Official Organ of the Southern Christian Convention.

IN ESSENTIALS, UNITY.

IN NON-ESSENTIALS, LIBERTY.

IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY.

VOLUME LXXXI.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, JANUARY 3, 1929.

NUMBER 1.

•• THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY ••

BY REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL.

HEADS FEDERAL COUNCIL.—

Bishop Francis J. McConnell, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has been elected president of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. In this position, the bishop will preside over the most important representative body in Protestantism. The Federal Council comes nearer being able to speak for all Protestant Churches than does any other organization. Since the organization of the council, the efforts of that body have been directed more and more toward the application of the principles of Christianity to the complex organization of our modern life. Bishop McConnell is eminently qualified for the duties of his office, being a leader in the movement to meet the human problems arising in the industrial world.

SPORT HELPED BY PROHIBITION.—

Prohibition is helping along in unexpected ways and places. Now it comes to us that Britons think the American mastery in certain sports has to thank the Volstead act. Archie Compston, famous English golf professional, on his return from America, was reported in the Sunday Chronicle, London, as declaring that prohibition has enormously helped Americans in their efforts for physical fitness. Compston was amazed by the number of nondrinkers and nonsmokers he found among golfers in the United States. "A British professional doesn't smoke or drink to excess," says the British golf star, "but you have to remember that Americans won our championship by only one stroke for several years—apart from Bobby Jones at St. Andrew's—and perhaps that's just the difference. American youth seems more thorough, keener, than ours."

Prohibition helps in every way. It is one of the greatest forward steps ever taken by any people. It will make our nation over and has already made it grander. Down with the men and women who want to go back to the weak and degraded days before we outlawed the liquor traffic!

MISSIONARY HYMNS.—

Dr. Milton S. Littlefield, president of the Hymn Society, announces the offer of a $100 prize for the best hymn "written in the spirit and voicing the purpose of the missionary enterprise of today." There is no doubt that there is a decidedly different approach to the missionary enterprise as compared with a generation ago. It came as a distinct shock to this writer, when a returned missionary stated that he had found a very decided objection to a certain line in "From Greenland's Icy Mountains." This is the offending line: "What though the spicy breezes blow soft o'er Ceylon's isle; though ev'ry prospect pleases, and only man is vile?" This old favorite mission hymn had long been considered by this scribe as expressing model sentiments. But we must confess that we would not exactly appreciate having other peoples sing such thoughts about our native land; and especially having such words in a religious song. Nor does it exactly portray the attitude manifested by the Christ toward those whom He sought to win. It is a difficult task to build an attitude toward others that measures up to the standard of the Christ.

THE MYSTERY OF PREACHING.—

Rev. Norman Maclean, writing in the Scots Observer, has this most interesting pronouncement on the art of preaching: "The world is filled with insoluble mysteries, and one of them is this: What is the secret of great preaching? The preachers who are not great are quite ready to explain and expound the art; but the man who can, week by week, hold massed congregations spellbound, hushed into a stillness that can be felt, if he is asked how he holds the multitudes in the hollow of his hand can only answer, 'I don't know.' It is not originality. What can the preacher say except that all the preachers have already said for a thousand years? He cannot launch forth as if the world were created yesterday. No preacher can cut himself adrift from the preachers that have gone before. 'I cannot light my own fire,' declared that prince of preachers, Robertson, of Brighton. The generations have labored and the preacher enters into their labors. The hearts of men today, as through all the weary centuries, are hungry for God, and the great preacher is the man who can blaze for the soul a path out of the labyrinth of time and bring it face to face with God. And that road has been there for nineteen hundred years. There is no originality possible. And yet there is, for each preacher must shape the message anew. Genius pertains to the form."

INDIVIDUAL RESPONSIBILITY.—

The Christian Century, in an article entitled "Getting Ready for Mr. Hoover," has some very pertinent things to say regarding the responsibility of the individual in the task of prohibition enforcement. There can be no doubt but that the question of prohibition influenced the votes of millions in the recent election. There will doubtless be the disposition on the part of many of these voters to feel that they have discharged their full duty by casting their votes. It was this attitude that was assumed by millions of citizens which has made possible the critical situation which exists today. The argument is summed up in these words:

"Finally, the individual believer in prohibition, all societies pledged to that end, all civic organizations and—more important than any of the others—all Churches should grasp this moment as the one in which to voice a new insistence on the personal responsibility of every citizen. This is not to advocate any form of coercion, even moral coercion, except to coerce a new and serious study of all that is involved in the present situation. Is there social danger, let it be demanded, in the lawlessness which has sprung out of this issue? Very well: Back of the lawlessness stands the corrupted public officer. Back of the corrupted public officer stands the illicit liquor syndicate. Back of the illicit liquor syndicate stands the booze-runner. Back of the booze-runner stands the bootlegger. Back of the bootlegger stands the citizen who buys the stuff. It is high time that sinister trail were blazed."

RELIGION IN HOTELS.—

Some years ago an organization known as the Gideons undertook to place a Bible in every room of every hotel in the land. This was a pioneer attempt to meet the religious needs of the traveling public. But it started a movement that has become so popular that now one of New York City's newest and most modern hotels has provided a chapel for the use of its guests. It is the Hotel Biltmore that has this unique addition to the things ordinarily provided by hotels. Meditation Chapel is the name given to this place of worship. It is not planned to have stated services of worship, but it is a place for meditation and prayer. It is open to believers of any faith or creed. Mr. John McEntee Bowman, president of the Bowman Biltmore Hotel Corporation, said in connection with the opening of the chapel:

"As its name implies, 'Meditation Chapel' is not for set services, but for meditation only, a place where any one may sit in silence and hear his own thoughts. There are times in the lives of all of us, in the day and in the night, when we want to get away from the world and commune alone with our God, to kneel before his altar. The Church is not always available. Many may find their rooms adequate for all purposes; others may find comfort in the little chapel in the inn.

"The presence of one spot in the hotel, disassociated from the worldly things of this life and dedicated and consecrated to the God we profess to serve, is now recognized by this act as a spiritual necessity in any hotel with which I am connected, and as soon as practicable a meditation chapel will be installed in all of our hotels.

"Since 'Meditation Chapel' in the Biltmore is for those of all creeds and denominations, the only symbol of religion within it is the altar, the symbol of all religions, since the altar stands for sacrifice, and without sacrifice there can be no religion. Flowers will always be found at this altar, and above the altar the adopted inscription: 'Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.' It is an invitation to us all. The consecration of this chapel is the use for which it has been set aside forever."

NOTES-PERSONALS

THE SUN has carried the advertisements of "Peloubet's Select Notes" and "Tarbell's Teachers' Guide" for some weeks; price $2.00 per copy, postpaid. The first quarter's study of the International Sunday School Lessons is worth the price of either book.

Rev. W. J. Edwards, High Point, N. C., a member of the Western North Carolina Conference and one of our loyal and devoted ministers, is open for work in Church or Churches desiring his ministry. Bro. Edwards is well known especially in his own Conference, where he has served faithfully and well.

Miss Victoria Adams, Ponce, Porto Rico, sends best wishes for a joyful New Year to all her friends of THE CHRISTIAN SUN family. "Since I do not have time to send greetings to all the people I know and love who have been helping me in my work since I have been here," she writes recently.

The Sunday School notes that appear weekly in THE CHRISTIAN SUN deserve a careful reading by all interested in Sunday School. They are written by Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, and we may look for him to give us a three years' course in the fundamental teaching of the Bible in three months—the best course offered by the National Committee in years.

One of our good deacons and a man much interested in our Elm Avenue Church, Portsmouth, writes under recent date: "You can count on Elm Avenue this year to send in more mission money than we have ever before sent." Elm Avenue is one of our growing Churches which the Mission Board materially assisted in making a beginning and in which the board takes a pardonable pride and at whose progress we rejoice.

In the death of Bro. I. A. Luke, Holland, Va., THE SUN's editor feels a personal loss, as he numbered Bro. Luke among his warm friends. The town of Holland, Va., and our Church there have certainly sustained a great loss, as he was a real factor in business, civil and Church life. For years he served as superintendent of the Sunday School there, and under his energetic and consecrated leadership the school was numbered among the most aggressive and active to be found anywhere. As deacon and delegate to annual Conferences he was faithful, consecrated and progressive. Our sympathy is extended the bereaved.

Eight new titles are to be added to the Doubleday, Doran dollar library of religious books during the spring of 1929. A notable addition to the series is "The Impatience of a Parson," by Rev. H. R. L. Sheppard, which sold so enormously both in Great Britain and America in the regular trade edition. The immediate and continuous success which the dollar scheme has met in the religious field since it was instituted by the publishers last summer marks a highly significant trend in book distribution and justifies the addition of new titles. Over 30,000 copies of the first books issued have been quickly absorbed by the public demand for standard works in attractive format at a nominal price, and new printings have been made for nine of the titles.

Rev. G. H. Veazey, pastor First Christian Church, Roanoke, Ala., writes: "I wish to thank you on behalf of our Church for the check just received of $350. Our Church is now clear of indebtedness, and we are indeed made happy. We are more determined than ever to go forward in our Master's work. Services yesterday, both morning and evening, were well attended and interest increased. I feel that by the help of God the Mission Board will be made proud of the donation they have made to the First Church, Roanoke." A letter from Treasurer V. E. Kitchens, elsewhere in THE SUN, shows they had had a note-burning and clearing up of financial obligations at our Roanoke Church. We congratulate them on the great and good work they are doing.

"A Musical Evening" was presented by the orchestra and choir of the First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., under the direction of Mr. Ernest G. Carr, Sunday evening, December 23rd, at 8 o'clock. The occasion was greatly enjoyed by a large attendance. The program rendered was as follows: Organ prelude; song, "As with Gladness Men of Old"; prayer by Dr. C. C. Ryan; song, "O Little Town of Bethlehem"; orchestra, "Fort Washington March"; orchestra, "Opera Gems" (Mackie-Beyer); vocal duet, "Hark, Hark, My Soul" (Shelley), Mrs. Stockdon and Mrs. Francis; quartet, "Gesù Bambina" (Pietro A. Von), Miss Franklin Woodson, violin; Mrs. A. Schroeder, flute; Mr. D. M. Stith, 'cello; Mrs. F. K. Woodson, piano. Organ, "Christmas Pastorale" (Ashford), Mr. Ernest Carr; notices and offering; orchestra, "Overture" (Hayes); orchestra, "Cavatina" (Raff), piano solo, "Christmas Fantasia" (Carl Meuller), Miss A. Wilkerson; choir, "And There Were Shepherds" (Ashford), violin obligato by Mr. Lawrence Lewis; organ, "Festival March" (Read), Mr. Ernest Carr; song, "Joy to the World"; benediction; orchestra, postlude. Instrumentation: Violins—Duke Dent, Lawrence Lewis, George Euksuzian, Jennie Snyder, Emily Mae Gardner, Buster Brown, Norma Adams, Francis August, Kathryn Pritchard, Mrs. M. Parsons, Lawrence Mason, Doris King, Helen Alward, James W. Parker, Margaret Shackelford, Estelle Johnson; flute—Evelyn Morissette; clarinets—Albert T. Samuels, William O'Brien, Jack Grimm; cornets—Robert George, Mary Tompkins, Ernest G. Carr, Arthur Nelson; saxophones—Ashby Truslow, Loretto Taylor, Rupert Crump; cello, D. M. Stith; baritone, C. W. Knapp; trombone, Joe Mosby; bass, J. T. Kernodle; pianist, Garnett Evans.

VANCEVILLE, GA.

The Vanceville, Ga., Sunday School is continuing its fine extension work in Louisiana through the home department sponsored there. The home department is supplied by the Vanceville Sunday School with literature from our own Christian Publishing Association, and reports quarterly to the Vanceville Sunday School. The Sunday School began in a contest held in 1922 to secure new members, and Vanceville secured those members who had moved to Louisiana and were without Sunday School privileges, and has continued the work ever since.

The last report sent in recently by Mrs. W. A. Hand shows that there were twenty-five members of the home department, that more than half of these have studied every lesson during the past year, and that they have sent $8.57 as their offering to the Vanceville Church. These families who have moved to Louisiana are, most of them, subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN and the Sunday School Herald, and through these publications, as well as through their study of the quarterlies published by our Church, are keeping in touch with the work of the Christian Church and contributing to it.

FRANKLINTON, N. C.

As a result of a recent survey of the town of Franklinton, N. C., it was found that there are one hundred communicants of the Christian Church. This is important, it seems to me; especially is it true when we think that there are to be no Church services there this year. On account of the condition of the building, and being unable within themselves to build, they had no services last year, but the Sunday School continued just the same. While it is to close, I understand, the last Sunday in December, these people need help to get firmly established. They are loyal to the Church and contribute to every department of the work. There is constantly coming into the town members of some of the Churches of surrounding territory. If some effort could be put forth to encourage and get the work established, some day we would have a Church of which we would be proud.

E. M. CARTER.

ROANOKE, ALA.

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

In response to your request, I give you a sketch of the First Christian Church, at Roanoke. In the fall of 1923, by invitation, Rev. G. D. Hunt came over and organized a Church with eight charter members. We held our services at the city hall until the summer of 1926, when we secured a tent and placed it on the lot which we had purchased for a Church site and our pastor, Rev. G. D. Hunt conducted a two weeks' meeting, not trying so much to increase in membership, but to get our Church before the people of this community. At the close of this meeting we had a business meeting and appointed a building committee. We immediately let the contract and purchased material for the erection of a building. On the first Sunday in December, 1926, we held our first service in the new building, and a great day it was for us. On the fifth Sunday in May, the following year, Dr. W. W. Staley came to us and dedicated the Church. On that date all indebtedness was provided for. In August, 1927, Dr. G. O. Lankford came and held a week's meeting for us, in which much good was accomplished and our Church materially strengthened. We have made improvements from time to time. In June of this year our beloved pastor, Bro. Hunt, resigned in order that we might have the service of a local pastor, and the Church extended a call to Rev. G. H. Veazey, who had just finished his course at Elon College. Bro. Veazey came here working, and is still hard at it. In the summer of 1928 we secured the service of one of our own boys, Rev. J. H. Dollar (better known here as "Jesse"), to conduct a meeting for us, and he did it well. The result was twenty additions to the Church. In September we began to think of getting out of debt, and the Southern Christian Convention proposed to meet us half-way, and we immediately accepted their proposition. By the faithful work of Mrs. J. F. Brown, we went over the top. Now we have a plant and equipment valued at $5,700, and a membership of seventy, with half-time preaching, Sunday School, Christian Endeavor, woman's mission, junior mission and Willing Workers.

On Sunday, December 9th, I asked the pastor to call conference in session for a few minutes, as I wanted to make my report as treasurer. The report showed all indebtedness paid in full, leaving a balance in treasury of $229.24. After a few appropriate remarks by the pastor, we all went away rejoicing and giving God the praise.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

TWO GREAT TOWERS.

By Rev. Joseph W. Fix.

(An address delivered before the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, in session at Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., by Rev. Joseph W. Fix, pastor Franklin Christian Church. Printed in THE SUN by request and vote of the Conference.)

From the upper deck of the good steamship which brought us into New York harbor this summer, I saw amid the skyline of lower Manhattan Island two great towers standing side by side in the world's greatest skyline. In my imagination I have formulated a possible conversation that might take place between these two great towers which are erected to the service of the American commonwealth. The smaller tower opens the conversation, and this is what is said:

Little Tower: "O Big Tower, during the many years that I have been standing here I have longed to talk with you. It is my nature to be friendly, but thus far we have been as silent partners. You grew up beside me so rapidly that I did not even have time to say 'Hello' as you passed up by me. But since we are next-door neighbors, let us get acquainted."

Big Tower: "All right, Little Tower, I shall be glad to talk with you, for I, too, have wanted to know who you are, what you are, and for what you stand. As for me, I am the tallest building on the American continent and I represent commerce. You ought to know me; every one else does. I represent one of the largest chains of stores in the world. As soon as I tell you my founder's name you will know me. He was born a poor boy and worked in a store for a living. Later in life he conceived the 5 and 10-cent store idea and I am a monument to F. W. Woolworth. Within my offices thousands of people work. These and many other things I might tell you, but won't you tell me about yourself, Little Tower; who you are and for what you stand?"

Little Tower: "I am old Trinity Church, and I have been here for years and years. Within my walls God's message to men is proclaimed. From behind my pulpit many of the world's greatest preachers have told the old, old story. Within the cemetery surrounding me lie many of America's greatest men; their voices still speak to the mighty throng as it rushes up and down Broadway. My Founder, like yours, started life as a poor boy. He was born in a manger, and when He grew to manhood, He was rejected and despised. Yet by the power of righteousness He became triumphant, and I am a tower to His name—I am the Church of Jesus Christ."

Big Tower: "What you say, Little Tower, is very fine. It is a delight to me to have you—a tower erected to religion—to stand near me: a tower erected to business. We ought to have much in common. We both serve millions of people. We are both indispensable, and we ought to share our experiences in a helpful way to each other."

Little Tower: "But, Big Tower, you have outgrown me. Your height is 750 feet, while mine is only 150 feet. You are 63 stories; I am only 1. You cost a million dollars; I cost less than a hundred thousand. Your doors close at 5 o'clock; my doors are always open. I build hospitals, colleges, and send missionaries into the uttermost parts of the world, while you sell articles for 5 and 10 cents. My products are eternal; yours temporal. Tell me, Big Tower, the secret of your success."

Big Tower: "My founder taught the masses of people to invest their money regularly, steadily and in small amounts, thus I came to be. He felt that if thousands of people would spend a dime a day and do it often enough, my success was assured. He knew that people would not feel the loss of so small a coin as a 5 or 10-cent piece. O, Little Tower, if the world would learn to invest in your cause of religion as they have in the cause of big business, you might tower as high into the air as I. But they must be taught by ministers of vision and teachers of business ability to invest a part of all their money, though small it be, in your program. This they must do regularly, and to their surprise they will receive blessings therefrom and will never miss the investments."

Then, the Church realized that she too was founded upon the very same principle that had made possible the Woolworth Building—that of growth, through her people paying regularly (1) "upon the first day of the week"; (2) individually, "let every one of you"; (3) proportionately, "as God has prospered him," and (4) paying in a practical way, "that there be no gatherings when I come." This was the plan used before the apostolic Church came into existence. The early Hebrews taught and practiced the same plan which in this age has made possible the Woolworth Building. This method was thoroughly grounded in the Old Testament and carried over into the New Testament by the Master, who declares that He came not to destroy the laws of the tithe or any other, but to fulfill them all. The apostle Paul had much to say relative to this plan of paying. On one occasion he was writing to some of his Churches when he said: "Now, concerning the collection for the saints at Jerusalem, I have given order to the Churches at Galatia, even so do I to you." And then the apostle tells them how they can most easily raise the money for the unfortunate people in Jerusalem. It was an easy plan as well as a certain plan. It was the plan underlying the erection of the Big Tower about which we have been speaking. The plan of the tithe—taking out of each dollar a small 10-cent piece, and with regularity investing it in the cause for which the Little Tower stands. Let us read 1st Cor. 16:2.

1. Regular paying. "Upon the first day of the week." There is a designated time for all things. A time for sowing and a time for the harvest. A time for the doctor to come and a time for paying him. A time to make accounts and a time to settle them. Once each year a man must pay his tax. Once a month he must pay his grocery bill. Once a week he must pay the paper boy. Hence, a regular time to pay his Lord. "Once the first day of the week." And this is a very fitting time for such a settlement. On a day that is sacred—a day set aside for the worship of Him by Church attendance, he is to pay Him. By regular paying, he thinks of Him regularly. When on the first day of the week he divides his money, taking part for his Lord, he keeps Him in mind. Just as regularly as the ancient Jew reaped his harvest, he set aside a definite part of all his increase unto the Lord. He never awaited a spasmodic impulse to stir his purse or his heart, as we do today. Rather, he brought all his tithes unto the storehouse of the Lord, that there might always be meat in His house. He thereby proved his loyalty unto Jehovah his God.

God's work must not cease. His Churches must keep open doors throughout the entire year. Sunday Schools must teach children every week, lest they grow into men and women who are unfit for the Master's use. Ministers and missionaries must be trained and sent—all this must be done with regularity. The religious program is gigantic—it must receive a steady inflow of funds. You and I are to pay weekly to its endeavors. Hence, "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you" pay unto Him.

2. Individual Paying. "Let every one of you."

One of the secrets of the successful erection of the Woolworth building is that everyone patronizes its chain of stores. The few select people of New York visit the fashionable shops on Fifth Avenue, but everyone, rich and poor, young and old, go to the "five and ten." Would we build great churches that would meet the demands of the age: to go, to preach, to heal and to instruct. Every one of you must pay; for it is the "Little drops of water and little grains of sand that make the mighty ocean and the beautiful land."

When everybody pays into a common fund there will be erected a great tower to religion. There are some debts that my friends can assume for me, but I alone must pay to my Lord. For my father or even my best friend to attempt to pay my religious obligations is to rob me of my share in helping extend the kingdom. There is a joyous reward that comes to every person who pays his part to benevolent causes.

We have known some heads of families who made it a practice to follow the line of least resistance by writing an annual check to the Church treasurer in full payment of the entire family's religious obligation. We have known of other heads of families who taught that every child should assume a proportionate part of the Church's upkeep. The former plan is man-made, the latter is divine.

We sing, "He included me"; we read that He makes His rain to fall on the just and the unjust alike; we know that God sent His Son into the world to save all men. Should not each one acknowledge His goodness by individual paying?

3. Proportionate paying. "Lay by him in store as God hath prospered him." God does not expect any man to bring more into the storehouse of the Lord than he is able. To that end, God has worked out a system of proportionate paying. He expected the ancient Jew to practice the plan of "laying by him in store as God prospered him." He was commissioned to "Honor the Lord with his substance and with the first fruits of all his increase. He was expected to bring all the tithes he possessed into the store, that there might always be meat in God's house. He expects just as much of men today as in days gone by. Proportionate paying is the fairest method in existence. By it each person shares with God as God causes him to prosper. As to what the share should be, we know that the tenth is the minimum. God can do more with one dollar than the wisest financier can with nine. Give God His proportionate share. The widow who gave her mite gave as much, if not more, than all the others who paid into the treasurer.

In his "Money Creed," Franklin Rall said, relative to proportionate paying: "I should set aside a definite proportion of my income for the Church and the services of others. This I do, in acknowledgement of God's sovereignty over all of my material possessions. I do this because it is business-like, realizing that giving on the spur of the moment and without consecration is not in accord with God's plan."

Too often we have robbed God of His part. We are like the old colored workman who had agreed to raise a crop of corn for a white man. The understanding was that every fourth load was to go to the owner of the land. The harvest was

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

CHRISTIAN SUN readers can look back on Nineteen-Twenty-Eight with gratitude, and bid that good year farewell with reluctance. It was a good year. Our country remained at peace with all the world, and prosperity rewarded our industry and enterprise. Fields and farms yielded abundant harvests, factories supplied a wide and voluminous demand, and savings banks throughout the country increased by millions over the deposits and savings of previous years. For material blessings, 1928 was a good year, and so merits our praise and deserves our gratitude.

Politically and socially, we can review it with complacency and regard it favorably. We passed through the heat and excitement of a presidential campaign without violence or bloodshed to any unusual proportions, and the wheels of State and national government move on as smoothly and as noiselessly as if they had not been disturbed by temporary excitement and nervous tension. Our people have demonstrated the fact that they can keep their tempers and control their passions, even in a campaign where personalities and not issues are involved—an achievement not attained among many people, and one to be praised and applauded among our own.

Our Churches have had a good year. Generally there has been a larger income to Church enterprises, institutions and boards of administration than in several previous years, and outstanding indebtedness has been curtailed. There has been a steady increase in Church membership, and 1928 hands to its successor, 1929, a longer Church roll than it inherited from its predecessor, 1927.

Our own Christian Church has every reason to thank God, take courage and press forward. Wholesome and sure progress in the mission it has pursued through its history, that of Church and Christian unity, has been made, and another year of such progress will mark its greatest achievement in this regard. Christians and Congregationalists, one in aim, one in purpose and polity, one in method and manner, through their ancient and honorable history, were brought nearer together in name and practice in 1928 than ever before, and for this unity in Christian co-operation and fellowship we should and do rejoice and give thanks.

Our Southern Convention, assembled in Richmond in 1928, was a forward-looking body and provided plans whereby our Churches and people can agreeably, consistently and adequately finance all our Church institutions and enterprises, and thus provide the means of further and more rapid growth, prestige and power. Harmony prevails throughout our brotherhood, and 1928 brought us all nearer together in the work of the Church and the kingdom of our Lord.

All of which signifies that 1928, the good year we now enter, should be our brightest and best yet. The Church of the living God exists for the purpose of winning souls to our Christ, of building up and extending His kingdom on the earth, of hastening the day of His return to earth and of that time when He shall rule and reign on earth even as He does in heaven. We, therefore, hail and greet with joy every year, day and agency that brings us nearer to that grand climax and consummation. J. O. A.

BRIDGES.

Bridges are bracing, buoyant and beneficial. They are more than this; they are very interesting and full of meaning. One can spend days, and with profit, just visiting the bridges of one's community.

The reason why they are so bracing is because they signify strength, power and prestige. They are invigorating to look upon as they bear their burdens without complaint, and save hours and days of time to the traveler without boasting. They are buoyant and beneficial because they teach us how to cross over dangers and difficulties with complacency, and not to worry and fret with every excitement and strain that arises and threatens. Shakespeare said, "There are sermons in stones, and books in the murmuring brooks." That hand could have well added, "and beauty and bounty in the far-flung bridge."

God did not make streams, dig canals and furrow out rivers to separate communities and divide neighborhoods; streams, canals, rivers are friendly messengers of refreshment and fertilization, a blessing to any community. But they are man's challenge from His Creator to buttress and to bridge them, and so show his own prowess and become a co-worker with his God in making these streams a beautiful and an unmixed blessing.

Since the flood receded, and this continent was built, the Nansemond River, Chuckatuck Creek, and James River, in Tidewater Virginia, hastening from the interior, their sources far apart, converged to friendly embrace in helping to create Hampton Roads, one of the deepest and safest harbors of the Atlantic seaboard. These three streams, near their mouth, made three different and distinct communities, as different in soil, production and occupation as if hundreds of miles apart. Only a year ago dredges, derricks, steam-hammers and cement-mixers began their incessant hum and roar and knocks and drives. A multitude of men, like so many human ants, began their creeping forward, inching over, pressing backward, urging onward, and, presto! today three beautiful bridges span and defy the passing, and heretofore dividing, flood. They are wonderful! Some seven or eight million dollars, mixed with human brain, brawn and energy wisely directed, seem to have dropped down from a friendly hand somewhere on to these long divided communities and made them one. In consequence, Newport News, Norfolk and Suffolk have moved up closer to each other by several miles and hours, and Richmond, the capital of the Old Dominion, has become a close and intimate neighbor to all three.

Land values have been enhanced by tens of thousands, and neighbors for ages living in sight of each other across intervening rivers but as far removed as if living in distant States, have been brought, by these friendly and intervening bridges, face to face and put on intimate terms. A veritable miracle has been wrought!

Jamestown, where our American civilization began to be built; Williamsburg, where our first laws were enacted, and Yorktown, where our independence was secured—these three historic and memorable spots have, by these friendly bridges, been brought within easy and delightful reach of all the rest of the world from North and South, East and West, and henceforth travelers in these cross-currents of trade, commerce and friendly visitation will in ever-increasing numbers visit, view and be thrilled by these scenes of an ancient and a most honorable past.

One of these bridges—that spanning the James—is, we believe, the longest and most artistic and expensive of any in America, if not in the world, four and seven-tenths miles. Its overarching steel tentacles, its undergirding steel and stone pillars, its broad and brooth cement floors, and at night its hundreds of brilliant electric lights combine to make it a thing of satisfaction and security to travel on, a delight and a joy to look upon. Somebody, by the wise and beneficent expenditure of seven or eight millions of dollars, has indeed conferred a boon and a blessing not only upon Tidewater Virginia, but upon travelers by auto from North to South, and so created a real asset to our great land and common country.

I like bridges. I love to linger on and beneath them. They tell such stories of conquest and achievement. And they teach me that currents and streams that seem to separate and divide us in this life are God's invitation to us to span and eliminate our dividing dangers and difficulties and so become neighbors and friends with all the world.

I would not be Mission Secretary of the Southern Christian Convention if I did not believe in the efficacy, the beneficence, the beauty and the blessings of bridges. I believe that the intervening chasms and currents that separate Chinese and Japanese, African and Anglo-Saxon can all be bridged by the force and power of human energy, divinely guided, so that God's love and saving power may make all nations, tongues and peoples one in honoring His name and in doing His will. To this end may we of the Churches pour out our few thousand and millions that the separating streams and currents which divide the people of the world into warring and unfriendly factions may all be bridged, and this whole wide world shall become one neighborhood of fellows and friends in Jesus the Christ, the world's only hope and sure Redeemer. J. O. A.

THE ENEMY OF RELIGION.

When the foreign missions enterprise began in modern times, the missionary concerned himself with showing the superiority of Christianity to other religions. In particular, he pointed out the falsity of the non-Christian religions. It was a clear case of battle for existence between religious systems.

Today the foreign missionary still insists that Christianity is superior to all other religions, but he uses the truth in those other systems to build up. It is not a case of battle to the death, but of completion of the partial non-Christian faiths through introducing their adherents to Christ.

What has produced this changed attitude? A common enemy has appeared in the field, an enemy to all religion, materialism, an enemy that threatens to destroy religion itself in the soul of man and certainly in his social relations. The real battlefield has shifted. Religious systems are now striving to preserve their best in co-operative efforts and are saving their fighting strength for the common enemy, materialism—materialism that reduces life and its hopes and aspirations and the immortal soul itself to the functions of electrons and protons and boldly says that there is nothing beyond the material universe, either in the realm of origins or of destiny. "Dust thou art, to dust returnest," was spoken of the soul and of all else, says this new philosophy of the twentieth century.

Let us in the New Year witness anew for personality and spirituality, and let us exemplify their power in our personal living and in our social relationships. There is no other way to destroy this insinuating common enemy of all religion. Argument will not do it, but witnessing living will. Against that there is no logic.

TROUBLE AND GOODNESS.

Many people who try earnestly to be good wonder why they have so much trouble. The Bible teaches that the wicked "are not in trouble as other men; neither are they plagued as other men" (Psa. 73:5). Yet, in the mind of most men, trouble and goodness do not seem to belong together. It seems to some that the good would be free from trouble; but the contrary is true as personal experience and history prove. The better people are, the more trouble they have. This seems to suggest a contradiction in conditions. Character does not exempt people from trouble, but makes them more susceptible to trouble. A clean garment shows spots sooner and more than a soiled garment. A good reputation is more easily damaged than a bad reputation. A good home is more easily damaged than a bad home; and the same is true of a Church.

A dishonest man does not trouble over his failure to pay his bills, but an honest man is in trouble as soon as he is unable to pay. When a dishonest man's business fails, he lets it go, goes into bankruptcy, or goes on his way and lets creditors trouble. But an honest man is in trouble when his business fails. It kills many men. When adversity upsets prosperity and the man who provided well for his family and paid his obligations, fails, he gives way to trouble, his health fails, and he passes on to the grave. You can come near telling whether a man is honest or dishonest by the way he takes failure.

A sorry mother does not have much trouble over wayward children; but a Christian mother who tries to train her children in good behaviour and the principles of right living, sees her child go wrong, it nearly breaks her heart. Good mothers have most of the trouble of motherhood. The same is true of fathers.

Dishonest officials do not have trouble over the violations of the eighteenth amendment, but honest officials do have trouble. The only time the dishonest official has trouble is when he gets caught. That is true of all dishonest men. A dishonest workman does not have trouble over poor work, but an honest workman does. The better the workman, the more trouble he has when the work is not good.

Unfaithful Church members, who do not attend regularly nor support the Church by their means, do not worry over Church debts and failure to raise Conference apportionments, but the best members, who do their part, are in trouble when financial or spiritual conditions get bad in the Church. A good musician is in trouble over one wrong note, a scholar over one wrong word, a doctor over one wrong prescription, a tailor over one misfit, and a cook over the failure of a Christmas cake.

Carry this thought on until you reach Calvary, and you get the truth. Jesus was without sin, yet He suffered for all. "Christ hath also once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God" (1 Peter 3:18). Most of human suffering is by the good and for others—parents for their children, nurses for their patients, ministers for their members, doctors for their patients, teachers for their pupils, good people for bad people, and Jesus for all. ORDINATION AT ELON.

BY REV. ROY N. MOSES.

"This occasion is highly significant and important. Never before, perhaps, have two denominations united in an ordination service to consecrate a man as a gospel minister in both Churches."

With a statement like this, Dr. J. Edward Kirbye, pastor of the United Church of Raleigh, opened the formally organized session of the Council of Congregational and Christian Churches, which met at Elon College for the purpose of ordaining Prof. Ross Ensminger as a minister of the Word in both the Christian and the Congregational denomination. Such a service is prophetic of the time when variety of doctrines held and differences in form of ceremonies practiced by the different Churches will no longer be able to hold back the rising tide of Christian brotherhood. As a milestone marking progress toward Christian unity, this service is likely to hold a definite place in Church history; and for that reason, as well as because of the intrinsic importance of the occasion, it is worth while to record just what took place.

At 11 A. M., December 19, 1928, the council was called to order by Dr. J. Edward Kirbye, pastor of the United Church of Raleigh, which had sent out the call for this council to convene. The session was held in the Whitely Auditorium of Elon College.

Dr. W. M. Jay was elected temporary scribe. Dr. Kirbye was elected temporary moderator. Both of these elections were later made permanent. The roll was called, and it was determined that a quorum was present and the council was therefore competent to go ahead with the business before it.

Those composing the council were Dr. J. Edward Kirbye, pastor of the United Church of Raleigh; Dr. F. P. Ensminger, pastor of the Congregational Church, at Star, N. C.; Dr. Ozora S. Davis, moderator of the National Council of Congregational Churches and president of Chicago Theological Seminary; Dr. G. O. Lankford, pastor of First Christian Church, Burlington, N. C.; Dr. W. S. Alexander, pastor of the Elon College Christian Church, and Prof. Simon A. Bennett, head of the department of religious education of Elon College.

The opening prayer was offered by Dr. W. S. Alexander. Prof. Ross Ensminger made his statement of his reasons for wishing ordination and of his qualifications for the ministry of the Word.

Opportunity was given for asking questions of the candidate. On motion, made by Dr. Davis, it was voted that the council should be by itself. After the council withdrew, the Congregation enjoyed sacred music which Prof. Velie made by playing the Skinner pipe organ.

The council returned and reported a unanimous vote in favor of proceeding with the ordination services. Dr. Ozora S. Davis preached the ordination sermon. Dr. J. O. Atkinson delivered the charge to the candidate. Dr. F. P. Ensminger, father of the candidate, offered the ordaining prayer. Those who laid their hands on the head of the candidate were the members of the council and also Profs. Van Cleave and White of Elon College, and Dr. Opie, pastor of First Episcopal Church, Burlington.

Prof. Ross Ensminger pronounced the benediction. Paper submitted by Prof. Ross Ensminger for examination by the ordaining council.

Training and Experience.

My training for the gospel ministry may be briefly summarized by a statement of the education I have been privileged to receive. I received my A. B. degree from Carleton College, Northfield, Minn., in spring of 1925. The first two years of my college course were spent at Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga. After graduating from Carleton, I attended Yale Divinity School the following year and studied under Dean Luther A. Weigle and Prof. Benjamin Bacon, among others. The next two years I attended Union Theological Seminary, New York City, receiving the degree of bachelor of divinity in May, 1928. The field of my major interest was in religious education, and my thesis was written on the relationship of Protestant Christianity to psychiatry.

My experience has been limited. For the first four summers I have been a summer student-worker in the Congregational denomination, working in Colorado, Montana, South Dakota and Pennsylvania. During these summers the work has been varied, including these forms of Christian service: preaching, pastoral work, organizing daily vacation Bible Schools, Sunday Schools, Boy Scout troops, etc. During the years in seminary I have acted occasionally as supply pastor and have engaged in religious education work in settlements and Churches. This past summer, President Harper, as an expression of friendship towards the Congregational Church, engaged me to teach in the department of religious education in Elon College.

The following is submitted to explain my wish to become a minister of the Christian gospel: The deepest desire of my life is to place it in the service of the development of humankind. The term, "the kingdom of God" expresses my goal as clearly as anything can. The welfare of human beings, individually and in their social relationships, is to me the highest task to which any one may be called.

I think the physical well-being of humanity is important, and those who are engaged in the ministry of healing men's bodies have given their lives to a high calling. The economic and political well-being of man is also important. But the inner, spiritual well-being of man I feel is most essential. A man or woman crippled in body and low in health may live a rich and blessed life, as the late Dr. Kerr lived, but a man with the finest of health and body may live a life of vanity and vexation of spirit, low and degrading to himself and others. The secret of the kingdom of God lies within a person—not within his physical body in the sense of being lodged or contained in some peculiar strength of the nerves, bone, muscle or brain, but within the spirit and soul of the man.

So I wish to give myself in the service of the spiritual well-being of humanity. Man is spiritually whole and well when he has shaped his life in conformity to the Eternal Creator and sustainer of life. "Thou has made us for Thyself, and our hearts are restless till they rest in Thee." Only when we become children and co-workers with the Universal Father may we realize our true and highest nature. God, it seems to me, is not only a transcendent Creator whom we worship,

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Some sayings contain great lessons and are almost universally used. One of these sayings is: "The same to you." This is the hearty response to: "I hope you will have a good Christmas"; and quick as an electric flash, you hear the "same to you." This expression is uttered more at Christmastime than any other time of the year. That suggests the wonderful influence of Jesus Christ upon the heart of mankind. The Babe of Bethlehem ushered in a new day that has changed the attitude of mankind toward Him and toward one another. It is not simply history; it is a revelation. If we had nothing else to prove His divinity, this great control over the thought and life of the world would at least suggest that Jesus was more than a man. No other being has made such an impression upon the world as to celebrate His birth in such a wonderful way as Christmas does. The very approach of the day stirs within the mind and heart generous and friendly feelings. Reunions, presents, vacations from the Senate to the smallest school, good will expressed in numberless ways mark the coming, the celebration and the memories of Christmas.

The expression, "The same to you," suggests a great lesson that might run through the whole year. If people would maintain this kindly feeling and give expression to it in a friendly way, the response would come back with a sympathetic touch in kindly words. "A man that hath friends must show himself friendly"; and it would be safe to affirm that the greatest asset in useful life is friends.

The Christmas spirit is the Christian spirit, and that spirit should be carried through the whole year. Christmas cards and beautiful and useful presents count much at this season of the year, but the salutation and response count most during the Christmastime. If that spirit reigned throughout the year it would change business, social life and even the Church itself. "I hope your business will be good this season." "The same to you." "Best wishes for you, your home and your friends." "The same to you." "A happy time in your Church next Sunday." "The same to you." The Book says: "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you"; and if we did that, the response would mean "The same to you." The way others treat us is the echo of our treatment to them. Action and reaction are equal; and life and love are equal. Love never begets hate, and hate never begets love. Love responds to love, and hate responds to hate.

Rob the world of Christ and there would be no Christmas; rob the world of Christmas and there would be no such good cheer as we see and feel in these glad days; rob the world of kind wishes, and you would blot out the rich saying, "The same to you." After all, it is what men think, feel and say that makes life sweet or sour. Words may wound or heal human feelings and human life. That is why the apostle says, "preach the word," for the word is life; it is God speaking to man. Do you wish others well in all the relations of life? Then you may expect the response in the words, "The same to you."

ELON LETTER.

Are we losing our enthusiasm? Have New Year resolutions lost their value? Is there not hope for a better day?

These are not the questions of a cynic, but of sober thought. We used to be encouraged to aim high, to hitch our wagon to a star, to set out to be President of the United States or his wife, but now the intelligence tests have consigned us to our little niche and we hesitate to "pep-up" on any subject.

And in our attitude of moderation and of complacency, not to say of apathy, we are wrong. Enthusiasms have their place. It is splendid to aspire. Intelligence tests do not reveal the whole story nor limit with finality the possibilities of life. Other things than intelligence count in achieving success in life. John Wesley was a blockhead, so his teachers said; and Charles Darwin could not learn books. Governor Vance of North Carolina averaged 70 during his college course. When told that he was unworthy of his diploma, he tore it up and said he would prove he was—and he did.

Not all scholars in college achieve greatly in life, though most of them do. Not all dullards are destined to be water-drawers and wood-choppers throughout life, though many of them will be. There is room for personal achievement. There is ground for aspiration. Do not be ashamed to day-dream. Aim high. You may hit a star.

At the beginning of the New Year, let me encourage my readers to make new resolutions and to begin at once to put them into practice, permitting no exceptions. And remember the Great Scorer in life's game figures not that you won or lost in granting your final reward, but how you played the game—that's it: how you played life's game!

A CHRISTMAS MESSAGE.

BY REV. C. C. RYAN, D. D.

(Broadcast over WRVA Christmas evening.)

One of the most instructive phases of our religion is its universal perennial human interest in the Birthday of Jesus Christ. No other event in the history of the world has so aroused the enthusiasm of poets and painters, philosophers and men of affairs as the birth of Jesus Christ.

To this the world is never weary of turning; childhood, youth, early manhood and womanhood and mature years, all ages interested in the Babe of Bethlehem. Even the angels in heaven found in this event new occasion for song, and their melodious voices were heard upon the earth.

"It came upon the midnight clear,
That glorious song of old,
From angels bending near the earth
To touch their harps of gold:
'Peace to the earth, good will to men
From heaven's all-gracious King,'
The earth in solemn stillness lay
To hear the angels sing."

"Glory to God in the highest"—this is nothing else than the first table of the moral law: love to God.

"On the earth peace, good will to men"—this is the second table of the law: love to men. This is the angelic interpretation of the advent.

The Bible makes its appeal to living men in every age and under every conceivable condition. The characters of the Old Testament—Abraham, Jacob, David, Solomon—become our teachers because they are so like ourselves. We are interested in reading the story of their lives and we see not only their frailties reflected, but we see our possibilities of high thinking and noble action. When we open the pages of the New Testament and find there the story of the Word that was made flesh we find in Him the one universal Man who fits into all ages of all people and has been and is and always will be the inspiration of the children of men. We find in him a faultless, spotless character, and yet he is human in every point.

His coming was at a time when the power of the world was concentrated in the Roman empire. I know that the Romans paid but little attention to His coming, for they were all absorbed in noting the youthful Prince Augustus. Yet the birth of Jesus forms the grand turning point in the world's history; the centuries which had gone before were now sealed up, and the doors were closed on all ages since Adam. Henceforth men began to count the years over as if the true life of the world had just commenced, and a new order of time was now to unfold upon the earth, the years of our Lord. And this grand era had its beginning not as we would have ordered it. We would have had the new-born King laid in a cradle decked with diamonds, in a temple radiant with silver and gold and gems of every hue; but He brought with Him no splendor from heaven, choosing rather a manger in a chamber hung with spider-webs.

The religious pole of the globe that attracts the thoughts and guides the steps of all who wonder over its surface, is found in a stable of Bethlehem. Yet vain it is, O man, that Christ was born in Bethlehem if never born in thee. Has not the inn of His birth become the shrine of all nations, and does he not receive all comers?

In casting about for a true standard of conduct, I might say, "My life is American, and in the twentieth century. How, then, can Jesus, whose life was in the midst of a Jewish and Greco-Roman civilization, furnish any criterion for me?" The guidance, however, which we are seeking pertains to the spirit. It is the spirit of Jesus with which we have to do. We are to meet life's duties in the spirit of the Master. Above all else, Jesus is to be the Guide of our lives in the varied relations which we sustain to our fellows.

We touch humanity at every point, and there is none other way of rendering service to God other than through service to our fellow-men. The cream of the Christmas story is the Father's love. The emphasis of Christmas from a sentimental standpoint has always been placed on childhood. The theological emphasis is placed on Fatherhood—God so loved the world.

The Word becoming flesh involves not merely the Son leaving His throne in heaven, but His Father leading Him to the battlement, and saying to Him, "The world is in sin and needs to be recruited. My image has been erased from the hearts of my children, and it must be seen again: so go, go and rebuild, recruit and draw the minds and affections of my children away from the world and back to me."

The nature of men must be changed; that is what Christmas is for. The gladness of Christmas is a call to humanity to come back to our lost estate.

I have seen a picture in Popular Mechanics of a little house on the rocks by the sea. For long years there beamed from the window of that house a bright beam of light. The lamp was oiled and the globe polished, and the wick replaced by a splendid mother. And the reason for it all was that long years before, her boy, in a fit of anger, had gone away to sea and had not returned. And the mother kept the light burning, that when the boy should return he would know that love and forgiveness and a welcome awaited him. And so the Christmas with its "Joy to the world," its "Little Town of Bethlehem," its "Silent Night," is but the gleaming of God's love calling on erring humanity to come back.

Prayer.

Our Father, we praise Thee for our restlessness; for a restlessness that will not rest except it moves.

Make us like the stars—without haste, without rest, each filling our God-given best. We thank Thee that the rear guard of our natures move ever to where the vanguard was. Save us from the nervousness, the irritation of trying to stay where we are. Help us to put our hand in His and climb to the highest peak of Pisgah which is served when we may catch a new view of Him. And we ask it in Jesus' name. Amen.

EDUCATION AT ELON.

The report of the Board of Education to the Southern Christian Convention at its last session indicates "which way the wind blows" by the number of graduates who enter the various professions, and where emphasis should be placed in making provision to serve the largest number of students for the future. During the history of the college, three hundred and thirty-nine of her graduates have entered the teaching profession, one hundred and ten have entered the ministry and mission work, one hundred and five have entered business, and seventy-four have become home-makers. Anticipating that the proportion in the future shall be in the same ratio, the college shall place special emphasis on departments preparing young people for these lines of work. Only eighty-six graduates have entered all other professions.

The profession of education has received the largest number of graduates, and should have special attention in providing courses of study to give the best possible preparation for this profession. The present trend of preparation for this profession requires a thorough course in philosophy of education, general and educational psychology, mental measurements and educational tests, administration and school organization and equipment. The best colleges and teacher-training schools are studying the needs and demands of their graduates and endeavoring to meet these needs in an adequate manner. Through such service they are growing rapidly and serving the public to better advantage. Following this policy Elon College would devote its largest attention to the preparation of teachers, ministers, business men and women, and home-makers, and thereby not only serve a larger number of her graduates to better advantage but also command the attention and attendance of a larger number of students because of meeting these needs to better advantage.

With the prospective coming of a theological school to Elon College next fall, the ministry will be better provided for and the graduates of the college will be better prepared for the ministry. There is provided a good business course for those who will enter the business profession. The department of domestic science and household arts should receive larger attention to supplement the excellent work that is now being done. The department of education should have a larger teaching force with special emphasis on advanced psychology and philosophy of education to provide for a greater number of students and a greater and more varied number of courses for the different grades of teachers. Such a provision would attract a larger number of students to the institution and serve the State and Church and extend the usefulness of the college to a greater number of people. A larger percentage of undergraduates from the college, as well as of graduates, enter the teaching profession than any other field of service. If the college wishes to serve to the largest extent, this is the open door for service, and provision should be made to give the best possible service in this field.

One who has come into contact with the teaching force in the State in an intimate manner can easily see the need for more teachers who have been educated under Christian influence and acquired the spirit and practice of Christian character. The strengthening of the course of education by providing more teachers and other advanced courses in philosophy of education and educational psychology would not only attract more students, give better advantages in preparation for teaching, but also give a stronger preparation and background for all other departments such as preparation for the ministry, for business, and for home-building, and thus attract a larger number of students to all departments of the college.

PROFITABLE FAILURES.

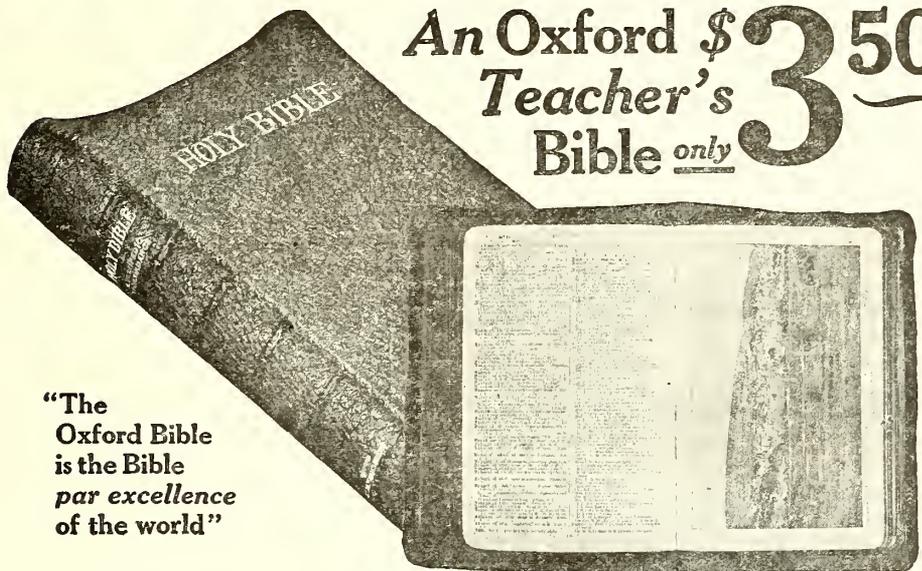

We face the stubborn realities of life and constantly meet disappointment. Mystery forbids that we understand the tangled threads which bind us. The uneven journey each individual makes is an adventure peculiar to itself. Experiences, while bitter in the making, often become rich in rewards. The hills of difficulty are never surmounted by faint heart or feeble effort. We gaze upward toward high ideals and holy purposes and strive in vain to penetrate the veil which shrouds the prize. We plan, and often find our plans a failure. We try again. Each new day presents a new opportunity for one who is willing to face obstacles unwilling to give up. Out of life's most trying experience comes strength for renewed effort. As Dr. J. U. Newman has so wisely said, "Each spring is new, but is only the old renewed. Each truth, to be real to us, must be baptized in the fount of experience." One thus armed with truth is better able to engage the necessary power to win. The weakest point receives proper re-enforcement, insuring a greater degree of success.

When a child begins to learn to walk it experiences many falls, but is soon willing to try again. Had all the world's great characters accepted failure (Continued on Page 10.)

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

APPEAL FROM PRESIDENT SMITH.

Dear Brethren:

As President of the Convention, I am writing to call your attention to the action of the Convention in session at Richmond, regarding the offering for our colleges.

The Churches are asked to raise $34,000 for the support of our colleges. This amount to be raised through Conference apportionments, individual offerings, special offerings and through our Sunday Schools. A definite plan was adopted to be used by our Sunday Schools in helping to raise this amount. Every school in the Convention is asked to make four special offerings during the year or one during every quarter. The Department of Education has asked that these quarterly offerings be made on fifth Sundays. The last Sunday in this year happens to be the first fifth Sunday after Conference sessions. (If you did not make it then, do so as early in January as possible, please.—Editor.)

I am, therefore, appealing to you, one and all, that in face of the great need of our colleges and of God's blessings upon us that we make a real offering for our educational institutions at the close of the year.

Elon College is asking for $24,000, and Bethlehem College is asking for $10,000. If your pastors or Sunday Schools be located near Elon, your offering should go to that institution; if it be located near Bethlehem, your offering should go to that institution.

As an inducement towards larger offerings to Elon, an interested friend has offered five free scholarships and the board of trustees has likewise offered five free scholarships. Two of these scholarships are assigned to the different Conferences of the Convention, and are offered to the Sunday School making the largest offering per capita during the year, or the largest offering during the year. In other words, if your Sunday School raises more money per capita than any other Sunday School in the Conference and sends the money to Elon College, you will have a free scholarship of $100 at your disposal; or if your school raises a larger amount than any other school in your Conference, you will have a free scholarship of $100 at your disposal. This is a fine plan and should be a great incentive to the young people of the Church to support our colleges.

Hoping and trusting that you may make a liberal offering on the fifth Sunday to our colleges, I am sure that the college receiving your contribution will be glad to print it in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Trusting that you will not fail in this important matter, I am,

Yours truly,

L. E. SMITH,

President Southern Christian Convention.

LOOKING AT THE WAVES.

We are all, more or less, familiar with the story recorded in the 14th chapter of St. Matthew, where Peter attempted to walk on the sea. We remember that the disciples were out on the sea in a ship that was being tossed high and low by the rough waves on that dark and stormy night. They looked out across the water, and they saw a figure coming toward them, and they were afraid, because they thought that it was a spirit. But this figure was none other than Jesus Christ Himself; and when He saw their fright, He said unto them: "It is I; be not afraid." And when they saw that it was their Lord, Peter cried out, "Lord, if it be Thou, bid me come to Thee on the waves." And Jesus said, "Come." Peter walked down to the edge of the ship and stepped out on the water and started walking towards Jesus; but before he had gotten very far he began to look at the waves as they rolled up near to him, and he began to doubt, and fear came over him, and he started to sink, but he cried out, "Lord, save me," and Jesus reached out His hand and caught him, and said unto him, "O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?"

The trouble with Peter was, he looked at the waves. And I am wondering how many there are of us today who, like Peter, are looking at the waves and sinking down into sin and shame? Here is a young man who decides that he wants to live a Christian life. He walks down the aisle and gives his hand to the preacher and his heart to God. He joins the Church and starts out with a picture of Christ over yonder and starts walking toward Him; but before he has gotten very far he takes his eyes off of Christ and begins to look at the waves of life as they roll up to him and cry out, "You can't make it. I know your past life. You are not fit to be a Christian. You had better stop the foolishness and go on as you were before." Soon that young man who has taken his eyes off of Christ begins to sink, and we all do not think to cry unto Christ to save us, as Peter did; but, instead, we sink down and down into a life of sin and shame. The whole trouble is, taking the eyes off Christ and looking at the waves.

Many a young man or young woman has started out to live a Christian life, but have taken their eyes off Christ and looked at the waves, and never accomplished their purpose. Many a young man has started out in life with something definite in mind, but some ill wind has blown a wave across his path and he weakened. Many a young woman has started out in life with a goal to reach, but took her eyes off the goal for a moment and it vanished out of her sight. Many of us make up our mind to do something definite tomorrow, but a wave creeps between over-night, and we allow it to stare us in the face rather than walk over it.

Had Peter kept his eye on Christ, he would have known nothing about the waves. And if you and I keep our eyes on the goal, whatever it may be, we will not be bothered with the waves as they roll before us.

I remember very well when I was but a small youth. Several boys in my neighborhood planned to leave the old county and go into a far city to take up a work that we thought we would like better than farming. We made plans several months before we were to leave, but the waves came before us and one by one dropped out until there was no one left but myself. I look back over those days sometimes and thank God that I walked over those waves with a determination to carry out my plans. Today the others who fell before the waves are, so far as I know, just where they were ten years ago, so far as their standing in life is concerned. The surest way to fail in business life or in the Christian life is to allow the waves that daily before us roll have their sway.

We are now thinking about New Year's resolutions. Many will be made, and most of them will be broken (by those who look at the waves), but I know of no better one to make than to resolve to keep our eye on the goal, whatever it may be, and ask God to help us walk over the waves on the sea of life.

J. O. ATKINSON, Sec'y.

ORDINATION AT ELON.

but an immanent, all-pervasive power and plan with which we must co-operate and serve.

There has been a tendency for the Church not always to serve the ones who needed it most. In large cities, Churches have tended to locate in prosperous residential sections where they could secure financial support. The underprivileged portions of mankind have been grossly neglected. The prosperous, well-to-do class certainly need the way of life and all that ministers can do in serving their spiritual life is greatly needed. But my interests as with the "lost sheep of the house of Israel," pioneer people, those in backward sections, those in depersonalized, congested sections of our large cities, the underprivileged in all walks of life. Perhaps among these people not as many outstanding men will arise, nor will there be as great achievements, nor will they have the resources and graces of education and culture, but their lives are just as infinitely precious.

I have great interest in mankind collectively. What a man individually is or becomes depends to some degree on his social environment and background. I feel that all stratification of race, nationality, class or creed, are barriers that breed friction, intolerance, bitterness and postpone the time when love shall reign supreme.

I believe in the unity of all Christians—those that have the same purpose and look to the same way of life should not be separated, but should join forces. However, I feel that no matter how much Christian unity there may be, there will be and should be diversity of opinion. Truth is like a diamond, many-sided and some see one facet and some another. But with an earnest sympathy for the right of liberty of conscience these differences may enrich and supplement instead of separate earnest Christians.

In conclusion, I feel that Jesus has given us an adequate picture of the nature of God, and an abiding insight into the way of life for man. He is, indeed, the Saviour of mankind from all that is low and material to all that is high and spiritual.

To this task of serving the highest interest of man I wish to dedicate myself. I wish not only to give myself but to have something worthy of being given. Conscious of my limitations here, my hope is in ever being a learner and a seeker in humbleness of spirit.

My own personal religious experience has come through a process of gradual growth. It has centered about the struggle in my mind and heart between a self-centered, selfish existence and a life which was concerned for the welfare of others, between my own selfish interests and the interests of the kingdom of God. The struggle has never been finally won, for I still have great temptations towards selfishness, but I have accepted in the main the interests of the way of love. The ideals and life of Jesus sum up to me this way of love.

Dr. Davis' Sermon.

In a sermon characterized by deep thinking and clear spiritual insight, illuminated by poetic touches and vivid illustrations, and made vital by a charming personality, Dr. Davis delivered a message which will long remain in the minds and hearts of his hearers. He began with the interesting statement that the great rules of life are made up of apparent contradictories. Just as the earth is held to its course in space by the opposite action of centripetal and centrifugal forces, so the rules of conduct are compounds of opposite tendencies. Men have erred by preparing dilemmas and saying that truth is a matter of "either—or," when it is really a matter of "both—and." Truth is a diamond—one person sees one of its many facets, another man sees another.

In life there are tendencies toward selfishness and tendencies toward altruism. One must develop self. Jesus said, "Come—learn of me"; and learning of Him meant the highest self-development. But Jesus added, "Go, teach."

As Christ said, "For their sakes I sanctify myself"; so must the minister of the Word sanctify himself. He must know God. He must know the historic Christ, the Christ revealed in the teachings of the Bible. But God is both transcendent and immanent. Once we stressed His transcendancy. Now we stress His imminancy. The great truth of Christianity is not the incarnation of Christ or His resurrection. The great and important truth for the minister to know is that Christ is a living, immanent person—a presence which must be with him in his work!

MISSION STUDY BOOKS.

If any individual or society desires to secure mission study books, I have the following on hand: "What Next in Home Missions?" by William P. Shriver, price 60 cents (the home mission book recommended for women's societies); "Youth and the New America," by G. Bromley Oxham, price 60 cents (home mission book for young people); "In the African Bush," by Jewel Huelster Schwab, price 75 cents (foreign book for Willing Workers or junior age children); "Indian Playmates of Navajo Land," by Ethel M. Booder, price 75 cents (home book for Willing Workers or primary age children).

I shall be glad to secure copies of "Friends of Africa," price 50 cents (the woman's foreign mission book), and "Africa Today" (young people's foreign book) for any who may wish to secure them.

I also have copies of "Please Stand By," by Margaret Applegarth, price 50 cents (children's book for 1927-28), and "The Adventure of the Church," by Samuel McCrea Covert, price 60 cents (woman's home book for 1927-28).

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson I—January 6, 1929.

OUR HEAVENLY FATHER.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him." Psa. 103:13.

Foreword.

The lessons for this quarter look interesting and promising. The Lesson Committee has selected great themes which are vitally related to the Christian life, such as "Our Heavenly Father," "Sin," "Christ the Saviour," "The Holy Spirit," "The Holy Scriptures," "Repentance and Faith," "Prayer," "Christian Growth," "Baptism and the Lord's Supper," "The Christian Sabbath," "Stewardship and Missions," and "The Future Life." It is one of the most constructive series of lessons that we have had for a long time, and those who invest a little time and study in these lessons will have a good foundation on many of the most vital and central doctrines or teachings of Christianity.

The writer of these notes would like to add a personal word here. From time to time he learns that here and there men and women are reading these notes, and in some cases at least finding them a bit helpful. To all readers of these notes he extends his New Year's Greetings. May the new year bring us all into a more vital knowledge of the truth, and inspire within us a new measure of consecration to Him who is the Truth. To this greeting the writer would add his promise to try to make these notes better and more helpful in the weeks to come, so that all who read them may be repaid for such time as they may spend on them.

The Idea of God as Heavenly Father in the Old Testament.

The God of the Old Testament was, of course, the God of the New Testament. The God who created the world was the same God who revealed Himself in Jesus Christ. But this is not the same thing as to say that the idea of God was the same. The idea of God has developed, it has gone through a progressive unfolding which reached its climax in the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. One of the most interesting things that a biblical student can do is to take any great idea or doctrine of the Christian religion and trace its development. The idea of our Heavenly Father offers a case in point.

For instance, the early—that is, the very early—Hebrews had little if any conception of God as a Heavenly Father. For them, God was a tribal Deity, more or less localized. He was especially interested in the Hebrews and especially friendly toward them. But they did not conceive of Him as their Father.

A later development—and we can only hint at these various stages—was the idea that God was the Father of the Hebrew nation. Israel was His son in a very exclusive sense. This represents an advance in their thinking and a step toward the fuller revelation of God as Father given in Jesus.

In still later and fuller developments there are special instances in which the idea of God as Father seems to have entered the mind and heart of the Hebrews. Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him, and the instance in which God calls Solomon his son are examples, but these are exceptions rather than the rule, and even in these cases there is little if any of the warm, personal element which we associate with Fatherhood.

One of the most interesting developments of the idea of God as Heavenly Father was the stage at which God came to be recognized as the Father of other nations as well as of the Hebrews. The prophets emphasized this truth and thus prepared the way for the fuller revelation that was to come in Christ.

In all of this it is not to be thought that the men and women of the Old Testament did not have any conception of the qualities of God which we associate with Fatherhood. Very early in their history they got conceptions of God's character, his goodness, his long-suffering, his mercy, his lovingkindness and other virtues that far surpassed the ideas of God which other nations had. But they had no distinct, compelling idea of God as Father.

The Idea of God as Heavenly Father in the New Testament.

If one should take a topical Bible or a concordance and trace the word father, he would be struck by the new emphasis and the new meaning which that word has when it comes out of the Old Testament and finds expression on the lips of Jesus. There is an intimacy, a warmth, a vividness, a certainty about it that makes it almost a new word. One of the supreme contributions which Jesus made to the world was the revelation He gave of God as His Father, and the insistence that He put upon the fact that God was our Father. Originally the Father of all men by virtue of the fact that He created us in His own image, God became the Father in a warm, personal way through grace. In the thinking of both Jesus and Paul, God's children, either through sin or through bondage to law, had been living as orphans in the world. But through grace, God's children had that experience that made them know that they were the children of God—His spirit beareth witness with our spirits that we are the children of God. John joins Paul and Jesus in this emphasis. The glorious truth of the New Testament is that we may become children of God in that warmth and intimacy of personal relationship which we suggested by the word "Fatherhood" at its best.

Lesson II—January 13, 1929.

SIN.

GOLDEN TEXT: "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves and the truth is not in us. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and righteous to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."—1 John 1:8-9.

Sin is the source of the major portion of the world's sorrow and suffering. Trace the things that burden and blight human life back to their ultimate source and you will usually find that they come from sin. Jails, asylums, hospitals, and many other institutions bear mute witness to the presence and power of sin in the world and in human life. But this is only a drop in the bucket, as it were. If one could know every heart and every life in a complete way, one would then come to a sickening realization of just what a tragic fact sin really is. Practically all of our problems spring directly or indirectly from sin.

We must keep in mind, too, the fact that sin is both personal and social. Indeed, one of the tragic facts about sin is the fact that it does not live a hermit life. A man cannot shut sin up in his own life and keep it there. Every sin ultimately has social implications. When Eve took of the fruit thereof and did eat, and then gave also unto her husband with her, she was simply doing the bidding of sin in that the one who is tempted in turn becomes a tempter to another. Poverty, crime, disease, war are examples of how sin leaves a hermit life and goes out to live among others.

Another thing needs to be said about sin. We usually think of sin in terms of the grosser sins. We associate drunkenness, immorality, murder, theft and other kindred and grosser things with sin. These things are, of course, sin. But sin often takes on a high polish. Indeed, sin can even become refined in a sense. It is this fact which makes sin so dangerous. In Jesus' thinking the Pharisees were sinners—dyed-in-the-wool sinners. Pride, bigotry, evil thoughts, evil desires, an unforgiving spirit, impenitence, covetousness, all forms of selfishness were sin, according to Jesus. The fact that sin often takes on a high polish does not make it any less deadly. A bullet that is highly polished is just as deadly as a dull, drab bullet.

Now, every one of us must reckon with this monster—sin. There is none righteous—no, not one! Sin as used in the Bible is often the Greek word for "missing the mark." All of us miss the mark. We do not always do the things we ought to do. We often do the things we ought not to do. There are sins of omission and sins of commission. Not to do some things is as bad as to do others. As Dean Brown says, "He who has no sense of sin has little sense of any sort."

In this connection it is well enough to call attention to a doctrine that has a more or less large following—the doctrine that there is no such thing as sin. Sin is not a fact of life, these people would say; it is only error. Or again sin is just the moral growing pains of the race as it comes up from the animal stage. Well, you may call carbolic acid what you will, but it is carbolic acid just the same, and it is deadly just the same. And you may call sin error or anything else, but it is deadly just the same.

In the light of the power and the penalty of sin, one can readily see that life's central problem is how to deal with sin. Men try to do many things with sin, such as to get away from it, to forget it, to cover it up, to ignore it, to compromise with it. In the final analysis, however, about the only thing a man can do with sin is to confess it and through the grace of God through Christ to overcome it. Sin is a power, and the only way sin can be overcome is by a mightier power. That is the significance of Jesus Christ. Men's supreme need is for deliverance from sin. The unique contribution which Jesus Christ made to the world was His ability to deal effectively and adequately with sin. Christ does more than merely forgive men their sins; He puts within men the power to overcome in a progressive way their sins. We call His name Jesus because He saves His people from their sin.

PROFITABLE FAILURES.

ure as a final decree, doubtless history would have revealed a far different aspect to our minds. Out of the ashes of defeat many have caught a vision of a more glorious plan and dared to try that plan. By determined effort, they created circumstances favorable for the successful promotion of a worthy cause. In this marvelous, yet restless age, servants of God often face apparent failure and become discouraged. The task seems too great and a number of those of consecrated devotion too few. In our weakest moments may we, through prayer, see that all the dross of selfishness in our motives and methods are consumed by Divine love. Then when the howling winds of obstinate forces threaten the structure, after much labor and sacrifice has been expended in the scaffolding, or when we find our designs like some storm-stricken area, with only a wreckage of debris of what before had given promise of fruitful reward, with trowel in hand, and faith of heart we shall go forth to spread the cement upon a more solid foundation, using the timbers salvaged from the wreck after the rough corners have been hewn off so that each may fit securely into a more imposing structure.

Life, therefore, is not one long series of successes, but rather depends upon what the builder can salvage from the failures of the past, which, after all, largely constitute the whole of life. When discouragement comes, as it will to all, at times, when the task seems great and your labor unrewarded, keep climbing with an upward gaze and some day perhaps your dream will become real. Your success may not be according to your own expectation, but if found faithful will be according to the wise design of the Master Architect of the universe and prove to be of more durable substance.

R. A. WHITTEN.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE.

At the last session of the Southern Christian Convention a co-operative plan for Piedmont and Bethlehem Colleges was approved. The board of trustees of Bethlehem College endorsed the affiliation in principle and changed the name to Piedmont Junior College. The committee on educational policy created by the board of trustees of Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., concurred in the movement and the educational affiliation of the two institutions was effected.

This affiliation has nothing to do with the financial plans of either institution. Each college must take care of its own financial needs as before, and all property rights remain unchanged. This means that Piedmont Junior College is just as much a Convention asset and liability as before the association with Piedmont College, and that the detail for financing the college, as arranged for by the Convention, must be carried out. That each member of the Churches of the Convention owes a debt to Piedmont Junior College, which is largely financial and which must be paid this year if the institution continues to operate. Our $50,000 campaign must be put over, and private donations should be coming in every day to apply on the current expenses which are running dreadfully behind every day. Something must be done soon if the school is to continue in operation until the close of the term.

The affiliation with Piedmont College is purely educational and fraternal. This is the extent of the present co-operation with Piedmont College. We have not changed the incorporate name of the institution. The business and financial end of the college is still under the name Bethlehem College. Incorporation, deed and constitution and by-laws are the same as before. The Convention has not lost in any sense the institution or any part of the institution. The property has in no wise passed out of the hands of the Convention. The name has simply been changed and the scholastic department organized with Piedmont College.

This is a very fine arrangement, for it gives this institution full credit with other institutions, as Piedmont College is fully accredited. If we had not established our credit with other institutions we could not have opened this year, as sentiment is so strong against uncredited colleges.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

MONDAY.

THOU CROWNEST THE YEAR WITH GOODNESS.

"Thy paths drop fatness."

To David a retrospect revealed the folds full of sheep. The fields were full of corn. The garnerers had plenty of stores. The country was at peace and had survived a famine and drought, and he burst forth in singing Psalm 65.

God crowns men as well as nature, and the passing of the old and the beginning of the New Year are supreme moments to us. Love has crowned the solitary life, success has crowned ambition, influence has crowned character, friendship has crowned the heart, trust has crowned honest toil, and honorable failures have not been without their compensation.

During the winter, while earth seems dead, we may "lay our ears to the ground" and hear the heartbeats of God's bosom and take a new courage, a stronger hope and a deeper consecration for life's task.

If thou hast resolutions, make them again, remembering that thy success will have behind it thy care and constant painstaking.

Prayer.—Oh, Lord God, we thank Thee for the life which Thou hast given us, for the riches of the successes, and for the good of failures. Give unto us for the New Year a child-like faith, a strong hand and a courageous heart. This, with the forgiveness of our sins, we ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE NEW YEAR'S CALL.

"He is faithful that promised."—Heb. 11:11.

"Thy Father worketh hitherto, and I work."—John 5:17.

All nature, all gifts, all talent, all successes, all failures, all sense and reason, call men to be co-workers with God. Life's affairs would be a pretty mess if we did not make daily resolutions to do our best. God gives but little without our toil.

So life is a great harvest-field, in which each in his own place is called forth to take his part and do his best. There is no room for an idler, nor any possibility for enjoyment and happiness on his part. If we would be truly happy, be useful, we must make our resolutions again. As thy New Year dawns, swing into line with the eternal energy, and life will never lose its tone.

Prayer.—Lord God, in the name of Jesus, our Saviour, give us the simplicity of faith, the liberty of grace, the glory of Christian service in our New Year. As we hope, give us trust in Thee. If misery comes, we will trust Thy never-failing mercy. Abide with us, our Helper, and keep us from evil forever. May all our works declare Thee in our hearts. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

OUR LINK WITH GOD.

"So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."—Psa. 90.

Man can do but little himself. He plows, he sows, he works and makes what preparation he can; then he has to wait.

There is something profoundly religious and infinitely suggestive, however, in waiting. What does one wait for? God. God has waited for us to do our part. Having done our part, the mystery of the harvest makes us fall down and worship.

A year of new hopes is before us with all its promises and the mystery of God. To toil ourselves is demanded, and the harvest, which is the gift of God, is our link to heaven.

Prayer.—Praise waiteth for Thee, O Lord, in Zion, and unto Thee shall our vows be made day and night. The name of Jesus is written on the gates through which we enter the New Year. His name relieves us of our sins in the past, and it gives us courage to face the future with a heart full of hope. Grant that we may enter upon that name and His saving love as we now go forward in the new page of our life. Amen.

THURSDAY.

CROSSES AND CROWNS.

"The house . . . was built of stone made ready at the quarry."—1 Kings 7:7.

Somebody said, "Out of winter comes spring, out of December comes June." We who live in the temperate zone think that perpetual summer is intolerable. There is no greenness of grass in June unless there has been the chillness of winter. God needs the one to make the other. Glory is fashioned out of the inglorious, or there would be no glory. Greenest grass comes after the fire.

Is it not also true that the riches, courtesies, graces, sympathies, most genuine fellow-feelings, spring out of tribulations? "My! what a time we had!" "Yes, but how mellow thy soul!" If we have had a hard time last year, and borne it in faith and trusted devotion to God, thank God for that which brings tender consequences.

Christ was content to have his crown fashioned in agony. He was offered the world of pleasure, delights and ease. Men tried to crown him, but He fled from it. The Father had a crown for Him in the redemption of men. It was a way of thorns, but it was a way of love. He chose between the crown that glitters and the crown that wounds.

What if a way is thorns if thereby thou shalt become a crown that shall shine with glory for the Master!

Prayer.—O merciful God, Thou hast given us a Saviour who took upon Himself the curse of our sins and snatched us away from Satan—out of death into life. We pray that all our doings this year may be ordered by Thy Spirit, and that we may be kept every hour by Thy renewing grace. Amen.

FRIDAY.

WORKING FOR SUCCESS.

"And when the vessel that he made of clay was marred in the hand of the potter, he made it again another vessel as seemed good to the potter to make it."—Jer. 18:4.

The farmer saves his best grain for seed next year for the sake of the best harvest in the future, for the sake of greatest achievement to come.

So must it be in our resolutions and our doings for our spiritual harvest to come. Take an inventory of the past, cull out the worst we've done, bring together the best and sum it up in the new life for the New Year. Sow the best and see what comes.

It was an autumn day
When next I went that way;
And what think you did I see?
What was it that I heard?
What music was in the air?
The song of a sweet-voiced bird?

But a sea of sunlight flowed,
A golden harvest glowed,
And I said, "Thou only art wise,
God of earth and skies!
And I praise Thee again and again,
For the sower whose name is pain.

—R. W. Gilder.

Prayer.—Father of us all, Thy right hand is ours forevermore. Support our souls and nourish us with Thy body and blood. Thou art the first to meet us this year. Each day that comes may we come into closer communion with Thee and live all the year in Thy saving, comforting and blessed fellowship. Amen.

SATURDAY.

"Well done, good and faithful servant."—Matt. 25:21.

The potter was a living presence to the clay. If we are to know true success, God must be an active presence in our lives, so felt that every desire, affection, and sympathy must be touched with His hand and actuated by His spirit. The divine ideal must evermore be present in our consciousness to give to our lives its highest features and truest charms. At the same time it is this presence which continually warns us against falling into fallacies and dejection of soul.

God is not unjust to demand of us what we can't do. We are not equally talented. He gives different talents to different ones, and He does not expect ten from each of us, but there is a possible result for each which will be worthy of His approval for each, and that each should attain to that approval has been his design for us. We are not expected to try to do something we can't do, but we are expected to fall in with what we can do—with the forces at work to do every moment's duty aright. That is the talent allotted us. Therefore, let come what He wills for us; His will be done. Faithfulness is the thing! "When He comes, will He find faith?"

Prayer.—Our Father, Thou art everything, or we are nothing. Make our every concern of the year rest in Thee. Let come what may, may we live through the year in holiness and patience. May we be found faithful to our trust now and forever. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"GOD IS LOVE."

I vexed me with a trouble thought,
That God might be
A God whose mercy must be bought
With misery.

But there's no wrath to be appeased
In heaven above;
No wrath with bitter anguish pleased,
For God is love.

No pleasure from our suffering
The Lord could steal,
Or anguish of the meanest thing
He made to feel.

But on Himself to grief He took,
The pain and loss
And shame of sin, and its rebuke
Upon the cross.

For love rejoiceth not in pain
Of good or bad,
But beareth all and still is fain
To make us glad.

Love circles with mercies sweet,
And guides our way,
And sheds its light around our feet
By night and day.

O love of Jesus! love of heaven!
O Holy Love,
Teach all the ransomed and forgiven
That God is Love.

—Walter C. Smith.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we understand but little of Thy grace. Give us Thy spirit and let us declare Thee in all our ways. Teach us how to acknowledge Thee in all our ways, and enable us to defend Thy cause unto the "washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost. Baptize us unto Thy eternal righteousness. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our financial report this week runs us up to $25,239.68. We now have to raise by the end of the year $4,760.32 to reach our goal of $30,000. Now, let everybody pull together for the last end of the rail and raise this by December 31st. Let every Church mail its offering in, and all the Sunday Schools that have money for the Orphanage please mail it in. Let every individual who wants to make a personal contribution to help us reach our goal mail us a check at once.

It will take a united effort on the part of all the Churches, Sunday Schools and every individual to push us up to the goal by the end of the year, but it can be done and I have faith enough in our people to believe it will be done. Shall we shout "Victory!" on the last day of December?

MESSIAH COMETH.

BY REV. L. L. LASSITER.

Now I know that the Messiah Cometh,
And that He is called the Christ the Lord;
When He cometh He will tell us all things:
"I that speak to thee am He," saith God.

Glory! glory! Wonderful Messiah!
To redeem my soul from sin He came.
Holy! holy! Lord! Almighty Saviour,
Heaven and earth unite to praise Thy name.

Oh! my brother, we have found Messiah,
And we know that He is call'd the Christ;
We have found the Saviour, God's anointed,
Of whom Moses in the law did write.

Praise the Lord, for we have found Messiah,
And that He has come to save the lost.
Now I know that I am His forever:
He redeem'd me at so great a cost.

Oh that shameful death—the crucifixion!
Then they laid Him in a borrow'd grave;
But He saw the wondrous resurrection
And ascended back to God, who gave.

Lo! He comes again in clouds of glory,
And His loved ones He will take away;
His true Church will be His bride forever—
Will you yield yourself to Him today?
Norfolk, Va.

A REQUEST.

Will the Churches of the Valley of Virginia Central Christian Conference be much in thought and prayer that soon, when called upon to name some one of their own number to co-operate with the Conference department and to lead locally in trying to stress the grace of Christian stewardship, unmistakably God may show who should be that one?

This is no light matter. Whether the person upon whom the lot falls be man or woman, young or old, is of little consequence. The big consideration should be, "Is it one who believes in and is willing to work for the coming of Christ's kingdom by actually putting first things first?"

MRS. J. J. LINCOLN,
Sec'y Stewardship V. V. C. Conference.

TWO GREAT TOWERS.

gleaned and Mr. Owner received no corn; whereupon he questioned his tenant, saying: "Look here, when are you going to bring my corn—I am to have every fourth load?" The reply of the old negro, when he said "There wan't no fourth load for you," sounded like many of our excuses for failing to pay God His portion of the harvest.

"God wants our best. He, in the far-off ages Once claimed the firstlings of the flocks, the finest of the wheat; And still He asks His own, with gentlest pleading, To lay their highest hopes and brightest talents at His feet.

He'll not forget the feeblest service, humblest love; He only asks that of our store we give Him His part.

The richest gifts for us, on earth or in heaven above

Are hid in Christ. In Jesus we receive the best we have.

The Lord of lords, by whom the worlds were made,

Through bitter grief and tears, gave us the best He had."

4. Practical paying. "That there be no gatherings when I come." Not only did Paul expect every one who considered himself a member of the Church at Corinth to pay according to the way God had caused him to prosper, but he expected that money to be ready for him as he passed through the city enroute to Jerusalem.

He sought to stimulate them to have the offering for the poor people of the mother Church in readiness. He did not care to spend much time in awaiting its collection. To that end, he specifies the practical aspect of money in hand "that there be no gatherings when I come." It is always poor business to put God off—to wait until the last minute to pay Him. It isn't practical. Efficient business houses demand prompt payment of bills that come due; why should not the Church do likewise? It is mighty easy to sing the old Doxology, "Praise God, from Whom All Blessings Flow," and truly His blessings do flow throughout the land—but God requires of you and of me more than just singing praise. He wants us to pay our honest debts. To withhold is to rob God of tithes and offerings. Some people pride themselves on being close schemers. It's not so bad to figure closely on personal investments; but to cheat God is a tragedy! Many there are today who are like—

Old Deacon Horner, who sat in the corner

As the contribution plate passed by.

Sweetly content, he dropped in a cent

And said, "What a good churchman am I!"

The story is told that a minister called upon an Irishman and asked him to give toward his pledge to the Church. The Irishman replied that he would as soon as he was out of debt; whereupon the minister said, "You are in debt to God now." The Irishman said, "I know it, but He don't crowd me like the other creditors." That's just it! God loves us and has an abundance of faith in all of His children. He expects us to be loyal unto Him, for it is required in all stewards that they be found faithful.

POUNDED.

On Sunday, November 11, 1928, we closed our service with the Happy Home Church. It has been seven years ago since we became pastor. The work has been very pleasant, and so the time has seemed short. We have received many blessings of the Lord while with the people. We feel we have some very dear friends in the Church and community. At various times we were given different things that aid our grocery account at home, all of which we highly appreciate.

At the close of the morning service, when we went to our car, it was loaded with useful articles. This was a pleasant send-off so as to keep down the sting of separation. However, we left that sacred place very reluctantly. Among the things found in the pounding were sweet and Irish potatoes, canned fruit, apples, dried fruit, eggs, butter, meat, flour, sugar, pickles, preserves, sheets, pillow-cases, towels and cloth, and also some money and a nice pair of driving gloves.

May the Lord richly bless you and prosper you in the Church is our earnest prayer. The fellowship has been a blessing to us as pastor. Rev. M. T. Sorrell is our worthy successor.

OBITUARIES

BRADSHAW.

Since the last meeting of our Woman's Missionary Society, the death angel has visited our midst and claimed one of our most loyal and faithful members, Mrs. Virginia Barrett Bradshaw, wife of Deacon J. W. Bradshaw, of Antioch Church. Resolved:

1. That her going from us was the will of the Heavenly Father, who doeth all things for a great purpose.

2. That while we mourn her loss, we bow our heads in submission to His will, for we believe all things work together for the good of those who love the Lord.

3. We extend to the Church, the society and her dear family our deepest sympathy, and pray God's richest blessings upon each of them.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be presented to her family, a copy placed on our records, and a copy sent to The Christian Sun.

5. May we continue to thank God for the life of this dear, consecrated mother and friend.

in Person County, N. C., near Cunningham, Tuesday, December 19, 1928, age 59 years, 7 months and 14 days.

In January, 1890, he married Mary Francis Clark, who survives him, together with two sons, Floyd Lafayette, of Burlington, N. C., and Norman H., of Cunningham, N. C. There are also three grandchildren and one sister, Mrs. Silas Lea, of Durham, N. C.

Brother Montgomery had been in poor health for the past two years. On the morning of his death he arose at his usual time and was at the barn feeding his stock when he was taken worse. He walked to the house, retired to his bed, and in a short while his spirit had taken its departure. He was a splendid citizen, faithful husband and devoted father. The high esteem in which he was held was evidenced by the crowd of relatives and friends at his funeral, although the weather was very disagreeable.

The funeral and burial were held at the Montgomery home, where the deceased had lived for sixty-five years. Services were conducted by the writer. The vacant place in the home cannot be filled. The Lord bless and comfort.

—Byron.

Our Father is always right. Let us live in that faith—and just one day at a time. Tomorrow will have its own cares.

Let us fail in trying to do something rather than sit still and do nothing.

MALONE.

Mrs. Margaret Parlea Malone was born in Caswell County, N. C., December 21, 1849, and passed into the spirit land on December 18, 1928. She leaves to mourn her going two daughters, Mrs. A. W. Warren, of Burlington, N. C., with whom she lived and in whose home she died, and Mrs. J. E. Dillard, of Rocky Mount, N. C.; also one brother, Mr. Lafayette Murray, Yanceyville, N. C., and thirteen grandchildren and fifteen great-grandchildren. Mrs. Malone formerly resided at Elon College, N. C., in the Warren home and made many friends. She was a most estimable woman, quiet, kind, complacent, a blessing and a benediction to the home and the community in which she lived. Truly a noble soul made a splendid contribution to life, and many rise up now to call her blessed. Her body was interred in the Burlington Cemetery on December 19th, the funeral services being conducted by the editor of The Sun, J. O. Atkinson, assisted by Rev. G. O. Lankford, D. D., Burlington. May our Father's blessings rest upon the bereaved ones.

HOUSE.

The useful life of Lizzie Mand Hense came to a close December 10, 1928, at the age of forty-one years. A period of illness, which resulted in paralysis, finally claimed her life. Since the age of seventeen she had been a member of the Church. She held her membership at Mt.

Olivet Baptist Church. Her body was laid to rest at Pope's Chapel. The funeral was conducted by the writer, with the assistance of Rev. E. M. Carter and her pastor, Rev. C. R. Hinton. She is survived by her husband, Romulus Weldon Hense, and five children—Rufus, Mack, Woodrow, John Henry and Lorine.

Mrs. Hense lived a life which was characteristic of motherhood—a life of usefulness and unselfish service and devotion to those whom she loved. May the peace of God keep the hearts of the bereaved.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE

WADLEY, ALABAMA

An Accredited Junior College

Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

Piedmont Junior College is training some of the best stock of America for Christian leadership, to be used by the nation and the world. Here is a great challenge and asset for students who wish to prepare themselves to serve in a worth-while way. The new Administration Building will be completed by time school opens this fall.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL.

PALESTINE'S JEWS.—

According to the report of the executive of the Palestine Zionist movement, there are 159,000 Jews in the Holy Land today. These constitute but 18 per cent of the total population. It is surprising to note that less than one-fifth of the population of Palestine is Jewish. But the Jews are on the increase in their native land. This increase is due to immigration and to natural increase. During the years since the World War, the birth-rate among Palestinian Jews has been increasing, and the death-rate decreasing.

FOR THE TRAINING OF RABBIS.—

Julius Rosenwald, chairman of the board of directors of Sears, Roebuck & Co., has added another large gift to his long list of notable contributions. Many of Mr. Rosenwald's previous gifts have been for the betterment and education of the negro. He has been the inspiration and a large contributor toward the raising of $3,000,000 for building Y. M. and Y. W. C. A.'s for colored people in cities that have more than a million negro population. He has contributed $2,500,000 to aid in constructing in the South schools for negroes which have cost $13,000,000. Recently Mr. Rosenwald has contributed $500,000 to the Hebrew Union College. This institution is located at Cincinnati, Ohio, and is a school for the training of rabbis. The bequest is conditioned upon the institution raising $3,500,000 by July 1, 1929.

BAPTIST MISSION BUDGET.—

The Northern Baptist Church Conference which was held in Chicago during the month of December adopted a budget of $5,100,000 for missions. The Baptists of thirty-six States are represented in this budget. The funds of this budget are to be used for home and foreign missions and for certain types of educational work which are distinctly missionary. Of the above-named sum, one million is to be constituted a revolving fund for the building of Church edifices. This would seem the most desirable form of aid to Churches that are not able to erect buildings commensurate with their needs. Where aid to such Churches takes the form of a gift, some Churches feel that when their building is paid for they are under no obligation to help other needy points. But under the revolving plan, a contribution goes on and on in its work of Church-building.

AS AN ASIATIC SEES US.—

Rabindranath Tagore, the Indian poet and philosopher, discussing the question, "What does Asia think of Christian civilization?" severely indicted our modern civilization. "In my travels through the so-called highly civilized countries—in Europe, in America, in Japan—I have found all the existing influences carrying the nations headlong toward material things, to the exclusion of spiritual things. These material things are of little worth. Today the great nations and their great men measure success in terms of bulk. This means that they are not great. . . . But what the people of Asia observe with most burning apprehension is the aggressive spirit of nationalism and imperialism which the nations of Europe cultivate. It is a menace to the whole world. Europe's political demoralization is so acute that it must necessarily react on Asia, whose peoples are the victims of western exploitation."

CHURCH UNION POSSIBILITIES.—

Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, speaking recently before a committee engaged in raising funds for the Broadway Temple, predicted that in 300 years there will be a united Protestant Church in this country. These are not very encouraging words for those who are actively and expectantly working for a unified Protestantism. They are encouraging to the extent that one so well versed in present-day conditions among Protestants as is Dr. Cadman believes that union is actually possible. There are those who contend that the very spirit of Protestantism is divisive, and that union among all Protestants is an impossibility. Judging by present-day conditions, Dr. Cadman's prediction is doubtless conservative, but Church history shows that, when great spiritual movements are once under way, there is unloosed a spiritual power that becomes irresistible. It has happened in the past. It may happen again.

ENTHRONING AN ARCHBISHOP.—

A British journal gives the following account of the ceremony by which the Archbishop of Canterbury is inducted into office. Dr. Cosmo Gordon Lang recently became the Archbishop of Canterbury. "Under the lofty arches of England's most famous cathedral, the new archbishop, surrounded by the bishops and dignitaries of the province, hears the mandate of the royal commissioners, authorizing the ceremony read. He takes the historic oath, administered by the dean, before being enthroned by the archdeacon on the archiepiscopal throne. Then, after prayer, he is conducted through the middle of the choir and installed in the dean's stall. Thence, whilst a hymn is sung, the procession moves through the screen to the marble throne, in which he is again enthroned. Returning to the high altar, he hears "Te Deum" sung, and then goes into the pulpit to preach. After his sermon and benediction, he goes into the nave to give a second blessing, which he repeats outside the west door, blessing the city, the country, and the people, before he goes through the cloisters, to the chapter house, for the ceremony of installation."

APPRECIATION OF OTHERS.—

About twenty-six persons meriting special distinction because of outstanding achievement in various spheres of activity during the year 1928 were given praise in the annual "Who's Who" number of the American Hebrew, just published. Among those who are included are John D. Rockefeller, Jr., who contributed $500,000 toward Jewish colonization in Soviet Russia; Ralph Adams Cram, the architect of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, who heads the Calvert associates group formed for the purpose of combating bigotry; Rev. Peter Ainslie, of Baltimore, and Rev. Albert E. Smith, a Catholic priest of that city, who were instrumental in organizing the League for Inter-religious Good Will. Others included are the Protest and Catholic members of the permanent commission on better understanding; Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, Martin Conboy, Judge Victor J. Dowling, Father Francis P. Duffy, Dr. W. H. P. Faunce, and Dean Roscoe Pound. Julius Rosenwald and Felix M. Warburg are honored because they contributed $5,000,000 and $1,000,000, respectively, to the movement for settling Russian Jews on the soil. Mr. Rosenwald also is praised for his gift of $500,000 to the Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati.

SALVATION ARMY LEADERSHIP.—

General Bramwell Booth, who is the supreme commander of the Salvation Army, has been critically ill for several weeks, with but little hope entertained for his recovery. Leaders in the Army are greatly concerned as to who shall be his successor in case of his death. General William Booth, founder of the Salvation Army, named his successor before his death. He appointed his brother, Bramwell Booth, who is at present supposed to be at the point of death. The only check upon the right of the incumbent to name his successor is a general council which has the power to decide whether the general of the moment is fit to set or to appoint a successor. It has been announced that a meeting of this council has been called for this month. It is the first time in the history of the Salvation Army that such a meeting has been held. The affairs of the Army have always been directed by a member of the Booth family.

Miss Evangeline Booth, who heads the work of the Army in the United States, is the only logical candidate of the Booth family. The daily press recently reported that when she went to England to visit her sick uncle she was not permitted to see him. The work of the Salvation Army which was at first so intensely spiritual has, as the movement has grown, assumed more and more material elements, until its directorate now calls for unusual administrative ability.

NOTES-PERSONALS

In his Suffolk Letter, Dr. Staley writes up the Christmas as observed in a Christian home. Don't fail to read it.

At the beginning of the year is a mighty good time to subscribe for or renew subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN has started the New Year with the largest list of new subscribers it has been our privilege to record in more than six years.

Dr. Nadol, president of Drewry College, Missouri, was also a visitor at Elon College, and, though speaking impromptu, delighted and edified the Men of the Church Club.

More "Peloubet's Select Notes" and "Tarbell's Teachers' Guides" have been ordered through THE CHRISTIAN SUN than in any previous year. This fact means much for the work in Sunday Schools for the year.

Dr. L. E. Smith, pastor of the Christian Temple, in Norfolk, Va., and President of the Southern Christian Convention, was in Richmond the first of this week on business. He made a brief visit to THE CHRISTIAN SUN office, giving us good cheer for the New Year.

Our Lanett, Ala., Sunday School, Mayor of Lanett C. R. Rutledge, superintendent, and Bro. G. P. Dunn, secretary, joins the growing list of our Sunday Schools, contributing once a month to missions. We are trusting that 1929 will see every Sunday School in the Southern Convention on the list of once-a-month contributors to advancing outside of its own community the kingdom of our Lord.

The editor acknowledges with pleasure and gratitude a copy of Dr. W. A. Harper's new book, "Character Building in Christian Colleges." It is a splendid volume, written in Dr. Harper's best style, and will have wide circulation. An editorial review of it is to be in next week's SUN. We congratulate our neighbor and associate in this another achievement of his brilliant intellect and incisive pen.

Dr. F. G. Coffin, 78 Smith Place, Columbus, Ohio, President of our General Convention and pastor of the United Church (the Christian and Congregational of Columbus), is now editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, being responsible only for two editorial pages. The editorial staff as now given is F. G. Coffin, editor; Sion M. Lynam, news editor; Hermon Eldredge, managing editor; Genoa M. Wheatley, editorial assistant. We feel that the Herald, the oldest religious newspaper in the world, will be able to carry on successfully and gloriously with such a distinguished staff.

Under date of January 2nd, Bro. O. H. Lambert, secretary of our Biscoe Christian Church, writes: "We organized a Sunday School last Sunday with four classes and thirty-four pupils on roll, and we will hold our first Sunday School next Sunday. The local forces of the Congregational people are co-operating with us, and are attending the Sunday School and Church, and we hope to work together for the advancement of His kingdom, as the consolidation of the two Churches seems certain now." Verily, the work of union between the Congregationalists and Christians goes on in many directions and seems only now to await approval of the national bodies to have full weight and effect, and this, it is believed, will take place not later than October of the good year 1929.

Chaplain H. E. Rountree of the United States Navy is chaplain of the navy's great ship "Utah" which brought President-elect Herbert Hoover from South America, returning from his "good-will tour" to our neighbors in the South. The Associated Press gives an outline of a sermon preached by the chaplain on Sunday, December 30th, the subject being "Regeneration—the New Life." Chaplain Rountree will possibly furnish SUN readers with a copy of the sermon. We print this week his sermon delivered on December 9th, "Ambassadors of Good Will," which sermon seems to us as most fitting for the occasion.

Dr. J. Edward Kirby, United Church, Raleigh, was a visitor at Elon College and delivered a most absorbing and engaging address to the Men of the Church Club at Elon College on Friday evening, January 4th. Dr. Kirby spoke from notes, but has, by request, agreed to write out the address and give it to THE CHRISTIAN SUN readers. He told us of some of the successes and failures of Congregationalism in the South, and made us all feel that the same successes and failures which the Congregationalists have experienced have been and are the same as those of the Christian Church. Verily, these two communions have been one in spirit and experience through the years, and it is only fitting that they should be one in name and activities.

The Congregational Mission Board has put under appointment as missionaries Dr. M. J. W. White and wife, now of New York, formerly of Norfolk. They are to go in the early fall or the latter part of the summer as medical missionaries to Cagayon, on the Isle of Mindiana, Philippines, and are to have charge of a newly equipped fifty-bed hospital. Dr. White, after graduating at Elon College, took his medical work at the University of Virginia, and having graduated there has done special work in New York hospitals, where he is now located in making thorough preparation for the great work he is to undertake as a medical missionary. It was more than a pity that the Christian Church did not have the funds with which to send out this splendid man and his wife as our own missionaries, but failing of this we rejoice that the Congregationalists have taken them up and will see to it that they are sent out with equipment for the good work they are to undertake for the relief of human suffering in the name of our Lord. Truly a great field has opened up to him and his, and herein we rejoice.

CASH REGISTERS AND CHRISTIANITY.

Dr. Halford E. Luccock, speaking before the divinity students of Yale, pointed out that the seeking after private gain is the chief present-day obstacle to Christianity. He said: "The chief obstacle to real Christianity today is the domination of the motive of private gain as the mainspring of life. This acquisitive motive spreads out into every problem and is the center of every festering sore in the world. In the English 'Who's Who,' one noted author gives as his favorite musical diversion 'playing solos on a cash register.' This is the principal reason for the clashing discord in the world today—too many million solos on the cash register! To accept Jesus' condemnation of the profit motive is not to join the fanatics who would dynamite the social order into chaos."

PROSELYTING OR SAVING.

We hear people who have not investigated missionary work say, with a sneer, "How many proselytes are you getting?" It isn't burglary to break into a house when the owner is inside asleep—if the house is on fire. It would be equivalent to murder not to. People who think missionaries are proselyting are badly informed. When eighty-five per cent of the children born have no legal parentage, it is not proselyting to establish Christian homes. Where people shoot and stab each other on little provocation, it is not proselyting to teach patience, love, pardon and good citizenship. Where intemperance and its baneful fruits reign, it is not proselyting to teach a normal life. Where towns of thousands of people exist with no religious instructor at all, it isn't proselyting to proclaim the gospel of the Son of God. Where a group of patriots are struggling to the best of their ability to lift their native land out of the moral and intellectual mire into which she has staggered under her load of ecclesiasticism, it isn't proselyting to run to their relief. If it is, it is a plain case of proselyting from the devil, and that is what missionaries are for, and so plead guilty.—The Messenger, Guatemala.

A SELF-EXPLANATION.

1. How long would it take to make my community really Christian if every other follower of Christ worked at it and prayed about it just as I do?
 2. How long would it take to make this nation Christian if all Christians gave their prayers and efforts and money toward it as I am doing?
 3. How long would it take to make disciples of all nations if all other Christians were to give this great program of Christ the place in their lives that it has in mine?
 4. Have I any moral right to expect or ask of other Christians, or even of preachers and missionaries, any service or sacrifice for Christ that I am unwilling to give myself?
- The work of winning the world to Christ is my work as really and as fully as it is the work of any one else. Let me not avoid it nor shirk it.—J. Campbell White.

Some may question the propriety of receiving gifts from unbelievers. Let such ask themselves: "Who is the real owner of the world? To whom belong its houses and lands, and its treasures of gold and silver?" God has an abundance in our world, and He has placed His goods in the hands of all, both the obedient and the disobedient. He is ready to move upon the hearts of worldly men, even idolators, to give of their abundance for the support of His work; and He will do this as soon as His people learn to approach these men wisely and to call their attention to that which it is their privilege to do.—Southern Watchman.

THE SUN LETTER.

Seven Churches made their pastors happy by complying with our special club rate and receiving a Stetson hat to present their pastor for a Christmas present. We were happy to send the hats and only wish that every Church in the Southern Convention had taken advantage of this offer.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN in every home is still one of our goals. Five thousand subscribers our second goal. THE SUN on a paying basis our third goal. Let every member of the Christian Church help us to reach these goals.

Elon College, N. C. Circulation Manager.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

AMBASSADORS OF GOOD WILL.

By CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE, U. S. N.

(The following is a sermon preached by Chaplain H. E. Rountree to the officers and men aboard the U. S. S. Utah on Sunday, December 9, 1928, as they were steaming into the harbor of Montevideo, Uruguay, which sermon was accepted as a very appropriate and timely message and meriting the thought of all citizens traveling abroad.)

Divine services were held aboard at 9:30 o'clock. The chaplain, after reading some very pertinent Scripture, said, in part:

Men, we are not without heaven's instruction and direction while visiting a foreign people. In 2 Sam. 10:12, it says: "Let us play the man for our people"; also God said to Jeremiah the prophet (29:7), "In peace shall ye have peace."

The greatest soul charm of our trip has been to stand on the bridge at night, or out in the open and gaze into the far distances of the open sea, gaze into the glorious starry heavens and stand in awe. There is no adequate response. It is simply glorious; it impels us to repeat David's words, "The heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament showeth his handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge." Days and days at sea make one realize as never before how great is the universe, how small is our little American continent, and what a pigmy is man who inhabiteth it. No wonder David said, "What is man that thou art mindful of him and the sons of man that thou visiteth him?" The whole thought overwhelmeth us; it induces reverence to God and impels us to say, "I will take the cup of salvation and call upon the name of the Lord."

Then when we contemplate how God has endowed man; what He has enabled man to do in the development of God's sciences of the earth and human ingenuity, and what He may do in the future, we agree with the sweet singer of Israel again, in spite of all that is to the contrary, "Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels and crownest Him with glory."

It is that glory we share in our present mission—that of being a man in representing the manhood of our country on an errand of "good will."

Ambassadors of Good Will.

The word "ambassador" is not a new word. It is as old as the ages, and means primarily "an accredited representative of a sovereign power; a diplomat charged with a special mission of maintaining friendly relations and as far as possible averting all hostilities; to show forth "good will" to the people.

The United States has such a representative in nearly every country, and upon their faithfulness and loyalty to the cause entrusted to them depends the success of that trust—our mission.

But are these the only representatives? Have we no part in such a trust? I am not talking about the ship's company as a whole, carriers of Mr. Hoover on his "good will" tour; I mean each individual. What are our personal relations and responsibilities?

Is it not true that we are the Americans, that we are part of the great body spirit of our country, and that anything we do short of our country's good will or short of the ideal as citizens of the United States, reflects upon our country and to a great extent annuls what others may do to represent it?

Is it not true that the United States is judged by the conduct and dealings of its citizens among other people?

Amidst the wonders of the earth, the sea, and the heavens, and the glory thereof, stands the wonderful fact that every one of us down to the last man is on a "good will" tour to another nation, and upon us depends the highest success of Mr. Hoover, and the highest success of our country.

Is this any different from the mission of Him who was the greatest ambassador the world has ever known—Christ? Whose first message was "Peace on earth, good will to men?" Whose last message was "Peace be unto you?" Whose last word was a commission to His followers, "Go ye into the world and teach all nations, and lo, I am with you even to the end of the world?" And who then looked to the Father and said, "Father, as Thou didst send me into the world, so sent I them?" "The glory which Thou hast given me, I have given unto them," "that the world may know that Thou didst send me—that they may behold my glory."

The first gift of Jesus had for man was His confidence in them and their cause, and history reflects that all good of the world has been built upon that fidelity. Therefore, our mission—His peace—becomes glorified harmony, and we are His emissaries entrusted with the spirit and the power to expel from the world all that causes disturbances, and all that hinders.

What an honor it is that we are the guardians of our country! How inspiring it is still to believe that a mission of good will is the carrying forward the very thing that Jesus came to earth to set in motion and accomplish, and that we are each an ambassador in miniature. Never mind that we are so small, that our names shall never be mentioned, that we shall never be known. Life's most perfect gifts are the little unseen and unheralded things. Christ said that it is "the cup of cold water given in the right spirit that counts most. And we know that it is the smile, the kind word, the hope of hearts, and the spirit of action that lends charm and warms hearts and makes friends.

This is the kingdom; this is heaven's message to all the world; this is our trust—and the sublimest thought is that God's will is being done on earth as it is in heaven when this is being sincerely promoted.

Prayer: Our Father, we pray that we may realize our true relations to life to others, to the world and to Thee; that we may acknowledge this in all our doings; that we may be faithful to our trust as playing the man for our people, and show us the right success with amazing fruitfulness. Amen.

ROSEMONT.

One of the most interesting organizations of the Rosemont Christian Church is the Woman's Missionary Society. This received the inspiration for its beginning at a meeting of the Christian Missionary Association held in the Portsmouth Christian Church about the year 1910, when Col. J. E. West made one of his great speeches and sent some of our good ladies home determined to do something for missions. This was about a year before the beginning of the Woman's Missionary work in an official way which gives Rosemont the honor of being on the ground floor of this great work now being done by the women of our Southern Convention.

The best information we have been able to secure shows that the following were members of that first missionary society in our Church, which existed before the Conference launched the movement officially: Mrs. B. F. Gibson, Mrs. Fannie Herbert, Mrs. O. S. Mills, Mrs. Tom Morrison, Mrs. J. R. Morrison, Sr., Mrs. Thomas Morrison (familarly known as "Grandma Morrison"), Mrs. Kate Crockett, Mrs. H. R. Morrison, Mrs. H. L. Bondurant, and Mrs. O. F. Smith. There may have been others; if so, we will be glad to know about them.

This society met first every two weeks—one meeting was for home missions, the other emphasized foreign missions. Later the meetings were held monthly, but they have been held regularly ever since, never having disbanded, even for the summer months.

Nor has the society ever had any plan for raising its money except the systematic free-will offering. Mrs. O. S. Mills is the present president of the society, and is making a good one. Mrs. H. R. Morrison is the efficient treasurer, and the records are most faithfully kept by the secretary, Mrs. H. C. Hedley.

The most faithful member of the society at the present time is Mrs. B. F. Gibson. In fact, she has been one of the faithful all these years. She is most highly esteemed by every member of the society, as well as every member of the Church, and even though she is now seventy-five years old, she is still one of the most faithful attendants at the meetings of the society, having been present at every meeting during the last year, only two others doing as well, viz: Mrs. O. S. Mills and Mrs. J. F. Morgan.

Rosemont Church appreciates very much the good work done by all the women of the Church, both in the Church and in the missionary society, and is especially proud of the good work of the older women of the Church and prays that the good Lord will spare them many, many years to come to inspire those of us who are younger to live helpful lives to the end that we too may be like them, a blessing to those who are to come after us.

SITUATION IN PORTO RICO.

Late word from Superintendent Mohler, in charge of the A. M. A. work in Porto Rico, says: "The problems of the rehabilitation of Porto Rico are just now getting worse, sickness is more prevalent and the natural supply of foodstuffs from the island itself has come to an end until new things can be grown. The survey made in Humacao recently gave eight hundred families still without homes and with no resources to rebuild their houses. It seems that the money that the Red Cross is able to provide will be quite insufficient to relieve the need. Tomorrow Dr. Watson is opening a clinic at the Playa of Humacao to help out in an epidemic condition there."

Senator Bingham, who has recently returned from a survey of conditions in Porto Rico, declares that the Red Cross should keep on indefinitely and that there should be a large government appropriation either for relief or for loans to small planters, since the need is greater than in any disaster area he has ever visited. The Red Cross has done some fine work, a good deal in the way of permanent replacements of houses for the peasants as well as immediate relief. But they have planned to close their emergency work in December. There will be a great deal of intense distress for months and perhaps years in view of the fact referred to by Superintendent Mohler that natural food supplies are about exhausted and the production of the island will only slowly be restored. For a long time yet the people of Porto Rico must be helped from outside if they are not to suffer from extreme food scarcity and widespread epidemic.—Congregationalist.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

CHURCH UNION.

The Churches have been practicing union more and more for some years. They are now preaching and talking and theorizing about it. In this instance, the talking and theory came after the fact and the practice.

There are hundreds of communities that have been practicing Church union, except in theory, more and more for the last decade. All denominations in some communities attend the Methodist Church on one Sunday, and then all go to the Baptist Church the next Sunday, and thence to the Christian Church the following Sunday, and wind up at the Presbyterian Church the fourth Sunday, and start the rounds again next month. A visitor to the community cannot for the life of him tell from the preaching and the character of the service in which Church he is worshipping. (Possibly, if it were Communion day in the Baptist Church some individual member or the preacher, in an unguarded moment, might say something to indicate that denomination, but it will be done apologetically, if at all.) In their Church worship, in their evangelistic meetings, in their Christmas entertainments, in all their extra-territorial activities and service, they are one—one in spirit, one in practice and in aim, and often, in closing, sing "Blest Be the Tie that Binds." Verily, Church union has been going on in practice more and more for a decade. The practice has outrun the theory.

And now the theory and the discussion and the generalization are in the air. So, we seem to be headed for Church union and Christian unity in fact, in principle and in theory. The Christian Church and the Congregational Church are theorizing and speculating about merging. In spirit and in purpose, they have already merged. Several months ago some of us met in Raleigh, N. C.

—Christians and Congregationalists—to see what the Raleigh congregation had done and was doing about Christian union. The good folks, doctors of divinity, philosophers, scholars, writers, thinkers, delegates and nondelegates assembled, decided that it was good to be there, and that the Raleigh congregation was really practicing a thing that could now be preached. So we went out and began to preach what our Raleigh congregation was practicing. And now, many months after, we are assured that one going into the Raleigh Church, our United Church, will discover no difference in the kind of service rendered and the manner and method of worship, save that the Church seems to be making more progress in building up its congregation and establishing its morale. The practice at Raleigh certainly has given us something to preach about. And it seems to have demonstrated the fact that what we Congregationalists and Christians need is to bring our theory and speculation and generalization up to date with our practice. Since that event in Raleigh, we notice dozens, not to say hundreds, of other like cases throughout the country, in which practice has preceded the preaching and the theory.

It is noted in a paper today that the Methodist, the Baptist and the Christian Churches of Springboro, Pa., have united and formed the United Church. This would have been startling news a few years ago, because that decision would have preceded experience. Our guess is that the Methodist, the Baptist and Christian Churches of Springboro, Pa., have been practicing Christian union for a long time and that it took all three congregations to make one. Evidently, these people have decided that instead of having visiting preachers of three different denominations that they will have one preacher to live in their midst and give himself to the task of developing them morally and spiritually. The theory and the outward act stand in the way of a very wholesome practice. We are personally acquainted with communities which could easily and would gladly support a minister to reside in the community and give all of his time, energy and activity to the betterment of the community, but instead of this they have three or four preachers whose time and talent and energy and interest are so divided that no community gets the full benefit and all-time service of a minister.

The present age demands not dogma and doctrine, but life and works and achievement. It matters little now that a man goes to meeting and says, "Lord, Lord," or declares that he believes with all of his heart in one sort of baptism or one sort of Communion; what his neighbors want to know, and what the world demands is what sort of life is the Church member living, what are his deeds, what are his practices, what are the fruits and results of his living and his conduct? It matters little if one professes a doctrine or a dogma, unless one's life reflects that doctrine and dogma in the beauty of holiness, and, as such, bears fruit. It was well enough in ages past for the thinking and the activity of the Church that doctrines and dogmas be emphasized. This emphasis did good and had its day; and far be it from us to say or think that such emphasis did not produce its results and its great and good lives. But ours is a practical age, and God seems to be revealing Himself to our time as one who demands service, and it is service that unites and binds and brings together. However much a community of people may be divided in theory and in beliefs, a common service for God and fellow-man will bring them together.

There is a beautiful legend as to how the city of Jerusalem, "the Holy City," had its origin. The legend is that two brothers owned adjoining farms. One was married and had a large family, the other was a bachelor and lived alone. At harvest time one day the bachelor brother reasoned that his married brother had a large family to support and needed more sheaves of wheat than he himself needed. So, at night, he decided that, without his brother's knowledge, he would move sheaves of wheat from his own farm over to his brother's field. On the same day, the married brother reflected that his bachelor brother did not have the joys and happiness of family life as he himself had, and in his loneliness needed more of this world's goods and comforts than he himself needed. So, he decided at nightfall he would move sheaves from his own field over to the field of his bachelor brother. Next day, though he had labored in the night in removing sheaves from his own field, each found that he had as many sheaves the next morning as he had the evening before. The performance was repeated till the third night, and is known as "the miracle of the sheaves," because while the one brother moved sheaves at night from his own field, he found as many there next morning as he had the day before. On the third night, while the two brothers were bearing sheaves to each other's field, for the first time their roads met, and they discovered what each was doing; and the legend is that where these two brothers met in this friendly, brotherly service, God planted Jerusalem, the Holy City, and there it still exists and is typical of the Holy City, the new Jerusalem. At any rate, where there is brotherly, kindly and friendly service, the city of God on earth begins to be built.

The Churches of the present time have on their hands the most gigantic tasks of all ages. Crass materialism, worldly mindedness, sin in many forms, and evil of every type are pressing hard. The Church needs to get together and present a solid front to the foe, and thus in its united strength and power make an impact upon the world of wickedness and waywardness and sin such as has never been made before. Christ prayed that they all might be one, even as He and the Father are one. When that prayer is answered, we may hope for and expect a united effort on the part of Christendom to make such an impact on the world of sin and unrighteousness as has never been made before.

A STUDY IN EXPENDITURES.

Many of us do not like to study expenditures. We prefer to make and to spend without going back to analyze what and how we have spent. One of the first things that occurred to Jacob after his ladder vision of Jehovah was that he was responsible for the way in which he spent his money. Realizing that responsibility, he decided he would give one-tenth of it to the Lord. That was a long time ago, and many have not improved on Jacob's decision. In fact, most of us have not yet reached the high ground to which Jacob came. We people of the United States know how to make money, but we have never learned how to spend it. Other peoples call us a nation of spendthrifts, and an English critic, writing of us some months ago, said that the United States was "no longer a country, it was a picnic"—a jolly set of folks off on a rollicking time, seeing how much money they could spend for trifles, tricks and truaney.

In 1925 we spent on our War and Navy Departments $707,029,890. That is non-productive, and its object was to be ready to fight and to kill folks. During that same year all of our Protestant Churches contributed for all Church purposes a total of $469,871,673. These expenditures seem small in a way in comparison with some others. In 1927 we spent for tobacco $2,031,000,000. In the previous year we spent for candy $1,000,000,000, and for soft drinks $497,500,000, and in the same year for gasoline (for pleasure vehicles only)

$1,541,961,000. During that year, contributions to colleges amounted to $118,114,084. Think of a country that in one year will spend $137,000,000 more for defense than for the work of all Churches, and that every thirteen cents spent for gasoline, one cent is paid to colleges to educate boys and girls who are not able to pay the full cost of their education.

There is no trifle to be mentioned for which we do not spend more money than we do for the serious purposes of religion and of collegiate education. Verily, Woodrow Wilson was right when he said that either we must spiritualize our industry or we will materialize our civilization. Money carries with it a weight of responsibility, and the Bible teaches nothing more clearly than the fact that men and women are held responsible to God for the way in which they spend their money.

THE EXCEPTION MADE THE RULE.

The world tries to work on too large a scale, and fails to do the small thing that needs to be done. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." One day at a time is the way life is lived. Surveys, questionnaires, contests, investigations and many modern methods of arriving at physical, mental, social and moral conditions in the whole country err in so many ways as to produce pessimism as the reaction in human society. A clinic in a single city will report a certain young man and a certain young woman as the most perfect specimens of health in the United States; a survey in some comes if the country will report the crimes, the immoralities and the robberies as the common condition among the young people throughout the nation. These examinations, surveys, investigations are made in small areas and limited numbers and are often exceptions and can in no adequate sense be received as the condition throughout the whole land and including all the people.

There is much of crime, misbehavior, dishonesty, immorality, robbery, murder, and dishonesty in society at the present day, but these are exaggerated and the good goes unnoticed. Ten honest men will conduct their business in an honest way, and hundreds of honest customers will buy and pay for goods all the week; but if one thief robs a store of a few goods on Saturday night, it is the talk of the town for days. The public mind is poisoned by the exception and talks about the bad condition of modern society. One man is arrested for selling liquor or being drunk and people begin to say, "There is more drinking than there ever was." One official goes wrong and they begin to say that the official world is corrupt. One bank fails and the run on banks begins. The greatest calamity is not that men steal, drink, rob, and even kill; but the greatest calamity is a loss of confidence in men. The best drivers put the most confidence in horses; the best hunters put the most confidence in dogs; the best officers put the most confidence in men; the best husbands put the most confidence in wives; the best wives put the most confidence in husbands; the best parents put the most confidence in children; the best children put the most confidence in parents; the best heads of business put the most confidence in employees; the best employees put the most confidence in superintendents, and the best Christians put the most confidence in God.

Society is better than the bad people in society. The Church is better than the unfaithful members of the Church, and the individual is better than his own wrong ways. Society needs a new faith in God, the Church, the government, and people as a whole. The world is moving on toward larger intelligence, better character, greater wealth, more friendly relations, and international peace.

THE GREATEST BUSINESS IN THE WORLD.

BY REV. E. B. WHITE.

It seems to me that the greatest business in all the world is our Heavenly Father's business. Our Blessed Lord, the world's first Missionary, came from glory to seek and save that which was lost. His business is the disciples' business—the winning of souls. As our Lord stood on the Mount of Ascension, His faithful little Church about Him, He emphasized the fact that all power is His, and bids them, therefore, to go out everywhere and evangelize all nations. "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you" (John 20:21).

Whatever our creed, we stand with admiration before the matchless and sublime character of our Lord Jesus Christ—the "Ancient of days," the "Messiah" of prophecy, the most august being ever born into the world. The Lord of lords, and King of kings, is the bright center in which all lines of moral and spiritual perfection and beauty meet.

The Lord of glory, Christ, the "anointed" One, is the fountain spring of that nobler life which is born of the spirit, and when we are so born through faith in Him, we are willing to live in His spirit and anxious to do the things which He expects us to do. One of the greatest, if not the greatest, honors that can be bestowed upon any person is the opportunity to make the world better.

The greatest job of the Church is witnessing for Jesus. The one business of the Church is to win souls to Christ. Our Lord sought to save individuals rather than masses of men. We should follow His example, as well as that of the apostles. But if we are going to be successful soul-winners we must know Jesus Christ, because it is impossible to preach His Lordship prevailingly save in living fellowship with Him. Our testimony will lack compelling power, save as the truth is proclaimed in living, personal comradeship with our crucified, risen, living, interceding, justifying Saviour—the world's only hope of salvation.

Beloved, the missionary idea came into the world with Christianity itself. Our Redeemer came to emphasize and to illustrate God's longing for the salvation of all mankind. This Divine Shepherd came to bring us gently and surely back to our Heavenly Father, as the shepherd goes after his sheep that is lost. Our Lord gave us a beautiful, living, incarnate exhibition of our Creator's infinite, fathomless, compassionate love; yet He was rejected of His own. The "Messiah" of prophecy bore the hissing, hooting, spitting and scourging; He staggered under the beam of the cross; died on Calvary and rose again for our justification, that He might persuade mankind to be reconciled by the unmistakable proof and guarantee of forgiveness. Jesus Christ has honestly and rightfully purchased us. He paid the costliest treasure in His possession, namely: His precious and sacred blood. In His precious blood is to be found the life of the world, the life of reconciliation with God, in it there is peace, joy, righteousness, resurrection! In the suffering and death of our Lord, we see the matchless love of God marvelously manifested, law is upheld, and sin is radically dealt with. The death of Christ the Lamb of God—is the very pledge of God's great love towards thee, whosoever thou art, how deeply soever thou hast sinned. The very thought of our Lord's birth, life, death, resurrection and ascension overwhelms us with astonishment, gratitude and praise.

As in Adam, all have received sin to damnation, so by Christ Jesus all have grace offered to salvation if they reject not the same. The gospel of Jesus Christ is the solvent for the religious, educational, industrial, political and social problems of our age. There never was a time when the help and guidance and power of our Lord was more needed in men's lives, in all our lives, than it is today.

The Creator, Lawgiver, and Ruler of the universe could by His omnipotent grace, save the lost without us, but He chooses to develop character by making us co-workers with Him. The beautiful story of salvation is not wafted by the winds nor rolled by the waters of the sea. It is carried by His faithful, spirit-filled, spirit-led "witnesses" who go, as they are commanded to go, to all the world with the life-giving messages of the glorious "gospel" which means good news, glad tidings—tidings of God's great love to man. The twelve were divinely called not to save themselves but to be co-workers with their Lord in the saving of immortal souls. These timid, uneducated men received their commission in unmistakable terms: "Go, evangelize." "Ye are my witnesses; and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

The great commission was not only for a few chosen disciples, or those who are entirely given up to the gospel ministry, but for true followers of our Saviour who have felt the marvelous love of God in their souls; every one who is born again. Christians have a glorious mission in life, and that sacred mission is to be co-workers with Christ in evangelizing the children of men, both at home and abroad. Beloved, it does seem to me that every one who has received the light of the gospel from the King of kings, who is the golden center around which clusters the hope of the world's salvation, is morally bound to support the interests of His kingdom.

"We, then, that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves. Let every one of us please his neighbor for his good to edification. For Christ pleased not Himself" (Rom. 15:1-3). These words, beloved, outline the philosophy of Christian missions.

We know that men and women out of Christ are lost. We know that only Jesus can save. Should we not be willing to sacrifice time, energy and money to bring the lost to Christ? As God thinks of us in our weakness and destitution, so we should think of the weak, the tired and the burdened; those in darkness, ignorance and superstition, and render sympathy and help. Our Lord organized His Church for this definite aim. It is a solemn thought that the Lord has committed the work of evangelization into our hands, and He is depending upon us to become active in the great interests of His kingdom. In our own life, we must let Him have His own way with us. Absolute surrender to the Holy Spirit must be our aim.

The spirit of missions is the spirit of the Master, and the more of that beautiful spirit we have the brighter and fuller burn our own altar fires. In this materialistic, money-made, pleasure-crazed age, we fail to realize what a joy it is to tell men this new story, old yet ever new, the story of grace divine and all sufficient. Let us not forget that personal contact with the lives of burdened, suffering humanity is the best way to express sympathy and help. The personal touch is the secret of the early progress of Christianity. Empowered by the indwelling Christ, we are to witness for Him and win the lost. This is our main business in this world. We must serve in the spirit of the Master, who "went about doing good."

I am convinced that it is time for a great awakening throughout our Churches in the matter of missions, home and foreign. Why? Because this work is related to the very life and existence of the Church. For only as she keeps close to humanity itself, and labors to uplift fallen men and women, can the Church expect the pillar of fire

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Readers will, no doubt, excuse a letter more personal than usual, as Christmas brings into exercise more personalities than any other season of the year. In fact, the Christian faith that celebrates the birth of Jesus, as Christmas, is personal in its experience, its service, and its hopes. Leave out all the theological and scientific questions, and there remains Jesus as a Babe, a Boy, a Man, and a Saviour, a person, and He says: "Follow me." The preaching that counted most in Paul's day, and counts most in our day, is the preaching of Jesus Christ as a personal Saviour.

On Christmas Day I was at the home of my son-in-law, Ben T. Holden, his wife and four children—Patricia, Ben T., 2nd, Rebecca Anne, and John Staley—in Louisburg, N. C. The Christmas tree in the living-room was beautifully decorated and lighted with candles, and a regular family Christmas program was rendered. It opened with "Joy to the World! the Lord is Come" as a chorus. This was followed by a recitation from Luke by Ben T., 2nd, after which "Papa" Staley offered prayer, closing with the Lord's Prayer, in which all joined. This was followed by a carol, as a duet, "It Came Upon the Midnight Clear," by Patricia and Ben T., sister and brother. The story of the "Shepherd Lad" was given by Rebecca Anne, after which "Merry Christmas" was recited by John Staley Holden. "The First Noel" was sung as a quartet by the four children—Patricia, Ben T., Rebecca Anne, and John Staley. "Northern Strains," a piano solo, was played by Rebecca Anne, and this closed the formal program. Mrs. O. Y. Yarboro, a neighbor guest, accompanied all the songs on the piano.

After the fine program came the distribution of more than a hundred presented to the sixteen persons in the room and the excitement and loud thanks as the packages were unwrapped and the gifts were known. Children, parents, and guests all entered into the joy of the occasion. Little John Staley, dressed up in his policeman suit with badge, gun and handcuffs, kept order in the midst of disorder while the rest opened their packages, ate nuts and candy and shouted over their presents. Sixteen persons were present: Mr. and Mrs. Ben T. Holden, their four children—Patricia, Ben T., 2nd, Rebecca Anne and John Staley—Mr. and Mrs. O. Y. Yarboro, Mrs. W. G. Barrow and daughter, Miss Frances and grandson William Barrow, Jr., Miss Jane Gray Perry, Charles Shilling, of California; Rev. W. W. Staley and Mrs. Annie Staley Calhoun, of Suffolk, Va., and Billy Ragland.

Then came the Christmas dinner, which was not the least of the happy Christmas Day.

Some people write and preach that the Christian home is passing, and that children are being neglected in their religious training in the home; but, if that is true, this Holden family is an exception, for they have grace at meals, family prayers, attend Sunday School and Church, read THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and have as good a time on Christmas as home ever knew. In the days when men got drunk on Christmas, mothers cooked, and children got no presents, and did not go to Sunday School, home, in the minds of some people, were religious homes. Some people do not know the past, do not improve the present, and make little preparation for the future. Wise people live in three periods, the past, the present and the future. The ignorant know little of the past; the selfish live only in the present, and the fa-natically religious dream only of the future. Jesus brought Christmas and all that it implies; and it is our privilege to observe Christmas in a Christian way, and then help to make the New Year the best year ever known.

ELON LETTER.

Henry Churchill King, the emeritus president of Oberlin College, has recently spoken of colleges as offering to men and women opportunity to erect memorials for themselves "better than granite monuments." Dr. King is reported to have said, "Properly to plant and nourish a good college is one of the highest privileges men and women can have. There is no soil as productive as mind, and no seed so fruitful as ideals. He who wishes to do the greatest possible good, and for the longest possible time, should nourish the fountains of learning and help thirsty youth to the water. Beating hearts are better than granite monuments."

Dean Roscoe Pounds, of Harvard Law School, is also reported to have given expression recently to similar thoughts to those just quoted from President King. Dean Pounds says, in speaking of "a real monument," that, "None of us likes to be forgotten. From the time of Cheops to the present day, men have been building pyramids and tombs, erecting tablets and headstones to tell that they are dead. But the thinking man who puts his money into a college provides a living memorial to tell that his spirit is alive as long as the institution stands. For example, a young man has recently finished with a distinction a course at the University of Oxford where one of his privileges was a scholarship provided through a gift made to that institution nearly a thousand years ago."

If these two eminent American scholars are correct in their opinions and conclusions, would it not be well for the members of our Christian denomination to give careful consideration to the strengthening of their educational work? Supporting Christian education, according to Dean Pounds, offers to generous-hearted men and women a real memorial, and according to President King this memorial is better than a granite monument for the individual who provides it.

We do not know that Elon has made wise use of the funds that have been given it, but the best judgment that the board of trustees could command has been used in the investment and expenditure of these funds. The result that has been achieved here has received the praise of eminent leaders in education outside of our denomination, and this is some reason for the Church to believe that the money it has placed here has been well used.

I am happy to say that the college has opened up as well as could be expected, in view of the general health conditions throughout the Church. In this connection, it should be said that Elon is in better condition to care for students when they are ill than most homes are. The regularity of life on the campus, the modern conveniences and the trained nursing which the college provides all contribute to this favorable situation.

VALLEY LETTER.

Our revival meeting at Timber Ridge resulted in twelve conversions and additions to the Church. Congregations were good most of the time, and the interest, while apparently rather dull at first, continued to grow until the end.

Immediately after closing there, I began a meeting at Joppa. This is one of our weaker Churches. The congregation was small at first, but gradually increased as the meeting went on. Towards the close of the meeting the congregations were unusually good, though we were prevented from holding our closing service on account of rain. I would like very much to have held several more services there, but could not stay longer. There were three conversions and additions to the Church.

I am at home now, trying to peep over the top of piles of neglected work in my study. Christmas services, however, are on hand now, and will take much of my time until they are over. I have held four revival meetings since the latter part of September, have been away from home almost all the time, have preached almost every night, and two or three times every Sunday; conducted funerals, kept up a little with my pastoral work all over my field, attended to a multitude of duties, have driven my little Ford 4,400 miles since Conference, and have pulled through in good shape physically, for all of which I am profoundly grateful to the Giver of every good and perfect gift.

With Rev. R. L. Williamson on the job in Winchester, and Revs. W. B. Fuller, Joe French, B. J. Earp and myself among country Churches of the Conference, we have arranged, I think, to take care of all our work. Now, if the folks will stand by the work in a fine way it looks as though we ought to have a good year here.

Winter is here now, and all of us may have to slow down a little, so far as active work in the field is concerned. My purpose is to stay in my study as much as I can between Sundays until about March, and then I shall have revival meetings to hold in three of my Churches.

This is a busy world, and the King's business requires haste, diligence, strength, perseverance, study and prayer.

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

First, since the days of the apostles, Christian is the proper name under which all Christians may unite in carrying the gospel of Christ to all the nations of the world.

First in publishing a religious periodical the Herald of Gospel Liberty, now in its one hundred and twenty-first year.

First in admitting both men and women to the same courses of study in college.

First, by adopting a resolution (at the General Convention of the Christian Church, held at Urbana, Ill., October, 1926) in requesting our department of Christian Education to give proper place in their program for the much-needed instruction in purity of heart and life as given in the Bible our rule of faith and practice. We can make a grand success if we will, and thus set a needy, worthy example to other Churches.

This has not been an easy task, as the general opinion seems to be that this teaching in the main should be given by the parents in the home. This is true in part, but the pastors and other Christian workers should also do their part faithfully in this all-important work. To assist parents and others in this duty, a series of purity leaflets and booklets have been prepared, graded to the needs of different ages in the homes. These are based upon Bible teachings and some hygienic truths and are not published for money profit, but for human betterment in Jesus' name. These are published at cost by the World-Wide Purity Legion, of which a member of the Christian Church is superintendent and who is also purity evangelist of one of our Christian Conferences. Much prayer and study have been given to this truly important Christian mission which will help all other of our missions when our members give it needed attention and encourage others to do so. Could the booklet problem solved be heartily accepted and practiced by adult members in general, it would, by God's grace, in many instances, add to health of body and strength of soul. The spirit of self-denial would also be increased and the Lord's tithe and more would gladly be put into His treasury for the better support of His great work. Oh, that many would believe this and prove it!

Of the series of graded purity booklets, our own dear Bro. Burnett wrote one, Dr. S. Q. Helfenstein one, Rev. Mrs. Bullock one, and the truly helpful address of Dr. F. G. Coffin on "Inducements to Purity." All of these are very helpful. They are paid for and they are free. They should be out doing good. Of inducements to purity, a secretary in England wrote me, "Every minister in England should read it." Surely, then, our own should read it. I wish they might read it three times and not forget it. There are now over thirty booklets and leaflets on the list, many of them are free, but we have very few left of some numbers. We hope a goodly number of persons will send gifts to publish new editions. This is a vastly important mission. We cannot afford to neglect it because of the great need and because it will also add much soon in the support of other missions.

A few of our ministers have kindly sent gifts to help. Many could share a little for a cause as needy if they study how to deny self of less important things. One did without a summer hat for this cause.

It is pleasing to see the very encouraging letters some of our good people have written as to the urgent need of the work to which we give for the sake of individuals, the homes, the Church and the nations, accepting no money pay. God provides for real needs. We make them few, and thus we can also have a little to give to other missions as well as to this.

Our dear good Dr. Harper sent a dollar for the work and also asked us to send him some purity leaflets that he might enclose in some of the letters he writes. Many could help the world-wide work thus.

Oh, how very much we miss our truly lamented Dr. Alva Martin Kerr, who so very kindly encouraged us by his notices of this work and wrote privately also. As to the booklet, "A Truly Trying Problem Happily Solved," he wrote as follows: "Give it as large a circulation as possible. I see nothing in it offensive. The truths it presents need to be reiterated again and again from many viewpoints."

"It is good. It should be a help to all who seek help. Men should appreciate the privilege of helping a worthy cause. May God bless you and give grace, patience and perseverance."—S. Q. Helfenstein.

"I like the pamphlet very much."—W. A. Harper.

ORDINATION SERVICE.

In a unique service, the first of its kind so far as is known, Prof. Ross Ensminger, of the department of religious education of Elon College, was on December 19th ordained a minister of the gospel in the Congregational and Christian Churches by a joint ecclesiastical council of these two denominations called for the purpose. The ordination service was held at 11 o'clock in the morning in the Whitley Memorial Auditorium, and the ordination sermon was preached by Dr. Ozora

S. Davis, moderator of the National Council of Congregational Churches and president of the Chicago Theological Seminary.

This joint ordination in which two denominations participate and at which the candidate becomes a minister in two denominations at the same time is highly significant and prophetic in view of the process of union now going on between the Christian and Congregational Churches, which union has already led to the merger of the higher educational institutions of these two denominations in the States of Georgia, Alabama, and North Carolina.

Dr. Davis, in the ordination sermon, read from Matthew the 28th chapter, beginning with the 16th verse, and took as his theme the four words, "Come, Learn, Go, teach," and urged that these commands be followed, stating that true learning must be shared, that living at the present is the supreme thing, and that teaching must be by the gift of self.

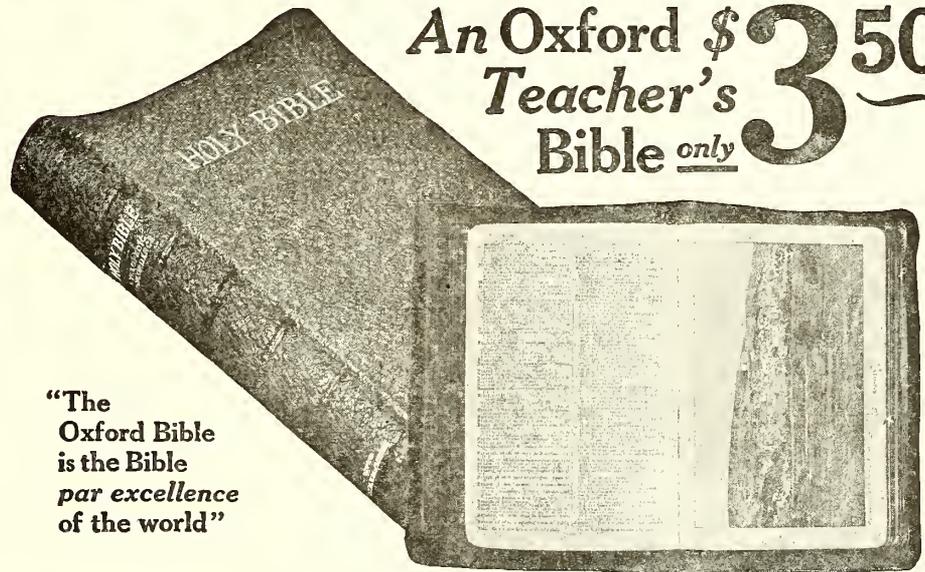

Dr. J. W. Kirbye, pastor of the United Church at Raleigh, brought greetings from the Raleigh Church to the Elon congregation, stated the purpose of the meeting, and called the council to order following his election as moderator, and the election of Dr. W. M. Jay as scribe. Greetings were read from Dr. W. Lankford Bloom, secretary of the southeastern district of the Congregational Church, and from others who were prevented from being present at this service.

Prof. Ensminger then made his statement to the council, asking for ordination, giving his training, experience and ideals as evidence of his worthiness of this consideration. His application being unanimously approved by the council, Dr. F. P. Ensminger, father of the candidate, offered the ordination prayer. Dr. J. O. Atkinson, of Elon College, delivered the charge, and Dr. Kirbye, as moderator of the council, welcomed Prof. Ensminger to the brotherhood.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

MISSIONARY NOTES.

By MRS. W. M. JAY.

Once again we are on the threshold of another year. As we think back over the year just gone, it seems logical and well worth while to go through a process of mental house-cleaning as the new year appears and check up our deeds and mode of living and map out from these experiences a course for the year to come. This applies especially to our missionary work, and I hope the first resolution that we will make will be to serve the missionary cause, the Church and our God better. And be sure to send your news items to your Conference editor, so it can be published in THE SUN and Christian Missionary. The Eastern Virginia women have adopted a fine thing, and it is this: that it is a part of their standard of excellence to send in at least one news item in the year. That is fine, and we'll all expect to read lots of news from Virginia.

The Young People's Missionary Society of the Holy Neck Church held a very interesting meeting on Sunday night, November 18th. The Bethlehem and Holland Societies were their guests for the meeting, and a splendid program was rendered, including a playlet entitled "Transferred Treasures." An offering was received, amounting to $11.18. Miss Lillye Holland is the wide-awake superintendent of this society and is doing a fine work with this splendid group of young people.

Mrs. L. T. Williams sends in the following interesting news from Dendron, Va. They held a public thankoffering program at Thanksgiving and received a good offering. This program was well attended and much enjoyed. They observed a week of prayer recently, using as their subjects a series of successive events from the life of Christ. A number of their members attended the district rally and annual Conference and feel that the time was well spent.

They were successful in raising their goal for the year, which was $75, and this was raised entirely by free-will offerings. They also contributed $10 towards the Barretts' automobile and sent clothing to Porto Rico for the relief in the storm area. Total amount raised during the year, $104.35. The year just passed was a most successful and profitable year, and inspires them towards larger things in this new year of 1929.

THE FEDERAL COUNCIL.

By DR. MARTYN SUMMERBELL.

The council, in its sixth quadrennial session in Rochester, adopted the novel plan of opening certain morning sessions to free discussions of co-operation and unity in our Church work. Such discussions were held on Friday, Saturday and Monday, the 7th, 8th and 10th of December.

On Friday, thought was given to the shifting conditions of our modern life and what changes might be introduced to make our Christian forces more effective.

Saturday morning the discussion centered on our attitude toward the possibilities of a more common worship and what hope could be entertained for a broader conception of Christian unity.

On Wednesday and Thursday evenings, in the Baptist Temple, there were open meetings for the council and the general public in which Drs. Spier and Cadman stressed the unifying influence of the simple gospel and the power of Christ and His resurrection.

Saturday morning Dr. Vance, of Detroit, spoke of the genial co-operation of the leading denominations of his city, and Dr. J. Nichols, of Chicago, made a similar report of the comity prevalent among the Chicago Churches.

A notable word was that of Bishop Earl Cranston, of the M. E. Church. He had helped in the organization of the council and came from a sickbed to this session to give his testimony in favor of a closer union among our Protestant peoples. He was convinced that the Church of Christ was one, and that it should present a united front, so that the world might believe that Christ was the sent of God.

In voice and manner, his message thrilled the assembly, and the applause when he took his seat was unrestrained. Among his last words was the expression of hope that the overtures of union between his people and the Presbyterians might lead to success.

The trend of discussion revealed three opinions as to Christian co-operation:

(a) Desire for an organic union of denominations of similar policy, and that it be effected speedily.

(b) Purpose that in all matters which they could not handle separately, to combine to secure greater efficiency.

(c) Conviction that Church work should cover wider areas as speedily as common concurrence can be secured.

On Monday morning the discussion turned upon the shifting conditions of rural, urban and suburban Churches. It was shown that a large proportion of children in isolated rural districts are growing up in complete absence of Church or Sunday School training.

Prof. W. O. Thompson pointed out that in cities a large and influential Church was required as a civic center, and to secure such a commanding Church in many instances it should be a united Church. Dr. William Adams Brown, of the Union Theological Seminary in New York; Dr. Shailer Matthews, of Chicago, and others voiced a like sentiment. Our Dr. Coffin mentioned that the spirit of the brethren today favored actual union of the Churches, and that undue haste to effect it might hinder its consummation, its actual approach may be nearer than we sometimes imagine.

From the several speeches made on Saturday morning, and from casual remarks offered throughout the session it seems clear that our leaders in all the denominations realize the need of a consolidated Protestant movement, and that the mass of the laity in the various denominations are included in that direction and are waiting to be shown the right and effective way.

LOYALTY TO CONVENTION.

The Southern Christian Convention, at its last session, requested every Sunday School in the Convention to take quarterly offerings for the colleges.

Every Sunday School should take these four offerings each year and divide the money with the colleges on the basis of 80 per cent for Elon and 20 per cent for Piedmont Junior College. This is "loyalty to the Convention's ruling, loyalty to the colleges," to the cause of Christian education, and loyalty to Christ and His Church.

"Through this quarterly offering every member of the Sunday School is brought in contact with Elon College" (our colleges) "and makes some contribution, however small to its support" (their support).

"The work of Christian education is all one, whether in the home, the Sunday School, Church or Christian college (Christian colleges). "Just as the State supports its university as well as its public schools, so the denomination must support its colleges (colleges) as well as its Sunday Schools."

The cause of Christian education is one, and the work of our colleges is one and should be supported as one, and the Convention has so decreed it in the request made for a quarterly offering for the "colleges." Together we stand, divided we fall.

I was gratified to learn, through THE CHRISTIAN SUN, that practically all the Conferences had approved the Convention action. If this be true, quarterly offerings will be taken in our Sunday Schools for our "colleges"—Elon and Piedmont Junior Colleges. I am pleased to note that several of our pastors have assured me that Piedmont Junior College would get her share of the offerings when taken. This is as it should be, for no Conference, pastor, Church or Sunday School can be loyal to the Convention that does not plan for and take the offerings for the "colleges" and divide them on a percentage basis. I know that some of us feel that Elon College must live, but some of the rest of us feel that Piedmont Junior College must live also; her opportunity is just as great and her best supporters have as much at stake. Loyalty to the Convention will win, but sectionalism will loose.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

Since our Church calendar suggests that our topic for instructional purposes be interdenominational co-operation during January, let us take a review of the co-operative agencies in the field of religious education. Among the non-denominational agencies, we have twenty-odd national and international organizations which are powers in their sphere, but we mention only a few that have a direct bearing and influence on the subject of Christian union.

The oldest organization and the one that has had the most influence on Christian union is what we have known as the World's Sunday School Association. At its last convention, at Los Angeles, the association changed its name to World Sunday School Council of Christian Education. But this organization, or at least the American unit, is no longer a non-denominational organization. It is non-interdenominational. In 1922 the International Sunday School Association and the Sunday School Council voted to merge into the International Council of Religious Education, which is now the American unit of the World Sunday School Council.

The Conference of Theological Seminaries, the Association of Biblical Instructors in Colleges and Universities, the Conference of Church-workers in Universities, and the Student Fellowship for Christian Life Service are all suggestive of their purpose in their names. The Student Volunteer Movement gives its attention to the whole field of missions and is interested in those who are in preparation for missionary work.

The Religious Education Association aids, in a scientific manner, the organizations which promote religious education. Of the interdenominational agencies, which are made up of the representatives of the different denominations in the United States and thus have great opportunities in advocating and accomplishing something in Christian union, we list the most important ones.

The Council of Church Boards of Education, the Association of American Colleges, the Federal Council Commission on Christian Education, the International Council of Religious Education, the Foreign Missions Council, the Home Missions Council, the Council of Women for Home Missions, the Council of Women for Foreign Missions, United Society of Christian Endeavor, the Central Committee on the United Study of Foreign Missions, Interdenominational Student Conference, Committee of Church Boards of Education, Foreign Missions Conference of North America, International Goodwill Through Churches, the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, Young People's International Council of Religious Education, Stewardship's Council of America, the World Conference on Faith and Order, the World Conference on Life and Work.

This is a partial list of the organizations that have an influence on interdenominational co-operation. Next week we shall try to point out some of the movements and accomplishments in co-operation.

GREATEST BUSINESS IN THE WORLD.

to descend, or the Shekinah fill her courts. The spiritual life and power of any Church are directly in proportion to what that Church is doing outside of itself. To be indifferent to missions is to be indifferent to the gospel. Do the heathen need the gospel? We cannot do better than to look at the testimony of the New Testament.

There is nothing more needed today than a Christian attitude toward money. We are stewards, and as such we must be careful how we handle that which has been entrusted to us. Isn't it a fact that a tithe belongs to God? In the Old Testament days a tenth was required of the rich and of the poor. No man was exempt. I do not find a syllable in the New Testament which, either directly or indirectly, repeals the law of the tithe. "The tithe is the Lord's still"—till He declares that it no longer is. It seems to me that the occasion for tithing is even more urgent today than of old, as the world religion is to be extended throughout the globe. What, therefore, shall a man profit if he gain the tithes and lose his own soul? Oh, the curse of unpaid tithes! What is wanting in the Christian character and experience of many is the grace of liberality. Be liberal, because you thus glorify your Benefactor. The true worth of money is never learned until we begin to distribute, to make others happy with it. The more we do for others, the more we ourselves are blessed.

We should honor God with our substance because He is the Proprietor of all things: all we are, and all we possess are His by proprietary right. Our welfare, salvation and happiness is His one great concern. His life was one sweet benediction of self-forgetfulness, one glorious example of the holy dignity of service. He was open-handed to dispense love and counsel and pity upon those whom He was not ashamed to call His brethren. It is our duty to give, because we have freely received.

An unprogressive Church is a dying Church, a retrogressive Church is a dead Church. We need to realize that the Church will never rise to her full privilege and blessedness until she "add the grace of liberality also."

Do missions pay? Yes, missions pay; they pay in every way—grandest of all, in the building of Christian character. Is it not a glorious work thus to transform character, to take human nature at its worst, savage, barbarous, corrupt and base, to cleanse it, to instruct it, to mold and to shape it, to refine it, to spiritualize it, to make it Christ-like? The greatest joy in the world is to tell others about this wonderful Redeemer.

The greatest business in the world is soul-saving. What a privilege it is to be a co-worker with God! The glorious gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, in our hands, is the flaming torch that is to dissipate the world's darkness, and the mighty hammer under whose blows the strong chains of wickedness and vice are to be broken.

Let us seek, my brethren, to lift Christ up; lift Him up in the life; lift Him up in the home; lift Him up in the Church—everywhere. He proclaimed the gospel the world needs when He said: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me."

Christians, will you just now pray, "Lord, make me a soul-winner." Let us prove our loyalty to Jesus Christ by supporting missions, home and foreign.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson IV—January 27, 1929.

THE HOLY SPIRIT.

GOLDEN TEXT: "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, these are the sons of God."—Rom. 8:14.

LESSON: Joel 2:28, 29; Luke 11:9-13; John 3:5-8, 14, 16, 17, 26; 15:26, 27; 16:7-15; Acts 2:1-21, 32, 33; Rom. 8:1-17, 26, 27; 1 Cor. 12:1-13; Eph. 1:13, 14; 3:14-21; 4:1-6, 30.

DEVOTIONAL READING: John 14:25-31.

"I believe in the Holy (Ghost) Spirit"—for centuries the Christian Church has been repeating this sentence as a part of its creed. The lesson is, therefore, concerning a fundamental fact of Christianity. Men may differ about many things in Christianity, but Christians believe in the Holy Spirit.

"What is the Holy Spirit?" is really not a fair question, theologically speaking, for the theology of the Christian religion does not refer to the Holy Spirit as a thing, but as a person. In the language of theology, the Holy Spirit is the third person of the Trinity. In the language of the average Church member, we might say that the Holy Spirit is the Spirit of God as active and manifested in the world and in man. As Phillips Brooks has said, "The Holy Spirit is the God of continual contact with mankind. A present God, an everlasting God, ever-helping, ever-saving God—this is the God whom Christ told of and promised, the God who came in the miracle of Pentecost, and is forever here."

The Holy Spirit Promised.

Jesus not only told His disciples that He was going away; He told them that it was expedient, it was best that He should go away. So long as He was with them in the flesh, He was accessible only to those who were immediately in touch with Him. Furthermore, so long as He was with them in the flesh, His disciples would depend upon Him. It was best that He should go away from them in the flesh. But, said He: "I will not leave you comfortless"—the word which Christ used meant helpless or alone; "I will come unto you again, or the Father will send the Comforter," which is the same word which we translate the Holy Spirit. The Comforter is as the word suggests, a Comforter; but He is also an Advocate, or a Paraclete, i. e., "One called to our side." In this way, Christ told His disciples that He would be universally accessible to all those who would seek Him, and they could depend upon His presence and His help.

The Coming of the Holy Spirit.

The story of what we call Pentecost is the story of the coming of the Holy Spirit. Peter plainly says that the glorified Jesus, "being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, He hath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear." This does not mean, of course, that the Spirit of God had not been in the world or in the hearts of His children before this. It means rather that the Holy Spirit had come in a new fullness, marking a new era in things spiritual, universalizing and personalizing the spiritual resources through Christ. God fulfilled His promise to send the Holy Spirit as He fulfills all His other promises.

The Work of the Spirit.

The writer of these notes went through the various passages of Scripture which constitute the lesson for today, and he found among other things the following functions of the Holy Spirit:

(a) He is a prerequisite for entrance into the kingdom of heaven. Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter (or see) the kingdom of God. (John 3:5-8.)

(b) He will dwell with, and in those who receive Him. (John 34:17.)

(c) He shall be our Teacher and our Reminder of the things of Christ. (John 14:26.)

(d) He shall testify of Christ (John 15:26). The Holy Spirit testifies that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and bears witness to the reality and presence of Christ.

(e) He will reprove the world of sin, of righteousness, of judgment (John 16:7-15). The Holy Spirit will convince men that it is sin not to believe on Christ, that Christ is sincere and righteous and not an impostor, that judgment has been pronounced on sin.

(f) He will guide into all truth, and He shall glorify Christ. (John 16:13, 14.)

(g) He shall reveal unto us the things of Christ. (John 16:15.)

(h) He shall give life to those who are dead in sin. (Rom. 8:10.)

(i) He shall quicken us into a new and victorious spiritual life. (Rom. 8:11.)

(j) He will help us to overcome the carnal impulses and desires. (Rom. 8:13.)

(k) He will give us the glad assurance that we are the children of God, and heirs of the riches of God. (Rom. 8:15, 16.)

(l) He is one, but He manifests Himself in various ways. But in every case "the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal."

(m) He seals unto the day of redemption. (Eph. 1:13, 14.)

(n) He strengthens in the inner life, helping us to do what we ought to do, and helping us to bear what we must bear. (Eph. 3:16, 17.)

(o) He promotes the spirit of unity. (Eph. 4:3, 4.)

(p) He makes intercession for us. (Rom. 8:27.)

(q) He helps our infirmities. (Rom. 8:26.)

Willingness of Father to Give Holy Spirit.

In the light of all these, and many other, things which might be mentioned which the Holy Spirit does, it can be seen that He is greatly to be desired. What a comfort and a challenge therefore are these words of Jesus. "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more will your Father in heaven give the Holy Spirit to those that ask Him?" God is always more eager to give us the Spirit than we are to have Him. The Spirit stands at the door and knocks, seeking entrance and desiring to bring His rich benefits into our lives.

CITIZENSHIP AND REFORM.

BY E. H. CHERRINGTON, LL.D., LITT.D.

Prohibition, divorce, poverty, crime, industrial relations and other great social problems which are concerning the nation and will concern it for some time to come are discussed in "Citizenship and Moral Reform," by John W. Langdale, published by the Abingdon Press. This is not a new book, but is a new edition issued in 1928, of a work which is probably more significant now than when it first came from the press.

Any of the themes discussed by Dr. Langdale would require a series of volumes for exhaustive treatment, but the author has, with commendable brevity, set forth the essential elements from the standpoint of the Christian citizen.

The prohibition question, naturally, holds a conspicuous place in Dr. Langdale's book. He summarizes the more significant arguments for and against prohibition and briefly sums up some of the most important social achievements of this new national policy. The angle from which Dr. Langdale views the anti-alcohol movement is thus set forth:

"The question is not whether a protester shall or shall not have his glass of beer or wine, but whether society is to continue to be cursed with the burden of insanity, poverty, crime and disease produced by the institution that supplies the occasional glass. Let the protester remember the personal liberty of women and children to have a decent husband and father, even though he be afflicted with an inward appetite that cannot withstand the outer temptation the protester would provide. They who upon that appeal are unwilling to sacrifice their taste are unworthy of the further consideration they should receive."

Preachers and others who are interested in the moral aspects of many of the social movements of the present day will find Dr. Langdale's book stimulating as well as informing.

SECRET OF SUCCESS.

What is the secret of obtaining the men and the women needed and the money required for missions? In every land and among all peoples, wherever Christ is exalted as the living Christ, people see that He should have right of way in themselves and full control of all that they have or ever may possess. It is inconceivable that the living Christ, who rose from the dead, should stand out in any company, or before any individual who acknowledges Christ, and not accomplish marvelous things—things that transcend all other experiences and that are sufficient to meet every need.

Why is it that in some colleges and seminaries, in certain homes and conventions, strong lives have been surrendered in such numbers, whereas, in other colleges and in other homes and conventions there have not been such offerings? The more deeply I have studied these cases, the more fully I have been convinced that the secret has been that in the former places Christ was lifted up, and in other cases He was not. In one case the conditions were complied with, and as a result He manifested himself. Old things passed away, all things become new; the right motives asserted themselves and dominated. The men and the money needed were forthcoming.

The only method that will bring forward workers who will stand the test in the day of trial and temptation, the workers who recognize that they receive their call not from man, and not from a dead Christ, but from a living Christ, and the only way in which we can obtain the money needed, and that will not bring greater dangers than now surround us, is the lifting up of Christ. We must hold Him up in our own lives primarily, in our homes and Churches, conventions and conferences, in our board meetings and committees. We will say less perchance about the motives and about the methods, and more about Him, and we will leave Him free to work.

If we will let the living Christ stand out in the central place, then we will have times of refreshing from His presence.—Dr. John R. Mott, in the Missionary Review of the World.

BIBLE HOUSE AT PEKING.

According to a cable received by the American Bible Society, Astor Place, its branch office in Peking reports the formal opening of the society's new Bible house in Peking with impressive dedicatory services in the presence of many guests. The Bible house, consisting of office building, residence and salesroom, is one of the most up-to-date and best equipped structures in that part of China. It was made possible by a gift from the Maryland Bible Society.

Situated on Hatamen Street, one of the main thoroughfares in the ancient city, the building has an attractive exterior of stately stone pillars, lofty and picturesque double Chinese roof, rafters and eaves. Western styles have been followed throughout the interior. The building was designed by the Mission Architects, of Shanghai. In spite of disturbances and military upheavals, construction was carried forward without interruption.

"Peking has been the distribution center for a tremendous output of the Scriptures for many years past," according to the Rev. Dr. Carlton Lacy, the society's secretary in charge of the work in China, with headquarters at Shanghai. "More than a million copies a year have been distributed from the little office that has just given way to the new edifice. From no other depot of the society's twelve foreign and ten home agencies, except from the national office in such cities as New York or Shanghai, have so many portions of Scripture been put into circulation. Recently vast new fields have opened in Manchuria and adjacent regions to be cultivated and supplied from Peking. It stands also in a great educational center. From all parts of China the youth of the land has been going to the northern capital for schooling. As nowhere else in the Orient, the Bible Society has here gained access to government school students and has placed in their hands the printed gospel message."

The work of the American Bible Society branch in Peking is under the supervision of the Rev. Earl A. Hoose. At present, sixty-six district offices, with the various sub-branches operating in north China, center around the Peking office. During more peaceful times, the number is much larger than this.

TREE SURGERY.

Ailing trees of the Southland can look toward the future with renewed hope. Four hundred expert tree surgeons—just as well qualified to feel the pulse of a tree and treat its ailments as a doctor is qualified to treat a sick patient—are now practicing their profession in the Southern States. They are employed by and under the direction of the Davey Tree Expert Company, of Kent, Ohio, which conducts the only school in the world for instruction in tree surgery.

The large number of tree surgeons sent South this winter reflects the great economic strides taken by the South, according to Congressman Martin L. Davey, president of the Davey Company. "We have been sending part of our tree surgeons South for the past fifteen winters," said Mr. Davey, "but there has never been such a demand for them as during the past five years. We find that this is a pretty good barometer of increasing Southern prosperity."

Many of the trees treated are of historical value. Because of the care which has been given them, they have been saved for future generations. One of the most noted of these is the horse chestnut tree at Fredericksburg, Va., the only one remaining alive of thirteen planted by George Washington to commemorate the original States of the Union.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

THE GOSPEL IN A SONG HIT.

"A merry heart maketh a cheerful countenance."
—Prov. 15:13.

One of the most surprising discoveries of the present times is the new philosophy of religious triumph in secular things. One of Irvin Berlin's new songs sounds a most characteristic note. Indeed, the sentiment is picturesque. Read it and see.

"Just let a smile be your umbrella on a rainy, rainy day,
And if your sweetie cries, just tell her that a smile will always pay.

Whenever skies are gray, don't worry or fret—
A smile will bring the sunshine, and you'll never get wet.

So, let a smile be your umbrella on a rainy, rainy day!"

One may "smile and smile and be a villain." A smile may betray emptiness, but that there is a smile that is child-like, that laughs away the clouds, that, like sunshine ripening the grain, mellows the soul, that is the language of love, that is divine because it lightens the weight of burdens and cares which all living carry, is the gospel of cheerfulness, of friendliness that makes one's love and heart-beats felt. This teaches us how we are to receive one another and that we must never wave it aside and forget it.

Prayer.—Our Father, speak to our souls about love and friendship and teach us the gospel of good cheer to encourage one another. Amen.

TUESDAY.

GOD'S PATHLESS WAY.

"Thy way, O God, is in the sanctuary . . . Thy way was in the sea."—Psa. 77:13-20.

"It is easy," said Dr. A. C. Dixon, "to believe that God's way is in the sanctuary, where Christians worship, and the beautiful architecture pleases, and sweet songs steal through our senses. It is harder to believe that God's way is where there is no way, that He makes a path where it is pathless. He is our Pilot on the sea."

That is what the Israelites found when God led them through the Red Sea, and again when He made a street for them straight through the swift current of the Jordan. Elijah and Elisha also found a road through the Jordan, and Peter, for a minute, discovered the waters of Gennesaret firm beneath his feet. The saints of all ages, when confronted by a sea of trouble, have been enabled by their divine Guide to walk straight through the sea on dry land.

This miracle of the path is so common in truly Christian lives that it is the expected thing. Thus we walk by faith and not by sight. Sight shows us the tossing billows, the treacherous waters. Faith shows us the receding waves, the solid highway. If we are going where God tells us to go, we are sure of a practicable way. He is the Way.

Prayer.—Our divine Leader, we follow on. Take from us all anxiety for the uncertain day. Give us the confidence to which all Thy children have a right. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

MANHOOD AND WHEELS.

"The spirit of the living creature was in the wheels."—Ezek. 1:15-21.

Ezekiel's vision was complicated and mysterious. It was for his day, yet it was even more for our day. Because ours is a day of wheels, wheels within wheels, and ever more wheels, wheels clogged together, wheels belted to power, wheels turning this way and that, filling the world with clamor and confusion. But is the spirit of the living creature in the wheels?

Here is a memorable sentence by John Stuart Mill: "The State which dwarfs its men in order that they may be docile instruments in its hands, even for beneficial purposes, will find that with small men no great things can really be accomplished, and that the perfection of machinery to which it has sacrificed everything will in the end avail it nothing for want of the vital power which it has preferred to banish."

Now Mill was writing about the State, but what he said so finely is just as true of our individual lives. It is easy to make a machine of a life. That is the readiest way to get along: settle into a routine, and turn out your tasks with steady and lifeless reliability. But true success calls for personality, for life. Let the wheels whirl, but see that the spirit of a living creature is in them.

Prayer.—Infinite Worker, as Thou dost fill with Thyself the least of Thy creations, so may we pour ourselves into every task. This we shall do only as Thou dost work with us. Amen.

THURSDAY.

WHERE IS THE PICCOLO?

"The Syrians . . . had brought away captive out of the land of Israel a little maiden."—2 Kings 5:1-9.

We all know the result, how the great General Naaman was cured of his leprosy, and great honor was given to the God of Israel and to His prophet, all because of the loving heart and ready word of a little Hebrew girl, a captive.

Let no one dare to say that he is insignificant in God's vast scheme of things. Remember the story of Sir Michael Costa, who was rehearsing a great musical performance, with hundreds of voices and instruments. So thunderous was the sound of it all, with its wild bursts of harmony, its tremendous crash and tumult, all ordered to one overwhelming result, that a man in a far corner who played the piccolo decided that in the din his little fife made no difference, and so he stopped playing. Instantly the great conductor flung up his hands, and absolute silence fell. "Where is the piccolo?" cried Sir Michael. His quick ear had missed that one little piping amid all the thunder, and the music to him was spoiled without it.

So it is with the Infinite Conductor of the universe. He listens for the faintest human voice. Not a boy or a girl, not the poorest and most ignorant and obscure, but will be missed, if he is silent, out of the anthem of the worlds, the music of the spheres.

Prayer.—Master Spirit, we would do our best. We rejoice to know that Thou dost know. Amen.

FRIDAY.

WELL-SHARPENED TOOLS.

"Our sons shall be as plants grown up in their youth, and our daughters as corner-stones hewn after the fashion of a palace."—Psa. 114:9-15.

The thought of the psalmist is that young people should be made ready for the work of life, and made ready completely, beautifully, victoriously. There is a fine saying to this effect which is given in a poem by Dr. George Lansing Taylor. Here are some of the verses:

"Grind your axe in the morning, my boy!"

'Twas a gray old wood-cutter spoke,
Beneath whose arm, on his backwoods farm,
Had fallen the elm and the oak.

"Grind your axe in the morning, my boy,"

He said to his lusty son,
'Or the hearts of oak will weary your stroke
Long ere the day is done.

"But if you miss your grinding at dawn,

You'll never know manhood's joys;
No triumphs for you, the long day through;
You must back the brush with the boys."

Many a grown man and woman, who did not make thorough preparation for life in youth has sadly learned this truth.

Prayer.—Be with us, dear Master, in the morning of life, and in the morning of our endless existence, and help us to make a good preparation, for Thy sake. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE SMOKE.

"The house was filled with smoke."—Isa. 6:1-8.

There is a wonderful little poem by George Macdonald about the smoke in God's house:

"Lord, I have laid my heart upon Thine altar,
But I cannot get the wood to burn;
It hardly flares when it begins to falter,
And to the dark return.

"Old sap or night-fallen dew has damped the fuel,
In vain my breath would flame provoke;
You see, at every door attempt's renewal,
To Thee ascends the smoke.

"'Tis all I have, smoke, failure, foiled endeavor, Coldness and doubt and palsied lack—
Such as I have, I send Thee: Perfect Giver.
Send Thou Thy lightning back."

We can trust God with our worship. Poor as it is, He will enrich it. Weak as it is, He will strengthen it. Dull as it is, He will glorify it. Smoke as it is, He will send the fire.

All that we need is to worship Him in spirit and in truth. He knows how our anxieties blur our worship, how our sicknesses twist it awry, how our sins mar it, so that it hardly seems like worship at all. But if only our heart falls down before His throne, He will lift us up.

Prayer.—Lord, we believe; help Thou our unbelief. Lord, we worship; help Thou our failures in worship. In the name of Thy dear Son. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE CALLED AND THE CHOSEN.

"For many are called but few are chosen."—Matt. 22:14.

If a man is called by God, does it follow that he is chosen by God? Answer: Only he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven shall enter the kingdom of heaven.

All believe that all are invited (called) into the kingdom, but none believe that any shall be saved who do not accept that call and train their lives in the kingdom. Christian character is the way of life and the qualification to acceptance. "They shall gather together His elect." Elect means in the Greek "accepted ones."

Every act, choice, decision, thought, constitute a call. Every neglect, indifference, doubt, misuse of trust, wrong, failure to avail one's self of the promises, constitute a rejection and a denial of the call. If life is spent that way there will be a time when, like the foolish virgins, one's search for God will not avail. God will say, "Depart from me. I never knew you."

Prayer.—Our Father, when Thy light shines upon us, when hidden things are revealed, when Thou dost come to us, we pray that we may stand and Thy spirit be upon us. Amen.

DR. HARPER'S NEW BOOK REVIEWED.

CHARACTER BUILDING IN COLLEGES, by Dr. W. A. Harper. New York, the Abingdon Press, 1928; 237 pages; price, $1.50.

There has been an increasing interest recently in the relation of education to character formation. Some educators seem to have thought the relationship was very slight; others have been working on the assumption that the achievement of character and the educative process should be progressively accomplished as the individual grows and develops in life's experiences. To all who are interested in the problem, Dr. W. A. Harper's recent book, "Character Building in Colleges," comes as a welcome contribution to a present-day analysis of the subject.

The material in the book has grown out of twenty-five years' laboratory experience in a college that cherishes the significant motto, "Christian Character First and Always at Elon." The author writes out of a rich experience and presents his views with the conviction that they have had their rise in the school of experience and have been subjected to practical tests. On the basis of this experience and careful research, the author sets forth his findings and projects a far-sighted program of character education for colleges.

This book should be of particular value to college administrators, religious educators, ministers and parents who are interested in carefully planning the character development of their children.

THE JUSTICE OF GOD.

Just recently there came to me, through an editorial on the above subject in the Sunday School Times, something so helpful that I want to pass it on. In reading the story of the prodigal son, many have felt the elder brother did not get quite a "square deal," and that he had some reason to be angry because of the great welcome given to his brother who had wasted all in riotous living. Doubtless, many have read the story over and over, carelessly overlooking the plural pronoun. The Word says, "He divided unto them his living." The elder son got his portion also. It is a wonderful picture of the Father's justice and faithfulness.

Then the editorial goes on to say that God's justice brings to mind His judgment. But again the Word shows His wonderful mercy, for in John 5:22 we are told "The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son." In verse 27 we are given the reason: "Because He is the Son of man." God is a Spirit. Our Lord lived among men, tempted in all points just as we are, sin apart, and He understands. He knoweth our frame; He remembereth we are dust. Moreover, if we sin, He intercedes for us. He is our Advocate. What more could He do than has been done? If you have taken Him as your Saviour, why not take Him as Lord of your life also? He is faithful and true; He will never leave or forsake, no matter what comes.

Holman Jewel Testament

INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2 1/2 x 4 1/4 inches x 3 1/2 inch

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller.

It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength.

One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together.

The size, 2 1/2 x 4 1/4 inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

Specimen of Type

TATE—TATE.

The wedding bells were made to ring when Miss Ethel Tate became the bride of Mr. Robert Fletcher Tate on December 23, 1928, at 10:30 A. M. They were married at the home of the bride's mother, Caswell County, N. C. Miss Ethel Tate is the accomplished daughter of Mrs. Sallie Tate. Mr. Robert F. Tate is the son of Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Tate.

These young people are both members of Conecord Christian Church, and are held in high esteem by their friends and neighbors. Following the ceremony the bride and groom motored to their home Church and then to Mr. R. L. Tate's, where a sumptuous dinner awaited them.

Mrs. Tate has a good position with the Penu Factory, at Reidsville, N. C., in which town the newly married couple plan to make their home for a while at least. Only a few intimate friends were present to witness the vows of the contracting party. It was a quiet, beautiful home wedding, the general marriage form of the Christian Church being used. Their many friends and acquaintances wish for them a long, happy, prosperous and peaceful life.

HUFFMAN—KITE.

On November 21, 1928, Mr. Willie Huffman and Miss Eula Mae Kite from Leaksville, motored to my home and were united in the holy bonds of wedlock. After a wedding trip of several days among friends, they returned to the home of the bride, where they are now living. The groom is a farmer and a member of the Lutheran Church. The bride is one of our best Leaksville young women. Their many friends, together with their pastor, wish them much happiness in their wedded life.

came to my home on November 29, 1928, and in the presence of a few friends were united in matrimony. The groom is one of our most active and interested members at Leaksville, and brings to the community as his bride an excellent Christian woman who will doubtless add much to the community and to the Church. May much happiness and usefulness attend them on their journey together through life.

BARNES—SUTTON.

A quiet, impressive marriage was solemnized at the parsonage of the First Christian Church, Reidsville, N. C., on Tuesday, December 25th, at 4 P. M., when William Rufus Barnes took the vows with Miss Pearl Ida Sutton, in the presence of a few close friends.

Mr. Barnes is a deacon of the First Christian Church, and is loved by a host of friends in the town and community. He loves his Church, and is always counted on to carry his part of its burden and work. Mrs. Barnes, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Sutton, Reidsville, is a member of First Christian Church. She is loved by all who know her. This splendid couple have the good wishes of their friends for many years of happiness and service to the Father.

BRAY—ROARKE.

On Thursday, November 29, 1928, Mr. Younger Bray and Miss Maude Roarke, of Nathalie, Va., came to my home in Virgilina, accompanied by a number of relatives and friends, and were united in marriage. Mr. Bray is one of our most active and useful young men in Liberty Christian Church. He is the son of Deacon John H. Bray and the grandson of the late Deacon J. A. Bray. Mrs. Bray is the daughter of Mr. James Roarke and a member of Mill Stone Baptist Church.

After the ceremony, the writer accompanied the bridal party to the home of the bride where an excellent supper was served. This is a very popular young couple and begin life together under favorable conditions for success and usefulness. May the Heavenly Father protect and bless them.

FRIDDLE—MOORE.

A simple but beautiful marriage was solemnized on December 22nd in the home of W. T. Moore, of Rockingham County, N. C., when he gave his daughter, Myrtle Ellen Moore, in marriage to Otis Clay Friddle.

Unattended, the bride and groom took their places before an improvised altar, where they were united in holy matrimony. Rev. J. W. Knight, of Stokesdale, N. C., performed the ceremony in the presence of a few relatives and special friends. The musical part of the program was conducted by Miss Ruth Clapp, of Elon College, N. C., and Miss Ruth Humphury, of Wentworth, N. C.

Following the ceremony, a five-course dinner was served. Their many friends wish them a long and happy life.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE

WADLEY, ALABAMA

An Accredited Junior College

Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

Piedmont Junior College is training some of the best stock of America for Christian leadership, to be used by the nation and the world. Here is a great challenge and asset for students who wish to prepare themselves to serve in a worth-while way. The new Administration Building will be completed by time school opens this fall.

NUMBER 3.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. Stanley C. Harrell.

GIVES A MILLION.—

Mr. A. Felix Dupont has given a million dollars to the Episcopal Diocese of Delaware for the erection of a Church boarding school for boys, which is to be erected near Middletown, Del. The school will be under the control of the Episcopal Church, of which Mr. Dupont is a lay member, but its enrollment will not be restricted to that fellowship.

THE PREACHER'S SALARY.—

Ten years ago the Rev. Crayton S. Brooks, pastor of the First Christian Church, Ardmore, Okla., asked that he not be assigned a definite salary in the budget of the Church, but that after all other bills were paid he be given what was left. The agreement has continued in force for ten years, with apparent satisfaction to both parties of the contract.

RADIO'S INFLUENCE.—

Dr. George W. Phillips, pastor of the Tenth Avenue Baptist Church, Oakland, Calif., has measurably extended the influence of his Church through the use of the radio, and has won his congregation to the acceptance of a wider basis of fellowship. This has been done without friction or discussion. Dr. Phillips broadcast a daily twilight hour at 6:30 P. M., and a daily prayer hour at 9:30 A. M. To the support of this department of the Church's work, Roman Catholics and members of the Christian Science connection contribute more largely than do the Baptists.

FIRE NO BARRIER.—

The Riverside Church of New York, which is under construction, was damaged by a recent fire to the extent of more than a million dollars. This building was being erected for the congregation of which Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick is pastor. The congregation had decided to drop the word Baptist from its title upon moving into its new home. The trustees have announced it as their purpose to repair the damage done by fire and to continue the work of construction as rapidly as possible, hoping to have the building completed and ready for occupancy by January 1, 1930. Dr. Fosdick and the congregation were the recipients of words of sympathy and encouragement from Church leaders everywhere. Dr. Fosdick summed up the situation in these words: "We are not pitying ourselves, for we have many things to be thankful for. We shall handle this situation successfully and carry through to victory, and we will come out the better and stronger Church for having faced this difficulty together."

RESTORING CITIZENSHIP.—

A bill has been introduced in Congress by Congressman Victor L. Berger, of Milwaukee, to restore citizenship to some 1,500 men and women who were convicted during the World War of violating the espionage act. Congressman Berger, a Socialist, was tried and convicted for the same offense during the war. But the decision in his case was reversed by the Supreme Court, and therefore his rights as a citizen were not lost. Mr. Berger claims that after careful investigation he finds that those who would be affected by his bill were not guilty of any overt act to hinder the prosecution of the war. They were convicted because they argued against the United States entering the war. There may have been those who talked in opposition to the war, who were moved by a desire to help the enemy. Doubtless there were many others who were sincere in their convictions against participation in the war. It is next to impossible when war hysteria is sweeping the country for questions that bear upon the issues at stake to receive sane and impartial judgment. Since the war fever has subsided there will probably be little popular objection to restoring the rights of citizenship to those whom the bill provides for.

A PRONOUNCEMENT ON BAPTISM.—

The following is an extract from the new constitution adopted by Dr. Fosdick's Church:

"1. Convinced that there are many Christians not affiliated with the Baptist communion who, because of family connections, social ties, or personal friendships, would find a congenial Church home with us;

"2. Convinced that there are many who, for one reason or another, would be able more effectively in this Church than elsewhere to invest their lives for the kingdom of God;

"3. Convinced that there are many whose spiritual needs may, because of personal temperament, be more adequately met in this Church than elsewhere;

"4. Convinced that there are many Christians who hold virtually every point of doctrine and of policy generally accepted by our Church except the doctrine of immersion;

"5. Convinced also that those whom Christ has received into His fold should not be barred from full fellowship with His flock on earth;

"6. Therefore, we, members of the Tenth Avenue Baptist Church, without in any wise compromising our profound convictions on the subject of baptism, declare in favor of permitting to our fellow-Christians the same freedom of conscience with reference to the administering of this ordinance which we claim for ourselves, and will receive into full fellowship all those whose lives reveal evidence of union with Christ and any who solemnly avow loyalty to His kingdom."

MISSIONARY SPIRIT IN FIELDS.—

The Church in mission fields has been making some very decided contributions to Christian thought and practice. Especially noteworthy has been their progress toward unity and co-operation in meeting the issues that face them. The latest development has been in Brazil, where three Protestant mission Churches of three different denominations have united their resources that they might send a representative to unoccupied and needy fields. The three Churches are of the Presbyterian, Methodist, and Episcopal connections. They are sending as their representative Dr. Nelson de Arnjo, a well-trained medical man who is competent in healing, teaching and preaching. This ought not to be news, but it is. It would seem that it should be the most logical thing in the world for Churches of different denominations to co-operate in such a task where they are not strong enough to undertake such work alone. In most instances the efforts of the average Church to extend the kingdom are directed in such a way that if success is achieved it will advance the interests of their particular denomination. Many of us have yet to learn that the kingdom is bigger than our own denomination; or if we concede that, we are determined that our work for the kingdom shall not help other denominations.

UNION IN SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK.—

It is interesting to note that there are those who in their effort to meet the problems that confront the Church at home are arriving at the same conclusions with reference to co-operation. Dr. Frederick M. Gordon, Brooklyn Church Federation secretary, speaking to a group of laymen under the auspices of the men's clubs of four Brooklyn Churches, made a plea for co-ordination and co-operation of the Churches in their efforts in behalf of the young people. There are few people who have seriously considered the problem of reaching the children in cities through the Sunday Schools who have not realized the necessity for co-operative effort. As the work is now organized and carried on, we are in most cities only reaching the children who have ties that bind them in some sense to some particular Church or Sunday School. It is perfectly evident that those who stand in most urgent need of the Sunday School message are those who have no connection with the Church. Dr. Gordon, in speaking to this very problem, said that it cannot be solved by individual Churches, as they are at present operated on a competitive basis. It is not unusual for efforts to be made to pull children from one Sunday School into another, while at the same time less than half the children in the city are attending any Sunday School. I have known certain Church leaders to refuse to co-operate in an effort to take a Sunday School census of the city on the grounds that they knew where their own children were located and that they had all they could do to look after their own. It is not surprising that those who are outside of the Churches have an idea that the Church may be tainted with selfishness. If we could only bring ourselves to take an absolutely unselfish stand, it would revolutionize the attitude both inside and outside our Churches.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield changes his address from Stokesdale, N. C., to 5338 Fort Avenue, Lynchburg, Va. Bro. Crutchfield is now happily located in Lynchburg as pastor of our United Church.

Bro. Dollar has had the unusual experience, and a sad one, of conducting seven funerals since his arrival nine weeks ago. Of the seven, three were good members, and their work and presence will be greatly missed.

From the Herald of Gospel Liberty: "Friends will be interested in knowing that both our associate editors, Dr. W. A. Harper and Dr. W. P. Minton, who have been confined to their homes with prevalent flu, are able to be back at their offices and duties again."

A telegram from Dayton, Ohio, Saturday A. M., January 12th, brought this sad information: "Dr. J. F. Burnett died this morning. Funeral Monday" (signed W. P. Minton). Dr. Burnett was one of the best-known and most beloved men in the Christian Church, having served for years as Secretary of our General Convention.

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, of our United Church, Lynchburg, Va., was a visitor at the editor's office Saturday, the 12th. He reports the work and prospect at Lynchburg hopeful and quite encouraging. Mrs. Crutchfield is quite ill at her former home, Stokesdale, N. C., and Bro. Crutchfield is now in constant attendance at her bedside.

Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh, mother of the world-famed aviator, is now a teacher in Woman's College, Constantinople, having given up her work as teacher of chemistry in Chicago and accepted work last September with the college among the Turks in the Far Eastern city. Some brave souls seek the hard places where they may best serve their Lord and fellowmen.

Comes now a Christmas gift of $10 for missions from a good sister; another $10 from a good Christian lady school teacher; and yet another with $30 from "one who is deeply interested in missions" and has to earn all her dollars through her daily toil. These were all voluntary and without solicitation or suggestion, so far as we know. Query for debate by the fireside: "Why do Christian women now and then voluntarily make a contribution to mission, but men never?"

Dr. I. W. Johnson, Secretary of the Southern Christian Convention and editor of "The Christian Annual," writes in this issue a very interesting personal experience. It is worth reading and talking about. In this day of so-called practical and commercial appeal, it is worth while to give heed to that which is surely divine. We agree with Dr. Johnson that unless the call to the ministry is divine, is known to be from God, it better not be heeded; but if it is from God, one will live to regret not giving heed to that call.

The Federal Council, in its department of evangelism and life service, has issued a thirty-two page booklet entitled "The Fellowship of Prayer" for the Lenten season, 1929—February 13th to March 31st. This is a very valuable publication, carrying as it does a Bible reading, a text, a meditation and a prayer for each day. Any pastor who will send his name and address to the Commission on Evangelism, 105 East Twenty-second Street,

New York City, will receive free a copy of this booklet. It is worth having.

One very much interested in THE CHRISTIAN SUN and its mission writes very pertinently: "I wish there was some way to cut down these long magazine articles you have to labor with." How we do wish that a number of our valuable contributors would learn and practice the fine art of discrimination and condensation. It is the editor's opinion, and almost an invariable rule, that after a certain length an article in THE SUN is read and has weight in inverse ratio to its length.

The publisher of "The Christian Annual," Dr. P. J. Kernodle, gives the glad announcement that his plans were to have completed and mailed "The Annual" this week, but owing to extraneous circumstances there is a brief delay, and "The Annual" is to be completed and sent out next week. This will certainly carry satisfaction to very many and real help, since "The Annual" is needed early in the year for reference and plans. The only fault we have ever heard found of "The Annual" was not in its matter or make-up but in the lateness of sending it out. We are glad, indeed, that this fault cannot be lodged this year.

The following from the Herald of Gospel Liberty is of interest to many SUN readers: "The last Sunday of the old year was an auspicious one for the First Christian Church of Dayton, Rev. John G. Truitt pastor, as on that Sunday the congregation voted favorably upon a proposition including the sale of the old Church and parsonage for the sum of $30,000 and a program which includes the erection in the near future of a temporary tabernacle in Dayton View on previously purchased lots. An evangelistic and fund-raising campaign is to be launched, terminating by spring in the letting of contracts for the new Church building. The entire brotherhood will offer its prayers for the progress of this worthy enterprise in our headquarters city."

Rev. J. H. Dollar, Reidsville, has been made happy since his arrival there by an incessant stream of kindness and helpful consideration on the part of his people: "They have pounded us by the ton! Upon our arrival, the Woman's Missionary Society gave us a general supply of groceries. The Ladies' Aid sent us a ton of coal. Bro. W. R. Barnes lighted the parsonage and later gave us a ton of coal. The Woman's Missionary Society again supplied us with linens and wares for the kitchen, all of which were useful. Many gifts have kept coming in, and still are coming. It seems that the usual expression which follows a pastor's arrival on a field is being protracted. We are greatly encouraged with the work. There seems to be a sharp increase in interest, our attendance at the services is gratifying, and we have every reason to look for a fair year in progress and in spirit."

Rev. G. H. Veazey, writing under a recent date from Roanoke, Ala., gives an account of the first session of the Ministers' and Laymen's Association of the Alabama and the Georgia and Alabama Christian Conference. It is proposed by these two Conferences to hold such a meeting on each fifth Saturday and Sunday of the present year. Of the first meeting, this report is given: "We met with the Hill Side Christian Church at LaGrange, December 30, 1928. Owing to a very severe epidemic of flu, the meeting was poorly attended by the people of LaGrange, and because the program was never published in THE SUN, very few of our people knew anything about it. I was first on program, and tried to explain the aim of the meetings. Rev. G. Staley Hunt preached an able sermon on "The Origin of Christian Education." A bounteous dinner was then spread which was greatly enjoyed. The speakers in the afternoon were Revs. A. H. Shepherd, Dr. S. L. Becugher, G. D. Hunt, and Miss Susie Elder. Each speaker brought a good message. The whole program was based on Christian education."

AN EXPLANATION.

Some of the friends of Bethlehem College seem to feel that a letter written by me, appearing in THE SUN January 2nd, regarding Sunday School offerings for our colleges, was biased and unfair to Bethlehem.

The statement specially objectionable was: "Those schools located nearest Elon should send their offerings to Elon, and those nearest Bethlehem should send theirs to Bethlehem."

I did not intend that this should militate against Bethlehem by any means, but only a suggestion in harmony with the policy which the Georgia and Alabama and Alabama Conferences seem to persist in adhering to. For instance, the Convention voted in session at Richmond that all apportionments raised by the several Conferences should be sent to the Convention and apportioned by the Convention to the several interests of the Convention. Instead, however, these two Conferences distributed their own offerings and sent the same into the Convention, with the exception of the Alabama Conference, which retained its educational offering simply to be distributed by the Convention on their order. My suggestion in THE SUN was only in line with this procedure, and only a suggestion; certainly, any Sunday School anywhere may send its offering to any institution it may desire. The suggestion that I made was not authorized by the Convention and was not so stated.

If any one has taken offense or feels that the suggestion was unwise, I am sorry that it was made and hereby ask that it not be considered a part of the appeal to the Sunday Schools for offerings appearing in a previous issue of THE SUN.

L. E. SMITH, President.

On the evening of December 20th, the members of the parsonage family were completely and most agreeably surprised when the door was opened and friendly visitors loaded with packages began to march in. They continued to come until the pantry was well supplied with "heavy and fancy groceries" enough to keep the "wolf from the door" for weeks and weeks to come.

Included in the donations were canned fruits, vegetables and pickles, preserves and jelly, potatoes, flour, honey, cocoa, raisins, soap, molasses, oranges, sugar, candy, nuts, rice, coffee, marmalade, apple butter, crackers, egg noodles, vinegar, sausage, fresh meats, bread, cereals, mince meat, apples.

Previously there had been several individual donations, including apples, sausage, fresh meats, apple butter. For all these expressions of kindness and good will we are sincerely grateful. We have found many splendid people here and active Church workers. The Christian Endeavor Society is especially active.

A Christmas pageant, "The Soldier of Bethlehem," was given on the evening of the 21st of December. It was well rendered and seemingly very much enjoyed by the large audience in attendance. Especial mention should be made of Mrs. Boyd R. Richards, Mr. and Mrs. Roy A. Larrick, who did the training, costuming, etc.; Mesdames B. F. Sine, E. W. Cather, Fred Forney, Leroy Chichester, of the decorating committee; and those who took parts in the pageant for their faithful co-operation.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

"FOR TO ME TO LIVE IS CHRIST."

BY REV. GARDNER D. UNDERHILL.

"For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain."—Phil. 1:21.

I believe this to be one of the most pregnant statements to be found within the covers of the Bible. Here, in one short sentence of eleven words, Paul packs his entire philosophy of life and death. The first clause of this sentence reads, "For to me to live is Christ," and the second, "and to die is gain." I have chosen the first clause as the thesis of my message, as it is of so much meaning to us who live. I do not care to discuss the second clause, as I do not think that it so vitally concerns us. We will admit that Paul might be right when he called dying a gain; thereafter we hope to live the fuller, better life with Christ in his spiritual kingdom. Yes, this might be true, and we believe it to be true; but we are living, and that is the point we must take into consideration. The business of the living is to live, and to live in the best way that they can; and if they are Christians, to live as nearly as possible after the example set by Christ, their accepted Leader. Coe aptly defines religion as a way of life. In other words, the life we live is but an expression of the religion we have chosen in our heart. There is a vast difference between saying "I am a Christian," and living the Christian life. Christianity implies a life lived on the basis of love for all, and no matter how strongly we profess our Christianity, we must live the type of life it requires or we are not really Christians.

Let us examine and see if this is true. Is it reasonable? Did not Christ command us to love our neighbors? He did; but the question is, do we? From this you can see that we can profess our Christian belief to our hearts' content; but if we fail to love our neighbor, or to fulfill any other of Christ's commands, we are not truly practicing Christians in our lives, but are followers of a faith of our own making.

For convenience in discussion, and in order to make certain points, I have divided the first clause of my text into three divisions, as follows: first, "For to me"; second, "to live"; third, "is Christ."

When Paul said, "For to me," he expressed an attitude that every Christian should have. Here Paul uses the personal pronoun "me," and thus gives us to understand that religion is a personal thing to him. This personal attitude is a rare possession, which every one claiming to follow Christ should strive to obtain. It places religion on the strong foundation of individual responsibility, which is a necessity for the strength and growth of the Church. This attitude would inspire a new loyalty which we know is essential to the success of any enterprise.

Few of us today seem to realize this necessity. Do you believe that? If you don't, compare the number of people in attendance at Church services with the number of people who are members of the Church. This applies to every Church that I have ever had anything to do with, and, as statistics show, to nearly every Church in the land. Men and women seem to feel that they have paid the pastor to conduct services, and that is as far as their duty goes. Parents send their children to Church, stay at home themselves, and seem to think they have done their duty by both their children and the Church. Doesn't this prove to us that many folks are not making their religion a personal thing?

years a mission worker in the mountains of Virginia; and one of his experiences is in my opinion a splendid example of the all-too-general attitude of many of our Church members. On his first visit to the field, he was introduced to the leading members of the Church, and of course the deacons were included in this select group. At his first service, the minister thought it would be a good policy to have one of the deacons offer prayer, so he called the man by name and asked him to pray. The result was almost tragic, and nearly broke up the service. The deacon's retort was, "Pray yourself; that's what we pay you for." This is a rather crude illustration, but still it admirably shows my point. We feel that religion is a good and fine thing, that it should be perpetuated, but the job is not up to us. We are like the little girl who always says, "Let brother do it."

You may feel that I am exaggerating the situation in what I am saying, and maybe I am to you; for you, my hearers, who take the personal attitude toward the Church are the people who make religion what it should be. Without people like you, where would the Churches of the nation be? They would be crippled and ineffective, with no influence whatsoever. We can thank God that there are always the faithful few who feel their responsibility and are ready and willing to carry on God's work in the Church and in the world. This group who have the personal conception of religion is the hope of the Church. It is through them that Christ's gospel will carry on and perform its function of making life a more joyous, happy thing, and of easing the torturous pains of life. This is a fine group, and as long as it exists we need have no fear as to the outcome of the Christian faith. It will go on and on, as it always has through persecution and trial. It is very encouraging, I'll admit, thinking of these self-sacrificing few who are glad to bear so much for their faith; but that isn't the idea. What we want is to add more to this group, to make all Church members active, practicing Christians, instead of mere deadwood who belong to the Church merely because it is the proper thing to do, or because of fear of social ostracism. If all Church members could see the necessity of personal responsibility and loyalty, pastors wouldn't need to make such desperate pleas for money, institutions of learning wouldn't have to close their doors to the youth of our land because of a lack of finances, missions would flourish, pews would be full, and folks outside the Church would be forced to accept it as a fact that religion offers something worth while.

Christ gave us personal responsibility. He commanded His followers to carry the gospel to all corners of the world and to all peoples. Are we going to accept the challenge, or are we going to pass it by?

In the two words, "to live," we can find much food for thought. Life is a mystery; we cannot fathom its cause; we cannot create it. All that we know about it is that a divine Heavenly Father gave it to us, and that it is a precious gift. Because of this gift of life, our reason tells us that we owe God a gift of gratitude, and that the only way we can show our appreciation is by using this gift in the proper way.

Our life in reality is not ours to do with as we please; it has been intrusted to us with instructions for its care. We might compare it with an automobile. When a man buys a car he receives a book of instructions telling him what he should and should not do if he wants the car to have long life. In a similar manner, God gave us life and a Bible with its teachings, telling us how to care for our life. No one need tell you the outcome of disobedience, as it is self-evident.

A great number of people try to make life a thing of compartments which contain the certain things they do. They feel that when one compartment is open, all of the others must be closed, and that only one can operate at a time. If they only realized what a fallacy this is, they would soon do away with the conception they hold. Their idea is somewhat like this. Religion is in box No. 1; social enterprise is in box No. 2; business is in box No. 3, etc. On Sunday, such people open the religious box and close the boxes containing business and social enterprise. On Monday morning they open the business box and close the others. Then in the evenings they will open the social box and drop the lid on the rest. This sounds absurd, does it not? Yet I would dislike the job of counting the people who hold such views. Haven't you ever known a man to go to Church as regularly as Sundays came, and then go out on Monday and cheat in business, buy votes in order to elect his man, or gamble? The man in question will probably try to rationalize, and say that religion is one thing and that business, politics and fun do not enter into its sphere. Is this man right? You know that he is not! If we accept the definition that religion is a way of life, we have further reason to say that the view is wrong. Christ never told us that attendance at Church on Sunday fulfilled our obligation; instead, He gave us the Golden Rule to guide us in our daily life.

We are forced to accept a comprehensive view of life, whether we like it or not; and as we know that Christ wants the whole of our life, it is our duty to give it to Him. If we declare ourselves to be Christians, then religion should permeate the whole of our life. It should guide us in our every action. Christ, our Leader, had no use for the man who would give part and not all. When the young ruler came to Him and asked Him what He should do in order to be saved, Jesus answered, "Sell your goods, and give your money to the poor." He wanted this fine young man to know that the Christian life was no part-way thing; that it was something in which his whole being and his best were required. The young man failed to see the beauty in such a life, so he went away, disappointed and unhappy. Then at another time Christ uttered his most stinging rebuke to a Church that was not making all of its life Christian. He said to them, "So because ye are lukewarm, and neither hot nor cold, I will spew thee out of my mouth." Christ was a dynamic Man; a Man who bent His every effort to the accomplishment of the great purpose He had set for Himself—and we who are Christians promised, when we joined the Church, to give ourselves to Him and to accept His teachings. Thus we cannot get around the fact that our life must be dedicated to Christian service, and that our Christian religion must enter into everything that we do.

"Is Christ" is the third division of my text, and to me it is the most important. As I have maintained throughout, Christ is the Founder of Christianity, our Leader, and His teachings are the guideposts by which we should strive to live. Now, the question that comes to mind, as I think of Christ's position as spiritual Leader in our lives, is just this: Do we give Christ the position He rightly deserves? Some of us do, and then there are others of us who do to a partial degree, and then we find those who refuse altogether.

This world has many people, in this supposedly Christian age, who bow down and worship strange gods. There is the class who are willing to give everything—respect, honor, character and even themselves—for money, fame, glory, power, and things of that nature. What is the result of such a life? Dissolution and unhappiness is the

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

CHARACTER BUILDING IN COLLEGES.

The Abingdon Press, New York, Cincinnati, Chicago, has printed and brought out for President W. A. Harper, Elon College, a substantially bound and beautifully printed volume of 237 pages, entitled "Character Building in Colleges." The book is written from the experience and observation of President Harper, who has had a quarter of a century with college life as student, teacher and administrator. The author has chosen a favorite theme, and one to which he has given close consideration and wide reading. The titles of the chapters will indicate, as no words of ours can, the trend of the author's thought and the aim in writing the book: "Jesus and Youth," "The Objective of Education," "When is a College Christian?" "The Curriculum and Christian Character," "Our Present Agencies and Christian Character," "Bible and Religious Education in Colleges," "Christian Union and Christian Education," "The Next Step for Church Colleges in Religious Education," "Altering Attitudes," "What is Life's Objective?" and finally "Motivating Christian Life Choices."

A preface to the volume reveals that the basic theme was presented in a series of lectures and studies at the faculty-student conference held at the University of Virginia October 13-16, 1927. Representatives from all men's colleges of Virginia were present, and there was a general discussion of the topic and subject matter presented. It may be said, therefore, that the book went through the process of refining and experience before it was given to the printer. Possibly the fundamental declaration of the book and that which reveals most clearly, in a paragraph, the theme on which Dr. Harper builds up his treatise is found on page 59, in which the author is answering his own question, "When is a college Christian?"

"To me it is not amply satisfying that the students of an institution should embrace intellectually the chief tenets of the Christian faith, nor that its alumni should be engaged in occupations suggestive of service rather than profit, nor yet that its alumni should be identified with some form of organized Christianity. I think that a college, to be entitled to be regarded as Christian, should produce alumni who exhibit Christian attitudes in their conduct and who consistently apply such attitudes in the problems and decisions of life which they are called upon to meet. It is entirely possible for a man to profess all the articles of all the creeds and to have his name on the records of a Church and to engage in an occupation with service, rather than profit, as its ultimate aim, and yet to exhibit in his major life attitudes pagan rather than Christian conduct."

His treatment of the distinction between the Christian attitude and the pagan is both incisive and comprehensive. "The pagan view of material substance is briefly summated in the simple verb 'get'."

The Christian view is that "he gets wealth that he may share it with others; he gets that he may give, and his greatest joy is found in the assistance he may bring to other lives through the wealth he has been able to produce."

The book reveals the very rapid growth of Christian education as taught in colleges and its widespread influence as already felt among students and in the world. Dr. Harper realizes that Christian education has just had a beginning, but this beginning has accomplished so much and gives such promise of prodigious results that the colleges are giving more and more place to it in their curriculum.

The motive for life's choice must be the Christian dynamic, and no attitude to life in any form is pardonable, being pagan, save the attitude of the world's greatest teacher, even Jesus of Nazareth.

This is Dr. Harper's best book so far, dealing as it does with the fundamental things with which he has familiarized himself, practically and theoretically, and reflects not merely the mind and heart of the student, but the spirit of a man who is seeking, with a brilliant intellect, to make a real contribution to college life, and to the thinking and conduct of humanity.

We bespeak for the book a wide reading. It is, we think, very appropriately dedicated to Mr. and Mrs. Michael Orban, Jr., donors of the first Christian education building erected on an American college campus.

ONE SIDE OF THE GOSPEL.

"Still, after all, here is an existing teaching" (from the pulpit) "only partially evangelical, built upon worldly principle, yet pretending to be the gospel, dropping one whole side of the gospel, its austere character, and considering it enough to be benevolent, courteous, candid, correct in conduct, delicate—though it includes no true fear of God, no fervent zeal for His honor, no deep hatred of sin; in a word, no seriousness—and therefore is neither hot nor cold, but (in Scripture language) lukewarm."

The above quotation is from a sermon on the "Religion of the Day," by Dr. John Henry, afterwards Cardinal Newman, delivered at Oxford, England, three-fourths of a century ago. It sounds as if it might have been delivered last Sunday. One wonders if Newman's words are not far more appropriate to the twentieth than to the nineteenth century?

It isn't sufficient in preaching, not according to the standard set by our Lord, simply to be "benevolent, courteous, candid, correct, delicate." Our Lord, in His preaching on earth, included in His utterances a fear of God, a fervent zeal for His honor, a deep hatred of sin, and a seriousness that cannot be overlooked. If one does not believe that the early apostles followed this example, let one read Peter's burning, bleeding, blistering words on the day of Pentecost and on succeeding occasions when he preached. Let one follow the teaching and the sermons of Paul, if one is not persuaded that the gospel has also an austere character. And Paul's injunction to his successor and son in the ministry, Timothy was: "Preach the word; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering and doctrine. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth. But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist."

Thus Paul indicated and declared that there was something else in the gospel than benevolence, courtesy, delicacy, that it included a fear of God, a deep hatred of sin, and that the gospel, in its demands, was austere and authoritative. Every immortal and outstanding minister, who was in his day and since a real prince in the pulpit, has sounded this note of austerity in the past and had in their messages the sting, the rebuke, the seriousness of sobriety, and the fear, as well as the love, of God. Sin is as rampant and is as hideous in the world today as it ever was, and certainly there is need of a zeal for righteousness and a consuming passion for souls, if ever there was such a need. The gospel is the power of God unto salvation, sharper than a two-edged sword, but neither its power nor its sharpness can be felt when only waved in a courteous and friendly gesture, even in a benevolent and delicate attitude.

MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

Paul did little in Athens and much in Corinth. The gospel takes root in a commercial city better than a classic city. Skepticism thrives more in universities than in illiterate neighborhoods. "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall" (Prov. 16:18). The hope of the world is not in higher learning, but in the faith of the heart. Ministerial education is not scholastic only, but personal obedience to the will of God. Jesus did not say, go to the great schools, but: "Learn of me." The whole scheme of Revelation is a personal relation; a personal God, and personal men and women.

The New Testament question is not, have you read many books? are you expert in dialectics? but "Have you received the Holy Spirit?" Jesus said in the synagogue in Nazareth: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because He hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; He hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord" (Luke 4:18).

Spurgeon raises the question, "Has the gospel been spread to any great extent by men of high literary power?" The learned men in Jerusalem could not understand the results of early preaching as the preachers were ignorant and unlearned men. Paul says that he did not preach in the wisdom of words, but in demonstration of the spirit and power." The same spirit that inclines men to preach, qualified them to preach the gospel. This has not been written to undervalue learning but to place the emphasis where it rightly belongs—upon the Holy Spirit and the word of God. Four points are named here in ministerial education:

1. Spiritual education.—Regeneration, call and surrender. Paul was first converted, then called, and then surrendered. The other apostles had this same invitation into the ministry. Personal contact with Jesus Christ, whether by a miraculous change, as Paul, or a simple follow me, as in the case of Matthew, must bring the man into spiritual fellowship with the Saviour of men. The call is a matter realized in the life; and the motive is spiritual. Full surrender is essential.

2. Personal education.—One may have salvation without character, which is like a fortune; it must be built up. The minister needs to do constructive work in character-building. Fitness embraces capacity to handle the word and the people. If such gifts are not inherent they must be learned. Absolute surrender to God and the work is one of the most difficult lessons to learn. Nature, family, new conditions, all suggest self-choice and self-management; but the true soldier never questions orders.

3. Intellectual education.—Academic, democratic, self-reliance. Academic education should be erected on a good personal and spiritual foundation. The mind is easily diverted from God and the gospel. The ministerial relation is like the material relation, with no preferences, no prejudices, with a bigger heart than head. The least and the greatest, the most ignorant and the wisest, the poorest and the richest, the youngest and the oldest should share alike in his sympathy and his service. Self-reliance is a prime virtue anywhere; but imperative in the minister. He should be debtor to all men, but not expect too much from others.

4. Practical education.—Organic, heroic, stay-at-it tell the tale. There is more to be done than preaching. The congregation is to be organized into active groups in such a way that they do the work themselves. Bossism fails. Tactful introduction of organizations puts the work on a sound and permanent basis. Hermon Eldredge said this wise sentence: "We have not too many organizations, but not enough of organization." The heroic must remain in the minister. The minister must not let discouragement rob him of his faith and hope in God, the gospel and the people. It is a life-job; learn to remain with it to the end.

PITY BARBAROUS MISSISSIPPI!

Not all Mississippians are barbarous—just some—but all are to be pitied, including their Governor. For it was in that now unenviable State, that on December 31st one of the most horrible and revolting lynchings took place imaginable. The poor victim, not allowed to be murdered quickly, was first tortured to the limit of endurance, and then wasted to death with steady and sure flames. The Governor being called upon said he had neither the time nor the money "to investigate 2,000 people." And so a whole State must suffer the bad eminence of a display of brutality and barbarism unworthy of any orderly or civilized society. Lynching is the worst form of mob law, and at its best is murder without restraint. Gradually we are getting away from it as civilization and economy and morality develop. Ten persons (nine negroes and one Mexican) were lynched in the United States last year, Mississippi again leading (?) all other States in this most unhappy and unenviable record, with four out of the ten; Louisiana and Texas each had two, Missouri and New Mexico each one. Year by year the number grows less on the whole, but remains about the same in Mississippi. In 1926 there were in all thirty lynchings; in 1927, sixteen.

That lynchings can be prevented, even when a mob has formed, is shown by the fact last year forty such mobs were prevented by quick and vigorous action on the part of officers of the law and those in authority. There is nothing in morality, justice, righteousness or economy, but all to be lost in resorting to mob violence and lynch law. It is a barbarous practice that no people can indulge in with impunity.

IS CHRISTIAN UNION A FAD?

Is Christian union a passing fad, a whimsical desire that catches the Christian's imagination and fires his enthusiasm for a time and then passes away, or is it something that is vital and permanent in the life of the growing Church? There are three reasons why the latter is the case.

First: The movement for Christian union has as its basic cause a recognition of the essential oneness of the followers of Jesus Christ. The day has passed when one group of Christians deny the Christianity of another group because of differences of theology or of practice and procedure. We have discovered we have a common love, the same loyalty to Christ and are all working for the same ends. Gradually we have come to see that these are the essentials and that it is not impossible to make satisfactory adjustments on the lesser matters that divide. The superficialities that separate are being swept aside as we become conscious of the Heavenly Father's love pulsating in each other's hearts. Spiritually we are one family, the Father above, Jesus our Leader and Master, and all the rest brethren. As the consciousness of this grows, heart becomes knit to heart, and it becomes a joy to work together.

The second reason is that the purpose of union is to enable us to more effectively serve the interests of the growing kingdom. Denominationalism has so divided the Christian forces in small communities that each Church is not large enough to do the best work. It has left the Churches in our larger urban centers without that unified policy and program which alone would enable them to meet the great and pressing religious needs of our cities, and it has sent into the foreign field a divided Church, thus causing confusion and misunderstanding among those whom we seek to reach. We are discovering that in religion as well as elsewhere division causes weakness while union gives strength. What an impact a united Church could have on the world! Our problem is to use the entire resources of the Church for the kingdom work: the stopping of the polluted streams of evil, the winning of all men to Jesus Christ and the transforming of all human relationships until they conform to His will and spirit. Only a united Church can accomplish this.

The third reason is that in most cases where union has been tried it has been successful, enabling the Church to do a larger work. It is a reasonable conclusion that if Christians really desire to work together it can be done. If those denominations that are most alike will come together by degrees the means can be discovered by which gradually a united Church may come into being. Few would go so far as to say that the rise of denominationalism was an evil. Its value has been great, for each new denomination has emphasized some neglected truth or some needed practice. There is, however, a growing belief that the continuance of these divisions can accomplish no good while a divided Church leaves her incompetent to do her largest work.

Union is not a necessity in the sense that the Church cannot survive without it; neither should the movement for union be considered as an evidence of weakness or an acknowledgment of failure. More than the facts justify has been said about the bewilderment of religious leadership and the losing of the Churches hold upon the masses. It is not surprising with the wealth of archeological and other discoveries that it should take a little while for Christians to make needed mental adjustments. Discoveries and inventions have led to such a complexity of our modern life that time is required to solve in a Christian way the many and varied resultant problems. The cause for wonder is not that we are still in doubt or in dispute about many matters, but rather that the Church has been able in so short a time to state with clearness and almost with unanimity the Christian position on most important questions. Religious leadership is revealing a clearness of insight and the Church giving evidence of the virility and power seldom equaled in Christian history. When Church relations may not seem as popular as at some other times, the growing numerical strength of the Church is one evidence that it is increasingly appealing to men as offering the only true way of life in the highest type of service.

Today there is also a peculiar situation which makes the Church's work more difficult. Growing material prosperity, industrialism and the amazing achievements of men are apt to lead the people to be satisfied with the work of men and the pleasures of a material civilization and to feel no need for God. Is it not surprising that in spite of all this we have a growing sense of the spiritual, an increasing realization of the pre-eminence of spiritual values, and a development of mysticism which is the awareness of the soul for God? Man is turning from the unsatisfying creature comforts to the great unseen spiritual forces—to God—for the insight, peace, comfort and inspiration that he needs and for his soul's true development. There are many who are satisfied with material things. It is only natural to expect this. It, however, is no evidence that the Church is wrong or has failed. Her duty is to continue her emphasis on spiritual things until these realize that here is the pearl of greatest value.

The movement for union, instead of being an evidence of the Church's weakness or failure, is the result of her virility, growing power and clearer spiritual vision. It is a passing from the trivialities that divide, to the essential unity of all those who are in the service of Christ. It is the attempt of true Christian statesmen to so correlate Christian forces that the greatest impact can be made against the forces of evil and the largest good accomplished. Union is necessary not that the Church may survive, but to enable her to do the greater work that needs to be done. This growing, visible oneness is evidenced not only by various unions taking place between the different Churches and different denominations, but also in the desire for the enlargement of the work of such interdenominational agencies as the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, the Home Missions Council, etc., and in closer relations and in many cases an actual fusing of interdenominational agencies. It may still seem to be in the distant future that the Church will be united and yet there are many evidences that the time draws near. It gives us encouragement to increase our efforts, that still further impetus may be given to this movement. Then, with the united Church adequate revealing our essential Christian oneness will come to the Christian message that new power and convincence which is needed to bring the world to Christ.

REV. HERBERT MILTON HAINER.

New Bedford, Mass.

The Greensboro Daily News of Sunday, January 6th, carried the fine face and features of Deacon L. M. Clymer, Greensboro First Church, and one of the charter members and leaders in founding and making the early history of this Church as being the man, according to the News, who first proposed and then led in the great work of establishing the Masonic Home for the Aged and Infirm, now one of the institutions of pride of the Masonic order of North Carolina, and of Greensboro in particular. It must be exceedingly gratifying to Bro. Clymer to contemplate this marvelous monument and beautiful living memorial to his love, life and labor, much of which has been given in solicitous care for the infirm, the aged and the needy. We congratulate Bro. Clymer on having the liberal heart and the far-sighted mind to lead in a work so noble and so splendid.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Sunday School raises new questions in the progress of Christianity. It is a child of the Church and, in its early stages, was for children. It was even held in the Church, as there was no other room for its sessions and classes. It grew. It took on new forms in its publications, its membership, and its equipment. Adult classes were organized; separate rooms for classes were constructed; classes were organized; and, finally, the school was separated into departments, with superintendents for each department, and classrooms around an assembly-room. The school was graded. It became a complete organization in itself, with graded literature, pianos, orchestras, and all the conveniences of a real school. In fact, some modern writers and speakers call the Sunday School the Church school. But one of the important elements in its history and value is that it is a Sunday School. This country has the opportunity to place such emphasis on Sunday in this school as to preserve what is known as the Christian Sabbath—Sunday. The world needs it, and this is the only nation that really observes it. "Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy." That is God's command, and His Church should obey it. Much is said in these days about the violation of the prohibition law, and little is said about the violation of the Sabbath laws, though more violated.

One of the grave questions of Christianity raised by the growth of the Sunday School is the question of Church attendance. Many go to Sunday School and do not remain for the Church service. It is estimated that not more than twenty-five per cent of the men in adult classes remain for the Church service. It should be kept in mind that there would be no Sunday School if there were no Church. The idea, the building, the equipment, the officials, the literature, the musical instruments and leaders, are all the product of the Church. If the Sunday School separates itself from the Church, or neglects Church attendance to the extent of weakening the influence of the Church in society, it had been better if the Sunday School had never been born. Church attendance has a value that is poorly appreciated. If all the members of the Church would attend midweek prayer-meeting and regular Sunday preaching services it would bring many of the unsaved to the house of prayer. People naturally follow the crowd; and there are members enough of the Churches to make a crowd if they all went to Church on Sunday. There is no substitute for the Church, and men and women who leave Sunday School and do not remain at Church need to stop and think. Radio sermons will never save the world. "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is" (Heb. 10:25).

ELON LETTER.

Another of Elon's benefactors and friends has fallen.

Mr. Benjamin N. Duke, who has been ill for more than two years, has just been buried in Durham, and with his passing a friend not only of Elon, but of Christian education in the large sense, has passed away.

Mr. Duke was a friend of Elon from the beginning, but not until the recent fire did he show special interest in the college. He and his brother, the late James B. Duke, gave the college $80,000 with which we erected the Science Building on the campus here in memory of their mother, Artelia Roney Duke. It seemed to be a pleasure to Mr. Duke to make this contribution to the college as it seemed to be a pleasure to him to help institutions that he considered worthy, no matter what their denominational affiliations might be.

Mr. Duke was a man who regarded his financial success not as a personal triumph, but as a social trust. He felt as much as any man of my acquaintance the obligation of men of means to support the enterprises and institutions that undergird modern civilization. Chief among these he placed the Church and its allied organizations—colleges, hospitals and orphanages. It was as natural, therefore, as life itself for him to support Christian colleges.

He had another attitude toward business which is growing more and more typical of business in general. I refer to his thought that not only should money, after it has been made, be devoted to the social and religious purposes with the expectation of building character as a consequence, but that the business itself should be organized on a Christian basis, and so conducted as to influence in the direction of Christian character-building the persons who work in each particular industry, as well as those who consume its products.

This is one of the most hopeful signs of our times. It means everything for the civilization that environs us on every hand to be shot through with such a Christian approach to one of the fundamental needs of human life, the need of employment and of the means of producing and distributing the material necessities of our life.

Mr. Duke was one of the most modest men. You would expect the possession of great wealth to somewhat influence a man's general attitude, but there was no evidence of this in the life of Mr. Duke. Whether he was in good health or ill, he was ever the courtly, courteous, Christian gentleman, and always interested in those things that really count, the causes and the enterprises and the persons, representing in his judgment the basis of enduring Christian civilization.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE LETTER.

Elon and Bethlehem (Piedmont Junior) Colleges were not established on such a basis of support; neither has there been any ruling by the Southern Christian Convention since their founding which shows that there has been any change in policy. If the Convention ever did assume any such attitude, it would be an injustice to Piedmont Junior College, since the statistics of the Convention are as follows:

Entire Convention: Number of Churches, 233; members, 32,459; property value, $2,648,196; pastors' salaries, $106,259; current expenses, $323,734; benevolences, $87,910; Sunday Schools, 189; enrollment, 23,290; raised by S. S., $39,223.

Georgia and Alabama Conferences: Churches, 40; members, 3,727; property value, $129,250; pastors' salaries, $8,050; current expenses, $7,860; benevolences, $677; Sunday Schools, 33; enrollment, 2,239; paid by S. S., $1,681.

Percentage in Elon College's so-called territory: Churches, 83 per cent; Members, 89 per cent; property value, 99.6 per cent; pastors salaries, 99.3 per cent; current expenses, 99.7 per cent; benevolences, 99.9 per cent; Sunday Schools, 83 per cent; enrollment, 99.1 per cent; money raised by S. S., 99.6 per cent—total, 852.2 per cent.

Percentage of property value and finance, 99.6; Elon's annual operating budget, $117,490; percentage, 84.

Percentage in Piedmont Junior's so-called territory: Churches, 17 per cent; members, 11 per cent; property value, 4 per cent; pastors salaries, 7 per cent; current expenses, 3 per cent; benevolences, 1 per cent; Sunday Schools, 17 per cent; enrollment, 9 per cent; money raised by S. S., 4 per cent—total, 47.4 per cent.

Percentage of property value and finance, 4; Piedmont Junior's operating budget, $20,000; percentage, 16.

Piedmont Junior College should have rightful claim on not less than 16 per cent of the Convention's present assets among the whole constituency, and no Conference should legislate to the contrary.

There is no possible way to calculate how Piedmont Junior College can hope to continue much longer on approximately four-fifths of one per cent of Convention assets for "education and colleges," when she has just claim on 16 per cent.

Furthermore, the major part of the membership of large finances of the Christian Church is located in the area adjacent to Elon College, and all designated gifts of any consequence have gone to Elon College. Unless we can somehow interest our people of wealth in the larger program of Convention education, our work here will suffer. We must have thousands of dollars, instead of hundreds of dollars come to Piedmont Junior College this year if we are able to continue operations any longer than this year. Who will come to our rescue?

HOPEWELL.

"I will bring the blind by a way that they know not; I will lead them in paths that they have not known; I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight. These things will I do unto them and not forsake them."—Isa. 42:16.

How precious are the promises of God and how wonderful to see them worked out in the lives of men; especially is it marvelous to watch His workings in a band of people working for the advancement of His kingdom on earth. The Church at Hopewell has indeed been led in a way that they knew not, and the darkness is giving way before His glorious light. Our Heavenly Father is leading, and we are content to leave it with Him, knowing that He will never forsake us.

The new year looks bright before us under the consecrated leadership of Rev. J. W. Barrett, who became our pastor December 2nd. We thank God for sending us such a man.

One of our Sunday School boys, Carter Harrison, was called to his heavenly home during Christmas week. He was eleven years of age and had been in frail health all of his short life. His mother, Mrs. J. H. Harrison, was one of the charter members of Hopewell Church. The funeral was held in the Church on the 31st of December, Rev. D. D. Nash officiating, assisted by Rev. J. W. Barrett. As Rev. Nash remarked at the service that the Hopewell Christian Sunday School has a representative at the throne of God, we know that Carter Harrison lives no more in a frail physical body, but lives in an eternal home now where there is no sickness or dying. Four of his classmates acted as pallbearers, and interment was made in Blandford Cemetery, Petersburg.

The missionary societies show a decided gain over the last Conference year already, and we are looking forward to a great missionary year for the societies and also for the Church. A box of clothing, etc., was sent to Porto Rico besides local missionary relief.

We covet an interest in your prayers, that we may stay where God can use us to His glory and the people's good.

COMMON THINGS.

In this fast age, this age of invention and discoveries, we are prone to forget the common things of life. We are today enjoying the blessings of many useful inventions and discoveries that our forefathers had never dreamed of. Only a few decades ago the airplane, the automobile, the radio were undreamed of. Very little was known about the use of electricity. Our fathers and grandfathers wrought well and laid a better foundation than they knew. They were content with the common things of life. They made their own tools, their wives made all their clothes. They cleared the forests, built their cabins and blazed the way for the greatest nation on earth.

Today we have all kinds of improved farm implements and machinery. Almost every farmer owns a car, and many enjoy the blessings of the radio. These uncommon things are getting to be very common now. Lindbergh's flight across the Atlantic was an uncommon thing and created a great sensation all over the world, but this was simply the achievement of a common lad reared under common environment.

The great game that was won New Year's day by Georgia Tech over in California gave the South a great thrill. This was an uncommon event. Great things, or uncommon things, create great sensations, yet it is the common things and common people that make the world's greatness. We forget that it is the common things that God has prepared for us that really make us what we are. We do not stop to consider the blessings of rain and sunshine, of seedtime and harvest, and hundreds of other common things. We do not realize how soon the earth and all things thereon would become a frozen mass if the sun should fail to rise, or how soon everything would dry up if the rain should be withheld.

When we behold a great event we can readily trace it back to the common things that go to make it. When we behold a great man we look back down the line somewhere and see a common lad in a common school.

The common home, the common school, and the common Church are responsible for all the great outstanding characters of the world today. The palatial mansions, the great colleges and universities, and the great million-dollar Churches all have their place and are great blessings to mankind; but without the common home, the common school, and the common Church, our great civilization would soon be only history.

The world's greatest Teacher took up His abode with common people, and built His Church with just such material. "They had all things common. The common people heard Him gladly." Let us think on the common things and be content with the common things that we are able to do; and exercise more faith in a common Saviour.

CHINA FAMINE SITUATION.

The story of the terrible famine in China increases in definiteness and volume as the weeks pass. Recent letters and telegrams from Peking, Tientsin and Shanghai and also from Hon. C. T. Wang and Hon. Sun Fo, of the national government at Nanking, bring the following facts:

A two-day conference in Tientsin (November 15th and 16th) of representatives from eleven provinces came to the conclusion that at a minimum 12,000,000 destitute men, women and children were at that time facing starvation and that the number would be increased to 20,000,000 by spring.

The amount needed for famine relief at the very lowest before next summer would be $20,000,000. Of this sum, the China International Famine Relief Commission is asking the national government and Chinese individuals to provide $8,000,000 and appeals to generous-minded people in Europe and America for $12,000,000.

Since that date, telegrams show that famine conditions are even worse in certain areas than had been estimated. General Feng Yu-hsiang has wired that not less than $20,000,000 will be needed in Shensi and Kansu alone.

These reports are now supported by letters from Shanghai. Dr. E. C. Lobenstine, secretary of the National Christian Council, writes (November 27th) that "there seems to be a very general recognition that there will be an immense amount of suffering between now and the late spring of next year." Mr. Geo. Fitch, of the Shanghai Y. M. C. A., says, "Reports that keep coming in from Honan, Shensi and Shantung are very distressing. The Chinese Foreign Famine Relief Committee (of Shanghai), of which I am vice-chairman, is flooded with appeals. It looks as if the present situation may be as bad as any we have been faced with. Politically, the country is improving steadily. Many of the real leaders are men of ability and integrity and many of them are Christians."

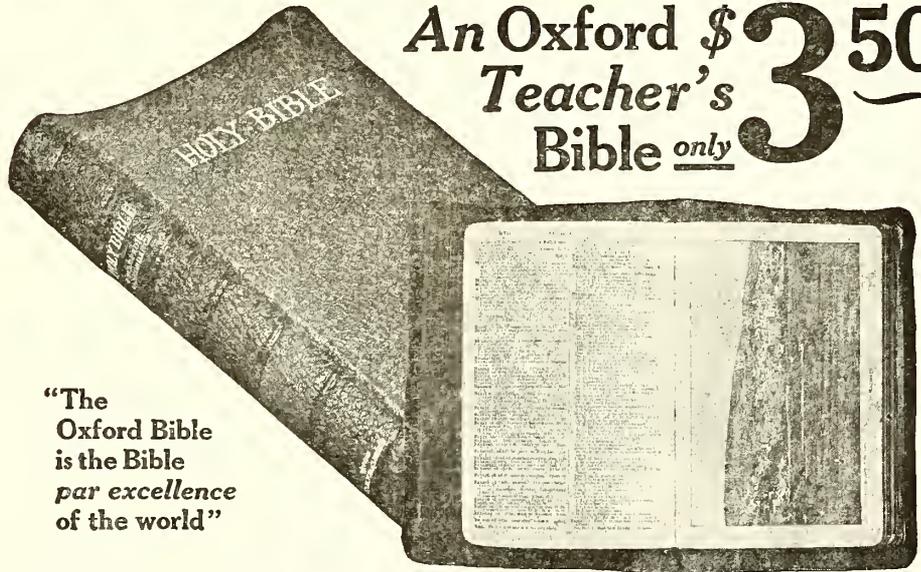

Hon. Sun Fo says, "I wish that China Famine Relief may devote a part of its time to raise a great sum of money for relieving the poor sufferers of the northwest from starvation."

Dr. Alma L. Cook, describing the situation in her region, says: "Famine is still extreme in western Shantung and southern Chihli. The crops are a complete failure due to drought, grasshoppers, worms and hail. The people are subsisting on chaff and tree leaves. Girls are being sold into slavery or worse at a price of four dollars. The able-bodied are moving to Manchuria or elsewhere. The old and sick are starving. A very conservative estimate, from investigations just completed, gives 500,000 actually starving now in six counties. There is no hope till June harvest, and if no rain comes in October the farmers cannot plant winter wheat."

In a word, the suffering is practically beyond imagination and the call for generous American response exceedingly urgent. Large sums should be going out to the relief agencies every week from now on until summer.—Dr. S. L. Gulick.

OXFORD BIBLES

An Oxford $3.50
Teacher's
Bible only

"The Oxford Bible is the Bible par excellence of the world"

The best recommendation of the OXFORD TEACHER'S BIBLES is the fact that over 3,000,000 copies have been sold. The wonderful helps they contain save your time because they are alphabetically arranged, making reference easy. They take the place of many books about the Bible, and can be depended upon, being written by eminent scholars. The Helps contain 32 graphic illustrations, besides 15 beautifully colored maps. The text is the Authorized or King James version, with over 50,000 centre column references.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

MILLIONS IN PROGRAM OF PROGRESS.

The Word of God gives missions first place in its teachings, its prophecies and its injunction. Moreover, Jesus gave it the first and most emphatic place in His program, and up-to-date history has proven that no denomination has grown to any considerable degree of proportion and honor until it has placed missions in the forefront of its thinking, its giving and its activities. Some day in the centuries to come a Church may rise up and grow and become great while it makes missions secondary in its giving, and in its thought, and in its activities, but God in heaven knows, and the Bible shows, and history proves that that Church, or even that branch of the Church, has not yet arrived on this earth. The Church will one day have a well-rounded program, but that day will be when it puts the evangelization of the world, the preaching of the gospel to the uttermost parts, and the salvation of souls of men, in the forefront of its thinking, its activity and its attitudes. We may persuade ourselves, we of the Christian name and faith may, that we can grow to great proportions and create within ourselves a well-rounded program by making missions only one and the least of the enterprises and activities of the Church, but unless the Word of God is misleading in its teachings, and the command of Jesus Christ is to be made of no avail, and the history of the Churches in the past is to teach us nothing, will find ourselves following a delusion and a snare. There is one reason, and only one, why the Christian Church, with its glorious principles, its holy and heavenly name and policy has not grown to great proportions and has not built up enterprises and institutions commensurate with those of other Churches, and that reason is because, as a people, we have made missions subordinate or secondary, or regarded them as a benevolence, or a charity, or an enterprise, that could or could not be attended to as we saw fit. Let's put John 3:16, which is the divine declaration, over against the following, which the Missionary Review of the World in a recent number pointed out to us:

"Is it nothing to you that there are 1,000,000,000 heathens in the world? that there are only 10,000 missionaries? that each missionary is responsible for 100,000 souls? that in the United States there are 100,000,000 people and 80,000 ministers besides other Christian workers? that 40,000,000 heathens die every year? that they are dying at the rate of 100,000 a day? that every breath we draw, four souls perish, never having heard of Christ? that Christians are giving at the rate of one-tenth of a cent for missions?"

In the face of these burning facts, who can be indifferent? Jesus said: "Go ye into all the world." There are three ways you can obey the great commission—pray, give, go. J. O. A.

CHRISTIAN SERVICE.

The fact that Christians are to live as Jesus lived signally has failed in its grip upon many who profess to be His followers. Jesus' natural life was simple in the extreme and tremendously sacrificial. He knew not and taught not the idleness, extravagance and excitement which today characterize society, even Church society. Jesus thought not of Himself. He applied His whole course of living to the way and will of God, seeking always to know the Father's precepts and obey them.

Second only to the preaching of His gospel of salvation, the specific end to which all Jesus' acts and teaching contributed was to build His Church, thereby creating an agency through which His disciples, even down to you and me, might carry on. In shame and confusion, it must be acknowledged we have carried on but poorly. Spirituality is not making the impress upon the world that it should be making. Just at this time the Church in many places is failing. There are high and wholesome spots, but spots only. In a general way there is much activity. But what kind of activity? Is it the kind that produces an ever-increasing spiritual harvest and hastens its maturity? That is the work to which Jesus was committed and to which He appointed you and me.

God likens Israel to His Son, and advances one reason for demanding of Pharaoh Israel's release. "Let my Son go, that He may serve me." Jesus Himself makes this test of discipleship. "If a man serve me, let him follow me"; that is, let him do as I do. Also this: "Where I am, there shall also my servant be." Nothing compromising or negative about those utterances. Not a matter of preference or privilege. We are to serve Him, going where He goes, doing as He bids.

Some will say the Church has not deviated from her Christ-ordained course (let no one charge she has departed from it—that in toto never will happen); that she is keeping safely true to original principles, differing only in the way of doing things, learning how to do things better. What things? According to the world's present population, are gospel sermons reaching greater numbers? Is prayer more availing? Is spiritual experience more general and of a better quality? I maintain the "things" often are superficial, sometimes unrelated and even foreign to kingdom growth.

Another argument against a weakened Church is, "Look how the gospel is being broadcast!" So it is. But to those who would be real stewards of Christian service, let me say God's love and the knowledge of His saving grace are not most effectively dispensed in that way, not one to many, many times as compared with the methods of early Christianity. In most instances the remarkable progress in world standards is not applicable to the work of the kingdom. And therein lies a great truth. With the progress being made in raising world standards, men and women, too much in the spirit of self-sufficiency, are saying, "I am captain of my soul," whereas in humility only should it be said, "I go to prove my soul," God help me to arrive.

In the last verse of the ninth chapter of Luke, there are mentioned who proposed to follow Jesus, but seeing they could not be Jesus' disciples and continue to serve their own folks and notions, they went back. These cases are individual, but the record applies collectively as well and gives rise to the necessity for every aggregation of believers, local or at large, to make the introspection. Just how truly are we serving Jesus in our policy of Church administration? But since an aggregate cannot exist except as it is composed of units, individual inspection is the more important. The individual Christian's entire mission is to serve God wholly and acceptably. God saves to serve. "Let my people go, that they may serve me." Serve me—not man's ways and ideas!

It has been pointed out that the Church is the one and only institution Jesus gave to the world. There is in the Church enough to satisfy and answer every divine aspiration. Jesus instituted it to that end. Be it large or small, influential or insignificant, we each are a part of our own local Church. Earnestly seeking therein to find the purest and highest channels for service, those channels will be discovered. God does not create us to a work (vessels of mercy . . . afore prepared—Rom. 9:23) and fail in His revelation of its identity and importance if this is faithfully sought.

Christian service is not always of the conspicuous type. Often it must be of that type. The disposition to avoid a service which invites notice may be dishonoring to our Lord, as likewise is the disposition to exploit that which properly belongs only to the period and place of retirement. The question resolves itself to a personal one purely, as does every question which has to do with relations between God and man. We are each the arbiter of all that pertains to our own destiny, meaning simply "work out your own salvation," and don't forget "the fear and trembling."

Because he took no chance of being humanly misled, but wholly followed the Lord, Caleb was permitted to enter Canaan. Paul could write to the Thessalonian Church, commending it on how it "turned" to serve the living and true God. If in us, individually or collectively, there be need of turning, let us be willing to do it. Perhaps our fault is one of usurpation. Let us give another a chance. Let us serve by helping others to grow.

MRS. J. J. LINCOLN.

CO-OPERATIVE AGENCIES.

Probably the organization that has had most influence on co-operation is the World's Sunday School Council of Christian Education. It is the oldest and its work affects more people than any other organization in the field of religious education. Among the many things it has done in bringing the Churches together in a common interest, two stand out as important accomplishments. It has established the uniform lessons used by all co-operating denominations, and it has introduced the Sunday School conventions for townships, counties and States.

The object of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, as stated in its constitution, is, first, to bring the Churches into a fellowship of catholic unity; and, second, to bring Churches into a united service for Christ in the world. It is a clearing-house for the problems of common interest to all the Churches. It promotes teamwork, local federations, informs pastors of industrial changes which affect their work, promotes international justice and peace, combats prejudice and promotes good will among all races and nations.

The Student Volunteer Convention, held at Detroit about a year ago, gives us cause for hope in this great movement. This three thousand students attended the Convention because they were seeking something. They did not go as representatives of their denomination; as a matter of fact, denominationalism and race prejudice were forgotten. Thirty races were represented, and the hotels made no distinction whatever in race or color of those received. These young people decided that the solving of their problems depended upon their attitude toward Christ.

Some one has said, "Crusade with Christ" is the modern rallying call to youth," and if we observe the situation we will recognize the truthfulness of the statement. The International Christian Endeavor Convention set the world to thinking when it announced this as its slogan, "A crusade with Christ in evangelism, world peace and Christian citizenship."

The purpose of the National Church Comity Conference, held under the auspices of the Federal Council, Home Missions Council, and Council of Women for Home Missions, was to discover means of co-operation to the end that competition, overlapping of work and waste of effort may be reduced. The findings committee reported that "We are advancing to a new era in which we will see free religious groups building not by competitive drift but by co-operative intentoin."

It is well for us to remember, too, that the three organizations mentioned in the above paragraph have recommended (1) a Church for each one thousand homogenous people; (2) a single Church in a field should receive into fellowship all people without regard to doctrinal views; (3) a mission supported Church in competition with a self-supporting Church should vacate the field; and (4) all denominations interested in a given field should confer and decide who should take the field.

The first American conference on Christian unity was not what some hoped that it would be, because it was here that sectarianism showed itself. However, it did accomplish one beautiful thing. The Lord's Supper was celebrated with representatives of more than twenty denominations participating.

A decision of great importance was reached at the recent convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church at Washington. The convention authorized its commission on faith and order to confer with the Presbyterian and Methodist Churches "in the consideration of matters of Christian morality looking toward organic unity." It seems that they are more interested, for the present, at least, in the moral and religious questions than ecclesiastical considerations. To quote Dr. Charley: "Hitherto our approaches have been mainly concerned with doctrine and order. How we try the interesting experiment of beginning with the religious life."

In answer to this overture, Dr. H. S. Coffin says: "Speaking both as a Presbyterian and as a teacher in an interdenominational seminary, I hail the action of the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in seeking conferences looking toward unity with Methodists and Presbyterians."

Likewise, the Methodist Episcopal Church, in its general conference at Kansas City last May, created a commission on Church union, the purpose of which union is to co-operate with interdenominational agencies and to confer with individual churches looking to co-operation and union.

Regardless of what may be said for or against the Lausanne conference, the Jerusalem missionary conference, the Stockholm life and work conference, the Inter-Church World Movement, or any other movement or conference, it is evident that the Church is discovering itself. These ventures may not have accomplished their aim, but they have served well, in that the Church is beginning to take stock. It is beginning to see the foolishness of all this Tommy-rot of selfishness and is realizing that it is yet far from Jesus' ideal.

If co-operation does not come from within the different denominations, then there are forces that will eventually compel co-operation. Missionaries have long recognized the folly and ineffectiveness of denominational creeds and doctrines in the mission fields, and have, so far as the denominational leaders at home would allow, undertaken the work without any attention to "isms" that we think so essential. Those who have never lived under the influence of Christianity do not want our doctrines, beliefs, creeds and isms. They want the gospel of Christ, and the missionary enterprise will never succeed until it unites on the essential principles which Christ lived and taught.

Economics demand that the system of financing the Church work be changed. Christian business men will soon demand economy in Church finance —and that can never be under the present conditions.

The youth movements are giving cause for quite a discussion and concern. Possibly the greater amount of criticism comes from older ones, who are so set on their Church and its aged views that their eyes are closed to the greater need of the day. They see, too, that youth is giving no attention to denominationalism. Yes, they make some mistakes, but they are seeking the Master Teacher and His message. They would know the mind of Jesus in the every-day situations of life.

It is obvious that this is a limited discussion of the co-operative agencies in the field of religious education. However, space forbids a discussion of all the agencies listed in last week's article. Next week we shall undertake to discuss the Christian Church's activity in Christian union.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson V—February 3, 1929.

THE HOLY SCRIPTURES.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Open Thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of Thy law."
—Psa. 119:18.

LESSON: Deut. 6:4-9; Josh. 1:8, 9; 2 Kings 22:8-20; Neh. 8:1-8; Psa. 19:7-14; Luke 24:25-32; Acts 17:10-12; 2 Tim. 3:14-17.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 119:105-112.

The Bible is still a Book to be reckoned with. It still has a place in human life. In spite of what a few critics and cynics say, it is not out-of-date at all; in fact, it is more up-to-date than the so-called best sellers. It still is read by millions of people, not all of them "dumb-bells" by any means, who find in it not only satisfaction for the keenest intellectual hunger, but satisfaction for the deepest heart-hunger. One of the most amazing things about the Bible is that it is so simple that even a child or the most untutored person can find something in it that he can understand, and yet it is so profound that even the greatest scholars frankly confess that they have never plumbed its depths. In spite of the fact that it was written hundreds of years ago, under conditions so different from those of our modern Western civilization, it still has a message and a mission for us today. It delineates human nature in such a faithful and frank and full way, and it deals with principles that are eternal, so that the Bible can never be outgrown. The Word of God standeth sure. Heaven and earth may pass away but it will never pass away.

It is impossible to do anything but touch the high spots about the Bible in one short lesson. These notes will simply suggest several angles of approach to the Scriptures, as suggested by the references for today's lesson.

1. The origin of the Holy Scripture. "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God." The Scriptures are divinely inspired. They had their origin in God. His Spirit working on and in and through the mind and heart and will of men expressed itself in the Scriptures. Theories of inspiration, of course, differ. Some think that the writers of Scripture were simply the machines of the Spirit of God. Others think that the Spirit of God inspired them, but that some measure of freedom was given. Put in another way, some think that every word and every comma and every jot and tittle of the Scriptures were literally and inflexibly inspired. Others think that the Spirit of God inspired the writers who expressed in language colored by their own background and experience, the things about which they wrote. Some would say that the Spirit of God dictated word for word, and with every punctuation mark and the dotting of an "i" and the crossing of a "t" the Holy Scriptures. Others would say that the Spirit of God gave the impulse to write as a man would tell his stenographer to write a letter, rather than to dictate it word for word. The testimony of the centuries, and the experience of the race agrees on one thing: the Holy Scriptures were inspired by God. They are different from any other book or books. Any one who reads the Bible with an open mind and a responsive heart will readily see that God is in it.

2. The purpose of the Holy Scriptures. It is a mistake to think that in every case the writers of the Holy Scriptures said in so many words:

"Now I am going to sit down and write something that future generations ought to study." The fact of the matter is that the writers of the Bible wrote out of their experience or their observation. They felt inspired by God to write and they wrote without any ulterior motive. The men who wrote the Psalms had no idea that future generations would be reading them and cherishing them. They simply put in forms of beauty and power the story of God's dealing with them as individuals, and with their nation. Paul did not have any idea that his letters to the Philippians or to Philemon would be eagerly read by millions yet unborn. The Spirit of God moved his head and his heart and he wrote these, as well as his other letters to meet specific and often local problems.

But, the Scriptures have a distinctive mission or purpose in human life and human history. Paul says it is profitable for—

(a) Teaching. The Bible is the one great textbook of religion. If all the other books in the world were destroyed, the Bible alone contains sufficient material for teaching ethical and spiritual truths. Compressed within the bounds of an ordinary Bible are all the fundamental truths of life and eternity. For teaching about God, about Christ, about man, about duty, about destiny, about virtue, about life, about character, about anything and everything that concerns man here and hereafter—the Bible is adapted to this purpose.

(b) Reproof. The Bible tells us very frankly, sometimes to the point of being painful, of our faults and shortcomings. One reason why many people do not read the Bible is because the Bible reveals their deep needs, their limitations, their sins.

(c) Correction. The Bible reproves that it may restore. God does not rest content when His children are shown their faults and shortcomings. He does this in His Word and by His Spirit only to the end that they may turn to Him so that He can restore them. The Bible helps men to the correct way of living.

(d) Instruction, which is in righteousness. The goal of the Bible is the man thoroughly furnished unto every good work. He who reads the Bible with an open mind, a responsive heart, and an obedient will will be coming more and more unto the measure of the fullness of the stature of Christ.

3. The challenge of the Holy Scriptures. If the Bible contains what man needs most to know, and if it has that which helps man the most, then it goes without saying that man should seek to know all that he can about the Bible. It should be read diligently, regularly, frequently, prayerfully, obediently. The greatest danger today does not lie in those who are criticising and attacking the Bible, but in those who are neglecting the Bible. Bible reading is not something that a man can accept or reject as he pleases with immunity. It is one of the sacred obligations of the Christian life. Much of the poverty of spiritual life in so many Church members is due to the failure to read the Bible. What are you who read these notes going to do about it? Make it a part of your duty to read and obey this Book.

OFFICIAL NOTICE.

Miss Pattie Coghill has resigned as Field Secretary of the Board of Christian Education of the Southern Christian Convention. All communications intended for that board should be addressed to F. C. Lester, chairman, Waverly, Va.

For about five years Miss Coghill has efficiently served the board and the Southern Christian Convention. The strain of constant travel and heavy work was beginning to tell on her health. An opportunity to teach Bible in connection with the public schools of Washington, N. C., beginning January 7, 1929, made her ask to be relieved by our board on January 1, 1929. The board unanimously voted to grant the request, but with regret.

The work is now being directed by the chairman, who will be glad to lend any assistance possible to those who wish it.

F. C. LESTER, Chairman.

A MINISTER'S EXPERIENCE.

It is popular to secularize the religious and spiritualize the secular. There is a difference between being called to plow and being called to preach. My father called me to plow, but God called me to preach.

My experience may help other young men. Very early in life I had an inclination to leave the farm and enter some field of commercial activity. My attention was first called to the study of telegraphy as a possible employment. I began the study of this work, with the intention of going off to school to take a business course. I wanted to make money. At the age of eighteen an impression came into my mind that I should preach. I did not want to be a preacher. The work carried with it too much responsibility. I would have to speak in public, and I was timid. I said, "I cannot be a preacher." But the impression grew. No one had mentioned the subject to me. I prayed over the matter.

Finally, after praying much in private over the matter, I said, "Lord, I want to know if this is a divine call to the ministry. If it is the Lord's call, I am willing to do my best." Then I said, "Lord, I want to be sure about the call. If this is a divine call, make it known to me through Major I. W. Duck, the superintendent of our Sunday School." I had never intimated to any one that I had such an impression. I had not been taking any public part in Church meetings except as a singer.

One Sunday after the session of the Sunday School was over, I was standing by the stove waiting for the preaching service to begin. Major Duck beckoned to me to come over into the "amen corner" of the Church. I felt a choking in my throat. I was afraid. He laid his hand gently upon my shoulder and said, "Walter, my boy, have you had a feeling that the Lord wants you to preach?" I said, "Yes, sir." The tears came into his eyes as he said, "I have been thinking and praying about this matter, and I believe the Lord wants you to be a preacher."

This incident, as it appears in cold type, may be passed up by some readers as insignificant. To me it is as spiritually real today as any fact in my experience. As the climax of a great struggle in my heart, I can never doubt that God called me into the ministry, and used that good Christian man to verify that call and help me to understand my position in the matter. No man could have persuaded me to enter the ministry. From that day until this day, no man could have persuaded me not to enter the ministry.

After thirty years of active service in the ministry of the Christian Church, I want to bear testimony to the joy of being a servant of the Master. God has never disappointed me. He has given me good measure, pressed down, heaped up, and running over. I devoutly wish that I may have the privilege of enlistment in this great service for thirty more such years of blessed fellowship with Him and His people. It seems to me that I have just begun. His voice is calling for other young men to take up this great work. Listen for that voice. Do not go unless He calls. But, if He calls, open your mind, your heart, your life to Him. He will go with you all the way.

I. W. JOHNSON.

THE FEDERAL COUNCIL.

By Rev. Warren H. Denison.

The Federal Council of Churches is the most representative voice of Protestantism in America, declared Dr. Clarence Barbour in his welcome address. Indeed, it would be difficult to assemble approximately five hundred more representative persons than were those present, either in training, experience, cleaner living, broader vision, consecration and statesmanship.

The great appreciation of the council was reflected in the scores of messages from Christian agencies throughout the world, as well as from President Coolidge and President-elect Hoover. Delegates were present from several foreign nations to bring greetings. The committee of one hundred, under leadership of Dr. W. O. Thompson, after a year's hard study, was ready to assemble in clear form some outstanding themes relating to America's Churches and as to the next step in united efforts. The capable senior secretary, Dr. Charles McFarland, reviewed in brief compass the way the council had come these twenty years. He summoned the council to the leadership of the Church up to the Mountain of Transfiguration, and then to let Christ lead them to the plains of human life and service. He declared the two outstanding needs of the Church to be spiritual authority and human sympathy. Messages were authorized to be sent to Christians of all lands and to all lovers of world justice, good will and peace.

The commission on evangelism heartily endorsed a program of visitation evangelism, looking to a great culmination in Easter, 1930.

Mrs. John Ferguson captured the council with her recital of the plans and program for a national organization of Church women. Sixty per cent of the Church women are enlisted in missionary organizations, and they seek to enlist all Church women in various Christian enterprises. There was intense interest when the commission on international justice and good will made its strong report endorsing the general pact of Paris and urged the Senate of the United States to ratify it without delay. It declared against any material increase in the United States Navy. The commission is doing a great work in creating friendly relations with the Orient and with Latin-America through its friendship projects. In all the work and plans of the commission's, whether of this or any other, may be found the underlying Christian principle. The commission concluded its report with this high note:

"We believe that world security and peace depend on bringing the ideals, the principles and the spirit of Christ into the mutual dealings of governments and peoples. Narrow nationalism must be overthrown. Patriotism must be Christianized. International policies must subordinate a nation's economic and financial interests to the welfare of all mankind.

We believe that only as nations seek first of all the kingdom of God and His righteousness will they achieve true greatness and honor. America should seek to be worthy, and only so will she be able to take her high place in this modern world and render to all mankind the service which now seems to be so remarkably within her reach."

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

THE BLESSING OF POVERTY.

"The poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel."—Isa. 29:17-24.

Prof. William James, the famous philosopher, once declared that "the prevalent fear of poverty among the educated classes is the worst moral disease from which our civilization suffers." His sentences in this connection have iron in them. He says: "We have grown literally afraid to be poor. We have lost the power of even imagining what the ancient idealization of poverty could have meant: the liberation from material attachments, the unbribed soul, the manlier indifference, the paying our way by what we are, or do, and not by what we have—the more athletic trim, in short, the moral fighting shape."

This reminds us of the great men of the Bible, who were all poor men. Our Lord Himself had no place to lay His head. He and His disciples were poor, "poor, yet making many rich." Paul earned his way by making tents. The Bible from end to end shines with glorified poverty.

And yet, as Prof. James says, most of us are terribly afraid to be poor. We forget that choice and august company to which poverty, nobly born, admits us. Ignoble poverty, the poverty of sloth, is of course a shameful thing; but there is, as Isaiah says, a poverty which rejoices in the Holy One of Israel.

Prayer.—Our Saviour, poor or rich shall be one to us if only Thou art in the poverty or the wealth. Amen.

TUESDAY.

ENRICHED AND ENRICHING.

"I will bless thee . . . and be thou a blessing."—Gen. 12:1-8.

Abraham's prosperity turned to the prosperity of all mankind. That is true of every noble spirit. Whatever such a man gains is a gain to all men. Every one should rejoice in his success, because every one's success is involved with his. A good man is like a lamp, whose light is no more for the lamp than for all around it: "it shineth unto all that are in the house."

Phillips Brooks once said something to the same point. "Set yourself earnestly," he urged, "to see what you were made to do, and then set yourself earnestly to do it; and the loftier your purpose is, the more sure you will be to make the world richer with every enrichment of yourself." Note Dr. Brooks' qualifications: "the loftier your purpose is." When a mean-spirited man grows rich, he serves to impoverish the world rather than to enrich it. Only a true Christian enriches the world with his riches.

Prayer.—Our Father, bless us, we pray Thee, that we may bless others. Help us to be good stewards of Thy bounty. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

HOW'S THIS?

"These things I have spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full."—John 15:11.

Can one be unhappy and happy at the same time? Here we are told Christ has a joy and that His joy is the source of our true joys, and yet we are told that Jesus was "a Man of sorrows and acquainted with griefs." Jesus was sad because of the sin and misery of the world, and because of the severe privations of His life; but in spite of all this He was happy because He loved God, because He loved righteousness, because of the happiness that righteousness would bring, because of the bliss of heaven and the everlasting salvation ready for those who would receive it.

Can we be that way? We are so frail we cannot be happy and full of the rheumatism at the same time. But amidst the things that sadden or depress us, if we can have the joy that comes by serving Christ, the joy that comes by helping others, the joy that comes in the satisfaction of being right, the joy of the eternal hope, sadness does not becloud our souls any more than it did His. "Life is divine when duty is a joy."

Let thy soul pray as it yearns toward Him. Yea, "the universe in which we live is crammed with God. Every common bush is afire with God. But only he who sees, takes off his shoes; the rest sit around and pick blackberries."

THURSDAY.

IS IT? CAN IT BE?

"Who hath known the mind of the Lord? . . . for of Him, and through Him, and unto Him are all things."—Psa. 34:36.

Dr. James A. Francis once wrote: "Jesus Christ is the explanation of human history, and no man, no matter how great his intellectual ability, has ever been able to find an adequate explanation of human history with Jesus left out."

Take Jesus of Nazareth out of history and the history of this world becomes the cruelest joke ever perpetrated by a demon; put Him in His proper place at the center of history, and before He gets through He will brighten the field of earth with such a harvest of grace, and whiten the fields of heaven with such a harvest of glory as will abundantly justify the ways of God."

If you have a perplexity in your mind, take it to Jesus and He will solve it. If you are held by a fear, take it to Jesus and He will conquer it. If you are confused by the noise and tumult around you, go to Jesus and you will find peace. If you are weighed down by your past sins, take them to Jesus and the burdens will fall off. If you are lonely, go to Jesus and He will give you the most glorious comradeship. If you are poor, He will pour the true wealth into your lap. All wisdom, all power, all peace and all joy are yours for the asking, if you will only go to Jesus.

FRIDAY.

BASKING IN THE SUNSHINE.

"For the Lord is a Sun."—Psa. 84:11.
"It is a pleasant thing for the eyes to behold the sun."—Ecl. 11:7.

"His face did shine as the sun."—Matt. 17:2.
"Let the beauty of the Lord be upon you."—Psa. 90:10-17.

How often is beauty ruined by an ugly disposition! The prettiest face is spoiled by a frown or a sneer, or a vain smirk. On the other hand, when purity, truth, goodness and God shine in a countenance, though the features may be plain, the face is the face of an angel.

If the beauty of the Lord our God is a permanent possession, it grows ever more lovely with the years.

Prayer.—O Thou, altogether lovely, we would see Thee as Thou art that we may be like Thee, and become increasingly like Thee through the endless years. Amen.

SATURDAY.

QUALITIES THAT STAND WEAR.

"There is that that scattereth and yet increaseth; and there is that that withholdeth more than it meet, but it tendeth to poverty."—Prov. 11:24.

There is a way to sow and get much and a way to sow and get but little.

There is a way to cultivate the farm that strengthens it for the next year; there is a way to cultivate it to impoverish it.

There is a liberal outlay that brings rich returns, and there is an outlay that crushes.

There is a way to give; there is a way to give expecting personal reward, and a way to give in order to bless. The latter has its reward in heart-volume, love, and joy and peace.

There is an accumulation that enriches and blesses and an accumulation that diminishes and damns. One may have a standing with a bank, but does he have a standing with hearts? There is a way to gain life and lose it.

The enduring quality is the quickening Christ-life which equips one for the life's duties and bigness.

Prayer.—Our Father, we pray Thee to take our lives into Thy full keeping. Our hearts are Thine. Our possessions are Thine. Our lives are Thine. Oh, seize us utterly. Amen.

SUNDAY.

STONES AND A WIDOW'S HEART.

"Behold, what manner of stones and what manner of building!"—Mark 13:1.

"She (the widow in the temple of stones) of her want did cast in all that she had."—Mark 12:44.

That is the way of human thinking. "See, what a magnificent building!" "My, what beautiful singing!" "Wasn't that a grand sermon?" That is what we say while Christ is looking for contrite, humble and unselfish souls. Christ might have chosen rich and influential people for His apostles, but He chose poor fishermen and despised tax-gatherers.

The apostles thought they were better than Mary, but as she washed the Master's feet with tears of her penitence they had forgot even their common courtesies.

The wealthy worshipers thought they were accepted for their much doing at the temple, but Christ regarding the heart of the widow who gave all she had with more want than them all, yet than the stone of which the temple was built.

Prayer.—Holy Spirit, make us clean. Thou alone purify us. Thou canst present us to Thyself without spot or blemish or any such thing. Amen.

IT CAN BE DONE.

Put your Church on a paying basis! Let the time-tested Layman Company's Tithing Pamphlets do the work. These pamphlets as issued by the Layman Company offer every Church a most effective education. They have convinced people by the thousands. Send sixty cents to the Layman Company and you will receive thirty 8-page pamphlets, which can be used for general circulation; three sermons; one account book; two short, convincing playlets; on copy of our new text book, "The Scriptural Basis for the Tithe."

The Church that is carefully, wisely and systematically taught to tithe will become a tithing Church, free from financial difficulties.

THE SUN LETTER.

Seven Churches made their pastors happy by complying with our special club rate and receiving a Stetson hat to present their pastor for a Christmas present. We were happy to send the hats and only wish that every Church in the Southern Convention had taken advantage of this offer.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN in every home is still one of our goals. Five thousand subscribers our second goal. THE SUN on a paying basis our third goal. Let every member of the Christian Church help us to reach these goals.

only answer. They go on for a time with a spirit of self-centered "grab, and grab all you can," which they believe is bringing real pleasure; but the majority of them wake up in time to find that life has fooled them, and that they haven't found satisfaction or contentment after all. We all know the story of the rich man who built new barns in which to store his abundant crops, and decided to take his ease and to eat, drink and be merry as his physical necessities were provided for, for many years. On the night of his decision, God told him that his soul was required of him, and asked him who then should possess his goods? Christ told this parable to illustrate the fact that a man's life does not consist in the abundance of things he possesses, and he ended the parable by saying, "So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God."

Then we have the multitude of people who accept Christ's position of leadership to a certain degree. Of course, the degree of acceptance varies with the individual, but all of them feel that occasionally they know better what is good for them than the Son of Man. I know two sisters, both of them married, bringing up families in the fear of God, diligent Church workers, honest, respectable. Both of them seemed to have all of the virtues necessary to make splendid Christians; yet, for all of this, they have one flaw which I fear makes their lives as Christians largely ineffectual. Some money was left them by a deceased relative, and they disagreed as to its division. And because they could come to no satisfactory agreement, they refused to associate or speak, no matter where they met. I have seen them go to Church, take the Holy Communion in the memory of our dear Lord and Saviour, and then go their separate ways without noticing each other. In fact, their actions manifested the fact that they were intentionally trying to avoid a meeting of any kind. Friends, can you picture that? Two sisters in flesh, and in Christ, working together in the same Church, participating in the same Communion, and then holding thoughts of jealousy and hatred for each other! Do you consider that they are living a real Christian life when they know that their Christ commanded His followers to love their enemies, and to do good to them that hated them? Can their lives count for much as bringers-in of the kingdom? I have already told you of the good work that they do, but I think the harm caused by their actions more than offsets it. Other people, outside the Church, scoff at them, and call it an example of what the Church will do; and, worst of all, their children are learning to hate. These cousins will not acknowledge their relationship.

What Christ and the Church needs today is the type of person who will actually give the Son of God his true position of leadership. It is hard to find many examples of this kind of men and women, as most of us are prone to want our own way too much. Our intentions may be the best, but that little streak of selfishness will crop out at times and make our noblest efforts fruitless. Paul, the author of our text, offers a fine illustration of the consecrated life. We know his history and the manner in which he worked and fought to spread the sacred Word. Near the close of his life he was able to make the following statement which we find in 2 Tim. 4:7, 8: "I have fought the good fight, I have finished the course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me the crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give to me at that day; and not to me only, but also to all them that have loved His appearing." Wasn't that a wonderful thing to say as he neared the close of life's journey? Don't you think that Paul enjoyed more real happiness, contentment, joy, and satisfaction than the man who refused to accept Christ's leadership either in part or in all? Life is but a fleeting thing; we have it now, but in a short while it will be taken from us. When we reach the end, shall we be able to repeat Paul's words and mean them?

Now, let us think once again of the text as a whole, "For to me to live is Christ." This was an easy thing for Paul to say after his conversion, for then he gave up all of his old habits and ways, and accepted Christ's message as a personal responsibility, which required intense loyalty on his part. This loyalty he gave unstintingly. Then he bound his life to Christ's, so that the two were as one. Christ was crucified, and left his work to be carried on by his followers. Paul took up this task with his whole heart, and performed it to the best of his ability; thus for him to live truly was Christ. Wherever he went, Christ's message went also, and this message was Christ, as Christ lived and died for it.

What are we, who are Christians, doing? Are we able to say, "For to me to live is Christ?" Do we accept the perpetuation of the Christian faith as a personal responsibility? Do we have loyalty enough to make us give up what we want for Christ? Are we making our life one with Christ's, not only in words, but also in actions? If we are not doing these things, are we obtaining true joy and satisfaction from life? Do you think we can go on living as we are at present, and when life ends for us be prepared to give such an account of ourselves as we would like to give; and would we be willing to have our Master hear?

Let us take stock of ourselves and find out just how we stand. If we have never before been able to feel that for us to live was Christ, let us start from today on to live such a life as will make this possible; for then, and then only, will life have a real significance and meaning. Let us remember that through faith and works we can accomplish this ideal.

In conclusion, I want to show you the all-important reason why it is our duty to be able to say, "For to me to live is Christ." It is said that after Leonardo da Vinci had finished his great picture of the Last Supper, he invited his truest and best friend to see it before it was publicly exhibited. After the friend had gazed at the work for a while, his first exclamation was, "O what a wonderful goblet in the hands of Christ!" With one stroke of the brush, da Vinci blotted the goblet from the picture. "I would have you see nothing," he said, "except the face of Christ."

As disciples of Christ, we, too, are painting pictures of Him. The world will look at us, and in us search for the face of Jesus; and if we are to succeed in our glorious purpose of true discipleship, we must blot from our lives anything that keeps Jesus from having the central place.

BROOKS.

Miss Mary Ellen Brooks was born August 3, 1889, and died November 28, 1928, aged 39 years, 3 months and 25 days. Miss Mary was a faithful attendant at my Timber Mountain services, though a member of the Lutheran Church. Shock and grief from the death of her mother about two weeks before brought on her death. She is survived by her father, two brothers, and six sisters. Funeral services at St. James Lutheran Church, in Hampshire County, W. Va., December 1. A. W. ANDES.

BROOKS.

Mrs. Almira Jemima Brooks was born May 17, 1857, and died November 13, 1928, making her sojourn in this world 71 years, 5 months, and 26 days. She lived near Timber Mountain, in Hampshire County, W. Va., and was a faithful member of the Lutheran Church. She lived a simple, quiet Christian life, and won the respect of all who knew her. She leaves to mourn her departure her husband, two sons, and six daughters, one daughter having died about two weeks after her mother's death. Funeral services at St. James Lutheran Church November 15, 1928.

A. W. ANDES.

HOYLE.

Our community was greatly saddened on the morning of December 10, 1928, when the spirit of our senior deacon took its flight to the God who gave it. Joseph Horace Hoyle was born November 14, 1859, being 69 years and 26 days of age. Bro. Hoyle accepted Christ as his Saviour when only a young man and united with Mt. Carmel Methodist Church, Vance County, later moving to Franklin County and united with the New Hope Christian Church, where he was ordained deacon. About eighteen years ago he moved back to Vance County and united with Liberty Christian Church, where he remained a deacon till death.

He was a good citizen, a faithful husband, a devoted father, and a very devout Christian. He always had a smiling face and kind word for all. Truly his life was a blessing and a benediction to the home, the Church and the community in which he lived.

For many years he felt the call to personal evangelism, and we believe led many to see the new light in Christ Jesus. He was ever ready to give unselfish service and devotion to the cause for which Christ died. His request was not to weep, but rather rejoice at his going.

He was loyal and faithful to his Church and perhaps no member misses him more than the writer. He always had a hearty handshake and a word of inspiration when we met. Bro. Hoyle was married in 1879 to Miss Neeta Coghill, and unto them were given four boys and four girls.

These he trained in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Besides the dear companion, eight children, 52 grandchildren, 19 great-grandchildren, a large company of friends mourn their loss. His body was interred in the Liberty Cemetery on December 11th, the funeral being in charge of Rev. J. E. Franks, Raleigh, N. C., a former pastor, and Rev. I. E. Crutchfield, present pastor. The board of day School superintendent in deceased's place, acted pallbearers.

There beneath a mound of flowers we breathed this prayer: "Father, into Thy eternal care and keeping we leave our brother sweetly sleeping." Truly a noble soul that made a great contribution to life has gone, but his works will follow him. While the vacant place cannot be filled, we realize that our loss was his eternal gain.

May the blessings of Him, whose grace is sufficient for our every need, comfort the bereaved ones.

MITCHELL.

Mrs. Mollie Mitchell was born August 1, 1884, and died December 30, 1928; age 44 years, 4 months and 30 days. At the age of nineteen, she married William Pinckney Mitchell. To that union were born eleven children. Four died in infancy; seven children are left with their father. She leaves also her mother, four brothers, four sisters and many relatives and friends who are grieved at her passing. Mrs. Mitchell was a member of the First Christian Church and was of a sweet and kindly disposition. Those who knew her best loved her most. She was a Christian woman.

Funeral services were conducted from the First Christian Church by the writer, her pastor, and interment in the city cemetery at 2 P. M. December 31st. May God strengthen the bereaved.

BROWN.

Mrs. J. J. Brown was born September 5, 1868, and died January 7, 1929; age 60 years, 4 months and 2 days. Before her marriage to Bro. J. J. Brown, thirty-nine years ago, the deceased was Miss Mary Willett. To the union of their marriage were born seven children—Mrs. C. W. Gerriuger, Mrs. J. H. Mintor, Mrs. J. W. Neville, Mrs. John Clark, and Fred, Bryau and Virge. She is survived by all her children, her husband, one sister and two brothers.

Not a more beautiful spirit was to be found than Sister Brown. She was a member of the First Christian Church, and was loyal in every respect. She loved her Church and her labors were for its success. The beautiful floral offerings were emblematic of her life in the community and of the love with which she was loved. Funeral services were conducted from the First Christian Church at 2 P. M. January 9th. The writer was assisted in the services by Rev. J. W. Ingle, pastor M. E. Church, South, Lexington, N. C., which Church Sister Brown attended in her last days which were spent there. May the blessings of God be plentiful toward the sad.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE
WADLEY, ALABAMA
An Accredited Junior College
Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

Piedmont Junior College is training some of the best stock of America for Christian leadership, to be used by the nation and the world. Here is a great challenge and asset for students who wish to prepare themselves to serve in a worth-while way. The new Administration Building will be completed by time school opens this fall.

NUMBER 4.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL.

DECLINES HIGH POSITION.—

Rev. W. Russell Bowie, who left a pastorate in Richmond, Va., a few years ago to become rector of Grace Episcopal Church, New York City, was, in December last, elected bishop coadjutor of the diocese of Pennsylvania. Dr. Bowie declined to accept the position as bishop, giving as his reason the claims of service in the field in which he is now serving. In his letter declining the position, he said: "It was only five years ago that I left another parish and another city with which almost all my ministry had been identified, and came here to Grace Church to face what I knew were considerable difficulties and a very large opportunity. I know that in these five years I have not yet rightly mastered the difficulties nor opened for this parish the doors of opportunity which wait here for the kingdom of God."

AN INTERESTING DISCOVERY.—

M. Rene Leblond, French consul at Akka, in Southern Morocco, has been making airplane journeys over the Sahara Desert for the purpose of making more accurate maps. He had to make a forced landing in a remote section of desert. He was doubtful as to the nature of his reception at the hands of the tribesmen. To his surprise and delight, he was most cordially received and treated with the greatest respect. He found that he had landed among a tribe that had descended from Jews who had fled from the Mediterranean region to the heart of Africa so long ago that there was no records as to the exact date. They had not been in direct contact with white men since 1866, and for more than half a century their only news of the outside world had been only vague rumors. Their language was a form of Arabic dialect, but in their writing they used the Hebrew characters and conducted their worship according to the Jewish ceremonies.

CARRIE NATION'S SUCCESSOR.—

Mrs. Maude Wilson, of Kansas City, Mo., has adopted the tactics of the late Mrs. Carrie Nation in dealing with the unlawful dispensers of liquor. Mrs. Nation, it is remembered, also hailed from the good State of Kansas. Kansas has for many years outlawed the saloon, and it was the disregard of the existing laws, and the unwillingness or the powerlessness of the officers of the law to deal with the situation which provoked Carrie Nation to resort to direct action to get results. Mrs. Wilson, it appears, was striking in defense of her family. Her husband had been patronizing a speakeasy, which fact had called forth unavailing protests from Mrs. Wilson. When she learned that her eighteen-year-old daughter was accompanying her father and was partaking of beverages stronger than those smiled upon by law, Mrs. Wilson got into action with the same weapon so effectively used by Mrs. Nation, with the same fatal results to the drink emporium. Even though her methods may not be approved, most right thinking people will sympathize with Mrs. Wilson. Such sentiment as hers directed toward the enforcement of existing laws would go far toward correcting the deplorable conditions that exist in so many sections of the country.

RESPONSIBILITY OF THE HOME.—

The Institute of Social and Religious Research of New York City has been making an investigation to find the causes of moral breakdowns among students while in college. R. H. Edwards, J. M. Artman, and Galen M. Fisher have been conducting the investigation. The inquiry has been conducted in twenty-three American colleges, the information having been sought from teachers and senior students. The findings have been published under the title "Undergraduates," and is published by Doubleday, Doran. The general conclusions of the survey are to the effect that where there is a failure on the part of the boy or girl in college to live up to the moral obligations, that in most cases there is back of the instances a failure of the home to provide the proper moral background. There is especial evidence which points to the fact that where the dereliction is in the use of intoxicating liquor the same attitude has been found in the home from which the student came.

CATHOLICS AND THE RADIO.—

The phenomenal spread of radio broadcasting and the corresponding increase in the use of receiving sets has created some interesting situations in the religious world. Recently a professor in a school of religion was discussing the effect of the broadcasting of sermons as it applies to the average preacher. His conclusion was that the average preacher would have to increase the quality of his preaching if he is to hold the attention of his hearers who are accustomed to hear sermons over the radio.

Occasion of concern is given the leaders of the Catholic Church over the fact that so many of their members are listening to Protestant sermons over the radio. That the Catholics who listen in have more than an idle curiosity was revealed by the experience of a California Baptist preacher who has been receiving substantial financial support in carrying on his radio program from his Catholic hearers. The Catholics are taking cognizance of the situation, and the Rev. Dr. Collins, of Overbrook Seminary, Philadelphia, has drawn up some suggested rules for the guidance of his Catholic brethren. As printed in the Ecclesiastical Review, they are as follows: "(1) To listen to heretical sermons on the radio when one is conscious that his faith is being endangered thereby is sinful and forbidden. (2) To listen occasionally, out of curiosity, when there is no danger to faith, is no sin, and unless definitely forbidden by the bishop or the holy see, may be allowed.

(3) To listen frequently or to follow closely the sermons of a particular sect or preacher implies that there is danger to the faith, and this practice should be forbidden. (4) To listen to heretical sermons in the presence of children or of adults whose faith is notoriously weak, should be forbidden on the ground of scandal, for which there is no corresponding sufficient reason."

DRINKING IN COLLEGES.—

Since the prohibition amendment went into effect, there has been periodic waves of discussion regarding the question of drinking among students. The latest outbreak has been provoked by the alleged disgraceful instances of drunkenness at the Virginia-Carolina football game played in Charlottesville, Va., last Thanksgiving. The circulating of reports as to what really happened caused the Governor of Virginia to call for an investigation. Dr. E. A. Alderman, president of the University of Virginia, in his report to the Governor, sets forth not only the attitude of the officials of the university, but also the difficulty of the situation which confronts educational institutions. A part of Dr. Alderman's statement follows:

"I take some satisfaction in the fact that this matter is openly brought to a head and can be frankly set forth. It has too long been a subject uninformed gossip and inaccurate surmise. There is a stubborn drink tradition in American college life, which I greatly deplore. I believe the prohibition laws have helped and are helping to break down this tradition, but they have brought their own particular troop of grave problems which as yet, in both general society about us and in colleges, remain unsolved. Drinking now tends to become more an occasional excess, induced by excitement and emotion, than a constant habit. The whole movement, however, is upward and not downward, a process of improvement and not deterioration. . . . Under the regulations of the university, any student convicted by the administrative council and the president of public drunkenness is dismissed from the university. Therefore, the case of a student alleged to have been drunk in public is reported by the dean to the president and administrative council, and the student is given a hearing. In every case, without exception, in which the proof of public drunkenness is clear, the student has been immediately dismissed from the university. Whenever a student is reported to the dean's office as using intoxicating liquor at all, or whenever a rumor to that effect reaches the dean's office, the student is summoned by the dean and the matter is talked over frankly between them. If the student admits that he has been drinking; that is, that the report or rumor is well founded, and if the dean finds that it is his first offense, or judges him worthy of retention, he must go on a strict pledge to the dean not to drink intoxicating liquor of any kind at least for the rest of the session."

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. MeD. Howsare, Dayton, Ohio, is this week conducting an energetic campaign, "a kingdom-enlistment service," at Elon College.

Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, pastor Liberty Church, R. F. D., Henderson, N. C., is a busy man. Besides serving Churches full time, he is taking post-graduate work in theology in Duke University, Durham, N. C.

The Executive Committee of the General Convention, Dayton, Ohio, has elected Dr. W. P. Minton, Dayton, and Dr. G. O. Lankford, Burlington, as the representatives of the Christian Church at the World Alliance for International Friendship Through the Churches.

Dr. J. O. Atkenson, editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, passed through Richmond the first of the week on his way to a meeting of the Executive Board of the Southern Christian Convention. We were glad to see him, and have a few words about the outlook for the new year.

Among the other bequests of the late Benjamin Duke, of Durham and New York, SUN readers will be glad to note that our Christian Orphanage, at Elon College, is to receive $15,000. Some other orphanages of the State, white and colored, were generously remembered with legacies ranging from $5,000 to $30,000 each.

Any of our ministers and other readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN desiring a copy of "The Christian Annual," issued by the General Convention, covering important data and statistics for the entire Church, may now secure a copy by sending $1.00 with order to Rev. W. H. Denison, Secretary, C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio. "The Annual" contains much data and information, and is invaluable as a book of reference and information.

The biggest religious event in the South in the last fifty years is the coming together of Christians and Congregationalists in Church and educational institutions. It is the acorn of Christian union in the South. The oak will grow from that acorn. The multiplication of Churches and members in the South is not as significant as the coming together of these two relatively small groups. We are dealing with beginnings.—Southern Congregationalist.

How very helpful it would be if all pastors would co-operate as does Rev. G. A. Pearce, of Windsor, Va., in securing renewals and new subscribers for their Church paper. If they would, THE SUN would soon be paying the Church a dividend instead of drawing from its resources. Remember, Bro. Pastor, that when you put THE SUN in a home you make at least fifty-one pastoral visits to that home each year—and visits that count and do good and are remembered.

Our sympathies are extended to our friend and brother, Chaplain W. W. Elder, U. S. N., who mourns the going away of his dear wife. She departed this life from her home at Long Beach, Calif., on December 26th. Mrs. Elder was a woman of many graces and accomplishments and made friends wherever she went. We remember with pleasure her stay at Elon College several weeks about three years ago, where she made many warm friends, all of whom lament her going.

It is learned with genuine pleasure and heartiest approval that Liberty Church, Vance County, is doing that which one could wish many of our other strong and growing Churches would do, viz: building a parsonage on the ground near the Church, that it may have and house its pastor and preacher close to the Church and in the community. This Church went from one Sunday a month preaching to two Sundays a month two years ago, and now it is taking another commendable and forward-looking step. This is a splendid community, and its beloved pastor, Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, and wife, rejoice in the prospect of a nice, comfortable parsonage at the Church, to be completed and ready for occupancy at an early date.

We regret to learn that Miss Pattie Coghill has resigned her work as secretary of Christian education of the Southern Convention. Miss Coghill has certainly rendered most faithful and capable service and has endeared herself not only to the young people with whom she has worked, but to all in the various Churches and societies with whom she has labored. Information is that Miss Coghill resigned because of the lack of income to the Department of Christian Education. The more is the resignation to be regretted on this account, because hers was a most worthy and meritorious work. Rev. F. C. Lester, who is chairman of the Department of Christian Education, will carry on the work through correspondence as best he can from his pastorate at Waverly, Va. Here is hoping that finance will be so arranged that Miss Coghill, or a successor, can at no far distant date be put in the field.

Mr. Peter Franklin Barbour, of Burlington, who had a nursery business and orchards in Mississippi, was instantly killed last Friday P. M. when the automobile in which he was riding collided at a crossing with a fast passenger train near Dade City, Fla. Bro. Barbour was on his way to visit his brother at Palmetto, Fla., when the tragedy occurred. The deceased graduated from Elon College, class 1903, and taught school successfully several years. He married Miss Ollie Hall, of Burlington, who, with a ten-year-old daughter, survive him. The funeral services were held from Shallow Ford Church, near Elon College, to which Church Bro. Barbour had belonged as a devoted and faithful member since he was a boy. The services were conducted by Dr. G. O. Lankford, Rev. T. J. Green, and Dr. C. H. Rowland. He was a good man, and many SUN readers who knew him will lament his tragic and untimely death.

Dr. Lewis H. Keller, president of the Atlanta Theological Seminary, sends us a copy of a letter signed by officials of his board of trustees, copy of which letter, Dr. Keller says, was sent to 800 leading pastors in America (Congregational pastors, we infer). One paragraph of this letter will prove of interest to SUN readers: "Atlanta Seminary is the youngest of our seminaries, and not yet endowed. It is the only theological seminary of the Congregational and Christian Churches in the entire South. Congregational in origin and administration, it is undenominational in service, nonsectarian in spirit, free and progressive in its thinking. The removal and enlarged plan call for $15,000 above present income. The final decision of the trustees to move to Elon, N. C., must be determined by the response of Churches to the appeal of our denominational leaders."

Rev. E. B. White writes: "In this fast, restless, materialistic age, it is well for us to remember that there is no event in the life of individuals or nations out of which Jesus Christ, the Lord God, can be thrust with any safety. The problems that constantly vex the race, no matter what they may be called or where they may be found, have no solution apart from the matchless Life-giver. There never was a time when the help and guidance and the power of our Lord Jesus Christ was more needed in men's lives, in all our lives, than it is today. Therefore, we need to seek for closer communion with God, for clearer and more vivid views of eternal verities, and a more constant sense of the Divine presence and dependence on the Holy Spirit. Christ must be our Master and Guide in all things. We must bring the spirit and principles of our Lord into all departments of life—social, industrial, economic, as well as religious—if our civilization is to be redeemed and saved. The Messiah of prophecy became the vicarious sacrifice for our sins, that He might become the Reconciler and Redeemer, 'That we might be made the righteousness of God in Him.' Christ, our High Priest, is the universal Saviour of mankind. The only way by which sinful men can approach God is along the blood-besprinkled path of Christ's atoning sacrifice. Our souls seek for peace and happiness, purity and truth, and these are found in Jesus, who is the Way, the Truth, and the Life."

ONE WHO NEVER TURNED HIS BACK.

The pressure of other material in the columns of the anniversary issue last month crowded out reference to the loss of one who, in his own person, incarnated the passion for larger Christian unity and unbroken fellowship—Alva M. Kerr, editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, of Dayton, Ohio.

An invalid for more than forty years, a patient disciple in the school of suffering, doing much of his work from a bed of illness and pain, Alva Kerr was a constant inspiration to those who had had the privilege of personal acquaintance.

By a multitude of others he was known and loved for his writing. Editorially, he was a trail-maker. Honest and clear-cut in his thinking, courageous in standing for progressive tendencies, always a prophetic champion of Church federation and unity, he made his journal, although the organ of a smaller denomination, one of the foremost Church publications of our day.

And we cannot forbear adding that, if all denominational journals were characterized by the same active and ardent enthusiasm for inter-church co-operation and fellowship which Alva Kerr wove into the very warp and woof of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, and if all carried on the same effective education through their columns in behalf of that ideal, the day of larger Christian unity would soon dawn.—Federal Council Bulletin.

THE SUN LETTER.

We want every family in the Christian Church to take THE CHRISTIAN SUN. We want every subscriber now on the list to help us get a new one. If you know of a poor widow lady in your community who is not financially able to take THE SUN and would like to read it, won't you be so kind as to write me and give the facts, and we will try to see if she can get THE SUN; or if some old member of our Church not financially able to pay for it, let us know about it.

This is the beginning of a new year; let us plan and do big things for THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Now listen: this is a very important matter, too. Look at the label on your paper, and if your subscription has expired, mail us your check for $2.00 to renew. It takes money to pay the printer; the rest of us work free.

WORSHIP OF GOD.

(From a Chaplain's Point of View.)

I.

BY CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE, U. S. N.

Definition: "Divine worship" is defined as being an act of paying honor to God. "Worship" is defined as being in the spirit and attitude of respect and honor—reverence—toward God.

God's command: "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shall thou serve." This has been God's order from the beginning of time, and the Church throughout all times, in whatever form it has existed, has been maintained with that in view.

The promise: As a reward for this devotion, God has promised that for the coming together in agreement and worship He will give us what we ask and endow us with a consciousness of Himself (Matt. 18:19-20), and that they who so worship shall renew their strength and shall not grow weary nor faint (Isa. 40:31).

The condition: The supreme condition of true worship is a true heart, unwavering faith and freedom from desire of evil (Heb. 10:22).

The manner or form: The manner and mode of worship may be according to one's own touch with God, or his personal relation to Him. Nevertheless, he has not left us without definite form. The Scriptures prescribe that the "assembling of ourselves together" in singing, making melody, making a joyful noise (for some folks can't make melody or sing either), serving gladly, coming into His presence with singing, prayer, exhortation, meditation (Psa. 100:1, 2), each helping the other (Isa. 4:6, 7), hearing instruction (Prov. 8:33, 34), etc., is the due and perfect expression of our devotion to Him.

In addition to this, there is the Church architecture and its equipment, in symbol of spiritual significance; the sacraments of Baptism and the Lord's Supper, with their spiritual significance—all create an atmosphere of devotion and are a medium of spiritual thought. During the Israelitish age the offering of sacrifices was an essential performance, but under Jesus these were done away with and an humble and contrite heart, with gifts for the poor and the support of the gospel and the Church, became the Christian's sacrifice.

The motto: There is a banner that each shall bear, and that banner is the standard of God, through Jesus Christ our Lord; a fixed and steady purpose of heart and mind, to glorify the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost (Matt. 28:19).

A false worship: Throughout the Scriptures, such things as heavenly bodies, groves, idols, images, other gods, improper use of temple, human sacrifices, witchcraft or devination of spirits, magic, and such like, all are denounced as idolatrous and unworthy the spirit of God. "God is a spirit and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth."

All these things are plainly given us as a part of our worship in order that everlasting praise may be given God to whom it is due. But, however clear and plain these things are, the obligation seems to rest lightly upon many professed Christians. The slightest unfavorable phases of the Church life may effect one's worship. If the preacher is prosy, or the service is too long for one's particular complex, or a member is a hypocrite, or the music is bad, or the pews are hard, or the weather is hot, any of these things is a sufficient reason to absent one's self from the Church. Such a one seems to regard the Church as something arranged for his convenience, instruction and entertainment, and when this fails there remains no further reason for devotion.

There are others who seem to think that the sermon is a matter of chief importance, that nothing else matters, so they arrange to arrive about the time the sermon begins. If the preacher happens to be not to their liking, they are cut of it, for this furnishes abundant reason for not attending Church again.

In these strenuous days, people are putting forth every ounce of energy they have to keep up with the procession of life. The Sabbath finds them weary and exhausted, and a day in bed, or riding, or picnicking, or the beach, or a play of some kind promises them more than the Church does, and they follow the line of least resistance, and so they turn to gratify their hearts' desire. But is not their hearts' desire" misplaced? Have they not a distorted idea of the meaning of the Church? Surely recreation is necessary and the wholesome kind is not out of place on the Sabbath Day, but should one allow his affections to be misplaced? Shall we have our worship of God undone?

We do not deny that it is possible for one to worship God in the quiet of his own home or in the secret of his own soul. One may enter into worship of God as he watches the glorious sunset, or gazes upon the mighty span of the sea, or visualizes the glory of the forest, or contemplates the flowers of the fields, or sits meditatively by the babbling brook, or rejoices in the river's eternal blessings. Nature is not only a storehouse of God's image and presence, but a throne upon which He sits where He impels man to become aware of Him. But how many do this? We do not know. Thus we believe that no man does so find God until he has done the first works of grace in his heart and been born from above, and who has not also, fundamentally, a soul yearning for the assembly and the edification of the saints. It is from this experience that he may, like Moses, then go out to nature and find God there.

If we understand the fundamental teachings of the Scriptures regarding worship, we conclude that the fundamental purpose of divine services is worship to God. If this obtains, where there is no sermon there still could be worship. Though one should fail to get comfort he looks for, or some word of encouragement he needs, or an inspiration of hope, or instruction (and it is very rare that a service does not give something in all these), there remains the fact that worship to God in the assembly of the saints is one of essential things, and it is that which they should diligently seek to the exclusion of their particular whims, erratic tastes, or peculiar complex.

We cannot urge too deeply the essential basic fact that God's children are a company of true believers bound together by an affinity of brotherly love which has its source and inspiration in Jesus Christ, and that to organize for it and work together for it with honor to God and with Jesus as our Leader is our great task. We organize our clubs and join them and have regular stated meetings and lots of special ones, in order to propagate the brotherliness it extends. Can a man be as good a Mason by absenting himself from all that is Masonic as he can be giving his devotion to the meetings, and to the welfare of the organization? In heart, yes, for it is in the heart all character is made, but in practice and in service, no; and he knows he cannot. Can a man love his sweetheart just as well away from her as in her company?

Can one be as good a Christian by the babbling brook as he can at service Sunday morning? In heart, yes; in practice and actuality, no. He needs the warmth of the soul, passion of others who think like he does, and in turn they need the warmth of his devotion. Besides, is there honor where no honor is observed? Do we hear anything when there is no sound? "Do men light a candle and put it under a bushel?"

Having done all this, what follows? The great outstanding blessing of worship, which is: divine connection between man and God in such a way that divine power is bestowed upon the man and serves him in the execution of his tasks. It comes in contemplations, in actions, in prayers, in instruction, and sometimes in menial tasks, but always it is a linking up of the human with the divine, and when it fails to do that it fails to be worship.

Finally, it means more still—the gift of spiritual valuation of things. All of life needs to be interpreted in its values, and only as man realizes these values do they have meaning to him. Man needs to work by spiritual standards. He needs to judge by spiritual values. He needs to regulate life by spiritual precepts. He struggles for food, for dwelling, for position and for honor. What do these things mean to him in terms of culture, of truth and spiritual insight? They have no such meaning unless he understands God and gives Him the honor of life. As "truth" means nothing to us unless we are given over to the culture of truth, so worship means nothing to us unless we are given over to worship. To be engrossed in the material things of life all the time disqualifies one for this culture and incurs the penalty which comes to the disobedient.

Every true lover has his way of loving and giving himself over to it. There is the "sign language," the eyes, the touch of the hand, gifts, little ministries, and a thousand attentions in everyday life which speak out loud to others that which the tongue can never express. Likewise, the emotions of the soul make known its secrets of the heart. A mother goes to her child's bedside where it sleeps, not to tuck the cover in again, but to kiss it and relieve her heart's devotion for the child. This is the spontaneous expression of love that all the powers in the world cannot stop. If it should be denied such an expression, love would die.

Unexpressed love to God will die also. Unexpressed devotion is the tragedy of the Church. Thousands make the mistake of believing that the Church is nourished and sustained by God alone and that their own spirituality is nourished by what they get out of it. That is a false conception. Spirituality is not something bestowed upon one gratuitously. It is something which is received as a consequence of opening the life to it and letting the life go out to it.

We cannot be spiritual by a simple passive acceptance of God; we must go further, and let God in and then we must "sup with Him," says the apostle, which means nothing more nor less than communing with Him, and expressing our love for Him, which communion is as essential to our spirituality as food is to our bodies, as thought is to our intellects.

We claim the Holy Spirit only by the wooings of our souls, and we may retain that Holy Spirit only by the oft-repeated expression of love for it. That is active worship.

Worship on a Battleship.

Worship on a battleship, or in the military service is essentially the same as it is elsewhere, with certain limitations.

In the first place, there is no Church building, no art-glass windows, no architecture, nothing to symbolize or suggest a place of prayer. Any

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE PEACE PACT.

The Senate of the United States has ratified, and President Coolidge has signed, the Kellogg peace pact. This makes the pact authoritative and valid, so far as our government is concerned. Other governments already ratifying the pact are France, Belgium, the republic of Czecho-Slovakia, Great Britain, Germany, Italy, Japan and Poland. While the Kellogg pact does not go as far as the League of Nations so far as its content is concerned, it does go much farther than any pact or treaty entered into by concurrent nations thus far. The treaty remains open for other signatories, and very likely other governments will sign it. The two articles of the pact which give much hope for permanent peace, and the settlement of international disputes without recourse to war, are:

Article I, which "solemnly declares in the name of their respective peoples that they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversy, and renounce it as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another."

Article II—"The high contracting parties agree that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may be, which may arise among them, shall never be sought except by pacific means."

Thus it will be seen that the nations entering into the treaty officially denounce and outlaw war as a means of arbitrament between contending nations. In other words, the pact now ratified constitutes a basic principle of international law which, if adhered to and interpreted according to the spirit of the pact, will result in the most momentous revolution ever achieved in time of peace for the abolition of war and the peace of nations.

The time has certainly come in the history of the world when mankind, for its own sake and protection, must protect itself against the horrors of war. War has become such a destructive force of life, of property, of morality and spirituality, that it can no longer be tolerated or endured. Either man must destroy war or war will destroy man. It has become a new thing and one that involves not only the soldiers who fight, as in previous decades and centuries, but all the people as well—men, women and children. Already the governments of the world are spending far more on wars—past, present and prospective—than on all other activities combined. We of the United States, for instance, spend $5.00 on war and its consequences for every one dollar we spend on all other governmental interests and enterprises combined—educational, commercial, internal improvement, road-building and all the rest.

It is no wonder, therefore, with every gesture toward national peace, and especially with the ratification of the Kellogg peace pact, the Protestant Churches of our country are in highest accord. The Federal Council of Churches, at its recent quadrennial meeting, summed up the situation for the pact so far as the Protestant Churches were concerned when it declared that "in the renunciation of war as an instrument of national policy, its council recognizes the great step toward the realization of the Christian ideal or a society in which all human relations shall be organized on the principle of brotherly love."

We join most heartily in the sentiment expressed in the bulletin of the Federal Council for January: "We suggest that the Sunday after the ratification of the pact by the Senate be observed throughout the Churches as a day of rejoicing, of prayer and of fixed determination that our people shall stand steadily behind the spirit of the pact through the decades ahead, to the end that peace, with justice and good will, may become a world habit of the nations."

While we rejoice over every step taken toward the realization of world peace, we may hope for the day, though it has by no means arrived, when the prophecy of the Book of Micah shall be fulfilled: "And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

PROHIBITION ANALYZED.

No law can enforce itself. Moreover, law has been defined as "the organized virtue of the community." This virtue may not be universal as controlling the conduct, or even the desire, of a minority, but it must be far-reaching enough to control the conduct and the desire of the majority, or it would not be law. The majority of the people of the United States, at various and sundry times, have declared in favor of prohibition and against the legal sale of liquor as a beverage. This is the law of the land. We have nothing to say now as to how this law has operated, as to the enforcement of its provisions, or the lack of it. We invite the reader's attention to another phase and feature of the law in this discussion. We have never heard the virtue of the validity of the prohibition law seriously disclaimed, nor its merit, as law, decried. The issue ever at stake is its enforcement.

This question then arises: Why is it that the great majority of the secular papers of the country, dailies and weeklies, hold up prohibition and prohibition enforcement to ridicule and, when possible, to scorn, knowing that the majority of their readers favor prohibition? Why is it that, in neighborly and social conversation, participants so easily lend themselves to ridiculing prohibition and to relating incidents of law infraction along this line? Why is it that the illicit manufacturer or dispenser of liquor is frequently spoken of as if he were a martyr or a hero? Why is prohibition, which has been adopted, not only as a part of the statute, but as an integral part of the organic law of the land, held up to ridicule and scorn or contempt while other laws and constitutional amendments escape this opprobrium?

There can be, it seems to us, but no answer to all these questions. The use, the drinking of strong drink, is a matter of individual taste and habit, and while each one who indulges thinks he can handle his own taste and habit safely, he is afraid that the other fellow cannot or will not. Hence, he is willing to uphold prohibition at the polls, but unwilling to carry out the law, so far as he himself is concerned. No individual considers himself a menace to the public, and considers his tastes and habits a matter of his own management and concern. He is firmly of the conviction that he can handle his own conduct and attitude under all circumstances, but he is as firmly convinced that he cannot afford to trust the other fellow to do the same. He knows he is not going to drink to excess himself, but he so much fears that the other fellow will that he votes to protect himself against indulgences of the other person while he declares to control his own situation himself.

Here, then, is the ground and room for education and preaching. Some recent writer suggested, in the daily press, that a part of the money appropriated to law enforcement could be well spent on educating the people up to the dangers and pitfalls of indulging individually in strong drink and its baneful effects upon the human system, and of the consequences the individual might expect if he persisted in the use of strong drink. That writer was not far of the mark. Let us learn that law, so far from enforcing itself, only gives an opportunity for individual behavior and the pursuits of virtue. Many of our Southern States, in particular, with other States of the Union, carried on a preaching and a propaganda very effective, in their results, and very wholesome in their pronouncements, against the hurtful influence of liquor on the individual. This was carried on until the great majorities in these States registered their decision at the polls. It was a wholesome educational process. Now, since we have prohibition, this educational process, in a large degree, has ceased, and we are trying to prohibit a generation from doing that, the evil consequences of which they know little about. They have not seen and been accustomed to the awful horrors and the consequences of the open saloons; for instance, they have not been taught, as some of us were in our youth, the deleterious effect upon the human frame, upon the brain, the brawn, the health and the morals of the individual of strong drink. We need again this educational process, this propaganda, this preaching, this moral instruction, that leads, young and old, to a full knowledge of the facts in the case, and of what may be expected of the individual if he habitually indulges his taste for strong drink.

It is high time we separate in our thought prohibition enforcement from prohibition law and conduct. We are persuaded that the law is beyond censure or ridicule, and that the methods of enforcement only lend themselves to ridicule and criticism.

This further line may be written: There are State laws, there are county laws, there are community standards, that are to be upheld and enforced. This is the duty of each individual citizen. Why put all the blame on the Federal government, for instance, for not enforcing prohibition when we have just as stringent laws in our States and in our counties, in our cities, towns and communities, against the sale of liquor and the making of liquor as the Federal government has? Why not take some of the censure, at least, home to our own county and city officials, to our own community and State authorities? These are as much responsible for non-enforcement as Federal officials are, certainly in States, cities and counties that have written stringent prohibition laws on their statute books. Prohibition is a matter of personal and community interest, and as individuals, who desire a moral and a sober community, we should seek to uphold the virtues of the law as well as to see that the law is enforced. These are our laws, and not the laws of some far-removed or remote makers of law. J. O. A.

SUCSESSES AND FAILURES OF CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES IN THE SOUTH.

BY DR. J. EDWARD KIRBYE.

(An address delivered before the Men's Club of the Elon College Christian Church.)

In the union of the Congregational and Christian Churches, there are administrative and legal problems which will need to be handled carefully, that reactions may not be disastrous to either group. Our only problems are at this point of contact. In our theology, our teachings, our principles, our polity, there can be no questions of a disturbing character. Neither has any written creeds outside the local Church, and each is a democratic organization, making character the test of fellowship. Christianity is a way of life to each group.

A great and grave responsibility rests upon us, and we need to pause prayerfully in the face of it. I think of the words of Tennyson these days: "O heart, are you great enough for a love that never tires?"

O heart, are you great enough—I have heard of thorns and briars!"

It is the cause of Christ—the kingdom for which He lived and died—the faith which He practiced, and the great concern, as our friends express it, and the influence that we will gain if we go forward and the influence we will lose if we turn backward, which now make imperative decisions affecting our own interests for all time to come. The torch of Christian unity will go out in our hands if we turn backward and it will be given to others to carry while we sit amid the ashes of a glory which was once our own. We cannot turn back unless we choose for ourselves the stale fleshpots of a sectarian past. I do not believe that sectarianism represents the mindedness or the will of either the Congregational or Christian Churches of the United States.

Wherever Congregationalists assemble these days, questions are being asked, books are being studied relative to Christian folks and their Churches. Likewise, Christian groups should be studying Congregational Churches, that a unity of spirit may become so real that each has a pride and joy in the other. My defense, therefore, is that I am speaking to a Christian group which presumably desires to know and appreciate the significance of the Congregational movement. That our failures as well as our successes in the South may be seen, some general observations may be thrown with profit into the background of the picture which we are seeking to make.

So-called Congregationalism came into being with no thought of founding a separate denomination. Originally it was a protest against Church establishment and headed in the direction of both a democratic government and a democratic Church. They were dubbed "Independents," and they accepted the name. Some called them Pilgrims, for in seeking a State without a king and a Church without a bishop, they became strangers in the earth. But the spirit grew in England and you have a revolution in 1640 with Oliver Cromwell and his praying independents, overthrowing the government of Charles I and leading him to the scaffold in Whitehall, London. In 1620 a band of them left Holland, where they had found refuge, for Virginia, but by mistake landed on the rocky shore of Massachusetts, where they named their settlement Plymouth. Only a few years before the successful revolution in England, Cromwell himself had planned to come, but was detained by royal order after tickets had been purchased. It is interesting to note that one of the early Christian preachers in the first half of the nineteenth century in North Carolina was nicknamed a Pilgrim preacher. Alexander Whittaker, in Virginia, was writing letters before 1620, urging independents to settle there, though Virginia in the main was one of England's most loyal colonies. Some came and settled in Nansemond County, but later left and sought the establishment of a separate colony in Maryland.

What have been the outstanding characteristics of this movement in both the old and new world?

1. A democratic Church and a democratic State.
2. A zeal for education and an educated ministry.
3. A missionary outlook upon the world.
4. Certain great periods of evangelism and the cultivation of religious experience.

The Congregational name gradually came into use to designate the movement. The names Independent, Churches of Christ, Plymouth, Pilgrim, Scrooby, Leyden have been used along with others. For years here in the United States there was no effort for a national cohesion. Not until the seventies of the last century was a national organization perfected. Ecclesiastical authority was feared for many years. In the latter part of the seventeenth and the first half of the eighteenth century a Calvinistic theology embedded itself in New England; then came the Unitarian protest, after which Congregational Churches swung back to the local Church with creed or no creed, as the Church might determine.

Why do some Churches grow in one community and not another? Why have the Congregational Churches grown in the Middle West and on the Pacific slope and not in the South? I do not know. Seemingly, there was every reason why they should have grown in the South. They were here at the beginning, and Churches existed in Norfolk and Nansemond Counties. The effort was made, but finally abandoned. It is necessary for us as Congregationalists to speak of our Virginia ancestry like that of a hill of potatoes—the best part being in the ground. But the Christian movement came along with some mind and appeal and succeeded following the days of the American revolution.

There is one Congregational Church in Charleston, S. C., with its roots deep in the soil of the past. It is known as the Circular Church from the shape of its building, although its corporate name is "The Independent or Congregational Church." The first ship landing colonists on this coast carried a record of an independent preacher who was spoken of as "an arrant knave and an ignorant preacher." There is a wonderful story associated with this Church. It was prosperous, although suffering greatly during the American Revolution. The Church and minister came through the struggle to overthrow Church establishment in the new State and to have its own creed put into the Constitution of a free State.

It is interesting to note the five declarations of this old Congregational Church, placed alongside the five declarations of the early Christian fathers here at Lebanon, Va.:

1. There is one Eternal God and a future state of rewards and punishments.
2. God is to be publicly worshiped.
3. The Christian religion is the true religion.
4. The Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments are divinely inspired and are the rule of faith and practice.
5. That it is lawful and the duty of every man being thereunto lawfully called to bear witness unto the truth.

These were drafted in 1778. There isn't a great deal of difference between these and the five principles of the Christian Churches adopted in 1794. If I were analyzing the differences I would suggest the superiority of the fifth principle of the Christian Churches over that of the fifth principle of the creed of this old Church.

What has the old "Circular Church" accomplished? What else has it done that entitles it to the gratitude of our day? It organized the Charleston Bible Society, which is older than the American Bible Society. It wanted the people to have an open Bible. It founded the Charleston Port Society for the rescue of seamen. It gave great sums of money for its day to Columbia Seminary, Yale and Andover. It has the oldest clergy society in America to take care of its aged ministers. Its numbers among its notable families such names as Charles Pinckney, Robert Y. Hayne, and Benjamin Palmer. But at the close of the War Between the States, less than three hundred of its former members could be found. But it is a shrine like that of the Old Lebanon meeting house, and together we will cherish it.

Then there is another one of these shrines which together we will cherish. It is the site of the old Midway meeting house, in Liberty County, Ga. This old Congregational Church gave both signers of the Declaration of Independence from Georgia. Among its list of ministers is Abiel Holmes, the father of Oliver Wendell Holmes and Isaac Stockton Keith Axson, who for years after his service there served the old Independent Church of Savannah. It was interested in education and organized the first institution for higher learning in Georgia. Eighty-three ministers of the gospel went forth from its life. The family of the mother of Theodore Roosevelt was enrolled in its membership. The first foreign missionary of any Church in the South was one of its members. It is a wonderful story, bringing out of the past a glorious chapter in American history.

In the early part of the nineteenth century there was another Congregational movement which seems to have been confined largely to the plateau areas of North Carolina, South Carolina and Tennessee. It was under the leadership of Rev. Wm. C. Davis and was violently anti-slavery in its insistences. Scores of Churches were organized, conferences created, but when the war came on the movement seems to have ended. And yet I haven't any doubt but that many people could be found whose fathers and mothers, removed perhaps two or three generations, were members of these Churches.

In 1853, in Georgia and Alabama a protest movement arose among the country folks which designated their Churches as Congregational Methodist. In the beginning of the present century most of these Churches had dropped the name Methodist. The Atlanta Theological Seminary was organized for the express purpose of providing a ministry for this group of Churches, and has rendered a notable service. Whatever our emphasis may be in the future, it would seem to be upon even a better preparation of our ministers in rural communities for the tasks of unified endeavor and a higher and better religious experience through the processes of religious education, that the Church life spiritually may be the equal of the educational ideal of the Consolidated High School. This Congregational Methodist movement, beginning a few years before the Civil War, in many ways parallels the movement earlier in the century of the Christian Churches in North Carolina and Virginia.

There is another Congregational movement in the South which is probably the most important of any. I am calling it the "Florida Movement," although the influence may be found in other

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Federal Council, which is composed of representative delegates from twenty-eight Protestant denominations, held its sixth quadrennial session in Seneca Hotel, Rochester, N. Y., December 5-12, 1928, with 503 present. There were three meetings each day, two in the hotel and one in the Baptist Temple.

The Christian Church was represented by Revs. Drs. F. G. Coffin, Martyn Summerbell, W. H. Denison, A. G. Caris, and W. W. Staley. Dr. Coffin requested me to report for Thursday morning, December 6th, for the Herald of Gospel Liberty, CHRISTIAN SUN, and Christian Vanguard.

The topic for that day was "The Approach of the Church to the Country Community and the Modern City." The term, rural population, as used by the United States census, includes all persons in centers of 2,500 and less population. Village population, defined as that of 250 to 2,500, and separate from urban population, is increasing. By the census of 1920, village population totaled 31,000,000. There is a steady moving from farms to villages, and from villages to cities, so that it is estimated that the total farm population is less than 28,000,000, or less than one-fourth of the total population of the United States. This classification makes three groups in American population: farm, village and city groups. The trend of population is toward the city by way of the village from the farm. But all groups under 2,500, whether on farms or in villages, are classed as rural. The shifting of population from farm to village, from village to city, and then from city to exclusive suburbs, raises new questions in social, moral and religious relations; and these are questions for Church solution. Every advanced step in education in commercial and industrial progress, and in transportation and communication, adds to the questions that require solution.

Agricultural villages are more nearly 100 per cent American than cities, and the more homogenous and American the population is, the more easily can the Church solve her problems. Conflicts arise between labor and capital, between rural and urban groups, between social groups, and even denominational groups, and these all need solution. The Church is the only institution qualified to harmonize discordant elements for the good of all; and the Church needs, first of all, to settle the differences within her own ranks.

Church unity, for which the Federal Council stands and has labored for twenty years, is a prime necessity in this age of new relations in all departments of human society.

Some claim that schools and seminaries prepare ministers for city pulpits; others claim that rural pastors are promoted to city charges and this weakens rural Churches; and yet others, that many ministers have their minds too much on larger salaries. Again, it is claimed that Churches in modern cities move into rich suburbs of best homes and largest incomes; that such moves are made for denominational reasons rather than for soul-saving; and that sections that need the gospel most are most neglected.

The Federal Council believes that there should be more co-operation and less competition, more unification and less overlapping.

All the questions that arose in the council were discussed in the sincerest and most friendly spirit from all angles and by men from all parts of the country. If the whole Church had the spirit and viewpoint of the council, unity would exist in local communities, cities and different denominations. The Church is moving toward unity as the nations are moving toward good will and peace. The Church is one in prayer and song, and should be one in work.

ELON LETTER.

THE SNARE OF PREPARATION.

The majority of college students, if asked to state why they are in college, will say in order to prepare for life. Our entire educational system is built on the basis of preparing for the life that is to be. Our grammar schools prepare for high schools, and high schools (in common parlance known as preparatory schools) prepare for college, and the colleges prepare for graduate and professional schools. And when the educated man is through with our system of preparatory institutions, he then enters upon another type of preparation, the accumulation of a fortune for the days of his decline and decrepitude. Toward the sunset period of life he takes counsel with reference to preparing to meet his God.

Count Leo Tolstoi looked on this system of preparation and declared it to be a snare. He enjoyed life from day to day as a worth-while experience, worth while in itself. And why wait till the end of life to think of preparing to meet God? Why not meet Him in the daily experiences of living?

Count Tolstoi is supported in his view by a Creator who said, "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." The man who spends his time waiting in bus stations or railway stations for the means of transportation to take him to some other place is largely wasting his time, and so it is of the student in college who has his eye fastened on the future career toward which he is looking and fails to extract from the daily round of his college duties and privileges the satisfaction and joy that attend real living.

A great preacher recently said that he had spent twenty-five years getting ready to preach next Sunday's sermon. Some housekeepers worry all winter about how they shall manage their spring cleaning, and then worry all the summer about how they shall get the house in order for the winter season. They miss the real joy and satisfaction of living.

A few years ago I made a trip across the continent and up through Canada. In every city in which we stopped there were large numbers of tourists, sightseeing so they thought. But, as a matter of fact, at the Grand Canyon they were reading their guide-books describing Salt Lake City or Los Angeles; and at these places they were reading their guide-books describing San Francisco, or Portland, or Vancouver, or the Yellowstone National Park, and at the Yellowstone National Park they were reading their guide-books about Chicago. At the end of their tour of the country they had seen what the guide-book had to say, but had really not seen anything for themselves and had missed the real opportunities of their journey.

A great banker was recently asked how far ahead he looked in his business. It was the great banker of New York City who built the National City Bank system, Frank A. Vanderlip. His reply was that he considered only the day in question, that he went to his office in the morning with a rapid stride with his blood circulating as fast as it could after a brisk walk, preceded by vigorous exercise in his home, and that he became absolutely absorbed in the business of the day. He declared that he regarded the day itself as sufficient, and he proceeded on that basis.

Horace, the sweet-singing lyric poet of Rome, advised his friends "to gather the flowers each day." In my college day, we used to criticize the Roman poet for living what we conceived to be a life without purpose or aspiration. We had our eyes fixed upon the future, and we really did not extract from each succeeding day that God gave us the real satisfactions and joys of living.

I am not deprecating preparation, but I am insisting at the first chapel service of this year that we shall recognize each day as offering us a worthwhile experience in living and that we shall look upon our college days as worth-while experiences, worth while in themselves, and that we shall devote ourselves to the duties and privileges that present themselves to us from day to day in whole-hearted zest and enthusiasm.

I think we shall find that in making the greatest possible use for the purpose of living of each day that we will really be giving ourselves the best preparation possible for what most people regard as the life of the future. And forget not, in the utilization of the privileges of living, to recognize God as present and interested in our making the largest possible use of it.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE LETTER.

Piedmont Junior College is located in the town of Wadley, Randolph County, Ala. The purpose of the college grew out of an earnest desire on the part of the Christians in those sections of Alabama and Georgia to have developed in their midst a higher and stronger type of ministerial and lay leadership in the Church, and, in general, a higher type of Christian citizenship. While the college is fostered by the Christian Church, it in no way is sectarian in its aims and purposes, and will not in any case impose any sectarian teaching upon the minds of the students. The one aim and object of the college shall be the development of Christian character and the fitting of service of those who shall become students.

The policy of the college and the final disposition of all matters of government and administration are vested in the board of trustees, of which Dr. Frank E. Jenkins is president. The internal government and administration of the college is vested in the faculty. The government is mild but firm, endeavoring to create a home atmosphere as much as possible. The purpose of the government is not merely to maintain discipline but to cultivate Christian character, grounded on the firm principles of right, a high sense of duty, honor and propriety and earnest love for truth.

The principal aim of the college is to train for leadership from such an angle as to dispel fanaticism and radicalism. It seeks to train for spiritual leadership but has no desire to dominate their beliefs or force them into predetermined piety, but seeks to show them the way for development of a strong individual religious experience. The work of the class-room, while as rigorously intellectual as possible, is intended to minister to the religious life. The religious leader whom the college seeks to produce is one trained in the sense of reality, in efficiency and contagious faith.

Due emphasis is put on courses in religious education which lead practically to a new profession. The most important task facing the Christian Church in America is the religious education of her youth. If you want to place your finger on the weak spot in the Protestant Church, place it on the 27,000,000 of American youth who are growing up in spiritual illiteracy. Religious education is a vital permanent human need. Theology, philosophy, metaphysics, psychology, history of religion, ethics, sociology and biological sciences have already contributed bodies of knowledge essential to religious education. A very technic is being formulated. Scales, score-cards, and standards of measurement have been treated and standardized for the purpose of measuring the factors in religious education and the processes of religious growth. Already thousands of persons are employed as experts in the application of this specialized knowledge to the spiritual needs of human beings.

Education is prerequisite to individual and group progress. Moreover, to contribute to any genuine advancement, the education must be of a certain kind, namely: of a nature to stimulate reflective thinking. Constructive thinking requires a background upon which to construct. It involves a knowledge of the peoples of the past and of what they have sought to accomplish. The founders of Piedmont Junior College believed that the forces which cause and explain our thinking and our environment are spiritual influences; also they believed that we can best understand the significance of the arts and sciences if we judge them from the standpoint of their usefulness to the spiritual development of mankind.

Thinking is primarily an individual process. Wherefore, the Junior College ages are times when many young people are in special need of personal attention from wise teachers. The freshmen and sophomore years provide the student's own foundation for his later specialized interest. They, in particular, are the years when he develops his own ideals for life and his background of general knowledge. Because of the peculiar need of the young people at this phase of their education, the small junior college has the support of many large institutions of learning, which realize how often in the crowded conditions of their own under-classes students cannot get the individual consideration they need for these purposes. The junior college also meets the growing demand for general college work on the part of the students who do not wish a full course leading to a degree in some major study.

The effort in Piedmont Junior College is to have education center in the student's life—not in subject-matter taught—and be the means of opening to him fuller life, with nobler and richer satisfaction. We deplore the disposition so often found in the name of education to be content with training students in the conventional or professional modes of action and thought. Such schooling tends to make a closed mind, whereas real education is a process of growth which never can be exhausted; it is life—that life which is perpetually more abundant.

There are about five hundred thousand students in our American institutions of higher learning; that is to say, out of every 225 people in America, one is engaged in securing a higher education. The importance of safeguarding the religious welfare of these prospective leaders of thought and activity must be apparent. There are hundreds of Church schools and colleges distributed over the United States, and others in the process of formation, but there is hardly a Church school in this country that has its full quota of students. Not only should these schools be filled with students from our homes, but money and equipment should be supplied by our Church people at large. There is not a Protestant communion that would not do well to largely increase its financial appropriation for the support of the Church schools, for these colleges have supplied the Churches with ministers and the world with successful business men; they have taken young men with a zeal to become ministers and have supplied that zeal with knowledge that turned that zeal into power.

Through the kindness and fraternal spirit of the committee on educational policy, created by the board of trustees of Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., this institution has become affiliated educationally with Piedmont College (Congregational). Its faculty and courses offered are under the supervision of Piedmont's committee on educational policy and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont.

This affiliation has given encouragement to the whole cause of denominational union. It has brought about a closer fellowship and a more vital contact with the larger advantages of Piedmont College, and it will tend to more effectively serve our educational interests in the South. It has put new life in the local situation and added prestige to the whole denominational program of the Southeast. It has given the institution a fine rating with other colleges and universities, and when, through the complete merger of the two denominations, a still closer co-operation shall be obtained, it will hold a unique position which will differentiate it from all other institutions of similar name.

A bulletin of six pages recently issued from Atlanta, Ga., by President Lewis H. Keller, D. D., of the Atlanta Theological Seminary, carries cuts of buildings and scenes of the Elon College campus and scenes from the Atlanta Seminary, with the cuts of President Keller, of the Atlanta Seminary, and President Harper, of Elon College. The bulletin is entitled "The New Home of Atlanta Seminary," and announces: "Atlanta Theological Seminary and Elon College affiliate. The seminary moves to Elon College, N. C., in September, 1929, to train young men for the ministry of Congregational and Christian Churches, with an open door for other evangelical denominations. Each institution retains its present identity and provides for its own budget. They will co-operate in a great, common task."

A contemporary says: "The old-time family circle now spends all of its time running around." We are prone to believe that there is some truth in their contention.

OXFORD BIBLES

An Oxford $3.50

A STEWARDSHIP MESSAGE.

What is stewardship but a rightfully imposed and an accepted task to which one must measure up? Real stewardship may be of the earth earthly, perhaps without definitely spiritual incentive on content but not without a certain degree of Christian motive and background. Church and State are, and ever must remain, two things. But of whatever type it be, absolute loyalty is the guarantee of genuine stewardship.

It is from stewardship's business and civic relationships that we get its true definition. God gave us that example in the case of Joseph. The whole meaning of stewardship is: "over" another's household, his possessions and affairs, the steward seeking by all legitimate means to give stability thereto and to improve and increase the owner's holdings. Therefore, Christian stewardship is over God's household, His possessions and affairs. God's household or family is the work of humanity, particularly those of His Church. His possessions, every subordinate and material thing He has placed in the world, all of which are given that His family may have security, comfort and happiness.

Christian stewardship looks only to kingdom growth: first, through a deeper consecration of individual life; second, a more efficient and better correlated Church administration. These two things, with many amplifications, well may constitute the sum total of aspiration and aim for a conference department of stewardship.

One aim which has in it easy possibility of adaptation to every local demand, and would tremendously enhance Conference development, has to do with attendance upon all services and appointments, not only locally, but the premise includes the responsibility of delegated representation with reference to larger interests. A member of the Church chosen to represent his organization, locally or at large, on any board or body whatsoever, if he positively or even tacitly so agrees, assumes a duty that in all human possibility should be met, and met to the full. For instance, a delegate who goes to Conference for one day or part time has a sense of obligation not to be coveted.

In the average local Church, what percentage of its members attends the prayer meeting, the business meeting? Report on a recent quarterly business session of my own acquaintance, out of a membership of one hundred and fifty, nine were present. The practice of attendance upon all Church services and appointments manifestly would bespeak deep interest and a desire for participation, and such a course not only would deepen one's won consecration, but the influence would spread, it could not be checked. Let just one soul resolve to be always there, whatever the occasion, and soon the example would be fruit-bearing, many-fold.

In the big majority of Churches, is not this one of the fundamental needs? People are finding too many things to absorb, too many places to go, and are giving their time all too little to God's house. Think of what just a few, by being more faithful upon all occasions, specifically the most neglected occasions, such as herein mentioned, could do for a Church's profit and progress. And then think if just a few in every Church of a Conference would step out in the same little act of being always there, how mightily such a precedent would strengthen the fibre of the entire organization!

RICHLAND, GA.

Dear SUN Readers:

A few lines from me will not be out of order. I attended the Conference of Georgia and Alabama and it was fine experience for me. One thing that made me glad both Conferences met in new Churches in growing cities. The Georgia and Alabama Conference met in LaGrange in their $20,000 Church, complete in every respect. Bro. Hanson is to be congratulated with his members in the wonderful achievement.

The work went off splendidly. Dr. Atkinson and C. D. Johnston, superintendent of the Orphanage, added to the interest of the Conference by their presence and helpful discussions. Also Miss Pattie Coghill was there and she endeared herself to the people by her kindly talks and winning ways. My! it's hard to sit there and be quiet after forty years of active service; but I could not speak, yet I was interested. The entertainment was fine, and everybody was cared for in a royal manner.

The Alabama Conference met at Roanoke in their new Church. Bro. Hunt is the man who engineered this work, and just before Conference turned the work over to Rev. G. H. Veazey. This Conference was largely attended and the interest fine. There were times that I wanted to speak, but I held my peace. It was a source of joy to meet my many friends and enjoy the sweet fellowship with them.

Since Conference I have visited the following Churches: Oak Grove, Lanett, Enigma, Vanceville and Ambrose. I have gone into many homes and have been delighted with the fine spirit with which I was greeted. While down at Enigma I went fishing four times and enjoyed it immensely. I visited while there Sister Fannie Patrick, who was the wife of Rev. W. O. Patrick, a Baptist preacher. She was quite feeble, but she is one of God's faithful servants. She is one of the best friends I ever had. I would love to have had service with her, but my speech was gone and I could not publicly pray with her, but I did in spirit.

Then I met that faithful sister in Christ Fannie Hand at Vanceville. It is always a benediction to meet these old servants of God. I would love to tell all about the many others I met, but I can't speak of all with whom I met. I was at Ambrose the day they began their meeting and I was there the day it closed. Rev. J. D. Dollar did the preaching and did it well. They had a real good meeting and received six members—three men and their wives. It flooded my soul with joy to see them line up with the Church. They have a nice parsonage there of five rooms, Bro. Carpenter living in it, and is loved by all the community. It was a source of gladness to see the work going forward under competent leadership.

While at Ambrose I met Bro. T. J. Holland's wife. I think he made a good choice. I am at present stopping with Sister Susie Sidford. She is one of God's jewels in the faith. Our Church at Richland is looking forward. The Church at Red Hill is being repaired, to the delight of all. It is the oldest Church in the Conference, and they have been without a pastor for nearly two years. God bless them in their effort to rebuild. May the good work go forward is the earnest prayer of my heart.

H. W. ELDER.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES.

Southern States. A great many people of the North in the last forty years have moved into the South and settled. Texas, Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, Virginia, North Carolina, as well as Florida, have felt this influence. The most pronounced expression of it has been in Florida, and here Congregational Churches have grown. In many of the larger towns and cities of Florida, these Churches have developed into strong institutions and have ministers of commanding influence and power. Rollins College came into being years ago through this influence.

There is another Congregational influence in the Southland. Following the Civil War, the American Missionary Association came into being, with the objective of ministering educationally and religiously to the more backward people upon the American continent. For many years its ministry has gone to the negro, the Indian, the Chinese, the Japanese, and for a long time to the American highlander. Some splendid educational institutions have been built and the influences have reached far and wide. In the South the greater part of its work is now centered upon the negro.

In the main, these have seen the Congregational influences in the South with their successes and failures. Looking back over the period, one will discover some very important contributions. You will not find very much sectarianism in it. Often-times the movement has been content to make its educational contribution to the Christian spirit and allow others to reap the advantages. Numerically, the Christian Churches of the South will contribute more to the union in the South than will the Congregational Churches. We are glad this is so. The Christian Churches of Virginia and North Carolina will worthily carry forward the ideals for which we all stand.

The South is moving forward and upward. Its spirit is breathing on new heights and on new levels. The Christian Churches with us must gird for new tasks and greater duties. Our united program in North Carolina should at once take steps for an alliance with the Friends, who are like ourselves, possessed with a mindedness of real unity. We must make Elon College another Oberlin in spirit, and with all our schools, representative of the leadership which is ours. And if we will do this, I am quite sure that I do not misinterpret the spirit of the national fellowship of Congregational Churches in the North and Midwest when I say that to us will be given their co-operation. It is a great day, there are great duties, great songs in the things we are doing.

Christian unity, education for a better leadership, religion in the terms of friendship for God and man, a grasp of the social significance of the kingdom of Jesus for our day and time in the abolition of poverty, the destruction of disease, the doing away with war between nations, classes or races, the moral control of power in the world's greatest mechanistic age, the making of human personality fashioned into the mindedness of Jesus, a life, a spirit, which made Him the central personality of all time in the transcendent glory of a cross—these are some of the things which we should hope to achieve in a larger measure as Congregationalists and Christians now unite their hearts and hands.

A PERSONAL TRIBUTE.

Saturday, January 12th, our Dr. Burnett laid down the earthly cares and went home. He had served well as pastor, long as Conference officer, and for nearly forty years as denominational official. Since 1894 he had served as Convention Secretary, and at the Urbana Convention, on account of age and failing health, he laid down the work to which he had so devotedly and faithfully given himself for approximately a third of a century.

No successor could have had a finer spirit and attitude shown him than has the writer. He has lost a friend, and all he can hope is to be a worthy successor.

Dr. Burnett was a great preacher. To the writer, not only was he a great preacher, as to the message itself, but his appearance, his dress, his neatness, his manner, his dignity in the pulpit has ever been an inspiration since we first knew him in 1893. Never once have we seen him in the pulpit without actually being impressed by these outstanding characteristics.

His life, work, and his spirit will live on in many lives. God bless the memory of our friend. Dayton, Ohio. W. H. DENISON.

THE THINGS WE NEED.

Standing beside the grave of the Unknown Soldier, President Coolidge said:

"We do not need more national development; we need more spiritual development.

"We do not need more intellectual power; we need more spiritual power.

"We do not need more knowledge; we need more character.

"We do not need more government; we need more culture.

"We do not need more law; we need more religion.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday February 3, 1929.

TOPIC: "The Challenge of Christ to the Youth of the World."—Matt. 10:16-42. (Christian Endeavor Day.)

Some Bible Hints.

Christ sends us forth not into a life of ease, but into one of danger at times. Missionaries often take their lives in their hands (v. 16).

Christ challenges us to keep contact with heaven. Only in this way can God speak to us (vs. 19, 20).

Christ challenges us to take a stand for principle. We must follow the truth wherever it leads, in spite of all opposition (v. 21).

Christ challenges us to whole-hearted service, fearing nothing, daring the impossible. Think of Paul or Livingstone (v. 28).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Christ challenges us to decide what kind of life we want to live, an easy or a useful one. We stand at the parting of the ways.

Christ challenges us not to a single battle, but to a crusade. Evil cannot be conquered in a day or in one struggle.

Christ challenges us to purity. The human body is divine, and whatever degrades or defiles it is sin. Study the words, "even as He is pure" (1 John 3:3).

Christ challenges us in the sermon on the Mount to pure minds; not only not to do evil, but not to think it. How hard do we try?

A Few Illustrations.

Livingstone felt the challenge to live a life of usefulness. Hence he offered to go as a missionary wherever the need was greatest.

Christ challenged William Carey through a vision of the need of the pagan world to stir up the Church to its duty. Each age has its own challenge.

Christ's challenge today is to support prohibition and prevent liquor from coming back. It will come back if we do not fight.

Christ challenges us to a campaign for peace and a warless world. Peace will not come unless youth demands it and works for it.

To Think About.

What is the biggest challenge to youth today?

How can we arouse youth to interest in Christ's challenge?

What is Christ's challenge to you?

ON DENOMINATIONAL UNION.

Merger adjustments in mission work involving investment funds and other property valued at over $48,000,000, will be considered at the annual National Conference of Congregational Executive Boards and Officers to be held in the Statler Hotel, Cleveland, Ohio, January 17th to 24th.

The adjustments are those which will be required by the proposed merger of the Congregational and Christian denominations. Recommendations looking forward to the formation of a new general council of the Congregational-Christian Churches next October have been made. The annual expenses of the Congregational mission work are more than five million dollars. The nearly fifty million dollars of assets of the Congregational mission boards are exclusive of the endowments and other property held by the trustees of some 100 colleges which are affiliated with the mission boards.

The National Conference of Executive Boards and Officers is the most important annual meeting of the denomination and second in importance only to the biennial meeting of the National Congregational Council.

A movement for a substantial advance of 20 per cent in the support of missions during 1929 will be proposed at Cleveland by Rev. Charles C. Merrill, D. D., Chicago, Ill., secretary of promotion for the denomination's commission on missions.

The conference will begin with a religious education program on Thursday and Friday, January 17th and 18th, under the direction of Rev. Herbert W. Gates, D. D., Boston, Mass., general secretary of the Congregational Education Society.

Those attending the conference will include the State superintendents, the directors and officers of the home boards, of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, of the Commission on Missions, of the Commission on Inter-Church Relations, and of the executive committee of the National Congregational Council.

Among the officers will be Rev. Ozora S. Davis, D. D., LL.D., Chicago, Ill., president of the Chicago Theological Seminary and moderator of the National Council; Hon. William E. Sweet, Denver, former Governor of Colorado and associate moderator of the National Council; Rev. Charles Emerson Burton, D. D., New York, N. Y., general secretary of the National Council; Rev. Wm. Horace Day, D. D., Bridgeport, Conn., president of the home boards and a former moderator of the National Council; Rev. Rockwell Harmon Potter, D. D., Hartford, Conn., president of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions and a former moderator of the National Council; Rev. Oscar E. Maurer, D. D., New Haven, Conn., chairman of the Commission on Missions; Rev. Frank Knight Sanders, D. D., Rockport, Mass., chairman of the Commission on Interchurch Relations.

A CHERISHED HOPE.

Piedmont Junior College must not fail because cherished hopes of long standing have been realized and earnest prayers of consecrated people who had waited long have been answered. Hope must not fail.

There is no section that needs a college more. There is no co-educational college within a radius of one hundred miles. The youth of this part of the State of Alabama are eager for an education and are willing to do their part to get it.

There is no better material for leadership, for muscles and brain have been developed through the hardships of making a living on and among the hills of the Blue Ridge Mountains and brought up in humble Anglo-Saxon homes.

Parents have labored and sacrificed to give their boys and girls a high school education, and still have a desire to see their children get a college education, but can send them no farther to school unless a college can be operated near their homes. Piedmont Junior College affords this privilege and opportunity within reach of their homes. This will enable their sons and daughters to remain at home two years longer, and thereby help in paying their way through college.

If the college should fail, many of our boys and girls will never be able to get any college work. The opportunity should not be undervalued. God will be displeased if we do not carry on the task. Our people and others have done their part in the erection of buildings and support and cannot now afford to lose what they have put into the institution.

This is a Christian educational institution, and Christianity must not fail—character must be built by the youth of our day.

AN APPEAL TO THE COUNTRY.

Thomas Nixon Carver, professor of political science, Harvard University, addressed the press of the country, and especially the press opposed to the eighteenth amendment, at a luncheon at the City Club, Boston, held Monday noon, under the auspices of the Manufacturers and Business Men's Committee of the Anti-Saloon League of America, attended by 600 leading citizens of Boston and vicinity.

"An appeal to the press, especially to those editors who do not favor prohibition. You may not be convinced by the election that the country is overwhelmingly dry. There were too many other factors in the campaign to establish that as a demonstrated fact. You must be convinced, however, that the country is not overwhelmingly wet. Prohibition was certainly one of the most talked-about issues of the campaign. The outcome certainly indicates to any reasonable person that the country is not wet enough to repeal the eighteenth amendment or even seriously to modify the dry laws. At any rate, it is not likely that any candidate for the presidency will again stake his success on a program of repeal or modification, much less on a program of nullification. To those who take the position that the country is still wet in spite of the returns, there is not much that can be said. 'None is so blind as he who will not see.'

"When we consider the great personal popularity of Governor Smith, the mildness of his proposals in the way of modification, his remarkable skill as a campaigner and the vigor with which he argued for the Canadian system of dispensing liquor, we cannot find any sufficient reason for his overwhelming defeat except the fact that the country is dry, or, at least not wet enough to induce a majority to vote for him and his proposals. By what person or under what circumstances could a proposal for modification be more favorably presented to the American public? If Governor Smith could not make modification popular, who could? Does any other candidate want to try it?

"To those who despise the kind of people who constitute the majority or who voted for Mr. Hoover, there is this to be said: if we are to have democracy at all, we must accept the will of such majorities as we have. When we accept the fact that the government must be in the hands of the common people, we must realize that these 'Babbitts,' these 'country yokels,' these Church-going people are the common people; they are the masses. If you are a Democrat at all, you must accept their will in matters of government. If you are not willing to do that, you should frankly advocate a monarchy, an aristocracy, or the dictatorship of a minority.

"To the frank and open nullificationists, there is also something to be said. If the American people are really determined actively to support the prohibitory law, you are not ignoring a forgotten law. You are actively opposing your own government and its officers when you try to nullify this law. You will, in fact, if you are a nullificationist, be in active rebellion against the government in its active enforcement or attempt at enforcement of the law. Do you want to put yourself in that position? If you want the American to forget the prohibitory law, you will not succeed by active disobedience or defiance that will only create a more active determination. Don't try to scare the American people or their government. If you think that you can, by open disobedience or defiance, cause the people or the government to forget or repeal a law which seems to be as popular as prohibition, you have, in the language of the street, 'another think coming.'

"There is only one honorable choice before you that is between insurrection and acquiescence. Active nullification of an active law amounts to insurrection. It is actively resisting the active efforts of the government to enforce it. It is an appeal to what some have called the 'glorious right of revolution.' It is an attempt by the method of breaking heads to regain what you have lost by the method of counting heads that has been tried many times before, usually without success.

"Why not acquiesce? Why not be good sports? Democrats have acquiesced in the defeat of Governor Smith as the Republicans would have acquiesced had Mr. Hoover been defeated. With almost the entire metropolitan press of the country against prohibition, see how little influence you have had. If the Anti-Saloon League could 'put across' prohibition, and if the united power of the metropolitan press could not defeat it or even produce any noticeable diminution in its popularity, what a humiliation that would be for the metropolitan press! As a matter of fact, the rising tide of opposition to drink is due to factors which lie deeper than Anti-Saloon Leagues or metropolitan dailies. Such agencies can accelerate or retard a movement of this kind. They can neither start nor stop it.

"The tragedy of Governor Smith's astounding and overwhelming defeat lay in his utter inability to understand the American people. He simply could not believe that any considerable number of people were really dry. His surroundings made it impossible for him to see that fact. Maybe you and other editors of metropolitan dailies are in the same position. If so, God help you! If the American people are really determined to go on with prohibition, you can't stop them. You can make it more difficult of enforcement. You can compel the government to appropriate a few extra millions of dollars and put a few extra thousands of men into the enforcement work, but you can't stop it.

"Whatever other faults and weaknesses the American people may have, they are not cowards. They are not likely to back down just because enforcement is difficult. This is especially true of the country people, the 'country yokels,' as some find comfort in calling them. They were brought up on difficulties. They have been facing and conquering them for generations. Please note especially that they are not likely to back down just because you and the smart set insist on calling them bad names.

"Our appeal is simply this: Don't aid and abet those who are actively breaking a law which your government is actively trying to enforce. Don't muddle the minds of your readers by confusing an active law with an obsolete law. Don't encourage any one to think that it is either smart or clever, either courageous or honorable, to outwit your government. Don't excuse the bootlegger or his patron. Don't vilify enforcement officers who are trying to do what the law requires them to do and what they have sworn to do. If you want to castigate any of them, try it on those who are shirking their duty. Don't caricature or cast aspersions upon those private citizens who are not only obeying the law, but trying to help the government. This will not weaken their determination; it will only encourage law-breakers and add to the cost of enforcement. In short, throw your vast influence on the side of your government, and not against it. Help the government in the carrying out of this 'great social experiment, noble in purpose and far-reaching in results,' or at least don't encourage active resistance to your own government."

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

THE ARMOR OF LIGHT.

"The night is far spent, and the day is at hand; let us, therefore, cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light."—Rom. 13:8-14.

Writing to the Romans, Paul talked about armor. We have much to learn from the Romans for our Christian life. We cannot follow Christ without courage and endurance. We need armor for attacking evil, and we need armor for defense against the darts of the evil one. But the Christian's armor is not heavy, stiff, and cumbersome; it is the armor of light.

What a radiant image Paul used! The spirit leaps at the thought of armor of light. There is no weight in such a suit. It is no burden on the back. Nor is it black and dismal and rusty, but shining and resplendent. The armor of light is not stiff, either, but yields freely to our every motion. Our religion means perfect freedom, perfect ease, perfect joy.

But no armor was ever forged that rested attack so stoutly as this armor of light, or pressed so irresistibly into the ranks of the foe. The Christian is clothed with power. He can chase an army. Legions of demons flee before him. He is the champion of the Lord.

Prayer.—Great Captain, lead on! Thine is the armor; Thine is the cause; Thine the power and the glory, forever and ever. Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE SECRET OF PLEASURE.

"God had made them rejoice with great joy."—Neh. 12:38-43.

The rejoicings in Jerusalem on the completion of the new wall under Nehemiah, were typical of the highest pleasure. That joy came at the end of toil and as its sure result. It was preceded by danger and bravery, by high resolve and noble effort. The joy was not planned for, but the wall was planned for, and as it was completed the joy came of a blessed necessity.

President Lowell, talking to a company of Harvard freshmen, said: "If any of you are here to seek pleasure, you are seeking it in the wrong place. There is pleasure in abundance to be found here, but you will not find it by seeking for it. You can spend a great deal of labor over it and get nothing."

Many a young fellow, in college and out of it, has discovered the truth of President Lowell's words. Sometimes he has discovered the truth too late for a successful life. Recreation is a necessity, but recreation sought for itself is never found. Pleasure is an attendant of work. When pleasure strides on ahead and would be a leader, it gets nowhere and ends in a slough.

The secret of pleasure is that it is always incidental. As President Lowell said in that same talk, pleasure is a by-product of life. If we do something worthwhile, and do it for its own sake, we are always surprised by the coming of joy. But when we pursue joy for its own sake, we are invariably disappointed.

Prayer.—Lord Jesus, be Thou our joy. As Thy work was Thy happiness, so may ours be. As Thy meat was to do the Father's will and finish His work, so may that be our abiding satisfaction. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE DANGER OF TOO MUCH.

"Give me neither poverty nor riches; feed me with the food that is needful for me."—Prov. 30:1-9.

One of the chief glories of the city of Washington in the spring is the magnificently blossoming Japanese cherry trees planted along the Potomac. There are four hundred and sixty-seven of these, all presented to the United States by the Japanese government as a token of friendship. These trees, however, thrive best on high, well-drained land, and this summer the unprecedented storms have inundated them, probably killing three hundred of them. They could not have lived without some water, but too much water has destroyed them.

How much like men are these cherry trees! We need some prosperity, but few can stand much prosperity. We pray to be flooded with wealth; but if the flood should come, our souls would never blossom again.

God knows what is best for us, and we do well to trust Him, and be contented with the measure of good fortune which He metes out to us. Contentment and good cheer should be our response to His love and nurture.

Prayer.—Bless us, Infinite Gardener, giving us what is needful for us. Our Father who art in heaven—(and the family circle will repeat the Lord's Prayer).

THURSDAY.

DEALINGS RETURN.

"As thou hast done, it shall be done unto thee; thy dealing shall return upon thine own head."—Obadiah 1:10-16.

This saying is the reverse of the Golden Rule. It is not so nobly unselfish as the Golden Rule, but it expresses a truth we may well heed. As we treat others they are quite certain to treat us.

The world is a looking-glass: frown at it, and it will frown back at you; smile at it, and you will see a smile upon the face of the world. Your deeds will be echoed back in good solid deeds from the rest of mankind. As the preacher promises: "Cast thy bread upon the waters; for thou shalt find it after many days."

This law of returns is a rule of multiplication. You are but one and the people around you are many. Your one smile is returned to you as many smiles; your kindness comes back upon you as many kindnesses. It is not as if you faced a single looking-glass, but as if you lived in a hall of mirrors, endlessly tossing your good acts or your evil acts back and forth until there seems to be an army of you and of them. Literally innumerable are the reflections of kindness, the returns of unkindness, upon the life that sends them forth.

Prayer.—One of the parents will offer a prayer, asking that all in the circle may realize the vast importance of thoughts, words and deeds, and may strive so to live that their lives will come back upon them in constant blessings.

FRIDAY.

HOW CAN WE KNOW GOD.

"We know that we know Him, if we keep His commandments."—1 John 2:1-6.

It is a fine thing to be sure of things. A man is strong quite in proportion to the number of things he positively knows. And of all knowledge, the most strengthening is that which deals with the highest things. If we can say of Christ, as John could, "I know Him, and I know that I know Him," then we are persons of force and influence.

Dr. J. H. Jowett once wrote: "The spirit power will make us what I may call affirmative. That is one of our needs today: affirmative men and women, believers who know the Lord, and who know they know Him." And how to gain this certainty of knowledge? John points out the way: "We know that we know Him, if we keep His commandments."

There is nothing like obedience to implant confidence in the soul. The best-drilled army has the most exultant faith in its commander. The most diligent student is surest that his teacher is the best man in the faculty. The citizen who does the most for his country is the most enthusiastic patriot.

Keeping God's commandments brings us into closest contact with Him. We study Him, that we may know His will. As we walk with Him from day to day, we enter into "the secret of His presence," and come to know Him with all our heart.

SATURDAY.

HOW CAN WE HAVE PEACE?

"Acquaint now thyself with Him, and be at peace."—Job 22:21-30.

More than ever before in the world's history, men are valuing the peacemaker. Christ was the great Peacemaker. He is our Peace. He came to earth to end the long war that man was waging against the loving Heavenly Father. And no man can be a peacemaker, in the private or the world sphere, until he gains for himself the spirit of the world's one Peacemaker.

That is the secret of success in peacemaking. Until we get peace in our own hearts, love peace, and exemplify it, we cannot establish the peace on earth of which the angels sang. Peace is a blessed contagion. Peace, like a river, flows from one soul to another. The nations will be at peace when the will to peace animates all peoples.

Prayer.—Thou Prince of Peace, enter our hearts, we pray Thee, and rule them utterly. Help us to the inner peace, that we may help others into the same. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE HELP OF A KIND WORD.

"Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days."—Eccl. 11:1-8.

The sure returns of a good, kind act are beautifully illustrated in the story of the Paris merchant, Julian Legrand. During a financial panic, when great firms were going under, he became alarmed for his own stability. He found that to carry him safely through the crisis it was necessary for him to have $100,000 in ready money. He tried in every way to borrow the sum, but absolutely failed, and was expecting any hour to meet disaster. At that juncture a fine-appearing man, a total stranger, called on him and quietly offered to let him have $100,000 for a year, on his personal note, and without interest.

The stranger explained that when he was a poor boy in school, shabbily dressed and timid, this merchant was a member of the examining committee of visitors, and asked the questions of the boy's class. The lad blundered and stammered and expected that the children of rich and fortunate parents would have all the praise; but at the close the merchant singled out the poor boy, told him he had done very well, but could do better, that the way to honor was open to all, and that he could succeed if he would only push on. That little talk was the beginning of a prosperous career, and now he came to make some slight return for what had been the chief inspiration of his life.

What happened to that thoughtful merchant will happen to us also if we cast our bread upon the waters. It is sure to return to us in gratitude and in rich recompense.

Prayer.—Our Father, the Infinite Giver, teach us to give of ourselves and our goods. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The year 1928 has passed and gone, and while we did not reach our goal of $30,000 in money, we did reach it in money and food and clothing contributed, for which we are very grateful. It will be necessary for our Churches, Sunday Schools and friends to be more liberal with us this year, as we now have 118 children in our care. This is the largest number we have had at any one time in the history of the institution. But it has been one needy case after another from our Churches that we could not refuse and were urged to take until our number is 118. It adds expense when we add children. We will have to increase our offerings to meet. Let every Sunday School, every Church and every friend come to our rescue. This is a worthy work, and one that should appeal to every individual.

A RESOLUTION.

While the board of trustees of the Christian Orphanage cannot express its sense of loss and mournful regret in the passing away of William Kirkpatrick Holt, the president of its board of trustees, we wish our permanent records to convey to friends and to posterity a word of gratitude and of appreciation for the faithful and efficient service he rendered the Orphanage, the Church, and the kingdom of his Lord. Elected as a trustee of the Orphanage by the Southern Convention in 1916, he was made president of the board at its annual session in 1918 and served as president and presided at all meetings from the time of his election till the day of his death. Under his wise and efficient leadership, many improvements were made in the plant, two splendid brick buildings were erected, and the value of the plant increased from $50,000 to $160,000.

The Orphanage occupied a large place in his heart, and he showed the deepest and most abiding interest, not only in its sound financial management, but in the care and concern for the children, whose home it was, and for all the employees who helped in making the institution an agreeable, a wholesome and a happy place to live. Every member of the board had the highest respect and esteem for his administrative ability, wise business judgment, and intelligent understanding of all problems with which the institution had to deal.

His last official act was to preside over the services of dedicating the Johnston Building at the Orphanage on July 29, 1928, being stricken while in this service and passing from the flesh into the spirit world from the institution only a few hours after the services closed. A great and a good man, having been blessed in building a monument for himself that will not perish with the using or fade with time, was thus permitted to pass, quietly and peacefully, from the very scene that marked his triumph, honored his genius and glorified his earthly career, into that house not made with hands.

We place in our permanent records this word, inadequate and insufficient as it is, by unanimous vote of our body, and convey the same, with tenderest feeling of sympathy and esteem, to the widow and family of the bereaved, and present a copy for print to our Church paper, THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

By resolution of the board of trustees in meeting assembled.

J. O. ATKINSON,
C. D. JOHNSTON,
Committee.

place whatsoever and marked with a Bible stand to symbolize the altar and decorated with signal flags and the ensign in order to create as far as possible an atmosphere of sanctity is the Church.

The worshippers are the boys from our homes with a sense of belief in God that is in direct ratio to their early training, some showing evidence of splendid religious training, others fair, others poor, and others with no conception of religion.

Many of the better trained fall away from the practice of their early faith and loyalty, and never appear at divine services. That they should stay from Church many years is sometimes a boast to them.

So far as we are able to determine, there are two elements that enter into their lives which cause this. The first is: upon enlisting in the service they get the idea that to be "hard-boiled" is the first qualification to acquire, and they immediately begin to shape their minds, speech and conduct accordingly.

There are others who would keep their hearts true, but worshiping God, while a thing much desired (they get the notion), is considered by their comrades as effeminate, a goody-goody sort of thing, and not in keeping with the life of a true sailor. The finger of "goody-goody" they cannot stand, or they hide their light under a bushel and try to live it out that way.

But this is not different from "the outside," as we say. In fact, it appears to be a true representation of conditions everywhere, whether from the same causes or not, is another matter.

But not all are that way; there are many thorough-bred souls, and every Sunday when Church call sounds and the bell tolls, if duty does not prevent them, they are found at the service, singing and worshipping reverently.

We rejoice always that there are those of whom it may be said in the words of Milton: "Faithful found among the faithless, faithful only be; among innumerable false, unmov'd, unshaken, uneduc'd, unterrified, his loyalty be kept, his love, his zeal." No numbers so great, nor example so strong, ever swerve them from the truth or change their constant minds.

OBITUARIES

GILLIAM.

Mrs. Lucy May Gilliam, wife of R. L. Gilliam, passed from time to eternity at her home in northern Alamance County, N. C., on January 1, 1929, aged 31 years, 11 months and 30 days. She and her husband were united in marriage in 1913, and to them were born six children. Her husband, six children and a host of relatives and friends deeply mourn her death.

In early life she united with Union Christian Church and was a loyal and useful member. A beautiful life on earth has closed—that of a Christian wife and mother and a devoted follower of Christ. The funeral services were conducted from Union Christian Church by the writer, and her body laid to rest in the Church cemetery. May the dear Master comfort and keep the bereaved ones.

P. H. FLEMING.

MASSEY.

Mr. Thomas Levi Massey was born October 22, 1869, and departed this life on January 7, 1929, his age being 59 years, 2 months and 15 days. He had been a resident of Stony Creek Township, Caswell County, all his life. He leaves to mourn their loss two sons—Oscar and Aubrey—one brother, W. G. Massey, all of Altamahaw, R. F. D. 2, and a number of relatives and friends.

Bro. Massey had been in declining health for several years, while his death came as a shock to many of his friends. He was a merchant by trade, being the owner of Massey's Store. He was held in high esteem by his customers and his neighbors as being an honest and conscientious business man. He was a friend to many. He will be greatly missed in the community.

Funeral services were conducted at the Concord Christian Church by the writer, assisted by Rev. I. T. Underwood, of Yanceyville, N. C. The body was placed MURCHISON.

At her home, in southern Alamance County, N. C., Miss Elizabeth Murchison passed from labor to reward on January 6, 1929, in her 86th year. In youth she united with the Pleasant Hill Christian Church and remained a consistent member till she fell asleep in death. She loved her Church and was a good friend and neighbor. One sister and one brother and many relatives and friends survive her.

The funeral services were conducted from Pleasant Hill Church by the writer, and her body laid to rest in the Church cemetery. Verily, a Christian landmark has passed from time to eternity. The Master bless and keep the bereaved.

P. H. FLEMING.

WARD.

Mrs. Flora Marley Ward, wife of W. A. Ward, of Elon College, formerly of Bennett, N. C., passed from labor to her reward December 22, 1928, being aged 49 years, 2 months and some days. She leaves to mourn her departure her husband, four children, her mother and other relatives and a host of friends.

Burial services were held in Whitley Auditorium, Elon College, by the writer, assisted by the pastor, Dr. W. S. Alexander, and Rev. T. E. White, and her body was laid to rest in Magnolia Cemetery.

A beautiful life has ceased, but her influence will be felt in time to come. May the Heavenly Father richly bless and comfort the hearts of her loved ones.

TATE—MADREN.

Wednesday, December 19, 1928, Mr. Emmet Boyd Tate and Miss Alvoner Elizabeth Madren motored to Elon College, at the home of the writer, and promptly at 2 P. M. they were united in the bonds of holy wedlock.

Mr. Tate is the son of Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Tate, of the southern part of Caswell County. Miss Madren is the accomplished daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Madren, of southern part of Alamance County. These young people are very industrious persons in their community and at their homes. They will make their home in the southern part of Caswell County.

Only a few intimate friends of the contracting parties were present to witness the ceremony. Immediately following the act that made them one, they left for the home of the bride, where a sumptuous supper awaited their arrival.

May a long, peaceful and prosperous life be theirs is the wish of their many friends and the writer.

ROBERTSON—LAWRENCE.

Rev. George Robertson, of Providence, R. I., and Miss Margaret Lawrence, of Lynchburg, Va., sprang a happy surprise on their many friends and acquaintances by being happily wedded before returning to Elon College to complete their closing semester's work of their senior year. They were married at the Christian parsonage, Reidsville, N. C., at 4:30 on the afternoon of January 7th, by the writer, assisted by Rev. Jesse Dollar, a fraternity brother of Mr. Robertson, and who is pastor of the Reidsville Christian Church.

These newlyweds are superior students, admirably suited to each other and hope to invest their lives in Christian service. Their services are now being solicited by a good New England Church as soon as their college days are over. We bespeak for them great joy in useful service. Mr. Robertson has had a few years of successful pastoral experience.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE

WADLEY, ALABAMA

An Accredited Junior College

Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

Piedmont Junior College is training some of the best stock of America for Christian leadership, to be used by the nation and the world. Here is a great challenge and asset for students who wish to prepare themselves to serve in a worth-while way. The new Administration Building will be completed by time school opens this fall.

JAPAN'S WAR ON VICE.—

The bulwarks of many age-old and deeply entrenched forms of vice are slowly crumbling. In the past it has been the accepted idea in Japan that prostitution is natural and inevitable, therefore the government has licensed it. Last week the Assembly of the Saitama Prefect passed a resolution which provides for the gradual abolition of the licensed districts of prostitution. No licenses will be renewed to the brothel operators. The national government has passed a law that offers a way of escape to girls who wish to leave the life of prostitution. Heretofore, as long as a girl was in debt to the operator of a brothel she could not leave. The new law provides that where a girl wishes to leave such a life, she may report to the police, who will arrange the terms by which her debt is to be paid after she has her freedom.

SALVATION ARMY SQUABBLE.—

The Salvation Army is now passing through the throes of a very trying struggle. The army is organized strictly along military lines. All the affairs of its workings head up in a commander-in-chief whose authority is absolute. His commands are passed down through a well-organized and closely knit hierarchy. The founder, General William Booth, foresaw that the time might come when for physical or other reasons the best interests of the organization might demand a change of commander, and provided for the high council. In the opinion of those who are far advanced in the places of authority, such a time has come. For the first time in fifty-nine years the high council has been called together. A delegation called upon the general and reported that his weakened physical powers were affecting his mental activity. The general, however, refused to consider the suggestion that he retire from office. The high council then voted, with only a few dissenting votes, that he be removed.

Those who voted in favor of retaining Bramwell Booth as commander-in-chief were, in the main, connected by family ties. Last week General Booth obtained from the courts an injunction restraining the council from electing his successor in office. The issue is now to be fought out in the courts of England. It is the old question of which is supreme, vested authority or the will of the majority. The issue is fundamental in all schemes of organization, the religious being no exception.

The contention does not mean that the high council has lost the idea of the importance of spiritual things being foremost. It does mean that there must be agreement as to the fundamental basis of organization if the work is to go on successfully. Stanley High says: "With the Salvationists split, the Zionists split, the bishop and dean of America's greatest cathedral at serious odds, one has more sympathy with the failure of statesmen."

A CHRISTIAN DOCTOR'S GIFT.—

A retired physician who signs himself "A. B.," writes most interestingly in the Christian Century under the caption, "The Doctor Finds a New Profession." He had reached the point in life that he could no longer meet the rigorous demands of his practice, and being anxious to serve his fellowman, he conceived the idea of practicing as friend and adviser. He caused to be circulated where it would be most likely to reach those whom he was trying to serve a card which bore this announcement: "Believing that some men and women are burdened and anxious and need help in meeting perplexing personal problems, Dr. A. B. retired from general practice, offers not medical advice, but friendly counsel for those who desire it. By appointment only." The good doctor says that he wrote on the corner of the card, "No fees." He was determined that it should be purely a labor of love.

From the tone of the article, it has evidently brought great rewards to the doctor, through the consciousness that he is being of real service to those who need this intimate sort of help. And who but a doctor, who learns as much about the peculiarities of the human mind and heart as he knows about the malfunctioning of the body, is so well qualified to serve in this capacity. He gives a list of the things that he is consulted about—"fear, love, animosities, incompatibilities, sense of ill-usage, discouragements, disappointments, futilities, sins, sorrows, and bereavements; loneliness; no one to talk to; relatives who do not understand; friends and acquaintances who cannot be trusted."

For all these various ills it seems that the doctor's three main prescriptions are religious in tone, for he seems to have great faith in Church-going, Bible-reading, and prayer. He says: "I believe that religion may take the form of convincing personal experience, and peace and comfort, lifting of intolerable burdens, sense of security, relief from perplexity, active fighting for God and righteousness and, ultimately, a fine sense of merging into the eternal." In suggesting that there may be other men and women from other professions who might find joy in such a line of service, he lays down the following qualifications as meeting the requirements of the task: "experience, a fair fund of common sense, the spirit of consecration, somewhat of humility of mind, and personality. Not the personality of mere winsomeness, but that based on character."

CHURCHES AND SOCIAL JUSTICE.—

The National Christian Council of Japan, representing forty-one Protestant Churches and evangelistic bodies, has adopted the following social creed which represents the ideal for which these Churches are working:

"Setting up as our ideal a Christian social order in which God is revered as Father and humanity is interrelated as brothers, we purpose to realize the love, justice, and fraternal oneness manifested by Christ.

"We are opposed to every kind of materialistic education and materialistic system of thought. We reject all social reconstruction based on class struggle and revolutionary methods. We are likewise opposed to reactionary oppression. Moreover, taking measures for the extension of Christian education, we pray that many leaders will arise from among us who will pour their lives into the solutions of social problems.

"We maintain that making the life of Christ a living force within organized society is the only salvation for the present distress. We believe that wealth is a God-given trust, and that it should be offered up for Him and for men.

"In conformity with these ideals, we advocate the following matters:

1. Equal rights and equal opportunities.
2. Nondiscriminatory treatment of nations and races.
3. The sanctity of marriage, equal responsibility of both men and women regarding chastity.
4. The betterment of women in the educational, social, and industrial world.
5. Respect for the personality of the child and the prohibition of child labor.
6. The enactment of a law making Sunday a public rest day (with the expectation that wages will be paid).
7. The abolishment of the system of public prostitution and the complete regulation of all similar trades.
8. The promotion of national prohibition.
9. The enactment of a minimum wage, peasants' welfare, and social insurance laws, and legislation and equipment promoting public hygiene.
10. The encouragement of producers' and consumers' co-operative associations.
11. The establishment of a suitable agency to attain harmonious relations between employees and employers.
12. The diffusion of a thorough education for working people and the enactment of a reasonable working day.
13. The enactment of a higher progressive tax rate for incomes and inheritances.
14. The limitation of armaments, strengthening of the World Court of Justice, and the realization of a warless world."

NOTES-PERSONALS

Bro. Gerringer writes, with gratitude, that the poundings at the parsonage in Wakefield have not ceased, and that his heart is moved with constant gratitude for the continuous stream of kindness and generosity on behalf of his members and friends. The Church work in his pastorate moves along well.

Hines Chapel, Guilford County, N. C., one of our strong rural Churches, is building three additional Sunday School rooms to its present plant. This will, indeed, be a valuable addition. The time has come when the Church has to provide class-rooms and apartments for the youths of the Sunday School. These are the hope and the prospect of the Church.

Bro. A. W. Haraway, treasurer of the building fund at our Danville Church, advises that the addition to their Church of Sunday School rooms recently at a cost of over $3,000 has all been paid for and the indebtedness wiped out. Evidently our Danville faithfuls work with a willing heart and a liberal hand, as they built quickly and paid off quickly. "The King's business requires haste."

Rev. J. C. Cummings has been confined for treatment and quite ill at Sanford Hospital for a month, but we are happy to report that he is much improved, is at his home, and hopes and expects to be strong and fully in his work shortly. One of our busiest of men is Bro. Cummings. Here is hoping that his health is sufficiently recovered to enable him to carry forward the great work he has taken upon himself the present year.

Sympathy is extended our neighbor and brother in the ministry, Rev. L. L. Wyrick, Elon College, N. C., who is called upon to mourn with his wife the death of her father, Mr. L. A. Brown, of Guilford County, N. C. The funeral was conducted from Apples Chapel by the pastor, Rev. T. J. Green, Elon College, Saturday, January 26th, and the interment was in Apple's Chapel Cemetery. May our Heavenly Father comfort the bereaved ones.

Dr. S. Q. Helfenstein, editor of our Sunday School quarterlies and other Sunday School literature, Dayton, Ohio, is to be in the enjoyment of an extended trip to the Near East and the Holy Land for several weeks now. Dr. Helfenstein is a most capable and competent editor of Sunday School literature, and we are sure that his trip to the Holy Land and spots made sacred by the earthly career of our Lord will inspire his pen to even greater service and instruction.

Rev. Carr E. Gerringer, Wakefield, Va., enjoyed the high privilege of attending the All-South C. E. Convention, Chattanooga, Tenn., December 28th to 31st, and had a most helpful as well as enjoyable trip. The loving cup presented to that State which had reached the highest standards of excellency went to the State of Virginia, and Bro. Gerringer, with Miss Faber, of Richmond, Va., represented the State by invitation in making the speeches of acceptance for the cup which was carried to the Old Dominion with joy and gladness.

Against the recent donation of W. C. Durant, New York, of $25,000 as a prize to the one who would submit the best plan to make the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution effective, William Randolph Herst offers a prize of $25,000 for the best plan to repeal the same amendment, claiming that he offers this "in behalf of temperance." Anybody presenting a plan that would get that amendment repealed would earn his money, since that amendment went into the Constitution by the greatest majority and most wide-spread approval ever given any amendment to the Constitution.

We are sure our readers were delighted to see in last week's SUN an article from the pen of our dear brother, Rev. H. W. Elder, Richland, Ga. It seems a miracle, indeed, that Bro. Elder has been brought back from such very low state of health to a condition that enables him to write again. While his tongue and voice have failed to function in the matter of speech, his trembling hand inspires his friends and loved ones, and the article referred to, we are sure, carried joy to hundreds of hearts who love this man of God and rejoice that our Heavenly Father has spared him to us for a good work yet.

We are under obligations to Rev. J. F. Whitley, D. D., 228 Thirty-sixth Street, Norfolk, Va., for the exceedingly interesting, historical paper presented in another column, giving a sketch of the Eastern Virginia Conference held at the Hebron Church, Carrsville, Va., in November, 1872. Hebron Church was later moved to and became the predecessor of our Holland Christian Church. Dr. Whitley was once editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and though at present well advanced in years, he wields an interesting pen and contributes exceedingly valuable articles periodically to the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot.

We learn with deep regret that Mr. Rayford B. Whitten, father of our Rev. R. A. Whitten, Elon College, N. C., died at his home, 1101 Second Avenue, LaGrange, Ga., Friday, January 18th, Bro. Whitten, whose wife preceded him to the better world some ten years ago, lived with his daughter, and the burial services were conducted by his pastor, Rev. W. P. Cofield, pastor of the Baptist Church, LaGrange, and Rev. G. H. Veazey, pastor of the Christian Church, Roanoke, Ala., on Saturday, January 19th. Our sympathies are hereby expressed to Bro. Whitten and to the other members of the bereaved family. A kind and loving father, a faithful member of the Baptist Church has gone to his reward.

Rev. Carr E. Gerringer, Wakefield, writing recently, reports that the attendance both at the Sunday School and Church services in his pastorate is very good, indeed, and his people respond splendidly to the many calls made upon them for service and gifts. "The Ladies' Aid and Missionary Societies are doing splendid work under the leadership of their respected presidents. I have my first quarterly conference this and next week, at which time I am presenting the cause of missions to the Churches, and hope that we will be able to do something." We sincerely trust, with the advent of February, all the Church sessions will take up and discuss the matter of missions and put on a plan and a program for the spring offering for missions. If we are to reach our goal this year, there is certainly no time to be lost in making plans and putting on programs looking to the offering which is to be taken in all of our Churches at or about Easter.

It is learned with genuine pleasure that the united effort of Christians and Congregationalists in Birmingham, Ala., is bearing fruit and even now bringing results. The survey in Birmingham shows that the Congregationalists have about 145 members in the city, and the Christians forty-five, who are members of Churches elsewhere. In the membership of the United Church, the ratio is about two from Congregational Churches to one from Christian Churches. A pastor, Geo. H. Dier-lamm, is in charge of the United Church, and the work seems to be going nicely. A building has been secured and is used for Sunday School and preaching services. There is promise of permanent work if wisely directed. The following is taken from the Southern Congregationalist: "Birmingham, the United Church (Christian-Congregational).—Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, of Washington, D. C., secretary of missions for the eastern division, visited the Church on the first week-end in December. Dr. Bloom preached on Sunday and was greeted by a fine group representing the new Church. Dr. Luman H. Royce, of New York City, who is director of our national city work for the extension boards, visited the Church on the second week-end. On Friday night previous, Dr. Royce met a group of Church leaders at a dinner to discuss the location of a new Church edifice. A site was practically decided upon following the suggestion of Dr. Royce, who had been called in for counsel in the matter. The Sunday morning service was well attended, and Dr. Royce delivered a timely message. Rev. E. W. Butler, of Thorsby, our Alabama State registrar, was also present. The writer and Mr. Butler both took part in the service. Rev. George H. Dierlamm, with Mrs. Dierlamm, are leading the new Church in a splendid way."

UNION OF DENOMINATIONS.

Undoubtedly organic Church union is coming. The idea is receiving more thought than ever before, and just now it is being given an extra impetus by the fact that so many small denominations are struggling for existence. It is undeniable that when any Church must put forth great effort to secure funds sufficient for financing its operation, its efficiency for doing the work for which it exists is greatly impaired. For instance, a local Church which must spend much time and effort getting its budget subscribed, then add extra effort in making collections sufficient to pay operating expenses, has little time, thought or funds left for the real work of the Church.

Suppose two or more small denominations similar in character should unite. It would mean that where there are two small struggling local Churches with two overheads and two of everything else, there would be one large congregation, one overhead, the money strain would be removed, and the Church could do a real work.

I am keenly interested in the pending union of the Congregational and Christian denominations, which seems likely to be effected soon. The union, when operative, will bring relief to a large number of local Churches.

It is true, the Methodist Protestant Church has not been invited to become a party to this union. But does any one think for a moment that two Christian Churches that can unite with each other would present an unfriendly attitude towards a third denomination which might wish to join them?

My suggestion is that in a tactful manner we ascertain from the Congregational and Christian Churches if they would welcome a third party to the coalition, and, if the answer is favorable, proceed at once to take the steps necessary to such union. This need not involve any embarrassment if the matter is approached in the right way, and would stay threatening disintegration. Eventually the Protestant Churches must lay aside their pride and prejudices, compose their differences, and get together. The waste of the denominational system is too enormous to be endured much longer.

This is an appeal, not to the ministry alone, but to the laymen as well, of our denomination, to face the situation squarely, recognize the facts and take steps to see what can be done to bring about this consolidation.—E. S. Wills, in Methodist Herald.

WORSHIP OF GOD.

II.

BY CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE, U. S. N.

In order to appreciate our point of view, one must recognize first of all the presence of nothing aboard a battleship that is contributive to worship. The ship is a war machine, and everything on it and in it down to the last bolt and screw is there for that purpose. In its simplicity, its directness, its crudeness and its glamor of brass and steel, the absolute lack of significance and dignity, as far as the worship of God goes, is appalling. Anything of a worshipful atmosphere must be created by God and the chaplain. To take these young men, the most of whom are untrained in religious thoughts, amidst such surroundings, and produce a service of sound sequence and significance and lift them up into the divine presence is a task which we can only attempt in the name of Him who can—God Himself. It cannot be done in an address to them. It cannot be done in cheapening songs or undignified pep and snappiness. It can be done only in manly elements and fittig processes and in doing the things that lead them to God. To do this requires not only the careful mental preparation and the exhibit of natural gifts and winsome personality (these contribute their quota to success), but also order in arranging the service, simplicity and beauty in prayer, wisdom in singing and in the use of the Scriptures, and the ability to create an attitude of devotion.

The Rev. George R. Stewart says: "Worship is the highest upreach of the human spirit. It celebrates the goodness, the mercy and the love of God. As such, its very nature depends for its highest expression upon the uninterrupted flow of the Spirit in a continuous and increasing sense of the divine presence. Worship is a great and a fine art, and for its greatest effectiveness demands premeditation and careful preparation. The spontaneous element in worship is not inhibited by such care; in fact, the unexpected flow of ideas is increased by thorough arrangement."

Our worship must begin with singing and a song service consisting of their own choice of hymns which they think are great hymns and serves to give more lead to their devotion than anything else.

While a chaplain undertakes to lead his audience to a consciousness of the presence of God, he must remember that the audience consists of representatives from all denominations and are used to as many forms and ceremonies, and the feelings of all must be gratified, as far as possible; therefore, we follow the singing with a touch of the ritualistic consisting of the responsive, the Lord's Prayer and Gloria. This has proven most helpful, especially in leading the worshipers to read and pray aloud. At all times the leader must remember that he is not expressing his own feeling merely, nor is praying to himself, nor is preaching; but he is directing their minds, their aspirations and their confessions toward the living God. There must, therefore, be meaning in every phase of the service.

There is another point of view which is not extant in usual devotions where the worshipers are a prayerful people, and that is creating a desire for worship. The hearts of enlisted men are very passive, religiously, undemonstrative and reticent. To be seen at all at the services is enough. Evidence of deeper devotion becomes an object of derision from irreverent comrades with whom they have to live, and having not learned that depth of consecration that stands out alone from others, this is not desirable. There are others who are there because they are there, and that is about all one can say. All these souls not only need to be fed, but they need first a hunger for the food. Thus it is a first task of the leader to so conduct and enliven the service that a desire for worship, desire for prayer, desire for the Word and desire for more of it may be created.

This means beauty of setting and expression. It means, on the contrary, talking their language. It means making contact with their thought. It means adequate and comfortable provision for every one. It means a hook for every one. It means getting away from noisy interruptions if possible. It means lofty expectation, and the practice of the presence of God.

This is a great task and often impossible, but a task which if not so understood and undertaken cannot be accomplished even to an appreciable extent. But it is a task in which we have much witness of the spirit, and we often thank God for His part of doing what we ourselves cannot do—in making His presence felt and giving to one and all a satisfaction in worship.

The baptism of the Holy Spirit has no reference to forgiveness of sins, nor the grace of character. It has to do with the use of what we call ours for service. It is the endowment of power that leads one into a service for others that insures a life of victory over the world, the flesh and the devil. The call of the rich young man was not one of his personal salvation, but to do something for the good of God in humanity. Our call to the Church is not one of our salvation, but the call of one's self to be co-workers with him in bringing His Spirit to the world, and to Him who giveth all things abundantly we must go for the daily infilling that we may not miss the work which He has called us to do. Amen. *

U. S. S. Utah, at Sea.

LET US PRAY.

1. For a missionary spirit—That the Church may see the whole world's need of Christ, and may be ready for any sacrifice in order to make Him known to all mankind.

2. For a spirit of prayer—That Christian people may learn to pray as Christ prayed and taught His disciples to pray; and that an ever-increasing number of interceders may be raised up until the whole Church is awakened to prayer.

3. For a spirit of sacrifice—That the Church may be willing, at whatever cost, to follow and to bear witness to the way of Christ.

4. For a spirit of unity—That the whole Church of Christ may desire and experience a new unity in Christ.

5. For the gift of interpretation—That the Church may learn to preach the eternal gospel by word and life in terms that the men and women of this age will understand.

6. For courageous witness in moral questions—That the witness of the Church in the moral questions of our day may truly reflect the mind of God and may be known and felt throughout the world.

7. For a spirit of service—That a great number of men and women may offer themselves unreservedly to do Christ's work at home and abroad in our generation.

8. For the completion of our own conversion—For the removal of all hindrances in our own lives to the manifestation of God's redeeming love and power.—Missionary Review.

STANDING IN THE GAP.

"He stood between the dead and the living; and the plague was stayed."—Num. 16:48.

Korah, Dathan, and Abiram talked against God's chosen servants, and God allowed an earthquake to swallow them up. Then the rest murmured against Moses and Aaron. God was angry and He spoke to Moses, saying, "Separate yourselves from among this wicked people, that I may consume them as in a moment." Moses said unto Aaron, take a censer and put fire therein from off the altar, and put on incense and go quickly unto the congregation, and make an atonement for them, for there is wrath gone out from the Lord. The plague has begun. And Aaron stood between the dead and the living and the plague was stayed. A plague has broken out among us. The work of the Church is the best, the most spiritual work I know in all the world. And yet I see, and have seen for years, a falling away from God. There is a great desire in my heart that God will come into our midst with great power, revive us again, and get to Himself great glory. The plague is begun, the plague of compromise is in our midst. We are willing to compromise with truth. We do not want to accept the Word of God as truth. We compromise with the world by our approval and love of worldly things. We love the world when we are commanded to come out from among them, and "be ye separate, saith the Lord, and I will receive you."

"Love not the world, neither the things of the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof, but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever."—1 John 2:16-17.

It is not the will of the Father that we compromise with the world. He desires and requires that we be separate, that the world may see Christ in us.

Then we have the plague of unbelief. We do not believe God these days. But you say we do believe. Still what we do speaks so loud you can't hear what we say. When we think of great men of faith, such as Noah, Abraham, Moses, Daniel, Stephen, Paul, Moody, Livingston and many others, we wonder how God has spared us of so little faith. For without faith it is impossible to please Him, "for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him" (Heb. 11:6). God wants us to expect great things and honor Him with our faith by believing that He is able and willing to do greater things than we think or ask. Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God. I fear here is our trouble. We fail to study the Word of God to increase our faith. Too, we need to have more faith in our fellowman.

The plague of selfishness is in our midst. Also too often we place self on the throne, and give honor and praise to same. We love self, we work for self, and take what God has intrusted to our care and spend dollars for self and pennies for Him. Yes, we spend millions of dollars for pleasure, while millions of souls are perishing—yes, perishing for the bread of life. In view of that fact, can we deny being selfish? Jesus gave up everything and by His life proved that He was not selfish. He said if any man will come after me, let him deny himself, take up his cross daily and follow me. No one can follow Him without denying self. Notice here, Christ used that word "deny." He said to Peter the first time, deny self; He said the second time, "Thou wilt deny me." We must deny self or we will deny Christ. Remember that it was love of self that made Satan. He was an angel of the Lord's, but wanted to exalt

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

HOW AND WHY READ OUR BIBLES?

The Bible is not to be read as an end in itself. Read in that light, it has no more to offer than many other books, and not as much as some. The Bible should be read as a means to an end. This is the Book that lifts, or is intended to lift, our thoughts and our hearts to God and His righteousness, His plans and His purposes. The Bible is not an attempt at history nor to show how man has acted in his relationship to God. Taking many of the men of the Bible, we find characters with many defects, and in no manner to be followed. A man of the world once wrote a book on "The Mistakes of Moses," as if the Bible held up Moses or any other of its characters (except its central figure, the Christ) as being perfect. The Bible does not undertake to show us perfect men. It does undertake to show us a perfect God. It does not show how men dealt with God, nor even how men have tried to find God. This Book was written from above downward, and not from down upwards. It shows how God in the past dealt with men and women. It is a revelation not of the character of man, but a revelation of the righteousness of God, and His sovereign attitude to man. In the Bible, God is speaking, or seeking to do so, through the agencies and instrumentalities and temperament of the times to man, to the heart and soul of man, that He may bring man into fellowship with Himself, and thus allow man to share in the joy and triumph and the glory of His righteousness. It will help us in reading our Bible to keep our mind and heart on our quest for the righteousness of God. When our Lord and Redeemer said "there is none good but God," He meant that literally. Goodness, absolute goodness, is lodged, and to be found only in the mind, character and conduct of God. It is God's righteousness, His holiness, His sovereignty, His goodness, His lovingkindness that the Bible reveals and seeks to bring to our minds and hearts. Read in this light, we can say with the writer of the fourth gospel, "The word became flesh and dwelt among us."

This word, the Word of God, is constantly becoming flesh and dwelling in our very hearts when we read that Word in the light of its true meaning. The Word of God is sharper than a two-edged sword, because it penetrates and also illuminates the heart of man and the conscience of men as no sword or any other sharpened instrument can. The Word of God, as a revelation of the righteousness of God, is indeed a balm in Gilead and a joy to read and to contemplate. It is, indeed, in this sense a lamp to our feet, a light to our pathway. It is, indeed, a means to an end—a means, rightly read and interpreted, which brings us poor mortals face to face with the fullness and the flame of God's righteousness. J. O. A.

GENEROUS FRIENDS TO THE RESCUE.

With the beginning of February, according to the program of the Southern Convention and the division of the Church calendar year, our mission period begins. During the months of February and March, we are to emphasize in Sunday School and pulpit missions, foreign missions. The schedule as adopted by the Convention (page 7, "Christian Annual," vol. 57) is that the Church year for instructional purposes be divided as follows:

January, interdenominational co-operation; February, March, foreign missions; April, evangelism; May and June, home missions; July, August, September, October, education; November, December, orphanage and stewardship.

As to offerings, the Convention adopted the following:

That the Mission Board and Orphanage have annual offerings Easter and Thanksgiving, respectively; access to the Sunday Schools for monthly offerings, and to individuals at any time.

That the colleges have quarterly Sunday School offerings and access to individuals at any time.

From this it will be seen that the Convention planned the educational period for missions, foreign especially, for two months, practically, before Easter, the educational period culminating in the offering at or about Easter for missions.

The Convention voted to ask the membership to raise this year, from September 30, 1928, to September 30, 1929, $45,000. As has been stated, this would clear the Mission Board of present indebtedness and enable us to face the future with a constructive program.

Now, that this great objective may be reached, two generous souls have given the whole Convention a challenge. One of these generous friends, as is now well known, gives $5,000 on condition that we raise $40,000 from all other sources; and now another generous friend, deeply interested and devoted to the Church, makes a donation of $2,500 on condition that from other sources we raise $37,500. Thus, two generous friends have come to the rescue with an inspirational challenge to every minister, Sunday School superintendent, Woman's Missionary Society, and all others in position to help in building up our Church through its missionary enterprise. We know well enough if all will do their duty and will give our people a chance even, we will reach the goal.

During the months of February and March, let us sound the missionary note far and wide and give our Christian forces a challenge to a generous offering and to a great achievement. There are hearts burdened and souls devoutly praying that every pulpit, that every Church of our Christian forces, in the Southern Convention, shall be awakened to a lively interest in missions and move forward to the accomplishment of a great task.

QUARTERLY OFFERING FOR COLLEGES.

The Southern Convention, in its session at Richmond last May, voted that the colleges have quarterly Sunday School offerings. This is interpreted to mean, preferably, on fifth Sundays, as it is believed that this will interfere with no other financial program. It would seem that all schools could agree to this. There were doubts in the minds of some as to how this offering was to be divided between Elon College and Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala. The Executive Committee of the Southern Convention, in session with the presidents of these colleges at Suffolk last week, agreed upon the interpretation that the Sunday School quarterly offerings from the Conferences in North Carolina and Virginia should go to Elon College; and that the Sunday School quarterly offerings in Georgia and Alabama should go to Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala. It was understood from the beginning that this offering was to be taken more for its educational than for its immediate financial value. While some financial income will be derived from this source, the great objective, as stated explicitly by Dr. L. E. Smith, President of the Southern Convention, was its educational advantage. Through this means, we are training our youths in the Sunday School and teaching them to become acquainted with our colleges, and later to become pupils in our colleges.

If on the fifty Sunday, when the offering is taken for the colleges, some one in the school designated for the purpose will read to the school information about our colleges, give facts or make a brief address about our institutions, it will have a far-reaching effect and most wholesome influence. We certainly need to teach our young people loyalty and devotion to our colleges, and there is no better place to do this than in our Sunday Schools.

If our youths, in their Sunday School experience, are favorably impressed with our institutions and have information about them, they may be trusted to be loyal to these colleges and attend one or both of them when the time comes for them to go off to college. It is a wise provision of the Convention, and if carried out will have far-reaching and permanent values that cannot be estimated in words or figures. It is devoutly to be desired that the movement shall be universal and that all the schools will adopt not only the program of giving the quarterly offering, but a program of information on the day the offering is taken.

WHAT ABOUT THE LOST?

In the 15th chapter of Luke, three losses are described: the lost sheep, the lost silver, and the lost boy. A woman had ten pieces of silver and lost one piece. She swept the house and sought diligently till she found it. Then she called her friends and neighbors together and said, "Rejoice with me; for I have found the piece which I had lost." That is a common experience to lose and find material values and then rejoice. One piece lost excites more concern than nine pieces in hand. Material losses have broken many hearts and caused many deaths. The losses of the world are heavier than the crosses of the world. Jesus could bear the cross easier than He could bear the loss of the world. He died willingly to save the lost. "Likewise, joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons which need no repentance." One mission of the Church is to hunt for the material values that are lost in the world. The Church is a great sweeper and a great finder of silver and gold.

The second loss was a sheep by a shepherd who had a hundred sheep. When the one was lost he left the ninety and nine and went into the wilderness and searched till he found it. When he found the lost sheep he laid it on his shoulder and carried it home and called together his friends and neighbors and said unto them: "Rejoice with me; for I have found my sheep which was lost." That sheep represents a member of the Church, a believer in Jesus Christ, a Christian. That sheep was not an outsider, but an insider outside. It is a Christian who has wandered and lost the protection of the shepherd and the happy association of those who went not astray. The most beautiful thing in this parable is that the shepherd carried the lost sheep "back on his shoulders, rejoicing." Jesus not only goes after us when we wander, but He carries us back to the fold; and the fold is glad to see the return of the one that was lost. Many Church people have rejoiced with Jesus when, in a meeting where the Spirit brought back some erring member, the lost seemed to be found. The Church needs that kind of work repeated, and the Church is God's agent to go out and hunt up the lost members and carry them back to the house of prayer and praise. Many a boy on the farm has hunted for the lost sheep or cow and made the family happy when, in the twilight, he drove in the lost. Church members can go out and bring in the wandering ones and make the Church and God rejoice.

The third was the lost boy—the prodigal son, who left his father's house and went into a far country and there "wasted his substance with riotous living." He went to the end of his road. When he had spent all, a mighty famine arose in that land, and he began to be in want. When he came to himself, he thought of home, decided to return, and came back to his father's house. When he was a great way off, his father saw him, had compassion, ran and fell on his neck and kissed him. His father said: "Bring forth the best robe and put it on him; put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet; bring forth the fatted calf and kill it; and let us eat and be merry, for this my son was lost and is found."

The Church is always happy when wanderers return. God goes after the lost and welcomes those who repent and return. W. W. S.

CHRIST AND CHRISTIAN UNION.

BY DANIEL B. ATKINSON.

In recent years the weakness and evils of a divided Christendom have been strikingly revealed to thinking Christians. There has been an insistent demand throughout the Christian world that the forces of Christ shall come into a closer fellowship and eliminate the many faults due to a divided Church. It is not to be expected that all Christians shall agree as to what is involved in the union of Christians, nor that there shall be agreement on the methods of procedure.

We shall need to remember that twentieth century Christianity is the product of many generations of religious development. We tend to regard as sacred the institutions and beliefs which have come to us as part of our social heritage. History indicates that the Church has, from the very beginning, been desirous of maintaining unity among the believers. Paul admonished the Christians of Ephesus to be diligent to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace. All through these centuries the Church has endeavored to keep some sort of unity. That unity has generally been regarded as unity in belief. On this theory the great creeds of Christendom have been formulated. When an individual or a group of individuals found themselves out of harmony with the prevailing beliefs, the only method of obtaining harmony was by division. In the orthodox fold the dissenting brother was regarded as a heretic. In the new group he became "orthodox," an accepted member.

We shall need to remember that historical background out of which came the present denominations. There has been a tendency to oppose the coalescing of Christian bodies because in the past these denominations have endeavored to maintain unity on the basis of belief. The important question does not pertain to the origin of a denomination, but to its present attitude. Christ's dictum to His disciples should be the guide: "He that is not against us is for us."

Christ's life was spent among a people who were divided into numerous conflicting parties. Jewish influence, authority, hopes and aspirations were thwarted by the debilitating results of their antagonisms. He clearly saw that a kingdom, nation, or city divided against itself was doomed to desolation. This is as true of spiritual kingdoms as of political kingdoms. He, therefore, prayed that His disciples in all the ages might be united. The very success of the kingdom of God depended upon the maintenance of that spiritual unity which characterized the unity of the Father and the Son. The convincing power of Christian teaching depends upon the unity of the people of God. The world will not believe the Christian message if that message comes from a divided Christendom. No more prophetic utterance came from the lips of Christ than this utterance concerning the paralyzing effort of division among the followers of Christ. Twenty centuries of history bear emphatic witness to the fact that division among the people of God has weakened the Church and enabled its enemies to triumph in many a conflict.

The American denominations have carried their peculiar doctrines, practices and organizations into every land where missionary work has been done, and by so doing they have magnified unimportant, even non-Christian factors into matters of great importance. The minds of these non-Christian peoples have been bewildered by these purely denominational matters. The present reaction in the Orient against Western Christianity is due in part to Western ideals and practices which have been intertwined with the Christian gospel.

Christ made a marvelous appeal for a generous fellowship among those who would be His followers. When John told of his restrictions placed upon a man who cast out demons in the name of Christ because the man refused to be a companion of the disciples, Christ expressed His disapproval and gave excellent reasons for a more charitable attitude. A single kindly deed inclines the heart toward a life of righteousness. A cup of cold water, given to a disciple of Christ, is worthy of a reward. And on the other hand, it is a serious matter to offend a child who believes in Christ. Christ takes the position that it is far better to encourage the good deed than it is to criticize a possibly bad deed. It is better to err on the side of virtue than on the side of wrong.

This has not been the historic attitude of the Church. And in this day when Christians are endeavoring to find common ground upon which to unite, it is well to be reminded of these generous words of Christ. Christ is not pleading for a spineless Christian life. The heroic measures which He advocates for the perfecting of life forbids such a conclusion. A sturdy faith and a deep-seated conviction are not inconsistent with a generous fellowship.

A sheep-fold is a safe place, but it is not an attractive place. Christ did not stress the fold as the essential part of his program. The green pastures and the running water had an irresistible charm for Him. Here is the ideal pastoral life. Sunshine, pasture, living water, beauty of landscape, invigorating open-air life, protection from marauders, all combine to enlarge and enrich life. Into this rich and enriching life the other flocks come. They become one flock. There is one shepherd.

One of the dangers which may confront the present movement toward Christian union may lie in an effort to discover a limited number of "essentials" upon which Christians may unite. Any tendency in that direction ought to be restricted as not in harmony with the will of Christ and as dangerous in its implications. Christ did not come into this world to impoverish life, but to enrich it. His purpose is not to limit the longings of the human heart, but to enlarge them.

One of the results of human progress has been a vast increase in the number of human wants and in the means by which these wants are satisfied. Life constantly tends towards a "divine discontent," toward an increase in desires. Life is richer and more satisfying because of these desires. There is no reason to believe that the Christian life should be cold and barren. Christ came to bring men an abundant life. In the unity which must eventually come to the Christian world there ought to be a richness and variety of Christian experience correspondingly increased because of the expansion of human life in every other phase.

The road to Christian unity will not be an easy road to travel. Denominational institutions, associations, and practices have created a strong denominational consciousness, and many will feel that loyalty to these ancient and honored customs is the very essence of loyalty to Christ. Christians have not always been tolerant of new ideas. The way of religious progress has been marked by the fires of Christian martyrs, lighted by the hands of other Christians. This fact should temper the criticisms of those who are inclined to be unsympathetic toward those who find it hard to make the new adjustments which will be required by a united Church. It should also suggest to the conservative that he may be too narrow and limited in his understanding and appreciation of the Christian life.

We are confident that the oneness of Christians is in harmony with the will of Christ. The Church has no right to permit its activities, its organizations, its pleasures, its ideals, or anything else to destroy, baffle, or weaken the will of Christ. Christ's words were prophetic when He prayed for the unity of the disciples on down through the ages as convincing evidence to an unbelieving world that the Christ was the Son of God, sent by the Father as the Saviour of the world. A Gentile world, yet largely pagan in spirit and practice; international relations still maintained on a foundation of distrust and hatred; national disputes still settled by resort to war; race antipathies still deep-seated and bitter—all these and other unhappy social conditions point unmistakably to the small place which the kingdom of God still occupies in the affairs of men. Centuries of divided Christendom testify to the fact that a divided kingdom can never be a supremely conquering kingdom.

One is your master or teacher, and all ye are brethren.

OFFICIAL NOTICE.

The Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at its last session, accepted an invitation from Newport News to meet there in 1929. But inasmuch as their new Church will not be completed by the time of the Convention, the Newport News people have asked to be relieved from entertaining this year. The executive committee is, therefore, anxious to receive an invitation for the coming session of the Convention. Please take this up with your school and notify us if you wish to entertain.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

There is no printed matter, outside of the Bible, more helpful to the members of the Church, and a family of the Church, than the Church paper. For the members and Churches of the Southern Christian Convention, that paper is THE CHRISTIAN SUN. It may not be the best Church paper published, but it is the best for members and Churches of the Southern Christian Convention. Next to this, for the same members and Churches, is the Herald of Gospel Liberty, the oldest religious paper in the world, and published in Dayton, Ohio, by the Christian Publishing Association, at $2.00 per year—the same price as THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Ministers and leading laymen of the Churches of the Southern Convention will profit greatly by subscribing for and reading the Herald of Gospel Liberty. And now that it carries the Journal of Christian Education and the Christian Missionary, it is of special value to Sunday School teachers and members of missionary societies. These two papers have more Christian Church value than any other religious publications. Your life has more value in your home than the life of greater persons outside of your home. You have more value, as a member, in your Church than the best member of another Church has in yours. It is this personal home touch that gives greatest value to these two papers.

The regular reading of THE CHRISTIAN SUN does three things. It produces regular attendance, regular contributors, a knowledge of and interest in the general work and institutions of the Convention—publications, colleges, missions, Orphanage, Church extension. In other words, it makes a member of the Church interested, active, and useful. To be a member of the Church is more than to be saved. It is to be a contributor of thought, prayer, money, service, for the support of the Church and the saving of souls. If you go to Church regularly, somebody else will go because you go. If you put in your envelope regularly, somebody else will put in, too. If you read THE CHRISTIAN SUN, you will talk about it to your neighbors, and that will influence some of them to subscribe. If you talk about Elon College and Piedmont Junior College, it will lead others to inquire and learn more about these good institutions. If you know enough about the work of the Mission Board and the Woman's Missionary Societies to talk about them, you will interest others in the great Bible theme of missions. If you keep posted in the work of the Christian Orphanage, your interest and conversation will lead others to pray for it and give to its support. If you read the monthly reports of Dr. Atkinson for missions, Superintendent Johnston for the Orphanage, and what Drs. Harper and Beougher write about Elon and Piedmont, Jr., you will fall in line with the institutions which are not only the products of the Convention, but the life and service of the Church. You cannot keep step with this army of progress in the Church unless you read THE CHRISTIAN SUN. If you do not keep step in this march of progress, you are not your best as a member of the Church.

PRAYER IN A UNIVERSE CONTROLLED BY LAW.

(A chapel talk, later given before the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference.)

Is the universe controlled by law? Is it a mechanism? Has it evolved in accordance with certain laws to its present form? If so, can men continue to pray in such a universe?

The average man, when the word natural law is mentioned, thinks merely of such a law as gravitation about which we have heard since the proverbial apple pounded upon the head of Sir Isaac Newton. If such a man has studied physics, he also immediately thinks of the law of conservation of mass and energy or perchance of the laws of electric and magnetic force. And such a man is inclined to think that all natural laws are of the same quality as these laws which appear to operate without exception and are blind in their distinction between the just and the unjust. These laws have no respect for persons nor for times nor for seasons, nor seemingly for God Himself.

Those who are versed in science, however, are thoroughly aware that what is known in science as law is not in every case similar to the laws that have been mentioned. They make three categories under which they classify the laws that they find operating in the natural world. Those who wish to pursue this matter further would do well to consult Mather's "Science in the Search for God."

1. Identical laws. Reference has already been made to these laws. We can both know them and describe their processes and we can predict with confidence their action in any particular situation. The scientist confidently asserts that there is no exception to these laws, and that no one can violate them with impunity. However, the scientists humbly admit that two identical laws may come into conflict with each other. For example, according to the law of gravitation, a liquid heavier than air should always seek the center of the earth. There is, however, another law of the identical type that affects the action of liquids. If a piece of blotting paper be inserted in a bottle of ink, the ink will climb the blotting paper away from the center of the earth. This is not a discrediting of the law of gravitation; it is a confirmation rather of the law of adhesion and cohesion. At the same time, this fact establishes the principle that identical laws are operative only within certain limits, a most encouraging fact for those spiritually minded persons who disbelieve on the basis of their own experience the dogma of some scientists, who blandly assert that life is mechanistic and that freedom in the moral realm is a chimera.

We may even go further and assert that identical laws far from making freedom impossible for man, do not even limit freedom. Let us take an illustration from the spectrum, according to which there are seven primary colors, and only seven. Does this fact limit the freedom of the artist so to compound these colors as to excel in beauty and in charm and loveliness of the rainbow itself? Rather does this situation make it possible within the limit set by the seven primary colors revealed in the spectrum, for the artist to display creativeness within the law. Let us take another illustration, and this time from the field of mathematics. Mathematics has taught us that a circle can only be conceived in terms of $2\pi R$, which means that if you double the radius of the circle and multiply it by 3.1416, you will always have the circumference of a circle. Does this fact circumscribe and defeat the liberty of the artist to produce the noble imaginings of his spirit? Rather, because there is certainty in this formula, the artist is able to give form and substance confidently to his creative genius.

We may readily conclude, therefore, that the identical laws of nature, about which so much has been said, are found not to be the enemies of our freedom, but its servants. And may we not readily conclude that, if man himself is able to exhibit creativeness in giving expression to his genius by co-operation with these identical laws, God, too, is free to express His beneficence and creativeness in terms of these same laws and in co-operation with them.

2. Statistical Laws. A second category of natural laws has been differentiated by scientists to include laws obeyed by groups independently of the characteristics of the component individuals. Among such laws are those governing the action of gases and the laws of thermo-dynamics. For example, the assemblage of molecules in a body of gas obeys these statistical laws, regardless of the composition of the gas. Gases absorb heat according to their expansion and not according to their composition. An excellent illustration of the operation of the law of gases statistically may be found among the Texas oil wells. Though these wells are under a blazing Southern sun, the pipes through which the gas escapes from an oil well will be found covered with frost.

These statistical laws may be described, but no scientist of repute claims that he can explain them. Surely there is food for thought here for the dogmatic scientist who sees no place for faith as a working hypothesis for moral and ethical living, not to say Christian living.

3. Transcendental laws. The third category of natural laws posited by scientists includes such items as the laws of atomic structure and the quantum process, the movement of electrons and protons, the form and construction of the atom and the flow of energy. It is not necessary that we deal in detail with these laws, except to say that the atom epitomizes in its structure the history and the situation of the universe, and to describe the quantum process as producing light through a vibration of particles of energy or of individual units of energy, which individual units are known as quanta. Through adherence to the quantum process, many physicists have been led to abandon two former theories of light, the corpuscular and ethereal vibration.

Scientists are ready to admit that they are conscious of the existence of these transcendental laws, but that they are neither able satisfactorily to describe them nor adequately to explain them. The challenge of the universe to the men of science today is to explain these statistical laws and to describe and explain the transcendental laws of our universe. Surely there is greater reason here than in the cause of statistical laws for the dogmatic scientist to be ashamed of any assertion as to the lack of freedom in the moral and spiritual realm of human living.

We return, therefore, to the query raised in our first paragraph: Can men continue to pray in a universe controlled by law?

Our discussion of the laws of the natural universe as they are conceived by scientists themselves suggests that there is place for prayer and that no law as we know it in any one of the categories outlined by scientists precludes the possibility or denies the efficacy of prayer.

This is true, even with respect to identical laws, which we have found not denying human freedom but, so to speak, only setting metes and bounds wherein the creative urge of the human spirit may operate in becoming orderliness. It is even more true with reference to the operation of statistical laws, and most true in the realm of the operation of the transcendental laws, which scientists admit they can neither describe nor explain satisfactorily nor adequately.

May not prayer be one of the transcendental laws of the universe? There is no tenets of science to negate this possibility. Human experience, on the other hand, raises the answer to this question from the realm of probability and, as a countless host would testify, to the realm of certainty. Experience teaches that prayer is an essential part of the process of giving expression to the highest values of personality. We do not simply mean by this that prayer benefits psychologically through auto-suggestion, but that it puts at the disposal of the transcendental spirit resident in man a tool for creating a world in terms of the nature of God.

Prayer should use all the knowledge it has as a support and buttress of its confidence in God and in the integrity of His universe. Prayer is not the antithesis of knowledge, nor is it dependent wholly upon faith. When our friends are sick, according to the attitude of this discussion, in which devout scientists happily concur, it would be as irrational to use medicine without prayer as to insist upon prayer without medicine. The heart that truly prays laws hold upon all the assistance it can garner from its total environment, which includes knowledge of the laws of the nature of the universe and experience in the spiritual realm.

The Lord of life understood this thoroughly when He said, "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them."

WINDSOR, VA.

If one loves his neighbor, let him say so! If the shepherd loves his flock, it is his duty to say so. If the flock reverences the shepherd, their love for him will show itself in some concrete form. Christ taught by example. So should His followers let the works of their hands speak forth the feeling that lies deep in the hidden recesses of the heart.

Christ, loving His own, He loved them unto the end and gave Himself a ransom for many. Most denominations have a denominational paper. So does the Christian denomination. However, there are members of the Christian Church who seem to be somewhat indifferent towards their Church paper. The pastor may do his level best to keep his people informed as to what is taking place within the denomination, and fail. As the individual's life is in total darkness without Christ, likewise is the home in partial, if not total, darkness as to conditions within the Church without the rays of light THE SUN and the Herald of Gospel Liberty bring. However, I am sure THE SUN family will rejoice with us when they learn that the people of Bethlehem Church are at present taking more SUN "baths" and planning to enjoy more Liberty than has been known before in its history. A special drive is being made at present for renewals and new subscriptions to the Herald. The pastor is much elated about this. He is now wearing one of THE SUN's $10.00 Stetson hats as result of work done by Mrs. T. H. Dilday, who took the circulation manager at his word and secured more than the required number of renewals and new subscriptions to THE SUN. I take pleasure to insert the names of some who helped her by co-operating: Renewals—E. F. Cullifer, C. F. Savage, Isaac Piland, J. W. Folk, S. L. McCleney, W. R. Winner, L. E. Whitehead, W. H. Byrd, A. D. Hingerty, Mrs. O. D. King, Mrs. W. J. Pierce, Miss Doris Eure, Mrs. J. C. Pierce. New—Mrs. Ernest Oliver, Mrs. R. E. Roberts, Mrs. F. A. Gloss, Mrs. S. W. Powell, Mrs. W. D. Austin, Miss Helen Summers, Mrs. T. H. Dilday, W. J. Riddick, C. E. Duke, H. H. Byrd, L. F. Darden, A. C. Hingerty. Total amount collected and turned in, $58.00.

The Young People's Missionary Society, under the leadership of Miss Beulah Bracey, and the Christian Endeavor Society, under the leadership of Miss Doris Eure, are doing some commendable work.

Notwithstanding weather, roads and flu conditions, there was a goodly number present at the meeting of the Woman's Missionary and Ladies' Aid Societies. They're beginning the year in grand style with much interest shown. At this meeting the pastor was given many useful articles for "pantry decoration," ranging from a ham to table salt, all of which can be used to a great advantage by pastor and family.

GEORGE A. PEARCE.

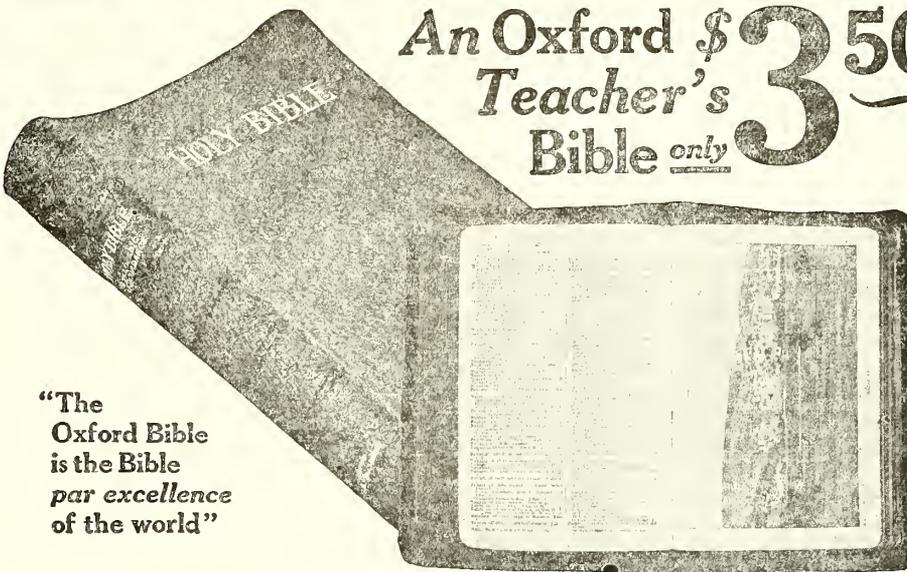

THE PEACE TREATY.

On January 15th the Senate of the United States ratified the peace pact of Paris. The vote was 85 to 1 for ratification of the treaty. There were nine senators absent, who were reported as being favorable to the pact. The vote of the Senate may well be taken as indicative of the sentiment throughout the country. There had been a persistent effort on the part of a small group of senators to have certain reservations written into the act of ratification; but the effort failed. As is doubtless known to every one, the purpose of this treaty is the outlawry of war. Under the terms, the waging of war is made an international crime. And the signatories are committed to the plan of arbitration for the settlement of disputes between nations. Thirteen nations have already ratified the treaty, and the action of the United States will doubtless have a far-reaching effect in influencing other nations to ratify. Since the closing of the World War there has been a steadily increasing spirit of hostility to war. The United States has been behind the other leading nations of the world in condemning war; but recently there has been an increasing sentiment that has swept the country. Of course, the ratification of the treaty does not mean that there cannot be any more wars. But if the nations of the world set their faces against war, the situation that has existed for centuries is reversed. And the world has made a long stride toward peace.

OXFORD BIBLES

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

THE RELAY RACE AND TORCH-BEARERS.

The shining blue waters of two wonderful gulfs were busy with fishing boats and little ships. The vessels came under their square sails and were driven by galley-slaves with great oars.

In between the two gulfs lay the Isthmus of Corinth, to which the men on the ships were sailing and rowing.

The people were all in holiday dress for the great athletic sports that were to be held on that day and the next—the sports that drew, in those ancient days, over thirty thousand Greeks from all the country round, from the towns on the shores of the two gulfs and from the mountain lands of Greece; from Parnassus and Helicon and Delphi, from Athens and the villages on the slopes of Hymettus, and even from Sparta.

These sports, which were some of the finest ever held in the whole world, were called, because they were held on this isthmus, the Isthmian Games.

The athletes wrestled. They boxed with iron-studded leather straps over their knuckles. They fought lions brought across the Mediterranean from Africa, and tigers carried up the Khyber Pass across Persia from India. They flung spears, threw quoits and ran foot-races. Amid the wild cheering of thirty thousand throats, the chariot-eers drove their frenzied horses, lathered with foam, around the roaring stadium.

One of the most beautiful of these races has a strange hold on the imagination. It was a relay race. This is how it was run:

Men bearing torches stood in a line at the starting point. Each man belonged to a separate team. Away in the distance stood another row of men waiting. Each of these was the comrade of one of those men at the starting point. Farther on still, out of sight, stood another row, and then another, and another.

At the word "Go," the men at the starting point leaped forward, their torches burning. They ran at top speed towards the waiting men, and then, gasping for breath, each passed his torch to his comrade in the next row. He, in turn, seizing the flaming torch, leaped forward and dashed along the course toward the next relay, who again raced on and on till at last one man dashed past the winning post with his torch burning ahead of all the others, amid the applauding cheers of the multitude.

The Greeks, who were very fond of this race, coined a proverbial phrase from it. Translated, it runs: "Let the torch-bearers hand on the flame to the others," or "Let those who have the light pass it on."

That relay race of torch-bearers is a living picture of the wonderful relay race of heroes who, right through the centuries, have, with dauntless courage and a scorn of danger and difficulty, passed through thrilling adventures in order to carry the light (of the gospel) across the continents and oceans of the world.

The torch-bearers! The long race of those who have borne, and still carry the torches, passing them on from hand to hand, rush before us. A little ship puts out from Seleucia, bearing a man who had caught the fire in a blinding blaze of light on the road to Damascus. Paul, for that is his name, crosses the sea and then threads his way through the cities of Cyprus and Asia Minor, passes over the blue Aegean to answer the call from Macedonia. We see the light quicken, flicker and glow to a steady blaze in center after center of life, till at last the torch-bearer reaches his goal in Rome.

Centuries pass, and men of another age, taking the light that Paul had brought, carry the torch over Apennine and Alp, through dense forests where wild beasts and wilder savages roam, till they cross the North Sea and the light reaches the fair-haired Angles of Britain, and later the fierce Saxons also. From North and South, through Columbia and Aidan, Wilfred of Sussex and Bertha of Kent, the light came to Britain and to us of the English-speaking world. (Thus the torch-light of Christianity came to our wild and savage ancestors at the hands of faithful and fearless missionaries.)—Basil Matthews, in Missionary Times.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ARMY—FORWARD!

The Sunday School has an army of fifteen million scholars, from whose ranks we may well seek to organize a world-wide missionary campaign. If every member were trained to give at least 2 cents a week to missions, it would produce a missionary income of fifteen million dollars annually, and if only one out of every thousand of the members would go as a missionary, we would have fifteen thousand additional missionaries—enough, we are told, with native helpers and the present force, to evangelize the entire non-Christian world.

It is only in youth that broad foundations can be laid. At the age of thirty, character begins to harden like plaster in a mold, and it is in only a few instances that it ever softens again. It is hard to make an impression on the old while youth is pliable and impressionable, full of ideals, and capable of the highest direction. By harnessing the inquisitive and adventurous spirits of the young, their activities may be turned into missionary channels.

A child grows spiritually as he does physically—by food and exercise. Bind the feet and arms of a child, and physical growth is arrested. Bind the mind of the child to the groove of mere reflection on spiritual ideals and the spiritual life will atrophy. The word of God is the food for the spiritual life; missionary service is the exercise that enables the convert, probably more than anything else, to digest and assimilate the truths needed for the growth of a strong Christian character.

Christ's great purpose and plan in His work and association with His disciples was to develop and prepare them to be missionaries. If He were here bodily today, would He be content to have the Sunday School scholars simply study the teachings of His word? Would He not be vitally concerned that every scholar should be actively serving? To claim belief in Christ, and yet fail to fulfill His commands is an intellectual faith that has in it no saving power; and to claim belief in missions and yet not give of one's self, one's prayers and one's money, is an intellectual claim that will not bring any reward in eternity.

A Sunday School without missionary instruction may be compared to a village shut in by the hills, with no road to the outside world. The inhabitants know nothing of the great world that is lying beyond them. Ignorance, prejudice and indifference are some of the hills that are shutting out the world-vision of missions from the majority of Sunday Schools.

When Robert Moffat returned to England, he told the people that in Africa he had seen the smoke from a thousand villages where no missionary had ever been. David Livingstone saw the vision, and his adventurous spirit became harnessed for Christ, leaving a track in that dark continents in the shape of a cross which has never ceased to light the way for those who are sitting in darkness. We need men and women as teachers who will graphically portray the blackness of heathendom as Robert Moffat did, and impress upon the young life of our Sunday Schools that these people can never know the Light of the world unless they will volunteer to take Christ to them.

The missionary enterprise is not a notion that has been tacked on to the Church. The whole scheme and plan of giving the gospel to a lost world was instigated by our Lord Jesus Christ, the greatest Missionary that ever lived. Since Christ's purpose was to bring the world unto Himself, missions must be an integral part of the Word, and but the natural result of the true interpretation and application of Christian principles.

The force and strength of the Sunday School has hitherto been expended on itself. When once this giant is awakened to the world-vision of missions, the entire world will receive the knowledge of Jesus Christ. George H. Trull says: "In the hands of Sunday School superintendents and teachers lies the real solution of the missionary problem. They hold the key to the whole situation, and if they improve their opportunity, within a generation there will be a Church whose intelligence about missions and zeal for them have never been equaled in the world's history."

The problem is now to make and keep alive the interest of the superintendents and the teachers. There is a large number of superintendents and teachers who are not interested in the subject of missions, and know no more about it than do the scholars.

In every Church there will be found at least one person who is interested in missions. "A missionary fire burning in the heart of one person is all that is necessary to set any Church on fire for missions." It must be the business of this person to arouse a sleeping Church or a sordid Sunday School. It is far, far easier to go quietly on one's way and to indulge one's self in the ease of pondering and studying upon these questions, but if we know and see the will of our Master, we cannot acquit ourselves of guilt until we have done everything in our power to bring this vision to the hearts and minds of others.—Sue R. Staley, in "How to Interest Your S. S. in Missions."

We are grateful indeed for those who helped last week to push us on to our goal of $45,000. And here is some good news: One generous brother pledged last week to give $2,500 if we reached during the year $37,500 from other sources. (One liberal soul had already put in his $5,000 on condition we reach the $40,000, thus challenging and helping us to the total goal of $45,000 for the year.) Every dollar now sent in counts, and is appreciated beyond expression.

Mission Secretary.

NEWS NOTES.

By Mrs. W. M. JAY.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Christian Temple, Norfolk, observed the annual thanksgiving offering at their regular December meeting. Rev. J. E. McCauley, of the First Church, gave a most thrilling address on the subject, "What Shall We Do with What the Lord has Given Us?" The largest thankoffering that this society ever gave was received.

This society has recently completed the study book, "What Next in Home Missions?" and used the plan that so many of our Churches are finding profitable—that of having it taught in the mid-week prayer service. Dr. Smith taught the lessons, and they report a splendid, helpful course.

The women of Norfolk district will hold a union mission study class at the First (Norfolk) Christian Church on Tuesday, January 29th. Dr. L. E. Smith and Rev. H. S. Hardcastle will teach the book, "Friends of Africa." This is a great idea, and we hope to have a report of this meeting.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Holy Neck Church has been having a most successful record thus far in their year's work. The meetings have been well attended and the members enthusiastic. Their aim is to make this year count for more and better missionary work. They have completed their first study book, "What Next in Home Missions," and they used the following plan: They met in the home of some member each Wednesday night, and on the night of the last chapter they met in the home of their efficient teacher and pastor, Dr. N. G. Newman. No refreshments were served until this last night, and then each took along some "eats," and a splendid social hour was enjoyed. They recently took out a life membership, and this was presented to their spiritual life superintendent.

Mrs. E. T. Holland is the wide-awake president of this society and is leading them in a most commendable way.

The Bertha Rowland Missionary Society, of Holland Church, is having a most profitable year under the leadership of Mrs. A. L. Jolly. The attendance has been splendid, and an unusual interest shown in the work. The programs published by the C. P. A., with other selected material, have been used for devotional periods, and a letter from one of our missionaries read at each meeting. Two boxes of clothing were sent to Mrs. Barrett immediately following the Porto Rican disaster.

A mission study course has recently been completed, "What Next in Home Missions?" having been used as the text. This course was taught by the Sunday School superintendent, Mr. E. L. Daughirey, in connection with the midweek prayer service, which proved to be a very successful way of conducting the study.

On Sunday night preceding Christmas, a pageant was presented entitled "The First Christmas." This was a dramatization of the birth of Christ, with special music. The society raises its apportionment entirely through free-will offerings, using the quarterly mite-box system.

BURNETT.

Rev. John Franklin Burnett, D. D., son of Enos and Hannah Burnett, was born April 16, 1861, at Bentonville, Ohio; died at Dayton, Ohio, January 12, 1929. He was married to Elizabeth Ellen Turner, at Ripley, Ohio, September 8, 1870. To them were given six children—Minnie, Myrtle, Lee, Jessie, Helen and Lewis—Minnie and Myrtle passing on in babyhood. Mother Burnett passed on December 15, 1898. He was married to Alice Edwards Moreton January 23, 1901. Mother Alice passed on March 5, 1928.

He is survived by Lewis, of Indianapolis; Mrs. Jessie Goodwin, of Dayton; Mrs. Helen Ryan, of Dayton, and Lee, of Dayton, and two grandchildren—John Franklin and Gretchen Virginia Burnett—and one sister, Alice Faulkner, of Port Williams, Ohio.

He was ordained to the Christian ministry on the third Sunday in October, 1879, but had been a pastor for about two years prior to this, having preached his first sermon at Neville, Ohio, in 1877.

He was secretary of the Southern Ohio Christian Conference for seventeen years, secretary of the Ohio State Christian Association for several years, and president of it two or more years; secretary of the Department of Sunday Schools of the American Christian Convention for four years. He was elected secretary protem of the American Christian Convention at Norfolk, Va., in April, 1894; elected secretary of the American Christian Convention at Haverhill, Mass., in October, 1894. This office he held continuously until January 1, 1927, since which time he has been secretary-emeritus.

He was pastor at Bethlehem, Oak Grove, Eagle Chapel, Hiatts Chapel, Fellowship, Point Isabel, Mt. Zion, Mt. Pleasant, Union—all in the Southern Ohio Conference—and at Eaton and Bethlehem, Ohio; Muncie, Indiana, and Franklin, Ohio, where he was pastor at the time of his departure.

The honorary title, doctor divinitatis, was conferred by Union Christian College, of which he was a trustee for several years. He has been a member of the Temple of Honor, Good Templars, Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, Red Men and Masons.

He was editor of the American Christian, co-editor of the Conference Herald and Living Christian. He was the author of the "Jedekiah" articles. He was author of several books, booklets and pamphlets. He was a devoted and true husband, a loving, kind and generous father, a real friend and wise counselor. He was a self-educated man, having been taken out of school at the age of fourteen. There was no man so well and widely known in all the Church and more loved than Dr. Burnett.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson VI—February 10, 1929.

REPENTANCE AND FAITH.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Repent ye, and believe in the gospel."—Mark 1:15.

LESSON: Isa. 1:10-20; Ezck. 18:20-23, 27-32; Mark 2:1-12; Luke 3:1-14, 15:11-24; Acts 2:32-39; Heb. 11:1-10.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 27:1-5.

"Repent ye, and believe the gospel"—these are the words of Jesus Himself as He begins His ministry. They must be important words, for in a way they sum up His message to the nation. We will do well to consider what repentance and faith mean and what place they have in Jesus' way of life.

Repentance.

There are several words in the Bible which are translated repentance. In the Old Testament there is the word "naham," which means difficulty in breathing; hence to pant or sigh. This word naturally came to mean to lament, or to grieve. This word is used about forty times in the Old Testament and in nearly every case it refers to God. It does not have in this sense, of course, any reference to sin, but it indicates the aroused emotions of God which prompt Him to a different course of dealing with the people.

Another word for repent which is most generally employed in the Old Testament to express the Scriptural idea of genuine repentance is "shubh." This word implies a radical change in one's attitude toward sin and God. It implies a conscious, moral separation, and a personal decision to forsake sin and to enter into fellowship with God.

The New Testament has three words which are translated repent. "Metamelomai" means to have a feeling of care, concern or regret. The feeling indicated by the word may issue in genuine repentance, or it may degenerate into mere remorse. This is the word used in connection with Judas' repentance. Another word, "metaneo," expresses the true idea of the spiritual change implied in a sinner's return to God. It signifies to have another mind, to change the opinion or the purpose with regard to sin. It is the equivalent of the word "turn." One more word, "epistrepho," is used to bring out more clearly the distinct change wrought in repentance. It means to turn over, or upon, or unto, and emphasizes the positive idea of turning to God as well as the negative idea of turning away from sin. In all of these words, both Old and New Testament words, there is the idea of turning away or changing one's mind; that is, turning away from sin or what is acknowledged to be wrong, or changing one's mind. Repentance is that change in a man's mind which leads him to turn from his evil ways and live. It must not be thought, however, that this "change of mind" is a shallow thing, or that it is simply a matter of intellect. It includes the emotions and especially does it involve the will. The little boy gave a splendid definition of repentance when he said "to repent is to be so sorry that you quit doing the thing." The words used in every case place chief emphasis on the will, the change of mind or of purpose.

Several things may lead to repentance: (a) A consciousness of one's guilt or sense of sin; (b) fear of punishment; (c) a recognition of God's greatness and love; (d) the inevitable consequences of sin; (e) the hope of spiritual life and membership in the kingdom of heaven. Ministers and Sunday School teachers have in the Word of God that which under the blessing of the Spirit of God makes men and women, boys and girls more susceptible to repentance, to turn from what they know is wrong unto God and what is right.

Repentance should find expression in a changed life. John the Baptist told those who said they had repented to bring forth fruits meet for repentance. If a man has sincerely repented, his life ought to be different. Not only does he stop doing the things he did, but as far as possible he undoes the wrong which he has done. The prodigal son—by the way, this story illustrates repentance in a fine way, for when he says I will arise and go to my father, and when he arose and went, he was putting into practical effect repentance—had to do something fore, however, than to arise and go unto his father; he had to live differently in his father's house. Genuine repentance changes conduct and character.

Faith.

What is faith, anyway? A small boy said that faith is believing something that you know isn't so. Alas! that all too many people think that faith is believing something that they cannot possibly understand, and often something that contradicts reason. As a matter of fact, faith does not contradict reason; it simply goes beyond reason. And the important thing to keep in mind about real faith from the standpoint of the religion of Jesus is that faith is not so much believing something as it is believing or relying upon some one. It is illuminating and inspiring to note that of the twenty times where Jesus used the word faith in the sense in which we are using it, in only one case does he use it in the sense of fidelity. In all the other cases He used it in the sense of reliance or trust. Faith for Jesus was simply reliance upon a God known to be trustworthy. In other words, faith is believing that God means what He says and acting upon that fact. An illustration comes to mind here which beautifully gives concreteness to faith. A father and his little girl had been swimming far out beyond the breakers when he suddenly discovered that the tide had turned and was running so swiftly that it was impossible for his daughter to get back to the shore line. Swimming over to her, he told her to turn on her back and wait for him—he would swim to the shore and come with help in a boat. After a hard struggle he reached the beach, and after a long delay he secured a boat and returned for his daughter. In due time he found her far out, floating undisturbed upon the water. When he finally got her safely into the boat, one of the boatmen said, "Weren't you scared out here all by yourself?" She replied, "No, I was not afraid. My daddy told me he would come back for me, and I knew he meant what he said, and he would do it." That is faith!

One does not have to know much to have faith. Minds that cannot begin to comprehend even the simplest creeds and beliefs of religion can have faith. One does not have to be able to explain the metaphysical and philosophical theories of theology in order to experience grace in Christ. He needs only repentance for sin, and faith to believe that Christ is what He is and can do what He says He can do.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, February 10, 1929.

TOPIC: "Jesus Teaching Us to Serve."—Matt. 20:20-28.

Some Bible Hints.

High positions do not mean large service. The Great Servant of humanity was the lowliest (v. 21).

A condition of efficient service is capacity to sacrifice and suffer. He who serves and expects gratitude will likely be disappointed (v. 22).

In Christian service it is the spirit of it that counts. Pride makes true service impossible (v. 26).

Service in the view of Jesus consists in the giving of life. It is not merely giving things or doing things; it is giving vitality, time, life itself (v. 28).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Jesus taught His disciples to serve by serving them and serving others in their presence. Acts speak louder than words.

Healing the sick was part of Christ's service, as it is of ours. Whatever alleviates pain and distress is divine service and acceptable to God.

Jesus taught His disciples how to teach, for teaching is a tremendous service. To give sight to mental blindness or ignorance is a wonderful boon.

All human need appealed to Jesus and challenged Him to help. This is our call to service today also. What is the need of the world? Can we help?

A Few Illustrations.

The feet-washing spoken of in John 13 is a beautiful example of how Jesus taught His disciples to serve; to serve thoughtfully, to think of the comfort of others and help.

Jesus served by bringing to us the emancipating message of God's Fatherhood and love. We can serve people in the same way if we live the life of the Father.

The service of God does not mean doing big things, but little things (like the feet-washing). It is simply serving one another in the home, at work, and so on.

Jesus' service grew out of deep communion with God. We wonder why our efforts are not more fruitful than they are. Here is the reason. The spiritual power is not in the human wire.

To Think About.

What service is most needed today?
Where and how may we begin to serve?
What are the rewards of service?

PICKLES BY TRAINLOADS.

Diversification of agriculture and development of industries based on agriculture in the South was well illustrated by the movement through Atlanta, Ga., of a solid train of twenty-one cars of pickles, manufactured in Montgomery by the W. & W. Pickle Company, from cucumbers grown in southeastern Alabama.

This is said to be the first trainload of pickles ever handled on American railroads. It was brought into Atlanta by the West Point Route and delivered to the Southern Railway for movement east. The cars in the train were consigned to the following points: Fall River, Mass.; Brooklyn, L. I.; Roanoke, Va.; Greensboro, N. C.; Gastonia, N. C.; Winston-Salem, N. C.; Shelby, N. C.; Charlotte, N. C.; Knoxville, Tenn.; Chattanooga, Tenn.; Nashville, Tenn.; Charleston, S. C.; Spartanburg, S. C., and Greenville, S. C.

STANDING IN THE GAP.

self. Mother Eve wanted something for herself, and so our first parents fell into the wretchedness of sin. I say again, we are all more or less selfish. We do not love each other as we should. Jesus said, "Love one another as I have loved you." Jesus loved to the uttermost. He gave Himself, that we might have eternal life. He was unselfish. In everything His first thought was for others. O how we need that spirit of love in our hearts! But thanks be to God, we believe that He has given each Christian a spark of that divine love that does not fade away. Yes, real Christians are bound together with a tie of Christian love that nothing can separate.

The plague of prayerlessness is in our midst. We have great singers, we have great preachers, but where are our pray-ers, our intercessors, those who can stand in the gap between the dead and the living and cry mightily to God? Well, we have some, but I am sure we need more real pray-ers. Our knees are not worn out as were William Bramwell with constant praying. Baxter stained the walls of his study with prayer-breath. These men spent two, three, four, five hours and sometimes all day on their knees in prayer. We are so busy working, working, working our lives out, and sometimes with little results! We fail to take time to be holy. We need to pray more and we need more pray-ers. Aaron stood between the dead and the living. He held his place as a mediator, as an intercessor, and the Lord stayed the plague.

God said to Ezekiel, "I sought for a man among them, that should make up the hedge and stand in the gap before me, but I found none" (Ezek. 22: 30). What a Sad thing that God found no one! God is still wanting men and women of power, of consecration, and prayer. He is wanting those who will stand in the gap in these awful days in which we are living and make up the hedge around the Church that has been broken down.

We are inclined to build the Church according to man's plan and make it too often just a modern place to go to. God wants those who will stand between those dead in sin and trespasses, and point them to a living Christ, who can save them. He needs real witnesses. Jesus said, "As the Father hath sent me, even so send I you." And ye shall be witnesses unto Jerusalem, in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth. Ye shall receive power after the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be my witnesses. Have we been endowed with power? Do we need to tarry in that upper room, or have we lost our saving power? There are many whose hearts pine for God and long for some heaven-sent ambassador of Christ to lead them from the bondage of sin into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

The important question is, what are we doing? and what are we willing to do? Since soul-winning is God's requirement and the main business of the Christian, what are we doing to win lost souls? God wants men and women who will stand in the gap and send their money and their earnest prayers that the gospel may be carried to Porto Rico, China and Japan, and to the uttermost parts of the earth. That all may know of a Saviour, the Hope of the world.

May God give us a new vision of lost souls, and cause us to stand between the dead and the living. Then the plagues of compromise, unbelief, selfishness and prayerlessness will be stayed.

MRS. R. J. NEWTON.

It is quite as important to hold members as it is to win new ones. The lookout committee should make this a part of their business, and not allow any member to drift away.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

GOD'S PROMISE.

"If my people who are called by my name shall humble themselves and pray—then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sins, and will heal their land."—2 Chron. 7:14.

There are altogether two many of God's people who have plenty, but who bend their souls but little in seeking the face of Jesus.

Let us examine ourselves. Is there any lack? Is there a lack of brotherly love? are there jealousies? is there a tendency to neglect Church? is our speech always kind? are we disposed to criticize? are we giving lots of attention to keeping our bodies well and efficient and neglecting the soul? do we tuck ourselves in bed at night and fail to think of God? do we have differences with any one? If we are guilty of any of these, a study of the text will remind us of our duty and privilege in this and what God will do for us.

"Be not formed to this world, but be ye transferred by the renewing of your mind."

Prayer.—O Father, Thou who in Jesus came to the world, and took upon Thyself the form of a servant for our sakes, teach us to pray and be better. Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE CALL OF A LAWYER.

"Set forward Zenas, the lawyer."—Titus 3:13.

It is not known whether Zenas was a Roman jurist or a Jewish doctor. It is conceded that he was a man of education and influence, and Paul had no question about his call into Christian service.

The significant thing about this incident is that God is no respecter of persons. "He that feareth Him and worketh righteousness is acceptable to Him"; and that He needs men like this to carry His blessings to mankind, to establish righteousness and justice in the "isles of the world."

Prayer.—O Lord, call into Thy service men of power whose faith is true and cause the world by them to rejoice in hope, patient in tribulation and active charity. Live Thou in us, precious Lord Jesus, and let us die in Thee.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

RECOIL, RECALL, REBOIL.

"I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done."—John 13:15.

One's mind is called upon to make distinct movements in every instance when one is offended. The mind starts back at evil suggestion, at least far enough back to plant itself farther down in the attitude of resistance, just as one would reach back for a weapon. This is the recoil.

Directly at this movement there is a steadying poise of the mind in consideration of what, why, how and what must I do—"shall I or shall I not," said George Elliot, upon which it accepts the opportunity or resists it and character is either formed or manifests itself as already formed. It stands by and prosecutes standards already set or it falls in its weakness. This is the "reboiling" process.

In the first, we are given the opportunity to be the best of what we are—time for thought and the summons of one's powers and passions to resistance in the protection of the soul. It was this moment with Jesus in the garden that he said: "Father, save me from this hour."

Our destiny depends upon the second. It is but a moment, maybe but an instant, but it is momentous in its possibilities. It is in this moment we readopt or we fling to the wind our resolutions or our well-made purposes. It is in this moment we reaffirm or we disavow our allegiance to our better self or to our God. It is in this moment we rally ourselves and prosecute our determinations or we "lie supinely upon our backs and let the enemy bind us, hand and foot." It was in such a moment with Jesus He said, "For this cause come I unto this hour."

In the last instance, out of the manhood that is in us, out of faith in the Father's designs, out of His grace which is sufficient for all our needs and which may be instantaneously summoned by a single gesture of the spirit, we fight to translate life to its highest meaning, though it cost the supreme sacrifice.

If we can put the importance of these things in our minds to keep them there in our times of temptations, we will do much to act spontaneously in the spirit of Jesus.

Prayer.—Dear Lord Jesus, be Thou before us in all things, the untold fullness of life that give life to us along our daily path. Amen.

THURSDAY.

WHAT WOULD YOU DO?

"Every one of us shall give an account of himself to God."—Rom. 14:12.

We have been told of a beautiful silver lake set in nature's grandeur called the most beautiful spot on earth. But if it were drained off, nothing but ooze, mud and slime would be found. Drain off your own heart and what do you see?

If you were judge and your father were a murderer, what would you do? If you were a Governor and your son were a murderer, what would you do?

If you were sheriff and your father murdered your sweetheart, what would you do?

If you were you and your sister were carried off by a seducer, what would you do?

It is hard to accuse ourselves, but the noblest life is one who faces self. A thousand things make claim on our manhood in the salvation of personal problems. In solving them, remember that "a soul injured by sin finds it hard to recover its first purity."

Prayer.—Dear Father, let Thy glory radiate from Thy heaven and give us guardian angels to warn and protect us from sin and those things we will regret before Thy face and Thy throne. Amen.

FRIDAY.

SAVED FOR SERVICE.

"He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also."—Jno. 14:12.

"Herein is my father glorified that ye bear much fruit."—Jno. 15:8.

A consecrated host is the only means of saving the world. A consecrated soul behind truth is God's power unto the salvation of the world. It is one thing to have faith and quite another to have working faith. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

It is a sad plight to have our light blown out by a puff of wind. That is what profession without practice amounts to. When consecration is complete, whatever our station and ability, whether our days are few or many, our lives will not be wasted."

It means a lot to do this. We have to drill through our pride, our lusts, our selfishness, be willing to sacrifice and endure opposition; but "He will keep thee in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee."

Prayer.—Our Father, we pray Thee for Thy vital force to throb in our hearts and abide in us to make us faithful in sincerity and service. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO YOU.

"He that abideth in me and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit."

A soul-winner has a lot to learn to make his service effective. He is a representative of Jesus Christ, and as such he must learn to love others; he must learn the sorrows of others and those of his own he must smother; he must learn the sins he must probe; he must learn true heavenly ministries; he must learn the obstacles of others; he must learn the spiritual tone to be preserved; he must learn to be circumspect and keep himself unspotted from the world. Forget that you must be master over those to be reached and just be beautiful within. Life is made of little sunbeams, not lightning; of waters of Saloam, not torrents; of little words, not sermons; of little deeds, not miracles; of little kindnesses, not battles.

Prayer.—Our Father, be Thou in us and make us beautiful within, partakers of Thy divine nature, filled with Thy truth and Thy life, endowed with Thy might, lighted with Thy wisdom. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE GLORY OF THE COMMON-PLACE.

"Is not this the carpenter's Son?"—Matt. 13:55.

Jesus did works which astounded the people. They said, "Is not this only the carpenter's Son?" "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" The days of our Saviour's solitary life qualified him to bring heaven to man.

Murillo has a painting portraying angels doing the work of the kitchen, each glad of the spirit of all. The spirit glorifies anything.

Before the giant mogul locomotive there's the iron foundry. Before the glory of the ship there is the "black gang." Before the temple there is the quarry. Back of every glorious deed there is the hard labor of some one who may share the glory. Isn't this encouraging?

Prayer.—Dear Father, we willingly and gladly submit our lives to Thee. Quicken our faculties for seeing the glory of the good things that come of honest labors and increase our faculties for loving, and make our hearts Thy dwelling-place. Amen.

THE SUN LETTER.

We want every subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN SUN to read the little label on the front page near the top of the page which bears your name and the date your subscription expires. If it reads some month in 1928, your subscription has expired and if you will mail us a check to renew for another year we will be glad. We need your sympathy and your co-operation in trying to finance THE SUN, and if every subscriber whose subscription has expired would mail in their renewal, it would help us so much at this time. The first of the year is a good time to start doing good deeds. This would be one. Who will mail in their subscription right away?

Christian Orphanage

My dear Friends:

The Christian Orphanage appeals to all Sunday Schools to make a monthly offering each month to support the Christian Orphanage. The monthly offerings are our strong-arm supports. We truly hope that the Sunday Schools will try and increase their offerings this year. We have some Sunday Schools that gave us $1.00 per month twelve years ago when we had only one building and forty-two children; some still send the $1.00 per month, yet we now have three buildings and 118 children—nearly three times as many children and three times the expense. Let every Sunday School begin now and do its best to make its offerings larger this year.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

A BIT OF CHURCH HISTORY.

Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D.,
Editor CHRISTIAN SUN:

Rev. and dear Brother,—While looking over some newspaper clippings, I found a faded bit of history in the form of a letter that I wrote to the Norfolk Virginian in November, 1872, outlining the proceedings of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, which had just closed its sessions at Hebron Church, near Carrsville. (I observe, however, that I did not mention Hebron as the Church where the body met.) It occurred to me that it might interest you, and possibly you might consider it fit to publish. So I have copied it and enclosed the copy herewith for such use, if any, as you may have for it.

THE SUN is sent to me regularly, and I read it with appreciation. May all blessings rest upon the paper, the Churches, and yourself.

By the way, Rev. W. B. Wellons was the standing secretary, though not mentioned in my report.

Yours fraternally,

Norfolk, Va.

J. T. WHITLEY.

Carrsville, Va., Nov. 2, 1872.

Dear Virginian:

For the last four days I have been in attendance upon the sessions of the above-named body, and have enjoyed the exercises very much. A pleasant home was assigned me in the family of Mr. Jesse Whitehead.

Rev. C. A. Apple was elected president, vice Thomas J. Kilby, Esq., who declined re-election. B. C. Eley, of Chuckatuck, was chosen assistant secretary. About fifty delegates were in attendance, among whom were the following ministers: Rev. W. B. Wellons, Rev. J. N. Manning, Rev. R. H. Holland, Rev. C. A. Apple, Rev. J. T. Whitley, Rev. M. B. Barrett, Rev. T. W. Joyner, and Rev. C. J. Ralston.

The discussions during the entire session have been spirited and interesting. The subjects of Sunday Schools, temperance, education, home missions, etc., were considered.

The Suffolk Collegiate Institute came in for a share of discussion and support, and over $1,300 were subscribed for finishing the building.

The home mission committee reported the erection of a new house of worship in the city of Norfolk as not far in the future, and the Conference pledged its support and co-operation to Rev. J. N. Manning, who has charge of that enterprise.

The arrangement for preaching and pastoral service for the ensuing Conference year will be as follows: Providence, Berea (Norfolk County) and Sharon (Camden County, N. C.), Rev. R. C. Tuck; Holy Neck and Bethlehem, Rev. C. A. Apple; Berea (Nansemond), Oakland, Cypress Chapel and Damascus, Rev. E. W. Beale; Jerusalem and Liberty, to be supplied by Rev. S. S. Barrett and others; Liberty Spring and Ivor, Revs. C. A. Apple, J. T. Whitley and C. J. Ralston; Antioch and Spring Hill, Rev. J. T. Whitley; Mt. Carmel, Union and Barrett's, Rev. M. B. Barrett; Hebron and Johnson's Grove, Rev. R. H. Holland; Cool Spring, Rev. T. W. Joyner; Suffolk, Rev. W. B. Wellons; Norfolk Mission, Rev. J. N. Manning.

The following standing committees were appointed for the ensuing year: education—Revs. W. B. Wellons, J. N. Manning, J. T. Whitley and C. A. Apple; Sunday Schools—Rev. J. N. Manning, John Oberry and Rev. M. B. Barrett; temperance—Rev. J. T. Whitley, T. J. Clements and William Eley; home missions—Rev. W. B. Wellons, A. Savage and I. W. Duck; executive committee—Revs. J. N. Manning, R. H. Holland and W. B. Wellons.

After transacting much business of importance, the Conference adjourned to meet at Cypress Chapel, Nansemond County, Va., on Wednesday before the first Sunday in November, 1873.

The oldest members of the Conference say they have never attended a more harmonious and profitable session than the present. QUIT.

NOTICE.

Please let me be your subscription secretary. Send me your new and renewal subscriptions to all magazines, religious and farm papers. I handle them all. Not necessary to have my prices, as I meet publishers' prices singly or in clubs. Satisfaction guaranteed.

BAYNES.

George W. Baynes was born May 22, 1848, and died December 11, 1929, age 80 years, 7 months and 11 days. He was married October 16, 1873, to Louisa C. Terry. He leaves a wife and six children to mourn their loss. His children are D. A. Baynes, of Columbia, S. C.; Jonathan Baynes, of Leaksville, N. C.; J. G. Baynes, Mrs. Ella Griffin, Mrs. T. W. Peerman, Mrs. P. S. Dixon, New Bethel, Rockingham County, N. C. He leaves seventeen grandchildren and seven great-grandchildren, two sisters and one brother—Mrs. P. S. Lassiter and Mr. J. M. Baynes, of Reidsville, N. C., and Mrs. Mollie Sharpe, of Summerfield, N. C., and many relatives and friends.

He was a member of New Lebanon several years, and took a very active part. He passed away in the home of Mrs. P. S. Dixon, where he had lived for many years. Before his death he told Mrs. Dixon that he was ready to go when the Lord was ready for him.

His suffering was great here on earth, but from the testimony he left it was light to his glory now. May God's blessings abide with the bereaved.

The services were conducted by Rev. J. W. Knight and Rev. J. C. Gillispie, of the Baptist Church, at Mt. Bethel Christian Church.

J. W. KNIGHT.

NELSON.

Rhoda Rozelle Nelson, daughter of C. D. and Annie Harton, was born November 30, 1887, in Warren County, N. C., and died December 23, 1928, in Henderson, N. C.; age 41 years and 24 days.

On May 8, 1912, she was married, by the writer, to Mr. Benjamin Harrison Nelson. To them were born seven children—Crandel, Benjamin, Margaret, Annie Shelton, Frank, Charles Bernard and Fritz Krisler. When eleven years of age she united with Liberty Christian Church, and in 1905 when the Henderson Christian Church was organized, she transferred her membership to become a charter member of the latter organization, and was one of the leading and most loyal members the remainder of her life, holding responsible positions in both Church and auxiliaries. Her greatest and most influential work was teacher of the True Blue Bible Class. In her home she was the true wife and mother, relieving her husband of the executive affairs of the household, allowing him to give his best attention to his business with the Carbutt Manufacturing Company, which firm he was associated with for twenty-five years. The deceased is survived by her husband, Mr. B. F. Nelson, father, mother, three sisters and four brothers, as follows: Mr. William and Warran Harton, of Richmond, Va.; Mr. Leonard Harton, of Burlington, N. C.; Mr. Weyland Harton, of Washington, D. C.; Mrs. Stella Horn, of Henderson, N. C.; Mrs. E. S. Martin, of Raleigh, N. C., and Mrs. W. J. Holmes, of Creedmore, N. C. The funeral was conducted by Rev. D. M. Spence, her pastor, from the Henderson Christian Church, on the afternoon of December 24th, assisted by the writer, a former pastor for six years, and the interment was in the city cemetery. The Church was filled with sorrowing relatives and sympathetic friends. The music was beautiful and impressive, the floral designs were among the prettiest and most numerous the writer ever saw. It was indeed a touching scene as the husband knelt by the open casket at the grave with the bright, interesting, motherless children close by. However, no words of consolation were needed by him after hearing him say, "She is in heaven and I am going to meet her there."

LOY.

Bro. J. Madison Loy passed from this life December 6, 1928, being 65 years of age. He leaves a wife, several brothers and sisters to lament his going, but we feel their loss is his gain. He was a faithful and devoted member of Apple's Chapel and will be much missed in his Church and community.

May the blessings of an all-wise Father comfort his loved ones. Burial was at his Church, conducted by the pastor.
 T. J. GREEN.

ALLEN.

Mr. Julius Lafayette Allen departed this life at his residence in High Point, N. C., December 20, 1928, in his fifty-ninth year. He united with Long's Chapel Christian Church in the year 1887, the year that the Church was built, and though living away for some years, he still held his membership with the Church that he united with when he was a boy and was interested in its welfare. His many friends and relatives mourn his death. The funeral services were conducted from Loug's Chapel by the writer and his body interred in the Church cemetery. The order of Elks, of which he was a member, assisted in the last rites of their deceased brother. Peace be to those who mourn.

P. H. FLEMING.

RUMLEY.

William Lee Rumley was born April 3, 1906, and died December 26, 1926; age

23 years, eight months and 23 days. Bro. Willard made a profession of faith several years ago at Apples Chapel Christian Church, where his family are members and where his body was laid in mother earth at 3 P. M. on December 27, 1928. His death came as a result of an operation. His life was clean, his purpose good, his nature kind. He leaves a mother, three sisters and three brothers, with many relatives and friends to miss him.

The services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. T. J. Green. May God comfort the bereaved.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE WADLEY, ALABAMA An Accredited Junior College

Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

Piedmont Junior College is training some of the best stock of America for Christian leadership, to be used by the nation and the world. Here is a great challenge and asset for students who wish to prepare themselves to serve in a worth-while way. The new Administration Building will be completed by time school opens this fall.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. Stanley C. Harrell.

WAR TO END WAR.—

The World War was supposed to be a war to end war. But never have the forces of evil that have clashed with evil forces produced an ethical product. The toll of the war was billions of dollars, but all of the money in the world can never bring back the 10,000,000 lives sacrificed.

EDUCATING TURKS.—

There are constantly recurring reports of strange things that are going on in the far-away places of the earth. Some of us were only mildly interested when we learned that Turkey had adopted the Latin alphabet and that all State business and State documents were to be written in the new language. But now, having simplified the process of learning to read, Turkey is making war upon illiteracy. The edict has gone forth that every illiterate between the ages of sixteen and forty must enter the national schools and learn enough to at least read and write simple messages by the end of the year 1929. The world has seen much of attempts to educate the masses, but this is the first time that any nation has ever attempted within the short space of one year to blot out adult illiteracy.

KING LOSES THRONE.—

During recent years the world may not have been made safe for democracy, but it seems to have been made very unsafe for monarchs. King Amanullah, of Afghanistan, has lost his throne. It appears that King Amanullah had made a visit to Europe and had a look at modern civilization and its advantages. He had been to Turkey where there was a persistent effort to modernize an ancient civilization. And King Amanullah went back home determined to join the ranks of progressive people. The king adopted European clothes and tried to induce his tribesmen to follow his lead, shave off their beards, unveil their wives, and send their children to school. His people decided that their king was too modern for their tastes, and the consequence was that Amanullah has abdicated in favor of his brother, who after a few days spent in attempting to rule also decided to give it up. The latest reports were to the effect that the reins of government had been placed in the hands of a tribesman who bears the name Bacha Sakao, or the water boy.

EDUCATION FOR SKILL.—

Dr. L. P. Jacks, better known perhaps as Principal Jacks, who has made himself famous by his achievements in the educational world, in a recent address comes out most emphatically in favor of education of the mind through the training of the body. "The best methods of training the mind are indirect methods, the training of the body being an indirect way of training the mind. Bodies possessed of no skill are frustrated bodies; some belong to rich fools, some to graduates, others to criminals, hooligans and wasters. These bodies are the greatest evil in the modern world. The finest sort of fellowship among human beings is that which arises from co-operation in skillful work. The massing together of large numbers of people with no skill and with money in their pockets is a great social danger.

The disaster of the unskillful man lies in the way he uses his leisure. He has to buy his pleasures ready-made, and they are usually very poor. Education for leisure is one of the greatest tasks for the future. Think of the vast sums of money made out of silly pleasures devised for people who are mere bundles of tired and shattered nerves. Think how the sex side of life is being exploited by clever people who know the weak spots in human nature and are determined to make money out of their knowledge."

A CHRISTIAN LIFE-PROGRAM.—

Sometimes a man writes the epitaph which he desires to have inscribed upon his tombstone. I recently read such an epitaph which was written by an Englishman. It reads: "Loved, worked, prayed, played, with the warm urgency of young blood, thanking God for all His gifts." Could there be six finer things to occupy one's time and energy. Not one of them could be left out without the life being decidedly the poorer for its absence. There are two of them, play and enthusiasm, which the average Christian is in danger of leaving out. Some one has said that we do not stop playing because we get old, but we get old because we have left off playing. It is seldom that any one ever lives to a very advanced old age who does not have a happy, fun-loving disposition. Gloom and melancholy seem to poison life literally as well as figuratively.

Many of us do not realize that it is enthusiasm which makes the tasks of life easy to perform. When marching men begin to grow weary, if some one starts a lively song, immediately there is a different step observable all along the line. The explanation is that enthusiasm has been quickened and the going is easier. If we are to get the full significance of enthusiasm we must go back to the Greek from which we get the word. There it means the quality of having God within. There are a lot of good Christians who would be infinitely better Christians if they only had a little more enthusiasm.

REPARATIONS AGAIN.—

On February 9th a new "Dawes Committee" is scheduled to meet in Paris to consider the war debts, and to try and arrive at a more satisfactory agreement as to the terms upon which Germany is to continue to pay war indemnity. The foremost financial experts of the world will be represented on the committee. The issues that face the committee are fraught with just as grave significations as were the conditions which brought on the World War. Germany is very anxious to have the French and Belgian troops withdraw from the Rhineland.

And there can be no doubt that she would welcome some reduction in the two and a half million marks which she is required to pay annually to the allies. This was the amount that was stipulated by the Dawes plan. Of course, if the new committee fails to reach a satisfactory agreement, the original terms of the settlement will stand. There seems to be an earnest hope on the part of all those concerned that a satisfactory agreement may be reached which will relieve some of the strain and shorten the time of final settlement. All the after-effects of the war have made for disillusionment, and created sources of potential trouble. It would seem that the conclusion is about to be forced upon both the allied and central powers that no matter what may be the result of the trial at arms, both parties to such a conflict as modern war has come to be are bound to be ultimate losers.

SUNDAY SCHOOL EVANGELISTS.—

Writing in the Texas Christian Advocate, under the query, "Who is the greatest evangelist?" Rev. H. D. Tucker, pastor of the Asbury Methodist Church, El Paso, Texas, answers his question by the assertion that the world's greatest evangelist is the modern teacher in a scientifically organized and scientifically equipped Sunday School. There may be those who will feel inclined to dispute Mr. Tucker's statement, but it is doubtful that any one will be able to definitely refute it. The efforts to successfully carry on mass-evangelistic work are encountering ever-increasing difficulty. It is not that the evangelistic message is less effective than it formerly was. The real difficulty is to get those who are not already professing Christians to attend evangelistic meetings. Bizarre and sensational methods have lost their ability to attract crowds. And the evangelistic service held by an individual Church does not reach those who are not already reached by the gospel. It has long been a self-evident fact that most of those who come into the Churches come from the Sunday School. This is the case with both young people and adults. It is generally a much easier task to persuade people to attend the Sunday School than it is to persuade them to attend an evangelistic meeting. Once an individual has been enlisted in the Sunday School the work of winning him for Christ and the Church is half done. It is the duty and privilege of the individual members of the Sunday School to bring new members into the school. It is then the opportunity of the teacher to win him for Christ and the kingdom. Too great emphasis cannot be laid upon this phase of Christian work.

NOTES-PERSONALS

The Executive Board of the General Convention of our Church is to meet in Dayton, Ohio, on February 7th. Important business will come up, it is understood.

Dr. J. Edward Kirby is bringing great things to pass in Raleigh. Shortly, we believe, we will be able to announce that Church is out of debt. Dr. Kirby is a power.

The readers of THE SUN will sorrow to learn of the death of Mr. M. Orban, Jr., Whittier, Calif., at his home on February 2nd. He was one of the noblest Christian men of our generation. God bless his memory.

Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, pastor, ordained three deacons at Liberty (Vance) the third Sunday in January. The Church work at Liberty seems to be going well. Rev. E. C. Fry, D. D., is to speak at this Church at night February 21st.

Dr. McD. Howsare has concluded a very effective kingdom enlistment campaign at Elon. Fourteen members were added to the Church. In view of the large number that had joined in September and October, this appears to have been a very notable ingathering.

The eight Christian Churches of Greater Norfolk have decided to begin an accredited international leadership training institute this fall, perhaps in October. It is a great idea and will yield excellent results for the Churches there in the years ahead.

Dr. C. H. Rowland has rounded out his fifth year as pastor at Greensboro. He has been a minister for twenty-five years—twenty years at Franklin and five at Greensboro. During his Greensboro pastorate, the membership has doubled and a parsonage erected, and a long-hanging Church debt paid.

Bro. J. M. Darden, Assistant Mission Secretary, accompanied by Bro. Sam Davis, was at Windsor, Va., last Sunday morning in behalf of our mission work and the missionary offering. A delightful service resulted, and a committee was appointed for an every-member canvass and a guarantee that the full quota will be reached by this Church. Bro. Darden was at Bethlehem with Bro. Davis in the afternoon of the same day, and almost the full quota for this Church was pledged and assurance was given that the full quota would be reached. This, indeed, is encouraging. It is not quite two months till Easter, and the Churches which propose to raise their full quota on or about Easter will be inspired, we trust, by the splendid example set by Windsor and Bethlehem.

Dr. L. E. Smith has been pastor at the Christian Temple for ten years. Here is a tabulated record of the beginning of his labor. We quote from the January 27th issue of the Church Bulletin: "Our pastor's anniversary.—In checking over our records we find Dr. Smith has been serving us as pastor for ten years, this month. Here are some figures which indicates something of the services rendered and progress. We find that during the past ten years Dr. Smith has preached 852 sermons, received 1,105 members, married 121 couples and buried 76 persons, made 8,121 pastoral calls, received $32,531 salary. The Church has raised for all purposes during the past ten years, including salary, approximately $344,500, or an average of more than $30,000 a year. We are grateful to God and pray for the continuance of His blessings upon us."

CHAPLAIN GOES SOUTH.

Ever since leaving Norfolk, on the 11th, we have been steaming south at about ten knots, headed for the Canal Zone.

We have been having gunnery drills and have been getting ourselves settled down for operations with the fleet. During the Hoover trip, we didn't do so much because we were short-handed in officer personnel.

On the way south it was odd to see the temperature changing day by day; you could hardly believe that it could be so cold in Norfolk and so warm down here. Our trip was very pleasant. We anchored in Limon Bay Friday night and got underway at daybreak Saturday to go through the canal. The canal is certainly a masterpiece of engineering, being 110 feet wide in the locks and 41 miles long, and lifting the ships 85 feet. It is a beautiful trip and takes about ten hours to go through.

Monday we start operations with the rest of the Atlantic (or scouting) fleet against an imaginary foe who is trying to destroy the canal.

H. E. ROUNTREE.

M. ORBAN, JR.

A telegram has been received from Whittier, Calif., by President Harper, announcing the death of Mr. M. Orban, Jr., former trustee of Elon College and its benefactor.

Mr. Orban has been in failing health for several years, though his death was not expected at this time. The telegram gave no conditions relating to his decease, but merely stated the fact that he had passed away at his residence in Whittier, Calif., at 4 o'clock Saturday morning. Mr. Orban is survived by his widow and his two daughters and two grandchildren.

In 1923, when the rebuilding program was undertaken at Elon College, Mr. Orban was appealed to to provide funds with which to erect the unique building in the administrative group of five then under contemplation for construction. The idea appealed to Mr. Orban very much. He had always been interested in Christian work and particularly in efforts in denominational colleges to prepare young men and young women not merely to be ministers of the gospel, but also to be intelligent lay-workers in the Churches. It is because of this passion of a lifetime that he was ready and willing to contribute $100,000 for the erection of a building on the campus at Elon for this purpose.

It was characteristic, too, of Mr. Orban to donate this building in memory of some one else. The Christian Education Building at Elon is, therefore, known as the Isaac Mooney Building, being in memory of the Rev. Isaac Mooney, father of Mrs. Orban. C. M. CANNON.

KINGDOM ENLISTMENT AT ELON.

Elon College community has enjoyed an unusually helpful privilege recently. During the week January 20th to 27th, we had with us Dr. McD. Howsare, from Dayton, Ohio. Dr. Howsare is Secretary of the Department of Evangelism and Life Work of the Christian Church. He, aided by his board members and others, has worked out a very useful and efficient plan of co-operative evangelistic service. As all who have had experience knows, it is peculiarly difficult to promote successfully evangelistic services in a college community where time and interest is so completely taken up in the pursuit of the varied college duties which require regular application. The tried and true methods of the past likewise fail in their appeal to student life. The kingdom enlistment plan so utilizes the strength of the Church that usually his dormant is too great a degree in the revival methods of the past, that greater results generally follow.

The visible results of our meeting were eight public confessions of faith made for the first time. Of these, five were young men, all members of the senior class in college. Three were lady members of the freshmen class, all but one placed membership in our Church at Elon, six being baptized Sunday morning, January 27th. Three young people from the town were received by letter into full membership. Three faculty members were received into associate membership. In all, thirteen new members were added to our working force. One made her public declaration for Christ and places her membership in the Baptist Church of her home community. Dr. Howsare's messages at college chapel services and at the evening Church services were very helpful and genuinely appreciated. His stay among us will be long remembered. He was reimbursed to the amount of $106.02.

College Pastor.

CHRISTIANS AND DISCIPLES.

Attention has been called to an error in a recent news paragraph which announced the federation of a Congregational and a Disciples Church in Columbus, Ohio. It was not a Disciples Church, but a congregation of the Christian denomination, and this local federation was an anticipation of the union which is contemplated between the two denominations and which will quite probably be consummated within the coming year. The distinction between "Christians" and "Disciples" is not difficult to make historically, but confusion in individual cases easily arises by reason of the fact that most of the Churches which are composed of "Disciples" are known locally as "Christian" Churches. It is of the essence of the Disciples' contention, so far as nomenclature is concerned, that Churches should not use names which are in themselves divisive and exclusive, but should stick to scriptural names which any Christian may use. Consequently they have called themselves either Christians or Disciples, and their Churches have been called Christian Churches or Churches or Christ quite indifferently, although the first of these corporate designations belongs specifically to the denomination which is about to unite with the Congregationalists and the latter is claimed as the peculiar title of a very conservative group which separated from the Disciples a generation ago. The Disciples justify this ambiguity by reminding critics that they were not looking for a name that would designate them as a denomination, but, on the contrary, were seeking a name that would not do so. But since they have become a definite ecclesiastical group, some embarrassments naturally arise, and circumlocutions sometimes have to be employed to indicate their particular group in distinction from others. The "Disciples" as a separate body originated in a separation from the Baptists about 1830 under the leadership of Alexander Campbell. They have, with some exceptions, continued to insist upon immersion as prerequisite to Church membership. The "Christians" were the resultant of several movements beginning somewhat earlier, the chief of which was led by Barton W. Stone, of Kentucky. A merger was effected in 1832 between the Disciples and a part of the "Christians," including Stone himself. The "Christians" of today are the successors of those who did not join in this merger (dating back to 1794). They do not insist upon immersion. It is the attitude toward baptism which constitutes the principal barrier between "Christians" and "Disciples," as it does between the Disciples and the Congregationalists.—Christian Century.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

A REMINDER OF JESUS.

BY REV. J. W. FIX, B. D.

"In Remembrance . . ."—Luke 22:19.

On the night before Jesus died, in the upper room of a friend's home in Jerusalem, Jesus served the first Communion. Following the repast, He commanded that they should perpetuate this sacred rite. For over nineteen centuries His followers have been faithful in keeping this feast of His passion. The New Testament record of the supper makes it very clear that the Master intended this event for a threefold reminder, or "in remembrance" of Man's weakness and His supremacy. The Greek word which is rendered "remembrance" is a form of the very to keep alive the sense of a thing or to think of it as if it were at hand. Thus this institution is not only designed to keep alive the scenes surrounding the crucifixion, but to make us mindful of Him and to sense His ever presence, just as though He were present.

1. The Communion is observed in remembrance of man's weakness. Over the pages of biblical history it carries us to the weakness and sinful fall of our first parents in the Garden of Eden. It depicts before our eyes the awful murder scene enacted by Cain in the destruction of his own brother. It leads us to the opening of a pit in which we see a lad, who for the love of money and the weakness of humanity has been cast by his own brethren. It calls to mind again and again the horrible fact that two thousand years ago an innocent Babe was sought, that He might be killed ere He grow to manhood and inaugurate a new kingdom. Each morsel of bread and each cup of wine brings before us all the bitter dregs of His young manhood until finally they open the portals of a window through which we see Him stretched upon a cruel cross.

The Communion reminds us of our tendency to sin. Jesus knew that after His ascension many of us would not be receptive to the quickening power of His spirit. We would drift from righteousness. We would fail to take heed to the wisdom of our parents and ignore friendly advice. There would be times when each of us would be tempted to the extent that our mortal weakness would say "yield." The constant repetition of the Communion "in remembrance" of Him is a reminder that we need Him, lest we fall far short of His expectations for our individual lives.

Evil is in the world. If it were not present, there would be no fight, and if no fight no victory, and if no victory no crown. Man easily becomes its victim, and because he is weak he oft forsakes God's supernatural power which comes through the Spirit of Christ. Man is deceived by the artificial glamour of evil—and because of weakness he betrays his Lord, like Judas—but like him, awakens to find that he is a victim and not a victor.

Man continues in life to "wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers." There is but one who is sufficient in strength to come to his rescue. He is Christ the Lord, whom God has commanded to be preached to the ends of the earth. Christians everywhere are indebted to Him for the institution of the Communion "in remembrance" of man's weakness and God's strength.

2. The Communion is observed "in remembrance" of man's need of repentance and God's willingness to forgive. After man becomes conscious of his weakness and his tendency to sin, he needs to be reminded of the need of repentance and the forgiveness of his Father to as many as come unto Him. Dr. Russell H. Conwell used to relate an experience concerning a divorce case that came under his observation years ago. This case, he says, was withdrawn from court and mutually settled because a certain little reminder led the mother to repent and prompted the father to forgive. For a long time it seemed impossible to ever reconcile this couple. They had suffered a bitter quarrel, the details of which are not to be recited here. They seemed to hate each other to the extent that in court they spoke not without the use of vile, spiteful language. At Christmas time, the wife's parents ordered the husband to send the clothes that were once possessions of his mate. In response, he sent all of her things, including two little red shoes. Either by accident or intentional, these two little shoes were placed on the wife's bureau, as the things were being unpacked by her mother. When she came into her room alone—alone after those loving years, alone without husband or child—she saw those two little red shoes. The little one who wore them was in her grave.

The reminder crushed her heart to repentance. She fell before the bureau as before the altar of God, and pledged herself to seek forgiveness. She desired from thence onward to think less of herself and more of others. The thoughts of which she was reminded was "what does our baby child in heaven think of us here on this earth quarreling over her grave and here in the presence of her little red shoes?" Repentance, yes repentance; and only a reminder was needed. Then followed the act of repentance, a loving Christmas letter to the husband. She told of the two little red shoes and asked him to come. Then in the presence of these baby shoes their hearts beat in unison once more. Hatred gave way to love, even deeper and richer than before. They entered their home anew and lived together ever afterwards in happiness and domestic peace. There was a need for repentance and a plea for forgiveness. But there had to be a reminder. Christ, understanding that phase of human life and nature, instituted the Communion "in remembrance," or to remind us that we might appreciate what He has done for us; repent of our sins, and ask of the great God above His loving forgiveness.

3. The Communion is observed "in remembrance" of His promise to be with us through the battles of life. As such, He encourages us to be valiant soldiers. During the battle of Santiago the sailors were frequently encouraged when a reminder sign was placed before them by the captain. On it were these words, "Remember the Maine." This brief statement was sufficient to remind men who were discouraged that they owed their best to America. The English sailors used to be reminded of their allegiance to old England by a banner which was hoisted high upon the mast. It read: "England expects every man to do his duty." Such reminders arouse courage and patriotism toward one's native land.

When we come to the Communion we see a blood-stained banner in the shape of the cross. It is "in remembrance" of His courage. On it are words of encouragement for you and for me. They are His final words to us, "Lo, I am with you always." Now, if that be true, and we know that every word is, then He is here today. He is with us all the time. When we are tempted to go astray, to defraud, to bear false witness, etc., He is conscious of every act. When, on the other hand, we do deeds of goodness, He smiles upon us. When we gather around the Communion table in remembrance of Him, we are again reminded of His promise to be with us and never leave us comfortless.

INTERCOLLEGIATE ATHLETICS.

Only a daring critic would lift his voice against the almost unanimous custom of educational institutions in putting their athletic teams on the road. Nevertheless, there do still exist some such critics. They shudder at seeing trainloads of students following the teams and congregating at distant cities for the games. The time lost from study, the cost of the trip (falling often on parents who are poorly prepared for it), the undue moral exposure of immature boys and girls, the physical risks from weather, the difficulty of settling back into school routine—all these are unfavorable to the custom. The contestants may obtain some benefit. We are told they are developed in body, mind and character. But the few participants in the games are the only persons for whom these claims are made.

Emory University is one institution that does not engage in intercollegiate athletics. The Emory Alumnus says: "Emory's nonintercollegiate policy is one of her chief assets and is a matter not for apology but for boasting." It continues: "Is not a ninety-two-year record of consistent growth in scholarship, enrollment, power, and prestige without yielding to the popular clamor for stadium amusement more meritorious than the momentary glory of a championship football team?" The policy of Emory of "athletics for all" brought last year six hundred students, more than four-fifths of the undergraduate student body, into campus competition.

Emory seems to have demonstrated that a university can live and grow without the advertisement of traveling athletic teams. No one would assert that scholarship is injured by following Emory's policy.

This season of the year is an opportune time for drawing attention to the fact that intercollegiate games are frequently arranged for Thanksgiving Day, and thus the purpose of the occasion for expressing gratitude to God is almost wholly thwarted. Church colleges join their secular neighbors in destroying the spirit of the day. The necessities of travel in reaching the places where the games are played forbid an opportunity "to assemble in accustomed places of worship and give thanks," as the proclamations of the Presidents of the United States direct. The holiday for Thanksgiving is made a holiday for another purpose.

While here withholding commendation of intercollegiate athletics in general, a word of positive objection is entered against the games that destroy the purpose of Thanksgiving Day.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

THE LAW OF EXCELLENCE.

I recommend you to ground your life on the law of excellence. Make excellence the governing idea, not only in your labor, but in your leisure as well. Learn to enjoy yourself by doing things excellently. Believe me, there is no form of enjoyment at all comparable to that. I know the difficulties; I know the obstructions and the inhibitions which make it difficult to practice the law of excellence in the world as it is now arranged. But when allowance has been made for all that, I still say, lose no opportunity that comes your way for adding a touch of excellence to your great neighbor, God's universe. God's universe is not too vast an object for you to manage and operate upon. It has a way of concentrating itself in its particulars, so that when you have given a cup of cold water to one of these little ones you are entitled to say to yourself: "I have slaked the thirst of the whole universe."—L. P. Jacks, in Christian Advocate.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

WHAT "THE ANNUAL" SAYS.

Our "Christian Annual" for 1929 is out, and we presume the Churches now have them. We congratulate Dr. Kernodle and the Central Publishing Company, Richmond, Va., for bringing out "The Annual" and mailing it during January. Dr. Kernodle, a loyal friend to every enterprise of the Church, seeks to expedite and to do with great efficiency all work for the Church committed to him, and he assures the writer that "The Annual" this year would have been out in December but for the delay on the part of two Conference secretaries who failed to send their minutes in till December. The only reason "The Annual" did not appear in December even, instead of January, was because the Conference secretaries delayed the matter to the chagrin and deep regret of the publisher.

But "The Annual" itself is certainly well prepared and presented in good form. The book is larger than usual and contains much that could have been left out without hurt or injury to any cause or interest. If some one were appointed to edit the minutes and delete extraneous and useless matter, the size of "The Annual" could be reduced. The present book carries 208 pages besides the four cover pages, and it costs 8 cents per copy to send it through the mail. So much for the make-up of the book.

Its tables and records are worth studying, and reveal some facts not very agreeable to contemplate. The seven Conferences composing the Southern Convention, have a total membership of 31,089. This total is only 195 above the total reported in "The Annual" of one year ago. And this gain can only be shown by estimating one Church of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference which one year ago reported 290 members, but this year failed to get its report in. If one leaves that membership in last year, and makes his additions from the total report of this year, without that one Church which failed to make a report, there is a loss instead of a gain. But this writer happens to know that that Church is still carrying on, and in all probability has even more members than it had last year. But making the membership of that one Church the same as that reported a year ago, our gain in Church members is shown to be 195. This, we think, is most regrettable, for certainly 31,000 Christians ought to be able, if they are Christians, to add more than 195 to their total membership. The Conferences that showed gains were the Valley of Virginia, 127; Eastern Virginia, 29 (which Conference reports a total membership of 10,504); North Carolina and Virginia, 217; Western North Carolina, 171. Total gain for these four Conferences, 544. The following Conferences showed a loss the past year in total membership: Alabama, a decrease of 47 over the number reported a year ago; Georgia and Alabama, a decrease of 48; Eastern North Carolina, a decrease of 144. A total decrease of membership in these three Conferences, 349. Subtracting this decrease from the increase reported in the other Conference, we get a total gain in the Convention of 195 Church membership.

As to Sunday Schools, we find the following:

The Valley of Virginia increased from a total enrollment of 2,012 to 2,115; gain for the year, 103.

The Alabama Sunday Schools reported a year ago 1,428 on roll. This year, for some reason, its Conference makes no report in "The Annual" of its Sunday Schools whatsoever. Our only recourse then is to estimate that the Sunday Schools of this Conference, at least, kept up their enrollment, and for the sake of totals, we will put their number the same as last year, 1,428.

Georgia and Alabama reported a year ago a total in their Sunday Schools of 811. The reports this year show a total of 1,106, a gain of 295.

The Eastern Virginia Sunday Schools reported an enrollment of 8,164. This year's report shows a total enrollment of 7,433. However, there were six schools reported in "The Annual" of 1927 not reporting in 1928, which schools had a total enrollment, according to the last report made, of 383. Taking for granted that these schools held their own, there would still be a decrease in the enrollment of the Sunday Schools of this Conference of 348.

The Sunday Schools of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference reported one year ago a membership of 4,310. This year 4,339, a gain of 29.

The schools of the Eastern North Carolina Conference reported a year ago 3,099. The total reported this year, 2,576, but there were eight schools reporting last year not in the report of this year, and their total was 719. Again, taking for granted that these schools held their own, and adding this number to those reporting this year, we have a total of 3,295, which would show a gain of 196.

The Western North Carolina Conference one year ago reported in its Sunday Schools a total of 3,027. The total reported this year is 2,934, but there were two schools not reporting this year whose total membership one year ago was 242. Again, estimating that these schools held their own, we will have a total of 3,176, thus giving a gain in Sunday School membership of 149. On this basis, there was a total gain of 275 within the Convention.

These figures for our Sunday Schools give some encouragement, but certainly not what one could wish and has the right to expect.

As to finance, the reports of one year ago showed that the Churches of the Valley of Virginia Conference raised for all purposes (including pastors' salaries and all local enterprises) $11,249.80. The past year the total is reported to be $14,935.33. The Alabama Conference reported raised for all purposes a total of $9,929.07. In 1928, $6,995.02. Eastern Virginia Conference raised for all purposes in 1927 $263,774; in 1928 the total amount raised for all purposes was $359,044.90. North Carolina and Virginia Conference raised for all purposes in 1927 $56,260.25; in 1928, $63,409.54. Eastern North Carolina Conference raised for all purposes in 1927, $35,311.51; in 1928, $15,988.10. Western North Carolina Conference in 1927 reported raised for all purposes $27,374.23; in 1928, $20,343.17. The Georgia and Alabama Conference reported raised for all purposes in 1927 $15,370; in 1928, $18,191.28. This shows a total raised by all the Churches of the seven Conferences of the Convention for local and all other expenses in 1927, $429,268.86, and in 1928, $496,907.34, thus showing a gain in total amount raised of $67,638.48 more in 1928 than in 1927. Very much the larger part of this total was for Church improvement, pastors' salaries, and current expenses of the Church. This is a wholesome gain, and shows that the people are not indifferent to the calls and needs of their Church and are as willing to give as they have ever been. We are putting our treasure into our Church. It will be interesting to any one having an "Annual" to figure out just how much of the money raised by Churches was spent for local purposes and how much went to Church enterprises—missions, colleges, orphanage, superannuation, education, publications. It will be seen, however, that the amount spent on the general enterprises of the Church is far behind the amount spent on the local Church.

"The Annual" reveals many significant facts and tells the story in figures of triumphs and of failures, of victories and defeat, but, nevertheless, of effort and devotion in the right direction.

One fact is evident in publication, and that is that every pastor and every Church should put forth renewed zeal, energy and effort to win others to Christ and to Church membership, and at the same time seek to develop the loyalty, the devotion and the spirituality of the membership of the Church. To this end, may God help us and give us victory in the year 1929. What we need most of all, as any one will see who studies our "Annual," is an awakening of the spirit of evangelism and a consequent deepening of spirituality in the Churches.

J. O. A.

THE MISSIONARY IMPERATIVE.

Bishop Mouzon, of the M. E. Church, South, in a notable address at Memphis, Tenn., recently declared that the missionary message of our Lord was not optional with Christians, but imperative. The bishop stressed the fact that the imperative to spread the gospel over the earth is written all through the New Testament, "and it is written not only in words but in the heart and spirit of the gospel. It is the heart of the gospel, and if this is taken out the gospel dies."

Many of us may not believe in foreign missions, but that does not relieve us of our sacred duty and solemn obligation as Christians. Jesus did believe, and does believe, in missions, and on this account He knew it was best for His followers and all who would share His presence and fellowship to believe in missions also. Who are we that we should put our judgment and our belief over against the judgment, belief and command of our Lord? The simple truth is that our Lord never intended that this command should be a burden, but a blessing to all who obey it. And it has been such through the ages and is such today. That which many look upon as a burden, our Lord knows is a blessing and a benefit, and He invariably makes it turn out that way.

Quoting Bishop Mouzon again in his stirring appeal to the Methodist hosts: "It is a sacred and solemn duty to share this gospel with all men everywhere. All men need Christ, and all men are naturally religious. If we have a saving gospel for ourselves, we must take it to others. Men cannot live without God. Night reigns, lights go out and hearts die without God. If we have this gospel, the demand is that we must take it to others who do not have it. The world has long tried many substitutes for the salvation offered by Christ, but all these substitutes have failed. Unless we get Christ to man, he is lost. It is, therefore, imperative for us to carry Christ to that man. The only hope of reforming and regenerating human society is through Christ. We must learn to risk our gospel in the hardest places and believe it can and will triumph over all difficulties."

No wonder many are morally dumb and spiritually paralyzed. They stand before an imperative duty enjoined upon them by our Lord, and are dumb and amazed because the command embraces such scope and requires such hazard and sacrifice. This is the very reason the command was given, that we as followers of the Lord might become willing to sacrifice in His name and to make an adventure for His sake.

We give to missions and do the missionary work not for man's sake, but for God's sake; not for humanity's sake, but for Jesus' sake. We do not know and so cannot love, the folks afar off. But our Saviour knows them intimately and loves them with the same passionate devotion that He loves us. On this account, He has put upon us the constraint and the duty of sharing the gospel with others for His sake—that we might have fellowship and be co-workers together with Him. God always releases spiritual force and power in that Church and among that people who undertake and do sacrificially their duty as enjoined by the great commission. J. O. A.

HOW A N. C. DENOMINATION GIVES.

It helps some of us to see the great and the good things being done by others. One of the great factors in building up the cause of Christianity and benevolence in North Carolina is the Presbyterian Synod of North Carolina. The synod of North Carolina of the Presbyterians does not embrace all of the State, since there is an Asheville Presbytery composed of fifteen counties in the western part of the State not included in the synod of North Carolina, although this presbytery is within the bounds of the State. Exclusive of this presbytery, covering fifteen counties, the synod of the State, according to figures now made public, gave during the year 1928 a total of $896,040 to benevolences, not including pastors' salaries, current expenses, building expenses and congregational missions, totaling $1,819,474. Our Presbyterian brethren gave to their benevolences as follows:

|---|---------------------|
| Foreign missions | $276,524.00 |
| Assembly's home missions | 240,302.00 |
| Christian education & ministerial relief... | 43,606.00 |
| Publication and Sabbath School work.... | 15,533.00 |
| Assembly's training school for lay workers | 4,563.00 |
| Bible cause | 4,705.00 |
| Orphans' homes | 120,970.00 |
| Educational institutions | 189,837.00 |
| Total | $896,040.00 |

That which is striking from the above, because of its universality among the denominations going forward with a great increase in numbers and membership, is the fact that foreign missions received the largest amount of any Church enterprise or benevolence. The Presbyterians, like others, have learned to grow by putting foreign missions as a secret of prestige and power that all Churches have to learn before they go forward in great strides. Dr. Gillespie, in giving out his figures and data for the past year, calls attention to growth as follows:

"In 1888 we had 122 ministers; now we have 316. The Sunday School enrollment increased from 13,165 to 64,567. We then had 261 Churches; we now have 559, and our Church membership has grown from 22,553 to 76,213, and this number will be greatly increased when the figures for the past year are in." Continuing, Dr. Gillespie says: "Look at the response to the foreign mission call. In 1888 we gave $12,761; in 1928 we gave to foreign missions $276,524. In 1888 our total contributions to all benevolences was $29,811, while the last year, as already stated, the total was $896,040. Though our membership has increased only three and one-half times, our giving has increased to a total of sixteen times as much. The only explanation of such parting with money as this is the spirituality of our people, the recognition that they are not their own, but that they and theirs belong to God."

The Presbyterians of the North Carolina synod are certainly setting a pace for the rest of us in growth and in giving that we may study to our profit and emulate to the glory of God. In flame the hearts of the people with the missionary passion and a zeal for the salvation of the unsaved, then the impossible becomes the possible and God honors with results such efforts in His name.

We grow, and we glow, only as we obey the great commission and "go." J. O. A.

PROGRESS OF CHRISTIAN UNITY IN 1928.

BY H. C. ARMSTRONG,

Secretary Association for the Promotion of Christian Unity.

Concerning Christian unity at the end of the year it can be said that "now is our salvation nearer than when we first believed." It has been a year of obvious and important progress. The problems involved are being better analyzed and understood, trends toward unity are becoming clearer and more definite, and the desire for unity is more general and more insistent. In things both visible and invisible the cause of church reunion has made decided and significant gains.

There has been the introduction of a new and highly important factor into the movement for unity and co-operation. It is the principle of research and practical investigation. At the meeting of the Home Missions Council there was launched a five-year program of study and fact finding survey in American church conditions for the guidance of home mission work and comity arrangements. This study is already bringing important facts to light.

Another research agency, The Inquiry, has just completed a study, the results of which are published in a book entitled "Are There Too Many Churches in Our Town?" This is an outline book for the use of study groups in local churches and committees. In the larger world, the year has seen the establishment of an international bureau of social and religious research with headquarters at Geneva, Switzerland. This bureau publishes the new magazine of international co-operation, "Stockholm." In the field of theological discussion there has been published "Faith and Order," which is the full report of the addresses, discussions, and findings of the Lausanne conference of August, 1927. This is the fullest and most authentic compendium of contemporary church belief and practice yet published.

This new factor of research is greatly significant. It means that Christian unity is moving out of the realm of the abstract and speculative into the realm of the concrete and the real. It is "getting down to earth" and becoming practical.

It has been a year of notable progress in the movement for the union of local churches and of communions of kindred origin and similar faith and practice. The statistics as far as known indicate that the number of local church unions is increasing at the rate of about three hundred a year. There are now between 1,500 and 2,000 local united churches in the United States.

Arrangements have been practically completed for the union of the Congregational and Christian Churches, and negotiations are well advanced among the Reformed, the Evangelical, and the United Brethren Churches. A number of very significant informal conferences have been held between groups of Baptists and Disciples for the consideration of closer fellowship. The outstanding overture of the year is that issued by the Methodist Episcopal Church at the Kansas City Conference, inviting the Presbyterian and Congregational Churches to consider the question of union. The movement for actual, definite union among American Protestant communions seems now to be a permanent fact.

The year has witnessed the twentieth anniversary of organized Christian co-operation in the United States. In December, 1908, at Philadelphia, the organization of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America was effected, "to manifest the catholic unity of the churches," and to provide a way for the churches to do together those things which can be done better together than separately. At the meeting at Rochester, December 5th to 12th, the Federal Council celebrated its twentieth anniversary. This meeting marked a significant milestone in the progress of practical Christian unity. The meeting was characterized by a decided renewal of hopefulness and enthusiasm for unity, a clear and definite recognition of the necessity and urgency of closer fellowship, and by a practical temper of mind which dealt with these matters in a constructive fashion. A committee of twenty-five was appointed to work out and propose plans for such revisions and reconstruction of the Council as are needed for the closer unity of the constituent communions.

The good year 1928, therefore, "reports progress." Much has been accomplished. There is much yet to be done. Christian unity in America has undoubtedly "turned the corner." The big, long "home-stretch" lies ahead. It calls for the help of every loyal heart and hand.—The Christian Evangelist (Disciples).

MAKING PEOPLE MORAL BY LAW.

The opponents of our Sabbath law say: "You are trying to make people moral by law. This cannot be done. The only way to make people good is by getting the love of God into their hearts."

Our reply is: We are not trying to "make" people moral by law. We are trying to give them an opportunity to be moral by law. What is a garden fence for? Not to make the garden; the gardener does this. The fence is to make the garden possible, to keep out intruders that would trample down its tender plants. What are the dykes of Holland for? This country, with its beautiful scenery and fruitful fields, lies below the level of the sea. Great dykes have been built on its shores which put their shoulders against the sea and prevent its waters from sweeping in to destroy Holland. The Dutch, not the dykes, make Holland; but the dykes make Holland possible.

This is all Sabbath laws are for. They do not make people go to church or perform any religious duty. But they do say to greedy commercial interests who are bent upon using the day for money making: "Stand back and give the preacher, the Sabbath school teacher, and Christian father and mother an opportunity on the Sabbath day to reach the people with the teachings of God's Word, which will make them good."—The Christian Statesman.

ELON LETTER.

The Senior Class Sunday School Class has just closed a very earnest discussion extending over four Sundays as to prayer. To me it was very illuminating to see the high estimate young people place upon the exercise of this priceless spiritual privilege.

Prayer is the language of the soul, the medium by means of which men and God may communicate, they agreed. This may not be a philosophical definition, but it is certainly a descriptive one, growing right out of actual experience.

This group was particularly pleased with the prayer, which we call the Lord's Prayer. They examined it with great care and sought to get down to its foundational meaning.

Its "Our Father," they thought signified that prayer cannot be entirely personal. It must include others by implication. It would be presumptuous they felt if any one should address God as "My Father."

The first petition breathes the reverence we should always feel in the presence of God.

We cannot really pray the Lord's Prayer, they thought, unless we are willing to identify ourselves with His program in the world. That is what "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done, on earth as in heaven," means to these Seniors.

"Give us this day our daily bread," they were glad to think, was meant to suggest that God is interested in every phase of our life and experience, even our physical welfare.

They did not know whether to say "forgive us our trespasses, or 'forgive us our debts.'" They examined the meaning of this petition in the original documents and found that we should really pray "forgive us our oughts"—that is the things we ought to have done, but neglected, as well as for the things we did do, but ought not. So they accepted both "debts" and "trespasses" and regretted we have no English equivalent in common use to connote the idea.

They expressed small patience with the fellow who thinks he is equal to any situation and who is willing to be tempted. Prayer should teach us our insufficiency, our sense of lack, our need of help, humility. If Jesus had not taught His disciples to pray, "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil," these Seniors would feel like amending the model prayer by including that idea.

They were glad too that the prayer ended in an outburst of praise and adoration, just as it began, suggestive that the very alpha and omega of prayer, its atmosphere is reverence.

I doubt if many of us who pray the Lord's Prayer see in it the great significance it contains. It was a revelation to these Seniors, even as it was to me, to discover the concept behind the words our Lord suggested to His followers when they asked Him to teach them to pray.

DEPENDENCE.

Occasionally one runs across a person who evidences but little or no desire to take an active interest in the hustling world of affairs, but rather is apparently content to languidly, and with a minimum energy, go through life in a desultory manner, quite satisfied to let others bear the burdens and take the initiative in the ordinary functions of daily experience.

Dependence upon others is surely not a desirable status with which any man or woman should be satisfied unless, of course, the dependent one is physically handicapped or has reached the age where he or she can conscientiously take their hands from the plow, as it were, and enjoy well-earned rest.

It was no doubt intended by the Creator that every one should work out his or her own salvation in this life, that they should perform certain duties imposed equally upon all people, that by diligence and labor alone could they merit the possession of the luxuries of life.

If a man or woman, being possessed of sound health and endowed with average intelligence, fails to do his or her own work, then it logically follows that this same work will have to be performed by others, these others assuming added burdens thereby. It is only necessary to glance at the pages of history to determine the inevitable result—aggravated conditions superinduced by the idleness and wastefulness of those of great wealth, as opposed to the rightful indignation of the half-starved, over-worked masses who owed their pitiable state of lack to the excesses that were crowding the foolish lives of the aristocrats.

It is amusing and instructive to conduct our investigation further, even into the lower forms of life. For instance, let us visit an apiary and learn the lesson taught by the highly energetic little bees. Here we see industry—a combination of scientific skill and manual labor. The provident insects have no use for a drone, the idler being killed with dispatch as he is considered an impediment to be removed, at the earliest possible moment, for the common good of the workers.

The drone, the man who habitually accepts charity, whining at "misfortunes" that his own idleness has brought about, indeed merits little sympathy. If he were candid he would say of himself, "I am a liability. The world is progressing despite my inertia. I am content to let others feed and clothe me. However, beneath the fancied happiness of my inactivity there lies a sinister gloom. I am consuming what I have not produced. By sheer laziness, chicanery and perhaps open dishonesty, I glean from the fields where other men have sown."

On the other hand, the active, honest and energetic man can say with equal and more justifiable candor, "I am an asset in this world, a needed and appreciated member of society. By doing my share, I am contributing to the advancing prosperity and general progress of my city, State and nation. I am benefiting humanity. I earn my living honestly and am looked upon by my fellows with confidence and trust." The latter is indeed the happy man. He is so interested in his work, so gratified at the progress he has made, so absorbed in making himself a better citizen, a better husband, a better employee, that his mind is stimulated and his every activity becomes a joy—life proves a great, fascinating experience.

The habitual "leaner"—let it be hoped for the good of society his number is few—is missing some things that make this earthly experience worthwhile, and such a man has no place in the ranks of those who are materially contributing to the general progress of the world. W.

O Lord, our God, send Thy blessing upon us today. Prepare us in mind and heart for worship. As we open our hearts to Thee today may we have Thy cleansing and inspiring presence. Enrich us with Thy grace. Speak to us in this hour of worship. Minister to us the bread of life, and may righteousness, peace, and joy fill us as we worship Thee this day. Amen.—Centenary Bulletin.

SERVICE.

Christianity began with a renunciation of wealth; indeed, with a renunciation of things, not because wealth in itself is bad, but because it has proved itself so constantly a barrier to the good. One need not use the word "wealth" in this connection, for the amount of possessions is not the determining factor; it is one's attitude toward them. No one will dispute Dean Inge's witty statement of the truth that the average man is rich enough when he has a little more than he has got and not till then. There is as fatal bitterness aroused in bickerings over small estates as over large, and materialism may measure the value of life by dollars as truly as by thousands of dollars.

What is of inescapable significance is the witness of history that the great servants of the world, the effective prophets of liberty and wisdom and beauty, the men and women who have won for us our continents, who have established our schools, who have preserved for us our faith, whose heroisms remain in the recollections of humanity as flaming milestones of our social progress, have been men and women who renounced or ignored the securities of possession for the adventures of service. The pioneers who pre-empted the lands which we have inherited—physical, social, moral—have had that intrepid quality of renunciation by which they forewent the luxuries and even the comforts which constitute so much of our ideal of life, and through their poverty we have become rich. From the viewpoint of expansive and ministrant living, history seems about to tell us that "it is hell not to be poor." It is not simply the austerity of religion; it is the frankness of human experience which declares that as a way of life materialism is mocked by wisdom, and the end thereof is the way of death. Jesus is unhesitant and unmistakable in his attitude toward possessions. He never condemns them for themselves; he simply has no use for them. "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth."—Rev. J. M. M. Gray, in Christian Advocate.

MORE RURAL HIGH SCHOOLS.

There are a greater number of high schools in the country than in the city, but those in the cities are larger and their numerical total of attendance is greater than that in the country schools according to statistics of the Department of the Interior. It was stated that the country youth has less opportunity to continue at his books through the secondary stages of education than has the city youth.

These facts are compiled by the Federal Bureau of Education. It states that there are to-day in the United States 21,700 high schools. Reports have been received from 17,711 of these, of which 3,960, or 22.4 per cent, are urban high schools; that is, they are located in centers of 2,500 or more population; 13,751 or 77.6 per cent are rural—located in centers of 2,500 or less in population.

In the 13,751 rural high schools in the United States there are only 1,079,086 children, or 28.8 per cent of the total high school enrollment; in the 3,960 urban high schools there are 2,662,364 children, or 71.2 per cent of the total enrollment.

It is estimated that more than 18 of every 100 children 15 to 18 years of age in urban areas continue their education beyond the high school, while only 7.2 of every 100 children of the same age-group in rural areas seek further education preparation.

As secondary education has developed and is now functioning, the urban high school child has a much better chance to go to high school, and when he does go he enjoys an educational opportunity much better adjusted to life's needs than that now available in the rural schools.

REJOICING, PRAYING.

We are definitely told that the will of God for every believer is to "rejoice always; pray without ceasing; in everything give thanks" (1 Thes. 5: 16-18).

Christians need have no doubt as to what God's will for them is, for we have this plain statement from His word. These three things go together: "Rejoicing, praying, thanksgiving." They are inseparable; they compose one sentence in the revised version; they constitute the perfect will of God for His people. Happy is the man that doeth His will; he "abideth for ever" (1 John 2:17).

But how is it possible to "pray without ceasing?" How can one constantly be in a spirit of prayer? With so many things to distract his thoughts, and disturb his heart, and demand his time, how can a Christian fulfill this expressed will of God? Dr. J. O. Buswell, president of Wheaton College, in his book on "Problems in the Prayer Life," says: "The continuous nature of prayer may well be illustrated by the conversation of intimate friends. Words are not constantly exchanged, but fellowship is not interrupted. We must not only have regular and frequent times of prayer, but whenever there is a break in the occupation of our minds we ought to revert to conscious communion with God just as involuntarily as we should continue in conversation with a friend near at hand."

Furthermore, it should be borne in mind that, in addition to our petitions, there is to be constant rejoicing and thanksgiving as a part of our communion with God. Making our requests known is only part of a life of prayer; it is just as important to rejoice in the Lord and praise Him for what He is and what He is doing. This will open the door into the prayer-room of our hearts. It matters not what may happen, at any time, at any place, from any source, if only we take it as permitted by God for His glory and our good, thank Him for it, and continue to rejoice in the Lord, we will then find our hearts going out to God in worship, praise and supplication.

On the other hand, if we begin to murmur and complain, criticise and find fault, question and doubt, the door into the prayer-room of our hearts will involuntarily close. We will soon find ourselves unable to pray. The Holy Spirit will be grieved and quenched. In order to pray without ceasing, it is necessary to be continually happy in the Lord. Our spirits must rejoice in God our Saviour.

Notice how often praise and thanksgiving are associated with prayer. "Continue in prayer and watch in the same with thanksgiving." "In nothing be anxious; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God." Again, "I thank my God upon every remembrance of you, always in every prayer of mine for you all making request with joy." And again, "We give thanks to God always for you all, making mention of you in our prayers."

But is it possible to rejoice always down here in this vale of tears, disappointments, distresses, afflictions, sorrow and death? Yes, David said: "I will bless the Lord at all times; His praise shall continually be in my mouth." It was a matter of his will and not of his feelings. Paul said: "Rejoice in the Lord always, and again I say rejoice." And again, "Let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually; that is, the fruit of our lips giving thanks to His name."

It is not a question of circumstances. God is far above all our circumstances, surroundings and perplexities. Therefore, we can always rejoice and say with the prophet of old: "For the Lord God will help me; therefore, shall I not be confounded; therefore have I set my face like a flint, and I know I shall not be ashamed." Paul learned to "take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake." The quickest way out of any difficulty or trouble is to praise God for it. That is the way Paul and Silas got out of prison. That is the way the twelve apostles escaped from their enemies: "rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for His name." Such rejoicing and thanksgiving stimulate prayer and supplication, even for those who are against us.

Take heed, therefore, that nothing robs you of that joy which the Lord bequeathed to His own (John 15:11), and without which you will be hindered in prayer. If you are not able to rejoice in the Lord and be grateful for all His benefits, endeavor to find the cause and quickly remove it. It will generally be found in unbelief or in unconfessed sin. Either of these will dispel your joy. "Now, the God of peace fills you with all joy and peace in believing," we read in Romans 15:13. Therefore, it is necessary to meditate much upon the promises of God; for "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God." To neglect your Bible is to lose your joy.

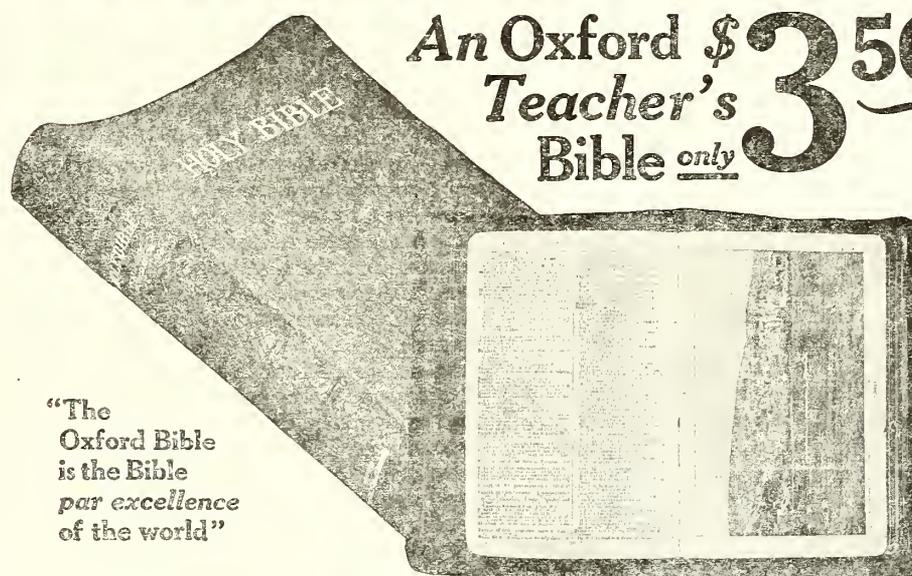

The apostle John wrote his first epistle in order that "your joy might be full," and again that "ye sin not." In this way only can we maintain fellowship with the Father and with the Son. This fellowship can easily be marred by the darkness of sin, and then we are unable to rejoice in the Lord. Let us quickly confess every known sin, with a purpose to forsake it, plead the blood of Christ, believe the promise of God (1 John 1:6-9) and then we will be able to pray in the Spirit with joy in our hearts.

If we find nothing that interferes with our joy, then we should thank God for His love, His grace, His forgiveness, His patience, His faithfulness, His goodness, His gentleness, His power and for all His benefits (Psa. 103:2). "Name them one by one," and soon we will be in the spirit of prayer again. By rejoicing in everything and being thankful for anything, we can "pray without ceasing" anywhere. And "this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you" and every member of the body of Christ.

Continue to pray earnestly for a revival.—The Great Commission Prayer League.

OXFORD BIBLES

An Oxford $3.50
Teacher's Bible only 3

"The Oxford Bible is the Bible par excellence of the world"

The best recommendation of the OXFORD TEACHER'S BIBLES is the fact that over 3,000,000 copies have been sold. The wonderful helps they contain save your time because they are alphabetically arranged, making reference easy. They take the place of many books about the Bible, and can be depended upon, being written by eminent scholars. The Helps contain 22 graphic illustrations, besides 15 beautifully colored maps. The text is the Authorized or King James version, with over 50,000 centre column references.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

BY BURYING HIS GOD HE FOUND THE LIVING GOD.

Missionary stories that center around certain passages of Scripture will never fail to interest. Tell the story of Joseph Hardy Neesima, who in boyhood buried one of the little clay gods to see if it was really a god, and if it had any actual power. After watching it carefully for days, he saw a sprig of green shooting up from the mound. Believing that the god had life, he dug down to see more—and found only a grain of rice that had lodged in a crevice in the little clay image. The idol was lying there as powerless as when he had placed it beneath the sod. This turned the faith of Neesima away from the gods of his fathers and he began searching for the truth. The way of life was revealed to him in two Bible verses. He read in a Chinese Bible, in a seaport of Japan: "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." This was his first revelation of God. Later, in China, in another Chinese Bible, he read: "For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." This was his first revelation of the Son of God, Jesus Christ. And from these two verses he became a strong Christian leader, Christian minister to his own people, and the founder of a famous university. Would not the reading of these two verses, with the story of the work they wrought in Neesima, make a strong impression upon any Sunday School?—Sue R. Stacy, in "How to Interest Your Sunday School in Missions."

JESUS' WORLD-WIDE PROGRAM.

Though an Oriental, a native of one of the smallest countries of the world, a member of the narrowest of races, Jesus rose far above His people, His times, His training, traditions and environments, and was the first whose sympathies and purposes embraced the whole world of mankind. His love and mission of service were irrespective of race-prejudices and national ambitions. They embraced the whole wide world.

A man's conception of the "world" reveals his conception of the mission of Christ and the task of the Church. Indirectly it indicates his attitude as to his responsibility for promoting Christ's ideals and carrying out His program:

1. The "world" is one of the eight planets revolving around the sun, and not even a first-class planet. Jupiter is twelve hundred times the size of the earth.

2. The "world" comprises the vast populations of the globe, "composed of all nations and kindred and peoples and tongues," ever increasing, and estimated at this time as over 1,750,000,000. This is only a fraction of the peoples, past and future, whom we are told that "God so loved." In looking at the two hemispheres that make a world, we cannot eliminate either hemisphere in our program of Christian service without discrediting the larger conception of Christ's ideal as to the scope of the Church's paramount task.

The great commission of Christ to His Church is the basis of all missionary operations. He said to His disciples when on earth: (1) The limited commission, "Go to the lost sheep of the house of Israel"; (2) the enlarged commission, "Go ye into all the world"; (3) the all-inclusive commission, "And ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

The unfortunate and unwarranted distinction between home and foreign missions has greatly retarded the progress of the kingdom.

1. One pernicious error that has resulted comes from undue emphasis on "beginning at Jerusalem." It has crystalized into the half-truth, "Charity begins at home," with its attendant, inexcusable excuse—"enough work to be done at home." If the Church should remain at "Jerusalem" until every individual is converted, it would never advance beyond Jerusalem while the world stands.

2. An equally mischievous error is to limit the commission to the heathen world. This also reduces the task of the Church to a part rather than the whole.

Jesus never said, "Go ye into all the civilized world" or into all the heathen world, but into all the world. Is not the time propitious for discarding all narrow conceptions of the task of the Church, and for so enlarging the thought of men that they will take into calculation a real world-program, and into their sympathies every phase of missionary effort essential to the fulfillment of the great commission?

Christ, in His parables, forecasts the two opposite resultant developments, the one material and outward, the other spiritual and unseen:

1. The grain of mustard seed may represent Christendom, the human resultant of the gospel, nominal Christianity, promoted by false methods, emphasis on numbers, and worldly consideration.

2. The leaven may represent the divine purpose, spiritual Christianity, the kingdom that "cometh not with observation." The two parables illustrate the vast difference between Christendom and Christianity.

These two objectives may be expressed as evangelizing the world, and Christianizing Christendom. The evangelist who casts the gospel "net unto the sea" of humanity "gathers of every kind"; the pastor who applies the principles of the kingdom, "gathers the good" for useful service. Missions are first an evangelizing program, and second a Christianizing process. Each is equally important, and the one is the complement of the other. Neither objective should overshadow or overbalance the other. They go hand in hand.

The effect of the Emperor Constantine's program for indiscriminate world-conquest—converting the chief of a tribe and then proclaiming the nation Christian and baptizing them en masse—led to nominal Christianity and resulted in the dark ages. On the other hand, the neglect of foreign missions in the early centuries after the Protestant Reformation resulted in the stagnation of the spiritual life of the Church which was overcome only by the rise of Puritanism, the Methodist revival and the missionary awakening under Carey, Morrison and others.

Church history has impressed the fact that it is easier to evangelize a nation than to maintain the Christian standard. It is easier to conquer a country for Christ than to hold it for Christ. Where is Jerusalem, the mother Church? Where is Antioch that sent out Paul and Barnabas, the first distinctive foreign missionaries? Where are the Churches of Asia Minor? Where are the North African Churches of Alexandria, Hippo, and others that in the early days of Christianity counted a thousand bishops? Mohammedanism has uprooted Christianity in these scenes of the early Christian triumphs, and from hundreds of minarets and towers 200,000,000 followers of the "false Prophet" hear the call: "God is God and there is no god but God, and Mohammed is His prophet."

Will this history repeat itself in the United States? In our "Christian country," with its splendid civilization, material development and great religious organizations, is there no danger of degeneration? When machinery is substituted for spirituality; when the Church is over-organized and cumbered with machinery, it is in danger of breaking beneath its own weight. Today culture is often more in evidence than piety. The Church is becoming "rich and increased with goods" and is in danger of becoming self-satisfied. Commercialism and worldliness, in many places, sap the life of the Church.

The two greatest enterprises confronting the American Church of the twentieth century are still the evangelization of the world and the Christianization of America. The first is the aim of the department of Church operations known as foreign missions; the second is the task of the co-ordinate department designated home missions. To enlarge the circumference is to increase the area included in the circle. The successes of foreign missions necessarily enlarge the sphere of home missions. They are as mutually dependent for the advance of the kingdom of Christ as the two oars of a boat, or the two departments of an army—the forces advancing on the firing line and the forces at the base of supplies. The one advances into new territory, establishing outposts; the other assimilates it and makes the new land and peoples an integral part of the kingdom.—Missionary Review.

BUSINESS THE CIVILIZER.

By DR. ERNEST H. CHERRINGTON.

The economic arguments for prohibition may be stressed without apology hereafter, since Ernest Elmo Calkins has written "Business the Civilizer," newly off the presses of Little, Brown & Co. Instead of a crude, selfish and materialistic realm, Mr. Calkins portrays the world of business as "the profession." He finds: "Men are bringing to it some of the qualities which actuate the explorer, scientist, artist—the zest, the open-mindedness, even the disinterestedness with which the scientific investigator explores some field of pure research." In fact, he becomes quite dithyrambic when he writes:

"Each age had its appropriate method of seeking adventure. The knights set out clad in unspeakably ridiculous suits of armor, to break up the dull humdrum of life by courting the unexpected. A century or two later, as man became conscious of his physical universe, he set out in almost equally ridiculous ships to tackle what lay beyond the pillars of Hercules, the rotundity of the earth, or a short passage to India.

"Not only were such the outlets for daring souls which could not settle down to a monotonous and orderly life, but in these achievements they won such glory as their age offered. Always this thirst for adventure, this craving for the unknown, this desire to tackle whatever dragon happened to be unslain at the moment. And all these gallant gentlemen united in considering a man who made and sold things as the lowest form of animal life. Napoleon could not think of anything more insulting to say to England than to call it a nation of shopkeepers, but today the Napoleons are more interested in shopkeeping than in anything else. The type that once was a Ulysses, a Columbus, a Roland, a Sir Francis Drake, a Benvenuto Cellini, or a Balboa, is today a manufacturer whose business is really the charger or the galleon with which he sets forth to seek this modern version of adventure. Today Peter the Hermit, instead of putting men on the backs of mail-clad horses and sending them on crusades, is putting them into Fords and Chryslers and Cadillacs."

The new idealism in business which expresses itself through an active interest in civic and social well-being, as well as in the ethical concepts of the business man, is recognized by Mr. Calkins, who points out: "We are just beginning to realize that altruism, unselfishness, generosity, honesty, sincerity, frankness, all that list of old-fashioned virtues, have a definite dollar-and-cents value in business; that they are not vain gestures; that they are not throwing the dust in the eyes of the public; that they do build up that one commodity on which we depend, belief and confidence." And elsewhere says:

"Even the most jaundiced observer must admit that business is ethically better than it used to be. The millennium has not arrived. Human nature has not changed. Men are just as selfish and self-seeking as they ever were. But business has learned the priceless truth, laid down by Benjamin Franklin and scores of philosophers before him, that honesty is really the best policy. It has learned that the only source of prosperity is the public, which buys and pays; that on its treatment of that public depends, in the long run, its success; and that a permanent customer who comes back is a greater asset than the profit on the first sale."

Mr. Calkins' principal interest is in advertising, which is merely another name for publicity. However, few would agree completely with his statement: "It is a hundred years since Edmund Burke christened the newspapers the "Fourth Estate," and Napoleon said that four hostile newspapers were more to be dreaded than an army. The power of the press was puny when compared with the mighty engine of publicity we have today—an engine which is apparently getting out of control. Like the fisherman in the Arab tale, the newspapers have opened the bottle; they are appalled by the djinn that has come out, the djinn of publicity, with vast powers for good or evil; they do not know how to control it, what to do with it, or even how to coax it back into the bottle."

Not even a hostile press can halt the onward movement of great social forces that are remaking the nations of the world. We discovered that long ago in the fight for prohibition. Other nations than America are making that discovery today. The press can be tremendously helpful or can very seriously handicap those who are fighting against some deeply entrenched evil. But publicity is not entirely in the hands of the newspaper editors of the country, nor has it ever been possible for any group to secure unanimous opposition by these editors to any social program.

The readiness of the American people to throw on the rubbish-heap old ideas or old customs—as was evidenced by their whole-hearted approval of national prohibition as well as of State prohibition laws—is recognized by Mr. Calkins, who writes:

"The new American tempo is manifesting itself in a number of interesting ways. First, in the public's disconcerting willingness to turn its back on establishing institutions, products, methods, ideas, as evidenced by the rusting rails of hundreds of abandoned trolley lines; by the difficulty a woman with long hair has experienced for the past two years in finding a hat large enough to fit her head; by the ruthless wiping out of denominational lines and the establishment of broad 'community' Churches; and by the fact that the only thing that saved the great solidly entrenched phonograph industry was the timely introduction of a new and vastly superior machine built on a new principle.

"Next is the public's promptness, amounting almost to aggressiveness, in accepting new products, new methods, institutions, and ideas. Witness radio, balloon tires, the metropolitan tabloid pictorial newspapers, the Chrysler car, the bootlegger, Duco finish, electric refrigeration, pale ginger ale, National Cash Register stock—not to comment on the celerity with which the nation accepted its newly created bad breath!"

As one catches the spirit of modern business so lucidly set forth by Mr. Calkins, one may understand why the great leaders of America's industrial life are today arraying themselves behind the prohibition laws. It is not alone that prohibition has made tremendous contributions to our present prosperity, but that it is also in harmony with that new spirit of social responsibility whose recognition by our economic leaders is today emphasizing the truth so pithily expressed by Mr. Calkins in the title of his book, "Business the Civilizer."

OFFICIAL NOTICE.

The Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at its last session, accepted an invitation from Newport News to meet there in 1929. But inasmuch as their new Church will not be completed by the time of the Convention, the Newport News people have asked to be relieved from entertaining this year. The executive committee is, therefore, anxious to receive an invitation for the coming session of the Convention. Please take this up with your school and notify us if you wish to entertain.

THE WORLD'S POPULATION AND RELIGIONS.

The world has one billion, six hundred and ninety-one million people. The religions of these people, as nearly as we are able to gather, are as follows:

Table with 2 columns: Religion and Population. Includes Christians (565,000,000), Confucianists (301,000,000), Mohammedans (222,000,000), Hindus (211,000,000), Animists (158,000,000), Buddhists (138,000,000), Shintoists (25,000,000), Jews (12,000,000), and Unclassified (15,000,000).

RECOMMENDED PLANS AND PROGRAM

February, March—Foreign Mission Months

THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION, in its Richmond Session last year, made February and March "Foreign Mission Months" for educational and informational purposes, culminating in an offering from all the Churches for Missions at, or on the nearest possible Sunday to, Easter—March 31, 1929. The goal set for the offering—Home and Foreign Missions—from Sunday Schools, and Churches, and individuals is $33,000; Woman's Societies, $12,000—total, $45,000. Inasmuch as the entire amount thus asked must be raised by voluntary offerings, the Conferences, in their recent sessions, in which the matter was discussed, adopted and recommended to the Sunday Schools and Churches the following method to be pursued in reaching their quota of one-third as much for Missions as for pastor's salary:

FIRST: When a Church uses the Budget Plan, write into that budget one-third the amount of pastor's salary to go to Missions, and send this in monthly or quarterly.

SECOND: If the budget is not used, canvass the individuals of the Church and Sunday School to find out how much each will give to Missions and when, entering the same on a card prepared for the purpose and which may be had of the Mission Secretary, Elon College, N. C.

THIRD: Where neither of these plans is adopted, then endeavor to increase the offering from the Sunday School, and at or about Easter have a Missionary Rally and try to raise the entire amount of the quota at that one service, in conjunction with the monthly offerings from the Sunday School for the year.

Each Church and Sunday School should use one or the other of these plans.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson VII—February 17, 1928.

PRAYER.

GOLDEN TEXT: "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ask whatsoever ye will, and it shall be done unto you."—John 15:7.

LESSON: Gen. 18:23-33; Ex. 32:21, 32; Neh. 1:4-11; Dan. 6:10; Matt. 6:5-15; Luke 18:1-14; John 17:1-26; 1 Thess. 5:17; 1 John 5:14, 15.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 121:1-8.

Jesus prayed. That is a rather conclusive argument for prayer. He assumed, too, that His disciples would pray, and He therefore taught them many things about prayer. The lesson for today suggests several characteristics of real prayer.

1. Prayer should be sincere. "When ye pray ye shall not be as the hypocrites, the actors, the make-believers." They were not sincere. They did not pray because they felt the need of prayer, but rather to be seen of men. But to do this was a travesty on prayer. Prayer should be the most sincere thing a man does. If ever a man was earnest, if ever he means what he says and does, it ought to be when he prays. It is not so much what he says, but the spirit in which he says it that counts.

2. Prayer should be secret. "When thou prayest, enter into thy chamber and pray to the Father who is in secret." This does not mean that a man cannot pray, or should not pray in public, but it does mean that every man should have some place and should take some time, so that alone with God he might talk with the Father. There should be private or secret prayer.

3. Prayer should be social. "When ye pray, say 'Our Father,' . . . 'Give us our daily bread, forgive us our debts, or trespasses, bring us not into temptation, deliver us from evil.'" A man should pray for himself, but he should also pray for others. Prayer that never includes more than a man and his wife, his son John and his wife, never becomes full-grown prayer.

4. Prayer should be reverent. "Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name." One is not to rush unabashed into prayer. It is a time for reverence. Without reverence for the God whom we address there can be no real prayer.

5. Prayer should be regular. "Daniel kneeled upon his knees three times a day and prayed. It is not enough to pray simply when dire emergencies come or when we want something from God. Prayer should have a regular place in every well-organized life. It should be as much a part of a man's day as is his eating and sleeping.

6. Prayer should be resigned. "If we ask anything according to His will." Jesus said, "Nevertheless, not as I wilt, but as Thou wilt." No matter what we may desire, we are to ask for it if it be the Father's will.

7. Prayer should be personal. A man can and should pray for others. But no man can do all the praying for another. Prayer in the sense in which Jesus used it was personal communion with God. "O God, Thou art my God," is the heart of personal religion out of which prayer issues.

8. Prayer should be persistent. "Pray without ceasing," said Paul, and he was only putting in another way the truth that Jesus expressed in the parable of the unjust judge and the widow woman. A man should have the spirit of prayer as an integral part of his life.

9. Prayer should be practical. "Give us this day our daily bread. Lead us not into temptation." A man is not to deal simply with indefinite generalities; he is justified in asking for definite, specific, and even very practical things. Our real needs ought to be objects of prayer.

A few things need to be said in regard to prayer. It needs to be understood that prayer is not primarily asking God for things. Prayer accomplishes its highest purpose when it makes it possible for God to work out His purpose in our lives. Not what God can give us in the way of material things, but whether we get God Himself is the crucial problem in prayer.

Furthermore, the main difficulty with all of us who read these notes is simply the fact that we do not pray. The best argument for prayer, said a great man, is praying. One may not be able to offer eloquent prayers, but one may be able to offer real prayers if in a spirit of sincerity and reverence he combines in words or thoughts adoration, thanksgiving, confession, intercession and consecration, which are the essential factors in prayer. We have not because we ask not, said James. Prayer is in a sense a blank check, signed by God and left blank, and made payable to all those who call upon Him in sincerity and truth for those spiritual resources, and even those material things which are necessary to our highest well-being.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, February 17, 1928.

TOPIC: "How Much Should We Strive for Material Things?"—Luke 12:13-31.

Some Bible Hints.

This incident shows Jesus' estimate of spiritual as compared with material things. Material things are necessary, but spiritual things are more important (vs. 13, 14).

Too much attention paid to material things easily leads to covetousness. God means each one in this world to have his own, but not to grab the other fellow's share (v. 15).

Life is not for the accumulation of things, but the development of character. On this point, the world is all awry and needs to turn around and be converted (v. 15).

It is right to enjoy life, but not to the exclusion of forming character. To be rich toward God is the one thing needful (v. 21).

Suggestive Thoughts.

When a man lives "for himself," he has missed the meaning of life (v. 21). We gain our true selves only when we rise about ourselves.

Material things are the furniture of God's world, the equipment in God's school-room. To live for them and what they bring is like a boy worshiping the desks and the blackboard.

Carey worked to make a living, that he might lead a divine life. This is a true principle. Work for the material things that they may be used for noble ends.

Our economic system is wrong. It makes striving necessary when there should be enough for all without the desperate struggle that we see everywhere. Something is wrong when in order to get bread we eat we must snatch it from a brother.

A Few Illustrations.

When you are dizzy, you move and cannot stop. When hypnotized by material things, we cannot stop striving to get more and more. We are slaves.

The moment material things get us, dominate us, and we are interested only in getting more, we should stop, look, and listen. That is a danger signal.

We must not despise material things. God means us to work for them, even strive for them. "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread" (Gen. 3:19). The danger is in seeking them too much.

No one can draw a line and say, "Beyond this is too much." What would be much for some may be right for others. It depends only on how we would use material things if we got them.

To Think About.

What use should we make of material things?
How may we know when to stop striving?
What is the stewardship of material things?

IMPORTANT INFORMATION.

On October 25, 1918, there was organized in Raleigh, N. C., a Board of Religious Education of the Southern Christian Convention. This forward-looking group of men and women voted that the following aims should constitute the program for that year: "(1) Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Societies in every Church in the Southern Christian Convention. (2) Every school a standard school, and every Christian Endeavor Society a standard society. (3) Monthly missionary instruction and offering. (4) An endeavor to raise the sum of one thousand dollars for the work during the year."

For ten years this board has been working towards this goal, but as yet has not completed its task. Religious education will never be completed so long as there are children to train and there is progress made in civilization.

The work has progressed, however, until the Convention in session last May thought it wise to grant the board a budget of $4,500, to be raised through the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions and Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies. This amount is needed in order to carry on the work which should be done.

The board, through its proper officials, appealed to the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions for aid and received from them $1,089.78, which still left us due $3,410.22, to be raised through the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies. An appeal was made last October to all of the pastors and Sunday School superintendents of the Convention for an offering which would average only sixteen dollars per Sunday School. According to the treasurer's report up to the end of 1928, twelve schools had responded with offerings ranging from $1.90 to $13.60, and totaling $69.13, which leaves the board $3,341 short of its budget. This means that two hundred Sunday Schools did not respond in any way to the appeal, and means also that the board does not now have sufficient funds to engage a field secretary.

We do not feel justified in making another appeal for funds. It may be that there are pastors and Sunday School superintendents who wish to respond to the needs of religious education by giving their schools and Endeavor Societies an opportunity to contribute. If so, their loyalty will be greatly appreciated by the members of the board, who are anxious to do a worth-while service for the Church, and the offerings will aid greatly in promoting a much-needed work. This matter is left entirely with those in authority in the local Churches.

F. C. LESTER, Ch'n.

WITHIN REACH OF ALL.

The advantages offered to young men and women having a college degree are becoming more and more apparent. From a time when such an education was looked upon as a luxury, to be acquired by only a financially favored few, it has now reached the point in this country where it is almost a prerequisite to a successful career.

Naturally, the number desiring to be of the latter group is ever increasing. To those whose parents are in good financial circumstances, the item of expense is not necessarily considered a great difficulty, but to others it is an obstruction blocking the path to a college degree.

Universities and various organizations have striven to make a higher education possible to all. Scholarships are offered, student loan funds have been established, and it has been arranged so that students can work their way through school, paying their own expenses.

Those who adopt the last-mentioned method find that the way is hard at times. The desire for learning must be sincere, the determination strong to stick until the goal is reached. However, it appears that the hardships entailed by the necessity of working one's way through school are counter-balanced to a large extent by the benefits received as a result.

A recent survey of 763 universities and colleges in the United States which make some provision for working students show that 46 per cent of the men students and 23 per cent of the women students of those institutions are earning part or all of their way through.

The Educational Directory for 1928 lists 1,068 higher educational institutions with enrollments totaling 878,088 men and women students. In these colleges and universities about half of the men and a quarter of the women are contributing to their own support by working part-time;

After all, it does not matter so much how one has to get an education. It is obtaining the knowledge and then applying it that counts. The great part of it is that there are so many young Americans who are imbued with the ambition to make their lives count, and are determined to secure all possible preparation, no matter the sacrifice.

The one thing above everything else which distinguishes us as Christians is "brotherly love."

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

PAY AS YOU GO.

"Be sure your sins will find you out."—Num. 32:23.

Sin is self-recording. So is holy living.

We are told of an invention called the Dynograph, an instrument attached to a locomotive for the purpose of detecting unevenness of the track. As the train runs, a roll of paper is moved by power received from the wheels. Glass needles containing red ink make the record. If the track is level, it makes a straight mark. If not, the exact variations are recorded.

The whole story of human life is just as infallibly recorded, and no one can escape the record; and we believe, without doubt, according to God's word, that "There is nothing hid that shall not be revealed"—that the whole record shall be revealed. There will be no judge necessary to condemn us and give sentence. Our lives will condemn us.

Prayer.—Lord, let Thy grace and truth shine in our souls every bit of the way and make our path straight. Amen.

TUESDAY.

ON THE WATCH.

"I have set thee a watchman unto the house of Israel."—Ezek. 33:1-9.

Once a traveler visited the lighthouse of the great harbor at Calais, in France, and asked the keeper of the light, "What if one of your lights should go out at night?" "Never! Impossible!" the man exclaimed. "Why, Sir, out yonder are ships sailing to all parts of the world; and if tonight one of my burners went out, I should hear in six months from India, or America, or Africa, saying that on such a night the lights of Calais gave no warning, and some vessel had been wrecked."

That lighthouse-keeper felt his responsibility. Ezekiel, from whose prophecy our Bible passage is taken, felt his responsibility also. He had been set as a watchman to give warning to his people of their spiritual perils, and God would require their lives at his hands.

Every Christian is responsible for some one. Each one of us has some one—some child, some friend, some sister or brother or Sunday School pupil—who looks up to us and is guided by our advice and example. These lives are like chips, sailing to all shores, embarked on many diverse enterprises, turned toward failure or success, according to the shining or the extinction of our lights. Shall we not keep them clear and bright?

Prayer.—Our Saviour, help us, we pray Thee, so to let our light shine that others may see our good works and glorify our Heavenly Father. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

GLORIOUS REST.

"His resting-place shall be glorious."—Isaiah 11:1-10.

There is a glorious rest, and there is a rest that is inglorious. The rest of a sluggard is shameful. It is not real rest. The rest of a man of low ideals is stagnant, for it does not prepare for anything ahead of him that is worth preparation. Rest is a necessity in every life that is limited by our human weaknesses, and the kind of life it shall be is largely determined by the kind of rest it is.

The Son of Man was obliged to rest, and His rest was glorious. It was preceded by the most glorious labors. It looked forward to the most glorious struggles and triumphs.

Christ would teach us how to rest. The only preparation for His rest is His work. The only enjoyment of His rest is His fellowship. Millions pass through life without once enjoying real rest, because they have not once known the delight of Christ's fellowship. The door of true rest is labor with the Lord. The pillow of true rest is prayer.

Prayer.—O Thou divine worker, we would enter Thy occupations. O Thou peace of eternity, we pray that we may enter into Thy rest, on earth in time, in heaven forever. Amen.

THURSDAY.

ALL FOR CHARLOTTE.

"The mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha."—2 Kings 6:8-17.

Once a little girl, accompanied by a relative, was taken to the heart of a great city to do some shopping. She was immensely interested in the turmoil, the throng of carts and street cars and automobiles, and especially in the remarkable way in which she crossed the streets. When she was asked if she had not been afraid to go across, she answered serenely, "Oh, no! The big policeman just held up his hand, and all the folks and horses waited till Charlotte went over."

The little girl thought that all the stoppage of traffic was just for her, and in a sense she was right, just as Elisha was right in seeing the mountains full of the heavenly host round about him, protecting him. Every one of us has a right to feel that all the force of the armies of heaven exists to protect him.

How our fears dishonor the Heavenly Father! What more can we wish than the concentration of divine protection upon our little life?

Prayer.—Lord God of Sabaoth, send out Thine armies and surround us. Be our impregnable fortress. And let us rest at peace in Thee. Amen.

FRIDAY.

BE NOT IMPATIENT.

"What glory is it if, when ye sin and are buffeted for it, ye shall take it patiently? but if, when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye shall take it patiently, this is acceptable with God."—1 Pet. 2:18.

India has given the world many stories of Christian heroism, but none more thrilling than that of Abdul Karim. He was all on fire with the love of Jesus Christ and with eagerness to tell all men the good news of salvation. He ventured to carry the message of the cross into the terrible closed country of Afghanistan. They soon made him a prisoner and bade him deny his religion, saying "Mohammed is God's apostle." "I will never say it," he replied. They cut off his right hand. Still he declared, "I will never say it," and they cut off his left hand. As he continued to refuse and to preach Christ, they pulled out his tongue. He did his best to say "Jesus Christ, my Lord," as he passed away to meet his Saviour in glory.

In the presence of such heroism, we may well ask ourselves what credit we deserve for our ordinary Christian lives. What sacrifices have we endured for Christ? What have we given up for Him? What enemies of Christ have we faced? What testimony have we given under any difficulties? We count it Christian service to receive from Christ the comfort and peace and joy which He is so glad to give us; but what have we given to Him in return?

Prayer.—Lord Jesus, take us out with Thee on the paths of glory. Give us courage to serve Thee in difficult places. In Thy name. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE PERFECT WORKER.

"God finished His work which He had made; and He rested."—Gen. 2:1-7.

Joseph Parker, commenting on this verse, draws the contrast between the work of man and the work of God. "God rested," he said, "because the work was finished; we rest because our poor strength is wasted, and we need to be recruited by sleep. God finishes His work, and He rests, not as one who is weary, but as one who has completed his design. We rest because of an exhaustion of our strength, but He who is yonder in the heavens, throned above all heights, rests because His work is completeness, His efforts are perfection."

If we bear in mind this contrast, we shall rest confidently in God. Our work is faulty, but His is never marred by any blemish. We often fail in our work, but He always succeeds. We are timid about undertaking new tasks and important affairs, but with Him as our partner we shall fear no labor to which He sends us.

The world's workers may thus be divided into two classes, those who work with God and those who have not God as their helper. The latter may have great genius and natural ability; they may gain conspicuous worldly success, but they cannot attain the eternal success. To choose the lasting prosperity rather than the fleeting triumphs requires long patience and a true sense of values; but oh, how richly it pays!

Prayer.—O Thou Crucified, we would take up our cross and follow Thee. We would go by the road of sorrows, the Via Dolorosa. So shall we come out with Thee upon Olivet and ascend with Thee in glory. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE COST OF REVENGE.

"Vengeance is mine, and recompense."—Deut. 32:26-36.

Some one has said that "paying back wrongs leaves us heavily in debt to God." We regard any harm done to us as a debt we should pay back. "I owe him one for that," we foolishly say. And then when we have paid this silly debt of revenge, when we have "got even" with our enemy, we discover that we are far from even with God. Nothing so puts us out of harmony with God as the spirit of revenge. God is love, and revenge is hate. Revenge, therefore, is in direct opposition to God.

When revenge takes possession of us, unrest seizes upon us. Peace leaves us, happiness leaves us, strength leaves us. Thoughts of hatred so fill our minds as to leave us no thought for our proper work in the world.

And it is all so useless. If sin is to be punished, we can safely trust that affair to the Judge of all the earth. Our judgments are crude indeed compared with His decisions. And when His loving wisdom perceives that a penalty must be imposed, how swiftly and completely it falls. God, the all-merciful, is also the all-avenger. Let us not seek to take His work into our feeble and clumsy hands.

Prayer.—Our Father, who art in heaven, forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors. Make our mercy to others the measure of Thine to us. Bless our enemies, we pray Thee, and receive us and them into Thy love. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our good friend, Bro. H. A. Carlton, of Raleigh, N. C., knows how to make little children happy. He went in a store in Raleigh after the holidays and saw they had quite a number of toy wagons and other playthings to make little folks real happy left over. He bought the stock and had it shipped to the Christian Orphanage. The first pretty day after we received it we called the little folks to the office and distributed the toys. Then the fun began. On the concrete sidewalk they went. Joy, happiness, pleasure and everything that goes to make real life for a child was theirs. As we stood at our office window and watched them in their glee, we wished our friend Mr. Carlton could have been present and enjoy looking at them in their flood of real enjoyment.

I often think that if those who make contributions of this kind could only be here and see the real joy and happiness they bring to the children by their contributions they would get as much joy out of the giving as the children get out of the receiving.

If the good women who make the pretty little Easter dresses which they have been sending us from year to year could only be here on Easter Sunday morning and see all the little girls march off to Sunday School dressed in the little dresses which have been so nicely made, and the faces of the little children beaming with smiles of real happiness and appreciation, they would doubtless shed tears of joy because they had a part in bringing this real joy to these little fatherless ones.

A GENIUS.

It has been said that "poets are born, not made," and, if there is any degree of truth in this supposition, the same must apply to those masters of music who have endeared themselves not only to their contemporary surroundings but whose names will ever live in the minds of all true music lovers.

It is generally conceded that talent along any professional line, principally in the arts and sciences, springs from within, as it were. In other words, it is necessary for the young musician, the student sculptor, the amateur thespian, to be possessed of a certain natural versatility which cannot be imparted to him by the professors of the conservatory, the studio or the school of expression.

It is a fact that certain people are obviously not intended to engage in professional work of this nature. They may have the benefit of the most competent instructors. They may spend years at a recognized institution in an endeavor to develop histrionic ability, and yet prove a dismal failure in the opinion of experienced critics and reviewers, not to mention their audiences.

One who was born a musician, at least we may be justified in assuming this to be a fact, was Franz Schubert, world-famous composer, the centennial of whose death was recently observed in musical circles. This artist was born in a little village near Vienna on January 3, 1797, and during a very brief life (he died at the age of thirty-one) composed over four hundred and fifty songs, nine symphonies, twenty-four sonatas for the piano, and a large number of miscellaneous pieces. Not only that, but he was the virtual founder of the German Lied.

As a young child, Schubert began the study of music under the direction of his father. He possessed a fine soprano voice which was developed at a choir school in Vienna. It was said of him that he was a tireless worker, a most devoted student. His compositions are marked by a tinge of melancholy and this may be attributed to the fact that, personally, he was unattractive physically, and apparently unappreciated.

Among the better known of his compositions are "Hark, Hark, the Lark," "The Wanderer," "The Erl-King" and "Sylvia."

Schubert, the genius, is not dead, but will continue to live in the hearts of music lovers of the world for centuries to come. In epitomizing the life work of this famous musician, an editorial writer recently stated, and appropriately so:

"Music has had a large place in the world of men. Its influence is for good. It makes for understanding, fellowship, noble thought, decency and good order. Were the music all taken out of the world, it would be a drab place indeed. We believe, with Shakespeare, that the man who has no music in his soul and who does not respond to the influence of sweet sound is a man to shun and one who is ripe for treason, stratagems and spoils."

COLE.

Mr. Benson Cole, Chapel Hill, N. C., age 84. A consecrated and joyful follower of the Master; highly esteemed by old and young; conscientious and fearless in the approach of death; member of Damascus Christian Church.

B. J. H.

LAWRENCE.

Ruth Lawrence, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Lawrence, Sanford, R. F. D., was nearing the age of fourteen years when overtaken by death. She had professed faith in Christ, was a good little girl, known and loved by an unusually large circle of young and old.

B. J. H.

ESTEP.

Virginia Alice Estep, wife of W. J. Estep, died October 9, 1928, aged 71 years. Mrs. Estep had been a faithful member of Wood's Chapel Church for many years. She had gone through many severe trials and was a great physical sufferer for several years, but through it all she was patient and trustful. A good woman is gone. Funeral services were conducted by the writer from the Cedar Grove Church of the Brethren.

She leaves to mourn her departure her husband, one daughter, one sister and one brother and eight grandchildren.

W. T. WALTERS.

PATTERSON.

At dawn on November 26, 1928, an angel came from the heavens and took the spirit of a tried and weary soul and soared away to a land of rest. As smilingly and as brave as she lived, Mrs. Mary Patterson, aged 84, charter member of Pleasant Grove Christian Church, died at the home of J. R. Patterson. Surviving her are five children—J. W. Patterson, Mrs. Lee Kicker, Opelika, J. R., and T. F. Patterson, Verbeua, Mrs. Homer Atkins, La Grange. She was laid to rest in the Bethel Church Cemetery, Chilton County, Rev. Mr. Howell officiating.

SUTTON.

Mrs. India Odel Faucett Sutton was born July 5, 1900, and departed this life December 31, 1928. She married Mr. L. Marion Sutton September 3, 1922, and there were born two children, Alva Reid and Dorothy Mae. Alva Reid passed to the home above on October 30th. Mrs. Sutton leaves to mourn their loss a husband, little daughter, father and mother, one brother, four sisters and other relatives and many friends.

In early life she united with Shallow Ford Christian Church, where she was a devout member until she fell on sleep in her twenty-ninth year. May the God of love and mercy comfort the bereaved. The burial took place at Shallow Ford Church by the writer, assisted by Rev. T. J. Green. The many beautiful flowers and the large audience at the funeral rites attested the love for and high esteem in which she was held. Sweet peace to her memory and rest for her soul.

J. W. PATTON.

ELDER.

Mrs. W. W. Elder, wife of Chaplain Elder of the United States Navy, died at Long Beach, Calif., December 26, 1928. She was taken with influenza and had seemingly about recovered when there was an infection that went over her body and resulted in death. Her unexpected death was a shock to the entire family.

Before her marriage, Mrs. Elder was Miss Elizabeth Kachne, of New York. She leaves to mourn her going, besides her husband, two children—Elizabeth Ann and Jimmy; also two sisters. She was with Chaplain Elder at Elon College for several weeks about three years ago and made many friends, who will learn with sorrow and regret of her untimely going away.

DAVIS.

Funeral rites for Mrs. Etna Ann Burke Davis, wife of J. C. Davis, 209 Salisbury Street, Raleigh, N. C., were conducted at New Elam Christian Church Sunday, January 6, 1929, by her former pastor, Rev. G. R. Underwood, of Pittsboro, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Well, of Raleigh Presbyterian Church, and D. A. Mann, deacon of New Elam.

Mrs. Davis was a faithful member of New Elam Christian Church for more than fifty-eight years. Interment was made in the Church cemetery, under a beautiful mass of flowers. Pallbearers were C. C. Johnson, C. S. Howell, C. N. Johnson, William Drake, V. Lasater and Grover Woodall.

Mrs. Davis was 70 years of age, had lived in Raleigh the past twenty-one years. She is survived by her husband, J. C. Davis; four children—Mrs. C. C. Johnson, Greensboro, N. C.; Mrs. C. N. Johnson, Varina, N. C.; Mr. H. E. Davis and Mrs. C. S. Howell, of Raleigh, N. C.—and one sister, Mrs. J. J. Lasater, Durham, N. C., and one brother, W. A. Drake, of New Hill, N. C.

SMITH.

W. L. Smith was born September 9, 1854, in Troup County, Ga., and died at LaGrange, Ga., January 4, 1929, age 74 years, 3 months and 25 days. Bro. Smith moved to Randolph County, Ala., near Roanoke, where he made his home till just one month before his death. He had become too feeble to farm, so he moved to LaGrange, that he might take life easy and rest himself a bit.

He joined the Forest Home Christian Church in August, 1895, and remained a faithful and loyal member till his death. He was a kind, affectionate husband and father, an ideal farmer and citizen who was highly appreciated by all his neighbors. He appreciated very much his pastor. This writer was the last pastor he had and feels very keenly the loss of such a distinguished Christian friend. He leaves to mourn their loss two brothers, J. L., of LaGrange, Ga., and T. J., of Roanoke, Ala.; a wife, eight children, seventeen grandchildren and a great host of friends.

May God's richest blessings rest upon the bereaved family is the prayer of an humble servant.

G. H. VEAZEY.

SCOTT.

William Hulbert Scott, son of Loftin B. and Bettie A. Scott, was born in Person County, N. C., April 21, 1875, and died December 10, 1928, age 53 years, 7 months and 19 days. He was educated in the local schools and at Elon College. When a boy, he united with Lebanon Christian Church, Semora, N. C. On April 22, 1903, he married Miss Hattie Meeler, who survives him, together with one son, Estes Scott, of McClure, Va., and one daughter, Mrs. Madelene Nichols, of Newark, Del.; there are also surviving him three grandchildren, a stepmother, Mrs. Loftin B. Scott, of Semora, N. C., and the following brothers and sisters: Alwin B., Robert C., Clyde D., Misses Ethel and Arnold, Mrs. Ed Neman and Mrs. Russell Apple.

Mr. Scott for a number of years was a R. F. D. carrier from Semora. Eleven years ago he resigned his position with the government and located at Beckley, W. Va., where he died December 10, 1928. His body was brought to Semora and the funeral was conducted at the Lebanon Church on the afternoon of December the 12th. The burial was in the Church cemetery. May a strong faith in the one who directs the affairs of men not fail the surviving relatives in the hour of bereavement.

HOYLE.

We, the board of deacons of Liberty (Vance) Christian Church, feel very keenly the loss of one of our most faithful and consecrated members and deacons, Bro. Joseph H. Hoyle, whom the Heavenly Father saw fit to call from this life to the life beyond on December 10, 1928. Bro. Hoyle came to us in 1911 from New Hope Christian Church, and continued his deaconship and faithful service as a devout Christian with us until his death.

While we mourn the loss of our dear brother and co-worker, who for many years has so faithfully performed his duties to his Christ and community, we realize that our loss is his gain. May we ever strive to imitate his good example by being more faithful in the discharge of our every duty.

We wish to express our appreciation of his noble life lived among us and the uplifting influences that will still be felt by the people of his Church and community in which he lived.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we humbly submit ourselves to the will of the Heavenly Father, who in His great wisdom doeth all things well.

2. That we extend to his loved ones in bereavement our deepest and most heartfelt sympathy.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to his family, one to the local paper, one to the minutes of the Church, and one to The Christian Sun for publication.

HOLLOWELL.

Whereas, our Heavenly Father has seen fit to take from this life our friend and sister, Mrs. Sue Boyd Hollowell; and whereas, she was the organizer, as well as a most faithful member of the Ladies' Aid Society of Berea (Norfolk) Christian Church; therefore, be it resolved by the society:

1. That in the death of Mrs. Hollowell, our society has lost one whose service of love we gratefully appreciate, and whose passing we deeply mourn.

2. That we, the members of the society, record our gratitude for her life among us, and while we realize our loss we are submissive to Him who doeth all things well.

3. That we express here our sympathy to her husband, and to all the members of her family, and pray God's richest blessings may rest upon them, and that the presence of His Spirit may comfort them.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the secretary's book of our Ladies' Aid Society, a copy sent to the family, and a copy published in The Christian Sun.

NELSON.

On December 23, 1928, God, in His love and wisdom, called Mrs. B. H. Nelson to mansions above.

We, the members of the Missionary Society of the Henderson Christian Church, of which Mrs. Nelson was a most loyal and faithful member, wish to offer the following resolutions:

First, That the members of the Missionary Society feel that her going from us was the will of our Heavenly Father, who doeth all things wisely and well.

Second, The society feels that we have lost a true and faithful member, always loyal to her Church she loved so well. She will be greatly missed and long remembered for her good deeds.

Third, That her husband and children have lost one from their circle whose life was a benediction. With sympathy we commend them to the Lord, who promised never to leave nor forsake us.

Fourth, We extend to the Church, the society and her dear family our deepest sympathy.

Fifth, That these resolutions be recorded on our minutes, a copy sent to the family, and a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

TARBELL'S TEACHERS' GUIDE

"ASK THE TEACHER WHO USES IT"

WHITE.

Joseph Thomas White was born in Sussex County, Va., January 4, 1862. When a young man he was married to Miss Seagr George Chapman. To this union were born six children, two of whom survive, namely: Carl and Chapman. Later he married Miss Mary Roxie Riggan, and to this union one child was born, Joseph Franklin.

He joined Spring Hill Christian Church when about eleven years old, and, except for two years while in Norfolk as a member of Memorial Temple, he remained a loyal and consecrated member until his death. Following his father, Edward Thomas White, he became deacon of the Church and superintendent of the Sunday School, which offices he held with dignity, and with profit to the Church and community for about twenty years.

Therefore, be it resolved:

First, That we recognize in his death the providence of God, and bow in humble submission to His will, finding comfort in the hope of meeting again "in the house not made with hands."

Second, That the Church acknowledges the loss of a faithful deacon and Christian counselor, but rejoices that for so long time his services were given freely to the Church.

Third, That the Sunday School appreciates the long years of devoted service which it has received, and will seek to be worthy of his efforts by continuing the work which he loved.

Fourth, That sympathy is hereby tendered to the bereaved family, and the comfort of the Holy Scriptures and the hope of immortality are offered for consolation.

Fifth, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy spread on the records of the Church and Sunday School, and a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE

WADLEY, ALABAMA

An Accredited Junior College

Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

Piedmont Junior College is training some of the best stock of America for Christian leadership, to be used by the nation and the world. Here is a great challenge and asset for students who wish to prepare themselves to serve in a worth-while way. The new Administration Building will be completed by time school opens this fall.

CHURCH MUST PAY DAMAGES.—

The Supreme Court of the State of Minnesota has recently affirmed a judgment against the Simpson Methodist Episcopal Church of Minneapolis, which requires the Church to pay the sum of $3,000 in a damage suit brought by one of the members who held an official position in the Church. The man who brought suit was attending a Bible class social. He was injured while aiding in moving a piano. The piano had a broken caster, which was responsible for its tipping over, breaking the man's leg. The trustees had been informed of the condition of the piano, and had neglected to have it repaired. The lower court awarded the damages and the Supreme Court approved the decision. The Supreme Court summed up the case as follows:

"It may reasonably be said that charitable institutions must first fairly compensate those who are injured and damaged by the negligence of their officers and servants in the conduct of the affairs of such institutions before going farther afield to dispense charity and do good. Men and corporations alike are required to be just before being charitable. Charitable, benevolent institutions have been and are doing immeasurable service for the physical and moral welfare of humanity. Such institutions are rapidly growing in number, in resources, and influence. They should be encouraged, aided, and protected in carrying on their work to the full extent that it may be done without injustice to others. They are generally favored by being relieved, partly or wholly, from the burden of taxation. We do not think it would be good public policy to relieve them from liability for torts (legal wrongs) or negligence. Where innocent persons suffer through their fault, they should not be exempted. That rule, in the long run, will tend to increased efficiency and benefit them and the public, as well as persons so injured. It is almost contradictory to hold that an institution organized to dispense charity shall be charitable and extend aid to others, but shall not compensate or aid those injured by it in carrying on its activities."

POOR PREACHING AND PIE.—

Writing under the title: "The Peril of Too Much Pie," an author who prefers not to receive too much publicity, contributes a most interesting article to the current number of Church Management. The contention advanced for the cause of so much poor preaching is that the preacher eats too much, and exercises too little, and as the result of this over-indulgence of the appetite and under-indulgence in the proper exercise, the preacher is unfitted for keen mental activity. The writer seems to have in mind the eating of various and sundry kinds of refreshments at unseemly hours. The same being forced upon him by attending Church socials, and by kindly disposed ladies who prepare rich and delectable tidbits to regale the ministerial palate.

There is much food for thought in the suggestions made. The preacher who has a good appetite and a weak will certainly faces a grave danger if his congregation still lives up to the old-time custom of inviting the preacher for special dinners. He is not in so grave danger if most of his meals are taken at home. There are not many preachers who do not sin against the body, through their failure to regularly and properly exercise. There are still some preachers whose pious, nonsensical convictions of conscience dictate that they should keep everlastingly on the job. They have never found out that the only way to hold tight is to turn loose once in a while. Any preacher who is disposed to be careless in keeping physically fit will do well to carefully consider the following paragraph, in which the author illustrates his idea:

"Not all good preachers are necessarily athletes or perfect physical specimens. At the same time, a study of the physical properties of these masters of the homiletic art will reveal the fact they are uniformly virile men, men of endurance and stamina, men of good health and, most important, men of good habits. Watch these men at their work. They are able to study long and hard—they have the strength to do it. They face the exciting and exasperating duties of their work with a calm mind and with good poise and self-control—they have a reserve of strength that enables them to do this. Watch them as they preach. The vibrant vocal tones that thrill us—the clear-cut enunciation that makes the message easily heard even in a large auditorium—that spontaneity of thought and that flashing wit that we all admire—these are something more than the skill of oratory acquired in a school; these are primarily the expressions of a healthy mind that is perfectly at home in a healthy body!"

POPE NO LONGER A PRISONER.—

The Associated Press bulletins of February 7th carry the statement that an agreement has been reached between Mussolini and the Pope of Rome which settles the long agitation over the "Roman question." The details of the agreement have not yet been made public. In fact, it has not yet been officially signed. The date set for the signing being February 10th, at which time Premier Mussolini and Pope Pius XI are to meet at the Latern Palace and sign the agreement. The details of the settlement will then be made public.

The friction between the Italian government and the holy see dates back to 1870. Previous to that date the pope had been enthroned in Rome as a temporal ruler. He not only ruled over the city of Rome, but also over adjoining territory which was known as the "papal states." The pope claimed that his authority over this territory was absolute, basing his authority upon anants which had been made to the holy see. In 1870 the troops of Victor Emanuel II besieged the city of Rome, and as the forces of the pope were not strong enough to offer resistance, the claims of the pope were disregarded, the city was declared to be the capital of the kingdom of Italy.

While denying the claims of the pope, the Italian government proclaimed what was called the law of guarantees, which gave to the pope the use of the Vatican palaces and gardens as his official residence, and with this went certain other properties. He was given also a large indemnity by the government to compensate for the loss of revenue from the territories that had formerly constituted the "papal states." The Italian government gave the pope the privilege of visiting his former domain whenever he might wish, promising that he would receive every protection from the State and that he should be accorded royal honors whenever he made such visits.

The pope absolutely refused to accept the terms offered him by the government. He claimed that he had been unjustly deprived of his territory and that he could accept nothing save the restoration of that which had been forcibly taken away from him. He shut himself up within the Vatican, declaring that he would never leave it until his dominion should be restored to him. He stuck by his declaration until the ends of his days, and his successors have followed the same policy. It is commonly said that the pope is a prisoner in the Vatican. He is a prisoner only in that he elects to play the role of a prisoner. He might come and go as he pleased and the protection of the Italian State would be accorded him.

To appear, however, outside the Vatican, the pope claims would be to take the role of a subject of the King of Italy, and would be to recognize the authority of the king over the city of Rome, and this he refuses to do. This is not as whimsical as it might appear to some of us. It is the question of the temporal power of the Church which is involved. The pope claims the right to be a temporal ruler; but a ruler, to be a ruler in more than name, must have something to rule over. As it is, the pope is only permitted the use of the Vatican palaces and the land that goes with them, as an expression of the courtesy of the Italian government. Even a little State over which he exercised absolute authority would permit him to set up a court as a temporal ruler. He would then be in a position not only to have his official representative at the Italian court, but would also give him the right to send his ambassadors to all the nations of the world, as well as to the World Court and League of Nations. It would now appear that the deadlock between the pope and the Italian government which has existed for almost sixty years is about to be broken. The world awaits with considerable interest the announcement of the terms of the agreement.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Dr. R. S. Stephens, in sending a remittance for missions, reports the encouraging fact that he has just concluded a protracted service of two weeks, with twenty-three conversions and twenty additions to the Church.

Mr. and Mrs. O. H. Paris, of Greensboro, will have the sympathy of their many friends in the death of their only child on February 5th, a sweet little girl of eleven years. THE CHRISTIAN SUN extends deep sympathy.

The Rev. Milton W. Sutcliffe, who has been pastor of the Webster Christian Church, near Havre de Grace, Md., for the past five years, resigned in January on account of poor health, and he expects to go to Arizona for a while. The pulpit of Webster Christian Church has been filled every Sunday since Mr. Sutcliffe left by the Rev. E. W. Jones, of Dover, Del., except on February 3rd, when Mr. H. C. Taylor, of the People's Church, of Dover, Del., filled the pulpit.

Rev. P. S. Sailer, pastor of Vanderveer Park Christian Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., in renewing his subscription to THE SUN, writes: "If you can possibly manage to do so, I wish you would send me a copy of 'The Christian Annual,' published by the Southern Convention. I am enclosing check for three dollars to extend my SUN subscription as far as possible and at the same time pay for the Annual. For about twenty-six or twenty-seven years I have been a subscriber to THE SUN. I look forward to its weekly visits with a great deal of interest."

Rev. O. D. Poythress writes: "Our work is moving along very encouragingly, considering the amount of sickness we have had. We are expecting Dr. Fry to preach for us the second Sunday night in February. Would like very much to have you come one Sunday during February and preach for us. We are anxious for our Church to become a real "missionary" Church. Of course, this cannot be accomplished in a month or a year, but I believe that eventually, through education, wise planning, backed up with genuine consecrated living and faithful praying, it will be accomplished."

THE CHRISTIAN ANNUAL.

"The Annual" has been mailed out to Churches of the several Conferences. It contains the proceedings of the Southern Christian Convention, held in Richmond, Va., May 1-4, 1928; the Woman's Convention, held at the same time and place; the proceedings of the seven Conferences composing the Southern Christian Convention, and in addition it gives the proceedings of Eastern Virginia Christian Missionary Association, O. D. Poythress, president and J. F. Morgan, secretary; Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference, Mrs. M. L. Bryant, president, and Mrs. L. W. Stagg, secretary; North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference, Mrs. C. H. Roland, president, and Mrs. J. J. Henderson, secretary; Woman's Missionary Conference of Alabama, Mrs. M. W. Melton, president, and Mrs. G. L. Stevens, secretary, and Woman's Missionary Conference of the Valley of Virginia, Mrs. A. W. Andes, vice-president, and Mrs. B. F. Frank, secretary.

The proceedings of the missionary societies are printed at the charge of the general publication fund of the Southern Convention, and no copies are sent out to members and officers of the missionary conferences. However, any officer or other person can receive a copy by writing THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Richmond, Va., and enclosing 50 cents, preferably in stamps. The number of copies is limited, and those writing will have preference in order of their requests.

SOUTHERN'S CORN CUP.

Chas. N. Long, of Bremen, Haralson County, Ga., corn grower, who was awarded the Southern Railway System's corn cup as the producer of the best ten ears of corn in the South in 1928, received the handsome trophy from the hand of Governor L. G. Hardman, of Georgia, in the executive offices in the State Capitol, on Thursday, January 31st.

After winning first prize at the Southeastern Fair, Mr. Long entered his exhibit in the competition for the Southern's cup. Exhibits from the eight States of the South served by the Southern were collected in the office of Roland Turner, general agricultural agent, at Atlanta, on December 11th and were judged by a committee of experts consisting of Dr. Tait Butler, editor Progressive Farmer, Memphis, Tenn.; Dr. H. W. Barre, director experiment station, Clemson College, S. C., and C. A. Cobb, editor Southern Ruralist, Atlanta, Ga.

The cup will remain in the possession of Mr. Long until the winner of the 1929 competition is announced, and his name will be engraved on it along with those of Willie Pat Boland, of Newberry, S. C., winner in 1925; James A. Patterson, of China Grove, N. C., 1926, and Dan Bickley, of Irmi, S. C., 1927.

THE PRODIGAL FATHER.

We have heard much about the parable of the prodigal son. In this day when we are hearing much about the criminality of boys, it is well to give heed to the parable of the prodigal father. Here it is:

A certain man had two sons; and the younger of them said to his father, "Father, give me the portion of thy time, and thy attention, and thy companionship, and thy counsel which falleth to me."

And he divided unto him his living in that he paid the boy's bills, and sent him to a select preparatory school, and to dancing school, and to college, and tried to believe that he was doing his full duty by the boy.

And not many days after, the father gathered all his interests and aspirations and ambitions, and took his journey into a far country, into a land of stocks and bonds and securities and other things which do not interest a boy; and there he wasted his precious opportunity of being a chum to his own son.

And when he had spent the very best of his life, but had failed to find satisfaction, there arose a mighty famine in his heart; and he began to be in want of sympathy and real companionship.

And he went and joined himself to one of the clubs of that country; and they elected him chairman of the house committee and president of the club and sent him to Congress. And he fain would have satisfied himself with the husks that other men did eat, and no man gave unto him any real friendship.

But when he came to himself he said, "How many men of my acquaintance have boys whom they understand and who understand them, who talk about their boys and associate with their boys and seem perfectly happy in the comradeship of their sons, and I perish here with heart-hunger! I will arise and go to my son, and will say unto him, 'Son, I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight; I am no more worthy to be called thy father; make me as one of thy acquaintances.'"

And he arose and came to his son. But while he was yet afar off, his son saw him and was moved with astonishment, and instead of running and falling on his neck, he drew back and was ill at ease. And the father said unto him, "Son, I have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight; I am no more worthy to be called thy father. Forgive me now and let me be your friend."

But the son said, "Not so. I wish it were possible, but it is too late. There was a time when I wanted to know things, when I wanted companionship and counsel, but you were too busy. I got the information, and I got the companionship; but I got the wrong kind—and now, alas! I am wrecked, in soul and in body, and there is nothing you can do for me. It is too late, too late, too late!"—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

THE MEN GOD WANTS.

When God wants a worker, He calls a worker. When God wants a great servant, He calls the busy man.

Moses was busy with the flock at Horeb. Gideon was busy threshing wheat by the winepress. Saul was busy searching for his father's lost beasts. David was busy caring for his father's sheep. Elisha was busy plowing with twelve yoke of oxen. Nehemiah was busy bearing the king's wine cup. Amos was busy following the herds. Peter and Andrew were busy casting the net into the sea. James and John were busy mending their nets. Matthew was busy collecting customs. Saul was busy persecuting the friends of Jesus. William Carey was busy making shoes. John Milton was busy mastering the classics. John Bunyan was busy tinkering pots and pans. Martin Luther was busy performing penance. Adoniram Judson was busy investigating religious truth. Charles Spurgeon was busy as a preacher. Roger Williams was busy as a stenographer.

God never called an idler into His service. The indolent young man who looks longingly toward the gospel ministry will never get a call from God. The busy workers are the men God wants.—H. L. Hastings.

"BECAUSE I LOVE IT."

Gladstone's rule, even in his older years, was that of a "twicer," as he termed it, at public worship. "Church going," he said, "is not a matter of fancy for a Christian. It is his duty for the work's sake. I am a regular Church-goer. I should go for various reasons if I did not love it, but I am fortunate enough to find great pleasure in the midst of devout gatherings, whether I can accept their creeds or not. For I find that there is in a corner of my heart a little plant called reverence which wants to be watered about once a week."

Are you looking about for a means or a method by which you can help improve the community in which you live?

There is no other way by which a man can make what is best in himself such a wide and permanent influence for good in his community as by throwing himself heartily and vigorously into Church work.

To be an outside saint is better than nothing, but the best position is to be an inside laborer in the life of the Church, thus helping to develop the finest character and bestowing the greatest blessings on mankind.

A man is never more safe or more happy, never more useful, than when he has associated himself with the composite life in the spirit which the Church provides.

"Come, thou, with us and we will do thee good and thou shalt be to us instead of eyes."—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

LUKE—PHYSICIAN AND ARTIST.

By Rev. J. W. Fix.

The difference between a snapshot and a portrait is outstanding. A snapshot may be made anywhere and at any time. It may even represent the subject in action; but a portrait is a thoroughly formed conception of an individual wrought out of deep meditation and study. When one reads the gospels it is evident from beginning that they are not a series of snapshots of Jesus. Instead, they are carefully painted portraits of Him, as seen from different angles of His ministry.

The Greek world has made innumerable contributions to the field of sculpturing and architecture. In the realm of art she is pre-eminent if for no other reason than the fact that some of the most beautiful portraits of Jesus are painted by a little Greek physician whose name was Luke. This young Greek was never married; therefore, being relieved of domestic responsibilities, was free to devote his entire life to the service of God and humanity.

At the beginning of his gospel he portrays the Bethlehem manger scene in colors that delicately harmonize with the living Christ. He closes with that wonderful walk to Emmaus, when they said: "Did not our hearts burn within while He walked and talked with us?" In the center of the gospel one finds His two outstanding parables that of the good Samaritan and the prodigal son. With grace and ease, Luke translates prose and poetry into many very vivid and dramatic scenes.

Luke has a tendency to materialize and humanize. He speaks of the Spirit of God appearing in the form of a dove. He refers to the risen Christ in terms of flesh and bones. When the three disciples slept in the Garden of Gethsemane, the other gospel writers say that Jesus rebuked them; but Luke moistens all words of harshness. He speaks much of the tenderness of Jesus. He tells us that Jesus wept over Jerusalem and that in the spirit of kindness He prayed for those who put Him to death. He does not denounce the leaders of the early Church for their mistakes, but, with a universal love for all mankind, he eats with sinners.

1. Luke's first portrait of Jesus is that of a Saviour. In his Bethlehem scene, the angels proclaim, "Unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour." Luke alone records the story of Zaccheus. He tells how Jesus entered his home and revealed unto him God's great plan of salvation. While onlookers said, "He has gone to be the guest of a sinner." Zaccheus said, "Half of the goods I give to the poor; and if I have taken anything from any man by false accusation, I restore him fourfold." And Jesus said: "This day is salvation come to this house—for the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost.

Matthew gives us the parable of the lost sheep. In Luke 15 we have the story repeated together with that of the lost coin and the lost son. Luke records the prayer of the publican who prayed for salvation, saying: "Lord, be merciful unto me, a sinner."

2. Jesus, friend of the poor. In Matthew we have in the manger scene the Christ-child as a descendant of a king, an heir of David, who was visited by the wise men from the East who brought costly gifts unto the new-born King. Luke paints an humble scene. He tells us of a Baby in a manger because of no room in the inn. He speaks only of a group of humble shepherds men coming to the scene of His nativity. Matthew says: "Blessed are the poor in spirit." Luke says: "Blessed are the poor." His great love for them is shown by his care for them. He speaks much of the lame, the halt, and the blind. It is in Luke's portraits of Jesus that we read of the rich man and Lazarus. He shows us how Lazarus went to heaven and there enjoyed peace and happiness. While the man who refused him bread-crumbs endured torment. Luke tells of a rich young man, whose soul was required of him because he loved money more than God.

3. Luke pictures Jesus as a friend of women. During the time of Jesus, woman was considered a slave. This fact deplored the young Nazarene, and in His new kingdom He set forth a plan by which she should be emancipated. On the first page of Luke's gospel we have an introduction to some of the women of His time. Elizabeth is there. He tells us of Anne, a prophetess of the tribe of Asher, who was in the temple when Jesus was brought to be dedicated. Very vivid are Luke's scenes in the home of Mary and Martha. Luke tells us that Jesus healed a woman who for eighteen years was bound. Very beautifully does he picture the ministry of Mary Magdalene. He tells of Joanna, and of Sussanna, both of whom supplied the needs of Jesus. On the way to the cross, Luke pictures women following Him and he lets us hear Jesus say in kindly words to them: "O daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me, but for yourselves."

4. Luke portrays Jesus as a man of prayer. In this portrait he reveals the fact that Jesus was constantly in communion with His Heavenly Father. At His baptism he tells us He prayed. Before selecting the twelve, He was in consecrated prayer for guidance. He prayed for those who took His life. While in the midst of prayer, some of His disciples came to Him and said: "Lord, teach us to pray." Luke tells us that in one of His parables Jesus said: "Men ought to pray always and faint not. At the close of His life, the other writers say that Jesus exclaimed:

"My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me." Luke tells us that He said: "Father, into Thy hands do I commend my Spirit."

In conclusion, I would say that the world would be incalculably poorer were it not for these portraits of Jesus from the work of Luke. His revelations of the birth of Jesus, the lad of twelve in the temple, His twelve outstanding parables, and the transfiguration scene alone are invaluable in their worth to twentieth-century Christians. As we turn from these pictures of Him, there lingers those impressive scenes of the "three losts." We realize that the world is full of folks today who are lost in a maze of circumstances and entangled in a world of economic, political and social disorder. They are lost to guidance, like the lost sheep. Lost to usefulness, like a lost coin that is hidden underneath a piece of furniture or in some dark corner. Lost to loving companionship, like the prodigal son who was lost from sight of his beloved father. All of these men the Son of Righteousness came to seek and to save. He came to put them into useful activity and to bring them nearer the Father's throne than they had ever been.

Unless you and I can portray Jesus in our own lives, as Luke sets Him forth, He means little unto the world as far as we are individually concerned. We may paint Him in beautiful colors that blend into harmonious perfection, but unless we portray Him as the Divine Son of God, the gospel stories lose their resolute power in our own lives.

HOW SHOULD WE GIVE?

A little girl had 10 cents given her. She bought ice cream with it. Some one said to her, "I thought you were going to give your dime to missions." She replied, "I did think about it, then I thought I would buy the ice cream, and let the ice cream man give it."

One day a boy said to his mother, "I am going to the Church tonight to hear the missionary from Africa, for when he was here before I gave him 5 cents and I want to know what he has done with it."

Do you give intelligently and follow up your gifts with interest?—Emma C. Fisk.

Shall We Share the Gospel with Others? IF SO, TO WHAT EXTENT?

One million, seven hundred thousand souls in Japan and Porto Rico alone are depending upon us. If we of the Christian denomination do not share with them the Gospel, they will never get it. February and March are "Foreign Mission Months" in the Southern Christian Convention. What will the answer be from us as individuals, Sunday Schools and Churches? We are depending upon each and every one to do his or her best in obedience to the command of our Lord, "Go ye."

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

IN SUNNY FLORIDA.

Orlando, Fla., Feb. 9, 1929.

It is exceedingly difficult to realize that snow and sleet and cold, shivery weather are so nearby as papers and letters from home indicate. Here at Orlando the balmy sunshine woos one, and the gentle outdoor breezes forbid one to remain shut-in. If there is any value in open spaces and a beaming sun, one certainly gets that value here now, and revels in it. Seated now by a placid silvery lake, basking in the genial rays of a balmy sun, birds twittering and crooning as they play hide-and-seek in silken mosses hanging from the branches of pines and palms—one is forced to meditate not so much on the wonders and beauties of nature as upon the goodness and glory of God. I am spending and relaxing a few days at this sane, sensible and reasonable sanitarium, and am not surprised that Ponce de Leon decided he had found the fountain of youth when in the centuries past he came to and discovered Florida. Since his day, thousands, yea millions, of others seeking health and happiness have come this way. And what a contribution these health-seekers, these broken, bruised, battered and afflicted ones have made to the world! "If there were no suffering and afflicted ones, there would be no sanitariums, hospitals and health resorts. So suffering has produced our sanitariums, and what a product they are in this world." If you want to find patience, persistence, cheerfulness, faith, prayer and a great many other virtues of godly make and mien, go to a sanitarium where, as Roman gladiators entering the arena used to say, with a cheery smile and a polite bow, "Morituri te salutamus" (we who are about to die salute you). And as a result of, or rather following that cheery smile and polite bow, those who patronize sanitariums and hospitals don't die—certainly not till they have made their contribution to mankind. What would this wicked, treacherous and disappointing world be without patience, and a great deal of it? Well, if you want to see patience, and learn to be patient, go where patients are. Ancient Job had to be in a hospital a long time, and suffer afflictions almost beyond human endurance before he could write the immortal book that bears his name. Job's suffering and afflictions gave to this world its supreme example and contribution of patience. One cannot think of Job without thinking of patience, and one cannot think of his patience except for that background of, and long stay in, a sanitarium to which his friends (?) came on friendly visits—and brought him wormwood and gall. (And Job bore all that so patiently that now, instead of wormwood and gall, they bring you potted plants and fragrant flowers to the sick-room.) Job's suffering certainly did make this sick and afflicted world more tolerable, and its lot more endurable.

But patience is not the only contribution suffering has made to the world. If you wish to find smiles, sunshine, radiant cheerfulness, go to sanitariums and hospitals where suffering is. I have a friend who has not walked a step in years. Day in and out, month by month, year by year, he lies flat on his back and radiates sunshine and good cheer to all who visit him. We lovingly call him "The Merry Cripple." The merriest, cheeriest, gladdest, most grateful people I meet on this earth are in and about sanitariums, where suffering and affliction have smoothed and wiped out the frowns and flaws and fickle frills and brought out the real jems, jewels and diadems of character; laid bare and put before the world the real heart and soul of one, as God made it and intended it should be. People in sanitariums and hospitals are not a charge on society, nor a liability to the world—they are an asset, and very often a boon and a blessing.

And persistence! Why, one does not know what persistence is until one has visited a sanitarium and consulted people who are suffering and have been afflicted. What would we know about Paul, and John Bunyan, and David Livingstone but for their suffering, afflictions, chastisements—and their power of persistence through it all. Why, it is nothing to meet in a sanitarium one who has been suffering and is yet afflicted for two, four, six, ten years, and still persisting, persevering with a zeal that cannot be daunted, not only in the endeavor to get well, but succeeding in the attempt to be agreeable, courteous, kind, gentle, gracious and grateful. And faith! Such faith as these afflicted ones show to this otherwise faithless world. I doubt if we know what faith is; certainly we never see it at its best until we find it in the sick-room, discover it in the heart and soul of one who has suffered and endured, one who is and has been afflicted, and, with Paul, can say, "I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed to usward."

Suffering and affliction are not things to be coveted or sought after; nevertheless, they have their place in the economy of grace and in the purposes of God. As such, they make their contribution to the glory and welfare of man, and to the praise of their Creator.

The writer is neither sick, suffering, nor afflicted. He packed some books, "parchments," a "cloak" or two, and other paraphernalia in his hand-bag, and for a few days fled away to Florida and this Adventists' sanitarium, where they feed you on nature's foods only, serve you to nature's remedies only—sunshine, fresh air, salt-rubs, electricity—awaken you in the morning with hymns and melodies of praise, and soothe you in the evening hour with a soulful, reverential vesper service, and greet you through the day with smiles, good cheer and a most willing and efficient service—and so make the heart glad while the body grows strong, the mind grows clear, and the soul grows grateful.

WHY FOREIGN MISSIONS?

Why? Let Dr. Egbert W. Smith, secretary of foreign missions, Presbyterian Church, give answer: "Why? The one answer is Christ. The authority for foreign missions is Christ. The exemplar of foreign missions is Christ. The power in foreign missions is Christ. The foreign mission enterprise is the Church's supreme exhibition of her obedience to Christ's authority, her sympathy with Christ's spirit, her loyalty to Christ's purpose, her faith in Christ's power and promise."

So the foreign mission enterprise is Christ's, and in promoting that enterprise we are promoting not a human but a superhuman enterprise, and we do so not for our own sake, nor even for humanity's sake, but for Christ's sake. On this account foreign missions, as does no other enterprise of the Church, forces the Church to a close fellowship with Him and, to use Dr. Smith's words again, "throws the Church completely back on her superhuman resources and develops her faith, her courage, her endurance, her prayer life as nothing else does or can."

Why foreign missions, then? That we weak, selfish, faithless mortals may have something to try our strength, wipe out our selfishness, test and strengthen our faith. For that which we do for foreign missions, we do not for ourselves or for those round about us whom we may see and know, and from whom we expect thanks or praise, but we do it for Jesus' sake, just that we may honor Him and seek to glorify His name in the earth. And what we give to foreign missions we give not for earthly praise, show or reward, but we just give it for the sake of our Lord and Master who commanded us to do it. And this is the Church's greatest need today—Christ-likeness. We need most of all to be more like Him, draw nearer to Him, do more for His sake that we may the more intimately share His fellowship.

"The Church's ever-present need" (I am quoting Dr. Smith again) "compared with which money, organization, machinery, members are but dust and chaff, is Christ-likeness—that spirituality, that faith, that holy courage, that redemptive passion that we see in our Lord."

Why foreign missions? Just for the sake of our Lord and Saviour. That is all. He loves the whole world and wants to save the whole world. And He, not me, chose the way of foreign missions, and in this way invited us to walk with Him and become co-workers with Him in the great adventure. We go that way with Him just for His dear sake and because He chose that way for Himself and for us.

READING AND THINKING.

This is an age of printing and reading. "Of making many books there is no end; and much reading is a weariness of the flesh." This was written by the author of Ecclesiastes 12:12. That is true today; and when magazines and newspapers are included, the truth of that statement is magnified. That is one peculiarity of the Bible, that its statements are inclusive, containing more than the words express. Every great truth in the Bible opens a mine of invaluable worth to mankind. It is like the soil that produces more and more as the centuries pass. The more scientists study the soil and the more labor tills the soil, the greater the harvests. Increasing population does not diminish the products of the world. The more people, the more they have. This is true of the Bible. The more men study it, the more they find in its pages.

Reading papers, magazines and books is the fad of this age. People used to study; now they read. Students in school are very much the same in their studies. It is largely reading. There has never been so much reading in any age of the world's history as today. The latest paper, the latest book—that is what readers want to see. Reading for the mind is like eating for the body. There is mental appetite as well as physical appetite. There is also spiritual appetite. Too much eating dulls mental appetite, and too much reading dulls spiritual appetite. Too much reading fills up the mind with undigested thought, as a farmer can plant more acres than he can cultivate; and that makes a poor harvest.

Thinking is exercising the mind actively, to produce results, either in the minds of others or in the world's work. The thinkers of the world have produced the inventions that decrease the burdens of men and increase the necessities and useful comforts of life. The steam engine, the sewing machine, the electric light, the typewriter, the cook stove, are all products of thought. Governments, constitutions, theologies, sciences, philanthropics were all conceived in the field of thought. Thinking broods over reading like birds on a nest, till something new and useful is hatched out. The hen that lays the eggs may be dead when the hen that sits on the nest sees the living chicks. Paul seems to combine reading and thinking in what he writes the Philippians in chapter 4:8: "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." Thinking is the mental digestive organ. To eat more than the stomach can digest is a producer of disease and not of health. To read more than the mind can digest in thought is to produce mental disease and not health. That is the reason that "much reading is a weariness of the flesh."

CHRISTIAN UNITY.

We are expecting our people in every section to rally heartily to our Christian unity program. Every Church and Sunday School should respond with generous offerings for this program which we have talked about a long time. Funds are necessary for your commission to do its work. Our share toward the work of the Federal Council of Churches must be paid from this Christian unity budget. A goodly number of individuals, whose hearts have believed in this program for a long time, should now find it not only a joy to make a worthy personal contribution, but also an opportunity herein to actually help along the cause. If your Church and school did not make their offering on the date, February 3rd, kindly see to it soon.

Does your Church make an annual every-member canvass for both its local expenses and benevolences?

Did you put your very best efforts into your appeal this year for your January Convention offering?

Have you planned for a stewardship institute in your Conference this year?

We have round-table questions on "Church Management and Church Organization" which would be very helpful for your next Conference quarterly or institute, or mid-year convention.

Some of our Church treasurers are fine business men, and note things that will be of help in our office. We appreciate them. They always send in even amounts, so they are quickly and easily divided. Under the Convention budget plan, the remittance is to be divided and credited as follows: General Convention, 6 per cent; foreign missions, 34 per cent; evangelism, 5 per cent; Christian education, 25 per cent; home missions, 25 per cent; reserve fund, 5 per cent. They quickly detected the difference in time and work in making a 6, 34, 5, 25, 25 and 5 per cent division of $50 over that of $49.79, for example.

Mr. W. T. Dunn, Lynchburg, Va., says that the men of the Church are starting a stewardship class. This will help to spell success in any Church.

Recently our Church and the Congregational Church of Lima, Ohio, federated. Both pastors retired from the field and they are calling a new pastor. The finance committee has adopted the Convention budget plan, and are dividing the benevolences equally, sending one-half to the Christian headquarters and one-half to the Congregational headquarters. They remit monthly and have made two such remittances already.

We have word from Mr. H. C. Replogle, president of the Western Osage Conference, that the Conference is planning to use the Convention budget plan in its Churches.

WHAT DOES PREDESTINATION MEAN?

Some people have the idea that God has fixed the destiny of every man, woman and child in the world—that each one is to be saved in heaven or consigned to hell according to God's will, and that nothing that one can do will change his future. Is such a doctrine taught in the Bible?

The word "predestinate" is found twice in the Bible. The word "predestinated" also occurs only twice. Surely, if this doctrine of predestination, as popularly understood, is taught in God's word, we shall find it in these texts.

Romans 8:29, 30 contains two of these words. "Whom He did foreknow, He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His Son." "Moreover, whom He did predestinate, them He also called; and whom He called, them He also justified; and whom He justified, them He also glorified."

We must here draw a sharp distinction between foreknowledge and predestination. These terms are confused in the minds of many. It is true that "God . . . knoweth all things" (1 John 3:20). This, however, is entirely different from foreordination or predestination. Knowing about a thing before it happens does not necessarily imply responsibility for its occurrence. Astronomers can predict to the very minute eclipses of the sun and moon hundreds of years in the future. They have foreknowledge, but do not control the eclipses. I might look up in the sky and see a crumpled airplane falling. I foreknow that the machine will strike the earth, but I am not responsible for the accident or the death of the aviator.

Coming back to the predestination mentioned in Romans, a careful analysis of these verses shows us that "whom He did foreknow, He also did predestinate." God foreknows every one. Then, we cannot escape the conclusion that He has predestinated every one. To what? Some to eternal life and others to eternal damnation? No, no! That is not what the text says. It reads, "predestinate to be conformed to the image of His Son."

All are Predestinated.

God has predestinated every man born into this world to be conformed to the image of His Son. This can mean nothing else than that God has predestinated every human being to be saved. The text reads further, "Whom He did predestinate, them He also called; and whom He called, them He also justified; and whom He justified, them He also glorified" (Rom. 8:30). The plain meaning of this Scripture is that all are predestinated to be called, justified, and glorified.

The other two places in the Bible where predestination is mentioned are Ephesians 1:5 and 11: "Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to Himself." "In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of Him." Both these statements concerning predestination teach only one thing; that all men are predestinated to salvation and a place in heaven.

The Will Is Free.

God predestinated that every man should be saved. "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God" (Rom. 3:23). "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. 6:23). We are all sinners under the condemnation of death. But through Christ we are all heirs of eternal life. "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive" (1 Cor. 15:22). In this way God has conferred eternal life upon all.

If there is one teaching more emphatically laid down in the Bible than another, it is that God will never force man's will or deprive him of his power of choice. "Whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (Jno. 3:16). "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely" (Rev. 22:17).

The tree of the knowledge of good and evil was placed in the Garden of Eden that Adam and Eve might choose to serve God, or not to serve Him. Joshua told the children of Israel, "Choose you this day whom ye will serve" (Josh. 24:15). Elijah gave the same exhortation to Israel in his day, "If the Lord be God, follow Him; but if Baal, then follow him" (1 Kings 18:21).

The one thing that God wants of us is our love. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind" (Matt. 22:37). But love is one thing that cannot be forced. It must be voluntary, freely given. There is a little girl at my home. Suppose I should say to her on returning from work at evening, "Helen, come throw your arms around my neck and kiss me, or I shall whip you." Fearing the punishment, she does as she is bidden. How does a caress given in such a way affect me? Do I appreciate and enjoy it? Of course not! So it is with God.

On the other hand, if my little daughter comes dancing out of the house to meet me, and throws her arms about me voluntarily and kisses me as an expression of the love in her little heart, how this thrills a father's heart! Just so we make God happy by expressing our love to Him.

If God had foreordained that some should be saved, while others are doomed to be lost, then those who are saved are forced to live with God, whether they desire it or not. Their love, in the very nature of things, cannot be free and voluntary. God has the power to force things His way, but He does not exercise such power, because it is contrary to the nature of His great love.

A father might want his son to enter his firm, work with him, and eventually become a partner with him; but if the son refuses to follow his father and accede to his plans, the wise father will not force his son, knowing that an unwilling heart will not bring success. God plans for us all to be saved, but if we reject His plans for our welfare, and refuse the destiny He offers us, He will not force us to do His will.

God predestines us all to be saved and live with Him throughout eternity; but it is possible for any man to take himself out of God's hands, away from the destiny God has planned for us. "I have called and ye refused; I have stretched out my hands, and no man regarded." "For that they hated knowledge, and did not choose the fear of the Lord" (Prov. 1:24, 29).—Kay M. Adams, in Signs of the Times.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America is an organization that originated in an unconscious urge in the mind of the Protestant denominations. This urge found expression in local ministerial associations in cities, and larger groups of leading men who felt that there should be some way to cultivate and express the unity for which Jesus prayed, and thereby increase the efficiency of the gospel at home and abroad. One of the first great organizations was the evangelical alliance, an association of evangelical Christians of various Churches and countries, formed in England in 1845. General meetings of this association followed in London, 1851; Paris, 1855; Berlin, 1857; Geneva, 1861; Amsterdam, 1867; New York, 1873; Basel, 1879; Copenhagen, 1885; Florence, 1891, and London, 1896.

This great organization was followed by the Interchurch Conference on Federation, held in Carnegie Hall, New York City, November 15-21, 1905. At that meeting, 300 delegates, by a rising vote, adopted the plan of federation, which was fully organized in Philadelphia, December 2-8, 1908. At this meeting, Dr. William H. Roberts was chairman; Elias B. Sanford, secretary, and Bishop E. R. Hendrix, president. Delegates from thirty Protestant denominations were present in that meeting, and twenty-eight denominations now constitute the organization. The sessions of the council are held every four years, and the president serves only one quadrennium. The places of meetings and the presidents have been as follows: Philadelphia, Bishop E. R. Hendrix, 1908-1912; Chicago, Rev. Dr. Shaler Matthews, 1912-1916; St. Louis, Rev. Dr. Frank Mason North, 1916-1920; Boston, Rev. Dr. Robert E. Speer, 1920-1924; Atlanta, Rev. Dr. S. Parks Cadman, 1924-1928; Rochester, Bishop F. J. McConnell, 1928.

Rev. Charles S. Macfarland, brought up in the Christian Church, is the general secretary of the council and one of the outstanding workers in that greatest of all organizations yet formed to promote unity and co-operation throughout the ranks of Protestantism. The delegates to the council are elected by the general bodies of the respective denominations, so that the council is not a body to dominate the denominations, but it is supported and controlled by the denominations in co-operation with one another. That is the one organization in which all the denominations stand on a common platform, enjoy equal rights, and the same privileges. The smallest denomination is respected as much as the largest. Geography, theology, numbers, forms of government, race and wealth, all fare alike in discussions, votes and opinions. The great questions, too large for any one denomination to manage, are more successfully controlled by unified co-operation. For example, when the whole Church works for prohibition and its permanent place in the nation, it creates a public sentiment that is impregnable. "Upon this rock I will build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." In unity there is strength. The council labors to unify the Churches in all that advances the interests of the kingdom.

ELON LETTER.

Elon is called upon again to mourn the loss of a great and good friend. On Saturday morning, February 2nd, Mr. M. Orban, Jr., passed to his eternal reward at his home in Whittier, Calif. A telegram that day from Mrs. Orban announced the sad intelligence of the decease of one of the most devoted and generous friends the cause of education in the Christian Church has ever had.

The interment was in Whittier on Tuesday, February 5th. A memorial service was held at the hour of the funeral in the Mooney Christian Education Building—the gift of Mr. and Mrs. Orban to the college in memory of Rev. Isaac Mooney, father of Mrs. Orban. During the memorial service, over which Dr. W. S. Alexander presided, the following program was rendered:

Song—"How Firm a Foundation."

Invocation—Dr. J. U. Newman.

Scripture—Psa. 24:1-5; Matt. 5:3-8, 14-16: Prof. Ross Ensminger.

Memorial Address—W. A. Harper.

Solo—"Come, Ye Disconsolate," Prof. C. James Velie.
Prayer—Prof. S. A. Bennett.

Mr. Orban was one of the gentlest and kindest men it has ever been my privilege to know. From the moment that I first grasped his hand at the Union Station, in Los Angeles, in August of 1923, until the day of his decease, I have felt that in him Elon College and the other institutions of higher learning of our Church had a staunch and devoted friend, one who was ready to sacrifice for these institutions and to rejoice in the privilege such sacrifice offered.

It is rare, but it is at the same time refreshing to the soul, to meet such a man as Michael Orban, Jr. He was denied the privileges of higher education himself, but he was significantly appreciative of the value of thorough preparation, and especially for the work of the kingdom, and was willing to give of the prosperity that had come to him that others might enjoy that which he had not been privileged to have. And nothing gave him greater satisfaction than to think over the possibilities that offered themselves to well-prepared young people in the days that lie ahead.

Again and again have I heard him speak of some young man whom I knew he had helped in his preparation for the ministry (though he did not know I was aware of his assistance to the young man) as a promising servant in the work of the kingdom. And often has he said, with respect to such a young man: "I have watched his record for several years, and I have high hopes of his doing still greater things for the Lord."

On the morning of January 18, 1923, which is a sort of dating point in the Elon history and experience, being the day of our great fire, though I had never met Bro. Orban I had heard of him, I decided I would telegraph him of our disaster, and acted upon my impulse. The next morning I received a night letter from him, stating that he was sending me "a five." Five days later I received a letter from him with a check for $5,000. His epigrammatic telegram was characteristic of his modesty. He had none of the desire to exploit or parade himself for his generosity, and he did not even wish those who transmitted his message to know what he proposed to do. I was not certain whether he was sending $500 or $5,000, because I was not then personally acquainted with his great spirit.

When his letter was received containing his check for $5,000, he stated that it was a genuine pleasure to him to do something for Elon; that he had read of our work in the Herald of Gospel Liberty and THE CHRISTIAN SUN and was impressed with it, and the little he was doing was to him a real pleasure.

When the plan had fully developed for rebuilding the college, and it had been decided to include in the group of new buildings one devoted especially to Christian education, I felt impressed to go across the continent and to lay this matter on the heart of this man whom I had never met, but with whom I felt a strange soul-kindness. My first plan was to go the 1st of May, but it was inconvenient for him to see me at that time because of certain other engagements he had taking him away from home, and so the trip was abandoned.

In July I became impressed again with the propriety of a visit to California. I wrote him and told him I would be glad to come to see him if it was agreeable, and he telegraphed me to come. I reached his home on the 2nd day of August of that year, with the result that is well known.

The idea of providing a center for the expression of the Christian life in a college appealed to Mr. Orban with irresistible force. It was clear from the beginning that he was enamored of the thought and that he was anxious to make this contribution not only to one of our colleges, but to the Christian world in its higher educational field. On Friday morning, following our arrival at his home, I arose early and found Bro. Orban in the living-room, and in his hand was an open Bible. Lying on the table beside which he was seated was a pen-drawing of the proposed building. He looked at me with radiant joy in his face and said: "Well, we have decided to try it." He meant by "we" Mrs. Orban and himself, they being joint partners in all their Christian generosity. These twain have been one in their great and good work through the years of their happy wedded life.

On a bronze tablet in the entrance to the Mooney Christian Education Building is found this inscription: "Michael Orban, Jr., a Christian layman, whose consecration to the kingdom of God has been an inspiration to a host. Modest, consecrated, generous, he has devoutly lived the simple life that the institutions of the Christian Church might profit by his larger liberality. This building erected to the memory of his father-in-law stands as a memorial also of his own and of his noble wife's generosity of heart and soul. 1923."

I shall never forget the visit which Bro. Orban made to Elon that fall when the foundation of the Mooney Building was just climbing out of the soil. He was happiness itself in the thought of seeing this noble structure arrive at completion. In the fall of 1925 the building was dedicated, and he and Mrs. Orban and their daughter, Miss Corrinne, were here for the occasion. It was a memorable event in the history of the college.

And, now, my friend has gone, gone to his eternal home, and in his going there is added another compelling charm to the urgent and insistent appeal of the spirit world. So long as experience shall be green in memory's garden of life, the cherished friendship and beautiful Christian character of M. Orban, Jr., will stand out. And this good thing which he has done on the Elon campus will, I take it, be the forerunner of many similar structures for the expression of the Christian life and training therein on the campuses of Christian colleges.

Bro. Orban was more than a pioneer. He was a prophet in the realm of Christian education. He had the insight of a prophet and the devotional enthusiasm of a saint. Happy, do I count myself, to have been privileged to know and to love this simple man of God.

Since I could not be present at the funeral, I sent the following telegram to be read on that occasion, and this telegram summarizes in brief the high estimate our brother held in the minds and hearts of all who knew him:

"Michael Orban, Jr., was an inspiration to a host of us who knew his consecration of life and his devotion to the cause of Christ. His modesty and his generosity which grew out of his spiritual consecration and his Christian devotion were unsurpassed by any one of my acquaintance. He had the prophet's insight and the saint's emotional enthusiasm for great causes. He loved Christian education, and, Christian statesman that he was, he gave to Elon College the first building wholly devoted to Christian education on any college campus in the world. God bless his memory."

The recitations were suspended during the hour of the funeral in memory of Bro. Orban.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE.

There was a meeting of the Executive Board and the Finance Board of the Southern Christian Convention at Suffolk, Va., January 22nd. The purpose of this meeting was to interpret the ruling of the Convention regarding the colleges and the financing of the same. At this meeting we arrived at a definite understanding of the relationship of the colleges to the Convention and to each other. It was agreed that for the period preceding the meeting of the next Convention the Sunday School offerings should be promoted and the offerings sent to the colleges in their adjacent territory; so Elon College will promote the work of Sunday School offerings in the Conferences in Virginia and North Carolina and will receive all moneys collected therefrom; and Piedmont Junior College will promote Sunday School offerings in the Alabama and Georgia and Alabama Conferences and the same plan for scholarships that was arranged for by Elon College will apply to Piedmont Junior College, the same "generous person" that is giving a scholarship in each of the five Conferences in Virginia and North Carolina will give a scholarship of $100 to each of the Conferences in Georgia and Alabama, and the college will also give a scholarship of $100 to these two Conferences. The Sunday Schools in each Conference that make the largest gross gift to the college through quarterly offerings will be allowed to name a young person for a scholarship worth a hundred dollars, and likewise the Sunday School that makes the largest per capita gift will be allowed to name a young person for one of these scholarships.

It might be possible that the same Sunday School will win both scholarships. This plan gives equal opportunity to the small Sunday Schools to win a free scholarship. These quarterly offerings should be arranged for on every fifth Sunday, but since some of the Sunday Schools have not taken quarterly offerings, it may be necessary for them to double up if they want to win a scholarship for the coming school year. For some time this promotional work in the Sunday Schools will be largely educational, but it is hoped that over a period of years it will yield some very needed support for Piedmont Junior College.

BIG CHURCHES SHOULD UNITE.

A definite agreement that the Presbyterian Church in the United States and the Methodist Episcopal Church of America should unite was reached recently at a conference of commissioned representatives of the two Churches, Rev. Eugene M. Antrim, Oklahoma City, secretary of the joint committee announced. The two denominations have a membership of 6,000,000.

Devising of a plan, which might also serve for future alliance with other denominations, and its adoption by the Presbyterian general assembly and the Methodist Episcopal general assembly are steps toward union to be expected later, Rev. Antrim said.

"Our beliefs, our doctrines, and in fact everything about the two denominations are so similar that union is almost inevitable," he declared.

The announcement followed a day of discussion between members of the Presbyterian department of Churches co-operation and union, headed by Dr. J. Ross Stevenson, of Princeton, N. J., and the Methodist Episcopal committee on relations with other denominations, headed by Bishop Herbert Welch, of Pittsburgh.

The Presbyterian officials also met with officials of the United Presbyterian Church for what Dr. Stevenson declared to be a resumption of informal discussions looking toward an alliance between the two denominations. The United Presbyterian denomination has a membership of approximately 176,000, and has national headquarters here.

The ultimate organization of the plan for union of the Presbyterian and Methodist Episcopal denominations was regarded by conference leaders as the task of a joint committee as suggested by Rev. Dr. Joseph A. Vance, of Detroit.

The conference, which was closed to the public, was attended by high Church officials from Chicago, Detroit, Buffalo, N. Y., Baltimore, Columbus, Washington and Philadelphia. The conference was the result of a resolution adopted at the Methodist Episcopal Conference at Kansas City last year looking to a union with the Presbyterians. It later was sent to the Presbyterian general assembly at Tulsa, Okla.

It has been said of the world's history hitherto that "might makes right." It is for us and for our time to reverse the maxim, and to say that right makes might.—Lincoln.

The spirit of good will among men rests upon spiritual forces.

OXFORD BIBLES

An Oxford $3.50

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

SUNDAY SCHOOL AND MISSIONS.

Said a Sunday School superintendent: "This school's business is to teach the Bible, not missions."

To compress into ten words a denser ignorance of the Bible or a heresy more fatal to the progress of Christ's kingdom would be a difficult feat. That missions form the central current of Scripture, we have already seen. The New Testament, the crown and climax of divine revelation—by whom was it written? By missionaries. For whom was it written? For mission converts and mission Churches. It is not primarily a system of doctrine, or a collection of proof-texts, or a miscellany of lessons. It is the history of a campaign, beginning from Jerusalem and aiming at the uttermost parts of the earth.

Its main sections are two. The first four books contain the life of Christ whose last command was "Go, and lo I am with you." The rest are the history and results of the going. The first four, "Christ in Palestine." The other twenty-three, "With Christ on the mission field." The gospels close with the Saviour risen and pointing outward. The next book is "The Acts of the Missionaries," the word apostle being but the Greek spelling of the word missionary. Then follow the epistles, written to strengthen the hearts and guide the life and thinking of the missionary converts and Churches.

If the New Testament were taught in every Sunday School as primarily a missionary book, beginning with the life of the Great Missionary, then the acts of the missionaries, then the letters of the missionaries from this, that, and the other point of the far-flung battle line—the Church of tomorrow would be far nearer what our Lord intended His Church to be, and the kingdom would go forward with a mighty stride.

The object of Sunday School teaching—is it simply to impart knowledge? An experienced schoolmaster was asked, "Do you not get weary of going over the same old subjects, with class after class, year after year? How do you live through the sameness and grind?" "You forgot one thing," was the reply. "You forget that I am not really teaching that old subject-matter at all. I am teaching living boys and girls. The matter I teach may become familiar and lose the thrill of novelty. But the boys and girls are always new; their hearts and minds are always fresh and inviting; their lives are always open to new impressions, and their feet ready to be turned in new directions."

Just so, Sunday School superintendents and teachers that know their business are not teaching the Bible, save as a means to an end. Bible knowledge is not the true objective. But they are seeking, through the Bible, to train every member of the school to be a missionary-hearted Christian, because the spirit of missions is the spirit of Christ, expressing itself in loving service in the home, the school, the community, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth.

How far the average Sunday School fails of imparting the missionary passion, we all know. Multitudes carry away from their years of attendance on it no world vision of Christian service, no consciousness of missionary obligation, scarcely a country-wide conception of the kingdom. Passing strange this is when we remember that Christianity is a missionary religion and that the Church's supreme business, for which the Sunday School is the appointed training department, is the establishing of Christ's kingdom throughout all the world.—Dr. Egbert W. Smith, in Desire of All Nations.

LIFE'S SUPREME LESSON.

The supreme lesson that the Christ-like life of self-forgetting service is the richest, the most satisfying, the most blessed in retrospect—where can we find this lesson taught so convincingly, so interestingly, so simply and vividly, as in the lives of the missionaries?

Said James B. Angell, LL.D., ex-president of the University of Michigan and formerly United States minister to China and Turkey:

"I have had the good fortune to be in the homes of princes and the palaces of the rich in many lands, but I am speaking the simple truth when I say that I have never been anywhere in the world in homes which impressed me so with the happiness of the dwellers as the humble homes of our hard-working missionaries on the foreign field. It was not the happiness of pomp, but it was that highest of all earthly happiness, which God grants to every man and every woman who makes the supreme end and desire of life to do the work of the Master, regardless of personal comfort."

"Exposed to robbers by night and invaders by day," wrote Ann Haseltine Judson, in her journal at Rangoon, Burma, "we both unite in saying that we never were happier."

After nearly fifty years of ceaseless toil and self-sacrifice in India, where for many years, as he himself said, he was tolerated like a toad and then hunted like a beast, William Carey left it as his dying testimony that the work of a missionary "is the most blessed service in which any human being can be employed in this world."

"You can hardly conceive how I feel," wrote Mary Moffat, "when I sit in the house of God surrounded by Christian natives. Though my situation may be despicable and mean in the eyes of the world, I feel that an honor has been conferred upon me which all the kings of the earth could not have done me. I am happy, remarkably happy, though my habitation is a single room with a mud wall and a mud floor."

Robert Moffat declared that if he had a thousand lives they should all be devoted to preaching Christ to those who had never heard the joyful sound.

Livingstone reached Linqanti through flooded country, struggling through swamps and water three and four feet deep. His hands were raw and bloody. His knees were through his trousers. He was weak from repeated attacks of fever. Yet he writes, "What an unspeakable mercy it is to be permitted to engage in this most holy and honorable work! What an infinity of lots in the world are poor, miserable, and degraded compared with mine!"—Desire of All Nations.

VALUE OF MISSION STUDY.

Through personal interviews, correspondence, and reports obtained from the leaders of mission study classes it is believed that the value of mission study in the lives of young people has been fairly estimated in the following testimonies:

"Mission study has caused me to be a better Bible student." "It has led me to a realization of the value of a human soul." "It cultivates a hunger for the whole truth of human life in the world." "The more we study missions and become enlightened on the subject, the more interested we are in the work." "It sets young people to thinking with regard to the problems and possibilities of the work." One student says: "The success of the work in foreign lands and the beautiful Christian lives produced have all been to us a strong present-day proof of the living power of the gospel." Another says: "By contrast with heathen religions, the blessings of the gospel are made clearer, gratitude engendered, and a deeper interest in lost souls awakened."

In some instances conversions have resulted from mission study. "One young lady was converted in the mission study class." "One member was won to Christ." "There were two conversions in one class due to the opening of the mind to the possibilities of God."

As a result of mission study, young men and women have already sailed for the field, while others are preparing for service at home and abroad. "One of our members has left us to begin work as a missionary at Singapore." "Two of the members are planning to work in foreign fields." "One young man was led to enter the ministry." "Several young people have made the decision to go into regular Church work." "A young man and his wife gave themselves to mission work."—Missions in the Sunday School.

NEWS NOTES.

BY MRS. W. M. JAY.

Friday, February 15th, is the day set aside as the "World Day of Prayer for Missions." This is one of the greatest meetings our women have during the year, and we hope to have many reports for our news column.

The day of prayer for missions has been observed by the Church women of the United States and Canada for many years. As the years have passed, women of other countries have joined until it has become a world day of prayer—a worldwide union of Christians of all races, meeting on the same day, and voicing in many languages their petitions to the Father, that His name may be hallowed, His kingdom come, and His will be done on earth.

Mrs. O. S. Mills, president of the Rosemont Missionary Society, gives us the following information regarding their Thanksgiving service: A publicity committee of five distributed envelopes and gave a personal invitation to every member of the society, with the urgent request that they bring an offering in money and in words of thanks to God. The program of our genial board was used. The meeting was well attended and an offering of $31 was given. This society also sent a nice box to Porto Rico.

The sympathy of our women will go out to Mrs. O. H. Paris, secretary of the North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference and president of the Greensboro Woman's Missionary Society, in the loss of her little daughter, Margaret, aged 11 years, the only child of the home. Sweet and winning, and possessed of an unusually keen mind, she gave promise of a bright future. She was sick for four weeks from flu complications, and she fell asleep on February 5th.

OFFICIAL NOTICE.

The Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at its last session, accepted an invitation from Newport News to meet there in 1929. But inasmuch as their new Church will not be completed by the time of the Convention, the Newport News people have asked to be relieved from entertaining this year. The executive committee is, therefore, anxious to receive an invitation for the coming session of the Convention. Please take this up with your school and notify us if you wish to entertain.

RECOMMENDED PLANS AND PROGRAM

February, March—Foreign Mission Months

THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION, in its Richmond Session last year, made February and March "Foreign Mission Months" for educational and informational purposes, culminating in an offering from all the Churches for Missions at, or on the nearest possible Sunday to, Easter—March 31, 1929. The goal set for the offering—Home and Foreign Missions—from Sunday Schools, and Churches, and individuals is $33,000; Woman's Societies, $12,000—total, $45,000. Inasmuch as the entire amount thus asked must be raised by voluntary offerings, the Conferences, in their recent sessions, in which the matter was discussed, adopted and recommended to the Sunday Schools and Churches the following method to be pursued in reaching their quota of one-third as much for Missions as for pastor's salary:

FIRST: When a Church uses the Budget Plan, write into that budget one-third the amount of pastor's salary to go to Missions, and send this in monthly or quarterly.

SECOND: If the budget is not used, canvass the individuals of the Church and Sunday School to find out how much each will give to Missions and when, entering the same on a card prepared for the purpose and which may be had of the Mission Secretary, Elon College, N. C.

THIRD: Where neither of these plans is adopted, then endeavor to increase the offering from the Sunday School, and at or about Easter have a Missionary Rally and try to raise the entire amount of the quota at that one service, in conjunction with the monthly offerings from the Sunday School for the year.

Each Church and Sunday School should use one or the other of these plans.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson VIII—February 24, 1929.

CHRISTIAN GROWTH.

GOLDEN TEXT: "But grow in the grace and knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."—2 Peter 3:18a.

LESSON: John 1:40-42; Matt. 16:15-18; John 21:15-19; Luke 2:40, 52; Eph. 4:11-16; Phil. 1:6, 9-11; Col. 1:9-11; Heb. 6:1-3.

DEVOTIONAL READING: John 15:1-8.

There was born into the home of the writer of these notes a little over a year ago a baby boy. What a relief it was to know that after all those months of uncertainty and discomfort on the part of the mother, the little one had arrived safely and that the mother had come through the "valley of the shadow" all right. The birth of that boy, the fact that he came into a new world with life in his little body—what a tremendously important event that was! To be born of the flesh is a very significant and important event.

But any parent knows that this is only the beginning. What care that baby boy has required! What work he has caused! What concern he has laid upon the heart of the father and mother! What tremendous issues are involved in that little life! What a challenge to intelligent training and loving care that little boy flings at his parents! Or, let us put the matter in another way: Suppose that after that little boy had come into the world, the father and mother had said in so many words, "Thank God, the little fellow has arrived! It is all over. We can take things easy now. We have done our part." Suppose they had left him to care for himself. Suppose they had simply taken care of his physical necessities. Suppose they give no heed to his training, that they make no provision for his education, that they do not bother with trying to teach him high ideals, that they make no attempt to help him to help himself. One can readily see that in the light of the possibilities of life that there is something after all more important than simply to be born.

Now let us transfer this principle to the matter of the Christian life. There are many people who think that the important, and the all-important thing in the Christian life is to be born again. If only people can be persuaded to "be converted" and to "join the Church," all is well. Christ said, "Ye must be born again," and when a man has been born again, that is all there is to it—thus do many people reason with themselves and with others.

Now, it is absolutely essential that man and women be born again or anew. Except a man be born again or anew or from above, he cannot enter or see the kingdom of heaven, said Jesus. One suspects at times that one thing the matter with so many members of the Church is that they have never been born again. They have never been regenerated. They are still living in the realm of the natural rather than in the realm of the spiritual.

But just as being born in the physical sense is only the beginning and not the end, just so is being born anew in the spiritual sense the beginning and not the end. You cannot make much of a Christian out of a man who has never been born again, who has not experienced in his heart the regenerating and transforming power of the Spirit of the living Christ. But, on the other hand, he is a poor Christian indeed who interprets his Christian life in terms of the fact that was at a certain time born into the kingdom. In other words, conversion is not the ultimate goal in the religious life; it is simply the starting point, the means to an end. The ultimate goal of the Christian life is Christ-like character and conduct. Not babes in Christ, but "a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ" is the goal of the Christian life.

The failure to recognize this central truth of Christianity accounts in large measure for the stunted and dwarfed Christians who are to be found in such large numbers in every Church. The idea of Christian growth has never laid hold upon such people. They have looked upon the Church as the "ark of safety." They have interpreted the Christian life as a finished and completed product, rather than as a never-ending process of growth and development in Christ-likeness. They have never seriously set themselves to the task of putting themselves in that atmosphere and providing themselves with that spiritual food, and resolutely setting themselves to those spiritual exercises which will make for well-rounded, constantly growing Christian character. They have grown but little in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Ministers and Sunday School teachers need to emphasize again and again the fact that Christian growth is not an elective in the Christian life; it is a required subject. Jesus Himself is authority for the principle in its application in our individual lives.

Now, when one thinks of Christian growth he can think of it in terms of growth in the natural world. A seed grows by being in a suitable soil, by getting the proper nourishment, by getting sunshine and moisture and warmth, by being cultivated, by being pruned of all parasitical growths, by being cared for. Of course, the seed must have inherent life in itself. Put an artificial seed in the best soil and give it the best attention and it will never grow. The same principle applies to the Christian life. Let a man have the experience of conversion, then let him put himself in that atmosphere which is congenial to the Christian life, let him attend services of worship, let him nourish his soul on prayer and meditation and Bible reading, let him exercise his soul in active service, let him keep his life open to the spirit of the living and life-giving Christ, and let him do this persistently and insistently and consistently and he will grow; he cannot help growing! A man is not responsible for growth in spiritual life any more than he is responsible for the growth of a seed. But he is responsible for the conditions of growth. Let him fulfill in the spiritual world the simple conditions which foster growth in the natural world and he will grow. And unless he grows, he will die. This is one of the inexorable laws of life.

At the risk of making these notes unduly long, the writer wants to call attention to this principle of growth as illustrated in today's lesson. At first, the disciples simply "followed Jesus." But under His teaching and because of His spirit they "grew" until in that memorable experience at Caesarea Philippi, in the words of Simon Peter, they came to see that He was indeed "the Christ, the Son of the living God." But that was not enough. Jesus would have them understand that the Christian life was something more than an understanding of what He was, to say nothing of simply following Him. In the incident as related by John, He suggests that the ultimate test of discipleship is to love Him so sincerely and so passionately that the whole life overflows in service to one's fellow-men.

It is not amiss to remind the readers of these notes that we are in the midst of Lent. Whether we be members of those communions which observe Lent or not, we overlook a supreme opportunity if during this period we do not deepen and enrich our devotional life and avail ourselves of the splendid opportunity for Christian growth which the Lenten period both suggests and makes possible.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, February 24, 1929.

TOPIC: "Why is Christianity the Only Adequate Religion?"—Acts 4:8-12; John 3:16.

Some Bible Hints.

Christianity satisfies because it fills us with the Spirit, with heaven itself, with power to live the Christ-life (v. 8).

Christianity is the only religion that has a personal Saviour. It is more than a doctrine, it is trust in a person (v. 10).

Christianity offers not merely paradise, but salvation—release from the power of sin now. It offers forgiveness, joy, health, wholeness (v. 12).

Christianity alone reveals a personal God of love, who gives Himself for our salvation (v. 16).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Christianity is known by its fruits. It lifts believers to higher levels of living, and it lifts nations as well. Compare America and China, for example.

The God described by Jesus, a loving Father, is the only God revealed in any religion who wins at once our acceptance. You can worship such a God and no other.

Christianity is the only religion that sets up God Himself as a model to be followed. "Be ye perfect as your Father in heaven is perfect." The meaning is to be perfect in loving.

Christ's ideals as revealed in the Sermon on the Mount appeal to the moral sense of mankind. They are ultimate practical truth. No other religion makes such an appeal.

A Few Illustrations.

At the World's Parliament of Religions in Chicago, when representatives of many faiths expounded their religious beliefs, Christianity shone like a star. It had the best in all other religions and none of their weaknesses.

There is much truth in Buddhism, but there is something wrong with a system which, like this system, produces worshipers of cows. A religion is known by its fruits.

Buddhism, which claims to be tolerant, persecutes those who confess Christ, often driving them from home and family. Would Christ, who turned the other cheek, do this?

Mohammedanism is an aggressive religion, but it does not build hospitals, foster civilization, establish benevolences. Christianity alone does that.

To Think About.

What is the greatest feature of Christianity? How does the teaching about the love of God raise Christianity above other religions?

Why should we respect the good in other religions?

RESOLUTIONS OF APPRECIATION.

Whereas, Miss Pattie Coghill has been associated with the Board of Religious Education for several years, and has throughout these years, both by her character and by her diligence and efficiency, greatly contributed to the work of Christian education throughout our Convention; and

Whereas, she has done such constructive work as has laid the foundation for those who may follow her; and

Whereas, the unstinted way in which she has given herself to her work has made such demands upon her physical and nervous energy that her health was threatened and she felt constrained to give up the work which she loved:

Be it therefore resolved, That we, the members of the board, hereby express the grateful appreciation both of our board and of the Convention which we represent, of the sterling character, the efficiency in service and the devotion to duty of Miss Coghill; that we express our appreciation of her fine spirit of co-operation and her constructive suggestions in regard to the work which she believed to be so vital; that we commend her for her fine work both in the field and in our summer school.

Be it resolved also, That we hereby express the hope that Miss Coghill will build up that reserve of physical and nervous energy which will restore her to abounding health; and that we hereby express the wish that in the work to which she has been called she may find fruitfulness and abiding satisfaction.

Be it further resolved that a copy of these resolutions be sent to Miss Coghill, a copy sent to THE SUN for publication, and a copy kept on file in the records of the board.

WASHINGTON'S ANNIVERSARY.

Congress has authorized appropriations of $4,500,000 for a nation-wide celebration in 1932 of the 200th anniversary of the birth of George Washington. The commission which has charge of the proposed celebration met recently to formulate definite plans for this event.

As part of the proposed celebration, the meeting adopted a resolution calling for the construction of a suitable highway to connect Mount Vernon, Va., the home and burial place of Washington, with the south end of the Arlington Memorial Bridge now being constructed in the city of Washington over the Potomac River.

The meeting also adopted a resolution for the publication of all of George Washington's papers, except his diary which has already been published. Another resolution called for the restoration of "Wakefield," birthplace of George Washington. It provided further for the appointment of a committee of three to consider plans submitted by the National Wakefield Association and army engineers for restoration of this property, which is owned jointly by the United States and the association.

President Coolidge, chairman of the commission, presided at the meeting. Others present were Senator Fess, of Ohio, vice-chairman; Senator Capper, of Kansas; Senator Glass, of Virginia; Senator Bayard, of Delaware; Representative Tilson, of Connecticut; Representative Byrns, of Tennessee; the Vice-President, Charles G. Dawes; C. Bascom Slemph, of Virginia; the Speaker of the House, Nicholas Longworth; William Tyler Page, of Maryland, Clerk of the House and executive secretary of the commission, and Mrs. Sherman, of Denver, Colo.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

TOUCHING JESUS.

"If I touch but His garment I shall be made whole."—Mark 5:28.

Did you ever touch Jesus? Not many do; at least they do not realize it. Six hundred thousand Israelites thronged Him for the promised land, but only a few got there. Hundreds thronged Him, elbowing Him all the way, but His virtue went out only to one who touched Him. What was that touch? It was the unqualified faith of the seeker. "He that cometh unto the Lord must believe that he is, and a rewarder of them that seek Him." How about that time you prayed and you knew in your soul that God was in you, and you had an immediate answer? How about those holier moments perhaps listening to a sermon or to a good song, and you resolved you would live a better life? How about those hours awake in bed when you dreamed of the Christ-like life and visions of spiritual significance dawned in your soul? Touching Jesus.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we desire to touch Thee in that vital way that cleanses us from sin and all soul impurities, and endows with Thy virtue. Grant to us to shut out the world and talk with Thee until we shall find. Amen.

TUESDAY.

A NEW CREATURE.

"If any man be in Christ he is a new creature."—2 Cor. 5:17.

At the brook Jobbok Jacob struggled all night with a heavenly spirit. At the break of day he won. He decided to give up himself, trust God and take the consequences. He decided to go back to Esau and set his bad past straight and spend the rest of his life straightening out his own crooked ways. At that moment his soul came to a rest and peace and he was no longer Jacob, but Israel. Heretofore life had been a living for him, and no matter how he got it. Now it is "Penial," which means "the face of God."

That is how God makes folks over who surrender to Him.

Prayer.—Our Father, in heaven, draw us to Thee, that heaven's perfections and glories for this world may lead us on to its achievements in every experience until we shall be with Him forever there. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

GETTING AWAY FROM SELF.

"I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto Him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and in Thy sight; I am no more worthy to be called Thy Son, make me as one of Thy hired servants."

"He that hearkeneth unto counsel is wise."—Prov. 12:15.

"Who walketh wisely he shall be delivered."—Prov. 28:26.

As a child runs in at meal-time and flops down at the table, face and hands all dirty from the play of the day, calling for something to eat, so is a man who is engrossed in the material interest of the world and his own satisfactions. But as mother leads him to the mirror and says, "Look, what so you need?" so is he who faces Christ—he soon sees the wrong of his way, and "beats" it to the place of washing.

Not many years ago a monument was unveiled in New York representing Washington in prayer. This was taken from that experience of his when all hope of re-enforcements were gone and he said his re-enforcement was God. It was at this time the great general was often seen upon his knees.

The richest moment in any man's life is when he feels so poor that there is nothing to do but to go to God.

Prayer.—Our Father, and our God, we do realize more and more that all the gains of this world are naught without Thee. We pray for a daily submission and surrender to Thee. Amen.

THURSDAY.

EAGLES AND GOD'S WAY.

"As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings: so the Lord did lead them."—Deut. 32:11, 12.

That is just how they do it, and that is just how God does it.

We are told that when young eaglets are old enough, the mother bird destroys the nest and shoves the little birds out into space to make them fly. That is her method for teaching them to fly and to awaken in them a consciousness of their own power.

God does not drop His children and leave them to fall. He gets under their fall and bears them up. When the "bottom dropped out" with Jacob and the prodigal son, they would have gladly given all that they had ever possessed for peace to their accusing conscience. Their experience, however, seemed to be a necessary one to bring them to their senses, and just that was necessary to give God a chance to get under those men and bring them in to His service. God stands at the door of every heart ready to bless, but He never makes the way so easy as to come in unwelcomed. We all must come to where we say, "I will arise"—and make all things right.

Prayer.—Dear Father, in the name of Jesus our Lord, we pray for humility. Awaken in us a deep realization and consciousness of Thyself, and of our debt to Thee. Slaken not Thy Spirit with us until we are fully Thine. Amen.

FRIDAY.

SOMETHING NEW.

"Behold all things are become new."—2 Cor. 5:17.

When the prodigal decided that he would live in harmony with his father's house and do right, he was a new man. All things were new to him.

When Jacob decided to go back to Esau and make his past right and serve God, he was a new man.

When conscience has made itself heard, God gives one a new life; he speaks in a new language, as it were—doctrine (truth) seems new, commandments are new, he has put on the new man, living is new, and all things are new. The face that was harsh and forbidding is now the expression of kindness and love.

After Jacob's change, he blushed to say his name was Jacob, which means "deceiver," "supplanter." But now it was Israel, which means "Striver"—"I have striven and am striving with the Lord."

Prayer.—Dear Father our God, in the Saviour's name we come to Thee for succor. Remember us and give us blessed experiences with Thee, that we may know we are Thine. Amen.

SATURDAY.

EVIDENCES OF REGENERATION.

"As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God."

"The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God."

"The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, self-control; against such there is no law."

And added to these is love of His law, obedience to law, love of righteousness, hatred for sin and all unrighteousness. A new-born soul may not have all these, but he will have some of them to some degree and all will come as he cultivates them.

Prayer.—Our Father, forgive us all our iniquities, heal us of all our diseases, redeem us from destruction, crown us with lovingkindness and tender mercies, oh satisfy us and reunite us daily. Amen.

SUNDAY.

CHANGED INTO ANOTHER MAN.

"And Thou . . . shalt be changed into another man."—1 Sam. 10:6.

Human nature had asserted itself and Israel clamored for a king. Saul was given and Samuel turned to him, saying, "Thou . . . shalt be turned into another man."

Saul's fitness to be king and be of special service depended upon the spirit of the Lord coming upon him.

A true child of God seeks the realm of his highest usefulness and joy, and he must be endowed with power from on high in order to possess the heart-life that is the issue with us in all things. The new life means especially two things to every believer—deliverance from self and dedication to God.

As a result, the life gains a new capacity. The capacity gets power, the power goes out and works.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we come to Thee, asking for the new man to be in us, that the man that is may surrender to the man that ought to be. Amen.

APPOINTMENTS.

Rev. E. C. Fry, D. D., our missionary from Japan, now on furlough, will speak on "Missions" or preach at the following Churches: Henderson, N. C., Wednesday night, February 20th; Liberty (Vance), Thursday night, February 21st; Fuller's Chapel, Friday night, February 22nd; Pleasant Union, Sunday A. M., February 24th; Pleasant Hill, Sunday night, February 24th; Durham, N. C., Wednesday night, February 27th; Sanford, N. C., Friday night, March 1st; Burlington, N. C., Sunday 10 and 11 A. M., March 3rd; First Church, Greensboro, N. C., Sunday night, March 3rd; Palm Street, Greensboro, N. C., Sunday 3:30 P. M., March 3rd; Reidsville, N. C., Monday night, March 4th; Elon College, Thursday A. M., chapel services, March 5th; Shallow Ford, Tuesday night, March 5th; Danville, Va., Wednesday night, March 6th.

If SUN readers in the vicinity, in addition to the pastor's announcement, will make these appointments known, it will be appreciated.

Dr. E. C. Fry, returned missionary from Japan, can only be with us a very limited time. I have made the above schedule from such information as I had on hand. If other Churches can arrange to have him with dates named, Dr. Fry will be glad to go. Those congregations who hear him will be fortunate indeed. We only wish he could visit all our Churches.

Secretary.

OBITUARIES

KELLY.

Percy Kelly, Jonesboro, N. C., age 23, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Walker Kelly, a devoted son, faithful member of the Presbyterian Church, active Mason, industrious citizen, enemy to no one, a Christian gentleman. In his going, the writer grieves the loss of one of his best friends among young men. B. J. H.

DAWSON.

Miss Nancy Dawson, Sanford, R. F. D., died at 58 years of age. She was a character member, deeply interested and regular attendant at Turner's Chapel Christian Church. Funeral services by the writer and Rev. R. L. Williamson, in the presence of an unusually large congregation of relatives and friends. B. J. H.

LONG.

Mr. Sidney F. Long, Chapel Hill, N. C., died very suddenly in his office in the 68th year of his life. He was a trusted and highly respected employee of the University of North Carolina. For many years he was chief of police of Chapel Hill. His convictions were strong. To him a thing was right or it was wrong. His faith and integrity won for him the lasting esteem of all classes. He was a member of Damascus Christian Church. B. J. H.

THOMAS.

Mrs. Delanaah McIvor Thomas passed from this life at 72 years of age, leaving four sons and three daughters. She was one of those rare saintly characters in whom kindness, thoughtfulness, patience and persistence are so finely and powerfully blended. A very faithful member of the Shallow Well Christian Church. B. J. H.

BLAND.

Mrs. Annie Moore Bland, wife of brother John Bland, passed into the great beyond in the thirty-fifth year of her life, leaving husband and three little children. She had been a member of New Elam Christian Church since childhood, and was ever interested and faithful in the cause of right and a better life. Funeral and burial at New Elam Church. B. J. H.

HIGGS.

Joseph H. Higgs was born June 26, 1877, and died January 14, 1929, making his age, therefore, 51 years, 6 months, and 18 days. He is survived by seven children, his wife having died about ten years ago. The three youngest children are still at home, and will perhaps try to keep the home together without the guiding hand of either father or mother—a sad situation, even though they are good children. Bro. Higgs was a member of Newport Christian Church and a highly respected man. Funeral services at St. Paul's Lutheran Church, near his home, January 16, 1929. A. W. ANDES.

HELBERT.

Lycurgus Sylvester Helbert was born September 1, 1857, and departed this life at his home in Harrisonburg, Va., January 14, 1929, at the age of 71 years, 4 months and 13 days. He was a highly respected man, a good citizen, and a kind husband and father. Surviving are his widow, two sons and one daughter, four grandchildren and two great-grandchildren. Part of the family belong to Bethlehem Christian Church, and the funeral services were held there January 16, 1929, and interment at New Market. The writer was assisted in the service by Rev. Joe French. A. W. ANDES.

MURRAY.

Willie Scott Murray was born in the month of April, 1873, and died in Durham, N. C., December 31, 1928, age 55 years and 8 months. He was converted several years ago, and, I am told, lived a real Christian life from that time till his death. For twelve years he had been a great sufferer, and for the past year or two his sufferings were intense, but these he bore patiently. The deceased is survived by his companion and nine children, and one brother, Lewis Murphy, of Leaksville, N. C.; two sisters, Mrs. Pattie Loftis, of Leaksville, and Mrs. Scott Tuck, of Finchley, Va. The funeral services were held at the home in West Durham, N. C., and the burial was in Union Cemetery, Virgilina, Va., on the afternoon of January 1st. C. E. NEWMAN.

WHITT.

Miss Polly Whitt, daughter of James and Minerva Whitt, was born November, 1855, and died January 15, 1928, age 73 years and 2 months. Early in life she professed faith in her Saviour and united with Mt. Cana M. E. Church. In 1911 she and her sister, Betty, joined Liberty Christian Church, Nathalie, Va., where her membership remained till death. She is survived by six brothers—James, Tommie, of Nathalie, Va.; Henry, Joe and Robert, of Virgilina, Va., and Lewis, of Petersburg, Va. Her brother, John, and sister, Betty, preceded her to the spirit land by a few years.

After the death of Miss Whitt's mother several years ago, the old home was then broke up, and the remainder of her days she made her home with her brothers. She was of a quiet, kind disposition and loved by all. She will be missed by her loved ones and many friends. Her parting message to them was she was ready and willing to go on to her heavenly home. C. E. NEWMAN.

WHITTEN.

Rayford B. Whitten was born January 27, 1853, in Coweta County, Ga., and died at LaGrange, Ga., January 18, 1929. He was seventy-six years of age less nine days. He married, in 1887, Miss Mary E. Pitts, of Troup County, Ga. She preceded him to the spirit world in February, 1919. Five children are left to mourn their loss—Mrs. Lola Phillips, Mrs. Felicia Brown, LaGrange, Ga.; Mrs. Lizzie B. Wetcher, Miami, Fla.; Mrs. Dovie Patterson, Milledgeville, Ga., and Rev. R. A. Whitten, Elton College, N. C.

Bro. Whitten spent most of his life on the farm near Roanoke. He moved into Roanoke, where he lived about ten years. After his wife died, he made his home with his daughter in LaGrange till his death. He was a loyal member of the Baptist Church, and died in the triumph of a living faith. Funeral services were conducted from the home by his pastor, Rev. W. P. Cofield, assisted by the writer. His body was laid to rest by his wife in the cemetery at Roanoke, Ala., to await the resurrection of the just. May God comfort the bereaved. G. H. VEAZEY.

G. H. VEAZEY.

SWINT.

W. L. Swint was born December 12, 1860, and died January 23, 1929. Mr. Swint grew up in an age when opportunities were not as good as they are in this age. However, he prepared himself for the teaching profession and taught quite a number of schools in his younger days. He was always a busy man. He earned his living by honest toil. He had been operating an up-to-date shoe shop for a number of years prior to his death.

In his early manhood he married a good woman, who only lived a short time, leaving their only child at seven weeks of age. Mr. Swint reared this boy as best he could and had made his home with him for the last few years. On November 20, 1928, he took unto himself another wife, Miss Gussie Mae Brumeloe, and he was as happy as any man I ever knew.

He leaves to mourn their loss one sister, one son, one grandchild and his own young wife. Funeral services were conducted

MARSHALL.

John H. Marshall was born October 4, 1862, and died December 15, 1928, age 66 years, 2 months and 11 days. He was married to Jettie Ham October 25, 1883. To this union were born the following children: William D., Charles M., Joe W., and John S. Marshall, who died about five years ago; also Mrs. A. H. Hester and Mrs. E. F. Johnson, all of Salem Chapel community. His wife preceded him in death about thirty years ago. He did not remarry but reared his children alone, acting the double part of father and mother.

His life was characterized by honesty, industry and thriftiness. He joined Salem Chapel Christian Church when about thirty years old and remained a member till death. In his last years he lived much alone in his quiet way on his farm. His was the quiet life. He spoke slowly after thinking slowly. He was a man of strong convictions and great determination. The funeral services were conducted from the home and Salem Chapel, where the remains sleep beneath beautiful flowers. There was a large attendance of kindred and friends. Services were conducted by the pastor.

JAS. L. FOSTER.

GOODE.

Mrs. Ida Chaudler Goode, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Chandler, was born in Halifax County, Va., on February 13, 1896, and died in Person County, N. C., January 15, 1929, age 32 years, 11 months and two days. When a young girl, she professed faith in Christ and joined Mt. Cana M. E. Church. Later she transferred her membership to Union Christian Church, Virgilina, Va.

In 1916 she was married to David Goode, of Virgilina, Va., who survives her with two children, David and Annie. Sister Goode had been in poor health for several years. In recent months her sufferings increased. She bore her affliction patiently. Her neighbors spoke in the most complimentary terms of her high Christian character. Her parting message to loved ones and friends was, "I am going home."

The funeral was from her Church at Virgilina, Va., on Saturday P. M., January 19, 1929, conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. E. R. Harris, of the Baptist Church, and the burial was in the town cemetery. The high esteem in which she was held was shown by the crowd of relatives and friends at her funeral and burial. The floral designs were beautiful. Many hearts are sorrowing, but not as those without hope, of the separation ending when this life is over.

FULTON.

Mrs. Martha Vaughn Fulton was born April 26, 1855, and died January 13, 1929, age 73 years, 8 months and 17 days. She was married to J. Wyatt Fulton September 1, 1872. To this union were born the following children: T. P., Mrs. Sallie F. Vance, William W., who died at the age of 23 years; Walter L., J. Frank, Anna F., who died at the age of 36 years; Mrs. Martha B. Hester, who died at age of 32 years; Ernest W., Mrs. Byrd Hester, Mrs. Jennie Burke and Mrs. Fleta McKinney, of Winston Salem, N. C., with whom the deceased had lived for some years. One brother survives, Mr. W. L. Vaughn, of Walnut Cove, N. C.

In the above union, the families of Salem Chapel section were largely made akin. This large family was reared on the farm near Belews Creek, Stokes County, N. C. In early life she joined the M. E. Church, but later moved her membership to Salem Chapel Christian Church with her husband and remained a loyal member till death. For some years she suffered, but after an operation she enjoyed life till about twenty-four hours before death came. Her going was sudden and unexpected. The messenger found her in comfort, waiting and ready. She had the privilege of visiting her Church twice last year.

She was a good Christian woman, gentle, loving and motherly to all with whom she associated. In her latter years, loving children administered to her needs, and acts of love and sympathy were given her day by day. The beauty of her Christian life was but reflected in the beauty and fragrance of the lovely flowers banked by the casket.

The funeral services were held from the home of Mr. and Mrs. McKinney, Winston-Salem, and Salem Chapel Church, and her body sleeps beneath a great bank of flowers to await the resurrection morning. The attendance was very large. The funeral services were conducted by the pastor.

COOK—CLAPP.

Mr. Chalmer R. Clapp and Miss Leola Cook were united in marriage by the writer at his home at Elon College, N. C., Sunday, January 13th, at high noon, in the presence of a few relatives and close friends. The scribe, with the young pair and their friends, drove to the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Cook, where a splendid dinner was in readiness, awaiting their arrival. These are splendid young people of the Apple's Chapel Church and community, and many friends wish them perpetual happiness in their wedded life. They will reside at present in the home of the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Eli Clapp.

SHIFLETT—CRAWFORD.

Mr. Russell Shiflett and Miss Rhoda A. Crawford, both of Greene County, Va., were quietly united in marriage on January 21, 1929, at Swift Run, Va., in the presence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Moses S. Crawford, and a few friends. The bride is the organist of the High Point Christian Church. Ceremony by the writer. May their lives be happy and useful.

B. J. EARP.

PATTERSON—TAYLOR.

Mr. Millard Patterson and Miss Alma Taylor were united in marriage at the home of the writer Monday evening, December 24, 1928, with only a few of their immediate friends present. Mr. and Mrs. Patterson are two of the beloved young people of our young people's department of Third Avenue Christian Church. Their many friends wish them a long, happy and prosperous life.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE

WADLEY, ALABAMA

An Accredited Junior College

Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

Piedmont Junior College is training some of the best stock of America for Christian leadership, to be used by the nation and the world. Here is a great challenge and asset for students who wish to prepare themselves to serve in a worth-while way. The new Administration Building will be completed by time school opens this fall.

THE CHANNEL TUNNEL.—

The British Parliament is again confronted with the question of building a tunnel under the English Channel, and thus connecting the British Isles with France. There is a marked division of opinion as to the desirability of such a connection. Business men in general seem to be in favor of the project. On the other hand, there are those who fear that in case of a future war the tunnel would prove a source of grave danger to England. In all probability, the enterprise will not be undertaken in the immediate future, but eventually it is likely to be done. The world moves ever closer together, and the fears of men must give place to the faith that builds for a larger future.

CITIZENSHIP AND THE CONSTITUTION.—

Louis Werner, a native of Germany, has been refused naturalization as an American citizen. Werner was making application to become a citizen of this country, but witnesses testified that in a Baltimore barber shop he had expressed the wish "to see the day when there would be a still in every American home." His request to become an American citizen was refused. If disregard for the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution makes a foreigner an undesirable candidate for citizenship, what is the status of the American citizen who flaunts the provisions and purposes of that same amendment? This is a question which deserves serious consideration from millions of American people.

CONSIDERING CHURCH UNION.—

On January 30th, in the city of Pittsburgh, two significant meetings were held in the William Penn Hotel. In one room, representatives of the Baptist and Disciples Churches were met for the purpose of discussing the possibility of union between these two great religious bodies, which appear to have so much in common. At the same time, in another room of the hotel, were gathered representatives from the Methodist and Presbyterian Churches, who were discussing the possibility of union between their respective organizations. Outstanding leaders from all sections of these communions were represented in the meeting. It is indeed remarkable to see the developments that are crowding one upon the other, which point to an ever-increasing sentiment for union among the followers of Christ.

A member of the Disciples Church, in commenting on the proposed union between his denomination and the Baptist Church, said: "Is there any reason why these two denominations should not merge? There may be reasons, but in the light of current Protestant trends, these should not count. Protestantism must either unite or perish. Denominationalism has run its day. Intelligent people will no longer support it. The things that divide are two trivial. There are traditions, of course, but are traditions dearer than the progress of God's reign?"

QUEER TURNS IN POLITICS.—

We have long been familiar with the saying that truth is stranger than fiction, and it seems at times as if politics were determined to furnish renewed instances. This new and strange turn is manifested in the appointment of a diplomatic representative to Washington from Nicaragua. The new Nicaraguan minister to this country is none other than Senor Juan Batista Sacasa. When the United States intervened by sending the marines to Nicaragua, there was a conflict on between the Liberal and the Conservative parties of the government. The President of the little republic had died. Senor Sacasa, a representative of the Liberal party, was the Vice-President. He claimed the right which was provided by the constitution to succeed to the presidency. The Nicaraguan Congress met in special session and elected Senor Diaz, a Conservative, to the presidency. The followers of the two contending candidates for the honor prepared to settle the issue by an appeal to force of arms. The United States intervened, sent American marines to Nicaragua, drove out Sacasa and firmly established Diaz as President. When Diaz's term of office expired, the marines were still there, and to them was delegated the task of seeing that an orderly election should be held, in which the people might express their real choice for national officers. The election was held, the conservatives were defeated at the polls, and the liberals were elected to office. The new Liberal President has rewarded Sacasa by appointing him Nicaraguan minister to Washington. The man whom the marines deprived of a chance to rule is now the official representative of his country at the American capital. In the meantime, the American marines are still in Nicaragua, and some of them continue to be killed.

THE ROMAN QUESTION SETTLED.—

The provisions of the political treaty between the holy see of the Catholic Church and the government of Italy are of considerable interest. They are about what might have been expected by one who was at all familiar with the outlines of the controversy. The pope is recognized as the absolute ruler over the properties that have been in his hands during all the years of the controversy. It gives to the pope an evidence of his claim to be a temporal ruler. Besides the recognition of the temporal authority of the pope, the Roman Church receives little save the eighty-seven and a half million dollars which the Italian government agrees to pay as indemnity for the losses which the Church has sustained. But for Mussolini and the Fascisti government of Italy, it doubtless has far-reaching political significance. It brings the support of the Roman Catholic Church to strengthen the power and increase the prestige of the Fascist party. The Roman Catholic faith has been all along the established State religion of Italy.

The article dealing with the teaching of religion is suggestive of the entire spirit of the agreement. It is as follows: "The teaching of religion becomes compulsory, not only in the elementary schools but also in the secondary schools, according to the program established in the accord between the holy see and Italy. Italy recognizes Catholic organizations forming part of Italian Catholic action, which, according to instructions of the holy see, must keep their activity outside of any political party and under the immediate control of the hierarchy of the Church for spreading and applying Catholic principles."

BIG NAVIES AND WAR TALK.—

Have you been reading anything in the papers and magazines about the possibility of war between the United States and England. There have been many articles recently dealing with this theme. Some were written by Americans and some were written by Englishmen. To some of these writers, war between these two nations is considered unthinkable and impossible; others are of the opinion that a series of unfavorable situations might easily bring about war between the two largest English-speaking nations. What is calling forth this weighing of the possibilities of war? There is no grave issue pending between England and the United States. There is no situation that is calculated to arouse jealousy or dis-sension. Two momentous issues—that of the British debt to the American government and that of the proposed Franco-British alliance—have been amicably settled within the last few years, without even a suggestion of strained relations arising.

Whenever there is a proposal for a substantial increase in the fighting strength of the United States Navy, there always arises this discussion about the possibility of war with some other nation. A few years ago, when a bill was pending to make large appropriations for building battle-ships, it was the possibility of war with Japan that was used to make the American people believe that it was expedient to spend millions of dollars in providing a bigger navy. It is not at all necessary for alarming conditions to exist which are the reasonable basis for such war talk. There are always situations that are potential sources of war, if nations or people are looking for occasions of war. But it is also true that such situations can always be settled peaceably and satisfactory if the nations involved desire peace. Such discussions focus the national consciousness upon war. They engender suspicion and hatred, and do more to precipitate war than anything else possibly could.

NOTES-PERSONALS

THE CHRISTIAN SUN learns with sorrow that Mr. J. A. Williams, of Franklin, Va., is quite ill at his home. The latest report is that he is improving. We hope and pray for his complete and speedy recovery.

Rev. C. E. Geringer, Wakefield, Va., is planning to attend the conference for rural ministers at Vanderbilt University this spring. This is one of the most important conferences on Church work in the United States. We hope that several of our ministers will go.

Dr. E. C. Fry, home on furlough from Japan, is now in the Southern Christian Convention and will be within the bounds of the Convention until March 6th. Our people are delighted to have a visit from this veteran missionary, and we are sure his visits will do the cause of missions great service.

There has been so much sickness in our Churches and among our ministry that, during the first two months of the calendar year, our Church work has materially suffered. Reports are to the effect that the "flu" epidemic is improving in the country, and we hope and pray that this means a general increase in the efficiency of our Church work. So far, no minister in the Southern Christian Convention has passed away. We hope that all of them will be fully restored to health, and that the Lord will bless and prosper their efforts.

THE SUN LETTER.

The circulation manager has set apart the 27th day of February as a day to show our appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN SUN by mailing in our renewals and getting new subscribers. Fifteen hundred letters have been mailed to subscribers, asking that they help to make this a red-letter day by mailing in their renewal and a new subscriber if possible. It would be a fine thing if every reader of THE CHRISTIAN SUN would read the little label on the top margin of the first page of the paper bearing the subscriber's name and giving the date the subscription expires; and if the subscription has expired, mail your renewal. It will only cost you two dollars to make us happy, and then THE SUN will shine in your home a whole year. We want to hear from fifteen hundred subscribers by February 27th. If you will send in your renewal, others will, too. Don't fail us.

FRANKLIN, VA.

Our Church has extended an invitation to Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein, of Dover, Del., to conduct its evangelistic campaign. He is to be with us April 21st to May 3rd.

Dr. E. C. Fry brought us a fine message on missions Sunday night, February 17th.

Our young people enjoyed a delightful Valentine party given by the Holland Christian Young People on Friday, February 15th.

Many of the former Elon students of Franklin plan to attend the Elon get-together banquet at the Suffolk Christian Church Friday, February 22nd.

Rev. R. D. Stevenson, of the Baptist Church, of Franklin, and Joseph W. Fix, of the Christian Church, exchanged pulpits on Sunday night, February 10th. There is a fine spirit of co-operation between the Churches of Franklin.

JOSEPH W. FIX.

EDUCATION A CONQUEST.

One of nature's greatest laws seems to be, "Least of all seeds, greatest of all harvests." The first acorn had wrapped up in it all the oak trees on the globe today. All life comes from microscopic beginnings. There is nothing small in nature. The microscope reveals as great a world below as the telescope above. All of nature's laws govern the smallest atoms, and a single drop of water is a miniature ocean.

Drop by drop is instilled into the mind the poison which blasts many a precious life. Moment by moment the soul is equipped for the proper discharge of life's greatest duties and responsibilities.

How often do we hear people say, "Oh, it's only ten minutes, or twenty minutes till dinner-time; there's no use doing any thing." Or to use other similar expressions. Why, it is just these little spare bits of time, these odd moments which most people throw away that men like who have risen to gain their education, write their books and make themselves immortal.

If you think you "can't" improve your education and rise to a higher position in your profession, then you can't, and this is not meant for you. Grant could not find the word "can't" in his dictionary. Napoleon said, "Impossible is the adjective of fools." If you think you are too old to improve your situation in life by further study, then this is not intended for you. Arkwright was fifty years of age when he began to learn English grammar and improve his writing and spelling. Franklin was fifty before he began to study science and philosophy. Milton, in his blindness, was past fifty when he sat down to complete his world-known epic, and Scott, at fifty-five, took up his pen to redeem an enormous liability. "Yet, I am learning," said Michael Angelo, when past seventy.

There is no place in life where we should stop our study, and there is no young person in our day who desires an education and wants it bad enough that cannot acquire it.

S. L. BEOUGHER.

"AND LO! I AM WITH YOU."

It cannot be otherwise than that God has kept His promise, because ever and anon I have felt His Spirit as I have gone about testifying to the goodness of His Son, Jesus Christ, our Saviour. Last night I had the privilege of speaking for thirty minutes to a large room packed with men and boys at banquet tables in the First Christian Church of Troy, and in the faces of those men and boys I could see the reflection of that self-same Saviour. As I tried to speak of the finer things which challenge the hearts of men and mold the hopes of boys, I found ever a ready hearing, and especially when I spoke directly of the challenge of Christ Jesus for the very best in their lives. It was a father and son banquet, and as I occasionally mentioned men or boys of the South I could see from their countenances how united in Christ all true Christians are. As often as I see things which stir my heart, I think of readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and wish they, too, might know that folks up here are thinking and acting bravely under the leadership of Him who said, "And lo! I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." And so, whether it be the chronological end or the geographical end, Jesus our Saviour is there.

Last Sunday I saw a large congregation gathered in the First Christian Church of Dayton, Ohio. Several of the leaders of our Convention were there, and some of our finest pastors. They were there to mark the removing of that congregation from that place to one that is larger and better. From Dr. Warren H. Denison, who recited briefly the history of the First Christian Church, I learned that it had been preaching its broad, brotherly, Christian principles in Dayton for nearly a century and a quarter; that editors, authors and writers of our denomination had for years and years worshiped in its pews; and that many of the history-making moments of our great denomination had been planned and promulgated from within its walls. Being in the headquarters city, it has housed many of our Conventions and General Board sessions, and denominational secretaries have felt in it a new power with which they might go out to less favored Churches and inspire them to better things. Mrs. O. W. Powers spoke of how the women of the Church had entertained the best and greatest of our leaders, and therefore kept abreast of the foremost thought in our denomination. Through them they heard of the splendid successes and achievements of the South and learned of our finest Churches and ministers throughout that great section. Dr. W. P. Minton told of the Church's missionary activity, and Rev. A. W. Sparks spoke on the relation of First Church to the denomination. A Church that has stood the tests of one hundred and twenty years in the very heart of the denomination can measure up to the requirement expressed in Edgar A. Guest's "It takes a heap o' livin' in a house to make it home."

Rev. W. T. Scott was present to tell how the First Christian Church, through one of its organized classes, began a mission in the Walnut Hills section of the city which later came to be Walnut Hills Christian Church. Rev. Clark A. Denison was present, and told much the same story of how the pastor and members of the First Christian Church had started a work which is now the Crown Point Christian Church of Dayton. Rev. Edwin B. Flory was present and spoke of the great number of members which had gone from the First Christian Church to the Riverdale Christian Church, of which he is pastor, and which, by the way, celebrates its fifth anniversary tomorrow and hopes to have seven hundred present for the occasion. It was interesting to notice that four of the eight preachers on the platform were at one time pastors of Churches in Norfolk, Va. How closely we are related after all!

THE CHRISTIAN ANNUAL.

"The Annual" has been mailed out to Churches of the several Conferences. It contains the proceedings of the Southern Christian Convention, held in Richmond, Va., May 1-4, 1928; the Woman's Convention, held at the same time and place; the proceedings of the seven Conferences composing the Southern Christian Convention, and in addition it gives the proceedings of Eastern Virginia Christian Missionary Association, O. D. Poythress, president and J. F. Morgan, secretary; Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference, Mrs. M. L. Bryant, president, and Mrs. L. W. Stagg, secretary; North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference, Mrs. C. H. Roland, president, and Mrs. J. J. Henderson, secretary; Woman's Missionary Conference of Alabama, Mrs. M. W. Melton, president, and Mrs. G. L. Stevens, secretary, and Woman's Missionary Conference of the Valley of Virginia, Mrs. A. W. Andes, vice-president, and Mrs. B. F. Frank, secretary.

The proceedings of the missionary societies are printed at the charge of the general publication fund of the Southern Convention, and no copies are sent out to members and officers of the missionary conferences. However, any officer or other person can receive a copy by writing THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Richmond, Va., and enclosing 50 cents, preferably in stamps. The number of copies is limited, and those writing will have preference in order of their requests.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

THE POTTER AND THE CLAY.

By Rev. J. W. Fix, B. D.

"Cannot I do with you as this potter? saith the Lord. Behold, as the clay is in the potter's hand, so are ye in mine hand."—Jer. 18:6.

One of the greatest enemies known to mankind is discouragement. When once Satan pries open the human heart with his wedge of discouragement and allows the other satanic enemies of life enter, he claims the victim for his own. Last week while sitting beside the bed of a good woman, she said, "I could get well physically if it were not for my mental attitude, for I become discouraged at almost anything. When once I become discouraged I give up hopes of recovering. Discouragement comes from illness, from poverty, false friendship, disappointment in love, and from having people take no heed to the wise counsel of leaders. We read in the promises of Jeremiah that he became badly discouraged because the house of Israel would not heed his words of wise prophecy. He had been sent forth to proclaim the words of the Lord. In the 17th chapter of his prophecy he warns them to be obedient to the laws of the Sabbath, but they inclined not their ears to the words of the Lord, and Jeremiah became discouraged. Then the voice of the Lord said unto him in the words of our Scripture lesson: "Jeremiah, arise and go down to the potter's house, and I will cause thee to hear my words." Then Jeremiah went to the potter's house and behold the potter molded a vessel of clay and marred it in his hand as it was nearing completion; then he made another even more beautiful than the first one. Then the words of the Lord spake to Jeremiah, saying, in the words of our text, "Cannot I do with you as this potter? saith the Lord. Behold as the clay is in the potter's hand, so are ye in mine hand."

This bit of prophecy suggests to our thinking three items of interest concerning our lives.

1. God has a plan for each life. As the potter has a pattern for each vessel, so God has a plan for each life. While visiting in one of the large potteries of Ohio, I saw the potter at his wheel. The various vessels molded by his hands differed one from another, but for each one he had a definite plan. The world is full of variation. The stars differ one from another. The flowers differ and men are all different. God planned that the rose bush produce roses, and the fig trees figs. He planned for the birds to fly in the air and the fish to inhabit the water; He planned for man a definite work, and a different work for each man. To some he gave the gift of prophecy, some teaching, some preaching, etc. In this plan for each individual life each man is to be himself. Imitation is unnatural and does not tend toward carrying out His purpose. Sometimes we find it hard to discover God's plan, but, nevertheless, He is anxious to reveal it. In the hands of Pilate, the Master said: "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world." In like manner, each man is born into the world for some distinct service which he can render better than any one else. God planned that Moses should be a leader and a law-maker. He planned that David should be a king and a psalmist. He planned that Jeremiah should be a prophet. He has a plan for you.

2. Man may mar God's plan for his life. Man is made in God's image. He is given the gift and ability to think and to reason. Ofttimes he fails to use his best judgment in the fulfillment of God's plan for his life. He mars the plan even as the potter mars the vessel. I knew a popular chautauqua lecturer who use to create clay models as his part of the entertaining and instructive program. Sometimes he would reveal to his audience the fact that the clay would not produce great figures because it was marred by certain defiling objects. From the mass of molding material he would draw forth a bottle of whiskey, a pack of cigarettes, a pair of dice, a number of coins, a deck of cards, etc., and explain that these little things went toward marring his plan for producing clay models of great men. So we often allow bad habits, dissipation, indifference, and lawlessness to mar God's plan for us.

Not only do individuals mar God's plan, but great nations often fall short of fulfilling His highest expectations. Ancient Rome marred His plan, and Rome fell. Modern Germany marred the plan of the designer, and she is paying the humiliating price of defeat.

Both the land of Israel and the prophet Jeremiah were tending toward the downward grade in being disrespectful toward God's plan. Israel disobeyed the words of prophecy and Jeremiah allowed himself to become discouraged. As the prophet saw the potter mar the clay as it neared perfection, he saw his own life and work in the analogy. He heard the voice of God saying, "O house of Israel, cannot I do with you as this potter?"

3. God can reshape the lives we mar. As the potter takes the marred clay and remakes it into a beautiful vessel, even so God may take our sinful lives and convert them into usefulness and beauty. Jeremiah took new hope when he heard the Lord say unto him, "Behold, as the clay is in the potter's hand, so are ye in mine hand." God, through Christ, takes men that are indifferent and marred and makes them into vessels that are fit for kingdom service. He has been doing this for ages and ages. His purpose runs throughout eternity. Years ago, he took the humanic clay of a Nazarene and molded him into the greatest of men. He reshaped the life of Simon, the son of Jonas. He made him to be Peter, the foundation of the Church and the famous preacher of Pentecost. He reached down, and with His molding hands, shaped Saul of Tarsus, then an enemy to Christianity and the Church, into Paul the saint and writer of the world's greatest and most illuminating epistles. He took that piece of Hebrew clay that was marred by selfishness and designed the world's greatest missionary and preacher. He may take you and me, though sinful and unworthy we be, and create within us clean hearts and noble ideals. His creative possibilities are unlimited. So let us yield our lives as we sing—

"Have Thine own way, Lord! Have Thine own way!"

Thou art the Potter; I am the clay.

Mold me and make me after Thy will,
While I am waiting, yielded and still."

BRO. ALLRED'S FIELD.

I was blessed with the privilege of meeting with the Christian Church people at Biscoe on the second Sunday in February at 3 o'clock, and ordaining two deacons. It was a pleasure to see how earnest that small band is working. The secretary suggested that we see what we could raise on our quota for missions in the small number that were at that business meeting. They pledged so near the quota that I am sure it will be finished. They are doing a wonderful work there, and deserve credit. They have a nice building with extra rooms for Sunday School. It is a brick-veneered building. They are having a good school now, with between fifty and sixty on the roll. The Lord can use us if we will let Him. We want the prayers of the Christian people, that this Church may be a soul-winning Church. I also think that our Pleasant Ridge Church will reach its quota for missions. The Church at High Point will do the best they can on missions. If any one will watch THE SUN he can see what High Point Church is doing. Then, our little Church at Shady Grove that has been neglected is going to do something for missions and the Orphanage. They are giving once a month to the Orphanage, and they will give once a month for missions I think. May the Lord help us to encourage people and not to criticise them.

JOHN M. ALLRED.

Shall We Share the Gospel with Others? IF SO, TO WHAT EXTENT?

One million, seven hundred thousand souls in Japan and Porto Rico alone are depending upon us. If we of the Christian denomination do not share with them the Gospel, they will never get it. February and March are "Foreign Mission Months" in the Southern Christian Convention. What will the answer be from us as individuals, Sunday Schools and Churches? We are depending upon each and every one to do his or her best in obedience to the command of our Lord, "Go ye."

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

IN SUNNY FLORIDA.

Orlando, Fla., Feb. 16, 1929.

Edward W. Bok, of the Curtiss Publishing Company, has made a distinct contribution to Florida, to the United States and to mankind. His gift is unique in our country, so far as this writer knows, and is certainly worth while and marvelous. It is sixty miles out from Orlando, and is on the highest peak of the few hills in Florida. On Mountain Lake, within three miles of Lake Wales, you will find it, and having found it you will want to tarry there just as long as circumstances will permit. In the first place, Mr. Bok purchased the whole of Iron Mountain, a few hundred acres in the Mountain Lake region, leveled the peak of it into a plateau, and then proceeded to adorn and beautify it with green lawns, shady nooks, an infinite variety of flowers and shrubbery and tropical plants from everywhere, dotted the whole with tiny lakes, moats and playing fountains, and then right in the center of it all he placed and planted his now famous "Singing Tower." This tower is a delight to the eye, an inspiration to the heart, and a joy forever. Its architectural skill and achievement are matchless and wonderful. The tower itself rises to a height of 205 feet. It is all of hewn and polished stone. The coquina rock used in the lower walls was quarried near Daytona, Florida, and is historic to Florida, being the same sort of stone used by the Spaniards in building the old fort of Saint Augustine in 1638. Both the rich gray marble at the base of the tower, cut to suggest the outline of bells, and the gorgeous pink Etowah marble, blended in the building in perfect harmony, are from quarries in Georgia. Near the base are richly colored forms of sea life, the jellyfish and sea-horse, and then above there are carvings of trees with bird life displayed in the boughs thereof. The carvings of birds in the marble band encircling the tower show the cranes, flamingoes and native birds of Florida. The tower itself weighs 5,500 tons, is built on re-enforced concrete piles driven twenty-four feet into the ground. It is 52 feet square at its base, but rising in gradually changing form and tapering lines, it becomes octagonal at the top and is there thirty-seven feet wide. I have purposely described this tower at some length, and in some detail, that the reader may be prepared, in a measure, to enjoy the music of this tower when it is all set to music and to "singing." For in this tower, high up and obscured to vision from the outside, are sixty-one bells, all toned and tuned to music, weighing 123,164 pounds. The tenor bell alone weighs eleven tons, and the smallest bell of the number weighs only ten pounds. These sixty-one bells have forty-eight tones (four octaves), and when all these bells, composing the carillon, are put to sound in perfect tone and melody by the world's most noted carillonneur, now employed the year around by Mr. Bok to give a daily concert, well, the whole tower sings, and the top of the mountain sings, and the whole atmosphere around you is vibrant and articulate with music. Promptly at 4 P. M. as the gong sounded the hour, "Lead, Kindly Light" pealed forth from the tower, and you could hear the tune and the tone as if a legion of angels were caroling forth their celestial minstrelsy from the batterments of glory. When the half-hour closed the concert with "Sweet Hour of Prayer," one felt as if he had been transported to another and a better world. For miles and miles the melody and music of the carillon at 4 P. M. daily sound out to gladden the hearts and cheer the souls of all who came within its reach and range. And then Mr. Bok has made a sanctuary for bird life. Through the range of the hillsides and all around the great tower are all and sundry forms of bird life. Mr. Bok has made a real sanctuary for birds as well as for humans, and he has made Florida and our whole country his debtor. No wonder President Coolidge came all the way from Washington, D. C., just to dedicate this sanctuary. It is worth coming all that distance and more just to see it all and hear the "Singing Tower."

Florida is blessed this year with an abundant citrus crop. Some one told me 20,000,000 crates of oranges and grapefruit would be shipped from the State this season, and that says nothing of the millions of bushels that are culled out or fall to the ground and decay. Yesterday a friend took me in his car out through the truck fields, where tons of berries and vegetables are now going out to Northern markets. It looked good, and spring-like sure enough to see scores of boys, girls and women picking large, luscious strawberries and the men crating them and hauling them by hundreds of crates off to the nearest shipping stations. Thousands of crates of cabbages, beans, beets, peas and potatoes are now going North daily, and the Florida farmer is hurried with harvesting his spring crops, transplanting and hoeing his celery and cucumbers and planting his corn.

The days now are warm and balmy, the great out-of-doors is wholesome and inviting, mocking birds are singing, flowers are blooming, and God's glory and bounty are manifest everywhere. This writer is grateful for a stay of two weeks, in which he quit losing flesh and put on four pounds, and now turns with a grateful heart and a more steady hand to tasks that call and duties that press and invite him. What a beautiful and bountiful world indeed is this in which a good and benevolent Creator has placed us! We do not praise Him as we should for His bounty and His blessings.

THE DESIRE OF ALL NATIONS.

The essence of Christianity is the sharing of one's best with others. And the best that Christianity has to offer and share with the world is the gospel—the good news of Him who loved the world so well that He gave His life to redeem it. To make this good news known in the world, Paul gave his grateful and joyful service. "Unto me who am less than the least of all saints was this grace given, to preach unto the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ and to make all men see." The reason why we do so little, give so little, to share this gospel with others is because we ourselves possess so little in Christ. Dr. Egbert W. Smith, in a volume of 193 pages, contends that "Our experience of Christ is the fountain, our missionary zeal is the stream—the one measures the other."

Dr. Smith has written a wonderful little volume entitled "The Desire of All Nations." We wish every pastor and every Sunday School superintendent in our Church had and would read this brief book. It burns with missionary zeal and fervor and pours out a constant stream of missionary information and inspiration. The first chapter shows the foundation of and authority for missions, and is entitled "The Bible and Missions." In a few strokes of the pen, Dr. Smith convinces the reader that the whole Bible isregnant with the missionary passion—the passion of God for the salvation of souls. Then Dr. Smith contends that the chief business of the preacher and of the Church is to make Christ known to the world. This is followed by a chapter on "The Sunday School (Church School) and Missions," in which the importance and the necessity of teaching and practicing missions in the Sunday School are vividly portrayed. A superb chapter on "The Penny and Missions" shows the relationship of our going and our zeal for missions. The volume closes with "The Critic and Missions," in which objections to missions are mentioned and disposed of.

In this little volume (one can get it, paper-bound, of Doubleday, Page & Co., for 75 cents) one gets missionary information from one who has been much on the mission field and has given more than a quarter of a century to the promotion of the missionary work in all the world.

In closing this volume, the author offers an injunction that all may, with profit, heed: "Before that great and loving Lord let us kneel. Let us ask Him to touch our eyes, that we may see the world as He sees it in all its sin and want and helplessness; to touch our hearts, that we may feel for it that compassion of His that brought Him to the cross; to touch our lives, that we may live for that for which He lived and died; and to quicken us by His resurrection power, that the light and the joy of His love we may carry unto the end of the earth." How we do wish there might be a wide and careful reading of this Book among our people at this time!

BUSINESS AND PROHIBITION.

Business and the saloon could not prosper together. Railroads and drunkards could not live together. Business discovered the necessity for sober men and railroads prohibited the use of liquor before the Woman's Temperance Union and the Anti-Saloon League were born. Engineers were prohibited from running a train under the influence of liquor before the Church excluded members for being drunk. Luke was right when he wrote, "The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light" (Luke 16:18). Only sober men could be trusted to operate trains, or steamships, or big factories, or big business of any kind, and big business prohibited the use of alcohol as a beverage. This is a business age, and business demanded soberness.

Then followed the Woman's Temperance Union and the Anti-Saloon League, local option, and, finally, the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution. Even now railroads prohibit smoking on their premises. On almost every station there are signs on the walls, "No Smoking." The law now prohibits driving automobiles while under the influence of liquor or having liquor in possession. It is time for men to stop talking about the Church taking away personal liberty and putting prohibition over on the people. Business demanded it. The Church prayed and worked for it. The voters of the nation decided it. It is now law, and those who make, sell, buy, or use intoxicating beverages are law-breakers, and law-breakers are the lowest class in society. They are all conscious of the wrong they are doing or they would not hide in doing it. Personal liberty ends where law begins.

When we come to the moral and religious point in this question, the obligation is just as binding. Paul struck the keynote when he wrote, under inspiration, in 1st Cor. 8:13, "If meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend." Cain raised that question in Gen. 4:9, after he slew Abel: "Am I my brother's keeper?" for "no man liveth to himself." The best must live for the worst. The sober man lives for the drinking man. The honest man lives for the dishonest man. The law-abiding man lives for the law-breaking man. The Christian man lives for the sinning man. Jesus lived and died for all. That is the great lesson for all. We live for others or we do not really live at all. Before prohibition is changed, three things will have to be done—business will have to be destroyed, the Church will have to go out of business, and the ballot-box will have to be closed and American voters robbed of their rights. The Constitution may be added to, but it will never be annulled. W. W. S.

ARE YOU DYING SPIRITUALLY?

"Man doth not live by bread only." This is a scientific truth that is not generally appreciated. The other day a patient came into my office, an intelligent, well-informed business woman, fifty-seven years of age. She said to me, "Doctor, do you know, I feel the need of something that I do not possess. I know that I cannot enjoy real health without it, and yet it is not for me. My father was an avowed agnostic, and I was reared in that atmosphere. I am now too old to undergo any change."

I told her she reminded me of a man who came to Christ one night. He, too, felt his need of something he did not possess. Jesus told him he needed to experience a new birth. But he said, "How can a man be born when he is old?" (John 3:4.) He was assured that even this was possible and essential, although it could not be explained by human reasoning or human philosophy. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." (v. 6.) The latter is just as real as the former. The one who is born of the Spirit has experienced two births. He has been born again, "not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever" (1 Peter 1:23).

He is now in possession of two natures—the human and the divine. These two are contrary the one to the other. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned" (1 Cor. 2:14).

A very intimate relation exists between health and this spiritual birth and life. Jesus came that we might have life, and have it more abundantly. It is this abundant life that is begotten by the Spirit of God.

How Life is Sustained.

Possessing these two natures, attention must be given to each. The fleshly nature, or animal nature, is sustained just as is that of any animal, by natural food. It cannot long continue to exist without food. Man lives by bread, or physical food, as any other animal does, but "man doth not live by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord" (Deut. 8:3). What physical food is to the body, the word of God is to the soul. The prophet said, "Thy words were found, and I did eat them" (Jer. 15:16). To John, on the Isle of Patmos, in revelation, "a little book open" was presented, and the words were spoken, "Take it, and eat it up" (Rev. 10:1, 2, 9).

To the unbelieving Jews, Jesus said, "Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and are dead. . . . I am the living bread which came down from heaven; if any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever: and the bread that I will give is my flesh. . . . Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink His blood, ye have no life in you" (John 6:49-53). He did not here refer to the literal flesh. In explaining what He meant, He said, "The flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life" (v. 63). To some, this was a hard saying, and they forsook Him. Turning to the few who were left, He said, "Will ye also go away?" Simon Peter replied, "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life" (vs. 67, 68). This was the true bread. "The word which ye hear," Jesus said, "is not mine, but the Father's which sent me" (John 14:24). Near the close of His ministry on earth, He said in His prayer for those who had been with Him, "I have given unto them the words which Thou gavest me" (John 17:8). In them was sustaining and keeping power.

God's Word Creates.

God's word has in it creative power. "By the word of God the heavens were of old" (2 Pet. 3:5), and "through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God" (Heb. 11:5). "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made." "For He spake, and it was done; He commanded, and it stood fast" (Psa. 33:6, 9). God's word received is spirit and life. "It shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please" (Isa. 55:11) is the promise of God. For this reason, Paul thanked God that those who heard him preach the word "received it not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe."

If we would live a true Christian life, the conscience must be quickened by constant contact with the word of God. Man is as dependent upon the word of God for spiritual life as he is upon physical food for physical life. To refuse to eat physical food results in physical death, and to neglect to feed upon the word of God results in spiritual death.

We must partake of physical food daily, in order to keep physically fit. It is just as essential to partake of the heavenly manna daily, in order to keep spiritually fit.

It is not what we eat that builds up physical vigor; it is what we digest and assimilate. To allow the mind to dwell upon a portion of Scripture or a definite subject is of greater benefit than is the methodic reading of an entire chapter day after day without thought. Prayer and meditation aid in appropriating the word of God, making it possible for it to become a part of the being. The word must be made flesh in order to be of real benefit.

Exercise is an all-important aid in appropriating the food we eat, after it is digested. He that works little should eat little, and he that will not work at all, neither shall he eat has a scientific basis. Many a dyspeptic could be helped by merely spending a portion of each day in some out-of-door occupation. Exercise creates a normal appetite for food; it improves digestion, and aids assimilation. This is equally true spiritually. The man who buries himself in his books and fails to live to be a blessing and a benediction to his neighbors, friends, and enemies soon becomes a fanatic. A fanatic is a spiritual dyspeptic. He is one who eats but neglects work. He that will not work shall not eat, applies spiritually as well as physically. It is in this way that a man receives the full benefit of the word, and that man lives "by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord."—Signs of the Times.

WHAT THE CHURCH NEEDS.

The Church's ever-present need, compared with which money, organization, machinery, numbers, are but dust and chaff, is Christ-likeness—that spirituality, that faith, that holy courage, that redemptive passion that we see in our Lord. Out of this burning conviction came Theodore Parker's declaration that "if the whole missionary work had accomplished no more than the building up of one such character as Adoniram Judson, it would be worth all that it has cost."

While lying in the foul and fetid Burmese jail, with thirty-two pounds of chains on his ankles, his feet bound to a bamboo pole four feet above the floor, and the mercury over one hundred degrees, Judson was sneeringly asked by a fellow-prisoner, "What about the prospect of the conversion of the heathen?" He calmly replied, "The prospects are just as bright as the promises of God." That such faith and fortitude are not the exception, but the rule, among the missionaries of the Lord Jesus, the records abundantly prove.

Most of our Church and social life in this Christian land consists of the interchange of courtesy and kindness, speaking to those that speak to us, loving those that love us, doing good to those that do good to us. But in all this, asks our Master, "What do ye more than others? Do not even the publicans the same?"

But in His foreign mission work He is challenging and lifting His Church to a supreme unselfishness. It is carried on for those who can render no return and who at first often reward all efforts to help them with abuse, persecution and sometimes murder. It demands and develops in His Church the very spirit and likeness of Him who "when He was reviled, reviled not again; when He suffered, He threatened not"; who came "not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give His life a ransom for many."

Prof. William James, in one of his books, speaks of "the remarkable way in which contemporary religion neglects the heroic standards of life." The prevalent dread of poverty and hardship among our better classes, with its accompanying worship of wealth and luxury, he pronounces "the worst disease from which our civilization suffers." And every Christian communion today is voicing its fear that our wealth of material comfort is softening the Church's fibre and dimming her sacrificial zeal. Where under God shall we go for the right antidote and impulse?

There is one divinely appointed place for learning and relearning the heroic standards of apostolic Christianity. It is the school of missionary obedience. There these standards reign. There the Church sees them in daily practice.—Dr. E. W. Smith, in Desire of All Nations.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Tilling of the soil is the first and it will be the last occupation of man. "And the Lord God took the man, and put him into the Garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it" (Gen. 2:15). Again, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground" (Gen. 3:19). The nation rests on tillers of the soil and the character of the nation rests on that same class.

Much is said and written in these days on farm conditions, farm relief, and most of it is by politicians who court the support of country voters. Corn, wheat and cotton are not produced by Congress, but by man, plow and mule, working in harmony with God's seasons and rain. No class of men practice faith more than those who cultivate the soil. They plant and sow with implicit faith in God, and harvests reward their faith and their labors.

The difference between the business of the world and farming is that farming can be done in a small way and by individual effort. Big business cannot be done by individuals; it must be done through corporations. A single individual could not operate a steel plant, a coal mine, a railroad, a cotton mill, or a lumber plant. Such plants, and others of like kind, must be operated by corporations and many workers. It is different in farming. In fact, what the nation needs is small farms and individual farmers. It is a mistake to try to farm through big corporations. The small farms near communities and homes where honest toil, social life, community Churches and schools produce the best character the world has ever known. If individuals could manufacture steam engines, automobiles, steamships and great organs, it would break up great corporations without which cities could not live. If farming could be done by great corporations, it would destroy rural life without which the nation could not live. It takes both to develop the best interests of society and the wisest and strongest citizenship. The smokestack and the mule labor together to feed and clothe the world. Big farms scatter country homes so as to weaken, if not destroy, country neighborhoods; and there is no finer group of people on the globe than a compact, religious, real working country neighborhood. There is time to sleep, time to think, time to visit, time to go to Sunday School and Church, time to cultivate those friendships that are sweetest and best. The farms are too large, and there are too many acres in money crops. Less hired labor, more work by owners of land, the cultivation and raising of home supplies, and then the best money crops will solve many agricultural questions that now throw gloom over the best business in the world.

ELON LETTER.

Character is a by-product of experience, of the total experience. It is the consequence of the personality's reaction emotionally, intellectually and volitionally to particular situations in terms of the highest values. Christian character is the consequence of the personality's reaction emotionally, intellectually and volitionally to particular situations in terms of the highest values inherent therein, these values being conceived in terms of the revelation of God in Jesus Christ and as progressively interpreted by the Holy Spirit.

But what are the highest values?

They are personal, they are moral, they are religious.

Character education cannot be differentiated from religious education, and in a Christian land from Christian education. Our public schools, therefore, cannot function most effectively as character-builders. Religion is not merely a universalization of the highest conceivable principles evolved out of experience. Religion is the synthesis of those personal forces we have found inherent in the universe and their organization into techniques rendering those forces serviceable to the race, personally, socially, societally.

Morality is, speaking quantitatively, only one-third religious. It is the intellectual contemplation and segregation of the categorical imperative. It lacks warmth and energy. It is cold and lifeless. Morality has no conscience, because it lacks affectional devotion, because it lacks sacrificial commitment to causes, because it is pure reason applied to particular situations. Character, however, involves the whole personality. It harmonizes, conserves, illuminates, affectionalizes, motivates and activates every experience in terms of the highest values inherent therein.

Religion cannot be differentiated into a department of experience. Religion, as a course of study, may, for purposes of curriculum construction, be organized around certain areas of human experience, but the religious quality is inherent in every experience. The college itself is an area of human experience, just as the home is. This area may be resolved into various teaching units, every one of which inevitably will be capable of religious significance, and when education in any college becomes perfectly developed every such teaching unit will yield its inherently religious contribution to the building of character in its faculty, its students, its own organizational life. Religion is more than morality tinged with emotion. Religion is morality conceived in terms of the highest personal values, affectionalized in the spirit of the martyr, and volitionalized in the spirit of the crusader.

We should at this point differentiate between the dual purpose the college faces in its religious education program. It aims to transmit to its students certain generalized past experiences in the field of religion, and it aims to make its students religious. Religious knowledge may be so presented as practically to lack character-building quality, because the religious value inherent in the situations described may not be raised to consciousness nor be so presented as to result in their affectional embrace. But while we can differentiate these dual purposes, we can never wholly separate them; and ought to endeavor to fuse them into a unified process. Even those students who do not elect the religious courses of instruction should become religiously motivated and activated by the college through its other character-building techniques.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE LETTER.

The distinctive features of Piedmont Junior College are hereby presented for your consideration:

1. The inculcation and practice of the tenets of the Christian religion as they are accepted by our evangelical denominations without regard to sectarian alignments.

2. The teaching and application of the principles of true American citizenship, using as a basis the Constitution of our great national commonwealth and the Declaration of American Independence.

These two ideas will stand out in all the instruction in this institution, every subject having its relationship to them made plain. Christianity has a vital relation to all true knowledge and to education of the highest and truest type. All of the subjects taught in the college have their bearing either directly or indirectly on the development of citizenship. Our American civilization is a Christian civilization and should be recognized and emphasized.

Some scientists profess to believe that science is out of accord with the Bible and likewise out of harmony with the tenets of the Christian religion. We teach that true science is in harmony with the statements and revelations of the Scriptures and with the teachings of Jesus Christ, the Son of God.

The history of the world is strewn with the wrecks of nations that forgot God and neglected the fundamentals of citizenship on which the stability of the State depends.

Many of the textbooks and much of the teaching of the present in our schools are tainted with false science and unwholesome humanitarianism, leading ultimately to a corrupt and degenerate citizenship.

Piedmont Junior College is committed with all earnestness to the development of Christian citizenship of the highest type. Therefore, our creed includes:

1. Christianity, the basis of our national ideals.
2. Religious freedom to individuals.
3. Complete separation of Church and State.
4. The United States Constitution as the permanent foundation of our government, and a jealous guardian of its principles.
5. Democracy in education and freedom and liberty for educational institutions.
6. Teaching these principles without fear or favor.

The stress of modern life and a vicissitude of fortune prevent thousands from availing themselves of instruction in college, so Piedmont College is an institution which affords an open door for an education of those of very limited means.

S. L. BEOUGHER.

HOPEWELL, VA.

Having been unanimously called to take charge of Hopewell Christian Church, I assumed my duties as pastor the first Sunday in December, 1928. I have been very kindly received, and my feeble efforts to preach the word are apparently highly appreciated. They love the Lord and His precious word.

Before preaching my first sermon as pastor, I asked the congregation what they wanted me to preach, and the answer came from many of the leading members, "Preach the Word; preach Jesus Christ and Him crucified." I assured them, by the grace of God, I would do it. I never felt more at home or had greater liberty in preaching than I do here.

The flu has crippled us very much in Sunday School and Church work generally, especially in attendance. The prospects for the future are bright and very promising. We are hoping to have a special revival meeting in the spring. We most earnestly ask the prayers of all God's people, that we may have a gracious revival of pure and undefiled religion of Jesus Christ. Three have been received into fellowship with us since our arrival.

We have a very active and interesting Christian Endeavor Society. The greater number of our young people belong to it I think. We also have a wide-awake Woman's Missionary Society. Sister Warner is president and is very active in the work. They are deeply interested in the cause of missions, home and foreign. Sister Ryan is secretary of missions for the Church. She is endeavoring to get every member of the Church and Sunday School to give some definite amount for missions, weekly or monthly, as they may prefer. I think she is succeeding nicely, and we are looking for good results.

The people here seem to have a mind to work. The Ladies' Aid Society of the Church is very active and doing a splendid work. Sister Black is president, and a good one, too.

We were delighted to have Bro. Wood, of the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., and Bro. Baldwin, an evangelist, of Petersburg, Va., with us in our prayer service last evening. They both took part in the service and had encouraging things to say to us. We hope they will come again.

Our prayer meetings are largely attended and real soul feasts to us all.

On Tuesday evening, the 5th, there was a rap on our door. When I opened the door, the members and friends of the Church began to pour in with their arms full of good things for the larder, etc., ranging from good things to eat in abundance to a beautiful settee and chairs to match for our living-room. We were so surprised and agreeably shocked that we stood almost speechless while they placed these articles in our rooms. It was one of the heaviest poundings we ever received, and yet we feel much better after having received it.

We wish to return our most sincere thanks to each one taking a part in it, and also to those who desired to have a part in it and were denied the privilege. This is in many respects a very hard field, but there are some whole-souled brothers and sisters in our membership. God is going to bless us as we trust and obey. Pray for us, please.
J. W. BARRETT, SR.

WINCHESTER, VA.

The other day I was told that a man of our Church has to his credit thirteen years of continuous attendance at Sunday School without missing a Sunday. And he has been almost, if not quite, as regular at preaching services. In the nearly five months we have been here, he has not missed a service, and only once has he been absent from mid-week prayer meeting.

And we have quite a number of others who are almost as regular in attendance. And others still whose hearts are with us, and their prayers, but whom sickness keeps away from the services of the Church they love. Such faithfulness is heartening to the pastor. We have a band of loyal and faithful members here—people really interested in the growth of the Church and the extension of the Master's kingdom.

The Sunday School, under the leadership of Superintendent Roy A. Larrick, is in a healthy and encouraging condition. The young people's Christian Endeavor Society recently closed an interesting contest, resulting in the addition of several members and the raising of more than $60. The success of the society is largely due to the energy, earnestness and consecration of the president, Miss Frances Richards, ably assisted by the faithful young people who stand by her in the work.

The Ladies' Aid Society has recently had the parsonage repapered, painted, and otherwise improved, at a cost of about $150. Under the efficient leadership of Mrs. Fred Forney, this amount has been raised with the exception of a very few dollars.

The Woman's Missionary Society is doing good work under the capable leadership of the president, Mrs. Roy A. Larrick.

We greatly desire an interest in the prayers of the brotherhood, that we may be used of the Master to accomplish His will through us here.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

PRAYER.

My prayer for the new year is that this may be a good year; that our country shall have reasonable seasons and average health, and that every heart shall be able to know Him from whom these blessings come. My prayer is that God may bless our fields and the hands that till them, and that He may reward our work with a satisfactory harvest.

That God may bless our manufacturing interests and the people who carry on in this great enterprise, as men, women and children are thus given occupation and are thereby enabled to provide the necessities of life. And the mining industry, which brings to the surface that which makes life comfortable and worth living; the result of which turns the wheels of commerce and brings to this world the joy of knowing God.

That God may abundantly bless His spiritual kingdom on earth, and that this shall be the most fruitful year in saving the lost.

All these material achievements depend upon how we regard the kingdom of His dear Son. I am praying for a harvest of souls to be garnered for God. I am praying for all of our missionaries and their fields of service, that God may provide some way for our Church to give the gospel to seventy thousand souls in Porto Rico; that there may be some way provided for a million souls to be saved through our Church in Japan. I am praying for all my people of every condition and kind. I have a prayer list with more than sixty homes whose names are on the list, for whom I am praying daily; and besides this, I remember the poor colored people of my country at a throne of His divine grace.

THE MINISTER'S MESSAGE.

The great prophets of the Old Testament on the threshold of their office were given, in some form, a vision and revelation of God. So it was with Paul—"It pleased God to reveal His Son in me, that I might preach Him." And not preaching only, but Christian doctrine, Christian ethics, Christian life and experience are all determined by our conception of God. Our idea of God is the stamp. Press it down on the intellect and the result is theology; on the conscience, and the result is duty; on the feelings and will, and the result is spiritual experience. The one regnant thing in a man's religion is his conception of God—not his lip conception, but what in his inmost soul he understands God to be. An error there means just that much darkness in the mind, that much sin, wretchedness, failure in the life. A few years ago one of the leading papers of Boston published a full-page Sunday editorial, and in large print in the center of the page were these words: "A man's idea of God, if he could express it, would tell you instantly the nature of the man."

Of all the misconceptions of God that are wrecking human character and happiness today and staying the coming of the kingdom, the two most harmful, the two most widely and unsuspectedly prevalent, are the very same two against which much of the Old Testament is aimed and to overthrow which both Christ and Paul put their lives in peril. Against the Pharisees, Christ showed that God is not a class God, that He loves the outcast as well as the high caste, the bad as well as the good, the unchurched as well as the enchurched. Against Pharisees and Judaizers, Christ and Paul showed that God is not a provincial, tribal, nationalistic God; that He loves not one race, but all races; that He is the great Saviour God of all the families of men.

These two tragic misconceptions Scripture pictures to us in two men sulking, one outside of a house, the other outside of a city. One is the elder brother in the parable. The other is Jonah. The one sulks over fatherly love shown to a prodigal, the other over fatherly love shown to foreigners. The one thinks of God as loving the good only. The other thinks of God as loving the nation only. The most distinctive thing about God, the greatness of His heart, both are ignorant of. Yet both are specialists in religion and one is a prophet.

Can Christian people find anywhere a more conscience-piercing fact than this, that although the Son of God commanded His followers to go into all the world, to disciple all the nations, to preach the gospel to every creature, yet nineteen centuries later we find 95 per cent of all Christian ministers and Churches crowded into a few favored countries, so crowded that in our Southern States there is an average of nearly four Protestant Churches to every thousand of the population, while the majority of the human race are left in spiritual darkness? The explanation is that all over these favored countries, to an extent undreamed of, the God who is praised in the pew and preached in the pulpit is a provincial, tribal, nationalistic God.

If any man ever knew this narrow conception of Deity, how deep-rooted and stubborn it is, Paul knew it. Does he adapt himself to it? Does he preach a little God to please men's little hearts? With his pulpit the castle stairs, he beckons to the great audience massed before him in Jerusalem. He addresses them in their sacred Hebrew tongue. Silence falls. As they hang upon his lips, suddenly, like a thunderbolt smiting their rock-bound prejudice, comes the tremendous declaration that by the command of God Himself Paul is going forth as a missionary to preach their Messiah-Saviour to foreign nations. With that word the storm breaks. "Away with such a fellow from the earth, for it is not fit that he should live." But Paul has shot his foreign mission bolt. He has borne his witness to the world love and world purpose of his Lord. And did the Lord approve that kind of preaching? He did. In the night the Lord stood by him and said, "Be of good cheer, Paul, for as thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem, thou must bear witness also at Rome."

"As thou hast testified of me in Jerusalem." Paul had testified of Him as a world-Saviour; he had testified of His purpose of love to those other nations; he had testified at the risk of popularity and life itself. And so must the present-day minister testify, if he would follow in the steps of Paul and Paul's Master.—The Desire of All Nations.

AFRICA TODAY.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

I.

Foreword.

This suggested program is the first of a series of nine based on the study book, "Africa Today," by Mary A. Jeffreys. It has been prepared for young people's groups. It will not work itself, but if the suggestions herein made are carried out in full or with adaptations, it will serve as a background for an interesting session. It can readily be seen that some advance preparation will have to be made, especially by the leader. For two or three dollars, the society can purchase such books as "Africa and Her Peoples," Walker; "The Golden Stool," Smith (especially good), and "The New Africa," Fraser. These books could be passed on from leader to leader, and would be very helpful. Only as the activity of the members of the class is enlisted can the best work be done. A mere lecture by the leader will not suffice.

Program.

1. Devotional Period:

(a) Call to worship—The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light; they that dwell in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined (Isa. 9:2).

(b) Hymn—"The Morning Light is Breaking."

(c) Scripture reading—Acts 17:22-31; Rom. 10:8-17.

(d) Silent prayer—The leader should suggest definite objectives for which the members of the group, with heads bowed reverently, should pray for earnestly, e. g., for the missionaries in Africa; for the victory of Christianity over Islam; for those who have positions of authority; for better industrial conditions; for the Christianization of racial relations, both in Africa and in America; for many new volunteers for work in Africa.

(e) Prayer—Brief prayer by the leader or by some one appointed before hand.

(f) Hymn—"O Zion, Haste, Thy Mission High Fulfilling."

2. Question-Box Period:

The leader should prepare in advance a sufficient number of copies of the following list of questions (she may add others, of course) and pass them around, asking them to answer as many of the questions as possible. In spite of the fact that there is an appalling amount of ignorance in regard to Africa, this need not be embarrassing, for each will keep and correct his own paper.

List the great rivers of Africa. Two African lakes. Two deserts. Five African cities. Eight African products. Some historic places in Africa. List the names of as many missionaries to Africa as possible. What two great religions are seeking to evangelize Africa?

3. Leader's Talk Period:

The leader ought to present briefly and clearly some of the outstanding facts about Africa, such as her size, her geographical features, her resources, both mineral resources and raw materials, her peoples, her languages, her religions, her problems. These facts can be secured from many sources, available in most cases to any group which might use this program.

Special—By the use of a map of Africa, and by the use of posters and pictures, this period can be made most interesting and instructive. The National Geographic Magazine, Asia, the Missionary Review of the World, and current magazines often have material which can be used very effectively. A little foresight and a little ingenuity and work will do wonders here.

4. Discussion Period:

This period should be used for general discussion on such topics as "Why study Africa?" "What contribution has Africa made to us?" "Do we have any responsibility toward Africa?" "How can we discharge our responsibility to Africa?" "How does the presence of Africans in our own section affect the problem of missions in Africa?" Many other topics can be suggested, and if the leader is wise and tasteful this will be a most profitable period.

5. Debate Period:

Plan well in advance to have a debate between two teams (two or three on a team) on the subject. "Resolved, That civilization has done more harm than good in Africa." This is by no means a one-sided question. Limit each speaker to three to five minutes, depending upon the number and upon the time limit of the program.

6. Assignment Period:

The leader for the next class period should make the assignments in advance, holding each person responsible for his part of the program.

7. Closing Period:

A moment of silent prayer.

KEEPING IN TOUCH.

Every Sunday School should keep itself in vital touch with the foreign field by having its own missionary toward whose support it contributes and whose letters from abroad and visits when on furlough would be living links between the school and the field. In a Scotch Sunday School, the superintendent one Sunday read a letter from a missionary in Fiji Islands, describing how the gospel was changing the hearts of the cannibals. Then he said, "I wonder if there is a boy here who will some day become a missionary of the Lord Jesus and give his life to carrying the gospel to cannibals?" In a class of boys just in front of him sat Jimmie Chalmers, twelve years old. Then and there the seed was planted, the resolve was made. Deep down in his heart, "God helping me, I will," said Jimmie, and became, though some careless years intervened, the apostle of the Papuan Gulf, whom Robert Louis Stevenson loved with a passionate admiration, esteeming him one of the two greatest men of modern times, and writing to him, "If I had known you when I was a boy, how different my life would have been!" Superintendent, why should not your boys know Chalmers, and your school send out another like him?

Boundless are the possibilities of youth, and equally great the incentives to fidelity of those who labor in this the most fertile of all fields.

The missionary movement in America, represented today by 13,000 foreign missionaries and an annual contribution of $38,000,000—by whom was it started? By bishops? By college presidents? No! By young people. Not to the wise, the learned, or the mighty came the vision of America going forth to the spiritual conquest of the world, but to a few college boys, Samuel J. Mills and his four friends, in that memorable summer of 1806 as they knelt in prayer while the storm raged around their haystack shelter. Offering themselves for the foreign field, and then by their faith and zeal stirring the Church to send them, they opened a new and glorious chapter in the history of the kingdom.

Not to the old or the middle-aged, but to the young, is given the divine promise that they "shall see visions." If our young people today are not catching fresh visions, and opening new eras of world conquest for Christ, it is for our Sunday School leaders on their knees to inquire, "Search us and our work, O God, and show us the reason why."—Desire of All Nations.

JAPANESE STUDENTS AND THE TITHE.

When we were visiting the Japanese academy at Naraha, a few miles out of the great city of Tokyo, Prof. A. N. Nelson, the principal, told me of an experience that the students had been passing through which has a real lesson for all of us. It shows how true it is that the blessing of God does follow faithfulness in paying the tithe. He has promised, and He fulfills His promises. We hear it in the testimony of our brethren and sisters in all lands. Said Prof. Nelson:

"A year or two ago, students were falling behind in their accounts at the school. The student indebtedness had run to over 1,000 yen (a yen is half a dollar). The question was taken up, and in connection with the matter the students themselves agreed that they would be systematic in paying tithe on the gains by their industrial work in school. They would be careful and conscientious in tithing every little factor of income. So they gave their orders to our business office that the tithe was to be credited on all their reports of work.

"Well, sir, the result was wonderful. Really it was. There was a visible improvement in the financial situation of the students themselves. In one year they nearly paid out the total indebtedness on student accounts, and for the present year they are running on with no obligations."

"Well, now, how do you account for it?" I asked, as Professor Nelson told me this story: "They seemed able to turn out more work and to earn more. They were more careful of their time and more industrious. They did not lose so much time. Moreover, strange to say, there was not so much sickness among them. They were able to devote full time to their industries."

There it is, brethren. A group of students out in the country, alongside that great bay that reaches up into the main island from Yokohama northward, and without any thought of demonstrating anything at all except their loyalty to God, this student body bears witness that the blessing of God does come upon those who are faithful in yielding to the Lord His own. Read again what the Lord says in Malachi. It is true, and our brethren and sisters bear witness to it in all the world:

"Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts" (Mal. 3:10, 11).—Review and Herald.

FORTY-FIVE FOR MISSIONS.

The Southern Christian Convention must reach the goal of $45,000 for missions. With this amount, the board can pay its debts, make more liberal appropriations to the General Board for foreign missions, and be in a position to expand its work.

As to new Churches, the Convention is practically at a standstill. We cannot stand still, but must go forward or backward. Will you help us to go forward? Near Easter, every Church that has not done so should raise its quota for missions.

Of the $45,000 goal, one man offers to give the last $5,000, another the last $2,500 preceding the last $5,000; the women have agreed to raise $12,000 of the remaining $37,500, leaving $25,500 to be raised by Churches and individuals. The women will give some of that raised on the Churches.

Men of the Church, can't we raise double what the women raise, or five times what one man will give? Let's get down to business and do our part. Let us prove to the world that we believe in missions and are willing to support missions.

J. E. WEST, Ch'n.

LITERATURE.

During this foreign mission period in our Churches our people should be informed as to our foreign mission work. We have in the mission office at Elon College, N. C., an abundance and a variety of literature giving just such information as is needed at this time. This literature is for free distribution and can be had on request. Let pastors, Sunday School superintendents and others interested address us their request, and we will be glad to accommodate them.

Mission Secretary.

OFFICIAL NOTICE.

The Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at its last session, accepted an invitation from Newport News to meet there in 1929. But inasmuch as their new Church will not be completed by the time of the Convention, the Newport News people have asked to be relieved from entertaining this year. The executive committee is, therefore, anxious to receive an invitation for the coming session of the Convention. Please take this up with your school and notify us if you wish to entertain.

RECOMMENDED PLANS AND PROGRAM

February, March—Foreign Mission Months

THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION, in its Richmond Session last year, made February and March "Foreign Mission Months" for educational and informational purposes, culminating in an offering from all the Churches for Missions at, or on the nearest possible Sunday to, Easter—March 31, 1929. The goal set for the offering—Home and Foreign Missions—from Sunday Schools, and Churches, and individuals is $33,000; Woman's Societies, $12,000—total, $45,000. Inasmuch as the entire amount thus asked must be raised by voluntary offerings, the Conferences, in their recent sessions, in which the matter was discussed, adopted and recommended to the Sunday Schools and Churches the following method to be pursued in reaching their quota of one-third as much for Missions as for pastor's salary:

FIRST: When a Church uses the Budget Plan, write into that budget one-third the amount of pastor's salary to go to Missions, and send this in monthly or quarterly.

SECOND: If the budget is not used, canvass the individuals of the Church and Sunday School to find out how much each will give to Missions and when, entering the same on a card prepared for the purpose and which may be had of the Mission Secretary, Elon College, N. C.

THIRD: Where neither of these plans is adopted, then endeavor to increase the offering from the Sunday School, and at or about Easter have a Missionary Rally and try to raise the entire amount of the quota at that one service, in conjunction with the monthly offerings from the Sunday School for the year.

Each Church and Sunday School should use one or the other of these plans.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By Rev. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson IX—March 3, 1929.

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

GOLDEN TEXT: "So, we, being many members, are one body in Christ."—Rom. 12:5.

LESSON: Matt. 16:13-20; Mark 4:26-32; Rom. 12:4-8; Eph. 1:15-23, 2:13-22, 4:4-6, 11-16, 5:22-27; 1 Tim. 3:15.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Eph. 4:11-16.

What do we mean when we use the word "Church"? We may have several things in mind. We may refer to the building in which people meet to worship. We may refer to the members themselves; that is, a man is a member of such and such a Church, meaning that he is a member of the Church which meets in that particular Church. We may refer to the denomination, the larger fellowship of which the local Church is a member and a part. Or we may be more inclusive and refer to the Church universal, the entire body of believers known as the Church. In some cases, we may have in mind the ideal Church, the Church invisible. The word "Church," therefore, embodies many meanings.

It is somewhat surprising to note that Jesus uses the word "Church" only twice as recorded in the four gospels. It is quite probable that he had in mind the Church universal; that is, the body of believers, not only those who believed on Him in His day, but that larger group who, through the succeeding centuries, would believe on Him and be united by a common allegiance and loyalty to Him. It is to be noted further that "the Church" and "the kingdom of God or heaven" were not synonymous in Jesus' thinking. It would seem that the Church was a means to an end—the bringing in of the kingdom of God. The Spirit of the kingdom ought to be and is in the Church. But the kingdom of God is more inclusive than the Church. The Church is to be perhaps the most effective instrument through which the kingdom is to come.

In the references as given for today's lesson there are several truths in regard to the Christian Church in its largest aspects. They can only be touched upon in a brief way here for lack of space.

1. The origin of the Christian Church. The Church is an institution of divine origin. It was founded by Jesus Christ Himself. "On this rock," said Jesus—and He was not referring to Simon Peter, but to the living and vital confession of faith in Him as the Son of the living God and as expressed by Peter—"I will build my Church." Let no man think that the Church is a man-conceived and man-made institution. It is a divine institution founded by God through Christ.

2. The mission of the Church. "Christ is the Head of the Church. The Church is the body of Christ." What did Paul mean when he wrote these words? He was simply putting in a concrete way the truth that the Church was the organization that was to embody and to express the will and the spirit of Christ Himself. The Church is to be Christ's representative in the world. It is to declare His character. It is to express His spirit. It is to carry out His will. It is to be the means through which the kingdom of God is to come in human life.

3. The Unity of the Church. "So we, who are many, are one body in Christ." "There is one body, and one spirit, even as ye were called in one hope of your calling. One Lord, one faith, one baptism. One God and Father of all, who is over all, and through all, and in all. There are many, many, alas all too many divisions in the Christian Church, but it is well to keep in mind that after all there is really only one Church. In spite of our differences there is only one Lord and Master, one faith—faith in God as revealed in Christ, one baptism—the baptism of the Holy Spirit. It is high time that we began to magnify our agreements and minimize our differences and attempt that unity for which Jesus prayed.

4. The growth of the Church. The Church is to grow naturally, even slowly, silently, and yet irresistibly. It is as seed sown in good ground, or as leaven put in a lump of dough. It does not need to parade with brass bands. It needs only to be the channel of the divine Spirit and it will grow.

5. The limitations of the Church. The Church is made up of men and women, ordinary people with all the foibles and weaknesses of human nature. It is not a select group of angels. It is made up of folks—folks just like you and me. It ought to go without saying, therefore, that the Church will have its limitations and will make its mistakes. But, alas! there are so many who expect to find, or who say they expect to find in the Church perfection both in the Church and in the Church members, that it needs to be emphasized again and again that the Church has its limitations, limitations imposed upon it by the human factors involved in it. And yet, by and large, there is not another organization that even approaches the Church in the high level of its ideals of life, or in the high moral enterprises to which it gives itself.

6. The future of the Church.—"And the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it." The gates of Hades, or hell, are generally interpreted to mean the "power of the unseen world, especially the power of death. The gates of Hades prevail over all things human, but the Church shall never die." There are some faint-hearted people who wonder about the future of religion and of the Church, and there are some faint-hearted people who prophesy that the Church will eventually, and perhaps soon, be an outworn anachronism. Let all such read again the words of Jesus Himself. Ultimate victory is the heritage of the Church. She shall not fail. She is the one sure thing in a world of uncertainty.

7. The challenge of the Church. If the Church is committed to the task of producing Christ-like character and of establishing the rule of God in human hearts; if, after all, at heart the Church is one; if the Church has at her disposal the infinite resources of God through Christ; and if she has the promise of ultimate victory—then certainly we ought to give all that we have and are to the Church. Here stands the Church as the representative of Christ on earth, seeking to find out and to carry out the will of God. Here are men and women, young men and maidens with capacities and resources that the Church can use and must have and has a right to expect. In the light of the needs of our modern world, how dare those who have experienced the grace of Christ withhold all that they are and have from the Church! To belong to the Church means something. There is no greater achievement than to be a true member of the Church of Jesus Christ.

TOPIC: "Recruiting for Christ."—Matt. 9:35-38. (Consecration meeting.)

Some Bible Hints.

"Jesus went about." The recruiting officer must go where recruits may be found (v. 35).

Jesus' way to recruit was to teach, preach, explain, heal. He was a conversational evangelist (v. 35).

We shall never do much evangelistic work unless, like Christ, we are moved by compassion. Self-love is stationary. True love moves and acts (v. 36).

"Pray." We can all pray. This service is often neglected (v. 37).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Jesus had a passion for souls. His greatest joy was to help people to understand God. Read John 4:32, 34.

Youth can be recruited for Christ far easier than age. The young mind is not yet set. It is open to ideas, to conviction. Youth wants to be won if the challenge is big enough.

Begin recruiting within your own circle. Try to win people you know, in your home, in your work, in your community. That means, of course, that you live Christ first.

A beautiful Christian life is the best way to recruit for the Master. People recognize Christ in us, and respect Him, and are drawn to Him.

A Few Illustrations.

You cannot recruit for Christ without the Spirit's power any more than you can operate an electric car without electricity.

Use the gospels in recruiting. Single gospels, which cost only a cent or two, should be given to those you are trying to win. This opens up conversation.

In recruiting, we must be patient with people's problems. An Italian woman refused a gospel because her child was sick, arguing that if God were good, her child would not be sick. Finally she took the book, and later was won to Christ.

Endeavor societies can engage in evangelism by agreeing to win a definite number of young people in the community. First, study personal evangelism in a class, then start after your comrades.

To Think About.

What should we ask the recruit to do?

How long should we try to win a given person?

What is the reward of soul-winning?

SUMMER SCHOOLS.

News has reached the writer that some are wondering whether there will be summer schools at Elon and Piedmont Junior Colleges. The resignation of Miss Coghill as field secretary caused this question to arise. There will be schools at both places. Plans are in the making, and fuller announcement will be made soon, but please remember that summer schools will be conducted at both of our Southern colleges.

The dates of these schools have not been definitely fixed, but the Bethlehem Junior will likely be June 30th to July 6th, and Elon July 27th to August 3rd. The writer would like to know from those interested whether these are acceptable dates. He is anxious to have the schools at a time when most people can attend.

Suggestions concerning courses to be offered will also be gratefully received. The board is anxious to offer whatever courses will best meet the needs of our Churches. The writer believes that the best thing that could be done for our Sunday Schools would be to have our superintendents take a course in the summer schools that would help them in their work. For several years young people and teachers have been taking courses that inspired them and made them want to do a fine work in the local Church, but on returning to the local Church they discover that the superintendent has received neither the inspiration nor the training which has been theirs. The result has been that in many instances the enthusiasm created at summer schools has dwindled to nothingness and the training put to no use. If the pastors and superintendents will attend with their young people, it is my belief that the value of the Sunday School will be greatly increased.

Please begin now to plan to attend the summer schools for young people and Christian leaders of our Church. You cannot spend a week to better advantage.

WORLD'S FAIR.

Plans are being made to hold a World's Fair in Chicago in 1932 to celebrate the 100th anniversary of that city. A house joint resolution, introduced by Representative Wallis C. Hawley, of Oregon, and sponsored in the Senate by Senator Deneen, of Illinois, providing that when the sum of $5,000,000 has been collected and turned into the treasury of the Chicago World's Fair Centennial Celebration Corporation, the President shall invite the participation of other nations of the world, and that exhibitions from other countries may be imported free of duty, custom's fees, or charges, has passed the House and the Senate, and now awaits the signature of the President. When this bill was before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, Vice-President Dawes stated his approval of the plans for the celebration and urged a favorable report from the committee.

The announcement that such a fair is to be held arouses no special enthusiasm upon first thought. The people of this country generally have become somewhat tired of what the average exhibition known as a fair consists. The term connotes to most persons a heterogeneous mass of individual exhibits constructed largely for advertising purposes.

But, it is said that the proposed fair in Chicago is to be based upon an entirely different idea. It is to have as its purpose an exhibitory review of the progress of the various sciences, arts and industries of the world in the last century. Instead of being upon a competitive basis, as heretofore, the businesses of each industry are to join in contributing toward the exhibit of that particular industry only those things which have added to its progress. It will be similar to the plan adopted by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad in exhibiting the progress of transportation, last year in Baltimore, which drew a larger attendance than the Sesquicentennial Exposition at Philadelphia.

A number of scientific and educational organizations have shown interest in the project. The National Research Council, which is the organization of the scientific intelligence of the nation, has indorsed the idea, pledged its support and appointed a commission of distinguished members to aid in the preparation and development of the plans.

Doubtlessly, the proposed World Fair at Chicago, conducted in accordance with the proposed plans, would be a success and of great educational value. In the rapid progress of the last century, few have had time to pause and contemplate the back path. Each new development has caused the majority to discard and forget the old in admiration and wonder of the new. What an opportunity, what an education, to be enabled to study the whole, to connect each step, to catch a vision of what may be accomplished in the future.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

A MIGHTY GOOD INVITATION.

"Come unto me."—Matt. 11:28.

The occasion of this utterance from Jesus was that of burdened surroundings. There were lots of folks in that throng who were tired, spent in heart and soul under the yoke of Jewish regulations and Roman government. There were laboring beasts harnessed to loads beyond their strength. At the docks, men were weary under severe taskmasters loading ships to their gunwales. He said, "You are burdened like harnessed beasts." "Come unto me and I will give you rest."

How? By fellowship with Him. That lightens the load and renews the strength.

By communion with Him. That means loyalty, courage and strength tremendously sustained in the consciousness of truth, in which one bears tremendous loads as though they were light. When Christ said, "For I am meek," we are told He meant "I am to you as an unbroken colt" in energy and strength. If the burden was sin, He meant I will take it away and make your heart a shrine of innocence and trust. Somehow, He takes His love, His affections, His sympathies, and spreads them out as a soft rug for the path of the weary and burdens are made light.

A gentleman on a street car one day said: "Put your basket down, lady, the car will carry both it and you"—"Cast thy burdens upon the Lord, for He careth for you."

Prayer.—Our Father, we confess that we do try to carry our own loads and trust too little to Thee. Forgive us, in Thy mercy and teach us how to cast off and lean on Thee who will make life easy and bright. So we try this day to come to Thee. Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE BEST GIFTS.

"Oil and perfume rejoice the heart; so doth the sweetness of a man's friend."—Prov. 27:9.

Christmas time brought to a lot of folks lots of presents. Here is a list of a few that one person got: fountain pen and pencil, account book, clothes brush, box of writing paper, dressing gown, three neckties, address book, and more than three hundred Christmas cards, many of them beautiful works of art.

But he said: "The best gift I had was friendship. Expressed in the presents, and especially in the cards, many of which contain personal words, written with a pen. Friendship is one of the rare things in this world that cannot be bought with money nor lost with poverty.

"It is that eternal fact in human relations that preserves our faith in human nature. It keeps us optimistic in the midst of what sometimes seems like a very bad world. Friendship is the unselfish side of life. True friends are not trying to get something out of us, but to share something with us.

"One of the finest things that Jesus ever said was, 'No longer do I call you servants, but friends.' And He said it, not as a superior being, condescending or patronizing, but as a companion with men who needed that fellowship more than anything else.

"No one is poor who has friends. And no one is rich who has none."—C. M. S.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

WEDNESDAY.

THREE IN ONE.

"Ye are the salt of the earth."—Matt. 5:13.

"Ye are the light of the world." "Ye are my power."—Rev. 11:3.

A boy once said, "Salt is that stuff that makes the biscuits taste bad when you didn't put it in." If we are salt, the world will taste bad if we don't live up to it in our contract with the world.

Emerson said, "Light is the first of painters. There is no object so foul that internal light will not make it beautiful." Where there is no light, there is darkness. If Christians are the light, the world will be darkness if they do not shine.

Of power, Burke says, "All persons possessing any portion of power ought to be strongly and awfully impressed with the idea that they act in trust, and that they are to account for their conduct in that trust to the one great Master, Author and Founder of society."

What is power worth stowed up in a cold engine? "He hath no power who has no power to use it."—Festus.

If God is depending upon us as power for the salvation, Perfector of souls and Endower of tianity seriously. I am painfully impressed that we are not wielding our God-given power to its maximum.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, our Father, Author of salvation, Perfector of souls and Endower of power, come Thou into our lives more and make us more keenly sensitive to our responsibilities in sharing with Thee the salvation of the world; give into us an understanding of what it means to be Thine, that Thou art ours, and where we are Thou wilt be. Give us the simplicity of faith and the liberty of grace and the courage of conviction to shine for Thee forever. Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE FEARFULNESS OF BEING A PRODIGAL A LITTLE WHILE.

"Because of this deed, thou hast given great occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme the child that is born unto thee shall surely die."—2 Sam. 12:14.

The result of stepping aside for a little bit is appalling at times. Think of the people that the prodigal son associated with! What was the influence of his life upon them? What happened to them after he quit them and returned to his father's house?

David, a triumphant monarch, a "man after God's own heart," who had private designs crowned with success, enjoyed prosperity, designed evil against his neighbor with his neighbor's wife, succeeded, with no publicity nor scandal connected with it.

But the blow came. The unseen hand appeared. He got into difficulties from which he could not extricate himself. There came trouble in his own home. In his family there came irregularities and crime, sons rebelled against him; he had to play himself at the mercy of an unscrupulous person who knew his secret; things went wrong. Are you surprised?

There are a thousand problems for us; a thousand demands upon our manhood. What will we do? Can a soul injured by sin recover its pristine strength and beauty?

Madam Burka, the world's most famous criminal woman, had over 1,200 descendants; 90 per cent were jailbirds through murders and vice. Yet there was a time when Maggie was a fair-haired, innocent girl.

If we are tempted, let us think of what it may mean to others, and act for their good.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, we come to Thee and trust Thee to deliver us from the consequences of sin. Abide in us our helper when we are tempted. Crucify evil from us forever. Amen.

FRIDAY.

RELIGION AND DYNAMITE.

"He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."—Mark 16:16.

There is a story of a city building a sewer. Blasting was necessary. A man failing to notice the danger signals was walking down in the blasting area. The foreman ran toward him, calling "Fire! fire! fire! stop! back!" Action on this warning saved his life.

It is true manhood, to say nothing of true religion, to act sensibly on life's warnings. It is folly to do otherwise. This being true, we are appalled at the number of heedless people and make folly their outstanding trait.

We are told of a converted skeptic who, in reply to the question of what changed him, said, pointing to the clasp on a Bible, "See these words? There are two words which conquered me—thou fool. I have inscribed them on this clasp. God has simply convinced me that I am a fool, and I have determined that I would never come to any consideration of its sacred mysteries except through this medium. I will remember that I am a fool and that God is the only wise."

Prayer.—Dear Father, we realize that our days fly fast and dangers encompass us. We wait on Thy promises that they will direct the path of those who wait on Thee. Grant us this, Lord. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE TRAGEDY OF INDECISION.

"When the young man heard the saying, he went away sorrowful."—Matt. 19:22.

And we have never heard from him since. He was a model young man, a pleasing character, gracious in manner, clean and pure as human purity goes, honored in his community, socially accurate, an observer of business ethics. But, more than all these, he was rich, and this left him undecided about taking up real active Christianity. Tragic indeed, because it closed the one supreme opportunity he had to be an apostle of the Lord and probably a spiritual world ruler. He went away like a cloud without a rain, like a lamp without oil, like a field without a harvest.

Prayer.—Dear Father, it is in Thy light we shall see the light. How soon will the flowers of our life wither and die if we do not follow Thee and know life everlasting! Forbid that any sins shall come in and steal away our sunshine. Amen.

SUNDAY.

CARRYING THE FACE OF GOD.

"I have seen Thy face as though I had seen the face of God."—Gen. 33:10.

How many folks ever thought of God when they saw you? Reverse it. How many folks do you know; when you see them, make you think of God?

Dear Friends:

Our Orphanage superintendent is always up against two problems. The superintendent of the Christian Orphanage is no exception. Our first problem is to know how to meet the many appeals we have and the one to give the preference. When all seem to be so needy and worthy and need a place so badly! We have often heard it said that there is always room for one more, but in orphanage work this rule will not hold good from the fact that we sometimes reach the point where we have no vacant place left.

We have had two appeals within the last week which have been real touching, and our heart goes out to these little children. One case is that of a little girl. Her mother is dead, and her father is paralyzed and had to go to the county home. She is eight years of age and is a very bright child. She has a sister older than she who can make her own way—but what about this little girl of this young and tender age! Good women in her community have appealed to the Christian Orphanage for assistance for this child. We have another appeal to take five children, three girls and two boys. In this case the mother is dead, and an aunt of the children has cared for them for some time. She fell ill some weeks ago and died last Week. Five little children left without protecting care save and except what the good women in the community render in their behalf.

Orphanages are avenues of service to fatherless and motherless children. Here are two instances where the Christian Orphanage can render a real service to helpless humanity. The last five children mentioned are members of the Christian Church; they are looking to the Christian Orphanage to take them and care for them in this hour of need. That is our first problem.

Our second problem is to get funds with which to pay bills at the end of the month. The Orphanage is a channel through which every member of our Church can visit the fatherless and the motherless and minister unto them and carry out the teachings of the Bible in regard to visiting the widow and the fatherless in their affliction. Every member of the Christian Church should make some sacrifice to help the Orphanage carry on its great work in rendering a real service to fatherless children. Have you done your part?

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

Secretary.

FAMILY ALTAR.

Men judge the goodness of God, His forgiveness, His kindness by the attitude and helpfulness of others. The infirm, the impatient, the crushed and the burdened, the stricken and the sick, all look into the Christian's face to find out how Christ looks and feels about them, and they come to know Him by them. Besides, there is nothing which feeds a bad man in his badinage so much as a look of approval. Christians, therefore, should not hesitate to give their disapproval of wrongdoing. We too often beam with sunlight when we ought to flash fire.

It is the privilege of good men to make it easier for those who are weary, or sinning, to believe in the compassion and mercy of our God.

Prayer.—Our Father, we have received much at Thy hands, and we have offered Thee nothing in return. Make us more faithful and diligent in all our days, and to shine for Thee and do all the good we can. Amen.

CAN GOD TRUST YOU?

Less than ten years ago the writer was connected in a small way with a concern in Missouri which was started and built up by a man who had less than 200 when he went into business.

It was a known fact that he had a "million-dollar business," and it was advertised as such. His $250,000 home was talked of by every one who saw it.

A few days ago, the writer was in that State and stopped in to see the president of the house (who was the same man that started the business) and was shocked to learn that the business has dwindled down to almost nothing.

One of the former departmental managers told me that they had until the 1st of April to move out of the "million-dollar building," as it had been sold to satisfy the demands of their creditors.

But what was the trouble? Was it a change in business conditions? Is this kind of business a thing of the past? No. I was told that while the business was at its height the president came to the point where no one could advise him. No one could talk to him. There was a time when he would stop and "pat" a fellow on the back, but success changed that picture.

There was a time when big business men came to him for advice. There was a time when he could, and did, advise the Chamber of Commerce and other large organizations, but the picture changed. His business started down the other way: His friends tried to advise him; big business men tried to advise him; the Chamber of Commerce tried to advise him against the very thing that ruined his business and wrecked his name.

I was told that he could not buy a dollar's worth of merchandise in the whole city with his credit. His name is no longer mentioned in magazines. Thousands of dollars' worth of advertising space remains unpaid for.

Many a young man is in the height of his success today, and saying that "I will run my business as I want it run." Many a young woman is saying today, "I am a good business woman; I can handle my own business. I do not need to ask my friends for advice. I don't have to depend on either man or God." Yet, we look around and find many of those who have failed to look to God in times of their prosperity and are today in the gutters of life.

It seems hard to take the advice of those who have gone through the gates that have closed them from the pleasure and happiness that once they had. I wonder if we are handling the affairs of our own as God would have us handle them?

C. J. STRICKLAND.

God will either keep His saints from temptations by His preventing mercy, or in temptations by His supporting mercy, or find a way for their escape by His delivering mercy.

The Church is not an end in itself, but a means to an end, and that end is the service of mankind.

OBITUARIES

WYMER.

Jacob Wymer was born July 10, 1843, and died December 21, 1928, at the age of 85 years, 5 months and 11 days. He was twice married, his first wife having died some years ago. He is survived by his second wife and by four sons and three daughters, all children of the first marriage. He was a member of Whistler's Chapel Christian Church, and was well thought of. Funeral services at Whistler's Chapel, December 24, 1928.

A. W. ANDES.

BOLDEN.

Mrs. Fannie Boldeu ended a life of usefulness at the age of sixty-six years. Her body was laid to rest at Martha's Chapel February 17, 1929. She was brought from a distance back into the community of which she was formerly a part. Sister Bolden, conscious of her approaching end, expressed her readiness to go. A large congregation came to pay its final tribute to this loyal wife and mother, a Church member, and a Christian woman.

R. LEE HOUSE.

GILMORE.

Thomas Hasten Gilmore was born November 6, 1864, and died January 23, 1929, making him eighty-two years, two months, and seventeen days old. Bro. Gilmore was a Confederate veteran, a member of Company H, Seventeenth North Carolina Regiment, Junior Reserve. He joined May 30, 1864, and returned home May 1, 1865.

Bro. Gilmore joined the Church in early life and unto his death he was a faithful follower of Christ.

In 1872 he was married to Susan J. Johnson, and became the father of ten children, nine boys and one girl. His wife preceded him to the grave seven years. May the blessings of heaven rest upon his relatives and friends who mourn.

J. A. DENTON.

BROWN.

Bro. L. A. Brown departed this life on January 24, 1929, at the age of 77 years, 9 months and 23 days. He leaves to mourn his departure his wife, who was Miss Sallie Summers, to whom he was married fifty-one years ago last December; nine children—H. H. Brown and Mrs. W. H. Michael, of Gladys, Va.; Mrs. R. A. Apple, Mrs. J. A. Apple and A. J. Brown, of Altamahaw, N. C.; Mrs. Jason Lowe and Mrs. C. C. Whitsell, of Gibsonville, N. C.; Mrs. L. L. Wyrick, Elon College, N. C.; Mrs. A. Y. Fuller, of Guilford College, N. C.—twenty-five grand-children and one great-grandchild, three brothers, and many other relatives and a host of friends. Burial service was attended by an unusually large crowd and held at Apples Chapel. Last but not least, he was a Christian. May the Comforter console the hearts of the loved ones.

T. J. GREEN.

LUKE.

Isaac A. Luke was born in Murfreesboro, N. C., September 23, 1864, and died at Holland, Va., December 9, 1928, age 64 years. He was the son of the late Rev. J. W. Luke and Catharine Holland Luke. He was married to Jesse E. Holland, daughter of the late Rev. Robert H. Holland and Margaret Oberry Holland, on May 16, 1888, and to this union two sons survive, Howard A. and Isaac H., both of Holland.

He joined Holland Christian Church in 1894, and was ordained a deacon the following year. He was for many years superintendent of the Sunday School, chairman of the board of deacons and chairman of the official board, which offices he held with dignity and profit to the Sunday School, Church and community.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we recognize in his death the providence of God, and bow in humble submission to His will, finding comfort in the hope of meeting again in the house not made with hands.

2. That the Sunday School appreciates the long years of devoted service rendered by the deceased, and will seek to be worthy of his efforts by continuing the work which he loved.

3. That the Church acknowledges the loss of a faithful deacon, official and Christian counselor, but rejoices that for so long his services and means were so freely given to the Church.

4. That sympathy is hereby tendered to the bereaved family, and comfort of the Holy Scriptures and the hope of immortality are offered for consolation.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy spread on the records of the Church and Sunday School, and copies sent The Christian Sun and Herald of Gospel Liberty for publication.

HOZIER.

Mrs. Mary A. Hozier, the last of the charter members of the First Christian Church, Norfolk, Va., died January 6, 1929, at the age of 88. She had lived the last years of her life with her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur F. Hozier, whom she leaves, together with a number of other children to mourn their loss.

The funeral services were conducted at the First Christian Church on the afternoon of January 8th by Dr. W. W. Staley, Rev. O. D. Poythress and J. F. Morgan. Her pastor, Rev. J. E. McCauley, was unable to attend the funeral on account of illness. The body was laid to rest in the family lot in Magnolia Cemetery, Norfolk, Va. May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved ones left behind. J. F. MORGAN.

PARIS.

On February 5, 1929, after four weeks of unceasing illness, the spirit of little Margaret Paris, aged 11 years, took its flight. She was the only child of Mr. and Mrs. O. H. Paris and a devoted member of the First Christian Church. She was one of those rare little creatures, gentle in manner, brilliant in mind, and lovely in spirit. Loving hands and skilled physicians did all in their power, but her frail little body was not able to win out in the struggle. There is a vacancy in the home and a sorrow in the heart; yet her loved ones are comforted with the thought of greeting her again, "Lovelier in heaven's sweet climate, yet the same."

Funeral services were conducted from the First Christian Church by her pastor and Rev. R. Murphy Williams. Then the body was taken to Belew's Creek and, after a brief service there, interred in the Preston family plot. Girls from the Dixie Scout troop carried the flowers, of which there was a great profusion.

While our hearts in grief may say, "Why so few years"? yet we can also say, "Thank God for the beauty of those years and the joy and sunshine brought."

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE

WADLEY, ALABAMA

An Accredited Junior College

Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

RECREATIONAL ACTIVITIES.—

A vacation is not a sure vacation without recreational activities, such as boating, fishing, swimming, tennis, roque, horseshoe, etc. No champion of athletics and recreation need be disappointed in deciding on Winona as such a spot.

THREE LIVES IN ONE.—

Dr. David Starr Jordan, who recently passed his seventy-eighth birthday, in speaking to a large group of friends and Stanford alumni, reviewed his lifework in a most interesting and unusual way. He said: "I have lived three lives. I have been a naturalist and explorer; I have been a teacher and the president of this university; and I have worked for international peace. Thirty-eight years ago, Governor Stanford asked me to found a university that should begin where the University of California ends. Herbert Hoover is the type of man we then hoped to develop. I think my greatest achievement in behalf of world peace was made by my lecture tour through England, Germany, and Japan in 1913. I did not think the war would come. But the rulers of England thought they would be more powerful if Germany were crushed. The rulers of Germany thought they would be more powerful if England were crushed; and so the war came. But world peace is coming. The Kellogg pact is the greatest step toward peace ever taken; not because of the treaty itself, but because it has gotten the whole world to thinking peace instead of war."

TITHING AND SINCERITY.—

A preacher recently published the story to the effect that a man well known in public life had handed him a check for a thousand dollars, with the statement that it represented his tithing for the week. One of the first things this man did when he took a definite stand for Christ was to dedicate a tenth of his income to Christian work. Of all the things that have been said in favor of and against tithing, one fact is inescapable. There can be no doubt about the sincerity of the tither's Christian convictions. For one thing, tithing costs a little too much to be kept up steadily for the sake of a mere pretense. It is too constant, regular and systematic to be sustained by anything save a deep-seated conviction. The millionaire may, in a burst of liberality, give large sums. The man of average means may give sacrificially when his sympathies are deeply moved. But it takes a genuine love for Christ and His kingdom to devote a tenth of one's income week after week and year after year. Rich men sometimes argue that for them to give a tenth would mean that they would have to give too much. The poor man argues that in the light of the little he has that for him a tenth is too much. It really is not true that to give a tenth is too much for any Christian. But it is sometimes true that the love is too small to sustain such a system of systematic support of kingdom enterprises.

LIQUOR IN WASHINGTON.—

William S. Abernethy, writing of the task of enforcing the prohibition law in the nation's capital, sets forth the conditions as follows: "The House committee, familiarly known as the Gibson committee, has been holding numerous hearings of late in the endeavor to formulate some sort of an enforcement bill which will operate to rectify alarming conditions now prevailing in the District of Columbia. The capital city is wet, notoriously so. Dr. Doran, prohibition commissioner, says there are three thousand places here where liquor can be secured. The foreign embassies and legations of course have direct access to all the wines and liquors they want, and no law of this land can deny them this privilege. To call them bootlegations would probably not be in good taste, so we will not apply that term in this connection. There is a strong feeling that a good portion of this foreign stuff filters through the consignee to thirsty throats in select circles. The problem is a serious one at best. Washington has no enforcement act. Now and then a padlock is clamped on the premises where some notorious offender has held forth, but the usual program is arrest, acquittal; or if convicted, as occasionally happens, a small fine and then back to the profitable business again in some new location. Great things are expected of the new administration locally. There is a strong feeling that the man up in the White House can, if he really wants to, pass out the word that will assist the police and prohibition enforcement officials to quit winking."

MORE ABOUT CHURCH UNION.—

We referred last week to the meeting recently held in Pittsburgh in which representatives from the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Presbyterian Church in the United States were gathered to confer about Church union between their organizations. These two bodies are perhaps generally known to SUN readers as the Northern Presbyterian and Northern Methodist Churches. Most of us were doubtless expecting that about as far as they would get would be to pronounce union as something earnestly to be desired, and that might be expected in some remote and uncertain time. Full details as to exactly what were the results of the conference are not now available, but it seems that the religious world has been startled by the serious approach which was made to the question before them. Such reports as have been made public indicate that these two great bodies are giving themselves to the question of uniting in a whole-hearted and determined way. And when great numbers of Christian men and women really get in earnest about momentous issues of the kingdom and begin to approach them in the spirit of faith, great results are accomplished. It is then, and only then, that the desired becomes the sought for, and the impossible becomes possible. We have deplored the divisions and talked about the possibility of union so long that we have for the most part about lost our faith. But it appears now that the earnest prayers and labors of a few determined souls are beginning to bear fruit.

HIGH COST OF EVANGELISM.—

Sir Henry Lunn, editor of the Review of the Churches, a British religious periodical, has recently said some things that have been needing badly to be said for a long time, concerning the sums received by a certain type of evangelist. Sir Henry writes under the title: "Demas as Evangelist, A. O. 1928." For the benefit of some of our readers who may be forgetful, let it be recalled that Demas was the man who forsook Paul, "having loved this present world," to quote Paul's exact words.

This noted Englishman seems both amazed and disgusted at the huge sums collected by professional evangelists in this country. He refers to such a procedure as "selling Christ," and argues that it is worse to sell Christ than to deny Him. Attention is called to the case of "Rev. — S—, D. D.," who is generally known as "B— S—," "received for his campaign in New York, in addition to the expenses of himself and his staff, the sum of $100,000." The system is likened to the sale of indulgences by Tetzel, which roused the indignation of Martin Luther and started him upon his crusade of reformation. It is pointed out, however, that the money collected by Tetzel and his associates went into the coffers of the Church, rather than for the enrichment of their individual estates.

Sir Henry learned that during six years of evangelistic work, Aimee Semple McPherson had been able to accumulate $600,000 in clear profits. These two cases are exceptional in the amounts that have been accumulated. But everywhere are found evangelists, both big and little, who follow similar tactics. They make engagements wherever they can, but always with the stipulation that they are to receive "free-will offerings." The technique of securing these "free-will offerings" is often a marvel of skill and ingenuity.

Sir Henry's suggestion as to how to meet and deal with the situation seems adequate and directly to the point. "But the whole of this money-making business, under the guise of evangelism, can be brought to an end if the Churches will unanimously agree to insist that the evangelists shall be paid a fixed salary by the society that sponsors them, and that all free-will offerings shall be duly accounted for and forwarded in tact to the society which sponsors the evangelists."

NOTES-PERSONALS

The address of Rev. J. A. Denton is changed, and is now Raleigh, N. C., R. F. D. 3. Correspondents will please make note of same.

If Churches desire envelopes for the mission offering on or about Easter, or literature now to help inform the people, let requests be sent to the Mission Secretary, Elon College, N. C.

The many friends of Mrs. F. E. Bullock will learn with sorrow that her home in Dayton, Ohio, was recently destroyed by fire, entailing a serious financial loss upon Mrs. Bullock and Bro. Bullock.

The new Elon College Catalogue is from the press of the Central Publishing Company, Richmond, Va. A postcard addressed to C. M. Cannon, registrar, will bring a copy free to any reader of THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

The Clio Literary Society of Elon College celebrated its thirty-ninth anniversary on Washington's Birthday. The program was of a high order and indicates that literary life is not entirely dead in modern colleges as some people are inclined to think.

The Mission Secretary has in his office for distribution what he and others think the best missionary literature we have had in years. If pastors and Church officials wish their people to have real missionary information and inspiration as to our own work and workers in mission fields, let them send request for this splendid literature.

Rev. J. E. McCauley, First Church, Norfolk, was confined to his room for four weeks after Christmas, but is much improved now and is occupying his pulpit again. He writes: "I am using this month (February) and next at my Sunday morning and Wednesday evening services for preaching on missions and studying stewardship."

There will be deep sympathy for Prof. L. L. Vaughan, always active in the work of the United Church, Raleigh, in the death of his father, Mr. J. B. Vaughan, Franklin, Va., on the morning of the 19th. Prof. Vaughan has been called upon to sustain the loss of his father and mother both within a year. THE CHRISTIAN SUN extends deep sympathy.

The Board of Trustees of Elon College met in their midyear session on the 19th. Fifteen members of the board were present. They spent a most profitable day in studying the college as a going concern. The domestic science department served a delightful luncheon in their honor in the Y. W. banquet hall. Members of the faculty were guests also of the department at this luncheon.

President Lewis H. Keller, of the Atlanta Theological Seminary; Dr. Lyman Royce, secretary of city Churches in the Congregational National Council, Cleveland, Ohio; Dr. Fred P. Ensminger, secretary of the southeast Congregational field, Nashville, Tenn., and Dr. J. Edward Kirbye, pastor of the United Church of Raleigh, were visitors to the college on Saturday. Elon is always glad to welcome representatives of the Congregational Church to its campus.

Our collection of missionary literature for the Churches during this mission period is excellent and gives a splendid idea of our work and workers. The Mission Secretary has on hand and for free distribution where actually needed and desired folders, leaflets or pamphlets with the following titles: "The Missionary Motive," "Missions in the Sunday School," "Why?" "How?" "Winning the Japanese Farmer by Mail," "$59,-872.92—What Does it Mean?" "Pre-Easter Suggestions for the Foreign Mission Period," "That They All May be One," "Down by the Riverside," and pictures of each of our missionaries.

It is not often that THE CHRISTIAN SUN calls attention to contributed articles, but there are two in this issue that the editor will be glad to have THE CHRISTIAN SUN readers look up. These articles are an appreciation of a sermon delivered by Bro. Stanley C. Harrell by a Baptist layman, who was not only present but who really listened in as the preacher preached; the second is by Miss Sallie W. Roberts, an invalid, who has had a genuine Christian experience and who is able to impress her readers with her uplifting message. We hope that both of these messages will be read by all of our readers.

"Teaching the Church to Tithe" is a new leaflet issued for free distribution by The Layman Company. Its subtitle is "Guidance on the road to financial freedom and self-respect." It contains simple but tested suggestions of methods which can be used in any Church without breaking into or interfering with present activities. It is equally well adapted to Sunday Schools, young people's societies, woman's societies, or other groups in the Church. This leaflet will be sent without charge direct from The Layman Company headquarters, 730 Rush Street, Chicago, on request from pastors or others who are interested in unsectarian, simple and practical stewardship promotion.

Bro. J. M. Darden, Assistant Secretary of Missions, Suffolk, Va., is working diligently and planning wisely to the end that the whole Eastern Virginia Conference shall do its full duty and meet its full quota for missions during the mission period and at or near Easter. He believes now that this Conference will give at least one-third as much to missions this year as its Churches pay their pastors. This is certainly a goal within the reach of every Church in every Conference, and no Church should be willing to do less than this—pay one-third as much to have the gospel preached to others as they pay to have it preached to themselves. We will go far beyond this some day, when we appreciate the gospel more than we do now; but surely this year we should—every Church should—do at least this much.

Suffolk Church has not only put on the budget, but seems to be living up to it. Last week we reported in THE SUN the quota for missions of the first quarter and we are advised all claims for the first quarter of the Church year, including all apportionments and obligations, were met. This is doing business for the Good Lord in the Good Lord's own way. "Let each one of you lay by him in store on the first day of the week as the Lord hath prospered him." The trouble with many of us is that we put off our offerings for the Lord until about the last—the last of the year, or the last of the month, or week—when we are commanded to put this aside first. Others can do, if they will, as Suffolk is doing, and they will find it much easier and better to give to the Lord's work in this way the part due Him.

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, pastor Suffolk Church, under date of February 19th, writes: "So far as the Eastern Virginia Conference is concerned, it is doing an intensive work (in the present missionary period). I can say this because I can speak from first hand. Our own Church is pledged to raise its quota, and we are going to do it. I am hoping, however, that in this emergency we shall do a bit more and go over the top with an extra offering. I have made definite plans for our missionary education work during the next few weeks. A series of sermons distinctively missionary in character and spirit, a well-defined program of missions in the Sunday School every Sunday, and what I think is going to be a very attractive missionary display, together with a personal letter and the distribution of the splendid missionary material available this year—all these things ought to awaken and develop the missionary spirit of our Church. I am looking forward with keen delight to these next few weeks." When a pastor enters the mission period with zeal and plans like those, he may indeed look forward with keen delight, for there will be response and results.

THE BLUE AND THE GRAY.

Sixty-four years ago there ended a struggle which had threatened the very existence of our nation. A struggle in which two sections of our country had arrayed themselves against each other and fought for four years with bitter hatred. At that time it seemed to many impossible that the wound would ever heal, that enmities could be forgotten. Today, so complete has been the reunion of the two factions that it seems even more impossible that such a tragic affair could have occurred.

There remain but a few of the Blue and of the Gray who fought so valiantly and stubbornly for what each believed to be the right. With the passage of years they have forgiven and forgotten. Since the time of that futile conflict, their descendants have fought side by side and with equal valor for the glory of the Stars and Stripes. It could not be said those of the North are more patriotic than those of the South.

These remaining few are fast succumbing to the ravages of time. While there are yet some of these two great hosts for whom taps have not been sounded, it is planned that there be held, in the city of Washington in the year 1929 a grand reunion.

To this end, Congressman Edgar Howard, of Nebraska, has introduced a bill to provide for an appropriation to bear the expense of such a reunion and the appointment of a commission to carry out the plans. The commission, as provided in the bill, would consist of the general of the United States Army, the commander of the Spanish-American War Veterans, the commander of the American Legion, the commander of Veterans of Foreign Wars, and such other persons as the President of the United States may appoint.

Such a reunion, symbolizing the complete unity of our nation, following the historic assemblies of the Blue and the Gray at Gettysburg, Vicksburg and Stony Mountain, and the return of captured battle flags, would be an event of national significance and serve as an inspirational object lesson to our people for generations to come. H.

LITERATURE.

During this foreign mission period in our Churches our people should be informed as to our foreign mission work. We have in the mission office at Elon College, N. C., an abundance and a variety of literature giving just such information as is needed at this time. This literature is for free distribution and can be had on request. Let pastors, Sunday School superintendents and others interested address us their request, and we will be glad to accommodate them.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

LITTLE FAULTS THAT RUIN GREAT LIVES.

By Rev. Joseph W. Fix, B. D.

"Take the foxes, the little foxes that spoil the vines, for our vines have tender grapes."
—Songs of Sol. 2:15.

The Song of Solomon is a very dramatic and poetic book. It is most beautiful in its construction and the analogy portrayed through its songs. The ancient Jews said it showed the relationship between Jehovah and His people Israel. The early Christians said it illustrated the love of Christ for His people. It is the story of King Solomon and his love for a rustic country maiden. She has been in love with her true lover, a shepherd boy of the hills. Her songs of love and devotion make up this book of canticles which were canonized as "The Song of Solomon." We are not surprised at a book of human love in the Bible when we consider that such love was ordained of God.

Seven songs make up the book. In the first one the maiden sings before her townsmen a song in which she asks them to show her where she might find her lover. In the second one she relates a visit with him in which she sang a song of humor and nonsense. Let us listen to that part of it which we shall meditate upon as our text: "Take the foxes, the little foxes that spoil the vines, for our vines have tender grapes."

To be sure the folk songs of those days were full of truth and grand analogy. There is more in them than mere jesting and humor. Imbedded in this ditty is a lesson for us all to consider. It surely stimulates our thought and helps us discover that there are certain little foxes continually trying to spoil the tender vines and fruits of our lives. The fox is a cunning little creature. He is small and his teeth are sharp. One tiny bite upon a young vine will destroy its future prospect. One bite upon the tender life of a youth will bear unfavorable fruit, unless something be done to remedy the situation. Let us think of some of the dangerous little foxes that impair our lives, weaken and wreck character and lead us down to destruction. They all may seem like insignificant little things, yet they may ruin lives that are destined to become great in the sight of God and man.

1. One of the greatest enemies known to man is evil companionship. When once a youth is a member of a bad crowd, he is destined to failure, unless he give up the bunch and select good friends. Just as the tender grapes are ruined by the minute bite of the little fox, so we may become useless and miserable if we associate with bad company. The old fable of Aesop brings out the thought that one becomes like the group with which he travels. Listen to the story: Once upon a time a man set a trap in his field. The next morning he discovered that among the birds caught therein was one that did not resemble the thieving crows. This bird said, "Do not kill me, for I am not as one of the others." But the man said, "Birds of a feather flock together." So it is that a person is known by the company he keeps.

A bad crowd will have untold influence for evil upon any one. Every professional gambler, murderer, drunkard and prostitute started on the downward grade by being in a crowd that encouraged wickedness.

Much truth is to be found in the singing of Dr. H. R. Palmer's famous hymn, "Yield not to temptation, for yielding is sin. Shun evil companions; be thoughtful and earnest, kind hearted and true. He is willing to aid you, He will carry you through."

The tragedy of Judas stands out in the New Testament as a fair example of sin that was brought upon him because members of a bad crowd won his confidence. Had it not been for his frequent association with the Roman cohort, I doubt if Judas would have ever thought of betraying his Lord and Master.

When Thomas Carlyle began to write the life of Frederick the Great, he tried to realize all of the conditions of Prussian life. He used a desk brought to him from Germany. His inkstand, ink and paper came from that country. Even the pen with which he wrote was German made, and upon the walls of his study hung pictures of Germany. This environment and stimulating surroundings enabled the great Scotch writer to create a work of Frederick the Great that is unsurpassable in literature. Let us seek an environment made up of things that are pure and holy. Of friends that are good and honest. Good companionship creates loveliness and mercy, such as you and I need in the building of Christian lives. In such an environment there will be no dangerous little foxes. They lurk amid bad crowds.

2. The second little fox that often gnaws upon the tender vines of life, we shall call Falsehood. Especially is it interesting that we talk about this fox today, the first Sabbath following the birthday of George Washington, who is proverbially known as the lad who could not tell a lie. This factor in the life of the lad, no doubt, had much to do with his superb greatness as a leader. It is a desirable habit for every one to formulate.

There is an old English proverb that says, "a lie has no legs." This means that a lie cannot be of any use to any one along the journey. Though it be a little thing seemingly, it is a sharp instrument in tearing down the walls of justice, righteousness and truth. It brings one to failure, sorrow and utter defeat. In the twelfth chapter of Proverbs we read that "Lying lips are an abomination to the Lord." Not only in the sight of the Lord, but every man, woman and child of moral character despises people who are untruthful. Furthermore, the people who tell lies despise it in others. Contrasting the untruthful man with the truthful, we may say that everybody loves a truthful man. The truth alone shall set men free; falsehoods bind them to slavery and unhappiness.

Telling lies undermines character; whereas telling the truth builds up strong moral fiber in the lives of all who yield not to the undesirable temptation of lying. This past summer I stood in the American Hall of Fame in New York City. Around me were placed the figures of America's greatest and most famous men and women. They were chosen from the rank of people who learned the value of telling the truth.

Telling the truth is a little thing. Sometimes it may seem hard to do, but when once it is told, each succeeding time becomes easier and easier, until the habit of telling the truth is firmly established. To tell the truth is to win a victory over Satan; to tell a lie is to let Satan win a victory over you and over me.

One of the outstanding characteristics of Abraham Lincoln was his truthfulness. He never yielded to telling lies. After his death some one said, "Abe was the best boy I ever saw or expect to see." You could always rely upon his word. Yes or no meant that he would or he would not.

"Speak the truth, boys; speak the truth
And let your hearts be true to God.
Stand for the right, boys, in your youth—
A coward lies and fears the rod,
Speak the truth, boys; dare to be true,
And life will bring success to you."

Concerning truth, Oliver Wendell Holmes said, "Truth is tough; it will not break like a bubble. Nay, you may kick it around all day and it will be round and full at evening."

The Elon College Glee Club gave a sacred concert in the United Christian Church, Raleigh, on Sunday afternoon, and on that evening in the First Church, Durham. Other Churches that would like to have the college Glee Club give concerts for them may address Prof. C. James Velie, Elon College, N. C. There will be no cost except entertainment and perhaps transportation connected with these visits.

Shall We Share the Gospel with Others? IF SO, TO WHAT EXTENT?

One million, seven hundred thousand souls in Japan and Porto Rico alone are depending upon us. If we of the Christian denomination do not share with them the Gospel, they will never get it. February and March are "Foreign Mission Months" in the Southern Christian Convention. What will the answer be from us as individuals, Sunday Schools and Churches? We are depending upon each and every one to do his or her best in obedience to the command of our Lord, "Go ye."

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE GRACE OF GRATITUDE.

One of the joys of reading the Psalms is the gratitude we find so often expressed there. "Oh, that men would praise the Lord for His goodness, and for His wonderful works to the children of men." Of course, we cannot count our blessings. They are too numerous and abundant. Still we may, if we will, and can, with pleasure and profit, dwell on some of them and be grateful. This writer had an experience recently, witnessed a scene, for which he can and will be grateful as long as he lives. He visited Silver Springs, six miles out from Ocala, Fla. This spring, or rather this legion of them (for they are many) is one of the rarest combinations of chemical and biological elements to be found on this earth. Now, this writer will not describe what he saw on, in, and under Silver Springs. He could not do so if he desired. What writer has ever described the fragrance of a blushing rose, the glory of a setting sun, or the wonders of another world? One can experience such joys, and be grateful. That is why God gives us experiences we cannot reveal, and shows us wonders we cannot describe. He wants us to have some things that beggar description, that we have to keep to ourselves, and for which to be grateful. Thus He seeks to cultivate in us our sense of gratitude.

When one goes out on Silver Springs, in a glass-bottom boat, and looks down, one leaves this world then and there and is transported, soul and body, into another and an altogether different world. With the naked eye, one sees far beneath the surface of the water—twenty, thirty, fifty, sixty, eighty feet—and finds there, in some areas, a luxurious growth of green, healthy, vigorous vegetation, abundant and sufficient to feed many a herd of cattle if only the cattle could dive so deep and live there long enough to eat it. But that is the home, the wooing and the watching place of a numerous funny tribe who, varicolored, free and grateful, in their native surroundings swim in and out, up and down, to show the people of this world what the perfection of curve and outline and grace of movement really are. The formation of ancient upheavals are beneath those springs and chasms, currents and cross-currents of bubbling, sparkling waters, clear as crystal, and as sparkling as gems. You see beneath the waters of Silver Springs the life, growth, conduct and habits of the mineral, vegetable and fish life of another and a different world. If one cannot be grateful for scenes and wonders like that, one's heart is hard indeed and one's soul is dead in trespasses and in sin sure enough.

One does not have to go to Silver Springs in Florida to see objects of gratitude and wonders that incite to praise. When our own life seems to shut in on us, to shrivel and shrink and become narrow and not worth while, look out on some life that is worth while nearby us and be grateful for that. This writer has friends that he thinks are wonderful. For them he thanks God every day. As Emerson says, "We have not chosen our friends: God has chosen them for us and given them to us." They form a constant stream of comfort, strength and helpfulness into our lives. So we thank God for them as we should, and praise God for giving them to us as we ought.

This writer sat the other day, all unobserved by the wearer, and observed with keen delight a beautiful diamond on the hand of a stranger. That stranger did not know what a favor he was conferring on me by wearing that diamond. It was rich and restful and rare to look upon. A stone shot through with all the colors of the rainbow, a gem taken from a cavern, or obscurity somewhere, polished, adorned, God-kissed. I thank God for diamonds that other people wear for my enjoyment, contemplation and delight. They, too, make their contribution to my life and cause me to praise Him who alone can create and condense such rare beauty into such small space. Are we grateful enough for the beauty and the bounty, the benevolence and the beatitudes round about us? "Oh, that men would praise the Lord for His goodness and for His wonderful works to the children of men!"

THE COUNTRY CHURCH.

Because of its incalculable contribution to the morality and spirituality of our civilization, the rural Church has always played a great part in our civic and national life. From the country Church have come many of the most capable and stalwart characters not only of the pulpit but of the pew and of the political and business world as well.

Because of its importance in molding the character and shaping the conduct of such a large part of our citizenship, its problems, pursuits and prospects engage the thinking and the interest of social and religious workers every where. Scarcely a civic or social assembly of consequence meets that does not give some time and discussion to this theme—the country Church. By many, it is now declared "our major" problem, and is treated as such by scholars and investigators. Recently a friend called to our attention the inclosed Associated Press report of the Southern Social Congress, in session at Atlanta:

"The rural Church today was declared to be in danger of extinction unless trained rural clergy were alert to the menace confronting four-fifths of the nation's Church membership and sent out to help solve this 'major Church problem.'

"Addressing the Social Service Conference, sponsored by the Woman's Missionary Council of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Dr. E. C. Branson, head of the department of rural economics University of North Carolina, said the country Church 'too long has been a victim of tight-fisted religion.'

"The country Church,' he said, 'is not a home mission problem. Four-fifths of the whole membership is in rural communities, and the country Church is, therefore, the major Church problem of the South. Too long has the country Church been neglected by the Church papers; been the victim of a tight-fisted religion, and received its pastors untrained, underpaid, part-time men.'

"He declared the country Church in the South to be in three distinct phases. In densely populated, intelligent, home-owning centers, he said the Church was growing; in over-churched areas of static population and once-a-month preaching, it was marking time, and in areas of excessive tenancy, illiteracy and decreasing farm population, the 'country Church is either dying or is dead.'

Many of our universities now are giving courses free to ministers of rural Churches in which courses the problems of rural Church life are given thorough study and investigation. Not a few of our own rural pastors have availed themselves of these courses and are seeking to stimulate activity in Church life by a more intelligent handling of Church problems and conditions.

The biggest problem of the rural Church is that of the city Church and of all Churches, namely: that of having an alert, studious, active ministry, spiritually minded, with a burning zeal to preach the Word of God and an insatiate passion for soul-saving. Given the right sort of ministry and the Church problem is solved. For the right sort of minister is no more content to preach as he preached, teach as he taught, and tell what he learned twenty years ago in the country Church than he is in the city Church.

MARRIAGE AND THE HOME.

Marriage is a divine institution and is the union of one man and one woman during the life of both parties. "Whosoever putteth away his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery; and whosoever marrieth her that is put away from her husband committeth adultery"; and "adulterers cannot inherit the kingdom of God" (Luke 16: 18 & 1 Cor. 6:9-10). This sacred relation satisfies human nature in all of its requirements, and is the foundation of the home; and the home is the unit of strength in Church and State. It is the spring from which all the streams of human society are supplied. The springs are the purest waters in the world. Corrupt the springs of the world and all the streams will be defiled. The best home in the world is the Christian home. I have seen the stream back into the spring in a time of flood and make the fountain as muddy as itself. We are living in a time when the back-water of society is polluting the homes of our land. Modern discoveries and inventions; modern organizations and intercourse; the printed page and the moving picture; new methods of education and child-training have combined to transfer the idea of home to community service. The home has, in a way, surrendered its rights and its responsibilities to public sentiment and public guardianship. Parents seem satisfied to let their children get their ideas of manners and morals from others rather than from the teaching and example of the home. This is no individual thought, but the common opinion of this age in which so much is written about child welfare and child-training.

Home life is almost ancient history in the country today. The fireside is unknown. The parlor music is a Victrola. The models for children are in public places. The love is there. The good desires are there. The sacrifice is there. But the home tie is not there. The joy of home is not there. The power of example is not there. Many parents feel that their children know more than they do. They have seen more. They have been to school more. Society works such demands upon children that parents yield their place and are submerged by the thought and customs of the times. Prayer in the home is for the sick, the aged and the bereaved. Prosperity, like too much rain, has spoiled the home. The Israelitish nation did not produce Moses; it was the peasant home of Amram and Jochebed. The Israelitish commonwealth did not produce Samuel; it was the peasant home of Elkanah, with his praying wife, Hannah, that gave that great man to the nation. Jesus came from the peasant home in Nazareth. What this day needs is the Christian home. The Sunday School cannot do all. The public school cannot do all. The community center cannot do all. Children need home. Young people need home. Old folks need home. The Church needs it. The State needs it. This age needs it. Separation of people by ages is intellectually, psychologically, socially and spiritually false. The old need the association of the young, and the young need the influence of ripe experience tempered by love. The family group is the purest, the sanest, the sweetest, the wisest group among men. Home, sweet home! W. W. S.

OUR PRESENT PRIVILEGE.

Unless our pastors, Churches and Sunday Schools take advantage of the present missionary period, we fear the consequences for the Church and school throughout the year. If we find it difficult, inconvenient, disagreeable to put on missionary programs, sermons, exhortations and efforts now while splendid literature is abundant, and the theme is uppermost in the minds of many, how much more difficult will it be to put on such program and preaching when the matter is not so convenient? Very wisely and well, we think, the Convention named early spring months the mission period. In the spring we look to the world's greatest single event—the resurrection of our Lord. Through His resurrection, the plan of salvation was completed. We should at this period of the year desire most of all to proclaim Him to the world, and make Him known who Himself has made us what we are.

If we have any passion for souls, surely we enter into this mission period with zest and zeal. For it is through our missionary effort we show to God and man our desire for the salvation of the unsaved, the redemption of the unredeemed. When we give to missions, either our prayers, our labors or our means, we show to the world and to our Saviour that we have a saving care and concern for others and that we want others to share with us the knowledge and the saving power of our Lord. J. O. A.

"HAS ANY ONE BEEN OMITTED?"

The late lamented Rev. J. W. Wellons, in administering the Lord's Supper, would say at the conclusion, "Has any one been omitted? If so, the uplifted hand will so indicate and we will see that he or she is waited upon. We do not wish to omit any one who wishes to partake of the emblems of our Lord's broken body and shed blood."

"Unele" Wellons was right. None should be omitted; none should be overlooked who should commune. And yet, aren't we Christians, "open communionists" though we be, overlooking and omitting a great many who should and would love to commune if they only knew? Are we not omitting or overlooking some seventy thousands in Porto Rico, the great majority of whom would commune with us if we would hasten and tell them of our Lord, of His saving and redeeming power, of His life, love, death and resurrection? And then are we not omitting or neglecting about a million souls in Japan, vast numbers of whom would be gladly communing with us, if they only knew about our Lord's teachings, crucifixion, sacrificial life and death? There is no one else to invite them—no one else ever will invite them—if we Christians do not. They are assigned to us; the other denominations have all they can do elsewhere and are not to extend the invitation to these. Shall we omit them? shall we continue to overlook them when our Lord's Supper is spread? He died for them as He did for us, but He left it to us to tell them about Him and invite them to His table. Shall we invite them or omit them? We are to answer this question one way or the other on or about Easter this year. J. O. A.

ADD PATIENCE TO TEMPERANCE.

Just before the reaping of the harvest of the earth, there will be a people of whom it will be truthfully said, "Here is the patience of the saints, here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." The great movements of providence will develop a people who will be a spectacle to the universe, to angels, and to men—a patient people. Not until such a people is developed will the harvest of the earth be ripe for the sickle. Everything is held in restraint until this is accomplished.

How often do we hear the expression in prayer and social meetings, "I am so impatient," or "Pray for me, that God will give me more patience." We feel our need of this crowning virtue. We can see that God could not admit into heaven an impatient person, for such a one would spoil the place. Heaven's dwellers will be patient. They will be patient there because they have first been patient here.

When it can be said of a people living on the earth, "Here is the patience of the saints; here are they," then the harvest of the earth is ripe, and not before. Then the Son of man will come to gather together His elect, and will escort them back to the mansions prepared for them. There will be no family jars there, no heartaches. All will be peace, because all have learned to say while on earth, "Not my will, but Thine be done."

What is it that makes people manifest impatience? It is because their wills are crossed; because they cannot have their way. Could we always have our way in every detail of life, it would not be difficult to be patient. It is when our wills are crossed that we manifest impatience. We then reveal what is in the heart by nature.

How can this virtue, so desirable, be obtained? It is not obtained by good resolutions. There is a way that leads to it, and it is the only way, but it is a way that the flesh never chooses. We pray for patience, but when the Lord takes us over the only path leading to it, we halt and often step back and are unwilling to enter it.

The path has been clearly pointed out. Here it is, "Tribulation worketh patience." The pathway of tribulation leads to the virtue of patience. Those of whom it is said, "Here is the patience of the saints," of them it is also said, "These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb" (Rev. 7:14).

Pray for Tribulation.

When praying for patience, let us fully understand what we are praying for. It means that we are praying that we may be led into the path of tribulation, a path where our wills will be crossed again and again. It means that we shall say, "Father, Thou knowest what we most need, the experiences through which we must pass to become patient. Help us in every place and in every experience to submit our wills cheerfully to Thine, and to say, 'Not my will, but Thine, be done.'"

In Israel's history we read the experiences of human nature as revealed under trial; and we see revealed ourselves under similar circumstances unless the will is fully surrendered to the will of God. So long as everything came their way, they were happy; but when the winds were contrary and tests came, they murmured and found fault with Providence. They alternately sang and murmured.

A short time ago at the conclusion of a talk on faith in an overruling providence as related to health, a woman who evidently was under conviction and yet was unwilling to acknowledge that the trouble was wholly with her, came to me and said, "Doctor, I get very angry sometimes." Before saying more, she began to justify herself for getting angry. She said, "I am naturally good-natured," but immediately added, "that is, if I am treated halfway decent." It was rather amusing to observe her manner of confession and self-justification at the same time. She expressed the feelings of most men and women. Yes, it is not difficult to be good-natured when treated halfway decent; but a Christian must be patient when not treated half-way decent. This is what it means to be a Christian. Any one can be patient by having removed all causes for impatience, but a Christian can be patient under provocation.

Physical Factors Overlooked.

While the grace of God is all sufficient to make men patient in tribulation, there are often physical causes for impatience that are overlooked. "Add to temperance patience." If intemperance in eating or drinking or working or sleeping is responsible for the impatience, it is essential to make the needed physical reforms. As well may the whiskey drinker pray that God will save him from developing a rum blossom so long as he keeps drinking, as for one who is careless in his habits of eating and drinking to pray for patience so long as he continues these practices.

A sour stomach and a sweet disposition do not naturally go together. The gospel is designed to save from sin, not in sin. It saves from causes in order to save from results. It does not save from results, leaving causes unremoved. When this is more fully recognized, much more will be said in regard to the need of eating and drinking to the glory of God.

There are many who are praying for patience, and they would be greatly aided in their struggle if they would give up the use of tea, coffee, and flesh meats, and learn to combine properly the simple non-irritating foods afforded by the vegetable kingdom.

"To knowledge (add) temperance; and to temperance patience." This is God's program for us to adopt. "If ye do these things, ye shall never fall," on the point of impatience.—Review and Herald.

OFFICIAL NOTICE.

The Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at its last session, accepted an invitation from Newport News to meet there in 1929. But inasmuch as their new Church will not be completed by the time of the Convention, the Newport News people have asked to be relieved from entertaining this year. The executive committee is, therefore, anxious to receive an invitation for the coming session of the Convention. Please take this up with your school and notify us if you wish to entertain.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

In the field that made ancients great, this age is a copyist. This age is great in the field of personal liberty and mechanics, but in the field of letters and arts it sits like a school-boy used to sit at the writing table to copy what the teacher had written in the copybook. No new great art in architecture, sculpture, painting, music, poetry, theology, or philosophy has been produced by this nation or any other within hundreds of years. No great structure like Cheops—Egypt's greatest pyramid—Solomon's temple, the temple in Athens or St. Peter's in Rome has arisen under original designs within four centuries.

For commercial and convenient purposes, new structures, as the skyscrapers, great bridges, and great factories have been created; but no real work of art has been created by modern architects. For the artistic in architecture, this age copies past ages; but for industrial and mechanical progress, this age surpasses all ages. In printing, picture-making, books, magazines and papers, this age leads all time; but the pictures and books are not equal to the products of past ages. In fact, this age is characterized by the multiplication of rather than the creation of greater things. This is true of education and the conveniences of life. There is a greater number of books, but not greater books. There are more schools, but not greater schools. There are more scholars, but not greater scholars. There are more pictures, but not greater pictures. There are more musicians, but not greater musicians. There are more poets, but not greater poets. There are more architects, but not greater architects. There are more Christians, but not greater Christians. There are more preachers, but not greater preachers. There are more orators, but not greater orators. There are more teachers, but not greater teachers. There are more missionaries, but not greater missionaries. This is an age of multiplication and distribution. More enjoy the opportunities and comforts of life than ever before. This wider distribution all the ages have produced has had a leveling effect upon human society. The more widely the products of land and sea are distributed, and the more widely educational and religious opportunities are distributed, the more society is reduced to a common level in dress, manners, education, wealth, and standing. The tendency of the world is toward democracy and equality. Ancestry, learning, position and wealth do not count as they once did. In a way, the rich man is still the big man; but the wider distribution of wealth and the increasing number of rich men is reducing that divisive element in human equations. We are not only tunneling the mountains, bridging the rivers, crossing the ocean, and sailing through the air; but we are doing the same thing in human society. The world was never so close together, and nations were never so close together, and the Church was never so close in unity of purpose and work. Social life has reached this same stage of friendly intercourse. All this has been produced by the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ, who brought a new spirit of unity into the hearts of men, and the Church, and the nations

ELON LETTER.

W. K. HOLT—AN APPRECIATION.

(Read at the annual banquet of the Burlington Chamber of Commerce, February 22, 1929.)

At our banquet a year ago, the president-elect, Kirk Holt, assumed the duties of his office, made a splendid plea for co-operation, and announced his committees for the year. He entered upon what promised to be a record year of achievement for the chamber. But on Sunday, July 29th, when presiding over the dedication exercises of the new building of the Christian Orphanage, at Elon College, of whose board of trustees he was president, Mr. Holt was stricken, and that night passed away.

W. K. Holt was born on the farm of his parents, three miles east of Burlington, on April 22, 1866. At the age of eighteen he came to Company Shops, at a salary of $25.00 the year, with board and room. He worked just as hard for that salary as for any he ever earned, and soon he began to prosper.

He was here when the name of the town was changed from Company Shops to Burlington, and was a part of the community in every real sense for forty years thereafter. For many years of this period, he was town clerk, then alderman, then mayor. He was chairman of the board of county commissioners, member and chairman of the board of education of the city and county, and held responsible positions on committees and commissions at various times having to do with the development of the city's life.

He was active in the business life of Burlington, being an officer in more than twenty leading corporations at the time of his death.

He was prominent officially in the local Christian Church, of which he was a loyal and devoted member, and in the general work of the Christian denomination. He took greatest pride in his work for the Christian Orphanage, where his fine executive ability brought order out of chaos, and prosperity out of financial distress. This institution is now one of the best-managed orphanages in the South. He saw it become so.

Mr. Holt's characteristics were of the sturdy variety that have made America great. He was a typical modern business man, reflecting the spirit of our times in his life.

1. In the first place, he was energetic. He loved to work, and in his work he found his joy. He was so absorbed in the enterprises to which he devoted himself that he did not know how to take a real vacation. He wanted to be in harness and to wear out rather than rust out. He had his desire, and rejoiced in it. Such hard workers as he do not reach old age, but they accomplish Herculean tasks.

2. He was resolute and determined. Mr. Holt did not make up his mind as rapidly as some, but when he had weighed a situation and decided on a course of action, he pursued his goal doggedly, resolutely, with grim determination. Yielding in the line of action was contrary to his make-up. Some people who sought and needed his influence for their enterprises, therefore, thought he was cold-blooded, but he was only apparently so. He was really warm-hearted and enthusiastic in his support of the thing or cause he had espoused. But he could be as indifferent as ice to a cause he was not devoted to, and as adamant as steel against the thing that had evoked his opposition.

3. He was positive. You knew where to place him. There was no pretense, or camouflage, or deceit in his character. He did not evade issues. But at the same time he was a fair antagonist. He would not stoop to mean methods of achieving success. Nobody ever successfully accused him of unfairness or of taking underhanded advantage.

4. He had judicious insight. Surface considerations could not divert his mental eye from the central facts involved in an issue. As a director of big business, he was, therefore, an invaluable asset. His criticism of a policy was a signal that it needed to be re-examined. His espousal of it was evidence that it had been thoroughly thought out and promised success. So his business associates valued, trusted and loved him sincerely.

5. He was a producer of results. He molded the policies and built the reputations of not a few local corporations. He accumulated no inconsiderable estate, and did it all honorably; nor did his prosperity spoil his genuine human qualities.

6. He was community-minded. He did not always support every community enterprise, because his judgment did not always approve. But what he did approve he supported with unalloyed devotion. He loved the Church and denomination to which he belonged, and gave of his time and his means for their advancement. He was an enthusiastic Rotarian and believed in its motto, "He profits most who serves best."

He believed particularly in the Chamber of Commerce. He was a charter member of the organization, and the one of Burlington's busiest men and advised by physicians to let up in his duties, he accepted its presidency and gave several of the most productive months of his life to its advancement. During his term as president, characteristically, he set in motion the budget that has placed the Chamber of Commerce on a sound financial basis.

This Chamber of Commerce, therefore, and this city and county, and the Christian Church, will long remember with gratitude and appreciation this upstanding man who summated in his character six of the finest attributes of the leaders of our American life, attributes that have made America great. Long live the memory of this energetic and constructive Burlingtonian.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have great pleasure in presenting to you a portrait of our deceased friend and brother and co-worker. I think it's a beautiful custom which you inaugurate at this time of placing upon the walls of the office of the Chamber of Commerce the likenesses of the great and good men who, as presidents of this organization, have given of their time and talent for its advancement in the community and for its service of uplift and upbuilding of the community life. I am sure that the honor of being the first to have his picture placed in this permanent way in the office of the chamber is fully deserved by the late William Kirkpatrick Holt, your immediate predecessor in office and a man whom this community will have every reason for many years to love and cherish.

W. A. HARPER.

THE STRAIGHT ROAD.

Several years ago the good roads in some sections of the States were kept up by the use of toll gates. Every few miles a toll gate would stop you, and there you'd have to pay for the use of the road. The road of life is just like that—there are toll gates, and you must pay the price if you keep the straight road, for there are no detours on the road to Christian living.

Every true Christian is a soldier, and has a warfare on hand to fight to victory. If we are true to God, He will not suffer us to be tempted beyond what we are able to bear. But it is impossible for us to be carried to heaven on a flowery bed of ease. Do not think that God has forsaken you because things do not go the way you would have them. God cannot develop character along the pathway of ease. We do not know how God can best develop our character, and we do not know whether we should have more bright days than dark ones, but we do know that He doeth all things well.

We are ships on the sea of life, and I want to tell you, my friends, that storms will come—storms of sin, storms of temptations, storms of trouble and sickness. Maybe it would be more interesting to tell you that these words are written by a sufferer of tuberculosis for several years. I am writing this flat of my back, trusting that it may help some one. My life has been very different in the past years. I have learned what the little things of life meant; but the greatest blessing I have gotten from my sickness is that I have learned to appreciate God.

I was like most young women and men are, it seems, nowadays. They think they are Christians, but, as I would call it, "a counterfeit one"; and if you think you can get by on that, you'll be out of luck at the judgment day. Most of the doors of opportunity have been closed upon me, but I find in the blessed Book where there is an open door that no man can shut—Jesus Christ. So, friends, if you are in your health, don't wait until you get disabled and afflicted to take the right road, for you may not even have that chance.

Serve God now in every way you can. Give your fellow-men a smile and a little sunshine, for their load may be heavy. Remember, God is ever knocking at your door, waiting patiently to come in. So don't sit on the doorsteps; you may be too late. There is no excuse for any of us, for God says: "He that cometh unto me, I will in nowise cast out"—and He's better than His word. No matter how your life has been lived, He is always ready to give you the second chance.

Let me advise you as you face the future and strive to climb the mountain of God, that you take Jesus Christ, the Guide who knows the way. He will make no mistakes. He will lead you up no blind alleys. There will be no places where you have to turn and come back, for He knows the way.

We think of death as an awful event—and it is, for we must die alone. Our loved ones may stand at our bedside, doctors may render every aid they can, some dear friend may give us a last clasp of the hand; but when the door of death swings shut, we face eternity alone! The door of death! No prisoner has been known to open it, once its eternal locks have caught. But what a reward will be our portion if we have traveled the straight road. The gray curtain will not seem so heavy, for God will make our bed as soft as downy pillows are. He will be our Guide through the valley of the shadow of death, and our Pilot across the dark River of Jordan.

Windsor, Va. SALLY W. ROBERTS.

IMPRESSED BY SERMON.

On the evening of the 17th of February I visited the First Christian Church, in company with my companion (this being her regular place of worship), I was much impressed by the splendid exposition of the 121st Psalm by the pastor, Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, and would like to pass it on. The theme, "The great safety of the godly who put their trust in God's protection"; the text, Psa. 121, 8th verse, "The Lord shall preserve thy going out, and thy coming in, from this time forth, and even forevermore."

I shall not endeavor to quote verbatim or from shorthand; only from memory. The preacher gave a thrilling illustration at the beginning by reference to a British vessel in peril at sea, with a severe storm raging, while the mad billows whipped the sides of the great ship; consternation, fear, and dismay to the fright of the passengers, a signal given of distress by the captain by air waves, an American ship caught it, and with the velocity of lightning speed the ship made its way to the disaster. On getting near the disabled ship, she was found to be unapproachable on account of the yet raging storm. Four days were spent before an approach of the life-boats was possible. Then all aboard were landed safely in the American ship, and then carried safely to the British destination. Then the shrieking of whistles of other ships in harbor and demonstrations of gratitude were manifested by moving of flags, greetings of loved ones, and double homage paid to the captain and the ship's crew. But the captain would not have the honor. He said this miracle of safe deliverance was none other than the providence of Almighty God. This coming out, this preservation, and restoration was by the Lord of Hosts.

Another daring illustration—one of trust and confidence, and final deliverance—was given. An equestrian had an ambition to undertake a long journey of many, many miles to the Capitol at Washington, and secured two wild Arabian horses. One he would ride, the other he would use as a packhorse. After long and patient training, he mounted the steed, followed by the packhorse. Through meadows, marshes and difficult places he journeyed. Mountains became so difficult to ascend that he had to dismount, and, followed by the faithful horses, he succeeded in the ascent. Finally he came to a place impossible to progress, only by traveling on the tracks of a great railroad. As only through trains traversed these tracks, the schedule was of a nature that he decided it might not be hazardous. So he went his way; but to his dismay, he heard the rumblings of the great iron horse. Nearer and nearer it made its approach. With confidence in the animals, which had been in obedience to his mandates, he led them off the track and pushed them as close to the bank as possible in a great cut in the earth. Then he proceeded to do likewise. The moving train with its mighty freight passed on, and he then resumed his journey. At last, after some two years, he reached the great capitol. This great feat was accomplished only by the trained animals understanding him, and he understanding them; otherwise, his efforts would have been fruitless.

The preacher said that the Lord had a right hard time with some of his people to preserve their coming out and going in by their not living in an acquiescent atmosphere in understanding the Lord. By their not having this life of trust and obedience, they thereby forfeited this blessing vouchsafed to them.

MISSIONS
 REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

THE PENNY AND MISSIONS.

Every penny has two possibilities; not necessarily a bad and a good, but a higher and a lower. "Why don't you buy you a motor car?" said one man to another. "Because," was the reply, "I have made a vow not to buy me a car until I am supporting my own foreign missionary."

The night before David Livingston left home for Africa he spent the entire night in conversation with his father, and they discussed the coming of the time when well-to-do men would consider it a privilege to maintain entire mission stations. Already hundreds of such men and women are beginning to discover that a mission station, a mission school, a mission hospital, a mission residence, is a more satisfactory luxury than an additional big automobile, and vastly more potent in inspiring their children to larger and better living.

What finer training in international brotherhood and the nobler uses of money could boys and girls receive than to be shown on their school maps the location of the missionaries, or of the mission hospitals, schools, or homes, that they and their parents have erected or are supporting or helping to support, and to have pictured to them by parents and in missionary letters the streams of blessing that flow therefrom to meet the piteous medical, educational and spiritual needs of young and old.

Mr. John H. Converse, president of the Baldwin Locomotive Works, thought the support of missions by individual Churches the wisest possible Church investment. Such investments the late Mr. George W. Waits, of North Carolina, after personally seeing their fruitage on the foreign field, pronounced the best of all the investments he had ever made. A certain manufacturer is supporting 228 native pastors under his Church's foreign mission board, and thus reaching hundreds of thousands with the message and uplift that only the gospel gives.

Said John Wanamaker, ex-Postmaster General, a few months after his return from a trip to the Orient: "In all my life I never saw such opportunity for investment of money that any one sets apart to give to the Christ who gave Himself for us. As I looked at the little Churches, schools, and hospitals, and inquired the original cost of buildings and expense of administration, I felt a lump of regret in my heart, that I had not been wise enough to make these investments myself, and wished a hundred times I had known twenty-five years ago what I learned a half-year ago."

Foreign mission investments meet the two ideal requirements. (1) The money is expended where the need is the very greatest; (2) it is devoted to its very highest use, being transmuted into Christian evangelism, education, healing, emancipation, holiness, spiritual life, in continuous and ever-widening circles, the receiver becoming a transmitter, till only eternity can measure the good accomplished. Since in heaven "we shall know even as also we are known," shall we be welcomed into the Father's house and acclaimed as their human saviors by the outstretched hands and grateful voices of hundreds and thousands from Asia, Africa, Latin-America, to whom our gifts opened the door of life eternal?—The Desire of All Nations.

COSTS OF MISSION DOLLAR.

"It costs a dollar to send a dollar to the foreign field"—so says the critic of foreign missions.

This hoary calumny will no doubt continue to circulate as long as its father persists in going to and fro in the earth and up and down it.

Some expenditure for foreign mission administration is obviously necessary. A foreign mission board must have offices, agents and facilities for handling its responsibilities. In view of the multitude of details incident to the conduct of an international enterprise so vast and varied, with its financial, industrial, educational, medical, and diplomatic problems, the cost of administration of the denominational boards is surprisingly low, the percentage of administration proper ranging from 5 to 7 per cent. From 2 to 5 per cent in addition is usually required for the work of informing and educating the home Churches and developing their interest and gifts. Indeed, a considerable part of the expense of what we have called "administration proper" is for this latter purpose. Thus at least a half or more of the total expense percentage is not for administering the funds but for securing the funds to administer, for stimulating Church members to support a work which, by the nature of their Christian profession, they should support of their own accord. In missions, as in other business, the larger the volume of business, the smaller the percentage of expense. The best way, therefore, to decrease the percentage cost is to increase the income.

The foreign mission boards are composed of experienced ministers and sagacious business men and women who prayerfully, diligently and without pay administer the great trust committed to them.

Foreign Mission administration has long since passed the experimental stage. For thirty-five years, officers and members of the foreign mission boards of the United States and Canada have been meeting every year for joint study and discussion of all the various phases of their mighty task, printed annual reports of all these studies and discussions being secured by each board until, from the constant focusing of the judgment and experience of all upon the problems of each, foreign mission administration has largely become, as respects all its major policies, an exact science, using only the methods and proceeding only on the lines that long and varied experience and the protracted study of hundreds of experts have shown to be the wisest and best. The Churches, therefore, have good grounds for believing that their foreign mission contributions are judiciously administered.—Dr. Egbert W. Smith, in Desire of All Nations.

"CHURCH FINANCE."

"Church Finance." By William H. Leach; Cokesbury Press; $2.25.

Dr. Leach has given us one of the most constructive and helpful books on Church finance that it has been our privilege to see. His rich experience has been laid at the feet of pastors and finance departments of Churches. He has made a great contribution to application of stewardship principles in Church finance, and has turned the whole subject into a most fascinating experience that will not only secure funds but which will in the process greatly enrich the spiritual life of a Church. The book is practical, helpful, interesting in all of its fifteen chapters. It covers methods and spirit and gleans from Churches and pastors their best experiences. Every pastor should have it at hand, and a copy should be at the disposal of every board of Church finance. It contains 224 pages packed full of the best things in a very readable style. What a study-book it is for the members of a finance committee!

WHY CHRISTIAN MISSIONS?

In this age of questioning and doubt, not only have the time-honored doctrines of the Christian Church come under review and criticism, but many are wondering whether the day has not come when the Church should at least modify, if not entirely abandon, its work for the heathen and non-Christian peoples of the world. We welcome, therefore, this opportunity, as another of our foreign mission annuals is placed in the hands of millions of readers, to make a clear and candid statement that we believe will help them to a better understanding of the work that is being conducted, the needs that must be met, and the pressing calls for advancement in every land. This is no time for indifference. The motto of the Christian Church for reasons that follow must be, "Abandon—never! Withdraw—not an inch! Modify—not in the least!"

It has been my privilege to live and labor at both ends of the line. In countries of enlightenment, the opportunities for uplift and betterment are beyond computation, and our ample store in garner and warehouse tells of unparalleled prosperity.

But out yonder in heathen lands, there stands out in heart-rending contrast the pitiful lot of countless millions without God, without hope of eternal life through the gospel of His dear Son. There they dwell, uneducated, half starved, degraded even to cannibalism, suffering with untold maladies, with their souls benighted, with dull consciences, blighted with evil thoughts and sunken in the depths of moral depravity.

For this challenging inequality there is a reason. The fact that there is a difference is explained only in the light of our possessing what they lack. The background of our history, in these more favored lands, has been Christianity with its uplifting influence. In theirs, this has been entirely lacking. Go where you will, the line of separation is found at the point where Christian influences are not at work. Wherever and whenever the Christian Church, through organized Christian service, has occupied new fields of endeavor, immediately conditions have undergone a change, and the blight and curse of heathenism have given place to the uplift and joy of fellowship with Jesus Christ.

Divine Warrant.

Foreign mission work by the Christian Church was begun under the compelling command of Jesus Himself when He said:

"All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo! I am with you always, even unto the end of the world" (Matt. 28:18-20).

The Need of the World.

The background for this commission is the need of a world lost in sin. Its origin was in the love of God, which is manifested through the gospel. It points the way to a type of service that will be warranted as long as man is held under the dominion of sin. The regrettable thing is that the Christian Church has not been more urgent in response to the Master's command. This is not the time to speak of retrenchment, but rather to rise in the power of a new dedication to the finishing of God's work in the earth. The unentered fields and the unenlightened places and races of the earth challenge us to new endeavor and new achievements in His name, for instead of the world needing less of the gospel, it really needs more of it with its power to uplift.

It would be hard to present a true picture of the abject slavery of those who live as unenlightened heathen. "His soul and body are indeed chained in slavery. But he himself wields and hugs his chains, and with violence defends them. No agency but a new spirit within his own breast can set him free." There are no inherent uplifting influences in heathen philosophy. This element has to be supplied from a power without, and there is no power equal to the task except the power of Jesus Christ as made known in the gospel.

Appreciation for Gospel Blessings.

Those who thus have been transformed by the gospel bear the best testimony to the value of Christian work in their midst. One of these speaks for himself: "Less than a year ago I lived as a man wholly abandoned to evil. My drunken brawls and evil deeds were the scandal of my neighborhood. My wife, hungry and in rags, appealed for a few cents to buy bread, but the only response to those pleadings on my part was outbreaks of anger and abuse. With a weapon I threatened to stop her pleading forever. Under this persecution she was compelled to flee for safety. Thus I lived in poverty and disgrace.

"But a change came. A gospel message called. He told me the sweet story of the cross. When I saw what hope there was in Christ for a sinner, my heart melted. Again and again the messenger called with the word of God until its message completely changed my heart. Today I am a new creature. A new light is in my eye, a new spirit within my heart. My life of sin and shame is abandoned. My money, instead of being squandered to gratify my own desires, is spent for the necessities of life, and my once persecuted wife is now tenderly cared for. Thus, by God's grace, I am able to witness that the gospel 'is the power of God unto salvation.'"

Nor is this type of testimony limited only to those who embrace Christianity. There are persons who do not become Christians who are forced to testify to the value of Christian missions in their midst. A testimony of this type is found in the words of K. Chandy, a distinguished member of the administration of Mysore, India, one of the largest, wealthiest and most progressive states under Indian rule. He says:

"These qualities (cleanliness, organization, freedom from corroding habits and superstition, taught by missionaries), when inspired by the spirit of service, as opposed to the spirit of aggression, are the qualities, it occurs to me, that India greatly needs to supplement her own beauty, sweetness, patience, and quietness. I am aware that there is a great deal of rural work being done by individual missionaries, but I hope it will be admitted that there is scope for enormously larger work in uplifting and improving the lot of the people."

Think of what it means to the world in this grasping age to have a multitude of men employed the world over in unselfish service for others! Those who are serving the missionary cause can never be charged with serving their own ends. Every one of them could better himself from the standpoint of worldly gain in some other occupation. The motive power of their service is found in the consecration of heart and hand to a task for which the only reward is the uplift and conversion of the people for whom they labor. To them this is the greatest joy on earth.

The missionary goes in his youthfulness, struggles with the problem of his task, learns a new language, lives in an uninviting environment of lonely toil, looking forward to the time that undoubtedly will come in response to his prayers and labors when heathenism breaks down before the challenging attack of the gospel. This type of unselfish service rendered anywhere is bound to have its influence for the betterment of any community. It stands out in striking contrast to selfish interests and grasping ambition.

There are no more worthy people in the world whose service commands more respect, admiration and support than Christian missionaries. In 1927 the Mission Board of Seventh Day Adventists sent out 184 new missionaries. Among this number were consecrated men and women who represented every type of Christian service. There were doctors, both men and women; nurses, ministers whose service will proclaim to a restless, sin-burdened world the words of the Christ who said, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest"; and teachers, who will struggle with the problem not only of dealing with the mental development, but of implanting seeds of divine truth in the heart. The objective of all these classes of missionaries is the same—to bring the realization of the saving power of the gospel of Christ into the hearts of men everywhere.

The Young Willing to Go.

It is the most pleasing task to deal with the selection and appointment of these young people for foreign mission service. The heartiness with which they respond, and their willingness to go, evidences with wonderful clearness their unselfish spirit of Christian service. The yearly recruiting of these forces, the spending of millions of dollars in the maintenance of missionary enterprises, creates new demands upon our members and friends at home. Our Ingathering annual this year is sent out with the prayer that the Spirit of God may so interpret the glorious opportunities of this hour to the hearts of those who are privileged to read these appeals, that the response this year may be greater than ever, assuring a further extension of gospel work into other dark portions of the world. No greater joy can come to us than that which is afforded by the knowledge that we are uplifting for this life and saving for eternity thousands who now sit in degradation and the shadow of death.—C. K. Myers, in The Watchman.

RECOMMENDED PLANS AND PROGRAM

February, March—Foreign Mission Months

THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION, in its Richmond Session last year, made February and March "Foreign Mission Months" for educational and informational purposes, culminating in an offering from all the Churches for Missions at, or on the nearest possible Sunday to, Easter—March 31, 1929. The goal set for the offering—Home and Foreign Missions—from Sunday Schools, and Churches, and individuals is $33,000; Woman's Societies, $12,000—total, $45,000. Inasmuch as the entire amount thus asked must be raised by voluntary offerings, the Conferences, in their recent sessions, in which the matter was discussed, adopted and recommended to the Sunday Schools and Churches the following method to be pursued in reaching their quota of one-third as much for Missions as for pastor's salary:

FIRST: When a Church uses the Budget Plan, write into that budget one-third the amount of pastor's salary to go to Missions, and send this in monthly or quarterly.

SECOND: If the budget is not used, canvass the individuals of the Church and Sunday School to find out how much each will give to Missions and when, entering the same on a card prepared for the purpose and which may be had of the Mission Secretary, Elon College, N. C.

THIRD: Where neither of these plans is adopted, then endeavor to increase the offering from the Sunday School, and at or about Easter have a Missionary Rally and try to raise the entire amount of the quota at that one service, in conjunction with the monthly offerings from the Sunday School for the year.

Each Church and Sunday School should use one or the other of these plans.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

LESSON X—March 10, 1929.

BAPTISM AND THE LORD'S SUPPER.

GOLDEN TEXT: "This do in remembrance of me."—1 Cor. 11:24.

LESSON: Matt. 3:13-17, 28:19-20; Acts 2:38, 41; Rom. 6:1-14; 1 Cor. 11:23-29.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Rev. 7:9-17.

Baptism and the Lord's Supper are sacraments of the Church. Generally speaking, and according to the definition given in Webster's New International Dictionary, "a sacrament is an outward and visible sign of an invisible or inward and spiritual grace; one of the solemn religious ordinances or ceremonies enjoined by Christ or by the Church for the spiritual benefit of Christians."

It may be interesting to call to mind the fact that the Catholic Church recognizes and observes seven sacraments; the Anglican Church recognizes two sacraments—Baptism and the Lord's Supper—but also has regard for other sacraments; the Protestant Churches in general observe two sacraments—Baptism and the Lord's Supper—while the Friends, or Quakers, reject sacraments as unnecessary outward rites. The three chief opinions concerning the sacraments are as follows: (a) They are channels by which divine grace is conferred and are inherently efficacious—the Catholic view. (b) They are seals or ratifications of a covenant between God and the individual soul—the Protestant view. (c) They are signs or badges of a Christian profession, or they are simply visible signs or symbols of something invisible and spiritual, and destitute of value and significance if the invisible or spiritual reality is wanting.

Baptism.

1. Divergent views of baptism. Like the famous Heinz products, there are "fifty-seven varieties" of views on baptism. Among the readers of these notes there will be those who believe that one must be baptized in one way, while others will be just as sure that one must be baptized in another way. Immersion, pouring, sprinkling, no water baptism at all—these are the general forms of baptism, and within these forms many shades of opinion and practice. It would be unprofitable, therefore, for the writer to attempt to establish any one form of baptism as the only form of baptism. Far too much discussion, much of it too warm discussion, has already been devoted to this subject, and all to no purpose so far as coming to any agreement as to the method of baptism is concerned to justify added arguments here. These notes are concerned not with the method, but with the meaning and purpose of baptism.

2. The meaning of baptism. What does it mean to be baptized? Does it mean that baptism is a magical thing that in itself changes the inner man or renews the spiritual life? or does it mean that baptism is an external sign or a symbol which bears witness to an inner and spiritual experience? Is baptism in itself such a vital thing that once a man has been baptized he is saved, no matter what kind of man he may be or become? Or is it possible for a man to be saved even if he has never been baptized, as in the case of the Quaker? To raise such questions is to come to grips with the fundamental principle underlying baptism. Whatever divergence of opinion there may be among Christians—that is, Protestant Christians; Catholics believe that baptism is the channel through which a man is born again, or regenerated—there is a general unanimity of belief that baptism is an outward sign or symbol of an inner experience or spiritual fact; that it is the way in which one testifies in a public way to a change of mind and to a new allegiance to Jesus Christ. Baptism, in a sense, is a badge of discipleship; but unless baptism is accompanied by that inner change of mind and heart which issues in a change of outer conduct, it has little if any significance.

3. The requirements of baptism. "Repent and believe the gospel"; "Repent and be baptized"—these are typical slogans or texts by which men were challenged in early New Testament Christianity. As has just been stated, baptism in itself means nothing unless it has been preceded by or is accompanied by a change of heart. It is blasphemy for a man to be baptized unless by that act he bears witness that he has repented of his sins and is pledging himself unreservedly to Jesus Christ and His cause.

4. The practical implications of baptism. Baptism is the beginning, not the end. When a man is baptized he is beginning the Christian life. The fact that a man has been baptized ought to be a constant incentive to him to live up to high ideals and to give himself to the Church to which baptism was a pledge of allegiance.

The Lord's Supper.

The genius of Jesus is nowhere shown in a more striking way than in the memorial which He left to Himself. Instead of building a great monument or memorial to Himself which would eventually have crumbled or which only a few might have seen, He left as His memorial a simple thing—the eating of a bit of bread and the drinking of a bit of wine. And yet this simple thing which has become a great sacrament is a perpetual memorial to Jesus and serves to keep Him in mind as nothing else could have done. Millions of men and women, boys and girls regularly and usually frequently partake of this simple sacrament, and in the partaking thereof they are reminded again of the moral beauty of Christ, of His matchless life and His sacrificial death; of His resurrection and of His triumphant coming; of their own unworthiness and of His power and willingness to meet their needs—and they are moved to confess their sins and to pledge anew their allegiance to Him and to the cause which He represents. It is a visible symbol of the unseen but real Christ, and He who neglects the Communion service does so at his peril. "This do in remembrance of me," said Jesus.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, March 10, 1929.

TOPIC: "How to Become a Christian."—Acts 2:37-41, 16:30, 31.

Some Bible Hints.

Repentance is necessary. This word means "to change the mind," to form a new conception and follow it (v. 38).

Baptism was a declaration of a person's faith and public confession of Christ. It committed the person to live like Christ, and that is what being a Christian means (v. 38).

Many stop at faith, repentance, confession, rather than go on to seek the Holy Spirit, which is the most important of all (v. 37).

Belief is the first step, because if we do not believe, we can go no further. Heaven opens to the believing soul (vs. 30, 31).

Suggestive Thoughts.

A Christian is a follower or pupil of Christ. We do not need to know a great deal about Him to be a Christian. We can begin in the kindergarten class and "learn of Him."

If our minds are cluttered with ambitions, fears, hopes, and so on, it is necessary that we repent or change our minds. Make a beginning, however feeble.

To be a Christian we must decide to be one, just as to be a soldier we must enlist. We can decide quite calmly and proceed to make good.

We can become Christians very simply by just telling our Lord in prayer that we are His, and asking Him to make what He can out of us. This is surrender, and it should be without reservations.

A Few Illustrations.

An old cabinet-maker took a table which was to be thrown out, and polished and transformed it. That is what Christ does with us. We put ourselves in His hands.

A. B. held back from Christ a long time because he did not want to give up certain sinful habits. Becoming a Christian does not mean so much giving up as it means receiving.

What kind of Christian do we want to become? Just ordinary, or out-and-out? Francis of Assisi was out-and-out.

Becoming a Christian means that we get power to live Christ's life. He Himself lives in us.

To Think About.

What hinders me from being a Christian?

What can I do to win my chum?

What does "coming to Christ" mean?

NEWS ITEMS.

Mrs. Martha McGrew

Mrs. McGrew passed to her reward February 9th. She was a woman of vision, consecration and intelligence. When the forward movement began, she gave it a practical start. Seven persons were sought to give generous sums of $5,000 each. She was the first to furnish the funds. She could not give the funds outright, but said she would give them if she could have interest only on the funds during her lifetime. This was the financial beginning of this great movement in the Christian Church. She had the vision to see its possibilities, while others hesitated and questioned. Through all these years she kept her interest in the great forward movement program. She was an intelligent conversationalist and good correspondent. Her heart was in the work of her Church. Her prayers and her money went together to advance the kingdom of God.

Two Things go Together.

They are the Convention budget plan and the every-member canvass. Every Church now should be using the annual every-member canvass, for both the local expenses of the Church and for the benevolences of the Church, and both should be subscribed and paid in weekly. The General Convention budget plan anticipates the payment of one-twelfth of the Church's allotment monthly, or one-fourth of it regularly each quarter. There should be the fullest effort to raise the full allotment as the minimum. Only thus can your work be maintained. We must lay upon the heart of all our pastors and finance committees the very important need of reaching the full allotment, the regular remitting, and the educational program.

The Christian Annual.

Your orders have been mailed out. Already good words are being said about it. But we are especially anxious that it be of service in the hands of our workers. All pastors, Church clerks, missionary workers, Church treasurers and superintendents especially need it. It is made for our workers. It is crowded full of ready information for our Church leaders. It is for your working desk now, and for your files when the year is over. Historical records make it invaluable.

A Joy.

One of the pleasant things to note in our office is the growing number of our people who are coming to a fuller appreciation of the service the General Convention is endeavoring to render to the Churches. With the remittances now coming in for the Convention offering come expressions of a new interest in the Convention work. More pastors sought literature and actually planned for the Convention offering than did last year. Our supply of Convention literature is just about exhausted. Other pastors would not take the offering when the day was unfavorable, or the "flu" epidemic at its height. Other pastors are tracing their offerings and seeing that they are not delayed. It is such co-operation as this that counts. Then, it makes all the work pleasanter. We get some very fine letters from our workers. Thank you for them.

Mr. W. S. Sanford, Ashton, Ill., who was licensed to preach last fall by his Conference, seems to be doing good work with the Washington Grove Church. He is putting good financial plans into operation as well.

Mrs. J. J. Lincoln, Lawrenceville, N. J., is working out a very definite plan of stewardship promotion in the Virginia Valley Central Conference. At last writing, twelve Churches had appointed stewardship secretaries. No Church will get very far in stewardship lines until it has an active stewardship secretary, with a league or fellowship of stewards.

Rev. Norvel C. Kern, Wolfeboro, N. H., reports that this Church, at its annual meeting, adopted the Convention budget plan.

W. H. DENISON.

DENDRON, VA.

It is true that this is a beautiful world and a wonderful age in which we are living, but at the same time there is a tide of change, of insidious and seductive error, of worldliness and spiritual declension, rising high and beating fearfully against the old foundations of vital faith, and true spirituality and godly life. It is a pity that so many sincere, moral people are committed to a philosophy not after our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, to a psychology eliminating the supernatural, to a sociology which reduces everything to naturalism; to a program unevangelical. They have so emasculated Christ, His wonderful teaching and practice, that they have devitalized Him. It seems to me that they are trying to take from Jesus Christ, Lord God, the final authority of Christianity. No wonder we have a vast multitude who are clothed with the barrenness of winter, their spiritual sensibilities benumbed, and their spiritual energies paralyzed. I believe that much of the false teaching abroad in our land today is directly responsible for the awful crime wave, the indecency wave, and the wave of rampant lawlessness and the dreadful wave of skepticism regarding Almighty God and His Word, that is throwing our great nation into moral and spiritual bankruptcy. False teaching, immoral conduct, and forgetfulness of God our Blessed Benefactor spells the doom of American civilization.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

POWER WITHIN.

"According to the power that worketh in us."—Eph. 3:20.

"Christ in you the hope of glory."—Gal. 1:27.

In modern warfare, a place is made impregnable to frontal or direct attack by means of the power of the weapons within.

In the sinking of a ship, it is not the ship in the water that sinks it; it is the water in the ship. The heart's door opens only from within.

Prayer.—Our Father, as the word was made flesh and dwelt among us, help us to open our hearts, that Thou mayest dwell within us. Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE NARROW AND THE OTHER WAY.

"Enter ye in by the narrow gate, for wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction."—Matt. 7:13, 14.

All of us are familiar with gates. There are the big easy attractive ones, through which there are furling crowds. Carlyle said, "There you find the plurality of blackheads." The gate seems to say, "Everybody come this way and join the happy throng." Often behind these gates the delights are like the things behind the scenes of a side-show—it makes one laugh, but it is a farce, and there is no more good to come of it than the rejoinder, "the foul thing!"

Life's gate of opportunity came to us much the same way. There is that of play in which one may shirk his tasks; there is that of money, in which one may take short cuts and schemes may be substituted for sound business principles; there is the crying world of sensuality which saps one's mental and physical powers. Jesus was taken before these broad, attractive gates and showed all the kingdoms of the world and the glory thereof, but their blandishments did not attract Him. He had souls to live for, not the loss of His own and to give His soul was His children.

We cannot live a loose life and think certain high thoughts. God has put that narrow gate before us.

Prayer.—Our Father, to Thy high and holy doctrines help us to cling with unreserved fidelity, and may no invitation of the devil or of false profits deceive us. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

SAYING "YES" TO CHRIST.

"Why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?"—Luke 6:46-49.

A successful Christian worker lay on his deathbed and some one asked what had been the secret of his life, and all the good he had done. His answer is well worth remembering. "The secret of my life," he said, "is that I have said 'Yes' to Christ."

Saying "Yes" to Jesus Christ will make any life successful. He will not leave us in doubt as to His will for us. His Spirit will dwell with us, instruct us, guide us, strengthen us.

Saying "Yes" to Christ is not always easy, even though He makes the way so plain to us. It involves giving up whatever Christ does not say "Yes" to, and it often means going where we do not want to go and doing what we do not want to do. Saying "Yes" to Christ is far more than a mere word. But when we say "Yes" to Christ, He says to us, "My friend." "Ye are my friends," He says, "because ye have done what I commanded you." And to be Christ's friend is the highest honor and the most blessed joy that can come to any one. It is the secret of eternal happiness.

Prayer.—Our Saviour, we have done nothing, and we can do nothing that deserves Thy friendship, yet bestow it upon us, we pray Thee. Amen.

THURSDAY.

KEEP STILL.

"Rest in Jehovah, and wait patiently for Him."—Psa. 37:1-11.

Martin Luther reminds us that the literal translation of the Hebrew is, "Be silent to God, and let Him mold thee," and he adds, "Keep still, and He will mold thee to the right shape."

How often we foolish little beings presume, like Peter, to give advice to God! We should be reverent before Him, filled with awe. We should be humbly guided by Him in every way. But lo! we must put in our word, we must suggest here, criticise there, beg for changes, hint, or more than hint, that we could do better if we had a chance. How ashamed of it all we shall be in the wiser hereafter!

We do not often put all this into words; that would be too bold, too crude; even we are not bold enough for that. But we put it into feelings, into discontent, into fretful petitions, into worries and fears. As if God did not know what all these mean!

Let us be silent to God. Let us allow Him to mold us. Those hands upon our little lives are the hands that fashioned Arcturus and his suns. They are the hands that sent Orion on his march through the skies. They are the hands that guide the procession of the seasons. Are we not safe with Omnipotence?

Prayer.—Father, forgive our foolish fears. Father, pardon our impious anxieties. Father, we wait patiently for Thee. Amen.

FRIDAY.

PAIN, A HEAVENLY MESSENGER.

"He is chastened also with pain upon his bed."—Job 33:13-28.

Once Robert G. Ingersoll was delivering one of his infidel lectures, when a disgusted hearer interrupted him to ask whether, with his puny intellect, he would undertake to improve upon the work of the omniscient Creator of the universe. "Certainly," the speaker answered promptly; "I would abolish pain."

Yet pain is one of the greatest blessings conferred by an all-wise, all-loving Father upon His children. Suppose there were no pain. The most horrible diseases would fasten upon us, and we should be ignorant of our danger. A rattlesnake would dart his poison into us, and death would come upon us before we could take measures of relief. Almost every pain which man feels is a kindly notice from God, bidding us cease from evil and conform to His wise laws before it is too late. Pain is the warning shout of the infinite Father.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, forgive us when we murmur at Thy wise dealings with us. We pray with all our hearts, Thy will be done. Amen.

SATURDAY.

HOW BIG ARE YOU?

"Is not God in the height of heaven? And behold the height of the stars high are they!"—Job 22:12-22.

Everybody ought to know about the heavens, the stars, etc. Nothing of the universe gives one quite so magnificent an idea of the glory and power of God. Sam Walter Foss, who wrote "The House by the Side of the Road," also wrote of the majesty of the universe.

"Despise not any man that lives,

Alien or neighbor, near or far;

Go out beneath the scornful stars,

And see how very small you are.

The world is large, and space is high

That sweeps around our little ken;

But there's no space or time to spare

In which to hate our fellow-men.

And this, my friend, is not the work for you;

Then leave all this for smaller men to do."

Let us learn more about the greatness of God, that we may rise above our own littleness.

Prayer.—Our Father, who art in heaven, we would live in Thy heavens with Thee. We would do our work faithfully on the earth, but our souls would dwell amid the stars. Amen.

SUNDAY.

TRUST GOD AND DO RIGHT.

"God is faithful who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will, with every temptation, make also the way of escape, that ye may be able to endure it."—1 Cor. 10:13.

There are two reasons for trusting God to do unto us well; His faithful promises being fulfilled before our eyes, and the victory that others have in Him. So strongly are these facts true, that we make God fiction when we deny His claims. This faithfulness is not always manifested in good fortune, but perhaps more especially in misfortune, and trials and temptations. Paul in prison is a good example. It may be hard to feel his faithfulness in such times, but the soul of spiritual vision and understanding finds him of notwithstanding. Though all else leaves us, He still sits upon the throne of our conscience, painting the way. One finds a pocket-book. The devil says, "You need that, keep it." God says "That isn't right; return it to its owner." He is faithful that promised."

Prayer.—Our Father, we pray for power to trust Thee more, that we may receive healing and salvation. Forgive us of all transgressions and fill us with all that life needs. Amen.

LITTLE THINGS COUNT.

"It's the little things that count," is a saying that we have heard for years, but how many ever stop to do the "little things"?

The other day I was traveling through the southern part of Texas, where towns are few and far between. I had just finished reading the morning paper, and it was lying by my side when the train conductor came by and stopped and politely asked me if I was through reading the paper. I told him that I was, and, thinking that he would like to read it, I offered it to him. He took it and, after thanking me, said, "There are any number of people along here who would be glad to get this paper." I never thought much more about it until a few minutes later I saw him roll it up and throw it out of the train to a farmer who was standing near the railroad track as we passed.

Then the thought came to me, "How little do we think of the little things that count?"

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Boys and girls in an orphanage appreciate doing things as well as boys and girls in the home. I remember several years ago one of the larger girls cut and made with her own hands a pretty dress, and after she had finished it she brought it to the office to show it to me. I will never forget how happy she was that she was able to make it herself and without help. One of the happiest boys we have in the orphanage family now is Clarence Fields. Clarence is always on his job. He takes an interest in his work because he takes a great deal of pride in whatever he undertakes. Clarence has had charge of the hogs for several years. He studies how to feed to produce the best and reads all the literature from the State college and the United States government bulletins on how to feed and care for hogs. The sun never shines too hot, the winds never blow too cold; it never rains too hard for Clarence if his hogs need feed or shelter.

He raised last season for the orphanage twenty-six hogs; ten out of this number were mates and weighed 4,551 pounds. His twenty-six hogs weighed 10,033 pounds. We offered him a prize the first of last year if he would make ten thousand pounds of dressed meat. He won by thirty-three pounds. Clarence is a fine old boy, any way. He is as happy over the fact that he broke all records at the Christian Orphanage on making meat as we are because he produced for us ten thousand pounds of meat.

THE SUN LETTER.

The subscribers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN could assist the circulation manager very much if they would mail him their renewals promptly. Many do this, and it is a source of real appreciation. It would save the circulation manager lots of work and give him more time to look up new subscribers. We wish we could get all our pastors to help us more. Some of them are very kind to us and send us renewals and new subscriptions. We have 125 ordained pastors. Suppose each pastor would send us five new subscriptions—and each one ought to easily do that much—it would mean 625 new subscribers added to our list. Then, suppose each Sunday School superintendent would send us three new subscribers. We have about 200 Sunday Schools, and that would mean 600 new subscribers; making from just two sources 1,225 new subscribers. It would make the circulation manager very happy. It would make the Publication Board happy, too; and it would make those who send in the list happy, and the new subscribers would enjoy the paper, and we could have a real feast of rejoicing together.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Elon College, N. C. Circulation Manager.

"BECAUSE I LOVE IT."

Gladstone's rule, even in his older years, was that of a "twicer," as he termed it, at public worship. "Church going," he said, "is not a matter of fancy for a Christian. It is his duty for the work's sake. I am a regular Church-goer. I should go for various reasons if I did not love it, but I am fortunate enough to find great pleasure in the midst of devout gatherings, whether I can accept their creeds or not. For I find that there is in a corner of my heart a little plant called reverence which wants to be watered about once a week."

Are you looking about for a means or a method by which you can help improve the community in which you live?

There is no other way by which a man can make what is best in himself such a wide and permanent influence for good in his community as by throwing himself heartily and vigorously into Church work.

To be an outside saint is better than nothing, but the best position is to be an inside laborer in the life of the Church, thus helping to develop the finest character and bestowing the greatest blessings on mankind.

A man is never more safe or more happy, never more useful, than when he has associated himself with the composite life in the spirit which the Church provides.

"Come, thou, with us and we will do thee good and thou shalt be to us instead of eyes."—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

OBITUARIES

CHUMBLEY.

Mrs. Martha Chumbley departed this life to be with her Lord February 5th. While Sister Chumbley was not a member of any Church, she had made profession of faith in Christ a few weeks prior to her going. She would have been 55 in August. She married Mr. T. H. Chumbley in 1889. She leaves to mourn her loss two children and one sister, her husband and many friends.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer from her home, near Happy Home Christian Church, and the remains were laid to rest in a nearby family cemetery. Regardless of the bad day, there were a large number present at the funeral. May the Lord help those that mourn her loss to be like-minded, ready when He who knows all things best shall call them to go.

P. H. RICKETTS.

BIRDSONG.

Joseph H. Birdsong was born July 31, 1854, and went to his reward February 10, 1928; age 74 years, 6 months and 10 days. Early in life he professed Christ as his Saviour and united with Burton's Grove Christian Church; later he transferred his membership to the Wakefield Church; then when he moved with his family from the neighborhood he moved his membership to Highland Methodist Church, near Petersburg, Va., of which he remained a member until the end. In May, 1886, he was united in marriage to Miss Lily C. Faison, and to that union were born 10 children—six boys and four girls. His wife and two boys and one girl preceded him in death, and he is survived by four boys and three girls and seven grandchildren.

The body was brought back to Wakefield and the interment was made in the town cemetery, the services being conducted by the writer in the presence of many of his friends and former neighbors. Mr. Birdsong was loved and respected by those that knew him for his splendid character and life as had been exemplified while with us. God, comfort those who mourn at his passing.

C. E. GERRINGER.

APPLE.

Russell Davis Apple, son of Rev. and Mrs. Cornelius A. Apple, was born in Caswell County, N. C., September 12th, 1865, and died in Washington, D. C., February 12, 1929; age 63 years and 5 months. When a lad, he lived for several years in Suffolk, Va., where his father was professor of mathematics in the Suffolk College. Later his father moved to Apalachicola, Fla. While there the deceased became a registered pharmacist and located in Milton, N. C., being connected with the Bub Dixon drug store. He was confirmed when young by the bishop of Florida as a communicant of the Episcopal Church in Appalachieola, of which Church his father was rector.

On November 12, 1889, he was married by his father to Miss Florine Scott, a daughter of L. B. and Betty Scott, of Semora, N. C. To them were given three daughters. Two of these, with their mother, survive—Elizabeth and Mrs. Tice. Annie Russell, the eldest, died twenty-two years ago.

The funeral services were conducted at the home, 804 Fern Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., on Friday afternoon, by Dr. T. Freeland Peter, canon of the Cathedral of St. Paul and St. Peter, Washington, D. C. The remains were brought to Semora, N. C., accompanied by the family, and on the afternoon of February 16th a brief service was conducted by the writer in Lebanon Christian Church and the interment was in the family plot of the Church cemetery.

Both at the funeral in Washington and the service at Lebanon, the same prayer-book was used from which Mr. and Mrs. Apple were married thirty-nine years ago, and the second daughter, now Mrs. Tice, was married eleven years ago; also used at the funeral of Annie Russell Apple twenty-two years ago.

For the past thirty-three years Bro. Apple had been with the post-office department in the railway mail service. For twenty-seven years his home has been in Washington, D. C. He was a man of sterling qualities, industrious, honest and faithful in the performance of all duties. He was blessed with a faithful companion, intelligent, interesting children, and they with a true husband and devoted father.

In September of this year, Bro. Apple was eligible to retire from government service on a pension, but on the very eve of this the summons came to enter upon that larger and more glorious life. Sad now is the home here, but there is comfort in the hope of the unbroken circle yonder.

CARTER.

Michael L. Carter, son of the late John Andrew and Margaret Williams Carter, of Gates County, N. C., died at his home, Holland, Va., R. F. D., February 10th, aged 52 years. The funeral services were conducted by the writer at Holy Neck Christian Church, of which he was a member, and the burial was in Holland Cemetery.

The deceased leaves two sisters, Miss Eua Susan Carter and Mrs. Willie Lee, a widow, who was Miss Kate Linda Eure, and five sons—John Henry, Charles Bradley, Hallet Ward, Mike Loyd, Albert Rid-dish; five daughters—Stella, Mrs. A. F. Smith, of Norfolk; Emma Morgan, Annie Sue and Helen Elizabeth; two grand-children, and a large number of nephews and nieces.

Mr. Carter was a good husband and father, an industrious citizen and a good provider for his family, and a kind and generous neighbor. May the God of all grace comfort and keep his loved ones.

DUKE.

Inasmuch as Almighty God, in His wisdom, has seen fit to call out of his clay tabernacle the soul of Mr. Charles E. Duke, Jr., a faithful member of the Newport News Christian Church; and, whereas, in his going away this Church has been deprived of the blessing of fellowship with one who took Christ as his example; be it resolved:

1. That we extend to the bereaved widow and little daughter our heartfelt and loving sympathy, assuring them of our prayers, that they may find the grace of Jesus Christ sufficient for them in the night of sorrow.

2. That we bow submissively to the will of Him who doeth all things well, and seek to profit by the example of this consecrated Christian brother.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the widow, and a copy sent to The Christian Sun.

Done by action of the quarterly conference of the Newport News Christian Church.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE

WADLEY, ALABAMA

An Accredited Junior College

Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

Piedmont Junior College is training some of the best stock of America for Christian leadership, to be used by the nation and the world. Here is a great challenge and asset for students who wish to prepare themselves to serve in a worth-while way. The new Administration Building will be completed by time school opens this fall.

THE MARRIAGE QUESTION.

By REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL.

For a long time, Church leaders have been giving consideration to the question of divorce. Representative gatherings of churchmen have engaged in lengthy discussions and passed numberless resolutions about the evils of divorce. In such discussions there have been a few thinkers who recognize the fact that divorce is more or less of a symptom of certain very grave conditions that do not appear to the eye of the average observer. Many have recognized the fact that if the Church is going to do anything to correct the terrible conditions indicated by the ever-mounting divorce rate, that it will have to begin much further back than has been the custom in the past. And that something more will have to be done than to pass resolutions condemning the evils of divorce.

The Russell Sage Foundation, New York, has recently published a book dealing with the question of marriage, under the title, "Marriage and the State." The Literary Digest of March 2nd discusses the survey at length. The book is a statement of the findings of a survey made by Fred S. Hall and the late Mary E. Richmond, under the auspices of the Sage Foundation. The study was made to ascertain actual conditions which have developed because of the general neglect of the marriage laws throughout the country, and the wide difference of marriage requirements in neighboring States. Some States have attempted to deal with the issue in a constructive way by passing laws which provide most necessary safeguards and restrictions against the heedlessly contracted marriage. Often the beneficial results of such legislation has been negated by the low requirements in adjacent States. Out of such situations has arisen the "marriage market town," where an effort is made to capitalize the situation for the profit that it brings to certain officials. The investigators making the survey found fifty-seven such towns in twenty-nine States, and made a detailed study of fifteen of them. The report sets forth that justices of the peace are the principal offenders in exploiting brides and grooms for financial profit; but there are also numerous instances where the "marrying parson" has been seriously implicated. The situation was summarized as follows:

"In one place, two social workers reported that on entering an office having a sign, 'Marriage Parlor,' they were informed by the justice of the peace on duty that his fee for the ceremony and helping them obtain a marriage license would be three dollars, but that if they wished the fact of their marriages kept out of the newspapers the charge would be three dollars additional. In this town, 'runners' were found to be common, being employed to solicit trade for the justices. They even board automobiles in motion if the occupants appear to be prospective brides and grooms." Seventy-nine per cent of the people married in this town were found to have come from outside of the county.

"Another town investigated was near a large city, with connection by street cars. Advertising in these cars, it was learned, was used by two justices of the peace who worked as partners. One of their cards read, in part, as follows: 'Sweet-heart: Be ready at four o'clock. We'll go to . . . just a short ride, and Justices . . . and . . . will tie the knot.'

"In a third town, where it was found that twice as many marriages are performed each year as there are people in the place, certain clergymen, rather than justices of the peace, profit by the business. Splitting fees with taxicab drivers who bring them marriage couples has been charged against several of the ministers, and one has been dismissed by his Church on that account."

The question involves more than simply the instances of the "marrying parsons," as they are called. It involves the responsibility of the clergyman for the marriage ceremony which he performs. And here again the lack of uniformity in the laws of the different States complicates the issue. When a clergyman is performing a marriage ceremony, is he the servant of the State which by law authorizes him to perform such a ceremony, or is he also the servant of the Church of which he is a minister? If he be recognized as a servant of both Church and State, to which is he most directly responsible when the State recognizes by law a marriage as permissible, but which the Church has placed beyond the pale? The State of Virginia vests the right to perform marriage ceremonies only in duly ordained or appointed ministers, and requires, or did require, every minister to qualify and give bond before he can perform marriage ceremonies. Now, if the State of Virginia has vested the right to perform marriages in the hands of the clergymen, and if the State issues a license to two of its citizens to marry, is not some clergyman under obligation to perform the ceremony for them? If some clergyman is under such obligation to perform such a ceremony, then surely every clergyman must be thus obligated when the State has issued a license, unless there be evidence that the license has been fraudulently obtained. It is a question that the law should decide, but if decision has ever been passed upon the issue, it has never been given very wide publicity. In the State of North Carolina, marriage ceremonies may be performed either by clergymen or by justices of the peace. It would seem reasonable to presume that under such conditions, if the clergyman should find that he cannot conscientiously perform the ceremony uniting the contracting parties that he might decline and turn them over to a justice of the peace. But here again we must plead ignorance as to the legal status of the issue.

This raises the question whether marriage is purely a legal contract or whether it is as is claimed by some, a religious sacrament. Can it be one without the other, or must it of necessity be both? Doubtless, most clergymen have been called upon to officiate at marriage ceremonies in which there was no consciousness of a religious significance in the mind of any one present, unless it were in the mind of the clergyman himself; and try as he might, he did not seem to be able to invest the ceremony with sacred significance.

If there be in marriage both the legal and the religious significance, why not have two ceremonies, the one legal and the other religious. That is what some countries, notably France, have done. The legal ceremony is obligatory. The religious is optional. This was discussed by the report of the survey. It was found that conscientious clergymen have been able to exert a most wholesome influence by advising with the couples about to enter into the marriage relationship. There is so large a possibility of helpfulness here that it was not deemed advisable to provide for the additional trouble and expense of a double ceremony for those who desire the religious ceremony.

There is no social question of the day with which the Church may deal that is fraught with such momentous possibilities. Nor is this a social question in which any stand that the Church might take could be considered as undue meddling on the part of the Church, since the officials of the Church are recognized by law as being directly concerned. There is need for a careful thinking through on the part of clergymen and Church leaders of this whole question. Definite conclusions need to be formulated, that from them there may be developed a sound conscience in the matter. Mention is made in the report of a Protestant Episcopal minister's "Rule of Three":

"1. Proof that the candidates have known each other for at least three months.

"2. The presence of witnesses personally acquainted with the bride and bridegroom.

"3. A certificate from the family physician, showing the bridegroom to be physically fit."

The survey prompted certain definite recommendations which the authors believed would help to correct the situation which exists at present. The principal one was to the effect that the States pass laws requiring that legal notice be given of the intention to apply for a marriage license, and that this notice be given at least five days before the issuance of the license. Twelve States already have laws requiring such a legal notice, and the fact was cited that in all twelve of these States not a "marriage market town" was found. The whole question is one about which most clergymen have felt concern, and it is one about which many very sincere men may be honestly in doubt as to their conscientious duty. A definite consideration of the matter is earnestly to be desired.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., preached on a recent Sunday in the First Congregational Church, Tampa, Fla. His sermon topic was "John Bunyan's Battle."

Envelopes for the missionary offering have been sent to all Church secretaries. Every member of Church, Sunday School and congregation should be given an envelope and the opportunity of making an offering. We must reach our goal—and by prayerful, consecrated, united effort we will do so.

Many SUN readers do not know the number and names of our missionaries in Porto Rico and Japan. This week we are printing in another column the names, ages, salient biographical facts about them, and suggest that these be kept for future reference by those interested in our missionaries.

The Eastern Virginia Elon alumni enjoyed a splendid banquet and fellowship meeting on the evening of Washington's birthday. Mrs. J. B. Gay, Franklin, Va., was president last year. She is succeeded by Dr. N. G. Newman, Holland, Va., for the ensuing year. Rev. W. C. Hook, of Holland, served as toastmaster.

Dr. J. E. Rawles, Suffolk, Va., who has been quite ill recently, is spending a month in Florida, where he is rapidly recuperating. Dr. Rawles is doing a great work as surgeon in connection with the Lakeview Hospital, Suffolk, Va. He is also active in the life of the Suffolk Christian Church and a trustee of Elon College.

Prof. S. A. Bennett had the misfortune to lose his mother at her home, at Elon College, on Sunday evening, February 24th. A brief funeral service was held in the residence on Monday, after which Prof. Bennett and his sister, Miss Lou Emma, accompanied the body to Solon, Ohio, where it was interred by the side of her late husband, Rev. S. D. Bennett. Within a year, Prof. Bennett has lost both his parents. THE CHRISTIAN SUN extends deepest sympathy.

The winter school, which is conducted each February at Franklinton Christian College for our colored brethren, was concluded on Friday, March 1st. Mrs. F. E. Bullock, Dayton, Ohio, represented the Board of Christian Education at this school. She was assisted by Dr. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro; Dr. W. W. Staley, Suffolk, and Mr. J. W. Sellers, of High Point. On Friday, the final day of the school, Dean A. L. Hook and President W. A. Harper, of Elon College, were present and took part in the work.

Rev. John G. Truitt has on a six weeks evangelistic campaign, February 24th to April 7th, which promises great things for First Christian Church, Dayton, Ohio, of which he is pastor. Among the speakers are Dr. W. H. Denison, Dr. F. G. Coffin, Rev. E. B. Flory and others, and Dr. L. E. Smith, Norfolk, Va., who conducts the services a week beginning March 19th. The plan of the new Church in contemplation and soon to be built is a most elaborate and beautiful one. Here is wishing Bro. Truitt all success in his great undertaking.

Mrs. Luther E. Carlton, 414 North Lombardy Street, Richmond, Va., has become very much interested in the erection of a suitable marker at the grave of Uncle Wellons. Uncle Wellons gave his life to the Church and was not able to accumulate property. It was his desire, as expressed to his intimate friends, that the Church at large would place such a marker at his grave as they might desire. Mrs. Carlton has undertaken this matter, and it is hoped that the ministers and Church members generally will co-operate with her. Contributions may be sent to her at her Richmond address.

Col. J. E. West has begun a very active and promising campaign for the governorship of Virginia. His formal campaign began at Lawrenceville, Va., on February 27th, and is reported to have been a most auspicious beginning for what promises to be a successful campaign. Col. West has served the State of Virginia as senator and Lieutenant-Governor for many years. He is known as a man of strictest integrity of character and of the highest moral and Christian ideals. The Old Dominion has enjoyed the distinction of having great men as its Governors. Col. West will hold up that standard. He represents in his personal and political life the very best traditions of our country. THE CHRISTIAN SUN wishes him well.

THE SUN LETTER.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN should be in every home in our denomination. Our members who do not take it don't know what they really miss. We receive many kind expressions from readers expressing their much appreciation of its weekly visits in their home. We regret that a larger number of our people don't enjoy its weekly visits. We would be happy indeed to put a thousand new names on the list right away. If you would like to assist me, will you mail me a check for two dollars?

We have a friend who wants to give fifty subscriptions to those members who are old and feeble and not able to pay for it. If you have such in your community, won't you send me their names and addresses?

THE CHRISTIAN MESSAGE.

Dr. E. Stanley Jones calls attention to the fact that while giving for general religious purposes in America has been steadily increasing, the giving for missions has been slipping. He says: "At the center of it all is the fact that we are not quite certain that Christ is necessary to human life." If this is true, it must be because the uncertainty exists first of all in the minds of our preachers and leaders. Is the diagnosis of Dr. Jones the correct one? Must we debate again the question, as Niebuhr has done, "Does Civilization Need Religion?" And particularly does it need the Christian religion? Possibly we might go back with profit to Prof. MacIntosh's book on "The Originality of the Christian Message" and see more clearly Christianity's ethical supremacy as well as its unique emphasis upon personality, to say nothing of the indisputable superiority of its Founder. Each new generation needs such frank and forceful grappling with the facts which lie in history! For Christ, as Mr. H. G. Wells declared, is "easily the dominant figure of all history." Reading the philosophy and examining the fruitage of the ancient faiths, I am more impressed with the peculiar and essential contribution which Jesus Christ has to make to their view of life and the future.

Jesus never asks His people to do what He Himself has not done or would not do. He is Captain of the host, and He is always in the thick of the struggle.

LAW-BREAKING ALIENS.

At a recent Sacramento (Calif.) Church Federation meeting, a Federal official who had handled over 5,000 law-enforcement cases, was quoted as saying that more than 4,000 names of defendants therein indicated either a Mediterranean or an east European origin. He further declared that nearly one-half of these alleged law-breakers were actually aliens. These, coming from areas of low economic standards, had not hesitated to abuse the hospitality of America. Their sole aim was "get rich quickly." This attorney's experience herein is not unique. Data from both Atlantic and the Pacific coasts' vice survey confirm his statements. Studies of lists of bootlegging, also Mann act defendants in States as widely separated as Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania on one hand, and Texas, also California on the other, substantiate said official's assertions.

Here, then, have we not data upon which to eliminate a chief cause of law-breaking and of, what is more, disrespect for the law? The names of the law-breakers indicted, in each case, an overseas origin in an area severely discriminated against in the quota immigration restriction act. The product of Protestant Sunday Schools cost American taxpayers practically nothing in crime upkeep.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

Please let me say to the ministers and members of the Alabama Christian Conference just a few words. First, I would like for our folks to know that our missionary offerings this year will be voluntary and personal. Every member of the Church should have an opportunity to give something individually to home and foreign missions, and this amount will not be counted as Conference apportionments, but will be a free-will offering for the purpose designated. The Convention call is for one-third of the amount of the pastor's salary. You know what you have been paying your pastor—one-third of that amount is what the Convention needs for the missionary work of the Church. If all of our pastors and consecrated laymen will set themselves to the task, I believe it can be done. I know it will not be done without an effort. Let us pray God to give us courage and strength for the effort. This will be a great year for the kingdom of God if we make it so.

Second, let all our Sunday Schools prepare to take a quarterly offering for our college at Wadley, Ala. Our own school! This is a new program for us, and it will take time and effort to make a success, but with a little faith and patience on the part of the leadership of the Sunday School and Church will insure a great inspiration to us all. If each Sunday School would just contribute one dollar it would mean almost $500 for the year. Many of them could easily give much more than that. Many individuals can give more than that, and be blessed by so doing. At any rate, let us not forget to take the offering. Our college is growing in influence and usefulness, and we must do all we can to increase the interest. I fully believe that it is possible for it to succeed.

Third, the weather is usually so inclement that we can't do much rural Church work during the winter months, and this winter we have had an unusual amount of sickness and deaths in our country. I have missed many of my appointments on account of funerals, and one Sunday but means a month for a country Church.

Now, brethren and sisters, let us buckle on the armor and gird up our loins for a determined effort along all lines of Church work for the spring season. We can make this a great year for the glory of God if we just do what we can when we can. I am praying for you and for the kingdom.

G. D. HUNT.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

TRUE SUCCESS.

BY CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE, U. S. N.

"For unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance."—Matt. 25:29.

It has been said, "He has achieved success who has lived well, laughed often and loved much, who has gained the respect of intelligent men and the love of little children; who has filled his niche and accomplished his task; who has left the world better than he found it, whether by an improved poppy, a perfect poem, or a rescued soul, or a better job than the other fellow; who has never lacked appreciation of earth's fine beauty or failed to express it; who has always looked for the best in others and given the best he had; whose life was an inspiration, whose memory a benediction."

We are in the world to get somewhere and to do something which will render a service not to ourselves but to those around us. We are in this world to go from what we are to something better, and we do not have to be promoted or exalted to some position of honor or trust to achieve this end. The highest success may be obtained right where we are, and it may be found in the possession of the fundamental principles stated in that which I have just quoted you. Smiling, loving and doing your task right where you are a little bit better than the other fellow has done it and leaving your little part of the world better than it was before you took it. Our Saviour, in the lesson which has been read, has very explicitly defined true progress, stating that it is improving our talent and showing us plainly that the fellow who does not improve his talent is worthless and at last gets nowhere.

Emerson has said, "The man who can do something better than his neighbor, though he builds his house in the woods, the world will make a beaten path to his door." And another whose name I do not recall says, "Nothing has been done that will not be better done. All human achievements will in the future be surpassed."

These are prophetic utterances and sound the note of true progress and development in anything.

First: What do we mean by true success?

Henry Ward Beecher said, "We should so live that what comes to us as seed may go to the next generation as blossom. And what comes to us as blossom may go to the next generation as fruit." That is his idea of true progress—success.

Carlyle represents true progress as finishing the unfinished task. Ruskin says, "It is the work of men building itself on the work of the past." Christ illustrates it (and we cannot reach our conclusions without considering Christ's statements) also as improving this talent until it is well done. This is defined in the lesson of the morning. Paul, in 2nd Tim. 1:9, defines it as "Attaining unto His purpose where unto He hath called us." He further defines true progress in Romans 8:30, in liberal interpretation, as being a determination to start right, to establish one's self in the right and to stick to it until the right prevails.

These are all practically agreed on this subject, and if true, and we must take it as true, we have to conclude that true progress is a permanent development toward the completion or perfection of anything, and it is true we believed it.

Second: Progress obtained.

There are but few people in the world who are not ambitious for true progress. There may be a few who have become so mentally or morally depraved that they have ambition for little of anything. Nevertheless, they are comparatively few. Most people desire progress, success, the going on into something better. It remains, however, that their ideas of true progress are not the same. Progress does not always mean the same. Progress does not always mean true progress. Solomon, in Prov. 11:24, has stated truly, "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." In other words, it is not always good policy to be stingy. You can be liberal in some things and enrich your heart thereby. You can be stingy and impoverish your own soul. It is a paying proposition sometimes to pay the fare of your friend when you are traveling together. To clarify my meaning further, one may seek riches and may have success, but it does not follow that he has had true success because riches do not always represent honest gains; neither do they represent true ideals. A bank account does not give one a foothold in human hearts, and it is service to others which brings largest returns. "Give, and it shall be given to you, full measure, heaped up, shaken down, running over." We are also told that, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these, ye did it unto me." And the parable of the rich man is a supreme example of the poor being rich and the rich being poor. You and I have seen the rich passing away, crying for needs which their riches could not buy. Oh, yes, their deposits piled up, but the depositor was impoverished.

Thus, true success lies not in material gains, but in one's insight in man, in God's idea of man, and in God's purpose for man. It consists in the gradual and harmonious development of all its constituent powers and all its component parts. This, with perseverance of effort and steadfastness of purpose, obtains true progress.

Third: The price of true progress.

But true progress is not attained as easily as it is to talk about it. There are deep valleys through which we must pass; there are dark days; there are many discouragements; there are many sacrifices.

Ruskin has said, "Sacrifice is its father, and compensation is its mother." "Table Talks" says, "True success is attained through manifold struggles and defeats." Beecher says, "Men's best successes come after their disappointments." Emerson says, "We must sink to rise." Timothy Titcomb has said, "Every man who strikes blows for power, and for right, must be just as good an anvil as he is a hammer." Christ says, "He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal."

These are all agreed that true success comes through the fiery trials.

Show me a man who has had no sacrifices to make, no defeats to endure, no disappointments, no criticisms, and no sorrows, and I will show you a man who is comparatively worthless. He who would secure great result must undergo great denials and forfeit great rewards. He must descend to the depths of sacrifice and be willing to take the sledge-hammer blows of criticism and profit by them, and thus as he loses himself he gains strength of character, true progress and the highest reward.

"Oh, yes," one says, "I will have my way. I will throw off every restraint and gratify every appetite." All right, you can do that, and you will accomplish your purpose. You will progress at that, you will have success; but, it is to be remembered that when thou hast done so, thy soul sits back in the foul temple of thy flesh and mourns like an exile; it sobs in infinite dejection—the body has gone astray. In all true progress, denial must come somewhere, and if thou dost deny thy body for the sake of better things, thy soul will come to the front and flood thy life with splendor. Give thy flesh its fling, and the soul mourns; and the price paid is a loss of the greater things of life.

Finally: Live the life.

Boys, live the life! We are told of the great Norwegian violinist by the name of Ole Bull, who was assailed at one time with hostile criticisms, and the New York Herald offered him its columns for its reply. And what was the answer? "I tink, Mr. Bennett, it is best tey write against (Continued on Page 10.)"

Shall We Share the Gospel with Others? IF SO, TO WHAT EXTENT?

One million, seven hundred thousand souls in Japan and Porto Rico alone are depending upon us. If we of the Christian denomination do not share with them the Gospel, they will never get it. February and March are "Foreign Mission Months" in the Southern Christian Convention. What will the answer be from us as individuals, Sunday Schools and Churches? We are depending upon each and every one to do his or her best in obedience to the command of our Lord, "Go ye."

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

EXPRESSING THE MIND OF CHRIST.

"We are persuaded that we, and all Christian people, must seek a more heroic practice of the gospel. It cannot be that our present complacency and moderation are a faithful expression of the mind of Christ, and of the wrong and want and sin in our modern world. As we contemplate the work with which Christ has charged His Church, we who are met here on the Mount of Olives, in sight of Calvary, would take up for ourselves and summons those from whom we came and to whom we return, to take up with us the cross of Christ, and all that for which it stands, and to go forth into the world to live in the fellowship of His sufferings and by the power of His resurrection, in hope and expectation of His glorious kingdom."

So closed the pronouncement made by the International Missionary Council, meeting on the Mount of Olives at Jerusalem last Easter time. That which this council found to be the most threatening and dreaded thing in the world today is not Buddhism, Mohammedanism, or any other false religion or idolatrous worship; but a smug complacency, begotten of a sense of crass materialism. That which Christianity and all other religions must face today as their most dangerous antagonist is secularism, materialism, wealth-getting, riches, mammon. All over the world millions are drifting not only from Christianity, but from Hinduism, Buddhism, Confucianism and Animism. They are throwing away such faith as they have had and are finding nothing to take its place, save self-seeking, worldly pleasure, accumulation of wealth. "I would rather have a man who bows down before a daub of red paint or a stone," cried out a man from Bombay, speaking to the council, "than an educated man who has nothing but materialism and is satisfied with it."

That is what we face today. Our land and country grows richer and richer and richer; wealth piles up at enormous increase. But it does not satisfy. We are not expressing the mind of Christ. We are not acknowledging His leadership when He declares "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, take up his cross daily and follow me." We are not denying ourselves in order to make Him known to the uttermost parts. We are not expressing the mind of Christ.

THE CHURCH BORN OF THE WORD OF GOD.

We are reducing everything to the human. This includes the Church and the Bible. It is a common thing now to find in one's reading the statement, "The Church is a human, a man-made institution. It is an enterprise of man, for man, by man. And the Bible was written a long time ago of men for men by men who did not know our age and our problems. Therefore, the time has come for a new Bible, or a rewriting of the one we have by men of our time who know our problems." All of which is false, because based on an erroneous conception of the origin of the Church, and the character of the Bible as the Word of God.

The Church is not a human, but a Divine institution in origin, in character and in conduct. It was conceived not in the human, but in the Divine mind. "I will build my Church," said the Christ of God. And He did build it, and is building it, not on a human, but on a Divine foundation. The foundation of the Church is a revelation made of God to Peter that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God. Peter did not make that discovery, neither was the Church founded on Peter as man or human, or what not; but God in heaven revealed to Peter a Divine and heavenly truth, and on that revelation, not on the man to whom it was revealed, was the Church formed and it is being built.

The origin of the Church, and the authority in and for the Church, then, is not Peter nor any other man, but "the word of God." And it was out of this salient truth that the Reformation was born. The Catholic world of the pre-Luther period held without pronounced opposition to the belief and doctrine that Christ founded His Church on Peter the man, and that authority from that day had been vested in Peter and his earthly successors, the popes of Rome. The now famous German writer, Karl Barth, holds rightly to the truth in the following: "When the theses of Bern in 1528 began with the rigid words, 'The holy Christian Church, of which Christ is the only Head, is born of the word of God, abides therein, and knows not the voice of strangers,' not the second but the first and causal word of the reformed Reformation was spoken."

The holy prophets of old had begun their messages, and ended them, with "Thus saith the Lord." And when Luther and the reformers held to the word of God as the divine credentials, then the people of God increased and the Church grew and flourished.

We are reducing things to the dead level of the normal, the natural, the human. We are saying with mathematics that there are three dimensions only—length, breadth, thickness. And these are all finite, measurable, visible. There is also a fourth dimension. This is infinite, immeasurable, invisible. Beyond the sun is the unseen, and above the temporal is the spiritual.

Pity the man who can only see on the tree its leaves, branches, trunk and fruit. For back of all these, producing these, and greater than all these is that invisible mind that conceived, and that invisible hand that fashioned and found these.

So the Bible is no more man-made than is the Church born of the Bible, and given to interpret the Bible as the revealed word and will of God.

The Bible does not give us a history, a code of morals, or a religion even. It shows us how God has spoken to man, what He said, His attitude to man under various and sundry conditions and circumstances. It is God's word to man. And God's word is divine and not human because He gave that word out of His own mouth. "And the word became flesh and dwelt amongst us, full of truth and grace."

PASS THE WORD ALONG.

"How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace, that publisheth salvation." So sang Isaiah. And men have been singing it since; and yet how reluctant we are to carry the glad tidings of peace and publish salvation. We have now our missionary period. It is, or should be, a time of publishing peace. If ever this world is saved, it must be through the power of the Prince of Peace. Are we telling to others this message of peace?

To how many in your Church, your community, have you published the fact that this is mission period; that now we are trying to think of those who do not have the gospel, know nothing of the Prince of Peace. Pass the word along. Learn of and tell about our missionaries. Tell what they are doing for us to publish out yonder the glad tidings. Tell of the thousands in Porto Rico, the millions in Japan whom we will keep in need and darkness by our sinful silence, and who wait upon us to give them the light.

Then see to it that all in the community, the Church, Sunday School have a chance, and are solicited to give an offering. See that each has an envelope (your Church secretary has them). Publish glad tidings. It is beautiful now to do this good thing. How beautiful indeed it is to publish the glad tidings of peace and salvation!

FIND GOD IN THE BIBLE.

Scholars have spent much time during the past two generations in seeking to find man in the Bible. They have largely succeeded. The traces of man's hand are easily found in Holy Scripture. It may be said now, as time has passed, that these same students have largely succeeded in making the book a human volume. They have found man so much in it that they have come to the conclusion that it contains the record of a long line of human experience. It is man's book. It is the record of his spiritual struggles. It has all the defects of a human document. It is not more fallible than any other record inspired by man's endeavor to live at his best and to go on his way seeking God.

After all these studies have been made, after all conclusions have been formed, after all convictions have been written, they have succeeded in giving us a human volume. Man is more in the Book than God Himself. Now, is it not about time for the world of scholarship to turn from this method and adopt another? Why should not the world, yea, and more, why should not the Church call upon this same group of investigators and thinkers to turn all their efforts to the work of finding God in Holy Scripture? The old method has had its day. It did not get us very far. Verily, it has gotten a large number so far away that they no longer believe in the divine origin, in the divine inspiration of that volume. Now, why not call for a new one? What a blessing it would be if we should set our minds to finding God in Holy Scripture! Surely it would bring on a new evaluation of that book. Positively it would restore the faith of many in the Bible as the inspired Word of God.—Western Christian Advocate.

REV. W. B. WELLONS AS I KNEW HIM.

BY REV. J. T. WHITLEY, D. D.

I am writing on the 18th of February, the fifty-second anniversary of the burial of the mortal remains of my revered pastor and friend, Rev. William Brock Wellons, D. D., who died in Suffolk, February 16, 1877, and whose funeral took place two days later in the Suffolk Christian Church. As you know from his biography, I had been selected to conduct the funeral services, and in this duty I had the assistance of Rev. E. W. Beale and Rev. C. A. Apple. Those who have read the biography as prepared by Rev. J. W. Wellons and Rev. R. H. Holland, need no detailed account of the exercises of that sad occasion. On each recurring anniversary of that good man's death I look up to his portrait which hangs on my study wall, and in my heart thank God for his noble and useful life and for the help he gave me during the ten years or more preceding his death.

My first contact with him was in August, 1865, when he conducted a protracted meeting at Providence Methodist Church, several miles out from Suffolk. That Church had no pastor, as the war had just closed and Conference had not met; so the official members requested him to hold the meeting. With some assistance rendered by Rev. J. M. C. Luke, a Baptist minister living in the neighborhood, and one or two others whose identity I have forgotten, Bro. Wellons was instrumental in arousing a profound spiritual interest in the community, and scores of persons professed repentance and saving faith in Christ. I was one of that number, having gone out from Suffolk several days with some young companions. It was a remarkable work of grace, and the effects of it were visible in the Churches of various denominations for years thereafter.

Soon after the close of that meeting, Bro. Wellons held another at the Christian Church in Suffolk, in which he had the assistance of Rev. James Murray, a Presbyterian minister residing in the town. According to my recollection, about seventy-five persons professed conversion during that meeting, most of whom have passed away, but a few perhaps survive. At the close of the meeting I was one of a large number of applicants for admission into the Church. My Methodist father had been dead for nearly nine years, and my Baptist mother did not use her influence to draw me into the fold of her Church, leaving me free to choose. Naturally, I elected to unite with the Church of the minister under whose preaching I had been led to Christ. At my age, less than sixteen years, denominations meant little or nothing to me, but personally meant a great deal. Under these conditions, I found it in harmony with my feelings to join the Christian Church. I must continue to believe that the decision was providential.

In February, 1867, when Bro. Wellons re-established THE CHRISTIAN SUN, in Suffolk, he induced me to quit the mechanical trade which I had pursued for several years, and enter his office as a sort of general helper. I assisted in the press work, folded and addressed the papers to subscribers, kept the account books, read proofs, attended the post-office, and was a sort of handy youth such as a busy editor needs at his call. I had already come to think of the gospel ministry as the most desirable occupation in the world, and I had access to the ample library in the pastor's study, where I did much of my work. After a while I was permitted to write brief paragraphs about local happenings, and also to print a modest little religious article once in a while. Thus I acquired an appetite for newspaper work, together with some experience which has stood me in good stead even to this day.

Under Bro. Wellons' kindly management, I began to conduct prayer meetings occasionally, and to make brief talks at Sunday School rallies. Then, on the 18th of July, 1869, by his previous arrangement, though I had not been licensed to preach, I went to the suburb of Norfolk that is now called Berkley, and delivered my first sermon in old Jerusalem Church, in the presence of a full congregation. Among my auditors were Rev. William B. Wellons, Rev. Stephen S. Barrett, pastor of the Church, and Rev. Maurice J. Langhorne, a retired Methodist Protestant minister. My text was in Luke 18:18: "Take heed, therefore, how ye hear." I have no notes of that brief discourse, but am sure that I said what seemed to me true and important at the time. Kind words from some of my hearers later on encouraged me to think that I had room for hope in my chosen field of service. In November of that year I was licensed to preach, and two years later was ordained an elder in that same Jerusalem Church, the ordaining presbytery being Revs. W. B. Wellons, J. N. Manning and C. A. Apple. December 1, 1869, I began college life at Richmond College, and three years later settled down as pastor of Spring Hill and Antioch Churches. When Dr. Wellons decided to publish a Sunday School paper in 1874, he enlisted my services as editor, and we published the Little Christian, a semi-monthly, which was afterwards enlarged and called the Sunday School Monthly. The International Lessons occupied a prominent place in the columns of the paper.

Time would fail me to relate in detail the outstanding events of that period, and I find that I have been writing already too much about myself and too little about the good man whose name heads this article. After ten years of labor in editing and publishing THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Bro. Wellons, who had meanwhile received the honorary degree of doctor of divinity from Rutherford College, was taken with his last protracted illness, from which he died in February, 1877.

Dr. Wellons, as I knew him, was a man of many interests and varied activities. Time and space would fail to speak of them all. But there were at least three chief interests that marked his career. First of these was the salvation of individual souls. He had a burning evangelistic zeal, and his labors, both in and out of the pulpit, were abundant in this direction. As an evangelist, he had remarkable qualifications and noteworthy success. His sermons were plain, simple, noted for persuasiveness rather than exactness of scholarship, and rarely ever failed to win sinners and edify saints. His face was illumined by good will, his voice was mellow and sweet, and his ample figure as he stood before a congregation and pleaded for his Divine Master made a deep impression upon susceptible hearts. The result was that hundreds, and perhaps thousands, were brought to Christ by his labors, and the Churches were built up in faith and love. Not only in the pulpit, but in private intermingling with the people, he was "urgent in season and out of season," as the apostle puts it, to win the wayward to righteousness.

Another chief interest of his was the union of all Christians of the various denominations on the broad basis of evangelical Christianity. For this he prayed, preached, wrote editorials, and contributed of his means in sending forth information by papers other than his own. For a while he published a periodical, with the co-operation of Rev. Thomas J. Melish and others, in promotion of Christian union. How he would rejoice over the fairer prospects of the present day in that direction! I cannot help thinking that the prospective union of the Christian and Congregational Churches would give him great joy if he could look down from heaven upon it. Perhaps that satisfaction is one of his celestial pleasures.

The temperance cause was also very dear to Dr. Wellons' heart. He was one of the organizers and principal officers of the Order of Friends of Temperance which flourished in Virginia and other States more than fifty years ago. He was for a long time the secretary of the State council, and I had the duty and pleasure of helping him keep the books and issue the charters to the new councils, as well as of attending with him the annual and semi-annual meetings in various parts of the State. What a joy it would be to him to know of the national prohibition laws at present on our statute books, and how ardently he would join in promoting their observance! As it was, even in that far-off time, he was instrumental in saving not a few of the victims of alcohol.

Among his labors as I knew him was the compilation of a hymn-book for the use of the Christian Churches, which was issued in 1870. A copy of it lies before me as I write—one which he presented to me with my name stamped upon the Morocco cover. I assisted him night after night in its preparation, he selecting the hymns from a variety of hymn books, both of us trying appropriate tunes, and I clipping the hymns, pasting them on the sheets, and attaching the numbers and meters. Those happy hours come back to me as I write these lines.

Mr. Editor, many other things press forward for notice, but this article is long enough, if not too long. If you had known Dr. William B. Wellons as I knew him, you would not think a volume too long in which to voice appreciation of his character and labors. "Who follows in his train?"

PRAYER LIFE OF THE LOCAL CHURCH.

(The following is a paper presented at a meeting of the W. M. S. of the Bethlehem Christian Church on the "Day of Prayer," February 15th, by Mrs. T. H. Dilway, assistant superintendent of spiritual life.)

Beginning with the individual, prayer does not end there. A Church made up of praying individuals will surely have a rich corporate life of prayer. Some of the richest promises of the Lord are made to the united prayers of His followers. In Matt. 18:20, He promises where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them. Again in Matt. 18:19 Jesus says: "If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything, that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father, which is in heaven."

The old temple is called a house of prayer. The book of the Acts of the Apostles is full of the story of praying Churches who observed the hour of prayer, who gathered where prayer was wont to be made, who gave themselves continually to prayer, who prayed on the Day of Pentecost, who prayed open the doors of prisons, who prayed the first missionaries into the fields. The main business of the Churches also of the apostles is prayer.

The story is told of an American minister who became the pastor of a London Church. From his first Sunday unexampled success in winning converts was his. His sermons seemed to come with a power by which they had never come before. Somehow he did not understand it, but about a year later he was called to the death-bed of a man who told him the secret of it all. He said: "The Saturday night before you preached your first sermon I spent all night in prayer for you. I have done that every Saturday night since." This man had prayed for him, as the Christians in Rome and Corinth prayed for Paul.

In a Church in Indiana, for several years a band of young men met regularly every Sunday morning before Church to pray for their pastor. Think what an encouragement that must have been to that pastor. Instead of criticising the pastor, pray for him. I wonder how many of

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The annual meeting of the Eastern Virginia Alumni Association of Elon College was held in the fellowship hall of Suffolk Christian Church on Friday night, February 22, 1929. Two long tables, with lovely decorations and a sumptuous banquet was served by the Philathea Class of the Suffolk Sunday School. In addition to flowers, ferns and candles, maroon and gold caps were furnished the guests. Sixty-four students of former days, and their guests, surrounded the lovely table and enjoyed the rich repast.

It was George Washington's one hundred and ninety-seventh birthday, and favors at the dinner were hatchets and cherries. His name is a part of this nation and its education as long as this country lasts; and it is hoped that it will last until all nations catch the spirit of liberty and equality that his name suggests.

Mrs. Joe Bynum Gay, Sr., president of the Elon Club, presided and gave the welcome address, in which she gave a brief history of the club. Rev. W. C. Hook, pastor of the Holland Christian Church, acted as toastmaster; Rev. J. F. Morgan, pastor of Rosemont Christian Church, led the song service and was accompanied by Mrs. I. W. Johnson on the piano. Mrs. Johnson played "Here's to Elon" as the guests entered the banquet hall. Dr. W. W. Staley offered the invocation, and Mr. Joshua C. West responded to the president's welcome address.

Fine brief addresses were made by J. F. West, Jr., president of the General Alumni Association; Rev. J. E. McCauley, pastor of First Christian Church, Norfolk, Va.; Prof. C. C. Mann, principle of Cypress Chapel High School; Rev. O. D. Poythress, pastor of the South Norfolk Christian Church; Rev. N. G. Newman, D. D., pastor of Holy Neck Christian Church; Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, pastor of Suffolk Christian Church; Rev. J. W. Fix, psator of Franklin Christian Church, and Col. E. E. Holland, ex-congressman and president of the Farmers Bank of Nansmond, Suffolk, Va.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: president, Rev. Dr. N. G. Newman, Holland, Va.; vice-president, Alton T. West, Newport News, Va.; secretary-treasurer, Mrs. Annie Staley Calhoun, Suffolk, Va. The occasion was spiced by Elon songs rendered in school-day spirit under the leadership of Morgan. The meeting was quietly enthusiastic, sweet-spirited, intensely loyal to their alma mater, and a glance at the above will show how many of the Eastern Virginia pastors are graduates of Elon College—and those named above are only a fraction of the Eastern Virginia pastors. The alumni and the alumnae of Elon are the living and working products of the institution in the local Churches and the Conferences.

A booklet was distributed that contains the names of the officers, the committees, and a roll of all the members, totaling about three hundred. This booklet will serve as a bit of suggestive history for contacts with the college and with one another. This meeting was, no doubt, the finest expression of alumni loyalty to Elon and the most enjoyable occasion of Elon students in this part of the Elon area. Rev. Dr. I. W. Johnson pronounced the benediction, and the banquet ended with pleasant memories.

ELON LETTER.

PRESIDENT'S REPORT.

February 19, 1929.

To the Board of Trustees:

My report at this time will be necessarily brief. The business manager will make a statement in regard to the financial situation. The administrative committee will report on the faculty.

I think it will be well for the board of trustees to pass a general resolution of authority to the business manager to make notes and renew notes in the conduct of the current business of the college under the budget adopted by you at each May session. It seems that we have not done this in sufficiently specific language.

It is considered good practice for a board of trustees to have a set of by-laws for its procedure. We have, I think, never adopted a set of by-laws, but if we have they were burned in the fire of 1923. I suggest that you appoint a committee of three to draft by-laws and report them at the May session of the board.

Since our meeting in May, the Central Loan and Trust Company, of Burlington, and the Alamance Insurance and Real Estate Company, also of Burlington, have both failed. We had certain stock donated to us in the Central Loan and Trust Company and certain stocks and bonds on real estate donated to us in the Alamance Insurance and Real Estate Company. The investment committee appointed a special committee, consisting of D. R. Fenville, John M. Coble, and R. O. Browning, to advise them what should be done in regard to our holdings in the Alamance Insurance and Real Estate Company. Before this matter could be disposed of, the company went into the hands of a receiver.

The two engrossing items of the institution's life at this time are the proposed coming of the seminary here and the financial campaign to raise a million dollars. I shall present these briefly at this time.

Atlanta Seminary.

In the spring of 1927, President Lewis H. Keller, of the Atlanta Theological Seminary, paid us a visit. He was hoping that he might secure students from the college to go to the Atlanta Seminary. President Keller went from Elon College to Raleigh and visited Dr. J. Edward Kirby. Dr. Kirby was the founder of the seminary. It occurred to him that it would be well for the seminary to move from Atlanta to Elon College and to become integrated with our department of Christian Education, strengthening that department by the addition of its present resources and such other funds as it might be able to accumulate. He suggested this to me and to President Keller.

After considerable correspondence, a meeting was arranged in Atlanta at the seminary which was attended by Dr. Kirby, Mr. H. A. Carlton, and myself, in addition to the executive committee of the seminary trustees. At this meeting it was agreed that it would be well for the seminary to come to Elon College and to unite with our department of Christian education, and for the joint school to be known as "The United School of Religion." We left Atlanta with the understanding that President Keller and I should write out a tentative basis for such an agreement and that each should bring it to the other's attention for criticism, and then to our prospective boards of trustees for amendment and ratification.

Soon after, President Keller and Dean Zimmerman came to Elon College to look things over and write out an agreement. At this meeting the officials of the seminary insisted on retaining their name and being a co-ordinate institution, making use of our Christian education building and co-operating with us in the college instruction of the last two years, but going forward with the seminary as such, conferring degrees of graduate grade. This tentative agreement was written out to be submitted to our boards of trustees. It was presented to a called session of the board of trustees at the Southern Christian Convention in Richmond, 1928, and was ratified in principle, with the understanding that at the May, 1928, session of the board of trustees the matter would be finally ratified.

While our board was in session, May, 1928, and ready to pass upon the matter of bringing the seminary to Elon last fall, a telegram came from President Keller, stating that his trustees had voted to postpone coming to Elon until September, 1929. Our trustees then appointed a committee to work out details and present them at the session this May for final ratification.

This summer, while I was in Chicago, I received a telegram from President Keller, desiring to bring the seminary to Elon College in September, 1928. I informed him that the action of our trustees was final, so far as the academic year 1928-'29 was concerned, and that we could not consider the matter as possible until September, 1929. Again, in December, 1928, I received another telegram from President Keller, desiring to bring the seminary here in January of this year, to which I made similar reply. I did, however, state to him that, should he desire to close the seminary for the spring semester, we would accept its students on the same grounds and bases that we accept any other ministerial student, which would leave him and his officials free to raise money. President Keller did not think this wise.

Also in the fall of 1928 and prior to the second telegram just mentioned, President Keller came to Elon again, and this time with a third and very gratifying proposal, that the seminary acquire land to build a graduate institution off the campus at Elon, but co-operate with us after the manner of the co-operation between the University of Chicago and the Chicago Theological Seminary, using our Christian education building till this plan should be carried out.

I learned from Dr. Kirby that the executive committee of the seminary had not passed on this proposal and that leaders in the Congregational Church were opposed to adopting ambitious programs for the affiliation of these two institutions without visible funds to effectuate them. At his suggestion and the suggestion likewise of President Nadal, of Drury College, both of whom were present in my office at the time, I wrote to President Keller, asking that he get his executive committee to formulate a definite proposal, submit this to the Educational Foundation of the Congregational Church and to the Commission on Christian Union of that Church for approval, and then submit it to our board of trustees for ratification. President Keller agreed to this, but I have not, so far, received the proposal in final form.

The Financial Campaign.

Since our meeting, in May, 1928, I have been endeavoring to get representatives of the General Education Board to visit Elon and meet with the special committee appointed by you at your last session. All I have been able to get is a promise that at the first opportunity officers of the General Education Board will visit Elon.

After I have thought this matter over, it has occurred to me that we should not undertake the campaign actively until after the union of the Congregational and Christian Churches, and then a special effort should be made by the campaign committee you will appoint to interest the Congregational Church in a mutual plan.

I would recommend as a line of preliminary procedure for this campaign that you set up a general committee of five persons from the board of trustees to be known as the campaign committee, and that the President of the Southern Christian Convention be ex-officio a member of this committee as representing the interest of the Christian Church. I further recommend that all matters of detail for the organization and conduct of the campaign be referred to this committee.

The purposes of the campaign should be those already approved by the Southern Christian Convention and this board, the raising of a million dollars to be applied in the first instance to pay off the indebtedness, and in the second instance to increase the endowment by the net amount raised above the indebtedness.

W. A. HARPER,
President.

LAYMEN'S MISSIONARY RESPONSIBILITY.

A wider co-operation of the laymen of the United States is necessary in order to meet the present unprecedented world situation and opportunity. There may have been a time when the doors were swung as widely apart as we find in individual countries today, but there never has been a time when simultaneously in so many nations the doors were wide open to the aggressive yet peaceful preaching of pure Christianity. This is the first generation that has thrown wide open the doors to the Christian world.

The situation in the non-Christian world is one of unique crisis in urgency and danger. Christianity should be burdened with the great sense of solicitude lest the Christian Church lose the day of her visitation. When have so many nations been absolutely plastic, yet soon to be set like plaster? Shall they be set in pagan or Christian molds? When have the tides of nationalism served among the places of Asia, Africa, of the Pacific islands, not to mention the Near East of Europe, as in recent years? Tides that may set against the peaceful teachings of Christianity, or tides that may be regulated by Christian principles, which may be made factors for the up-building of the kingdom for truth and righteousness. And when has the world been more under the spell of what I look upon as the greatest danger of the world—the process of synchronism of ecclesiasticism? And when has the spiritual tide surging forth from the life of Christ and nations reached such levels and given such promise of carrying on a high flood from life of peoples as today?

I ask it reverently: what could Almighty God do to stir the Christian laymen of the United States to deeper devotion, to unexampled deeds, which He has not already done? Unless it be to visit this country with some terrible calamity, what more could He do to convince us that the present is the time? Where is there another nation of people to turn its back upon antiquity and to accept modern civilization? Where is there another Japan, with its millions of people, with pagan religion in keen competition in the balance with Christianity? And where is there another Japan to call a congress of religion, including Christianity, to take council as to what religion can do to buttress morals and make the nation safe? No longer is it my concern whether Africa and Asia and the islands of the sea will receive Christ, but whether United States will lose Christ as a result of not passing Him on. Whether there will be adequate awakening of the laymen of America.

We must have an uprising of the laymen of the Christian Church of the United States in order to deal with the past of this magnitude and urgency,

We simply must have the business experience and business judgment, the business habits of men of large affairs, not only to understand this situation but to grapple with it along better lines, from the activities in the individual parish up to the council rooms of boards of our different Church communions.

When business and professional men shall bring to this enterprise of Christian nations the same intelligence and energy which characterize their business and professional world, then the evangelization of the world of this day will no longer be an idle dream. When we have adequately measured the initiative, the support and the enthusiasm of the lay forces of North America, we will conquer the non-Christian world. This world is becoming a very small place. It is only about one-third the size it was when our fathers were boys. It has become practically one neighborhood.

We had hoped and prayed that the twentieth century would be marked by universal good will and by the spread of international arbitration, that all disputes might be settled and the kingdom of God might come. But in almost every part of the world there is still the danger zone. Not only in friction, but the disintegration of both sanctions and restraints, agnosticism and materialism taking their places, seven-fold more serious devils, if we may judge them by their fruit—the danger of demoralization.

What is the solution? It is not segregation, amalgamation, dominion or education? We must change the dispositions of man. We must revolutionize the methods and the ways of man. We must purify the springs and foundations of society. Pure Christianity is the only force which has ever been found adequate to working that transformation. Christianity is the impact of our nation. We must Christianize the people of the non-Christian nations who come to us. We must safeguard our civilization at the home base. The laymen must rise up in order to impress the laymen of the non-Christian religions.

CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP.

When His enemies sought to ensnare our Saviour with the question whether it was lawful to give tribute to Caesar or not, He had a penny brought in order to ask certain questions about it. "Whose is this image? And whose this superscription?" Following our Master's example, let us also ask certain questions about the penny; and let us have the Word of God answer them. The fact that twelve of our Lord's parables bore on this theme and that he had more to say about our relation to the penny than to any other one thing, shows the importance of these inquiries.

1. May I own the penny? If I have acquired it honestly, I may hold it as mine. The right of private property is ordained of God and every where recognized in Scripture.

2. Does the word "ownership" describe my chief relation to the penny? As between my fellow-men and me, my relation is that of ownership. As between God and me, my relation is that of stewardship. The word means the same in the Bible as in our every-day speech. The Standard Dictionary defines a steward as "a person intrusted with the management of estates or affairs not his own; one who manages or disburses for another." Our stewardly relation to God is founded on His all-perfect character and on His relation to us as Creator, Saviour, Preserver, Benefactor. Since in love He made us, sustains us, and dwells in us as the source of a life divine and eternal, we are doubly, trebly His.

Stewardship was a staple theme of our Lord's teaching. In His parables of the talents and the pounds, to take one illustration out of many at hand, He describes Himself as intrusting to His servants His goods to be used for Him until He should return. The servant's report is, "Thy pound (not mine) hath gained ten pounds." And even the unfaithful servant returns his unused talent, with the words, "Lo, there thou hast that is thine." Our Lord thus illustrates the uniform teaching of Scripture that, as before God, what we have we hold not as owners, but as trustees, as stewards.

On our coinage is the inscription, "In God We Trust." Let us hereafter read it, "In Trust for God." Let us write these words not only on our money, our stocks and bonds, our real and personal property, but on our business abilities, our educational attainments, our social gifts and accomplishments—nay, on life itself, with all that it has of endowment, opportunity, possibility, let us humbly, gladly write, "In Trust for God."

We are not to hoard or fail to use what we have, like the "wicked and slothful servant"; we are not to use it on selfish vices, like the prodigal son; or on selfish luxuries, like Dives; or on selfish accumulation, like the rich fool. But we are to live "as good stewards of the manifold bounty of God."

And this is no extreme or fanatical teaching. Since we are God's servants—serving Him, of course, in and through service to our fellow-men—and since we are to rear our children to be His servants, it is our duty to spend on them and on ourselves whatever may be necessary to develop and sustain their and our maximum efficiency—physical, mental, moral, social, spiritual—as His servants. To stint or to starve our bodies or brains would be to impair or destroy our productive powers as servants of God. What we may broadly call the necessities of life—good education, needed recreation, and the like—are thus ennobled into means of service, sustaining and multiplying our power for good. The principle of stewardship, therefore, rules in both the material and spiritual realms, sanctifying and directing both. It gives unity and dignity, concentration and consecration, to the whole of human life.

The Christian world seems agreed that since the days of Paul no more Christ-like man has lived than David Livingstone. This belief we cannot but share when we think of his humility, his patience, his purity, his magnanimity, his heroism, his love, his utter self-sacrifice. The secret of this character of Christ-like beauty and power is unveiled to us in a certain resolution made by Livingstone, a resolution that shaped his whole life, and which, if made by any reader of these pages, will lift his or her life also into splendid beauty and power. That resolution was, "I will place no value on anything I have or may possess, save in its relation to the kingdom of Jesus Christ," the kingdom of love and truth and righteousness. This is Christian stewardship.—Dr. Egbert Smith, in Desire of All Nations.

DEGRADATION OF HEATHEN WOMEN.

A loveless God and a loveless creed produce loveless character. Hence, the appalling cruelty that has marked Mohammedan history. Hence also the Koran's contrast with the Bible in that it has so little for and about children. Of such is not the kingdom of Mohammed. It is a religion for warriors. It is the kingdom of the sword. Under its baleful shadow the nobler virtues of love, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, meekness, forgiveness, wither and die.

Its fatalism paralyzes progress, quenches hope, dwarfs the intellect, binds all life in iron fetters, induces stoical acceptance of the sterility, stagnation, and social decay which are the mark of Moslem lands. As one of their own poets has said, in lines which Zwemer calls their psalm of life:

" 'Tis all a checker-board of nights and days,
Where destiny with men for pieces plays,
Hither and thither moves, and mates and slays,
And one by one back in the closet lays."

Of its moral inferiority, the final proof is its hideous immorality. This all-pervading vileness is hopeless of reform from within, because it is taught in its sacred book, practiced by its holy prophet, and exemplified by the most famous saints of its calendar. From the days when Mohammed, aged fifty-two, married Aisha, aged nine, until the day when he died, leaving eleven widows, Islam has degraded the home life of its people and corrupted the springs of human society at their very source. It puts God's sanction on polygamy, concubinage, and unlimited divorce, one of Mohammed's holy apostolic successors having divorced one thousand wives.

Of the ensuing degradation and misery of women, a Mohammedan judge of the district court, in Cairo, wrote:

"Man is the absolute master and woman is the slave. She is the object of his sensual pleasures, a toy with which he plays and then tosses away where he pleases. The firmament and the light are his. Darkness and the dungeon are hers. His to command, hers to blindly obey. His is everything that exists, and she is an insignificant part of that everything."

Let those who think this religion "good enough" imagine their own wives, daughters, sisters, and mothers shut into the slavery, the illiteracy, the vile gossip, the bitter jealousies, the dense mental and spiritual darkness and hopelessness of Mohammedan harems.

Of Confucianism, little need be said, because it is not a religion in our sense of the word. It is an ethical code, admirable in many respects, setting forth the duties that pertain to certain human relationships. But, as the Chinese themselves are realizing, it gives no hope for the future and no strength for moral living. It is frankly agnostic. It knows no God and no salvation. Its only worship is that of ancestors. To satisfy its deeper needs, the Chinese soul has had to go to other teachers and has peopled the universe with spirits.

Like other non-Christian systems, it degrades woman. It teaches that she is of a different species from man; that, belonging to the lowest state, she is as far inferior to him as earth is to heaven, and that equality with him is forever impossible to her. Says Confucius, "It is a law of nature that women should be kept under the control of men, and not allowed any will of their own. The aim of female education is perfect submission—not the cultivation or development of the mind." Except as the mothers of sons, women are looked down upon. They are spoken of as "the mean ones within the gate." A lady missionary of long experience said to me, with the tears running down her cheeks: "There is hardly a woman in China who could not tell you a tale that would break your heart."

Thus these non-Christian faiths, one and all, come to their most damning exposure in their debasement of half the human race. They join hands to make woman the mudsill of the house of life. They unite to rob her of self-respect, to shut her out from enlightenment, to bruise her natural and tender instincts, to condemn her to perpetual and hopeless inferiority, ignorance and oppression.—Dr. Egbert Smith, in Desire of All Nations.

A CALL.

Jesus, in His matchless glory, had a plan and purpose in walking by the sea that day. He didn't just happen to be there; it wasn't an unexpected scene when He beheld a ship on the beautiful waters of Galilee with men at their tasks, busy, not idlers. And He called to them. Oh, such a call! One that is still ringing from mountain-peak to peak. "And He called to them"—to whom? To the three men? No, it was to the young men. What a challenge! what a glorious privilege! what an honor to work side by side, hand in hand, with the Divine Master. Their father, Zubeedee, with the best years of life spent, was left lonely, but happy to see his boys step out for God. What an opportunity!

Does not your heart gladden at Easter time when you ponder and meditate on the fact that you have a living Christ to worship? All four of the gospels tell us "He is risen." What marvelous words! What power! Words to revolutionize our hearts and lives. "He is risen." What an announcement to the world!

If this memorable event should have occurred this Easter, what power does Christianity have to make these immortal words head the list of programs going out over the air in message and song? How strong are we? How weak are we? How many doubting Thomases have weakened the onward march of Christian soldiers? After life there is action. Jesus said, "Go!" This message, this command, again is given to a young woman. How inspiring to see young folks serving and praising their Lord and Saviour, on the firing line for God.

A picture so beautiful, so uplifting, so entrancing, the word cannot paint one to compare. Jesus is calling to you today as of yore. He needs you. Won't you hear? Won't you go?

RECOMMENDED PLANS AND PROGRAM

February, March—Foreign Mission Months

THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION, in its Richmond Session last year, made February and March "Foreign Mission Months" for educational and informational purposes, culminating in an offering from all the Churches for Missions at, or on the nearest possible Sunday to, Easter—March 31, 1929. The goal set for the offering—Home and Foreign Missions—from Sunday Schools, and Churches, and individuals is $33,000; Woman's Societies, $12,000—total, $45,000. Inasmuch as the entire amount thus asked must be raised by voluntary offerings, the Conferences, in their recent sessions, in which the matter was discussed, adopted and recommended to the Sunday Schools and Churches the following method to be pursued in reaching their quota of one-third as much for Missions as for pastor's salary:

FIRST: When a Church uses the Budget Plan, write into that budget one-third the amount of pastor's salary to go to Missions, and send this in monthly or quarterly.

SECOND: If the budget is not used, canvass the individuals of the Church and Sunday School to find out how much each will give to Missions and when, entering the same on a card prepared for the purpose and which may be had of the Mission Secretary, Elon College, N. C.

THIRD: Where neither of these plans is adopted, then endeavor to increase the offering from the Sunday School, and at or about Easter have a Missionary Rally and try to raise the entire amount of the quota at that one service, in conjunction with the monthly offerings from the Sunday School for the year.

Each Church and Sunday School should use one or the other of these plans.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By Rev. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson XI—March 17, 1929.

THE CHRISTIAN SABBATH.

GOLDEN TEXT: "For the Son of man is Lord of the Sabbath."—Matt. 12:8.

LESSON: Gen. 2:2, 3; Ex. 20:8-11; Matt. 12:1-14, 28:1-10; John 20:19; Acts 20:7; Rom. 14:4-6; Rev. 1:10.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 92:1-5, 12, 13.

1. The origin of the Sabbath. The Sabbath was made for man, not by man. It is a divine institution, blessed and sanctified by the Lord God. It is well enough to keep this fact in mind, for there are many who regard the Sabbath as of minor importance, and who do not understand the divine sanction which one day in seven is holy unto, or set apart for, the Lord. It is well enough, too, to keep in mind that the original commandment in regard to the observance of the Sabbath Day has never been abrogated. No one would propose for a minute that the law against murder, or adultery, or theft, as promulgated in the Ten Commandments, has been set aside, and yet some people attach little, if any, importance to the Sabbath, and disregard the fundamental law in regard to the Sabbath. Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy still has the divine sanction, and we disregard that law at our personal and national peril.

2. The purpose of the Sabbath. The Sabbath was made by God, but it was not made for God. It was made for man. Our supreme authority on things spiritual, Jesus Himself said that "man was not made for the Sabbath, but the Sabbath for man." It was a provision of a wise and loving Father for the highest well-being of His children. It is to be used in such a way that it shall pay the largest dividends. It is a continual reminder that as the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, so is time of the Lord and the opportunities thereof. "The Sabbath is the sacrament of time—its rest is the symbol of the consecration of work.

(1) It is made for the physical man. The Sabbath ought not to lose its original function of affording rest from the usual activities of the week. It ought to be spent in such a way that a man come to his work on Monday morning renewed and refreshed.

(2) It is made for the intellectual man. It is to be used in such a way that the mind shall be fed and strengthened by reading worth-while things.

(3) It is made for the social man. It affords the average man an opportunity to spend more time with his family and with his friends, to develop his social nature.

(4) It is made for the spiritual man. Above all else, it should be a day which gives an opportunity for meditation and worship, the renewal of the spiritual life of man, the quickening of the moral energies of a man. "The worship of the Creator demands a consecration of time as well as of place."

It should be kept in mind, too, that keeping the Sabbath is not primarily a matter of negation. There are many people who would not think of taking an automobile ride on Sunday who misuse the day by eating a big dinner, sitting around and reading the Sunday newspaper and cheap literature, or in talking about others. Misuse of the Sabbath is abuse of the Sabbath. It is a day for doing good as well as for refraining from doing things.

3. Jesus and the Sabbath. Jesus found the Sabbath so cluttered up with petty rules and regulations that it had lost its original significance. It was a day primarily of ceremonial detail. With that penetrating insight which was so characteristic of Him, and with that fearlessness which made His enemies hate Him, He got at the heart of the matter. He got beneath all the forms and ceremonies and reasserted the original purpose of the Sabbath—it was made for man. The rights of man had precedence over ceremony and form. The ultimate value of life is personality. The Sabbath was to be used in such a way that it helped man to grow into God-like character. This is the touchstone of the matter.

4. Our modern Sabbath. It is difficult to lay down a hard and fast rule in regard to the Sabbath. It was the desire to do this that produced the ridiculous position of the Pharisees in regard to the Sabbath. At the same time, however, there is not undefined liberty in regard to the matter. The puritans may have been wrong in their attitude toward the Sabbath, but when one carefully considers the divine origin and the original function of the Sabbath, one feels that after all they were nearer right than those who use Sunday as they use any other day, those who pride themselves on being liberal in religion, but who are as a matter of fact simply making themselves believe that the thing they are doing is right when they know that it is not in keeping with the real spirit of Sunday.

5. The practical import of the problem. We may well face this fact: disregard of the Sabbath will exact a heavy penalty on our country. A man or a nation cannot with impunity disregard and disobey an institution that is so closely knit up with his spiritual life. It is not a matter of going to Church on Sunday morning and then doing as one pleases the remainder of the day. Remembering the Sabbath Day to keep it holy is something more fundamental than that. Christians need to re-examine themselves in regard to this vital thing, and they need to be on their guard lest they be led astray by the attractive but shallow arguments that are abroad in behalf of a wide-open Sabbath. We need to come to a new understanding of the mind of Christ in regard to this day which is embedded so deeply in the fundamental structure of the universe.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, March 17, 1929.

TOPIC: "How the Church Helps Us to Live the Christian Life."—Heb. 10:19-25.

Some Bible Hints.

The Church, through its associations, is like the temple, a place where in peace we can draw near to God (v. 22).

The Church helps us by its demand for purity of life. It sets the life of Jesus as our standard (v. 22).

Meeting others of like faith and aim strengthens us in weakness and encourages to greater endeavor (v. 24).

The Church is a place of exhortation. It is meant to keep us in remembrance of our duty. It is a call to service (v. 25).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Where there is no Church, as a rule, there is little Christian life. Our ideals sag so easily.

We drift away from Christ because it is easy to drift (Heb. 2:1). The Church helps to anchor us to Him.

The Church's mission to preach the gospel is a challenge to us. We are drawn into taking part, and this activity forces us to lead the Christian life. We live for what we believe.

The Church's pastoral care helps us. There is too little of this intimate contact. Too often we are allowed to struggle on alone.

A Few Illustrations.

The Church is like a trusting-place where we have the promise of meeting our Lord. If we really go to meet Him, and not merely to hear a sermon, we are not disappointed.

The pastor is expected to be an expert, as Jesus was, in spiritual things. We consult experts in every line; why not in religion?

The Church is a school of religion. It should speak on every moral question. It should reveal the Father and teach us His way. We need that help.

If we are Church members, we feel an obligation to live up to its standards. The world expects us to and heaps scorn on those that fail.

To Think About.

What is a Christian life?

How does worship help us to live aright?

What is the best help we get from the Church?

THE VALLEY CONFERENCE.

Since November 1st, the undersigned has largely been serving as field secretary or supply preacher for the Churches without a regular minister in the Valley Conference. We are happy to announce that every Church in our Conference is now having at least monthly services, and the prospect seems brighter for our Conference than we have known for some time. We sincerely trust every Church will respond liberally to the special Easter offering for missions; and, brethren, let's make our offerings cheerfully and because we love the cause of Christ—"The Lord loveth a cheerful giver."

February 18th, at 7 A. M., Mt. Olivet (Greene) did a fine job of pounding their pastor with sixteen fine chickens. The Lord will reward those dear people for their kindness.

TRUE SUCCESS.

me and I play against tem." In other words, his music could speak for him, and that was sufficient.

Is not that true in life? Does not life speak for itself, and is not life, as it is lived, the best argument for one. Live against all criticism and sacrifice, and against all odds and ends, and let the life speak.

And now, to sum up: True success has its promise in the fundamental motives and standards of living. It has its development in keen discernment of things which make for a permanent foothold in business, society, in hearts and lives, and it has its realization in the sacrifices of self for the highest good. Worries and troubles and defeats of life are no sign of retrogression, but often are stepping-stones in progress to higher success.

Therefore, "Be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, knowing that your labor is not in vain in the Lord" (1 Cor. 15:58).

"For unto him that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance" (Matt. 25:29).

Shine where you are, profit in these, and thou shalt have more.

"The memory of the just is blessed (true progress), but the name of the wicked shall not" (Prov. 10:7).

sionaries, or priests, or teachers, but because of the steady push of the laymen. A little Mohammedan girl was asked, "Are you a Mohammedan?" Quick as a flash came the answer, "Thank God, we are Mohammedans." They are proud of their religion. They take it with them everywhere, and it is spreading more rapidly than Christianity. Christianity in the early days—that is, the individual Christian—looked upon it as his responsibility to spread the blessings which he had received within the spirit of his calling. The laymen must rise up and make Christianity what it was in that age, when every Christian was a missionary in the sense of spreading his faith. We must have laymen in order that we may have the contribution of money and men, without which we cannot wage with success this world-wide war. Half of the communicants of the Church in the United States are now making no contribution toward the support of Christianity in the non-Christian world, and, what to my mind is most serious, the average contribution at present of those who do contribute, is ridiculously small; and, what is still more serious, multitudes of Church members are giving no more to foreign missions now than they did ten years ago, and in many cases twenty years ago, although the average has increased, and although the opportunity has immeasurably enlarged, they have not kept pace with it.

There are thousands of individual laymen who should, under our leadership, each be led to undertake the support at least of one foreign missionary. There are hundreds of laymen who could each take on the support of a whole institution or a whole college, or hospital. There should be plans in which our denomination should unite in China, in Japan, Africa and India. We must maintain generously the great forward movement of evangelization and Christianity and philanthropy. Nothing less than millions coming from rich and poor, millions from those who can give millions, will meet the requirements of this work. God wants to convert the pagan world. He is calling new recruits to take up missionary service. Plans should be devised and money raised to place them in the field. It stirs me deeply to look into the faces of those to whom God is speaking for a life of which we have never dreamed. Persons in whom lie buried capacities for vicariousness, capacities for heroism, for Christ-likeness that can shape this world. Let us not disappoint God; therefore, let us revise not only our plans but our lives, and also our conception of God and human duty. Let us remind ourselves of our environment, of the divine resources of the King eternal, immortal, invisible, with whom rests all power in heaven and on earth, and, like Bro. J. M. Darden, give of our money, our time, and spiritual energy to the missionary work of the Southern Christian Convention, that the full quota asked for by our Mission Secretary, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, may be realized for our work in Japan and Porto Rico.

MISSIONARY RALLY.

The rallies of the Alabama Woman's Missionary Conference will meet March 9th at Cragford, with Cragford Church, and March 10th with Antioch Church, Lineville and Wadley groups meet with Cragford, and New Hope and Roanoke groups with Antioch. Dr. Fry and Dr. Atkinson are to be with us.

We are expecting these two days to be the biggest in the history of our work. Will each Church make a special effort to be well represented? We need you, and you need the inspiration and information you will receive at these rallies.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

THE SECRET OF THE LORD.

"The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him."—Psa. 25:14.

What is this secret of the Lord? It is being able to understand His designs for us, His designs for the world, to recognize His hand in things, and to see that His way is best, and that He doeth all things for the best to those that love and serve Him. These things are hard for many to see. None may see them perfectly, but those who have followed implicitly have given themselves to the highest spiritual culture and intimacy with Him, do receive the blessing of knowing Him and loving Him supremely.

Like the coming of day driving away darkness, so the understanding of the Lord comes to them that fear Him. Genuine Christianity has never darkened any one's window, never put any one's fire out, never stopped any one's music. There have been times when it appeared that a righteous act did limit one's income, maybe to privation, but it has never touched man's necessities, his good conscience, nor his closeness with God. On the contrary, it drives away the sting of death, it lends unseen protections, it makes music and joy, it relieves burdens, hushes accusing voices, it covers a man's sins.

Prayer.—O Lord, we pray that our lives may fill their intended uses—life and light, the faculty of loving, and to believe in Thee forever. Amen.

TUESDAY.

WHATSOEVER IS NOT SACRIFICED IS SATANIC.

"Then said Jesus unto His disciples, If any man will come after, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me."—Matt. 16:24.

"He that is not with me is against me, and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad."—Matt. 12:30.

This is philosophy in a sentence and an inspiration in a breath. However good one may be in moral standards, if he is not with the Lord, he is against Him.

We learn the lessons of living up with the Lord and of sacrificing for His cause not by lectures, nor sermons, nor by joining the Church. These may contribute to it, but essentially our learning of Him is in the school of the heart. It means believing in Him so thoroughly that we do nothing to see His cause established in all the ways we go. We will stand in the rain to see a quack doctor tell his lies. When will we give proof of our devotion to God by braving any or all elements when necessary to further His kingdom? The principle is the same, and to be fair with ourselves and with God we would certainly see that our devotion to Him lacks no expression, whether in kind deeds or attendance at Church.

Prayer.—Our Father, we desire to be known of Thee, and we confess our neglect of devotion to Thee often, and we allow pleasures to attract us too strongly. Forgive us this sin and make us Thy true children in this world as in that to come. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE JOY OF SALVATION.

"Great peace have they that love Thy law."—Psa. 119:163.

To have the approval of God in anything is great joy, and it is possible to have that approval. Take, for instance, the widow who gave all she had; take the woman who anointed Jesus, she did what she could; take the man who besought Christ's healing of his sick daughter—what faith! take thine own satisfied conscience, and you will find what the text is talking about. This is the realization of all our dreams and desires. When our lives are righted with God, there springs into the life deep joy; not joy as the world counts joy; not earthly passions and excitement, but abiding satisfaction in a conscious harmony with God's will. If sin be in the heart—

"The fairest sky is foul, and sad the summer weather;

The eye no longer sees the lambs that play together,

The dull ear cannot hear the birds that sing so sweetly,

And all the joy of God's good earth is gone completely,

If sin be in the heart.

"If peace is in the heart,

*The wildest winter storm is full of solemn beauty,
The midnight lightning flash but shows the path of duty,*

*Each living creature tells some new, joyous story,
The very trees and stones all catch a ray of glory,
If peace is in the heart."*

—Chas. F. Richardson.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer.

THURSDAY.

"WAIT AWHILE."

"And he said, Tomorrow."—Ex. 8:10.

It pays to wait long enough to reach our best decisions about things concerning which there may be question; but about certainties, procrastination is a thief and often proves a great loss, if not disastrous. This was the case of Pharaoh. He had had enough of the consequences of his own wicked way to turn him to God who alone could save Egypt; but often he had gone the limit. Moses said to him, "When shall I entreat the Lord that He shall take away the plague?" he replied, "Tomorrow." Pharaoh's people were crying for relief, but he said, "Tomorrow."

How many everywhere have made this a modern issue in their lives? For years and years they have put off their personal acceptance of Christ in God. They have had the inspiring examples of the righteous, and the warning examples of the wicked; they have not been without the consequences of sin themselves, and yet they say, "I intend to some time." It is too bad indeed!

How dangerous it is! He who continues against this appeal finds it increasingly easy to do so, and also increasingly hard to turn away from it.

Said a man of thirty, we are told, "I would give a thousand dollars to feel as I did in 1820. Then I had just started in business. I said ten years from now I will be set and in good shape, and now these years have engrossed me and I have no desire for religion at all."

Later, when his sister was buried, he said, "I would give a thousand dollars to have the hope she had." Some one said, "Why not? you can." "No; I am so busy I haven't the time." As an old man, he passed away, we are told, crying, "O if I could die a Christian!"

Prayer.—Dear Father, who art able to arrest every one's way and bless, bestow upon our needy souls Thy work of grace, and life and light, that we may come to Thee and know that Thou hast come to us. Amen.

FRIDAY.

WHAT SHALL I DO WITH TOMORROW?

"Take no thought for the morrow, for the morrow will take thought for itself."

"Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."—Matt. 6, 33, 34.

The consequences of waiting, procrastinating, are easily seen in every-day affairs. We do not hesitate in getting out of a burning building, or taking to the life boat in a sinking ship, or to adopt any means to save us from bankruptcy. In such things, common sense impels us to take no chances. But because consequences for an evil thing is not speedily executed, and because religion seems such an intangible thing, because we love the ways of the world, we set our hearts on them. It is hard to realize that now, our present time, is the only time we have yet, our common sense teaches us not to put off the task of the day until evening. The man who has a long journey to make starts early.

Can a person subdue his old passions, eradicate his old lusts and correct his old habits in a year? In the last years of one's life, when business is a greater care, when the heart is less tender, when conscience is more hardened and habits fixed, can he turn himself to God at will?

The present only is our own. Our yesterdays are gone. Our tomorrows may never come. Now is the time to do right. Now is our opportunity to make self and God one.

Prayer.—Our Father, come to us and we will accept Thee. That we might find Thee and abide with Thee. Make us Thy children and our hearts Thy dwelling-place. Amen.

SATURDAY.

WAGES FOR ALL.

"For the Son of man shall come in the glory of His Father; then shall He reward every man according to his works."—Matt. 16:27.

There is a touch of deep sadness in the parable of the fig tree. "Dig it up and cast it in the fire. It bears no fruit and is in the way."

Balaam prayed that he might die the death of the righteous; but no man can die the death of the righteous unless he has lived the life of the righteous, and mere wishing will never bring it. Grapes cannot be gathered off of briars. In this God means to teach that one cannot live a hard-boiled, impure, unclean, dissipated life and in the end expect mellowness, profit, pleasure and happiness. The only assurance we have of a righteous death is a life whose bent is against unrighteousness, a life set against deceit, a life lived to set crooked things straight, we must recognize that the difference between the end of a good man and that of a bad man is the natural result of their voluntary living. To wish for a righteous end without living it is like wishing to eat without earning it, like praying for honor without being worthy, like praying for promotion without qualifying. He will reward "every one according to his works."

Prayer.—Lord, give us grace of the spirit to believe in a true and noble living. Give us loyal hearts to do this. Preserve our faith for this until we shall earn thy "Well done." Amen.

SUNDAY.

EXAMPLES.

"I have given you an example that you shall do as I have done."—John 13:15.

"The righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him, and the wickedness shall be upon him."—Ezek. 18:20.

It is a solemn reality that we are held responsible for examples of righteousness, and also examples (Continued on Page 14.)

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our financial report for this week makes us blue. If my memory serves me right, it is the smallest in a number of years for any one week. It reminds me of the time when our offerings ran from $35 to $40 per week fifteen years ago. The orphanage at that time drifted in debt and could not help it.

We hope our people will never suffer that to happen again. When our offerings come in as they did this week it makes us blue, and I guess any one in this position would be blue, too, with 118 children to feed and clothe and the income $50.09. That gave us 44 cents per child to feed, clothe, school and care for it a week. It can't be done! Friends, cheer us up with a fine offering next week. Let everybody help us in this work of love. We need your sympathy, your love, and your help. We are expecting every Sunday School in the Southern Convention to help us with a monthly offering this year. Please make your offerings liberal.

OFFICIAL NOTICE.

The Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at its last session, accepted an invitation from Newport News to meet there in 1929. But inasmuch as their new Church will not be completed by the time of the Convention, the Newport News people have asked to be relieved from entertaining this year. The executive committee is, therefore, anxious to receive an invitation for the coming session of the Convention. Please take this up with your school and notify us if you wish to entertain.

PRAYER LIFE.

us are doing that today? Praying for our pastor instead of criticising him?

Church members may also help by praying for the unconverted. There was a pastor, called to take charge of a large fashionable but cold and powerless Church. After studying the situation, he called twenty of the women of the Church together and laid before them the fact that not one of their husbands was a professing Christian. He also called the officers of the Church and gave each one the list of the twenty men, for whom they were to pray. At the end of one month, all of the twenty men except two were baptized. Are we praying for our unconverted enough? If we are to work in prayer for the unconverted, it is necessary that we have a clear idea whom we're praying for.

The missionary society ought to be the greatest reservoir of the prayer life of the Church. The woman's missionary movement was born and nurtured in prayer. A group of women met regularly every month for sixteen years from 1813 to 1829, in New York City, for nothing else but to pray that the heathen world might be opened to the gospel. A prayer now gloriously answered. Certainly, with such a history behind it, a missionary society ought to be, first of all, a society of prayer. Is it? Are we, as a missionary society, praying as we ought?

One of the tried and true missionaries tells of a dear friend that she had some years ago on the mission field. Her friend was very ill. Day by day she attended her and prayed, until one day there seemed no hope. One of the missionaries in the little group that met daily to pray said: "O Lord, let some one pray for her whose faith is strong; we are all tired, helpless and hopeless." That evening, for the first time in many days, she became conscious and asked "What day is it?" When they turned to the little wall calendar to see, they were surprised to see that the day before had been her birthday; for there was her name on the Church calendar of prayer, and on that day thousands had been praying for her.

One of the outstanding opportunities of the Church life of today is Christians who will frankly and bravely express their faith that God is a God who answers prayer. The foundation of a true prayer-life must be laid in the home, the Sunday School, and among the young people. Careful, thorough, right instruction in prayer must be given in the Sunday School and young people's societies. This is first and is necessary, but it is not enough. Children learn by doing, far more than they do by hearing. We sin when we fail to pray for our young people and to let them know that we're praying for them.

The story is told of a Japanese girl, studying in an American college, one of whose American friends invited her home for the Christmas holidays. At the end of the holidays, her hostess said to her as she was leaving, "I hope you have had a happy time with us." "Oh, yes! a beautiful time, except that I have missed the God in the house." "The God in the house!" said her hostess. "You know in my country each house has its god-shelf, and we worship every day; but you have no God in your house," answered the Japanese student.

The story goes that the question stuck in the heart of the professing Christian woman and that family worship of God was begun in that house.

amples of iniquity. And we are certainly not lacking in either. Follow the newspaper records; follow the court records; follow the Church records; follow your own observations, and follow your own good judgment.

Here is one: Prof. Pelam, of Brown University, Germany, gives us an account of a single life: Madam Ida Zurka, born 1740; a drunkard, a thief, and a tramp; descendants, 834 with 706 traced in local records, 106 born out of wedlock, 144 beggars, 62 on charity, 181 lived disreputable lives, 76 convicts, 7 of whom were murderers; cost the country $1,250,000.

God may in some way settle accounts every day, but He settles them all at last.

Prayer.—Our Father, in the name of Thy Son Jesus, enable us to see Thy brightness in His face, His life and know His power in our spirits; to live the life, obeying the signals and the laws of the road. Amen.

INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2 1/2 x 4 1/4 inches x 3/4 inch

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made. The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller. It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength. One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together. The size, 2 1/2 x 4 1/4 inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

OBITUARIES.

SHELTON.

The death angel visited the home of Bro. Taylor, on Carter Street, Wednesday A. M., February 20th, and took from their midst their father, companion and grandfather, Bro. B. M. Shelton. He was 75 his last birthday. He had only lived in the city a short while. The deceased leaves to mourn his loss a wife, two sons, four daughters, besides a host of friends.

After the funeral service at the home, conducted by the writer, the remains were laid to rest in the family burying ground near Gretna, Va. The writer was assisted at the cemetery by Rev. Roberson.

May the Lord comfort the bereaved, with the assurance that Bro. Shelton has gone to receive his reward, where life fadeth not away. M. T. SORRELL.

JORDAN.

The death angel visited the home of Bro. W. F. Jordan February 15th, 7:45 P. M., and took from their midst their father and companion. The death came very unexpected, since he had been in good health up within a few hours of his death. The deceased was 79 years old and had spent the past sixty years here. Prior to his coming here, he lived in Wake County, near Raleigh.

Bro. Jordan married Miss Margaret Emma Worrell, of this city, December 23, 1873. To their happy union were added two boys and one girl. Charlie, who preceded him to his grave by five years; Mr. C. F. Jordan, and Mrs. R. W. Corbin, both now living on Third Avenue. Bro. Jordan also leaves to mourn his loss, besides a host of friends, his dear companion and two children, one sister, Mrs. John Siviter, of Norfolk, Va., and eight grandchildren and eleven great-grandchildren.

The funeral service was conducted from his home on Third Avenue, by the writer, assisted by Rev. Osear Guynn, Sunday, 2 P. M., after which the remains were laid to rest at Green Hill Cemetery, the ceremony being conducted by the Odd Fellows. The large crowd and many flowers were tokens of the high esteem held by his many friends of his Christian life.

Bro. Jordan was a charter member of his lodge and of his Church, Third Avenue Christian Church. He was always found faithful in his every duty of the Church and was one of its oldest members. Words are inadequate to express his Christian life. All that knew him held him up as an ideal Christian man. He was greatly beloved by all that knew him. One person said, "To know him is but to love him."

While the home will miss Bro. Jordan, and his Church and many friends will miss him, yet, while we cannot call him back, and would not if we could, we had rather go and be with him than have him come back and be with us. His life can well be summarized in the words he asked to be read at his funeral: "I have fought a good fight." May God richly bless the bereaved and comfort them and help them to realize that soon He who knows better than we, will call us to be with our own.

M. T. SORRELL.

FREEMAN.

Charlie A. Freeman, son of the late James Julia Ann Baines Freeman, was born September 23, 1858, and died February 9, 1929, age 70 years, 4 months and 17 days. Bro. Freeman was a member of a family of six children—five boys and one girl. Early in life he made a profession of faith and united with Burton's Grove Christian Church, and remained a member until the end. On February 23, 1882, he was united in marriage to Miss Lelia A. Hargrave, and to this union was born seven children—four boys and three girls. In January, 1892, he was ordained to the office of deacon in his Church, which office he filled in an acceptable manner until he was called to his reward. On September 2, 1908, his wife preceded him in death, and on October 2, 1913, he was united in marriage to Mrs. Nannie C. Latimore, and to this union was no children born; she preceded him in death April 12, 1925.

He is survived by one brother, four sons and two daughters and grandchildren. The funeral was conducted from his residence Monday, February 11th, by his pastor, assisted by Rev. A. K. Lamto, kin, of the Methodist Church, and the body was placed in a vault between those of his wives.

A man that was loved by his community at large has gone from among us, and we feel keenly our loss of his presence from the home, community and his Church. Evidence of our love was tenderly expressed in the beautiful flowers that covered his grave.

May God be a Father to the fatherless and comfort those who mourn.

STOVALL.

George Washington Stovall, son of Henderson and Martha Stovall, was born in Granville County, N. C., October 15, 1855, and died at his home in the same county on February 4, 1929, age 73 years, 3 months and 20 days.

When young, he united with Amis Chapel Baptist Church. Later he transferred to Olive Branch Baptist Church, where he held his membership till death. In 1909 the deceased married Miss Pattie Bray, daughter of the late Deacon J. A. Bray, of Nathalie, Va., who survives him. There were four brothers and one sister. Nat and Susie died when young; William and Charlie died in the Civil War, and James Polk, in 1921, at the age of 77. There are two nephews, Charlie and William Stovall, and one niece, Mrs. Hiram Royster.

Bro. Stovall was a true husband, kind neighbor and a sincere Christian. With him the hoary head was a crown of glory because it was found in the way of righteousness. The funeral and burial were at the home, conducted by the writer and Rev. A. B. Earl, of the Presbyterian Church.

C. E. NEWMAN.

HALLBROOK.

Bro. William Hallbrook departed this life to be at a better place January 21st, in his fifty-sixth year. He had been a faithful member of the Stoneville Missionary Baptist Church for the past twenty-one years. He was a devoted husband and father, a kind and generous neighbor and loved by all that knew him.

He Leaves to mourn his gniog, besides his wife, two daughters, and six grandchildren, a host of friends. May His spirit comfort the bereaved, in that his loss to them is heaven's gain.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer from Mt. Carmel Methodist Church, after which the remains were laid to rest in the Church cemetery.

M. T. SORRELL.

REYNOLDS.

On December 26, 1928, Mrs. J. J. Reynolds, a devout member of the Christian Chapel Church, Merry Oaks, N. C., was called home to be ever with the Lord she loved and served. She was a Christian in attitude, sympathy and service. She loved her Church, and expressed that love through her genuine loyalty and liberal support. She was a friend to humanity, and expressed that friendship through kindness, sympathy and charity.

She was a true, devoted wife and mother, and may the bereaved husband and children strive to follow her noble example of unselfish service to her Lord and humanity, and to meet her in heaven when life's sun goes down.

Her body was laid to rest in Christian Chapel Cemetery beneath a bank of beautiful flowers and in the presence of a large number of friends. The funeral services were conducted from the Church by the pastor.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE

WADLEY, ALABAMA

An Accredited Junior College

Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

Piedmont Junior College is training some of the best stock of America for Christian leadership, to be used by the nation and the world. Here is a great challenge and asset for students who wish to prepare themselves to serve in a worth-while way. The new Administration Building will be completed by time school opens this fall.

LABOR MENACED.—

A continuing series of labor-saving improvements throws a continuing series of workers temporarily out of employment. One of the acute problems of today is to reduce unemployment.

THE BIBLE IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—

The Tennessee Federation of Women's Clubs is seeking a change in the State laws relative to the reading of the Bible in the public schools. The law now requires the reading of twelve verses of Scripture daily in the public schools. If the proposed change should become law, the public schools must "cause to be memorized by each pupil at the opening of the school at least one day of each school week a passage or passages of Scripture to be selected by the pupil from either the King James Version of the Holy Bible, the Old Testament, or the Douay edition of the Holy Bible with the Apocrypha; but in no case shall the teacher allow any comment to be made upon such passage or passages of Scripture by the pupil or any one else."

RELIGIOUS ADVISERS AT COLUMBIA.—

Under a plan recently adopted by the administrative board for religious and social work of Columbia University, provision is made for Roman Catholic, Jewish and Protestant religious advisers to minister to the religious needs of the students of their respective faiths. Father J. Elliot Ross is the Roman Catholic appointee, Mr. Baruch Braunstein the Jewish, and Rev. Omar P. Goslin is the Protestant representative. Formerly religious activities recognized by the university has been limited to an adviser to student religious organizations. Rev. Herbert E. Evans has served in this capacity, and will continue his work under the new plan. There is a noticeable increase in the recognition of religion as a necessary part of the life of all educational institutions. The task of safeguarding the religious life of the thousands of students in the large educational institutions of the land is attended with considerable difficulty. So many faiths and creeds and denominations are represented that to take care of them all in an adequate way seems almost impossible. But religious leaders are diligently seeking the best methods of reaching student life with the message of religion.

THE MEXICAN MUDDLE.—

At the present time it looks as if Mexico were in for a civil war of no mean proportions. So far, there has been no considerable blood shed, but as the war goes on, serious consequences become more and more inevitable. For several years Mexico has seemed to be making progress toward a stable and constructive government. But Mexico has two gigantic evils to face. The one is religious prejudice and bigotry; the other is ignorance in the masses of its citizenry. The two generally go hand in hand, and both are deadly dangers to a republican form of government. It will require the strong hand of a Mexican Mussolini to set Mexico's house in order. But it is claimed that the present revolt has its origin in a conspiracy to hold the reins of government by two men succeeding each other in the presidential office. Any attempt to form a strong centralized government readily becomes the basis upon which the opposing party builds a revolution. There is doubt that Mexico can ever become strongly organized and united unless it be in the face of what is recognized to be a great national peril. Italy accepted the Fascist rule only when the Red peril threatened to engulf the nation in anarchy.

HIGH STANDARDS IN BUSINESS.—

The Associated Press carries the news that Colonel Robert W. Stewart has lost his position as chairman of the board of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana. Colonel Stewart was opposed by Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., on the grounds that Colonel Stewart was involved in the government oil scandals which were perpetrated a few years ago. Mr. Rockefeller's contention was that one who had been implicated in so questionable a deal was not fit to head so important a concern as the Standard Oil Company. When the results of the election were tabulated, they showed that an overwhelming majority of the stockholders had voted against Colonel Stewart.

There was no question raised as to the business ability of the man Mr. Rockefeller sought to depose. It was a question of high moral integrity, as an essential qualification of the man who would head big business enterprises. There was a time when it appeared that the chief and only concern of big business was the making of money. But there are signs that the day of such an idea has passed, or is rapidly passing. There is an insistent and increasing demand that the conduct of big business shall be in the hands of men whose integrity is beyond question or doubt. There is that which is more priceless than silver or gold.

GERMAN EFFICIENCY AGAIN.—

Before the World War the praise of German efficiency was heard on every hand. After the collapse of the German war machine the world has taken for granted that Germany was not half so efficient as was supposed. But if the claims that are made for the new German battleship prove to be true, Germany has wrought out a notable achievement. The plans for the new battle cruiser are described as "embodying the most revolutionary naval development in years." By the terms of the peace which were forced upon Germany, she was restricted to light cruisers of 6,000 tons. Germany set to work to devise plans for a light cruiser that could easily defeat a 10,000-ton cruiser. The result is the "Ersatz Preussen," which is soon to be built.

There has been a mania among naval experts for size in the building of battleships. When the cruiser bill was pending before the United States Congress, the chairman of the sub-committee of the House on naval finances made the statement that Congress may soon be asked to withdraw from active service two of the newest and biggest of our battleships, the Lexington and the Saratoga. These ships, which were built at a cost of $45,000,000 each, are now claimed to be so constructed that the amount of fuel required to run them makes it unwise to continue their operations. When the United States builds battleships costing forty-five million each, only to find that fuel cost makes it more economical to scrap them, it is about time for a sample of the much-heralded American efficiency.

DISTINGUISHED RELIGIOUS SERVICE.—

The Christian Herald has recently been making notable changes in its journalistic plans and policies. Many new features have been added to its pages, notable national figures have been added to the roster of its regular contributors, and the magazine sets for itself an enlarged field of activity. One of the innovations adopted by the Christian Herald is to annually select the religious leader who has during the year rendered the most notable Christian service, according to the ideals of the Christian Herald, and to publicly recognize that service by the distinguished religious service award.

For 1928, Bishop James Cannon was selected as being the winner of this "religious medal of honor." Bishop Cannon's major sphere of activity, as most of the people in the South well know, was during the year of 1928, the realm of politics. It is the bishop's activity in this field which the Christian Herald acclaims in the following declaration: "Distinguished religious service award for 1928. James Cannon, Jr., bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, distinguished Christian publicist and leader in moral reform, world missionary evangel, advocate of Christian union and fearless citizen: Christian Herald Association has elected you to receive its first annual award for distinguished religious service. You have been chosen not only because of your leadership, but because of the unselfishness of your leadership. You contributed largely to a major moral victory. But in victory you asked no reward for yourself. Christian people of all faiths who united to bring prohibition to pass, and who are united now to maintain and perfect it, will endorse your selection as the individual who during 1928 has rendered the most distinguished contribution in the field of this ward."

NOTES-PERSONALS

One of the busiest and most burdened pastors we know at present is Dr. Kirbye, of our Raleigh Church, who is putting forth most heroic efforts to clear that Church of all indebtedness.

Rev. E. B. White, of Dendron, Va., called at THE SUN office this week and brought us good cheer. He reports his field in good working condition and interested in the Easter missions.

A friend sends this squib, and it is worth keeping and passing on: "A Sabbath well spent brings a week of content, and hope and strength for the morrow; a Sabbath profaned, no matter what gained, is a certain forerunner of sorrow."

The missionary rallies of the Eastern Virginia Conference, according to the announcement of Mrs. M. L. Bryant, are April 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 5th. An attractive program has been arranged, and Mrs. Bryant is hopeful that the rallies will be largely attended.

Bro. Filcher, superintendent Sunday School of First Church, Norfolk, writes: "No work in our Sunday Schools and Churches can be greater than the mission work, and I pray that the day is near when we shall realize the duty incumbent upon us to give the gospel to others without it as one should."

Rev. J. F. Morgan, pastor of Rosemont and Berea Churches, Norfolk, Va., writes that he is at work on the mission offering in his Churches at Easter time, and, besides placing literature where it will be of greatest service, is seeking to enlighten and inspire the people to make a real sacrifice for missions.

Bro. J. A. Dunlap, superintendent, writes most hopeful of our new Church and Sunday School at Biscoe: "We started the first Sunday in January with thirty-five present. The first Sunday in March we had sixty-nine present." To increase the growth of a Sunday School by practically 100 per cent in two months shows interest and activity most commendable.

Dr. S. Q. Helfenstein, editor of our Bible Class Quarterlies, now on a visit to the Holy Land, seems to be enjoying his travels and sends to THE SUN's editor this cheerful line: "Could I wish you anything more enjoyable than to be here in sunny Sicily? I know I would enjoy your companionship." The line is under date of February 16th, from Palermo, Sicily.

The Baptist women of North Carolina, reporting at the annual meeting of their Woman's Mission Society, at High Point, last week, raised $345,000 for missions the past year. Their president, Mrs. W. N. Jones, of Raleigh, reported they had increased their annual offering to this amount from that of $27,000 twenty years ago—nearly a thirteen hundred per cent increase.

The following from the Associated Press, appearing in the daily papers last Thursday, will interest many: "Detroit,—David D. Buick, inventor and dreamer, who founded the Buick Automobile Company when the automobile industry was in its infancy, died here last night at the age of seventy-two, a forlorn, penniless, disillusioned old man. He had been ill with cancer at Harper Hospital for the last month."

"I am praying much as I work that God will give our people a vision this year such as they have never had before. Why should we not urge that March 24-30 be 'Self-Denial Week,' and that the amount thus saved be brought, in addition to the regular mission offering, on Easter Sunday?" So writes a good friend and brother who is exceedingly anxious that our mission offering this year be the largest and most liberal we have ever had.

The demand for mission literature has been unprecedented. The Mission Secretary has sought to distribute it to the best possible advantage. It is, we think, the best literature we have ever had, and will do more to inform our people on missions than any heretofore issued; but it costs something to produce and send out this literature, and while we wish all who desire and need to have it, there is none to waste.

Envelopes for the Easter offering for missions have been sent to the secretaries of all Churches, except in instances where the pastor wrote for the envelopes. Every member of the Church and Sunday School at least should be given an envelope with the urgent request that a liberal offering be placed therein for the work of kingdom growth and enlargement. This is our opportunity to declare to the world power of the resurrection of our Lord.

Bro. W. S. Briggs, superintendent Fuller's Chapel Sunday School, Henderson, N. C., writes: "We certainly enjoyed having Dr. Fry with us. His address was good, and having been in Japan for so many years he made the conditions there so very plain to us. I wish we were more missionary in our Churches and Sunday Schools and homes. It is certainly a great work." Dr. Fry has visited many of our Churches, and the people were greatly benefitted by hearing and coming in contact with him.

After an illness of about two weeks, Mrs. P. H. Fleming, beloved wife of Dr. Fleming, departed this life at her home in Burlington, N. C., at 7 P. M. Saturday, March 9th. Mrs. Fleming was a good woman, of wide acquaintance, and held in high esteem by a large circle of friends and relatives. The funeral services were conducted at Burlington Christian Church Monday, P. M. Our sympathy is expressed to our dear brother in the ministry, Dr. P. H. Fleming, and the family now called upon to mourn the going away of a treasured and loved one.

A good sister in a Church whose pastor is evidently not very missionary in spirit, in preaching, and in activity, writes very truly as follows: "We in our Church are not very much educated in missions. For one thing, our ministers need to be awakened to the need of missionary Churches. When they get real interested in missions, you will see missionary Churches, and not before. A missionary Church is a live Church always." That sister knows evidently from experience and observation what she is writing.

Dr. C. H. Rowland, president of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, called a meeting of the ministers of the Conference at Elon College Tuesday, March 5th, to discuss especially the missionary situation and the importance of all pastors and Churches taking an active part in the missionary program at this time in preparing the minds and hearts of the people for the liberal offering for missions at or about Easter. A majority of the ministers of the Conference were present. The meeting was a delightful one, and every phase of the missionary situation was discussed. Every pastor present expressed himself as determined to do his best and desirous of the Church reaching its goal. The ministers were graciously entertained at lunch by the college, which generous act was very much appreciated.

Bro. Jack Stafford, mission secretary of our Burlington Sunday School, writes a paragraph to the editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN which is worthy of careful and prayerful consideration not only by the young people but by the adults of our Churches: "If there are two particular fruits that God is expecting from His present vineyard, the Church, I believe that they are an intense evangelical spirit and a strong, well-developed, and heartily supported missionary enterprise; and I sometimes grieve and wonder how He views the apparent apathy and seeming unconcern of our particular branch of His Church. Would He denounce us as He condemned His ancient people in Isaiah 5:1-4, and unless we change our attitude and ideals will He find it necessary to fulfill His prophecy in our experience as it was fulfilled in the history of Israel and Judah?"

Dr. W. C. Wicker, president of the Eastern North Carolina Conference, called a meeting of the ministers of the Conference at the Raleigh Church 10 A. M., Friday, March 8th. A goodly majority of the ministers of the Conference were present and one interested layman. The ministers of this Conference are working with zeal for the cause of missions, and expressed themselves as hopeful that their Churches would reach the quota. All of the pastors are observing the mission period and are using plans which they deem most effectual in creating interest among the people for the missionary cause. It certainly helps the cause and the ministers themselves for pastors to get together and confer with one another and take counsel as to how they may best carry on the work of the Church in the name of the Lord. Since the annual Conferences last fall, the Mission Secretary has been permitted to meet in council with a group of ministers in all the Conferences of the Convention. These meetings have been most delightful, and the willingness and anxiety of the pastors to see and to help the mission cause prosper have been apparent everywhere. Our pastors certainly have a zeal for kingdom enlargement.

WORDS FOR THE SUN.

For a long time I have wanted to write for THE CHRISTIAN SUN. As I cannot get away from this feeling, I am going to write a few lines. I have always enjoyed reading THE SUN. I have been reading it since a child. I look forward to its weekly coming with pleasure. I think every family of the Church should take it. I am sorry to say that the people do not seem to appreciate the work that Dr. Atkinson is doing. It just seems to me that he is sacrificing his life for Christ's sake. I don't believe there can be a missionary in the foreign fields who is sacrificing more than he is. I am sorry for those who do not believe in missions. I once did not, especially foreign.

I am glad my eyes have been opened by something like a vision. I am glad I believe in tithing. If every member of the Church tithed, Dr. Atkinson would not be wearying his life away as he is. We would always have plenty of money in God's storehouse for every Church and charity need. I am a lover of the Church of God. I love His people everywhere. I know I have passed from death unto life, for I love God's people.

"Let us love our God supremely
Let us love each other too.
Let us love and pray for sinners
Till our God makes all things new.
Then He'll call us home to heaven
At His table we'll sit down."

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

THE CHRISTIAN AND HIS THOUGHTS.

By Rev. Gardner D. Underhill.

"Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report: if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."—Phil. 4:8.

When I was quite a boy, I heard a statement which impressed me very deeply. Because I place it so high in my estimation, I want to bring it to your attention. This statement is, "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he" (Prov. 23:7). Biologically speaking, man is an animal, having a body and body structure similar to that of the higher animals. Bone for bone, muscle for muscle, organ for organ, and function for function, we do not differ from them, yet in spite of these proven facts we have one great God-given power which places us on a pedestal and gives us dominion over all other creatures of the earth, of the earth itself, and of its resources. This remarkable power which we alone possess is the ability to reason or to think, and thus to modify our environment to please us and suit our desires—and this is the gift that makes us true sons and daughters of God. There are many individuals who cannot hope to raise their station because of certain natural defects. The child whose intelligence is below normal can think all he wants about obtaining a college education, but he will never get it. The person who has no musical talent whatsoever can dream of success as an artist all he wants, but he will never become an artist. It is admitted that we must have certain natural abilities in order to do a number of things; yet, despite this fact, we can go further by right thinking than by wrong, no matter who we are or what it is we are doing or hoping to become.

Shakespeare, through the speech of Portia, in "The Merchant of Venice," aptly points out to us one of the greatest of human difficulties; how to control our impulses, and keep them in harmony with our own better judgment; how to conquer the sin that is so apt to conquer us. This speech reads: "If to do were as easy as to know what were good to do, chapels had been Churches, and poor men's cottages princes' palaces. It is a good divine that can follow his own instructions. I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done than to be one of the twenty to follow mine own teachings." Isn't this sound? Isn't this a fairly accurate representation of our own feelings and attitudes? We all feel that we know what is good and what is right, but we find that sometimes it is mighty hard to live up to our own standards. We are far from perfect, yet, as Christians, we know that it is our duty to strive toward perfection. The point that I want to make is that we can help ourselves along toward that end by our thoughts, or how by those same thoughts we can make ourselves slaves, having no hope for the future.

We can use a figure of speech and compare a man's mind with a garden, which may be intelligently cultivated or allowed to run wild; but whether we cultivate it or neglect it, it must, and will, bring forth. If no good seeds are sown therein, then we will find that an abundance of useless weeds will somehow obtain a foothold and will continue to grow and produce their kind. This is a law of nature, for we know that if a farmer plants a field of corn, and then neglects its cultivation, weeds are going to come up and ruin what might have been an excellent crop of corn. Thus it is with the man who plants some worthwhile seeds in his mind, and then neglects them and forgets to supply new ones through study and good thought. In like manner, the bad or useless thoughts which I have compared to weeds will take root, grow without assistance, and in a short while take possession of the man's entire thinking, and thus of his actions and behavior. Many a person takes great delight in listening to and in telling vulgar stories, the reading of obscene literature, newspaper accounts of scandals, robberies, murders and things of that nature, and offers as an excuse that nothing else is of real interest. What is the result of such thought? An example might serve to show its effect.

A certain Englishman of power and wealth who had always been known for his fine character and moral qualities, was involved in a scandal with a young woman. He left England as a result of this trouble, and died a lonely, broken-hearted man in far distant Africa. His personal friends could not understand his action, as never before had he shown the slightest sign of wrongdoing, and no one would ever have dreamed that he would do such a thing. When his home was taken over and his possessions accounted for, an explanation of his conduct was found. Hidden away in the closet of his bedroom was volume after volume of cheap French novels, all dealing with things similar to the scandal in which he had become involved. You can see that through years of such reading, his mind had become stored with the seeds of evil thoughts, and finally it resulted in the terrible tragedy that took him from home, friends, old associations, and everything that was dear to him, and caused him to die a poverty-stricken wretch in a foreign country. Isn't this reason enough to make a man take heed to the type of thing he is constantly storing in his memory?

This one instance is enough to make any reasonable man take care. Yet, today this is one of the greatest problems America has to face. All one has to do is to step up to the nearest newsstand, look over the stock of magazines, and one will know what I am talking about. The majority of periodicals on exhibit are of a questionable nature, and the reason for their great display is that they are the "best sellers." If you want some worth-while paper, you will have to ask the dealer to get it from behind the counter for you. This certainly shows a deplorable situation in our country today. The cheap trash seems to be what the public demands, and statistics show that their sale far outstrips that of the worth-while thing. This is, to a large extent, true of our novels, plays and moving pictures. They must show a tangle of the low and vulgar before they are relished by the general public. As Christians and citizens of this great republic, we must use the utmost discretion in what we read and in what we allow our youth to read. Such thoughts in the minds of the young lead them to the juvenile courts, to the homes of detention, and later to the jails and penitentiaries. Both Greece and Rome offer striking examples of what becomes of wealthy, powerful nations whose people have ease and luxury and cultivate thoughts and habits of vice in their leisure. They were both destroyed by their vices and lost every trace and vestige of their former splendor.

I would not have you believe that I am making this the plea of a radical reformer by saying that conditions are all bad and that the world is going to the dogs. The present social order is far better than any the world has ever seen before. What I want you to see is that we have made improvement, but that there is still room for more improvement. Christ taught of a better social order, and told us to pray for God's kingdom come on earth as it is in heaven. We must constantly be at work to realize higher values. We must constantly be awake to the ideals of the Master.

We are forever struggling to improve our circumstances, and yet how many of us are willing to improve ourselves? Because we are not willing to do so, we remain bound. The man or woman who is afraid of self-sacrifice will never achieve the object of his or her desire. It may

Shall We Share the Gospel with Others? IF SO, TO WHAT EXTENT?

One million, seven hundred thousand souls in Japan and Porto Rico alone are depending upon us. If we of the Christian denomination do not share with them the Gospel, they will never get it. February and March are "Foreign Mission Months" in the Southern Christian Convention. What will the answer be from us as individuals, Sunday Schools and Churches? We are depending upon each and every one to do his or her best in obedience to the command of our Lord, "Go ye."

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE TESTING TIME.

It is now to be seen, and proven, whether we of the Christian Church are missionary or not. Last May, in Richmond, in Convention assembled, it was decided to give the people a chance, and let them show whether they wished kingdom enlargement or not. Every man, woman and child in the Church can know, and will know, whether he or she gives anything to missions this year or not, and how much. For what we now give to missions goes direct to missions and not to Conference, or as a part of any other donation. Either through a budget of the local Church or individual gifts from members, or the Easter offering, or all combined, the call is made to every Church to give at least one-third as much to missions, home and foreign, as the Church pays its pastor on salary. This seems a modest request, for every Christian surely is willing to give at least one-third as much to carry the gospel to others as he pays to have it preached to himself.

But unless there is a very strenuous and energetic effort put forth by pastor and people now, the Churches will not even reach this goal. It is a departure: the people have not become accustomed to it, and unless pastors make the matter clear and plain from their pulpits, there will be hundreds of our people who will know nothing of mission period, nothing of the necessity of making an offering, nothing of the needs and opportunities before us. Surely this is the testing time with us if there ever was such a time. Shall we, or shall we not show at this time our desire for enlargement of the kingdom of our Lord? J. O. A.

THIS CRUCIAL AND GLORIOUS TIME.

Easter is to missions what Thanksgiving is to the Orphanage. Our Convention has so arranged it, and no doubt this is wise. The most momentous event that has ever transpired in the history of time is the resurrection of our Lord. This event surpasses in importance creation itself. That we were created is an incident wholly inherent in the wisdom and plan of God. As individuals, we had nothing whatever to do with that. But being created, the most momentous event in human life and experience is as to whether the created soul shall be redeemed and saved. And the resurrection is the evidence and the supreme act in the plan of salvation. Without this, as an inspired writer declared, "We are of all men most miserable." Our whole hope of a future life and of salvation is blasted and disappears without the resurrection.

Jesus was and is the first fruits of them that slept, and unless He arose from the dead, we, who know of Him and accept Him, have no hope and our religion is a delusion and a snare.

The supreme act and test of the gospel is to proclaim the power of His resurrection to a sinful world. It was the power of His life, a power which death itself could not conquer that made us what we are, and when Jesus realized that He had this power, even the power over death, He commissioned His followers to proclaim that fact and His gospel to the uttermost parts.

So, it is the most fitting thing in the world that, at Easter time, we make offerings of service and real sacrifice, that we may help proclaim to the world the power of His resurrection. So our Convention, as other Churches of Christendom have done and are doing, has decided well and wisely that all our Churches be called upon to give this year, to carry the gospel to others, at least one-third as much as we pay to have the gospel preached to ourselves and in our own community, and as a part of this program the Easter offering is arranged and called for. Some Churches and pastors will undertake to raise their full quota and reach their goal through an Easter offering, and this can and will be reached if the offering is well planned and prosecuted.

The most cruel and killing thing in connection with the situation will be to do nothing at all, for the missionary cause suffers when the Church and Sunday School give nothing to missions and do nothing about missions.

How very easily do we make even the Church a center and an influence of selfishness. When any Church, or any Sunday School, decides to keep the gospel for itself and to do nothing to carry or send that gospel to others, in that act it destroys the very spirit on which and for which the Church was founded and exists. A Church may be selfish as well as an individual; and it is selfish unless it cultivates the spirit of giving that gospel to others, which gospel has been the power of salvation to those who believe in the community. It is through the missionary spirit only that a Church or a denomination grows and prospers. Neither the Christian Church nor any other Church, local or denominational, has been permitted of Almighty God to grow except as it has been missionary in spirit and in giving. The missionary spirit is inherent in the life and teachings of our Lord Jesus Christ, and when we rob the Church or an individual of the missionary spirit we take the very heart and power of the gospel out of such a life and Church.

This is a crucial period, for during this period our Christian Church in the South will decide whether it will carry out the commission of our Lord and obey Him or whether we will disobey and thus struggle on without the power of the Spirit that He has promised. "Go ye, and lo! I am with you"; but He has not promised to be with those who will not go. At the resurrection period, Christians should think of how they may do something to help make the power of that resurrection felt in the world, and to help carry or send the message of His resurrection to those at home and abroad who do not know and have not that power. J. O. A.

SELF-DENIAL.

Christ's whole life was one of self-denial. He could have been born in a mansion; He was born in a manger. He could have grown up in a palace; He grew up as a peasant. He could have wielded a sceptre over an earthly empire; He chose to walk with the lowly and the humble, and to have as His possessions not even a pillow on which to lay His head. He could have passed from the earth amid the thunderous applause of the rich and the mighty; He passed from it by way of the cross and with the sounds of execration ringing in His ears. Verily, verily, He spake the whole truth when He said, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow me." In that was contained the philosophy by which He lived and by which He would found and build up a kingdom on earth. All the empires and kingdoms before Him, and since His day, that have perished did so because they were founded on the philosophy of "getting," and not of giving; of self-indulgence, and not of self-sacrifice. The empires of the past have gone to pieces not through poverty or adversity, but through prosperity and gain. And ours must go the same way, and will go the same way, unless we shall learn and practice the doctrine of self-denial. Ours is even now the richest nation in the world; a people whose indulgence and luxuries amaze the rest of the world. And yet we call ourselves a Christian people, even while we know at least something of the life of our Lord Christ and the gospel of self-denial that He preached, and know further that even now millions are perishing because they have not the bread of life and know not the name and the power of the gospel of the Son of God. The rich and poor are relative terms, and the poor of one age have the luxuries and the indulgences of the rich of the previous age. If we wait till we have plenty before we give, and for that which we can easily spare without any sacrifice, we will wait forever and will certainly not follow our Lord when He said, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow me."

Are we willing to deny ourselves of things we need and feel we must have, in order to obey Him who gave all He had for us, and still waits, that we, through self-denial, make Him known to those who know Him not? J. O. A.

MISSIONS AND CHRISTIAN UNION.

The greatest prayer of Jesus was for the oneness of His people—that the world might believe that God had sent Him. Missions and union are essential to each other. Missions cannot be carried out without union, and union cannot be consummated without missions. Missions is too big for a divided Church; and missions is the only task large enough to unite the whole Church. The Church will never unite on an agreement in beliefs. Union of creeds is impossible. Union must come in the great work of saving the world. The abolition of disunion is not in the abolition of sectarianism. One star differs from another star, but difference in stars does not disturb the unity of the stellar world. The unity for which Jesus prayed was not organic union, nor Church union, nor doctrinal union, but spiritual union. Star light fades when the sun floods the world with light, and Church lights fade when the Light of the world floods the kingdom of God. Organic union fades before the oneness for which Jesus prayed.

Three movements have dealt with this question of union:

1. The Episcopal movement, as a "world conference on faith and order"; and its objective is the union of the whole Church, Protestant and Catholic.

2. The Presbyterian movement, an interchurch conference on organic union—the union of all evangelical Protestants.

3. The disciples movement—an association for the promotion of Christian unity. This association co-operates with the Episcopal and Presbyterian movements.

Back of these movements, historically, other agencies have sought to solve the question of Protestant divisions. (1) The Evangelical Alliance, in 1846; (2) the Evangelical Alliance in New York, in 1873; (3) the Interchurch Conference on Federation, in New York in 1905, out of which sprang the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, in Philadelphia in 1908; and from that date, quadrennial sessions have been held in Chicago 1912, St. Louis 1916; Boston in 1920, Atlanta in 1924, and Rochester in 1928. The only creed of that organization is "Jesus Christ as Divine Lord and Saviour." This body represents twenty-eight Protestant denominations and maintains a staff of workers at general headquarters in New York City, and an executive committee which meets once a year. This organization not only cultivates unity among Protestant denominations, but co-operation in the fields of education, temperance, peace and missions. Whatever may be said of its mistakes, there is certainly a finer spirit of friendliness among Protestant denominations, at home and abroad, than before the Federal Council was organized. Christian union need not disturb the autonomy of denominations. They may keep the "unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace." The forty-eight States do not lose their separate and distinct character by their relation to the Federal government. In fact, their autonomy is better preserved by the union.

Railroads used to have different gauges, but business sense suggested uniform gauge, so that cars can run anywhere on different roads; but the companies maintain their own organizations and control their own business: but they co-operate to benefit of all, and the business world, too.

GROWTH OF CHRISTIAN CO-OPERATION.

By REV. GEO. CHRISTIAN ENDERS, D. D.

The subject assigned me is one of many-sided interest. It is clearly stated and happily phrased; it is optimistic in tone and suggestive in thought, and it makes certain fundamental assumptions, which, if justified by the facts, are of far-reaching importance to Christianity. To investigate some of these assumptions is the purpose of this paper.

My theme, "The Growth of Christian Co-operation," assumes that, to a degree at least, we already have Christian co-operation. This assumption is strongly supported by the facts. To realize this, one needs only to call to mind the many inter-denominational and non-denominational Christian organizations, such as the Y. M. and Y. W. C. A., the Y. P. S., C. E., the Sunday School associations, and the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. A large proportion of nearly all community welfare work is the result of Christian co-operation. We have much in common. We are followers of the same Leader, read the same Bible, sing the same songs and have the same moral and religious ideals. The things that unite us are greater than the things that divide; and while, in this respect, conditions are far from ideal, enough has been accomplished to hearten us for the tasks that lie ahead.

My subject also assumes that the Christian co-operation which we now possess is an achievement the outcome of progress, the result of a growth. This implies that upon the whole we are not losing, but gaining ground. We may have lost bat-ties, but we are not going to lose the war. Therefore, our faces are set forward toward new ideals, and not backward toward the re-establishment of primitive Church conditions.

Normal growth is gradual and orderly and implies progress. Its law, the biologist tells us, is from simplicity through complexity to a new simplicity; from unity through diversity to a new, a higher unity. For instance, the simplest living organism, the amoeba, consists of a single cell, made up of a simple substance. This is an example of primitive unity. Any part of this cell can do the work of any other part. Growth for the amoeba means enlargement and division into other cells, each of which will be different in form and function from the mother cell. Some of them will be bone cells, some muscle cells, others will be cells of the nervous system, and so on. Here we have the change from the simplicity and unity of the amoeba to the complexity and diversity of the higher organism, as, for instance, it is found in the human body with its billions of cells. In the human body we can no longer say, as we can of the amoeba, that any part can do the work of any other part. Diversity has forever destroyed the primitive unity; but diversity has led to a new, a higher, a more efficient unity. The old order was a unity of sameness; the new order is a unity of co-operation.

The law of growth seems to have universal application. Go from the field of biology to that of economics. Here also in the industrial development of our country you can trace its progress from sameness through differences to co-operation, from unity through diversity to a higher and more efficient unity. The pioneer, who was farmer, house-builder, blacksmith, shoe-cobbler, wagon-maker and follower of numerous other occupations, represents the unity of sameness. Soon, however, others came to live in the community. One of these became a blacksmith, giving his whole time to that work; another became a carpenter, and so on. This development of division of occupations with its trade specialists shows clearly the progress of the law of growth in the direction of diversity, while the later displacement of the trade shops by the factories shows the movement toward a higher and more efficient unity.

Now, is it not true that this law of growth applies equally well to the progressive development of the Christian Church? It began at Pentecost in a simple, homogeneous unity. Three thousand, and later five thousand souls were gathered together and had all things common—common possessions, common interests, and common hopes and faith in the speedy return of a common Lord. Such a unity, inspiringly beautiful as it was, could not long exist. Important as it was in the beginning, it was equally important for the life of the Church that differences of opinion should arise. That such difference did arise, even in very early times, the New Testament gives abundant evidence.

Up to the time of the reformation, the Church authorities, by various means, were fairly successful in holding in check this tendency toward division, but not even the persecution of martyrdom could entirely prevent it. After the reformation, the hindrances to growth being now removed in the Protestant branch of the Church, divisions grew and multiplied to such an extent that there were established more than seven-score denominations, each one of which, to the exclusion of all others, as a kind of specialist thoroughly studied, and emphasized the importance of one or more thing which it regarded vitally essential to Christianity.

While this analytic, divisive movement was going forward, the counter-synthetic, unifying tendency was not inactive. Since the founding of Christianity, there have always been devout souls who have longed for and worked for the answer of our Lord's prayer, "that they may be one." It would require volumes to make adequate record of all the movements toward union from the time when Paul brought harmony out of the discordant elements of the Church at Corinth down to the world conference on unity recently held at Lausanne.

Although the divisive movement had connected with it much to regret, much that was not of Christ, yet in spite of this it rendered great service to Christianity. Perhaps not otherwise could the essentials of Christianity have been so fully brought out nor so clearly distinguished from the non-essentials. In this way the analytic tendency has not only prepared the way for a real co-operative union, but has made such union an absolute necessity, for the greater the number of divisions, the greater will be the interdependence of the parts. The only alternative offered to many of the smaller denominations is "unite or die."

From now on, growth toward unity should be relatively rapid. The spirit of unity is not only "in the air," but in the minds and the hearts of the people. The ideal of Christian co-operation is now set before the Churches. May the Congregationalists and the Christians embrace the present opportunity of making a unique contribution to the achievement of this worthy ideal.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

This is the special foreign mission period of the General Convention of the Christian Church. Every pastor, Church and organization should make this period one of most thorough inspiration, cultivation and sacrificial giving. Our Father expects every child of His to help bring all the others to Himself. Foreign missions is not a matter of sending the gospel to our inferiors; it is a matter of giving the gospel to our brothers. Foreign missions are as vital for one's own life and one's own Church as for the cause itself. No Church or pastor in the Christian Church can go through this Easter time unmindful of the call for foreign missions and be the same thereafter. Foreign missions are vital to the spiritual life and the development of both individuals and Churches. No family or Church can withhold life or money from the missionary enterprise and not lose thereby. Easter Sunday should be an occasion for a great outpouring of treasure at the altar of the Lord. Easter to Easter is to be our jubilee year. Will you help by making it such in your own life this Easter and by making your giving such as will make it a jubilee time in our foreign mission department?

The Easier Way.

It is easier to cut off names from a Church roll than to re-enlist them, if one is looking for an easier task. It will not take much time, prayer, patience, financial sacrifice to erase names of the inactive persons from a Church's roll, but it will take all of these elements to re-enlist them. Consequently, thousands of names are quietly dropped, the most of whom might have been unfolded into beautiful lives and good workers.

Come to think about that inactive list in your Church—how many of them are really bad? Are not the most of them good neighbors, fair citizens, even your personal friends? What is the business of the Church, anyway? What could be accomplished between Easter and Easter next year in re-enlistment if the Church will really face this part of its work! Yes, it is easier to mark them off than to re-enlist them.

W. H. DENISON,
Secretary General Convention.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The annual visit to Franklinton Christian College was made February 25th to March 1, 1929, by Mrs. F. E. Bullock, Dr. E. C. Fry, Dr. C. H. Rowland, Mr. Sellars, and this scribe. The visit is gratuitous on the part of those who go, and they spend the time in sermons, lectures, addresses and class work. There are 160 students, the faculty, and many preachers who attend during these days. The program is arranged so as not to interfere with the regular college classes. The first twenty minutes is spent in a devotional season with the whole school. Then class work begins.

Mrs. Bullock had charge of special classes, and I had charge of the class of ministerial students and the preachers present. Public sermons and addresses are delivered in the chapel after class work and at nights. Visitors are admitted at the public addresses, and the negro spirituals are sung heartily by all. It is inspiring to hear them sing. Dr. Henderson, the president of the college, presides at these meetings, and the finest behavior and attention characterizes all the meetings. Drs. Rowland and Fry gave fine addresses.

These annual visits are arranged with the idea in mind of helping the negroes in their educational work. They have the idea, and the white people have, too, that the white people have had better advantages than they have had and that such visits will bring great inspiration to their race. But a careful study of the situation reveals the fact that both whites and blacks are benefitted. They learn from each other, and that is a mutual benefit. Both have learned most of what they know since the Civil War, and that means within sixty-four years. The main benefit derived from such association is a clearer knowledge of each other, and a keener appreciation of the race characteristics and mutual dependence upon each other. No opposite races, of all the five races in the world, are so friendly and harmonious in their relations as the negro and white races in the Southern States. Born and reared under the same conditions, their interests are common and their co-operation is a mighty force in business and religion. The white man leads in business and the negro in religion.

President Henderson is suited to his position, faithful in it, and his helpers, like Collins, Holt, and others, make a faculty capable and consecrated.

What the college needs is $25,000 in money to finish the Bishop dormitory, which is a splendid building but unfinished, not even with a roof. Any man or woman who has heart and money enough to finish that building would render a service that would be rewarded in the greater work that the college could and would accomplish.

While there, we had private rooms, private dining-room, good food, and fine appreciation.

ELON LETTER.

(Dr. Peter Ainslie has just issued this challenge. I give it gladly my space in THE SUN this week.—W. A. H.)

WILL CHURCHES SIGN A PEACE PACT AMONG THEMSELVES?

One of the most remarkable documents in his tory is the peace pact between the political governments of the world, adhered to by many of the nations and, on January 15, 1929, ratified by the United States Senate, and, two days after, signed by the President and the Secretary of State. It reads as follows:

"The high contracting parties solemnly declare in the names of their respective peoples that they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies, and renounce it as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another."

"The high contracting parties agree that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may be, which may arise among them, shall never be sought except by pacific means."

There is hardly another document in history to be compared to this. Remarkably brief, containing only seventy-eight words, clear as a crystal in its outlawry of war, it registers the opening of a new era in the calendar of the world. Henceforth, nations are to face the difficult task of organizing for peace, difficult because through all history they have organized for war. It will not be discouraging if there are some failures, but the ideal has been released as the standard of the world. War is an outlaw. A new day has come. The integrity of the nations is challenged as never before. It is the triumph of an idealism that must take its place by the side of those miraculous achievements in modern science. A new world is coming into being.

But where are the Churches with their contribution of brotherhood? Is it possible for them to form a league of co-operation or sign an agreement for the abandonment of their isolations? The scientists and statesmen are moving forward with results that may be classified as modern miracles. Once there was a miraculous power in the Church; but in the luxury of their denominational pride the Churches—Eastern Orthodox, Roman Catholic, Anglican, and Protestant—have revealed an amazing contentment in their isolations. Long ago Christ said that a kingdom divided against itself cannot stand.

It is true that the Churches are not fighting each other now; neither are the French and Germans; but on the boundary line between France and Germany are many fortresses. The Churches have their magnificent buildings, many of them beautiful and worshipful, but so long as the Churches are divided these buildings are the fortresses of a denominational Christendom. Let one Church so much as reflect upon another and from these fortresses come thundering defenses and counter-attacks. Their schools, their Church buildings, and publishing houses are the arsenals of denominational Christendom. Is there no hope for a convincing expression of brotherhood among Christians? Are the Churches to remain forever the most backward organizations of men and women in civilization? Is not the whole world eager for something beyond what the Churches are now giving? Is the reality of a united Christendom possible?

Federation is doing a commendable work among Protestants, but those Churches that are in federation are moving very slowly toward each other. The conference on life and work and the conference on faith and order have made contributions to the conference idea, but the Churches in these gatherings show marked caution. Other Churches which are not included are even more reticent in their attitudes.

The scientists make their adventures and get permanent results for the blessing of mankind. So do statesmen, and we have the League of Nations, the International Court, and the outlawry of war—great steps in moral progress. But the Churches are hesitant in adventures in understanding and appreciation of other Christians than those of their own Churches. Consequently, these times are not impressed by our faith or our love, and an unbelieving world is the price we are paying for our divisions.

The following peace pact for brotherhood among the Churches, having been submitted to one hundred Christians in various Churches, with the results herein stated, is now submitted to Christians everywhere, who are asked to send us their signatures, giving address and Church membership.

The peace pact for the Churches is as follows: "We, Christians of various Churches, believing that only in a co-operative and united Christendom can the world be Christianized, deplore a divided Christendom as being opposed to the Spirit of Christ and the needs of the world; and we are convinced that the Christianizing of the world is greatly hindered by divisive and rivaling Churches.

"We, therefore, desire to express our sympathetic interest in and prayerful attitude toward all conferences, small and large, that are looking toward reconciliation of the divided Church of Christ; and we propose to practice, in all our spiritual fellowships, the equality of all Christians before God, so that no Christian shall be denied membership in our Churches, nor a place in our celebration of the Lord's Supper, nor any ministry be denied the courtesies of our pulpits; and, further, irrespective of denominational barriers, we pledge to be brethren one to another in the name of Jesus Christ, whose we are and whom we serve."

DENDRON, VA.

"In God is my salvation and my glory: the rock of my strength, and my refuge is in God" (Psa. 62.7).

Beloved, the greatest wonder of the ages is the wonder of redeeming love. Isn't it glorious to know that the God of fathomless love, whose wisdom is infinite, and whose power is unlimited, foreseeing the fall of man, his ruin and wretchedness, devised the marvelous plan of redemption—entered into covenant with His only begotten Son, the second Person of the Blessed Trinity, to become the Ransomer. In the "fullness of time," the eternal Sun of righteousness arose and fell upon the awful darkness of a sin-cursed world.

The Lord God Almighty, who laid the foundations of the earth and called out the sun and his countless attendants, that they might declare "His glory," and publish to the world "His handiwork," is the same God who created man in His own image, and "so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that He might become "the Author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey Him." It was a gift undeserved, unparalleled; the highest, richest gift of His boundless love. The apostle calls it "God's unspeakable gift." So it was.

Just think of it: Christ, the "anointed" one, the Lord of glory, laid aside His royalty and came from heaven, that beautiful abode, to this region of darkness and shadow of death; from the throne where He was equal with God the Father—to the manger, cross and the grave! How great the condescension of the Son of God! He became incarnate and entered into the circumstances of guilty men to redeem them. The precious, sacred blood of the Lamb of God paid the penalty, satisfied Divine justice, and rolled away the curse. His blood is the sovereign remedy by which the dreadful disease of sin can be removed. It is the only cure. "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin"—it never fails. No sins are too deep a dye for the sacred atoning blood of our Lord—humanity's only hope of salvation—to wash away.

Jesus, the kind, loving, sympathetic, Divine Shepherd came from heaven seeking to save the lost. He came to lead us gently back to our Heavenly Father as the faithful shepherd goes after his sheep that is lost.

Thank God for Jesus Christ, for His matchless and sublime character, His vicarious atonement, His glorious resurrection.

Beloved, you must, if you want the blessings of God to come into your heart, be willing to forsake every known sin. You will need to be clothed in something more than your own righteousness if you ever walk the streets of the city of God and sing the stirring songs of Moses and the Lamb. The Bible makes it plain that there is not the slightest hope of salvation except through genuine repentance and faith in Jesus Christ, whose precious blood was the only sufficient ransom. Only Jesus can save.

Jesus Christ, our Lord and Saviour, He only can meet and master all our necessities and extremities. You will never belong to Jesus Christ until you have yielded all to Him; until you have submitted life and character to the transforming power of the comforting fact that Jesus Christ gave Himself for you.

Beloved, repent, believe in Him, trust Him, walk with Him, and you pass from death to life instantly.

FROM INAUGURAL ADDRESS.

The country is looking to President Hoover to employ strenuous means and efforts to enforce the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead act. He seems to have made a beginning, in that he has appointed to his cabinet a pronounced "dry" as Attorney General, and transfers from the Treasury Department to the Department of Justice a large part of the enforcement activities. While the President delivered one of the briefest inaugural addresses on record, the address gives more space and emphasis to law enforcement and the eighteenth amendment than to any other one theme. One paragraph from the inaugural gives the tenor of the whole: "I have been selected by you to execute and enforce the laws of the country. I propose to do so to the extent of my own abilities, but the measure of success that the government shall attain will depend upon the moral support which you as citizens extend. The duty of citizens to support the laws of the land is co-equal with the duty of their government to enforce the laws which exist. No greater national service can be given by men and women of good will—who, I know, are not unmindful of the responsibilities of citizenship—than that they should, by their example, assist in stamping out crime and outlawry by refusing participation in and condemning all transactions with illegal liquor. Our whole system of self-government will crumble either if officials elect what laws they will enforce or citizens elect what laws they will support. The worst evil of disregard for some law is that it destroys respect for all law. For our citizens to patronize the violation of a particular law on the ground that they are opposed to it is destructive of the very basis of all that protection of life, of homes and property which they rightly claim under other laws. If citizens do not like a law, their duty as honest men and women is to discourage its violation; their right is openly to work for its repeal. To those of criminal mind, there can be no appeal but vigorous enforcement of the law. Fortunately, they are a small percentage of our people. Their activities must be stopped."

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

MISSIONS IN SUNDAY SCHOOL.

A Sunday School has all to gain and nothing to lose by making missions an integral part of its program, for two reasons:

First: Missions are fundamental in the Word of God. They should, therefore, be fundamental in our teaching of youths. The Bible is the story of God dealing with mankind. It is an unfolding of His will, a revelation of His love. Now, because God loves the whole world, as well as any and every part of it, it is incumbent upon those who know Him, and have received His word, to give it to those who do not know Him and have not received His word. God Himself, through Christ, put this commission and command upon us. We teach missions and practice missions, therefore, not for humanity's sake, but for the sake of our Lord and His command.

Second: Through missions, God releases His power and makes known His will and way to us. Whosoever will do the will of God "shall know of His doctrine." In teaching our youths to make sacrifices for missions, pray for and give to missions, we are preparing them to know the deep things of God, and to realize the power of His love. The release of spiritual force and power, through missionary activity, is a fact not to be disputed or ignored. Paul had a desire to preach that all men might know the fellowship and the power of a mystery that had been hid till his day in the mind of God. That mystery, Paul said, was nothing more or less than that the Gentile as well as the Jew, the heathen as well as the Christian were to be brought into the fellowship of God's saving power and redeeming grace. If we wish our youths started in the right direction in things that pertain to the power of God, we need to teach and to practice missions in the Sunday School. Our youths waste millions of money on trifles that neither buy bread nor make character. The avenues of missions open up a way wherein our youths, through the Sunday School, may be led constantly toward the City of our God.

How?

There are innumerable ways in which missions may be made a vital part of Sunday School life, but in the Churches of the Conferences composing the Southern Convention, we have agreed repeatedly and unanimously:

1. That all Sunday Schools take a once-a-month offering for missions. That is, give the regular offering of one Sunday in each month to the cause of missions. In this, the school has all to gain and nothing to lose. It is safe, after years of experience in many schools, to say that any school not doing this certainly pursues, if not a selfish, at least a very short-sighted policy. Of course, the reason assigned by any school not taking such an offering is that it needs and must have all of its funds to buy its own literature and pay its own expenses. This specious argument may soothe the conscience of those who are indifferent to their Lord's command, but in reality they are just opposed to missions. They are mistaken wholly in their argument and conclusion. Further, the Mission Secretary makes this a personal matter, and has said repeatedly and now says again that if any school will give a once-a-month offering to missions for a year; and on this account brings the school in debt for its current expenses, or the purchase of its own literature, he will personally pay that debt. The fact is, there will be no such debt, for a school that has the faith to make an adventure like this on the resources of God always finds increased, rather than decreased, revenue from the resources of God. It may be safely said that the Sunday School that does not take a once-a-month offering to missions has no logic and no facts to sustain its position, and is not lacking financially, but simply lacks in faith. Many superintendents and teachers and members of the school simply have not the faith to undertake even this program for Jesus' sake.

2. On the day the offering is taken, a special program for missions, using not less than five nor more than ten minutes, should be put on before the whole school. In this way, the school gets a missionary message, and the sad lack in all our schools and among our people today is that of information and its resultant inspiration. If some one in the school, appointed beforehand, will make a five to ten-minute talk on missions, have a prayer for our missionaries and missionary work, tell the story of self-denial and of conquest in the mission fields, this will increase interest in the school and make "Mission Sunday" among the most helpful and interesting of all Sundays of the month.

Especially needful is it that all the schools take a missionary offering once a month this year, and those that are taking it seek to increase their donations, because all Churches are asked to raise, through their Sunday Schools and their Church offering, and donate to missions at least one-third as much as they pay their pastor. It does seem that a Christian people would be willing to give, through their Church and Sunday School, at least, one-third as much to carry the gospel, with its blessings and benefits, to others without it, in the home and in the foreign land, as they pay to have the gospel preached to themselves. When we make our gifts to missions, we are making the most Christ-like, holy and unselfish gifts that we will ever make on this earth. We make all other gifts for the sake of humanity, in the name of sweet charity or benevolence; but the gifts we make to missions, we make solely and wholly for Jesus' sake.

WHY I AM A MISSIONARY.

BY DR. E. STANLEY JONES, of India.

I was at lunch at the American embassy at Buenos Aires last summer when a prominent lady turned to me and said, "I have been waiting to ask you why you do it? What impels you to go as a missionary among other people?"

There is perhaps much misunderstanding as to the motives of a missionary. Let me say here that we do not go because the nations to which we go are the worst in the world. Paganism is not something that can be pointed to on the map; it is something in the spiritual realm. Frontiers today are not geographical, but moral. We go to the East because it is a part of the world, and what we believe in for ourselves we believe is valid for the rest of the people of the world. We are not presenting Western civilization to the East, for Western civilization is only partly Christian. We tell the East to take what it finds good in our civilization, but we do not make it the issue.

Neither do we impose our ecclesiasticism upon the East, for we have built up around Christianity some things that are Christian and some that are not, some that will stand transplantation and some that will not. We put our ecclesiasticism at the disposal of the East, and say, "Take what is good and will fit into your own national life."

What we are trying to do is to give them Christ and to let them interpret Him through their own genius and life. If the East can show us something better than the Christ, then we will sit at the feet of the East.

One of the first things that impels us as missionaries is a basic belief in men. The missionary enterprise believes in people, apart from race, birth, and color. It says there are no permanently inferior peoples. There are undeveloped races, but there are untold possibilities in every human personality. A negro preacher to the American Indians laid the foundation of the missionary work of the Methodist Church. A Mohammedan looked at some of the outcasts of India who had been lifted out of their lowly condition by Christian missionaries and said, "Here you have turned animals into men."

We believe that each nation has something to contribute to the life of the human race. It would be a poor thing indeed for us to try to Anglo-Saxonize the world. It takes many instruments to make up a symphony; and many peoples to make a harmonious world. There is no mere giving nation and no mere receiving nation any more. All must be giving, all receiving. We expect to get back from the East as much as and more than we give.

As we believe in the people of the world, we want them to develop economically, politically, socially and morally. We do not believe the non-Christian faiths can produce this development. No nation can rise higher than its inmost thinking; no nation can be lifted until you lift the ideals that paralyze the life. The bloodclots that paralyze the soul of India are Kismet and Karma.

The Hindu gets under difficulty and says, "My Karma is bad." It paralyzes him and he sits down. The Mohammedan gets under difficulty and he says, "My Kismet is bad." Both tend toward fatalism; both tend to produce that fatalistic conception of life that has made the East nonprogressive.

I do not believe that India will permanently rise until Kismet and Karma are replaced by the cross. The cross stands for that optimism won out of the heart of pain. I have looked into the soul of the East; I have let the non-Christian speak at his highest and best, but I have come to the conclusion that these faiths are bankrupt. But they have very great assets; one can still have assets and be bankrupt. They have not sufficient resources to pay off the obligations they owe to their devotees.

Christ in life is inescapable. An Indian said, "Begin at India and her needs, and you come out at the place of Christ." It was Henry George who said, "I loved the people, and was led to Christ as their best friend"; and it was Cardinal Manning who replied, "I loved Christ, and was led to love the people for whom Christ died." It was a Hindu who said to me, "No one but Christ is seriously bidding for the heart of the world. There is no one else in the field." The modern man knows he must be religious after the mind of Christ or not be religious at all.

Everything is changing and being modified in the East. "All our customs are in the cooking pot," as an Indian said. Everything is changing except Christ. He stands unmodified, forcing modification upon everything.

A CALL.

Jesus, in His matchless glory, had a plan and purpose in walking by the sea that day. He didn't just happen to be there; it wasn't an unexpected scene when He beheld a ship on the beautiful waters of Galilee with men at their tasks, busy, not idlers. And He called to them. Oh, such a call! One that is still ringing from mountain-peak to peak. "And He called to them"—to whom? To the three men? No, it was to the young men. What a challenge! what a glorious privilege! what an honor to work side by side, hand in hand, with the Divine Master. Their father, Zubedee, with the best years of life spent, was left lonely, but happy to see his boys step out for God. What an opportunity!

Does not your heart gladden at Easter time when you ponder and meditate on the fact that you have a living Christ to worship? All four of the gospels tell us "He is risen." What marvelous words! What power! Words to revolutionize our hearts and lives. "He is risen." What an announcement to the world!

If this memorable event should have occurred this Easter, what power does Christianity have to make these immortal words head the list of programs going out over the air in message and song? How strong are we? How weak are we? How many doubting Thomases have weakened the onward march of Christian soldiers? After life there is action. Jesus said, "Go!" This message, this command, again is given to a young woman. How inspiring to see young folks serving and praising their Lord and Saviour, on the firing line for God.

A picture so beautiful, so uplifting, so entrancing, the word cannot paint one to compare. Jesus is calling to you today as of yore. He needs you. Won't you hear? Won't you go?

MISSIONARY PROGRAM FOR APRIL.

Young People.

Theme: A Call.

1. Hymn—"If Jesus Goes with Me."
2. Prayer.
3. Business Period.
4. Solo—(An appropriate Easter selection).

9. Poem—"My Debt" (page 17, February number of Herald of Gospel Liberty).
10. Prayer.

ANGIE CREW.

She does not know when she started to Sunday School. Born of parents keenly interested in Christian work, she was brought up in the Church. Her early schooling, including high school and one year of normal training, was secured at her birthplace, West Milton, Ohio, where she constantly attended the Christian Church. Following her normal work, five years were spent in teaching, thus fulfilling a dream of tiny girlhood, in which she felt she would be supremely happy if she could only teach school. The joy of this work almost cost her a college education—it came so near side-tracking her. Once when she was about twelve, she turned temporarily against the Sunday School and decided she would not go any more. But the "spell" didn't last long, and when she came back her interest in the work was greater than ever, leading her to become an active member of the Church and a teacher in the Sunday School.

All the time the feeling was growing upon her that she should devote her life to Christian work. Of this she says, "While teaching the beginners' class in Sunday School, I realized that I was happier in that work than in any other. It was then that I definitely decided to get a college education and take up some kind of Christian service." Publicly pledging herself to this in her own Church, she later entered Defiance College, where she completed her four-year course.

The campus life, with its Christian fellowship and high ideals, did much to develop her religious experience. Because of her mother's devotion to mission work, Angie, from a child, had been genuinely interested in it. When she was sent to her first student volunteer convention as the representative of the college Y. W. C. A., she was led shortly afterward to decide definitely to become a foreign missionary if the way opened. She did some fine work in the college religious activities and as secretary-treasurer of the Northern Ohio Student Volunteer Union.

Miss Crew has spent her first term of five years in Japan, where she did splendid work. After this present furlough she expects to go back to take up her work among the women and girls who need so badly just such an influence as hers. And this is the story of the deep and abiding influence of a Christian home and an early Christian training in the Church.

RECOMMENDED PLANS AND PROGRAM

February, March—Foreign Mission Months

THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION, in its Richmond Session last year, made February and March "Foreign Mission Months" for educational and informational purposes, culminating in an offering from all the Churches for Missions at, or on the nearest possible Sunday to, Easter—March 31, 1929. The goal set for the offering—Home and Foreign Missions—from Sunday Schools, and Churches, and individuals is $33,000; Woman's Societies, $12,000—total, $45,000. Inasmuch as the entire amount thus asked must be raised by voluntary offerings, the Conferences, in their recent sessions, in which the matter was discussed, adopted and recommended to the Sunday Schools and Churches the following method to be pursued in reaching their quota of one-third as much for Missions as for pastor's salary:

FIRST: When a Church uses the Budget Plan, write into that budget one-third the amount of pastor's salary to go to Missions, and send this in monthly or quarterly.

SECOND: If the budget is not used, canvass the individuals of the Church and Sunday School to find out how much each will give to Missions and when, entering the same on a card prepared for the purpose and which may be had of the Mission Secretary, Elon College, N. C.

THIRD: Where neither of these plans is adopted, then endeavor to increase the offering from the Sunday School, and at or about Easter have a Missionary Rally and try to raise the entire amount of the quota at that one service, in conjunction with the monthly offerings from the Sunday School for the year.

Each Church and Sunday School should use one or the other of these plans.

Lesson XII—March 24, 1929.

STEWARDSHIP AND MISSIONS.

GOLDEN TEXT: "It is required in stewards that a man be found faithful."—1 Cor. 4:2.

LESSON: Gen. 12:1-3; Deut. 8:17, 18; Jonah 3:1-10; Mal. 3:7-12; Matt. 28:18-20; Acts 1:6-8, 13:1-3, 26:12-20; Rom. 1:14-16; 1 Cor. 16:21 2 Cor. 8:1-15, 9:1-15.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 96:1-8.

There is no alternative for the Christian Church in the matter of missions. She must be missionary or she is not Christian. Jesus Christ, the Head of the Church, said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." He was never more supreme than when He spoke these words. He had risen from the dead and He was conscious that all power in heaven and on earth had been given Him. "Go ye, therefore," He said. It is not a pious wish or a sentimental hope; it is an authoritative command. The Church of Jesus Christ need not call Him "Lord, Lord," unless it tries to do the things He commands it to do. Missions is the chief and all-inclusive business of the Church of Christ, and those of us who name His name ought to be about our Father's business. People who say that they do not believe in missions do not realize just what is involved in what they are saying. They are not only revealing their ignorance of the true nature of Christianity; they are revealing the poverty of their own spiritual lives. As a matter of fact, Jesus Christ commanded His Church to be missionary not only because of the wholesome effect it would have on the world into which it went, but because of the wholesome effect it would have upon the Church which went.

The missionary spirit is in fact both an effect and a cause. A man has so much of the spirit of Christ in his heart that he feels an impulse to share his blessings with others and to make Christ known to others, and in doing this it enriches his own life. In a sense, missions does as much, if not more, for us than it does for others. One thing certainly is true: we would not have the knowledge of Christ which we have, or enjoy the blessings which come through Christ which we enjoy if somebody else had not been missionary. Every one who reads these notes is the direct object and product of missions. To refuse to share with others the blessings which have come to us through Christ is a denial of the gospel of Christ. The Christian experience of Christ, as well as the command of Christ, lies at the heart of the missionary program. Paul went to the heart of the matter when he said, "The love of Christ constraineth us."

Thus far we have dealt with the "Why of Missions." The "How of Missions" opens up a comprehensive field. Motivated by this command of Christ, which in the heart of the Christian is interpreted as the request of a friend, and impelled by the experience of Christ in the heart, Christ's followers have sought in every legitimate way to make His riches of grace known to all men. Evangelistic missions, educational missions, medical missions, industrial missions, agricultural missions—in a hundred ways the gospel is being presented throughout the world—but all with one goal in view: to make the Spirit of Christ a living reality in character and life. If one should study the list of the missionaries of some of the larger denominations he would be surprised at the various forms of missionary activity these missionaries are carrying on. Missions is not only the business of the Church; it is a many-sided business.

So much for missions. "Why 'drag in' stewardship?" however, some will say. Well, why not? As a matter of fact, the two are not twain, but one, and what God hath joined together let not man put asunder. The gospel is free in a sense, but it costs, and costs tremendously to take it in person and in institution to other lands and other peoples. Talk about big business and large sums of money! The missionary enterprise handles sums of money every year that make the budgets of some so-called big business look like pin-money or small change. But even at that, it does not handle as much as it needs or as much as it should handle; certainly not as much as the situation calls for. And why? Because men and women, young men and maidens, boys and girls do not have a proper sense of stewardship. They do not interpret their lives and their material possessions in terms of their relation to the extension of the kingdom of God. There are men who spend more for tobacco in a year than they give to missions. There are women who spend far more for unnecessary toilet accessories than they give to missions. There are young people and boys and girls who spend far more for movies than they contribute toward making Christ known to others. It would be a surprising and a disturbing thing for the average Christian to compare his expenditures for altogether unnecessary and even trifling things, with the amounts he contributes toward kingdom enterprises. A sense of Christian stewardship has not been established in our hearts and kept sensitive in our conscience. And because of that fact the Church at home and abroad suffers and the kingdom tarries. One sometimes suspects that one reason why people profess not to believe in missions is the fear that such a belief will cost them something. Money is an acid test after all.

There are, of course, other phases of stewardship, even in its relation to missions. There is, for instance, the principle of the stewardship of life. This is especially true in regard to young people. They are not their own, and they have no right to make any plans for their vocation or their location except in terms of its relation to the kingdom of God. In the light of the widespread and the deep-seated need of such large numbers over such large areas, it is inconceivable that God is not always claiming for Himself the youth of Christian lands for this great co-operative task of redeeming the world. No higher honor could come to a young person than to be accounted worthy to be called by the Lord into this great work. And to all those who go, there is the promise that the living Christ will go with them. To those who remain here, both young and old, there is the challenge to co-operation in prayer and purse.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, March 24, 1929.

TOPIC: "Making Jesus King."—Matt. 21:1-17.

Some Bible Hints.

People sometimes shout aloud words, the significance of which they do not realize. Let us think of meanings rather than phrases (v. 9).

Wherever Jesus comes, the "city is moved." If He came to Boston or Chicago or New York and spoke the truth, there would be tremendous excitement. Meantime are we moved? (v. 10).

The King demands house-cleaning. From us He asks heart-cleaning (v. 12).

Some welcome Jesus with loud voice, who later shout Him down when His demands grow clear to them (v. 16).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Jesus offers Himself to Jerusalem as King. He offers Himself to us. What are we going to do about it?

To the Jews came the moment to decide. Shall He be our King—King of our souls—or shall we refuse His rule. The same choice must be made by us today.

As King, He demands absolute obedience, not because He wants to be obeyed (He is meek and lowly, not power-seeker), but because the things He asks are essential to our happiness.

Jesus will be King over all life and not over part of it only. Smoe make Him King on Sunday in Church, and reject Him in business. With Him it is "all or nothing."

A Few Illustrations.

If we make Jesus King, in that act we not only promise to follow Him, but to make all our possessions His. We surrender self and all its belongings.

Jesus attracted the multitude superficially. Interest was only skin-deep. The people had no noble purpose. What attracts us to Him?

Each must crown Jesus King for himself. "I will follow Thee" is the act of crowning Him. He accepts no mob allegiance, but only individual allegiance.

The purification of the temple was a symbolical act. So must our lives be cleansed that accept Him as King. What is there in us to cleanse?

To Think About.

Why should we make Jesus King today?

What right has Jesus to be King?

What follows when Jesus becomes King?

THE CHRISTIAN AND HIS THOUGHTS.

sound old-fashioned to speak of sacrifice and duty in this modern age, but we must remember that it is through these, and through these only, that we can obtain ultimate and true happiness. It is hard indeed to cultivate this mental garden of ours, and it is only through self-crucifixion that it can be accomplished.

It is a known fact that our attention cannot be divided between two things. In other words, we will find it impossible to fill our mental gardens with weeds and at the same time have them full of fragrant flowers. It is also true that if we carefully cultivate this mental garden of ours so that it abounds in exquisite beauties, and make it our business to see that no weeds are admitted through our carelessness in reading or listening to the wrong things, there will be no opportunity for the weeds to push out the flowers. Thus, it is of vital importance that we become the master-gardener of our own mind, tending it as carefully as any gardener would his garden of earth, for by so doing we can make ourselves masters of our circumstances and environment.

Dwight L. Moody offers an exceptional example of the thinking-in-your-heart theory. He was still quite young when he chose his life's vocation of God's ministry, and when he told his pastor of his decision, the pastor did everything in his power to discourage him. He knew that Dwight was very reticent, and imperfect in his speech, and he was afraid that he would never overcome his defects so that he could speak in public. He hated to tell this to the young boy, so he encouraged him to go on in the Christian cause which he had chosen, but he did not encourage him to enter the ministry. Instead, he tried to reason with the boy and show him that a man could be in a trade or profession and still be a Christian. He thought he was doing what was best for the boy's own good, as he hated to think of the bitter embarrassment and failure that he was sure would be the only result of Moody's attempt to preach. This boy had thought in his heart that he was going to be one of God's messengers; he had filled his mental garden with the good seeds of purposeful thought, and he would allow nothing to come in that would in any way not harmonize with the goal he had set to reach. What was the result? He had a fixed thought in his heart, and because of that thought he became, not the lamentable failure his own preacher had predicted, but one of the world's greatest pulpit orators and one of the most powerful influences for good the United States has ever seen.

Not only is thought an important factor in the making and breaking of success, but its relation to our bodily health and physical well-being is unquestioned. Has it ever occurred to you who is apt to have the most numerous cases of sickness? If it has, you will know that they are the people who are in continual fear of catching something. When some one worries over drafts, open windows, rain, etc., because of the possibility of catching cold, you are usually safe in saying that person will have the cold he was worrying about by the next morning. Medical authorities now claim that the great majority of ills of mankind are not ills at all; that they are largely imaginary. In other words, people are sure that they have something that they haven't, and the result is that such a mental state often brings on the trouble. One of New York's most famous physicians claims that 60 per cent of the people who come to his hospital are troubled with only psychological ailments.

In reading, I found this paragraph which I believe to be essentially true: "Disease and health, like circumstances, are rooted in thought. Sickly thoughts will express themselves through a sickly body. Thoughts of fear have been known to kill a man as speedily as a bullet, and they are continually killing thousands of people just as surely, though less rapidly. The people who live in fear of disease are the people who get it. Anxiety quickly demoralizes the whole body, and lays it open to the entrance of disease; while impure thoughts, even if not physically indulged, will soon shatter the nervous system."

Throughout the centuries, thought has been one of man's most valuable possessions, and it is up to us to recognize this and to keep it so. We can use it to tear down, or we can use it to build up. Men who have cherished lofty ideals and visions are the men who have given the beautiful to the world. Inventors, poets, composers, painters and prophets, all of these and many more have done their part toward making the world more and more as Christ would have it. So I say to you: cherish all that is fine and good—visions, ideals, music, pure thoughts; for from these will be produced the real world in which you live, and this world will be one of heavenly environment if you will but build toward that end.

Let me repeat the advice that Paul gave to the Phillipians: "Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, honorable, just, pure, are lovely, of good report, think on these things."

MISSIONARY RALLY.

The rallies of the Alabama Woman's Missionary Conference will meet March 9th at Cragford, with Cragford Church, and March 10th with Antioch Church, Lineville and Wadley groups meet with Cragford, and New Hope and Roanoke groups with Antioch. Dr. Fry and Dr. Atkinson are to be with us.

We are expecting these two days to be the biggest in the history of our work. Will each Church make a special effort to be well represented? We need you, and you need the inspiration and information you will receive at these rallies.

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

DECIDE AND DO.

"I am resolved what to do."—Luke 16:1-9.

The steward of our Lord's parable cheated his master in order to make friends for himself. Christ certainly does not commend the steward for his dishonest conduct, but He sets him before us as an example of prompt, resolute and decisive action. He would have Christians show as much resolution in the ways of God as worldlings show in the ways of the devil.

Good resolutions have been compared to the steps of a tower. They are made of marble—solid, strong, beautifully cut and polished. We look at them with admiration. But what is the use of them if we merely look at them and admire them and do not count them?

Just so is it with good resolutions that remain nothing but resolutions, and are not translated into deeds. They are beautiful resolutions, accurately cut, finely polished; but the steps do not know our feet, the lovely resolutions have no contact with our lives. And a resolution that is only admired is not admirable. It is the faith without works which James declared to be dead.

Therefore, be resolved what to do, and then do it!

Prayer.—Dear Saviour, our Pattern in all things, enable us to be resolved, as Thou wert. May we enter into Thy determination. Thy will be done, in us and by us, on earth as it is in heaven. Amen.

TUESDAY.

ME AND MYSELF.

"Not what I would that do I practice; but what I hate, that I do."—Rom. 7:14-25.

Paul recognized in himself two Pauls: one worked for the good, the other loved the evil. He found a ceaseless struggle going on between the two Pauls, and he watched it with the keenest anxiety. He knew that, for him, nothing else was so important as the issue of that conflict. "Wretched man that I am!" he cried.

"Who shall deliver me from this Paul that is hanging about my neck and dragging me down to death?" And then he straightened up and shouted, "Jesus Christ, my Lord, can deliver me, and will deliver me. Praise God!"

This is the experience of every true Christian. Christina G. Rossetti knew the struggle, and put it into a poem:

"God, harden me against myself:
This coward with pathetic voice
Who craves for ease and rest and joys.

"Myself, arch-traitor to myself;
My hollowest friend, my deadliest foe;
My clog, whatever road I go.

"Yet, One there is can curb myself,
Can roll the strangling load from me,
Break off the yoke and set me free!"

What we need is to make Christ our other self. If we do that, then we are safe, and not till then.

Prayer.—Our Saviour, so permeate our house of life that there shall be no room save for Thee. Take us, possess us, now and forevermore! Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

TALKING AHEAD OF BELIEF.

"That which we have seen and heard, declare we unto you."—1 John 1:1-10.

John, the beloved disciple, had seen and heard wonderful things. He, like Paul, knew whom he believed, and was fully persuaded before he tried to persuade others.

This is what was once said by John R. Mott: "We must see things clearly ourselves before we can proclaim them with power to others. We must not talk ahead of our beliefs." That is one of the secrets of Dr. Mott's power over men: he has mastered his subject, and therefore the subject has mastered him. So also it masters his hearers.

There is much talking ahead of belief today. We talk—many of us—twice as much as we study and think, whereas we should study and think twice as much as we talk. Effective speech must have a large background of what is left unsaid, but packed into belief, into faith, and into living.

Prayer.—Dear Lord, we believe. Strengthen our belief; deepen our knowledge. And may we testify of what we know and of what we assuredly believe. Amen.

THURSDAY.

SUFFERING TOGETHER, GLORIFIED TOGETHER.

"If so be that we suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified with Him."—Rom. 8:12-18.

In Paul's mind there was a necessary relation of cause and effect between suffering and glory. He saw clearly that Christ's sufferings made up Christ's glory. Christ is exalted above all because He suffered for all. Christ's cross was His throne. The atonement was His crown. Sacrificial love was the law of His kingdom. For these reasons, Paul linked sufferings and glory in all his thoughts and writings.

"Depend upon it," says J. Stuart Holden, "the measure of your real love and loyalty to Jesus Christ is manifested by the weight of the cross which you have to bear as His follower and His witness. This is what it means to love Him."

Prayer.—Our ever-blessed Saviour, we would not have Thee bear the cross alone. Our glorious King, Thou wouldst not have Thy glory to Thyself. Ah, happy partnership of sufferings and triumph. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE POISON OF BAD TEMPER.

"Then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing."—Psa. 126:1-6.

When this is true of us, we are quite certain to be in good health. Good spirits and good health go together uniformly.

Bancroft, the famous historian, reached the age of ninety in splendid vigor. He said that the way to live long is never to lose one's temper. To be sure, we may inherit weak bodies, and that inheritance may shorten our lives; but, other things being equal, a person of a kindly and cheerful disposition is apt to live much longer than one who is ugly and morose and the victim of worries.

The physiologists, indeed, have discovered that bad temper actually causes the secretion of poisons which sap the strength of the body. Bad temper does spiritual harm in abundance, but it also does a vast amount of physical harm, and those who will not avoid it on account of the former may be persuaded to avoid it because of the latter.

Prayer.—Lord of life, and light, of sunshine and good cheer, Thou art the unfailing source of joy. Make us happy, dear Lord, and may we count all gloom as closely akin to wickedness. Amen.

SATURDAY.

GREAT DARKNESS, GREAT LIGHT.

"The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light."—Isa. 9:1-7.

Every one is sure at some time to be obliged to walk in the dark. As the earth must spend part of its hours in the darkness, so certain is it that a part of our life on earth must have trouble and sorrow for its dwelling-place. If we make up our minds to this, we shall not be overwhelmed by it when it comes, but will endure it with heroism and good cheer.

F. W. Faber, the writer of lovely hymns, once penned these lines: "Let us serve God in the sunshine, while He makes the sun shine. We shall then serve Him all the better in the dark when He sends the darkness. It is sure to come. Only let our light be God's light, and our darkness God's darkness, and we shall be safe at home when the great nightfall comes." After that nightfall, the endless day!

Prayer.—O Thou, Light of the world, we will live with Thee, and have no fear of the darkness outside. We will live with Thee, and find in the place which Thou hast prepared for us the everlasting light. Amen.

SUNDAY.

YOU CANNOT, BUT SOME ONE CAN.

"They called upon Jehovah, and He answered them."—Psa. 99:1-9.

Once a man sent his servant to deliver a letter. The servant, who was somewhat lazy, after a while came back with the letter. "Why didn't you deliver it?" asked the master. "I couldn't," replied the servant. "Why not?" "There was a deep river, sir; I couldn't get across." "But wasn't there a ferryman there?" "I don't know, sir. If there was, he was on the other side."

"Did you shout over to the other side to get the ferryman?" "No, sir." "You rascal! It is true there was a river and you couldn't cross it, but there was some one who would have taken you over. You ought to have cried out to him."

This is a parable of salvation. Our sins make a deep, dark river, which bars our onward progress. We cannot get over the obstacle, for the river is too deep to wade, too swift to swim. But there is a Ferryman there, ready to take us over, if we will only call out to Him. What we cannot do, some one can. We cannot save ourselves, but He can save us. He is there for that very purpose. He is waiting, and expecting our hail. If we do not care enough for His help even to ask for it, He will not force it on us. The river is there. The boat is there. The Ferryman is there. What fools are they who will not be ferried across!

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer.

NOTICE.

The Vance-Franklin and Warren District Missionary Rally will be held at the Liberty (Vance) Church, Thursday, April 25th, beginning at 10 o'clock A. M.

I want every pastor in the district to begin making plans, so that he will be able to attend the rally; and also every Church to begin making plans to send delegates, whether they have a missionary society or not. I am so anxious that every pastor in the district attend the rally and every Church be represented. Let us heed the theme for our rally this year, "The Call of the Master," and get busy in the mission work and attend the rally, thus making it the best that we have ever held in our district.

Don't forget the time and place—Liberty (Vance) Church, Thursday, April 25, 1929.

MARGARET ALSTON,
Henderson, N. C., R. 1. District Leader.

A SOLEMN OBLIGATION.

The tithe is sacred, reserved by God for Himself. It is to be brought into His treasury to be used to sustain the gospel laborers in their work.

Some have been dissatisfied, and have said, "I will not longer pay my tithe; for I have no confidence in the way things are managed at the heart of the work."

Read carefully the third chapter of Malachi, and see what God says about the tithe. If our Churches will take their stand upon the Lord's word, and be faithful in paying their tithe into His treasury, more laborers will be encouraged to take up ministerial work.

God's reserved resources are to be used in no such haphazard way. The tithe is the Lord's, and those who meddle with it will be punished with the loss of their heavenly treasure unless they repent.

these other lines of work. They are to be sustained, but not from the tithe. God has not changed; the tithe is still to be used for the support of the ministry.

Those who go forth as ministers have a solemn responsibility devolving upon them which is strangely neglected. Some enjoy preaching, but they do not give personal labor to the Churches.

The overseer of the flock of God should faithfully discharge his duty. If he takes the position that because this is not pleasant to him, he will leave it for some one else to do, he is not a faithful worker.

"Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it" (Mal. 3:10).

OBITUARIES.

BRUCE.

John Robert Bruce was called to his reward February 12, 1929. He was 61 years, 5 months and 25 days old. He never made a public confession, but had made statements that he was ready if he should be called. He leaves behind a wife and seven children. May the Lord bless this bereaved family. Funeral was conducted by the writer.

W. C. MARTIN.

AYSCUE.

Mrs. Iber Doris Ayseue was born April 19, 1910, and died February 13, 1929. In early life she professed faith in Christ and united with Liberty (Vance) Christian Church. She was faithful to the Church.

Mrs. Ayseue leaves to mourn her death her husband, one daughter, father, mother, two brothers and two sisters and a host of other relatives and friends. Services were conducted by the writer, and interment was made in Liberty Cemetery. May the Lord comfort the bereaved.

H. E. CRUTCHFIELD.

McADAMS.

Mrs. G. S. McAdams was born February 14, 1876, and died February 9, 1929. In early childhood she professed faith in Christ and united with Mt. Zion Christian Church. She was loyal to her Church. In 1892 she was united in marriage to Mr. G. S. McAdams. He went to his reward about four years ago.

She leaves to mourn her departure eleven children, five sisters and one brother, and many other relatives. Services conducted by the writer. Interment was made in Mt. Zion Cemetery. May the Lord comfort the bereaved.

H. E. CRUTCHFIELD.

AYSCUE.

On Wednesday, February 13, 1929, our community was made sad when the death angel called one of our splendid young women from labor to reward. Iver Doris Ayseue, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jim Ayseue, was born April 19, 1910 (age, 18 years, 9 months and 25 days). On January 1, 1928, she was married to Wesley S. Ayseue, and for thirteen months and thirteen days they were a devoted and happy couple. To them was given one little girl, Catherine Ramoua. The beauty of her sweet, Christian life was reflected in the way she so patiently bore all her sufferings. Like the Master, she never complained. At no time during her long and severe illness was she heard to murmur, but would always say, "I feel better."

Doris never mentioned dying, but looked forward to living. She wanted to go home, and set Wednesday as the day to go—the day on which she went to that eternal home, "the home of the soul." She was under the care of three good physicians and good nurses. Her sister, Leona, stayed with her both day and night while in the hospital. Words fail to describe the sufferings of her so young, and neither can we understand why it should be. But we know that He is too wise to make a mistake, and we trust her going will prove the means of reviving others to heaven.

We sometimes wonder why one so young and promising should be called. Then we remember that no family here would be natural with all its members of one age. Even so God is choosing the best of all ages to make up that heavenly family. Therefore, God the Father is only transplanting the buds, that they may blossom in heaven.

Doris professed faith in Christ and united with Liberty (Vance) Christian Church at the age of eleven years. She was ever ready to do what she could. In Christian Endeavor work she was always ready to help out the program committee by filling her place or the place of any absentee. She had a very pleasing and winning personality, always greeting you with a smile. Only a couple of hours before she died she smiled and said, "I am better."

Doris was a loving child in the home, a devoted wife and a friend to all. She leaves to mourn their loss a devoted husband, infant daughter (six weeks' old), father, mother, two brothers, C. O. Rem and Morris Ayseue; two sisters, Mrs. Chester Smith and Leona Ayseue, and a host of relatives and friends.

Funeral services were conducted by her pastor, Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, and interment was made in the cemetery at her Church. Members of the Young Ladies' Sunday School Class acted as honorary pallbearers. The floral designs were beautiful, characteristic of the beautiful young life. She will be missed in the home, in the Church, and the community, but we bow in submission to His will, realizing that our loss is her eternal gain.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE

WADLEY, ALABAMA

An Accredited Junior College

Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

Piedmont Junior College is training some of the best stock of America for Christian leadership, to be used by the nation and the world. Here is a great challenge and asset for students who wish to prepare themselves to serve in a worth-while way. The new Administration Building will be completed by time school opens this fall.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Mrs. B. F. Frank Rt. 4 12-1-29

By Rev. Stanley C. Harrell.

BREAKING WITH THE PAST.—

The Hyde Park Baptist Church of Chicago has departed from the time-honored custom of Baptist Churches and has called an unimmersed minister to be its pastor. The new pastor is the Rev. Roland W. Schloerb, who succeeds the Rev. Charles W. Gilkey. Mr. Schloerb is not a member of the Baptist denomination, and he is called with the understanding that he will not be immersed. The Hyde Park Church is the Baptist Church of the University of Chicago, and numbers among its membership members of the faculty of both the university and of the divinity school. The Church is to be operated in the future on the basis of "open membership." While this is a departure from the accepted Baptist custom in one respect, it is in line with the right of each local Church to determine its own policies, a right which the Baptists have always contended for.

CHURCH UNION IN PORTO RICO.—

For a number of years there has been a fine spirit of co-operation among the denominational missionary agencies in Porto Rico. Many readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN have heard Rev. D. P. Barrett tell of the co-operative spirit and the fine fellowship that obtains among the workers in that field. Mr. Barrett said that going to conference did not mean attending a gathering in which only representatives of one denomination had met for deliberation; but that it meant the gathering of representatives from all the evangelical Churches. All the candidates for the ministry have been trained for some time in a union seminary, in which the various subjects were taught by the best-qualified teachers available, no matter what denominational connections might be held by the teacher. A religious journal has been maintained which ministered to the needs of the entire field. This periodical has been described as the best evangelical journal of religion printed in the Spanish language.

THE JONES LAW.—

One of the first moves toward a more effective enforcement of the national prohibition laws, and one which gives promise of going a long way to make prohibition more respected, is the passage of the Jones law. This law does two things. It changes the status of the violator of the prohibition laws, making the crime a felony. It also makes the penalty of those who are convicted more severe. The law provides for a maximum penalty of five years' imprisonment or a fine of $10,000, or both. In this act is provided a means of adequately dealing with the professional bootlegger. Five years in a Federal penitentiary is calculated to make the man who is tempted to disregard the law take a second thought before he rushes into a career of crime. Now, if those who are charged with the work of enforcement put honest efforts into their task, we are in a fair way to see whether prohibition can be enforced. The law advises those who are charged with enforcement to "discriminate between casual or slight violations and habitual sales of intoxicating liquor, or attempts to commercialize violations of the law."

For the past two years a committee representing the Congregational, Christian and United Brethren Churches has been working on the task of effecting organic union between these three bodies. A satisfactory basis of agreement has been worked out; that is, a basis of agreement which is satisfactory to the members and representatives of these three connections in Porto Rico. The only thing required to make this union an accomplished fact is the approval of the parent mission boards of the respective denominations in this country.

In the light of the present relationship between the Congregational and Christian Churches in this country, there can be little doubt but that they will approve it. It may be that union will yet be effected on the mission field before it becomes operative at home. Certainly, the Porto Rican project is a more notable one, in that it is undertaking to bring about union between three denominations, rather than between two.

"CANNED" SERMONS.—

Frederick L. Collins, writing in the Woman's Home Companion, has come out with a radical suggestion for solving the problem of the empty Church pew. Mr. Collins states that he has traveled 8,000 miles and visited Churches in twenty-one States in making the observations upon which he bases his suggestions. Everywhere he went he listened to the sort of sermons that were being preached, and he was anything but favorably impressed. He pronounced the Church buildings and equipment in most places pitifully inadequate; but in his opinion the sermons failed to measure up to the standard of the buildings. To meet the situation, he suggests that the preachers be provided with ready-made sermons. He recommended the following:

"1. That the average minister be relieved of the necessity of sermon-writing.

"2. That the task be assigned to men and women who are conspicuously able to perform it.

"Specifically, I suggest:

"1. That each denomination solicit and pay for an annual supply of the finest sermons that can possibly be written.

"2. That the competition be open to everybody, whether they be clerical or lay, professional or amateur.

"3. That the number selected be sufficiently large to permit a wide choice of subjects by the local pastor.

"4. That the 'best' sermons be furnished to ministers in three forms:

"(a) Full length: to fill all the time now allotted to the sermon.

"(b) Abridged: to fill three-quarters of the time—the remaining quarter to be used for introductory remarks by the local pastor.

"(c) Further abridged: to fill one-half of the time—leaving the other half free for an original sermon on the same or on an allied subject.

"5. That the individual minister be urged to select the kind of sermon that best meets the needs of his particular congregation and to deliver it on Sunday morning."

The suggestions made by Mr. Collins have been widely criticised by writers in both the religious and the secular press. And so far, not a single writer whose observations have come to our attention has taken kindly to the suggestion. The Milwaukee Journal goes to the heart of the question when it says: "The only trouble with this brilliant scheme is that it shows such an abject failure to understand the mission and service of both pastor and Church." The Pittsburgh Christian Advocate says: "Unfortunately, it is the canned sermon that has been largely responsible for the dwindling congregations of the countryside."

That there is a great deal of poor preaching, the most of the preachers are perfectly willing to admit. And as a general rule their conclusion is based in the main upon the sermons which they have heard themselves deliver. The one thing that gives value to a sermon, no matter whether it be classed as a good sermon or a poor one, is the spiritual experience of the preacher. The preacher can only preach effectively what he himself has lived. The preacher, whenever his message reaches the hearts of his hearers, is always a witness. Every one has listened to sermons that, from an intellectual and literary viewpoint, were poor specimens. They would never have been considered in a contest based upon homiletic excellence; but because the preacher was dealing with a theme wherein he had experienced a real spiritual blessing, his message was of untold value to his hearers.

Mr. Collins says: "The old-fashioned expounding of Bible texts is about as popular as the old-fashioned high-wheeled bicycle." In this he is doubtless correct. The best sermons preached a hundred years ago would doubtless leave the average congregation of today absolutely unmoved. But that does not mean that the same truths which the old-time preachers dealt, if accurately interpreted and applied to the conditions which face us today would not bring the very light for which this generation is earnestly seeking. There are those who tell us that expository preaching is a thing of the past. But there is nothing that is so much needed as the sort of expository preaching which will bring the problems of our own day into the clear light of God's eternal Word.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Any pastors wishing assistance in evangelistic services during the summer should correspond with Rev. G. S. Hunt, Millersville, Ala. Bro. Hunt graduated from Elon College last May, and since then has helped in evangelistic work and served very successfully as pastor. He is a successful preacher and evangelist.

Our Methodist Protestant brethren have voted to merge two of their papers, the Methodist Recorder, of Pittsburgh, Pa., and the Methodist Protestant, of Baltimore, the united publication to be published at Baltimore, Md. By their latest published statistics, this denomination now has a membership of 193,665, a gain of 5,585 over 1927.

That is a letterful of interesting information from our Lynchburg Church. Evidently, Bro. G. C. Crutchfield and his co-workers are busy at Lynchburg. We wish more of our Churches would make such reports. The columns of THE CHRISTIAN SUN are open to Church news from any and all the Churches, and we only regret that we do not have more of it to carry.

Rev. J. W. Barrett, 308 Eighth Street, Hopewell, Va., pastor of our Hopewell Church, under recent date, writes: "I am trying to get each member of the Church School and of the Church also to give a definite amount each Sunday, or once each month, for missions. We are a missionary people. We just lack the ability to do more. Our prayers are with you." Bro. Barrett is finding a plenty of work to engage all his time and energy in the new Church at Hopewell, and he writes most hopefully about the work and the prospects there.

Elsewhere is presented by her pastor, Dr. G. O. Lankford, a tribute to Mrs. P. H. Fleming, Burlington, N. C., whose decease was noted in THE SUN of last week. The funeral services were conducted from the Burlington Christian Church, Monday P. M., by Dr. G. O. Lankford, assisted by Dr. J. U. Newnan, Elon College; Dr. W. W. Staley, Suffolk, Va., and J. O. Atkinson. A great congregation gathered to pay tribute of respect to the memory of this good woman and to express their sympathy with the bereaved family. The floral offering was most beautiful and elaborate, expressive of the beautiful life in whose name and memory the tribute was brought.

The following is from the Lynchburg, Va., Daily: "A goal of $300, to be raised by October, was set by the members of the Ladies' Aid Society of the United Christian Church at the monthly meeting held last evening at the home of Mrs. W. C. Harvey. The funds to be raised will be used to pay for improvements on the Church building. Announcement was made that $20 has been received on the quilt fund, this to be used to purchase shades for the building. Mrs. W. T. Tolley, Sr., is president of the society. After the meeting, refreshments were served by the hostess. Announcement was also made that a box party will be given at the Church tomorrow evening at 7:30 o'clock."

Dr. W. S. Alexander, who has served so acceptably as pastor of the college Church at Elon for the past five years, tendered his resignation on last Wednesday to the congregation, stating that he looked forward to returning, with the end of August when his resignation is effective, to a "normal" pastorate. Dr. Alexander has served nine years as college pastor, four years at Union Christian College and five years at Elon, and while he has been very successful in his college pastorates, and also as teacher of classes in Bible and religious education in both colleges, he is anxious to get back to the regular work of the ministry, and to that end he has tendered his resignation. The Church will be fortunate that secures Dr. Alexander's services.

The Greensboro Daily News editorially declares that, while the people generally are crying hard times and money seems to be scarce, the people are yet "able to put out for anything that they deeply desire." This conclusion, the News reaches from the fact that during January, 1929, more automobiles were sold in North Carolina than in any other January of the past five years, and that in February, 1929, more automobiles were sold than have ever been sold in any other February of any year, and that in the first two months of 1929 the number of automobiles sold in the State is nearly a fourth of all the automobiles sold in the twelve months of last year. The News editor decides that while there is no reason to become unduly excited about these facts, yet "North Carolinians are still able to put out for what they wish." It really seems so.

It has been announced that, in the effort to meet a long-felt need, a school of leadership in recreation and play will be conducted during the coming summer at the Blue Ridge Association conference grounds, Blue Ridge, N. C., beginning July 18th and running through three weeks, with the possibility of repetition if the enrollment justifies. Dr. W. D. Weatherford, executive secretary of the Blue Ridge Association, has worked out a dozen courses covering almost every phase of boys' work, Sunday School and Scout activities, girls' club work, indoor and outdoor play, nature study, etc., each of which will be given by a specialist in that particular field. Among the members of the faculty already engaged are Prof. Walter L. Stone, Dr. R. E. Baber, Prof. A. B. Miles, Dr. J. L. Kesler, Miss Ruth Coble, and a number of others. Any one interested, either in attending this school or in the possibility of sending some one for special training, should communicate with Dr. W. D. Weatherford, Y. M. C. A. graduate school, Nashville, Tenn.

A tentative program of the twentieth annual meeting of the Conference of Congregational Churches of the Carolinas in fraternal session, with members of the North Carolina Christian Church and the Society of Friends, has been prepared, the meeting to be held at the Congregational Church (Church of the Wide Fellowship), at Southern Pines, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday—April 2, 3 and 4. This is to be a fellowship meeting, and for the purposes of discussion and understanding between ministers and laymen of the Congregational and Christian Churches who are invited and expected to attend. Among the speakers on the program for the Christian Church are Rev. W. S. Alexander, D. D., Elon College; Dr. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro; Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College; Dr. G. O. Lankford, Burlington; Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, Durham; Dr. J. Edward Kirby, Raleigh; Rev. Ross Ensminger, Elon College; President W. A. Harper, Elon College. The Congregationalists have an array of speakers, and the program seems a most inviting one, and it is hoped that many of our people can avail themselves of this meeting. The Friends have about an equal number of speakers with the Christians and Congregationalists. The entertaining Church will give lodging and breakfast to delegates and visitors.

A TRIBUTE.

BY REV. J. O. LANKFORD.

Mrs. Ella Sipe Fleming, wife of Dr. P. H. Fleming, was a native of Rockingham County, Shenandoah Valley, Va. She was the daughter of Col. and Mrs. Emanuel Sipe, of the place just named, her parents being among the most honored and highly esteemed citizens of that section of the State.

She passed peacefully and triumphantly to the other and the larger, richer life at her home here on Saturday evening, March 9, 1929, at 7:45 o'clock, following a critical illness for a little more than a week.

To the union of her marriage with Dr. P. H. Fleming, this union being a most happy one during the years that have followed, six children were born, five of whom, with the husband, survive, as follows: J. S., Warsaw, N. C.; W. H., Henderson, N. C.; J. H. Laurinburg, N. C.; H. J., Windsor, Vt., and Miss Nellie, of Burlington. One son, John Edward, 19 months of age, preceded the mother to the grave.

Surviving also are two brothers and two sisters, as follows: W. H. Sipe, Bridgewater, Va.; D. J. Sipe, News Ferry, Va.; Mrs. J. J. Lincoln, Lawrenceville, N. J., and Mrs. C. E. Beery, Hagerstown, Md.

In her early girlhood, Mrs. Fleming made open and public confession of Christ as her personal Saviour, and united with the Church in the community of her birth. Coming to Graham, this county, as a bride, she transferred her Church membership there, where she began an active career of service in the Church, which continued until her last illness a few days ago, she having been an interested, active, faithful member of the Burlington Christian Church since her husband became pastor quite a number of years ago.

And now, as her pastor for the past eight years and having lived as neighbors, our homes being side by side during this time, and having, therefore, come to know and esteem the deceased as I have, there are a number of things I should count it a privilege to mention, but I shall limit my remarks at this time to only a few brief statements, for another who has known her and her family much longer than I will speak a little later.

I wish, then, simply to say that a most noble Christian woman has lived in our midst, has made a most worthy contribution through her life and service to the home, the Church, the community and the county. As a sincere, devout, earnest Christian woman, she has given definite and concrete expression to her strength of character, to her steadfastness of purpose, to her largeness and loftiness of ideal, and to her breadth and unselfishness of spirit through the many avenues of loving, sacrificial service into which and through which the privileges and responsibilities of life called her.

Mrs. Fleming was a true, faithful and devoted wife, a loving, thoughtful mother, a woman of great foresight and insight, a wife of great energy, sympathy and understanding, a mother of intense earnestness yet exceedingly tender, a Christian of wide vision and a lofty conception of the privileges of her discipleship in Christ.

Wife, mother, neighbor, friend, Christian, servant of Christ, servant of the many in need. This is she whose form now sleeps in our midst and whose spirit now lives in the house not made with hands, eternal and in the heavens, and upon whose brow, forever released from suffering and forever relieved of pain, rests a crown incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away.

Wherefore, let us be comforted in the Christian's hope that is an anchor to the soul, and may we lean constantly upon the everlasting arms of Him who is our eternal refuge and strength, and a very present help in trouble.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

DIRECTIVE PURPOSE OF THE UNIVERSE.

By CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE, U. S. N.

"The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth His handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge. There is no speech nor language where their voice is not heard. Their line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world."—Psa. 19:1-4.

"So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts to wisdom."—Psa. 90:12.

This verse of the Psalms has become the funeral hymn of Christendom recited at the burial of the dead. It is the thought of a man who has reached the evening-time of life and out of his experience has realized that life's supreme quest should be the right use of time, of knowledge, and of things around him, and an unswerving determination to get and rightly interpret and apply all things to the main purpose of his life. The greatest men of the world—those who have contributed most to the good of mankind, are those who have done this, and regarded time as the most precious commodity of life to be spent carefully—husbanding every hour to some good. Life is too short to start for Rio with a mission there and land in Africa. Life is too short to be given for a specific achievement and then fail to attain it. It is too short to have a duty and never perform it; to aim at the perfection of a soul and miss it. "What shall it profit a man if he gains the whole world and lose his own soul." What good is knowledge of the world if we forget its uses? What is to be gained if we start on a perfectly good journey with a perfectly good ship and wantonly run it on the rocks? The psalmist is saying that every one owes it to himself to turn the whole universe, as far as it is possible, to his own use, to his own welfare and achievement, and to look upon life's end seriously enough to strive every day to do what he would be found doing if he knew that judgment were to come tomorrow. He is also saying that the heavens, the firmament, and the earth and everything that is in it throbs with fullness of knowledge and is loud with speech that none of us may be lacking in knowing what to do.

Life a Strenuous Business—Not a Picnic.

When we talk about living seriously, the element of personal pleasure comes up. How much pleasure does Christianity take away from us? We cannot expect to accomplish anything without some self-denial of personal pleasures. The superior goals of life are not obtained in the pursuit of pleasure. This fact is more comprehensive to us when it is set in the things we are familiar with, and a bit of sea-going will help us.

For example, Mr. Wilbur, our Secretary of the Navy, in his address to the midshipmen last year, aptly sets forth "the voyage of life" in sea-going analogy. In brief, it is this: When we put to sea, our navigator becomes one of the busiest men, engaged night and day in charting the path for the ship in order not only to keep it in safety every minute, but to make certain the destination. He uses not only gyros, the magnetic compasses, the radio, the sextant, the chronometer, the lead line, the log, the buoys, the lights, the signals, and every ingenuity of man to find his path, but also uses his assistants to check every detail that he may attain the highest degree of certainty. And this is not enough. If he stops there he fails.

He must look beyond man to the heavenly bodies. God hath prepared His throne in the heavens where its treasures fail not. It is to this throne he has lifted his heart. Like as unto the sweet singer of Israel, to him "the heavens drop with the presence of God" and, together with all the learning of man in astronomy, approximating the error caused by the wind, fog, currents, clouds, storms, hurricanes, etc., He reduces all obstacles and dangers to a minimum. In all these he is doing nothing less than consulting God. He is conforming to the will of an infinite Creator as his truest Guide, and acknowledging Him as the supreme element in his own operations. Isaiah would say, "Drop down, ye heavens, from above, and let the skies pour down righteousness; let the earth open, that they may bring forth salvation . . . I, the Lord, have created it." The astronomer said, "O Lord, I am thinking Thy thoughts after Thee."

This has been no pleasure trip to the man on the bridge. When the "hook" has been dropped and the ship is safe in port, he goes to bed for a long rest. "Safe, safe at last, the danger past; safe in my father's home." Safe? Yes, but it took both man and God to make it safe—and it was no picnic. The hard and confining work of doing that was his paramount duty.

Had he given himself to pleasure during his voyage, "grief would have soon trod upon his heels; he would now be wearing a fool's mask as though it were worthy the dignity of life's highest calling to sacrifice the true course and the goal for passing levity.

Christianity does not exclude the harmless pleasures, but—

"Pleasures are like poppies spread:
You seize the flower
And the bloom is shed."

—Burns.

God has intended that we shall live for something better than pleasure. Pleasure itself is right enough, but when it cheats us out of our birthright—the culture of our spiritual natures—it is sin. In directing life's energies, anything short of the constancy and wisdom of a navigator; anything short of making God the supreme object of our reverence, affections and achievement is to disobey the first and highest laws governing the attainment of those ends, and miss the goal. Charles Lamb tells us that it is "like setting a house on fire in order to have a roasted pig."

After all, the greatest pleasures come from success in achievement. What pleasure is there to have some fun and sink the ship? What pleasure is there to the "Laughing Fool"? Yea, verily, they who spend their lives in pursuit of pleasures, never get it. "A perpetual cackle is the mark of an idiot." The greatest pleasures come in the hard work that wins a worthy object and bestows fortune's most splendid gifts.

A Constant Vision of Life's Continuity.

Life is one continuous course to run, whose end is God. How small is man in it! But when we consider that the whole universe is made for him, not only to live in but for him to master and use for his own advancement until he is transferred from the earthly to the heavenly, we begin to feel like David that "He is but a little lower than the angels and crowned with glory."

Man has been created for eternity, and this life is but the beginning of the whole. Ever since the Son of man stood amidst men and said, "I am the Way, the Truth and the Life," the soul of man has been raised to the level of the Saviour—God, and it is on that level every one finds everything that is necessary to aid him in following the true course.

With the instruments of man, with the rules of the road, with the sign-posts along the way, with the sun, moon and stars of the heavens, the navigator develops an intense consciousness of union with the Supreme Ruler and Architect of the Universe.

Likewise, with the wisdom of man and God, in Jesus Christ, the believer develops an intense consciousness of union with Divine life, so that both the human and the divine seem to be one continuous course, whose end is heaven—the world "toward which the whole creation moves"; and the whole cosmic universe lends its entire force to an every-day consciousness of steering the course; and the most satisfying experience one ever has in doing that is the consciousness of be-

Shall We Share the Gospel with Others? IF SO, TO WHAT EXTENT?

One million, seven hundred thousand souls in Japan and Porto Rico alone are depending upon us. If we of the Christian denomination do not share with them the Gospel, they will never get it. February and March are "Foreign Mission Months" in the Southern Christian Convention. What will the answer be from us as individuals, Sunday Schools and Churches? We are depending upon each and every one to do his or her best in obedience to the command of our Lord, "Go ye."

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

WIFE AND MOTHER.

The highest creative act of Christianity and of civilization is a devoted wife who is at the same time a godly mother. Our language has been exhausted in its endeavor to pay proper tribute to wife and mother. It cannot be done. Every grace known to the human mind, and every virtue manifest in human character, come to their highest and holiest in man's helpmeet, the loyal and loving wife and mother. Like the fragrance of the blushing rose, or the glory of a gorgeous sunset, such a character beggars description and defies definition. Such wives and such mothers are the glory of the Christian home, the joy of any community and the strength of an advancing civilization. Words are wasted when one undertakes in any adequate way to extoll the graces and the virtues of such characters. All who know them will agree in saying that they are the best that our civilization and our Christianity have given or can give us. Such reflections come when one of these souls goes out from us.

As the writer attended the funeral of Mrs. P. H. Fleming, Burlington, N. C., March 18th, and saw evidences of such loving esteem for the soul that had taken its flight to God, he could not help meditating upon such a life and what it contained, contributed and meant to the world.

Sister Fleming, reared from early childhood in cultural and Christian surroundings, nurtured in the school of grace and graciousness, uniting her life and destiny in the years of her youth to a minister of the gospel, beloved and respected everywhere, giving full strength of her strong hand, stout heart and great soul to the rearing of a goodly family and the cultivation in that family and in her community of those virtues and graces which are the crowning glory of human character and human achievement, she filled her days with service to man and God, proved herself a blessing to her household and to all with whom she came in contact, and now, after a busy and beautiful life of rich and fruitful service, calmly and quietly lays herself down to sleep, and her soul wings its flight back to the God who gave it. Surely, the wisest of men had her and others like her in mind when He said: "She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and the law of kindness is on her tongue. A woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised." And we who know her, only to honor, revere and esteem her, can most heartily join in the sentiment of the same wise man who said of such a character, "Give her of the fruit of her hands, and let her own works praise her in the gates."

While we naturally grieve because a home, a community and this earth are poorer because of the going from us in the flesh of such a one, we cannot grieve as those who have no hope, because we realize full well that heaven and the heavenly host are the richer by her going, and that her friends and loved ones who remain here for a season have now a new tie that binds them to the better world, and a new and shining light to shine on their pathway as they walk awhile yet the paths of earth that lead to God and to glory. But God will turn our mourning into joy, our sorrow into gladness, and our ashes into beauty as we ourselves, taking strength and courage from such a life as this, shall push on from thence ever nearer and closer to the pearly gates, knowing full well that when we shall have pressed in after the gates have swung ajar for us we shall meet her and all like her there who, through a firm, fixed faith in our Saviour and Redeemer, have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Every loving, loyal, faithful wife and gracious and godly mother is an inspiration to better deeds, to nobler living and to holier achievements, and we thank God for every such one who comes into our lives and helps and inspires us along the way. We know full well, though we cannot properly appraise them, the weight and the worth of such lives, and we know full well how and where to find them. They are challenging and beckoning us on to a better and brighter day, even to a place in that house not made with hands eternal, and in the heavens. I think such a person as good Sister Fleming had no higher hope and no holier ambition than that she should be a source of helpfulness, of comfort and of inspiration to her beloved husband and companion, to the children of her heart and her home, to her relatives and friends, and to all in this world who needed help, and for these she poured out her great love and gave her splendid life.

Such lives make this world a little more like heaven, and crown the creative act with a glory and a joy that will not fade away. Through such lives, heaven visits earth and shows us what we may expect, and what sort of souls we will have fellowship with beyond this veil of tears and in that land of triumph.

THE EASTER OFFERING.

Easter is the glad time of the year for Christians. It is the time when the crowning event of all time is celebrated. The resurrection of our Lord proved His Messiahship and set the seal of certainty upon the life He had lived and the message that He had brought to the world. After the crucifixion, the two disciples who talked to the Lord, not knowing that He was the Lord, on the way to Emmaus, said very significantly, "We had hoped that it was He who would redeem Israel." The resurrection signifies the revival of a lost hope, the reclaiming of all that the gospel had promised. It gives to Christian people the assurance that all that our Saviour had claimed for Himself was true. It did more than this. It showed that He had power even over death, and that He was Master of the grave. Here is our hope and here is the joy that fills our hearts with the one thing whom we believe is able of Himself to come forth from the grave, and, therefore, has the power to make good the promise, "Whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die; I am the resurrection and the life."

Surely all Christians at such a time should not only be willing but most anxious to lay their sacrificial offerings on the altar of God to help herald these glad tidings to all the world. As we enjoy the glad Easter season and realize what it means to us and then reflect that nearly two thousand years after that greatest of all events a majority of the people had never heard of it and know nothing of the Christ who arose from the dead, it does seem, I say, that we Christians would rejoice in the privilege of giving liberally of our means to carry the gospel, this blessed gospel, of hope and of eternal life to those who wait in darkness till we give them this light. We should make a real sacrifice, for this will only make our joy and gladness the more acute and the Easter season a more glorious event.

We should, one and all, carry our offerings, sacrificial offerings, to the Church of the living God at Easter time, and with prayer and thanksgiving lay those offerings on His altar to be used of Him to advance His kingdom in the world. Shall we not make our offering liberal, indeed, this Easter time?

NOT ASHAMED OF THE GOSPEL.

Paul had been ashamed of the gospel. He had held it in disdain and contempt. He regarded it as a matter belonging to the ignorant, the deluded, the superstitious, the impotent and the degraded. He had studied life from its various angles, and he saw no need of the gospel. And then one day he made a discovery. He found to his amazement that here was something that dealt not with the detached portions of life, but with all of life. He discovered that here was the power that could conquer a man's will and change his whole outlook. He had regarded man as a mind to be instructed. He now discovered that man was a soul to be saved, and that here was a power sufficient to save him.

Now, after Paul had seen the effect of the gospel on his own life, he discovers that there are others who are ashamed of it. In the imperial city of Rome, he knew that the high-brows, the learned, the intelligentia, scoffed at the gospel and were ashamed to have anything to do with it. Paul, writing to the individuals of Rome whose lives this gospel had touched, made it clear to them that he was not ashamed of the gospel, and he tells why; that it is the power of God unto salvation to all who believe.

The trouble with many at Rome and of those who were ashamed of the gospel was that they had lost or had never developed the sense of sin. The most difficult thing that Paul had to do in his day was to make people realize the hideousness of sin, that they were sinners and needed a Saviour.

That same difficulty confronts the world of our day. The world doesn't need a new salvation; it does need a sense of sin and the realization of the need of a Saviour.

It will do us no good to point out this fact or to worry ourselves into trying to stimulate the sense of sin. It will help us, however, if we will look about us and see the offering, the anguish, the distress, the deplorable condition of a sin-cursed world. In our easy-going time, when life is complacent and all those conditions are sought which make life comfortable and agreeable and luxurious, we need to lay on our hearts the burden of a world around about us in sin and whose deplorable condition has been brought about because of sin.

The great suffering of the world today comes from sin. Nearly two-thirds of humanity are without our Lord or a knowledge of Him, who is the world's only Saviour and Redeemer. Truly did He say: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." Instead of worrying ourselves to develop a sense of sin, we do need to be anxious about the condition of a sin-stricken and a sin-cursed world and to realize that sin, like a monster, is doing its hideous work in destroying the bodies and souls of men. J. O. A.

SYSTEMATIC GIVING.

Giving of money to carry on the Lord's work is biblical and a necessity. The Bible not only suggests a system but a sum to be given. "Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come" (1 Cor. 16:2). Three things are specified in this Scripture: (a) First day of the week (that is system); (b) every one of you (every member of the Church should give); (c) as God hath prospered him (that makes the whole matter of giving plain, easy to be understood and binding upon all). It is seen, therefore, that the Divine plan is for weekly offerings, individual offerings, and offerings according to what people have. Among the failures to comply with this Bible instruction are two prominent thoughts and decisions. People who have but little think their giving would be so small that it would not count; hence they neglect to give. Those who are able to give much, think it is too much trouble to make weekly payments, and they wait until some convenient time to give. These two ideas keep the treasury of the Church hard up all the time.

If one examines God's operations in nature, he will discover system in the rising of the sun, the flowing of streams, the rising and falling of the tides, the coming of the seasons, the growing of crops, and all that God does for man. If God did not work thus in nature, it might mean starvation for mankind. If spring did not come systematically; if it were deferred for two years, bread would be lacking and the race would starve. Now a part of the religious life is to be like God; to treat His interests as he treats our interests. Spasmodic giving does not accord with the Bible nor the necessity of the Church. Special offerings may be necessary in cases of emergency, as heavy showers of rain may come at intervals; but it is the gentle rain and the regular giving that supports the Church and her enterprises.

It requires regular eating to support the body in health, regular work in the store to care for the business, system in the school to educate the rising generation, a regular schedule for all modes of transportation; and it requires just as fine a system of support for the Church; and that cannot be well done without systematic giving as the word prospers us. Those who can give only the least are under the same obligation to give as those who can give the most. Obligation is not measured by what men give, but by their ability to give; and system is just as necessary for the smallest givers as for the largest givers. The easiest method of giving is systematic giving. Where members fail to give, they suffer more than the Church; and nothing has surer reward and larger satisfaction than systematic giving as the Lord prospers men. W. W. S.

WANTED: A NEW NOTE OF HOPE.

We need inside the Church a new note of hope and a new note of cheer, and the only way to get it is to go back to the fundamental Christian facts—to the resurrection of our Lord. The resurrection is the proof and pledge of the power of the Christian life. We are accustomed to speak of the power of the Holy Spirit as the great energy of Christianity. It is so. But in what cannot be said is this power set forth in the New Testament? Inseparably from the resurrection. So Peter declared on Pentecost: "This Jesus did God raise up, whereof we all are witnesses. Being, therefore, by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, He hath poured forth this, which ye see and hear." The risen Christ is the proof and donor of all power, and the resurrection is the pledge and measure of it. How may we know "the exceeding greatness of His power toward us who believe?" Why, "according to that working of the strength of His might which He wrought in Christ when He raised Him from the dead." There is no possibility of disconnecting the power of the Holy Spirit from the resurrection. The power of the Holy Spirit raised Jesus from the dead. He was declared to be the Son of God with power according to the spirit of holiness by His resurrection. And it was the power of the risen Christ which came forth in the Holy Spirit, given without measure to men. Here is power sufficient for all our duty—God's power, free and limitless.

We felt all this vividly last Easter in Jerusalem at the meeting of the International Missionary Council. Monday evening we had gone to St. George's Church at the Jaffa Gate, through which Allenby came in when Jerusalem fell or rose in the great war. After our Communion service together, we went through the deserted streets of the city, down David Street and then through the silent bazaars to the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, and from the Church of the Holy Sepulchre through the Via Dolorosa up which Christ came that dread day with the cross, by the Church of Ecce Homo over the pavement where He was judged by the Pool of Bethesda and through St. Stephen's Gate, down to the brook Kedron and then into the Garden of Gethsemane, where we sat under the olive trees while the clouds hurried across the face of the paschal moon, and there we knelt and prayed, as Our Lord had prayed on that night on which He was betrayed.

On Easter morning we were by the grave where He may have lain, and when the sun was well up we gathered for our Easter morning Communion at the German Hospice on the Mount of Olives. As we sat there meditating on the resurrection, looking eastward across the Dead Sea to the hills of Moab and Gilead, and then westward over the city, it seemed to us that any moment the door might burst open and Simon Peter come rushing in with his joyful cry, "The Lord is risen, at any moment He may be here. All things are possible now. He has conquered all things. Blessed be the God and Father who has raised Him from the dead. Anything can happen in the world where He lives again, by the power of an endless life, forevermore." It seemed to us that we were ready to go out into the modern world with all its need with the old authentic gospel of the New Testament, assured of its adequacy and its power, and with the presence with us to the end of time of Him who came neither to condemn nor to loose, but to redeem and save the world.

I know very well what the world says to all this "pure moonshine, sheer moralistic idealism." Not so. This is the only hard reality. We are standing on the unimpeachable facts of the world's indisputable needs and the reality of the gospel and the incarnation and the resurrection. We will never get what we want on any other road than this. The world will seek forever for the answer to its needs in vain until it seeks of Him who is Himself the Great Seeker, who came to seek and to save that which was lost. That word "lost" is an old and well-worn word, but as fresh and true today as it ever was, and the only hope for the world is to be found there where alone each man of us can find hope for himself. "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God."

Without that, no new heaven and new earth filled with righteousness; but with that the heavenly vision and the fulfillment of it: "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away. And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and He shall dwell with them and they shall be His people and God Himself shall be with them and be their God."

PULPIT BOOK REVIEWS.

The New York Times of February 5th quotes Dr. C. L. Goodell as saying, "If there is not anything more important to preach to your people about than a new book, then you should not preach at all. The only real sermon is the one that declares, 'Thus saith the Lord.'"

Dr. Goodell is chairman of the Commission on Evangelization of the Federal Council of Churches. What he says is therefore important either in its rightness or its wrongness. And his present statement seems to me tragically important in its wrongness.

If Dr. Goodell means that preachers should not rush into the pulpit to talk of every new novel, or even of every new scientific or religious book, most of us will agree. If this is what he means, he should have said this, and not what he did say.

There is no higher duty incumbent on the ministry today than that of using the time their people give to them for the purpose of studying and digesting some of the best new books, and then giving the results to their busy people who often have no time to read for themselves. Church people are hungry to share the thought-life of their times, and if they were allowed and invited to do so by the ministers, the Churches would not today be so much berated for being out of touch with our modern life. One of the greatest opportunities of the present-day Church and pulpit is to be a spiritual university extension course for men and women who have not been to college, and for college men and women, too, who are laden with duties that rob them of the time to read. Of course, no sane preacher will allow book-sermons to be the only fare he gives his hearers. But to follow John Milton's definition, "a good book is the life-blood of a master spirit," and to refresh the people with draughts from these sources is surely a ministry to souls much needed.

Does Dr. Goodell think that all the new books are just written for fun, or for money? Some of them, as I have seen in this winter's reading, and as I have helped, I hope, a few others to see, are as full of "Thus saith the Lord" as any sermons of any age, including some of those in the Bible.

Dr. Goodell's statement is unfortunate, in that it is one more of those utterances that widen the gap between the thought processes of the mind and the health of the soul. It is one more rebuff to people who want to bring both mind and soul into the Lord's temple. It is one more invitation to many reading people to stay outside the Church. It is one more encouragement to ignorance in the pulpit. The vaporous "Thus saith the Lord" of many a preacher might well find added power if he said "Thus saith the Lord through the lips of our contemporary, So and So."

Dr. Goodell need have no fear that too many book-review sermons will be preached, for they mean hard work. Only the most industrious men will give the work needed. Many of the others will continue to cry, "Thus saith the Lord."—Rev. Geo. L. Parker, in N. Y. Times.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Nothing is more religiously impressive than the funeral services of a good person held in a Church. It turns the heart in a reverent mood toward Jesus Christ and best human character. The reading of the Scripture lessons, the songs, the prayers, and the remarks, the flowers, and the throng all unite to speak a language that the heart only can understand. Such was the occasion in the Burlington Christian Church on Monday, March 11th, when the funeral service for Mrs. Ella Sipe Fleming, the wife of Rev. Dr. P. H. Fleming, was held at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Her last sickness was brief, but her life had been useful in the service of the King. Pastor G. O. Lankford, Drs. J. U. Newman, J. O. Atkinson, and I took part in the service. A full choir rendered appropriate songs, and Mrs. Huff sang a fine solo. The great auditorium was thronged with friends from two States. More than a hundred floral designs expressed the sympathy and high regard of friends for the deceased and her husband, three sons and one daughter, who survive. The great Church was full of beauty, sweetness, and a feeling of love and hope.

The Fleming home was the union of two families and two States. In their marriage, North Carolina and Virginia had joined the Fleming and Sipe families in bonds not only of love, but a life-service in the Christian Church. The Sipe family was prominent as Church workers in the Valley of Virginia, and the Fleming family had helped to make Mount Auburn great. The past history of these religious families was intensified by the united service of this devoted pair—devoted not only to each other and the Christian Church, but to the welfare of the unfortunate.

Dr. Fleming had filled important positions as superintendent of public schools in Alamance County, secretary of the board of trustees of Elon College for many years, and superintendent of public welfare for Alamance County. In all these positions, Mrs. Fleming was in sympathy and hearty co-operation with her husband, especially in the welfare work. She had a heart responsive to human need and a mind resourceful in methods of help. She held out faithful to the end, and has received a crown of life. "Her children arise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her" (Prov. 31:28).

Mrs. Fleming is survived by her husband, Dr. P. H. Fleming; five children—J. S., Warsaw, N. C.; W. H., Henderson, N. C.; J. H., Laurenburg, N. C.; H. J., Windsor, Vt., and Miss Nellie, at home, Burlington, N. C. John Edward died when nineteen months old.

She is survived also by two brothers, W. H. Sipe, Bridgewater, Va., and D. J. Sipe, News Ferry, Va.; two sisters, Mrs. J. J. Lincoln, Lawrenceville, N. J., and Mrs. C. E. Beery, Hagerstown, Md.

Mrs. Fleming began her Church work after her marriage, in the Church in Graham; and then in the Burlington Church, where Dr. Fleming became pastor; and she continued her work with the Burlington Church to the close of her career. There is no greater asset in a minister's life than a wife adapted to his work and helpful in it; and Mrs. Fleming was that kind of a companion. The luster of the close of such a life never fades from memory or stops her work.

ELON LETTER.

I was talking today with one of the leading business men of my acquaintance on the deep significances of life. This business man of large affairs, who looks at life not as a fitting experience, but as an opportunity for human advancement, is deeply interested in religion as foundational in every life.

In the course of our conversation, he expressed himself as not exactly in harmony with the denominational colleges, which he feels perpetuate sectarianism. He has no patience with sectarianism, and yet he believes that religion cannot be divorced from life without disastrous effects upon character.

Very naturally, our conversation drifted from education through a general consideration of religion to the Church and to the ministry of the Church. My friend is a regular attendant on the public worship of the Church. If he is not at home on the Sabbath to attend the service in the sanctuary in which it is his custom to worship, he seeks some other Church in which he may give public expression to his confidence in religion and the necessity of religion for personal life and social well-being.

"I have not heard a minister anywhere since the war speak of sin," my friend said. "They will talk about events that happened many years ago and about the unfortunate circumstances in which we find ourselves today, but sermons for the most part lack a vigorous attitude toward sin, and in this there is a great mistake."

My friend is deeply read in philosophy and he understands the trends in modern psychology, particularly the behavioristic and mechanistic trends, according to which sin is a mistake in judgment, a situation in which a man did not measure up to his best, but in which the man has no sense of his relationship or responsibility direct to the will and mind and purpose of a Divine Being.

This upstanding business man is old-fashioned enough to believe in God and to feel that God has standards for life which a man may not violate with impunity. He longs for the Church and those who are its mouthpieces to take a vigorous attitude toward sin and advocate at the same time constructive measures for the improvement of life and of the social order.

It was a refreshing experience to be privileged to talk with this intelligent and straight-thinking business man. I feel sure that he has given me a new sense of the obligation of life to serve God and to do the right which I very much needed, and I am passing on this impression to the readers of the Elon Letter, hoping that this cursory treatment of our conversation may be of some benefit to some at least who may read.

PORTO RICO LETTER.

Dear Folks:

Since Christmas a good many things have taken place that I feel sure you will be interested to know. In spite of poverty and sickness, the programs of our Churches have been carried on with much enthusiasm, and most of our members have been trying to help with their offerings to the best of their ability. I suppose most of you know the conditions of this field since the terrible storm took place and destroyed some of our Churches, as well as destroying the homes of some of our faithful members. Of course, all this means a very dreary future for our self-supporting dreams. However, we in Porto Rico have a strong faith, and we still are looking for brighter and better days for our mission.

On the 16th of this month, our Sunday School and Christian Endeavor conference met at Salinas. A very interesting program was enjoyed by all. Many new thoughts were presented to the conference to arouse the interest of our young people. A new committee was appointed to draw a uniform plan for our teacher-training classes. Of course, in some of our Churches we have tried to have these classes, but have not been recognized. But we are in hopes that this committee can make a plan of study that will meet the needs of our Churches; also that it will be possible to carry on without any difficulties. The part that was enjoyed the most was the evening session conducted by the evangelical family, Rev. and Mrs. F. J. Peters, who were holding services at our Salinas Church at that time, and as result of their campaign over 100 persons made profession of faith. We certainly ought to be very proud of our pastor at Salinas for his earnest work. Our Salinas Church is one of the most active Churches we have. Let us all pray for Bro. Romero, that he may create more love and enthusiasm for the kingdom.

On the 22nd, a very enthusiastic conference of the Christian Endeavorers of the island was held at Mayaguez; our Ponce Church had a very large representation. Many leaders of the island brought interesting messages to the youth. This conference showed that the youth of Porto Rico is waking up and recognizing their needs. A splendid spirit of union was shown in this conference. The following denominations were present: United Brethren, Christian, Disciples, Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist—so you see that we are all working together on this island. We will have one evangelical Church on this island. Let us especially pray for the union which will bring salvation to the world.

Our Ponce delegation was compelled to miss the evening session of the conference, and to return to Ponce for our special program of our 26th anniversary of Ponce Church. A very impressive service was enjoyed by all members and the visitors. And we were very fortunate to have our new organ, which has been bought by the hard work of various members of the Church and Sunday School departments. All these things are encouragements to all of us that are trying to labor in His kingdom. "Ask with faith, and it shall be given to you."

Now, Bro. Ojeda, Dona Delfena and I are very busy, making an every-member canvass and holding open-air services at various sections of the city. Yesterday Bro. Ojeda and I took our lunch and spent about ten hours at Calusall, visiting the members of our Calusall Sunday School and others that we thought would be interested. And in the evening we held a prayer-meeting, when forty-seven persons were present in our little chapel. As the result of the meeting, we had one who made profession of a faith, and a young couple that are very strict Catholics expressed their interest and promised to attend our services. Yes, there is a great need for personal work. Since the first part of this month I have been walking about two miles to attend, also helping with our services at our Calusall Chapel. I often wish that the hours of the day were longer, so that I could complete my plans for the day's work.

We need your earnest prayers daily.

Ponce, P. R.

VICTORIA E. ADAMS.

"THIS IS LIFE ETERNAL."

One of the very last things Jesus Christ did on earth was to offer the most wonderful prayer ever recorded. This prayer occupies the entire seventeenth chapter of John. At the beginning of this chapter it says:

"These things spake Jesus; and lifting up His eyes to heaven, He said, Father, the hour is come; glorify Thy Son, that the Son may glorify Thee: even as Thou gavest Him authority over all flesh, that to all whom Thou hast given Him, He should give eternal life. And this is life eternal, that they should know Thee the only true God, and Him whom Thou didst send, even Jesus Christ" (John 17:1-3).

There is no question that concerns humanity more than that of eternal life. We start into this life as infants, and before we realize it we have reached old age. And he who does not solve for himself the problem of eternal life has missed everything that is worth while, regardless of how much he may have achieved in fame or in anything else that goes to make up the ordinary processes of this life.

But Jesus says in this text, as He is communing with His Heavenly Father, that "Thou gavest Him authority over all flesh, that to all whom Thou hast given Him, He should give eternal life." The great purpose of the Master in His mission on earth was to bestow eternal life. And then He says that eternal life is received through knowing the only true God, and the Lord Jesus Christ. This is a very simple statement of a fact that has infinite possibilities in it. And to get hold of the truth uttered in these Scriptures means to change the whole processes of life; for to "know" God means to know His great character of love; for, says the Scripture, "He that loveth not; knoweth not God; for God is love" (1 John 4:8).

Let the mind dwell upon this Scripture. Let it be emphasized over and over again that the individual who "loveth not knoweth not God." Then the only way to become acquainted with God is to give up our hatreds and all of the evils that go with them, and come to the great Fountain of life and power, our Heavenly Father Himself, and learn from Him the sublime fact that He "is love." And one of the most beautiful facts of His life, as expressed in His love, is expressed in these words:

"Herein was the love of God manifested in us, that God hath sent His only begotten Son into the world that we might live through Him. Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins" (1 John 4:9, 10).

Spend time with this verse. Tremendous is the statement, "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins." Emphasis should be placed upon this point, for the thought is repeated in verse nineteen, as follows: "We love, because He first loved us." He loves us "first," and it is in this way we are encouraged and drawn to Him.

The individual is drawn toward God just as soon as he learns to know the true God, because, just as expressed in these wonderful Scriptures, "God is love," and He is seeking to draw us toward Himself by the love that He manifests toward us. As soon as the individual catches that vision clearly, the heart is imperceptibly drawn toward God.

But the great enemy of our souls is seeking to obscure God, so that we do not get this view of Him. He is seeking to keep us away from a true knowledge of our Heavenly Father. This was manifested in a remarkable way in the life of the apostle Paul, for as soon as Paul got a real, true vision of the Master Himself, he turned away from all of the things that he had regarded so highly—his position in the nation and everything of that sort—and affirms:

"Yea, verily, and I count all things to be loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but refuse, that I may gain Christ, and be found in Him, not having a righteousness of mine own, even that which is of the law, but that which is through faith in Christ, the righteousness which is from God by faith: that I may know Him, and the power of His resurrection, and the fellowship of His sufferings, becoming conformed unto His death; if by any means I may attain unto the resurrection from the dead. Not that I have already obtained, or am already made perfect; but I press on, if so be that I may lay hold on that for which also I was laid hold on by Christ Jesus. Brethren, I count not myself yet to have laid hold: but one thing I do, forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press on toward the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Let us, therefore, as many as are perfect, be thus minded: and if in anything ye are otherwise minded, this also shall God reveal unto you: only, whereunto we have attained, by that same rule let us walk" (Phil. 3:8-16).

Paul, like many others, had evidently been impressed by the wonderful life that Jesus lived, but, through his prejudice, he kept away from Him until finally he got a true vision of Him on that journey to Damascus. Then the great love of Christ as a mighty magnet drew Paul, so that his only desire was "to know im, and the power of His resurrection," and all the rich experiences that come into the soul through the Christ life. "This is life eternal, that they should know Thee, the only true God, and Him whom Thou didst send, even Jesus Christ."—Signs of the Times.

THE GREATEST SIN IN THE WORLD.

(Many CHRISTIAN SUN readers are not acquainted with some of the splendid native preachers and pastors our missionaries have won in Porto Rico and Japan and help to inspire and train them in the work of the ministry. Both in Porto Rico and in Japan some of our very ablest and most consecrated and successful pastors are not those we have sent out from America, but those who have been won to Christ and called to the ministry in their native land. One of the very ablest and most consecrated of these is Bro. Sano, in Japan, and below we give one of his many experiences that will interest all who care for soul-saving.—Ed.)

A stranger who called on me a short time ago said to me, "What is the greatest sin in the world?"

"Since the greatest commandment is to love God with all your heart, if you do not love God, this is the greatest sin," was my reply.

Then the stranger told me the following story: "My home is continually full of quarrels and hatred among the members of my family. My mother was always abused and cruelly treated by her mother-in-law. The quarrels never allowed any place for love so that I never knew what a mother's love was. Being tired of life, my mother took me to a railroad crossing, intending to end both her own life and mine. How did we escape? I don't know, but from my childhood on, the world seemed to be as cold as a block of ice. How can I love God when I have never tasted once the joy of love? How can a loveless heart love God? I left a loveless home many years ago. Until recently I lived by myself, but now my sister lives with me.

"One morning when she was preparing breakfast, I heard her singing, 'What a friend we have in Jesus,' and the song touched my heart. To find out about the Friend, I began to study the Bible, and one day when I was reading the Bible at a railroad station, a stranger seeing me, took an interest in my reading, and I told him my trouble. He told me to come to you, and I have come. What can you do to lift me out of the slough of despond? Can you show me the way into the love of God? My burden is too great to bear. Can you help me?"

What a joy it was to tell him of the glorious good news of the great love of God who in His great mercy sent His own beloved Son to the earth to show us the loving heart of God, to show us that for our sins He died on the cross, that by simply believing on him with a sincere and humble heart, we obtain forgiveness of sin, that the Lord Jesus Christ comes into our hearts with the fullness of love and joy, that we are born again and become the sons of God, that the loving Father deals with us as sons and makes use of all His wisdom and love and power to make us perfectly happy here in this world, and in the next world He will provide a glory for us beyond all we can ask or think and this will go on forever.

This man was completely broken down before the Lord. He repented, and the Lord did take away the burden of sin and filled his heart with love and joy. He came to the next evening service and testified to the wonderful love and power of God, how the Lord in great condescension had come into his heart and taken away his burden of sin and sorrow, had taken away in an instant his love for tobacco, had brought him out of darkness into His marvelous light and had filled his heart with peace and joy.

Jesus made His disciples fishers of men. I wonder if any fisher for fish ever experienced as great a joy as I daily experience when in the Tokyo waters I fish for men for the kingdom of God. Of the problems which many who are burdened with heavy burdens and trials bring, Jesus is able to bear and solve them all. Glory be to His great name!—Genichiro Sano.

MAKERS OF THE FUTURE.

"Not since the days of the Reformation—not, indeed, since the Pentecost—has so great an opportunity confronted the Christian Church. . . . The Far East, as a whole, stands at the parting of the ways." Thus says Bishop Bashford.

Not only is the Far East at the parting of the ways; the same is true of Moslem lands and in superlative degree of India. Everywhere is unrest and tumult; everywhere a groping for the light.

One of America's wisest elder statesmen recently declared, viewing the world situation, that no intellectual or material accomplishment can solve the manifold problems of the present. He considers the purified character of the rank and file of the people of every nation the only solution. Such character he describes as having for its essentials, mercy, compassion, kindly consideration, brotherly affection, sympathy with fellow-man, unselfish willingness to sacrifice for others.

Surely these are the Christian ideals, the fruits of the Spirit of God. Accepting this dictum as simple truth, the missionary enterprise of the Church takes on a new and thrilling significance. Wandering lights have failed the world. The Divine light alone can lighten the gloom.

Let us listen to the solemn admonition of a Chinese statesman. "True liberty does not come from mere political upheavals," he affirms. "True liberty comes only when a man is freed from his sins. It only comes when he has established a true relationship between himself and God, and himself and other men. Without that, he will not be free. One of the best means—indeed, the best—of bringing freedom to the world is to carry Christianity to all peoples. In Christianity we find the germs of all democracy. We find service and brotherhood and helpfulness. In service and in love of one another we find the source of freedom. I always maintain in my political work that to have progress we must bring the gospel to all the people."

These two Christian statesmen—the Hon. Elihu Root and the Hon. C. T. Wang, vice-president of the Chinese senate and delegate to the Peace Conference at Versailles—have spoken prophetically. Believing that the Christian Church cannot fail to respond in this crisis to the mortal challenge of human need the question becomes: how best shall Christianity be made regnant among the nations?

For a hundred years and more, the Church has laid the emphasis upon the number of missionaries and their character. This emphasis must be maintained. But just here two vital points face us at the home base. While the number and fitness of missionaries should be developed as fast as possible, they must, first of all, be men of unimpaired faith in the atoning sacrifice and divine nature of our Lord.

Warnings come to us from Japan and China, and from other fields, of young missionaries who bring an uncertain message. It cannot be forgotten that the Danish-Halle Mission in India, after a century of noble work, "expired under the influence of rationalism," to use the phrase of Kurtz, the German Church historian. "The factor that is really undermining Christian faith is destructive criticism, shaking faith in the Bible and Christ as the divine Saviour. Buddhism and all other false religions attack us from without, and we can fight them squarely, but when destructive criticism comes into the Church it is like an assault from within, and is most damaging." Thus writes Paul Kanamori, the Japanese evangelist, who is giving his life to the proclamation of the gospel among his people.—Caroline A. Mason, in Wonders of Missions.

J. O. ATKINSON, Sec'y.

TO WESTERN N. C. PASTORS.

These lines are addressed to the pastors and Churches of the Western N. C. Christian Conference in the interest of the great missionary enterprise of the Church and because of the imperative demands that are upon us at this time as we face our missionary responsibility.

The missionary undertaking to which we, as a denomination, have set our hands is our work, and there is no source of revenue to which our mission boards can look for funds with which to carry on this work other than our own people. If we fail, then the work fails. If we stand heartily behind our missionary work with our prayers, our co-operation and our money, the work will not only be maintained but enlarged as the years go on.

The Southern Christian Convention calls upon us, one and all, to make a special offering to missions at this Easter time, or upon a date most convenient thereto, in all of our Churches. Each Church, including its Sunday School, is requested to raise during the year an amount equal to one-third the pastor's salary for this missionary purpose. It will be necessary, therefore, for our pastors and Sunday School superintendents to take the lead in earnestly placing this matter before the Churches and Sunday Schools, and then let us hope that the response from each Church will be most generous and whole-hearted, and that the offering we bring for missions this Easter will be worthy of and in keeping with the mercies and blessings which God has graciously granted unto us.

For the convenience of all, in taking our Easter offering, envelopes have been sent from the office of Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary, to all Church secretaries in the Conference, and we hope full and righteous use will be made of the same.

Let us be as thorough as possible in our preparation for the offering, generous and Christ-like in our giving, and prompt in forwarding the funds received to J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C.

Yours in prayer for a great offering for missions from the Western Conference.

G. O. LANKFORD,
President Western N. C. Conference.

AN APPEAL TO PASTORS.

Dear Pastors and Members of the N. C. & Va. Conference:

The time draws apace when we are to make our offering for the missionary enterprise of our Church. As your Conference president, it gives me a thrill as I think of all of our Churches on Easter Sunday morning—the day that should be the happiest day of the year for Christians—coming before the Lord with a free-will offering.

There are some features about this offering that appeal. First, it is equitable, fair, and easily operated. It lays no demands on one Church or member that it does not lay upon every other. There is no compulsion, no assessment. It is true that the goal, one-third the amount of the pastor's salary, has been set in order to have something as an objective and as a reasonable share of each Church. We are hoping and praying that no Church will do less.

Second, it places the responsibility for the success of our mission work where it belongs—upon the rank and file of our people. Missions should be the most popular and powerful benevolent enterprise of the Church. The people will respond if they know. The pastor must give them the facts and the response will be generous and enthusiastic; and when such a response is not secured, it is almost certain that some phase of the plan has been neglected.

Third, it provides the spiritual element, without which missions cannot long survive. Missions demand the prayers and the interest of all the people. People will not give gladly for the salvation of the world unless they are interested in the peoples of the world and their souls. No man or Church can be really spiritual and in right relations with God without the missionary spirit. And let us remember that though there are many good causes to which Christians should give, the one cause supreme above all others is that of giving the gospel to the unsaved world.

In the light of these facts, let us make our free-will offering on Easter or on the Sunday most suitable liberally and gladly, for "God loveth a cheerful giver."

Greensboro, N. C. C. H. ROWLAND.

OPEN LETTER TO PASTORS.

My dear Fellow-Pastors:

I want to call to your attention the vital importance of the special Easter offering for home and foreign missions, and to urge you to try in every possible way to make the offering from your Church or Churches as generous as possible for at least two reasons: In the first place, the Mission Board not only faces a heavy indebtedness; it also faces a serious curtailment of the work unless the Easter offering represents a sufficient amount to balance the budget. In the second place, because in view of the fact that missions has no place in the Conference apportionments, this Easter offering constitutes the major appeal of the Mission Board in behalf of missions to the Churches of the Eastern Virginia Conference. There must be a much larger response than usual because of this fact. If we fail here, we fail in a very real way and a very vital way. If our people do not contribute to this Easter offering in many cases they will not have made any contribution to missions during the Conference year.

I need not add that the Easter season is a most appropriate time for such an offering. The day and season that exalts the risen Christ and reminds us of the blessings He has given to us, is a most appropriate time at which to give of our means that His riches of grace may be made known to others.

As president of the Eastern Virginia Conference and as your fellow-pastor, I urge you to present the matter to your people in such a way that they shall respond gladly, generously, and as unto the Lord.

Sincerely yours,
H. S. HARDCASTLE.
Suffolk, Va., Mar. 14, 1929.

PASTORS, TAKE OFFERING.

It is the sincere hope of the president of the Virginia Valley Central Conference that all our Churches will at least have a part in the missionary offering this year. According to the record, there were nine of our Churches last year that had no part in the financial side of the missionary program of our Church. This year all our Churches have good pastors. We have two new men in the Conference. Surely every pastor and every Church wants to have a part in the great missionary program of our denomination.

Dear pastors, this is the psychological moment. Now is the time for action. Come on, let's do our best. Let's make the Valley Conference one hundred per cent for missions. Please, brethren, do not let a single Church fail to have some part in the missionary offering. If possible, take the offering not later than April 30th.

B. J. EARP, Pres.

PRAYER FOR MISSIONS.

Our Father, who art in heaven, we are lifting our hearts to Thee in behalf of missions. The need is great, the time is at hand, the workers are on the field. Now it rests with the Christian nations to shake off the drowsiness of the present age. All these years the rocks and hills have been crying out: "We were not made by man, neither by any graven image"—while men are silent. Open, Thou, their mouths and minds. May they, in the midst of a brooding stillness and an oppressive silence, begin to realize what woe shall come to them that are at ease in Zion; and may we begin to ask ourselves, "Am I my brother's keeper—and who is my brother?" Awaken Thou us who sleep, and may we put on the whole armor of God and bestir the gifts that are within us. For the day is coming when every man shall sit under his own fig tree and no one shall say unto his neighbor, See the Lord; for every one shall know Him for himself. And to this end we work, we give, we pray, we watch and wait. May we all engage in this great and lasting movement until the gospel is preached unto the uttermost parts of the earth. World without end. Amen.

THE SUN LETTER.

We want to see THE SUN grow in number of subscriptions in order to get it in more homes and get more of our people in touch with the Christian Church and its institutions. We want to see it glow with its splendid articles and beautiful thought which should inspire us to do our best in Christian service. We want to see it go as a business proposition and get on a sound financial basis. So we want to see it grow and glow and go, and want you to help make it so.

RECOMMENDED PLANS AND PROGRAM

February, March—Foreign Mission Months

THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION, in its Richmond Session last year, made February and March "Foreign Mission Months" for educational and informational purposes, culminating in an offering from all the Churches for Missions at, or on the nearest possible Sunday to, Easter—March 31, 1929. The goal set for the offering—Home and Foreign Missions—from Sunday Schools, and Churches, and individuals is $33,000; Woman's Societies, $12,000—total, $45,000. Inasmuch as the entire amount thus asked must be raised by voluntary offerings, the Conferences, in their recent sessions, in which the matter was discussed, adopted and recommended to the Sunday Schools and Churches the following method to be pursued in reaching their quota of one-third as much for Missions as for pastor's salary:

FIRST: When a Church uses the Budget Plan, write into that budget one-third the amount of pastor's salary to go to Missions, and send this in monthly or quarterly.

SECOND: If the budget is not used, canvass the individuals of the Church and Sunday School to find out how much each will give to Missions and when, entering the same on a card prepared for the purpose and which may be had of the Mission Secretary, Elon College, N. C.

THIRD: Where neither of these plans is adopted, then endeavor to increase the offering from the Sunday School, and at or about Easter have a Missionary Rally and try to raise the entire amount of the quota at that one service, in conjunction with the monthly offerings from the Sunday School for the year.

Each Church and Sunday School should use one or the other of these plans.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By Rev. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson XIII—March 31, 1929.

THE FUTURE LIFE (EASTER LESSON).

GOLDEN TEXT: "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee the crown of life."—Rev. 2:10.

LESSON: Matt. 25:31-46; Mark 12:26, 27; Luke 24:1-12; John 14:1-6; 1 Cor. 15:3-20, 50-58; 1 Thess. 4:13-18; Rev. 22:1-5

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 23:1-6.

Mankind has always had an instinctive belief in the future life. Somehow or other, men have felt that death did not end all. A study of the religions of the world, even of religion among primitive peoples will show that there was another world and another life. There was naturally a great deal of mystery and a great deal of vagueness, even a great deal of fantasy about that other world and that other life, but underlying all this there was the feeling amounting to a conviction that life here was related to and connected with life hereafter. The doctrine of immortality is not, therefore, a distinctively Christian doctrine; that is, it did not have its origin in Christianity. It existed centuries before Christ lived.

But Jesus Christ, by His teachings and by His resurrection, threw new light on the matter of the future life. There came into human hearts a new certainty, and therefore a new conviction in regard to this perplexing question. Here, as elsewhere, Christ came not to destroy but to fulfill. He enriched and enlarged the conception of immortality and the future life in several ways. For instance, He confidently predicted that He would rise again from the dead. What had been a hope in other men was a central conviction with Him. After He had risen from the dead, His disciples recalled that on several occasions He had told them that He would do that very thing. This prediction in itself, however, did not have much weight with the disciples. The thing that really counted was Christ's resurrection from the dead.

The turning point in Christianity was the conviction which the disciples had that their Lord and Master, whom they had seen crucified and whom they knew to be buried, was alive. There is only one way to explain the change that took place in the disciples and the followers of Jesus, and that is that they were absolutely sure that Christ had risen from the dead. Furthermore, they were not convinced of this by argument, but by personal experience. They knew that He was alive because they had seen Him and had had fellowship with Him. "Now is Christ risen from the dead" is more than the words of Paul—it is the unchallengeable fact of Christianity, and of history. Men may differ in their interpretations of the facts, but any one who knows anything at all about Christianity knows that the heart of it all is a living Christ. Immortality and the future life was taken out of the realm of the speculative and put in the realm of certainty when Jesus Christ rose from the dead.

For the corollary of the fact that Christ rose from the dead is the fact that through Him we shall rise from the dead. "Because I live, ye shall live also," said Jesus. It cannot be demonstrated as a mathematical formula, but Christians know the truth of this statement. There are those who will read these notes who are as certain of this future life as they are sure of the present life. They feel in their hearts what they cannot prove by their heads.

It was stated above that Christ threw new light on the future life. He took it out of the realm of impersonal existence and interpreted it in terms of conscious, personal, abundant life. Fellowship with God, with Christ, with other conscious, personal spirits were characteristics of this life. It is not dull and drab. It is the most desirable thing imaginable.

All this, of course, has practical implications for us. It brings a message of comfort and hope for all those who have lost loved ones and friends. Let all such at this Easter season meditate again on the words of Him who said that He was the Resurrection and the Life, and that whosoever believed on Him, even though he should die, yet should he live again, and whosoever lived and believed in Him should never die. We have not lost our loved ones; they have simply gone from us for a while. Theirs is really the true life. They have preceded us and await us in the world of abiding reality.

Then, too, the Easter lesson brings a challenge. After Paul had gone into a lengthy discussion of and argument for immortality, and after he had presented the matter in what he felt was an irrefutable form, he summed it all up with these words: "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." The practical implication of the Easter lesson is simply this: There is a future, unending life, be assured of this. Therefore, get busy, live as if you believe this, make your life here count for the very most and very best you can; it is all going to count in terms of the abiding values of that life that is to come. The message of Easter ought to be a constant incentive to holy living and fruitful service.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, March 31, 1929.

TOPIC: "The Words of Jesus About Life Unending."—John 14:1-3. (Easter.)

Some Bible Hints.

Belief in eternal life depends upon faith in God and in Christ. No one can prove it with absolute certainty (v. 1).

Jesus' word about the future is to be believed because He was an expert in spiritual things. He had spiritual insight in a very wonderful degree (v. 2).

Jesus assures us that there is a special place in heaven for His people. That is a tremendous and suggestive idea (v. 3).

Believers will be "with Christ" wherever He is in the beyond. To know that is enough (v. 3).

Suggestive Thoughts.

Jesus never for a moment doubted the fact that men will live after they die. In fact, He assures us that they do not really die at all (John 11:26).

"God is not the God of the dead, but of the living" (Mark 12:26, 27) is a convincing saying. God is life; He does not create man to die.

Jesus' word, "I am the resurrection and the life," shows that He knew His power and believed it. He proved it by raising the dead. Allied with Him we not only live eternally, but live sublimely and beautifully.

Jesus tells us that those who kill the body cannot kill the soul. The body is not the man, but the house in which he lives.

A Few Illustrations.

In dying, Jesus committed His Spirit unto His Father. He knew He was not dying, but entering into life. "To die," cried a saint, "is a great adventure."

The emigrant leaves his own country and starts on a voyage across an unknown sea to an unknown land and a new experience. That is like death. We go on to a new life.

The ego persists. Our bodies change, but not the mind which inhabits the body. I am the same "I" today as I was twenty years ago.

Man is a bigger piece of work than can be completed in time. It will need eternity to perfect it. We should not educate our children if we believed that school meant their end.

To Think About.

What word of Jesus about death seems helpful to us?

Why should we believe what Jesus says about death?

Why should we distinguish between body and soul?

NEWS NOTES.

By Mrs. W. M. JAY.

Mrs. J. W. Fix, the efficient news correspondent of Eastern Virginia Woman's Conference, has sent in the following news items. Mrs. Fix is doing a splendid work, and the local societies may help much by sending reports of their meetings to her. Let's boost this department and give our Conference editors such information.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Berea Christian Church, Driver, Va., observed the world's day of prayer for missions on February 15th. A splendid service was held and all felt doubly repaid for having participated in it.

They have also decided to raise their goal by the motto, "The Lord Loveth a Cheerful Giver." For several years they have had suppers, parties, etc., to raise their quota, but this year have adopted the free-will giving method. Each member brings 50 cents each month to the meeting as her free-will offering, and so far they report great success and enthusiasm.

The Suffolk, Va., Missionary Society recently celebrated their seventeenth annual birthday party, and it was a most enjoyable event. Dr. E. C. Fry, missionary from Japan, was the principal speaker and gave a most interesting talk on his thirty-five years in Japan. A special program of reading, music, etc., delighted the large audience, and the decorations and refreshments were pleasing as well. Mrs. W. H. Yates is the wide-awake president of this society and presided over the meeting with ease and grace. Each member is asked to bring a penny for each year of the society's or their own age. The offering amounted to $86.95, and $31.03 as birthday offerings. One unknown member sent in an offering of $20, which she gave as a thankoffering for her Christian parents.

This society joined with other societies of the city in a union world's day of prayer service on Friday, February 15th.

They are in the midst of their mission study now, using the book entitled "The New Africa." They meet each week in the homes of members and have a different teacher for each chapter. This society consists of a loyal band of Christian women, working away toward their goals and accomplishing much for the cause of missions.

DIRECTIVE PURPOSE OF UNIVERSE.

ing lifted daily from what he is to what we ought to be.

There is nothing more certain to a spiritual soul than the certainty of the life to come. There is nothing in the Scriptures, in life, or in nature, to sustain the supposition that it is different—that life has interruptions or meaningless suspensions when man may believe or disbelieve what he chooses independently of God and His provisions for him, or think that the present life is separated from everything and everybody. Just as in navigation, it has its safety linked up with the celestial life, and in no sense can we be thought of as distinctly separate and apart from it. As the bud is related to the blossom, so are we related to life hereafter. Wordsworth said, "As a plant must be uncovered to the air and the sunshine which comes to it from celestial distances, so is man dependent upon the eternal silence of the indestructible truths of spiritual things to guide him safely home. Some one has said, "When the arch-enemy, death, has done all he can, destroyed everything about me, all conditions in which I am living, it yet leaves me to go on forever."

Finally, Life's Evaluation.

How man is made partaker of God's everlastingness! This is what it means to "number our days and applying our hearts to wisdom." It teaches us that at last, though the world passeth away, yet he who doeth the will of God abideth forever.

How we learn the value of spiritual things through the material! In life's affairs, we estimate values by the things to which they are to be applied. When we learn how much the value of the material is dependent upon the spiritual, we come to know the value of the spiritual, and thus the true values of life. When we apply these values to our personal life, conscious of it or not, we gauge and test our living in the light of spiritual issues, such as love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, kindness, goodness, etc., which are the sublime goals of human achievement. Under Christian guidance, we find ourselves taking account of the things of this world, so as not to forget their meaning to our lives; and this so comprehends things of the eternal realm as not to forget that they are won only by godliness, righteousness and sobriety. Thus a Christian will not, indeed, allow the immensity of the sublime to overpower him and unfit him for every-day living, but he will not be so engrossed in living as to lose sight of the sublime; he will have his legitimate pleasures, but he will not number his days as a "tale that is told"; he will take account of them as a beginning of that which prepares him for his highest calling. He will not think that what he knows about it is all or enough, but he will court every counsel to the attainment of greater knowledge. He will give himself to the culture of that finer power of intelligence which suggests the proper application of facts and the correct direction of his faculties. He will be busy discarding the worthless and retaining the valuable. He will apply his knowledge to wisdom and think divinely. Like the true pilot, he will consecrate himself to the one supreme attainment of a perfect existence.

Let us ask ourselves the question: Has our time been frittered away in a thousand distractions which, the harmless singly, in the aggregate are fatal to usefulness and true greatness? Has God been crowded out of our thoughts? Have we become so engrossed in ourselves that prayer is more difficult and religion more unwelcome? Do we hesitate to confess God or to protest the insult offered His name? Have we grown in knowledge and wisdom so that we are less at the mercy of the waves of "chance desires" and the hidden rocks of temptation? Are we heaving closer to the right channel and headed in the right direction? There is an answer to all of these, not unqualified to be sure, but enough for each of us to know whether we are sinners being carried along by the stream, or whether we are making our way against it, and enough for a growing consciousness in all the graces until we shall be perfect in them all.

Life is a miracle and a mystery, but the mystery is made plain by heaven's intelligence. The night falls upon us indeed, but the gyros is set, the magnetic attraction is faithful, the silence of the stars we do not despise. The dawn breaks, the pall of the night lifts. Through the wondrous day of the guiding sun, as faithful souls, we pass on bearing with us the redeemed of God until we enter the haven of rest in the sunrise of the eternal day.

Then shall the heavens be Glad, and the earth rejoice; the sea may roar and all the fullness thereof; the fields exult and the forests sing for joy before the Lord, because his judgments are in the earth and the world and the people in their faithfulness and righteousness shall merit heaven's holy crowns.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

SHOULD WE SAY, "GOD IS RECONCILED"?

"God is in Christ reconciling men to Him."—2 Cor. 5:19.

Men sometimes say, if they repent and come to Him with the confession of their sins, He will be reconciled to them. That is not the gospel of Christ.

God is reconciled to you whether you are ever reconciled to Him or not. It is one thing for God to be reconciled to and have forgiveness for a man, but it is quite another thing for a man to receive that forgiveness and so be reconciled to God. The reception of the atonement is what is wanted on our part.

Prayer.—Our Father, we acknowledge Thee in all our doings. If we do not we pray that we may do so this day. Forgive us our past sins. Make us clean and pure and harmonize our souls with Thine. Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE MINISTRY OF REST.

"And He saith unto them, Come ye yourselves apart unto a desert place, and rest awhile."—Mark 6:31.

There are three reasons for rest: the need of it, the use of it, and the gain of it. Upon the need of it no comment is needed. We all have been tired and craved rest. The spirit needs rest also. Excitement all the time drives one mad. Continued happiness may grow monotonous. In the rest of the spirit there is often revelation of God. It is said that God takes us aside to feed our souls.

But there is a word to be said on the use and the profit of rest. In the quiet meditation hours, problems may be solved and perplexities banished. In quiet thought on His way, we become conscious of His reality. It takes away distractions and relieves the high tensions. It gives a chance to complete life's ideas. Thus it is God's call to His fellowship and to His victory.

Prayer.—Father, we pray Thee to abide in our hearts. Thou dost fill the infinite spaces, and yet there is room in the little dew-drop for Thee. Abide in us and make us Thy children forever, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE MESSAGE OF THE LORD'S SUPPER.

"That ye may eat at my table in my kingdom."—Luke 22:29.

All that Jesus said about the Lord's Supper taught service and love, and He set it apart as a symbol of fellowship with Him both in "the life that now is and that which is to come." This means we shall know Him as He is. It means enjoying His fullness. One of the reasons we live such poor restless lives is we are not filled with His fullness.

A good woman dying was asked if there was some one she wished to come and talk with her. She replied, "I have always been ready. He has been very precious to me, and I go gladly to Him for my rest." So she departed as going on a journey.

Prayer.—Our Father, fill us with desire for Thee. Change such desires that need changing and give us the new course in life that takes us to Thee. Remove from us all that is earthly, selfish, mean and bad, and make us happy. Amen.

THURSDAY.

THOUGHTS FROM GETHSEMANE.

"O death, where is thy sting."—1 Cor. 15:55.

We learn from the tragedy of Gethsemane the following facts: The will of a man in perfect harmony with God's; the soul of a man subject to the higher laws of life; the difference in being led to temptation and retiring from it into the presence of God; the power of positive language; that goodness abolishes fear of death; that Christianity prepares one to go; that the purest person has the keenest perceptions of the sins of others; that a man may pray his way to perfect calm in any circumstance, which attainment is ever the companion of complete surrender; that prayers are answered in a richer and better way than we expect; that God gives grace to bear any sorrow (angels ministered unto Him); that in all things prayer is connecting our thoughts with God's thoughts; and that the Christian life is changing the human will to the divine.

Prayer.—Dear Father, help us to see that Jesus, Thy Son, became a man for all men. May we feel that He is for us. May we turn to Him in every place and in Him we shall rejoice with great joy even in the sufferings of life. Amen.

FRIDAY.

"When the doors were shut."—Jno. 20:19.

The disciples had locked themselves in to protect themselves from the Jews. They did not know that they shut Jesus out. Often we do something that raises barriers between us and that which is best for us, and later find that we have done more than we thought. The greatest tragedy, perhaps, is when one shuts the door against himself. When engagement engrosses one so that it masters him and takes his every thought, he closes the door to his higher and better self and to God.

But Jesus was not to be shut out. He appeared before them. Does He ever appear before you? Thy deeds twenty years ago rise up in thy memory; it is Jesus calling thee. Thou hast had moments of exquisite happiness, like the memory of music; it is Jesus before thee. It is nothing to Him that doors are shut—that man is arrayed against Him. We would as well try to stifle springtime, or fetter the summer morning, or draw a curtain over the dawn, as to try to shut God away from us. David said, "Though I descend into the depths of hell, Thou art there."

Prayer.—Our Father, we are Thy people. We humbly confess our selfishness and our sins and our desire to be saved. Give us the happiness and the bliss of that assurance and open our souls to Thee forever. Amen.

SATURDAY.

BY THIS SIGN CONQUER.

"He shewed unto them His hands and His side."—John 20:20.

Those hands had been about His Father's business; they had moved away the powers of darkness; they had blessed little children; they had broken the bread of heaven. Those feet had walked stormy waters, taken Him to homes and hearts of sorrow, to open graves, hastened to the side of the wretched, climbed the mountains of prayer, trudged the way of Gethsemane, and failed under the load. Those shoulders had borne the rugged cross and bowed His body to the earth. It is with out-stretched arms (the cross of self)

He holds out Himself to the disciples to inspire a faith that He had conquered.

So would they conquer. His courage had won. So would theirs. Into the struggle He had gone like a ship in the storm, and out of it He had come with riggings torn and a battered hull, but with the dignity of victory.

Prayer.—Our Father, make it our chief delight to look unto Thy counsel, to trust in Thy salvation, and to stand ever before Thee, though it give us scars. Amen.

EASTER SUNDAY.

IF EASTER BE NOT TRUE.

If Easter be not true,
Then all the lilies low must lie,
The Flanders poppies fade and die,
The spring must lose her fairest bloom,
For Christ were still within the tomb—
If Easter be not true.

If Easter be not true,
Then faith must mount on broken wing;
Then hope no more immortal spring;
Life prove a phantom, death a dirge—
If Easter be not true.

If Easter be not true,
'Twere foolishness the cross to bear;
He died in vain who suffered there.
What matter though we laugh or cry,
Be good or evil, live or die,
If Easter be not true?

If Easter be not true—
But it is true, and Christ is risen!
And mortal spirit, from its prison
Of sin and death, with Him may rise!
Worthwhile the struggle, sure the prize,
Since Easter, aye, is true!

—Henry H. Barstow, in Presbyterian Advance.

NOTICE.

The Vance-Franklin and Warren District Missionary Rally will be held at the Liberty (Vance) Church, Thursday, April 25th, beginning at 10 o'clock A. M.

I want every pastor in the district to begin making plans, so that he will be able to attend the rally; and also every Church to begin making plans to send delegates, whether they have a missionary society or not. I am so anxious that every pastor in the district attend the rally and every Church be represented. Let us heed the theme for our rally this year, "The Call of the Master," and get busy in the mission work and attend the rally, thus making it the best that we have ever held in our district.

Don't forget the time and place—Liberty (Vance) Church, Thursday, April 25, 1929.

MARGARET ALSTON,
Henderson, N. C., R. 1. District Leader.

OFFICIAL NOTICE.

The Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at its last session, accepted an invitation from Newport News to meet there in 1929. But inasmuch as their new Church will not be completed by the time of the Convention, the Newport News people have asked to be relieved from entertaining this year. The executive committee is, therefore, anxious to receive an invitation for the coming session of the Convention. Please take this up with your school and notify us if you wish to entertain.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our little folks are looking forward with a great deal of pleasure to the Easter season and the pretty little Easter dresses the good women generally send in to make them happy for Easter. It is one of the most beautiful occasions we have during the year. When every little girl is dressed in a pretty Easter dress and the little boys in a nice little suit and march off to Sunday School on Easter Sunday morning it is a pretty sight. Our good women for a number of years have made the Easter season happy by making and sending to us many beautiful Easter dresses and little suits for boys. They seem to get so much real joy out of the service rendered.

The First Christian Church, Goshen, Ind., was the first to send us a box, containing 16 beautiful dresses and 5 suits. Sixteen little girls on Easter Sunday will wear a new dress, and five little boys will have a new suit. We feel confident that none will be disappointed, as our good women have never forgotten our little folks at this season.

It is desired that the pastors shall attend the district rally in which are the Churches he serves. The Churches are asked to send representatives, even if there is no organization in them. In this way we can make these meetings representative.

MRS. C. H. ROWLAND, Pres.,
N. C. Woman's Missionary Convention.
Greensboro, N. C.

MISSION RALLIES.

The Woman's Mission Board of Virginia Valley Central Conference met at the home of Rev. A. W. Andes on the night of March 14th, the president, Mrs. R. A. Larrick, presiding.

The district rallies were arranged as follows: Timber Ridge, June 9th; Palmyra, June 11th; Bethlehem, June 12th; Mt. Lebanon, June 15th; Mt. Olivet (G), June 16th.

In addition to the program as arranged by the Southern Board, there will be an address by Rev. Joe French, and probably another speaker can be secured. The chair appointed Mrs. B. J. Earp, Rev. B. J. Earp, and Mrs. B. F. Frank a committee to finish the plans for the rallies.

Our annual Conference had been planned for Leaksville, and the Board set the date August 1st. The Board asks for a contingent fund.

Every member of the Board and nearly all the pastors were present.

MRS. B. F. FRANK, Sec'y.

OTHERS WANT UNION.

At a meeting held in Dayton, Ohio, February 6th and 7th, commissioners from the Reformed Church in the United States, the Church of the United Brethren in Christ, and the Evangelical Synod of America adopted a "basis of union" which is to be submitted to the governing bodies of the three Churches. The plan results from almost a year of negotiation. It provides for organic union, beginning with the merging of the supreme judicatories, together with their work in foreign missions, home missions, education, ministerial pension and relief, and other benevolent causes. The merging of the annual conferences, district conferences or classes is provided for but not immediately contemplated. The administration of the new Church will be in the hands of general superintendents, with whom there will be associated a board of promotion, consisting of pastors and laymen elected by the general council. It is possible for final approval to be given this proposal within a year. The three Churches involved are nearly the same in size and in doctrinal emphasis, while they occupy territory that hardly overlaps at all. The Church of the United Brethren was founded by Philip William Otterbein, a pastor of the Reformed Church, and represents the impact of the Wesleyan movement on the Germans of Pennsylvania, Maryland, Ohio and that general region. The Evangelical Synod, also of German origin, has stood for the reconciliation of differences between the Lutheran and Calvinist wings of German Protestantism, and has acknowledged the doctrinal standards of the Reformed as well as the Lutheran Church. The doctrinal position proposed for the united Church will likewise be a mediating one. Proposals for Church union in America are being brought increasingly down out of the air and put into actual operation. "Let those unite who will unite!"—Christian Century.

A SIXTY-YEAR PASTORATE.

In these days when the short pastorate is the rule, for a man to be officially connected with the same Church for a period of sixty years is indeed news. The pastor is the Rev. Azel W. Hazen, and the Church is the First Congregational, of Middletown, Conn. Dr. Hazen went directly from the seminary to the pastorate of this Church in 1868. He remained the active pastor until 1916, thus serving the Church for forty-eight years. During the past twelve years he has served as pastor-emeritus.

OBITUARIES.

WILLIAMS.

On February 13, 1929, the body of Sister Emma Elizabeth Williams, of Williamsville, was interred in the cemetery at Cedar Grove after the funeral had been preached in Whistlers Chapel Christian Church. The deceased was sixty-seven years of age and leaves a number of relatives and friends who cherish the hope of meeting her on the shining shore. B. J. EARP.

BROWN.

The good Lord saw good in His infinite wisdom to take from among us to his reward John Spencer Brown on November 13, 1928. He leaves to mourn his going a wife and several children, besides a host of friends. His life is a book that has been completed which will be opened on the morn of the resnrrection and his reward will be made known. The funeral was conducted by the pastor of Brown's Chapel Church and he was laid to rest in the Chnrch cemetery. W. C. MARTIN.

McCOY.

Mrs. Mary Kanffman McCoy, wife of Bro. C. W. McCoy, died on January 31, 1929, at the age of 61 years. She was a useful member of St. Peters Church, near Elkton, Va., for forty-eight years, being secretary for several years. Mrs. McCoy leaves to her hnsband and five children a heritage that they appreciate and which will challenge them to their best.

She was laid to rest in the presence of a host of friends on the afternoon of February 3rd. The writer was assisted by Rev. Mr. Ran. JOE FRENCH.

COFFMAN.

Mrs. Pearl Myester Coffman died January 21, age 37 years, after an extended illness of many years. She was a patient and even cheerful sufferer. Mrs. Coffman is survived by her hnsband and little daughter, her parents, one brother and one sister. The funeral services were conducted from the home by her pastor, the writer, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Dimmick, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, and the Rev. Mr. Jacobs, pastor of Ivy Memorial Baptist Church. Interment followed in the Newport News Cemetery. May the Lord comfort those who monrn. M. F. ALLEN.

OVERBY.

Bro. Henry Overby died on the 7th of February, 1929, being about 78 years of age. He was a devoted member of Wentworth Christian Church and for several years the senior deaeon. It is my opinion that we seldom see better men than Bro. Overby, nor often those so good. He leaves a wife and several children to miss him. The Chnrch has sustained a loss.

The body was laid to rest in the Chnrch cemetery. Services by the writer. May our Lord's rich blessing be with those who mourn his going, and bring them together in glory. J. LEE JOHNSON.

SHEPHERD.

We, the members of the Junior Phila-thea Class of the Main Street Christian Church, Durham, N. C., desire to extend our sympathy to our classmate and sister in Christ, Mrs. Roy Shepherd, in the loss of her sweet little babe, Robert, on February 13, 1929. Robert was a bright little fellow of fourteen months old, who will be missed in the home as well as in the cradle roll department. We wish to offer the following resolutions:

1. We submit ourselves to the will of the Heavenly Father, who in His great wisdom doeth all things well.

2. That we extend to his parents and loved ones our deepest and most heartfelt sympathy.

3. That these resolutions be recorded on our minutes, a copy sent to the family, and a copy to The Christian Sun for publication.

MAMIE GARDEN, MRS. W. H. BOONE, MAUDE FULLER, Committee.

AYSUCUE.

Mr. William H. Ayscue was born May 14, 1844, and departed this life February 25, 1929. For many years he had been a member of the Liberty (Vance) Christian Chnrch. He is survived by one brother, one sister, six children, twenty-five grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren and many other relatives.

Bro. Aysene was patient in affliction, and expressed his readiness to go to the reward that awaited him. The services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. D. M. Spence, pastor of the Henderson Christian Church. Interment was made in Liberty Cemetery. H. E. CRUTCHFIELD.

MATTHEWS.

Bro. John Matthews, the oldest member of Wentworth Church, departed this life on the 17th of February, 1929, being 80 years, 1 month and 1 week old. Bro. Matthews was once a member of Cokesbury Methodist Church, Harnett County, but on moving to Wake County he united some fifteen or twenty years ago with the Christian Church. Bro. Matthews was a splendid man of fine qualities, a devoted father and husband.

Two sons and four girls, all married but one son; a wife and several grandchildren remain to sorrow for him. He was a Mason of fifty-nine years standing, and was laid to rest by that fraternity, assisted by the writer. Interment in Wentworth Cemetery. The blessing of God on the bereaved.

J. LEE JOHNSON.

SAUNDERS.

God saw fit to call from his labors in the early moru of life young Bro. Gernie E. Saunders, sou of Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. Saunders. Gernie was a bright and loveable character, who gave his life to God last September in our revival meetings. He made mention in his last hours that he didn't expect to get well, but he was cheerful and desired his sisters to play and sing for him.

Gernie was born September 6, 1914, and died January 29, 1929, age 14 years, 11 months and 23 days. He leaves behind father and mother and five sisters and three brothers. May each member of the family be in readiness to meet little Gernie as they are called to their reward. The funeral was conducted by his pastor.

W. C. MARTIN.

VAUGHAN.

On Tuesday morning, February 20th, Mr. James Buchanan Vaughan, of Franklin, Va., died in almost the same manner as his wife, who preceded him a few months before. Mr. Vaughan was in his seventy-third year and was born December 14, 1856. On January 3, 1883, he married Miss Ida Rawls, of Nansemond County, Va. Mr. Vaughan was a man of many friends and was known far and wide for his intense devotion to hunting and fishing. He took an active interest in public affairs, served as justice of peace, county commissioner, and a member of the school board. He was a deacon and one of the leading members of the old Bethany Christian Church, and when it was discontinued several years ago he became a useful member in the Franklin Christian Church.

He is survived by two sons, Prof. L. L. Vaughan, head of the department of mechanical engineering, North Carolina State College, Raleigh, N. C., and James Andrew Vaughan, of New York City.

Funeral services were held from the home, on Clay Street, Wednesday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, by his pastor, Rev. Joseph W. Fix, pastor of the Franklin Christian Church, assisted by Dr. C. H. Rowland, of Greensboro, and Rev. R. D. Stevenson, of the Franklin Baptist Church.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE

WADLEY, ALABAMA

An Accredited Junior College

Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

Piedmont Junior College is training some of the best stock of America for Christian leadership, to be used by the nation and the world. Here is a great challenge and asset for students who wish to prepare themselves to serve in a worth-while way. The new Administration Building will be completed by time school opens this fall.

THE JONES LAW.—

Nothing has been done in the prohibition problem that has produced results so quickly as the Jones law, which became effective. The chief of police of St. Louis has announced that already 62 saloons have been closed, and more are to follow. The law increases maximum punishment for a first prohibition offense to five years in prison or a $10,000 fine, or both. A few more years will see the end of liquor in this country.

PORTO RICAN RELIEF.—

The American Red Cross spent $3,000,000 in the work of relief in Porto Rico in an effort to repair the damages done by the storm which swept the island on September 13, 1928. The relief workers are now finishing their work and preparing to leave. There is no other organization which so adequately expresses the charitable spirit of the American people as does the Red Cross. And there is perhaps no other organization which so favorably commends the American people to the rest of the world. It serves as a sort of counter-irritant for our sometimes hasty and shortsighted national policies which cause the rest of the world to view us with suspicion and ill will. It seems that the effort to help the Porto Ricans in their time of great need has gone a long way to cement the ties of friendship of the Porto Ricans for this country.

THE LENTEN SEASON.—

It is only in comparatively recent years that many Protestant communions have begun to make very much of the season of Lent. And their efforts to avail themselves of this most significant of all religious anniversaries have been somewhat faltering and uncertain. It would be for the permanent enrichment of our spiritual lives if the pre-Easter season should be made the occasion for the deepest of heart-searchings. There is a place for self-examination and penance for the selfishness and sin which exists in our individual lives. We need to place our lives alongside of the example of righteousness that is given us in Jesus Christ, in order that we may see how far short we come of the ideal. But the message of the season has a deeper implication than that which pertains to the matter of personal behavior.

There is a grave danger that we of this generation shall miss the fundamental meaning of life. We are too prone to evaluate life in terms of the material, the shallow, and ephemeral things. The whole tendency of our age's thought is conducive to a self-indulgent attitude. That which has undermined and destroyed the finest manhood and womanhood which past civilizations have produced has been the idea that the world was created for their individual gratification and aggrandizement. Such men and women have lost their sense of responsibility for the welfare of their fellowmen. This sense of responsibility is not alone the heart and soul of religion. It is the fundamental basis of all true patriotism. It is the genius which inspires all abiding progress. And this sense of responsibility has never been so vividly portrayed as in the cross of Christ. In the cross is love incarnate, sacrificial love, unselfish love. The sort of love that redeems and transforms all of life, and gives to life a high and holy meaning. The world needs as never before the message of the cross.

MILITARY DISPLAY.—

Writing under the caption, "The Inauguration of a Quaker," William S. Abernethy, Washington correspondent of the Christian Century, has the following to say concerning the inaugural ceremonies: "As a military display, it fully came up to expectations. Apparently, we know of no way to express ourselves on a big occasion such as the inauguration of a new President, except by bringing out the soldiery. Cavalry, marines, cadets, artillery units followed each other in rapid succession. They made a brave showing and gained the applause of the crowd, but one wonders if we have nothing in this country to exploit on such occasions except the military arm of the government. Nothing produces the spectacular effect that flashing guns and prancing cavalry steeds do, to be sure, but is it wise? Why rule out all the cultural influences? A 'peace float' somewhere in the long line would not have been amiss, but it was not there—only guns and men marching with military precision and blaring bands. We proposed a war renunciation pact just the other day and our Senate ratified it, but no one watching the Hoover inaugural parade would gain the remotest idea that our national consciousness was inclined in the slightest degree toward that end."

This criticism seems to us most appropriate. It is surprising that it has not been voiced emphatically long ago. This is but another illustration of the tremendous difficulties that are going to be encountered when we seriously give ourselves to the task of ceasing to think in terms of war, and to think in terms of peace. For a long time, national thinking has held military power and glory at its very center. Most of the United States histories which have been used as textbooks in our public schools have been little more than a chronicle of the wars in which our country has participated. Already a movement has been launched to provide histories for textbook use that will not be such manifest glorifications of war. Every one who does even a moderate amount of thinking occasionally, knows quite well that war is not the principal contributor to our national greatness. We have merely fallen into the bad habit of unduly exalting war on patriotic occasions. And the inauguration of a Quaker of necessity emphasizes the ridiculousness of it.

SKYSCRAPER CHURCHES.—

The press, both secular and religious, has carried announcements of Churches that are going to build edifices which rival in both height and grandeur the modern skyscrapers. Some of these buildings are actually in process of construction. Others have been projected and plans are being worked out for financing such a costly undertaking. The plan is usually a combination of Church and office building, or of a Church and an apartment house. Church activities are to be housed on the lower floors, and the upper floors are to be used for other purposes. Two reasons are advanced for such undertakings. The first is to secure revenue from the rent of such portions of the building as are not used for religious purposes, to finance the program of the Church. The second is to construct buildings which shall equal in height and proportions the huge structures which are erected by modern finance and industry for the purpose of financial gains.

One cannot but wonder what Jesus of Nazareth would think of such reasons. There may be a few Church organizations with huge endowment funds to invest that might turn to such a plan because it offers a form of investment over which the Church may exert a direct supervision. But for the average Church member, whether rich or only in moderate circumstances, will this sort of use of money bring the same sort of spiritual benefit as is received from the direct giving for the support of kingdom enterprises that appeal to the heart and conscience of men? Does such financial undertaking satisfy the impulse to express love for God and for one's fellow-men through sacrificial giving of one's means to advance the kingdom? We have come so far and so fast during the last few years that it is hard to relate the complex relationships of this present day to the conditions which obtained in the first century.

It is not so difficult to decide what Jesus would think about trying to build a Church as big as a modern office building of the large city in order to impress people by the mere size of the thing. If Jesus had placed any confidence in the usefulness of material magnificence to further the purposes for which He came into the world, His course must have been entirely different from the one which He followed. When modern congregations spend millions of dollars upon such undertakings in order to try to impress the masses by mere physical proportions, it does begin to look as if they have lost some faith in the power of spiritual realities. The man in the street, with all his apparent worldliness, still has the ability to distinguish between that which is material and that which is spiritual.

NOTES-PERSONALS

"All that we have is Thine alone—a trust, O Lord, from Thee."

"Have a quiet talk with God about your responsibility and your great privilege. He will guide you."

Make this the gladdest and happiest Easter your Church and people ever had by raising on that day the missionary quota of the Church. This indeed is real Easter joy and service.

Dr. W. W. Staley, of Suffolk, Va., was in Richmond on Tuesday of this week and made a brief visit to THE SUN office. He was in fine spirits and was calling on friends and former Church members who feel yet as if they were a part of his flock.

Burlington Churches are holding, this week and last, simultaneous revivals, all congregations coming together at 10 A. M., and each holding an evening service. Rev. J. Lee Johnson is doing the preaching at the Christian Church to the delight and edification of the large congregation in attendance.

We wonder how many parents love their Church paper, THE CHRISTIAN SUN, well enough to subscribe for it and have it sent to their sons and daughters who are away from home at school or at work! Children who casually glance at this Church paper at home will often read it through when away from home. Parents, keep your children in touch with their Church through your Church paper.

Chaplain H. E. Rountree, of the U. S. Navy, in a recent line to THE SUN's editor, says: "My work goes on nicely. Out of 129 religious exercises last month, I had 29 reconsecrations and 5 united with the Church, all young men, of course. I am expecting this month to yield quite as good results." Bro. Rountree, though on shipboard and often far out at sea, receives young men into the Church and forwards their name to the Church they unite with.

Bishop James Cannon, Jr., president of the Board of Temperance and Social Service, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, one of the leaders of the Anti-Smith Democrats, has cabled from Cairo, Egypt, to President Hoover a message emphasizing the value of the appointment on the President's commission to study the enforcement of the prohibition law of at least one outstanding representative person who is vitally interested in the success of prohibition. Bishop Cannon, however, did not suggest the name of any person whom he personally favored or endorsed for this commission.

"We had a great day at Holy Neck on Tuesday, 19th instant. Bro. Hardcastle went with me and gave a very interesting talk on Japan and Porto Rico. He had his charts with him, and $80 in cash was contributed for missions. Many of the ladies gave hens, which will be sold and the money given to the Treasurer for missions. I made a talk, and afterwards talked with the pastor, Bro. Newman, and many of the men of the Church. They are trying to do their best, and urge the people to do all they can to raise the quota for Holy Neck."—A personal note from Assistant Secretary of Missions J. M. Darden.

It is learned with deep regret that the nice Chevrolet car the women of Eastern Virginia presented to Rev. and Mrs. D. P. Barrett on their return trip to Porto Rico was recently stolen. Bro. Barrett succeeded finally in finding and recapturing the car, but it was wrecked and stripped of its equipment. This is a great loss, as a car is indispensable to Bro. Barrett in his work. Evidently, certain American habits are in vogue also in Porto Rico. We sometimes wonder if an automobile does not say to every thief and near-thief: "Please come and steal me. I will take you rapidly from the scene of your theft." Automobile stealing seems to be an easy mark for all who are inclined to theft.

A good brother, writing from Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Sunday School, recently says: "We give the offering on each third Sunday to missions. The last mission Sunday we raised over $26. Our goal each mission Sunday is $21.50, and we are trying to give from the Church $21.50, making a total of Sunday School and Church, $43 per month." This is one of our mission Churches, but it is showing some of the long-established Churches how to be missionary and to grow. If Elm Avenue keeps up this good habit and practice, they will some day have a house of worship and a congregation of which that city and the denomination will be proud indeed. Whenever a people develop the missionary spirit, even while they are struggling with inadequate equipment themselves, you may count on them to get that adequate equipment some time and to rise and shine for their Lord.

Assistant Mission Secretary J. M. Darden was with Dr. Smith at Christian Temple, 11 A. M. Sunday, March 17th. Dr. Smith writes that "Bro. Darden's visit to his Church was a real inspiration to every one present, that he gave a great message and helped to create a fine spirit." Dr. Smith and his people are making a most worthy and meritorious effort to greatly reduce their indebtedness, and the amount raised in cash and pledges on Sunday, the 17th, to be paid by July 1, was $6,038. There is no congregation of our acquaintance that has wrought so unselfishly and given so sacrificially as the Temple congregation of Norfolk. They are workers for the Lord in that Church. The pastor of the Church and the congregation are a constant source of inspiration not only to the Christian people of Norfolk, but of the whole denomination. While attempting and effecting a great building project and entailing thereby heavy indebtedness, neither their enthusiasm for missions nor their contributions to missions and to benevolence have ever abated or fallen off, but have always been amazingly liberal.

TO ALABAMA CHURCHES.

Dear Brethren and Sisters of the Alabama Christian Church:

Shall we not do our best to make a creditable missionary offering at or near Easter this year? Not creditable just from a human standpoint, but for the sake of our Lord and in return for what He has done for us? Just imagine what our condition would be without the gospel? Think of our neighbors across the sea who need just as much as we the gospel of salvation from sin. There are those enveloped in filth and all manner of impurities and sins. Give them the "gospel of cleansing." Think of the ignorant. The gospel of Jesus is a gospel of enlightenment. Think of those who are not accustomed to sanitary privileges and conditions. The gospel of Jesus increases our appreciation for sanitary food and clothing. The gospel helps folks to save their lives, to save their health, and their souls. It gives us a high regard for our fellow-creatures in every way, and gives us also a greater vision of citizenship. Let us be faithful to our trust and not disappoint our dear Lord in this crucial time. I trust we may prove our loyalty to our Church and to our Christ in this great time and privilege. In our dear old State there is much sorrow, much suffering, floods, sickness, death.

Since we who have been spared are kept for some good purpose, may we not do what we can to the honor of our Christ in the preservation of life and liberty? I am trusting that we may do our duty and our best.

G. D. HUNT,
President Alabama Conference.

WE SHUT-INS.

I feel my reading-matter is about complete since THE SUN makes its weekly visits to me again—thanks to the editor.

But what a pity he could not stay on in sunny Florida and gain another four pounds—unless he felt he would be burdened with flesh in a citrus country, whose food might prove better for him than beefsteak and coffee.

There has been an inquiry made here about THE SUN's editor recently. A few days ago one of the elders of the S. D. A. Church here came up to see if I remembered when the editor was in Orlando, Fla., in a sanitarium, somewhere about a year ago. This elder wanted a copy of THE SUN that had a letter in it which was written while the editor was at the sanitarium or just about the time he came home. I think that was May, 1928. If any one remembers the letter and has a back number of THE SUN with the letter in it with which he is willing to part, it would be greatly appreciated were he to mail it to T. E. Bowen, S. D. A. Conference Bldg., Review and Herald Office, Takoma Park, Washington, D. C.

I am well pleased with our Herald magazine numbers. I think it is much better that the Sunday School lessons come in earlier and can be used by those who have no quarterly, and by those who, like myself, never get to Sunday School except over the radio.

As I lie in bed listening in through ear phones which have been prepared for shut-ins, I cannot help but think what a godsend a radio is to invalids, for with one a person may be shut in but not shut out from the outside world.

God bless the Federal Council of Churches for the devotional services each week-day morning at 8:15, and for making it possible for sermons to be broadcast on Sunday at different hours over the different N. B. C. stations.

Recently I was delighted to hear the voice of Bro. P. S. Sailer on the air when he was conducting morning worship in New York City at the regular service hour, 8:15. I am also enjoying the pre-Easter noon-day Lenten services held at the First Congregational Church. This Church broadcasts each Sunday its regular morning sermons.

I take great interest in keeping up with the activities and enterprises of this Church as well as ours, for it seems to be a leader in opening its doors to speakers in progressive kingdom work. I suppose our Church and theirs are looking forward next fall to merging the two bodies. I can always interest myself among Christian people who seem to be trying to help answer Jesus' prayer, that we all may be one in spirit and in truth.

MR. HOOVER'S GOOD-WILL TOUR.

By CHAPLAIN H. E. ROUNTREE, U. S. N.

It was a day of queer feelings when, lying at anchor in Hampton Roads last fall, it was announced that the Utah had been chosen to meet Mr. Hoover and his party at Montevideo, South America, and bring them home. There were those who had long anticipated their Christmas leave and the visit home, and they did not wish to forego that pleasure. Some had seen South America, and the trip to them was not attractive. There were others who anticipated the long, dragging out trip down and back again, and the immediate spring gunnery practice without any shore relief, and there was nothing about the trip compensating for it. There were those who desired to make the trip. To them a visit to the South American ports and Mexico City and Havana (as was first expected) would be an experience of a lifetime for which nothing could be substituted. They felt that the sacrifice of home and people at Christmas-time was very well compensated for. There were a few who, beyond all this, felt that it was a most unusual privilege to be introduced to the President-elect and Mrs. Hoover and their distinguished guests. Such contacts are not to be despised. Even there were those who felt deeply the distinction of being one of a party on a "good-will" mission to a foreign country; and that a battleship is used for such a purpose is most remarkable and, perhaps, never heard of before, certainly with a mission just like this. Though by actualities we are a long way from it, it has the semblance of "beating swords into pruning hooks."

Thus, with a hurried trip to New York, where supplies for the trip were taken on, equipment and furnishings for Hoover accommodations installed, officers put ashore to provide stateroom space for all, and the ship made ready in general for the duty, we sailed from Hampton Roads November 21, 1929, for the long journey South of nineteen days.

The trip down was spent preparing the ship for Mr. Hoover. Plans had to be formulated, and much was required to carry them into effect. Every one was busy. Except for a few days out of Hampton Roads, the sea was smooth and the ship was steady. Only a few times did we sight another ship until we were on the last lap of the journey down by the coast of South America. The only living thing to be seen were the flying fish. They seemed to be much excited as the big-fish Utah plunged into their playgrounds. They would fly about in gangs going in every direction.

The event of crossing the equator was a masterly affair. The legend of the sea describes Neptuneus Rex, the mythological king of the deep, as having his throne in the briny deep of the equator. Any one entering that domain, for the first time, must be initiated into the Solemn Mystic Order of Shellbacks." The members of this mystic order prepared for the exercises in most elaborate fashion. The king and the queen and the royal baby, and all their cohorts, representing Davy Jones, His Royal Majesty's Secretary; the Royal Council, the Royal Doctor, the Royal Dentist, the Royal Barber, the Royal Magistrates, the Royal Guard, and the Royal Executioners; also all living creatures of the sea, such as Mermaids, Whales, Sea Serpents, Sharks, Royal Bears, Sea Lions, Pollywogs, etc. Coal-tar, varnish, sulphur, giant razors (size 18x24), rip-saws, surgical instruments, meat axes, chains, handcuffs, cans and cans of axle-grease mixed with fuel oil for bathing purposes, police billies, electric shocking machines, hypodermic needles, castor oil, quinine and nux-vomica, a tank of water mixed with bilge oil, two death chairs and coffins—all were present to do their part in the proceedings. Each candidate was treated by and with all these in an appropriate manner. With a perfect system and marvelous speed, eight hundred and ninety-one were initiated into the Mystic Order of Royal Shellbacks. As the aches and pains diminished, we locked back on a day well spent and gave thanks that we did not have to go through it again. We are all "Shellbacks" now, and we are proud of it! We will await some future time when we can get even, wreaking our vengeance upon some other poor unfortunate victim who has never entered the domain of Neptuneus Rex.

I have written of this at length because it was an experience that means more to some than all the rest of the trip. It is an experience that comes but once in a lifetime, and with the thought also that it may be of interest to the landlubbers at home.

We arrived at Montevideo, Uruguay, December 9th. Here we waited ten days for the arrival of Mr. Hoover. But it was not a case of "waiting," as liberty was extended to half of the ship each day, and Montevideo, a pretty Spanish town, with her American and English population, gave us a royal time.

Mr. Hoover and his party arrived by cruiser from Buenos Aires, Argentine, Sunday 16th. Liberty stopped, and we prepared for his boarding. Promptly at 10 o'clock Tuesday morning he came aboard and immediately we were under way for Rio de Janeiro. The Utah's visit to Rio de Janeiro made the South American cruise altogether worth while, to say nothing about Montevideo and the "good-will" mission of Mr. Hoover and his party.

About noon, Friday, December 21st, we sighted the city glorious. The mountains hardby loomed up like sentinels magnificent. The bay formed a horseshoe in their midst, and the city lifting from the water's edge all around to the mountain-slopes presented a spectacle of natural beauty seldom witnessed.

Yet this was the least of what we were to see. The city itself, down to the minutest detail, is a product of age-long European art which is ingrained in the very natures of these very interesting people. From the mapping out of streets and plazas to the locating and the setting of domiciles; from the planting of flowers to the erection of statuary; from arrangements of streets and the home lighting to the finest detail of construction and finish; from long lanes of palm trees set in gardens of flowers to the ornamentation of the hills, there is a beauty and a grandeur which is known only when man and nature seem to meet in blissful concord.

And still grander scenes await us. We are taken upon a high mountain and shown all the beauties of the surrounding country. The spectacle is marvelous. The horseshoe city of twenty miles' shore line lies before us in charming panorama, and the mountain-sides are dotted with splendid homes and plantations, which in the distance look like the stars in the heavens. The gorgeous illumination of the homes, streets, and the city in general blend a scene of a thousand colors charming beyond description.

Upon one side we look down a perpendicular depth of a dizzy two thousand feet upon floral gardens, parks and winding driveways. On another side we gaze into the distance rugged with mountain peaks in which the city lies like a gem sparkling with illumination of gold, opalescent and amethyst hues; on another side lies the bay and the broad expanse of the glistening white-capped sea. Beautiful beyond expression is about all we can say.

Yes, this is not all. Another surprise awaits us. As if not satisfied at having turned over the keys of the city to us; as if not satisfied with having done everything it seemed possible to entertain us and make us happy; as if not satisfied with the most soulful hospitality of which they were capable; as if there is more beauty and glory yet to be revealed—when our visit was over, at 7 o'clock Sunday evening, as we steamed out of the harbor, the city flashed into its blaze of lights of a thousand hues and her twenty miles of shore burst into flaming fireworks of most artistic designs. In the background, from five different mountain-peaks, rockets burst like bombs in the air and splashed their graceful spray against the sky, while a cruiser followed us amidstream also sending forth fireworks in flashes. Surely some one was right in calling Rio the metropolis of the world. This acquaintance with Rio alone has made the trip worth while to every man who has never been there before.

By this time, Mr. Hoover decided not to visit Mexico and Cuba, but to hurry a visit to Wash-

Shall We Share the Gospel with Others?
IF SO, TO WHAT EXTENT?

One million, seven hundred thousand souls in Japan and Porto Rico alone are depending upon us. If we of the Christian denomination do not share with them the Gospel, they will never get it. February and March are "Foreign Mission Months" in the Southern Christian Convention. What will the answer be from us as individuals, Sunday Schools and Churches? We are depending upon each and every one to do his or her best in obedience to the command of our Lord, "Go ye."

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE FIRST EASTER.

(Mark 16:1-16.)

And when the Sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, had brought sweet spices, that they might come and anoint Him.

And very early in the morning the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun.

And they said among themselves, Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre?

And when they looked, they saw that the stone was rolled away; for it was very great.

And entering into the sepulchre, they saw a young man sitting on the right side, clothed in a long white garment; and they were affrighted.

And he saith unto them, Be not affrighted: Ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified: he is risen; and He is not here: behold the place where they laid Him.

But go your way, tell His disciples and Peter that He goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see Him, as He said unto you.

And they went out quickly, and fled from the sepulchre; for they trembled and were amazed: neither said they anything to any man; for they were afraid.

Now, when Jesus was risen early the first day of the week, He appeared first to Mary Magdalene, out of whom He had cast seven devils.

And she went and told them that had been with Him, as they mourned and wept.

And they, when they had heard that He was alive, and had been seen of her, believed not.

After that, He appeared in another form unto two of them, as they walked, and went into the country.

And they went and told it unto the residue: neither believed they them.

Afterward He appeared unto the eleven as they sat at meat, and upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen Him after He was risen.

And He said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.

He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.

THE CHRISTIAN'S GLAD TIME.

Easter should of all seasons be the gladdest and happiest with Christians. It celebrates the resurrection of our Lord. This incident has no parallel in history, and there is nothing with which to compare it. It is unique. It stands alone. It is unapproachable, is incomparable. Christ Himself, and some of the prophets in the flesh, intervened, and, as God's spokesmen, raised individuals from the dead. Christ alone of all who ever came back from the tomb, arose from the dead with no spokesman or mortal representative to utter a word or to intervene as God's representative. He arose from the dead, and in this God's power was manifest and Jesus our Saviour became the first fruits of them that slept. In this act, God manifested His power over man's bitterest and most desperate enemy, death. This we say was the most momentous event of all time. It was the crowning act of redemption, without which the life of Jesus Christ might be likened to many other lives. His resurrection stamps the seal of His divinity upon the life He had lived, and declares Him to be the incarnate Son of God. The resurrection proved all that Jesus had ever done, and claimed for Himself was true; and He claimed much. He claimed to be the Son of God; He claimed to have power to forgive sins; He claimed to have come down from the Father; He claimed to be the Light of the world, a Light that could not be hid or obscured; He claimed to be both Saviour and Redeemer; He claimed to be able to give rest to the weary soul and eternal life to every one who would come unto Him. No teacher that ever came to this earth claimed so much for himself as did Jesus of Nazareth. He set Himself as Teacher and Leader and the great example of mankind. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

While He was in the flesh, men doubted and despised Him for His claim to power and authority, and His followers could not understand Him. But when He arose from the dead and laid aside the garments and the vesture of the tomb, and walked and talked with men and women, He put, by the act of His resurrection, the stamp of the divine seal on all that He had ever claimed for Himself.

And now the history of succeeding centuries has shown that every claim He made for Himself was true and just, and every word that came from His lips was divine and eternal. "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but not one jot or tittle of my word shall pass away." Out of His life have come those processes and powers which have made civilization's great and human beings immortal and divine. He is the world's hope, and as the centuries go He does not become less, but greater, and mankind discovers in Him new and ever-increasing powers, pursuits and possessions.

By and through His resurrection, He changed the day of worship and of rest and of devotion. Prior to His time, men had rested on the seventh day to celebrate creation. Since His time, men have rested on the first day of the week to celebrate salvation and redemption. This is well, for it may not have mattered much that any of us were created; but it does matter much as to whether we shall be saved. As salvation is more important than creation, so the Christian world rests and worships on the first day of the week to celebrate the crowning event of redemption and salvation, viz: the resurrection of our Lord. Then annually, at Easter-time, our Churches are filled with glad songs, preachers of righteousness proclaim to the world that He is risen, glory to His name forever. This, indeed, is the Christian's glad hour. Shall we not celebrate this glad hour, not only by word of mouth and by devotion of heart through song and service and prayer, but by backing all this up and sealing it with that which costs us something, and make a gift in His name to help make His known to others? Think of it! nearly 2,000 years after the glad resurrection morn, nearly two-thirds of the human race are yet without Him or any knowledge of Him. We who know Him and the power of His resurrection should certainly show our gratitude and appreciation and joy by making our offering of self-denial that His name and the power of His name may be given to those who know Him not. J. O. A.

THE WHOLE CHURCH LOOKS ON.

The last session of the Southern Christian Convention voted that the Churches take an offering at Easter for missions. This is somewhat of an experiment. Heretofore, there have been calls for an Easter offering; this time the call comes imperatively from need and from the system now in vogue. The pastors have been called upon to carry the missionary message direct to their people and to give their people an opportunity to respond to that message. There is nothing so cruel and killing as silence, indifference and inactivity in this matter. Heretofore, a Church could do without taking a missionary offering and still feel that it had a part in missions and the mission work. It cannot do this any more, for no part of Conference apportionments will go for missions, and all that will go must be given directly. Every Church in the Southern Convention, and every Sunday School, can and will know this year just how much it gives to missions or how little. A part of the program is to take the Easter offering and try, through that offering, to come as near as possible to reaching the goal set for each Church, that goal being one-third the amount of pastor's salary. Some Churches and some pastors write that they will do their utmost to reach their entire quota on Easter. Others will try, and all will do something in this direction. It should be the culmination of many weeks of effort and preparation. To this end, every one is supposed to do his best and give something to missions, for the whole Church is looking on. The next few weeks will reveal whether we are a missionary people and which of our Churches are missionary, or whether we are indifferent and unconcerned as to Church building at home and sending the gospel abroad. Let every Church, every pastor, every individual, do his and her best in the Easter offering. It will express the gladness and gratitude of our own hearts for the glorious Easter Day and the resurrection of our Lord that it celebrates. Our offering will, in a measure, say whether we appreciate that event and whether we are willing to celebrate in a way and manner that counts for the Church, for Christ and for the kingdom.

The whole Church looks on, and there will come righteousness and gladness throughout the Church, or there will be sorrow and depression and regret and disappointment in many, many hearts. We believe that every pastor will give his people a chance either on Easter Sunday or at the first service nearest thereto. It will be cruel, indeed, not to say tragic and most deplorable, for any one to ignore this vital matter. May God help us to do our best, since the whole Church looks on. J. O. A.

A BUSINESS, AND NOT A CHARITY.

The Church has many charities, and Church people do many charitable deeds. This is right and proper. But missions is not a charity. It is more than a charity. It is an obedience to the great commission of our Lord. We give to charity to help our fellow-man and for the sake of humanity. We give to missions to help in the work of our Lord and for the sake of Jesus, our Saviour and Redeemer. The wicked man, the agnostic and the atheist may and will often give money for charity; just for the sake of helping a human being in need. They will not give to missions, for the simple reason that missions are for the sake of Him who came to redeem and save a world. No wonder Dr. Frank Mason North, the distinguished mission secretary of the Methodist Episcopal Board, said: "From now on, missions must be the business, and not the charity of the Church"; and Dr. Cornelius H. Patton, the great secretary of the Congregational board, says: "That it is the biggest and most successful endeavor that has ever sprung from the brain of man. We are dealing with the fruitage of God. The thing which Jesus said would come to pass if the gospel were preached and practiced among nations has actually come to pass. The gospel is the power of God as it was in the day of the apostles." Missions is not only the biggest business that ever sprung from the brain of man, or ever emanated from the heart of God; it is at the same time the most successful and the most praiseworthy, because it is all to the honor and glory of God, and in the name and for the sake of His blessed Son.

We give our money for sweet charity's sake to buy bread and clothing and shelter for the physical body of those in need; we give our money to missions to carry the bread of life to the souls of those who are perishing without it. We do the first for the sake of our fellow-man and humanity; we do the latter for the sake of Jesus Christ and because He commanded us to do it. It may be we cannot love the folks afar off and care little about helping those whom we may never see; but they are not afar off from the love of our Lord, and He yearns for their salvation with the same anxiety that He yearned for ours before that yearning bore fruit in the salvation of our own souls. He has seen fit to make His work of saving others dependent upon us who have been saved. To this end, He called the Church into existence and burdened and blessed it, not with a charity to be chosen or refused, but with the business of carrying on His work in the world. We say again, with Dr. Frank Mason North, "Missions is not the charity, but the business, of the Church"; and with Dr. Patton, the biggest business that was ever conceived by the brain of man, and the greatest thought that ever emanated from the mind of God.

READY-MADE AND READY-TO-USE.

This is an age of machinery. The wheels are turning everywhere and the machines are doing almost everything that was once done by hand. Man has designed and created the machines that are producing the various articles of daily use. Man is a creator as he was made in the image of God. God said, "Let us make man in our image." "God created man in His own image" (Gen. 2: 26, 27). Man was given dominion over the fish of the sea, the fowl of the air, the cattle, over all the earth, and over every creeping thing" (Gen. 2:26). But man is limited in his dominion to the earth, and its contents. He has no power to control the planets, the sun, or the stars. Within his domain he has the capacity to create and control. The machinery of the world proves his right to create, and his genius in that vast field.

Shoes, hats, dresses for all ages and conditions from the cradle to the casket are on the market. The stores and shops are filled with things of all uses ready made—clocks, watches, needles, scissors, razors, all kinds of china, glass and silverware, guns, cars, pens, typewriters, typesetting machines, printing presses, kitchen outfits; in fact the drudgery of the working world has been reduced to a minimum. This wonderful achievement in the realm of human creation has increased the work of man, but decreased the burden of his work. He does more and works less, because his inventions have multiplied his labor a thousandfold. Think of the music, and addresses heard through machinery, and the drafts made upon water, electricity and air to give power, light and intercourse for man. Yet, the more there is produced, the busier men become. They do more, they have more, they enjoy more.

The mechanical age has reduced the inequalities of mankind. Fine dress at one time in the past distinguished the wearer and made that one an outstanding person in society. That day passed with the coming of the machine, artificial silk, and all styles of ready-to-wear articles of dress. The world today is unified in dress, in homes, in living conditions, in education, through public schools, as never before. The gospel of Jesus Christ has enlightened mankind to the extent of reducing the divisive and increasing the unifying conditions of society. Religion itself is coming to be a ready-made system of thought, expression, and life. The people of God read the same Bible, sing the same songs, offer the same prayer, and practice the same habits. Prohibition is driving out drunkenness, education is driving out coarseness, business is driving out rudeness, and the Church is refining as well as saving men. Business houses and transportation companies teach courtesy and good behavior. Banks teach honesty and promptness in meeting obligations. Schools teach obedience to authority, and the Church teaches faith in the Bible and Jesus Christ.

TRYING THE IMPOSSIBLE.

Will Rogers, the humorist and comedian, like all genuine humorists, is a philosopher and has the power of summarizing and generalizing. He is quoted as saying recently, "Russia is trying to do something that no nation can do and live—Russia is trying to scrap God." The humorist is eminently correct, and follows the teaching of history and experience when he further says that "A nation may scrap her navy and army and still exist, but no people can scrap God and religion and long exist." He might also have said that what is true of a nation is true of an individual. Because of a community's belief and faith in God, an individual in that community may disbelieve God and be carried along with a tolerable degree of bodily and mental security, but such a person has his community to thank for safety and security.

The greatness of our own nation has come from its belief, and the faith of its citizenship, by and large, in God. Only by keeping alive a firm, fixed faith in Him has our nation been blessed and made secure. "In God we trust," is stamped upon the coins of the realm, and while there are those, even millions, who are heedless of God, yet the soul of our nation gives heed to and worships God.

Whether we shall depart from this is to be seen. Let it be borne in mind that our safety and security as a nation and as people depend upon our belief and faith in God.

Russia is trying to scrap God, to relegate Him to the realm of nothingness. Russia is teaching atheism in her schools and practicing atheism in government and in the high places generally. Russia is undertaking the impossible. J. O. A.

FOLLOWING JESUS.

A certain young man once said to Jesus, "Lord, I will follow Thee; but let me first go bid them farewell, which are at home at my house" (Luke 9:61). Hundreds of years before, another young man was called to be a prophet of God, and he made a similar request, but when chided answered the call and became one of the greatest prophets—a double-portion prophet, in fact.

Since the beginning of time, many have said, "Lord, I will follow Thee; but let me—" A half-hearted surrender, "Some of self and some of Thee." The choice comes to all, and instead of "Christ or Barabbas," it is "Christ or self." A half-hearted surrender never brings peace. Only an unconditional surrender brings peace to hearts as well as to nations. We cannot say, "But let me do this or that"; only "May Thy will be done in me, by me, through me, each day of my life." Jesus' rule for His followers, as given by Matthew, is: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." Deny ourselves the worldly pleasures, the fleshly lusts even as He did, that we may bring glory to His name. We need to choose the "precious from the vile," and crucify in our bodies "the lust of the flesh and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life." The choice is not for this life only, but for all eternity, that we may know Him and the power of His resurrection. We have not chosen Him, but He has chosen us; yet we can hold back and not let Him work His perfect work in and through us.

We need to realize our nothingness in our own sight before we can be something in His sight. It has been said that Moses was forty years in Egypt, learning to be somebody; forty years in Midian learning to be nobody; and then for forty years in the wilderness, God showed what He could do with a man who had learned these two lessons. Do we want to be used by Him in the work of His kingdom? Then, let us say from the depths of our hearts the words of the song:

"Not I, but Christ, be honored, loved, exalted;
Not I, but Christ, be seen, be known, be heard;
Not I, but Christ, in every look and action;
Not I, but Christ, in every thought and word.

"Not I, but Christ, in lowly, silent labor;
Not I, but Christ, in humble, earnest toil.
Christ, only Christ! no show, no ostentation; Christ, none but Christ, the Gatherer of the spoil." W.

GEORGIA AND ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

We are hoping, by the help of the Lord, to have one of the best Sunday School and Christian Endeavor conventions at Richland, the fifth Saturday and Sunday in March, that we have ever had. Whether we do or not depends upon the interest manifested in it. So far, the prospects are encouraging and everything bids fair for a good convention. It looks like every Church will be represented. We want you represented, whether you have a S. S. & C. E. or not. That will be a fine place for you to get the "fever" for one.

The Congregational people will be represented. If you who read this know of any Congregational Churches in reach of the convention, make it a point to see that they send some delegates. I am serving Antioch (Congregational) Church this time, and we elected five last Sunday to represent the Church at Richland. They are happy at the prospect of going, but no happier than we are for them to come. The good people of Richland are making great preparations and will be disappointed if we do not have a large crowd. Come, bring others, and pray that the spirit of the Lord may guide us in all we do at Richland.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The tenant system is poor business—poor for the occupant and poor for the field occupied. The term is usually applied to those who reside on and cultivate other lands than their own. As a rule, tenants do not improve the land they cultivate; and they are thinking of renting a better farm. This spirit and practice not only reduce the value of the land, but the value of the tenant himself. It is difficult to take the interest in short occupancy of the land of another that the owner of the land takes in what is the interest he takes in his own lands, and people in tenant communities are not equal in quality and value to lands occupied by the owners. It is a rare case to find a worthless man on land that he owns and cultivates himself. There is something in the ownership and cultivation of real estate. Jails are not filled by men who own their own homes and keep out of debt. There is something in the ownership and occupation of a real home that builds character and useful service.

But this letter has to do with the tenant system of ministers of the gospel. Some ministers seem to think of a pastorate as a temporary engagement and are open at any time for a change of location. They are tenants with no fixed attachments and no thought of building a congregation. A larger salary, a finer Church, a more prominent place, will appeal to them. It seems that such ministers are open to a call and to a change at any time. The idea of permanence in their position does not seem to possess them. They are tenants rather than owners of their position.

There may be two calls—one into the ministry, and the other into the place for work. In other words, a double call means permanence. If views differ on this question, one thing is certain, that the tenant system of ministers in continually changing positions does not conduce to personal or Church success. If a minister finds his true place, he can succeed, whether the place is large or small. The best farmers develop the poorest lands. Change may be necessary for a minister to find his place, but, when he finds his place, he should settle down as the owner of land settles down to remain and to develop his field. There are too many changes of pastorates, and too many short terms of service; too many serving like tenants: in one place this year, and another place the next year. What the Church needs is pastors to remain in one field and develop that, and it will develop him. The great ministers and the great Churches of the world have been developed by long service. Spurgeon, Joseph Parker, Beecher, and Phillip Brooks are examples. Permanence in place, absolute surrender to God and His cause, being satisfied on small salary if need be, and making the little Church a great Church, and God will take care of the minister who finds his place and keeps it by faithful service. The tenant system in the ministry, as in farming, fails to develop the best in the ministry and in the Church. This method will finally put the minister where God wants him to be, and that means that the work of the Lord will prosper in his hands.

ELON LETTER.

A friend said to me today that he was disturbed about what to do with his sixteen-year-old son, who is shortly graduating from high school.

I told him I entered college when I was fourteen years of age. He replied: "But life is far different today. You did not have the strains then that beset young people today."

This friend of mine is right. Life is fast today compared to what it was thirty-five years ago. I had never seen an automobile when I came to college. Concrete sidewalks were luxuries in those days, and concrete roads had never been dreamed of. Motion pictures and the phonograph and the radio were non-existent. Telegrams were reserved for death messages and war news. Life was slow and stately in my undergraduate days.

The wealth of the country has increased prodigiously, and that adds another snare for modern youth. The only "week-ends" we knew of in our day were under our hats. Going to college was an engrossing affair a generation ago. Now it is the by-product of an otherwise intensely interesting life.

Our college studies filled our lives a generation ago. Now they fill the leisure hours only of the student. The real business of college students today is living. Education must not interfere with life, nor must anything else. A boy with a car and a check book has small chance of arriving intellectually.

Some colleges are in a worse plight than others in these regards. It behooves a father concerned for the future of his son to investigate the students of a college as well as its physical plant and its faculty. If the students of a college have extravagant habits, if they waste their time and squander their talents, if they "cut" classes and other college duties and fritter their time away in social life and auto trips and the like, no matter how learned the faculty may be nor how well-appointed the buildings may be, there is small chance of a boy's getting an education there. On the other hand, there is large chance in such a situation that he may wreck his moral character.

Parents would do well to be anxious about their sons and daughters. The college they attend should be chosen for its known moral contribution to character development.

My friend is rightly concerned. It is a sign that he is a good father. I only wish all fathers would take to heart so deeply the welfare of their sons.

A BIG IDEA.

My dear Friends:

Every member of our Church is getting a letter exactly like this one today.

No, it is not about money or work. It is about a big idea. Not a new idea, but one so old that we have forgotten just when and how it began. Any way, it is known and more or less practiced throughout the whole of this and other countries. The idea is that of the people coming together at the Churches and other places dedicated to that convenience and spending one hour on each Sabbath Day in the worship of God. From 11 A. M. to 12 M. is the popular hour in our country.

Thousands of groups, representing millions of people, are practicing the idea. There is some evidence that they become better and happier people by the practice.

I think the idea is a great one. The approach of no other hour has the effect upon my thought and feelings that the hour I'm writing about does. If I were alone in a jungle or desert, I believe with the approach of that hour a deep sense of reverence would steal over me; a hatred of my sins and a desire to worship God would lead me into fellowship, in spirit, with those worshipping congregations. Do you have such thoughts, feelings and desires wherever you are during that hour? I guess you do.

But a great number of our people don't seem to like the idea. So it is not going strong at our Church. Maybe there's something wrong with the program, and not the idea. Or, maybe some other idea is found to be better. Anyway, something needs attention. I'm distressed until we can reach an agreement. One of our brethren who believes in the idea wished for $1,000,000 the other day, that he might erect for us a "Christian Temple." I countered with a wish that we would better use the one we have. Maybe I was wrong. Maybe we both were wrong. Maybe we can abandon the Church idea.

Wish I knew what you think and how you feel about the idea. Is it worth it? What would you do if you were in my place? Is our little Church glorifying our Heavenly Father to the full measure of its opportunity? If not, what should we do?

Lastly, what can I do to make our fellowship more thoroughly Christian, and make us mutually helpful? Can I better serve you in any way? I know that I am your friend.

DOES OLD AGE WORRY YOU?

Today I was talking with a lady whose face showed signs of worry. Her eyes showed signs of sorrow, her ambitions seemed crippled, and her life seemed weary. After talking with her a short time, I learned that this was her thirty-fourth birthday, and this was her "worry." "Just think! I will soon be forty years old," she said to me, with a dreadful look on her face.

Twenty years ago this morning she arose from her slumbers with a smile that would drive the misty clouds away, with hopes and ambitions that few could imagine. Her life was before her. She had no worry. She had no sorrow.

Twenty years have changed her life. Twenty years have changed her looks. Twenty years have come and gone, and now her hopes, her joys, her ambitions, her thoughts are all hampered by the dreadful thought of "old age."

There was a time when she was the gay one at the party. There was a time when she was able to rise in the morning and sing happily through the day. There was a time when golden opportunities were presenting themselves to her each day.

But today she hangs her head in sorrow. Today her life is one filled with dreadful thoughts of tomorrow. Her life is now one of doubt and fear. Her ambitions have ceased to make themselves known any more. Though she is yet young, she is old—old because of her imagination; old because she has allowed dreadful thoughts to come into her life; old because she is filled with fear of "old age."

It's true that this particular person is a little unusual in her thinking, and in her worrying; but there are many of us today wasting time worrying about "old age" and all its worries, instead of planting the seed of life that will bring a golden harvest in the years to come.

We spend too much time wondering if we will be like So and So when we get to be their age. We wonder if we will be dependent upon some one when we get "old." We have all kinds of doubts and fears in our minds. But what need have we for this?

Old age may come, or we may go on into eternity without ever living to know anything about this state of old age. But why should it matter? When we have a God that we can trust our souls with, there will be no need for any doubt or any fear,

There will be a time when all shall be young again. There will be a time when all shall be happy and gay again. There will be a time when the soul that trusts in God shall shake off the cloth of dreadful fear; the soul shall say "good-by" forever to old age and all its worries, and go on knowing that it shall remain young and happy forever. And in the meantime, God will take care of those who trust in Him.

A glance at the above Church list will reveal several changes in their order as reported last year; also that many of them do not appear in the Sunday School attendance list above. It will be interesting to see next year what these forty-two Churches give in denominational benevolences, and note the order in which they come. A number of Churches appear in the Sunday School list that are not in the Church list.

TRUTHFULNESS IS WATCHWORD.

In the department of your paper called "The SUN's Observatory," edited by Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, in the issue of February 28, 1929, appeared an article headed "High Cost of Evangelism." In that article quotations have been made from the Review of the Churches, a British publication, edited by Sir Henry Lum. Attention was called to the case of "Rev. S., D. D., who is generally known as "B. S.," "who received for his campaign in New York, in addition to the expenses of himself and his staff, the sum of $100,000." Of course, the one who is meant by "B. S." is none other than the Rev. William Sunday, D. D., a reputable, distinguished, heaven-sent, God-inspired evangelist. With reference to the amount he received in New York, these are the facts:

Instead of $100,000, he received approximately $144,000. Of this amount, he did not keep one penny for himself, but contributed the whole amount, one-half to the Red Cross and the other half to the Y. M. C. A. for their work during the World War. I also happen to know of the many kind things Rev. B. S. has done during the years with the money so willingly and generously given by the multitudes who were blessed by his gracious ministry. The writer in THE SUN's "Observatory" should not confuse this man of God with many so-called evangelists or imitators of B. S. who may themselves be guilty of gadding about for the sake of the dollars they can rake in. And as for comparing him with Tetzal, of Martin Luther's day, Bro. Harrell must not have studied his history aright. If large offerings are received by the evangelists, blame the preachers and the people of the Churches who call them, and not the evangelists. Before Rev. Harrell writes or becomes sponsor for any more such articles, let's get the facts and the truth.

BRO. FLOWERS' WORK.

The lectures of Rev. A. R. Flowers in Rocky Mount, N. C., have been an inspiration to our young people who heard them. Bro. Flowers is a good thinker and is an earnest worker in his efforts to create a desire in our boys and girls to make the most of their opportunities possible. He is doing a work that is most needful and a work that has been neglected by many of our pastors. The Churches of different denominations feel no hesitancy in asking Mr. Flowers into their pulpit.

MISSIONS
 REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

WOMEN AND MISSIONS.

The Woman's Missionary Council of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at its concluding session of a Conference in Washington, D. C., on the 19th instant, pledging $1,119,000 for foreign missionary work the coming year. Verily, the women in every Church take the lead in missionary work and stimulate missionary activity among the men of the Church. It may seem a strange thing that in the biggest task ever undertaken by man, and ever commissioned to man by the God of heaven, must be led by the women. Possibly it is because missionary giving is the most unselfish and Christ-like giving that mortals ever do in this world. What we give to missions is not for the praise or thanks or reward from man, or even for the sake of man, but just for Jesus' sake. When the woman opened the alabaster box of ointment and anointed our Lord against His burial, she just did so out of pure, genuine, loving loyalty for Him. Our Saviour said then "That which this woman hath done shall be told as a memorial of her whosoever the gospel shall be preached." It is just loving loyalty to Jesus Christ that prompts us to give to missions, because while our heart cannot yearn for the salvation of folks we have never seen, and will never know, His heart does yearn for their salvation, and while He gave His life for them and for us, He depends on us, who know Him, to be loyal enough to Him to give the gospel to others, not for their sakes or for our sakes, but for His sake. Women somehow know what loving loyalty and devotion are, and they have the power and the willingness to express it. This caused woman to tarry longest at the cross and to be first at the tomb, not for the praise and reward that man could give, but because she was loyal to her Lord and loved Him and just wants to do some things for His sake. Our Women's Missionary Societies are kept alive and their work has become mighty in the world, not because they wish any reward or praise from mankind, but because of a willingness and a desire to express in this way a loving, loyal devotion to Him.

Possibly, too, the women are more loyal to their Lord, because they are the sufferers of the world, and Jesus Himself suffered as none other has ever suffered. They have, therefore, with Him what Paul called "the fellowship of His suffering." Women can endure and always have endured more suffering than man, and possibly it is on this account that she has the greatest loyalty to her Lord, who Himself must needs be made perfect through suffering. At any rate, the women show us how and lead the way to express our loyalty; a loyalty born of the heart and of the soul; a loyalty that expresses itself in beautiful deeds and glorious achievements in His name. Since this writer has been Mission Secretary, he has received time and again checks from young women, unsolicited and of their own accord, for $5, $10, $25, and even $50. He does not recall ever having received a check for missions unsolicited, and of his own accord, from a young man out at work. True, many young men give to missions through their Churches and Sunday Schools, but only when and as solicited.

Somehow, the women seem inspired by loyalty to their Lord and have a desire that the world shall know Him, whom to know aright is life eternal. This explains why there are women's missionary societies of the Churches and no men's missionary societies. Women can just do things out of loyalty and devotion, with no thought of reward or praise; not even with the thought of humanity, but with the thought of their Lord and the desire to do something in His name and for His dear sake. J. O. A.

WHAT IF CHRISTIANS TITHE ONE MONTH?

Rogers Babson, the noted statistician, estimates that the average income of Christian Church members in the United States is $1,000 per year. In round numbers, there are 31,000 of us in the Southern Christian Convention. If our income is up to the average, and we presume it is, the total for one year would be $31,000,000. If we tithe for a year, the income to the Churches would be $310,000. This would be over $25,000 per month. With such a monthly income, our Churches, mission boards and institutions would, in a few months, wipe out all indebtedness. We have not learned to tithe. We haven't even learned to deny ourselves. Our Lord said, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me."

There is the usual complaint of hard times and scarcity of money, but our spending for what we really want goes on apace. North Carolina reports more automobiles sold in January, 1929, than in any January for five years, and considerably more in February, 1929, than in February for five years. This may not indicate an abundance of money, but it does indicate that people somehow manage to spend money for what they want. J. O. A.

FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(A copy of a letter sent to every member of his Church by the pastor, Dr. C. H. Rowland.)
 Greensboro, N. C., March 20, 1929.

Dear Friends:

As your pastor, I send hearty greetings of good will to all members of my congregation this Eastertide. As Christians, our thoughts turn naturally to the last week of our Lord upon earth. We share with Him the fleeting triumph of Palm Sunday; we go with Him to the temple; we retire with Him alone with His friends; we go to the upper room, and partake of the Last Supper with Him; we go with Him to Gethsemane, stand around the cross, lay our flowers before the closed tomb, and we shout for joy at the resurrection.

I am thinking also of sacrificial gifts. This is the time when we are to make an offering for missions, and each of us should bring a love-gift on this day that Christ conquered the grave, to be used for heralding His love abroad. Inclosed you will find an envelope. Let each one give as he feels in his heart he should after prayerfully considering the needs. Our quota is $1,000. Of this, about $200 will be given through the Sunday School. The remainder is to be given through our Easter offering. If you cannot bring your offering, send it. I am counting on you for your part.

But the most important of all is the ingathering of souls for our Master. Our boys and girls, our friends, our neighbors, are our opportunity. Let us be faithful in bringing them unto the Church. Let parents advise with their children and lead them into the fold, and let the spirit of this week be in our whole life.

Remember the services each evening at 7:30 during next week. They will help us all to get closer to Christ. Then on Easter Sunday morning come to the place of worship and let's make it a great day for our Lord.

Announcements to His Church.

The young people have the evening program in charge and have correlated it with the Sunday School lesson, "Stewardship and Missions," giving a playlet, "Aunt Tillie Learns to Tithe."

A short service at 7:30 will be held each evening this week in the hut. It is our purpose to make these services preparatory to Easter Sunday. Let all who feel the need of a deeper consecration attend. Reports will be heard each evening from personal workers.

We trust that each teacher is seeking to lead all those in his class who have not yet confessed Christ, to Him, and that all such may unite with the Church on Easter Sunday. We have secured a number of transfers and we want to be very active during this week, seeking out those who should be united with us. We want a great ingathering on next Sunday.

We want to make next Sunday a great day in our Church, and we will need the presence of all of our members to do this. After His trials, suffering and death, came the glorious resurrection, and may the joyous Easter message, "He is risen," inspire us into a fuller, richer life. Then, too, we want to bring our offerings for missions. "God so loved that He gave"—and so will we.

There is to be an early morning service of the Christian Endeavor Societies of the city at Grace M. P. Church on Easter Sunday, in which our people are to join.

Your devoted pastor,
 C. H. ROWLAND.

THE OUTCAST.

BY PASTOR SANO, of Japan.

It was a rainy night in the month of July when a crowd of people attended the Meguro Church. The building is small and very hot in summer. That night I preached on the subject, "Christ, the Friend of the Lowest." In the audience was a man who had come to the meetings a couple of months, but the truth had never seemed to touch his heart. He always came late and always went away before the meeting closed. But on this special night he waited for the prayer meeting, which is always held after the regular service is over.

He asked for permission to speak, and when it was granted, this was the substance of his speech: "I was born in a village which is called Eta-Mura, where all the people are despised. Socially, we are all ostracised and have none of the ordinary rights which other Japanese have. At eight years of age I was sent to the public school to learn to read and write, but always I was confronted with the cry of 'Outcast,' and was not only not allowed to play with the other children, but was always treated with contempt. I went home to my mother and asked her what the word 'Eta' meant. She took me in her arms and comforted me as much as she could, telling me that we belonged to a class of people who were considered to be at the bottom of society and had no rights which other people enjoy. I remained in that school, which was a hell, for six years.

"My home was not pleasant, but in the hope of better things I went away to Osaka to seek work in a place where I was not known. But in Japan one must present to prospective employers a statement of his origin and past life. Knowing I was an outcast, no one would give me employment. In my despair I determined to commit suicide, and one night at midnight in a lonely place I rushed in front of an approaching train. But the next day I found myself in a hospital, being taken care of by strangers. I got well and wandered from place to place, seeking rest, and like the demons in the Bible, I found none until in the meetings of the Meguro Church I learned of Jesus, the Friend of the 'outcast,' who came to save the lowest and lift them up into the heavenly places into His own glory and peace and joy. Jesus has made me feel that however low among men I may have been born, I am now a son of God, and some time, if I overcome, I shall have the unutterable privilege of sitting with my Saviour on His throne (Rev. 3:21), exalted far above all earthly distinctions. Ah, what a wonderful Saviour we have!"

The above is only one of many testimonies that might be given of what the gospel gives to lost souls as Bro. Sano has found among the people who have come to his Church at Meguro—lost men and women hungering and thirsting for the bread and the water of life.

BLUE RIDGE CONFERENCE.

The All-South Missionary Education Conference means the challenge of a world friendship program, the getting together for fellowship, inspiration and instruction, the enrichment of life through sharing in high thinking, rich message, and helpful action.

The 1929 conference offers intensive study courses, live discussion periods, an atmosphere of devotion, high points of inspiration, and recreation hours that will be a joy. From morning watch to vesper hour the days will be those of delight. Every summer Blue Ridge is a point of high privilege.

The executive committee is making plans that cannot but insure success. The program committee is now ready to announce the entire list of faculty members and other leaders. For general conference information, write to Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, 528 Victor Building, Washington, D. C.

MISSION RALLIES.

Missionary rallies for the North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference:

Alamance District—Graham, N. C., April 9th; superintendent, Mrs. W. P. Lawrence, Elon College, N. C.

Guilford District—Greensboro, N. C., April 11th; superintendent, Mrs. L. P. Wieker, Greensboro, N. C.

Halifax District—Virgilina, Va., April 16th; superintendent, Mrs. Alfred Hayes, Virgilina, Va.

Lee-Chatham District—Turner's Chapel, April 18th; superintendent, Mrs. Doyle McFarland, Jonesboro, N. C.

Randolph District—Ramseur, N. C., April 20th; superintendent, Mrs. I. H. Foust, Ramseur, N. C.

Durham-Wake District—Chapel Hill, N. C., April 23rd; superintendent, Mrs. G. H. Leonard, Chapel Hill, N. C.

Vance-Warren District—Liberty, April 25th; superintendent, Miss Margaret Alston, Henderson, N. C.

It is desired that the pastors shall attend the district rally in which are the Churches he serves. The Churches are asked to send representatives, even if there is no organization in them. In this way we can make these meetings representative.

MISSION RALLIES.

The Woman's Mission Board of Virginia Valley Central Conference met at the home of Rev. A. W. Andes on the night of March 14th, the president, Mrs. R. A. Larrick, presiding.

The district rallies were arranged as follows: Timber Ridge, June 9th; Palmyra, June 11th; Bethlehem, June 12th; Mt. Lebanon, June 15th; Mt. Olivet (G), June 16th.

In addition to the program as arranged by the Southern Board, there will be an address by Rev. Joe French, and probably another speaker can be secured. The chair appointed Mrs. B. J. Earp, Rev. B. J. Earp, and Mrs. B. F. Frank a committee to finish the plans for the rallies.

Our annual Conference had been planned for Leaksville, and the Board set the date August 1st. The Board asks for a contingent fund.

Every member of the Board and nearly all the pastors were present.

MRS. B. F. FRANK, Sec'y.

RECOMMENDED PLANS AND PROGRAM

February, March—Foreign Mission Months

THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION, in its Richmond Session last year, made February and March "Foreign Mission Months" for educational and informational purposes, culminating in an offering from all the Churches for Missions at, or on the nearest possible Sunday to, Easter—March 31, 1929. The goal set for the offering—Home and Foreign Missions—from Sunday Schools, and Churches, and individuals is $33,000; Woman's Societies, $12,000—total, $45,000. Inasmuch as the entire amount thus asked must be raised by voluntary offerings, the Conferences, in their recent sessions, in which the matter was discussed, adopted and recommended to the Sunday Schools and Churches the following method to be pursued in reaching their quota of one-third as much for Missions as for pastor's salary:

FIRST: When a Church uses the Budget Plan, write into that budget one-third the amount of pastor's salary to go to Missions, and send this in monthly or quarterly.

SECOND: If the budget is not used, canvass the individuals of the Church and Sunday School to find out how much each will give to Missions and when, entering the same on a card prepared for the purpose and which may be had of the Mission Secretary, Elon College, N. C.

THIRD: Where neither of these plans is adopted, then endeavor to increase the offering from the Sunday School, and at or about Easter have a Missionary Rally and try to raise the entire amount of the quota at that one service, in conjunction with the monthly offerings from the Sunday School for the year.

Each Church and Sunday School should use one or the other of these plans.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

BY REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson I—April 7, 1928.

THE MINISTRY OF ISAIAH.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Then I said, Here am I; send me."—Isa. 6:8.

LESSON: Isa. 6:1-13, 7:1-17, 20:1-6, 38:1-22.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 116:12-19.

"In the year that King Uzziah died." The earthly king was dead. He may have been a personal friend of Isaiah. His death evidently made a profound impression on the prophet. The significant thing is that it was out of this experience that Isaiah had a larger vision of the Lord. Men often come to know God in a more intimate way because of experiences which for the moment seem grievous, but which work out a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

"I saw the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up." Isaiah saw God. Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God. And blessed is the man who has a clear vision of God, for all of life finds a new interpretation in that experience. The turning point in Paul's life and the secret of all that he became and did was the vision he had of the Christ on the road to Damascus. The significance of this vision of the Lord high and lifted up, and seated on a throne was that even though earthly kings may go the way of all flesh—and Uzziah was one of Judah's greatest kings—the Lord ruleth on high. The thing that John wanted to impress upon his readers in the book which we call Revelation was the fact that, in spite of the turmoil and the unrest in earth, the Lamb sat upon the throne. God still ruleth on high. The destiny of individuals and nations is in His hands. It might be remarked in passing that it was in the temple that Isaiah saw the Lord. God has, of course, revealed himself to men in sundry ways and in sundry places, but he who is wise will look for Him in the stated place of worship. And it should be added that while Isaiah saw the Lord, he saw Him as the Lord. It is our privilege to see Him as the Father.

"Holy, holy, holy is Jehovah of hosts." The gods of the pagans and the heathens are more or less glorified human beings. They are subject to like passions as we. But those of us who worship the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ have one who is altogether lovely, the fairest among ten thousand, the one who is perfect, and hence who is worthy of our adoration and worship. And in worshipping such an one, we enrich our own lives and increasingly become like unto Him.

"Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips." It is not at all likely that Isaiah was a bad man. In fact, he was a man of integrity and of strong character. But when he saw the beauty of the holiness of the Lord he felt his own weakness and his own uncleanness. He was putting in one way what Paul put in another way when he said, "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners of whom I am chief." One reason why men need to read the Bible and to go to Church and to come into the presence of God is that they may have a true revelation of their own needs and a sense of their own limitations which is the beginning of all moral growth and spiritual development. Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness, not those who are satisfied with their own achievements in moral character and spiritual growth.

"Lo, I have touched thy lips, and thine iniquity is taken away and thy sin is forgiven." God has power to cleanse not only our lips, but the inner life. He who said, "Keep thy heart with all diligence" has power to cleanse that heart so that the whole output of life is wholesome. As far as the east is from the west, so far hath He removed our transgressions. He forgiveth all our iniquities; that is, if we confess our sins. He creates within us a new heart and renews a right spirit within us." Thank God for a Saviour who can wash us and make us whiter than snow.

"And I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" He heard the voice of the Lord; it was not the voice of men. There is an inner voice for those who will to do the will of God. And if there were times of quiet and reflection in many lives there would come the voice saying, "Will you go for me?" He who has seen the needs of his own life met in Christ and who has had revealed to him the needs of his fellow-men will always hear a call to some kind of service. The first thing that Paul asked Christ was, "What wilt Thou have me to do?" The emphasis should not be upon what we can get out of Christianity, but what we can put into it.

"Then said I, Here am I; send me." It was as it should be. The love of Christ should constrain us, that we should do with all our might what our hands and our heads and our hearts can find to do.

The man who would follow God must be prepared to pay the price of his convictions. It was no easy thing for Isaiah to wear the garb of a captive and to endure the privations involved thereby, but it was a part of the price that he must pay as a protest against the policy of his beloved nation. And what was worse than the privation was the ridicule. Many a man or woman, and many a young person does not follow Christ at all or follow Him afar off because they cannot bear the ridicule of those who often pose as their friends. It takes real courage to follow Jesus all the way. He who is looking for a challenge to red-blooded living will find it in discipleship—that is, real discipleship—to the Master.

The reference to Hezekiah is introduced to show the conditional nature of prophecy. There is nothing arbitrary in God's dealings with men. The wages of sin is death. But if the wicked turn from his wicked ways and repent, he shall live. In like manner, the grace of God is for all. But only those who meet the conditions can claim the promise.

One thing stands out in bold relief in this lesson—the supreme importance of being true to the heavenly vision. We may not all have visions such as Isaiah had, but to every one of us there comes an insight into the finer possibilities of ourselves. Happy is that man who sees in this the heavenly vision and who sets out to follow the gleam. To all such who follow such light as they have, there shall come more light, and eventually they shall see the Light.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, April 7, 1929.

TOPIC: "Using the Bible as a Daily Guide."—Psa. 19:7-11; Rom. 15:4-7; Heb. 4:12. (Consecration meeting.)

Some Bible Hints.

"Converting" means turning. The Bible turns us from the doubtful and evil to the good (v. 7). The inner eye, the eye of conscience, is enlightened if we use the Bible in earnest (v. 8).

What God says is true and right. We do not need to experiment with it. It has been tested for ages (v. 9).

The Bible is a book of life, a book of experience, and spiritual experience does not change. We can learn from the men of old (Rom. 15:4).

Suggestive Thoughts.

The Bible must be used. The dust-covered Bible helps nobody.

The Bible directions must be followed. This is a book that commands and demands obedience. It is not merely literature or good advice. It is the Word of God.

The Bible must be read with discrimination. It records the growth of mortality. We must follow the highest and not the lowest.

The Bible must be read with prayer. It is the book of communion. In prayer we speak to God; in the Bible, God speaks to us.

A Few Illustrations.

An automobile blue book under the back seat of the car will not tell us the way we shall go; neither will the Bible hidden in a chest.

Only the fool, we are told, makes the same mistake twice; but it is also true that only the fool imitates the other fellow's mistakes. The Bible reveals dangers to shun.

As a guide to a knowledge of God, the Bible is unequalled. It is there that we find Him revealed in Christ. There we learn to know what He is, but we must study to know.

The light of the Book shines in the world like a lighthouse, not only warning of rock and shoal, but showing the way into the harbor. It is God's lamp for the life of man.

To Think About.

How do we use the Bible?

How does the Bible guide us in temptation?

Why memorize parts of the Bible?

A TIMELY WORD.

BY REV. R. C. HELFENSTEIN, D. D.

Lieutenant Governor J. Henry Hazel, an official in the People's Christian Church of Dover, Del., who was very active in the recent building program of his Church, is also rendering most effective service to his State as Lieutenant Governor by his activities and pronouncements on questions of reform legislations. People's Church is justly proud of the record he is making and the firm stand he takes on every moral issue coming before the Legislature.

Mr. Hazel was a captain in the army during the World War, winning distinction for his bravery and efficiency. Since taking his oath of office the first of this year as Lieutenant Governor, he is displaying the same courage and efficiency in statesmanship. What an influence all Christian men in public office might exert if they would realize, as does he, that a man holding public office can in no way more effectively witness for Christ than by using his good office to promote Christian ideals in legislation. The term "politics" should be used discriminatingly, recognizing that, though there is what is termed "dirty politics," that at the same time there is such a thing as "clean politics," and that clean politics or Christian statesmanship is synonymous with Christianity itself as it is applied to civic life.

Lieutenant Governor Hazel, in his inauguration address before the Senate, said, in part: "I recognize the seriousness of the oath I have solemnly taken—an oath which no man should dare to take thoughtlessly or insincerely. I wish to pledge myself to use my full influence in a manner that shall be worthy of the trust imposed in the office I hold.

"I am interested in everything that concerns the life and progress of our State. I am supremely concerned in the moral welfare of our State, for I realize that if the moral interests of our State are made secure, all the other interests will be cared for.

"We are not here to serve special groups who seek selfish objectives. We are here to serve the people of our State and to serve them in a way that will enable the ideals of the best people of our State to be realized, namely: to pass such legislation as will co-operate with the highest interests of the home, and the highest purposes of the school and the Church."

Since taking office, Captain Hazel has fearlessly championed every measure for moral reform that has come before the Senate.

As a prominent member of the American Legion, he has similarly challenged the legion to get back of the moral reforms of the day. In a recent address at a State Legion gathering, he voiced a most timely word which should similarly be voiced before all the Legion gatherings of the nation. Following are a few paragraphs taken from his address to the leading Legionnaires of the State:

"If the American Legion wants to get in a real fight for high ideals and for the right, I challenge you to get back of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead act, and lend your influence and support as men and as an organization for the enforcement of the prohibition laws.

"During the World War, I attended the first officers' training camp at Fort Meyer, Va. General Bliss was sent to our camp, as he or other high officials were sent by President Wilson to all the officers' training camps, to impress upon the officers in training the fact that we were up against the greatest military machine the world had ever seen, namely: 'the German army,' and that America must have the most efficient army possible to secure in order to overcome this formidable military machine. In the interest of efficiency, General Bliss asked us that we take the pledge to abstain from all use of intoxicating liquors while in the service of our country. Why? Because our government knew that a sober officer was the best officer, and that a sober army was the best army.

"Since the World War, we have had an era of prosperity in America, the like of which has never been experienced by any other country in the history of the world. More of the working-class own their own homes in America than in any other nation in the world. More of the young people of the nation are able to go to college and university to prepare themselves for life's work than is true of any other nation. The deposits in the savings banks of our country have increased many times beyond those during any like period in our history. Since the war, America has made more economic progress than any other nation because of the one fact, namely: America is the only prohibition nation in the world.

"We own 24,000,000 of the 29,000,000 automobiles in the world today. Seventy-five per cent of the life insurance business of the whole world is done in the United States. Industry is better. Business is better in America than anywhere else in the world. Why? Because the American working-man is producing more per hour than ever before, and greater production means greater receipts for the working man, and greater receipts mean higher standards of living. It means for the nation leadership in industry and leadership in world trade. And the reason the American working man is producing more goods is that, as a class, he is the only sober working-man in the world. A sober working-man is the best working-man. A sober nation means a working nation.

And a working nations means a prosperous nation. Sobriety and prosperity go together, and national prosperity is impossible without national sobriety.

"Therefore, I challenge you, Legionnaires, if you love your country, get back of the moral and social reforms of our day; accept the challenge of the great ideals expressed in the preamble of our Legion constitution, 'For God and country.'"

It is needless to say that such a challenge made a great impression upon that large gathering of members of the American Legion. Echoes from his address were heard at scores of similar gatherings the following week.

If all the leaders in the American Legion would sound such a challenge to their followers as this challenge uttered by the Lieutenant Governor of Delaware to his brother Legionnaires, think of the influence they could exert for God and for country. What our day needs is more Christian men who are not afraid to speak their convictions to their fellow-men. We need more Christian men in public office who will stand firm for the right—and men who are able and unafraid to speak "the timely word" whenever and wherever occasion permits.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

UNNECESSARY WORRY.

"He will not suffer you to be tempted above that which ye are able; but will, with every temptation, provide a way to escape."

On our trip to New York last fall, to make hurried preparations for the trip to the Utah to meet Mr. Hoover, President-elect, and his party at Montevideo, Uruguay, to bring him home, everyone was all "frustrated," desiring to make a liberty in New York, and yet told that the time would be taken in work, night and day, and that they would probably sail the following day. Oh, the howls and growls!

When work began, the boys were told that if they got through their work in time they could have liberty that night. Needless to say, the impossible was accomplished. The hull of the ship was scraped and painted to a finish in three hours. In the meantime, in the development of things, the ship got orders to sail the second day after, and twenty-four hours' liberty was accorded.

O for the grace of patience and the ability to wait! "Work and wait, and all things come." We are prone to worry much about imaginary troubles and then to find that things come out better than we had expected and the worry was useless. So we say, work and trust God and do right and wait patiently for Him and see how contented the result of things will make us.

Prayer.—Lord, let us come to Thee and receive the fullness of Thy grace. Help us to know in our conscience that if we do our best Thou wilt do the rest. Send us Thy grace and Thy truth as it is in Jesus. Amen.

TUESDAY.

HAPPY ALL THE TIME.

"For the joy set before Him, He endured."—Heb. 12:2.

How to be happy in spite of everything—that is the question. Jesus was. If He was, can we? Why not? Well, it is pretty hard to be happy with a pain in the "tummy" all the time, or a pain anywhere else, for that matter! We have no record of Jesus ever having a pain, or even being sick. But He was as we are, and a boy as boys are; and He must have eaten some green apples or something in His young days. Still, He showed us how to be happy all the time, and it was this way: First, keep healthy; second, keep sinless; third, know you are right; fourth, cultivate many friends and have no enemies and be enemies to nobody; fifth, live for the common good of those around you.

Jesus was sinless. He was tempted as we are, yet He refused to do wrong. The reality of sin is the worst torment to any Christian. Jesus never suffered this. He suffered no anger; He had no jealousies; He had no unholy desires; He was never vexed with envy, never consumed with malice, never puffed up with pride, never shaken with fear, never sullied with a sinful thought, and, therefore, never any remorse came into His life.

Jesus was always right. His eat and His drink was to do the will of His Father. There is nothing that brings more satisfaction than the feeling that after we have done what we could, "it is well with my soul."

Jesus made friends. There were homes He could go into and be treated like a member of the family. There were offices He could visit where the man there laid down his business to receive Him. There were travelers along the road who loved His conversation. There were comrades who loved the touch of His hand and the counsel of His great heart. Even in His darkest hours, angels talked with Him.

Beyond all wealth, honor, or even health is the friendship of noble souls. To be good, generous and true is to make them in the same way, and these friends make us what we are. Nothing can take away the joy of such a life.

Jesus never let pass any one to whom He might render a service or speak a good word.

In following Him, we can be like Paul: "take pleasure in infirmities, reproaches, persecutions, distresses, for Christ's sake." Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

KINDNESS PLUS TRUTH.

"Let not kindness and truth forsake thee: bind them about thy neck, write them upon the tablet of thy heart."—Prov. 3:1-6.

Gov. McCreary, a former Governor of Kentucky, a man noted for his politeness, was once the guest of a friend in the country. His hostess asked him at the dinner-table whether he would have coffee or tea. "Coffee, if you please," he replied. Thereupon, she explained that her cook had neglected to heat the coffee. Now, the Governor was very fond of hot coffee, but he responded, to be polite, "How fortunate! Do you know I am so eccentric as to prefer cold coffee, and I do not care for it any other way?" The next morning was very cold, and was just the day when a hot drink of coffee would have been the very thing. But the hostess did not forget what he said, and when she served coffee she explained, "Governor, the rest of us have hot coffee, but I have it cold for you. You see, I remembered that you said you never liked it any other way." The Governor drank his cold coffee, but his smile was less winsome than before.

The Governor had read only half the text—"Let not kindness and truth forsake thee." In trying to be kind, he had been untruthful, and he paid the penalty that always comes sooner or later for telling a lie. We talk about polite lies, but lies are not polite. Courtesy and kindness both are founded on truth, or they will topple over sometimes. We may not think the truth kind at the time, but it will be proved kind in the long run.

Prayer.—Dear Father, deliver us from the false and the impure, the wrong and the misery; and baptize us in Thy kingdom. Amen.

THURSDAY.

KNOWING HOW TO DO THINGS.

"If ye know these things, blessed are ye if ye do them."—Jno. 13:17.

A young Bible worker was visiting in a home and called for the Bible. It was brought and handed to him. When he opened it, a pair of spectacles fell out. The lady exclaimed, "Well, well, well! there's my specks. They have been lost three years."

Suppose a lawyer never kept up with his law better than that! Or physician! Can a Christian expect to be one without knowing the Christian's Book?

According to the number of Bibles printed and distributed every year, it must be that the world is seeing that the Bible is not an end in itself, but a way and a means whereby one learns living—enters into and contributes most to the common good of all.

The Bible in the hands of folks—heathens, etc.—does the following: reduces poverty, opens up night schools, hospitals, homes for poor, institutes, athletic fields, hygienic righteousness, pacifies labor, rectifies politics, reduces common evils, builds resistance to temptations and establishes control of life. This is the way it defends itself in our lives. Omit the Bible from life and we undercut our greatest power.

Prayer.—Dear Father, turn our thoughts to Thee now and forever. Amen.

FRIDAY.

WHAT IS YOUR NAME?

"What is thy name? And he said, 'Jacob.' And He said, 'Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but 'Israel,' for thou hast striven with God and man, and hath prevailed."—Gen. 32:27-28.

For Jacob to acknowledge that his name was Jacob admitted more than one is willing ordinarily to admit. "Jacob" means "smooth," "crafty," "cunning," "swindler," and Jacob had been all that. However, this was at a time in his mature life when settling down to true worths and giving more thought to the good side of his life, and an honest confession of his life's faults opened and yielded his life to the higher urge; and when done, God blessed him with a new name, "Israel," which meant "Soldier of God."

That is what God does for all who yield to Him. If we were to confess our faults frankly, what would those faults be? Suppose we check up on ourselves—look at our secret thoughts, look at what we do in the dark, etc., and see what name would be given us did they know?

We have known Mr. Crosspatch and Miss Highminded, a Mrs. Haughty, John Quarrelsome, Junius Hypocrite, Jack Foreflusher and Susie Proud, and Amos Lier, Abel Whistdeck, Flora Gossip. There are lots of others whose character mark them not as man but as "dark horses," but whom God waits for that He may bless their lives and their talents with "Thou shalt be called Christian, a soldier of God." Amen.

SATURDAY.

WHAT MEANETH THESE THINGS.

"How can these things be?"—Jno. 3:4.

Man builds dams, masters the sciences, talks about the world, flies like a bird and does wonders, and says, "See what I did?" But when it comes to the new birth in Jesus Christ, regeneration, transformation of life and soul, he balks and tries to stay away from it. All feel that higher urge to grow better all the time. A bootlegger may change to the keeper of a brothel, and then reform again and gamble, and then reform again and become a gentleman of leisure. This is improvement, indeed, but it isn't the "new birth."

When the nursery man puts a graft in the rose-bush, he gives it a new life. When the worm flies, we do not say it is reformed, but we say it is changed—it is new life. If a clock goes wrong, we know something is wrong inside. If a man goes wrong, he has got the devil in him, and no amount of reformation saves him. He must have the new life—Jesus. He must have the Christ planted in his heart. "Ye must be born again."

Prayer.—Our Father, Thy law is truth. Thy truth is for us to live by. Grant it to us to live by, that we poor lost sinners may cast out our sins and be saved by Thy grace as it is in the Lord Jesus Christ our Saviour. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our good women are always thoughtful of our needs, and never forget us at the Easter season. We believe those who join in helping to make others happy really get more joy out of the giving than those who receive. In sending the Easter boxes, in most cases, the box is accompanied with a letter, telling us of the real joy that the good women get out of the making, getting together and mailing the box containing little dresses for girls and little suits for boys at the Christian Orphanage, Elon College, N. C. We feel sure they do get joy out of this service because they make the little garments so beautifully. The little garments seem to radiate the joy that was put in the making.

The following have been received: Mrs. Beeson, Pleasant Ridge Church, N. C., 2 coats, 1 hat; Mrs. Sarah E. Copeland, Eagle Springs, N. C., 7 cakes butter; First Christian Church, Goshen, Ind., 16 dresses, 5 suits; Business Men's Bible Class, Burlington Church, N. C., 10 towels, 1 case Octagon soap, 7 doz. toilet soap; Mrs. C. E. Martin, Richmond, Va., 1 box second-hand clothing; Ladies' Missionary Society, North Manchester, Ind., 36 dresses, 6 suits; Ladies' Aid Society, Bethlehem Church, Eastern Virginia, 14 dresses, 4 boys' suits; Ladies' Missionary Society, Wakarusa, Ind., 16 dresses, 3 suits, 2 blouses, 2 pair pants; Murray Christian Church, Ladies' Aid Society, Bluffton, Ind., 9 dresses, 2 suits, 10 blouses and pants; Newport News Church, 20 dresses, 1 suit; Sisterhood of the First Christian Church, Warren, Ind., 29 dresses, 2 suits, other garments; Ladies' Missionary Society, Muncie, Ind., 5 dresses, 5 suits; Miss Dora Ballentine, Varina, N. C., 1 dress, socks, handkerchiefs.

For all these contributions we are very grateful, and it will be a blessing to us in this work.

SUNDAY.

WE SHALL NEVER FALL.

"As an eagle that stirreth up her heart, that fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them and beareth them on her pinions, so the Lord did lead him. He made him to ride on the high places of the earth."—Deut. 32: 11, 12.

We are told that when young eagles get large enough, the mother bird destroys the nest and teaches them to fly. She does it by taking one at a time on her wings out in a flight, shakes him off and swoops down and catches him again, and continuing the process until the little one can fly for himself.

It is so, we are told, that God deals with His children. It may not always seem so. To be thrown upon his own, must seem to the young eaglet that the mother bird is bent on destruction. A school teacher hears the pleas of her pupils for help in their problems, but offers no help. That is hard, but it is a necessary protection to the mental development of the pupil—by relying upon himself he develops his brain.

Suppose God did everything for us. We would be rotten.

"They that wait in the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint."

Prayer.—Dear Father and our God, teach us how to hearken unto Thee. Show us Thy strength and secure us from evil. Amen.

NOTICE.

The Vance-Franklin and Warren District Missionary Rally will be held at the Liberty (Vance) Church, Thursday, April 25th, beginning at 10 o'clock A. M.

I want every pastor in the district to begin making plans, so that he will be able to attend the rally; and also every Church to begin making plans to send delegates, whether they have a missionary society or not. I am so anxious that every pastor in the district attend the rally and every Church be represented. Let us heed the theme for our rally this year, "The Call of the Master," and get busy in the mission work and attend the rally, thus making it the best that we have ever held in our district.

Don't forget the time and place—Liberty (Vance) Church, Thursday, April 25, 1929.

MARGARET ALSTON,
Henderson, N. C., R. 1. District Leader.

OFFICIAL NOTICE.

The Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at its last session, accepted an invitation from Newport News to meet there in 1929. But inasmuch as their new Church will not be completed by the time of the Convention, the Newport News people have asked to be relieved from entertaining this year. The executive committee is, therefore, anxious to receive an invitation for the coming session of the Convention. Please take this up with your school and notify us if you wish to entertain.

MR. HOOVER'S GOOD WILL TOUR.

ington, and full speed ahead was made for Hampton Roads, where he disembarked on the 6th of January, and our journey was at an end. Preparations were then made for our spring maneuvers at Panama, where we are now engaged.

If one may indulge personal mention, it might be of interest to you to know that the chaplain had some personal experiences which reflected his Church and his alma mater. At Montevideo, he was invited to speak at the English-speaking Methodist Church. He took a hundred men of his ship with him as the Church party of the day. At Rio, he spoke at three different Churches during Sunday morning, December 23rd—the Baptist, Episcopal and the Congregational. At each place he spoke through interpreter.

There were those who had imagined that a cruise with such a dignitary as Mr. Hoover might be a "stone-face" affair. Such a one had a surprise coming. The party of publicists and cameramen were a jolly set and very likable. And Mr. and Mrs. Hoover did not hesitate to mix with the officers, and even the enlisted men came in for their share of attention when their Christmas dinner was visited by them and a Christmas card presented to every man. Permission for a snapshot was evidence of brotherly attitude and of charming spirit. There was not a day in those fourteen days of the last lap of the trip that something interesting was not going on, either athletic, social or theatrical. The officers of the ship were dined by them, who in turn banqueted them. Athletics on deck was the delight of nearly all, even Mr. and Mrs. Hoover, who took rounds at medicine ball early in the morning. Motion pictures were shown every evening, both on the quarter-deck to the crew and on the upper deck to the Hoover party and officers. The most of these pictures were pre-releases secured at New York. The outstanding events were two band concerts every day, a splendid show put on by the crew, banquet by the officers, Christmas party by the Hoover party, and a New Year's party by the officers.

It is believed that Mr. Hoover's visit to the countries of South America has been one of the finest expressions of friendship ever advanced, and, to come just before his entrance into the White House as President, gives promise of a bond of friendship with these neighbors of ours which could not have otherwise taken place. It is distinctively significant that the "Red" element in Uruguay who were not friendly to his visit, published a statement on the eve of his leaving, saying that they were willing to be shown the friendship he professed to bear to them.

Our own contact with Mr. Hoover has satisfied the inquiry into his life that every project of his has been a success, from the smallest things of his earlier life to the big task of feeding the army and the navy and the Belgians during the war and engineering reparations of the Mississippi floods two years ago. We have learned of his wide knowledge of world affairs as related to all nations, and his keen perceptions of wisdom in dealing with folks. We have learned that his political ingenuity is more shrewd than is usually accredited him. We believe that the people of the United States have made no mistake in their choice for a President, and that as success has crowned his life's engagements for great good to people, so his four years at the White House will bring to the nation a progress and a success hitherto unknown in the annals of our history.

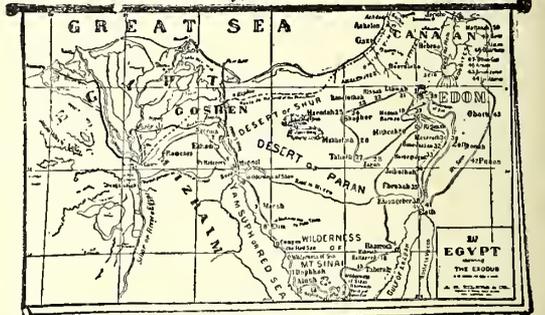

FIELD NOTES.

At a recent meeting of the Executive Committee of the General Convention, the special committee on jubilee-year program recommended the appointment of one person from each of the five regional conventions to represent said conventions on the committee and in the promotion of the jubilee year work in his respective convention. The following were duly elected: Rev. E. R. Caswell, Laconia, N. H., New England Convention; Rev. A. C. Youmans, Albany, N. Y., Metropolitan Convention; Rev. L. E. Smith, Norfolk, Va., Southern Convention; Rev. H. H. Short, Hagerstown, Ind., Central Convention; Rev. J. M. Kauffman, Albany, Mo., Western Convention.

The General Board, at its October annual session, took action, requesting all members of the General Board, itself, the presidents of our educational institutions, our general secretarial staff, the officers of our Conferences, and all members of our local Church official boards, to make a careful restudy of Christian stewardship. This is one of the important matters now confronting our Church. This careful study is to be made apart from the raising of any funds. It means actually selecting a few of the very best stewardship books and mastering their contents. It will bring new interest and enrichment of life to each one who heeds this urgent request.

Holman Jewel Testament

INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2 1/4 x 1 1/2 inches x 3/4 inch

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller. It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength. One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together. The size, 2 1/4 x 1 1/2 inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

POCKET SIZE 3 3/8 x 4 1/2 inches

The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance. In size, 3 3/8 x 4 1/2 inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and pronouncing text. The edition on India paper is ideal, and we know of no better gift at the price than one in the finer bindings.

OBITUARIES.

FARMER.

Faunie B. Farmer was born in Mecklenburg County, Va., August 31, 1873. She passed to her reward on February 18, 1929, at her home near News Ferry, Va. She was a daughter of F. Joseph and Corrina Sanford Apple, being a granddaughter of Rev. Alfred Apple, one of the best-beloved ministers in the early days of the Christian denomination.

Mrs. Farmer was married to Samuel C. Farmer January 30, 1876, from which union three children were born—Alfred, Mrs. Josephine Owen and Obediah. She is survived by her husband, three children and four grandchildren, and the following brothers and sisters: Mrs. Elizabeth Latta, Mrs. Arthur Mangum, Mrs. Ollie Mangum, Mrs. G. W. Roberts, W. S. Apple and Robert Apple, of North Carolina, and James Apple of Maryland.

As a young girl, Sister Farmer joined Union Christian Church, Virgilina, Va., and after her marriage transferred her membership to Pleasant Grove Church, and has been one of its most loyal and faithful members. Her life has been spent in unselfish and devoted service. Not only to her husband and children, but the needy and suffering around her she was always a friend in time of trouble. No truer epitaph could be written of her life than these words: "She went about doing good."

She lived the religion she professed as a consistent Christian. Her bright, cheerful disposition made one glad to meet her always. In her illness she was a patient sufferer, showing that cheerfulness and optimism that she always possessed. May the dear ones left be able to look for guidance and comfort to Him that doeth all things well. Beneath a bank of beautiful flowers in Pleasant Grove Cemetery the body was gently laid to sleep.

MRS. D. J. SIPE,

Sec'y Pleasant Grove Church.

HOLT.

William S. Holt was born in Halifax County, Va., July 21, 1861, the oldest son of William S. and Marie Ann Holt; died at the hospital in South Boston, December 19, 1928. He was loved and honored by a host of friends in the Church and county. He has been in public service a large part of his life, having been a magistrate, etc., and for a number of years had been judge of the juvenile and domestic court. He was a good and kind neighbor and devoted father. On April 25, 1888, he was married to Mattie B. Ballou. To this union were born five children—W. Starke, John R., E. B., Bransford and Miss Phoebe Holt, all of which survive him, with four grandchildren and the following brothers and sisters: Mrs. M. E. Hawkins, Mrs. Andrew J. Stephens, Mrs. Phoebe Faulkner, Mrs. Conrad Titus and Sam W. and Robert P. Holt.

Funeral services were held from his home by Rev. J. D. Burford, of the Methodist Church, and his pastor, Rev. T. Fred Wright, with interment in Pleasant Grove Cemetery. The flowers were many and beautiful. The sympathy of the congregation is extended to the bereaved loved ones, and may the God of love heal their wounded hearts.

MRS. D. J. SIPE,
Sec'y Pleasant Grove Church.

CARROLL.

Stephen W. Carroll, last member of the family of the late Jesse and Betsy Washington Carroll, was born August 19, 1852, and fell asleep October 17, 1928, age 76 years, 1 month and 23 days.

He was a member of a family of eight children—five boys and three girls. On August 7, 1888, he was married to Miss Becky Andrews. To this union was born one son. He is survived by his wife and son, one grandson, several nephews and nieces.

Bro. Carroll never united with any Church, but in his closing hours expressed a willingness and readiness to go. The funeral services were conducted by the writer from the home, and interment was made in the Wakefield Cemetery.

God will lead His children safely home.
C. E. GERRINGER.

GRIFFIN.

Annie Merl, daughter of J. W. and Alma Griffin, was born June 30, 1928, and fell on sleep December 6, 1928, age 5 months and 6 days. She never was able to enjoy the best of health while here, and her stay was brief, but long enough to find a large place in the hearts of her parents, brothers and sisters. She was preceded in death by one brother, and is survived by her parents, four brothers and two sisters.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer from the graveside at Millfield Baptist Church, where the body was laid to rest beside that of her relatives. The bereaved family have the assurance of her waiting for them in a better world.

WINSTEAD.

Bro. D. W. Winstead departed this life to be with his Lord February 17th. He was fifty-three his last birthday. Bro. Winstead married Mrs. S. B. Clapp about seven years ago. He had been a member of Happy Home Christian Church for about four years. He told his dear wife a short while before going that he was ready.

Bro. Winstead leaves to mourn his loss, besides his wife and a large number of friends, two brothers and one sister. May the Lord comfort the bereaved and help them realize that to such as believe on Christ have the privilege of going to a better place. The funeral services were conducted from Happy Home Christian Church by the writer, after which the remains were laid to rest in the cemetery at the Church.

M. T. SORRELL.

DEATON.

On Saturday, January 12th, the Master called to reward Bro. George Deaton. In his last hours he suffered great pain, but he was faithful and conscious unto the end and had asked the writer to conduct his funeral. He had made a profession in early manhood and had lived a consistent Christian life.

He leaves to mourn his going a wife, several children and a host of kindred and friends. He was laid to rest in the Piney Grove Cemetery. The funeral was conducted by the writer.

W. C. MARTIN.

DAVIS.

Allen C. Davis died February 13, 1929, at the age of 83 years, 2 months and 17 days. He was married in early manhood to Miss Arsenia Rollins, who preceded him to the spirit world by six years. To this union were born eight children, seven of whom are living: James R., Jodie C., C. Junie, Mrs. M. E. Prince, Mrs. J. J. Womble, Mrs. G. B. Woodell, Mrs. E. M. Cotten. There are 25 grandchildren and thirteen great-grandchildren.

Bro. Davis professed faith in Christ when fourteen years old, and united with Christian Chapel, Chatham County, N. C. He was ordained a deacon at about forty years of age, and wrought in this position to the esteem of his Church and to the glory of God until the end. As his pastor for eight years, I knew him to be very faithful in attendance and really enjoyed the worship; often exclaimed the praises of God after the old pioneer fashion.

Bro. Davis was a soldier in the Civil War. He spent the last few years of his useful life at the Raleigh Soldiers' Home. Upon his removal there, he became an important leader in prayer-meeting and in Christian worship among the old soldiers. And when the end came, it was a victorious one, with not a ripple of cloud across the spiritual sky. His body sleeps in Christian Chapel Cemetery until the first blessed resurrection morning.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE

WADLEY, ALABAMA

An Accredited Junior College

Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

Piedmont Junior College is training some of the best stock of America for Christian leadership, to be used by the nation and the world. Here is a great challenge and asset for students who wish to prepare themselves to serve in a worth-while way. The new Administration Building will be completed by time school opens this fall.

NUMBER 14.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Mrs N T Farmer

By Rev. Stanley C. Harrell.

A UNIQUE PASTORATE.—

Bethel and Mt. Hermon Baptist Churches, Chesterfield County, Va., comprise a pastorate. Rev. H. R. Winfree has recently celebrated his fortieth anniversary as pastor of these Churches. Rev. David R. Winfree, father of the present pastor, also served as pastor of these Churches for forty years. When he died, the congregation insisted that his son take up the father's work. The son had not decided upon the ministry as his life's work, and was not prepared educationally for the task. However, he yielded to the solicitation of the congregation, and as soon as he had completed the necessary school work, was called to the pastorate. That the voice of the people was in this instance the voice of God, is attested by the long pastorate. Eighty years of service by father and son in the same field is a very unusual record.

ANOTHER MOVE FOR CHURCH UNION.—

This time it is the Reformed Church in America, the United Brethren in Christ, and the Evangelical Synod of North America that are making plans for consolidation. The proposed plan of union was announced on March 9th. Commissions representing the three denominations have agreed upon the plan of union as it has been worked out, and the issue is now referred to the membership of the three connections. The name that is proposed for the new organization, should the proposal be found acceptable to the rank and file of the memberships, is "The United Church in America," which would have a membership strength approximating a million. The Reformed Church and the United Brethren are soon to vote on the proposal, but final action on the part of the Evangelical Synod will not be taken until the fall. The plan of union provides for a "general council" which is to act as the main governing body should the union be effected. This council will be composed of an equal number of ministerial and lay delegates, one for each 5,000 members. There are only slight doctrinal differences in the three denominations, and membership will remain on the same basis as at present.

THE PLEDGE FOR LEGISLATORS.—

Dr. Charles M. Sheldon recently presented the following pledge to the Arizona Legislature, and urged every member to sign it: "I promise myself and others that I will abstain from the use of any intoxicating drink, so help me, God. I make this promise for the following reasons: (1) The people of this country have declared by a large majority of citizens, that the use of intoxicating drink is harmful to the best interests of all the people. I wish to be classed with this natural group. (2) By constitutional enactment, the Congress has made the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor a crime, to be punished as such. I wish to help in the enforcement of this law by my own personal loyalty to the Constitution. (3) The drinker encourages the law-breaker to make what he drinks. I do not wish to give him any encouragement by buying what he makes and drinking it."

We have no information available as to the success which attended Dr. Sheldon's efforts to persuade the legislators to sign the pledge. The response may have been disappointing. But there are unmistakable evidences of a strengthening of the sentiment in favor of the enforcement of the prohibition laws. Even though the makers of our laws may not yet be ready to take the pledge, every increase in sentiment will have its effects upon the members of our legislative bodies. The trouble all along has been that there was not a healthy sentiment prevailing throughout the country for prohibition enforcement. Where there has been such sentiment, there has been an effective enforcement. The majority of the people can just about have what they want.

SHALL WOMEN PREACH?

This is now the question which confronts the Presbyterian Church in the United States, what is generally known as the Presbyterian Church, North. For a number of years this body, together with many other Presbyterian connections, have given a rather emphatic negative answer. Women have had a right to vote on matters which were put to a vote of the congregation, but they had no part in any other official deliberations of the Church. The Presbyterian Church recognizes the office of deaconess, but all other offices and positions of the Church were closed to women. An overture which proposes that women be ordained, and that they be admitted to all official representations of the Church, has been favorably acted upon by the General Council of the Church. The action of the council will be referred to the General Assembly, which convenes in May. Should the General Assembly approve it, the action will not become the policy of the denomination until it has been adopted by a majority of the 299 presbyteries representing the Churches. But the fact that it has been approved by the General Council is an evidence that those who have been entrusted with high responsibility are favorably disposed toward the measure, and believe that the Church at large will give it favorable consideration. Those who are urging the adoption of the change are doubtless more intent upon securing the right of women to representation upon all official organizations of the Church than upon the privilege of ordination for those who may desire it.

UNSELFISH SERVICE.—

Under the title "Two Ministers," the Lynchburg News, in a recent issue, carried the following appreciation of the spirit of ministerial service:

"When a minister of the Church goes wrong, it is news. In that thought, comfort may be found by those who love the Church, because it would scarcely be news if it were not something out of the ordinary. By the same token, it might be said that the action of a minister of Chicago who resigned a $20,000-a-year place with a rich Church to become bishop of a rural diocese at $5,000 a year must have been regarded as news, because it, too, was unusual. Well, it was unusual in many respects, but something like it, we all like to believe, is less unusual than absconding churchmen and wayward ministers.

"In any event, Rev. H. P. Abbott, rector of a wealthy Chicago Episcopal Church, who was paid $20,000 by his wealthy parishoners for comparatively easy work in comfortable and cultural surroundings, has left that parish to become bishop of Lexington, in Kentucky, at a salary of one-fourth that amount, and to do work in a diocese that calls for hardships. 'His new work,' points out the Richmond Times-Dispatch, 'will mean exactly the reverse of his present comparative life of ease among people of wealth and cultivation; it will take him over rough roads in the Kentucky mountains, often astride a mule, to the home of poverty-stricken and uncultivated folks. Some of the most isolated sections of the State are in his diocese, and in his travels over the district he will frequently have to make use of heavy wagons, for there are many places where automobiles and buggies cannot penetrate. The diocese embraces about 20,000 square miles, including thirty Churches, 5,000 parishoners, and twenty clergymen. The work will be hard, but Bishop Abbott willingly undertakes it, for he sees a great opportunity for service among the Kentucky mountaineers.'

"Truly, Bishop Abbott can say that he has answered a call to a field where he can do a greater service, without causing any unkind remarks about hearing a call from a field of more congenial work and higher salary. Not even the most irreligious can snicker and throw that taunt. And that story is not news altogether or chiefly because of its unusualness, but more because of the prominence of the clergyman involved. In Virginia, the Times-Dispatch reports, is Rev. Fred Goodwin, well enough known in his own State, but not a rich and powerful clergyman of a rich, big city Church. He, too, has made and is making sacrifices, though he would probably be the last to regard what he has done as a sacrifice, and there have been no news stories about him. He has refused the offer of a bishopric at a salary much larger than he is now getting in the Northern Neck. 'He preferred to remain in his country parish, because he thought that was where he could be more useful.'"

NOTES-PERSONALS

The Troy, Ohio, Christian Church, Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, D. D., pastor, is adding an expensive and well-equipped Christian education building to its present plant.

"The only miracle I care anything about," said Franklin K. Lane, "is the resurrection. For if we live again, we must be concerned about how we live now. If I am to die with my body, it matters little as to how or whether I care for my soul."

Rev. F. C. Lester, beloved pastor, Waverly, Va., Church, has been recuperating awhile and health-seeking at the Orlando, Florida, Sanitarium. Dr. Andrews, the physician in charge, writes: "Rev. Lester is a fine, clean man. A genuine pleasure to have such a good man in our sanitarium." Lester chose well his place for rest and recuperation.

The women in the various districts are exceedingly anxious to have present at their rallies all the pastors of their districts. The women certainly desire this much encouragement and cooperation from the pastors, for they are doing a real work for the Church. Surely every pastor will make an attempt to encourage the women in their work by being present at the rally in their district.

Rev. G. D. Underhill, now in his senior year at Elon College, served as supply of Hyde Park Christian Church, New York, Sunday, March 24th. Bro. Underhill has recently supplied two splendid sermons to THE CHRISTIAN SUN's pulpit, and gives promise of making one of our strong young men in the ministry. He will be open for full-time work immediately after graduation from Elon at the coming commencement in May.

The Mission Secretary, J. O. Atkinson, in company with Assistant Secretary J. M. Darden, rejoiced with the good people of our Holland, Va., Church at 11 A. M. service Easter Sunday. The offering for missions was taken and a check of $414 was handed the Secretary before he left the Church. Holland people are missionary in spirit and in activity and in giving. It was a joy to be with Pastor W. C. Hook and his faithful and enthusiastic co-workers.

From the Herald of Gospel Liberty: "Rev. L. E. Smith, of Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., has just closed a week's evangelistic service with the First Christian Church of Dayton, Ohio. One does not have to hear Dr. Smith's preaching long before he knows why he has built up a Church in Norfolk from a membership of 250 when he entered upon his pastorate ten years ago, to a present membership of nearly 1,400 and a house of worship costing $300,000."

Mrs. Grady H. Leonard, Chapel Hill, N. C., chairman and leader of the missionary rally in the Wake-Durham-Orange district, is exceedingly anxious that all the pastors in the Churches of her district be present at the rally at Chapel Hill on Tuesday, April 23rd. These rallies are highly important in the work of the women, and it encourages them exceedingly to have the pastors present. Mrs. Leonard is also anxious that representatives from Churches not having societies attend this rally. An excellent program has been arranged, and a good day is expected.

Rev. Fred D. Ballard, now in Vanderbilt Theological Seminary, Nashville, Tenn., hopes to complete his bachelor of divinity degree in December of this year. Bro. Ballard has had successful experience as pastor, and is open for an engagement in pastoral and ministerial work from the 1st of June till the last of September. Any Church or pastorate needing services for that period will do well to secure Bro. Ballard. After he completes his course in December he plans to give all his time to the ministry. Fortunate will be the congregation that secures his services.

The Mission Secretary enjoyed the privilege of occupying the pulpit at our Sanford Church Sunday, March 24th, at the 11 o'clock hour. The Church has no regular pastor, but is keeping up its Sunday School well and secures supplies for the pulpit from time to time. Many expressed a desire, and indulged the hope, for a pastor at no far distant date. It was a pleasure and a joy to worship with this loyal and faithful congregation. They are hoping, even in the absence of a pastor, to reach their full quota in their missionary offering and gifts through the year.

The First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., devoted Easter Sunday to the cause of missions. No special exercises beyond the regular preaching service. The Sunday School lesson was the study of the Easter lesson. At preaching hour the usual offerings were taken. The Church was adorned with some vases and baskets of beautiful flowers, not much beyond the average decorations. At the close of the service the mission offering was taken and the result of the Church offerings for missions for the day was $779.99. This, with the offering of the Woman's Missionary and other contributing bodies, will carry the Church well over its quota of $800.

Under advice from his physician and much to his disappointment and regret, Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West, Suffolk, Va., has felt it imperative to withdraw from the gubernatorial race in which he had assurance from many sources of success, and of becoming, had he continued in the race, the next Governor of the Old Dominion. The daily papers throughout the State of Virginia express keen regret at his withdrawal. Lieutenant-Governor West is a safe and sound Christian statesman, a business man of wide experience, and has the ability and qualifications of a wise administrator. In him the State of Virginia would have had a most excellent chief executive.

The Mission Secretary was with Rev. B. J. Howard at Shallow Well Church, near Jonesboro, Sunday evening, March 24th. This is a Church of large congregations and great possibilities. It is in a thriving, thickly settled community, and has the advantages of electric lights for its evening services. The singing at Shallow Well is always an inspiration. It was at this Church that this writer was ordained to the Christian ministry, and the spot has ever been dear and sacred in his memory. Bro. Howard is doing good work as pastor and leading his people on to activities. He is hoping and expecting that the Church will raise its full missionary quota and be happy in doing so.

It was a beautiful and most timely letter that their pastor, Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, sent to each member of his Church, Suffolk, Va., two days before Easter. It was as follows: "This letter brings Easter greetings and best wishes for the Easter season. May the Spirit of the Risen Christ fill your hearts and enrich your lives. This letter also presents an urgent appeal for a liberal contribution to our special Easter offering for home and foreign missions. The cause is dear to our Lord. The need is especially acute this year, not only because of the deficit of the Mission Board, but because missions do not share any longer in the Conference apportionments. Because of these facts, it is imperative that we make a generous offering. The goal for our Church is $600 for this special offering. By giving of our means, we can share with others the blessings that Christ has bestowed upon us. Please give gladly, generously, and as unto the Lord."

NEWS NOTES.

BY MRS. W. M. JAY.

Springtime always brings to the minds of our women the various rallies, and indeed it is becoming an event to which we look forward. Webster says that a rally is a lively assembling for a common purpose. Yes, this is a common purpose—that of missions—and these spring rallies help us to get added enthusiasm and interest.

A fine program has been prepared for these meetings, and it will be a day well spent to go. The conferences are divided into districts, making it convenient for every one, so be sure to go to the rally in your district, and then you will want to go to the annual woman's conference in the fall.

The theme of the program is "The Call of the Master." The three different phases to be emphasized are the call to a "life of faith," the call to a "life of love," and the call to a "life of service." Dr. Atkinson, in his usual way, will bring a thrilling message on "A Constraining Love," and several short addresses on our missionaries and their work will be given.

Every pastor is urged to attend the rally in the district in which are the Churches he serves. All Churches should send large delegations, whether there is a society or not. These meetings will open promptly at 10 A. M., so begin now to make plans to go. Following are the rallies as scheduled:

N. C. Woman's Missionary Conference.

Alamance district: Graham, N. C., April 9th; superintendent, Mrs. W. P. Lawrence, Elon College, N. C.

Guilford district: Greensboro, N. C., April 11th; superintendent, Mrs. L. P. Wicker, Greensboro, N. C.

Halifax district: Virgilina, Va., April 16th; superintendent, Mrs. Alfred Hayes, Virgilina, Va.

Lee-Chatham district: Turner's Chapel, April 18th; superintendent, Mrs. Doyle McFarland, Jonesboro, N. C.

Randolph district: Ramseur, N. C., April 20th; superintendent, Mrs. I. H. Foust, Ramseur, N. C.

Durham-Wake district: Chapel Hill, N. C., April 23rd; superintendent, Mrs. G. H. Leonard, Chapel Hill, N. C.

Vance-Warren district: Liberty, April 25th; superintendent, Miss Margaret Alston, Henderson, N. C.

Eastern Virginia. Woman's Conference.

Norfolk district: Mrs. H. C. Caviness, superintendent; First Church, Portsmouth, Tuesday, April 2nd.

Nansemond district: Mrs. B. D. Jones, superintendent; Isle of Wight, Thursday, April 4th.

Waverly district: Mrs. O. M. Cockes, superintendent; Barretts, Friday, April 5th.

Valley Virginia Woman's Conference.

Timber Ridge, June 9th; Palmyra, June 11th; Bethlehem, June 12th; Mt. Lebanon, June 15th; Mt. Olivet (G), June 16th.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

EASTER SERMON.

BY REV. J. W. FIX.

"He is risen."—Matt. 28:6.

Easter is the most joyful time of the year. Ordinarily, Christians think of Christmas as being most blessed; but when one stops to meditate upon the significance of the two great seasons of the year, he finds that the true significance of Easter is of greater value, in that it represents the fullness of life. Easter stands for life triumphant, for "He is risen." The Lenten period has ended, and no longer are we thinking of the forty days of suffering and agony. We cease to reflect upon the cruel acts of Judas, Pilate, and all who participated in the crucifixion. Toward a victorious life of joy and happiness, we now turn. The disciples no longer thought of Him as dead on the cross, but rather as living in the hearts of men. In like manner, you and I ought to think likewise. Up until the word that He was risen came to them they had been very despondent. They felt that their last friend was gone forever. They had seen Him placed in the tomb; they wondered if He would ever come forward.

The darkened hopes of the world flashed into distance when, on the first Easter morning, they beheld Him as He walked in the garden. Further evidence that He was risen was the empty tomb. From in front, the stone had been rolled away and from within came a voice asking, "Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here; He is risen."

1. The risen Christ is a historical fact. There was no doubt in the minds of those who saw Him but that He lived again. The grave was not sufficient to bind Him forever. They saw the grave-clothes left in the empty tomb. His resurrection was a reality unto those who visited the tomb that first Easter morn. It is a fact that is undisputable. Its mysteries you and I cannot understand, yet we know that it is a fact, supported by all the evidence of nature. It is demonstrated in the continuous growth of the lily, the development of the butterfly, the corn, of wheat, and in fact all vegetable and plant life.

It is a fact based upon His words to the disciples, saying: "I go to prepare a place for you, and will come again and receive you." In Paul's letter to the Corinthians, he said: "If Christ be not risen, then our preaching is vain, and if in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are, of all men, most miserable. But now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that slept, for since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead."

A Moslem once boasted to a missionary that his religion had something that Christianity did not have. When the Moslems go to Mecca they find at least a coffin, but when the Christians go to Jerusalem they find only an empty tomb. "That is just the difference," said the missionary—"Mohammed is dead, but Christ is risen." This is the supreme fact of our religion!

2. The risen Christ is a joyous hope. The fact that Christ is risen from the dead brings supreme joy to His followers. On that first Easter morning, each of the disciples rejoiced. The little group of women were likewise happy. Today, little children are made happy and their lives are full of joy on Easter. They enjoy Easter eggs, but few of them realize that the egg is symbolic of a new life. It is said that the first Easter eggs were colored red because of the color of the Savour's blood. Easter is a joyous time—the time of the year when the seed becomes a flower and when the dead limbs of the trees become new and beautiful.

Everywhere, we ask, "O death, where is thy sting?" and we hear the joyous voice of a steadfast hope, "Death is swallowed up in life." And we all give thanks, saying: "Thanks be unto God, who giveth us the victory through Jesus Christ." For He has robbed death of its awfulness and darkness, and the Christian rises with Him, singing, "I know that my Redeemer liveth."

3. The risen Christ a triumphant life. One day I sailed up a river, and in the distance I saw at the navy-yard the construction of great ships. For what were the big ships over there in the river being builded? They were builded for the great sea beyond the river. Likewise, that is what we are doing here. The great unknown seas of life lie ahead. We are building our life-ship that we may sail out into the great eternal life-seas after this earthly life is ended. How carefully we should be in selecting the material with which we build this ship of ours.

The fact of immortality has furnished men with sufficient compensation. It has served him to undergo sacrifice and suffering in order that others might gain. Wherever missionaries are found giving out their lives for the gospel story; wherever nurses, teachers and preachers are found giving of the best of Christian manhood and womanhood; wherever you find men and women giving time, money and life for others—there is back of their actions the impulse which throbs with the thought of the Risen Christ. The triumphant thought or fact of immortality has never turned men's thoughts backward, but always forward. It has never given him selfish standard, but always sacrificial ones. All that is within the soul of man demands that he believe that he himself was made for eternal life.

"How do you know that Christ is risen?" some one asked an old fisherman, whose faith in Jesus seemed very simple and sure. "Do you see those cottages near the cliff? he replied. "Well, sometimes when I am far out at sea I know that the sun has risen by the reflection in those windows. How do I know that Christ is risen? Because I see His light reflected from the faces of some of my fellows every day, and because I feel the light of His glory in my own life."

EDUCATION A NATIONAL PROBLEM.

"Although education is primarily a responsibility of the States and local communities, and rightly so, yet the nation as a whole is vitally concerned in its development everywhere to the highest standards and to complete universality," stated President Herbert Hoover in his inauguration address. "Self-government can succeed only through an instructed electorate. Our objective is not simply to overcome illiteracy. The nation has marched far beyond that. The more complex the problems of the nation become, the greater is the need for more and more advanced instruction.

"Moreover, as our numbers increase and as our life expands with science and invention, we must discover more and more leaders for every walk of life. We cannot hope to succeed in directing this increasingly complex civilization unless we can draw all the talent of leadership from the whole people. One civilization after another has been wrecked upon the attempt to secure sufficient leadership from a single group or class. If we would prevent the growth of class distinctions, and would constantly refresh our leadership with the ideals of our people, we must draw constantly from the general mass. The full opportunity for every boy and girl to rise through the selective processes of education can alone secure to us this leadership."

The advocates of a department of education find in these statements further foundation for the belief that such a department will be instituted during the administration of President Hoover.

"Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap" (Gal. 6:7).

Monument to Rev. J. W. Wellons, D. D.

The above cut represents the proposed monument to be placed at the grave of Rev. James Willis Wellons, D. D. Besides this, the plot is to be inclosed with a granite curbing and posts. The combination presents a most attractive design. Elaborate lettering is to be placed on the monument. Already the fund has been started. The cost, completed, is to be $865. Will you send your contribution to Mrs. L. E. Carlton, treasurer, 414 North Lombardy Street, Richmond, Va.?

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

NOT ASHAMED OF THE GOSPEL.

Time was when Paul was ashamed of the gospel. He considered it a travesty on the religion of his time, and a disgrace to culture and refinement. He did not believe that it could have a place in the realm of scholarship and learning. He believed that it ought to be wiped out, expelled from all decent society. And then one day his rebellious will came under the spell of its power. He realized that here was something more powerful than either his scholarship or his ignorance; that here was something that should have first place in life, because it was master of life. It was a great discovery. All his study, scholarship and learning up to this time had dealt with separate and detached elements of life. He had studied the science of his day which taught him something of life in its native elements. He had studied and had learned something of the philosophy of his time which taught him of beautiful theories about conduct and character. He had studied Church history which taught him how an ecclesiastical body should be governed. He had studied rhetoric and grammar which taught him how to handle his native and other languages. He had studied much of the separate elements that enter into life, but never before had he come in contact with a power that conquered, not a part but the whole of his life. Here, indeed, was that which baffled definition and defied explanation. Paul's life was conquered. He realized that not any separate parts of his life, but the whole of his life had faced a power not his own and had been conquered.

And then Paul made another discovery and learned something else. He discovered that the world about him was full of men like he himself had been, and that, even if he himself had discovered this power that conquered life, they had not, and, moreover, they treated with disdain and contempt, as infamous and impudent, that which he claimed had conquered his life. The gospel of the Son of God was not held in good repute, especially by the scholars and followers of his day, and they were ashamed of it, and of any who claimed to be a scholar and yet could be conquered by it. Most of all was this true at Rome, the center of learning and of power at the time of Paul. The high-brows of mighty Rome would have nothing of the teachings of the Man of Galilee, and looked upon such teachings and the life of Him who taught, as contemptible and beneath intelligent consideration. And yet into this center Paul sends the most learned and emphatic utterance of his fertile and inspired pen, declaring that he, himself, was not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for said he, "It is the power of God unto Salvation to every one that believeth." That of which Paul had been ashamed and which he held in such disdain and contempt, he now boasts of and glories in. It had conquered his life and given him a new vision of the world, of mankind, and of God. And though it had not the prestige and the power of seminaries and universities, and wealth and scholarship, it, at least, to him was the power of God unto salvation, and, as such, it was sufficient. Paul had discovered that back of the gospel was a life that could control all of life if surrendered to Him.

PREACHER OR PASTOR.

A preacher is a man called of God, and he delivers sermons on a text of Scripture or some religious topic. A pastor is a minister who has official charge of a Church. One man is usually both preacher and pastor. The question often arises as to which of these two functions is the more important. The normal status of preacher and pastor is that both may function together in such a way as to edify the congregation from the pulpit and look after the flock by personal visitation. But the public mind usually thinks of the minister as being good in one sphere and poor in the other. With that view in mind, and the difficulty of being a success in both pulpit and homes, then the question is which is the more important. The answer to that question depends upon the congregation. A learned congregation will attach more importance to the sermon. The average congregation will attach more importance to pastoral visits and the attention the minister gives to the people in their homes.

Pastoral visitation has a double value: it impresses the people with a feeling that the minister cares for them; and it furnishes the minister with suggestions for his sermons that no book or work in his study can give him. It will make an ordinary preacher a better preacher, and an indifferent pastor a better pastor. Personal contact with the members in their homes will make them more interested hearers, and make the study a more interesting place of prayer and investigation. He will have questions put to him that will make him investigate more than any scholarly work could do. No matter how brilliant his thought, nor how great his oratory, the people cannot love him if they have no personal contact with him. Love is the bond that holds minister and congregation together, and faithful pastoral service will improve the sermon in its delivery and its place in the minds and hearts of the congregation. Any message is good when it comes from a man the people love. Love improves sermons and congregations. The great intellectual preachers reach the minds of the people; a faithful pastoral preacher reaches the hearts of the people.

In this day, pastoral attention counts more than in the time that has passed. When few people came in contact with others, they did not feel neglected if the minister did not visit them. In fact, only a few members felt able to entertain the preacher. The preacher is not such an important personage now as he was fifty years ago. People are more enlightened than they were then. Social life has been intensified and personal attention is unconsciously demanded. Distinctions have been removed and people feel neglect more keenly than ever before. No minister can be his best unless he visit his flock. The shepherd not only fed his flock but went with them. W. W. S.

THE PASTOR IS THE LEADER.

Nothing reflects and indicates the missionary spirit of the pastor more emphatically than the offering from the Church for missions. A letter from a layman in his Church, much interested in missions, says: "I fear the offering from our Church will not be large. The missionary spirit has never been developed among our people and is at low ebb. Our pastor seldom, almost never, refers to missions or our missionary work." That brother explained the whole situation in his Church. Unless the pastor is missionary in spirit, in attitude and in activity, the whole Church falls down on its missionary program, and, of course, as a consequence, fails in matter of progress and growth. A non-missionary Church never grows and a non-missionary pastor never leads a Church to growth, to prosperity or to power. There was a proverb among the old Romans, developed from their experiences as great warriors, which said: "Better is an army of stags led by a lion than an army of lions led by a stag." There may be lions in a Church, but if the pastor is a stag they do not go out for militant service. The pastor is the leader. Of course, there are always excuses and hindrances in the way. Any one who undertakes to do service for God will find hindrances and difficulties. The strong man is the one who meets hindrances, faces excuses, and overcomes both. Dr. Egbert Smith, in the "Desire of All Nations," gives this paragraph:

"Excuse-making was the first business started by man after the fall. It has been his biggest industry ever since. How common it is to hear of the peculiar circumstances that prevent a Church doing anything worth-while for missions. And how common also to see a change of pastors in that Church followed by a splendid development of missionary spirit just as if those peculiar circumstances did not exist."

We are in a world of difficulties and excuse-making. God challenges us to carry forward His work in face of difficulties. I have never known a work undertaken in the name of the Lord which was not fraught with difficulties, many and trying. As one has well said: "We are to pray not for tasks equal to our strength, but for strength equal to our tasks." This is a trying time, and if we are to have the strength to do our duty and accomplish our tasks in our missionary endeavor, we shall have to pray for strength equal to our tasks. The pastor is the leader of his people. True, we need "fellowship" as well as leadership, but with consecrated, wise, energetic leadership on the part of the pastor, the Church will be found following.

THE WHOLE WORLD IS THE FIELD.

Christianity is not a restricted, at-home sort of religion. It is unrestricted and takes the whole world in its scope. If one is to have a Christian creed, it should be at least as inclusive as that of Augustine. "A whole Bible for my staff, a whole Christ for my salvation, a whole Church for my fellowship, and a whole world for my parish." Only a world-wide gospel is a gospel sufficient to save any part of that world.

Recently, one said: "There are gospel-hardened people in our community and in our Church congregation." The statement was no doubt true.

There are gospel-hardened people in every Church and community. They have been preached at, preached to, and preached about, so much that they have become callous, hardened, indifferent. What they need is a gospel that reveals to them the good news from the cross and the resurrection for the whole, suffering, sorrowing, sinning, cruel and wicked world—a gospel that is sufficient for all.

The gospel of our Lord is such a gospel. It can save, and it does save, to the uttermost parts of the earth, as well as to the individual. The trouble is that many of us who preach it restrict it to the home folks. Those of us who have read the sketches of the lives of some of our native pastors in Japan know that the Christian Church has entrusted to it a gospel that can and does save in the remote parts as well as here at home. Those of us who have the native workers in our Churches and pulpits of Porto Rico know we Christians have entrusted to us a message that can reach and redeem men and women in Porto Rico as well as in Georgia or Alabama, North Carolina or Virginia. And preaching a gospel that saves afar off does not detract from, but adds to, the power of the gospel we preach for home consumption. Only as we share the gospel with others does it become strong enough to save us.

J. O. A.

THE SENSE OF SIN.

The world today does not need a new salvation, or a different salvation. It does most emphatically need a new sense of the character and the nature of sin. We are not hearing much about sin now. One may be in an evangelistic meeting for a week and not so much as hear the word "sin," or "repentance," or "salvation" mentioned either by the preacher in his sermons or in the prayers. We are not saying now what has produced this in our day. We are just saying that people do not any longer talk much about sin. We seem to have lost the sense of sin. We appeal to people today to come out on the side of Jesus Christ and join the Church for ethical, or social, or aesthetic, or economical reasons. I heard recently a minister make a lengthy appeal for converts and for Church members on the ground that the gospel was the most economical scheme that was ever offered man and that it was good economy to live for Christ and join the Church. It is; but it is more than this. The whole life of Christ is meaningless if we are to abolish sin, for it was sin that He came to this world to conquer as the incarnate Son of God. His life on earth from start to finish was an exposition of sin, an explanation of the hideousness of sin, or a battle against sin. From the time He began His ministry till the moment of its close, He lived in the white heat of the awful flames of sin around about Him and did brave battle against the violence, the hideousness and the awfulness of sin. He gave the impact of His entire and marvelous life to an aggressive offensive against sin. The most difficult task in our day is to convince individuals around about us, who are out of Christ, that they are in sin, and that they need to turn from sin.

J. O. A.

SINFUL SILENCE.

There are times when silence is sinful. When the lepers saw that the Syrian hosts had fled and had left their tents and an abundance of food behind and knew that the army of Israel in Samaria was perishing without food, their silence was sinful. They acknowledged as much, and in repentance made known to the Samaritans and the Israelites that there was an abundance of food to be had for the taking close by. For us to be silent about the missionary situation now is nothing less than sinful. Our Southern Convention has asked us to carry the missionary message direct to the people and to give the people an opportunity of response. The people certainly will not respond unless the message is carried directly to them, and unless they are urged and taught and instructed in the good way. There is nothing so killing, so cruel, so paralyzing, as the sin of silence at a time when we are commissioned to cry out, and "spare not." Many Churches will be taking a missionary offering in the next Sunday or two, not having had a service on Easter Sunday. God forbid that either pastor or people should indulge the sin of silence when our speaking out will mean so much. God has supplied an abundance of the bread of life for souls that are perishing. Let us arise and tell them, through our missionary gifts, that "the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to all who believe." We should cry it out from every pulpit, and make it known in every Church and Sunday School, lest we commit the sin of silence, that the gospel feast is ready and that the time of the offering has arrived; that now is our opportunity of showing to those who are depending upon us to give them the gospel that we are ready and willing to do our utmost. Let none commit the sin of silence.

ENCOURAGING DISCUSSION.

The action of the Commission on Interchurch Relations at Cleveland, on January 22nd, calls for editorial emphasis, which may best be given by reporting here the actual resolution. After a general discussion by the commission of various phases of the proposed Christian-Congregational project of union, it was voted:

1. To appoint a special committee (in view of the proposed absence of Dr. Sanders on the Pacific coast for several months) consisting of Mr. William Knowles Cooper, Dr. William Horace Day, and Dr. A. W. Anthony to take charge of the task of instituting, in co-operation with the administrative groups concerned, both Congregational and Christian, fact-finding conferences and studies, in which it is planned to consider and adjust, as far as practicable, the problems which require clarification in regard to the proposed merger of the two denominations.

2. To try to arrange for the early presentation of the report of the commission at Detroit to the National Council, and thereafter, for its thorough discussion in extra-program sessions prior to its final disposition by the council.

The significance of the above action will be readily apparent. It means that those who have most deeply considered the matter of union with the Christian body and who are most favorable to its consummation, desire that every phase of so important a step should be open to discussion and further consideration before final action is taken.

That is a position suggested as much by practical regard for effective union as by right method of procedure. Organic union which is not based upon strong convictions arising out of careful study of all the facts, apart from the general aspirations for unity which all good men share, might easily prove a hindrance rather than a help toward Christian progress. To that extent we cannot agree with the Christian Century regarding one statement in an editorial reference to the Christian-Congregational merger, in its issue of January 3rd—a reference which otherwise is highly commendable in spirit and statement. Presenting in a general way the favorable aspects and hopes of the proposed merger, our contemporary says: "It would be a disgrace if it were to fail."

Is not that precisely the matter that further discussion is designed to determine? With present knowledge, the Congregationalist sees no insuperable barrier to union, and it is our hope that the project will be found to be both feasible and advisable. But suppose barriers were discovered that would have the effect of seriously altering or limiting the Christian work and witness that either group is best fitted to give. Would it be a disgrace if, frankly facing that situation, either group should decide that it was better to maintain its former status? The question is not whether Christians and Congregationalists shall love each other, but whether the two groups can best serve the cause of Christ in organic union. It would be a disgrace if the merger failed because of any un-Christian spirit or from any unworthy cause or motive. But there can be no disgrace if Christian men solemnly decide either to unite or not to unite, organically, when their action is determined with care and upon grounds of Christian expediency. Organic union ought to be our goal, but even organic union may be achieved at the cost of real unity. We do not anticipate any such cost in this case, and it is our present belief that this project of union will be accomplished. But further investigation and discussion are meaningless if the issue be decided in advance and "disgrace" should be attached to those who, conceivably, might become conscientiously convinced that the proposed union would be disadvantageous and disappointing in its results. Let us decide the matter with open minds and open hearts, patiently considering and regarding every point of view and every contingency.—The Congregationalist.

THE MINISTER AS A MAN.

- To respect my profession, those whom I serve, and myself.
- To be honest and fair with others, as I expect others to be honest and fair with me.
- To think of my Church and its enterprises with loyalty, speak of it with praise, and act always as a trustworthy custodian of its good name.
- To be a motor in the organization, of which I am a part, and not a clog to hinder its progress; a pusher, not a kicker; a booster, not a knocker.
- To respect at all times the opinion of others, as no one is infallible.
- To base my expectation of temporal reward on a solid foundation of service rendered, willing to pay the price of success in honest efforts.
- To look upon my work as opportunity to be seized with joy and made the most of, and not as a painful drudgery to be reluctantly endured.
- To make a study of my Bible, the needs of my people and my profession, and not allow things of minor importance to rob me of the performance of this sacred duty.
- To pray daily for spiritual strength for myself, that my own heart be so filled that I may impart that spirit to others.
- To mix brains with my efforts, and use system and method in my work.
- To find time to do everything needful, by never letting time find me doing nothing.
- To hoard days as a miser hoards dollars, and make every hour yield dividends in satisfaction of duty performed, increased knowledge, or healthful recreation.
- To expect difficulties, and force my way through them, and turn hard experiences into capital for future references.
- To steer clear of debts and dissipation, and to guard my health of body and peace of mind as my most precious stock in trade.
- To finally take a good grip on the joys of life and play the game like a gentleman, and fight against nothing so hard as my own weakness, and endeavor to grow as a minister and as a man.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Before and after enter into every life, and these two determine character and happiness. Before is in the field of choice and decision; after is in the field of regret or satisfaction. Choices and decisions enter into the equation that works out character; review and reflection enter into the results that make up life in its bitter or sweet experiences. Life itself is the gift of God and forefathers. For life, as existence, we are not responsible; but for life, as lived, is the main responsibility of mortals. Individual responsibility is what all must answer for not only in the final account but all the way through this life among men. There are three judges before whom we must give account: God, self, and others. Two of these are just and friendly in their judgment. God makes no mistake, and is both just and merciful. Self is just, but not so merciful. Others, as a rule, are neither just nor merciful.

The favor of God is obtained by repentance and obedience to His will. The Holy Spirit enables us to know whether God approves our life; and His word makes clear to our minds whether our lives are in harmony with His will. The soul that is at peace with God need not fear what man can do unto him. "If God be for us, who can be against us?" No matter what may come, those who experience regeneration and then live so as to be conscious that they please God can work with satisfaction and sleep in peace.

To satisfy self is a constant quantity. Self is a stern judge. He counts no favors, overlooks no faults, and renders decisions in accordance with the facts, and listens at no suborn witness. Satisfy self as to opinions and conduct, and you stand on solid ground. The hardest person to deceive is self; and the best friend on earth is self. This court covers the whole field of human service. Even as a member of the Church in the matter of attendance and contributions, self will demand the right thing. To push obligations aside and treat the mission offering lightly or indifferently will not satisfy self. If this is not carefully settled before Easter, after Easter is not too late to make your offering what God and self indicate it should be.

That great court called others is always on the bench. But others do not have all the facts, and they cannot get the motives, and therefore their judgment is not fair. If God and self agree as to our life, it is useless to bother about what others think. This does not mean that we are not to regard the opinions and judgments of others, for public opinion may represent the best judgment of the best people and is entitled to our respect. But good people should never fear the opinion of others when they are honestly trying to please God and self.

ELON LETTER.

Big business has given the nation an inspirational thrill, and that, too, in the moral realm. Col. Stewart has been ousted from the management of a great corporation, not because he did not make dividends for the stockholders, but because they were tainted.

It is all the more to the credit of the stockholders of the company that they took this action after the government had failed to convict Col. Stewart. The public was sure, however, that technicalities had saved Col. Stewart, and that morally he was guilty. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has done the moral sense of the business world a great service in his decisive stand against Col. Stewart and his success in ousting him.

Some people have felt that Mr. Rockefeller should have insisted, too, that the tainted dividends be returned. But a little thought will make it clear that this could not be done. There was no way of determining the amount of the tainted earnings nor of determining to whom they should be returned even if they could be computed. Mr. Rockefeller, therefore, ousted the man who was guilty of the misdeed, and so made it clear that at least one great corporation is careful to profit only on legitimate bases in its business transactions. It is great for America that this has happened. It is great for the world. It is a triumph for Christianity.

Oftentimes our Churches have debated whether tainted money should be accepted for the work of the kingdom. Some have been willing to accept it, alleging that it had served the devil long enough already. Others have declined to accept it, because it meant the approval of the methods of its making and public approval of the man making the gift.

Big business has in this instance suggested a solution—acceptance of the gift and public condemnation of the giver. It is doubtful if there would be any tainted money offered the Churches if they should employ this drastic method of making the motive of its acceptance plain.

At any rate, there are to be no tainted dividends in the Rockefeller corporations, and that is something to be grateful for. It means a new day for American industry. Let us give thanks and take courage for the future.

W. A. HARPER.

FROM THE HOLY LAND.

February 26, 1929.

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

Due to rough seas, we could not land at Cyprus, so I had to be content with a view of it through my field glasses. The city of Arauna, at which we were to land, appears very beautiful. I was surprised to see the unevenness of the surface. Mountains loomed in the distance, white, as if covered with snow, but I don't suppose that could be. Yesterday P. M. we reached Haifa, after spending a few days in Palestine and Syria. We reached Jerusalem by train from Cairo, and as we rode from the station to the Alenby Hotel, I had my first thrill when the driver of our car pointed out Mount Zion. The sight of it recalled much of sacred history. The psalmist speaks of those that shall be as Mount Zion, that cannot be removed forever. We ate breakfast at the Alenby Hotel and then started out to see the city. Mr. Jamel, our guide, is well versed in biblical history. He took us through a narrow street called David's Street. I asked why so called. He said because it is close to David's wall and explained that this wall has been identified by the aid of archiology and chemistry. Archiologists dug down forty feet and found the Jebusites' fortification, and proved it to be so by chemical analysis of the mortar. The next addition was that of the Hebrews, and I think the next that of Herod the Great, so the wall is quite historic. Farther on, we came to Christian Street, so called because when Mohammed conquered Jerusalem the Christians all clustered along this street. The guide showed us a piece of pavement, the very stones of which are those over which David used to walk. This fact also is established by archiology. But of deeper interest is "The Dome of the Rock," which is a magnificent structure, built on the site of Solomon's temple, proved to be so by the rock on which Amanah was threshing wheat, when David offered a sacrifice to stay the plague that resulted from his numbering Israel. A high point of interest was reached on our way to Bethlehem when Mr. Jamel had the cars stop and told us he wanted to show us something. Leading us to the side of the road, he pointed to a plain in the distance and said that is where Ruth gleaned in the field of Boaz, and afterwards became his wife and the ancestress of David. And there David tended his father's sheep and composed most of the psalms, especially the 23rd. He said, "I'm glad this place has not been spoiled by tradition, but remains in all its beauty and simplicity as it was in the days of David, showing life as it was then. This view gave a real thrill. Then we went on into Bethlehem, and still Bishop Brooks' words, "O little town of Bethlehem, how still we see thee lie," seem appropriate.

It is hard to sift what is traditional from what is real, but we can rest with comfort in the truth that Christ, the world's Redeemer, was born in Bethlehem. Whether the Church of the Nativity stands on the identical spot doesn't matter—Christ was born in Bethlehem, and all who believe in Him are born anew. For fear of tiring you, I close.

Sincerely yours,

S. Q. HELFENSTEIN.

CYPRESS CHAPEL.

The work at Cypress Chapel is going along smoothly and very well. Never could a pastor expect to get better co-operation from his people than the members of Cypress Chapel are giving their pastor; nor need a pastor ever wish for better people with whom to work than those people constituting the membership of this same Church. The Sunday School and Church attendance, which was cut down by winter weather and flu, is getting back to regular attendance.

It has been a pleasure for the pastor to work with and to serve this Church since we began our labors together a little more than a year ago. The Sunday School, Ladies' Aid, Woman's, Young People's and Willing Workers' Missionary Societies are doing a great work.

As the result of an appreciated Christmas gift from the Sunday School, the pastor is riding in a new Ford. We are working to the end that this year may be even a better year at Cypress Chapel for the Church and kingdom than was last year. May God help us to "press on toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Jesus Christ."

R. E. BRITTLE,
Pastor.

SUFFOLK GOES "OVER THE TOP."

Our Suffolk Church is the first to report and send in its full mission quota. It had sent in since Conference last fall more than a third of its quota. Last Sunday (Easter) they set their goal to reach $600 at the morning service. They reached $620. In addition to this, Suffolk is sending from its Sunday School $25 per month. This is to be in addition to its quota which the Church itself is giving. Great and good for Suffolk! It shows what can be done by making plans and then working your plans. The beloved and wide-awake pastor, Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, gave his people a series of missionary sermons, addresses and charts, and encouraged them to go forward.

The finance committee, Bro. J. W. Darden, chairman, worked in harmony and co-operation with the pastor. Personal work, in addition to pulpit teaching and appeal, greatly aided. Suffolk congregation is justly happy to reach the goal so early in the year and show the rest of us how it can be done. We congratulate and rejoice with our Suffolk friends and faithfuls.

President's Inaugural Appeal

WHAT WILL HOOVER DO WITH FIRST REAL CHANCE FOR PROHIBITION ENFORCEMENT?

His Administration May be Otherwise Successful, but Chances are Poor for Second Term Unless Liquor Problem is Solved.

BY CARLTON M. SHERWOOD.

At last prohibition has a vigorous and outstanding defender in the person of the President of the United States. Since its inception, prohibition has needed moral support from the White House. This it has not had in the past in any real sense. Prohibition has succeeded exceptionally well, despite this lack, but with such support it would have succeeded immeasurably better.

Prohibition came in the administration of Woodrow Wilson, and from him had official but only half-hearted support. Despite statements to the contrary, he was not opposed to prohibition, but he certainly did not give it his vigorous approval. The great war and the peace treaty of Versailles were the all-absorbing issues just then, leaving him little time to consider this matter.

Prohibition had its real beginning in the administrations of Presidents Harding and Coolidge and both of them seemed to be satisfied with platitudes about law enforcement in general. No one will doubt the personal observance of the prohibition law on the part of Mr. Coolidge, but the fact remains that during his six years in the presidency, he at no time made it a major matter of consideration, and never issued a clarion call to the country to support it. With all of the constant wet propaganda against it, prohibition had no greater need than vigorous and outspoken support in high places, particularly the presidency.

In the ten minutes following his inauguration, President Herbert Hoover said more in support of the great national policy of prohibiting the liquor traffic than has ever been said by any President at any time. He did not evade. He recognized the issue. He put it first in his inaugural. As though to give redoubled emphasis to the message to his countrymen, at the close of his inaugural oath, he leaned over the Bible and kissed the well-known eighteenth verse of the twenty-ninth chapter of Proverbs: "Where there is no vision, the people perish, but he that keepeth the law, happy is he."

Of course, in a very real way, Herbert Hoover had a greater mandate from the people on this issue than any of his predecessors. From the standpoint of prohibition, the Democratic nomination of Governor Smith now appears as a blessing. The issue was thus forced, and strategically as well as sincerely, Mr. Hoover was placed on the dry side. There is no doubt about his belief in prohibition or his understanding of the truth that the prohibition issue was the most important one in the minds of the people in the election contest. He has clearly recognized that he has more than a perfunctory obligation to defend it.

One answer to the questioning title of this article is clear. President Hoover will certainly do something! It is not like him to wait in the presence of vital issues for something to turn up; he will turn something up himself. His very nature makes watchful waiting impossible. He is a man of action. It need not be dogmatically stated that he will always do wisely, but do he will.

Furthermore, Herbert Hoover sincerely wishes to solve this problem. He has expressed himself as believing that prohibition "is an experiment, noble in purpose," "enacted for the protection of the American home," and that he "wishes it to succeed."

There also stands a powerful political factor.

If Mr. Hoover does not solve the problem of prohibition law observance and enforcement to a reasonable, though not necessarily perfect degree, he will not be re-elected for a second term. This may seem to be a dogmatic and long-range assertion, but it represents an earnest conviction. As an ardent supporter of Mr. Hoover, we venture the statement that no matter how brilliant or successful his administration may be in other respects, if he does not reasonably solve the prohibition problem he is through politically. Such are the fates! But we believe that he will win.

In our judgment, Herbert Hoover will do again and again what he did in his inaugural address in bringing the vital importance of this question to the mind and heart of all the people. In his first message, President Hoover drove home the fact that "it takes two to make a bootlegger," to use the searching phrase of Prof. Horace D. Taft, brother of the Chief Justice of the United States. Already there is a new conscience abroad in the land on the matter. Many more or less neutral individuals who were left cold by appeals of temperance bodies or lesser personages have caught the implication and challenge of the President's inaugural appeal. He undoubtedly will need to speak several times, emphasizing one phase and another of this question.

He begins by urging obedience because it is the law. If he continues, he will need to emphasize obedience not alone because it is the law, but because it is a good law. Both emphases are im-crime and judicial procedure and not solely prohibition. The President has done well to state his conviction that crime increase and allied problems are due only in limited part to prohibition. Masses of the people will begin to understand that the laying of all the evils and problems of American life at the door of prohibition is simply wet propaganda that has no basis in truth.

The President's plan for a law-enforcement commission will consider the entire question of portant.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

LIVINGSTONE COMMEMORATED.

The birth of David Livingstone, the noted African medical missionary and explorer, on March 19, 1813, is being commemorated this month by children of the Congregational Churches in the United States with gifts toward the restoration of his birthplace in Scotland. The gifts are being collected by Miss Agnes S. Kelsey, of Boston, Mass., children's secretary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, the foreign missionary society of the Congregational Churches.

Livingstone was born in an old tenement house among the cotton mills of Blantyre village, on the River Clyde. The house is to be made into a memorial museum with rooms showing how the mill workers lived at the time of Livingstone's childhood, and with other rooms containing exhibits illustrative of Livingstone's travels in Africa. The exhibits will include a life-sized tableau which has been given by King Khama, the sovereign of a Christian tribe in central Africa. On the banks of the Clyde River will be built an out-of-doors amphitheatre where missionary plays and pageants may be given.

The relief expedition headed by Henry M. Stanley and sent to Africa by the New York Herald in 1869 performed a historic achievement in journalism. Stanley returned in 1872 with Livingstone's precious diary for the preceding six years. The diary "contained a wealth of information about countries and peoples hitherto unexplored and unknown."

Livingstone remained in the interior of Africa and died May 1, 1873 at Chitambo. His heart was buried by his native attendants at Chitambo and his body, embalmed as best they could, was carried nearly a year's journey to the coast at Zanzibar. It reached England April 15, 1874.

The London Missionary Society, an agency of the Congregational Churches in Great Britain, first sent Livingstone to Africa in 1840. He originally set out solely to discover fields for mission work, but later his explorations were directed to combat the atrocities of the slave traffic through opening up the country to legitimate and productive commerce.

In 1866 he accepted a commission from the Royal Geographical Society to ascertain the watershed of South Central Africa and to locate the source of the Nile. But when urged to relinquish his missionary work and attend only to discovery, he wrote: "I would not consent to go simply as a geographer, but as a missionary and to do geography by the way." Regarding the number and accuracy of his astronomical and geographical observations, it was said: "You can go to any point across the entire continent along Livingstone's track and feel certain of your position."

A dauntless spirit made Livingstone known as "the man who would go on." Once when rounding a river's course in an unknown region, he came suddenly upon a great force of armed savages. Arrows sped over his canoe.

"Go back!" shouted the chief. But Livingstone slipped into the water, and with his arms above his head walked quietly and deliberately toward the threatening warriors. His audacity and courage held them spellbound and he was permitted to go on.

He went on and on across mountains, marshes, mountains, rivers. Shaken with fever, wounded, deserted by his attendants, robbed of his medicines, threatened by wild beasts, human head-hunters and slave-traders, he would not cease his explorations. Before he died he saw the slave-trade struck a death blow. On the site where the slave market once stood in Zanzibar is now a great cathedral built by Negro hands.

On his third trip back to England, two years after he had buried his beloved wife in Africa, he learned of the death of his son, Robert, at Gettysburg, U. S. A., where he had died fighting in the Union army. Livingstone went back to Africa, never to return alive.

It is stated that he is the only missionary and the only Congregationalist to lie interred in Westminster Abbey. When he was buried, Punch paid tribute in a seven-verse poem, which ended:

"Open the Abbey doors and bear him in
To sleep with king and statesman, chief and sage,
The missionary come of weaver-kin,
But great by work that brooks no lower wage.

"He needs no epitaph to guard his name,
Which men shall prize while worthy work is known;
He lived and died for good—be that his fame.
Let marble crumble: this is Living-stone."

IS IT WORTH WHILE?

Of all our Japanese Churches, the Church at Ishinomaki, under the leadership of Bro. D. F. Jones was the first to be organized, and from this Church more preachers have come forth than from any other—Ohta, Takahashi, Irokawa, Matsukawa, and Abe. Of this number, two have passed on into the life beyond, one resigned, one is the pastor of the most influential Japanese Church in America, at Oakland, Calif. The other is the faithful pastor of the home Church who has put in twenty-two years of gospel preaching for the uplift of his people.

Mr. Irokawa tells me that in his younger days he received a New Testament which he tried to read, but it was so uninteresting that he gave it up. Later, when Bro. D. F. Jones came to Ishinomaki, one of his friends induced him to go to the services, but at this time a desire to learn English was born in him. With the earnestness of Bro. Jones, he was much impressed. Then faith came; his conversion followed. Then the Book in which he had found no interest became the most interesting book in the world, and to walk with the Lord and talk with Him and live with Him was his chief joy. At first he had no thought of becoming a preacher, but he did want to tell his neighbors and friends about Jesus who comes into one's life, cleanses the heart from sin, help us to live the true life here on earth and prepares us for the eternal glories of the life to come. So his home became a Church and a Sunday School into which he gathered the children of his neighbors.

When I first visited the Ishinomaki district thirty-six years ago, it was my privilege to visit the home of Bro. Irokawa and to preach to his neighbors several times. I always looked forward to going to that Christian home in the country, for Bro. Irokawa was a farmer. Later he took a step upward when by the death of his parents he became the head of the family and the heir of the property. He came to the Bible School, which was conducted in Tokyo by Miss Penrod and myself. He did not finish the course, but owing to the great lack of preachers, he was called to Utsumomiya to assist Bro. and Sister Fry. He could not come back to school because there was no one to take his place in the Utsumomiya Church. So he has kept on, preaching and reading and studying to the present time. Miss Stacy, who has been with him at Ishinomaki, speaks highly of his preaching, of his character, and of his influence in the Ishinomaki community.

His self-sacrifice is indicated in the fact that all the property he inherited, he has spent in Christian work, at one time trying hard to be independent, gradually selling his land in order to do so. Money values cannot estimate the importance of such a man who, in the midst of most iniquitous surroundings, has steadily held high the torch of truth, and for the glory of God preached Jesus Christ. If Bro. Jones in his six years in Japan had done no more than win this man to Christ, would not all the money spent for him have been well worth while?—From Dr. Woodworth.

"POVERTY, RICHES, LOVE OF MONEY."

Let us never forget that "rich" and "poor" are purely relative terms. The Bible was written and the Saviour lived and taught in the East. There, the poverty of the people was and still is more pinching and pitiful than anything that we, in this favored land, have seen or imagined. To Peter and John much of our so-called poverty would have seemed wealth. When we think of the average comfort in which Christian people live in this country, we cannot doubt that the average member of our Churches would surely be accounted by the Bible as belonging to the class and subject to the perils of the rich. But the average member does not believe this. Neither Bible nor preacher can convince him that money is any peril to him.

I once knew a small storekeeper with a bad reputation for parsimony. His business was prospering, but there was no increase in his contributions. As his pastor, I was much concerned about him. Finally, I prepared the strongest sermon I could on the love of money. I preached it with all possible earnestness, and he listened with absorbed attention. I was sure a profound impression had been made. Downtown the next day he crossed the street to speak to me. "Brother Egbert," he said, "I greatly enjoyed that sermon of your yesterday morning." "Why?" I asked. Said he: "Did you notice that Mr. . . . was in the congregation? Well, you certainly did give it to him. You did not leave him a leg to stand on. I don't see how he could have stayed in Church under that sermon."

Just there lies the deadliness of the money peril—that we never think of it in connection with ourselves. Of all temptations, it is the most insidious, the most utterly unsuspected. La Salle, the most popular confessor of the middle ages, has left it on record that of the tens of thousands that confessed to him their sins, not one ever confessed the love of money.

Yet the prevalence of this sin is taught from one end of the Bible to the other. In Isaiah's time, what sin was it that brought the chastisement upon Israel? God tells Isaiah: "For the iniquity of his covetousness, was I wroth and smote him." In Jeremiah's time, what was the prevalent sin? God tells Jeremiah: "From the least of them even unto the greatest of them every one is given to covetousness." In Ezekiel's time, what was the prevalent sin? God tells Ezekiel: "Son of man, they sit before thee as my people, and with their mouth they show much love, but their heart goeth after their gain." And in the New Testament we find that of all its characters in history or parable that are represented as losing their souls, nearly every one went astray, directly or indirectly, through the lure of money.—From "The Desire of All Nations, by Dr. Egbert Smith,

It will be seen from the above that the Easter offering is beginning to come in. Two or three Churches took the offering a week before Easter, as the above indicates. We appreciate three individual donations as indicated in the above. Every dollar coming in now helps to count on our goal. We must reach the $45,000 for the year. We have a long way to go, and every soul that desires to see the goal reached and our missionary indebtedness wiped out should make a contribution through the Church or Sunday School, or send to us directly, and we will credit the same and send it as the donor may direct. We appreciate every dollar that comes, for the need is great and the task is large and the burden is heavy. We thank you, dear friends, for every consideration and every contribution to missions.

CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP.

Dear Co-workers:

Christian stewardship is now receiving a new emphasis. The United Stewardship Council is a great agency helping to bring this message to the heart and life of the Church. The International Lesson Committee is now giving us stewardship Sunday School lessons. Our teachers and officers need preparation to interpret them rightly.

These lessons will mean much or little, as the teachers and officers enter fully into the spirit and purpose of stewardship or fail to do so.

Dr. David McConaughy, of the Presbyterian stewardship department, is making a nine months' stewardship itinerary among the Churches of the Orient to establish stewardship in their Churches' program. An international conference on Church finance was held in Glasgow in June; another will be held in London in 1930. The International Missionary Congress at Jerusalem thoroughly discussed the importance of Christian stewardship. Unless our people learn to know the meaning of stewardship in life, home and Church, they and our Churches will be the losers. Several denominations are making it the dominant note of their Church life in 1929.

This subject is so vital to the spiritual and financial life of our people, to the Church locally and at large, that the General Board, at its October meeting, adopted the following important recommendation, urging "A careful and thorough restudy of stewardship on the part of the members of the General Board, the presidents of our institutions, our denominational officers and secretaries and our Conference officials and Church official boards."

If our leaders become imbued with the present-day stewardship message, they will bring untold blessings to our people. I, therefore, bring to you this important request of the General Board, hoping it may be followed out in your own life by the careful study of a few well-chosen stewardship books. Enclosed is a bibliography of such, which will help you "to lead them in paths that they have not known."

As your Stewardship Secretary, I should greatly appreciate a list of the books you will so study. May I ask your further co-operation in presenting this pressing matter to Church official boards as you have opportunity.

With every good wish,

WARREN H. DENISON,

Dayton, Ohio.

Secretary.

MISSION RALLIES.

The time for the North Carolina Woman's Missionary Rallies draws nigh. The superintendents have the program in hand. These programs can be added to or adapted to meet the local situation. The time for the meeting, unless otherwise announced, will be 10:30. The offering this year will go for reconstruction work in Porto Rico.

We are hoping that every Church in each district may be represented, and that the pastors of same may all be present. Let us remember the places and dates: Graham, N. C., April 9th; Greensboro, N. C., April 11th; Virgilina, Va., April 16th; Turner's Chapel, N. C., April 18th; Ramseur, N. C., April 20th; Chapel Hill, N. C., April 23rd; Liberty (Vance), N. C., April 25th.

President.

MISSION RALLIES.

The Woman's Mission Board of Virginia Valley Central Conference met at the home of Rev. A. W. Andes on the night of March 14th, the president, Mrs. R. A. Larrick, presiding.

The district rallies were arranged as follows: Timber Ridge, June 9th; Palmyra, June 11th; Bethlehem, June 12th; Mt. Lebanon, June 15th; Mt. Olivet (G), June 16th.

In addition to the program as arranged by the Southern Board, there will be an address by Rev. Joe French, and probably another speaker can be secured. The chair appointed Mrs. B. J. Earp, Rev. B. J. Earp, and Mrs. B. F. Frank a committee to finish the plans for the rallies.

Our annual Conference had been planned for Leaksville, and the Board set the date August 1st. The Board asks for a contingent fund.

Every member of the Board and nearly all the pastors were present.

MRS. B. F. FRANK, Sec'y.

NOTICE.

The Halifax District Missionary Rally will be held in Virgilina, April 16th, beginning at 10 o'clock A. M. We are especially anxious that every pastor in the district be present and every Church be represented. Any one coming by rail, please notify the undersigned when they will arrive.

MRS. ALFRED HAYES,

Virgilina, Va.

District Leader.

RECOMMENDED PLANS AND PROGRAM

February, March—Foreign Mission Months

THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION, in its Richmond Session last year, made February and March "Foreign Mission Months" for educational and informational purposes, culminating in an offering from all the Churches for Missions at, or on the nearest possible Sunday to, Easter—March 31, 1929. The goal set for the offering—Home and Foreign Missions—from Sunday Schools, and Churches, and individuals is $33,000; Woman's Societies, $12,000—total, $45,000. Inasmuch as the entire amount thus asked must be raised by voluntary offerings, the Conferences, in their recent sessions, in which the matter was discussed, adopted and recommended to the Sunday Schools and Churches the following method to be pursued in reaching their quota of one-third as much for Missions as for pastor's salary:

FIRST: When a Church uses the Budget Plan, write into that budget one-third the amount of pastor's salary to go to Missions, and send this in monthly or quarterly.

SECOND: If the budget is not used, canvass the individuals of the Church and Sunday School to find out how much each will give to Missions and when, entering the same on a card prepared for the purpose and which may be had of the Mission Secretary, Elon College, N. C.

THIRD: Where neither of these plans is adopted, then endeavor to increase the offering from the Sunday School, and at or about Easter have a Missionary Rally and try to raise the entire amount of the quota at that one service, in conjunction with the monthly offerings from the Sunday School for the year.

Each Church and Sunday School should use one or the other of these plans.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Lesson II—April 14, 1929.

HEZEKIAH LEADS HIS PEOPLE BACK TO GOD.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Jehovah, your God, is gracious and merciful."—2 Chron. 30:9.

LESSON: 2 Chron. 30:1-27.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psa. 145:8-17.

The Times.

Hezekiah was a king of Judah, reigning according to the records, from 715 to 690 B. C. He was a contemporary of the prophet Isaiah, and was profoundly influenced by him. He was the son of Ahaz, a wicked and inefficient king, and inherited from him not only a disorganized realm, but a grievous burden of Assyrian dominance and tribute, and the constant peril and suspense of greater encroachments from that arrogant power. Furthermore, the situation was the more complicated of the social and religious situation. The dominant classes were aping the customs and fashions of the East, while the neglected common people were exposed to the corruptions of the still surviving heathenism of the land. Religiously speaking, the nation was at a very low ebb. Politically speaking, there was a threat of invasion from without and unrest from within. From every standpoint, Hezekiah had a difficult situation before him.

The Man.

Hezekiah's name means "Jehovah has strengthened," and that sums up in a general way his character. He was a man of integrity, and his passion was for peace and truth. He saw the inadequacy of mere formal religion, and, with Isaiah, he desired a revival of inner spiritual religion. He devoted himself to developing the resources of his nation, and also courageously took a stand against the foreign nations that threatened Judah. He was tactful, yet firm, in dealing with the factions represented in the nation, and he is referred to later as one of the greatest kings of Judah. He is listed as one of the three kings who alone "did not commit trespass"—the other two being David and Josiah.

Hezekiah's Work.

Hezekiah had a sincere religious sense. He deplored the religious situation, and he set about to do something about it. He sent word throughout not only his own realm, but into the Northern Kingdom, that a Passover would be observed, and invited all to come to Jerusalem for that solemn and significant event. Hezekiah was no stickler for form. The stated time for the Passover was the fourteenth Nisan, the first month of the Jewish year. But they could not get ready for the Passover at that time, so Hezekiah suggested that they have it on the fourteenth day of the second month. Furthermore, when some of the people came to the Passover unprepared, so far as the strict letter of the law required, Hezekiah suggested that they be allowed to take part anyway, for their spirit was all right. In that early day, this man of affairs had laid hold of the essential thing in religion—it is not how or where or when a man worships, but in what spirit he worships. It is to be noted, too, that Hezekiah set the example himself. It was no easy thing for him as king to do what he did. Here, as elsewhere, we see the value of personal example, especially on the part of those higher up. Mr. Hoover did a fine thing when he not only refrained from having any liquor for himself, but when he asked the members of his cabinet to be personally dry. What a difference it would make if every political and social leader, from the President and members of Congress on down to the last man in the humblest position was personally dry! The solution to the whole matter of law enforcement in its application to the eighteenth amendment is to be found in large measure here. The writer of these notes feels that there is going to be a different phase to the situation after eight years of Mr. Hoover's administration and a campaign of sound education.

There are many suggestive truths embodied in the lesson as printed, and all of them have practical application for those of us who teach and those who are taught.

1. The personal example of a leader counts heavily either for or against religion.
2. Religion is not a matter of form, but of spirit.
3. Correct form in religious ceremonies is desirable, but rightness of heart is imperative.
4. A man's religious sympathies should extend beyond the bounds of his own narrow circle and beyond the confines of his own country.
5. Some men scoff at religion. (Some of the men of Ephraim and Manasseh "laughed them to scorn and mocked them" when the messengers of Hezekiah invited them. Verse 10.)
6. Nations, as well as individuals, need a day of self-examination and penitence.
7. There is an unquestioned value in group worship.
8. God is gracious and merciful.
9. Sound religious life lies at the basis of true prosperity.
10. To those who respond to the overtures of God there comes a blessing beyond price.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Sunday, April 14, 1929.

TOPIC: "Bible Messages Needed Today."—Matt. 16:24; John 3:16; Isa. 55:1-3, 6, 7.

Some Bible Hints.

In an age of self-assertion, ambition, and success, no message is more needed than that of self-denial; a hard one to learn (v. 24).

"If any man will come after me." It is not easy. To follow Jesus would cause a revolution in most lives. We have barely started (v. 24).

At the heart of Christianity we find the cross. It is not an easy and comfortable system. It calls for effort, struggle, agony at times (v. 24).

The world needs to know that God is love. The truth that we are His children—the children of divine love—outweighs all sacrifices we may make (v. 16).

Suggestive Thoughts.

We need a message of faith in the unseen. Abraham had it when he left home and people. We must see the Invisible.

We need the message of humility. We are too self-centered. Even in our service of God we are thinking of ourselves and how splendid we are. We need to see the truth about ourselves.

We need the message of love. We are selfish, harsh, uncharitable, unkind. The world needs the big, generous heart of Christ.

We need the message of confidence in our fellows. Wars come from selfishness and suspicion. We need to learn to trust one another.

A Few Illustrations.

Emphasize evangelism. The world needs it. So do we. We need it because we are sinners and need salvation. The world will be lost if there are no evangelists.

We need the message of citizenship. Let weeds grow undisturbed, and there will soon be no room for flowers. Let graft alone, and soon there will be nothing but graft.

The world needs Christ as the earth needs the sun. This is the world's greatest need and the central message of the Bible. How can we give Christ to the world?

We need the message of repentance. Men are thinking wrongly and need to change their minds, as the word indicates. Changed lives come from changed minds.

To Think About.

What Bible message do we need?

What Bible message would Christ bring to our town?

What Bible message does our Church need?

SOUTHERN BUSINESS GROWS

BY LEAPS AND BOUNDS

Arthur Coleman, in the April issue of Holland's The Magazine of the South, says: "Today there are millions who, being possessed of all the means of information at man's command, do not know the tremendous steps the new South is making toward her goal of industry supremacy; do not realize the awe-inspiring power still unexploited, still untouched. It seems almost impossible that this should be so; that people who call themselves modern, and who live in a world of modern miracles and modern means of knowledge, should go uninformed concerning so great an economic movement, change, renaissance, beneath their heedless noses."

"For the new South is coming into a power that is startling in scope, in its vastness. It would be startling in a purely industrial and commercial section. Much more amusing is it, then, in a region which the people of a nation have come to regard as purely agricultural. One expects other and more commercialized sections of the United States to show gains and growth in industry. And that is why it is so unexpected to learn that, in six years, the annual value of manufactured products in the South increased $567,000,000, while manufactured products values in the remainder of the country during those same six years decreased $279,509,000.

"The industries of the nation are learning that the new South offers advantages in such abandon and of such quality as can be found in no other one section of any country. They are discovering that many Southern mills can pay a dividend on the annual cost of heating similar establishments in some portions of the country. They are discovering that wages for competent labor are 25 to 40 per cent cheaper than in more congested sections, and that the labor itself is of a far higher class. And the fact that Southern taxes are not oppressive is very welcome knowledge to Northern industries who are finding it more and more difficult to compete with contemporary institutions in this territory."

Rev. F. C. Lester, of Waverly, Va., who has been spending some time in Orlando, Fla., for his health, has just returned. He called at THE SUN office this week, and is looking well and in good spirits.

A Quarterly Church Activity

MEN OF THE CHURCH AT LYNCHBURG, VA., ORGANIZE FOR EFFECTIVE WORK.

W. T. Talley, Jr., Elected Leader of Male Organization—Quarterly Conference Elects Officers. Other Branches Elect Officers.

The Men of the Church met on January 29th, at the home of W. T. Talley, Sr., for the purpose of organizing the Men of the Church. The following officers were elected: W. T. Talley, Jr., leader; John Evers, associate leader; Henry Daniel, secretary; C. B. Coffey, treasurer; W. T. Dunn, news reporter for local papers and THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

The name of the organization was voted to be "The United Christian Church Men." The membership fee is $1 per month. The February meeting was held at the home of W. T. Talley, Jr., and Dr. William Joy met with us and spoke to us on the aims and purposes of the Christian Church men. We at this time took up the matter of the every-member canvass and the budget. The following budget was adopted:

Current expenses: Pastor's salary, $720; fuel and light, $50; interest on Church debt, $120; miscellaneous, $195—total, $1,085.

Benevolences: Conference apportionment, $45; Elon College, $35; Orphanage, $40; Christian education, $45; missions, $250—total, $415.

The Men of the Church met at the Church on Sunday, February 17th, and made the canvass. Nearly all of the budget was subscribed. It was decided that we should begin a course of study in stewardship, and on suggestion of Dr. Denison, we will take up the booklet, "A Partnership in Life." Refreshments were served by the Ladies' Aid Society.

Our March meeting was held at the home of Mr. E. W. Harney, on March 4th. The question of the Church debt of $2,000 was brought up, and it was decided that we recommend to quarterly conference, which met Sunday, March 10th, that we launch a campaign at once to clear the Church of this debt.

Mrs. Horney served a delicious supper of sandwiches, fruit salad and coffee.

Since coming on the field here, Rev. G. C. Crutchfield has organized an efficient Ladies' Aid Society. Officers of the organization are as follows: president, Mrs. W. T. Talley, Sr.; vice-president, Mrs. W. C. Horney; secretary, Miss Mildred Daniel; treasurer, Mrs. A. S. Dunn.

The Woman's Missionary Society has taken on new life, and the officers are as follows: president, Mrs. W. T. Dunn; vice-president, Mrs. S. R. Goy; secretary, Mrs. Helen Pribble; treasurer, Mrs. R. L. Hight.

The Christian Endeavor Society elected new officers January 1st: president, Miss Erlma Morris; vice-president, Mrs. Rosa Daniel; secretary-treasurer, Miss Odessa Talley.

The Church met in quarterly conference Sunday morning following the protracted service, and the following officers were elected: financial secretary, A. S. Dunn; secretary, Mrs. Helen Pribble; current expense treasurer, O. F. Talley; benevolence treasurer, Miss Mildred Daniel; stewardship secretary, W. T. Dunn.

It was decided that a campaign be launched immediately to clear the Church of debt. The evangelistic meeting will begin Sunday, March 17th, and continue through Easter Sunday, with the pastor doing the preaching.

On March 11th, some of the young men met with the pastor and the writer at the Church to organize a young men's club, which will be called the Fort Hill Young Citizen's Club, and the following officers were elected: W. T. Dunn, general; James Lawrence, Jr., assistant general; Charles Radford, secretary-treasurer. Among other things, this club will sponsor a baseball club, of which there will be more later.

W. T. DUNN.

LYNCHBURG CHURCH.

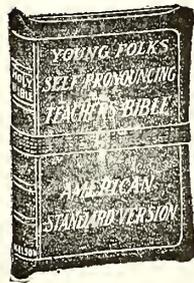

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, the pastor of the United Christian Church, has been holding an evangelistic campaign since Sunday, March 17th, and will continue through Easter Sunday. We are having large crowds and interest is good. We have had several reconsecrations and expect more next week.

Mr. Mack D. Madren, formerly of North Carolina, is leading the singing. We have had special music most every night. The Fairview Disciples of Christ quartet and string band were with us one night, and a quartet composed of the pastor, Mr. and Mrs. Mack D. Madren and Miss Pearl Reynolds, have rendered several numbers; also a duet, composed of Mr. and Mrs. M. D. Madren. We earnestly beg the prayers of the brotherhood.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE,
One of Our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasure . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

A HAPPY FAMILY.

"Touch no unclean thing; and I will be to you a Father, and ye shall be to me sons and daughters."—2 Cor. 6:17, 18.

The Fatherhood of God and the childship of His children is a mystical relationship, purifying, exalting and recreating to every believing soul, and by it we are carried on into a wealth and fullness which transfigures the human relationship. It has spiritual dimensions sufficient to provide motive and reason for living; yes, for the existence of the universe—it enables us to see the home of God in history, and at the same time it retains worth and personal quality to reach you and me and satisfy us both in mind and heart.

Since the family life is the most real relation of our earthly existence and it has become the symbol of our relation to God, it is difficult to conceive our uplift away from the downward drag of lower influences, except in that same conception. Our climb toward perfection and God is through the revelation of that Fatherhood to us.

Prayer.—Dear Father of our souls, draw us to Thee and forbid that we shall slacken our pace in the run. Comfort and encourage us by Thy Word and with Thy manifestations of victory. Be Thou our hope and desire. Fill us from every weight of sin, which we know cannot harm us if Thou art near us. Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE FAMILY HOME.

"Know ye not that ye are the temple of God?"—1 Cor. 3:16.

As the family life is symbolic of the heavenly life, so also does the analogy apply in the dwelling-place for the family. Like everything else, true realization is first in the heart, and if God and we do not dwell together in our hearts there is no dwelling and no consciousness of the family relation.

Our reference to the prodigal son is a splendid example. The Scripture comes with renewed meaning, "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy, for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are."

Prayer.—Let Thy mercies fall on us, dear Lord, even salvation, according to Thy word and spirit, that our hearts may be Thy dwelling-place with us forever. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

A RUNAWAY.

"The younger son . . . took his journey into a far country; and there he wasted his substance with riotous living."—Luke 15:3.

And he is not the only one who ever did this. There are cries in the air of some son or some daughter who has repudiated his father, the family, the home, and disappeared into the wilderness world. It is not the matter of leaving home, nor is it the venture in a cold, merciless world that is to be condemned; but it is the attitude toward the family and home.

So it happens in our Lord's house. The most cherished and devoted one, the most sacred and tender, the one least suspected may wander from the path of right and rectitude into paths of pleasure for a season, until the name "Jesus" is only a name to them. God's fatherliness, His goodness, His mercy and love are forgotten, and He is lost and on the road plumb to the devil—yes, a Church member; yes, an ardent worker one time, but now lost and away from the family of God.

Prayer.—Most merciful Saviour, and our God, be merciful unto us for our waywardness, and forgive us. Make us now Thy true servants in Thy household. Amen.

THURSDAY.

WHAT A RUNAWAY DOESN'T KNOW.

"He knew not that the Lord was departed from him."—Judges 16:20.

The saddest thing about a runaway is that he is lost and don't know it; unprovided for in the necessities and comforts of life and knows not how much lost he is and what a hard time he may have!

Many are spiritual runaways and lost. A man becomes absorbed in business, in pursuit of pleasure, in gratifying the human desires. The way has been easy and happy, but somehow prayer is more difficult, religious observance is less desirable, the Bible is not read any more; in fact, the whole being has become irresponsible to religious claims and it seems no longer a necessary part of life. Even now but little thought is given to such things. Lost and don't know it. Do these things mean anything to us?

Prayer.—Almighty God, who art able to do all things, save us from the lethargy of spiritual indolence and a lost soul and quicken our consciousness every day into Thy newness of life. Amen.

FRIDAY.

WHERE IS HE?

"They returned to Jerusalem seeking Him . . . and they found Him in the temple."—Luke 2:45.

That is where they lost Him. The prodigal son found the father where he left him. Paul found him in his heart where he had denied and cursed Him. The Philipian jailer found Him where he had disbelieved. If we lost Him, it will be at the beginning of some prodigal or unsaved way, and if we ever find Him it will be just there. In each account of life we may find Him or we may lose Him, and we have to settle up each account by going back to where we departed from Him. He is there waiting to receive and bless.

Prayer.—O Holy Christ and God, as a father pitieth his children, so Thou dost pity them that fear Thee. We claim Thy pity in our lives. Lead us, lest we stray. Lead us gently all the way. Amen.

SATURDAY.

WHAT IS SALVATION?

"Godly sorrow worketh repentance unto salvation."—2 Cor. 7:10.

The theme of the Bible is "Salvation." "Getting religion," as we used to say, is "salvation"—what is salvation? It is taken to be deliverance from, or victory over outward dangers and enemies. It is taken for remission of sins, the embracing of true faith, the exercise of true repentance and obedience (Luke 19:9). It is taken to be eternal happiness hereafter which is the object of our hopes and desires (Luke 1:77). It forgives a sinner of all his sins, washes his soul white and fits him for spiritual bidings.

This is not realized as a sudden experience to all. To some it comes as slowly and as gently as the opening of the dawn; to others, it is like turning in the road; to others, it comes like an earthquake. But to all, it means the feeding of the soul on Jesus. To all it means personal knowledge of God. To all, it means harmony with God and peace with the world. All are directed toward the sunrise of eternity.

Prayer.—Our Father and our God, author of eternal life, keep thy salvation ever before us and inspire our lives to the claim of Thy salvation throughout life. Amen.

SUNDAY.

LIGHTHOUSE LENSES.

"Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven."—Matt. 5:16.

They who are familiar with the perils of the sea and the shoals near the coast know the value of lighthouses and are dependent upon the flashing powerful lights to give them their bearings.

In the light of our text, and many other similar ones, it is certain that Jesus expects all His children to be such shining examples of His light that the world can make no mistake along its way. He must have expected that Christianity would spread with the contagion of fire in the broom-field.

Aunt Dina, speaking of another negro who was supposed to be converted, said: "Dey say she's got religion. If she has, she's took it mighty light—it don't hinder her from goin' on jes de same as ebber, and nobody needn't be afraid of catching it from her."

Some of us sterilize our religion. What kind of religion must we possess if others would be irresistibly influenced by it?

Prayer.—Kind Father, giver of light, fill our lives and our souls with the fire of heaven and shine. Thou, in us as Thou wouldst hvae us shine. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The good women of our Church everywhere have been exceedingly good to us this Easter season and have remembered us beautifully with little dresses, little suits, and many other things. The following have been received since our last report:

The Women's Missionary Society, Mrs. E. Lena Rothert, secretary, Luray, Va., 16 dresses, 1 suit, 2 blouses; Women's Missionary Society, Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., 38 dresses, 13 suits, 1 suit clothes, etc.; Ladies' Missionary Society, Turner's Chapel, N. C., 10 dresses, 4 suits; Missionary Society, First Church, Urbana, Ill., 14 dresses, 5 suits, 1 quilt, other garments; Miss Birdie Wilson, Virgilina, Va., 6 dresses; Riverside Christian Missionary Society, Elkhart, Ind., 12 dresses; Ladies' Missionary Society, Randleman, N. C., 23 dresses, 4 suits; ladies of the Lynchburg Church, Va., 8 dresses, 1 boy's suit; Bethel Missionary Society, Mansfield, Ill., 20 dresses, 3 pr. bloomers, 3 boys' suits; Young People's Missionary Society, Burton's Grove Church, Va., 7 dresses, 2 suits, etc.; Sidney Christian Aid Society, Sidney, Ind., 17 dresses, 1 boy's suit; Eurie Christian Church, 9 dresses; Women's Missionary Society, Reidsville, N. C., 10 dresses, 1 suit; Mrs. C. W. Franklin, Cary, N. C., 3 dresses, 5 pr. socks; Ladies' Aid Society, Bethlehem Church, Va., 8 dresses, 1 towel; Working Circle, Old Zion Christian Church, Norfolk, Va., 20 dresses, 8 suits, candy eggs; ladies, Pleasant Grove Church, News Ferry, Va., 10 dresses, 3 suits; Women's Missionary Society, Christian Temple Church, Norfolk, Va., 10 dresses, 1 suit, coat and vest; Mrs. N. P. Ingram, Ingram, Va., 2 dresses; Mrs. C. V. Dunn, Paces, Va., 2 dresses; Ladies' Aid Society, Waverly Christian Church, Va., 13 dresses, 1 slip, 1 pr. pumps.

The women of our Church are always glad to make our little folks at the Christian Orphanage happy at the Easter season, and they have made it possible for all the little boys and girls up to the age of twelve years to have a little new suit or dress for Easter Sunday morning. We are very grateful and appreciate all the little dresses and suits sent to us for this Easter season.

NOTICE.

You read magazines, farm and daily papers. I sell subscriptions to help support my family. I would not ask you to add any periodical just to help us. However, when you renew those you now take, please send, through my agency, the same amount you would send publishers. You can make checks payable to publisher, but send to me. Publishers do not allow any reductions from their offers. However, on all orders received from CHRISTIAN SUN readers at publishers' offers, I will personally donate 10 per cent of total order to any Church, auxiliary or cause they may suggest. This may also apply to many daily papers in Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia. I handle many of the leading dailies in these States. Will be glad to send you catalog and list on request.

NOTICE.

The Vance-Franklin and Warren District Missionary Rally will be held at the Liberty (Vance) Church, Thursday, April 25th, beginning at 10 o'clock A. M.

I want every pastor in the district to begin making plans, so that he will be able to attend the rally; and also every Church to begin making plans to send delegates, whether they have a missionary society or not. I am so anxious that every pastor in the district attend the rally and every Church be represented. Let us heed the theme for our rally this year, "The Call of the Master," and get busy in the mission work and attend the rally, thus making it the best that we have ever held in our district.

Don't forget the time and place—Liberty (Vance) Church, Thursday, April 25, 1929.

MARGARET ALSTON,
Henderson, N. C., R. 1. District Leader.

OFFICIAL NOTICE.

The Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, at its last session, accepted an invitation from Newport News to meet there in 1929. But inasmuch as their new Church will not be completed by the time of the Convention, the Newport News people have asked to be relieved from entertaining this year. The executive committee is, therefore, anxious to receive an invitation for the coming session of the Convention. Please take this up with your school and notify us if you wish to entertain.

PRESIDENT'S INAUGURAL APPEAL.

With thorough Hoover efficiency, the President will appoint his law-enforcement commission and will not expect it to decide whether prohibition or any other law is good or bad.

The President has already indicated that he expects to have Congress transfer the prohibition enforcement bureau from the Treasury Department to the Department of Justice under the Attorney-General.

The President has appointed as his Attorney-General, William D. Mitchell, of Minnesota, formerly solicitor-general of the United States, a man of high character and brilliant legal gifts.

prohibition. Whether, from an administrative or an executive point of view, he is of the type and temperament to put drive into the enforcement program remains to be seen.

The larger responsibility, however, does not rest in the person of the Attorney-General, but at last belongs to President Hoover.

No one can imagine Herbert Hoover tolerating either corruption or inaction in the prohibition bureau or any other branch of the government.

Herbert Hoover must "deliver the goods" on this law or else deny the laws of his own being. The compulsion upon him is even more internal than external.

What, then, is the duty of those citizens who believe in prohibition? First, to trust and believe in President Hoover and give him a fair chance to start on this matter.

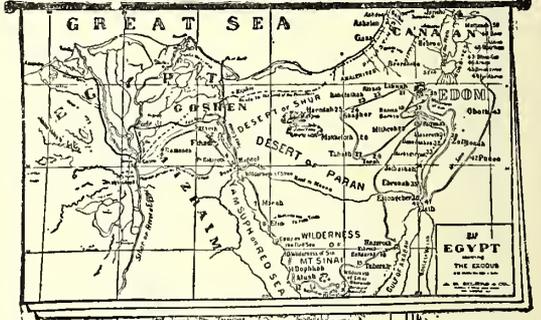

ON GOD'S SIDE.

"We know that God is on our side," said a friend to President Lincoln during the Civil War. Lincoln rebuked the man and went to the heart of the matter in replying: "I am more concerned to know that we are on God's side."

OBITUARIES.

BARBER.

James D. Barber passed from labor to his reward March 7, 1929, at the age of 66 years, 10 months, and 18 days. He leaves to mourn his departure two sons, Cyrus L. and Hennan L., both of Elon College, Route 1, with their families, including four grandchildren.

Burial service was held at Shallow Ford, where he held his Church membership, and interment was beside his wife, who preceded him in death four years. The Lord comfort his loved ones.

T. J. GREEN.

MORGAN.

George W. Morgan, son of the late William J. and Mildred Byrd Morgan, died at his late home, near Whaleyville, Va., February 19, 1929, aged 73 years. The funeral services were conducted at Liberty Spring Church by the writer, assisted by Drs. I. W. Johnson and W. W. Staley, and Rev. Mr. Taylor, of the Baptist Church. The interment was in the Church cemetery.

Mr. Morgan leaves a widow, who was miss Lavinia Morgau; two brothers, J. B., of Holland, and James, of Whaleyville. He had been a member of Holy Neck Church since his early life and was a man of excellent character, faithful to his obligations, kind in the home and generous as a friend and neighbor. May the God of all comfort bless and keep his loved ones.

N. G. NEWMAN.

SEWARD.

Hettie Faison Seward was born January 25, 1872, and was called to the fuller life on January 31, 1929, at the age of 57 years and 6 days. Early in life she joined Union (Surry) Christian Church, where she remained a faithful member until about fifteen years ago, when she transferred her membership to Moore's Swamp Baptist Church, where she was a faithful member until she was called to her reward.

On January 25, 1899, she was united in marriage to Samuel Thaddeus Seward. To this union were born two sons. She leaves to mourn her going her husband, Samuel Seward; two sons, Clyde F. and Ray White, of near Surry, Va.; five sisters: Mrs. J. P. Whitmore, of Newport News, Va.; Mrs. O. E. Berryman, Surry, Va.; Mrs. M. E. Whitmore, Dendron, Va.; Mrs. J. H. Lane, Elberon, Va.; one brother, E. Dudley Faison, Dendron, Va.; two grandchildren, and a multitude of friends.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by the Rev. E. B. White, and interment made in Moore's Swamp Church Cemetery. May the Lord comfort those who mourn.

R. E. BRITTLE.

VICKERS.

Miss Myrtle Virginia Vickers was born March 16, 1902, and died January 12,

1929, living 26 years, 9 months and 26 days. She united with the Christian Church when thirteen years of age and was baptized by dear old Bro. H. W. Elder. To know her was to love her. At the time of her death, she was efficiently filling her place as teacher of the fourth grade in our school. She was our pianist at Ambrose, and a more faithful one could never be found. She lived a humble Christian life till death. The floral tribute and messages of sympathy coming from far and near spoke in no uncertain terms of the high esteem in which she was held. Her life of humble consecration to God will always be an inspiration to me, and I'm sure to all who knew her.

Her funeral was conducted by the writer, her pastor, at Ambrose Christian Church, assisted by Rev. Bro. Stanford, pastor of the First Methodist Church, Douglas, Ga. Interment was made in Mt. Union Cemetery. God has suffered a mighty stroke to come upon the home, the community, and the Church in the taking of this dear young lady. The remark was common, "No one in the community would have been so badly missed as she." She was to have spoken at our coming Richland convention on "What a Young Woman May Mean to the Church." Though she did not live to make the speech, she was preparing it. But, best of all, she has shown us by her own life what one may mean.

We are bowed with grief, but are reconciled to the will of Him who giveth and taketh away. May God comfort that sad home and give back to the children the health of their dear father and mother who have likewise been near death's door. We know that God has been glorified by her life, and our prayer now is that her going may be sanctified to our

ANDERSON.

William Lilian Anderson, Jr., son of W. L. and Eva M. Atkinson Anderson, was born September 4, 1904, and died February 23, 1929, age 24 years, 5 months and 19 days. He was a member of a family of five children—three boys and two girls. Early in life he professed his love for Christ and united with Wakefield Christian Church and remained a member to the end. About seven years ago his health failed to the extent that he spent the remaining part of his life in the hospital, where the end came.

The remains were brought to Wakefield, his former home, and interment was made in the Wakefield Cemetery, where the services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. E. B. White and A. K. Lambkin, in the presence of a large crowd of his friends and relatives, and the body laid to rest under a mound of beautiful flowers.

He is survived by his parents, of Richmond, Va.; two brothers, C. A., of Wakefield, and Edgar, of Richmond, and two sisters, Mrs. Walter Seely, of Wakefield, and Mrs. W. T. Wood, of Mobile, Ala. God will comfort those who lean on Him. C. E. GERRINGER.

JONES.

Riddick Jones, born March 13, 1849, passed from labor to reward on February 1, 1929, age 80 years, 10 months and 18 days. On October 31, 1876, he was married to Emily J. Duke, who preceded him to the gloryland by less than four months. Bro. Jones united with Cypress Chapel Christian Church early in life, where he was a faithful, life-long member. He loved his Church, was a faithful husband and father, and his life was a benediction to his community.

He leaves to mourn his going one son, Marshall Jones, deacon in the Church and superintendent of Cypress Chapel Sunday School; one sister, Mrs. R. E. Babb; one grandchild, Elizabeth Jones, and a host of close friends.

Funeral services were conducted at Cypress Chapel Christian Church on February 3, 1929, by the writer, assisted by Dr. W. W. Staley and Rev. J. M. Roberts. Interment was made in Cypress Chapel Church Cemetery. May the Lord of comfort be the portion of those who mourn. R. E. BRITTLE.

SPENCER.

Ike Spencer, son of R. H. and Martha Spencer, was born November 28, 1848, and died March 9, 1929, age 80 years, 3 months and 9 days. The deceased is survived by one sister, Mrs. Sallie Wells, of Semora, N. C. When a young man, he married Miss Missouri Carter. Only one child was given them. Both wife and daughter died a few years ago.

Bro. Spencer did not unite with the Church till recent years, when he joined Lebanon, and although a cripple and suffered much, he attended Church when he had the opportunity and entered into the worship with joy. The funeral and the burial were at Lebanon Christian Church on Sunday afternoon, March 10th, conducted by the writer.

PIEDMONT JUNIOR COLLEGE

WADLEY, ALABAMA

An Accredited Junior College

Where Opportunity Awaits the Student of Very Limited Means

GIRLS' DORMITORY

Piedmont Junior College, Wadley, Ala., will open September 12, 1928. This institution is a Junior College, which is co-educational, where scholarship ranks high and expense is low. It is thoroughly Christian, absolutely non-sectarian, and vitally American. A school where opportunity awaits the student of very limited means—$68.00 pays all college expenses, except books, board and room. Board, $15.00 per month, and room $4.00; total expenses for the term of nine months, $250.00.

Piedmont Junior College is affiliated, as Junior College, with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and its courses are co-ordinated with those of Piedmont and accredited by this institution. Piedmont College is a charter member of the Association of Georgia Colleges, a member of the Association of American Colleges, and an accredited College of the Southern Association of Colleges.

Piedmont Junior College is training some of the best stock of America for Christian leadership, to be used by the nation and the world. Here is a great challenge and asset for students who wish to prepare themselves to serve in a worth-while way. The new Administration Building will be completed by time school opens this fall.

NUMBER 15.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

BY REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL.

JAPANESE PROHIBITION.—

The liquor problem seems to be universal. No nation is exempt. And each nation is attempting to deal with it in a different way. All of them are experimenting with various forms of legislation, each hoping to find some plan that will be satisfactory. Japan has recently proposed a law by which it hopes to counteract some of the evil results of drinking intoxicants. This measure would forbid liquor to young men under twenty-five years of age. Japan also has a law which forbids smoking by young men under twenty. The proclaiming of the United States prohibition laws as a failure seems to be influencing other nations to adopt less-sweeping policies of restriction. Though many of them are following closely the steps taken by the United States in arriving at our present policy, those who are vitally interested in prohibition realize that the success or failure of the prohibition cause in the United States will exert a world-wide influence. If our government should be able to effect a satisfactory enforcement of the prohibition laws, all other nations of the world who have large industrial interests will have to adopt a policy that prohibits indulgence in intoxicants in order to meet American competition in industry. In no other country has prohibition become so intimately associated with religious motives as is the case in the United States. Japan is considering the present legislation mainly for moral and physical reasons.

THE RURAL CHURCH PROBLEM.—

For years religious gatherings have been discussing the problem of the rural Church. The number of suggested remedies have almost equalled the number of those who have engaged in the discussion. In many instances the efforts have never gone beyond the discussion stage. But the School of Religion of Vanderbilt University has set itself in a definite way to do its part toward meeting the situation. This institution holds an annual rural Church school. The third session is being held April 1st to April 12th. The plan is to bring together four hundred pastors of rural Churches to study the problems that confront rural Church workers. The scope of the study embraces all the major interests of rural life. The leading authorities of the country are secured to deliver the lectures and lead the discussions, which are made as practical as possible. Perhaps the best feature in connection with the entire plan is the fact that they are able to select the rural workers who can receive the largest benefit from the course. Many rural pastors do not receive sufficient salary to enable them to attend such institutes at their own expense. Some far-sighted philanthropist has provided the necessary funds to pay the expenses of the rural pastors who attend the school. The interest that is being taken is evidenced by the fact that, though this is only the third session, and the facilities available can only take care of four hundred, there were about a thousand applicants.

YOUTH AND THE CHURCH.—

The Presbyterian Advance, of Nashville, has recently made an attempt to canvas what modern youth in our institutions of higher learning are thinking about religion and the Church. A group of representative students were selected, who were to find out the attitude of the students upon their respective campuses toward religion and the Church and to report their findings in articles which were to be submitted to the Presbyterian Advance in a prize contest. The Literary Digest quotes as follows from the article of Munro Kezer, of the University of Nebraska, who won third prize:

"Discontent with the Church and lack of spirituality, religious disbelief are synonymous terms to many. This is a handicap to an understanding of modern American youth. To youth there is no inconsistency in religious belief and dissatisfaction with the Church. Youth is, as always in the past, seeking an ideal. It is searching for perfection. If it is not to be found in the Church, youth will seek elsewhere. Vital religious beliefs may permeate the soul of the youth discontented with the Church as fully as any other individual. Such a combination of discontent and religious interest may swing into a condemnation of organized religion. It may also be directed into attempts to remedy what to youth appear to be significant defects.

"The average adult is likely to be somewhat shocked by the bold statement that serious-minded youth tends to be discontented with the Church. His fears might be greatly allayed by an examination of the causes of such dissatisfaction."

"The adult has achieved a relatively stabilized life. The student, on the other hand, is in a transitional stage. Environmentally, his life lies between the stabilized home of his parents and the stabilized home he will establish later. Mentally, his ideas are receiving a constant overhauling under the influence of a wide range of new ideas, acquired both in and out of the class-room. He is in a state of uncertainty.

"The Church that adequately meets the needs of adult life seems inadequate to him. He may be seriously dissatisfied with the Church now. A few years later, as his intellectual development and environment become more stabilized, he may find that the Church meets his needs. Recognition of this fundamental difference between the religious needs of youth and adulthood would do much to remove apprehension over the spiritual interests of youth.

"Modern youth has such interests. Young people today are, in general, concerned about vital spiritual matters. Few of them will admit it. It just isn't the 'collegiate' thing to do.

"It is such a youth, indifferent outwardly, thinking inwardly, that is discontented with the Church today. Adjusting itself to a rapidly changing world, youth is seeking the ideals of its dreams. To many, the Church has lost its appeal, an appeal which it may never regain without adaptation to a new world life. To a large number, the Church has lost its hold during a transitional period. This portion will return. But it will return, demanding a finer Church, not in a physical, material sense, but in a spiritual sense. It will demand a Church which will adequately meet the spiritual needs of a more comprehensively trained mentality. Ultra-conservative portions of the Church may resent needed changes. They will come, anyway. The generation of the youth of today will demand organized religion as emphatically as have others. It will construct religious media to answer its needs. If there be cause for apprehension in that, the students' attitude is, 'Let them worry.' Meanwhile, they will go their own way, seriously attempting to satisfy their most inner religious interests."

This young man has stated some facts that the Church most urgently needs to learn. One fact that the Church must ever face is that it must interpret religion in terms of life to the generation that is to come after it. Another fact is that each generation must interpret for itself religion in terms of the life of its own day. It is indeed a difficult task to perform. We must so interpret religion that the generation which is to come after us shall miss none of its fine, rich meanings. But if we insist upon making the religion of the next generation exactly like that of its predecessor, then we have cut off forever all hope of religious progress. We are endeavoring to teach the art of religious living. We must see that youth shall have all the materials of the art, together with such of principles of the technique as we may have been able to master, and we must then leave youth free to construct its own masterpiece.

Religion should no more be satisfied with producing copyists than should art. The world needs creative genius, not copyists skilled in the technique of imitation. One generation expresses its beliefs in a creed, couched in the thought forms and current phraseology of its own day. Another generation arises which does its thinking in entirely different terms. It becomes necessary to have an explanation of what, to the former generation, needed no explaining, and by the time the third generation has arrived there must be an explanation of the explanation. This is continued until it is not surprising that the way is lost amid so many explanations. Truth is eternal, but the application of it to the ever-changing problems of life must be made for each succeeding generation.

Mrs N T Farmer

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. F. C. Lester, the faithful and beloved pastor at Waverly, Va., after a vacation, health seeking in Florida, has returned to his work at Waverly and with renewed energy and vigor is taking up the tasks of his pastorate.

Our Biscoe Church, Western North Carolina Conference, the youngest of all our Churches, was one of the first after Easter to send in its missionary offering. This shows a commendable spirit and one that will help Biscoe live and prosper if cultivated and developed.

Hyde Park Christian Church of the Evangel, Brooklyn, N. Y., has extended a call to Rev. G. D. Underhill to become its pastor soon after his graduation from Elon College, in May. Bro. Underhill recently spent a Sunday with this Church, giving them two sermons and looking the situation over. His decision has not yet been rendered at this writing as to whether he will accept.

Rev. J. N. Cutchin, South Norfolk, Va., who has been very unwell for two months, is now able to take up his work again. Bro. Cutchin has no Church in charge at the present time, but has been, and is still, used quite extensively as a supply, having supplied for twenty different Churches during the last few years. Any pastor needing a supply for a Sunday, or any Church needing a pastor, will do well to get in touch with Bro. Cutchin.

Elsewhere in THE SUN is presented a paper by Mrs. W. H. Andrews, Suffolk, Va., read in the One-Day School of Missions at Suffolk, Wednesday, the 3rd. The specific object in presenting this paper through THE SUN is to explain to all who may be interested the purpose and plan of life and memorial memberships in the women's work of the Southern Christian Convention. The paper is self-explanatory and will help those who read it to comprehend what the women are seeking to do through these memberships.

"Dear Bro. Atkinson,—I am glad to say that at the missionary rally on Easter we succeeded in raising the full amount of our quota for the Richmond Church. I hope that, for Jesus' sake, all the Churches of the Convention may do likewise. Your brother in service, C. C. Ryan." Such letters from happy pastors carry a thrill of delight, not only to the heart of the Mission Secretary, but to all who are interested in the great task upon us this year of raising $45,000 for missions, if we would save our face and redeem the situation.

Rev. C. E. Gerringer, of the Wakefield pastorate, was one of the fortunate ministers receiving a scholarship to the School of Rural Pastoral Work at Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn., and for the past two weeks Bro. Gerringer has been enjoying the privileges offered by this school. The pastors who in previous years have had the advantages of this school, report most favorably upon it, and we are sure that Bro. Gerringer will come back to his people much benefitted and helped for the tasks that abide him as an efficient pastor.

Rev. T. N. Lowe, of the Elm Avenue Church, believes that one of the most helpful agencies in any congregation to the success of our Church enterprises is a large subscription list to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. He devoutly wishes that every family in his Church would subscribe for and read THE SUN, and in this Bro. Lowe is eminently correct, for where THE CHRISTIAN SUN is read, there the people are ready to hear and to give heed to the pleas and the programs that make for progress in the Church and the kingdom. Truly, one of the strong arms of the pastor is his Church paper.

Rev. N. G. Newman, D. D., pastor of Holy Neck Church, writes, under recent date: "Our Easter offering began Sunday. Those present gave $166. Envelopes have been sent to those not present. We are pressing as much as we deem wise, hoping for the best from all the Churches." Similar reports come from many pastors and Churches, showing that while a beginning was made for the Easter offering, the work is to be carried on till all are given an opportunity. However, whatever is collected should be sent in as soon as possible, that each Church may get credit in due season.

A good brother, who was not sure whether his own Church would take an offering for missions at an early date, writes: "Although I have sustained heavy losses of late and am hard-up for money, I inclose $5 for missions. I want to give something for missions. I cannot be a Christian without having a missionary spirit. I have enjoyed THE CHRISTIAN SUN today. It seems to me to get better every week." If THE CHRISTIAN SUN had more subscribers and readers like this good brother, both our mission cause and all other enterprises of the Church would receive more loyal and liberal support.

The following telegram reached the Mission Secretary Monday, April 8th, 10 A. M.: "I am happy to advise that both Antioch and Isle of Wight Courthouse Churches raised full quotas yesterday. (Signed) J. M. Darden, Assistant Secretary, Suffolk, Va." If a similar effort, put forth by Bro. Darden, can be put forth in all of our Churches, we do not fear as to results, for Antioch and Isle of Wight Courthouse Churches have their problems and difficulties like all rural Churches at this time of the year. It is a question of getting the people to be willing to really deny themselves and make a sacrificial effort in His name and for His sake.

Bro. Sam Leonard Davis and wife, evangelists, have just concluded a very successful revival in the Cottage Place Methodist Church, Portsmouth, Va. Rev. J. T. Fulcher, the pastor, says of the meeting and of the work of Bro. and Sister Davis that "the Church has been greatly revived in every way, and it was one of the most successful meetings in the history of the Church at this place. Bro. and Sister Sam Leonard Davis are very efficient in every part of their work, and will be a benediction to any Church that can secure their services." Several of our Churches have had Bro. and Sister Davis, and they should be kept busy in evangelistic work, since their efforts seem so abundantly blessed in all the meetings they have held. Our pastors, in planning their evangelistic meetings for the spring and summer, should bear them in mind.

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, pastor of the Christian Church, Lynchburg, closed on Easter an exceedingly interesting and helpful series of meetings, he himself doing the preaching. At the close of the meetings, seven united with the Church, and there are quite a number who are to join at an early date, sickness preventing several from uniting at the time. The work goes well at Lynchburg, and they are planning now, in prayer and faith, to make a most desperate and commendable effort to pay off their Church debt by the 28th of April. It is hoped that the Church can be dedicated in June. The work is promising. Any reader of THE CHRISTIAN SUN who wishes to invest some good dollars wisely and well in the Lord's work, can safely do so by acceding to a request of the pastor published in this week's SUN, under "Lynchburg, Va.," which will be found quite interesting to SUN readers, as it carries much valuable and inspiring information.

One of the very busiest ministers of the Eastern Virginia Conference is Dr. W. W. Staley, pastor-emeritus of the Suffolk Christian Church. This Church confers a favor upon the denomination by making it possible for Dr. Staley to be used so profitable and helpful in many ways for the advancement of the kingdom. Interested in every enterprise of the Church, he lets no opportunity pass of rendering service in the name of his Church and Conference and Convention when it is within his reach. He supplies for absent pastors and gives time and effort to the meetings of general interest. In the absence of Rev. C. E. Gerringer the past two Sundays, he supplied the pulpits of his pastorate, and some Church nearby, or remote, claims his services almost every Sunday, and, though by no means well and in good health, he attended last week two of the missionary rallies and took part and showed the deepest interest and concern in their welfare. Surely this man gives his life to his Church and his Lord.

A very interesting and largely attended meeting of the three congregations—Congregational, First Christian, and Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Va.—was held at our Elm Avenue Church Tuesday evening, April 2nd, to discuss the matter of uniting the three congregations. Rev. H. C. Caviness presided, and very interesting talks were made by members of each of the three congregations—Dr. Shelton, of the Congregational Church; Dr. Carroll, of their mission board; and Rev. T. N. Lowe, pastor of Elm Avenue, all being present and taking part. Bro. J. M. Darden and J. O. Atkinson, of the Mission Board, were also present. The meeting resulted in a resolution calling for the appointment of a committee of three from each of the congregations to work out a recommendation and details and plans of the proposed union and submit the same to each of the Churches to be voted upon by the congregations thereof at as early a date as practicable. If each of the three congregations deem it wise to form the union, committees will be formed to carry out the instructions and the decision of the three congregations concerned. The discussion was a very frank and friendly one, and while the only question raised was as to whether such a union was feasible, advisable and workable.

DANVILLE, VA.

Sunday, April 7th, was a great day for the Christian Church, Third Avenue, Danville. Rev. M. T. Sorrell, the pastor, and his co-workers were greatly rejoiced at the completion of their young people's department, now a part of their Church plant, and over the fact that the indebtedness was entirely wiped out. A wing to the main building, adding three large rooms for young people's classes, built of brick-veneer, and equipped with proper furniture, makes a very valuable addition to the Church, both in appearance and in utility. The enlarged building was dedicated at the 11 o'clock service Sunday, with a large congregation present to engage in the joyful occasion. We noticed from the record that there were 275 present in Sunday School, and the discovery was made that, so far as relieving congestion or overflow is concerned, the additional rooms are wholly inadequate. That is to say, the numbers joining the Sunday School have increased more rapidly since they began building a few months ago than the space for accommodating them has through the addition of the new rooms, and now in order to even accommodate the growing numbers, it becomes necessary to put on another addition, and the Church is confronted with the identical problem that faced it before the rooms were added. This, we take it, is quite unusual, for while the enlargement of a plant often increases to some extent the numbers, it is only in rare instances that, by the time the enlarged capacity is ready, it is even more taxed for space than was the building before the enlargement was begun. And the Church membership is growing in numbers along with the increased numbers in the Sunday School, the membership having doubled within two years. They have had many trying difficulties and dark days in the Danville work, but the faithful few have been loyal and devoted and have already lived to see the triumph of the work so well begun in this substantial and growing community. Situated as the Church is, far out in North Danville, many residences have been added since the Church was planted there, and are still being added, and there is no other Church than ours to serve this growing community. A great opportunity confronts the Christian Church there, and in turn the Church has upon it the weighty responsibility of reaching large and ever-increasing numbers, and under wise direction the Church should become, as it gives promise of doing, one of the most numerous in membership in the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference, of which it is a constituent member.

We felicitate Bro. Sorrell and his faithful co-workers in the energetic prosecution of a progressive program for kingdom service and enlargement, and it was a joy to be with them and have part in their dedicatory service Sunday, April 7th.

DO PROTESTANT PREACHERS PRAY?

The scope of this article is limited to Protestant ministers chiefly because I have no personal knowledge of the devotional habits of the Roman Catholic or Jewish clergy. But I have a somewhat extensive acquaintance with Protestant ministers of all the leading denominations, and of some others also, based upon observation extending over sixty years. Of course, it is impossible for even a careful observer to know fully the private devotional life of even intimate friends, but it is possible to gather here and there in one's personal contacts a fairly accurate idea of the general trend of matters in even an obscure field. For example, I once heard a mature and thoughtful pastor say in a group of ministers when the conversation became intimate: "Brethren, I think that I have never prayed more than five or six times in my life." Doubtless he had uttered words of prayer thousands of times, both in public and in private. But self-examination had led him to the sorrowful conclusion that most of his approaches to the throne of grace had lacked the qualities essential to real prayer. Possibly this good man was not doing himself justice in his self-estimate. But every one who has dealt strictly with himself is bound to acknowledge that much which claims to be prayer falls far short of the standard set by the Master for His disciples.

A Congregationalist minister, who was formerly a Methodist, in a recent number of Zion's Herald, makes the amazing statement: "I know ministers in both denominations who have given up the practice of private prayer. These pastors never pray except at a public service, and a few of them have told me they wished there was a satisfactory substitute for that exercise. Some of my clergy friends use handbooks of prayers in their studies to go through a sort of psychological setting-up exercise, but the ear of a God who might hear is not in all their thoughts." The same writer says that Dr. E. Stanley Jones, the most conspicuous missionary in the world at this time, in a public address to a Western audience not long ago, declared that he was "surprised to find in America a non-praying ministry." His phenomenal ministry to the high-class natives of India had been carried on under the mighty impulse of communion with the unseen but omnipotent Christ who commissioned His disciples to preach the gospel to the whole creation and assured them that He would "be with them always, even unto the end of the world" (Matt. 28:20). Coming to this country from the fervid ministry of his Indian experience, it appeared to him that preachers over here were not praying with any fervor and expectation of success.

To similar conclusion did the late Dr. A. C. Dixon arrive—he who occupied Charles H. Spurgeon's famous pulpit in London years after Spurgeon passed away. Dr. Dixon related this incident: In a gathering of 150 pastors in one of the larger American cities, a speaker asked all who were accustomed to spend as much as half an hour daily in prayer to signify it, and very few responded. More replied that they spent fifteen minutes a day in prayer, and a still larger number said they spent as much as ten minutes. When it came to five minutes, all the company arose, but one man said: "I am afraid I was lying, for I am not sure that I spend five consecutive minutes any day in prayer." These facts, or alleged facts, may need some discount, but they point to a condition that is far too prevalent, and which should be pondered with candor and self-examination. If these things are so, and the laity is equally remiss, how can we expect the ministry to be a vital force, and the Church to be what the Master designs it to be—"the salt of the earth" and "the light of the world"?

The situation as thus alleged is to me a great surprise, and a very painful one. If this world is ever to become in fact, as it is by right, the kingdom of God, it can only be accomplished by divine power. But God's plan is to bring this result to pass by means of His ministers and people, and His promise is: "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Spirit is come upon you." To await the promised "power," the early apostles and others spent ten days in private and social prayer; and it was while they were praying that the Spirit fell upon them on the Day of Pentecost. Before this they were weak and inefficient, but immediately they were transformed, becoming bold as lions, and eloquent with more than mortal speech. Thereafter, prayer was the hourly source of comfort and strength to these disciples, as it was later on to Paul of Tarsus, the mightiest of them all. No one can read his epistles to Churches and individuals without seeing that they are saturated in the spirit of prayer, and that Paul's great success was due in the last analysis to the influence of his constant communion with God. No doubt, the other apostles found their inspiration at the same fountain, though we know less of the details of their ministries.

All along the subsequent years the most successful preachers and pastors have found the source of their personal peace and joy in prayer, and also the power of their ministry to others. Richard Baxter used to study the texts of his sermons on his knees. For the sake of defining to his own mind more clearly the precise object of his prayer, he would place his finger on the word of which he wanted a clearer notion or a deeper sense, and pray: "Lord, reveal even this to me; show Thy meaning." Charles Spurgeon, when asked for an explanation of his success in winning people to God, replied, "Knee-work! knee-work!" John R. Mott says: "The supreme question of missions is, how to multiply the number of Christians who, with truthful lives and with clear, unshaken faith in the character and ability of God, will individually or collectively, or cooperatively as a Church, wield the force of intercessory prayer for the conversion and transformation of men, for the inauguration and energizing of spiritual movements, and for the breaking down of all that exalts itself against Christ and His purpose." And Dr. Alexander Maclaren, one of Scotland's greatest preachers, wrote: "I have always found that my own comfort and efficiency in preaching has been in direct proportion to the frequency and depth of daily communion with God."

The brightest example of all in the matter of private prayer is to be seen in the life of Jesus

Monument to Rev. J. W. Wellons, D. D.

The above cut represents the proposed monument to be placed at the grave of Rev. James Willis Wellons, D. D. Besides this, the plot is to be inclosed with a granite curbing and posts. The combination presents a most attractive design. Elaborate lettering is to be placed on the monument. Already the fund has been started. The cost, completed, is to be $865. Will you send your contribution to Mrs. L. E. Carlton, treasurer, 414 North Lombardy Street, Richmond, Va.?

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

EASTERN VIRGINIA MISSIONARY RALLIES.

The one-day school of missions, or missionary rallies, as conducted by the four groups of the Eastern Virginia Conference, have come to be real events and epochs in the history and life of the Churches of that Conference. These one-day schools of missions were held last week: the Norfolk group, at Portsmouth, on Tuesday, the 2nd; the Nansemond group, at Suffolk, Wednesday, the 3rd; the Isle of Wight group, at the Courthouse, Thursday, the 4th; the Waverly group, at Barrett's, Friday, the 5th.

Of the first group, Mrs. H. C. Caviness, of Portsmouth, is the leader and superintendent, and, with her competent co-workers and assistants, rendered an exceedingly interesting and educational program. There were about 150 present, and the offering amounted to $40. This rally had present a returned missionary of the Presbyterian Church, who gave an interesting talk; and the various ones assigned for reading papers or making addresses were all present and rendered their parts well. The society of the Portsmouth Church served a luncheon, to which all were invited. The weather was perfect, and the entire day was pleasantly and profitably spent in the work of missions.

Mrs. B. D. Jones, of Holy Neck, is the superintendent and leader of the Nansemond district, and the exercises of the day showed that she and her co-workers had taken counsel together, and the features of the program were real features of worth and merit. The sketches of our missionaries and the charts displayed were exceedingly helpful to all. The offering was $29. One feature of this meeting was the presence, we believe, of all the pastors in the district. One pastor, Rev. R. I. Brittle, of Cypress Chapel, delivered a very interesting missionary address, and the other pastors were recognized, and most of them took active part in the exercises.

Mrs. W. D. Harward is the leader and superintendent of the Isle of Wight district, and though the attendance was not as large as at some of the other meetings, there was the deepest and most intense interest, and the whole program was beautifully rendered. Mrs. Harward is a consecrated leader, and her heart is in her work. It seems that the pastors of this district, with the exception of Dr. W. D. Harward, were unavoidably detained by engagements in other services and duties, much to the regret of the good women who are doing such splendid work in the district. The offering was $12.51. Some of our most earnest workers are in this district, and while they have not as many Churches in their group as in some of the others, the reports from their societies were excellent and showed that the societies were working with vim and vision.
