It has been said that laughter, while it lasts, slackens and embraces the mind, weakens the faculties, and causes a kind of remissness and dissolution in all the powers of the soul; and in such a sense it may be looked upon as a weakness in the composition of human nature.

But if we consider the frequent reliefs we receive from it, and how often it breaks the gloom which is apt to depress the mind and damp the spirit, if we consider the physical benefit, the permanent heartiness of soul and satisfaction of mind, the blessings of its fellowship, yea, the transient and unexpected joy it gives us and others, we will take care not to grow too wise at the price of so great a pleasure.

Prayer—Our Father, we believe thou hast made us to laugh as well as to weep. We pray that we may use both of these faculties aright and for the good of ourselves, of one another, and for the glory of God. In Christ's name, we pray.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

"Buy truth and sell it not."—Prov. 23:23.

"Stand therefore, having girded your loins with Truth."—Eph. 6:14.

"Seeing ye have purified your souls in your obedience to the truth unto unfeigned love of the brethren, love one another from the heart fervently."—I. Peter 1:22.

Emerson said that the highest compact anyone can make with another is, "let there be truth between us forever." It is sublime to be able to say of another, whether I meet, or speak, or write to him; or even should we never renew our friendship or send tokens of remembrance; I can rely on him as truly as on myself; if he did thus or did not thus, I know it was right.

Prayer—Our Father, give us more faith to trust in thee and to have more of thy spirit in all our living with one another. Forgive us our sins, our short-comings, remissness, and strengthen us in the truth forever. In his name we ask it.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

MAKING CHOICES OF LIFE.

"Butter and honey shall he eat, that he may know to refuse the evil and choose the good."—Isa. 7:15.

This is the prophecy concerning Jesus. When he came, he taught that one of the supreme lessons in Christianity was to desire and to know how to eschew evil and choose the good.

Abraham Lincoln once wrote, that there are few things wholly evil and few things wholly good. Almost everything is an inseparable compound of the two, so that our best judgment is in continual demand to choose that which is best. Sometimes, it is not a question of duty or not, but highest duty.

Prayer—Our Father, we thank thee that thou hast not cut us off in our shortcomings. Forgive us and choose us and help us to choose thee. Give us the power to choose between the good and the evil, and in all do thy will.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

HAPPINESS.

"He that keepeth the law, happy is he."—Prov. 29:18.

"Blessed is everyone that feareth the Lord, that walketh in his ways, for thou shalt eat the labor of thy hands."—Psa. 128:1-2.

"Happier is he who has only a dinner of herbs, but has love with it, than he who has this world's goods in abundance and hatred therewith."—Prov. 15:17.

Lots of folks think they have to make other folks good. It can't be done. Each of us has one person to make good: self. Our duty to others may be better expressed by saying, "I love to make them happy." This is the shortest route to goodness.

Prayer—Our Father, teach us our mission toward others. Make us willing and give us the power to carry the spirit of Christ to all. And let us not forget thy Word, that inasmuch as we do something for the good of others we do it for thee. Forgive us and bless us, we ask it in the name of Christ.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

DOING GOOD AND ITS REWARDS.

"Take heed that ye do not your righteousness before men, to be seen of them; else ye have no reward with your Father who is in heaven. . . . Sound not the trumpet, as the hypocrites do . . . that they may have glory of men . . . but let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth . . . and thy Father who seeth in secret shall recompense thee."—Matt. 6:1-2.

"One man, when he has done a service to another is ready to set it down to his account as a favor conferred. Another is not ready to do this, but still in his own mind he thinks of the man as a debtor, and he knows what he has done. A third, in a manner, does not even know what he has done, but he is like a vine which has produced grapes, and seeks for nothing more after it has produced its proper fruit.

"As a horse when he has run, a dog when he has caught the game, a bee when it has made its honey, so a man when he has done a good act does not call out for others to come and see, but he goes on to another act as a vine goes on to produce again the grapes in season.

"Must a man then be one of these, who in a manner acts thus without observing it? Yes, what more dost thou want when thou hast done a man a service? Art thou not content that thou hast done something comfortable to thy nature, and dost thou seek to be paid for it, just as if the eye demanded a recompense for seeing, or the feet should demand a recompense for walking?"—Marcus Aurelius.

FACTS ABOUT THE BIBLE.

The first book printed from movable type was the Latin Bible in the year 1455.

The first Bible printed in America was in the Indian language in 1663 by John Eliot.

The first English Bible printed in America was in 1782.

The Bible is now printed in 900 different languages and dialects, representing the speech of nine-tenths of the population of the world.

In the thirteenth century a Bible cost as much as the earnings of a laboring man for fifteen years. Today the entire Bible may be obtained for sixteen cents, and the New Testament for six cents.

The Bible contains 3,536,489 letters, 773,093 words, 31,173 verses, 1,189 chapters, and 66 books. The 66 books were written by about 40 men during a period of about 1600 years.

The books of the Old Testament are classed as: Law, 5; History, 12; Poetry, 5; Prophecy, 17. The 27 books of the New Testament are classed as: History, 5; Epistles, 21; Prophecy, 1.

Ezra 7:21 contains all the letters of the alphabet except "j".

The middle verse of the Bible is Psalm 97:8.

About 30,000,000 copies of the Bible or New Testament are printed and distributed every year.

The Bible is a divine Book and from its pages God speaks to man.

Christ is the center of Scripture, its one central preeminent theme.—Exchange.

Nothing in the world can take the place of persistence. Talent will not; nothing is more common than unsuccessful men with talent. Genius will not; unrewarded genius is almost a proverb. Education will not; the world is full of educated derelicts. Persistence and determination alone are omnipotent. The slogan, "Press On," has solved and always will solve the problems of the human race.—Calvin Coolidge.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

EMERGENCY CHRISTIANS.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"Who knoweth whether thou art not come to the kingdom for such a time as this?"—Esther 4:14.

Christians feel that there is something compelling about Christianity. John 4:4 expresses, incidentally, a feeling which runs true to the movements of Christ throughout his earthly life: "And he must needs go through Samaria." "He must." Again in Matthew 16:21 we find: "From that time forth began Jesus to shew unto his disciples, how that he must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer . . . and be killed, and be raised again the third day." Again in Luke 4:43, "He said unto them, I must preach the kingdom of God . . . for therefore am I sent." No wonder Christians feel this compelling sense of duty about Christianity, for from the time Jesus at the age of twelve told his parents that he "must be about" his Father's business until he laid that same business with compelling urgency upon the shoulders of his disciples, he seemed to be "driven up by the spirit."

As one reads Acts, and the subsequent history of the church, one is brought under the very power of that life-moving "must" of the Christian religion. There is something "shock-troop like" about Christians. For shock troops are those selected cavalymen who, upon command, rush into personal, hand-to-hand combat, against the enemy. May Christianity never lose its compelling urgency.

We are to think briefly about Esther, one of the finest in the royal ranks of God's shock troops. The chosen people found themselves scattered over the one hundred and twenty-seven provinces of King Ahasuruss. A wicked Haman was plotting their downfall. And Esther, a beautiful young member of that honored race, was about to be caught with all her people in a death-trap. Mordecai, her uncle, challenges her to action—to action that would jeopardize her own life if her plea to the king should fail. She must be a heroine. She found herself possessed by a compelling "must." Her human nature would try to hold her back. She would reason with herself that she was queen, and therefore, exempt from the death dealing decree. She would reason that she was but a bride in the king's court, that her political advice and counsel would not be wanted, or heeded. She would suggest to herself that she had better wait until some later, perhaps a more strategic moment—that now she could do nothing. Maybe later she could enter some plan or plea of value. She would want to help, surely. She would see the emergency of the hour. But while "the spirit is willing, the flesh is weak." How human it would be to halt and procrastinate!

But, as I have said, God's people feel that there is something urgent about religion—something compelling about duty! Mordecai said, "Think not with thyself that thou shalt escape in the king's house, more than all the Jews . . . and who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this." And the deep challenge of Mordecai found response in the depths of the great soul of Esther, and she commanded prayer of all her people, assuring them that after three days of prayer and fasting she would go in unto the king, "and if I perish, I perish." The Book of Esther is remembered and read for those words!

Let us abbreviate our text: "Thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this." Let us know that God is calling us. That we are not left out of his challenge, his plan, and his purpose. We are his children. We have accepted his way. We have taken vows upon us. His promises are therefore ours. We have obligations. And "who knoweth whether thou art not come to the kingdom for such a time as this?"

Locally, we are members of a great church. There are enough of us to fill this church to its doors and windows. There are enough of us to line the surrounding streets with the most impressive advertisement for real religion we have seen in many a day. There are enough of us to invite every unchurched man, woman and child in this section of our city to the worship of God in his holy sanctuary. There are enough of us to support in a fine way the great Christian work both at home and abroad. There are enough of us to make our city feel that something has taken possession of a great and good people, and that a whole church is arising, feeling that it is sent to the kingdom for just such a time as this!

To do this sort of thing we would not have to be fanatic, but fine; not hoodlums, but heroes; not narrow, but noble, and broad, and good! Honor and glory would come to such a church. But, mark you, it is not honor and glory without first paying the price of heroic consecration of our lives to a compelling urgency. Churches do arise in their might, filling their auditoriums and classrooms, raising their budgets, winning their communities, and bringing honor and glory upon their Christ; but not until there has been singleness of purpose and sincerity of purpose in serving God and fellowman, and not until they have committed themselves to a life-moving power of the compelling Christian urgency.

It is something we desire for our church, is it not? Who knows but what each of you have come to the kingdom for just such a time as this! Unlike Queen Esther, we may say we can't; unlike her, we may be willing to wish instead of work, unlike her, we may ignore the emergency of the situation, and think that we shall escape even if the church fails! But let us hear again the words of Mordecai: "If thou holdest thy peace at this time, then shall their enlargement and deliverance arise from another place; but thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed."

The needs of our church are many: increasing Sunday School, larger congregation, paid budget, deeper loyalty on the part of many, and a greater respect generally for the fine program which it is putting on day by day and week by week. We would like to have these things, and more. How shall we get them?

First, we shall let the need greatly and richly impress our souls. We shall see our opportunity as great and inviting. We shall look by faith at the victory from where we are. We shall see the distance between the need and the actual as being a challenging path.

Second, we shall match ourselves to the need, by prayer and fasting, by inside, secret, self-surrender to God in such a way as it shall demand of us time, talent, money, life! Esther would not undertake to see the king until she had seen God! We cannot do more. We shall have to make our decision to do God's bidding, to listen for his bidding in purposeful prayer, to feel the full force of concerted prayer and action on the part of one another. It is childish to say we can't, indolent to say we will not; but it is divinely heroic to say, God being our helper, we will do his work in a great way!

Nobody but ourselves can keep us from paying at least one-tenth of all our earnings to God's work; nobody but ourselves can keep us from attending church every Sunday; nobody but ourselves can keep us from entering enthusiastically into the enterprises of our church in such a way as to make them inviting for others; nobody but ourselves can keep us from persuading people into our congregation; nobody but ourselves can keep us from the sheer joy of personal communion with God, and for the faith-victories which none but those who seek God truly ever experience!

"The fault is not in our stars, dear Brutus, But in ourselves that we are weaklings."

Was Esther victorious? Were her people saved? Did God hear her prayer, and honor her (Continued on page 14.)

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The Christian Orphanage is having a very discouraging time. We are in the hands of a most severe drought. We have no seasons since April, only two light showers. The only thing we have that has not burned up, is one patch of garden beans—they will be gone in a few days. This is the third summer we have suffered from dry weather. I believe this is the most acute of the three. We have all worked hard this spring to get out a nice crop of beans, peas and silage corn, and vegetables of all kinds and had it worked well; but we cannot compete with the dry season. We had a very fine field of silage corn when it was about three feet high, as pretty as I ever saw. It makes us heart-sick to look at it now. It should grow twelve (12) feet high with good seasons. It is tasseling out at five feet and has fired half way up.

We have faith. We have gone through dry years before and hail storms, too. In some way God has provided for us. We have faith he will still provide. CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

JACKSONVILLE.

Rev. H. Samuel Fritsch, D. D., has resigned as pastor of Union Church, Jacksonville, Fla. Dr. Fritsch has been ill for the past four months and his resignation was the result. The church has reluctantly accepted his resignation with resolutions of appreciation for nearly five years of efficient and devoted service to the church.

Dr. Fritsch came to the church after ten years as pastor of the Hough Avenue Church in Cleveland, Ohio, a pastorate which was especially notable because of his success with the evening service problem. Prior to the Cleveland pastorate, he was in Medina, Ohio, and had also served in Chicago and other churches in the midwest.

Dr. Arthur E. Leonard, who was for nearly two years pastor of the Jacksonville Church, and who is now living at the Penney Memorial Community at Green Cove Springs, is serving as interim pastor.

efforts, and the efforts of her people? Our hearts do not ask for mere figures and facts alone in that case. Somehow we would feel the power of her victory even if her people had suffered, and she had perished. Her consecration was her canonization! As, please God, it shall be yours! The cross was Christ's crown. But is his victory any the less therofor? Do we love him any the less for going there? Are we any more likely to fail having seen that outcome? No! For beyond the tomb was his triumph, and beyond the cross was his power-commission to his church.

Let us then realize that the great Christians of every age have been nothing more nor less than emergency Christians stepping out and up to the need of the hour. "I must," said Christ! "I must," say his followers!

STARTING RIGHT.

By DR. CHARLES M. SHELDON.

One Sunday morning, after preaching on "What is Conversion?" as I came down from the pulpit to greet strangers and my own people, one of the first persons to come up was a husky boy, who introduced himself by saying abruptly:

"I want to be baptized and join the church."

I was surprised at his manner and appearance, and after a moment I asked him to wait so that I could talk with him alone. He went over to a side pew and sat down, until every one had gone away except the janitor and myself. Then I had a good talk with him, and, the longer I talked, the more interested I became. He had just entered the Academy class in the college which was a part of my parish, and he arrived Saturday night. His parents were not church members, and his father was not interested in education, but had given the boy leave to enter college on condition that he work his own way through.

After giving me this much of his personal history, the boy said again, "I want to be baptized and join the church."

I looked at him more carefully. Physically he was raw and uncouth. He had been born on a ranch, and his hands were rough and brown. His name was in its spelling and pronunciation more Russian than American. But the one thing that was emphatic about him was his determination to confess Christ, be baptized and join the church. He said:

"I want to start right. My folks are not Christians. They don't belong to any church. But I want to start right."

I told him our regular Communion was the first Sunday of the next month, three weeks from that day. He looked at me with the same wistful look, to which I grew accustomed many times as the years came on, and said:

"Can't you take me in next Sunday?"

I explained to him that there would be no one else coming into the church at that time, as people preferred to wait until the regular Communion day. But he repeated what he said before:

"I want to be baptized and join the church now. I do not want to wait."

I shall never cease to give thanks to the good Lord that I had sense enough to say to the boy: "You can join next Sunday."

The three of us knelt together in prayer.

I presented his name to the church meeting that week, baptized him and took him into full communion the next Sunday. He was alone before that church full of people that day, but I could detect no sign of nervousness, nor even a hint of consciousness of a crowd as he knelt at the communion table for his baptism. He was only a little over seventeen years old, and had never before been to a city or faced city or college people.

The whole story of this boy who wanted to join the church and start right would make one of the six best sellers if someone who knew how could write it. He started right in to work his way through. He mowed my lawn the first summer, and fired my furnace the first winter, and helped my wife about the house when the hired girl left us without notice or reason. He asked for a class in the Sunday School, and when there was none of the sort he wanted, he went out and picked up a group of boys, and held them all through his college course. He became president of the Young People's Society, and was captain of the college football team the year it won all the games in its western conference. He was the Y secretary for the state after his graduation, and every boy in the state loved him. Then he went out as a Y secretary to North China, and lost his life there while still in his young manhood, even his splendid body breaking under the strain of his heroic efforts to bring his abundant life to people who were hungry for a knowledge of the Master. I put down his name in the tables of my heart's memory as one soul of youth with a hunger for religion which I firmly believe—if it had not been nourished by the church at the time he asked for spiritual food—would have turned ravenously to the hunger for sexual excitement or selfish worldly ambition.—Selected.

ing, jealousy. Show how these attributes of personality may express themselves in various ways to mar the beauty and worth of friendship. Discuss the danger of having an inner circle of friends, who may cause us to become selfish and indifferent to others who need our friendship.

IV. How may we make new friends? Friendship is necessarily beset with relationship of human beings. No person is perfect. Most of us possess certain faults and limitations of personality that hinder the finest relationship with another person. Because of the influence of one personality upon another, other problems arise. Christian friendship demands a constant outreach for enrichment of personality and perfection of character on the part of anyone who aspires to be a friend in the finest sense of the word.

OBITUARIES

KENNEDY.

Mrs. Tracy Catherine Kennedy, wife of Casper Kennedy, was born September 21, 1888, and died June 24, 1933, age 44 years, 9 months and 3 days. The deceased lived in the Mayland community, and was highly respected there. She was a member of the Lutheran Church.

The funeral services were held at Linville Creek Dunkard Church, June 25, 1933. The writer was assisted in the service by Rev. Charles Nair.

A. W. ANDES.

ROTHGEB.

David A. Rothgeb, a highly respected citizen of Leaksville, Page County, Va., was born March 12, 1855, and departed this life June 15, 1933, age 78 years, 3 months and 3 days. Surviving are three sons, six daughters, thirty-six grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

Funeral services were held at Leaksville, June 17, 1933, and the remains laid to rest by the side of his wife, who died several years ago.

A. W. ANDES.

MOTLEY.

The subject of this sketch would have been 61 years old in July. She was the only daughter of T. J. McDaniel and wife.

About 45 years ago, she became the wife of C. G. Motley. There were born to this union 7 children, 5 of whom are living, 2 boys and 3 girls. One little boy and one little girl preceded their mother in death.

Sister Motley became a member of the M. E. Church, South, in her childhood, remaining true to her Lord until death called her home. Her's was a busy life—a life of sacrifice, a life of service—but now "she rests from her labors, and her works will follow her." She was a good wife, a devoted mother, and a most loving daughter. Her mother died in

Episcopalians Maintain Pensions.—

During the year 1932, the Church Pension Fund of the Protestant Episcopal Church, paid annual pensions amounting to $1,022,705, to 1,662 clergymen or their dependents. This fund was set up in 1917, and the entire church assumed responsibility for its maintenance. A large initial sum was subscribed, which has been increased by regular assessments. The total assets of the fund at the end of 1932 amounted to $29,090,064. The churches themselves had during the past fifteen years paid in over $15,000,000, and unpaid assessments amounted at that time to less than one-half of one per cent.

Bishop Cannon Pleads Not Guilty.—

Striding into the courtroom of the District of Columbia, minus his customary crutches, Bishop James Cannon, Jr., pled not guilty to the indictment charging him with violation of the Federal corrupt practices act, which grew out of his activities in the Hoover campaign in 1928. It is reported that the Bishop refused to make a statement on the charges against him, but he did take occasion to comment upon the anti-prohibition wave now sweeping the country, and denounced the Roosevelt administration's repeal support as a "slap at the churches" of America. He gave no indication that he considered prohibition a lost cause.

A "One-Horse" Town.—

In the Northwest Territories of Canada, at the mouth of the Mackenzie River, is the town of Aklavik. The inhabitants exist chiefly on caribou meat and fish, and drinking water is obtained by melting the ever-present snow. In the winter, on baking days, the newly made bread is put out to freeze. It is then brought into the house and thawed out as needed, when it is said to taste just like "new" bread. In the summer time the sun does not set from around the first of June until the middle of July. Although located so far north, it is regularly visited by summer tourists. The town boasts of no motor cars and only one horse.

Dr. Barton and Mr. Farley.—

On the evening of July 17th, Dr. A. J. Barton, nationally known Baptist minister, of Wilmington, N. C., spoke from the same platform from which Postmaster-General James A. Farley had spoken on Saturday night. Dr. Barton called upon the people of Tennessee to go to the polls and uphold prohibition. He also declared that "as an American citizen, I should like to inquire where the money came from to finance Mr. Farley's excursion into the South." If it came out of the treasury of the United States and if the citizens of the country are to pay the bill, he added that he maintained that it "was a misappropriation of funds and that every Federal officer who was a party to the transaction ought to be impeached or otherwise removed from office."

Child Labor and the Textile Mills.—

The adoption by the textile industries of the new operating code makes certain the abolition of child labor in the allied industries covered by this code. More than 20,000 children are affected by the new regulations which have gone into effect. According to the 1930 census, the number of children between the ages of ten and fifteen working in cotton mills alone were in excess of 10,000. The total number of children under sixteen years of age employed in all industry, including farming, was 667,118. Two Federal laws have been passed regulating child labor, but both have been declared unconstitutional. The child labor amendment to the constitution, which was passed by Congress in 1924, has only been ratified by fourteen States.

The Compensated Dollar.—

In an endeavor to find a way out of the morass of financial difficulty into which the world has been plunged, a compensated dollar has been proposed by economists, including Prof. Irving Fisher. The dollar would then become "a scientific measure of value." It would not contain a fixed amount of gold with a varying purchasing power, but would consist of a varying amount of gold with a constant purchasing power. The weight of the dollar rather than the value would vary. With such a system there would be no coinage of gold, but the government supply would be kept in gold bars. The actual currency would be as at present, and the paper money or fractional currency would be exchangeable for gold on demand as under the gold standard. But there would be this difference, the amount of gold for which the dollar would exchange would vary with the price level.

Paper Gardens.—

Mulch paper covers have been much used to stimulate the growth of food plants and to protect them from the cold. Now, there has been introduced a paper "Pattern Garden," in which seed, fertilizer and paper are combined in a "hitherto unknown community of interest." Business Week tells us that these Pattern Garden sets "make composite flower beds 1½ to 3 feet wide and 12 feet long." We are told that a plot this size is prepared with the fertilizer and then covered with the mulch paper. The paper is divided into sections in each of which is a series of holes.

These sections are numbered and so are the packets of seeds. Thus the seeds from packet No. 1 are planted in section No. 1, etc., and the plants grow up through these holes in accordance with combinations which have been prepared by expert horticulturists, and the novice is assured of the proper combination of color, height and rotation in blooming. The mulch paper kills weeds, holds heat and prevents evaporation of moisture. The insulation permits earlier planting of flowers and consequently an earlier spring garden.

Up to the South.—

Richmond, Virginia, stands second to no city in the question of a wet press. There may be others with a greater number of daily papers, but her's make up in enthusiasm for lack of numbers. And did we say brass—but we're off the gold standard, morally, it seems, as well as financially. The following is an editorial from the ruler of the morning news, and like it those who read for breakfast must: "President Roosevelt is looking to the South this week to do its bit for the repeal of prohibition. Today Alabama and Arkansas vote on the question. On Thursday, Tennessee goes to the polls. The Democratic party, at its national convention, declared for the eradication of the Eighteenth Amendment. On July 9th, in a telegram to Leon McCord, the Democratic national committeeman for Alabama, Mr. Roosevelt appealed to Alabama to carry through the party program. Now, undoubtedly with the approval of the President, James A. Farley, as chairman of the national committee, is touring the South in the interests of repeal. The South holds within its power to put prohibition out of the Constitution before Christmas. By the end of November, thirty-five States will have taken action on repeal, and if the count continues to run straight against the dries, Virginia may raise the number of States to thirty-six, enough to put over repeal. The States which vote this week represent the last "strongholds" of the dries—if they can be called "strongholds" after the support they gave Mr. Roosevelt and his repeal program last November. The dries are fighting desperately, for the wets believe that the long fight for repeal will be as good as over, if they can win the first three battles in the South, or even two out of the three. Defeat for the wets would not mean ultimate victory for the dries, but it would serve to prolong the fight by giving the prohibitionists fresh hope—which they sadly need. Virginia, preparing belatedly to do its own part, hopes that the South will come through this week. The country wants to get immediate benefit from the liquor revenue and then, the devastating fight over, turn its attention to other recovery measures."

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Rev. C. E. Gerringer, who has served the Wakefield pastorate for the past seven years, has resigned from that field, his resignation to become effective at the end of the present conference year or sooner. We have not been informed as to Mr. Gerringer's plans, nor who will succeed him in the work at this point.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill has been teaching at the Missionary Conference at East Northfield, Mass., following which she went to the New York and New Jersey Young People's Conference at Blair Academy. Following the Blue Ridge Conference, she went to Massachusetts for a visit with Mrs. Mary Jeffrey Williams, her old friend and predecessor in the Florida work.

Rev. and Mrs. O. H. Denney, of North Miami, Fla., have been granted an extra vacation, and sailed on Tuesday, the 18th, for New York. They expect to spend the summer in New York State, visiting former pastorates and especially spending some time at Chautauqua, where Mrs. Denney will serve during August as hostess in the Congregational House. On July 21st, at 8 A. M., Mr. Denney will conduct the morning devotions over NBC, from the New York studio on Fifth Avenue.

Mission Secretary, J. O. Atkinson, preached at 11 A. M., to our Ocean View congregation, Ocean View, Va., Sunday, July 16th. Rev. Joe French, an Elon graduate, with successful pastoral experience in the Valley of Virginia Conference, and a recent graduate from the Vanderbilt School of Religion, Nashville, Tenn., is the pastor of our Ocean View Church, and has already won the esteem and loyal support of his congregation.

It may be worth our while to take notice of who is putting up the money to break prohibition and bring back repeal and the liquor traffic. A published report on June 17th, showed that the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment had received $135,542.00 for the second quarter of the year, of which $61,200.00 had been contributed by one family, the DuPonts. One wonders if this money has been contributed with the unselfish purpose of helping our government and citizens, or has it been contributed by those who care more for their own fortunes than they do for the sobriety and welfare of mankind? At any rate, such figures tell us who are and have been the givers and leaders in the campaign for repeal.

Rev. M. T. Sorrell, Danville, Va., still a member of the Eastern North Carolina Conference; Rev. S. E. Madren, Henderson, N. C.; Rev. J. Ray Dickens, Varina, N. C.; Rev. R. A. Whitten, Portsmouth, Va.; Rev. T. Fred Wright, Sanford, N. C.; Rev. E. M. Carter, Youngsville; Rev. J. Lee Johnson, Fuquay Springs; Rev. H. C. Hilliard, Norlina, N. C., were pastors who attended their Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention at Wake Chapel last week. Only a few of the ministers in this conference were conspicuous by their absence. It is regrettable that there are pastors, very few in some conferences, more in others, who do not feel it obligatory on their part to attend their conventions. The conventions need them, and they need the conventions.

Rev. Hermon Eldredge, Dayton, Ohio, associate editor of the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty, had this item of interest to SUN readers in last week's paper: "Rev. H. S. Hardcastle might easily have adopted a policy of going along with the tide of things at Suffolk after the great work built up there in fifty years by Dr. Staley, but he did not adopt any such policy, as the building up of the membership, the remodeling of the church and the building of a $100,000 Christian Education Building will bear witness. Rev. John Truitt comes back to his native heath after five years of service in the First Walnut Hills Congregational-Christian Church of Dayton, Ohio, which organized its merger under his pastorate. His call to Suffolk is approved by all who know him and the Suffolk Church. A more fitting choice could not have been made, and we predict a long and successful pastorate in that church of long pastorates and successful community and world service."

TITHING IN HARD TIMES.

There is no better time to begin to tithe than a time of business depression. Then it takes both faith and courage.

If tithing were a sure thing, like buying five-dollar bills for $4.00, it would have no more value than any other form of bargain hunting. Everybody would tithe; the man most careful to pay the tenth might be the most avaricious man in town.

That's not the tithing God has promised to bless. Tithing is a sure thing; and usually it leads to material betterment. But not always; and never, in any magical or non-moral way.

The law of the tithe is not a law for times and seasons. It does not rest on circumstances, good or bad. The true Christian will begin to obey it as soon as he realizes that it is a law, and that it is for his guidance and his good.

All true enough; nevertheless, there are special reasons and special values attached to tithing in hard times.

It is easy to thank God for pleasant experiences, though we know that often they may be spiritually barren. It is not so easy to be thankful for adversity, though difficulties and disappointments in our material affairs can provide the finest of disciplines.

Listen to Habakkuk, the prophet:

"For though the fig tree shall not flourish, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labor of the olive shall fail; and the fields shall yield no food; the flocks shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls; yet will I rejoice in the Lord: I will joy in the God of my salvation."

The tither who can make the prophet's words his own will not be deceived by prosperity, if and when it comes.

Prosperity is quite likely to come to the tither; remember that. Somebody has counted the Bible references to giving. They total seventy-two. And forty-eight "show open promise of God's blessing to the giver."

During a spell of hard times a bank auditor examining the books of many Toronto business houses, found entries in the books of John Macdonald & Co., that showed the firm was setting aside a tenth of its profits for religious and philanthropic work. He closed his audit and recommended to the bank that the Macdonald house should have all the credit it desired. It was the beginning of a new prosperity.

John H. Converse, when president of the Baldwin Locomotive Works, was a tither who believed in doing more in hard times. One year, when his business was less profitable than usual, he gave $400,000 to religious and charitable work.

It is known and admitted that not everybody gets ahead financially by tithing. Why should he? "Getting ahead" may be a great curse. A tithing business man puts the fact thus:

"There are other successes than money ones. I've got something more than money out of tithing; it's given me happiness and contentment that I never could have bought. Suppose some of the New England families who tithed did not succeed financially? Could science measure the contentment which these families might have through knowing that God was a partner in their home affairs?"

A man who is almost to the end of his resources will find his time of stress a good time to make new study of his life.

The head of a great business did this once, when he was worse than bankrupt. One day he opened his Bible at Genesis 28:22, drew a pencil mark around the verse, and said: "From this moment on, as long as I live, of all that God gives me I will give him one-tenth."

Since then he has prospered far beyond the ordinary. But what is more, he has made "hundreds of investments for human betterment and to advance righteousness on earth." The feeling that one can thus be a co-laborer with God is the greatest incentive to true living which man can have. It can make one's sunset days his best days.

A conscientious examination of your affairs now may actually show how you can save enough to pay the whole tithe. Consider more methodical ways of buying. Wait a week before buying something you think you want. Buy for use, rather than for appearance or luxury-value.

Budget your income and outgo. Many people who begin to spend by a budget make a surprising discovery. They find that from ten to twenty cents of their dollar is being spent without producing any corresponding benefit.

So your whole situation may be helped as you see where your tithe can be paid without distress.

Whenever it can be put into practice, there's a big saving hinted at in the old saying, "He who cuts his own firewood is twice warmed."

Hard times are hard times for God as well as for us. His work suffers because, when depression threatens, so many cut off, first of all, their gifts to religion.

Never mind trying to explain the theology of it. You know that benevolent agencies face lessened incomes. Students who would gladly work must leave college for lack of funds; church enterprises are forced to retrench their work; the poor, the sick, the distressed, all must know keener their sufferings because the church has less money to spend in their behalf. So the tither who tithes in hard times is doubly blessed—in his own life and in being the friend indeed who comes as the friend in need.

Tithing in hard times is a sharing of life with those whose "times" are harder than ours. None of our tithe literally gives "to God;" it goes to men and women like ourselves. It broadens the base on which the world's total of usefulness must rest.

Hard times are good times to begin tithing because it doesn't take so much moral backbone to tithe a small income as a big one. Many people have been tempted to quit tithing because their incomes became "too big to tithe."

A rich man told a missionary secretary during the war, "I'm sorry, doctor, but I can't give you anything for your work this year. Why, my income tax is a million and a quarter."

The tithe in hard times contributes to our spiritual self-respect. When we are prosperous, we may feel—as we should—that the tithe ought to be supplemented by free-will offerings and gifts far beyond the tenth.

In hard times we may not be able to make these gifts. But we know that in tithing we are acknowledging God, and declaring our faith. We are not offering to God that which has cost us nothing.

It costs, to tithe in hard times. But not to tithe costs more, in values that are as real as ever, and that will last beyond all times, whether hard or easy.—The Layman Company.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE EASTERN CONVENTION.

A large congregation of delegates and visitors gathered at Wake Chapel, Fuquay Springs, N. C., at 10 A. M., July 11th, for the 39th annual session of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Eastern Conference. The secretary and many of the departmental superintendents were absent, but Rev. R. A. Whitten, the president, set a good example by driving all the way from Portsmouth, Va., to call the convention to order and to preside over the sessions of a day and a half. Since the last session of the convention, Brother Whitten had moved, with his family and work, to another conference, but mindful of the trust committed to him and the duties and responsibilities imposed by his convention of a year ago, he labored zealously to make the convention the success it was, to put on a good program, and to see that the convention was brought together in good numbers and conducted with the same faithfulness and zeal as if he were close by and still in the convention.

Owing to revival meetings in some churches of the conference, some schools were not represented in the convention, but the great majority were represented, and with good delegations. There was deep interest in all the proceedings, and it was good to be there. The morning period was consumed, for the most part, with introductory services, enrollment of delegates and reports, appointment of committees and of very helpful devotional services conducted by Rev. S. E. Madren. The president had asked the Mission Secretary, J. O. Atkinson, to give an annual address on the first day, which address concerned itself with the objective of church and Sunday School in a complete program for carrying out the theme of the convention, "Forward With Christ." The complete program of Sunday School, Christian Endeavor and church is a program with five points, even as the five fingers of the hand, making a complete and strong hand with which to reach out after men and women and point them to the uplifted Christ.

The reports in the afternoon, under the head of "Christian Endeavor," were two in number, culminating in an address by Rev. T. Fred Wright, emphasizing the weight and worth of Christian Endeavor. Miss Estelle Murray, departmental secretary of Cradle Roll, gave a helpful report from her department, as did Mrs. M. B. Newman, for the Primary and Beginners. Revs. E. M. Carter, J. Ray Dickens and M. T. Sorrell made very suggestive and helpful reports and addresses for their departments—Adult, Teacher Training, and Missions, respectively.

Among the very helpful and suggestive addresses in the afternoon were those by Brother C. J. Strickland, of Columbus, Ohio, well known to Sunday School workers and devoted to the church and convention of his early years, and Prof. L. L. Vaughan, State College, at Raleigh, who longs to see the convention put on a more practical and progressive program, and realizes that if the convention is to go forward and not backward, or in a circle, it must have a definite goal, a plan and purpose under which to work and some constructive things to undertake and to do, and Prof. E. W. Boshart on "Literature," in which the right kind of literature, both for the Sunday School and the general reader, was urged and emphasized.

It was a delightful day and, of course, Wake Chapel took care of the convention royally. That church and those good people, with their neighbors, do not know how to be other than gracious and abundant in hospitality and good fellowship.

It was a source of regret to the writer that he could not remain for the evening session and the one session held on the morning of the second day, the convention closing at noon. Reports were that both the evening session and this morning session were well attended, and that the Orphanage was well represented by singers from the institution, and by Rev. J. L. Foster in place of Supt. C. D. Johnston, who was unable to be present, and that on the second day, Rev. F. C. Lester, secretary of Religious Education, and Dr. L. E. Smith, president of Elon College, were present and brought messages of good cheer and of helpfulness to the convention, especially as related to the interests in whose behalf they spoke.

ADVENTURES IN RIGHTEOUSNESS.

The cause of righteousness calls for adventure. The most stalwart characters of righteousness are those who dared, departed, veered from the beaten paths, hazarded all and ventured. One of the romantic, as well as heroic, figures of antiquity was Joseph and his experiences in Egypt. There had been no man before him who achieved name and fame in the way and manner he did. He was a romantic adventurer in righteousness. His father before him, Jacob, had been an adventurer and a lover of the untried. His path led along the way that no other man before him had trod. And Abraham, Jacob's grandfather, was a pioneer pilgrim, pushing out into places and privileges that were untried. Here are three men of one family—son, father, and great-grandfather—who reached eminence, all of them, by a different route and by way of novelty and the untried.

From the day that history lifts the veil till it drops the curtain on his career, the life of Moses is one constant adventure along untried paths and experiences. He achieved eminence and renown in the world in no sense as his ancestors had, and as no one else had as far as history reveals.

The young shepherd, David, as far as we know, had no record to go by, no previously trod path to walk in as he defied the Giant Goliath in the name of the God of Israel. All his life, David was an adventurer, daring to blaze new trails, try new experiences in the cause and realm of righteousness.

Daniel and Amos and Jonah faced new and untried perils, strange and unheard of experiences in their bold, daring and fearless adventures in the field of righteousness. The whole record of Biblical literature is just that way.

Peter and Paul and John came to high pinnacles of renown and honor and esteem, but they all followed different paths, had different experiences, traveled and arrived by different routes, achieved by different methods and experiences.

The world of righteousness has always been the world of romance, of adventure and of daring, for God and truth.

All of these characters began where they were, took things as they found them, went forward fearlessly in the name of righteousness, not waiting for big things, or great things, or the examples and experiences of others to blaze the way for them.

Stanely High, in his recent volume, "Today's Youth and Tomorrow's World," says:

"It is safe to say that if Jesus came back to your town tomorrow, he would not object because it was small and insignificant, and forthwith look up a time-table for trains that would take him elsewhere. On the contrary, he would probably begin to discover things you have never seen. By the end of the first forty-eight-hour period he would be engaged in the important adventures of the kind to which he gave himself when he ministered in Galilee. Whoever believes that it is worthwhile to bring Jesus' ideal of an abundant life to the world will never lack excitement."

If we are looking for excitement, we can find it by making adventures in righteousness, daring boldly to uphold and maintain the right and seeking where we are, with all our might, to see to it that righteousness shall prevail whate'er betide us. God is leading onward and upward. To follow him we must try the untried and see the invisible.

TITHERS FOR A MONTH.

Tithing is a joy and a privilege, and it pays. It is much easier to write, or to read that than it is to practice it. That is because tithing is not a matter of logic, but of love; not of argument, but of experience. There is only one way to prove that tithing pays and is a privilege, and that is to try it. If unwilling to try it indefinitely, and to practice it continuously, why not try it for a month? It is, at least, worth the effort.

Last week's North Carolina Christian Advocate gave the experience of a church in or near Greensboro that really made an experiment, and a glorious one, of tithing for a month. Speaking of the experience, the Advocate said it worked because, when presented, "the conservatives liked it because it was Biblical. The liberals were equally anxious to try something they had never seen before, a whole congregation tithing. Only a few dolefully prophesied that nothing would work." So while a few dolefuls prophesied, the many hopefuls signed a pledge to tithe during the month of June.

The church trying the experiment had a membership of 340, of whom 242 participated in the tithing campaign. The results: "The tithers, including children, average giving 56 cents a week. The non-tithers gave two cents." During the month there were no special collections, dues, rummage or cake sales, and the tithe money was brought to the church and all put into one fund. The reporter for the church making the experiment, says:

"At the end of the month the stewards, together with the officers of each organization in the church, met together to apportion the tithe fund. It was distributed to the Sunday School, missionary society, junior missionary society, conference collections, building fund, pastor's salary, and incidentals. Every one was surprised at the amount of money they could raise in a month. They paid all regular expenses, a good amount on the building fund, and half the yearly benevolence apportionment."

That, indeed, is a record for one month. The Bible is plain, true and unmistakable in its teaching about the tithe. Our Father knows what is best for us and his Word is the best Book, not only on morals and religion, but on economy, ethics and living, as well. We are just afraid to take our Father's word for it; we are just afraid to trust him to lead and guide us. We prefer our will and our wisdom to his will and his wisdom, hence we falter and flounder and fail.

What all of us need is to read and learn from some clear-cut definite statement of how and why to tithe, and then try the experiment and see how and whether it works in our own case. If we are unwilling to try for a year, if a congregation is unwilling to pledge for a long period, why not try a month? "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." (Mal. 3:10.)

THE WORLD ECONOMIC CONFERENCE.

Our delegates, headed by Secretary of State Hull, went to London with high hopes and noble expectations. It was to be a conference of nations, with the hope of world-wide agreement on economic conditions and improvement. Representatives of other nations went to the conference with the same high hopes and noble expectations. And yet, after several weeks of argumentation, presentation and propagation, the conference seems to be on the verge of collapse and utter failure. Our nation has its views about economic improvement. First of all, the currency must be readjusted and the single standard must be abolished or left in the background. France has other ideas and is unwilling to yield. Our nation is dealing out millions, hundreds of millions, directly to give employment to the unemployed, food to the hungry, necessities of existence to the needy. England declares, through her representative, that she will have none of that even as an experiment, since she has already made similar experiments, and either could or would not go further in that direction. And thus the cross currents of thought and national ideals meet and conflict.

Nationalism still holds its supremacy in the thought of mankind. A long time ago a very wise one said that "If one member suffer, all the members suffer with it." This applies to nations now, particularly since, through modern invention and travel, the world has become one, but we haven't come to that in our thinking and in our attitude yet. Maybe these conferences will help bring us to that, but we haven't arrived yet. Nationalism (another term for selfishness) still holds sway in the world.

A WAR HERO SPEAKS.

Sergeant York, the outstanding hero of the World War, has this to say:

"It is truly to be deplored that there are those Americans who find no more intelligent reason to offer for the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment than that it should increase the revenue of the U. S. A., patently ignoring recognition of the incalculable harm, misery, and the economic ruin and havoc it will release in countless homes, but more particularly in the lives of the boys and girls of our great country.

"That the brewers and alcoholics welcome repeal is not in the least hard to understand! but that those controlling the destiny of our people should be sponsoring a thing as manifestly evil as alcohol, historically a wrecker of homes and of happiness, and breeder of violences too numerous to catalogue, is indeed incomprehensible, if not wholly tragic."

While Sergeant York could capture single-handed and alone a whole regiment of the German Army, he will have a harder time capturing those who have made up their minds to follow the advice and leadership of the brewers, alcoholics, ex-saloon-keepers and bootleggers. In the World War soldiers were obeying and sought to carry out the commands of those who, because of courage and wisdom and daring, had been put in places of leadership and command, but we are under a different leadership now, and we very much fear that the brave Sergeant is talking against a host more heedless than an army with banners.

WHAT OF A PURPOSE?

We find about us men of varying degrees of success and failure. Some seem born for success and others seem to have failure stamped upon them from infancy. Some become great teachers, ministers, financiers, statesmen, others are mediacres in life, and a large number are flat failures.

Why this difference? Is it due to differences in birth, to heredity, to differences in ability, energy, or purpose? The psychologist asserts that we inherit nothing but our bodies equipped with nerves, nerve centers, and potentialities. If this be true, the differences encountered cannot be due to heredity.

It is true that some inherit weak bodies; some of our greatest men and women have, from their earliest youth, been sufferers from some form of weakness. Witness Elizabeth Barrett Browning, Stephen Girard, and many others of those whose names have become household words during the past two centuries. Strength or weakness of body, whether inherited or acquired, seems to have no special bearing on life as successful or unsuccessful.

The psychologist answers that this difference comes from a difference in final purpose or goal. This is especially true of the Gestalt psychology which stresses goal as one of the four elements of success in any undertaking. The behaviorist also stresses the same idea except under another name. He tells us that proper motivation is one of the strong factors in success.

If this be true, then success or failure in any undertaking, no matter what that undertaking may be, is simply a difference in the final aims and purposes, or in the goals of the individuals. The student in college, the agricultural worker, the college professor, or the college president, the worker in the mill, or the man who undertakes to create a great business must have a great goal in mind if he would succeed in his great undertaking. And coupled with this idea is the energy or power drive necessary to reach the goal set by the person. The person who has no definite set goal or purpose drifts with the winds and the currents as a ship on the open sea would drift if captain and rudder were gone. The person whose goal is perfect, but yet lacks energy to reach the goal, is also handicapped and fails in his career. As the traveler who wishes to reach some definite destination, but who lacks the gas to propel his car or the money to buy the gas or power, fails in his purpose to arrive at some definite time. While a goal is necessary, the energy which is supplied by an indomitable will must be there also, otherwise failure results.

Then this energy must be directed in the proper direction. A man might push against a mighty oak with all his might from day to day until he is absolutely exhausted, and yet the oak would stand still and mock at the man's puny attempts. Misdirected energy seldom accomplishes anything.

The idea of goal is also expressed by the wise man who said, "Where there is no vision, the people perish." This quotation stresses the idea of purpose, aim, end, goal, the vision seen in the distance, but not realized as yet. The final end, vision, goal, purpose—this is the determining factor of success or failure in a man's undertakings in life.

Just a year and a half ago, a Southern university president found that on account of bank failures and financial distress at home, a large number of students at his institution would be compelled to drop out for the spring quarter. He had conferences with these young people and found that it would take $109,000 to keep those six hundred students in college for the remainder of the year. He told them to remain in the institution and continue their college work. Notwithstanding the fact that the depression was at its worst, and other college presidents were loudly proclaiming that it was impossible to raise money for their institutions, he set his goal to add $109,000 to the loan funds of his university, and he went out with such a goal in view, and he worked for these high stakes, and 600 students' lives were made richer, fuller, and better because of his noble work. The goal kept steadfastly in view and the push and energy of this great man saved the day and the world is better off for his work.

Because John McDonough had a vision of a chance and of an opportunity for all the children of his beloved New Orleans to acquire an education, he lived out his days a single man, saving, working, slaving and acquiring; when he died he left a sum of money which has established over forty free and high schools in New Orleans, each school built and equipped, and all teachers' salaries paid from the interest on the McDonough funds, and, in addition to this, the accumulations from these funds enable the people of New Orleans to build, equip, and man another school every four years. This vision and John McDonough's grit and determination left to the children of New Orleans parks, recreation centers, and schools of which the city is justly proud.

Illustrations might be multiplied but all point to the fact that a definite goal kept steadfastly in mind, backed by will and energy is a prime essential of success in any undertaking. And he who has no definite plan, purpose, or goal in mind will be as surely overwhelmed in the mazes and difficulties of life as that God is stronger than man. Not that God wills it, but that it is the inevitable law of life.

THOMAS C. AMICK.

No one ever heard of a man whose fortune was impaired, whose health was broken down, or whose morality was undermined by keeping Sunday for God. But we have heard of many whose health has been impaired, whose fortune has been wrecked and whose morals were undermined by taking that day just like every other day.—C. Macartney.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

A man was visiting his neighbor, who was a farmer 75 years old. He found the old gentleman setting out some fruit trees. He said, "Why are you setting out fruit trees, at your age; don't you know they will not bear fruit for you?" "Well," replied the farmer, as he worked at his task, "when I came to this farm, I found some fruit trees on it; and when I leave it, I want those who come after me to have fruit for their use and enjoyment."

This man was living with a high and holy purpose for an ideal. He was concerned about providing for others. He was seeking to project his life into the future. He had shared in the fruit of the labors of others who had planted and he gathered the increase. Life is given to us that we may pass some blessings on to those who follow in our train. However, there are too many people who are seeking to gather all the profits in their day and generation and leave nothing for the next generation.

This attitude of life is manifested in the present attitude of many people toward our forests. In the mad rush to get gain and convert trees into money, many of our beautiful forests have been destroyed. It should be a crime to cut down a small tree for the purpose of cutting it into lumber at a mill. The great lumber corporations have been cutting our forests, and in the majority of cases, no one has seriously taken up the matter of letting trees grow for the generations to come. People are careless and reckless in the matter of burning rubbish on the farms and in the forests. Thousands of acres of young timber are burned every year.

The present generation is not deeply concerned about the moral and religious conditions of the future. It is true that the churches are going forward with great programs, and there is a vital spiritual interest in the work of the church. But too much of this is selfish. The church is self-centered and concerned about its own salvation. How often do we hear the expression: "It is our first duty to look after our own people at home." One of the favorite ways of looking after our own church interests is to cut down budgets and salaries and try to reduce current expenses and all benevolences. It has been several months since this writer has heard any church members expressing a desire to increase gifts for benevolences in the church. "Cut down the expenses. Cut down the gifts for others. Cut down the trees. Do not plant new orchards." This is the present cry.

In the darkest day of the history of the church, Jesus said to the disciples, "Go ye into all the world." He commanded that they should wait in Jerusalem until they should be endued with power. But when they received the gift of power they should use it for others—even to the uttermost parts of the earth. Those disciples had no adequate church buildings and no rich treasuries or invested funds. They had made no plans for adequate funds for the task. But they did plan for adequate power. And they received the power from God. And it was prevailing power.

How well the early church met its opportunities is a matter of historical fact. The story of their adventure is thrilling and inspiring. They were planting and planning for others. They had received a great salvation from others. It was their duty and privilege to pass it on. The question for us to face, in our day, is what are we doing for the hungry people who are crying for the bread of life? They are depending upon us for help.

I. W. JOHNSON.

DID YOU ROOM IN EAST DORMITORY?

East Dormitory, the one original building on the campus, has been closed for two years. The building had gotten in a bad state of repair and was almost beyond use. The student body had decreased so it was possible to house all the male students in North Dormitory. For the sake of economy, East Dormitory was closed and all the young men students living on the campus were transferred to North Dormitory. Every available room was occupied last year. With indications of an increased student body for another year, it was evident that additional rooming space would have to be provided. The Board of Trustees authorized the renovating of East Dormitory a year ago, but funds were not available for this purpose. We did not have the funds to make the necessary improvements this year, but necessity compelled action.

A force of laborers has been at work for the past two weeks—the building is being completely made over again on the inside. The best of materials have been used—new closets have been built in all rooms; new plastering throughout, with attractive decorations; an improved lighting system has been installed; hardwood floors, representing a very high grade of material, have been laid. As a rooming house for young men, it could hardly be surpassed. We tried to make it substantial, beautiful and durable. The carpenter force at the College will build the beds, themselves. This will be a most attractive part of the furnishings. The beds will be single, fitted with new springs and mattresses. The building will present such a nice appearance, it seems that it would be a pity to fit up the rooms with old furniture. There are twenty-four rooms in the building.

The College does not have the money necessary to purchase the furniture. I am wondering if there aren't churches, individuals, societies or classes that would undertake to furnish a room. It does seem that there might be twenty-four churches in the entire Convention that would be glad to furnish a room each. If your church will furnish a room, write us. We will be glad to put a name-plate on the door, stating that your church provided the furniture for this particular room. And, if you, yourself, are interested, won't you please write me?

When you were a student at Elon College, did you room in old East Dormitory? If so, I know that you will be glad to see her in her new dress. Well, we are going to invite you to come back on a very important occasion. On Friday, September 8th, at 2:30 P. M., we are arranging for a special service, part of which will be the reopening of East Dormitory. An invitation is hereby extended, particularly to all former students of Elon who roomed in this dormitory, to be present on this occasion. A special program, celebrating this occasion, will be announced in the papers later. All former students of the College who did not room in East Dormitory are likewise invited, together with their friends. All members of the present student body, together with their parents are invited. It will be an open meeting and we are hoping that the public in general will attend. The remodeling of this dormitory will be of interest, particularly to young men who are to be members of our student body for another year. It affords modern conveniences and comfortable quarters. The building will be open to all classes, freshmen included. Have you made your reservation yet? If you want a room in the new building, you had better send in your request at once, and don't forget to enclose your acceptance fee of $5.00. The cost of a room in the new building will be $40.00 a semester. The conveniences and accommodations will overbalance the cost.

Applications from new students are coming in very satisfactorily. The friends of the College are cooperating with us finely in our efforts to secure more students for the College. Have you done your part? Do you know of some young man or young woman who wishes to go to college and who is unable to go to the more expensive schools? Perhaps you could interest them in coming to Elon. We are prepared to meet their needs at a reasonable cost. Please write us, enclosing the name or names of those whom you consider are prospective students for Elon College. We will be glad to send them a catalogue and other materials and see that they are fully informed as to the advantages and opportunities to be had here. Now is the time that a word spoken by you, or an effort on your part, may mean a great deal to the College and to your friends who are seeking a college education.

We are depending on you.

L. E. SMITH.

ANTIOCH OBSERVES CENTENNIAL.

The congregation at Antioch, near Harrisonburg, Va., held their centennial celebration, Sunday, July 2nd, in an all-day service. The song service throughout the day was led by Mr. W. C. Rhodes. Many old hymns that have been the source of joy and inspiration to many congregations for years, were sung together.

Welcome by Miss Helen Showalter, primary teacher in this Sunday School: "We have met today to celebrate 100 years of Christian service and inspiration of Antioch Christian Church. This spiritual service perhaps at best, has never been as intelligent, unselfish and whole-hearted as it ought to have been, but we want to think that through all these long, and sometimes confused years, there has gone forth a stream of divine influence that has touched and blessed a multitude of lives.

"We are met today to ask our Father in heaven to forgive all mistakes and selfish ambitions and lack of true Christian consecration of all these years, and to dedicate ourselves anew to a spiritual service and inspiration that will call forth the blessing and favor of God. We are surrounded today by a cloud of witnesses that expects large and holy and beautiful words and thoughts and deeds from us. Shall we disappoint them? Shall we be good and true and brave enough to go on and make our full contribution to the work of our Father?

"On behalf of the Antioch Christian Church, I extend a hearty welcome to pastors, strangers, friends and all. I hope that your being here today may lead us all to a new consecration of the spirit."

A brief history of the church was read by Mr. E. A. Showalter. The history was incomplete as records could not be found covering the entire time. The church was organized by Elder I. N. Walter, of Ohio, an itinerant minister, who during his ministry made some thirty trips back and forth from Ohio to New York, via Virginia. His traveling was done mostly on horseback and by boat. He preached the dedicatory sermon of the first chapel at Antioch, June 30, 1833. Since 1870, the following ministers have served this

The following served as secretary since 1880; Wm. P. Byrd, J. S. Kagey, C. A. Heaton, F. H. Showalter, W. C. Wampler, Mrs. Berta F. Argenbright, Miss Ivie D. Andes, B. C. Deavers, R. J. Wampler, E. A. Showalter.

The morning sermon was preached by Rev. R. H. Peel, of Gasport, N. Y., a former pastor, who took his text from I. Samuel 7:12, and Matt. 16:18. He said: "In the former, God called Samuel, calling him by name. He gave him a message that marked his way of life. Through life Samuel knew God and followed him. At this time Israel suffered at the hands of the Philistines. The people entreated him to call upon God in their behalf. God heard and helped them put the Philistines to flight. Samuel planted a stone and called it 'Ebenezer—hitherto has the Lord helped us.' This stone stood as a memorial to God's deliverance. In the second, Peter makes the great confession, 'Thou art the Christ.' A truth revealed by the Father. Jesus said: 'Upon this rock I will build my church.' In one case God recognized as the power for a great victory, in the other the truth taught by Jesus called forth a confession that was to become the foundation of the church. In Samuel's declaration, 'Hitherto hath the Lord helped us,' we have the basis of the world's progress and hope. In Peter's soul confession of the truth we have the true foundation of our faith. Peter was never greater than when he made this confession. He became the temple of the living God.

"Through such confession God's real power is used. The church anchors the soul. Has the church failed in its task? it has not failed. This faith has brought victory through many battles; the church loses its power only as it loses sight of Jesus. 'Other foundation can no man lay, other than Jesus Christ.' God's spirit has given the victory. God's truth has been its foundation. God's promise, its hope. Life has been its message. Eternity, its gift. The church has stood a hundred years in the community, shedding its light. Who can tell its influence? Only heaven knows."

The whole community furnished an abundance of lunch, which was spread upon tables on the church lawn. The pastor, Dr. M. L. Weekley, was the happy host who had a pleasant smile for everyone. The Greenmount Church of the Brethren, a near neighbor church, kindly consented to conduct the afternoon devotional service.

Dr. J. W. Wright, pastor of the Harrisonburg U. B. Church, preached at the afternoon service, using as his subject, "The Rural Church and the Community Life." Dr. Wright said:

"Joining today in the 100th anniversary celebration of this church, I am reminded of Acts 11:26, 'And the disciples were first called Christians at Antioch.'

"Our Scripture lesson today relates the parable of the sower who went forth to sow. There are three factors in every farm crop—seed, soil, sowing. In our story, the seed may be likened to the Gospel message; the soil to mankind in the community, and the sowing to a process which belongs to the functional life of the church. Churches are of two types: those which consider themselves as an end and look to the community to build them, and those that look upon themselves as the builders of the community.

"For one hundred years, this church has been sowing the Gospel seed. Some have fallen upon the wayside, where evil birds devoured it. Some have fallen upon stony ground, and among thorns where it could not grow. But much of the Gospel seed has fallen upon good ground, bringing forth thirty, sixty, and an hundred fold. The church is a tremendous force in a community, if properly used, with a great task. The church is constantly face to face with the indifferent, the bluffer, the exploiter, the vicious, as well as the honest minded.

"We can no longer run away from our problems as the American pioneer once did. We started as an agricultural nation. We must now rebuild human units. Shall we do so without the church of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ? May the depression remain with us until we learn how to live."

Many interesting reminiscences were given in a short talk by Mr. Sam Miller. Rev. Mr. Peel was again called to the floor for a short talk. He told of some incidents of his early pastorate at this place, of his present pastoral charge, which is located in New York State, just thirty miles from Niagara Falls. He also told of being at the first conventions when the Congregational and Christian Churches united.

The program during the day was livened by special musical selections. The Hinton Male Quartette delighted the audience with a number of selections. The Wampler Quartette sang "The Land Above." Solos were sung by Mrs. C. S. Whitmore, who sang "City of Light," and by Billy Andes, who sang "Good Night and Good Morning."

There were present six great-grandchildren of Martin Burkholder, a charter member of Antioch, and one other great-granddaughter represented by her husband, Rev. R. H. Peel, who was the principal speaker of the day.

The following ministers are sons of this old church: Rev. F. G. Miller, deceased; Rev. J. C. Williams, deceased; Rev. C. H. Swank, deceased; Rev. C. J. Rolston, Presbyterian; Rev. A. W. Andes, pastor in Virginia Valley Central Conference. MRS. B. F. FRANK.

THE RIPEST EVANGELISTIC FIELD.

Late in 1932, Dr. E. Stanley Jones made a long tour in China. He found that 3,500 Chinese in Canton alone had gone to the trouble of registering their names in order to hear his evangelistic addresses, and on the last day of the series of meetings more than 1,000 persons signed cards indicating their decision to follow Christ. So responsive were his audiences in many cities that Dr. Jones writes:

"China is the ripest evangelistic field in the world at the present time. The whole situation is awaiting a push, a gentle, loving, Christian push."

And this in spite of twenty-seven years of revolution after revolution. Yet Dr. Jones declares that communism with its definite economic program and anti-religious propaganda appeals so strongly to the Chinese masses that the issue is in doubt and that a race is on between Christianity and Communism.

At such an hour of crisis it is deplorable that the missionary staff is depleted and that it is impossible for boards to send out new appointees with special qualifications to cooperate with the Chinese forces. However, after generations of effort in Christian training, Chinese leaders are emerging, both men and women, with ability and devotion—Dr. James H. Franklin, in The Never Failing Light.

GOD IN THE VIRGINIA HILLS.

The evening of July 7th brought to a close a two-weeks' meeting at Elk Spur. We were fortunate enough to get the same preacher we had last year, young Rev. J. Ray Dickens, of Varina, N. C. He is sincere, brave and preaches an unadulterated gospel. And while I was only able to attend the three last services, I am sure we have had a great and good meeting.

The workers here conducted a Bible School during the two weeks of the revival, and Mr. Dickens taught an adult class. There must have been great good done in this school, for that is what the words of one student implied.

I attended the services at the close of the Bible School and one dear old lady, almost 75 years of age, rose to thank the teachers for what they had done. In her speech she said much in praise of all the workers. She had been in the class taught by Mr. Dickens, and she said he had taught her many things about the Bible, and had explained or untangled many passages of Scripture that had for years been puzzling to her. It was inspiring, indeed, to hear her praise the Lord for sending to her, even in her last days, these young people who are able and anxious to give her the light for which she long had sought.

However, the most inspiring moment of the meeting was the last night when the doors of the church were opened and an invitation was extended to all who wished to come. The ten-year-old son of the first Christian missionary to the Blue Ridge Mountains (Iola Hedgepeth Meredith) came forward and took his stand for God in the church his mother built. That shows what a Christian home means to children. I saw, as did many others, that this ten-year-old boy understood more about life than he might have at fifty, had he not come from a Christian home. Yes, I said he understood more about "life," for what is life without God?

I had seen children dragged up to the altar when they seemed not to know what it all meant, but this young fellow wasn't satisfied out of the church, and asked to be allowed to join. I thought it unusual, and felt that it was God speaking through this youth of our hills. I wish the outside world could have had a glimpse into our hills that night, and let the lesson sink deep into the hearts of all. That picture will go with me to the end. Can you see this boy standing out alone, so bravely holding his head high, an unafraid look and tears of sincerity in his eyes? He looked as steadfast as the rugged peaks that shut him in, as he started to follow in the footsteps of his mother to hold the Cross of Christ before a dying world. I felt that here was one mother who had answered her own prayers. God grant that we may have more.

VICTORIA OF THE HILLS.

DR. AND MRS. WHITE TRANSFERRED.

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

I suppose you have heard of the possibility of our transfer from Cagayan to Davao. Several weeks ago we received official sanction of this transfer. The transfer is made necessary because the American doctor has served there six and one-half years without relief, and must go home. The board is unable to send another doctor to this field during these hard times, and the best way to meet the situation seemed to be our transfer to Davao. The Cagayan Hospital will be left in charge of my present assistant and his wife, also an M. D. Both are well trained and consecrated to the work.

Davao is on the same island we are now on, but at the southern end. More Manila hemp is grown in Davao than in any other place in the islands. Most of the laborers are Japanese, so we will have a large number of Japanese as patients in the hospital. The town itself is composed mainly of Christian Filipinos and is surrounded by hills where the pagans live, so with the American planters and Chinese business men we will have a varied class of patients.

Of course, we regret leaving our home and friends and the work we have engaged in for three and one-half years, but we expect to find a very interesting and needy work in Davao. We will be associated with a young couple who have but recently come to the Philippine Islands, and are taking charge of the evangelistic work in Davao.

Please remember us in your prayers as we start out in this new field. If you wish, you may put this notice of our transfer in THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Sincere good wishes.

HOLLAND, VA.

The Barrett Missionary Society of the Holland Christian Church, holds its meetings monthly, and due to the fact that our society is not very large, we meet in the homes of each member. Each member of the society seems to take considerable interest in our meetings. Mrs. J. P. Dalton, who has only been our leader this year, has been very faithful to us and has also shown great interest.

Our programs this year have been very interesting. At times the programs have been taken from the articles in the "Guest Book," which we consider very valuable and interesting. We had a very interesting Mother's Day program, which consisted of original poems and prayers written by members of the society.

We were very fortunate, at one time, to be invited to a meeting of the Women's Missionary Society. Miss Pircilla Chase was present, and gave a most interesting talk. It was a great opportunity for us, as some had never had the privilege of hearing Miss Chase.

During the year, we have enrolled nine new members, and we are well on our way toward reaching our conference apportionment. We have completed our study of "The Young Revolutionist," and each of us has thoroughly enjoyed it.

CYPRESS CHAPEL.

The Young People's Missionary Society of Cypress Chapel Christian Church has had thus far a very good year. Unusual interest has been shown by the officers and the greater part of the membership. Regular monthly meetings have been held every first Sunday night with planned worship programs, and the study of our Mission Study Book. Not only the young people attend these regular meetings, but many of the church members who are not members of the society. Once each quarter a social is planned, so that the social side is not neglected.

Last, but by no means least, we have raised three-quarters of yearly apportionment, which is a source of inspiration and encouragement.

CHRISTIAN TEMPLE.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Christian Temple has had a most delightful year meeting by groups in the various homes each month for a program of study, and at the church for a general meeting at the end of each quarter.

This method has proven so successful that in May the missionary society and the Ladies' Aid voted to merge. The object being to get over the program of the church to a greater number of our women.

One year hence we shall be glad to tell you the result of this move.

PROGRAM.

The following is the program for the Sixth Annual Session of the Virginia Valley Central Congregational-Christian Woman's Missionary Conference, to be held at the Leaksville Christian Church, July 20, 1933:

New Winston-Salem Chapel and Parish House.

THE NEW WINSTON-SALEM CHURCH.

The above picture gives a view of the new building of the United Congregational-Christian Church in Winston-Salem, N. C., which was used for the first time on Sunday, July 9th. It is a definite project of our united Congregational and Christian forces.

The building will serve as a chapel and parish house, and it is erected on the rear of a large corner lot at West Academy Street and Lockland Avenue, in Ardmore, which is one of the best residential sections of Winston-Salem. Ample room for future growth is provided for on the corner of the property.

The chapel and parish house is sixty-five feet long, thirty-two feet wide, and is constructed on the American bungalow style of architecture. Its construction is such that when it is outgrown as temporary quarters, and a permanent church plant is erected on the corner, for a small sum it can be converted into a seven-room parsonage. It is built of brick and brick veneer, and has two floors. The basement, which extends under the entire building, is out of the ground and does not have the disadvantages of a sunken basement. Perfect natural ventilation and light are provided.

- Play—Whistler's Chapel.
- Special Music—Leaksville Male Quartette.
- Reports of District Superintendents:
 - Mrs. B. J. Earp.
 - Mrs. A. F. Kite
 - Mrs. Roy Rinker.
- Short Talks—Mrs. Walter Voorheese, Miss Verdie Showalter.
- Address—Rev. Horace Lequear.
- Reports of Committees.
- Closing Prayer—Rev. R. L. Williamson.

MISSIONARY REPORT.

The basement floor provides space for church school departments, a kitchen, social rooms, etc. On the main floor is found an adequate and completely fitted chapel with a seating capacity of approximately 200 persons. Back of the chancel is situated the large study to be used as the pastor's office. The church parlor with its comfortable open fireplace and homelike atmosphere, is well adapted for small meetings and social affairs.

Sand finish plaster is used for the walls of the auditorium and the ceiling is of specially prepared insolate, rendering aid to the acoustical effect of the auditorium. The ceiling of the auditorium is of an arched effect and the general appearance is very worshipful.

The Florentine glass windows supply ample light and ventilation for the comfort of all who attend the services. The floors are of natural oak, and the interior woodwork is decorated in white with dark mahogany trimmings, harmonizing with the dark mahogany furniture.

In the erection of this form of temporary church building the congregation has a plant which is beautiful and serviceable and yet it has conserved almost its total investment, for when the permanent church plant is erected, this building will be an adequate and complete parsonage. For the size of the building and the small amount of money expended, it would be difficult to find a more complete church plant, or one which could more adequately care for the needs of the community.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

REPORT OF FINDINGS COMMITTEE.

EASTERN VIRGINIA YOUTH FELLOWSHIP.

We, the Findings Committee, wish to submit the following report:

The Seventh Annual Session of the Youth Fellowship of Eastern Virginia Conference was called to order by the president and opened with a song service led by Rev. J. F. Morgan. Rev. S. K. Emurian led the young people in singing the theme song of Glenlake Tabernacle, at which place the Fellowship met. The morning worship service was led by Miss Dora Martin, of South Norfolk, which was followed by the president's message, in which he expressed his pleasure in having worked with the Fellowship and his regret at not being able to carry on the work that he has been doing with this group.

Committees were appointed, and the minutes read at the morning business session, and the superintendents' reports were given.

The main feature of the Conference was discussion groups—two in the morning session and two in the afternoon session.

The morning topics for discussion were: "Making Christ Real in Recreation," led by Miss Doris Eure, Mr. Robert Speight, and Rev. A. H. Stainback, and "Making Christ Real in Government," led by Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

The afternoon topics for discussion were: "Making Christ Real in the Home," led by Messrs. John Hogge, Harry Pitt, and Rev. O. D. Poythress, and "Making Christ Real in the Church," led by Rev. F. C. Lester.

Special music was furnished the conference by Miss Frances Cotten and Mr. Woodrow Laine; Misses Nancy Eley and Annie Glen Darden; Messrs. Elliott Johnston, Mac Swanner, Everett Holland, and Marshall Harrell; and Francis Cokes.

The afternoon worship was led by Miss Edna Fulcher.

After a brief business session in the afternoon, at which time the committee reports were given, the following officers were installed by Dr. W. M. Jay:

President, Mr. Robert Speight, Suffolk, Va.; vice-president, Miss Doris Eure, Suffolk, Va.; secretary, Miss Irene Cotten, Dendron, Va.; assistant secretary, Miss Ruth Bishop, Dendron, Va.; treasurer, Miss Elizabeth Sharpe, Waverly, Va.; supt. of devotional life, Mr. Vaughan Beale, Franklin, Va.; supt. of service, Miss Louise Pittman, Wakefield, Va.; supt. of leadership training, Miss Lettie Mae Cross, Suffolk, Va.; supt. of moral standards, Mr. Aubrey Todd, South Norfolk, Va.; supt. of publications and reporter, Mr. Lanson Granger, Berkley, Va.; pastor-counselors, Rev. F. C. Lester, Waverly, Va., and Rev. R. E. Brittle, Suffolk, Va.; lay-counselor, Miss Lillie Holland, Holland, Va.

The closing devotional service was led by Dr. W. M. Jay.

ARE THEY ALL WET?

The newspapers would have us believe that practically all Americans are disgusted with prohibition, that all are eager to show their personal liberty by drinking alcoholic beverages, and that in a very short time the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States will be only a bad memory. Skillful propaganda which appears as news items, special features, and editorials contribute to this impression.

Lest we become stampeded in our thinking, I should like for you who read this, and politicians who now hear the clamor of drunken men and women who are yelling for more liquor, to read the resolutions passed unanimously by the Valley of Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention and by the Eastern Virginia Youth Fellowship. It should be remembered that the people who voted for these resolutions are not paid prohibitionists. They are the leaders in local churches who had come together to consider how to bring brotherhood among men.

VALLEY VIRGINIA VOTES DRY.

"We deplore the attitude taken by the President of the United States and by many members of Congress in advocating beer, and the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. We recommend that this convention go on record as being positively opposed to the legalization of beer, and the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. We call on all our people to stand firm for prohibition and positively against the breaking down of any of our prohibition laws. We commend the positive stand taken by the Governor of our State of Virginia in refusing to call an extra session of the State legislature as desired by the beer advocates and other wets."

YOUNG PEOPLE VOTE DRY.

"We, the members of the Youth Fellowship of the Eastern Virginia Conference, do hereby protest against the efforts to legalize beer in Virginia, and deplore the whole movement to repeal the Eighteenth Amendment.

"We hereby pledge ourselves to resist every attempt to bring back in any form the legalized liquor traffic. We believe that such a step is a denial of the ideals of Christ as applied to national life, and in loyalty to him we pledge ourselves to abstain from the use of alcoholic liquor."

Instrumental Prelude—Instrumental arrangement of one of the negro spirituals.

Call to Worship—"There can be neither Jew nor Greek, there can be neither bond nor free, there can be no male and female; for ye all are one in Christ Jesus."

Hymn—"In Christ there is No East or West."

Scripture Story—Have someone prepare to tell the story recorded in Acts 10:1-35.

Prayer—

Hymn—"When Thy Heart With Joy O'erflowing."

Introductory Talk—

Development of the Topic—

Hymn—"Teach Us, O Lord, True Brotherhood."

Benediction—

O blessed Son of God,
 In love and faith we plead,
 That thou wouldst bind our minds and hearts

In brotherhood of need.

Thou Man of Galilee,

O, wilt thou live again,

Abide within, control, inspire,
 Our brotherhood of men?

Amen.

In preparing this topic, take into consideration the following suggestions:

1. Ask some young person who is a serious student to prepare a short talk on the origin of race.

2. Ask someone to be prepared to discuss these questions:

a. Are races by nature superior or inferior? Or do the terms "advanced" and "retarded" better describe the difference?

b. What part does environment play in the development of race?

3. Ask someone to discuss the contributions to civilization that have been made by various races and nations. Consider music, art, literature, science, religion and other elements of culture in this study.

4. For group discussion:

What contributions do other races and nations make to the comfort and happiness of our everyday lives? What are some of the outstanding achievements of members of other races in recent years?

This is the last of a series of programs on friendship. We have discussed our need of friends, and the problems of friendship. On this topic, we want to think of expanding the boundaries of friendship to include those of other races.

There must be in our hearts a spirit of friendship and friendliness before there can be any real friendship. If we observe the spontaneous play life of little children we are led to believe that God planted that spirit in the human heart. But it is not long until the prejudice of adults begins to poison the childish heart and friendliness. By the time we have reached our age we find ourselves in these walls of prejudice until it is necessary to use our intelligence and reason to free ourselves so that we can be friendly with those of other races.

How can we cultivate the soil out of which racial friendship may grow? First, by a study of the origin of race and a realization that God created all men equal. Second, by a recognition of our indebtedness to the races both for our civilization which is the product of the centuries and for the satisfactions of our present life. Third, by an appreciation of the character and personality of other races growing out of our association with them. E. R.

SELLING THE GOSPEL.

The only man in the New Testament who sold the gospel was Judas Iscariot and he sold it in the wrong way. Nothing makes us more weary than the constant intrusion of cheap business phraseology into the domain of the church. Christianity is not a board of trade or a chamber of commerce proposition and it does not need to be "sold" in the ordinary drummer's sense of the word. This being the case, we were interested in the following comment of Brother M. F. Ingraham, which we received a few days ago:

"I am continually hearing at our conventions and seeing in our papers, admonitions to our preachers to study salesmanship. It occurs to me that it does not require salesmanship to dispose of staple and essential articles. To the hungry man, all he needs to know is that you have bread; to the thirsty man, let him know you have water. Christ announced himself as the bread of life and the water of life, and to the scattered flock as a good shepherd. The art of selling lightning rods and patent nostrums may require the tactful study of salesmanship, but Paul's admonition was: "Study to shew thyself approved unto God . . . rightly dividing the word."

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

ISAIAH DENOUNCES DRUNKENNESS AND OTHER SINS.

(TEMPERANCE LESSON.)

LESSON IV—JULY 23, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people."—Proverbs 14:34.

LESSON TEXT: Isaiah 5:8-12, 18-24.

Isaiah was not afraid of being called a "political parson." He preached against liquor in public places. He believed it was both a personal and a national evil, and in his SERMONS he lifted up his voice against it, and condemned it. It is quite likely that the wets of his day would have preferred that this preacher preach the broad truths of the Gospel, refrain from meddling in politics, keep quiet about liquor, and concern himself simply to rescuing those who were victims of drink and its kindred evils. But Isaiah refused to be shut up. He saw the true nature of the evil, and he saw the terrible toll that it was taking both of the individual and of the nation. He, therefore, preached against the evils of strong drink. He would preach against the evils of strong drink today. One would like to hear Isaiah preach to a modern congregation today on this liquor question. He would have something rather pointed to say to those who use liquor and to those who give their moral support to it in any way. If any one doubts that statement let him read the section of Isaiah's sermon which forms the basis of today's lesson.

It is an unfortunate thing that the pulpit and the classroom have neglected to emphasize the evil effects of alcohol, physically, mentally, socially, morally and spiritually. Indeed, if one reads only the statements of politicians and editors he gets the idea that this matter of liquor was first, last and all the time, only an ECONOMIC MATTER. Only last night, the writer of these notes read an article by Mr. Jouette Shouse, the leader of the Association Against the Eighteenth Amendment, and he listed as one of the many factors that had entered into the change of sentiment in regard to the Eighteenth Amendment, the fact that people no longer regarded the question of liquor as a moral question, but as it really was, an economic question. That was Mr. Shouse's interpretation of the liquor question—it is an economic question. But that is not God's interpretation of the liquor question. At least, one does not get that impression of the matter as he reads the prophets as they denounce the evils of strong drink. They condemn it on moral and spiritual grounds. They condemn it on the basis of what it does to a man and to a nation. The tragic factor in the whole situation now is that so many good people, so many church people, have become more concerned about keeping the "party pledge" and in "balancing the budget" than in advancing the Kingdom of God. The liquor traffic, either in its illegal, or in its legal form, has no place in the Kingdom of God. Christians and members of the church, according to Jesus, ought to give the Kingdom of God and its righteousness their first and foremost allegiance. One wishes that those who vote on the question of repeal, especially so long as there is no substitute amendment or any constructive suggestion for dealing with liquor, would look at the matter in the light of their responsibility as members of the Kingdom of God. One thing is sure—if the liquor traffic is ever legalized, if the United States government ever gives its legal sanction to the manufacture, sale and distribution of strong drink, it will be only through the consent of and the support of members of the church of Jesus Christ. That is a sobering truth for those of us who are members of the church.

The Sin of Monopoly.

Isaiah denounces the monopolies of his day. Woe unto them that join house to house, that lay field to field, that seek a corner or monopoly on things. Such a policy, says the fearless prophet, will sooner or later bring about desolation. He who gets only for himself sooner or later will have nothing of that which he has gotten. One of the disturbing facts about our national wealth is the disproportionate part of it which is in the hands of such a comparatively few men. This fact constitutes a very serious danger. Money means power, and those who have money power do not always know how to use it rightly.

The Sin of Intemperance.

Isaiah knew "his onions" about strong drink. In fact, as the slang is, "he knew all his vegetables." He states facts about those who drank in his day that are very modern and up-to-date about those who drink today.

Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning that they may follow strong drink. The habit had so fastened itself upon them that they had to get up early in order to start drinking again. It is just another way of saying that the man who drinks will go to any extreme to get his drink. He starts out by taking a drink and ends up by the drink taking him.

"That continue until night, till wine inflame them." Wine inflames the minds and passions of me. It distorts the vision, both physical and moral. It dulls the higher sensibilities. It blights the spiritual faculties.

"And the harp and the viol, the tabret and pipe, and wine are in their feasts." These instruments were primarily the instruments of religion. They were prostituted to the ends of the drinkers looking for a new thrill. Drink regards nothing as sacred. Men under its influence will do things that they would not even dream of or dare to do when sober. "The morning after the night before" applies not only to the physical hangover; it applies to the regret after a night of revelry.

"But they regard not the work of the Lord, neither consider the operation of his hands." Drink strikes first the higher spiritual faculties. Before ever a man staggers, he has lost the finer susceptibilities of his mind, and he has dulled his spiritual perception. Isaiah adds that drink begets a kind of brazenness, the kind of spirit that says in so many words, "Well, what is the Lord going to do about it, anyway?" See verse 19: "That say, Let him make speed and hasten his work that we may see it; and let the counsel of the Holy One of Israel draw night and come, that we may know it."

"Woe unto them that are mighty to drink wine, and men of strength to mingle strong drink." Those who boast how much they can carry, those who say that they can take a drink or let it alone—woe unto all such, says this prophet of another day to his generation and to ours. The evils of strong drink have not become less. Indeed, modern life has but intensified them. And any people or nation who gives themselves up to it, any nation that gives it their moral sanction, any nation that exacts revenue from it, sooner or later will reap the very woes that Isaiah prophesied would come to his nation, woes that were fulfilled in dramatic and tragic fashion. "Therefore, as the fire devoureth the stubble, and the flame consumeth the chaff, so their root shall be as rottenness, and their blossom shall go up as dust; because they have cast away the law of the Lord of hosts, and despised the word of the Holy One of Israel.

AMERICAN STANDARD BIBLES.

Authorized and Edited by American Revision Committee, and Published by Thomas Nelson & Sons.

These Bibles contain the Concise Bible Dictionary which forms the helps to these Teachers' Bibles. It supplies, in the most condensed and convenient form, all the latest information about the Bible, its writers, its language, the various versions, complete chronology, life of Christ, with harmony of the Gospels, life and travels of St. Paul, etc. The illustrations are reproduced from recent photographs, and truly illustrate the articles. The Combined Concordance is entirely new, and has been made expressly for the American Standard Version. It combines with the Concordance, Subject-Index, Scripture Proper Names, etc. The 12 Maps have been carefully revised and are beautifully colored. In making orders, give the number and price.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

"The opening of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."—Psalm 119:130.

"I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord."—Psalm 116:13.

MONDAY.

THE MAGNET OF GRATITUDE.

"I will give thanks unto Jehovah with my whole heart; I will show forth all thy marvelous works."—Psa. 9:1-8.

Oliver Wendell Holmes once forcibly compared the thankful heart to a magnet. You can take a dish of sand and scatter particles of iron all through it, and then sweep your hand through the sand in an attempt to find the iron, but you will not discover any. Then take a magnet and sweep it through the sand, and it will soon be covered with the bits of iron. "So," he said, "the unthankful heart, like my finger in the sand, discovers no mercies; but let the thankful heart sweep through the day, and, as the magnet finds the iron, so it will find in every hour some heavenly blessings—only the iron in God's sand is gold."

Therefore, if we go gloomily through life and think we have nothing for which to praise our Maker, the fault is with ourselves and not with Him. We do not carry with us eyes to see our blessings or mind to understand them or heart to value them. And this is why some persons, to whom God has given not a tenth so much as he has given to us, so far excel us in this grace of gratitude.

Prayer—Forgive us, O God, that we make so poor return for all thy kindness. Make us sensible of thy benefits. Make us happy in our blessings. Make us grateful to our infinite benefactor. We ask it in the name of thy unspeakable gift.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE CLOGGED PIPE.

"The wicked are like the troubled sea; for it cannot rest, and its waters cast up mire and dirt."—Isa. 57:11-21.

The sea on a sunny day, as its waters sparkle and its waves exult in the light, is a beautiful emblem of a thankful life sending its praise to heaven; but Isaiah gives us a picture of a life made gloomy and thankless by sin, its waters with no sparkle, full of mire and dirt.

Once in a large city church, in the midst of the services on Easter Sunday, the organ suddenly became silent. An examination was made and it was discovered that an eel, pumped up from the river, had clogged the pipe that supplied the motor. It was an acted parable of the ceasing of the song of praise from many a human soul as some sin or unbelief creeps into the channels of power and communication with God is shut off.

If we feel our hearts growing cold, if we can no longer join in songs of thanksgiving, let us examine our lives for lurking evil. Sin and gratitude are incompatible. Sin silences the music of life. As Satan comes in, the heavenly choir goes out.

Prayer—Holy Spirit of all purity and peace, guard thou our souls against every temptation and preserve us from all evil. So shall our spirits sing thy praise, and worship thee with anthems of thanksgiving.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE VOICE OF HIS PRAISE.

"O bless our God, ye peoples, and make the voice of his praise to be heard."—Psa. 66:8-15.

Praise is a voice. Thanksgiving must be born in the heart, but it must not stay there. Dumb gratitude will answer for dumb beasts, but not for speaking men.

When the psalmist bade all people to utter in words the praise of God so that their thanksgiving could be heard, he was only commanding them to do what is reasonable and sensible. Who of us, if he bestowed great and constant benefits on some one, would be content with his silence?

And while spoken praise of God is justly desired and commanded by heaven itself, it is no less required for the good of earth. There is a contagion of joy and gratitude which no one who wishes a happy life can afford to scorn. Praise God with your speech, and you will be more cheerful and contented, and your neighbor will be the same. Make the voice of his praise to be heard, and that praise will sound, with ever-increasing exultation, through all the earth. Strike up the anthem in your own heart, and you will rejoice at its growth in volume all around you.

Prayer—It is because thou lovest us, our Father, that thou dost ask for praise; and it is because we love thee and thy children that we will make the voice of thy praise to be heard. So shall we join the heavenly choir, and join it here on earth.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

REMEMBER THE GIVER.

"Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, coming down from the Father of light."—James 1:12-18.

The giver is always better than the gift. The richer the gift, the richer must be the giver back of the gift. The more pleasing the gift, the more pleasing should be the giver. We see the giver in the gift; yes, but the gift gives us only a glimpse of the giver's graciousness. Happy is the receiver who looks beyond the gift to the giver.

If we always enrich our blessings with the remembrance of God who gives them, what an enlargement of our blessings follows! How every least benefit becomes a significant of divine favor! All heaven shines out upon us from some joy that others would least consider. The very smallest comfort becomes a personal token from the King. We are constantly delighted and surprised and exalted by these proofs of the Father's love.

Prayer—Yes, Lord, for thou never gavest a blessing but thou gavest thyself with it. Thyself, and all of thyself. Shall we fail to give thee all our heart in return?—Amen.

FRIDAY.

"Freely ye received, freely give."—Matt. 10:5-15.

Spurgeon once said that "we breathe in the atmosphere of heaven by prayer, and we breathe it out again by praise; prayer and praise make up the essentials of the Christian life." Try to live by breathing in only; you cannot keep it up for a single minute. Try to live by breathing out only; that will last as short a time. The air flows in and out of the lungs, the blood flows in and out of the heart, and equally necessary is it that the love of God should flow in and out of the life.

Prayer—Forgive us, our Saviour, that we have presented to thee distorted lives; that we have destroyed the pure symmetry of thy bestowals. As the mirror returns the image, so may our gratitude return thy gifts, to thy glory and to our infinite good. In thy name.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

UNTHANKFUL LIVES.

"Whoso is wise will give heed to these things; and they will consider the lovingkindness of Jehovah."—Psa. 107:31-43.

Many persons live unthankful lives because they do not know enough to be grateful. They have no conception of the marvels of the eye, and so they are not thankful for the wonderful gift of sight. They do not realize the delicate balance of the ear, and so do not praise God while that balance remains undisturbed. They have not followed the course of history, and so are not grateful for the goodly heritage of this country.

Or, they may have the knowledge, but leave it unrelated to their Creator. They regard themselves as children of chance and not design. They are only dull parts of a dull machine; they do not know the Father, and so they are not grateful to him.

Both ignorances are deadening. Both leave the heart sad and the spirit inert. Both choke the spring of thanksgiving at its source and leave the life a barren waste.

Prayer—We would be wiser than that, O our Father. We would take heed to the world in which thou hast placed us. We would know what a marvelous palace thou hast given us to enjoy. We would consider thy lovingkindness in nature, in history, and in the realm of divine grace. And, above all, O Father, we thank thee for thy Son, and for the riches of love which thou hast bestowed on us in him. That mercy is so great that all eternity will not suffice for our unceasing gratitude. So to thee, and to him, and to the Holy Spirit of all good, we give praise forever.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

GRATITUDE FOR AFFLICTION.

"Before I was afflicted, I went astray; but now I observe thy word... It is good for me that I have been afflicted; that I may learn thy statutes."—Psa. 119:65-72.

It is well, in giving thanks to God, to begin with what we are likely to forget in that connection, our troubles and sorrows. If we praise God for them, we shall praise him for all the rest of our lives.

And we shall praise God for our afflictions. They are all designed for wise ends. They punish us for wrongdoing, and so help us out of the temptation to repeat it. They wean us from the things of this world and so turn us toward heaven. They make us to see how weak we are and so cause us to lean on infinite strength. They teach us to see clearly many blessings that we had not realized till we lost them for a time. There is endless good in afflictions. Let us know the good hand of our God in them.

Perhaps if we begin our thanksgiving with our sorrows and troubles, we shall not go further, for our hearts will be too full of praise for other utterance. Verily, our heavenly Father is kind to us, who transforms even our misfortunes into beautiful blessings.

Prayer—Lord, we praise thee at all times. When others moan, we will sing; when others weep, we will laugh; when others cry defeat, we will shout in triumph. Never art thou so kind to us as when Satan whispers that our lot is bitter.—Amen.

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

THANKS—A COMMUNION MEDITATION.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"He took the cup, and gave thanks."—Matt. 26:27.

We are about the communion table of our Lord, Jesus Christ. Let us be quiet in our souls. Let us set aside the superficial. Let us bring ourselves into a period of thinking about Jesus...

Jesus has been talking with them. He has spoken about the other world, and the hereafter. To him it is real—maybe near. To him it is a place where God is, and prepared for all the godly, loving, gentle. To him it is for his, both those who are following him now, and those who shall follow him.

His words have been about going away, about coming back to receive. He has been telling them about faith, and prayer, and has been giving them something of a command—and the sum of the command was love. He has thought of others, always of others—and he has been asking them to so think.

Thanks! There must have been mighty assurance in the thanks of Jesus! Have you ever thought about the thanks that Jesus gave? Have you ever thought how many thanks have been returned to him?

I have tried to think what the thanks might have been for. It is not so easy to say just what those thanks might have been for. They might have been for so many things. For Mary. Or the old shop, its work-bench, its tools. Or lakes, and mountains, and the lanes and paths thereabout. Or Bethany, or Bethlehem.

"He took the cup." Held it in his hand, and gave thanks for the cup! Something is put into your hand, and for it you give thanks. I mean that he gave thanks for the very cup itself—the material, common object. He appreciated having it. He never overlooked the little, common things. He was like that. Even in the very stories he told one sees the humble dog. Crumbs under a table. Seed on a hard, flat surface, some on a rock. Finger-rings, sandals, a pitcher, a candle! How intimate. How appreciative of the little, common things.

He told those followers that he had longed for that opportunity to eat thus with them. I think he gave thanks that the opportunity had arrived for them! What fellows they were! How he loved them, trusted them. Isn't it too bad about Judas? Isn't it too bad that he chose to fall out of the ranks, and to betray the leader? But I think Jesus gave thanks for the eleven men who were left. How men love men even in the ordinary walks of life when they are all real, and true!

And I think his thanks climbed the hill of calvary. Beyond the garden of Gethsemane—yea, even beyond the tomb. He gave thanks for the fellowship, the world-wide, age-long reconciliation that would follow the fulfilling of this present bitter part of the redemptive program. For the joy that was set before him—on out, far beyond the cross with all its suffering and shame was the joy! Joy—the joy of fellowship and comradeship which you and I are enjoying today—a deeper, finer fellowship than even we can fully understand.

May we go a step further? Jesus gave thanks for the cup, for the fellows themselves, and, since he prayed "not for these alone," he must also have had their successors in mind when he gave thanks.

And this should bring us to a sobering, consecrating thought. He gave thanks for us! Are we worthy? Our sins are many. Our words are too often too hot, and too often too cold! Our works are sometimes short, and our thoughts un-Christian and unkind. Are we worthy? Our faith—is it strong? Our love—is it unailing?

He gave thanks for us. Thanks for the cup, and thanks for us! He took that cup for us. Shall we not uncomplainingly take ours for him, and his? We shall be worthy through him. And for that we can give thanks! For that we may never cease to give thanks. For the privilege of working with him to establish more and more fully that family-wide and world-wide fellowship, we may give him thanks.

May we pray: Our Father, we are gathered about the table of thy Son, Jesus Christ, our Saviour. As we so gather we pray that we may feel the sweet communion of his fellowship; that we may have in him forgiveness of all our sins; that we may partake of this bread, and this wine, in grateful remembrance of him; and that we may help him establish a fellowship of love through out the whole wide earth. Feed, thou, our souls upon the Bread of Life, for Christ's sake. Amen.

HE STANDS BY HIS CONVICTIONS.

In these days, when politicians who were called Prohibitionists have fallen over one another to get on the wet side for the good of "true temperance" as they say, but because (as others think) they want favor, it is good to turn to that stalwart Methodist layman in the United States Senate who was one of the authors of the Prohibition bill, and who puts moral right above political favor. Hear him:

"The most extensive campaign of false insinuation and assertion any nation ever knew has been constantly under way against Prohibition. We must not permit this nation to forget that a legalized liquor trade means a lower form of civilization. We must not permit this nation to forget that beverage alcohol is one of the most prolific sources of impoverishment, misery, disease and crime. I feel I speak the sentiment of believers in Prohibition everywhere when I say we now and here declare continued an eternal war on liquor and all its works."—Senator Shepherd.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The hearts of our Orphanage family were made sad this week when news came to us that our good friend, Mr. Edwin Gould, of New York, the founder of the Edwin Gould Foundation for Children, had died almost suddenly.

Mr. Gould was very much interested in institutions of charity and was particularly interested in a number of child-caring institutions in the South, of which the Christian Orphanage was one. He sent one of his assistants to visit us more than a year ago, and report her findings to him. Later he came himself and spent a half day with us, and took lunch with us. He was so kind and easy of approach that you would naturally fall in love with him.

I will never forget how the little children gathered around him as if they had always known him. He seemed to get so much enjoyment out of telling them jokes and making them laugh. He gave us a nice contribution in beds more than a year ago. He has remembered us a number of times since by sending us nice pictures and books to let us know he was thinking of us.

He had just recently had his representative from his office to visit us here, and went over our institution from bottom to top. He said he did not have a single criticism to make. We felt we had a real friend in Mr. Gould, and his untimely death brings grief to our hearts.

THE TITLE GOOD.

When I built this house I got a deed for the land and recorded it. I don't run down to the registry office every week to see that the title is good. If we have taken Jesus Christ at his word, and committed our souls to his keeping, and our lives to his ordering, and our power to his service, let us not worry about our little deeds to heaven. Go about your life work, brother, and do it thoroughly and conscientiously. God is responsible for the results sooner or later, and for your final reward.

The Shepherd knoweth his flock, and calleth them by name. To you his voice is "only believe," "follow me!" If your cup of trial is sometimes bitter, put in more of the sugar of faith. If you feel chilled by the disappointments of your plans or the unkindness of others, get into the sunshine of Christ's love. If income runs down, invest more in God's precious promises. A good, stout, healthy faith will sweeten your affections, and sweeten your toils, and sweeten your home, and sweeten the darkest hours that may lie between this and heaven. Adherence will bring assurance.

"If our love were but more simple,
 We should take him at his word;
 And our lives would be all sunshine
 In the sweetness of our Lord."

PLEASANT HILL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

Old John Barleycorn was given a black eye on July 4th, as hundreds of people assembled at Pleasant Hill Christian Church in Southern Alamance County, N. C., to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the founding of the Pleasant Hill Temperance Society, which is one of the oldest societies of its kind in America.

People from all walks of life met to show their interest in the great question of prohibition which is facing the American people today. By actual count there were present in the audience 14 ministers of the Gospel, representing a half dozen denominations, 18 public school teachers, six Sunday School superintendents, lawyers, doctors and other people of note. There were present eight members of the society who joined 60 years ago, and 14 persons were present who have been members for more than 50 years. Over 300 new members were taken into the society as a result of the days' program.

With the exception of a few years, this historic old society has held regular meetings at Pleasant Hill on July 4th, and at Cane Creek Friends Church Christmas Day, for more than 90 years.

The program began promptly at 10:30 A. M., with singing and devotional services, led by Rev. A. O. Lindley. A group of children re-enacted the play entitled "The Temperance Alphabet," which was given 60 years ago by a group of children at that time. Some of those same "children" were present at this meeting, one of note being Zeno H. Dixon, of Elkins, N. C.

After a short business session, Dr. J. Waldo Woody, of Graham, introduced the speaker of the hour, Rev. A. W. Plyler, of Greensboro, editor of the North Carolina Christian Advocate, and a member of the executive committee of the United Dry Forces in North Carolina. Mr. Plyler pictured the unpleasant conditions of society in North Carolina before the days of prohibition, as compared with conditions of today. He reviewed the propaganda of the wet forces and said it is a challenge to the dries to meet this propaganda and that it is everyone's duty to vote on November 7th.

In the afternoon session, T. C. Carter, lawyer, introduced in a few well chosen words, the Hon. Johnson J. Hayes, federal judge in the district court. Judge Hayes reviewed the conditions of the liquor business around his boyhood home, and said that his decision at 16 not to drink liquor led to other decisions of much importance in later life. He said further that temperance is a matter of individual choice rather than a matter of law, but that law keeps intoxicants out of the reach of many who might otherwise fall to its deadly fangs. Law does not entirely break up any crime. Even murder, with the death penalty attached, goes on in spite of the law. Why, then, he asked, should one vote for repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment on the argument that it has not entirely broken up the liquor traffic.

Judge Hayes discussed very forcefully the following reasons why we should vote against the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment:

1. Repeal won't rid us of the bootlegger.
2. We would be bringing harm to our children.
3. The power of suggestion in public advertising would lead youth to drink.
4. North Carolina cannot vote for repeal and still keep her dry laws in the State.

Rev. L. W. McFarland next presented Prof. Zeno H. Dixon, of Elkin, N. C., who traced the history of the Pleasant Hill Temperance Society from its founding in 1833, up to the present time.

The meeting adjourned to meet in regular session at Cane Creek Friends Church on Christmas Day, as has been the custom for many years.

Rev. D. V. Pike, of Siler City, is president of the organization.

EURE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

Rev. E. B. White, of Windsor, Va., who has been our faithful pastor for the past three years, has been extended a unanimous call to continue his services as pastor of Eure Christian Church. I have been instructed to say that unity prevails among the members, and a delightful fellowship between pastor and people. The work of our church continues to progress nicely under his leadership. We enjoy his preaching and the attendance has been good.

Our pastor is a true friend, a talented speaker, loyal to the church and the Kingdom of God. We are proud of him and his family.

J. H. LILLY, Secretary.

This interesting item comes by way of Suffolk correspondent to the Virginian-Pilot, July 10th:

"At a quarterly conference held Saturday at Eure Christian Church, largely attended, the congregation by unanimous vote extended to the Rev. E. B. White a call to continue his services as pastor of this church at which he has been serving for the past three years. Mr. White, on next Sunday, will begin his fourth year as leader of this congregation. On Sunday morning after the morning services, a business meeting of the congregation of Damascus Christian Church was held, and Mr. White received a unanimous call to continue as pastor in this church which he has served for six years.

To sell rum for a living is bad enough, but for a whole community to share the responsibility and guilt of such a traffic seems a worse bargain than that of Eve and Judas.—Horace Greeley.

ELON COLLEGE

of the

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING.

ELON COLLEGE, founded by the Christian Church in 1889, has fully justified the faith and hope of its founders during its 42 years of operation. Its graduates from the four-year course leading to a bachelor's degree, number 980, now living, 122 of whom are in the Christian Ministry and full-time Christian service. The majority of these are members of our own denomination. In addition, 449 are in educational work and are an active influence in the lay leadership of the Christian Church.

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING, and the definite religious atmosphere of the College, provide the very best facilities available for training for religious leadership, and offer the Church its finest opportunity to train the young people of the denomination to assume active leadership both in the ministry and laity of the local churches.

OBITUARIES

ORRICK.

At the cemetery in Lanett, Ala., we laid to rest the body of "Uncle Jimmie" Orrick. He was one of the oldest citizens of our city, having been a resident of Lanett for 42 years. He was about 79 years of age, and was a faithful member of the Baptist Church.

He leaves to mourn his passing, one son, two daughters, eight grandchildren, three great-grandchildren, and many relatives. His friends were numbered by his acquaintances. He was a good man of the "old type." He will be greatly missed not only by his family, but by the entire community. Everybody loved and respected him, as was attested by the large audience who attended the funeral services.

The service in his memory was held in the Christian Church, Rev. J. D. Dollar delivering the sermon. This writer read the Scripture and led in prayer.

The music was quite a feature of the services. Old-time hymns were sung in the old-time way. These old landmarks are being rapidly removed; God grant them rest from their labors, and may their works follow them, is the prayer of this humble scribe.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, it has pleased our heavenly Father to call our brother, George T. Tate, to his eternal home, we, the members of Concord Christian Church, wish to record our appreciation of his membership and fellowship with us; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we bow in submission to the will of God, knowing that he doeth all things well.
2. That we are thankful and appreciative of the interest he took in the work of the church and his willingness to serve.

East Meets West—by Telephone.—

Mr. Kipling may have been wrong, for Miss America can meet Miss India now and even carry on an extended conversation—by telephone. India is the fifty-second country to be brought within the range of the American telephone, and is the third Asiatic country to be added to a telephone network that now includes 92 per cent of the world's telephones.

Proposed Eighty-three Years Ago.—

Among construction projects growing out of the unemployment relief is a bridge connecting Oakland, California, with San Francisco. Yet we now learn that it is not a new project at all. We are told that the city council of San Francisco considered the first formal proposal for a bridge connecting the two cities in 1850, or 83 years before the contracts were finally let for a $75,000,000 structure.

Whiskey Stocks Go on a Spree.—

And then they, with others, take a fall. The figures, even, make one dizzy. National Distillers, common, sold once this year for less than $17 a share. Last week it reached above $120. Hiram Walker, the Canadian, dipped as low as $3.50, but rushed up to $59. Another Canadian stock jumped from $15 to $45, while still another company had its stock bounce from $15 to over $40, between the organization of the company and the issuance of its stock. Then came the jolt. Something ran against a wall. A selling wave set in—the largest since the first days of the crash in 1929. And when the whiskey stocks crashed—they carried all the others down with them. It's probably the nature of things.

8-Day Houses.—

Germany again comes to the front. This time it is a portable metal house, which is being pushed on the British market. It can be completely erected in eight days. Business Week gives the following description of the house: "The outer walls are made of two plates, the inside one of steel with a lincrusta finish, the outside one of copper. The four-inch space between the walls is filled with laminations of asbestos. Claims include: an insulating value equal to a brick wall 7 feet thick; fuel requirements only half of those of a brick building." We are also told that the wall plates are interchangeable, while the partition walls have provision for double windows. The electric wires, as well as the water pipes, are laid in the asbestos filler between the walls. The roofs are of copper.

A Natural Hot Air Conditioner.—

We are told that there is located near Altamont, New York, a cavern in the mountain-side from which there rushes constantly a current of air as cold as ice. Set in a wild woodland of jagged rocks and fallen trees, this black hole, known as Haile's Cave, is in an isolated part of Indian Ladder Park. A huge natural rock portal rises a hundred feet above the entrance to the cave, giving it the appearance of a great tomb. Few people follow the winding and tortuous descent from the mountain top down to the cave, but those who do and remain at its entrance for even a brief while are thoroughly chilled even in the hottest weather. No animal life is found in the cave except bats, others finding the temperature far too low.

A Unique Swimming Meet.—

Possibly the only swimming match of its kind occurred recently in Miami, Fla.—and Seattle, Wash. Separated by a distance of 5,000 miles, two racers sped over 500-yard racing lines in a meet held simultaneously in the two cities. A telephone bridged the space between them and acted as starter. The race was won by Ralph Flanagan, of Miami, in 5.28 3/5, setting a new world record. His opponent, Jack Medica, came in only four seconds later. A loud speaker was set up at the pool in Seattle, and the starter in Miami counting off thirty seconds. At the last count, both boys left their marks, the starter's voice having been conveyed across the continent by telephone. Due to the difference in time between the two places, Flanagan started at 4 P. M., while Medica had finished by 6 minutes past one o'clock.

Burying the London Conference.—

While the American press has been busy making arrangements for the funeral of the London Conference, things have been happening over there. Possibly the greatest thing that has been accomplished, from an American's viewpoint, is the clarification of the American program for recovery. In spite of the "gold bloc," headed by France, who fought stubbornly to bend us to their will, our position has generally improved. While they may not help, they seem less inclined to hinder. Great Britain has reached a stage where she even seems inclined to cooperate. This alone has made the conference worth while. Besides, growing out of the conference, have been agreements among the principal producers of wheat, while those countries producing rubber, sugar, and the various metals, and other commodities, are making encouraging advances toward agreement. After all, the burial of the conference may be premature. It has accomplished something, and it may accomplish much more.

As It Goes in this World.—

Foreclosure proceedings have been brought against the Manhattan Tower Building, New York, of which the Manhattan Congregational Church is a part. Whether services will be resumed next September may depend upon whether a movement in the church to gain control of the property succeeds. The building is at 2166 Broadway. The Manhattan Church leased its site to the Broadway Corporation in 1927. The corporation agreed to erect a twenty-three-story building, five floors of which were to comprise quarters for the church, on which no rent was to be paid. It also promised the church an annual rental of $25,000. The Bank of Manhattan Trust Company, trustee under a bond issue of $1,650,000, brought action against the 2166 Broadway Corporation, and the church was asked to pay rent on the 550,000 cubic feet of space it occupies. Until the church had obtained a court ruling that it need not pay rent, it was forced to close.—Exchange.

We Quote Alfred Emanuel Smith.—

"It does not seem to occur to the average man that at bottom human nature is responsible for the world's economic miseries, and that it is only by raising the general level of human character throughout the world that a new society free from war, brutality, arrogance, selfishness, waste, disease, and human misery, which are the causes of all economic depressions, can be brought about. Viewed from this angle, the job is one for the philosopher, the priest, and the doctor, rather than the statesman, lawyer, or business executive. . . . There is such a thing as putting too much faith in political and scientific schemes of salvation." Writing editorially in The New Outlook, Mr. Smith fails to see how the present administration's plans "possibly can work." Further on he impeaches it as a "triumph of bureaucracy" and a "field day for the academic planner." Commenting upon this editorial, The Christian Evangelist has this to say: "With much that Mr. Smith says, a paper holding the position of this one will necessarily agree. We believe fervently that a new society, free from brutality and selfishness, cannot be built except on the basis of millions of reformed individuals. It is a task which cannot be done even in a small degree by legislation, by codes of industry, by governmental decree. It is a job primarily for the preacher." But it adds that "we believe that the legislation passed by the administration in its war on depression cannot be discredited by a sweeping condemnation of it as a 'political and scientific scheme of salvation.' It may fail to work, but it cannot be fairly impeached in advance." There are many who believe that the administration's plan is not the best plan, but it is certainly the only plan that can be tried at present. If it succeeds, time will improve its better points and will eliminate its imperfections. One must choose it or nothing.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Rev. Thomas H. Derrick, of DeLand, Fla., and formerly pastor of the Orange City Church, has been acting as supply preacher for the Associate Congregational Church of Baltimore, Md. Mr. Derrick expects to spend August in New England.

Rev. Clarence A. Vincent, D. D., of Winter Park, Fla., is spending the summer at his summer home at Henniker, N. H. He writes of their family consisting of nineteen, all the children and grandchildren except two, a very happy family reunion.

The children of our day, like the children of ancient Joshua's day, may now cross the River Jordan, dry shod; the difference being that whereas Joshua and his followers walked across the bottom of the river, miraculously parted, our children may now cross above the river on a beautiful up-to-date steel bridge.

Rev. S. W. Phillips, pastor of our Elm Avenue Church, Portsmouth, writes: "We have one of the best Missionary Societies in the city of Portsmouth. This is the spiritual thermometer that never fails to tell us the truth about our spiritual health. When any department of the church fails, we have but one thing to do: stimulate Missions and results follow."

Rev. Orville D. Ullom and family, of Melbourne, Fla., have gone to Mr. Ullom's old home in Greene County, Pa., where they will spend the remainder of the summer. Mr. Edward DuBois, a student of the University of Florida, and under appointment as a Student Summer Service worker, will serve the church at Melbourne during the next two months.

Rev. H. Jennings Fleming, an A. B. graduate of Elon College, son of Dr. P. H. Fleming, Burlington, and a pastor of several years' experience, now located at Kittery Point, Me., would be glad to return to the South if there is a pastorate desiring his services. Brother Fleming is well and favorably known in many of our churches and is a man of talent, ability and preparation.

An impressive memorial service for Dr. Charles L. Fisk was recently held at the Euclid Avenue Congregational Church, Cleveland, Ohio. Mrs. Fisk has returned to her home at Stuart, Fla., accompanied by her daughter and son-in-law, Rev. Walter Giersbach. Mr. Giersbach is to supply the pulpit of the church at St. Petersburg, Fla., during August, while Rev. Lawrence A. Gedcke enjoys a vacation in the North.

Dr. S. L. Beougher, former president, Bethlehem College (now Southern Union), Wadley, Ala., and pastor of the Wadley Christian Church and, prior to his work at Wadley, pastor of our churches at Graham, N. C., writing under date of July 12th, says: "I would like very much to become pastor of some church in the South the coming year." Any church without a pastor and wishing to correspond, may address Dr. S. L. Beougher, Vaughnsville, Ohio.

L. W. Hendrickson, Jones Springs, W. Va., says of the recent election in his state: "I sat at the precinct all day and checked off the voters. With the aid of some men who knew them well, the way they voted was accurately indicated. A

A study of this list ought to convince any man with the capacity of reason that the drys are right. The people who are out of touch with the church and spiritual things voted wet in the main. The people of high spiritual life voted dry."—Christian Advocate.

Rev. O. D. Poythress, pastor and evangelist, of our South Norfolk Church, assisted the pastor, Rev. J. W. Patton, in a series of very happy revival services at Bethlehem Church, Alamance County, last week. Brother Poythress was a welcome visitor in the editor's office, Friday, the 21st, and reports his work as going good. His church in recent official session was unanimous in their call to him for another year, and he anticipates a year of hearty cooperation and good fellowship in the arduous task of his large and busy pastorate.

Rev. J. W. Patton is closing his fourth year as pastor of our Bethlehem Church, Alamance County, N. C., and has greatly enjoyed the period of his pastorate there, during which he has witnessed four very happy revivals and many accessions to the church, these meetings finding a happy climax in the one closing last Friday evening. With the close of the present conference year, Brother Patton, of his own volition, declined reelection as pastor the coming year and a call has been extended to Rev. G. C. Crutchfield.

Rev. W. T. Scott, pastor, feels much encouraged since opening up our new church at Winston-Salem for its first service, Sunday, July 9th. He writes July 18th: "We are having encouraging services in our new church. Last Sunday morning was very inspiring. We had a good congregation at the morning service and also a good Sunday School. We are cooperating with the other three neighboring churches in union Sunday night services. I am to preach at the Moravian church next Sunday night, and on July 30th the service is held in our building with the Methodist minister delivering the sermon. We felt that we could not afford to turn down the opportunity of cooperating with sister churches, and I am confident that much good will result from this union effort."

Our good friend and brother, Rev. Murdock W. Butler, pastor, sends a very attractive program for the 100th anniversary of Gulph Christian Church, Gulph Mills, Pa., the services being held morning, afternoon and evening on Sunday, July 23, 1933. The sermon for the 11 o'clock service was to be delivered by Rev. Martyn Summerbell, D. D., after the reading of a historical paper by Mrs. A. I. Supplee. Among the other ministers taking part in the services of the day are: Rev. J. E. Epright, Rev. Edwin N. Faye, the pastor, Rev. M. W. Butler, and in the evening a sermon by Rev. J. C. Felton. The Gulph Christian Church is a historical institution of rare and rich achievements through one hundred years. The church was organized July 21, 1833, by Rev. Frederick Plummer. The first building erected in 1835, is still standing and now forms the Sunday School room of the present substantial and attractive stone edifice.

President Roosevelt gives the South a large order, through his appeal, that we prove our patriotism by reducing our cotton acreage and voting to repeal the Eighteenth Amendment. Wisely or unwisely, well or ill, we are giving heed to the urgent request of our President and proving to him, at least, that we are patriotic by acceding as rapidly and as extensively as we can to both of his requests. Plowing up cotton is an economic problem; voting for the return of the saloon was a social and moral problem—until our good President assumed the responsibility of both problems for us. Thus in order to prove our patriotism, we surrender on the one hand our ideas of economy, and on the other some very deep convictions, which had become a vital part of our thinking. At any rate, we have come a long way in these last few months, and we are by no means certain as to how far we shall go in the next few months. But, at any rate, we have surrendered and are following our President and proving our patriotism.

Bishop Warren A. Candler, of the Methodist Episcopal Church (South), makes an appeal as the conference year begins to draw to a close to all Methodist Churches through the South in words which we, of the Congregational-Christian Churches, should hear and heed. Hear the good Bishop in these utterances from his heart: "The cause of Missions, both Home and Foreign, is in a condition of most urgent need. Surely, we will not withhold the bread of life from thousands of souls for lack of the money which we are so well able to supply. We have offered the 'depression' as an excuse for our failure to support this great cause. Now out of increasing prosperity, we will be increasingly generous in dealing with our benevolent collections which require speedy deliverance from sore depression. Let us give as our Lord has prospered us. Otherwise, we will dethrone him and deify our selfishness. His kingdom has the first claim on us for his support." When there is so much cry for bread and the supply of physical needs, we certainly cannot afford to ignore the cry, the soul-searching appeal, of those hungry in heart and those who perish without the bread of life.

NEWS FROM CAROLINAS AND GEORGIA.

Rev. C. H. Rowland, popular pastor of our Greensboro, N. C., Church, will be on his way to Texas when this is printed. His daughter married a minister who preaches in the Lone Star State. Why not bring him back to the good old North State—or Georgia? There are none better.

It was a great Opening Day at Winston-Salem, July 9th. And now the vigorous pastor, Rev. William T. Scott, is going through the city and his friends' pockets, opening pocket-books. Have you sent in your "V" or "X" yet? or is yours a good big twenty? Might as well send them on—Scot or the goblins will get you if you don't. Rather remarkable how those big tobacco houses are pouring out the coin for such objects, isn't it? But none of them can beat the Callaway Mills, LaGrange, Ga. They do it with studied interest and genuine confidence in the work of the Christian Church in every community.

North Georgia Association meets with the fine Sardis Church, July 31st (evening), and August 1st. The sermon Monday night will be given by Rev. Lawrence Stanley, of Meansville. His coming will serve, it is believed, to further the acquaintance and fellowship of the Association, Mr. Stanley coming from Middle Georgia. Two phases of the life of the church will be discussed on the general theme: "Developing the Resources of the Church." (1) "The Spiritual," by Rev. H. B. Mowbray; (2) "Material Resources," (a) "Getting Them," M. H. Fleming, James P. Mahaffey. Both these men are prominent and valuable laymen, and know how. (b) "Using Them," Mrs. L. C. Percy. She is professor of languages in Piedmont College, and knows how to use money well. Mr. Stanley will address the conference and the Women's Work will be presented by Mrs. J. A. Aldrich. The Young People's session will be in charge of Miss Annie Campbell. Rev. Carl Parker will preach the closing sermon Tuesday night.

Of very special interest and importance is the meeting of the Middle Georgia Association, August 2nd. It will meet at the United Church, LaGrange, Rev. J. H. Dollar, pastor. The unusual part comes in the fact that this is the first time any of the Christian Churches have ever united with the Congregational Churches of Middle Georgia Association for such a meeting. Such is not the case in South Georgia where Ambrose, Vanceville and Enigma, have for about five years met regularly and merged completely three years ago. This year it is expected that the Hillside Church, LaGrange, Oak Grove, Chipley, the Richland Christian Church, and the "Red Hill Church," will be well represented. The invitation recently sent out by Pastor Dollar is one of the best ever written. United Church will entertain with a will and her heart will be on her sleeve all the time. The Association Sermon will be preached by Rev. David W. Shepherd, of Columbus. Rev. L. L. Stanley will give an address on "The Program of Our Churches of the Middle West." Mr. Stanley visited these churches and spoke in them sometimes three to five times a day for about five weeks. He will tell an interesting story. There will be the Women's Hour and other interesting features.

The Piedmont and Elon College Leadership Training Conferences are in full swing as this is being printed. At Elon Miss Priscilla Chase is the guiding spirit and at Piedmont College Miss Annie Campbell serves in a like capacity. The Elon conference has been well advertised in THE SUN, but Piedmont makes its bow to say this is our second Georgia State-wide Leadership Conference, and everything points as this is written to splendid success. Miss Campbell has had general charge of the program and management in preparing for the event. She will be a great part of the affairs at the college, and teach in her department, majoring with the children. Mrs. Alan Jones and Jean Fullington will teach Methods for Young People, and Miss Race, our popular and well known director of Religious Drama, will have charge of dramatics. Rev. L. L. Stanley will teach World Friendship and Rev. Arnold Slater will teach the Bible. Charles Hoyt of Georgia Tech College, will have charge of recreation and assist in many details. President Newell or Dean Rogers are expected to address the conference and Mr. Mowbray, our pastor at Demorest, will lead the chapel each day. M. J. Sweet will act as dean and have charge of the vespers. Mrs. Ensminger, wife of our "Tall and Smiling" superintendent of Alabama, and who has traveled extensively in Mexico, and who is also teacher of Spanish in the college, will tell of her experiences to the young people on a selected evening. A visit to the nearby mountains which some from South Georgia have never seen, will be made, and other interesting hikes or autocades are being planned.

THE POWER AND NECESSITY OF APPEAL.

By TIMOTHY THOMAS.

It would be a Utopian age if man needed no appeal to arouse him to action. Intelligence is no eliminator to the need of appeal. Man, even when his life is best organized from every possible standpoint, must hear the ring of appeal to stir him to certain needs and conditions. The power of appeal is the one blast that must keep us awake to the march of progress. The necessity of appeal is the call of progress for another rung to be added to the ladder of the upward march.

Columbus had to appeal to his fellow countrymen for aid to discover a new world; and like many appeals of today, it had to be heeded by the minority, a lone individual in this case.

In every movement toward progress some man, or group of men, have had to make an appeal to arouse others to action. Man, as a rule, works for himself and not for society. The needs of society may be near and dear to him, but his engagement in private enterprises diverts his mind from the social needs of his community, his state and his nation. He serves on call; and while he may at times show signs of weariness because of so many calls, he knows that such calls are worth while and in the end he is always glad to make willing and ready response.

The cause of the church is near and dear to millions, but the needs of the church must ever be called to the attention of its members. That such calls are necessary is no indictment against the love and loyalty and the liberality of the church member. Because the church member does not always go to the rescue of the church's call before being appealed to, is no sign that his devotion is not true and genuine. It is the human way and must be met in a human way.

The church at large is today making a mighty appeal to its members. The local church is likewise calling for help. That responses are not forthcoming as the callers or the appealers desire is not to be interpreted as a lack of interest. You never know the other fellow's obligations and problems, and likewise you never know what he would do if he could. Silence may be only the cover to a noble desire; it should not always be taken for a negative attitude. If we could only know the other fellow and the desires of the other fellow as we know ourselves and know our own desires, our thoughts of others would be changed and our hearts cheered. The goodness and the greatness (though not always expressed) in the heart of our brother might overshadow our own loyalty and surpass our own liberality.

The power of appeal is an asset. It is the heritage of the few. The necessity of appeal will always be to the fore so long as progress endures. The two are handmaidens in the making of tomorrow into a greater period of time in which to live than today has been.

Who walks alone with God is filled with secret glory, who walks alone with men walks wearily, but who walks together with God and men overflows with radiance.—Young People.

Keep THE SUN Shining Mail Your Subscription TODAY!

Why not send THE CHRISTIAN SUN to your friends for the ensuing year, and they will be reminded weekly of your thoughtfulness and interest?

THE SUN needs new subscribers badly, and the members of the Christian Church in the South need THE SUN just as badly. You who read the paper keep in touch with your church's activities and interests. Wouldn't it be a wonderful thing if you would help others to become acquainted with the things that you know about?

For your convenience we are printing a blank below. Just fill out this blank and pin your check or a money order for $2, for each subscription you wish sent, and we will do the rest.

As a token of our appreciation of your cooperation, we will advance your own subscription date three months for each yearly subscription you send in.

Of course, if it happens that the person to whom you send the paper is already a subscriber, we will advance their subscription one year, and will notify them that you have paid same.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE EASTERN VIRGINIA SUNDAY SCHOOL AND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION.

The day was a very happy one at Holland, Va., July 18th. The Christian Church and friends of Holland were hosts to the annual session of the Eastern Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention. The Convention was hardly as well attended as in other years, but the delegation from schools and societies was a representative and deeply interested one. The program of a day was executed with dispatch and enthusiasm. Devotional services, conducted by Rev. W. Ellwood Jones, of Franklin, were appropriate to the day and the occasion and put the Convention in a frame of mind and heart for its divine task.

Rev. J. F. Morgan, president, in presenting the annual message, enjoined the Convention in the words of the Prophet Jeremiah: "To ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls." The president's earnest solicitation was that we do not give up, nor depart from the old ways, because they are old, but that we face and deal with the new ways that are being presented to us, only as we stand in the old paths, holding fast that which is good and keeping our feet planted solidly in the old ways until we have discovered safety for our souls in making the new a part of the old. We cannot afford to give up the old way of faith in God, in Jesus Christ, his Son, and in the Holy spirit, because after all it is this sort of faith that is equal to the tasks and temptations of the new day and "the new deal." We cannot afford to give up the old way of prayer, because prayer is the source of rest and refuge to the soul, and we must have regard for the soul as well as care for the body. We cannot afford to give up the sacred observance of the Sabbath day and desecrate this holy institution of our Lord. It is the good old way from which we cannot depart without meeting danger, difficulties and destruction.

We face mighty problems, many of them new problems, and these we shall solve, not by new principles and new plans and new purposes, but by principles, plans and purposes wrought out in the mind of God and tried through the ages. This is still God's world, and we must deal with it not by departing from him, but by trusting in him and getting from him that wisdom by and through which we walk securely and find peace and safety to our souls.

The address was not written, but by request, Brother Morgan has agreed to put its contents in manuscript and furnish same to THE SUN. It was a very valuable and timely utterance.

Brother J. W. Folk, of our Bethlehem Church, has been the faithful treasurer of the Convention longer than he will admit. At any rate, he is an integral part of the Convention and has rendered invaluable service to the body through the years with his painstaking care and accuracy in collecting and handling the funds of the Convention. Another integral part of this Convention, as well as a most faithful and efficient servant and official, is Brother W. H. Baker, Newport News, Va., who keeps the record as secretary and sees to it that all official transactions and proceedings of the Convention go accurately into the record.

One of the interesting items and a departure in the Convention was that several of the departmental reports were in mimeograph and furnished to all, so that all could read the reports and have copies to take home with them. Those reporting in the departments were Mrs. W. H. Johnson, superintendent of the Beginners' Department; Mrs. R. E. Brittle, superintendent of the Primary Department; Miss Doris Eure, reporting for the Juniors; Miss Mary Lee Godwin, for the Senior Department; Miss Lillye Holland, for the Young People's Department; Miss Irene Cotten, sending in her report for Youth Fellowship, and Mrs. Annie Staley Calhoun, for the Home Department. These reports sought to reveal the mind of the superintendents or secretaries as to best means and best methods of conducting these several departments in the Sunday School.

Following these reports, the Convention dissolved into groups for discussion of the various departments, each delegate and visitor being invited to attend that group discussion supposed to be of deepest concern and interest to each.

The afternoon session was featured by an address by Rev. F. C. Lester on "Our Church Enterprises," the speaker having been chosen by the program committee to represent the enterprises of the Convention—our College, our Orphanage, our Mission work, our Board of Christian Education. In this address the speaker gave due heed and emphasis to each of these enterprises which were the burden, benefit and blessings of the various Sunday Schools and Societies of the Convention.

Supper was served on the church ground at 5:30 and the vesper service was conducted by the Christian Endeavor at 7:00 P. M. The church gave an interesting musical program and Rev. R. A. Whitten, First Church, Portsmouth, substituted in the inspirational address of the evening for Rev. R. L. House who was unable to attend.

The next session of the Convention convenes with the First Church, Richmond, Va., Tuesday after third Sunday in July, 1934. Of course, the Holland Church, living up to its enviable reputation for loyal and liberal hospitality, made the occasion socially satisfactory and delightful.

KIDNAPING.

The New York Herald-Tribune recently pointed out that "kidnaping is big business." To prove its conclusion, it is cited that since the Lindbergh case stirred the nation more than a year ago, eight well-known victims had been held for ransoms totaling more than $700,000. Of this amount demanded, it is known that at least $250,000 has been paid to kidnapers in the last five months. but the Herald-Tribune continues:

"Some police authorities estimate the loot obtained by kidnapers in the last five months has been nearer $1,500,000. The death of the Lindbergh child has done much to persuade relatives and friends of kidnap victims to deal directly with the criminals without informing the police. No one knows how many persons have been kidnaped and returned when ransoms were paid without a word leaking out to the authorities." Frank J. Loesch, head of the Chicago Crime Commission, declares that "kidnapers are not sporadic, but are engineered by several gangs in the United States who systematically follow a plan adopted and worked out long before the victims are first spirited away."

And so this expert in the apprehension of crime, and also James S. Bolan, Police Commissioner of New York City, are advising and pleading that there be a voluntary nation-wide organization against kidnaping, and that the Federal Government take the matter in charge and pass laws that will enable it to take a hand in any kidnaping whose suspects did not cross State lines, as is now necessary before the Government can take a hand.

All of which is deeply significant and interesting. Surely, these supposed experts in the apprehension of crime have forgotten, since they entirely ignore the fact, that the Government joined with State governments in enacting laws to prohibit "bootlegging"—the illegal manufacture and sale of beer and liquor. And these experts must know full well that the main argument against Prohibition is that the law was not enforced, and that our National Government had to acknowledge its inability to enforce its own statute and organic law. In the light of that defeat, for the first time in the history of our country, our National Government dipped its flag and beat a retreat, is beating a retreat, and saying to the States: "Your National Government cannot enforce these laws; we leave it to you to do the best you can." And so the States accept the request of the National Government and are voting as rapidly as they have opportunity to acquiesce in the declaration of defeat on the part of the National Government.

The kidnapers, meanwhile, having learned of the acknowledged inability of the National Government to enforce its own laws against criminal violators, are proceeding, in most instances quite unharmed and unmolested, to carry on their nefarious business and so they kidnap. If a government acknowledges its inability to enforce law against violators in one line, what is to hinder violators in other lines from deciding that they too can get by without being apprehended, and this they are doing. And so, as the Herald-Tribune points out, "kidnaping is big business."

The violation of the law, the holding up to ridicule and disdain moral standards of good and tried repute, have come to be the order of the day. Surely, we need a prophet, like Jeremiah of old, who will cry aloud, saying: "Thus, saith the Lord, stand ye in the ways and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls." (Jeremiah (6:16.) Surely, there is little rest for the souls of those who, departing from the old paths, "where the good way is," are unwilling to walk except in the new and the untried paths.

BETTING RETURNS.

The recent session of the North Carolina Legislature, in keeping with many other legislatures throughout the United States, enacted laws either permitting pari-mutuel betting or giving to the people of the county the privilege by referendum of legalizing betting. Two counties in North Carolina have taken advantage of this and have held their elections—one county in the West voting by a heavy majority for pari-mutuel betting, the other county (East) refusing by a very small majority to enact such a law.

The claim was made in the campaign for betting that the law, if enacted, would bring in big revenue and would help to bring about a revival in business and thus lift the depression. It was pointed out that considerably over $1,000,000 passed hands in a certain county of Florida last winter in which pari-mutuel betting had been legalized, and that similar returns, with large revenue to the State, were shown from the race-tracks in a county of New Hampshire, in which over $1,000,000, the present season, passed hands in betting. The Boston Herald points out this as quite an achievement, an evidence of the fact that we are returning to prosperity and that business is rapidly on the increase, since at these races "the carnival atmosphere" prevails and every sign of revival of business and industry was in evidence.

So in our "new deal" put down race tracks and other legalized forms of betting among the assets of the present business revival. Was the wise one right or wrong who, through inspiration wrote: (Prov. 14:34) "Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people."

J. O. A.

DEBT, DEBT, DEBT.

Our National Government is, among other things, showing us how to get into debt. The deficit for the year ending July 1st, was $1,750,000,000. That is a larger sum than the imagination can reach, but they are the figures given out by the treasurer. For three years consecutively now the deficit for current expenses has increased so that during these three years our Government has increased its debt to the staggering sum of $5,650,000,000. While the last Congress sought by various and sundry methods of increasing taxation to balance the budget, over $3,000,000,000 is being poured out for various projects of recovery and employment. For instance, it is just announced that $238,000,000 will be spent forthwith in the Navy for building new war craft, and the Navy is making an effort to secure $77,000,000 more for the purpose of modernizing warships which have become ancient and out-of-date, within the past four or five years.

A total of twenty-one vessels, including a 10,000-ton cruiser, authorized in 1921, and four destroyers, authorized in 1916, are to be built with Public Works funds during the present fiscal year. These vessels will cost approximately $46,000,000 and will be built in private yards. In addition, the Navy is now building in its own and private yards seventeen vessels costing $40,000,000. Of course, it will not be many years before these ships will be ancient and will have to be scrapped, but, at any rate, we are building them with money that helps to increase our staggering and incomprehensible sum of indebtedness. We wonder if the injunction of the Good Book applies to nations as well as to individuals: "Owe no man anything, but to love one another." (Rom. 13:8). Spending hundreds of millions of borrowed money (every cent of which must be paid back, with interest, from taxes on the people) on warships and fighting equipment, does not look very much like an act or even a gesture of love.

But, at any rate, we are plunging deeper and deeper into debt; and spending borrowed money always was, and is, an easy and a rapid process.

REPEAL THE TEN COMMANDMENTS.

A distinguished leader in a nearby State pointed out recently that "the temper of the country at this time is such that the people would vote to repeal the Ten Commandments if they thought it would have a good effect on lifting the depression." No one has arisen to question the wisdom or doubt the conclusion of that brother. In fact, one wonders which one of the Ten Commandments we haven't already "voted" in our own mind—that is, a very large per cent of us—to repeal. For the convenience of the reader and to give a moment's meditation to the thoughtful, suppose we set down in order the Ten Commandments and then decide which of these has not been repealed, or is not being repealed:

- I. Thou shalt have no other gods before me.
- II. Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image.
- III. Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord, thy God, in vain.
- IV. Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy.
- V. Honor thy father and thy mother.
- VI. Thou shalt not kill.
- VII. Thou shalt not commit adultery.
- VIII. Thou shalt not steal.
- IX. Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor.
- X. Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's house, nor anything that is thy neighbors'

Is it not true that a very large per cent of our population have either mentally repealed these Commandments or defied them or disobeyed them?

THAT DEFINITE ASSURANCE.

All of us still remembering the very strong and definite words of Franklin D. Roosevelt when he said that "there must be some definite assurance that by no possibility, at any time or place, can the saloon come back." The States are rushing ahead voting repeal. Thus far we haven't heard what is to prevent the return of the saloon when repeal is effected. The breweries are speeding up in their business, and stocks in alcoholic enterprises and institutions went soaring last week on the stock market. It is now heralded we may expect liquor, and plenty, by Christmas. We are wondering about "the definite assurance," or any other sort of assurance, as to how liquor is to be sold without bringing back the saloon, since "saloon" is the name of that place in which liquor is sold legitimately or otherwise.

A PIECE OF PAPER.

There is more behind a piece of paper than I thought. I went through the Southern Kraft Corporation Paper Mill in Camden, Ark. It is a five-million-dollar plant, employing hundreds of men. Its raw material is pine timber, and its finished product fine paper. Modern machinery grinds up the wood, dissolves it into pulp in acid liquor, and carries it through the many steps of the process which ends in a huge roll of good quality paper. The hum of all this machinery is perplexing to a man who is uninitiated in its mysteries. But it works to a designed end beyond my understanding. I could not write a description of the plant which would serve as a blue print to reproduce it. But I know that it was not accident—it did not just happen. What great things have the mind and hands of man wrought! Consider the workings of a modern printing establishment, which takes the finished product of a paper mill and carries it to the climax of the printed sheet. It is an intelligent trip from a pine log to a great daily, which cannot be explained by accident. What about the pine trees and the man who transforms it into the bearer of printed intelligence? Are they to be explained as accidents? Did the earth with its mountains and rivers and manifold wonders; the heavens peopled with sun, moon, stars beyond number, and God knows what else; the laws of motion, being operated with such uncanny accuracy—did all this come by chance without a Supreme Intelligent Designer? Believe it who can, but he is not entitled to sympathy if he is taken for a fool. Any Intelligence Supreme enough to be such a Designer, is Supreme enough to be Almighty God. The proposition that God is should not tax the credulity of rational men. The mind must have a vast background of wickedness which can reason God out of the universe. "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God." (P. 14:1.)

Cled E Wallace, in Gospel Advocate.

AS THYSELF.

How much we love ourselves! We have failings, and we know it; but we love ourselves. We do things that shame us; but we still love ourselves. We can't see many of our own faults. We know this well enough. But the fact that we are worse than we see ourselves does not abate our love for ourselves. It is a mercy to us all that we cannot clearly see all our own faults.

But we have a clear vision of the faults of others. We have a quick reaction to them. The same fault in a neighbor looks worse to us than in ourselves. We cannot love him when he is like "that." Let any other practice upon us but a fraction of the wrong that we practice upon ourselves, and it would place an impassable gulf between us.

We all want friends. We all need friends. Life is not worth a straw to the person who is so made up that everybody excludes him. But nobody who is always resenting the faults of others can ever keep a friend. We are all slow to see faults in ourselves, and swift to forgive ourselves for persistent and premeditated wrongs toward others. Why can't we forgive our friends? The little faults in them are no worse than in us.

One trouble is that we dwell too much upon the faults of others. Our own failings would make a bad impression on us if we should dwell upon them. But we don't. We make ourselves the hero or heroine of every situation. We always assume the center of the stage. But the best actors on the stage of life are those who can forgive the little faults and dwell upon the best in their friends. If we can't do that, let this be a warning to us that we must have more grace.—Publisher Unknown.

YOU CAN TEACH RELIGION ANYWHERE.

A schoolmaster when I asked him what place he gave to religion in his curriculum, said: "We teach it all day long, we teach it in arithmetic, by accuracy. We teach it in language, by learning to say what we mean—yea, yea, and nay, nay. We teach it in history, by humanity. We teach it in geography, by breadth of mind. We teach it in handicraft, by thoroughness. We teach it in astronomy, by reverence. We teach it on the playground, by fair play. We teach it by kindness to animals, by courtesy to servants, by good manners to one another, and by truthfulness in all things. We teach it by showing the children that we, their elders, are their friends and not their enemies. We teach them to build the church of Christs out of the actual relations in which they stand to their teachers and their school fellows, because we believe that unless they learn to build it where they are, they will not learn to build it afterward anywhere else."—*L. SUFFOLK LETTER.

Ten years ago, in September, Rev. H. S. Hardcastle began his work as pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church. He succeeded Dr. W. W. Staley, who had served as active pastor for forty-one years. One of the final acts of Dr. Staley, before relinquishing the active pastorate, was a recommendation that a large and adequate Sunday School plant be added to the building equipment of the church. This recommendation was adopted and entered upon the church records.

Dr. Staley had the pleasure of serving on the committee which finally laid plans for the erection of one of the best religious education buildings in the South. The pastor, Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, did much to make this work possible, but due credit should be given to Dr. Staley for the original suggestions that something comparable to the present Sunday School plant should be erected.

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle closed his work, as pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church, on Sunday, July 23rd, after serving in that capacity for ten years. It is generally conceded that it is difficult for a new pastor to do his best work, if the former pastor remains in the field. Quite naturally the former pastor has the sympathy and friendship of some people who are slow to allow the new pastor to have their full cooperation. In some cases the former pastor solicits the continued support and good-will of his friends. While there are difficulties in such a situation, the plan worked admirably well in Suffolk. Dr. Staley made no attempt to capitalize his friendly relations with the church and the city. He became a pastor of the city and gave his unstinted support to the new pastor in his work. He not only gave his undivided moral support to the pastor who succeeded him, but he gave very liberally of his means in the effort to make possible the new building program. In this way he was a real help to the new pastor. How well Brother Hardcastle succeeded in his work here is now a matter of history. He recognized Dr. Staley and his place in the church and city, and honored him by seeking his cooperation and counsel on every hand. They worked well together, and this gave greater strength to the younger pastor in his contact with the church and city.

Brother Hardcastle has rendered acceptable service as pastor of the church. He is a close student, has an attractive personality, makes friends easily and is a good preacher. He is well prepared for special work in the field of religious education. His major emphasis, as a pastor, has been in that field. He has prepared himself for the work of teaching the young people the great fundamentals of the Bible and the religious life. His work, in that field, has been especially marked and approved. And in this respect he is following the example of our Lord whose principal work was in the field of teaching. Jesus was a Great Teacher.

Under his pastorate, the Suffolk Church has increased in membership and educational efficiency. The construction of the modern religious education building gave an impetus to departmental work in the Sunday School; and the school at this time, is somewhat larger than at any time in the history of the church. The type of work done in the departments is of a higher order, due to the emphasis which has been given during his pastorate to the preparation of teachers.

The Suffolk Church and many friends in the city regret his decision to resign the work here and go elsewhere. His friendly spirit and high standard of pastoral work, will linger in the hearts and memory of many friends, who wish him continued success in his work as a minister. The entire family are loved and respected in this city, and we wish them God-speed in their labor of love.

STUDENTS NEW AND OLD.

There are three things that are essential to the making of a college—teacher, student and equipment. The first two are absolutely necessary—the third is most helpful, and under present restrictions is necessary. In days of Mark Hopkins, equipment did not figure to any great extent. The idea was for the unprepared and ambitious mind to come in touch with the prepared and well informed mind. This meeting might take place on a campus with required equipment, or it might take place by the roadside with a log untouched by saw or tool as the proper stage for action. I fear that in our enthusiasm to provide accommodations and equipment to aid in the impartation of information to the uninformed, we have gone to the extreme, laying, perhaps, too much emphasis upon the material side of college training and not enough upon mental efficiency and fitness. The duty of a modern college is to impart the information to the searching student in such a way that such information will not only remain with him, but will result in the conscious and fruitful development of his own mental faculties. At Elon College, we have endeavored through the years to present a properly balanced curriculum, involving both physical and intellectual efficiency. In presenting this combination of advantages to the ambitious youth of the country, we have not overlooked the necessity of moral strength and of religious guidance, if the individual student is to be fully and completely prepared for the opportunities and emergencies of life. That is to say, it is our purpose to create a moral and religious atmosphere on Elon College campus that will make the needed and lasting contribution to the characters of our students.

We have had at Elon College some objectionable things—acts upon the part of students and others that would have a tendency to influence in the wrong direction, and we may have such influence to contend with in the future, but we are determined to eliminate as rapidly as possible such influence from our campus that those who are tempted toward habits that would make the wrong kind of contributions to life may be strengthened in their own lives and living, and that those who have not faced such temptations may be free to pursue their courses and not have to contend with such ill influences.

We are endeavoring to create an atmosphere and a curriculum of studies that will make their greatest contribution to the manhood and womanhood of tomorrow.

In September we hope to have a large number of old and new students—not old in the point of years, but old in the sense that they have formerly been members of the Elon student body. Last year our enrollment totaled 285. The recent graduating class numbered 45, leaving on our roster 240. There were approximately 25 who fell by the wayside during the year and did not remain on the campus until Commencement. Of the 215 remaining old students of the College, it would seem that we might reasonably expect 175 to return. Should this large a percentage of our student body return, it would be most gratifying indeed, and I am writing to appeal to the parents, to the friends of the institution, to the Alumni and to our former students, themselves, to make every possible effort to return to College that they be able to complete their education before launching out into life on their own initiative.

Now, we are most interested in this other class of students—new ones—the ones who are to come to our campus for the first time. We have more than double the number of signed applications for new students today that we had at this date one year ago. We have a larger list of prospective students, and the prospects now are that we will have a much larger number of new students than we had the scholastic year so recently closed. Last year, we had 122 old students and 163 new ones. Prospects for increasing this number of new students over last year are certainly favorable. However, it may be necessary for everybody interested in Elon College to exert every possible influence in order that we may increase our student body. When you influence a friend of yours to come to Elon College, you render a doubly efficient service—first to the student, himself, and second, to the College of your interest.

We have the buildings, splendid equipment, but they are of no service to us unless we have students. We are prepared to give to the young men and young women of our country advantages equal to those to be found in any progressive liberal arts college. Our expenses are not the cheapest, but they are not excessive.

At Elon College, we are endeavoring to make the happy combination of simplicity, efficiency and economy. Give us a trial and see if we do not succeed in such efforts! We have students from all sections of the country and are happy to bring representatives of States far and near together that we may be able to create a cosmopolitan spirit on the part of future citizens that sectional prejudices may disappear and that the real spirit of brotherhood and fraternity may possess the citizenry of our country. Elon College is endeavoring to be efficient in its instruction and influence, in its devotion and fellowship. Don't be afraid to risk your son or daughter with Elon College for training.

BETHLEHEM.

The series of revival services at Bethlehem Christian Church, Alamance County, N. C., Closed July 21, 1933. There were over twenty professions and thirteen accessions.

I am constrained to say that I do not believe these professions and accessions are of more value to the cause of Christianity than the revival of the church, in the upbuilding of the Kingdom, in binding and cementing the hearts and lives and interests of soul saving of people and vitalizing and energizing the sweet Christian love and devotion to Christianity and the Christian brotherhood of the community. All this based on the promise and faith in the teachings of God the Father as revealed in the Holy Word of God.

Indeed, the revival was wonderful, potent, and convincing for deep-seated seeding, and not superficial work was done.

Rev. O. D. Poythress, of South Norfolk, Va., who was with me last year in a gracious revival at this church, came to my assistance last Monday. He did all the pulpit work from then to the close. And he did fine work—gospel preaching—and the messages fell on and into good soil. He was not afraid, nor did he fail to tell the danger of hypocrisy and to proclaim from the depths of a devoted heart to God, the "Thus saith the Lord," and it was largely heard by large audiences.

Next week I go to Kallam's Grove; the week following to Mt. Bethel.

Rev. Bro. Uall, of Elon College, is to be with me in these meetings.

"WITNESSING PROGRAM" IS LAUNCHED.

By BERT H. DAVIS.

[A summary of the Thirty-Fourth International Christian Endeavor Convention, at Milwaukee, Wis., July 8th-13th.]

Witnessing for Christ was the objective, and in good measure the achievement, of the Thirty-fourth International Christian Endeavor Convention, which was held for six days at Milwaukee, with evening attendance of 7,000 or more young persons.

From the convention there has come even now a firm and surging purpose for a nation-wide and perhaps world-wide endeavor of witnessing for Christ "in my own life, in and through my church, in social justice, in international good will and peace."

In the daytime and evening mass-meetings during the four-day series of conferences (more than 125 separate group meetings in all), in the thirty denominational conferences and rallies, and in the worship and fellowship periods of the convention, a great objective—to re-present Christ's spirit and way in daily life—received inspiring guidance and a practical technic.

The program set before the youth of North American churches and broadened in the conferences of the Milwaukee Convention grows from months of preliminary study and testing in these Eastern areas.

Interpreted for small and large, rural and urban groups alike, and recommended for united organized effort, the witnessing program was placed before the convention in the opening meeting by Rev. Daniel A. Poling, D. D., president of the International Society of Christian Endeavor and of the World's Christian Endeavor Union. "I Will be Christian," was the theme and the spirit of Dr. Poling's key-note address, and also of the closing service of the convention, a time of reasoned, whole-hearted decision, which included making known the decision for full-time Christian service by not fewer than eighty young persons.

Walter H. Judd, M. D., came from his present post at the Mayo Clinic, Rochester, Minn., to tell simply and most effectively of China's call to him, and what he had tried to do in an inland city of China to carry on a Christian ministry of healing.

Rev. William Hiram Foulkes, D. D., vice-president of the International Society of Christian Endeavor, made a number of vital contributions to the day-by-day program. The union communion service, which he and other officers conducted in fellowship with Milwaukee ministers, was one of the unforgettable experiences of the convention.

Rev. A. W. Beaven, D. D., president of the Federal Council of Churches, summoned youth to give religious and moral causes a "new deal" in American life. Rev. Merton S. Rice, D. D., a noted Methodist minister of Detroit, outlined clearly and with many instances the task of the Christian Church today, to preach and live without compromise the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Rev. James Kelly, D. D., of Glasgow, Scotland, came to America especially to address this convention and to bring as president of the European Christian Endeavor Union a significant message from Hungary. To delegates in mass-meetings and at several luncheon and banquet sessions, and in a most timely address and conference for the one hundred fifty ministers who met daily, Dr. Kelley showed that the spirit of courageous and trusting Christian witness is the spirit of European Christian youth today. It was with deep satisfaction that the executive committee of the World's Christian Endeavor Union began planning for the World's Convention in Budapest, in August, 1934, as the Christian Endeavorers and the Reformed Churches of Hungary have strongly urged.

Mrs. Francis E. Clark, Dr. Clark's companion in founding the first young people's society of Christian Endeavor and in his world travels, came at eighty-two to Milwaukee to speak for Christ from her own full and active life. The admiration of the delegates for this tiny and winsome lady could hardly be overstated. Her messages were little gems of Christian witness, usually introduced by stories of the Endeavorers she had known.

At evening sessions several speakers of twenty years or younger added important value to the program. The services of a number of denominational young people's leaders proved almost indispensable to the success of the conference program or "school of the convention." The faculty and conference chairmen met daily for breakfast, and were addressed by Rev. Harry Thomas Stock, D. D., and Dean Albert J. Anthony. They formed a force of approximately seventy persons. Two thousand or more attended daily conferences.

Dr. Poling broadcast each noon a conference for youth through WTMJ of Milwaukee, young members of the International Society's executive committee acting as chairmen for these sessions. Homer Rodeheaver was director of song, aided by a chorus of six hundred, trained and directed by Dr. Daniel Protheroe, Chicago composer and chorus-leader.

Dr. Norman E. Richardson, in both public messages and a daily seminar for teachers, ministers, and parents, ably advanced the cause of Christian education and answered a host of questions about leadership.

A colorful parade was followed by a public hymn-sing.

The next International Convention is scheduled to be held at Philadelphia in the summer of 1935. Three other leading cities gave hearty invitations, including San Francisco, where the Endeavorers convened only two years ago.

President Roosevelt in telegraphing his greetings to the convention particularly welcomed the Christian Endeavor's aid as a world-wide movement in increasing understanding and good will among the nations. The convention by resolution declared support for missions, for the cause of temperance education and national prohibition, and for world-wide peace and disarmament, answering the message addressed to them by President Arthur Henderson of the World Disarmament Conference.

A message from Hon. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, who had hoped to be the guest of the convention, but was detained in London, was much appreciated.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary

THE DOLLAR MEMBER.

Associate Editor Hermon Eldredge has this very sane suggestion in the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty, July 20th:

"One of our churches, which does not want to be mentioned until it makes a full success of its plan, has started a mission promotion program with the slogan of 'Every Member a Dollar Member for World Missions,' and 'the dollar member' is the heart of the plan. An effort is made to have every member become a 'dollar member' according to his ability. He can become a dollar-a-year man if that is the best he can accept. Or he can become a dollar-a-quarter-year or a dollar-a-month man. We are not informed of what might happen if someone wanted to be a dollar-an-hour or a minute man. At least, the plan has the virtue of getting all the people into it, and that is a great step forward if it can be measurably accomplished. Seventy-five per cent (?) of our members in all our Protestant churches give practically nothing at all to world missions. The writer asked a state superintendent his opinion of the number of people who were 'sold' on missions—interested enough so they would give if they were not 'promoted' or cornered and had to give to 'save their face.' He was uncertain as to the per cent but felt that our suggestion that ten per cent was 'sold' was too high. Something is fearfully wrong. In missions and in solving the problems of Prohibition and peace we must go back to the material of which the Kingdom of Heaven is made—children—and lay our foundations. The Sunday Schools of our churches are able to give more to world missions than the total we now raise, and at the same time be building for the future. We have failed in missions, in the promotion of peace and in solving the liquor question, and it is not to be wondered at that the president of a great American University (Yale) says that this generation of ours must 'pass on shamefacedly' our task to the younger generation."

Mr. Eldredge is eminently correct in declaring that our Sunday Schools are able to give more to World Missions than the total now given by the church. No money invested by church, Sunday School or individual has ever yielded such vast and rich returns as the money invested in Missions, and yet because the Mission task is so great, so far-reaching in scope and purpose and so thoroughly unselfish and spiritual, it is difficult, indeed, to get the men and the women, the boys and the girls whose names are on the church roll and on the Sunday School class roll to realize the worth, the merit and the might of Missions—that Missions were instituted by our Lord Christ, and that in his name and for his sake, Missions are carried on.

As is suggested in the above, there are those who could become dollar members of a missionary band, if not a dollar a week or a dollar a month, still a dollar member to the plan, purpose and program of our Lord through Missions to build up the Kingdom of Heaven on earth.

WHY THE S. S. SHOULD CULTIVATE MISSIONS.

By MISS OLIVE ANDERSON.

Why should the Sunday School contribute to Missions? Not alone to foreign but home missions? We call our Schools, Church Schools today and we have in them children, intermediates, young people and adults. Each has to be trained as they come up from one department to the other. So it is with the Missionary project. We have to train before we can contribute.

But some will say, "Oh, I do not believe in missions. We need all the money here in our own school." Yes, maybe so—but a church school or individual who isn't missionary falls far short. Did not Christ command to preach his gospel to every creature? Aren't we his disciples and must not we fulfill his mission to seek and save that which is lost unto the uttermost part of the earth? If we do not, we fail to catch the spirit of the Master who loved them and gave himself for them. We can always meet the needs of those for whom we are responsible, but it is easy to forget this. We even yield to the temptation sometimes by asking Cain's resentful question, "Am I my brother's keeper?" But we are commissioned representatives of the Lord Jesus Christ.

When we side-step our responsibilities, we are like the twelve disciples of old, when they asked Christ to send the multitudes away to get food for themselves, but Jesus' startling reply was, "They need not depart, give ye them to eat." The disciples protested that they had but five loaves of bread and two fishes. They were mistaken; that word but was their mistake. If they had just left that one word out, for they had these and Jesus also. To whatever we have is always added Jesus, for he has said, "Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the earth."

Several miles above Milton, Pa., when the ice was breaking up, a farmer got in one of his boats to pull it out of the river. A floating mass of ice struck it.

A neighbor seeing his danger, mounted his horse and with all speed, rode to Milton to tell the people. They all gathered with all the ropes they could procure and went out on the bridge. They could not tell at which point the farmer would pass under, so they put a rope down every three feet across. By and by the farmer was seen wet and cold standing in the boat half filled with water drifting down the swift current. When he saw the ropes dangling, he seized the nearest one, was drawn up and saved. Now one rope might not have answered the purpose.

Our pastors hang the rope of salvation from the pulpit, yet sinners who are present do not seem to get near it, but if young people, adult departments, and Sunday school classes will hang out ropes, Missions will certainly go forward. How many ropes are we hanging out? Do we each have one in our hand?—Richmond Christian Advocate.

MISSIONS AT ROSEMONT.

The work of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society at Rosemont is going nicely. As we are entering the last quarter of our year's work, we are checking up on what we have done through the year.

Our June meeting was very interesting. Although the day was warm we had an attendance of twenty-one, and we felt very comfortable in our church. At this meeting we completed the study of our foreign book: "Lady Fourth Daughter of China." Our devotional program was led by Mrs. H. C. Hedley. Mrs. M. Ferebee gave us a chapter from the "Guest Book," and Mrs. Bondurant gave a reading. We did not ask for our apportionment to be reduced this year, and although the money is a little slow coming in, we are praying that God will lay it upon the hearts of our members to do their best so that our financial obligation may be met. This society as well as all the other organizations at Rosemont, is supported by free-will offerings. At this meeting $20.00 was given to Missions. It was the desire of the society to continue meeting through the summer.

The meeting was closed with prayer after which a social hour was enjoyed and refreshments were served by Mrs. H. L. Bondurant.

MRS. J. F. MORGAN.

GETTING INTEREST.

"I can't get interested in missions," exclaimed a young lady petulantly, and, if truth be told, a bit superciliously, as she left one of our thrilling "Board" meetings in company with an older lady, presumably an aunt or an older relative.

We were near enough to hear her answer.

"No, dearie," came the pitying reply, "'tisn't to be expected you would—yet awhile. It's just like getting interested in a bank; you have to put in a little something first; and the more you put in the more interest—time or money or praying—it doesn't matter which. But something you have to put in, or you will never have any interest. Try it, dearie—just put in a little something and you're sure of interest."—Publisher Unknown.

Prayer is not overcoming God's reluctance; it is laying hold of his highest willingness.—Trench.

FROM BUDDHA TO CHRIST.

By EDWARD JAMES.

Four miles southwest of Nanking is the village of Shanghsinho (Upper New River). It is the center of the lumber industry of Nanking. The big rafts of 500,000 to 1,000,000 feet of lumber, floated down the Yangtse from Hankow or above, are anchored to the shore and gradually, piece by piece, in most laborious fashion, carried by sheer man power up on the river bank and into extensive yards. This has been the process for generations, and still is. One wonders when will the Chinese adopt modern methods of doing such heavy work by machinery? But that is neither here nor there for this story.

We had a rented chapel on the main street of this village of twenty thousand people—now we own our property. Sometimes we had a preacher stationed there, sometimes not. It was part of my district, and received such care as I could give it. The travel was by chair, donkey, wheelbarrow, but mostly on foot. Frequently I went for an afternoon preaching hour and fellowship with the pastor. Sometimes I walked out in the afternoon, had a long evening of work, slept there, and walked back to the city for breakfast and the day's work in Nanking.

One day the pastor said to me: "Have you noticed a little Buddhist temple about midway between the city and here? Yes? Well, there are three or four Hoshangs (Buddhist priests) in the temple, and one of them is earnestly studying the Bible. Perhaps he will become a Christian. Will you step into the temple on your return?"

"Gladly!" So I went to the temple and met Mr. Kim. He did not look promising. Clad in gray Buddhist robes, sallow, emaciated, coughing, he appeared to be near the last stages of the opium habit and tuberculosis.

He asked me if he could become a Christian. I assured him that if he were willing to pay the price. He was diligently studying the Bible, he said, and occasionally, furtively, visited the chapel for conversation with the pastor. He was persuaded, he said, that Buddhism and all this idol worship was wrong, but did not know how to escape it. His life would be endangered, he said, should it become known that he planned to become a Christian. Much in his favor were two facts: he was quite well educated, and he was desperately eager to escape from the thralldom of vice and superstition.

Illiterate Priests.

People who profess to know, tell us that a large proportion of the Buddhist priesthood is illiterate, lazy and vicious. Certainly one has seen many of them that answer to this description, with an occasional one that combines intelligence with self-respect. As a class they are the scorn and scoff of the people, except when their services are required. They very well illustrate the saying: "Those that make idols and worship them, become like them."

But Kim had heard and read the gospel message, and that sort of life was no longer possible for him. It was now simply a matter of ordinary human prudence in planning his release and escape. I encouraged him, and promised him a little room in the chapel, answered his questions about the Bible, Christ, the faith, the church, and promised him aid should he feel led to make the great renunciation.

The incubation period between the conception of a new aspiration and its birth into visible, active life depends upon many and incalculable conditions. During the first few weeks after the first meeting I saw Kim occasionally, and ventured to suggest to him that his day of grace apparently would soon be past unless he boldly made move. One day I found him at the chapel, hidden away in a little back room. The pastor had provided him with an outer garment, and a hat with a queue pinned to it to serve until his own scant hair should grow. From his very modest allowance the pastor was providing the necessary food.

And now Kim's real battle was to begin. He was under no delusions as to the opium habit. There could be no compromise; it was simply a question of how. The new life he sought included this freedom also. It was a hard fight, and he almost died. But by divine help and the sympathetic care of the pastor, the demon was exorcised, the habit was broken, and the appetite was conquered. And Kim entered upon a period of convalescence.

Poor fellow! He needed food, and plenty of it, and physical comfort to build up his shattered frame and make him a useful member of society. Is not this part of the redemptive message of the gospel? Kim came through pretty well, considering the wreck he had been.

Now came the question of self-support. He had neither capital nor experience in commercial life; he had neither the tools nor the physical strength to toil. But being a literary man, he could teach. So I made him an assistant in one of our city day schools. One day he asked me about baptism and membership in the church. Like Philip, the evangelist, I asked him about his faith in Jesus Christ, and he declared his faith in Jesus Christ as his Saviour. I baptized him into membership of the Christian Church.

Step by step he was brought out of the isolation, the rejection, the negativeness of the Buddhist priesthood into the fullness of life of the kingdom of God on earth. He became a self-supporting and self-respecting citizen, and desired to marry and have a home of his own, and thus at once and forever complete the process of abjuring the old life and of rehabilitating in the new. Martin Luther had felt and done the same thing. A couple of years after his escape from the temple, almost a hopeless opium wreck, Kim married a good woman. And the natural desire of his heart was satisfied with the coming of two children into their humble home.

Thus is the power of Jesus Christ shown, that he is able to save from the uttermost to the uttermost those who come unto God by him. Nothing less than a miracle of grace can take such a man as Kim was and make him what he became. This it is to be "born again," to be born from above. And this is the testimony of the mighty power of God in Christ.—Western Christian Advocate.

THE CRUCIBLE SERVICE.

The crucible is set and the golden and silver articles that have been given are being placed in it and made ready for the refining process. There are rings, chains and pins that have adorned the persons of many departed loved ones; there are articles which they have handled that have been hidden away for many years, but as the call came for the gold and silver to help in the great cause of Missions, they were brought out and gladly given.

Oh, dear, sainted ones who once owned these articles; we wonder if you can see them now as the refiner's fire melts and separates the dross and in some mysterious way they are transformed into money that will go to the ends of the earth so that the story of Jesus and his love may continue to be told to those who know him not. Though you are gone to the land from which there is no returning, you will yet speak through these treasures of yours which we have laid upon the altar to be used as the Master Refiner sees fit. Some day, in his own time, there will stand upon those shores souls who have been washed in the blood of the Lamb because these treasures have been given. You are rejoicing today in the presence of the Christ of Calvary, the Christ of Olivet, because you went through the Refiner's fire and were refined as silver is refined, and tried as gold is tried. You were chosen in the furnace of affliction.

So, today, we lay your treasures in the crucible that you may continue to speak; and we lay our own hearts and lives at the feet of our Christ and say in sweet submission, "as God wills," and in the hottest fire hold fast for we want to stand with you on that great day and we want others to stand with us because we have lived true. You did not live to yourselves, and you inspired us to a greater endeavor.

So, though we may pass through the seven-fold fire we will not say him "nay," for we know the dross must melt and pass away if we would come forth as he would have us to be. We know that the Master Refiner is watching over us in the refining process, and we want to say "Amen" to the whole will of God.

"Should we think it pleased such a loving heart for to cause us a moment's pain?"

'Tis not so, but that through the present cross

He should see an eternal gain.

So he waited there with a watchful eye,

And a love that is strong and sure;

And his gold did not suffer a bit more heat

Than was needed to make it pure."

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

GREETINGS FROM AFAR.

This week there gathered at Elon College, N. C., and Wadley, Ala., groups of fine young people from Congregational and Christian Churches. They are studying, playing and praying together with the hope of growing more noble and stronger characters. Many of them had never seen each other before, but will take from this conference the happiness of new friendships which will live through the years.

In other areas of the country similar groups have gathered, formed friendships and gone back to their homes with higher hopes than before they attended these conferences. Some of them have thought of other groups and have sent greetings to unseen friends scattered throughout the land. Such greetings were sent from the Craigville School held at Cape Cod, Mass., the first of July to the Elon and Wadley schools, and are as follows:

"Greetings! We, who are assembled at Craigville, salute you. We hope your spirits are as good as ours, after two days of solid rain.

"Our membership at Craigville this year is one hundred and twenty-three. Our students are housed in four different places. We have the Craigville Inn, the Chiquaquet Inn, the Annex to the latter, and the Faculty House. Our classes are held mostly in the Tabernacle on Tabernacle Hill, a hill-top nestled among the pines. The ocean is about a 10-minute walk from either Inn.

This year we have organized, for the first time in the history of Craigville, a Student Council comprising ten members, five girls and five boys; and in the name of the Craigville School through the Student Council, we wish you a successful conference.

"CRAIGVILLE CONFERENCE STUDENT COUNCIL,
"HOWARD PIERCE, President,
"AVIS CHASE, Secretary."

A CREED.

There is a destiny that makes us brothers:

None goes his way alone:
All that we send into the lives of others
Comes back into our own.
I care not what his temples or his creeds,
One thing holds firm and fast—
That into his fateful heap of days and deeds,
The soul of man is cast.

A CHALLENGE TO YOUTH OF AMERICA.

[This item is taken from Church Management. Information concerning this project can be had by writing the editor of this page at Waverly, Va. The pamphlets referred to cost 20c each—Editor]

The Federal Council's Department of International Justice and Good-will is launching a Three-Point Peace Project for the youth of America. Young people are invited to do three things: To study the peace and war problem; to interview an adult regarding the cause and the cure of war; to write an essay of not more than 800 words on the results of the interview.

Youth should know the facts regarding present-day world problems. These facts, presented in a unique and readable style, are now available in a new pamphlet of more than 100 pages, entitled "Men Conquer Guns," issued by the Federal Council of Churches. This pamphlet deals with such questions as disarmament, the Japan-China controversy, the new German situation, the League of Nations, the traffic in arms, the relation of the United States to the world's peace machinery, international security, and the stake of religion in the peace movement. The two colored cover pages of this pamphlet represent a unique and interesting departure from the average run of peace literature. The graphs, too, are both interesting and exceedingly enlightening.

The second feature of the Federal Council's peace project for youth is the interviewing of an adult on the war problem. A special interview card has been prepared for this purpose. The young person holding the interview is asked to prepare an essay of not more than 800 words on the answers thus recorded explaining why he or she is or is not in agreement with the opinions expressed by the one who is interviewed. Every young man or woman who returns the card and essay to the Federal Council will receive a beautifully engraved Certificate of Merit, which pictures symbolically the historical pageant of the evolution of world peace and is suitable for framing. It will bear the signatures of Sir Eric Drummond, Secretary-General of the League of Nations; the Right Honorable Arthur Henderson, President of the World Disarmament Conference; Ambassador Hugh Gibson, Ambassador Norman H. Davis, and Mr. Mary E. Woolley, American delegates to the Conference; and Dr. Albert W. Beaven, President of the Federal Council of the Churches.

Cash awards will be given to the authors of the fifty winning essays. These, of course, are in addition to the Certificates of Merit. The author of the best essay will receive a cash award of $25.00. There will be a second award of $15.00, and a third award of $10.00; and forty-seven awards of $5.00 each. Each essay must be accompanied by the interview card and a sealed envelope containing the name and address of the write and should reach the office of the Federal Council on or before November 15th. Announcement of the winners will be made, if possible, on January 1, 1934.

It is believed that this is one of the most unique and interesting projects of peace education ever presented to the youth of America. All communications in connection with this project, should be sent to Walter W. Van Kirk, Federal Council of the Churches, 105 East 22nd St., New York.

SUCCESS.

If you want a thing bad enough
To go out and fight for it,
Work day and night for it,
Give up your time and your peace and your sleep
for it—

If only desire of it
Makes you quite mad enough
Never to tire of it:
Makes you hold all other things tawdry and cheap
for it;

If life seems all empty and useless without it,
And all that you scheme and you dream is about it—

If gladly you'll sweat for it,
Fret for it,
Plan for it,
Lose all your terror of God or man for it;
If you'll simply go after that thing that you want,
With all your capacity,
Strength and sagacity,
Faith, hope and confidence, stern pertinacity,

If neither cold poverty, famished and gaunt,
Nor sickness nor pain
Of body or brain
Can turn you away from the thing that you want,
If dogged and grim you besiege and beset it,
You'll get it!

HOW FAR DOES NATURE REVEAL GOD?

Daily Readings for this Week.

Monday—Nature Proclaims a Creator. Prov. 8:22-36.
Tuesday—Invisible Made Known. Rom. 1:18-23.
Wednesday—The Power of God. Isa. 40:12-17, 25, 26.
Thursday—Nature of God's Witness. Acts 14:8-18.
Friday—Man Has Divine Qualities. Matt. 7:9-11.
Saturday—The Supreme Revelation. John 1:1-18.

PROGRAM.

Instrumental Prelude—Choose one of the following: "Were I a Bird" (Henselt); "Butterfly" (Grieg); "Flower Song" (Lange).

Call to Worship—

Blessed of the Lord be his land,
For the precious things of heaven, for the dew,
And for the deep that coucheth beneath,
And for the precious things of the fruits of the sun,
And for the precious things of the growth of the moons,
And for the chief things of the ancient mountains,
And for the precious things of the everlasting hills,
And for the precious things of the earth and the fulness thereof. (Deut. 33:13-16.)

Hymn—"Praise to God and Thanks We Bring."

Prayer—Our loving Father, we would open our souls to all the messages that nature can bring to us. We are grateful for the world of beauty around us, and we find inspiration in the voice of wood and mountain and sea, which speak of thy glory. May the trees have for us a gospel of patience, endurance and beauty. May our lives grow in strength and fair proportions, like trees beside living waters. So shall we praise thee forever more.—Amen.

Presentation of the Topic—

Hymn—"Fairest Lord Jesus."

Benediction—

Additional Hymns—"This is My Father's World," "God Speaks to Us in Bird and Song," "God of the Earth, the Sky, the Sun," "For the Beauty of the Earth."

Assign the following topics to young people who are lovers of each of these particular aspects of nature:

1. The flowers speak to me of God.
2. The birds speak to me of God.
3. The trees speak to me of God.
4. The rocks speak to me of God.
5. The heavens speak to me of God.
6. Ask the pastor to speak on the topic, "Jesus, the Perfect Revelation of God."

Is nature a complete revelation of God? One word in our topic indicates that it is not, as wonderful as it is. That one word is "far." "How far" does nature reveal God? God has given to the world three great revelations of himself: Nature, the Bible, and the life of Jesus.

There are certain elements of nature such as storms, floods, volcanoes and the like that puzzle us when we attempt to reconcile them with our idea of a beneficent God. When we know more about our world, and understand God's laws more perfectly we shall no doubt be able to live in

LESSON V.—JULY 30, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Jehovah is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?"—Psa. 27:1.

LESSON TEXT: Judges 7:1-7, 16-21.

Unequal Odds.

The odds were against the people of God. They had 32,000 men; the Midianites had 135,000 men. It is a parable of life. As the church faces the world the odds are against the church, that is, locked at from the human standpoint. Think of the odds against the early church when it started out in the Roman world! It was so apparently weak that it was pathetic. Think of the odds against good people as they undertake any reform! From the human standpoint it always looks like an impossible thing. If a man dealt only with material and physical forces, he might well be discouraged.

Quality, Not Quantity.

But it was not even a matter of 32,000 people of God. 22,000 of these were fearful and lacking in faith, and there were only 10,000 available for the battle. God cannot use a man who is afraid or lacking in faith. The battles of the Lord demand courage and faith.

Weakness in Strength.

There is always the danger that we shall misinterpret our weaknesses and strengths. The weakness of the Israelites was their strength. There was a danger that they would think of themselves more highly than they ought to think. There was a danger that they would think that they were doing the thing, and doing it without the Lord's help. We are too prone to think of the strength of our churches in terms of size of structure, number of members, amount of budget, etc. Very often when a church or an individual thinks themselves to be strong, they are weak. And often those who seem weak in their own strength, are strong in the Lord.

Unconscious Testing.

God often tests us when we are unconscious of it. He told Gideon that he would "try the people" in a simple and searching, but unconscious test. The people were to march down by the water, and those who bent over and drank while on their knees were to be rejected; those who took the water up in their hands and lapped it up as they went on, were to be taken. The test was rather unique. It was a test of readiness or eagerness—these who lapped as they went were eager and ready for the fight. Furthermore, unlike those who knelt down to drink were not as alert—they could have been caught napping by an enemy on the opposite bank. Those who would fight God's battles must be both eager and alert.

The Three Hundred.

The Israelites had an army of 32,000 men to begin with. When the final test had been put to them, they had only three hundred. The average may be a little high, but as a matter of fact that is about the proportion of the members of the church who actually do any fighting in the army of the Lord. The average church could lose about two-thirds of its members and not be very much weakened so far as spiritual power and financial support are concerned. Every church member ought to ask himself as to which group of Gideon's army he really belongs—the 32,000, the 10,000, or the 300.

Of course, there is the lesson that we must not become discouraged at fewness in numbers. Three hundred men and women, young men and maidens with God can put to rout a whole army. One need not be concerned about how many there are on his side if he knows that he is on God's side. One with God is a majority. It would seem that for the present at least the majority are for the "wets." But let every man and woman who believes in the cause of temperance stand by his convictions, for God is on our side and eventually we shall win. The present crisis is only a battle; it is not a campaign.

Lamps and Pitchers.

The three hundred did not carry swords and spears. They carried lamps and pitchers and trumpets. The battles of the Lord are not fought with material forces or physical weapons. The Kingdom of God, says Paul, is righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Spirit. The weapons of the church of Jesus Christ are primarily and essentially spiritual. Sometimes it tests our faith to believe that we can win with these spiritual weapons. But if we cannot win with these weapons we cannot win at all.

The Sword of the Lord and of Gideon.

We are workers together. Gideon could not have done anything without God. But God could not have done anything without Gideon. We need God and God needs us. God works through men, and when men allow God to work through them God accomplishes the seemingly impossible.

Every Man in His Place.

"And they stood every man in his place round about the camp." That was the secret of the victory. It is the secret of victory today. If every member of the church stood in his or her place, if every member was faithful to that which had been committed to him or her, the forces of evil would be put to rout, and the church would be victorious. Are you standing in your place? Have you determined that the line shall not break where you are standing?

THE HEAVENS REVEAL GOD.

The spacious firmament on high, With all the blue ethereal sky, And spangled heavens, a shining frame Their great Original proclaim. And unwearied sun, from day to day, Does his Creator's power display, And publishes to every land The word of an Almighty hand.

Soon as the evening shades prevail The moon takes up the wondrous tale, And mightily to the listening earth Repeats the story of her birth; Whilst all the stars that round her burn, And all the planets in their turn, Confirm the tidings as they roll, And spread the truth from pole to pole.

What though in solemn silence all Move round the dark terrestrial ball; What though no real voice or sound Amidst their radiant orbs be found; In reason's ear they all rejoice, And utter forth a glorious voice, Forever singing as they shine, "The hand that made us is divine!" —Joseph Addison.

PLENTY OF ROOM.

"There is plenty to do. Do not wait for a church to call you as pastor or evangelist. Just go to some needy town, village or country community, go to work with your own hands, earn your living, like Paul, preach the Gospel without charge, and in time you will have a work that others will covet. There is plenty of room without crowding those who are already doing something for the Lord."—Selected.

AMERICAN STANDARD BIBLES.

Authorized and Edited by American Revision Committee, and Published by Thomas Nelson & Sons.

These Bibles contain the Concise Bible Dictionary which forms the helps to these Teachers' Bibles. FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

"The opening of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."—Psalm 119:130.

MONDAY.

THE SYMBOL OF THE HIGH PLACE.

"He setteth me upon my high places."—Psa. 18:38.

"I will set him on high because he hath known my name."—Psa. 91:14.

The Bible has a lot to say about "high places." As far as possible all altars and places of worship were built on a mountain or on a high place, and all worshipping was done in a high place, even if the altar consisted of no more than a pile of stones. In level countries they built hills and towers for these high places. In the cities they built towers for worship. This was for the purpose of getting as close to heaven as possible and storm the Almighty in the starry mansions of the skies. Even in the times of Jesus they followed this custom. Jesus himself chose mountain tops for his talks with God.

We have passed on these days from altars on high places, and we know now that God is just as near in the levels as he is on the high places, for he dwells in us. But, nevertheless, it is a high place of the soul that touches the infinite. Salvation is from above, and his lifting is from above, and we are climbing higher and higher toward his standard.

Prayer—Dear Father, we lift up our eyes unto thee from whom cometh our help, and in the pasture of thy fields help us feed upon thy eternal food and drink of thy eternal waters. This we ask for today and forever.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

OUR REWARD.

"Who can alter the mighty acts of the Lord? Who can show forth all his praise . . . He that doeth righteousness at all times."—Psa. 106:2-3.

"The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life."—Rom. 6:23.

We are not promised riches, neither freedom from disease and suffering; but for each loss we are promised compensation and fruit of our labors in riches of heart-life, in a happy conscience, in knowing the Lord and his ways, and the ability to so live that others will be compelled to know that we walk with him and they too may walk with him.

There is "glory and honor and peace in every man that worketh good" (Rom. 2:10), and "If ye do these things ye shall never stumble" (II. Peter 1:10).

Prayer—O Lord, as thou dost know our every thought, and that we are as weak as dust, fill our pathway with good, strengthen us against temptation, and lead us to do good. In Christ's name, we ask it.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

BIBLE CONTRADICTIONS.

"Grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."—II. Pet. 3:18.

Speaking of his enemies, David said, "I hate them with perfect hatred;" Christ said, "Love your enemies and do good to them that despitefully use you." This seems to be a contradiction, and many such contradictions are found in the Scriptures. Many honest inquirers cannot reconcile them and are puzzled.

Of course, these are contradictions, but it is in words only. There are no contradictions in truth. The latter ways are the new ways, and are the result of the development of Christian ideals. The people of David's time thought it was correct to hate enemies. That was the only revelation they seemed to have. But the more humanity has come along in the thought of God and the Son, the greater has been the revelation. The longer we walk with Christ, the more we know of him and the nearer we become like him. History tells us that certain facts of science used to be true, but recent discoveries have so far transcended them that we now laugh at the foolishness of them. Can it not also be true in religion?

Prayer—Our Father, we pray thee for a studious mind and heart, that we may walk with thee a little farther each day and grow more deeply in thy spirit and nature.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

A HARD LESSON.

"Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord."—Rom. 12:19; Heb. 10:30.

Though it has been many centuries since humanity has known the Lord, one lesson in Christian experience but very few have learned, and that is that revenge, or retaliation, is not of the spirit of Christ; is un-Christian, is sinful and of the devil; that, as Christians, we must learn not to retaliate or pay back the evil done in its kind. We must learn that all sin carries in it the seeds of its own punishment, and in due time God will take the vengeance, and he will recompense us for our good behavior.

To yield to the temptation to "get even" with one may do a great deal of harm to the common good. We hear it in words or see it in spirit almost every day. A member of our legislature once said to an enemy of his bill: "I will get even with you; I will not vote for yours," or words to that effect. This particular bill was an important one and very desirable for the district for which it was intended, so much so that the people marveled and exclaimed, "What a pity!"

What right has anyone, because of a personal grudge, to take vengeance by standing in the way of progress and the common good? What right has one to do another an unkindness as a return for evil? "Recompense no man evil for evil." Christ's way is to "turn the other cheek."

Prayer—Our Father, help us to present ourselves to thee daily for cleansing, and for right thinking in all our doing, that Christ's way may be manifest in us all the way long.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE BEAUTY THAT WILL NOT FADE.

"How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things!"

Lives there a man or woman who does not admire beauty in others, and covet it for him or herself? The possessor of beauty too often yields to vanity and spends hours in self-admiration. Such beauty, however rare it may be, the tooth of time will not spare. All flesh is as grass, and the rarest beauties are merely flowers in the field; even before the grass has withered, the flower has begun to fade.

But there is a beauty that time cannot wither. Let your imagination play for a little while on the names of famous beauties. Then call to mind such names as Florence Nightingale, Mary Moffatt, or Mary Slessor. The portraits of their faces we have forgotten, but the portraits of their characters are burned into our souls. The world can never forget what they did! Their beauty was not localized in their features; their very feet were beautiful. Covet earnestly the beauty that comes of service, for whosoever will may attain it.

Prayer—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

SATURDAY.

THE PERIL OF INSINCERITY.

"Lying lips are abomination to the Lord."—Prov. 12:22-28.

Disregard for the truth is not only a blow aimed at the foundations upon which society rests. It is utterly demoralizing and destructive, so far as the character of the individual is concerned. Every act that a man performs has what we may call a reflex influence. We imbibe by degrees the character of the actions we perform. A man may not be insincere and deceitful by nature, but if he allows himself, under stress of circumstances, to handle the truth recklessly, he may live to see the day when he will become as hypocritical as the Pharisees, and as malicious as well.

We tend to become like what we do. And it is just here that even our "white" and polite lies stand convicted and condemned. If we practice insincerity, even in small measure, we become insincere. If we deal hypocritically, we turn to hypocrites. If we live and act a lie, before we realize we become a living, walking lie, despised of good men and unworthy of aught but punishment in the sight of God.

Perhaps Solomon's words concerning lying lips sound harsh and cruel—for who has not at one time or another yielded to the sin of misrepresentation? At the same time, Solomon's words, viewed dispassionately and in the light of human experience, are but God's mercy given us as a gracious warning. The pathway of truth leads safely to the height of honor and of righteousness; but insincerity and deceitfulness are chasms the depth and danger of which are beyond human comprehension.

Prayer—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

SUNDAY.

THE LIGHT THAT GOD GIVES.

"Let us walk in the light of the Lord."—Isa. 2:1-5.

Progress of men and nations is the logic of God's creative power. The whole world of nature, human and otherwise, moves. Nothing remains static. Trees grow higher. Rivers change their courses. Mountains crumble. Plains are populated. Knowledge increases and nations become neighbors. It is so with everything; all suffers change.

Frontiers, too, are going. We are no longer pioneers, but tourists, on the path of life. The only frontiers that remain are the frontiers of mind. In the realm of thought we are never caught up with progress. But there is still adventure ahead. Great sermons to preach, great books to write, great enterprises to dream, great music to compose! We may study history, but it is greater to make history. We may sing the epics of yesterday, but it is more thrilling to write the epic of tomorrow.

Columbus sailed the uncharted sea—so are we to set sail on "Life's uncharted sea." The sea of life is restless. We have made it so with our inventive processes. Our progress, swift in its flight, has disturbed the calm of the waves. Let us face the future with the hero's resolve. Let us take the highway of mind with God, and with earnest purpose labor to establish his kingdom. To bring in the reign of righteousness—this is true progress and that, too, is inevitable! God does not change, but he changes things, and always for the better.

Prayer—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

VICTORS OR VICTIMS!

By RAY VAUGHN.

"Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good."—Romans 12:21.

Life has but two classes of folk—the victors and the victims. The victors are those who have overcome the hindrances in life; the victims are those who have been overcome by the hindrances in life. Life offers no other alternatives.

The admonition contained within the text, while originally uttered concerning the matter of retaliation, is equally wise as regards every detrimental force in life. We are not to be overcome by these forces, we are to overcome them. We are to be victors and not victims.

Three thoughts claim our attention:

The Difference Between the Victor and the Victim.

The one overcomes his environment, the other is overcome by his environment. One night a group of us sat talking on the veranda of a hotel in a little town in Missouri. Among the group was an old gentleman, near the three-score-and-ten mark. The old gentleman remarked that he had never been out of that particular county. As we talked, a modern passenger train went thundering by on the track, which lay but a few rods in front of the hotel, speeding across the countryside to other towns and distant cities. With means at his very door to carry him to the outside world, this old gentleman was satisfied to remain within the narrow limitations of one county. With abundant opportunities to enlarge their horizons and expand the limitations of their environments, many people are satisfied to remain victims of narrow and inadequate environments.

Another difference between the victor and the victim lies in the fact that one overcomes his failures, while the other is overcome by his failures. Abraham Lincoln was defeated nine times for public office. He also failed in business and lost his property. But in the face of defeat and failure he eventually achieved the highest office with in the gift of the nation and undying fame.

The victor overcomes his doubts; the victim is overcome by his doubts. James said: "He that doubteth is like the surge of the sea driven by the wind and tossed." Great things are not accomplished by doubters. When his sailors doubted and begged him to turn back, Columbus said: "Sail on, sail on!" The progress made in every field of human endeavor has been made, not by those who said, "It can't be done," but by those who said, "It can be done!" Lindbergh may have had some doubts that morning when he took off from Roosevelt Field on his flight across the Atlantic, but he did not allow them to overcome him. Through the long, lonely hours of that perilous flight he kept faith. The darkness of the night passed, near noon land was espied to the east, a few more hours and the flight was over, a flight that bound two continents closer together and that was made possible because a young man soared above his doubts.

Still another difference between the victor and the victim lies in the fact that one overcomes his self, the other is overcome by his self. An aged man was asked why he complained so at eventide of pain and weariness. Said the man: "I have so much every day to do. I have two falcons to tame, two hares to keep from running away, two hawks to manage, a serpent to confine, a lion to chain, and a sick man to tend and wait upon." Then he explained thus to his surprised questioner: "The two falcons are my eyes, which I must guard diligently; the two hares are my feet, which I must keep from walking in the ways of sin; the two hawks are my hands, which I must train to work; the serpent is my tongue, which I must keep ever bridled lest it speak unseemly; the lion is my heart, with which I have a continual fight lest evil come out of it; and the sick man is my whole body, which is always needing my watchfulness and care."

The Determinants of the Success of the Victor and the Failure of the Victim.

The one has a true conception of life; the other has a false conception of life. One's destiny in life depends largely upon one's conception of life. One who has the right conception of life will want to be a victor in life; one who has an erroneous conception will not likely be possessed with a burning desire to overcome the detrimental forces in life—he will be content to remain a victim of them.

To some people life is irksome. Many are living because they have never died, not because they are getting any real enjoyment out of life; others refuse to die because they have found something for which to live, something that so thrills them that they find life really worth living. To some people life is like a bit of loose change. And they proceed to "blow it in" on a good time. Their philosophy is that of the Epicurean, "Eat, drink, and be merry, for tomorrow we die." To some, life is only a matter of mud. Their conception is stated in the words of one who said: "We begin in mud; we shall end in mud." To them, man is only "an accidental lump of something."

Life is more than meat and drink. We are to live our lives to the glory of God. Life is more than mud. Man is of the earth earthy; but he is also of heaven heavenly. There are unmistakable evidences as to the origin and destiny of man, and these evidences bear testimony to the fact that man is more than mud or "an accidental lump of something."

The success of the victor and the failure of the victim are due to the fact that the one measures life from within, while the other measures life from without. The one is concerned about the depth of his life, the other is concerned about the length of his life. Measuring life from without, they are more concerned about what they can get out of the world than about what they can give out of their lives to enrich the world. Measuring life from within, they are more concerned about their statures than about their souls. They work to live, rather than live to do good work in the world.

A third reason for the success of the victor and the failure of the victim lies in the fact that the one has a hold on divine power, while the other has not that power. He who would be victorious in life needs him, through whom all things can be done, Jesus Christ. He is the only dynamic that can empower man to overcome all the detrimental forces in life. Without Christ in our lives we are powerless to become victors in the full sense of the word. The Christ-filled life is the victorious life. Peter was victorious because his life had been touched by Christ. Matthew left all to follow Christ and through him became more than a conqueror. Paul's life, transformed by the power of Christ, was a life of glorious victory.

The Destinies of the Victor and the Victim.

The life of the one shall be full, the life of the other shall be empty. The one, dying, shall be as he that liveth; the other, living, shall be as he that dieth. The one shall face the future with hope; the other shall face the future with despair.

E. C. Baird tells of walking one summer afternoon through a park where a number of old men were gathered, whiling away the time in conversation. Among them was one who was pitifully feeble, whose hands and arms shook constantly. "I am tired of living," said he in a quavering voice, "and yet I am afraid to die. To me, death is a deep, dark chasm—and I am afraid to enter into it."

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The dry weather still continues. It is making it hard on the matrons who plan and serve the meals. Gardens dried up and practically no vegetables to eat.

The peach orchards in the sand hills of North Carolina are very kind to us this year. They have already given us two truck loads of peaches to can and will give us one more. Our Orphanage family peeled, sliced and canned 350 gallons of peaches last Saturday. It was one busy day, and everybody worked but "father."

To peel 75 bushels of peaches and pack them in cans in one day with a bunch of little children shows you that our little folks know how to turn out a lot of work in one day when it is necessary to be done.

It is interesting to watch a crowd of children work with a lot of enthusiasm and all in a fine humor. I wish our church folks could visit us some time when we are canning and see all the little folks at work at one time. I feel sure that they would be happy that they have an opportunity to have a part in supporting an institution that is giving a happy home to fatherless children and training them for their life's work.

Our income this year has been far less than the expenses. Suppose that the church had called YOU to be superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, and you had accepted, and you had a hundred children to look to you for the necessities of life, and the churches and Sunday Schools would fail to be liberal enough in their support to enable you to meet your bills at the end of the month, after you had cut every expense possible and did your best to stretch a dollar bill far enough to make it pay a two-dollar account. Would you get blue?

"My friend," said one, whose face was all aglow, "why don't you walk on the bridge of faith? It spans the chasm as a rainbow of wondrous beauty. I am going that way in a little while—but I am going with a glad song of hope in my heart."

"Alas," said the other, "there is no such bridge for me."

Said Mr. Baird: "As I went on my way I carried with me two pictures: the despair of the man who faced the gloom of the chasm. The hope of the man who faced the glow of the rainbow."

Life has but two classes of folk—the victors and the victims. We must determine for ourselves to which class we shall belong. We are the ones who determine our fate. William Henley, a young Englishman, was confined in an Edinburgh hospital facing the possibility of an operation that would cost him his other leg, one having been amputated a few years before because of tuberculosis of the bone. He was a stranger in Edinburgh with no friends to visit him. But as he lay there penniless, friendless, helpless, crippled, suffering, he wrote these words:

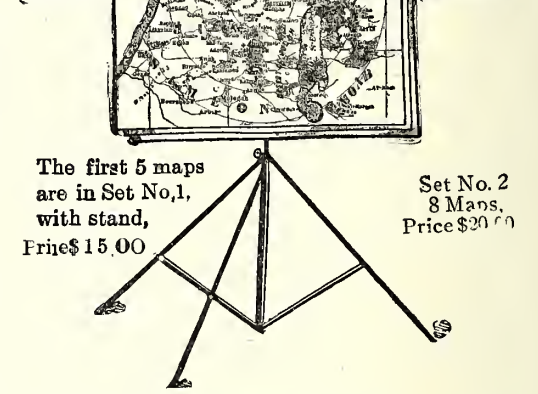

"It matters not how strait the gate,
How charged with punishment the scroll;
I am the master of my fate—
I am the captain of my soul."

May it be ours to march with the victors.—The Christian-Evangelist.

I am profitably engaged in reading the Bible. Take all of this Book upon reason that you can, and the balance by faith, and you will live and die a better man.—Abraham Lincoln.

MONTICELLO.

Sunday, July 16th, brought a series of evangelistic services at Monticello Christian Church. Rev. William Redd Turner (recent graduate of Vanderbilt University, and who is on an evangelistic mission this summer), assisted the pastor in these services. Mr. Turner's sermons on vital things of the Christian faith and belief were received each night by good audiences.

Besides the reconsecration of many members of the church, fourteen made a profession for the first time. At the closing communion service, nineteen united with this church, six coming by letter and thirteen on profession of faith. God has seemed close to us in these days, and we pray for a continued outpouring of his spirit upon his church.

UNION, N. C.

Revival services at Union Christian Church, Alamance, began on the first Sunday in July, and continued through the following Sunday.

On Monday after the first Sunday, Rev. Jos. E. McCauley, of Richmond, Va., reached us and preached for us until the close of the meeting. His messages were very helpful and much appreciated.

There was good attendance and interest from the beginning till the close of the meeting. At the close of the meeting, five members were received into the church upon confession of faith, and the same were baptized.

We thank our heavenly Father for blessings bestowed.

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING.

ELON COLLEGE, founded by the Christian Church in 1889, has fully justified the faith and hope of its founders during its 42 years of operation. Its graduates from the four-year course leading to a bachelor's degree, number 980, now living, 122 of whom are in the Christian Ministry and full-time Christian service. The majority of these are members of our own denomination. In addition, 449 are in educational work and are an active influence in the lay leadership of the Christian Church.

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING, and the definite religious atmosphere of the College, provide the very best facilities available for training for religious leadership, and offer the Church its finest opportunity to train the young people of the denomination to assume active leadership both in the ministry and laity of the local churches.

OBITUARIES

PASCHAL.

Whereas, our Father has taken home to himself our friend and fellow laborer, Mrs. W. A. Paschal, who died May 21, 1933, and

We, the members of Bethlehem Church and the Ladies' Aid Society desire to express our devotion to her, our appreciation of her worthy life, and our distress at the loss sustained by her departure; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we bow in submission to the will of our heavenly Father, remembering that "He doeth all things well."

2. That in her death, Bethlehem Church and the Ladies' Aid Society have lost a consecrated member, the community a loyal friend, and her home a loving wife and faithful mother.

3. That we extend to the bereaved family our deepest sympathy and may the memory of their sainted dead be a blessed inspiration.

4. That these resolutions be made a part of our minutes, a copy be sent to the family, and a copy to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

MRS. J. M. STORY,
MRS. ROY C. KERNODLE,
MRS. J. D. SIMPSON, Committee.

HARRIS.

Today, July 2nd, at the Pleasant Grove Christian Church, we laid to rest the body of our brother, Isom D. Harris, who died Friday morning, at 10 A. M., at the hospital in Lafayette, Ala. He was stricken one week before with appendicitis, and died from the effects of an operation.

Bro. Harris was 75 years old, and had been a member of Pleasant Grove Church for about 41 years. He lived all of his life on the old homestead upon which he was born.

Bro. Harris was very generous in helping young men and others to do good in life. He was a lovable character. He always was glad to read "The Christian Sun," and was a constant subscriber to his church paper.

He leaves to mourn their loss, his wife, a stepson, and two adopted daughters, this writer.

VOLUME LXXXV.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, AUGUST 3, 1933.

NUMBER 31.

.. THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY ..

Marriages and Divorces.—

The number of marriage ceremonies performed in the United States during 1932 numbered 981,759. This is the first time in twenty-one years that the number has fallen below a million, and is less by 7.5 per cent than there were recorded the previous year. Divorces also had a drop, falling off 12.7 per cent over the previous year to 160,329. Possibly too few marriages during the year, but certainly still too many divorces.

Hans Knows How.—

From a contemporary comes the following: "There is one place where the German intellect shines supreme. No other country has yet been able to handle the dirigible with success. Both the United States and England have paid heavily for their lack of knowledge in this particular field. There are no German dirigible disasters. The testimony in the case of the loss of the Akron appears to indicate that a German pilot would have brought the huge vessel through to safety. It looks like the rest of the world will have to depend upon Hans and Fritz to manage the Zeppelin.

Our Christian World.—

According to figures given in the Lutheran World Almanac, there are in the world at present 558,027,965 Christians, comprising approximately one-fourth of the world's population. Of this number, 83,624,772 are in North America, and a greater part of the 280-odd million are in Europe. The remainder of the world's population is divided among other religions as follows: Confucionists and Taoists, 17.77 per cent; Hindus, 11.65 per cent; Mohammedans, 11.09 per cent; Buddhists, 6.87 per cent. The other one-fourth of the world's population either has no religion, or is scattered among comparatively small groups.

White Lightning and Red.—

Red lightning, though seldom reported as causing forest fires, differs in no way from the destructive white lightning. White flashes are a greater fire hazard than the red kind simply because of atmospheric conditions responsible for the difference in color. In rainless air, we are told by Dr. W. J. Humphreys, of the United States Weather Bureau, electric discharges owe their light entirely to the two gasses, oxygen and nitrogen, and are, therefore, white or bluish white. An electric discharge through heavy rain, however, may dissociate some of the watery vapor along its path and thus produce, in addition to the light of oxygen and nitrogen, that of hydrogen, which is a brilliant red. Red lightning, coming only through rain, usually strikes wet objects, naturally reducing the liability of a fire. White lightning, on the other hand, is apt to strike dry substances which would kindle easily, and thus the fire hazard is greatly increased.

Gold Mining in the Philippines.—

Within the past few years gold-mining has become an item of importance in the Philippines, and "during the next ten years, if not the next five, Luzon is to win her real fame as a gold-field," The American Chamber of Commerce Journal tells us. It is reported that $3,500,000 worth of fine gold was shipped from the islands in 1931, and this amount was probably much increased last year. The New York Times quotes Dwight Davis, the then Governor General as saying: "The principal mines have positive reserves blocked out that will keep them profitably engaged for many years. These mines employ a large number of people, and the region surrounding Banguio was the one bright spot on the economic horizon in the islands." There is now pending in the islands the adoption of the proposal for independence submitted them by the United States Congress, and this measure may be vitally affected by the increasing gold demand.

Brass Tacks.—

The dry-goods counter is responsible for the phrase "brass tacks." Before the days of automatic measuring machinery such as the up-to-date dry-goods store now has, the ribbon or fabric salesman used the end of his out-stretched right arm as the measure of a yard, bringing the other hand back to his nose. This method was sometimes referred to as "smelling a yard." It is told that it was a Pennsylvania Dutchman who first awoke to the fact that a clerk with a short arm and a long nose was a decided asset to the dry-goods counter. Purchasers must have noticed the same thing, for later it became the custom to nail a yardstick on the edge of the counter. This proving cumbersome, the stick was in time replaced by a row of brass tacks nailed to the counter, measuring a yard and fractions thereof. After this method was adopted, the clerk who attempted to "smell a yard" was looked upon with suspicion and was told in no uncertain terms to "get down to brass tacks."

"Who is General Johnson?"—

Many have doubtless asked this question since General Hugh Samuel Johnson was appointed as director of the National Recovery Administration, and there-by became the "un-official" chairman of the board of every major industrial corporation in the United States. General Johnson was born in 1882 of Scotch-Irish parents at Fort Scott, Kansas, but was soon carried via the "covered wagon" route to Oklahoma Territory, where he later attended Oklahoma Normal School. When the Spanish-American war broke out, he tried to run away from home and enlist, but was haled back and, as a compensation possibly, sent to West Point. He graduated with an inconspicuous standing near the middle of his class. Two years later he married, and afterwards studied law at the University of California and was admitted to the bar. After the San Francisco earthquake, in 1906, he, as a lieutenant of cavalry, was made quartermaster of the army relief corps. He also served in the Philippines and with Pershing in the futile chase of Pancho Villa through the sagebrush of Mexico. In 1916 he was a captain of General Crowder's staff, and it was here that he first gained fame as the author of the selective draft law. He is described as being gruff, liking his own way, being impatient with those who see things differently, and sometimes domineering. These characteristics, we are told by his friends, grow from a desire to accomplish things. They are said to cover both kindness and a pervasive desire to see that fairness is done. In speaking of his present job, General Johnson says: "Theoretically, if all would pull together we could do this job tomorrow, and if we did it tomorrow that would be the end of this depression."

Nudity and Indecency.—

To the clean and proper-minded there is nothing inherently nasty or indecent about nudity. There is, however, something both nasty and indecent about the commercial and sensational exploitation of nudity, and it is on this ground that one must challenge the cheap hypocrisy of the so-called "art school" at the Century of Progress World's Fair, in which, as the papers report, one pays a twenty-five cent fee for admission as a "student" to the "art class," where practically nude women are said to be posed. The presentation of a pencil and sketch pad to a "student" only adds to the hypocrisy. We do not refer to the incident from any feeling that there is much hope of furthering a wholesome attitude toward sex and nudity by invoking the powers of police and censorship. The cure for the indecency and the hypocrisy in this sphere lies deeper, and it is to be found not in prurient sensationalism, but in the development of a wholesome attitude, and in furthering such effective protest as would make such exploitation impossible. The purpose of such an absurd arrangement is indecent, and it rests upon a psychology of indecency; but, after all, purposes can be changed only through enlightened and progressive attitudes, and not by narrow censorship, nor by the sort of prudishness that considers nudity in itself either evil or indecent. Merely with honest regard for the consistencies of progress those who are responsible for the Chicago Fair ought to eliminate this and all such side-shows that cater to a morbid and indecent spirit. If such a thing be justified or necessary in the carrying on of a World's Fair, let it be upon a plain and open basis without any hypocritical association of the thing with "art."—Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Rev. George D. Owen, pastor of the church at Ormond, Fla., has been preaching at the Asylum Avenue Baptist Church, in Hartford Conn. This church and two Congregational Churches unite in these services during July and August.

Chaplain H. E. Rountree, U. S. Navy, is now on the U. S. S. Whitney, San Diego, Cal., where he anticipates being located for some time. The Chaplain writes: "We are very pleased with California. Everything is amazing and most things are in extremes. The climate is cool and even the architecture is attractive. Fruits and flowers are in abundance."

The church at Fort Myers, Fla., being far removed from the Young People's Conferences, held a Conference of their own at Fort Myers Beach for the young people of that church. Two cottages were rented, one for the boys and the other for the girls. There were seventeen registrations. The pastor of the church, Rev. O. T. Anderson, and Mrs. C. E. Allen, an efficient teacher in the Sunday School, conducted the study courses. The girls did the cooking and the boys helped with the general work.

The following item under date of Suffolk, July 20th, tells of the passing of a long-time and very loyal and faithful member of our Liberty Spring Church, and our sympathies are extended to the bereaved: "Funeral services for James L. Pierce, 84-year-old farmer of Nansemond County, who died July 19th, were held Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock, at Liberty Spring Christian Church, in which he had held membership for 59 years, conducted by Dr. I. W. Johnson, Rev. N. G. Newman and Rev. H. S. Hardcastle."

One of our Florida ministers writes interestingly with regard to some experiences with the unemployed. One man who had at one time been a successful contractor, but who was unemployed and "up against it," was taken by this pastor to the head of the relief council in that city. As they entered the large office building to register as unemployed, the man smiled wistfully, and said: "Mr. M., I built this building over twenty years ago." In another instance, this pastor found himself advising another unemployed man, whose name and fame as an aviator was on the front page of every newspaper, and in the movie news reels only two years ago. Such are the strange contrasts of our present day.

We extend our brotherly sympathy to Chaplain H. E. Rountree of the U. S. Navy, and to the other bereaved ones who have recently sustained through death the loss of a kind and loving father. The Norfolk-Virginian Pilot, of July 20th, gives an item of the sad occurrence: "J. T. Rountree, 78, a prominent farmer of Nansemond County, died Thursday afternoon, at 1:50 o'clock, at his home near Cypress Chapel, after a short illness. Mr. Rountree is survived by six children: Mrs. H. B. Harrell, of Portsmouth; Mrs. H. P. Taylor, of Cypress Chapel; Chaplain H. E. Rountree, of San Diego, Cal.; A. T. Rountree, of Roanoke; W. T. Rountree, of Waverly; R. J. Rountree, of Franklin; 17 grandchildren; a sister, Mrs. W. P. Mitchell, of Suffolk; also several nieces and nephews. Funeral services were held at the Cypress Chapel Christian Church, conducted by Rev. R. E. Brittle, Dr. I. W. Johnson, and Rev. H. S. Hardcastle"

NEWS FROM CAROLINAS AND GEORGIA.

Rev. Henry B. Mowbray, Demorest, is home from the hospital, where he underwent an operation, and is feeling fine and doing his usual work with the church and summer student body. He acts as chaplain of the Piedmont Leadership Conference and leads chapel every day. Everybody greatly appreciates his thoughtfulness as host of this conference.

Piedmont College closed the six weeks' summer school with fine spirit and success. Other students are going on with an extra three weeks, and the outlook for next year is very good. The same report comes from Elon College. There are students galore—money, money, money—if we only had it, how many would be given a chance for an education.

In North Carolina, Ruth Scottford, Genevieve Chase, Carl Key, Read Chatterton and Katherine Burt have finished one month of most interesting and successful vacation church schools. Reports from the pastors indicate unfailing labor on the part of the S. S. S. people, and hearty cooperation on the part of the people. That's what makes everybody happy. "If anything goes, somebody is pushing."

For nearly two years, Rev. David Shepherd has been pastor of United Congregational Church at Phenix City, Ala., and United Congregational Church at Columbus, Ga. The work grew and demanded more man power. By special arrangement between the superintendents, Dr. F. P. Enslinger and M. J. Sweet, in conference with the two churches and the extension board's offices, it was voted that each call an all-time pastor. As a final result, Mr. Shepherd was called to be the pastor at Phenix City, and Rev. Arnold Slater was called to the Columbus church, to begin August 10, 1933. This promises to be a very fine opportunity for both these upstanding young ministers. Both churches are very happy. Much is expected.

In Georgia, after a month of "work, work, work," it is reported, at Williams Chapel, the people are sorry to have to let Dorothy and Joy Grigsby go. But the schedule is made and these happy workers are working now at Pearson where a similar work is being carried out with the same kind of cooperation on the part of the people. In this same parish, Alan Jones, pastor, Eben Chapman, is doing a most constructive work at Antioch Church. He is building the church through calling on everybody in the whole section and is meeting with fine response. He is preaching much and enjoys it. Also, at Baxley, the same parish, a recent revival resulted in five new members and at Union Hill Church, Pearson, three united. In these meetings, Mr. Jones was assisted by Rev. Arnold Slater.

The pastor-at-large warns his Carolina friends of what some call "speed traps" on Route 23, passing from Cornelia to Gainsville. Two little villages whose boundary lines join, have thought it wise, evidently, to seek to prevent auto accidents by fining anybody at least five dollars if caught driving over 20 miles an hour through these corporations. They comprise about two miles distance. In one of these there are fifteen buildings, all on one side of the road, and many of them vacant. None on the opposite side of the road. There is a railroad passing and perhaps there is a station on the other side of the railroad. It was reported that a large number of motorists are avoiding the annoyance caused by these towns by turning off this highway just north of Baldwin, finding friendly cities and towns who welcome the motor trade coming that way. The distance is no greater by the looks of the map, and—well, five dollars is worth saving, if you happen to want to go to Atlanta for a business trip and need to drive faster than 20 miles an hour. It should be said that this new movement, progressive as the citizens of these towns seem to think, started only about two months ago, it is said.

The Georgia Barnsville Parish is happy in some new ventures: First of all the fine revival conducted by Rev. L. L. Stanley, pastor, which netted six new members and several others were ready and will soon give themselves and their talents to the work of the church, Jones Chapel, Woodbury, Ga. This church is also happy that after a month of prayerful consideration, Mr. Stanley will remain with them. It has been apparent for a long time that the Meansville Church really needed two Sunday services. The only way to have two, would be to have Mr. Stanley give up either Bethany Church or Jones Chapel. It was finally arranged that Bethany Church, at The Rock, was willing, in a fine way, to release their second Sunday and take the fourth Sunday morning service. By this arrangement, Woodbury will have Mr. Stanley in the afternoon and evening. It should also be said of this four-point parish that the ladies of three of the churches visited Woodbury for an all-day meeting of the combined Missionary Societies. Sixty were present, the greater number being guests from Fredonia, Bethany and Meansville. In this way our several parish groups in Georgia are cultivating friendships and unification of effort which promises much.

CHURCH CENTENARY.

The Conshohocken (Pa.) Recorder of Tuesday, July 25th, carried the following interesting account of the services, July 21st-23rd, in our historic Gulph Christian Church, M. W. Butler, pastor:

"A century of progress in religious and spiritual service to the community was observed in the historic Gulph Christian Church, Matsonford and Gulph Roads, commencing Friday evening with a pageant depicting the various episodes during the past hundred years and continuing with an all-day jubilation Sunday. All of the services were largely attended, many former pastors and members of the century-old church and former residents of the community returning for the festivities. Greetings from the conference with which the church is affiliated and from the churches of the immediate vicinity were extended by personal messengers who participated in the program, while an interesting history, covering the one hundred years that the church has existed as a place of worship, was read by Mrs. A. I. Supplee.

"Sunday marked a whole day of celebration. Beginning with the session of the Sunday School at 9:30 in the morning, there were special features that made the anniversary one long to be remembered. The regular lesson period was devoted to an interesting address given by Walter E. Myers, secretary of the Pennsylvania State Sabbath School Association, who extended to the church the greetings and congratulations of the State organization.

"The morning worship period was featured by the historical paper read by Mrs. Supplee and a brilliant sermon delivered by Rev. Martyn Summerbell, D. D., president of the Starkey Seminary, of New York, who has passed the eightieth milestone in his life's journey.

"Rev. Edwin N. Faye, pastor of Trinity Lutheran Church, Norristown, was the speaker of the

YOU—AND YOUR CHURCH PAPER.

On the 14th of last month we sent out 287 letters to some, not all, of our subscribers who had for one reason or another neglected to pay anything on their SUN account for quite a while.

Some of these to whom we had written responded almost immediately with checks for varying amounts. Others replied with valid reasons for not having paid and promised that they would as soon as conditions made it possible.

There is a fourth group, however, that we are at a loss to understand. They have ignored the letter which we wrote entirely. We wonder if they even read it. It took time and money to send it to them, and we believe it deserved at least a reply.

If you are one of those who got the letter, read it again, and respond to its request as nearly as you can. It is well worth while.

To those who are listed below, we wish to extend our thanks for the support they are giving us in trying to make their church paper worth while. If there are any errors in this list, or if your name has been inadvertently omitted, please notify us. The change should appear on your label next week.

MASSANETTA MUSIC FESTI AVL.

The Valley of Virginia is rich in folk lore and songs. Many of the tunes of these sacred folk songs have been copied and put in modern settings and are being used by the choirs of churches all over the country.

They will be sung at Massanetta Springs in their traditional three and four-part harmony. These songs have come down through generations. Many of the tunes have never been written, but have been passed on by ear from mother to children.

Mr. John Powell, nationally known pianist, and Mrs. Annabel Morris Buchanan, noted composer, who are both authorities on Folk Music, will have charge of this program on Friday afternoon, August 4th. Mr. Powell will introduce the numbers and make a brief address on the origin and beauty of this type of music.

Among the selections are the following: "Retirement," "Tender Thought," "Zion's Pilgrim," "Limehouse," "Easter Anthem," "The Converted Thief," "New Jordan," "Evening Shade," "Saint Bound for Heaven," "Parting Song," "O Wondrous Love."

This Folk Music program to be put on Friday afternoon, August 4th, is only one feature of the Sacred Music Festival held at Massanetta Springs under the leadership of Dr. John Finley Williamson, of Westminster Choir fame.

The Ministers' Conference begins on August 7th, running for two weeks. We hope that the ministers, and laymen too, of our denomination will avail themselves of the wonderful opportunity this conference presents.

ROANOKE, ALA., REVIVAL.

Two services on the fourth Sunday brought to an end the week of special meetings held at the First Christian Church, Roanoke, Ala. This special revival effort was begun on the third Sunday. The pastor was assisted by Rev. Jesse Dollar, pastor of Congregational-Christian Church, LaGrange, Ga. Mr. Dollar brought to the church a series of helpful and inspiring sermons. The people from other churches of Roanoke showed a large interest in the meeting. The members of the church showed an excellent spirit of loyalty and of cooperation. Six members were added to the church, three by letter and three by profession of faith. All who attended found their spiritual lives deeply enriched.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE PASTOR'S SALARY.

"The laborer is worthy of his hire." There is a text that conscientious laymen should take to heart, practice and preach. In all probability, four-fifths—more nearly nine-tenths—of our pastors are far behind in receiving their salaries. Heaven knows their salaries promised were already too small, and now not to receive as promised is making life hard for them, indeed. The merchant, the grocer, the garage man, the gas dealer, expect and demand that the preacher pay his bills, or he is discredited and dishonored. There is the embarrassing situation. The pastor must keep going, meeting obligations, appointments, the necessities of living, and his congregation, ready to criticize if he does not pay his bills, lets him go unpaid. This is more of a reflection upon and a discredit to the congregation than to the pastor, though the pastor bears openly the blame and the burden of it.

One source of failure is the light in which many view their attitude to the pastor. There are hordes of people in the church who feel that paying their pastor is giving to charity. (One of the most abused words in our language is "charity".) It may be done or not according to convenience.

Paying one's part of the pastors' salary is not giving anything to anybody; it is simply paying an obligation for service rendered and received. In a majority of instances, the most valuable man in a community and the most wholesome and helpful service rendered is that of the faithful preacher and pastor. He is employed by his church to feed hungry hearts, to give comfort to bereaved and sorrowing souls, to bring courage to the despairing, to carry strength to the weak and make the light of eternal truth shine out in the dark places of sin and wrong-doing. In paying and supporting the pastor, one is paying for that which is without price and supporting that which is essential to full and abundant life. In paying our preacher, we are not making a donation to benevolence, we are investing in moral and spiritual forces and factors for ourselves and our community.

Nothing is a surer index to our lack in spiritual interest than our failure to pay our pastor. There are wants that are more than material, and there are needs beyond the physical. Paying our pastor is an effort to secure and share with others spiritual relief, soul food and moral freedom and righteousness. The purpose of the church is to give spiritual life and healing to the souls of men, and this is given through preaching the gospel at home and abroad.

It is rather remarkable, as well as deplorable, that the great decrease and curtailment witnessed in the church of the present is, on the one hand, its failure to pay its pastor and its decreased donations to Missions. These represent the spiritual power and thermometer of the church in the matter of giving, since it is the object of the pastor to preach the gospel to those who can hear his voice, and the object of Missions to send out other pastors to places nearby and remote that their voices may be heard as they proclaim the riches of grace through Christ Jesus, our Lord.

The church will not begin to recover its soul without paying its pastor's salary and increasing its donations to Missions, that the spiritual task for which it was founded as a spiritual body may be accomplished as our Lord intended it should be.

OUR NATIONAL ALLY.

A contemporary points out that, for the first time in all our national history, even from the notorious Whiskey Rebellion, which our first president, George Washington, lost no time in putting down, even till this good hour, has our national government become an avowed ally of the liquor trade. Whatever else we may or may not have done, good, bad or indifferent, our government has taken sides with the liquor interests and booze artists of the nation; has yielded to their insidious propaganda, admitted its inability to cope with or suppress them and has joined arms with them in removing laws and hindrances, so that the brewer may rejoice and the whiskey dealer may be glad. And so the brewers are laughing and the whiskey dealers are radiant.

Our one wish is that this alliance may not prove an unholy one, and that before it is too late we may check our hysteria, take counsel of our past and learn wisdom from the warning of him who cried: "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise. Who hath woe? Who hath sorrow? Who hath contentions? Who hath babbling? Who hath wounds without cause? Who hath redness of eyes? They that tarry long at the wine; they that go to seek mixed wine."

LETTING THEIR SOULS CATCH UP.

James Truslow Adams relates an incident of the jungles that has application to us of the cities and the plains:

An American explorer, who had spent two years among the savages of the Amazon, received one day an urgent call to leave the jungle for the nearest town. With the help of the chief and a train of attendants, he attempted a forced march of three days through the jungle to the nearest settlement. Without grumbling the party made extraordinary speed for the first day and on the second. On the third morning, however, when it was time to start, the explorer found all the natives sitting on their haunches, looking solemn and making no preparations to leave. On asking the chief what the trouble was, he received the answer: "They are waiting. They cannot move farther until their souls catch up with their bodies."

While we have been very busy and exceedingly active in gratifying our physical desires and plunging forward with our bodies, one wonders if our souls have not been left behind? Oh, was it for these heathen of the jungles, or for us of civilization, that the Prophet Isaiah wrote, when he said: "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; they shall walk, and not faint."

We have built machinery to supply all our wants (of body), and in trying to keep up with our machinery, we have left our souls behind.

J. O. A.

REVIVAL OR REVOLUTION.

A man of wide observation and far-reaching human experience said in our hearing recently: "We face and must have either a revival or a revolution." Which shall it be? The answer depends upon whether we swing to the moral and the spiritual and cleave to that which perisheth not, or swing to the doubtful, the immoral and the temporary and follow after that which is expedient.

At any rate, we are reminded of the words of that seasoned Christian philosopher, Schweitzer, who said:

"The human race must be converted to a fresh mental attitude, if it is not to suffer extinction. . . . The suicide of civilization is in progress. A dull despair hovers over us. A new renaissance, much greater than that in which we emerged from the Middle Ages, is absolutely essential. Are we going to draw from the spirit enough strength to create new conditions and turn our faces again to civilization, or are we going to continue to draw our inspiration from our surroundings and go down with them to ruin?"

Our age calls for stout hearts, strong men, heroic women, stalwart characters bent on doing the right at all cost and, disregarding public clamor and hysteria, set their faces toward the goal of high aims, noble purposes, divine pursuits.

SELF-CONTROL.

I remember once that a man came to our house red with wrath. He was boiling over with rage. He had, or supposed he had, a grievance to complain of. My father listened to him with attention and perfect quietness until he got it all out, and then he said to him in soft and low tones; "Well, I suppose you only want what is just and right?" The man said, "Yes," but went on to state the case over again.

Very gently father said to him: "If you have been misinformed, I presume you would be perfectly willing to know what the truth is?" He said he would. Then father very quietly and gently made a statement of the other side; and when he was through the man got up and said: "Forgive me, doctor. Forgive me." Father had beaten him by his quiet, gentle way. I saw it, and it gave me an insight into the power of self-control. It was a striking illustration of the passage, "He that ruleth his spirit is better than he that taketh a city."—Henry Ward Beecher.

AN APPEAL NOT TO REPEAL.

Chattanooga, Tenn.,
July 21, 1933.

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

May I have a bit of space in THE SUN for a few lines?

I was born and reared in Old Kentucky. I think it is one of the grandest States in the Union, and especially so since it put on its dry clothes. This it did before the Eighteenth Amendment became a law. I can say proudly that I helped to bring about Prohibition in the State not only by my vote, but by preaching against the liquor traffic. I said: "If you want to be a good husband, a good wife, a good father or mother, a good citizen, or a good church member, you must be a sober man or woman; must be a sober man to be a first-class farmer."

I remember when whiskey or brandy could be bought for fifty cents to one dollar per gallon, and when many farmers had a jug of water and a jug of whiskey in the shade of a tree in the harvest field. Often men would get so drunk they would be unable to work. The men who had the liquor in the field very often had trouble with the men destroying the grain, fighting, and disrupting the friendship of neighbors.

This never happened in my father's field. He had a special preventative and it always worked. I will give the recipe that others may have the benefit. He would not allow a jug of the poison stuff to come into the house or field. I can say to the honor of my father and mother, that they were teetotalers. But I'll tell you what they did have. About 10 o'clock, we children, or sometimes mother with us, would be seen making our way to the big mulberry shade tree. Then father, with the six or eight hands, would come to the shade and eat of the contents of a basket of cookies, apples or dewberry pie, with some good early harvest apples, and some good cold water. In the afternoon it was the same. His grain was well taken care of and soon almost all of the neighbors left off the liquor in harvest time.

Flemingburg, the county seat of Fleming County, was a great trading point. Each county court day, the fourth Monday of each month, scores came to swap horses and to sell other stock. Scores of men would get drunk and there would be dozens of fights during the day. Men lay on the streets drunk and drunks went up and down the sidewalks until women were afraid to be on the streets. But after local option in our town and county it was so women could go on the streets and see the fine stock on sale.

I remember well the first county court day after the town went dry, the largest crowd I had ever seen in Flemingsburg, and I only saw one drunk man during the entire day. He fell on the street and an officer picked him up and took him to the locker until he sobered up, paid his fine, and went home. Saloons went out, men found better occupations, and the stock sales went on fully as well. Previously men were afraid to go home from their places of business for fear of being knocked down by some drunk, and sometimes would have to leave the sidewalk and take to the muddy street to miss the drunks. Women were scarcely ever seen on the streets at night. Not so after the dry law came into effect. I saw only one drunken man in Flemingsburg after the law came in.

I would just as lief vote to repeal the law against murder and the law against theft and say: "Go to it, kill and steal, it is all right as the law says you may," as to vote for the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment and legalize the sale of intoxicating liquor. I am of the opinion that if all the men and women who have died and gone to drunkards' graves and a drunkard's hell could have the opportunity of standing on the earth again and testifying, they would tell us to shun it as we would shun a poisonous reptile. We cannot help the ones who are gone, but we can help the ones who are still within our reach.

Some of the brainiest men have died in disgrace and shame on account of drink. Drink has been connected with nearly all criminal cases. Booze was the starter of nearly every feud in Kentucky. Just legalize whiskey and beer, open saloons on every corner, and at every crossroads in every little store and filling station, just any place they pay the license, then watch the people go hellward on the lightning express. Repeal? No, a thousand times, No! As I see it, if a man is a real Christian at heart, he will be loyal to the principles of moral and Christian integrity. A man is not a good Democrat or Republican if he will not vote for that which is for the greatest good of the greatest number of citizens of our country.

If we want to save our young people from downfall and disgrace, it will help wonderfully to keep booze out of their reach.

Surely, if some who have voted or will vote for the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment had stood by the bedside and watched men die under the power of drink, and heard their screams for help and watched them gnash their teeth and froth at the mouth, and heard them cry: "O, friend, can't you help? Do drive those awful demons away! Oh, for one minute's peace! Look, look, the devils are coming again! Look, there is the very Boss Devil! Do help! Give me some water. . . . Rats are in the water (with curses knocking the water from the mother's hand). You put rats in it. Sister, bring me a drink. Preacher, don't let them put rats in it." Just then a wicked kicking against the footboard of the bed, with screams and curses. "O, take those snakes off my legs. Take them off before they bite me." I have seen men tied to keep them from doing bodily injury to themselves and their families.

I was visiting in a home once when the man of the house came in drunk. When he saw me, he flew into a rage, saying, "I thought I told you never to come here." I said, "On the contrary, you invited me to come." He made as if he would hit me. It was the booze in him that made him so. I had been there many times before and he always seemed glad to have me.

If there was as much money spent to take care of conscientious ministers and their families while they preach the gospel as is spent to bring back and legalize the devil's slop, it would be much better. We spent thousands of dollars to educate the girls and boys of our land so they may be useful. Then we vote to set before them intoxicants and damnation. O consistency, thou art a jewel.

REV. A. P. HURST.

HIS FAREWELL TO SUFFOLK.

From Suffolk correspondent to Norfolk Virginian-Pilot, the following interesting item is taken:

Suffolk, July 23.—"I have been with you Suffolk people ten years," said the Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church, in his farewell sermon this morning, preached just before leaving to take up the pastorate of the Norfolk Christian Temple, "and it is fitting that now I am about to leave you, I should have something to say to you out of my heart.

"I want to talk to you in a simple, and sincere and informal way about some of the aspects of my ministry among you.

"Needless to say, my feelings lie very near to the surface as I do this thing. As Paul said in his farewell, 'Ye know after what manner I have been with you at all seasons.'

"In my manner of life I have tried to be a Christian, serving the Lord in all humility and with many tears and temptations.

"I have tried to preach a well-rounded Gospel, of stewardship and giving, of racial equality and brotherhood, of missions, of prohibition, and the doctrine and duty.

"I have tried to do this in spite of the fact that some of you did not like some of these things to be preached and yet in such a way that you had to admit the fairness of my action.

"Fundamentally to it was my insistence upon repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ.

"I am going to a very difficult field of pastoral life.

"But none of these things move men, for I have had an experience of God that has given me courage and help for my task.

"And in the words of Paul, 'And now, brethren, I commend you to God, and to the word of His grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you an inheritance among all them which are sanctified.'

"Paul wanted their love and their remembrance, but he wanted most of all their supreme loyalty to be to God, and their supreme support to the 'Word of His Grace.'

"In like manner I want you to remember me, but I want to commend you to God, and to the word of His Grace. If your loyalty is to me, then I know that I have failed in my ministry.

"I want you to love the church and to love Jesus Christ supremely. I want you to give Mr. Truitt your support and your co-operation. I want you to go on growing and serving until you come unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Jesus Christ.

The church was filled today, and the large congregation remained for some time after the close of the service for farewells to the pastor and his family.

Mr. and Mrs. Hardcastle have moved to their home in Norfolk, and will leave Monday for Elon College, where Mr. Hardcastle will teach in the summer training school. They will go later to Montreat for a several weeks' stay.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

This is vacation time. The office and the workshop may be left idle for a few days. A week, or more, as conditions permit, is gladly accepted as a time of leisure, or a recess from the usual routine of labor and responsibility. One who has the privilege of a real vacation is, indeed, to be congratulated. For the minister this is an opportunity for physical improvement, mental relaxation and spiritual revival. If he is wise he will seek to spend some time in physical exercise and work. A few days in the country will offer many opportunities for work and recreation. Nothing surpasses a farm in this respect.

Somehow the ground is God's great school for man. "Cursed is the ground for thy sake." (Gen. 3:17.) It is an index finger pointing man to his greatest source of material blessing. Hard work is God's method of blessing mankind. If man had never sinned, he might be satisfied with the Edenic method of life, namely, eating fruit without laboring to cultivate the trees. But sin forever made it impossible for man to be satisfied with ease and idleness. This is not a presumption that man was idle in the Garden of Eden. But it is evident that life was free and easy.

Therefore, the ground offers an opportunity for a great vacation. From it we may learn that life is sustained by painstaking patience and systematic effort. The ground does not ask governments how to grow crops. Legislatures cannot change the laws of the ground. Crops are not produced by decrees and magic wands. The ground is not in a hurry. It waits for the quiet return of the seasons. There is a time to sow and a time to reap. There is a time when the ground is cold and a time when it is warm. A fortune may be made in one day on the stock market. But when one makes a fortune so quickly, it is certain that another has lost a fortune in the same market. A fortune is not quickly made tilling the ground. But the toil and the experience and the environment will help to make life great and worthy if rightly directed. Go to the ground and learn a lesson on preaching, and teaching and living. Jesus found many of his best illustrations while walking in the fields and forests and mountains of his day. Vacation should take one to the ground—the fields—with lessons on sowing, growing and harvest; to the forests and mountains for strength and endurance in time of stress and strain and storm; to the lakes and streams for quiet rest, and deep reverie and sublime meditation. Working in the fields, walking through the forests and fishing in the placid lakes and quietly moving streams, will dispel nervous depression, stimulate digestion and invite restful sleep when the day is done, and the shadows of evening are filled with the call of the katadid and the quaint song of the whippoorwill.

With the dawn of a new day one is ready for the voice of God in private devotions, or crowded Bible school. How fortunate to have the opportunity of fellowship in a Bible school out in the country. Massanetta Springs Bible Conference, August 7th-20th, offers such an opportunity. Ministers and laymen may be greatly helped by such a vacation. Other places and schools offer similar opportunities for recreation, study and fellowship.

The real vacation should include some mental and spiritual provisions for growth and development. If the entire vacation is spent in physical relaxation and enjoyment, the mind and the soul may suffer from too much dissipation and indulgence. Provide for the whole man in your vacation. And remember the great multitude who will not have the privilege of any vacation. For them there is no release from their daily tasks. Carry back to them a spirit of new zeal, new interest and spiritual enthusiasm. May your vacation bring you closer to God and fit you for better service in your day and generation.

DO YOU WANT A COLLEGE EDUCATION?

There seems to be a new interest on the part of high school graduates in a college education. More and more the type of training given by our high schools is creating a desire on the part of their students for a more complete and a more thorough knowledge of the subjects that they have begun to study. This, I think, is a wholesome tendency. Personally, I believe in a trained citizenry if we are to have a more efficient form of government and a higher type of society in which to live. The trained individual is of far more value to society than the untrained. His contributions are more decisive and more valuable—they are of a higher type. It matters not what his profession or pursuit in life shall be—his life will be more satisfactory and more productive of good if he is adequately trained. Those who desire college experiences and are determined to avail themselves of such opportunities are next brought face to face with the responsibility of choosing a college. For a young man or young woman of today to decide where to go for college privileges is no easy task. There are many worthy institutions—all of which are bidding for a capable and ambitious student. Colleges, large and small, stand with their doors open and with an urgent invitation for all who will to come and share in the good things that they have to offer.

In the mail today, I received a letter from a man who is engaged in educational work. He, himself, is a teacher. He has a son who graduated from high school at the age of fourteen. The next step in this youngster's preparation for life is college. The father is much concerned as to where to send his boy. Naturally, his hopes for the future center in his son and he desires to make no mistake in his further training. He writes: "I am considering sending my son to a small college." There are advantages offered at the small college that in some respects are superior to the advantages offered at a large school. In a small college, it is an easy matter to get acquainted with everyone on the campus and the alert student is not there many hours before he knows practically everyone. His contacts with the professors are personal and constant. If he is studious and has a disposition to cooperate, he will find that his advantages increase day after day. The average youngster has a desire for leadership along some particular line. In addition to guiding a student in his search for knowledge, the college should not fail in developing the possibilities for leadership in the individual. Opportunities along this line are ten to one greater in a small college than in a large one. The larger college offers but few more positions for leadership than the small college—the aspirants for these positions in a larger college outnumber the aspirants for like positions in smaller colleges as five as ten to one. In a small college there are always opportunities for personal contact and personal instruction that could not be expected even in a large school. But, whether the school be large or small, there are certain things that a student should find when he reaches the college campus. First of all, he should find a wholehearted welcome on the part of those in authority and on the part of those who constituted the student body the previous semester. He should find a wholesome and friendly atmosphere that should be conducive to contentment and clean living. He should find accessible and inviting opportunities for cultural and religious living. In short, he should find an atmosphere that makes the intelligent individual ambitious for mental development feel perfectly at home and happy in his pursuit of knowledge. For an individual to do his best work, he must have agreeable surroundings, congenial comrades and a type of instruction that makes difficult problems appear more easy.

At Elon College, we are working constantly and consistently toward this end. We are trying to improve living conditions for those who come. This, of course, calls for the expenditure of money. Here we have to move carefully and economically; however, we are reconditioning East Dormitory and making it a first class rooming house for men.

In addition to improvement of the building itself, which is about completed, we are arranging to furnish the building with new furnishings throughout. Instead of double-deck beds, we are providing twin beds for all rooms, and other furnishings for the rooms will be in keeping. The rooms in East Dormitory will be more comfortable and more inviting, and those who room there will be expected to take the best of care of both room and furniture. If you have not sent in your acceptance fee and are interested in rooming in East Dormitory, it would be well for you to send in your fee at once and make your request. In addition to living quarters, we are sparing no effort to make the spirit of the campus what it ought to be and to see that classroom instruction is of the highest type. What we are hoping to do at Elon College is to make a first-class educational institution from every standpoint, accessible to the ambitious student at a minimum cost. It is not the purpose of Elon College to become an expensive school, but it is determined to become an efficient school—desirable from every scholastic standpoint.

It is our purpose to administer to the whole life and to send our graduates out into life, capable of meeting the emergencies of life successfully. If you have not sent in your application, please write us at once. If you have a friend to whom you would like us to send a catalogue, let us have the request.

L. E. SMITH.

WHAT IS YOUR LIFE?

Life is the gift of God. Therefore we cannot esteem it lightly nor can we wish to shorten it. It has been given to us as a stewardship and some day we will be asked to give an account of our stewardship. Our life is what we make it and though we may try to shift responsibility the fact remains the same. Far be it from us to ever wish we had never been born or that our life might be shortened; the One who created life is the only one who should limit its length. Some one has said that life is too slow for those who wait; too swift for those who fear; too long for those who grieve; too short for those who rejoice. How then can humanity set the bounds of life; who knows when grief will be turned to joy or when the waiting time will be over and the fearful things be done away. The only answer to the questionings which may come about are found in our Lord Jesus Christ of whom John the evangelist wrote, "In Him was life; and the life was the light of men; he that followeth Him shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the Light of Life." We may not know what our part in life may signify, some one has written, but we are here to play it, and now is our time. This we know: it is part of love, not cynicism; it is part of action, not of whining. It is for us to express love in terms of human helpfulness. We should never sit down and cherish our own sorrows but we should ever reach out to those around us who also have sorrows for in comforting them we ourselves are comforted. Our Lord Jesus Christ came to earth that we might have life, and that we might have it more abundantly. Life without Christ is a failure, but life in Christ is the secret of life. Galatians 2:20, and as we live in Him and hold forth the word of life we may rejoice in the day of Christ that we have not run in vain. So we may "enter into the rest of a new life, feel the throbbing of a true life, and then go out to live a full life for God during life's little day;" showing forth the life that is hid away with Christ in God; looking not on the things of this life which shall soon vanish away, but upon the eternal glories of the paradise of God, 'the life above, when this is past, is the ripe fruit of life below.' Then 'we'll forget the thorns that have pierced the feet and the nights with their grief and gloom.' So with our eyes upon the goal and our feet on the ground may we reach to those around us who are also traveling life's weary way, encouraging and helping as we may. Only in this way will our life count in the final reckoning; only in this way can we finish our course with joy.

"My home is God himself; but oh the cost That Christ hath paid to bring my spirit there; His own dear life and all he held most fair, He laid it down for me that I might come, And dwell forever with him at home. At home in God, and safe none other where! O happy, place! O home divinely fair! You, too, may come and dwell, rejoicing there. You ask what I have paid? 'Twas naught but this: I lost my loathsome life, and took up his; And now God's free, free grace is all my boast. Not mine, but his, the cost." "W."

VACATIONS AND REFLECTIONS.

By TIMOTHY THOMAS.

This is vacation season for those who can spare the time and money for such an event. This year there are more people who have time than money to get away from the routine and the humdrum of position and place. The return to work would be a most happy vacation to millions long separated from their positions.

Back home is the vacation ambition of the majority of people, and an ambition worthy and worth-while. It is more than an ambition; it is a call within to return to the places where we learned our best and greatest lessons—places where we were unconsciously brought in touch with the ideals of life. To return home is to drink anew and afresh from the fountains of life from which we drank in early days the spirit that has guided us along and upward the paths that daily try our souls and commend the best of our hearts and hands.

The hand of time cannot be stayed, and so each time we return to the fields and streams, the hills and the valleys of our childhood days, there we see and face changes which we find it difficult to adjust ourselves to. Familiar faces are no longer to be seen. The parental home is changed, or in many instances broken, and newly made graves stand as signals for soul reflection. Playmates are scattered. The old mill has ceased, and the "over-shot" water wheel no longer spreads its gorgeous picture before which we once stood in rapture. In many instances only the old spring and the spreading shade trees welcome us, but such a welcome! By that natural fountain and under the century old canopy we linger and listen.

The lowing herd has gone the way of time. The same moon and the same stars lift us up to a new as well as a renewed childish feeling, and deep within we feel with the poet:

"Backward, turn backward, O time in your flight, Make me a child again just for tonight."

But the streams and the scenes are not all. There is the little church, whether it be around the corner, on the hill, or in the vale. It's the childhood chapel whose bell pealed out the tones every Sunday morning, the community signal for service and worship. Unlike the city church it has no skyward English steeple or Grecian dome. Instead of the large pipe organ found in the more pretentious places of worship, the little foot pedal musical instrument may still be there. The organist may not be a master of music, but as the old hymn is carried on in unison by the simple folk of the community, there is a flood of childhood reflections sweeping over the soul, and in all our wanderings we still find ourselves closely united with the spirit of the place.

Pity the man who cannot go back, regardless of his place and position in life, and tune in his soul with the echoes of childhood days. No wonder more people attended the services preparatory to the re-interment of the body of John Howard Payne, author of "Home, Sweet Home," when it was brought back from Tunis, Africa, and was placed in Oak Hill Cemetery, Washington, D. C., than has ever attended the inauguration of a president.

A vacation without its reflections is soiled and sordid. It is merely a cessation of work for a period of time.

The man who misses repentance will miss everything. If your repentance is shallow, your religious life will be shallow. If your coming to the Christ does not mean everything, you will not get everything. If your surrender is not complete, you cannot receive. If your hands are full, you cannot take hold.—Gipsy Smith.

A GOOD SAMARITAN FROM INDIA.

A brilliant young man from South India, who was receiving an advanced degree from an American university, was asked to spend his summer speaking to churches and conferences. One night he arrived in a certain New England city. He had wired an American friend there and expected to spend the night. When the taxi drove him to the house, he found that the friend had been called away by an unforeseen emergency. He asked the taxi-driver to take him to a hotel. Four hotels refused to accept this colored man from India. The driver finally said, after the Indian came out of the fourth hotel:

"I know a Negro who might take you in."

"Why," said the young Indian; "I am not a Negro; why should I be under obligation to a Negro family?"

"Right you are, why should you?" said the driver. "There's another place where you would be safe and have a bed, and that's the police station."

"Very well," said the student; "I am not proud, and I want to sleep."

The police had a vacant cot in a cell where a drunken man was sleeping. The young Indian thanked them for the offer, but soon returned to the desk and asked permission to sit up in the office till morning as the drunken man had become obnoxious. The taxi-driver, who had waited for the outcome of this choice of a lodging for the night, now volunteered: "I'm on night duty; you come up to my room and sleep in my bed." Next morning after breakfast he drove his guest to the ferry and refused any money for fare or breakfast.

"You've been a good Samaritan to me," said the Indian, and as he got on the boat he exclaimed again: "You certainly are a good Samaritan."

"Say, listen!" said the driver, "that's twice you have called me that name. What do you mean?"

"Do you not know the story of the good Samaritan?" asked the Indian student, in astonishment.

"No," said the driver. Whereupon he listened to the story, told by one to whom it was old and familiar. The white driver listened with interest, and said, "That's a good story. Where did you get it?"

"If I send you a book with it marked, will you read it?" asked the new friend.

"Sure, I will," replied the driver.

So a traveler from India, a foreigner of another color and language, sent a marked New Testament which related the classic story of brotherhood to the one citizen that he found in this so-called "Christian community," who was practicing real religion.—Robert M. Bartlett in Builders of a New World.

A CHRISTIAN IN JAPAN.

Dr. Woodworth sends over "Seed Sowing in Sunrise Land," a 1932 report of the Japan Book and Tract Society, of which Dr. Woodworth is vice-president and Bishop Heaslett, president.

Dr. Woodworth is also one of the ten members of the Board of Managers, and one of the four members of the Literary Committee to decide what publications are suitable for printing.

In 1932, 5,000 books and 42,000 tracts were paid for by the Society, and 21,000 books and tracts ordered and paid for by others, were published. A translation of Dr. S. D. Gordon's "Quiet Talks on Our Lord's Return," and Torrey's "Every Man's Need of a Refuge," were new.

From the reports of letters of appreciation during the year, are the following:

"I thank God for your endeavors for the evangelization of Japan. I would like to buy a copy of Pilgrim's Progress" to encourage our faith, but owing to the wretched condition of my family, it is out of the question for me to buy it. I appeal to your generosity to spare me a copy as a help and encouragement of faith for my poor old mother, who cannot attend church four miles away, and my wife, who for family reasons, is unable to attend.

"My family consists of my parents, both 76 years old, my wife and five children, the oldest of whom is 11. I was in a position to support this large family, but in January, 1929, I developed consumption while working for a life insurance company. Now I have been in bed for four years.

"From my youth, I believed in Buddhism, and studied Buddhist books and people spoke of me as a model boy. My employers thought well of me, and put their confidence in me, but I was taken ill and laid aside as a man of worry, darkness and despair. I cursed the world and wished to kill myself, but fortunately I came in touch with Christianity which I had formerly hated very much.

"I believed, and into my dark and comfortless life, light, joy, hope and thanksgiving came through the salvation of Christ (Buddhism had brought me nothing), and my wife and I were baptized in June, 1930. By our constant prayers exhortation my mother who had been an even more earnest Buddhist than myself, was baptized six months later.

"In our village, which was famous for the "Amakusa Rebellion in 1638, which lasted for 100 days, and was a revolt against the government persecution of the Catholics, are 500 houses, but ours is the only Christian home.

"My wife's family who are wealthy and very earnest Buddhists, have refused us financial aid in our distress, hoping to turn us from our faith and our house is despised in the village.

"My father, who was once a believer, has given up his faith, but my mother, wife and I are persevering, 'choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season.' We are kept by his guidance.

"I have sold all my books which were of any value, and cannot buy this book which I feel we need. While praying, the thought came to me to request it of you. I feel very much ashamed, for I know quite well that Japanese Christians should subscribe toward the holy war for the Christianization of Japan."

MOSES ON THE MOUNTAIN.

People have wondered, and tried to imagine, just what happened to Moses on the mountain. So now I am going to tell you what one Moses did on the mountain, and while I am sorry I can not tell about Moses of Bible times, I am truly glad I can tell about this Moses whom I know.

June 23rd, we had with us here at Elk Spur Christian Church, Dr. Atkinson and his brother, Moses Atkinson. Of course, we know and love our Dr. Atkinson, but we had not known "Moses" before. And Dr. Atkinson has good as told me not to say things about him in a certain way, or he would not print. So there! But perhaps FOUR WAYS TO THE TITHE.

By DAN B. BRUMMITT.

You may come to the tithe idea by several separate ways. It isn't one of those peculiar doctrines that depend on giving a special twist to a single verse of the Scripture.

LAW.

There's the way of the law. Some object to traveling that way. But there it is—not merely the law of the Old Testament. It is older than that.

Like the law of the Rest-and-Worship Day; like the law of "One-man-for-one-woman," it is a law which got into the thought of men before there were any Ten Commandments, or any Hebrew tribe, or any Code of Hammurabi.

It is old, old; and though there are those who think it has been repealed entirely, nobody ever thought of changing its form. You never hear of a seventh, a twelfth, or a twentieth. As a law, it was always the Sacred TENTH. If you come by the law road, you arrive at that.

EFFICIENCY.

There's the way of Christian efficiency. The Tithe really works, for the church; just as we have been told it would.

The testimonies in its favor are on record by multiplied thousands. It works almost too well. When a group in a church begins to practice it, or a group of churches, the tithers always carry a large overplus beyond their numerically proportionate share of the load.

Wherever it is applied, it settles the question of the support of every Christian enterprise, so far as the appliers are concerned. They are always "over the top" in their offerings.

SELF-INTEREST.

There's the way of self-interest. People who think spirituality means something ethereal are apt to sniff at this linking of tithing with prosperity. But they can't sniff it away. There it is. Other things being equal, the tither is more prosperous than the non-tither, and always will be. He can't help it.

This isn't magic. It isn't "materialism." It certainly isn't superstition, for superstition naturally can't be proved. The prosperity of tithers can be!

We pray for material blessings. Why be surprised when they come?

Tithing does not make poor land fertile. It does not turn tornadoes aside. It does not make up for the tither's lack of any other Christian virtue, or for the limitations that produce differences of ability.

But it works for prosperity, none the less.

It calls for conscience in dealing with what possessions we have.

It develops foresight. It fosters an increasing dislike of waste and needless spending.

It requires the keeping of records, and encourages budgeting, which always tends to cut down useless and wasteful expenses.

That habit alone will protect him at times from spending uselessly as much as his tithe amounts to.

LOVE.

And, best of all, there's the way of grateful love. In glad recognition that all we have is God's giving, we devote a definite proportion of his gift directly to the work we believe he wants done in the world.

This is the way of liberation. No man can follow it and be unhappy about it. Either it will bring its own happiness or it will not be practiced.

The tither can't be a pinch-penny, or a doleful contributor to the running expenses of the kingdom to which he belongs. He is so free he can be hilarious about it.

This way takes all the nuisance-value out of "appeals." To the tither, "appeals" are like his banker's list of possible investments. He doesn't invest in every one he hears about; but he isn't annoyed when the banker submits the list.

IS THE TITHE COMPULSORY?

Nothing Christian is compulsory. Jesus began his ministry with an invitation. He extended it to a few men. At the very end of his work he wept over a city which he would have saved, "but ye would not."

Some things are compulsory. Income tax, for instance. Rent, unless you own your home. Property taxes, if you have any property. The cost of crime, though you are a law-abiding citizen. The cost of ignorance, whether it is your fault or not. All contingencies must be paid for, if they befall—accident, fire, flood, death. The cost of all these is compulsory.

The tithe is voluntary.

The town in which I live has an elevated railway. One of the stations is near a great Roman Catholic burying ground—Calvary Cemetery.

For many years, because in that part of the town there were many more dead than living folks, the trains did not stop at the cemetery station except on request. Just after leaving the nearest station, the guard would open the door and say: "Next station is Calvary. Train stops on signal only. Anybody for Calvary?"

It is a parable of life's train. At all the other stations every train stops. At Market Street, at School Street, at University Avenue, at Main Street, at Vanity Fair, at Broadway, at Church Street, at Home Avenue. No special notice is needed.

But to get off at Calvary—that means a choice, and an expressed desire.

So Jesus stopped at his Calvary—of his own will, for our sakes.

His Calvary was death. And life everlasting. Its essence was its voluntariness. If it had been forced it would have been without meaning.

Every man goes to his own Calvary. Whatever its outward aspect, the essence of it is that he puts others before himself, and does this of his own choice. And that it is, more than anything else he does, which makes him a disciple of Jesus Christ.

Anybody for Calvary?

MOSES ON THE MOUNTAIN.

I can pull a few things on his brother, if I leave out all the things that everyone wants to say about the loyal heart and unselfish spirit of Dr. Atkinson himself.

Therefore, I am going to tell about "Uncle Moses." I had heard our Grissoms call him "Uncle Moses," and I wondered why, but now I see that no other name quite fits him. He truly is everyone's "Uncle." In him one sees the same loyal heart and true love for his fellowman, that is found in our dear Dr. Atkinson.

So "Uncle Moses" was found wandering peacefully along the old Elk Trail near our church. He was looking, no doubt, for a mountain cabin, you know the kind where a mountain trail silently winds its way among the clumps of rhododendrons and mountain laurels down the hill to where blue spirals of smoke rise ribbon-like from a cabin, and the odor of parching coffee and frying bacon greet you at the crest of the hill. Well, I hope he looked far enough to find what he was looking for. Had I known that he was out for that purpose, I could have shown him just such a cabin for I have one, and I hope it will not fall down before he comes again to our hills. I once hated that hut, but now I see another side of the picture. The novelty of the thing appeals to me. How it makes one dream to look at an old, old log hut where many a string of bright red and yellow peppers has hung just outside the door to dry in the sun!

I don't know whether "Uncle Moses" found his mountain cabin or not, but he did find mountain maidens who, glory be, have exchanged "snuff-sticks" for "lip-sticks," and the soot that was once said to streak the faces of mountain maidens, is only applied to eyebrows now by the use of a pencil. But I am sure a man like "Uncle Moses" can stand a few little changes like these and still see our hills in all their glory.

In all sincerity, it is a slow moving place here at Elk Spur, but if you had lived here a long time, as I have, you could see and appreciate the changes that have come here since the church came to our hills.

Away with these folks who say that the church has served its purpose and should pass out now, giving place to other institutions. It was the church that reached out a hand to me and to others like me; it has always been the church that did things, and God grant it may always be.

I want to thank you Christian people once more for backing our Hilly Mission and ask your prayers for our Hilly Grissoms.

And now the hills send their love to "Uncle Moses," and all good people everywhere, who are living to make ours a better and a brighter world.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."
REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

A MOUNT OF VISION.

The ancient story of Moses on the mountain with God is easy to understand by those who attended the Elon Summer School of Leadership Training last week, for they, too, came face to face with the Lord. They may go back to farms and factories and offices and homes and churches—places from which they came, but they will be different persons. Like the Indian brave who climbed to the mountain top when sent out by his chief, they can say to pastors and superintendents: "I have seen." And this vision will make a difference.

Before breakfast each morning these students and teachers read their Morning Watch booklets and prayed alone. Chapel followed breakfast and was intended to bring the thoughts and emotions to consciousness which would make the day beautiful because of the presence of God. This writer had the honor of leading these services, and many of those present said they were greatly benefited by these morning meditations.

Classes in the Principles of Teaching, The Message and Program of the Christian Religion, Primary Materials and Methods, Missionary Materials and Methods, Materials and Methods of Young People's Work, Recreation, and Worship filled the remainder of the morning. The first four courses were given for credit with forty-six people enrolled. One boy missed the last day in order to begin a job that will send him through school next winter. There were only two other absences in credit courses, and they were caused by sickness. There were only three absences from class in the non-credit courses, and they were caused by sickness. The average grade was just above B. This is almost a perfect record. There were no absences or failures because of lack of interest. Study was the order of the day.

The afternoon was given over to rest, recreation, and study. Fellowship had a large place in the life of the students and faculty. At supper the various groups made the dining hall resound with songs, yells, and happy chatter. "Monkeys" were continually climbing. "Bees" buzzing, and other groups making merry for the benefit of all.

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle was at his best in leading the vesper services each evening. This means that each evening the young people and their leaders were led into the presence of God where they worshipped.

A picnic at a nearby lake Saturday evening when labors were ended, gave everyone a chance to enjoy the friendships which had been formed during the week. Many of the students appreciated the later bed-time that night. Mid-night feasts added something to the joy of certain groups of newly-made friends.

Sunday morning, at 9:30 Rev. Hardcastle led a devotional service in the reception hall of the dormitory, certificates were awarded, talks made by many on what they had received from the week at Elon, and prayers led by the students as they stood in a friendship circle. Rev. Arthur Swartz preached at the 11 o'clock service and the writer conducted the communion. The Sunday services reached a high climax of a wonderfully beautiful and happy week. No one wanted to leave, but many were heard to say that they wanted to stay another week.

From this high place of vision more than half a hundred people turned again to their places of service with the hope of making the world a better place in which to live.

THE 34th INTERNATIONAL CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION.

By BERT H. DAVIS.

Witnessing for Christ was the objective, and in good measure the achievement, of the thirty-fourth International Christian Endeavor Convention, which was held for six days at Milwaukee, with evening attendances of 7,000 or more young people.

From the convention there has come even now a firm and surging purpose for a nation-wide and perhaps world-wide endeavor of witnessing for Christ "in my own life, in and through my church, in social justice, in international good will and peace."

In the day-time and evening mass meetings during the four-day series of conferences (more than 125 separate group meetings in all), in the thirty denominational conferences and rallies, and in the worship and fellowship periods of the convention, a great objective—to re-present Christ's spirit and way in daily life—received inspiring guidance and a practical technic.

The witnessing program set before the youth of North American churches and broadened in the conferences of the Milwaukee Convention, grows from months of preliminary study and testing in Eastern areas.

Interpreted for small and large, rural and urban groups alike, and recommended for united youth effort, the witnessing program was placed before the convention in the opening session by Rev. Daniel A. Poling, D. D., president of the International Society of Christian Endeavor and of the World's Christian Endeavor Union. "I Will be Christian," was the theme and the spirit of Dr. Poling's key-note address, and also of the closing service of the convention, a time of reasoned, whole-hearted decision, which included making known the decision for full-time Christian service by not fewer than eighty young persons.

Walter H. Judd, M. D., came from his present post at the Mayo Clinic, Rochester, Minn., to tell simply and most effectively of China's call to him, and what he had tried to do in an inland city of China to carry on a Christian ministry of healing. His personal story, which includes his appreciative comments on Chinese life, is an epic in missions history.

Rev. William Hiram Foulkes, D. D., vice-president of the International Society of Christian Endeavor, made a number of vital contributions to the day-by-day program. Rev. A. W. Beaven, D. D., president of the Federal Council of Churches, summoned youth to give religious and moral causes a "new deal" in American life.

Rev. James Kelly, D. D., of Glasgow, Scotland, came to America especially to address this convention and to bring as president of the European Christian Endeavor Union a significant message from Hungary. To delegates in mass meetings and at several luncheon and banquet sessions, and in a most timely address and conference for the one hundred and fifty ministers who met daily, Dr. Kelly showed that the spirit of courageous and trusting Christian witness is the spirit of European Christian youth today. The executive committee of the World's Christian Endeavor Union has begun planning for the World's Convention in Budapest, in August, 1934.

Mrs. Francis E. Clark, Dr. Clark's companion in founding the first young people's society of Christian Endeavor and in his world travels, came at eighty-two to Milwaukee to speak for Christ from her own full and active life. The admiration of the delegates for this tiny and winsome lady could hardly be overstated. Her messages were little gems of Christian witness, usually introduced by stories of the Endeavorers she had known.

General Secretary Sherwood's biennial report indicated growth in numbers, progress in educational objectives, and an advancing interdenominational recognition for this fifty-two-year-old movement.

At evening sessions several speakers of twenty years or younger added important values to the program. The services of a number of denominational young people's leaders proved almost indispensable to the success of the conference program or "school of the convention."

Two thousand or more attended the daily conferences.

Dr. Poling broadcast each noon a conference for youth through WTMJ of Milwaukee, young members of the International Society's executive committee acting as chairmen for these sessions. Homer Rodeheaver was director of song, aided by a chorus of six hundred, trained and directed by Dr. Daniel Protheroe, Chicago composer and chorus-leader.

A colorful parade was followed by a public hymn-sing.

The next International Convention is scheduled to be held at Philadelphia in the summer of 1935. Three other leading cities gave hearty invitations, including San Francisco, where Endeavorers convened only two years ago.

Hymnic Response—"Purer in Heart, O God" (one verse).

Presentation of the Topic—

Benediction—

Father of love and power,
Guard thou our evening hour,
Shield with thy might,
For all thy care this day,
Our grateful thanks we pay
And to our Father pray,
Bless us tonight. —George Rawson.
Amen.

Special Music—"The Lord is My Shepherd," duet, or "The King of Love My Shepherd Is."

Religion has always found its greatest appeal to the human heart through poetry. Since the dawn of literature, man has offered his praises and his petitions to his God in poetic form.

The majesty and power of God, his loving care, his tender mercy, his forgiving heart, the comfort and peace that are the fruits of a great faith—all these seem to defy the limitation of prose for adequate expression.

RUTH.

LESSON VI—AUGUST 6, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Let us love one another; for love is of God."—I. John 4:7.

LESSON TEXT: Ruth 1:6-10, 16-22.

The historical background of the book of Ruth is fairly well known. A famine had driven the little family of four from Bethlehem, "the house of bread," over into Moab, "a foreign country." The famine was of such intensity and duration that the family settled in Moab, and the two daughters married Moabitish young men. Death invaded the little family circle, taking not only the father of the girls, but the husbands of both Ruth and Orpah, and leaving three helpless widows. In their extremity, Naomi turned back to her native land, and with breaking heart urged her daughters-in-law to remain among their own people. Orpah did this, but Ruth in immortal words, declared her purpose to go with Naomi, come what may. She went with her, made her home with her, won Boaz for a husband, and became an ancestress of David, and hence of Jesus himself. Such in brief is the historical background of this classic. Now for some practical truths.

Winsome Religion.

Ruth was a Moabitess, Naomi was a Jew. But there was about Naomi's life and religion something winsome, something so winning, that Ruth gave herself wholeheartedly to follow the God of her mother-in-law. One suspects that Naomi did but little talking about religion, but one feels that she did a good job of living her religion. It evidently made her so kind, so thoughtful, so unselfish that Ruth wanted the secret and found it in the worship and service of One whom she recognized as superior to the gods of the Moabites.

Alas, that there are so many of us who do not make religion either winsome or winning! So many people talk about religion, but they do not carry their religion over into life, especially into every-day life. This is life's central problem—to reproduce in every-day life the spirit of Jesus Christ. The best argument for Christianity is a Christian, a man who has the spirit of Jesus. Such a man is winsome and such a man wins others.

There is another side to the picture which needs emphasis. Ruth and Orpah were also winsome girls. There was that in their religion which made them kind. Their mother-in-law bore witness to their kindness to her husband, their father-in-law. There are some fair flowers of womanhood, even among those we call heathen.

Mother-in-Law—Daughter-in-Law.

The fund of jokes would be much depleted if all jokes about mothers-in-law were taken out. Of course, there is some basis for all the jokes, and for some of the things that are told on mothers-in-law. So many mothers-in-law are perfect fools, without either any common-sense or true religion. But a good word needs to be said for mothers-in-law. There are many, many women who are even as true mothers unto the sons and daughters who have come into their family circle by marriage. There are many young women and many young men who have found in their mothers-in-law a wise counsellor and a warm friend and a winsome companion.

Ruth a Moabitess—Jesus the Christ.

Ruth became an ancestress of David, who was an ancestor of the Christ. She was a Gentile, a foreigner, but her blood flowed in the veins of the Son of God who came to save all and to teach all that all were the children of the one true God. How persistent God has been in trying to teach his children that he hath made of one blood all nations of men. Again and again there have come from other races and from other nationalities those who have shown that God is no respecter of persons when he gives his gifts to the children of men. What a rebuke the story of Ruth is to those who think that the white race or Christian nations have a monopoly on either God's love or God's gifts.

Loss and Gain.

Naomi said she had gone out full and came back empty. But she had brought back Ruth. What a parable of life! Our supposed, or even our real losses are often our gains. Indeed, not only is "there no loss without gain," but as a rule we cannot experience gain without first experiencing loss. What a tragedy it would have been if Naomi had come back from Moab rich in material possessions, but without Ruth.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

Only those who have been privileged to study the literary perfection of the Psalms can fully appreciate their beauty. Without doubt the Psalms would have survived the ages for their literary value alone. But was it not the sensitive soul of the poet, conscious of his divine relationship to God, that enabled him to write such masterpieces of poetic beauty?

A program made up largely of poetry may be either very beautiful and inspiring or extremely boring. Two factors that determine its success or failure are: first, the choice of the poetry, and second and more important, the manner in which it is read.

It is suggested that an announcement be made in advance inviting young people to bring their favorite poems and share them with the group. These may be poems about God, or poems that lead us closer to God and to a better understanding of him.

Bless the Lord, O my soul.

O Lord, my God, thou art very great:

Who coverest thyself with light as with a garment;

Who stretchest out the heavens like a curtain; Who layeth the beams of his chambers in the waters;

Who maketh the clouds his chariot;

Who walketh upon the wings of the wind;

Who maketh winds his messengers;

His ministers a flaming fire.

Let the glory of the Lord endure forever;

Let the Lord rejoice in his works;

Who looketh on the earth, and it trembleth;

He toucheth the mountains, and they smoke.

I will sing unto the Lord as long as I live;

I will sing praises to my God while I have any being.

—Psa. 104:1-4, 31-33.

It is said that if you take one of a migratory flock of birds cut of the line which the God-given instinct has formed and is guiding to its distant home, and place it behind iron bars, it will beat its wings against the cage in its frantic efforts to rise and go on its journey. But let the season pass in which birds migrate, then open the cage; your bird will not go now. You may take it in your hand and toss it high into the air; it will be of no use; the instinct for motion has passed; the bird returns heavily to the same spot. So decisions for Christ may be delayed until there is no desire to be his.—Selected.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasurer . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

SALVATION FOR THE RICH.

"How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God."—Matt. 19:23.

According to Matthew, it is with difficulty that a rich man shall enter into the kingdom of God. It is understood that this difficulty is not because he is rich, but that a rich man is sorely tempted to independence, to worldliness and to unbelief. He has a terrible pull on him to worldly-mindedness and self-righteousness. He fares so sumptuously and receives so many good things in his lifetime that a personal recognition of God slips away from him and faith, as a way of life, is not important. It is not even necessary to be rich in this world's goods to be this way. If one minds earthly things, thinks he is "it," and that salvation belongs to him, and to just decent people like him, he is a rich man's comrade, whether he has much of this world's goods or not. To be sure poverty and afflictions are not to be taken as the way of salvation, but these things help one to hearken to the word of God, and turn the heart away from the world. Lazarus did not go to heaven because of his sufferings, but because he believed in God and remained steadfast to his belief, and his rest was in the "bosom of the Father of the faithful."

We cannot enter into life unless we have believing hearts and endure the afflictions and sufferings of this world as Christians. All genuine Christians will be blessed, and their tears will be seed from which will spring eternal joys.

Prayer—Lord Jesus, give us earnestness in the concerns of our soul, notwithstanding our position in life and what we may happen to possess. Whatever our station or wealth, in all, help us to do good and to help those who need, that they may endure. Save us from unbelief and give us a blessed end.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE LIGHT OF THE SANCTUARY.

"When I sought to know this, it was too painful for me, until I went into the sanctuary of God; then I understood."—Psa. 73:16, 17.

When the wicked defy God and challenge Christianity and still prosper and flourish, it is natural for the pious to be tempted to ask, "Is God righteous? Why doth the wicked prosper? Wherefore are they happy that deal treacherously?" It is hard to explain.

It is a fact, however, that events shape themselves in this world beyond life; beyond the visible things there is another world. In Christ we are children of that world in which we have our portion either in heaven or hell. But it is only in the sanctuary of God that we come to understand these things. The parable of the rich man teaches that the ungodly are set in slippery places; and if they continue in sin, they have their reward, and that reward will be according to their sowings in life.

Our lesson is, to let not the carnal mind control our feelings, but the Spirit; then the prosperity of the foolish will have no meaning to us.

Prayer—Give us godly hearts, dear Father, that we may know thy ways, and that we may not regard the wealth of this world, but Christian character as of supreme importance. For Jesus' sake we ask it.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE CONQUERING EXPERIENCE.

"As he is, so are we in this world."—I. John 4:17.

God is love. How blessed are they who are that much like God—who love God and who love everybody! They are blessed more than those who have honor and riches. And that God loves us and bestows this love on us is our greatest pride.

We have been fashioned to receive this love and enjoy its bliss, and we have been given the power to distribute it to others. If there is any one whom we hate and with whom we would not like to fellowship in heaven, we can remember that the Lord has made us kindly affectioned toward them and inspired us to view them in the light of Jesus. For he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him.

Prayer—Dear Lord, bestow upon us this most glorious and blessed gift of thine—the noble, rich, beautiful, and pure life of love.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

WHAT DOES IT MATTER?

"Happy is he whose hope is in the Lord."—Psa. 146:5.

We are seeing falsehood prosper. It takes the name of truth. It accuses the saints of being enemies to happiness. We are tempted to become bitter and become impatient about it.

But we are told that the visible things will pass away, and the invisible shall become the real. To live with the Lord means to be guided by his counsel, to be held by his hand, to be strengthened in his faith, and to be received in glory. Can we wish for anything better? If life is with God and our portion is heaven, what else matters?

Prayer—Lord, let us ever remain with thee. Keep us with thy right hand, and be, thou, our daily counsel and guide forever.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

"All things are now ready."—Luke 15:17.

This is the Lord's parable of the fullness of God's plans for us. Everything needful for our salvation is prepared. The Spirit keeps us supplied with an abundance of good things and invites us to help ourselves. Here is fellowship, holiness, love, liberty, comforts, joy and strength; here is the fountain of life; here is the house of the soul; here is the remedy for sin—it is all ready.

Let us learn wisdom and choose the good part always. Let us hear the call of God, repent of our sins, and give him our hearts. The wise merchant sells the lesser pearl for the better one.

Prayer—Lord, draw us to thee and give us thy blessings. Thou knowest how easily we are deceived. Give us wisdom and help us to obey thy call.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

"We know that we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren."—I. John 3:13.

Is there anything better that we can know? Death is the most dreaded evil. Life is the highest good. Death is terrible. Life is beautiful. Jesus said; "I come that ye might have life." And now we have it.

By "life" Jesus means that he would have us be of good cheer, enjoy life, be rich in deeds, and by this know that we are his children.

Should hate, or anger, or something else disturb us—In Christ we overcome with prayer and the word of God, and with deeds of kindness toward those we hate. By so doing, we have his promise to win them and we ourselves are reassured of the kingdom.

Prayer—O thou, dear Lord, who art rich in love, give unto us thy gift to love, too, and help us to practice it in our conduct. Above all, give us the assurance daily that we have passed from death unto life.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

SAYING "AHA!"

"Because thou saidst, Aha against my sanctuary, when it was profaned . . . therefore, behold, I will deliver thee to the children of the East for a possession."—Ezek. 25:1-7.

It is easy to treat sacred things lightly. Jest is readily based on hymns. Prayers can be twisted so as to become objects of mirth. Bible characters may be mocked at and Bible sentences parodied. After even the most exalted sermon there will be some to cry: "Go up, thou bald-head!" Every profanation of the sanctuary finds many to say "Aha!"

Swearing has been called the "great American sin," but this joining in the mockery of religion is to be found in all lands, and may be called the essential weakness and wickedness of the age. It removes from life all its earnestness and it takes from our thought of heaven all its splendor. It converts the most majestic element of our human existence into a mountebank show.

No Christian favors long faces and sourness of spirit; but there is a sane acknowledgment of spiritual majesty which is lacking in the feeling of today, which was powerful in the days of old, and which must be returned to our national consciousness before we can really be "strong in the Lord."

Prayer—Almighty God, we bow before thy glorious throne in profound humility. We know thee to be the Ruler of the universe, the Lord of all life. We honor, praise, and worship thee in holy reverence, world without end.—Amen.

THE WEALTH OF THE WORLD.

Some interesting figures on the wealth of the leading nations of the world have been brought together in a copyrighted document issued and for sale by Archie Rice, publicist and analyst. The United States is reported as the richest country in the world with wealth amounting to 320 billions of dollars. Next comes the British Commonwealth of nations with wealth aggregating 162 billions, divided as follows: Great Britain and Ireland (quoting billions), 80; India, 45; Canada, 28; Australia, 6; South Africa, 3. The combined wealth of the ten other countries mentioned below aggregates 326 billions, estimated as follows: France, 60; Japan, 51; Russia, 50; Spain, 42; Germany, 40; Italy, 25; Denmark, 22; Argentina, 15; Poland, 14; Mexico, 7. The wealth of all the countries listed totals 808 billions of dollars. But the Master speaks: "What will it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his soul?" This is one of the questions that mankind will work out, each for himself by the practical tests of meeting the attractions of the world and the gains proposed by the tempter. It is better by far to arrive at heaven, though we may be as poor as Lazarus, than to land in hell to keep company with Dives and others who have missed the way.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

THE CHRISTIAN'S DWELLING PLACE.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"The eternal God is thy dwelling place, and underneath are the everlasting arms."—Deut. 33:27.

How comforting is the assurance that the Christian has a dwelling place in God! The Christian may change his house but his home is in God. As Paul said in that great address to the Athenians: "In him we live, and move, and have our being." As Augustine, the great theologian, said: "Our souls are made for God, and they never are at rest until they rest in him." Moses said: "The eternal God is our dwelling place, and underneath are the everlasting arms." And again he said: "Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations. Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God." And David said: "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. I will say of the Lord, he is my dwelling place, my fortress; my God, in him will I trust." And again David says, "Because thou hast made the Lord, which is my refuge, even the Most High, thy habitation; there shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling." And best of all, to me, is that word of David's in his matchless twenty-third Psalm: "Goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I shall dwell in the house of the Lord forever."

I. The need of a safe and secure dwelling place. We all know the heart-hunger for a haven, do we not? In these shifting, uncertain times we have longed for security; we have wanted something permanent; and we have looked to God. It has been a good thing. If the changing scenes have lifted our faces toward the Eternal, we have been blessed. For there has been need of the Eternal, the Everlasting, the Unchanging in our lives.

Learned we our lessons at school, we awoke next day to find need for learning them all over anew. Yesterday's lessons were out of date, old hypotheses had hied away, and new ones stood in their stead. You awoke one morning with a place to earn a living, and that evening your position had been lost; you and your good wife held a council and decided you would have to begin to use up your little nest-egg of savings for daily food and shelter, and behold, another day and it was "frozen" in the banks! And then far more than one husband and father hunted a secret place, and sought to look up into the face of the eternal Father! Happy that man then if his faith held, and he could say: "Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations."

Had we the happiness and blessing of the children about our knees, with their sunshine and inspiration in some former day of strength and security? Did we know the joy of their laughter, and the perfection of the simple trust? Another day and they are far from us—dead perhaps on Flanders Field, or out yonder somewhere battling far stiffer battles than were our portion in other years. Hearts are lonely for their little laughter, and the lisp of their loving first words. How our hearts yearn for the companionship unspeakable—"The eternal God is thy dwelling place, and underneath are the everlasting arms."

What life is there worth living that has not had its shadows, trials, temptations? Take the life of Jesus, for example. Were there not times when he would want to cry out with the Psalmist: "Dwelling place failed; no man cared for my soul." (Psa. 142:4.) And did not he cry in anguish on the cross: "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" It was in such a supreme hour as that he could know that "the God of Jacob is our refuge," "the eternal God is thy dwelling place, and underneath are the everlasting arms," for it was then that Jesus said: "Into thy hands I commend my spirit." Yes, in the battles, storms, changing, ever-changing circumstances of life we need a dwelling place in God.

II. The poise of peace. How often we allow hopeless anxiety and needless fear to possess our souls! At such a time as that a Christian should "be still and know that I am God;" that in God he has a dwelling place; that "in him we live, and move, and have our being." And God is revealed in Christ Jesus. Does God seem far away? Turn to your Gospels. Are you feeling the fear of sin? Turn to the forgiving words of Jesus. Does tomorrow look black? And I know that no soft palliative can suffice in such a time, that platitudes are powerless, and that old shibboleths have lost much of their savor; but with a faith that has re-examined its foundations, I still sing:

"The Lord is our rock; in him we hide.
A shelter in the time of storm;
Secure whatever ill betide,
A shelter in the time of storm."

Nothing can take the confidence, and trust out of one quite like sin. It may be an old-fashioned word—yes, and there is an old-old problem. "The wicked flee when no man pursueth." There is no real poise where there is personal guilt—there may be for a time assumed poise; but the "peace which passes understanding" comes only to the penitent and the pardoned. "Therefore, if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, then come and offer thy gift." Perhaps one has sinned against his own best self, or his neighbor, or his God. The poise of peace comes only with forgiveness—and that forgiveness comes from "turning around," repenting, accepting the loving pardon of the Christ, and making whatever possible restitution.

III. Saved to serve. I have hunted for a new phrase, because I am afraid you will think the one I am using hackneyed, and I do not want anything to hinder this message. We must be "in him" for some purpose; poised for battle. "In him we live," yes, "and move!" How can we sit idly by while "wrong is on the throne?" "Into the woods my Master went, clean forspent, forspent." There was action, action to the very last. Jesus went to Calvary's top, and for the Christian whose dwelling place is in God, I can see nothing but that we should take up our cross and follow him! And where shall we begin? Jesus, speaking to his disciples, said: "Ye shall be my witnesses here at home in Judea and Jerusalem, and also in the unlovely and despised Samaria; yea, and to the uttermost parts of the earth." Where shall we begin? At home, in our own selves; our families; our community; in our acts, words, deeds, near at hand; and afar.

In the simple, honest round of their daily duty, I learn that the glory of God shone round about the shepherds on Judean hills! In the stirring business of battling for God, I learn that Gideon was God-enwrapped when he undertook to march in the strange ways of Jehovah of hosts! So, whether our lot shall be devoutly following a simple task, or leading a fighting army against a foe, we, as Christians, are entitled to know the peace of dwelling in God—"He shall be called Immanuel, God with us"—and having beneath us his everlasting arms.

Less than that belittles our Christ, and weakens our faith; less than that makes us guilty of the anxiety against which Jesus warned. After the battles of indecision as to whether, or not, I should yield to the call of God to enter the ministry of his sacred Word were won, I found myself face to face in fear and trembling with the task of preaching that first sermon. I chose for my text: "I will say of the Lord, he is my refuge and my (Continued on page 14.)"

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Some years ago a guard was marching some prisoners along a highway running parallel with a river, and they looked up the river and saw a small boat coming down the river, with two young boys in it, driven at a rapid rate by the swift current, and when the boat got near where the prisoners were, it capsized and the two boys were floundering in the water calling for help.

But are we, as Christians, perfectly innocent when so many fatherless and motherless children are homeless and helpless, and are floundering on the sea of life, appealing to the church for help, and we turn a deaf ear to their cry? When we could so easily help them.

Five years ago, three little girls and a little boy were fatherless and had no home. They cried to the Christian Church for help. It went to their rescue. The oldest girl graduated in the business course at Elon College this year.

We had three other splendid girls to graduate from high school, and they are working for the same company. We feel proud of them. They, too, called for help when they were as helpless as the boys in the river, but the Orphanage heard their cries and rescued them, gave them a chance and today the church may well feel proud of them.

Did you help rescue them? CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

afternoon service. He extended greetings to the church for their usefulness to the community for so long a period and expressed the hope that it would continue to grow in numbers and influence during the coming century. Greetings were extended by Rev. Harry Meyers, of the conference of which the church is a member. Rev. Albert Laucks, a former pastor, now at Dewittville, N. Y., spoke of his happy association during his pastorate and the progress that the church has made since that time, and expressed hope for continued progress. Rev. R. Earle Pettingill, pastor of Balligomingo Baptist Church, extended greetings from his own church and from the Ministerial Union of which the Gulph Church is a member.

"The closing session of the anniversary in the evening was featured by a sermon delivered by Rev. J. C. Felton, of Irvington, N. J. After extending greetings from his own church, he told the members present that the historic Gulph Church must continue to build during the coming years on the foundation laid during the first one hundred years of the church.

"All the speakers paid a flattering tribute to Rev. M. W. Butler, the present pastor, as a real Christin leader and true friend."

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING.

ELON COLLEGE, founded by the Christian Church in 1889, has fully justified the faith and hope of its founders during its 42 years of operation. Its graduates from the four-year course leading to a bachelor's degree, number 980, now living, 122 of whom are in the Christian Ministry and full-time Christian service. The majority of these are members of our own denomination. In addition, 449 are in educational work and are an active influence in the lay leadership of the Christian Church.

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING, and the definite religious atmosphere of the College, provide the very best facilities available for training for religious leadership, and offer the Church its finest opportunity to train the young people of the denomination to assume active leadership both in the ministry and laity of the local churches.

OBITUARIES

FISHER.

Miss Lydia Maude Fisher, daughter of D. W. and Jennie Roark Fisher, was born in Halifax County, Va., March 27, 1901, and died at her home at Natalie, Va., June 27, 1933, age 32 years and 3 months. She leaves her father, step-mother, one brother, Mr. George Fisher, of West Virginia, six half-brothers and four half-sisters.

Miss Lydia was never strong physically and for several years had suffered a decline of health. She bore her sufferings with unusual courage and patience. All that her fond parents, brothers and sisters could do was cheerfully done to make her comfortable. She had been a faithful member of Liberty Christian Church for nearly twenty years and was active in Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work. She was loved by all who knew her. Admirable in disposition, beautiful in her Christian virtues, and strong in her love for her friends, she leaves behind a life of influence for good.

The funeral services were conducted at the old Fisher home, near Valens, Va., with burial in the family cemetery. A large crowd was present. Many tears were shed. We left her mortal remains beneath a mound banked with flowers, tributes of love from her relatives and host of friends.

She has departed to be with her Saviour forever, which is better than remaining here. C. E. NEWMAN.

CRAVEN.

Stephen M. Craven was born April 10, 1906, and died June 9, 1933, age 27 years, 1 month and 29 days.

He was married December 24, 1925, to Miss Grace Smith. To this union was born one child, Clyde Resal.

He is survived by his wife and son, father and mother, four brothers, Claude, Bud, Earnest and Ira; two sisters, Dora and Edna. He suffered severely all the father, a good neighbor, and a kind while, but with his suffering he bore it friend.

Another Flying Record Established.—

The French pilots, Paul Codos and Maurice Rossi, who left Floyd Bennett Air Field last Saturday, landed in Syria on Monday, having been in the air for 54 hours and 19 minutes. The distance flown was 5,900 miles, making it the longest non-stop flight ever made, and exceeding the previous record of 5,340 miles by an estimated 560 miles. The Frenchmen are said to have claimed that they could have flown further, but decided to come down after making certain that they had established a new record.

The Power of Silence.—

Once was the time that the radio artists' fan mail was looked upon as a measure of his success. The New York American tells us that this can no longer be looked upon as a criterion. "Too many," it tells us, "jacked up their quota by trickery. The scope of the deceit was discovered through a new artist who, due to a mechanical breakdown on his first broadcast, spied through a dead mike." The station received over 300 letters of praise for this program which had gone dead. This started an investigation, and now fan letters are taken with the proverbial grain of salt.

The Free Church.—

The Free Church of America is in process of formation by the Unitarians (numbering 62,750) and the Universalists (numbering 47,288). In the former body objection was raised against the mention in the preamble of God and Jesus Christ. Humanists sought to have these references eliminated, but were overruled by the majority. What sort of Free Church would that be which the truth does not make free, especially the truth that God is, is the reward of them that seek him, is the beginning both of our wisdom and our knowledge? And we Evangelicals wonder how free a church would be whose members did not experience what the Saviour said: "If the Son make you free, then are ye free indeed."—The Christian World.

Uncle Sam's Credit Still Good.—

The first effort of the Treasury, since 1931, to convert a part of its floating, or short-term, debt into long-term bonds has proved surprisingly successful, notwithstanding the inflationary program which is in existence. On August 1st, the Treasurer offered $500 millions of 3¼ per cent, eight-year bonds, to replace $469 millions of 4 per cent certificates due on August 15th. They were issued in denominations of from $50 to $100,000, and were exempt from all taxation both as to principal and interest. At the same time there were offered $350 millions of Treasury notes bearing 1 5/8 per cent interest, due August 1, 1935. These replace certificates due September 15th, bearing 1¼ per cent interest. It was announced that these issues were over-subscribed within a few hours from the time they were placed on the market.

George Rector Tells What Cooks Eat.—

When asked by the Princess Alexandra Kropotkin, what famous chefs ate for their own dinners, Rector replied, "Goulash," and he added: "The highest-priced chefs in the world, men who spend their lives dishing up the most elaborate menus, call for goulash nine times out of ten when they order for themselves. Cooks of distinction rarely eat fancy foods. Onion soup is another favorite with them; also braised short ribs." He said that many times one would make a whole meal of cheese and salad. Mr. Rector said, and as a great American authority on cooking, he should know, that he approved of a certain measure of adventure in the kitchen, but that these principles would be found well worth remembering: If your soup is worth eating, it should be good for two helpings, with a simple meal to follow. A perfect salad should not be over-iced, and lettuce should not be too crisp. The use of salt and pepper is one of the fine arts of cooking and requires much study. And we certainly agree with him that big, comfortable plates—plates large in diameter—add to the pleasure of a good meal.

The Precious Metal—Silver.—

At one time in the world's history, now quite remote, the then very precious silver was used to ornament gold vessels used in the temples of the gods and for other very special purposes. Since history, as we know it, began, silver has, however, been the lesser of these two precious metals. Today silver is not precious so much because of its coinage into money or its molding into ornaments as it is because of its vastly increasing number of uses in the arts and industry. Last year twenty times as much silver was used for these purposes as was necessary for the coinage of money in the United State. One of the uses for silver is found in the motion picture industry, and it is not for making the "silver screen," but in preparing the films that are shown thereon. This one use alone requires tons of silver annually. Another use for silver is in making solder. Joints made with silver solder are said to be stronger than the metal parts which have been joined together, and for that reason it is much used in the building of airships and for special work in the construction of battleships and cruisers. Silver is also used in the making of railroad signals and in fire-alarm systems. It is a much better conductor of electricity than the more commonly used copper. In addition to this it furnishes a thrill for every bride-to-be in the form of sterling ware and other creations of the silversmith's art. Indeed, silver is more than ever a precious metal.

Defeated by the Dog Vote.—

In a recent primary in a Southern city, the defeated candidate lays his opponent's victory to the dog vote of the city. The present incumbent kept his place by a margin of some five hundred votes, but the defeated candidate, who received some 4,000 more votes than he did when running for the same office four years ago, says that the dogs were entirely responsible for the upset of his well laid plans. Scores of dogs—big ones, little ones, dogs whose bodies were crushed by speeding automobiles, dogs with distemper, dogs with pneumonia, mamma dogs whose babies were ill, all conspired to bring about his defeat. Of course their vote was by proxy, but it was their vote nevertheless that spelled his defeat. "Cal," the incumbent, is a lover of dogs. For years he has been doctoring them. He makes no charge, and he answers their call day or night. We are told that his bedside technique is as gentle and sympathetic as that of any physician bending over a sick child. And nine times out of ten the dog gets well. "Wherever I went," said the loser in this race for high constable, "there was always some man or woman who said, 'Cal cured my dog when he was sick.' That's something a dog lover never forgets. If I could have swung those few hundred votes, I would have won. The 'dog votes' defeated me."

We Favor the Army.—

There is one place where we favor the army. We cannot work up any enthusiasm over intelligent citizens cutting the throats of other intelligent citizens, simply because they happen to live in different countries or to march under different flags. It is when we read of how the gangsters and ruffians carry on their racketeering in cities like New York and Chicago that we grow enthusiastic over the army. Here is just where the soldiers are needed and where they can be of real service. How perfectly ridiculous it seems that the milk and poultry and other food supplies of a great metropolis should be controlled by a gang of highwaymen. The regular army or the marines could clean up the situation in a few weeks and eliminate the vermin who perpetuate it. Why do not the governors of the States concerned call on the soldiers for this purpose? It is absurd to say that they do not need them, for if the local authorities could have coped with the situation, they would have done so long ago. Had the army cleaned out New York, there would have been no Lindbergh kidnapping, and America would have a better reputation in the eyes of the civilized world. No other nation on earth would tolerate the kind of criminal control which exists in our large cities. It is time to eliminate it and the army is the only agency we know that is equal to the job.—The Christian Evangelist.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

We were glad to receive a post card from Miss Ethel Hurley who is now in Chicago, but was formerly in religious education work in the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va. She tells us that she expects to be in Dayton, Ohio, during the coming year, and we wish her much success in her work there.

A pastor of several rural churches writes truly in a personal letter: "My honest conviction is that a great awakening throughout all of our churches in the matter of missions is the greatest need of the hour. The gospel of our risen Lord is the flaming torch that is to dissipate the world's darkness."

We regret to learn that Mr. Henry Fleming, well-known former Elonite, and son of Dr. P. H. Fleming, of Burlington, N. C., was severely injured in an automobile accident while returning from a summer training camp in South Carolina. We sympathize with the Flemings in their distress and wish for the son a most speedy recovery.

Dr. Warren H. Denison has been preaching at Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., during the summer. We understand that his son-in-law, Rev. D. J. Bowden, Jr., will fill the pulpit there the last part of this month. Dr. Denison, of course, needed no introduction to the people of Norfolk. Mr. Bowden, has been recently in graduate work at Yale.

Dr. I. W. Johnson and Mrs. Johnson, of Suffolk, were at the offices of THE SUN, in Richmond, for a short while on last Monday. We were glad to see them and only wish that we might have been going with them to Massanetta Springs. Dr. Johnson expected to attend at least part of the sessions of the Virginia Valley Central Conference, which is being held near Elkton, Va., about eighteen miles from Massanetta.

Rev. J. Howard Smith has been substituting at Newport News the past six weeks. He writes: "For the past six weeks I have been supplying for Rev. Mr. House at the Congregational-Christian Church in Newport News. We are having two services each Sunday and are having good attendance. This past Sunday we had a musical program as substitute for the evening services. It was well attended and the music was delightful."

With the close of August, the two churches, Lee's Chapel, in Lee County, and New Hope, in Franklin County, N. C., served acceptably the past year by Rev. J. Ray Dickens, Varina, N. C., will be on the lookout for a pastor, Bro. Dickens having resigned, expecting to enter Vanderbilt University, September 1st, for further study. He is one of our loyal and promising young ministers who graduated from Elon College last June.

It is a source of relief and deep gratitude that Rev. and Mrs. R. T. Grissom, who were in a very serious automobile wreck Sunday night, July 23rd, are rapidly recovering. Mrs. Grissom, the more seriously injured, hopes to be released soon from Watts Hospital, Durham. Bro. Grissom has recovered sufficiently some days since so as to be able to return home. The accident occurred four miles west of Durham, about 10:30 P. M., the car in which they were traveling being wrecked and turning over four times, spilling in the wreckage the Grissoms, with a brother, and their 16-months-old baby, who strange to say, were uninjured. It was, indeed, a close call and a miraculous escape from fatalities.

Rev. J. L. Neese, Palm Street, Greensboro, pastor, writes happily: "We began a two-weeks' meeting Sunday, August 6th, at 11 A. M. Rev. H. C. Caviness and wife are assisting us in this meeting. There will be three services each day, eleven, two and eight o'clock. We are looking for a great spiritual awakening among our church people, and many souls saved. We closed a two-weeks' meeting Sunday night, July 30th, at New Lebanon Christian Church, in Rockingham County. Brother and Sister Caviness assisted us there. We had the greatest meeting that they have had in years. There have been over seventy-five professions of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and up to this time forty-three have joined the church, and we are expecting more. Brother Caviness is doing wonderful preaching and God is using him in a mighty way to win souls."

EAST DORMITORY.

Every student at Elon College, from the first to the last, will remember East Dormitory. If you were blindfolded and placed in one of the rooms in East Dormitory, and then permitted to open your eyes, I doubt if you would recognize the place. It presents the appearance of stability, neatness and elegance—you will like it when you see it.

We need furniture for this building—we do not have the money with which to buy. We have been fortunate in securing at bargain prices a large quantity of odds and ends at the receiver's sale of the Southern Furniture Company's stock, Burlington, N. C. Because of this purchase, we will be able to provide furniture at a reasonable figure for each room, which is as follows:

- Twin beds, springs and mattresses.
- Two dressers.
- Two chairs.
- Two tables.
- Two light fixtures.
- Two bookcases.

The cost of these articles will be approximately $66.75 per room. You will note that we are placing twin beds in the rooms; this will be a comfort and a convenience for the students.

I am wondering if you, your Sunday School class, or your church would not undertake to furnish one of these rooms. The rooms that are furnished by individuals, churches or organizations will be marked with a bronze plate, showing who provided the furnishings for that particular room. Won't you please write us, stating that you will see that one room is furnished? If you have a preference, state the room.

CHILDREN'S DAY AT NEW HOPE.

Saturday, July 22nd, was Children's Day at New Hope Church. Many people gathered on this occasion to enjoy the program of the day. The morning was given over to the children, who performed very beautifully before an attentive audience. Following the program by the children, and just after a few remarks by the pastor, everyone was invited around a very attractive table filled with good things to eat, which everyone greatly enjoyed.

At 2 o'clock, all assembled in the church for preaching by the pastor. After the service we had our regular church meeting, followed by the closing prayer. We all went home feeling that we had had a glorious and profitable day in the service of the Lord.

UNITED CHURCH, WINSTON-SALEM.

From the Twin City Sentinel, Winston-Salem, N. C., Monday, July 31, 1933: "The United Congregational-Christian Church was host to the other congregations of the Ardmore section (Baptist, M. E., South, and Moravian) of the city in a union service at the new church last night, Rev. M. F. Moores, of the Ardmore Methodist Church, delivering the message. The service was largely attended. The choir of the First Christian Church of Greensboro, with their director, H. R. Moag, and pianist, Mrs. W. B. Truitt, were also guests and added much to the service in rendition of special music. Reginald Marshall, of Winston-Salem, rendered a tenor solo, "Jesus Lover of My Soul," most inspiringly."

"The union meeting next Sunday night will be held at Tabernacle Baptist Church, with Rev. William T. Scott, host pastor last night, delivering the sermon. These union Sunday night services will continue through August."

Another article of the same date, has the following to say: "The Vacation Church School started at the United Congregational-Christian Church Monday morning, with a good enrollment. The school is for children between the ages of four and fourteen years, and it is directed by a group of capable leaders. Miss Priscilla Chase, extension worker of the Congregational-Christian Churches, is the director. Assisting Miss Chase are Miss Katherine Burt, a graduate of Pembroke College of Brown University, Carl Herman Voss, assistant pastor for the summer, Miss Frankye Marshall, a special worker in Vacation Church Schools, and other capable assistants. The school meets each morning except Saturday and will continue for ten days.

"There are seventy children enrolled and it is expected that this will be increased to over 100. This is the first school to be held in the church's new plant on West Academy Street and Lockland Avenue.

REDEMPTION IS ESSENTIAL.

By GLEN W. HUTTON.

The need for redemption might well be stated in these words: The world is not progressing, it is climbing back to the position from which it fell. The climb is impossible without divine help. Sin requires forgiveness. It cannot be overcome, it must be atoned for, and Jesus Christ, God's Son, made this atonement.

There is something about man that is different. He is created in the image of God. This statement and the statement in John's Gospel explains so much to the mind. John said, speaking of Christ, "There was the true light, even the light which lighteth every man coming into the world." This creative Logos was the Word that became flesh, it was Jesus Christ.

There is in every man a part of God. It is the spirit-mind, we say. This accounts for the worship desire in humanity. It has been said, Man is incurably religious. It is the outcropping of divine light in every life. This tells me why the black man of Africa worships and the monkey does not.

God put in every man a desire we call thirst and then he put the bubbling spring on the mountain side. He made us hungry and then provided the food. He put a part of himself in every human heart and then gave us Jesus Christ. The potato in the cellar reaches out with its long white sprouts in search for the sunlight. Why? Because there is a part of the sunshine in every potato. No man put it there: for who can take a handful of earth and a ray of sunshine and make a humble potato? No man! It takes God to do that. Neither can we take a man and couple him with personal goodness and make a Christian, for only God can make Christians.

The plan for man's redemption was forged in the mind of God. It was perfected because of his eternal love for man. Yes, it was costly, but love never counts the cost, it freely gives.

"Pass the time of your sojourning in fear; knowing that ye were redeemed not with corruptible things, with silver or gold, from your vain manner of life handed down from your fathers; but with precious blood, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot, even the blood of the Christ."

This plan, or should I say love gift, must be applied to the heart of man. It must be accepted. God does not force it upon us. As man chose to walk alone, so he must now choose to walk with God. Christ is not the choosing, he is the way back to God after we have made the choice.

God knocks at the heart's door through the Holy Spirit and if we will but open the barred door Jesus Christ will come in and God will bestow upon us the blessing of forgiveness. Without the open heart's door men are unforgiven and lost. We need today a new realization of redemption. A realization that results in conviction unto repentance which leads to a godly life.

Redemption is applied to our hearts and lives by God's plan. And that plan is the same as preached at Pentecost. It is the same as proclaimed to the Samaritans or at the house of Cornelius. It is the same as preached by Paul, that was proclaimed to Paul at the time of his conversion.

Preaching the gospel will bring about in men's hearts a belief in Jesus Christ. And when men believe in him they will repent. Oh, we need a genuine "godly sorrow for sin" that will work in our hearts a "repentance unto life."

We too often make joining the church the same as joining a club. We enter without any understanding as to the meaning of redemption. We make a confession of faith in Christ because it is required by the church; we are baptized for the same reason, while it should be a dynamic in our lives such as to result in the rapture such as was demonstrated in the early church.

We come finally to the question of behavior. This is not redemption but only the result of redemption. Paul said, "If any man be in Christ Jesus he is a new creature." Jesus does not say, "Ye shall or ye shall not." But he does say, "If ye love me you will keep my commandments." That settles the whole question. If we have come to God through Christ because we were lost sinners and we realized we were lost sinners without this sacrifice of love, we will be found only honoring the Master who saves us.

When is redemption complete? Christ came back to John on the Isle of Patmos when John was in the Spirit on the Lord's Day and gave him a picture of complete redemption. He told him to write it down and tell it to the world. It was a place where there was no sin, no suffering, and no sorrow; there would be no death there. Sorrow is removed and God will wipe all tears away from their eyes and we will dwell forever in the presence of the Lord.

Then we listen to the words of the Holy Spirit as he speaks again through Isaiah. He brings a tender message from the heart of God, "Fear not, for I have redeemed thee; I have called thee by thy name, thou art mine." We live with God for we have been redeemed by the blood of Jesus Christ.—The Christian-Evangelist.

THE FEAR OF GOD.

There is said to be a conspiracy of silence in modern religious life on fear as a worthy motive in religion. It is a scheme of Satan to make men bold and indifferent to the great realities of death, hell and the judgment. The more Satan can work in disguise the greater will be the result of his work.

Time was when a sudden death would be made the occasion of a solemn warning of the need of salvation, and we trust the holiness people are still awake to the fact that "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." Sudden and violent death haunts the highways but there seem to be few who take warning and prepare to meet God in the face of these accidents and calamities. The newspapers report that the death toll of the last Fourth of July in this country was one hundred and seventy-eight lives, if we recall the number correctly. What a sudden cutting off from life for one day! We do not know the spiritual state of those who met death so suddenly, nor is it necessary that we should to make the matter an occasion of exhortation to men and women to prepare now to meet God. There may be no other warning for some one than these words, "Flee from the wrath to come."—Exchange.

ILLUSTRATIONS IN THE BIBLE.

It has pressed into its service the animals of the forest, the flowers of the field, the stars of heaven, all the elements of nature. The lion, spurning the sands of the desert; the wild doe, leaping over the mountains; the lamb, led in silence to the slaughter; the goat, speeding to the wilderness; the rose, blossoming in Sharon; the lily, drooping in the valley; the apple-tree, bowing under its fruit; the great rock, shadowing a weary land; the river, gladdening the dry place; the moon and the morning star; Carmel by the sea, and Tabor among the mountains; the dew of the morning and the rain upon the mown grass; the rainbow encompassing the landscape; the light, God's shadow; the thunder, his voice; the wind and the earthquake, his footsteps; all such varied objects are made as if naturally designed from their creation to represent him to whom the book and all its emblems point.

Thus the quick spirit of the book has ransacked creation to lay its treasures on Jehovah's altar, united the innumerable rays of a far-streaming glory on the little hill of Calvary, and woven a garland for the bleeding brow of Immanuel—the flowers of which have been culled from the garden of a universe.—Unknown.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

RUTH.

This beautiful book of the Bible is called Ruth, but what of that character who through devotion to her family and her God, won Ruth, and without whom the world had never heard of Ruth? Reckon awhile with this Naomi. If Ruth was good and great wasn't Naomi even better and greater? I am speaking primarily and fundamentally. Naomi stays in the background and wags and wins, comforts and counsels, plans and provides, lives and saves. She had so lived in a hated, heathen land as to win, by the manner of her daily walk and worship, one who worshipped idols and false gods, to the worship of the true and living God.

The first real woman missionary from a Christian to a heathen nation was Naomi. She so loved and lived in that heathen land as to win one; not only win one to herself, but to her God. And that is living some in a day such as hers, and among a loathsome, heathen people, as were the Moabites.

It was Naomi who won Ruth and taught her the way of eternal love, life and hope.

And this capable and devoted pupil, Ruth, becomes the ancestress of our Lord Jesus Christ. What a contribution, indeed, this Naomi makes to history, the world and the Gospel, when she wins a soul from heathendom and starts that soul on its way to God and glory!

The writer of the book of Ruth tries his best to make us realize how great a find this was by repeating, in the close of his narrative, twice over again that Ruth, the Moabites, the hated heathen, became the ancestress of our Lord, being as she became, the great-grandmother of David. What treasures, indeed, heathenism still has for humanity, history and God, if only those who know God will, by their life and love, reveal him to those who wait and bow down in darkness till the true light and life be given. Truly,

"The dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear Full many a gem of purest ray serene."

if only loving and wise Naomis may be found who will, through worship of the living God, turn on the light in the dark lands and caves of heathenism so that these gems of royal Ruths may be brought into the light and life of a living world.

The first, as well as one of the foremost, missionary books of the Bible is the lovely and loving book of Ruth.

It was through famine that God literally drove Naomi, one of his first missionaries, into a pagan country. And it is largely through famine, want, need, persecution, self-denial, that he has been sending them out ever since.

DECREASE AND INCREASE.

Of course, no facts, no logic, no argument will cure hysteria, or roll back the ocean's tide. However, here are some facts that may one day arise up to accuse those who are responsible for engendering the hysteria:

After the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment, deaths from alcoholism in the United States decreased 42 per cent; alcoholic insanity decreased 66 per cent; crime from drink decreased 54 per cent; drunkenness decreased 70 per cent; automobile wrecks (with deaths) decreased 50 per cent; drinking decreased 77 per cent.

But what is all this in comparison with a promise of some revenue from taxing liquor? That is the question Canada asked and answered by legalizing the sale of liquor, under government control, with the following results: According to Canadian Bureau of Statistics since Canada legalized liquor, deaths from alcoholism have increased 100 per cent; general crime has increased 89 per cent; drunkenness has increased 55 per cent; drunken drivers have increased 830 per cent; auto wrecks (with deaths) have increased 42 per cent. Wet Canada (in proportion to population) has three times as many automobile wrecks as dry United States, England four times as many, and Germany six times as many. The death rate of the United States has decreased 20 per cent under the Eighteenth Amendment, which gives the dry United States the lowest death rate of any principal country in the world.

These and other equally appalling facts are supplied in a copyrighted pamphlet by Thos. H. Steele, Statesville, N. C. But why furnish facts to a people under the delirium of "Repeal?"

RAILROADS AND BIG SALARIES.

The railroads are losing money, their stocks are going down, they are begging the government for new travel, and their cry of hard times and unemployment is something to hear.

Meanwhile, what about salaries of the high-ups? The following from the Literary Digest gives an insight:

Thousands of railroad men "have no jobs at all," he reminded them, and "thousands of investors in railroad securities are receiving no return."

"The salaries to which Mr. Eastman referred," says the Associated Press, "ranged downward in 1932 from the $135,000 a year drawn by Hale Holden, chairman of the board of directors of the Southern Pacific Company. Many salaries since have been cut sharply." When the Southern Pacific applied to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a loan, it was not granted until Mr. Holden's salary was reduced to $60,000.

"Other executives in the higher brackets last year," the Associated Press adds, as listed in a letter from Mr. Eastman to Senator Couzens of Michigan, include:

"W. W. Atterbury, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, $121,500; Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore & Ohio, $120,000; L. F. Loree, president of the Delaware and Hudson, $90,000; L. A. Downs, president of the Illinois Central, $90,000; J. J. Pelley, New York, New Haven and Hartford, $90,000; Paul Shoup, president of the Southern Pacific, $90,000; Carl Gray, president of the Union Pacific, $90,000; F. E. Williamson, president of the New York Central Lines, $80,000; S. T. Bledsoe, of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, $67,500."

AFTER PROHIBITION, WHAT?

What remains to be done if the Eighteenth Amendment is out before Christmas, according to the prophecies of Jouett Shouse and Mrs. Sabin?

There has not been and there will not be any surrender by the dregs of certain well-fortified convictions, namely: That alcoholic beverages, even in limited quantities, are injurious to the individual, the family and society, and used to excess are poisonous to health, ruinous to happiness, and economically wasteful and destructive. Having reached this conviction on the evidence of experience, observation, reason and scientific investigation, they will continue to regard it as among their highest civic duties to use every means within their power to restrict, diminish and as far as possible do away with the consumption of beverage alcohol. They will practice and teach total abstinence, where they can, hoping by precept and example to lead others to the path of safety. They will begin again, by the operation of local option laws, to establish dry areas of ever-increasing extent.

The forces which have waged the repeal fight with such vigor and success, are likely to disintegrate, after the victory. Contributions to the wet cause will fall off sharply, just as they did in the case of the Anti-Saloon League after 1919. What need for prohibition reform when there is no prohibition? Why give Shouse $25,000 a year to fight prohibition when John Barleycorn is having things all his own way? Even the wet press, despite the alliance between the editorial page and the business management, will help us. For it must print the news, and it is fairly evident that the news will smell of whiskey. The front page cannot be closed to stories of gin-soaked bankers, liquor-motivated divorces, and the whole progeny of scandal and crime which alcohol breeds. The continual recital of all this evil and misery can have but one reaction on normal minds. Furthermore, the saloon is coming back with a flood—women bartenders and patrons, long hours, Sunday selling and all the rest. They are on the way—in some States already here. While the saloon has its apologists and its defenders, it has also an immense and proven capacity to make enemies. If it comes back with the old dirt and indecencies, the same brothel-alliances, and youth-corrupting influence, we give it but a generation to live. It will sign its own death warrant. That will be the second death—and there will be no resurrection.—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

The breath of prayer comes from the life of faith. Whatever you want, go to God by faith and prayer in the name of Christ, and never think his delays are denials! They that spend their days in prayer shall end their days in peace and comfort.—J. Mason.

THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT CAN BE SAVED.

By LEIGH COLVIN.

The Eighteenth Amendment can be saved if the Christian forces of the States yet to vote will renounce defeatism, and go to work with the earnestness and consecration which the crisis demands.

Although the wets have carried the States that have thus far voted, they are carrying them by a minority vote, most of them by a vote of from 27 to 37 per cent of the number of voters who ordinarily vote.

In the days when the States were adopting prohibition, and carrying prohibition in thirty out of the thirty-two States in which binding referenda were held, prohibition received the votes of about 55 per cent of all those who voted in the general elections, and the wets polled about 41 per cent. Now the wets are polling a still smaller percentage notwithstanding the fact that the States which have thus far voted include most of the wetter States of the Union.

The wets are voting, but the difficulty is that so many dries have been rendered indifferent by the continuous bombardment of wet propaganda that they are not going to the polls. The remedy is to overcome that indifference.

A second difficulty is that the present campaign is the most one-sided campaign in our history. The wets are pouring out millions to win, and have captured the political machines, whereas the dries seem transfixed by a spirit of defeatism and are handicapped by pitifully small funds.

Repeal can be defeated if a fighting spirit can be awakened, and extraordinary efforts put forth immediately. There are twenty to twenty-three States where there is yet a possibility of a majority vote against sanctioning the liquor traffic.

Repeal Will Destroy Constitutional Power.

The dry voters need to be awakened to the fact that these elections are not like the old local option elections when if defeated in one election they could come back in the next. If defeated now, we cannot re-enact National Prohibition. Repeal would deprive the Federal Government of the power to prohibit. The Federal Government is a government of limited powers and in the absence of a Constitutional amendment it would not have the constitutional power to prohibit or even regulate the liquor traffic. Furthermore, the States separately cannot cope with the liquor traffic when it is legally entrenched in adjacent States.

Now or Never.

The Christian forces should awaken to the fact that our generation is at stake. If the liquor power is re-entrenched in the revenue system and in politics, it will take defensive measures to prevent its being outlawed again for a long time to come. The history of the three great prohibition waves of the Fifties, the Eighties, and the Nineteens, shows that in each case after recession there was an interval of thirty years before the crest of the next wave. Those now of middle age should awaken to the prospect that if they do not fight and prevail now, when the Constitution is on our side, they are likely to go to their graves with America still in the grip of the legalized liquor traffic. They will have to spend the rest of their lives in an alcoholized society. They will have to endure a liquor environment. They will have to live in a period when the vision of the kingdom will be darkened. The Christian message will wither if the soil is that of alcoholized brains. Christianity's influence on non-Christian lands will tumble if the foremost Christian nation surrenders to alcohol.

The menace of liquor's dominance in our nation's life should stir the moral forces to unprecedented sacrifices to save America from such a calamity.

The Emergency Committee.

The National Prohibition Emergency Committee, Investment Building, Washington, D. C., was set up by the combined church and dry organizations of the country to carry on a unified campaign to prevent repeal. In connection with this a campaign for quarters was instituted by the W. C. T. U., using the slogan, "No Quarter for the Liquor Traffic, Thousands of Quarters to Retain the Eighteenth Amendment." Most of the meager funds which have been sent to the campaign States came from these quarters. The campaign for quarters should be intensified through the cooperation of the churches and the W. C. T. U., but much more than quarters are needed to block the liquor power.

The Eighteenth Amendment can be saved by an aroused Christian conscience and a widespread determination to do the extraordinary, the sacrificial.

A PURPOSE IN AFFLICTIONS.

One of the most profound statements of the Bible in regard to the providences of life is that God has a purpose in our afflictions. "Our . . . affliction . . . worketh for us." Saint Paul said, speaking of his own philosophy of life, which we may also share if we will pay the price. "Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."—(II. Cor. 4:17.)

When under the harrow of trial one may be tempted to give up in despair, or, at least to bitterly complain, because we think there is no benefit to be realized, no gain for the Master's cause to be registered as a result of what we suffer. We are inclined to say: "There is no sense in it, no real reason for it all." We cannot just now concern ourselves with the road by which afflictions come to us, and who sent them, and why, but we look about us to find out what we may gather up for our profit while they remain or after they may have departed.

Can affliction really work for us? Yes, so the Word of God says. It may do such a work as the keen knife of the surgeon, removing the cause of disease, it may do the work of sand and water that finally will polish the hardest granite; it may work for us like the storm at sea that tests our sea-worthiness and drives us toward the harbor, as stated in the hymn: "Blest be the tempest, kind the storm, that drives me nearer home."

If we take our sorrows like the growing tree that strikes down a deeper root when the wind blows, then we are learning to make them work for us. If, like Saint Paul, we learn to look at matters from the outlook of eternity, it will be well with us when the fire lights upon us. A great work must be done to fit us all to be comfortably at home with God and the martyrs, let us learn to win some important results when affliction comes upon us.

Alexander Smellie says that by bearing affliction in a Christian way God will teach the mind, soften and expand the heart, impart new strength to our faith and add vigor to our prayers.—Wesleyan Methodist.

THE STORY OF A BIBLE.

Napoleon Bonaparte, in one of his campaigns, was engaged in taking a German fortress which had resisted his efforts for six months. When at last it was taken by storm, the soldiers rushed into the town and laid hands on whatever of value they could. In the French army was a German named Krause, and he, like the rest, sought out a house which he thought might be worth looting. On entering he was accosted by a boy of six years, who, holding up a Bible, said: "Here, I will give you this, though I like it very much, only do nothing to my dear mother."

The soldier took the Book, and on opening it was arrested by the words he read, and much to the surprise and relief of the widowed mother and her four children, he said: "I will take nothing if you will let me have the Bible." He placed the Book in the breast of his tunic, and left the house, but he kept guard outside, and so prevented any of his comrades from entering until the soldiers were called to their quarters.

Meanwhile, a body of Germans were advancing to the relief of the town, but arrived just too late to prevent its fall. They, however, attacked the French, and during the progress of the fight Krause was struck in the breast, and fell to the ground. For a while he was unconscious, but on regaining consciousness he was much surprised to find that, instead of being wounded, the missile had lodged in the Bible which he had received from the boy. Thus the Book had been instrumental first in softening his heart and saving the widow's family from danger, and then in saving his own life.

Krause afterwards became an officer and seven years later he wrote a letter to the boy who handed him the Bible, enclosing a considerable sum of money "as a reward to the noble boy, who, seven years ago, gave the dearest possession as a ransom for his mother, and thereby saved the life of this grateful friend, Edelrich Krause."

This is a very remarkable incident, and though such an event is hardly likely ever to happen again, yet similar results are being seen every day. Many a hard heart has been softened by a passage from the Bible, and many who have set out to commit a wrong have been stopped at the remembrance of a text they loved in childhood.

No doubt that Bible was treasured and often shown by Krause to friends as the means of saving his life, but, better still, he accepted the Gospel message which the Book contained, and so it became the way to a better and more lasting life than that which had been preserved to him by its protection from the bullet.—The Little Christian.

THE ATHEISTS AND THE ALTAR.

By BISHOP W. A. CANDLER.

A man of high character, known throughout the United States, asked an atheist a few days ago if the latter and his associates expected to destroy Christianity in our country. The atheist replied, "Certainly we do, and that at an early date."

The man said, "Upon what do you rely to destroy Christianity?" The atheist replied, "We rely upon the pulling down of family altars."

This enemy of Christianity was entirely right. If only the altars in the homes of Christian people were pulled down, the Christian religion in America would certainly be destroyed.

As a matter of fact, many altars have been pulled down in homes, the heads of which still profess to be Christians. But there can be no religion without worship, and when they abandoned their altars, they virtually introduced a measure of atheism in their homes.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

What is success? The amassing of money? Dives did not find it so. Is it power? Herod did not find it so. Is it knowledge? Paul did not find it there. No! Success lies in stewardship, in receiving the facts of life—money, influence, intellects—as loans from God, to whom the account is daily to be rendered. "The longer I live," writes Samuel Chapman Armstrong, "the less I think and fear about what the world calls success, for the perfection and beauty of the inner life, for the purity and sanctity of the soul, which is as a temple"—Central Christian Advocate.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

There is a time to listen. Pride and sheer laziness have made it difficult, if not impossible, for many people to listen in a receptive mood. Some time ago this writer saw a minister commit an offense while a visiting preacher was waiting to preach in the church. During the singing of the hymns, the visitor was compelled to hear all about the conditions existing in the church, and community, with a few added boastings, as to the power and personal influence of the pastor.

At the close of the song service, the pastor, in a very dignified way, proceeded to request the attention of the congregation to the service of the hour. One wondered whether the choir felt that the example of the pastor was an encouragement for them to be cold and indifferent to the message of a man, who would not listen to them while they were singing the great hymns of the church. Evidently the minister who talked during the singing in that church, was not courteous enough to listen attentively to the message from his choir. It is not unusual to observe this type of people in almost any congregation. There are people who have never seemed to realize the importance of giving attention to every part of a religious service.

There are people who think the music is the only part of a church service of any real value. A young man arose in a church choir to sing a solo. He straightened himself up and assumed an attitude of superior complex, or self-importance, as if to say, "You should and you must listen to me." He sang well and with acceptance to the congregation. But when the minister arose and began the sermon, the singer, who would have resented any inattention on the part of any person in the congregation, at once, began turning the leaves of the hymn book and looking in every direction except towards the preacher. That part of the service was, apparently, uninteresting to him, and he was plainly relieved when the minister had concluded the sermon.

The measure of any man is indicated by his willingness and ability to listen to others. Some people cannot listen while others speak. It takes mental effort to pay attention. It requires concentration of mind and application of will power. Humility listens. Pride and conceit will close the ear and heart to others. The days are numbered for the people who will not listen. What one hears is not always worth serious attention. But one needs the mental effort of concentrated attention. Without that, one must fail to discover the best when it is offered. One is not called upon to accept everything one hears at its face value. It would not be wise to undertake to adopt every suggestion made by others. That is not the point of emphasis in this little discussion. Listen, that is the call of the hour.

Listen to songs, sermons, talks, addresses, conversations, advice; select the best, appropriate such as you may use for your needs and lay the rest in the storehouse of memory, if it is worth keeping in that sacred place. Are you listening to the still small voice of God within you? Are you listening to the voice of Nature? Are you listening to the voice of conscience? Are you listening to the teaching of the experiences of life?

Are you listening reverently or indifferently? Samuel listened to God, and said: "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth." Isaiah listened, and said: "Here am I, send me." Jesus listened in the garden, and said: "Not my will, but thine, be done." The prophets of old listened and wrote the messages of God, for succeeding generations to read and believe. John, on the Isle of Patmos, listened and wrote the messages to the suffering churches of the Lord Jesus Christ. Knowledge is not self discovered. Wisdom is not derived from self importance. It comes from others. Listen!

I. W. JOHNSON.

WHAT PRICE EDUCATION?

The average high school graduate that you approach today will agree that he should go to college. And further, he will declare his desire and ambition for such an opportunity. Then, he will begin to tell you how useless it is for him to think of such privileges, or even hope for such a chance in life—that he is financially unable to meet the expenses incurred in securing a college education; that his parents are without money and that he has no friend to whom he may turn for such assistance. There he stands—capable, ambitious, determined—knocking at the college door for entrance, but with no funds with which to pay his bills.

Only yesterday, a young girl, a recent high school graduate, with hopes and ambitions, came to my office, begging for a chance to enter college. She had no money—her parents had no money. She had a relative who is able to pay her expenses, but she is in doubt whether or not she will be able to influence this relative to lend her the money.

A few weeks ago, a friend of mine and a great friend of the College, expressed the hope that some day she might have the money to give to the College to provide cash scholarships for such worthy and ambitious youngsters. It is my hope and prayer that this good sister may be prospered and may find herself in possession of sufficient funds to realize her hopes and dreams for the youth of our country. Certainly those who have money could invest it in no better way. It seems that we have learned in these recent days that money laid up for "a rainy day" may be swept away by the storms before that day comes. Better, far, invest your money so that it will add efficiency and pleasure to ambitious young people and thereby bear dividends for good throughout the years to come.

At least 60 per cent of all young people applying for admission to colleges of this country are asking for generous financial assistance on the part of the college to which they hope to go. They are asking for jobs—they say they want to work, but in reality they are looking for financial help. Many of the colleges are turning a deaf ear to this type of student. They have two requirements for entrance. First, scholastic records—they must have averaged at least 85 in their entire high school course if they are to be admitted. Second, they must have sufficient money with which to pay the greater part of their college expenses. Unable to meet either one, or both of these requirements, they cannot enter the so-called "select" colleges. The majority of the independent or church schools of today are financially unable to grant liberal assistance to those who come; however much we desire, our hands are tied—we do not have the money.

Some of the greatest men of our country have been those who fought their way through college without money.

With the mounting demands on the part of our educational institutions, and with the diminishing fortunes of our best type of citizen, we are forced to inquire if the day has past when the youngster without money can secure a college education? It is, unless those who have been more fortunate in life and are able financially to give assistance to colleges for the benefit of such worthy young men and young women will cooperate with the colleges in making it possible for the boy or girl without money to have the advantages that will make him or her the kind and type of citizen that we need.

One would judge from the recent legislatures that the States, themselves, have in mind to "thumbs down" on financial appropriations for the adequate support of our State schools. This means that the generous hearted citizens will be called upon to increase their contributions to the independent college and I hope that they may respond.

When the youngster faces college today, he is aware that the price of an education is constant, consistent mental application. He is willing to pay this price. He can and he will. But, this is not all. He must pay money, and for him the price of a college education will amount to from $3,000.00 to $5,000.00 in most colleges. He doesn't have the price—he cannot pay—he cannot go.

In making our plans and in arranging our schedule of expenses at Elon, we have had in mind the type of student who is capable and determined, but with not much money, and we have reduced our expenses to the minimum. A young man or young woman can come to Elon College and stay for nine months and pay all of his expenses within $375.00. Of course, he can spend more if he wants to, but it is not necessary. We are proposing to offer advantages that are unsurpassed. If you are interested or know of someone else who might be interested in entering college in September, please write Elon College, Elon College, N. C., and inquire for information regarding the school.

MT. BETHEL REVIVAL.

The Mt. Bethel Christian Church is in the midst of a successful revival. Rev. J. W. Patton, pastor, assisted by Rev. L. A. Nall, of Elon College, who is doing the preaching. Brother Nall is an earnest, consecrated young man, who never gets tired nor discouraged, and has faith in the people and in God. He believes in preaching the old-time gospel.

There were on several nights, between ten and fifteen souls who came seeking Christ as their Saviour. There have been several who have already united with the church, and we are expecting others later, estimated at about thirty or forty.

We are indeed grateful for these blessings. Surely, these are great days for Mt. Bethel Christian Church.

Hundreds are coming to hear Brother Nall pour out his soul in heart-searching messages. The church feels wonderfully revived by the ministry of this man during these special days.

Rev. J. W. Patton, who is the beloved pastor, has been sowing the gospel seed and Mr. Nall has entered into his labors to help reap the harvest.

The Mt. Bethel and Kallam Grove Christian Churches will hold a joint baptismal service at Ogburn Pond, Sunday, at 2 P. M., the pastor, Rev. J. W. Patton, officiating. There will be approximately fifty baptized. The public is cordially invited to attend this service.

LEBANON AND LIBERTY.

Our annual series of meetings were held the first week in July at Liberty. On account of financial conditions, it was decided not to have ministerial help. The writer did the preaching, and local talent the singing. The congregations were good. Seldom have I been in a meeting where more nearly all the members of the church attended.

Visible results were a great number of reconsecrations, a few professions, and two united with the church. This church has a Sunday School of over one hundred members, a large Christian Endeavor Society, and a Woman's Missionary organization.

At Lebanon, the series of meetings began on the third Sunday in July, and continued through Friday. Rev. Holland R. Wilkinson, evangelistic singer, was with us and did all the preaching. Brother Wilkinson is a splendid practical preacher, wonderful in song and consecrated to the work. This church, through the influence of some friends of the noted singer, has been fortunate to have him with us for two years. We had good attendance, interesting services and much good resulted for church and community. Three united with the church and a great number of believers were built up in the faith. The Sunday School at this church, under the leadership of Brother Henry Earp, is doing a good work. This church has lost by death in recent years, many of its leading members, but there are a number of faithful ones carrying on the Master's work. The Woman's Missionary Society hopes to add new members and raise their entire apportionment for the present year.

At a recent business meeting, the present pastor accepted a unanimous call to serve this congregation for another year.

C. E. NEWMAN.

RESOLUTION.

Whereas, our dear friend and brother, Rev. R. L. Williamson, has deemed it necessary, for private reasons, to tender his resignation of the pastorate of this church, which resignation was very regretfully accepted at a meeting of the congregation held on July 2, 1933;

Now, therefore, this resolution and valedictory message has been formulated, in the name of the whole congregation, in order to convey to Bro. Williamson, and his good wife, and to place on record (which we do now, individually and collectively), our highest sense of appreciation of the faithful exposition of the gospel rendered by our retiring pastor, and of the many visits and kindly help to the sick and ailing throughout his ministry. His sermons and addresses have been a source of uplift and inspiration, and a gap will be left in the lives of many of us by our brother's departure.

We take this opportunity of wishing Brother Williamson and Mrs. Williamson Gospeed! We pray that, in their new sphere of labor, wherever that may be, they may find happiness and success.

THE WOMEN PREACHERS' ASSOCIATION MEETING.

The meeting of the Women Preachers' Association of America is never very largely attended. There are not so many of us and we are scattered from Maine to California, and in fact farther still, even unto the uttermost isles of the sea; but, we do meet and most thoroughly enjoy the fellowship which these meetings bring to us. The outstanding service of the meeting held in Milwaukee, July 5th-7th, was the sunrise prayer service on July 6th. The meeting was scheduled to last one hour, but did actually last one hour and forty minutes. Surely, these times of prayer and intercession bring their immediate results in deepened and strengthened spiritual life as well as in results spread over longer periods of years.

Rev. Lucy T. Ayers gave one of the most interesting addresses on "The Underprivileged Class." Miss Ayers has worked in mill towns both North and South, and knew whereof she spoke. Her address was listened to with interest and attention by all. The president's address, "Why Preach?" stressed anew the fact that the women of God are needed to preach the Word and that nothing can take the place of the spoken word; that there is a message and a place for the woman who preaches, even though there may seem to be an over-supply of preachers at the present time. Rev. Irene Earll, of Hartford School of Religion, told us something of the Oxford movement and its effect on her own life. The hostess of the occasion, Rev. Ada L. Forster, of the Disciples Church, is the only woman pastor in the city of Milwaukee. She was honored on Sunday morning by being one of those who officiated at the Communion of the Lord's Supper in the great auditorium, where about 3,000 young people attending the International Christian Endeavor Convention, and other friends joined together in this sacred service.

Rev. M. Madeline Southard, of Kansas City, was re-elected president; Rev. Elizabeth Wilson, Appleton, Wis., recording secretary; Rev. Ella L. Kroft, Indianapolis, Ind., treasurer; and Rev. May E. Bullock, of Trotwood, Ohio, general secretary. Since the association is incorporated under the laws of Ohio the headquarters office is for the present, in Dayton, Ohio. Any women in the Congregational-Christian Church, who are preaching, or doing foreign mission work, are urged to write Mrs. Bullock and affiliate themselves with the group of women doing similar work and with similar interests.

MAY E. BULLOCK.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary

MORE THAN A CHARITABLE ORGANIZATION.

The church will either be swung into the social order of the day or it will change that order. It cannot remain neutral. In the Moffatt translation of the New Testament we read: "Amid the darkness light shone and the darkness could not master it." May God grant that this is the truth that applies to our day. It will be tragic if the church invests its energies in an effort to build an institution instead of a mission, if it tries to build itself instead of building a better social order of society. Let her come out of her statistical stultification, her madness to count noses, and place the emphasis not upon how many are enrolled, but upon how much value they are in building the Kingdom of God on earth. Sometimes I find myself tempted to throw the church roll into the discard where many of those whose names appear therein have long since gone, then to launch those in whose hearts the Spirit of Christ rules on a great mission for the needy of the world. What value can there be in the rightness of creed where the wrongness of greed controls?

The great church of Jesus Christ is vastly more than a charitable organization fitted to feed and clothe the hungry and naked. What it has to communicate is as far beyond the value of food, clothing, and shelter as a human being is of more value than so many sparrows. But just as faith must be shown by works so love for men, which is of the essence of the higher life, may be proved and deepened by a ministry to the bodily as well as the spiritual needs of the community. Right now certainly offers an extraordinary opportunity to the servants of Jesus. If they truly follow him who truly healed and fed and who "went about doing good," as he preached the rich gospel of his Father's Kingdom, then the powerful appeal of present conditions will find quick response from the association of Christians which we call "Churches."—M. P. Recorder.

MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

The Virginia Valley Central Woman's Missionary Conference was held at Leaksville, Va., July 20th. The program was in charge of Mrs. A. W. Andes, president. The pastor, Rev. A. W. Andes, led the opening song and prayer. The welcome address by Mr. R. O. Rothgeb, made the visitors feel at home for the day. Miss Minnie Dofflemyre, of Bethel Church, responded in a few fitting words. Devotionals were conducted by Mrs. D. H. Dofflemyre, of Harrisonburg. Her subject, "The Why of Missions," was based on readings from Genesis, Ruth and Matthew.

The Leaksville male quartette and a ladies' duet from Whistler's Chapel rendered several delightful selections, lending interest and variety to the good musical part of the program.

The churches—Antioch, Bethel, Dry Run, Leaksville, Mayland, Newport, Whistler's Chapel, Winchester and Wood's Chapel, were represented. The ministers in attendance were Revs. Williamson, Earp, Andes and Weekley, of this conference, and Rev. Horace Lequear, of the Reformed Church, a returned missionary from China, who was present by invitation of the program committee.

Mr. George Rothgeb, of Luray, father of Mrs. M. J. W. White, of the Philippine Mission Hospital, gave a most interesting lecture on our mission work in the Philippines. His lecture was illustrated by charts and curios describing the location and work of Dr. and Mrs. White. This lecture was filled with information regarding the three successful years they have been on the field and many will wait anxiously for the time to slip by when the White family will be on furlough, and visit our societies. I believe all who heard Mr. Rothgeb speak will watch THE CHRISTIAN SUN more eagerly for articles from the pen of Dr. and Mrs. White. I had to think while listening to this address that a parent who has a son or daughter away on the Foreign Mission work must certainly hear a voice and receive a blessing that the rest of us know nothing about.

Rev. Horace Lequear, a returned missionary from China, gave a very interesting address. He told of the progress of Christianity in the twenty years of his work in that country, of Chinese history, and many personal experiences of much interest to his hearers. He was able to stay on the field long enough to see marked improvement of the natives.

The afternoon song service was led by Mr. Billy Andes.

Short talks were made by Mrs. A. F. Kite, who used as her subject, "The Influence of the Country Church," and by Miss Verdie Showalter, her subject being, "Our Wants and Our Needs." A reading by Miss Treva Senger, a teacher of expression, deserves special mention. A group of young people from Whistler's Chapel gave a dialogue illustrating the curse of the liquor traffic which was particularly interesting. A resolution was offered that we as a missionary body composed of the churches of this conference do heartily assert our loyalty and support to the Eighteenth Amendment and emphatically oppose its repeal until something better is offered in its place.

The reports were incomplete, but showed seven Women's Societies with 162 members, and four Young People's Societies, with 112 members.

The treasurer, Miss Verdie Showalter, reported a total of $425.37 received and of $423.96 sent out during the year.

The district superintendents, Mrs. B. J. Earp, Mrs. A. F. Kite, and Mrs. Roy Rinker, gave reports from their various districts.

The following officers were elected: Mrs. A. W. Andes, president; Miss Ora Scott, vice-president; Mrs. B. F. Frank, secretary; Miss Helen Showalter, treasurer; Miss Anna Lou Showalter, assistant treasurer; Mrs. Lizzie Frazier, superintendent Women's Societies; Mrs. Orville Hoover, superintendent Young People's Societies; Mrs. Lena Rothgeb, superintendent Cradle Roll; Miss Minnie Dofflemyre, superintendent Literature; Mrs. R. A. Larrick, superintendent Spiritual Life.

The sumptuous dinner served on the lawn was most gratifying and satisfying. This meeting was one of the best this body has ever enjoyed.

MRS. B. F. FRANK.

DANGEROUS DEFLATION.

Probably there is not one official board in Methodism that does not have one influential member who has his heart set on deflating the church missionary program.

He is not a very pious man. The love of Christ does not seem to constrain him to do much of anything for his Lord, but he has influence in the board.

He is not well informed—he is too busy to read the Advocate. His wife reads it and follows her missionary women around the world, but the game of winning a world is only tiddly-winks to him, small stuff for a big man.

He is a hard-headed business man. He dismissed his own men in order to save his business and wreck their prospects and help to wreck the nation. Now he wants us to dismiss our missionaries and balance our budget. It is the same hard-headedness that has driven his country on the rocks.

He is a big man, a shrewd man—at times—a good man, but he is a dangerous man in this crisis. His way means a blasting of our missionary work and a blight upon our whole church.

"We must save our own church," he says. But why must we save our own church if we have to abandon our real mission in the world?—Michigan Advocate.

THE HEATHEN AT HOME.

By F. B. SHEPHERD.

We who, as one good brother expresses it, have been "stung with the foreign mission bee," are constantly having our attention called to the heathen at home, and are being reminded of the necessity of carrying the gospel to these. I am not so sure that the people at home would appreciate the designation, but still I for one recognize the responsibility and want to do what I can to preach the gospel to every creature. If I know my own heart, I am no more interested in the people of Africa than I am in the people of America. I agitate on behalf of the people in Africa because there are fewer manifesting interest in them than there are manifesting interest in those of America.

But apropos of the heathen at home. The people of the South especially have a great challenge right at their own door in the colored neighbor. According to our Constitution, these people are not a separate nation. They are as much Americans and members of our nation as are we who are white. They are our Lazarus, full of sores, lying at our gates, and desiring to eat of the crumbs that fall from the rich man's table. And truly the crumbs are all that we give them. In fact, I sometimes wonder if we give them even the crumbs. But, as it is reported that Booker T. Washington once said: "If we expect to keep the negro down in the ditch, we will have to get down in the ditch with him." And if we whites would live above the ditch, we will have to assist the negro brother up on dry land also.

Brethren who are stung with the foreign mission bee, and brethren not so stung, what are we going to do this year for our heathen at home? Brethren of the South, especially, what about the negro? People of the North, what about the foreign element in your midst, as well as the negro? It is not enough for the people who have been stung by the foreign mission bee to confine their efforts to missionary work in foreign countries. Nor is it enough for those not so stung to rail on the ones stung, while they themselves do nothing, either at home or abroad. There is danger of human beings, wittingly or unwittingly, acting the part of cuttlefish. We can attract so much attention to others that we are overlooked in the general muddying of the waters.

The white disciples of Chattanooga, Tenn., have supported Brother M. Keeble in a meeting covering four weeks. They supplied the tent, sixty by one hundred feet, and everything that goes with it; paid the preacher, the singer and all expenses. The result has been fifty-five baptized and eight restored. This meeting has been a kind of climax of several years' effort upon the part of these same white churches, during which they have supported Brother Alonzo Jones in work among his own race. Brother Jones is a splendid Christian, a hard worker, and a good preacher. His preaching and his life have been all that we have any right to expect. The white disciples bought a lot and erected a church building for the colored disciples a few years ago. The recently closed meeting should almost place the negro work on its feet to the extent it will be almost, if not entirely, able to carry its own financial responsibility from now on. Certainly the white disciples will continue to watch after it. A few years ago this scribe was instrumental in getting the colored brother, Alexander Campbell, to hold meetings at Amarillo, Lubbock and Abilene, Texas. The Amarillo effort was practically a failure, and the church did not follow it up. The Lubbock work, though, was more promising, and the brethren there continued to encourage it. Brother John T. Smith was living at Lubbock when the Campbell meeting was held. Since he has been in his second period of ministry with that church, he has encouraged and in-under the direction of the white disciples, and work. Brother Keeble recently held a meeting under the direction of the white disciples, and Brother Smith occasionally leaves the white brethren to take care of the speaking on Lord's days, and goes down to the meeting house of the colored brethren and preaches to them. We now have a fine congregation of colored Christians in Lubbock, Texas. In Abilene, Texas, the brethren have spent several hundred dollars in the past ten years on behalf of the heathen at home (the negro). The work has been hard and disappointing. The results have not seemed to be in keeping with the financial outlay. But they continue on. Every year some of the young preachers going to school at Abilene Christian College take a special interest in the colored work. For years regular Bible classes have been taught for the colored children, by those young men, under the direction and oversight of the leaders in the College Church. About a year ago a house was built by volunteer white labor, and with money supplied by white brethren, on a lot bought by white Christians, and given to the colored disciples. Such faithfulness will be rewarded with real success in the long run. The time will come, with the proper oversight and encouragement, when there will be a church of colored disciples able to carry on independently. And let it be said of Lubbock Christians, Abilene churches, and the Chattanooga churches, that while they are seeking to save the heathen at home, they are not indifferent to the heathen abroad. All of these groups of white Christians have given very substantial help to African missions, and China missions, and Japanese missions, and missions in other sections of the United States.

Nor are these churches wealthy. They are made up of the general run of people so far as this world's goods is concerned. In Abilene the brethren have given generously toward financing Abilene Christian College, have started two new congregations in town, and assisted many weak congregations elsewhere during the past twelve years. In Chattanooga they have averaged a new congregation every two years during the past twenty years, in their own city, besides considerable assistance rendered in establishing congregations of white disciples in that immediate section of the United States.

What these towns have done—and I cite them only because I can speak from first hand knowledge—churches everywhere can do. If you cannot get enthusiasm for contributing money to preach the gospel to negroes in Africa, the Japanese, the Chinese, the Filipinos, or what not, then get interested in the heathen at home. What about the negroes, or the Mexicans, in your city? Have you made an attempt to establish a congregation of either? What about the poor, the down-trodden, the submerged tenth, of your city, North or South? Have you made any consistent, aggressive effort to save their souls and thus relieve your hands of blood-guiltiness in their case? Brethren, it is not enough to ridicule those who are foreign mission bee stung. The great question all of us will have to face some day will be: "What attention did we give to the great commission?" I wonder if Christ was bee stung? And what species of bee stung him? I hope the same bee will sting me, if it has not, and you also.—Gospel Advocate.

HOME—A UNIVERSITY.

The first university is the university of the home. Here the hours for recreation are—the morning, the noon and the night. Here we find the Round Table of infancy and childhood. Here are discussed the problems of the present hour and the possibilities of coming years. Here sit the scholars of youth and maidenhood. Here are enthroned two great chairs—endowed by destiny and sustained by human affection—Fatherhood and Motherhood. The greatest university in the world is the home. Said George Herbert: "One good mother is worth one hundred school-masters."

The greatest letters ever written, measured by their influence, were written by a mother's hand. These are the genuine love letters of the world. Written in the red ink of human affection, baptized with the tears of spiritual anxiety, and caressed by the hands of an unselfish devotion. No wonder the young lad from the country said that he found three things in his mother's letter: Money, Love and Tears. This is the trinity of a mother's love made manifest.—James Gordon.

FIDELITY REWARDED.

We may learn from the story of Ruth that self-sacrifice is self-saving, and that self-seeking is self-love. Orpah went back to Moab, and she is heard of no more. Ruth clave to Naomi, and she is canonized among the Old Testament saints, having a place among the ancestors of our Lord. The nameless kinsman was afraid lest his name should perish while he was seeking to perpetuate Mahlon's, and it has perished in spite of his refusal. Boaz did what this nameless one declined to do; and lo! his name stands in everlasting honor, on the first page of the New Testament.—William M. Taylor.

A MISSIONARY PROGRAM.

Among the many things which the students did at the Elon Summer School was to work out programs which they could use in their young people's societies at home. Below is a missionary program which was prepared by Misses Exie Arie and Vergie Sheffield for the class on Missionary Materials and Methods, taught by Miss Chase. After the program was rendered, the class gave criticisms which might strengthen the program. In this fashion the young people learned to do by doing.

Topic—"Organizing for Action."

Aim—

Hymn—"When Morning Gilds the Skies."

Responsive Reading—

Prayer—

Hymn—"O, Master, Let Me Walk with Thee."

Talk—"What is Our Attitude Towards World Friendship?"

Talk—"Chinese Life."

Hymn—"We've a Story to Tell."

Closing Prayer—

Responsive Reading—

Leader—"God is Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth."

Response—"We thank thee, O God, for thy Spirit in this lovely world."

Leader—"God is light. If we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another."

Response—"We thank thee, O God, for thy light in a dark world."

Leader—"God is power. They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength. They shall mount up with wings as eagles. They shall run and not be weary. They shall walk and not be faint."

Response—"We thank thee, O God, for the power thou hast given us to serve thee."

Leader—"God is love. Everyone that loveth is born of God and knoweth God. For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

Response—"We thank thee, God, for the great love with which thou lovest us, and that we may show that love to others."

What Is Our Attitude Toward World Friendship?

How much do we show our gratitude to our Father for the goodness which he has manifested throughout the centuries and which he permits us to share daily? Are we playing fair with God and our fellowman?

Have we stopped to think that if human society does not organize itself in the spirit of brotherhood it will not be worth the coffin in which to bury it?

We want first to right our own hearts and then try and help those around us. As we go onward in our daily lives we must share many joys with others.

Let us resolve to manage our own lives within the coming months. Let us try to awake with a prayer of thanksgiving in our hearts and end our day with the asking of forgiveness for our sins and failures.

We can attend the services which our church maintains, not so much out of a sense of duty as from a desire to express our appreciation for God's care and loyalty and to gain knowledge, courage and power to do our full share in bringing his kingdom to pass upon the earth.

We want to make our relationship with people in our community democratic, friendly and helpful—giving our prayers, time and money. Others have done—so why can't we?

If it had not been for the fact of our great missionaries, where would we have been at the present time? Probably prowling around in the woods three-quarters naked, eating locust and wild honey.

And just as surely as the sun continues to shine to light the heavens, our friendly relationships with all men will be a source of nobler deeds and higher ambitions.

ADORNMENTS OF THE SOUL.

A friend of mine recently introduced me to a great book. This was a friendly deed, and I wish to introduce you, also, to "Cyrano de Bergerac," by Rostand. The story is fine in itself, the language is poetry, and certain passages will live with me through the years. Cyrano was being .twitted about being a clown with no gloves, "no ribbons, no lace, no buckles on his shoes." Here is his reply:

I carry my adornments on my soul.
I do not dress up like a popinjay;
But inwardly, I keep my daintiness.
I do not bear with me, by any chance,
An insult not yet washed away—a conscience
Yellow with unpurged bile—an honor frayed
To rags, a set of scruples badly worn.
I go caparisoned in gems unseen,
Trailing white plumes of freedom, garlanded
With my good name—no figure of a man,
But a soul clothed in shining armor, hung
With deeds for decorations, twirling—thus—
A bristling wit, and swinging at my side
Courage, and on the stones of this old town
Making the sharp truth ring, like golden spurs!

The adornments of the soul are much more beautiful and lasting than the clothes which people wear. If the characteristics of spirit which are mentioned in this poem, and others of which you may think, are evidenced in life, then you have a chance to live well and happily forever.

PROGRAM.

Instrumental Prelude—"O, Thou Sublime Sweet Evening Star," or "Day is Dying in the West," played softly on a violin.

Call to Worship—"The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork; day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge."

Hymn—"Day is Dying in the West."

Poem—"At Nightfall," by Dorothy Louise Thomas.

Prayer—

Hymn—"This is My Father's World."

Introduction Talk—

Presentation of the Topic—

Scripture—Psalm 8:1-9.

Hymn—"Dear Lord and Father of Mankind."

Benediction—"Taps" (see Christian Endeavor Guide, April, May, June, 1932, pp. 5-7).

Additional Hymns—"Now the Day is Over,"

"We Thank Thee, Lord, for this Fair Earth,"

"For the Beauty of the Earth," "God of the Earth, the Sky, the Sea."

Choose the most beautiful spot that is accessible to your group for this meeting. Spare no effort to make the service truly one of worship. You will no doubt have in your group some young person who has made a trip to the mountains and to whom they are a special source of inspiration and worship. Another one may have been to the Great Lakes or the sea, another to the prairies. Some of the group will love the sunset better than another beauty of nature. Ask these young people to come prepared to tell what the mountains, sea, or whatever the case may be, means to them, and to describe some great experience of worship they have had under that inspiration.

Each summer the Literary Digest publishes a vacation number that may be helpful in preparing this program. Nature magazines may also be used to advantage.

AT NIGHTFALL.

How quietly the night descends! The still Lake mirrors little stars upon its breast.
Against the sky the outline of a hill
Is pricked in misty blue along the West.
All is calm, as if the tranquil night
Had quieted the noisy cares of day,
Laying upon her fevered brow the light
Touch of a cooling hand. Long shadows stray
Among the trees, where a belated thrush
With tender, flute-like note and silent wings
Seeks out his hidden nest. The breathless hush
Stirs hidden depths within my heart, and brings
The memory of One, who sought of yore
The gracious healing of some lonely shore.

On such a night as this the Master walked
Beside the waters of blue Galilee,
Wearied with men who gibed at him and talked
Of petty things. Spent with his ministry
To lame and halt, to deaf and blind, he came,
Seeking seclusion and the evening's calm,
To ease his heart, that ached for sin and shame,
Amid the solitude of deep-healing balm.
Night long he sought the Father's presence there,
Praying for love and patience, not for peace,
Growing in power to free drab lives from care;
And when, at last, the long night watches cease,
Renewed in spirit, strengthened once again,
Went ministering, among his fellowmen.

ALLIED YOUTH FORCES TO MEET IN CONVENTION.

Dr. Haven Emerson and Dr. Daniel A. Poling will be the outstanding speakers at the Second National Conference of Allied Youth which is to be held in Cincinnati on August 21st-22nd. Delegations from many of the six hundred organized groups of Allied Youth are expected to be present and to have a part in the program, in addition to many members of adult units of Allied Forces and friends.

The chief purpose of the Conference, according to a recent announcement made by W. Roy Breg, Director of Activities of Allied Forces, will be the launching of the new educational program of Allied Youth. Mr. Breg explained that the National Executive Committee of Allied Forces had a meeting in June at which the decision was reached to enter into this particular field with intensified effort. He said:

"We have spared nothing in arranging a program for the Conference which will be worthy of the high aspirations which we hold for it and for the new program."

Arrangements have been made to hold a series of special conferences for groups of leaders interested in educational work. These include religious educators, editors of religious publications,

HANNAH.

LESSON VII—AUGUST 13, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "A woman that feareth Jehovah, she shall be praised."—Prov. 31:30.

LESSON TEXT: I. Samuel 1:9-11, 24-28; 2:1, 2. Times have changed since Hannah's day. Life has become more complex. Much has been written about the psychology of parenthood, and the training of children. But in this simple story of this Bible mother of a far-off day in a far-off land, there are abiding principles that have a place in our modern life. This Bible mother has something to say to modern mothers.

A Worshipping Mother.

Hannah went to the church of her day. She worshipped regularly at the appointed place where God's people were accustomed to gather. She understood the place which worship had in life. She knew that womanhood could never come into its highest heritage unless it fed on something more than bread alone. There is a danger that many modern women shall become so engrossed in social activities that they will neglect the weightier matters of worship and service. It is not enough to send children to Sunday School and church. Parents should go with them. Mothers and fathers who do not attend services of worship need not be surprised if their children do not attend.

A Praying Mother.

Hannah was a praying mother. Prayer was a vital factor in her life. It was sincere and earnest. Out of the bitterness and loneliness of soul she talked unto the Lord. Prayer for her was no mere saying of words; it was the sincere desire of the soul. Her prayer was for definite things. She was specific. She asked God for a son. Her prayer was persistent. "She continued praying before the Lord"—her earnestness and her faith in God inspired her to keep praying. Her prayer was unselfish—she wanted a son, but she did not want him for herself alone, she promised to lend him unto the Lord. In all these things this woman of long ago speaks to the women of today about prayer.

And what tremendous consequences followed from her prayer. Here is a woman, out of the loneliness of her heart, praying for a son. God answers her prayer, gives her a son, and he becomes a nation's reformer, and in a sense, its saviour. One of the romances of history would be a list of the things that have come to pass as a result of a mother's prayers.

A Mother with Perspective.

Hannah was undoubtedly a woman of ability as her song in chapter two would indicate. She might have made a name for herself in public life as a prophetess. But she felt that the true mission of womanhood was motherhood. She looked upon child-bearing as a divine mission. She felt that there was no substitute for motherhood, and out of the agony of her soul she prayed that she might have a child. That her prayer was not selfish is evidenced by the fact that she vowed she would lend this child unto the Lord.

There are so many opportunities in modern life for women to earn money, and to gain distinction in the professions, that many women are remaining single. And there are many women who, although they marry, do not want children because they think that children will interfere with their "career." Let all such women learn from Hannah that the true mission and the highest mission of womanhood is motherhood. Blessed is that woman who marries and becomes a mother and makes a home.

A Mother With Common-Sense.

Hannah had such a common-sense view of motherhood. She did not feel that Samuel was hers to do with as she pleased. She felt that he had been lent to her by the Lord, and hence she ought to lend him to the Lord. Samuel to her constituted a stewardship, and she determined to be a good steward.

Now there are many mothers who never think of their children as God's children entrusted to them. There are, for instance, mothers who would be horrified if their boys told them that they wanted to be ministers, or their girls told them that they wanted to be missionaries or social workers. There are many mothers who cherish social ambitions for their children without any thought of God's will for their lives. And even in the case of good mothers there is so many times all too little sense of stewardship of children. Children are lent to us by God. We are to train them for God and help them to find and do God's will in their lives.

A Mother Who Kept Her Vows.

"And she vowed a vow . . . I will give him unto the Lord." "And she said, therefore also I have lent him to the Lord, as long as he liveth he shall be lent to the Lord." Hannah kept her vow. It was not easy to do. Every mother knows how her heart must have gone out to that baby boy whom she wanted to have and to hold. But she had promised him to God and to God he should be given. How easy it is to make vows—how hard it is to make them good! How many modern women stand at the marriage altar and glibly take upon their lips the marriage vows, and then on the slightest pretext and pretense break them. If it were not so tragic it would be funny to know on what grounds many women seek divorces.

Of course, the principle obtains for all of us. We have taken the vows of the church, the vows of marriage, vows which we have made under other circumstances. Let every man take heed how he deals with those sacred things made in a high mood of aspiration and high resolve. We will do well to remind ourselves occasionally of our vows and to renew again our covenants.

ministers, Sunday School and church school leaders, and those in charge of the preparation of Sunday School lesson material.

The Cincinnati Conference Committee, under the chairmanship of Kenneth E. Vordenberg, recent graduate of the University of Cincinnati, is planning a number of entertainment features in connection with the Conference program. These will include a sight-seeing tour of the city, special service at the impressive Lincoln statue in Fountain Square, a get-together session and an Allied Youth Banquet.

Headquarters for the Conference will be made in the Hotel Gibson, where all of the sessions will be held in air-conditioned auditoriums.

All who are interested in attending the Conference or in knowing more about it, are invited to write for full information to the Allied Forces, Investment Building, Washington, D. C.

I find it easier and easier to find contentment in the riches of the mind. Take from me all the so-called riches of the world and leave me imagination and I shall still be rich; but give me all the wealth of the world and take from me my imagination and you will plunge me deep into the pit of indescribable misery.—Anon.

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasurer . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

By DR. AMOS R. WELLS.

MONDAY.

HIDDEN SACKCLOTH.

"And the people looked, and, behold! he had sackcloth within upon his flesh."—II. Kings 6: 24-30.

The King of Israel was sorely moved by the fearful sufferings of his famine-stricken people, and when a particular instance of horror came to his attention and he rent his clothes, the bystanders perceived that underneath he wore sackcloth; so the people knew his hidden grief.

Longfellow once wrote sympathetically: "If we could read the secret history of our enemies, we would find in each man's life sorrow and suffering enough to disarm hostility." Even the highest in their pride, if we could look beneath their armor, would be seen wearing sackcloth. So let us move tenderly among men, knowing that though misery does not often flaunt itself, or beg for fellowship in grief, the unutterable need is still there, hidden below the surface.

Prayer—May we be strong to help, O heavenly Partner in human distress. May we find in thee the one surcease of pain, the one remedy for anguish, the one everlasting joy. And, having found it for ourselves, may we share it with all around us.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

PLEASURES CONTROLLED.

"They are choked with cares and riches and pleasures of this life."—Luke 8:9-15.

Our Lord's parable of the good seed choked among the thorns of worldliness found a sad parallel the other day in Lynn, Mass., when a toy balloon which a boy was inflating suddenly burst and the tin whistle at the opening was breathed in and stuck in his throat. The poor little fellow had passed beyond recovery before a doctor could be brought.

In a less obvious but equally real fashion, very often we children of a larger growth choke on our toys. Many different playthings kill us—money, ambition, pride, vanity, power, frivolity, passing pleasures—but all of them are as transitory as a toy balloon, and each of them is likely to choke us.

Prayer—May we examine ourselves, Infinite Judge, in the light of thy judgments. May we discover our true tendencies, may we see our lives as thou dost see them. And if we are living for the emptiness of the world, turn us, we pray thee, toward the real satisfactions—thy joys that endure and grow.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS.

"My righteousness I hold fast, and will not let it go."—Job 27:1-7.

In the great drama of Job, the proud man may see himself as in a clear mirror. Job was almost invincible in his persistent pride. Job was royally sure he was right. Job knew his own heart, or thought he did, and in it saw nothing impure. Job scanned his whole life carefully, or thought he did, and found no unworthy action. Job charged the Lord with unrighteousness because, in the midst of the fearful disasters sent from heaven, he was sure of his own righteousness. That righteousness the patriarch held fast and would not let it go.

Not all of us are so outspoken as Job, but in our hidden souls are we less hesitant to upbraid the All-Wise, the All-Loving? Do we hold our righteousness less tenaciously than Job held his?

Prayer—Thy pure eyes behold us, O All-Seeing One. Thy vision pierces to the uncleanness beneath all our confident shows. Force us into thy judgment hall. Strip off our self-conceit. Make us thine by the way of truth. We ask it in the name of thy Son, and in his lowliness.

THURSDAY.

CHEAP LABOR.

"They that plow iniquity, and sow trouble, reap the same."—Job 4:1-9.

An economist quotes the advertisement of a certain chamber of commerce, urging men to establish their business enterprises in its city, adding, "We offer free factory sites and plenty of cheap labor." Cheap labor, says the economist, is dear in the end. It means hopeless labor, sodden and degraded labor, inefficient labor, quarrelsome and unproductive labor. "Free factory sites" in such a community cost too much. God never asks any one to serve him for naught, but always pays liberal and amazing wages. The wages of sin, however, are nothing; nay, they are worse than nothing—the wages of sin are death!

Yet no one ever sinned but he expected big profit from it. But instead, he has seen only the black mischief and red iniquity which he sowed. God is never mocked. From the beginning of the world, it has been ordained that whatever a man sows, that he shall reap.

Prayer—Lord of the harvest, choose our seed for us and direct our sowing. Drive the devil from our land. Become our Blessed Partner, with thy rain and sun and the fruitful elements of the soil air. Then, when the angel reapers come, they will carry off a glorious harvest to fill the barns of eternity.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

ENTERPRISING AGE.

"Even to old age I am he, and even to hoar hairs I will carry you."—Isa. 46:1-7.

It is said that when the British War Office decided Quebec must be taken, they called in the generals one by one and proposed the plan. The oldest of them said it could not be done. That it was almost impossible. Every one of them declined the commission. At last, they came to Wolfe, the youngest of all the generals. He said, "I will do it, or die in the attempt."

This is thought to illustrate the characteristic qualities of youth and age, but the distinction is largely traditional. For every fervid and daring young man, you may find a coldly prudent and crassly conservative youth, and for every fearful and over-prudent old man, you may find one of dashing and imperious ardor. Those whose early years were with God find that he is the same even to old age. Courage and confidence do not grow less with the years, but rather increase.

Prayer—Thou, our King, art our reliance. We will begin our days with thee, sure that thou wilt go with us all the way. We will set out with Thee on the road of the morning, certain of reaching with firm step the goal of the evening. "All the way our Saviour leads us."—Amen.

SATURDAY.

STRONG BELIEF, STRONG LIFE.

"The word of God, which also worketh in you that believe."—Thess. 2:13-20.

Paul, the apostle of faith, is also and of necessity the apostle of works. He constantly links together belief and life. If men believe in Christ, they will work for Christ. And this is not merely a matter of the head, it is a matter also of the heart. Men are constantly deprecating what they call "mere intellectual belief," when there is no such thing to deprecate. If one could have a mere intellectual belief that twice two is four, and then deliberately add two and two to make five, he would prove that he was an arithmetical infidel.

Let us, then, test our beliefs by our deeds and feelings. Do we think we believe that Christ is the Son of the Almighty God, the Saviour from sin, the Lover of good and truth and beauty, and at the same time do we live ugly lives, selfish lives, false lives, lives that are sad and lonely? Thereby we shall know that we have no such belief as we supposed we had.

Prayer—Lord, we believe; help thou our unbelief. Protect our beliefs. Render them vital in our living. Help us out of assumed beliefs into felt beliefs. May we not cheat ourselves, making ourselves the victims of silent hypocrisy. In thy name.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE ONE FOUNDATION.

"The priests that bare the ark of the covenant of Jehovah stood firm on dry ground in the midst of Jordan."—Josh. 3:14-17.

One of the worst traffic jams that ever occurred in Boston was caused by a heavily laden coal truck which broke through the newly laid asphalt on one of the busiest and narrowest of the crowded city's down-town streets. It was three hours before the truck could be extricated, and for more than an hour traffic in three directions was stalled for many blocks.

The exasperating event pictures what happens in any life which attempts to carry heavy loads of responsibility and labor without securing the firm foundation of faith in Jesus Christ. There is sure to be a breakdown in such a life, when all its operations come to an embarrassing stand-still. On the other hand, when one's life is underlaid by sound reasoning, solid belief and assured faith, then its working is steady and swift. The mishaps of life do not distract it, the frets and fumes of life do not drag upon it, but it rejoices in constant advance and sure results. God's people know the full meaning of the promise, "Underneath are the everlasting arms."

Prayer—Thou art our firmness, O God! Thou art our stability, O Son of God! Thou art from everlasting to everlasting, and thy children abide constantly in thee. For thy wheels are never clogged and thy swiftness is never stayed.—Amen.

WHAT RELIGION DOES.

One of the greatest benefits that religion brings to a man grows out of the fact that it, more than any other thing in his life, keeps from turning in on himself and becoming narrow and selfish and self-centered. It is true that religious people are sometimes accused of being narrow and self-centered, and perhaps there may be something in the accusation at times, but in so far as there is point to the charge it is due to the fact that the religion of the people indicated is not of a genuine and good type, or is not functioning properly. Religion of the right sort in active operation links a man to God and opens up before him the great plans and purposes and programs of the Eternal.

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

TREASURE.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"And in his joy he goeth and selleth all he hath and buyeth that field."—Matt. 13:44.

The stories Jesus told are beautiful. And today we are to consider two of the most beautiful of them all—the hidden treasure and the pearl of great price. In the case of the hidden treasure a laborer is plowing in his master's field. Whoa! His plow has struck something that has a different ring from a stone. Someone, afraid that his treasure might be stolen from him, has carried it and buried it in a field, thinking that when it was needed he would return for it. The years have passed. The owner has died. The treasure has, therefore, become lost.

Now a man in the regular round of his daily duty has found it. He just plows right on, covering it up again—but leaving some mark of identification—and at nightfall, when the day is done, he bargains to buy the field from its owner. To buy that field he sells all that he hath.

The parable of the pearl of great price is somewhat like unto it. A merchant man has become expert in buying and selling beautiful pearls. Every new pearl catches his eye, and every great pearl commands his fancy. He has learned to know them, and to judge them. Some day he hopes he is going to come across the one pearl of absolute perfection—the soft light of whose radiant glory shall be indescribable, and whose weight, shape, and size excell all others. It is a dream, and a hope. More and more he begins to seek for it. Lo! and behold he has it! Sought, yet unexpected! He does not have to wonder whether there are greater. It stands out unquestionably above all others. "He went and sold all he hath and bought it."

Jesus says the kingdom of heaven is like that.

I. The kingdom of heaven is like a treasure. We cannot push a parable too far. But we can be sure that Jesus wanted to convey the idea to his hearers that the kingdom of heaven was of value so great that the abandon of all things else besides for it was not only commendable, but imperative. The other day a man said: "I would give anything for that;" a young woman said, "I am crazy about that house, I would give anything for it;" a young man said, "I would give anything for that position"—and so we remark, and sometimes the remarks are not meant seriously, sometimes they are unthinkingly said, and sometimes they are about mere foible and trash. But they are suggestive of the fact that there is a par excellence in the mind and heart of everyone that demands the "selling of all" to have.

Now Jesus would have us know that par excellence is the kingdom of heaven. For it he gave all. For it he would have us give all. It stands above all other valuables in a contrast that is overwhelming. One is to put it first—above father and mother, family and folks, houses and lands. With the charming young, rich ruler standing before him with a heart hunger showing from his eyes, looking upon him he said, "Go and sell all thou hast, and give it to the poor, and come follow me."

To others he said, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and its righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Let the kingdom come first. So many of you today are standing at the crossroads of life. So many of you are making your life choices. What a privilege! What an opportunity! I know something of your problems, my young people. How you want work, position, opportunity, education, experience, life! Many doors have been closed in your faces. You have had to turn many corners. But, hear me when I say that as difficult as your days may seem, you are still left an open door to honorable choices! "Let no man take thy crown." Let no one tell you that the true treasure of goodness has lost any of its value. It may sound old fashioned: "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches," but every day I see the old fashioned proverb verified in a new fashioned world. The kingdom of heaven is a treasure.

II. The Kingdom of heaven is like a hidden treasure. Jesus made much use of the word "hidden." He recognized that there were eyes that did not see, and ears that did not hear. He recognized that there were mysteries beyond the ken of man, and reached only by faith. He says the kingdom of heaven itself is like a hidden treasure—or a pearl found after being sought.

Have you noticed that here are set forth two ways in which one may come face to face with God? Why is it that we so often think everyone should be brought to God in some certain way suitable to our own experience or fancy? I confessed Christ for the first time at a "mourner's bench." My friend confessed him at a communion table, another at a catechetical class, another in his pastor's study, another at her mother's knees, another on the road to Damascus—why do we criticize the coming? Jesus did not call them all in the same manner. Here was a man following the daily round of common duty, and suddenly he is in the presence of God. In the field he finds a treasure. Here is another man seeking from earliest days after the pearl of great price, and eventually he finds it. Saul, the Benjamite, is seeking his father's asses, and finds instead a kingdom; Saul of Tarsus is seeking to destroy the church, and finds the Christ.

Who knows what influence will bring you face to face with the eternal choice? You may be sitting in the choir, and you are suddenly attracted to a face in the audience that glows as it follows the minister's message. You have not been listening to the preacher, but now you hear God himself through the face of a devout worshipper. Your heart yields, and a new name has been added to the roster of those who "sell all" to have a place and a part in the kingdom of love.

III. The kingdom of heaven is like a costly treasure. As I write these words in preparation of this sermon I await the coming of one who will carry me to attend a man while he is being operated on in a nearby hospital. He knows he is facing death, for his operation could fail. He wants a minister to stand by his side. He desires the physical evidence of the presence of God (such experiences greatly humble ministers), and he wants that someone who knows God is praying for him. At this moment he would gladly give all for a Christian faith. He may have it. Any of us may have it. It is free for all, and yet, it costs more than mere wishing.

It costs everything. "Go sell all. . ." And in one way or another he who follows Jesus Christ will find that message ringing into his own heart and life. We have made religion too easy. And our world is suffering. Religion has been made easy, and life has been made hard. When the world forgets the cross of Calvary, the cross of sacrificial living, the cross of self-denial, the cross of unflinching devotion to the still small voice of conscience, then it must remember other crosses far more bitter.

The cross of Christ cannot be avoided. It is not that God wishes to say, "I told you so"—not that at all. There is no threat in the cross. But there is an unchangeable and eternal law of loving service for others which simply cannot be evaded.

And the greatest joy in the world is found right there. "And in his joy," our text says. Yes, joy, and joy unspeakable. Have you known real happiness? Think back over it. Did it not conform to this divine principle of helping others? Jesus calls it "the kingdom of heaven." For that

Dear Friends:

Running the Christian Orphanage is more than a one-man job. You may select the best man that can be found in our church and place him at the head of any of our institutions, and then leave it to him alone to run it and finance it alone and without your help, and it cannot be done. It takes the cooperation of every member of the Christian Church to make it go.

If every member of the church would just feel that the College, Missions, and the Christian Orphanage are a part of our church work, and that it is the duty of every individual member to stand by them and help support them, the heads of these institutions would not live with such a burden on their shoulders all the time; but the load would be made lighter.

If I should go out on the farm at the Christian Orphanage to hoe an acre of beans it would be quite a lengthy job for me, and the burden would be heavy, but if I take fifteen fine stout boys with me to bear an equal part of the work with me, how easy the job can be done. The same principle works in our churches. If a large number of our churches hold hands off, and leave to a few faithful ones to support the Orphanage, it makes the burden heavy, the time to do the same work longer, and not so much good accomplished. While if every church and Sunday School member would be a booster for the Christian Orphanage, we could take little children who are pleading for a home here and ought to come here or go to some other institution of like kind.

Suppose each church and Sunday School would try to raise one dollar per member each year for the Orphanage, and do it, how easy it could be done, and think of the little children we could help. For the last two years our income has been far less than our expense account, after all the cutting of expenses we could possibly make. When your monthly grocery bill is forty dollars and you only have twenty dollars to pay it with, you can readily see what that means. It is the same thing at the Orphanage.

We want your cooperation. We want you to be a "booster" for the Orphanage and make the offerings in your Sunday School larger. Won't you join the booster club, and be a booster for the Orphanage in your Sunday School.

THE TARDY GIRL.

Her name is Betty Baker, her cheeks are flushed with rose, her eyes are bright as star dust, she has a saucy nose. Her disposition is sunny, she is jolly as can be. Now what can be the matter with such a girl as she?

When plans are made for outings, she does her share of the work, and no one ever says of her that she has tried to shirk. With all this in her favor, 'tis dreadful to relate that Betty's only failing is in always being late.

She keeps the breakfast waiting, puts others in a flurry. Although 'tis almost school-time, she sees no need to hurry. Her schoolmates plan an outing. "Now, Betty, don't be late," but always for Miss Betty the whole crowd has to wait. She never seems to realize the hours her friends must waste because she dilly-dallies and never will make haste.—The Portal.

WHAT PARENTS CAN DO.

The immediate task of parents is to help their young folks to choose and get started with the right sort of people. The immediate task of the young people is to get themselves started in the right channel.

For example: In all my years of business experience, I have never come across a person who was equally fitted to be a scientist and a merchandizer. It is nothing short of a tragedy for a young man possessed of a scientific temperament to get switched into business, or for a young woman with authentic business capacity to enter one of the learned professions.

Some young people love outdoor work and will never be happy in any other kind. Of course, outdoor work may not pay salaries equal to some other modes of livelihood, but what of that? Success in life does not depend upon one's salary, but upon one's happiness. It is far better to be a happy forester, or ornithologist, or landscape gardener, than to be an unhappy clerk, or salesman, or lawyer.

Some young people are born leaders, and possess qualifications for manufacturing and for handling large groups of employees; others are natural "lone eagles," and cannot cooperate with their fellows.—Roger W. Babson.

PROHIBITION.

I am sure that no question has been discussed more than the whiskey question. But we have come to the place where one must do something more than talk. Our action will not only affect us, but the future generations.

Do we want whiskey?

I wish to mention some of the arguments of those who favor repeal:

1. They say whiskey is here to stay; we can never get rid of it. I do not agree, but suppose that is true; no man can give a good reason for lending it support.

2. They say we have more whiskey than we had before the days of prohibition. I do not agree. We have plenty of living witnesses who will efface that argument.

3. They say the law cannot be enforced. I do not agree with this. I believe that the prohibition law is as well enforced as any other law that we have. No law can be enforced without co-operation. I am sure that crime is on the increase, but we must have law.

We cannot regulate the whiskey business; we must outlaw it. You cannot rid the country of snakes by raising more snakes.

REV. A. L. LUCAS.

REVIVAL AT LEE'S CHAPEL.

Wednesday, July 26th, marked the close of the annual revival at Lee's Chapel Christian Church. We had good congregations at each service, and the interest was great. Many Christians were revived and some accepted Christ as their Saviour. On the last night of the services, at the opening of the church doors, one young girl came forward and united with the church. This one soul was worth all the preaching that was done.

The pastor of the church did the preaching. He had expected Rev. Raymond T. Grissom, of Fancy Gap, Va., to assist him in the meeting, but due to an accident which took place while coming from his home, he was unable to be with us, which was deeply regretted by both the pastor and his people.

May the Lord have the praise for what was done in the revival, and may he bless Brother Grissom, our would-be helper, and his dear wife, in their trouble. J. RAY DICKENS, Pastor.

THE LAW OF LOVE.

Dig channels for the streams of love,
Where they broadly run;
And love has overflowing streams
To fill them every one.
For we must share if we must keep
The good things from above;
Ceasing to give, we cease to have—
Such is the law of love.

—R. C. Trench.

Victor Hugo once said: "When I go down to my grave I can say, 'I have finished my day's work,' but I cannot say, 'I have finished my life.' My day's work will begin the next morning. The tomb is not a blind alley; it is a thoroughfare; it closes with the twilight to open with the dawn."

ADVICE TO THE YOUNG.

Make few promises. Always speak the truth. Never speak evil of any one. Keep good company or none. Drink no intoxicating liquors. Good character is above everything else. Be honest if you would be happy. When you speak to a person look into his eyes. Spend less than you earn. Live within your income. Never run into debt unless you see your way out. Good company and good conversation are the essentials of virtue. Good character can be injured only by your own acts. If evil is spoken of you, let your life refute the falsehood. If your hands cannot be employed, attend to the cultivation of your mind. Read the above thoughtfully and carefully.—Said to be the Maxims of President Garfield.

OBITUARIES

SHEETS.

Mrs. Laura Delpha Sheets was born January 24, 1888, and died June 23, 1933, at the age of 45 years, 4 months and 29 days. Surviving are her husband, Gordon Sheets, and one son. She is also survived by her mother, Mrs. Amanda Smith, and by three brothers and three sisters.

Funeral services were held at Bethlehem Christian Church, near which she lived, June 25, 1933.

A. W. ANDES.

VICKERS—VICKERS.

What was perhaps the saddest funeral ever held in the Ambrose community, was the double funeral of the two baby children of the large, influential and dearly beloved family of "Uncle" Dennis Vickers—Roscoe and Tom. They met death suddenly when returning from a fishing trip on the Suwanee River, June 8th, when their automobile collided with another near Waycross. Death for Tom was instant, and Roscoe lived only a few minutes.

The funeral was conducted by the writer, at New Hope Baptist Church. He was assisted by Revs. Johnson and Sutton of the Primitive Baptist Church, and Rev. Henry Johnson, pastor of the New Hope Baptist Church. Interment was in New Hope cemetery.

Roscoe was born October 13, 1905. He was married to Miss Julia Paul, September 12, 1926. To this union was born one child, a baby boy, seven months of age. Roscoe gave his heart to God and united with Ambrose Christian Church in 1931.

Tom was born November 10, 1903. He was married to Miss Louise Carter, March 24, 1923. To this union were born three boys and one girl.

These boys leave to mourn their going their immediate families, nine brothers, six sisters a step-mother, and a multitude of relatives and friends. The great congregation, the beautiful floral tribute and many other things, showed the esteem in which they were held.

Among the congregation were some 200 Negroes who were as deeply grieved as their white friends. We shall always cherish the loving memory of these dear boys, and are continuously praying that the tragedy of their untimely deaths may result in ultimate good to those who are their friend and pastor,

The degree of Bachelor of Divinity is offered to qualified students who complete the required courses.

Vanderbilt University also offers the degrees of Master of Arts and Doctor of Philosophy, in accordance with the regulations established in its several departments.

MORE THAN A SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY.

Because of our affiliation with Vanderbilt, our relations with other nearby colleges where our students can take courses without tuition, and the cooperation of the American Red Cross and other social agencies in the city, we prepare students for many types of Christian service.

Come to Nashville, the Educational Center of the South, and prepare for Christian leadership. A Graduate School open to both men and women, with opportunities for self-help.

VOLUME LXXXV.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, AUGUST 17, 1933.

NUMBER 33.

A Record Low Price.—

Three million meals at one cent each is the record set by the community relief center of Atlanta, Ga., since it was first established in November, 1931, to care for the city's needy. We have no statement of what a meal consists at this community kitchen, but we are told they are good enough to attract over 100,000 persons monthly.

Not a New Idea.—

"All is old, even NRA," says Arthur Brisbane, and he tells us that when Rome was still young, the Emperor Diocletian issued an edict "to offset public suffering, caused by bad harvests and speculation," setting maximum prices for food-stuffs and for labor. More drastic than General Johnson, he fixed the penalties for the violation of his edict at death or deportation. Mr. Brisbane adds, laconically, "It did not work." May our leaders be more fortunate.

The Cuban Revolt.—

Those who have watched conditions in Cuba were not surprised when the revolutionists finally turned Gerardo Machado out of the presidency. Things have been going from bad to worse in Cuba for some time, and the expulsion of the President who refused to resign was inevitable. As was to be expected, this action was accompanied by much bloodshed and looting. Two American ships of war have been dispatched to Cuba to protect American interests there. Carlos M. de Cespedes, who succeeded Machado, has completed his cabinet and set up his government. Turmoil and confusion is still rife, but it is hoped that disorderly factions may be speedily reduced and peace restored. The little Republic of Cuba deserves a better fate than the troubled times that have been hers since her liberation from Spanish mis-rule.

A Hole-in-One Tournament.—

A hole-in-one is possibly the dream of every golfer, from dub to professional, but a tournament hole-in-one is something different. The Associated Press tells us that Jack Hagen, who has been living 53 years and playing golf most of them, deliberately stepped up to the number three tee of the Salisbury, New York, Country Club, and, upon his third attempt, sent the ball flying 148 yards true to the grass-rimmed cup. Twice before has Hagen achieved this well-nigh impossible shot, his first "ace" being made more than twenty-five years ago, while the second was on the fifth hole of this same course in 1930. Over a hundred golfers, each with a former hole-in-one to his credit, followed Hagen to the tee, but the nearest duplicate to his feat was a ball that landed between three and four feet from the cup. Five shots were allowed each player, and only two of the total number placed all five of their shots on the green.

NRA Drive is On.—

The NRA drive has begun in earnest. At the end of the first week 840,000 employers had signed up under the blanket code, and the number is still growing. Swamped by the rush at headquarters, quite a few queer things have gotten by—but only temporarily—as when the laundry industry somewhat surprised itself by getting permission to fly the blue eagle over laundries which paid women but $6.50 a week. It was just a slip and the permission was soon withdrawn. General Johnson calls attention to the fact that what is important is "It's not how many sign, but how many comply." The letter of the law is being emphasized at present, but there is no doubt that the spirit which it embodies is more important, and the authorities will evidently soon recognize this fact.

Business Conditions.—

According to the latest reports from the Department of Commerce—those for the week ending August 5th—there seems to be a general slowing up in basic businesses. Steel production remained unchanged, but there was a falling off in orders. The automobile business showed a decline from the previous month, but was still far ahead of the same month of last year. Building figures while better than some months previous, are still nearly one-third under those of July, 1932. On the other hand, electric power production is somewhat lower than for preceding weeks, but far in advance of last year. The same is true of car-loadings. A moderate recession in the business average can be laid partially to seasonal influences. Dun and Bradstreet tell us that business failures show a remarkable falling off, there being only 349 reported for the week ending August 10th, against 650 for the corresponding week of 1932. To quote: "Insolvencies at this period usually are at the low point of the year . . . but the reduction from the early months of this year is very much greater than in most other years." The South, the agency reports, is continuing to make an "excellent" showing.

Hoboes' Code.—

We are told that while the Hoboes of America, in annual meeting at Chicago, find modern conditions none too attractive for their profession, they have lost no time in drawing up their "code of fair practice." Complaint is registered against the railroads on account of the present-day construction of box-cars. The new single rods and the high type trucks now in use, they contend, make rail riding too hazardous for even veteran 'boes. However, they scorn the hitch-hiker, whom they claim seeks something for nothing. The code of the itinerant workmen, as they style themselves, was written by Jeff Davis, of Cincinnati, and Mose and James Routt, of New York and

San Francisco, respectively. It provides that hoboes shall not wash dishes or otherwise work in restaurants in return for meals, as doing so might take work from a man with a family. They may clean snow from sidewalks, or even shovel coal and wash windows, but are to receive 50 cents an hour therefor. They may also chop wood on farms in exchange for a bed in the barn or for a meal, but must not chop too much as this might work a hardship on some other hobo coming after. Among other delegates to their annual meeting was one from Nernberg, Germany, who attended as "delegate-in-chief" from Europe.

The Beginnings of a Naval Race.—

The Christian-Evangelist has this to say regarding our present naval program as well as that of Japan: "Contracts have been let for the building of twenty-one new ships for the Navy, 'the largest ship-building program in history,' says the United Press dispatch, when ten additional ships to be built in government yards are also considered. The construction is financed by a $238,000,000 public works allotment. Incidentally, we saw in a movie the other night an excellent bit of educational advice on the work of the navy during natural disasters, earthquakes, fires, volcanic eruptions. The ships are sisters of mercy, said the captions, not engines of war. Of course not, those big guns are purely merciful. News from Japan indicates that that country, too, is proving itself noble and merciful by building bigger and better warships. Fully thirty ships are authorized 'to build the navy up to treaty strength.' The plan is that Japan either before or at the time of the London holiday expires will renounce that treaty. Her admirals are no longer content to let their navy rest on a 5-5-3 basis. What we have here is nothing less than a naval armaments race between Japan and the United States. Each nation is building—against whom, if not each other? Last year for the first time in history our Atlantic and Pacific fleets combined in the Pacific for battle maneuvers. Japan was in an uproar. This year Japan replies with her maneuvers, making them the largest in her history, moving her ships to defend her shores from an enemy across the seas." Like our contemporary, we deplore the vast wastage of money on the arts of war, yet we realize that in a world of force, he who is best prepared can best trade for a reduction of armaments. We are glad to preach the gospel of peace, but would hesitate to preach that of unpreparedness. We cannot fail to recognize the fact that if we had had a navy commanding the respect of Germany, and England and France as well, it would have been unnecessary to enter the World War. We paid for our neglect not only with billions in money, but with the lives of the flower of our youth, and we are still paying.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

We understand that Rev. H. S. Hardcastle is spending some time at Montreat before going to take up his pastoral duties at Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va.

No one has the right to claim the promise, "Lo, I am with you," unless and until one has obeyed the command, "Go ye into all the world and teach all nations." The two are linked together.

Dr. L. E. Smith and family are visiting the Century of Progress Fair in Chicago. While in the West he is to deliver several addresses, especially at Winona Lake and other Bible Conferences.

Our deepest sympathy and condolence are with Rev. and Mrs. E. M. Carter, Youngsville, N. C., who mourn the death of their daughter, Rachel. Under date of August 9th, the sad news came over the wire, "Our daughter, Rachel, died at 2 P. M., today."

Supt. R. J. Hudson, Happy Home Sunday School, writing August 7th, says: "We have had a wonderful year at Happy Home. Yesterday we had thirty additions to the church, and our Sunday School has more than doubled in the last eight months."

Rev. John G. Truitt and family are to arrive in Suffolk from Dayton, Ohio, August 16th, and after a vacation of two weeks, Brother Truitt will begin his pastorate with the Suffolk Church on September 1st. The Suffolk people have practically built anew their parsonage and will give their new pastor and family a warm and glad welcome.

Dr. and Mrs. I. W. Johnson, of Suffolk, Va., and Rev. J. F. Morgan, with his wife and daughter, are spending the two weeks of the Ministers' Conference at Massanetta. Your managing editor, who with his wife, visited the Valley Conference, spent a couple of days at the Springs. We were disappointed that there was not the usual number of our ministers present, and hope that some went for the present week.

From a subscriber who reads: "I enjoy reading THE SUN, and am glad you stand by the guns and still fire on the wets and gangsters of all sorts. We are not licked yet nor shall we ever be if we stand every man in his place as did Gideon and his three hundred. I believe these have been testing times through which we are passing and that most of the faint-hearted have dropped out of the fight, but thank God we shall triumph at last."

We learn with sincere regret that the health of Dr. P. J. Kernodle, for many years publisher and managing editor of THE SUN, Richmond, Va., is much impaired and does not improve. It has been nearly three years now since he has been able to go to his office and give personal attention to affairs. For the past several weeks his condition has been much worse. Dr. Kernodle has long been one of the true, tried, loyal and faithful of the church. He has our anxiety, prayers and best wishes in his affliction.

Rev. W. T. Scott, of Winston-Salem, N. C., writes: "I have just learned that the family of Rev. Milo J. Sweet, pastor-at-large of the Congregational Churches of the Carolinas and Georgia, will move their residence to Elon College about August 30th, in order that their daughter, Miss Joy Grigsby, may enter Elon. Miss Grigsby made a high record scholarship at the Salisbury High School, graduating there last spring. The Sweets will occupy the Dr. W. P. Lawrence home, and the community is fortunate to have this fine addition to its already high citizenship. Brother Sweet has lived in Salisbury since coming to North Carolina."

One member of THE SUN family writes us as follows: "There's nothing that brings as much sunshine into my home as THE CHRISTIAN SUN. My parents before me took THE SUN ever since I could remember. . . . I dearly love my paper." The person who writes the above is in arrears, but says that they are unable to pay anything at present. They did not realize when they wrote this letter that they were paying something that money could not buy. True, their letter would not pay paper bills, nor ink bills, nor salaries, but it, and other letters like it, lets those who are trying to serve you know that their efforts are not in vain. We know that eventually they will pay in money as well as in love.

Saturday, August 12th, was Christian Church Day at Massanetta Springs Ministers' Conference. Rev. B. J. Earp, who is vice-president of the Valley Central Congregational-Christian Conference, presided over the various occasions with the art of a master. The number of Christian Church ministers present was the smallest that we have known for several years, but it was a good day nevertheless. Besides Bro. Earp, there were Rev. A. W. Andes and Rev. W. B. Fuller of the Valley Conference, Dr. I. W. Johnson and Rev. J. F. Morgan from Eastern Virginia, and Dr. W. H. Denison, of Dayton, Ohio. Dr. Denison addressed the audience at the morning service. There was quite a delegation of laymen present from our church, but we cannot but wish that more had availed themselves of this wonderful opportunity.

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield has resigned the work at Haw River to take up the work at Bethlehem. It is his plan to locate in the midst of the field. His work for the coming year will be Bethlehem, Berea and Providence-Memorial at Graham. Bro. Crutchfield writes: "We just closed a very successful meeting at Berea and Haw River. Results were good. The churches were greatly revived. Several additions to each church. Rev. J. Everett Neese was with us for the last week at Berea and for the meeting at Haw River. His earnestness and pleasing manner won for him many friends. He is a very promising young man, and we prophesy he will accomplish much good in the Christian ministry. At the close of both Berea and Haw River, the good folks treated us very royally and graciously with many good things such as can be used both to eat and to wear."

TWO LOYAL ALUMNI RESPOND.

East Dormitory is completed and ready for furnishing. I have asked churches, Sunday Schools, societies and individuals, to pay for the furnishings in the dormitory.

The first to respond to this request was an old schoolmate of mine, an Alumnus of the College, Mr. Charles Cook Howell, of Jacksonville, Fla. He has written me most encouragingly, saying that he and his wife, Clara Moffit Howell, an Alumna of the institution, will each furnish a room occupied by them while students at Elon.

This is certainly heartening. How fine it would be if twenty-two others would respond and write me.

For your encouragement and information, I am publishing Mr. Howell's letter, which reads as follows:

"August 8, 1933.

"Dr. L. E. Smith, President,
"Elon College.

"Dear Leon:

"Clara and I have read with great sympathetic interest your letter of the 4th inst., telling in more detail about the situation at East Dormitory.

"We have both often remembered and spoken of the pleasure we had in seeing you there, and have wished that we could have visited with you longer.

"Each of us shall want to furnish the several rooms which we respectively occupied. I shall want as long to pay as you can give me, but now enclose my check for $25.00 on account.

"We are both pleased with your suggestion of the bronze plate markers—I do not think it is due to small pride, because it will be some genuine satisfaction to us both to be remembered in that way where we spent such pleasant and profitable days. I assume that the inscription on the plates will be uniform throughout, and only suggest that my name be stated as Charles Cook Howell, and Mrs. Howell's as Clara Moffit Howell. So far as I recall the points of the compass there, my room was the southwest corner room on the second floor and Clara's was the southeast corner room on the second floor—at any rate, hers was the right-hand room on the second floor as you standing facing East Dormitory, and mine was the corresponding room across the hall on the other corner. This, of course, places her room nearest Dr. Harper's and mine nearest the new buildings.

"With cordial good wishes from both of us to you and yours, and all the activities in which you are engaged there, I remain,

"Sincerely,

"Charles Cook Howell."

L. E. SMITH, President.

THE IMPORTANCE OF REVERENCE.

There should be a revival of reverence for God. We need a new and more sincere conviction of the importance of reverence for divine things, and we cannot start too soon in the training of young life to lay out the ground for this work. God's name, God's day, and God's Word should all be respected and treated with the reverence they deserve.

Are the holiness people as reverent in worship as they ought to be? That is a question. There is grave danger that efforts to be free and sociable and happy in full salvation have resulted in making the times of worship somewhat of a joke, a place for punning and smart sayings and striving to arouse shallow emotions. Have you ever been in church a few minutes before the hour for the opening of the service and found the place a bedlam of voices, and sometimes with children running about in playground fashion? One has the feeling that he has come to the wrong place to worship the great God, or at least that he got there too soon.

"We are all busy," says George H. Morrison, "few of us are reverent. We can explain this by the weariness and hurry of modern life. There is no time for reverence. God has given us the Old Testament to remind of reverence. The condemnation of the irreverent is terrible. He may be clever, but he is always shallow. If he be smart, he is also almost always blind. The other side of reverence is humility, the other side of irreverence is pride. Ultimately irreverence makes one a stranger to Christ. Two things in Jesus arrest me. One is reverence for God. Though he knew God as none ever did or can, he held him in perfect reverence. The second fact about Jesus is his reverence for man. Again, he knew men more thoroughly than any other."

The Bible certainly stresses the importance of true reverence for God. When sin entered it produced an estrangement from God, and the fellowship of primitive innocence and holiness was broken between Adam and Eve and their Creator. Soon to follow was a desire to get away from God, to hide out of his sight and in time there came into mankind a spirit of defiance and opposition. The flaming sword placed at the gateway of Eden after the fall stands for that new relationship of man's independence and the spirit to defy and defraud the Almighty.

The great judgment of the flood added to man's knowledge of God this solemn fact that he is the Judge and Ruler, and must be obeyed with reverence and godly fear. And thus down through the ages men were taught to curb their impudence and independence of spirit. Moses was told to remove his sandals at the burning bush where God appeared, for the place was holy ground. Israel emerging from Egypt had many lessons to learn in this matter, especially at Sinai, where God appeared in great power.

An incident is recorded in the life of the elder Dumas that bears on this question. He gave a dinner to some literary friends one night in Paris, and during the evening the conversation turned on the question of religion. One of the guests stated that he held all worship in scorn, and that he would feel greatly demeaned to bow in reverent worship before the Christian's God, of whom he asserted that nobody knows anything. Dumas replied, "I have two creatures in my establishment who share your views; they are my dog and my cat." This acid reply served to break up the party for the evening.

The incident carries a profound truth. Mankind is capable of worship, which involves true reverence to God in all his offices, and the more men believe they are a close kin to brutes the less will they open their eyes to true worship. Thomas Carlyle said: "The man who cannot wonder, who does not habitually wonder and worship, were he president of innumerable royal societies and carried the epitome of all laboratories and observatories with their results in his single head, is but a pair of spectacles behind which there is no eye." Emerson says, "No greater calamity can befall a nation than its loss of worship."—Wesleyan Methodist.

THE EAGLE AT NIAGARA.

An eagle was seen on a cake of ice floating in the river above Niagara Falls, feeding on a dead lamb. A sleet was falling at the time, freezing as it fell. The unconscious eagle, intent upon its meal, surveyed the scene, obviously aware of approaching danger, yet nothing daunted, expecting to escape the threatening flood by flight. The ice was borne into the current, nearer the rapids, and then the falls. The eagle crouched to mount into the air, but its feathers were congealed into fetters. The harmless mist had frozen into bands of ice while the eagle was feeding in security upon earthly things. Nearing the brink, the awful moment came, when with frantic fright it strove to force the pinions, but it was bound; and with a piercing shriek of agonizing terror, plunged into the merciless abyss. This perilous picture will never be forgotten, neither the thought, what if the coming of the Lord find me occupied with earthly things, unprepared to meet the bridegroom of my soul.—Selected.

NEGLECTED CHILDREN.

A statement has come out from the Children's Bureau of the Labor Department of the government that one-fifth of all the children of the United States are showing the effect of poor nutrition, inadequate housing, and lack of medical care. This estimate is based on figures obtained in several large cities.

We do not entirely trust statistics, especially when based upon city populations alone, but it is our opinion that an even larger number of children than mentioned are perpetually neglected in the great cities and even in the country.

The question is not entirely one of food, clothing and housing. Probably half the people in this country live in houses unequal to sheltering them properly. Anyone who has traveled over the land much will be forced to conclude that the hurried, pioneer type of building has not yet been abandoned. That may all be well enough where there is outdoor room. But that has nearly all disappeared. The freedom of the fields for even children is almost gone and we are driven together more and more in too crowded a way.

Our observation, we are sorry to say, goes even further than this. The souls of the children are being neglected. Many are allowed to grow up without proper moral example, influence, and admonition. Here is where the task of the church comes in and its a mighty one. The future of the country is at stake. The future of the very children who are so neglected is specially involved. Unless we wish to live in a country of second-rate people physically, spiritually, and morally, we must all awake and take part in making a better world and in training the young to live in it.—The Christian-Evangelist.

Life is like fire. There is always more or less smoke about a fire to choke the voice, fill the eyes with tears and obscure the light of day. But if only the fire is hot enough and the stoking done with sufficient care, a fire can consume its own smoke, not only destroying the smoke as smoke, but utilizing it as fuel. So if only the fire of our spirit is warm enough, we can make fuel of our own miseries, clearing the atmosphere of our lives and strengthening the blaze of our souls.—Holmes.

There are some persons who think Sunday is a sponge with which to wipe out the sins of the week.—Beecher.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

BY THE SEASIDE.

(Editorial Correspondence.)

Virginia Beach, Va., Aug. 12, 1933.

One neither paints nor pictures the ocean. Its expanse is too great for the eye, and its magnitude defies the imagination. Some artist picks up a piece of it, a mere speck, and paints a ship, two ships, a fleet; or he paints a whirling, dashing surge of it, and calls it "A Storm at Sea."

He may picture the ships and the storm, but not the sea. At most you can only see twelve or fifteen miles of it, and the rest of its thousands of miles and fathoms is horizons, sky lines, the over-arching blue. And so here I am, seated by the sea, wondering at its energy, contemplating its majesty, awed by its grandeur.

It never stops. By day and by night, through months, years, centuries, its energy is never exhausted, its power is never paralyzed. The roar of its breakers and billows is not harsh, but like some huge, muffled drum, its sounds are soothing and there is melody in the multitude of its waters. And so people come to the ocean in thousands and tens of thousands. They can hardly tell you why. In the surf today within sight of where I write, there must be a thousand, two thousand, basking in the sun, bathing in the sand and the sea—getting at once the three elements of God's cleansing process—sun, sand and sea. For this earth, no less than our bodies, must be cleansed. And herein is the goodness and glory of the sea. It is this earth's wash-pot. That's why it is so busy, so restless, so energetic. It takes all its time to draw into its embrace, and then wash and purify the refuse, the filth of the world, and keep clean this whole mundane sphere.

The salt, the sand, the sunshine, the tireless scrubbing, energy and labor of the ocean are God's weapons of warfare against the filth and refuse and disease of an otherwise stagnant and destructive earth. God made the earth for man to dwell upon and the seas to cleanse the earth after man had defiled and deluged it with filth.

One cannot sit long by the seaside and contemplate its worth and wonders without having his mind and heart lifted in reverence and adoration to Him of whom Isaiah spoke, "Jehovah hath measured the waters in the hollow of his hand, and meted out heaven with the span, and comprehended the dust of the earth in a measure, and weighed the mountains in scales and the hills in a balance."

Day by day I see the great ships going out to sea laden with cargoes of commerce from our nation going out to Europe and Asia and Africa, and other great ships of those nations coming to our shores with their commerce and products. And so, besides cleansing and purifying the earth, the waters of the great oceans link the peoples of the earth together, and make this world of ours one after all. Ships, like the Gospel, go to the uttermost parts of the earth, and when the world shall learn that commerce and trade must be carried on according to the Golden Rule and in the same spirit that the Gospel is preached, this world will become one indeed, not by the friendly waters of the sea only, but in brotherhood, fraternity, equality and righteousness.

THE KINGDOM FIRST.

We would better decide that Jesus knew what he was talking about when he said, "Seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." That means putting God's kingdom first in our quest and endeavor. And we never find that kingdom till it takes possession of us. By our seeking, the kingdom does not change itself, but it does change us. No sort of outward change can bring the kingdom in, or change us. First, we must be changed by and through the power of the kingdom, and then we are prepared to conquer and to change the things about us.

An observant correspondent writes us: "I have felt for a long time that we have run wild on social service. I once had a friend who was in a large church in Boston that did a very great deal of social service. When he first went there, he was exceedingly enthusiastic, but after about four years he resigned. He said to me, 'You can't change a man's life with a clean collar, or a bed, or a new necktie, or even a new job (all of which this church helped to supply), but, if you can change a man's life, he will get these other things for himself!'"

Jesus said as much a long time ago. One would have a hard time giving a down-and-out more beautiful surroundings than Adam and Eve had in the Garden of Eden, and yet it was in that Edenic atmosphere and paradise that our first parents fell into sin and transgression.

Out of the heart are the issues of life and no sort of social service or surroundings can take the place of the change of heart and life.

NIRA IS TWO-EDGED.

In the News Leader, Richmond, Va., evening paper for Monday, August 14th, is an editorial which we deem worthy of reproduction here. Comment is not necessary as it explains itself. We differ from our daily contemporary on many matters, but a fair stand on the subject with which this editorial deals is to be commended:

"When President Roosevelt addressed the United States Chamber of Commerce on May 4th, he gave the country its first hint of what later became the National Recovery Act. He had let it be known on April 13th that he was sympathetic with the principle of a minimum wage, but he did not dwell on this when he told the chamber of commerce that if business houses go together to help industry and to eliminate wasteful practices, he would see to it that no dissenting minority should interfere. This was said 'off the record' and did not appear in the report of his speech, but it was generally understood that he had held out this encouragement to distressed business.

"When, a fortnight later, the national recovery bill took form, the emphasis was on the fact that the anti-trust laws were to be suspended for two years in order that business might co-operate in the recovery. It was not until the bill was in its final stages that its labor provisions attracted attention. Some of us said at the time that business need not think it would get immunity from the anti-trust laws without having to pay the price of a more generous division of its profits with labor, but we were not heeded. Now that the act is in force, little or nothing is said about the abolition of wasteful trade practices or exemption from the anti-trust laws. Every effort of the administration is being exerted to enforce the minimum wage standards and to limit the hours of work.

"We do not retrace in this summary fashion the history of the act in an effort to discredit it. On the contrary, though we are not unmindful of the difficulties yet to be overcome, we believe the act gives America the best chance yet offered her for effecting a speedy recovery. We have shown how the whole emphasis of the law has already been changed, in order to warn readers that it may again be shifted. So flexible a measure, vesting such wide discretion in the president, may be misused.

"For instance, it was inevitable that some of those who hastened to 'sign up' under the act should either misunderstand the obligations they assumed or else should conclude that they could get the benefits of the law without paying the price in higher wages and re-employment. In some instances this was due to the confusion that prevailed regarding the law. In others there may have been an element of deception. The aggregate of such cases, however, is apt to be only a small percentage of all the signatories. Most of those who have subscribed to the blanket code have done so with their eyes wide open, and they intend to live up to its provisions.

"What, then, should be the country's attitude toward those who, unwittingly or deliberately, are flying the blue eagle when they are not entitled to it? The country will answer, 'They should be exposed,' and the country will be right. But the manner in which this is done presents another and a grave question. We can imagine no better way by which a jealous and conscienceless competitor can injure a business than to put it in his power to whisper that the other man flies the blue eagle but is evading the code. To save honest men from whispering campaigns, from the wiles of jealous competitors and from the espionage of busybodies, it is imperative that proper official check-up of compliance with NIRA be provided. Otherwise, there is no limit to what the vicious can do.

"It is still worse with potential boycotts. The large business concerns in the cities can and will comply with the act. The expense may be heavy and the inconvenience great, but the burden can be borne for the country's good. Yet there must be tens of thousands of small industries in the country which cannot endure the expense of compliance with the blanket code. If they are to do their part—and most of them are willing to do so—it must be under special codes that take into account the difficulties and limitations of that particular business. To suggest that the boycott be invoked against these people is madness. The boycott is the most dangerous two-edged weapon in the world. Germany used it against the Jews, and now has found to her own distress that it can be used against her. Were America foolish enough to employ the boycott, the result would be hatreds, crinations and injustice equaling those of war. Time is required for the success of so vast an experiment as that on which America has embarked. There must not be a day lost, because winter is coming on; but there must not be the precipitancy of violence, least of all through the boycott. Official acceptance of the boycott in America, as a means of social pressure, would cost us in the end far more than we could gain by re-employment and a higher wage standard."

THE VALLEY CONFERENCE.

The Eighty-fifth Annual Session of the Valley Conference was held this year with Bethel Christian Church, about two miles north of Elkton, Va., on August 9th and 10th.

The writer, with his wife, left Richmond, around 8 o'clock on the morning of Wednesday, the 9th, and arrived at Bethel Church shortly after 11 o'clock. In as much as the conference was called to order at 10 o'clock, we missed both the welcome address which was delivered by Mr. Alfred Dofflemyre and the response by Rev. R. L. Williamsen, the president of the conference. These, we were told, were excellent addresses. They were followed by committee reports and other miscellaneous business.

The annual address was delivered by Rev. Alfred W. Andes, and we have heard no more masterly address in some time. As was fitting, it dealt with the problems of the church in the world of today. He said that since the time the master spirit of evil had been banished from heaven he had been going back and forth on the earth, making it his cause to fight the forces of good. Yet he reminded us of the promise that the Church of Jesus would eventually win.

Immediately after this address was over, the conference adjourned for the mid-day meal, and a sumptuous repast was spread by the good women of the church in a large grove just across the roadway.

Re-convening at 1:45 o'clock, the devotional service was conducted by Rev. W. B. Fuller, one of the local ministers of the conference. Next followed the report on Religious Literature. After discussion, the writer spoke for a few minutes on the need for the right kind of literature in the home in a time like this, and the necessity for the church paper as a factor in promoting good will among the local churches for the various activities of the church.

The Woman's Board made its report through its chairman, Mrs. A. W. Andes, and it was adopted.

Mr. R. L. Eittle made the report on Christian Union, which was one of the most concise and yet helpful reports of the entire session. Following this report, there was an address on "Convention Resolutions," by Dr. S. C. Harrell, of Durham, N. C., the president of the Southern Convention. In this address he presented the plans for the future of the Convention as outlined by the executive board of that body. His address was well received, and a motion to endorse the plans he presented was adopted.

In the absence of Mr. C. D. Johnston, Superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, Dr. I. W.

Johnson, of Suffolk, Va., who had been seated as a deliberative member, was called upon and made very impressive remarks as to the need for supporting the Orphanage.

After the report on Conference Missions, by Mr. R. O. Rothgeb, the conference adjourned.

The evening session was given over to the young people. It was under the direction of the Director of Religious Education, Mr. K. B. Hook. An item of interest at this session was an address by Dr. Harrell, who admirably filled the vacancy caused by the necessary absence of President L. E. Smith, of Elon College.

We spent the night with Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Dofflemyre, of Harrisonburg, and remembrance of their hospitality to us while in their home will always burn bright in our memory.

The Thursday morning session was opened with devotionals by Dr. M. L. Weekley, formerly a Congregational minister, then a Christian minister, and now a Congregational-Christian. The service was most impressive and its spirit pervaded the session which followed.

The roll call of churches and reading of minutes of previous sessions occupied but a short time and were followed by the report on Education, by Chairman A. W. Andes. At the request of Dr. Smith, Dr. Harrell had promised to speak on "The Church's Share in the program of Education." Dr. Harrell asked that he might combine with this address his own, which was scheduled for the afternoon. His request was granted, and in a most masterly address he spoke of the College as one of the opportunities for serving the kingdom through the Convention.

The report on Foreign Missions was presented by Miss Verdie Showalter, and discussed. Dr. J. O. Atkinson was to have spoken on this report, but was unable to be present. This was followed by routine business and adjournment for dinner.

It was raining heavily, and it was necessary to spread the repast in the basement of the church. While it was quite crowded there, this was soon forgotten when one gazed upon the fried chicken, ham, pies, and cake with which the tables were laden. There was nothing indicative of depression either here or in the grove the day before.

The evening session was taken up mostly with routine business. The report on Home Missions, by Mr. W. C. Wampler, possibly caused more discussion than any other one item. It included among other items one asking the conference to set aside a certain sum for evangelistic work. This was finally eliminated from the report, but it gave much food for thought nevertheless. One of the last items of business was the report of the Committee on Nominations. By the adoption of this report, the present officers were elected for the ensuing year. The conference adjourned after voting to meet next year with Maryland Christian Church, Rev. B. J. Earp, pastor.

This was one of the best conferences that we have ever attended in the Valley, much constructive work was done, and it is only to be regretted that Drs. Atkinson and Smith, and Supt. Johnston could not be present.

After the conference was over, we enjoyed several sessions of the Massanetta Springs Ministers' Conference, hearing some of the outstanding leaders of the religious world. Worthy of note was the fact that Saturday was Christian Church Day at the conference. The program for the day was under the direction of Rev. B. J. Earp, of Harrisonburg, and Dr. Warren H. Denison, of Dayton, Ohio, delivered one of the principal addresses.

Thursday and Friday nights we spent with two Elon Alumni, old friends of ours, Mr. and Mrs. Russell A. Campbell, of Harrisonburg, Va. Many of the readers of THE SUN will remember Mr. Campbell and his Elon Band, while some may better remember Mrs. Campbell as Lois Davidson. To say that we enjoyed being in their home would be putting it mildly, and we hated to tell them and their small son, "Rusty," goodbye.

HARDHEADS.

A few weeks ago the editor was a happy participant in a fishing party who caught 120 hardheads in the lower Chesapeake Bay. He has been asked to write an editorial on the experience. Seated on a chestnut stump beside a placid stream in the heart of the West Virginia hills, longing for a fishing line, he assays the attempt.

Hardheads are fish. We know some folks who are hardheads also. Zoologically they are not of the same order but psychologically they have similar traits.

A friend of ours, wiser in the lore of Maryland fish than we, says the hardhead is a mudsucker. That means to say that the fish noses around on the bottom of the bay seeking what it may devour. There are some writing ladies and gentlemen who delight to probe around in the mud that lies beneath the scum of human passion and feed their minds and pass on to their readers, in the name of realism, the unwholesome and salacious things that they find in the lower levels of human experience. These are they who know not the difference between low-mindedness and liberalism.

When hardheads are out of the water too long they have an unpleasant odor. Yea, verily there is a type of literature that is sustained by nosing in the mud, that, whether in a stale tabloid a week old or in a reprinted classic aged by the centuries, smells bad. Mudsuckers do not lend sweetness to the blessed isles of literature.

Hardheads are omnivorous. They will bite on worms, clams, fish-bait and peeler crabs. Men and women who feed on all of life may boast of a mental toughness but they hardly show that refinement of feeling or discrimination of taste which are the marks of culture.

Amateur anglers, like ladies and preachers who get up very early in the morning, love the hardheads because they are so easily caught. Taking any bait they have tough mouths. Once hooked they stay hooked until landed. Hardheads are hardheaded. They lack the spirit of play. Not for them the activities of trout or striped bass. They never try jumping out of the water. They never attempt to run ahead of the bait to shake the hook out of the mouth. They simply pull back and hold on until hauled out and thrown into the box. The tough mouth, the tenacity of purpose, the uniformity of act, the virtues of hardheads become their undoing in water or on land.

The human counterparts of the hardhead fish are those who say the same old things until the very lips grow tough with the twice-told tale. Not for them is any play with an old idea. They hold on to the truth once accepted no matter where it may be carrying them. They are hooked by opinions rather than personally convinced by an examination of all the implications of a theory. They never try to run ahead of their day. Well, the same ending comes to all hardheads. Holding on they are hauled out and thrown in and lie on the market place with dead ones where the race of living men goes by.

We like hardheads in fish—we like to catch them, we like to eat them, we like to write about them. They are easy to hook and are generally to be found on the old fishing marks. We like hardhead folks, they are of our kind, and they are dependable. We know how to handle them and they keep the world going in dull seasons. Stubborn folks who do their part in any tide are the basic supply of the sustenance of the earth. And, yet, for a good day's fishing that thrills, let us go into deep water when trout are running.—Editorial in Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Many people die of heart trouble. Think of the sudden deaths in your community every year. Without a moment's warning a robust friend falls in your presence. The doctor is summoned. The victim is dead. Heart trouble was the cause of the death.

This is an age of spiritual heart trouble. That was the real condition which Jesus found in his day. Matthew 15:18, 19, gives us this record of how Jesus regarded the evil of that age. "But those things which proceed out of the mouth come forth from the heart; and they defile the man. For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies; these are the things which defile a man." Evil is organic trouble. It is more than a contagion or an infection. It is in the heart. It is a spiritual heart disease.

Christianity is the only religion which has discovered the secret of spiritual depravity and death. That explains its vitality and imperative importance. It is not very comforting to learn that the Bible, the great and only authority on spiritual diseases, makes a clear diagnosis indicating impending spiritual death for the human race. "The soul that sinneth it shall die." (Ezek. 18:4.) "All have sinned." (Rom. 3:23.) Universal sin. Universal spiritual death. That is a sobering thought for young and old, rich and poor; it should cause every person to seek relief and cure.

And it is a blessed thought to discover that a remedy is within reach of all. That remedy is not for a few favored ones, but there is a blessed "whosoever will let him take of the water of life freely." (Rev. 22:17.) Not only is the remedy offered to all who will come, but it is efficient and effective when accepted and appropriated. The simplicity of the Gospel of Jesus Christ should appeal to all who need its healing and saving power. But too many people, like Naaman of old, expect God to offer them some special favor which will not bring them to their knees in subjection to the divine will. Humility is humiliating to pride and self-righteousness. However, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." (Matt. 16:24.)

This is the vital question. Are you broken hearted? Is your heart troubled by your own sin and moral failure? Does the heart ache because others have failed in the battle with sin and sorrow and distress? Is there some great burden upon the heart under which it labors with great stress and strain? Has bereavement, or disappointment, overshadowed the life with a cloud so dense and dark that it seems to threaten the faith of a life-time? Has doubt disturbed your peace and trust in the loving God? By the help of the Word of God and light of the Holy Spirit there is no question as to one's spiritual need of help.

A simple story will help at this point. A young mother died. A devoted husband and a six-year-old girl mourned their loss. The pastor went and offered the consolation of the Christian religion. The funeral was conducted and the body was laid to rest beneath the flowers in the little cemetery. Father and child returned home. They decided to stay at home the first night after the funeral. The child's bed was near the bed of the father. The child sobbed until late in the night. The father was broken-hearted. The blow stunned him. He was perplexed. He could not surrender. Finally the child said: "Father, it is so lonely; may I get in your bed and put my head on your shoulder?" "Yes, my child," he said, as he reached over and took her into his strong arms. She laid her weary head upon her father's breast and fell asleep. The father said, "Lord, why cannot I lay my head upon thee and trust thee as my child has found rest in me?" This thought gave him comfort. His heart found peace. One may find a cure for spiritual heart trouble by coming to Jesus. He never fails to heal the wounded heart that trusts him.

THE VALUE OF COOPERATION.

There are many undertakings too extensive to be done single handed, a smaller number beyond the efforts of a limited organization, but most worthy undertakings can be successfully done by the cooperation of the entire group. In the building of Solomon's Temple, everybody in the kingdom had a part. Some brought gold, some brought silver, some brought one kind of wood, some brought another, and some brought goat's hair. No one was expected to bring what he did not have, but everyone was required to bring what he had. With this spirit of cooperation and sacrifice upon the part of all a temple that has elicited the commendation and praise of all and has become immortal was erected. One of the cardinal principles of Christianity is cooperation. When we come to worship we worship together. When we come to serve, we serve together. When we go forward, we go forward in company. Our strength today is in united efforts—united prayer, united faith, united gifts and united sacrifices. Together we shall succeed; individually and alone we shall fail.

Today, as never before, at Elon College, our own educational institution, we are feeling the need, the imperative need, of cooperation. Here we, the united church, face a task that can never be done by an individual and would be difficult for a small group of us, but could easily be done by the whole church, by everyone doing his part, nothing more. The task confronting the united church at Elon College is, first of all, to pay our debts. We owe, at Elon College, a total of more than one-half million dollars. Who is responsible for the making of this debt I do not know; but I do know that we owe it. When I arrived at the College to take charge I found it there. It can be paid, and it should be. We can pay it and we must. God is not likely to bless us until we do.

Then, too, our task at Elon is to provide an efficient, capable faculty. We want the highest type of instruction for the young people of the church when they come for training. We are performing this part of the task as rapidly as we can, and here we are making headway. There will likely be four new members of the faculty for 1933-34. The ones elected will meet every requirement of an "A" grade college, the best that can be had for the salary that we are able to pay. The new additions to the faculty will be announced in a few days.

Another part of our task is to provide agreeable and comfortable living quarters for the students while here. We are taking one definite step looking forward to the accomplishment of this responsibility in the remodeling and complete overhauling of East Dormitory. This work is about finished and presents a much needed improvement on the campus. Our next step will be to give West Dormitory a thorough overhauling, that the girls may be better cared for. One interested friend is now making solicitations to see if she cannot interest a number of her friends in providing better living conditions for the girls for another year. All power and success to her in her efforts. If she approaches you, do not turn her a deaf ear, but lend her a helping hand.

This task that confronts us at Elon College could never be completed without a more wholesome atmosphere in the campus, and a more telling college spirit, far-reaching in its effects. This part of the task must be accomplished by those on the campus, both faculty and students. These are by-products, the natural fruitage of a carefully planned and effectively executed college curriculum.

Now the first part of this task at Elon, the paying of our debts, may not be the most essential, but it is certainly the first in order. The rest of the program cannot go as it should until this is done. You say, "this is a big job, too big for us. It can't be done." But you are mistaken. The task is not too big for us. It can be done, and we can do it if you and I and everyone else will just do our part—our part and nothing more. To say that you have no part in the support of our College would be a reflection and to say that you would not do your part would be an insult. What I want to know is, what is my part? What you want to know is, what is your part? My part and your part in the support of our College is to give what we can of what we have. To say that I have already given will not excuse you in the sight of God unless God has ceased to bless you. To say that you are not able will not answer so long as you are able to enjoy some of the comforts of life and a part of the luxuries of this age. To join the Dollar-a-Month Club is a good way to begin. Maybe you owe the College "conscience money." This is a good time to pay.

L. E. SMITH.

THEY HAVE LOST PURPOSE.

Somehow, and for some cause, many of the youths of our age have lost faith in themselves, to stick to something with a real purpose. Somehow they become discouraged before they get a sight of the goal and give up the race. They are either unwilling to stay with the job until it is through, or they don't know how to dispel illusions and conquer doubts. Things that I stuck to and overcome are insurmountable barriers to many youths of my acquaintance today. I have talked to many of these aimless youths as I have met them in the different towns and cities of the South, and I have found that most of them, for some cause, are not willing to pay the price of success. They were never taught that faith and courage are indispensable virtues in the building of a strong character. The joy that comes with the consciousness of having worked out, through endless fidelity, a place for themselves among the men who have achieved success has never been emphasized in the homes where they grew up. They were never taught that self application leads to understanding and an enlarged vision.

It is pathetic that so many parents have forgotten their obligation to their children. They have utterly failed to inspire them to choose the right course and pursue it with a real purpose. I have never yet talked with one of these wandering youths that came out of a Christian home, where each child was taught to share in the everyday duties of the family circle; and I am growing more and more in the belief that our wandering youths are the product of homes where love, inspiration, duty and restraint were lacking.

REVIVAL.

Our revival began at Concord Church, Caswell County, N. C., July 23rd, and closed July 27th. On Sunday, a large congregation greeted the pastor, who had charge of the morning and evening services, preaching both sermons.

Rev. M. A. Pollard, of Liberty, N. C., came Monday, and assisted in preaching until the close. His sermons were very appropriate and instructive for the occasion.

This was our first association with Brother Pollard in the gospel ministry. Our work together was very pleasant. His messages were of such a nature that he made a deep and lasting impression upon his hearers. His brief stay made for him many friends. We wish for him great success in his labors of love elsewhere.

Rev. J. T. Underwood preached a very timely and acceptable sermon on Wednesday afternoon. Brother Underwood is a very loyal member of the local congregation and held in high esteem.

A good spirit prevailed throughout the meeting. The church was strengthened and inspired, spiritually, to press onward in Christian living. There was one profession of faith in Christ, and many expressions stating it was a good meeting.

We are thankful to the Lord for all blessings received, and the good work that was accomplished in the meeting. L. L. WYRICK.

THE MEANING OF PRAYER.

The more I learn about life and its increasing needs, the more I am convinced about prayer and its meaning to the average person. "How can one pray without ceasing?" is a question often asked me. Not long ago I heard a young minister tell his parishioners that most of them should be on their knees one-half their time when it was obvious to me that they should have been on their feet more than they had; with a deep desire in their hearts for the advancement of God's kingdom in their community, and their church would be in better condition, both spiritually and financially.

Now, this young preacher, like many other persons, is placing too much emphasis on the real prayer life, on posture, for it is neither posture nor the audible expression of our desires that makes prayer. Each has its proper place, but the counting virtue is undisturbed, constant doing, motivated by a heart hunger for the will of the Father to be accomplished through our doing.

"RUM AND ROMANISM."

The August issue of The Civic Bulletin, Albany, N. Y., has a long, able article by Judge Gilbert O. Nations, of Washington, D. C., on "The Vatican Created and Directs the Repeal Movement." Many striking facts are given, as well as some startling statements from high-up members of the Roman Catholic hierarchy from the Pope down, to show the bitter and unrelenting hostility of the leaders of that church against the Eighteenth Amendment, even in some cases advising their members to ignore or disobey it!

The last page of this Civic Bulletin is devoted to an editorial on "Prohibition—A Battle between Protestants and Catholics," which also contains a lot of surprising facts. This whole Bulletin is very illuminating and should have a wide reading. A sample copy of this issue will be sent free to anyone, upon request. Send a post card to The Civic Bulletin, Box 627, Albany, N. Y., and get a copy of this Bulletin with all its illuminating facts about Romanism and the many startling statements from members of the Roman hierarchy against Prohibition and the Eighteenth Amendment.

LANETT, ALABAMA.

I have spent the past three weeks in revival work with Rev. H. M. Gray at Langdale, and G. H. Veazey at Corinth, and Rev. G. R. Walker, at McGuire's Chapel.

We had good meetings at all these churches, but I think the meeting at McGuire's Chapel was the best of all. It was well attended and the people seemed eager to hear the truth. A Bible School was directed by Staley Hunt and a Sunday School was organized and the church set to work again. This old church has not shown much sign of life in several years. But I think it will react and do much yet for the Lord. There are a lot of people here who, if they are served religiously must be served by this church.

It will be a sad day for our country when our old rural churches suffer or go out of business.

I go next week to New Harmony.

G. D. HUNT.

Young man, my advice to you is that you cultivate an acquaintance with, and a firm belief in, the Holy Scriptures. This is to your certain interest.—Benjamin Franklin.

I have no sympathy with the doctrine of universal brotherhood and universal fatherhood. I don't believe one word of it. If a man lives in the flesh and serves the flesh, he is a child of the devil. That is pretty strong language, but it is what Christ said. It brought down a hornet's nest upon his head, and helped to hasten him to the cross. Nevertheless it is true. Show me a man that will lie and steal and get drunk and ruin a woman—do you tell me that he is my brother? Not a bit of it. He must be born into the household of faith before he becomes my brother in Christ. He is an alien, he is a stranger to the grace of God, he is not a friend. Before a man can cry, "Abba, Father," he must be born from above, born of the Spirit from above, born of the Spirit.—Dwight L. Moody.

If the children of God consider their trials, not in their natural bitterness, but in the sweet love from whence they spring, and the sweet fruits that spring from them, that we are our Lord's gold, and that he tries us in the furnace to purify us, this may beget not only patience, but even gladness in the sufferings.—Leighton.

MISSIONS
 REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary

THE OPPONENTS OF CHRISTIANITY.

Two hundred and forty men and women from fifty-one different countries and representing many races, assembled in 1928, not far from the traditional spot on which Jesus had said that his disciples should be his witnesses to the uttermost parts of the earth. Able Orientals in impressive numbers, as well as Africans, Europeans and Americans, joined there in a serious study of those conditions which help or hinder in the task of making Christ, his gospel, and his way of life known to all people.

In the meeting on the Mount of Olives there was no division of opinion as to the peril of secularism. A Chinese educator said, "The opponents of Christianity in China are not the other religions, but a secularization of civilization." A missionary from India declared, "The greatest enemy we face in India is not Hinduism, but secularism. Better a man who bows before stone than a man who has shed all religious belief." A well-known East Indian, the late Dr. K. T. Paul, said, "Western civilization must be Christianized if the barriers are to be removed." An American bishop acknowledged that his own country is almost pagan in its materialism, militarism and pursuit of wealth, and he called for a challenge of the evil system "in order that the Gospel may have a chance." A labor leader from England lamented that Western Christianity has permitted a secular civilization to develop, and he joined the American bishop in regret at the apparent complacency of the missionary forces.

Jesus did not speak in so many words of secularized civilization, but he virtually called such a life, pagan, "heathen." We are living much as did the "heathen" of whom Jesus speaks. We have temporal horizons. We prefer a religion of pleasure and prosperity. The prophet who boldly condemns our acquisitive spirit and pleasure-philosophy is not popular. Our spiritual desires are frequently brought into captivity to our secular and sensual tastes. Often the size of one's herds or barns has been suggested as the index of God's favor, provided the prosperous one contributed liberally to approved objects.—James H. Franklin in the Never Failing Light.

PIONEERING FOR CHRIST.

The more one considers the history of missions as the history of exploration and discovery, the more one marvels at the impulses that have urged men forth to the most remote places and upon what would seem the most hopeless quests.

In China, as in India, missionaries penetrated almost from the early days of the Christian adventure. The Nestorians were the earliest Christian missionaries to China, and in our emphasis upon Protestant missions we should never forget the almost incredible missionary activity of the Jesuits. The French Jesuits established themselves in Canton in 1582.

The story of modern missions in China begins with Robert Morrison of the London Missionary Society, who reached Canton in 1807. The strange and intricate association of missions with commercial and political authority is illustrated in the fact that though the East India Company had endeavored to keep Carey out of India, Morrison, who was not allowed to reside in China, entered the service of the East India Company. Representatives of the American Board reached China in 1829, and on the opening of the treaty ports other societies crowded to the field.

The story of missions in China, even to our own day, has been one of triumph and tragedy. In the repeated outbreaks against the "foreign devils," many missionaries sacrificed their lives. Missionary work in that land has represented participation in the tragedy of a nation's life. In no land have the problems of materialism and a godless imperialism in conflict with Christian ideals in the modern world been more emphasized. China is bearing at the present hour the fruits and the penalties of world tyrannies, but the hope for that land, as for our own land, lies in the foundations that the missionaries have laid. The field is still one of adventure and hope, and the work of missions in China has become in a new and very real sense a work of pioneering for Christ.—Congregationalist.

UNEMPLOYMENT AT CLOSE RANGE.

He was a seventeen-year-old boy who had sometimes said rather boastfully that he "did not believe in missions." At a young people's conference he encountered three flesh-and-blood missionaries—one from China, one from Japan and one from Egypt. "Say, these missionaries are all a good sort," was his eager comment. "But I hear that none of them are going back. What's the matter? No money?" His attitude was one of disgust that such people should be unable to return to the countries where they had fitted themselves to work. If more of us could know these men and women intimately, we would feel even more deeply about this situation.

Last spring an officer of one of our national organizations made the remark, "The further people are from New York, the easier it is to drop them." What we do not see does not bother most of us—and the missionary is usually a long ways off. But to consider the useful careers which have been cut off in the middle, to live with people who have adjusted themselves for effective service in one land and then find themselves faced with the necessity of somehow "earning a living" in another, is anything but pleasant. Probably none of our recalled missionaries have experienced actual hunger, but most of them have suffered an utterly devastating disruption of their cherished ambitions. And it looks as though theirs might be among the more lasting wounds of the depression.—Congregationalist.

JAPAN'S FAREWELL TO WOODWORTHS.

Karnizawa, Japan,
July 19, 1933.

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

Since my typewriter is sick, I wonder whether you will have the patience to bear with a specimen of my penmanship.

Since last I wrote to you, the wheels of time have made many changes in our plans. The house in which we have lived nearly forty years has been sold and torn down. The buyer wanted immediate possession, but it took three weeks to pack up the possessions which we desire to take along, and have a sale of our household goods, and depart. We had a sale at which about the only people who came were the second-hand men, and what they paid for things was a song. So they paid from one-tenth to one-twentieth of the value of many things with the result that the sale realized only $45.00.

Fortunately for us the church parsonage was next door and Dr. Matsieno allowed us to occupy two rooms up-stairs, well lighted and ventilated. The kitchen of the parsonage was also large and so arranged that Mrs. W. could do the cooking. There we remained for about four months. When the heat of the summer came on, Mrs. W. came to our summer home at Karnizawa, where we are spending our last delightful summer in this beautiful land.

We have come to the end of forty-one years in Japan, rich in experiences and rich in the friends we have made and rich in the privileges we have had to bear witness to the glories of our Lord and the glories of his glorious gospel.

I shall tell you about the farewells. It is a custom of the Japanese to have a farewell meeting when one of their friends departs and at these meetings they recite all the good things the departing brother and sister have been guilty of, and all the other nice things they have done. I have passed through eight of these meetings. In connection with their speeches, one calls to mind another custom of the Japanese which is that at the funerals some one approaches the coffin and tells the corpse all the good things he has done during his lifetime, leaving out the bad. Putting the two things together, I told the brethren that I had an advantage over most people because I had a chance to hear my funeral oration before I die.

And the presents! The Japanese people are great for making parting gifts. So we have received so many as to seriously disturb our packing arrangements. At the Royawa Gatsum the students assessed themselves ten sen each to buy me a very convenient wrist watch. Then the students of the middle school (1200) assessed themselves ten sen each to buy me a present. They came to me and said:

"What shall we buy for you?"

"Nothing," I said.

"Of course, we can't buy a watch for you, because you already have one. But what about your wife; does she have one?"

"No," I said, "but she says she does not want a watch."

"But we must buy something," and they went ahead and bought a lovely gold watch for her, but with an inscription for me which means, "In grateful remembrance to A. D. Woodworth for eighteen years of faithful service in this school." The school also gave a dinner to its forty teachers, at which the formal presentation was made. Think of the surprises! First, the gold watch tied up in a box with red and white paper strings, Japanese fashion. Then the balance of money raised above the cost of the watch, 4117. Then the half yearly bonus, then a gift of 300 yen from the school as a parting gift. So I wondered whether the Japanese could be nicer to anybody than they were to me.

At the school farewell about 600 boys sang "My Old Kentucky Home," which I had taught them. Well, I have loved them and tried to give myself unreservedly to them, and I think I have never seen any greater display of affection than that which these boys have displayed for their old teacher.

I think I want to especially thank you and Dr. Minton and other members of the Board for giving me the privilege of passing these last six years in Japan, the crowning work of my missionary career in Japan, and of all the years the most fruitful and blessed.

The ship on which we plan to sail goes from Yokohama September 22nd, as now planned, and lands at Los Angeles. So we expect to be back to our old Merom, Indiana, home about the middle of October.

What I shall do when I get back remains to be seen. I have written to the Board that I am at the service of the Board if they so desire. Some time, somewhere, I shall hope to see your smiling countenance after I return.

All blessings on you.

Your brother,

A. D. WOODWORTH.

SEVEN REASONS FOR TITHING.

The problem of church finances will never be settled until the scriptural plan of tithes and offerings is given proper and widespread recognition. It is not necessary to attempt to establish the law of the tithe from the Mosaic economy, or to endeavor to regulate its administration from Jewish practices. The tithe like the Sabbath antedates the law of Moses. There are, however, many reasons for tithing which should make a strong appeal to those who have the interests of the cause of Christ at heart.

1. Tithing shows the importance which we attach to our religious life. The Jew gave a tenth, the Mohammedan tithes and so does the Mormon. It is but a natural inference that those in the Church of Christ who do not tithe place a lower estimate upon the value of their religion than the Jew, the Mohammedan, or the Mormon.

2. Tithing makes God a partaker in the business relationships of life. Those who have definitely taken God as their business partner are uniform in their testimony as to the sense of security and the feeling of joy which such a transaction brings to the lives of tithers.

3. Tithing enables one to determine the exact amount of money he pays into the church treasury. Unless proper books of account are kept there are no means of knowing the exact amount given to the church. Many of the failures in the business world are due to the fact that manufacturers and merchants endeavor to reckon the cost of production or distribution from their own observations instead of keeping an accurate system of cost accounting. Here also lies the cost of financial failure in many churches.

4. Tithing is the only just means of distributing responsibility. Who of us has not been in a meeting where a certain amount of money was to be raised when some prosperous individual would arise and say, "This money must be raised and here is my dollar?" He had mentally numbered the congregation and assumed what he thus judged to be his share. But that dollar perhaps was not one-tenth what legitimately was his share of that expense. The church which burdens the poor and excuses the rich will never have God's smile upon it. God's command is to give as he has prospered one.

5. Tithing is a cure for pious insincerity. Not every one that saith "Lord, Lord," will enter the kingdom, but only those who do the will of God. Is the consecration full and complete? Not words will be the test but the tithe and the offerings. It is not loud, vociferous nationalism that marks the man as a true citizen. This is of no avail unless he pays his taxes.

6. Tithing gives meaning and value to the possessions of life. It is because one day in seven is set apart to God, that the remaining six days take on deeper significance; it is only when one part in ten of our earthly possessions is returned to God that the nine-tenths become really sacred to us. There is a communion with God through worship which arises from the stewardship of possessions. God desires and demands both as a part of true consecration.

7. Tithing carries with it the promise of material and spiritual blessings—the opened windows of heaven, the full garner, but above all the loving favor of the heavenly Father and the smiling approval of the Lord of the whole earth.—Herald of Holiness.

CHRIST AT THE DOOR.

I remember reading some time ago of a talk a man had with his little son one Sabbath when they were looking at the pictures of an illustrated Bible. One of the pictures was a reproduction of Holman Hunt's "The Light of the World." You know it well—that picture of Christ standing outside the closed door of a house. The hinges were rusty, the portals were overgrown with weeds and ivy. And the Suppliant whose hand knocked seemed to get no response.

The father told the little boy the story it portrayed—of Christ standing there knocking, seeking admission. After some thought the little fellow said:

"Father, did he get in?"

"No, I don't think he did, Son."

"Why didn't he get in?"

"I don't know why, but I am quite sure he did not."

"Was it because they did not hear him?"

"I don't know, my boy. I don't see how they could help hearing him."

The little fellow thought for a moment, and then said, "Oh, father, I think I know! They must have been living in the cellar. That's why they didn't hear him."

We smile at the child's explanation; but as we think about it we stop smiling, for we recognize the truth of it. Yes! That is why a great many people never hear the voice of Jesus. They are living in the cellar, in the lowest things of life—for self-gratification, pleasure, sport, money-getting and money-spending and the like! Oh, let us all make quite sure of this that we are not living down in the cellar, or away at the back of the house, lest when Jesus comes to us saying, "Where is my guest chamber?" we are unable to recognize his voice.—Church and Home Monthly.

IN HIS KEEPING.

A man whose heart had been deeply touched by the death of a friend expressed a desire to begin the Christian life, and he told the minister so. "There is just one thing makes me hesitate," he added, "I'm afraid I can't hold out. You know, where I work there are some pretty rough fellows. I don't believe there's a real Christian in the crowd."

For answer the minister reached down and lifted a flower from the vase on the table. "Do you see this flower, Arthur?" he asked. "It grew right in the mud and slime of a marsh. Yet see how clean and spotless it is. That's because God kept it. And he can keep you, too."

It ought to be enough for every Christian just to know he is in God's keeping. He marks the sparrow's fall and hears the ravens when they cry. Can he not give us grace that we may be strong? "Greater is he that is in you than he that is in the world."—Forward.

"A young man once found a five-dollar bill on the street," says William Feather, a well-known writer. "From that time on he never lifted his eyes when walking. In the course of years he accumulated 29,516 buttons, 54,172 pins, 12 cents, a bent back, and a miserly disposition. He lost the glory of the sunlight, the sheen of stars, the smiles of friends, tree-blossoms in the spring, the blue skies, and the entire joy of living."—San Francisco News

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

VACATIONING.

The editor of this page has joined that host of men and women of our country who have left the regular grinding routine of daily duties in search of rest and the renewal of physical, mental and spiritual strength. For six years he has served as pastor of the Waverly Christian pastorate, which includes Centerville, Spring Hill and Waverly Churches, and has acted as chairman of the Board of Christian Education for almost that long.

A rest seemed to be necessary. There is an old saying that the constant dropping of water will wear the hardest stone. Certainly the constant pressure of duties will wear the toughest nerves. Having tendered my resignation to take effect on September 1st, next, the churches were still gracious enough to me to grant me August for vacation. Believe me, I appreciate this graciousness of the churches, and I am trying to make the most of it.

With members of the churches I have floated on the calm bosom of the beautiful James River waiting for fish to bite and have played in the sands by the sea where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours. Sometimes I get impatient for movement, and eager for more rapid progress. But the ancient river flows gently out to sea now as it did centuries ago. It does not worry, nor hurry. Why should we? Sometimes I feel important and powerful, but that feeling soon passes as I look at the rolling billows of the Atlantic or feel the pull of the under-toe that pulls one out to sea. Some times explanations of things about us seem easy, but it is not so easy to explain why the constant roar of a turbulent sea through the centuries. What is the mighty power that makes the tides? Listen to the constant roar through the night, and look at the rising sun across the sea, and explain that if you can. What we do is not to explain, but to worship the Infinite who sings his power in the sea and paints the heavens with his beauty.

Now I am in a roadside camp in the hills of old Virginia. Out under the shadows of scraggly oaks my typewriter spell out words which I hope will bring strength and cheer to some who may read, perhaps to some who will not have the privileges which are mine. Before me lies that beautiful poem by Walter Foss which I read often, and love, which says:

I see from my house by the side of the road,
By the side of the highway of life,
The men who press with the ardor of hope,
The men who are faint with the strife.
But I turn not away from their smiles nor their tears—
Both parts of an infinite plan—
Let me live in my house by the side of the road
And be a friend to man.

Tomorrow I shall be back at my old home; the place where I was born, and reared, and given the training that has sent me out into the world to help people. There under the oak trees I shall rest again as in childhood. There I shall drink from the old spring. There I shall bask not only in the light of the sun but also in the love of my family. There I shall renew my youth and be ready soon, I hope, to take up another job and go forward in a new and better way in the service of the Master.

CARES.

Some time ago a friend gave me the little poem by Elizabeth Barrett Browning with the above title. I have had it hanging on my study wall and read it occasionally. I, too, have cares. They often want to become worries. Now, I am on the way to do what the poem says—to lose them out in the fields with God. And, oh, how I wish all my friends could do the same:

The little cares that fretted me,
I lost them yesterday
Among the fields above the sea,
Among the winds at play;
Among the lowing of the herds,
The rustling of the trees,
Among the singing of the birds,
The humming of the bees.

The foolish fears of what may happen,
I cast them all away
Among the clover-scented grass,
Among the new-mown hay;
Among the husking of the corn,
Where drowsy poppies nod,
Where ill thoughts die and good are born,
Out in the fields with God.

PLANS. PLANS, PLANS!

A few years ago young Charles Lindbergh startled the world by flying across the Atlantic. He made a safe flight because he had planned carefully for the journey. Without proper planning Columbus would never have fought the waves of the Atlantic with that little sail-boat of his until he landed on American soil. It takes planning as well as hard work for the Chevrolet dealers to sell more cars than are sold of any other kind.

And it takes planning to make young people's societies grow. Without plans the society can die but cannot be buried. The president of the United States has a "brain trust" because he knows that plans are necessary in order to solve the problems of the country. The president and the officers of your class, society, or what have you, must plan if you are to solve the problems of your group. Dr. Stock and Miss Eldredge have prepared a pamphlet called "A Program Guide for Young People," with the hope of helping you to think through and solve your problems. You can get a copy by sending 25c and your request to the editor of this page at Waverly, Va. This Program Guide will do you much good if you use it, but it is totally useless lying in my office.

It is time to get plans ready for fall. Some of the group may be going away to college, and you will want to give them a good start by having a party or special program in their honor. Rally Day in September and Promotion Day in October should have appropriate programs which are planned well in advance. The general outline of the fall activities should be definitely planned by the first of September. Plan for nothing, and you will do nothing. Plan for accomplishments, and something will be accomplished.

By the way, if you are not ready to get off to college you might give that a thought. Don't sit at home and do nothing because of the recent hard times about which you have heard so much. If college beckons you, if there is something within you that yearns for college training, if you think life will be richer, happier, bigger, more successful because you are college trained, then do not sit and whine about being unable to go this year. It has never been easy to do big things. Many of the leaders of today got their training when it was much more difficult to get than today. Money is moving more freely now than a year ago. It appears that we have found the corner around which prosperity has been hiding. But however that may be, you have but one life to live, and you are living it now. Preparation is necessary

PROGRAM.

Instrumental Prelude—"Holy Bible, Book Divine."

Call to Worship—

Leader—"Thy word have I laid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee."

Response—"Open mine eyes that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law."

Hymn—"Sing Them Over Again to Me."

Prayer—

Prayer Response—"Open Mine Eyes that I May See" (first verse).

Hymn—"How Shall the Young Secure their Hearts?" (If this is unfamiliar to the group, use it as a quartette.)

Introductory Talk—

Development of the Topic—

Poem—(See "Youth Adventures With God," p. 85.)

Hymn—"To Knights in the Days of Old."

Benediction—Father, we go from this hour of study and fellowship with a new zest for reading. May we be so careful to give proper nourishment to our minds as we are to provide wholesome food for our bodies. May thy word be a lamp unto our feet and a light unto our pathway.—Amen.

Additional Hymns—"Holy Bible, Book Divine," "He Leadeth Me," "Break Thou the Bread of Life," "Rise Up, O Men of God."

Assign the following topics for short talks:

1. The place of books in human progress.
2. What books have meant to me.
3. The most interesting book I have read this year. Assign this topic to two or more persons. A brief review of the book should be given. It should be the purpose of the speaker to interest others in reading the book.
4. The best book I have read. Assign this to persons of varying interests, such as biography, history, religion, current affairs (which may include economics, politics, international relations, the new experiment in Russia, and the Oriental situation).
5. If your town affords a library, appoint someone to interview the librarian on the following points:

1. What class of books is in greatest demand? Second? Third?

2. What is the "book of the summer?" (One most in demand.)

3. What are the significant trends in reading?

4. What provision does the library make for guiding a person's interest in reading?

Interest in the program will be increased by some novel form of presentation, such as having the speaker dress to represent the book he reviews.

6. The world's greatest Book.

A talk on the moral, spiritual and literary value of the Bible by the pastor.

Very early in human history man acquired the ability to record his thoughts and happenings. His first efforts were a picture language, followed later by symbols. Scholars have been able to translate very much of even the earliest writings. For a long, long period of the world's history, knowledge had to be preserved by the laborious task of writing by hand. LESSON VIII—AUGUST 20, 1933.

SAMUEL.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Serve the Lord with all your heart."—I. Sam. 12:20.

LESSON TEXT: I. Sam. 3:1-10, 12:1-4.

Study also I. Sam. chapters 1-3.

There are delightful, human, intimate touches in the story of Samuel. There is, of course, the story of how his mother had besought the Lord for him, and how she had promised to "lend" him to the Lord all the days of his life. Then there is the story of how after the boy was weaned, she took him up to the temple or rather the "tabernacle" where she committed him to Eli, the priest to pay her vow unto the Lord. Every year Hannah would come to worship, and when she came, with true mother instinct and love, she would bring the boy a new coat or cloak which she had made with her own hands. Those meetings of mother and son must have been sweet seasons of fellowship. How they must have talked together, and what intimacy there must have been between them in spite of the long separations between the yearly worship periods at the tabernacle. We may be sure that the boy found in the comradeship and the counsel of the mother that which inspired him, and kept burning within him the fire of devotion to duty. Happy is that boy who finds in his mother's companionship that which inspires him to noble things.

The Lord and the Boy.

We do not know just how old Samuel was when God called him, but he was still a young lad. Because of this fact the story has deep significance. The Scripture frankly says that "Samuel did not yet know the Lord"—he had had no direct dealings with the Lord. And even when the Lord did speak, Samuel did not know it was the Lord—he thought it was the voice of Eli. But two factors entered into his experience which are significant. He had come from a godly home, in which religion was a natural element. And there was in him, as there is in every normal lad, an instinctive even though unrecognized, response to divine things. Thus it was that the lad responded as best he knew to that voice which spake to him in the silence of the night or early dawn.

Now there are those who rather discourage children from "professing religion" and "joining the church." They say that Susie, or Willie, is too young, they do not know what they are doing, they think they ought to wait until they are older and know what they are doing. There is, of course, something to be said on this point. But we should be careful lest we underestimate the religious capacity and instinctive response of children to things religious. God often speaks to young children in a very vivid and vital way. Some of the most faithful and fruitful Christians in the world were "converted" when they were young, and in many cases, when they were very young, even children. Many ministers and missionaries and full-time Christian workers heeded the "call" and dedicated themselves to God when they were but children. Fortunate indeed is that boy or girl, who when he hears what seems to be a strange voice, or when he feels strange stirrings within, has somebody like Eli to lead them on to hear and to understand, and to respond to, the voice of the Lord. Make a test of the average congregation in any church and you will find that by far the largest number of those present who are Christians, became Christians when they were young, and even before they were fifteen.

The story of Samuel is a challenge to every parent and to every Sunday School teacher who deals with children. All the service which Samuel rendered to the Israelites, and the strategic place which he held in the line of the prophets, is to be interpreted in the light of the fact that God called him when he was a boy.

A Good Name.

The lesson as printed does not deal with the life of Samuel as a whole. It simply gives the incident from his childhood, and an incident from his old age. In the section from I. Samuel 12:1-4 we have Samuel as an old man, in a straightforward, but simple way reminding the Israelites of his manner of life among them from his childhood up. He boldly challenges them to bring any charge against his fidelity or his integrity. He offers to make restitution to any man whom he has wronged. But in spite of the fact that he had been in public life all those years, there was no man who could say anything against his integrity of character. "Thou hast not defrauded us, nor oppressed us, neither hast thou taken aught of any man's hand," replied the people. It was a fitting tribute to a great life and to large service.

We do not know how much property Samuel left to his children. We do not know "how much he was worth" as we use the term. But we do know that he was rich in the things that make life truly rich. A good name is more to be desired than great riches, said a wise man of long ago, and when we think straight we know that he was right. Samuel had a good name, and he was rich beyond computation. He had a clear conscience that is beyond price. He had the esteem and the confidence of his fellowmen, and that is priceless. He had the commendation of God himself and that is life's supreme reward.

One wonders if our age does not need to learn this lesson from the story of Samuel. In this age when so many are thinking of life in terms of money values, and of power or prestige, we need to be reminded again and again that life's supreme value is character. What a man is, is far more important than what he has, or who he is, or what he knows, or even what he can do. As someone has said, it is a good thing to have money and the things that money can buy, but it is well to check up once in a while to see to it that we have not lost some of the things that money cannot buy. We cannot all be rich, but it is given to all of us to grow in favor with men and with God. A man's life does not consist in the abundance of the things which he possesses, but in certain qualities of mind and heart, in integrity of character.

BRING IN THE CHAIRS, PLEASE.

Many Christian Endeavor Societies and other groups of young people are making use of this delightful summer time to have open-air meetings. It is hot in the house. It is much more pleasant out in the open. God dwells in "a house not made with hands" and can be worshipped out in his beautiful world just as well as in the house "where his honor dwelleth." Find some beauty spot where your group can meet, prepare a program suitable for such a place, invite those who should attend, and then note the results. It is surprising how well people like this type of meeting.

Recently I have seen such meetings in progress, and have seen the nice chairs of the church left out in the open once. It is quite all right to use the church property for these meetings, but it is very important that the property be preserved. You may want to use it again, or someone else may want it. If you are afraid you will forget, then write on your program just after the benediction, these words: "Bring in the chairs, please."

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

"If thou wilt make the Almighty thy treasurer . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Almighty . . . and thou shalt make thy prayer unto Him and He will hear thee."—Job 22:25-27.

MONDAY.

THE LIGHT OF GOD'S WORD.

"Thy word is a lamp unto my feet; a light unto my pathway."—Psalm 119:105.

This Psalm seems to be the expression of a person who had felt all the unspeakable bitterness of insult, persecution, shame, discouragement, troubles, and exile. But he seems to be one for whom experiences did a good work, by throwing him back on God, his ways, and his will.

Today this experience becomes an echo of all Christian people for the whole Bible. A lamp and a light is exactly what they find it to be to them. That guidance in a dark and confused world makes provision for our whole lives; it is the secret of life's true sunshine; it is the light for the course of our thinking and our conduct. With God's word at hand, we should never be in doubt about any practical question with which we have to deal. It will guide us on the true road to everlasting happiness in another life.

Prayer—Our Father, we confess our neglect of thy Word. Turn us to it today and make it our lamp and our light in all things.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE SHINING LIGHT.

"Shining more and more unto the perfect day."—Prov. 4:18.

The function of light is to reveal everything along the way that we may carefully observe everything upon which its rays are falling—the path we tread, the objects we pass, the companions of our journey, the view it gives us of ourselves.

The light which we get from the Bible does the same thing for us mentally, morally and spiritually. It is light transferred from its pages to the inner sanctuary of life in which conscience sits as a guide, and it illuminates the humblest path with the radiance of the just.

The clearest evidence of this shining light is derived from personal experience, when obedience to his word creates an inner sense of reality, consciousness, and power of God. This is a kind of daily consecration which lies within the reach of all. Only let the Holy Scriptures have its assigned place in the regulation of conduct and life, and its light and power will certainly come. This was the reason for Christ saying, "If any man willeth to do his will, he shall know the teaching, whether it be of God, or whether I speak for myself." (Jno. 6:17.)

Prayer—Our Father, help us to give up everything that hinders from coming to thy heart—forbid that we shall care too much for prayers, for hoping, or in any seeking after comforts and feelings which deter us from thee. But enable us just to come to thee with faith in thy word. We promise to do thy holy will so far as we can, to serve thee as well as we can, and, whatever the reward, to do our best for the Master. This we ask for Jesus sake.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

STEPPING IN THE LIGHT.

"Neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I may finish my course with joy."—Acts 20:24.

There is a way to read the Bible and still be in darkness, and there is a way to read it and experience the light. He who would saunter along easy-handed through its pages will not see the light. God hides himself from that kind of seeker.

We find in the Bible what we seek. If we search it prayerfully we find depths of meaning, heights of glory, abysses of wonder, which one cannot give expression to. It is an inner condition, a revelation of which one is conscious in his Spirit, and which can be imparted only in the same manner. How many a soul who loves God, knows God, has experienced the new birth, cannot express it? Language can but suggest its realities, only those who search the Scripture in this way find it a light that makes one subdue himself and pursue a course which he will finish with joy.

He who does find this light experiences it as a purifier to the soul, a strength to the will in times of temptation, an elevation to thought amid strife, a quickener of spirit in faith and prayer and a continuous inspiration to those who otherwise would be stupefied by the murky damps of life.

Prayer—Dear Father, of heaven, our days' toil will be a failure unless we have a pattern for our labors. We pray for the pattern of life that is divine. We pray that thy will be done in us as it is done by the angels in heaven. We would walk with the King all day. We pray for power to walk in that reality and for power to interpret the Bible in the light of Jesus.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

A BAFFLING PERSONALITY.

"Verily, I say unto you, if ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you."—Matt. 17:26.

Read also: Mark 11:23 and Luke 17:6.

A single instance in the life of Jesus exemplifies this spirit. The Disciples and Jesus were visiting the temple and looking it over and no doubt admiring it in a worshipful spirit. The Disciples marveled at its size and massiveness. Jesus said, "yes, there shall not be left one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down."

We are prone to be baffled at the size of things and think that they compel us to certain thought and actions. Under such influence one may even submit to evil. That things may be big and compelling is enough for us. It's the city with the biggest population; the State with the overwhelming vote; the store with the biggest sales; the actor with the biggest salary; the hero with the biggest punch; the biggest building; the biggest bank; the preacher with the biggest crowd; and "what have you?" These are things in which popular interest and acclaim run.

The trouble is that we are charmed by the influence of bigness and we think that bigness can do things which it cannot do. None of these things are life nor do they express the meanings of life. Bigness is only quantity and perhaps it may be the most selfish quantities of life. It may be the enemy of personality, and certainly so when it results in the substitution of quantity for quality, and when it results in the substitution of success by any means for straight thinking, straight living and Christian character.

What is your estimate of Christian character? Is it in the amount of work one may do, or in the good that emanates from that one's life? What is your estimate of a successful church? Is it the size of the building, or is it in the reality of a personal touch with God? Is it in the size of the crowd, or is it in the overflow of pure hearts?

More people were in a parade on Coney Island once than engaged in the Crusades of Europe in the Middle Ages—a larger number than has ever gone out as missionaries of Christian faith. What did it mean? Peanuts and popcorn—that's all.

Quality, purpose—a great end in view—and we should march to that end, even though there be but a few of us. The five thousand who are fed by Jesus, meant nothing compared to the twelve who were to go out as apostles and change the face of humanity for Jesus.

Prayer—O Lord, Jesus, thou art fairer than ten thousand and altogether lovely. We humble ourselves before thee this day, imploring thee to make and keep us truly thine.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

OUT OF THE QUANDARY.

"Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law."—Psalm 119:18.

This Scripture, prayer of the Psalmist, is the best prayer one may make when he opens the Book. David must have realized in this that it was entirely possible, as Jesus expresses it, to "have eyes and see not."

If one were to hold out a lantern to you and ask you to tell him if there is a light in it, you might convince him that there is, but surely your chiefest concern would be, "is he blind?"

If any one should ask you if the Bible is true, and is it really the light of God which shines there, your pity is excited, that he has to ask some one. Why shouldn't he read and have the inner conviction himself? You may also remember that the Scripture saith, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." Does anyone find himself in that predicament? Then pray in the words of our text.

Prayer—Our Father, as we pray to thee this day, we turn our thoughts to thy word. Help us to ponder thy sayings. Give us holy, loving and grateful thoughts toward Christ, and kind thoughts toward our fellows, devout and contrite thoughts toward God. "The commandments of the Lord are pure, enlightening the eyes," and open thou our eyes.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE UNIVERSAL INVITATION.

"Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest."—Matt. 11:28.

It is a sweet thought that the Bible is for every one. Other books are for the poor, or for the rich, the great and the obscure; but the Bible regards men solely in their relation to God, as heirs to the common mysteries of life and death, of incorruption and immortality. It neither wearies the aged nor repels the child. In it one and all may find a steady flowing light to their souls. No other book says, "Come unto me and find rest."

The fact that all can read the Word and find rest, peace, wisdom and light, is evidence of its being the Word of God. All people are in substantial agreement on its teachings. We never heard of one critic who has denied the power of

CULTIVATING CHRISTIAN FAITH.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"Grow in grace."—II. Peter 3:18.

The simple things of the Christian faith become sublime when given proper attention. When we try to make our religion a complex, miraculous affair we lift it away from its proper base, and lose it in the mass of things. The growth of Christian faith is a perfectly normal thing. There is no proper work or business which can conflict with it, no increasingly abundant life which can be had aside from it. It says "No" to enemies of the soul. It says "Yes" to the right, and fair, and equitable everywhere.

Our text is simple, sublime. "Grow in grace" sets our minds toward the garden, or the nursery, or the very pages of history itself. Is religion as natural as growing? "Consider the lilies of the field how they grow." Consider the Christians in your circle of friendships how they grow, and have grown. Suppose we should liken all the good people of the Bible to a sort of human garden, how they grew! Moses! How he grew! As a baby he grew. As a man he grew. As a leader of God's people he grew. Lay the same measure beside Jacob, or Isaiah, Paul, or Peter, or John, or the man that was born blind, or Magdalene, or Mary of Bethany, or Nicodemus. My! how they all grew!

God's people do grow. God's nature grows. How my mother's eyes used to light up with an inward joy when she observed the growing of the corn, or the calves, or the little boys who loved her so! And as we meditate here this morning we may be fully aware of the fact that we are growing older, but let us seriously ask ourselves the question, "Are we growing in grace?" Are we better men, or women; are we better, wiser young people; are we growing in grace?

Whether we are children or adults, we may still grow in grace. I have recently read a very helpful little book called, "Life Begins at Forty," and it emphasizes the fact that we may grow after forty. How shall we grow? Growth is a result in part at least of cultivation. Christian growth of Christian cultivation. Let us consider:

Public Assemblage. "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together as the manner of some is." Personally I cannot remember a time when I did not go to church. But I have it on good authority of scores of witnesses that forsaking church attendance lowers one's spiritual growth. "You easily get out of the habit, you know," is what they so often say to me. And following that remark usually comes a long series of complaints—complaints about their neighbors, their church, their church folks, their faith, the times, a sort of general diatribe including as much as their minds may compass. I have it on good authority likewise that a return to regular, earnest, devout public worship is a cure for most of the common ills just mentioned.

One must admit that looking in upon one's own self is not very grand scenery. The church is the greatest institution in the world for turning one's self away from self, and setting them on God, and God's great world. One gets one sort of result if one whiles away an hour in a low be-sodden atmosphere of abuse, and dirt, and doubt—and quite another if one climbs a mountain height and views the expanding horizon reaching far beyond mountains, villages, fields, forests, streams, homes, hamlets, and villages beyond and beyond.

The highest height the world has ever yet climbed is Calvary! At church one glimpses it.

Private Worship. Home, in the light of the Christian who has kept his trysting place with God and neighbor and the church, is one of the sweetest places in the wide, wide world for the cultivation of Christian faith. "Be it ever so humble, there is no place like home" for a closed closet, an open Bible, and a listening ear for the voice of God. A friend tells me that two of the highest spots of helpfulness for him are the communion table in his church, and the quiet place of communion and prayer in his home.

Do you wish to grow in the business of living abundantly? Learn the art of communion with God and neighbor through the printed page. What is more helpful than after having dedicated one's days to God at his holy altar in his appointed "house of prayer for all people," than to "wait upon God, and be still" for at least a few minutes every day with a good book before one? Grace Noell Crowell so beautifully puts it thus:

If but one message I may leave behind,
One single word of courage for my kind,
It would be this—oh, brother, sister, friend,
Whatever life may bring, what God may send,
No matter whether clouds lift soon or late,
Take heart and wait.

Despair may tangle darkly at your feet,
Your faith be dimmed, and hope, once cool and sweet,
Be lost: but suddenly above a hill,
A heavenly lamp, set on a heavenly sill
Will shine for you and point the way to go,
How well I know.

For I have waited through the dark, and I
Have seen a star rise in the blackest sky
Repeatedly: it has not failed me yet,
And I have learned God will never forget
To light his lamp. If we but wait for it,
It will be lit.

Sometimes, I am told, teachers of religion should teach their folks how to commune in private. "I do not know how to pray in private any better than I do in public," says one. And I fear it is true. Find a quiet place, read your appointed chapter from the Bible, ask God's help for your moment of worship, and then having surrounded yourself with your favorite books—books of prose, poetry, and hymns—do as you please. God will show you your way. Follow it. You will "grow in grace."

And that leads me to the other word in our text: "Grace." There are two kinds of grace—that which is a free gift from God, and that which under divine leadership one grows into. One is as a gift, the other is as a growth. It is of this latter type the apostle is speaking. I read in the Book that it is commanded, and I observe ever and anon in the Christians about me that it is done. "Grow in grace." In that subtle something that points one out as being different. Gentle in Christian goodness.

What is more valuable to a family, or community, or a church than that type of Christian character? It is confined to no age, or class. It is found in the very young, and in the very old. It is found in the high and the low—in such terms can apply to Christians.

It seems to me that Paul has very aptly described one who is growing in grace. Let us do a bit of paraphrasing: Those who grow in grace suffer long, and are kind; never envious, never proud, never puffed up. They do not behave themselves unseemly, seek not their own, are not easily provoked, think no evil; they rejoice not in iniquity, but do rejoice in the truth; bear all things, believe all things, hope all things, endure all things. They have that love which never fails.

One has to read the whole text to know how Peter expects one to grow in grace: "Grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." There you are. There Peter tells just how it can be done, namely, by growing in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Peter is saying, "Look at me." What an impetuous blunderer I was. How ready to be wrong! How easy to be driven to denial of my best friend. How easily I could give away to anger, and how ready to turn back to my old paths. And how did I come out of it? How did I become one of the humblest and most trusted of all the apostles? How did I become ready to lay down my very life in deed

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The writer has often heard it said that "beyond the darkest cloud there is bright sunshine." Perhaps it is well that we have a dark cloud some times so that we will appreciate the bright sunshine after it has passed.

If we had no needs at the Christian Orphanage and we did not have to call on our church people for help, we would have no way of knowing whether they were interested in us or not. But when our funds run out and we have no money to buy bread, and we appeal to our people for help and receive a letter like the following, containing a check for one hundred dollars, it makes us feel that after the clouds, there is bright sunshine.

"Dear Uncle Charlie:

"If I were superintendent of the Orphanage, and needed help for the support of the Orphanage family, I would do as you have done, I would pray about it to my heavenly Father, and then expect help.

"I am sending a check to you to help out in this time of stress. There is only one string to the check—please do not give my name in reporting it. You may say from a friend, for so I am.

"Hoping others may come across with the needed amount to lift the burden from your heart, I am,

"Sincerely yours,"

If we had one hundred good women in our church like the one who wrote the above letter (and surely, out of our membership, we have), who would mail us a check for $100.00, our burden would be lifted and we could take time to recuperate in health and be able to accomplish more in the Master's name, for these little children. Who will be next to mail us a check. Men are not excluded from this proposition.

It takes acts of faith to be superintendent of an orphanage. Our faith is always strengthened when we make our needs known and friends come to our rescue.

A few weeks ago when I was so ill in the hospital, the doctor said I would have to have transfusions. The word went out. Four young men, three of them Orphanage boys, came to the hospital and offered their life blood that I might be strengthened and given a better chance to recover. I was in desperate need. They came to my rescue. The Christian Orphanage is in need. It does not ask you to give of your life's blood, but it does ask you to give of your means that its work may not be hindered in its financial distress. Will you come to the rescue?

Two friends went up into the mountains for their vacation. After they had pitched their tents and made arrangements for their week's rest, one of the friends said to the other: "Let us give some time to prayer before we go to sleep this first night." The prayer that followed carried them over the wide spaces of the world as this man who had learned the secret and power of intercession laid before the Lord the great burden of his heart regarding the work of the kingdom. It was a great hour of penetration and vision. In talking of it afterward, the man who had thus been led by his friend into the sacred, secret places of leadership and power, said, "When my friend stopped praying, I was almost afraid to reach out my hand in the dark for fear I might touch God."—Selected.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

ists of the Middle Ages were incredibly skillful in their use of the quill.

The invention of the printing press marks one of the greatest events in the advance of civilization. Books were then made available to the masses. At the present the libraries of the world contain the accumulated wisdom of the ages. An article containing some very interesting figures appeared in Publishers' Weekly. According to the article there are 162,000,000 accounted for books in the public libraries of the United States. This means that every American may, if he or she chooses, read one and one-third books each two weeks of the year by simply taking out a library card.

People generally have more time for reading than for many years. How are we using this time? What are we reading? Of what value are the books and magazines we read? How may we improve our reading? During this Christian Endeavor meeting, try to find an answer to these questions. EVELYN B. RICHARDSON.

SUNDAY.

SELF-STRANGLER.

"His roots are wrapped about the stone-heap." —Read Job 8:11-22.

Occasionally a tree sends forth a root which, instead of radiating from the tree, encircles the trunk. As the root grows larger it cuts into the bark, preventing the circulation of sap, killing the trunk above it, and affording a nesting place for destructive insects and fungi. If the root is not cut away in time, it strangles the entire tree. Thus it is with many a life. Its interests, instead of reaching out into the world of helpful action, merely circle about the soul in selfishness. "What I shall eat, what I shall drink, wherewithal shall I be clothed"—such things as these, fill a self-centered life.

The process is suicidal. What we need is the inflow of sap from all the world. Every man, if he would live, must love God and his neighbor. He must have radiating roots.

Prayer—God of love, teach us to give ourselves wholly to other men and to thy world. Then will men and the world give themselves wholly to us, even as thou dost give thyself to us.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

British cities have their newsreel theaters not unlike those found in the United States, but recently, an innovation is to be tried. There as here, there are people who commute from the country to their work and back, and quite often these arrive too late for the train on which they expected to return home. For their benefit and enjoyment as well as enlightenment, there is to be placed in the Victoria station of the Southern Railway, in London, a theater which will have accommodations for 300 people and will offer newsreels almost exclusively. The charge will be from 6 pence to a shilling, and an illuminated cock and time schedule will prevent passengers from overstaying their time.

THE SUN'S PULPIT.

and in truth for my Lord? How? By keeping company with my Christ; by growing in knowledge of him; by constantly observing the things he did, and the things he left undone; by listening to his teaching and by hearing him pray. What lessons I learned from hearing him pray. So great was the power and beauty of his prayers that we insisted that he teach us how to pray.

Grow! How, but by keeping company with the divine. Grow in grace! How but by constantly learning of the divine will for our lives, and taking each step, step by step, as he leads us. We cannot grow by neglect. If we neglect God's house, and the worship there; if we neglect the communion table, and his blessed sharing of his very life with us; if we neglect our private and daily communion with him, and if we neglect his works to do, then we are like a plant lifted from its soil. We perish. And how we perish! If you pause a moment to think about it you will know that the man who is "down and out" with his God, is soon "down and out" with his fellowman. He perishes physically, socially, mentally and spiritually.

"But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." If you really wish to grow as a Christian worker, bearing much fruit, you will find food a plenty and showers of blessings, although at first you may not recognize them as such, but by your constant walk with him you shall have eyes to see, and a heart to understand.

AN ACCREDITED COLLEGE

of the

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING.

ELON COLLEGE, founded by the Christian Church in 1889, has fully justified the faith and hope of its founders during its 42 years of operation. Its graduates from the four-year course leading to a bachelor's degree, number 980, now living, 122 of whom are in the Christian Ministry and full-time Christian service. The majority of these are members of our own denomination. In addition, 449 are in educational work and are an active influence in the lay leadership of the Christian Church.

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING, and the definite religious atmosphere of the College, provide the very best facilities available for training for religious leadership, and offer the Church its finest opportunity to train the young people of the denomination to assume active leadership both in the ministry and laity of the local churches.

OBITUARIES

MOUNTCASTLE.

Mrs. Beatrice C. Mountcastle, age 34, wife of C. C. Mountcastle, of Baldwin Avenue, Portsmouth, Va., died at a local hospital after an illness of one week.

In addition to her husband, she is survived by her mother, Mrs. Etta M. Holland, of Drum Hill, N. C., a daughter, Miss Mary Edua, four sons, C. C., Jr., James Owen, Talmadge and Robert Ellwood, all of Portsmouth.

Mrs. Mountcastle held membership in Elm Avenue Christian Church, and was faithful and loyal to her Lord until death called her home.

She was a good wife, a devoted mother, and a most sincere Christian.

May God bless her husband and children richly. S. W. PHILLIPS.

DENNEY.

On August 5th, the writer was called to Lanett, Ala., to assist in the funeral of Mrs. T. E. Denney. She was a very prominent Christian woman and will be greatly missed in the community.

Sister Denney was a member of the Baptist Church, but was a great helper in our church at Beulah. A great and noble woman has fallen, and the whole community mourns.

She leaves six children to mourn, and one step-son, Dr. T. H. Denney, who was reared by her.

Rev. C. W. Carter had charge of the service. God bless all who mourn.

Farm Forestry Pays.—

The United States Department of Agriculture is the authority for the statement that nearly two-fifths of the farms of the United States yield as much as $200 worth of timber a year. An exhibit from the Forest Service shows that the annual farm forest crop is worth approximately $400 millions. Timber not only pays in dollars and cents, but is like a bank account upon which the owner may draw in times of need. The uses of farm timber are varied, including lumber, telephone poles, saw logs, cross-ties, pulpwood, as well as fence posts and fire wood for home consumption.

Do You Like Grapefruit?—

If you do you are probably interested in its history. Have you wondered why it is called "grapefruit?" It is much more like an orange or a lemon than it is like a grape. Grapefruit does not even belong to the grape family, but is a member of that group known as citrus fruits. Its name possibly comes from the fact that it grows in clusters that resemble mammoth bunches of grapes. It is not a native of Florida as is commonly supposed, but was brought there from China by a sea captain by the name of Shaddock. This seafarer had eaten the "pomola" in China many years before, and it was he who first successfully grew it in America. The "pomola," or grapefruit, was exhibited at the Exposition in Philadelphia in 1876, but people hesitated to eat it, as they shunned the "love apple," or tomato, before that. Indeed, it was not till after the dawn of the twentieth century that the grapefruit became popular with the American people.

Pay Cut for Legislators.—

Virginia legislators are liable to have to take a dose of their own medicine. There is no provision made for calling extra sessions, consequently the estimated cost of around $175,000 must come from the general fund. Now comes from the comptroller's office a communication quoting Attorney-General Saunders, as follows: "Since this is an appropriation from the general fund, I am of the opinion that the deductions ordered by the Governor should be applied to these items. I see no practical method of carrying into effect the Governor's order save by applying the deductions to each individual payroll submitted. . . ." It yet remains to be seen how the astute statesmen making up these august bodies will sidestep one of their own laws when it affects their own pocketbooks. There were those legislators who thought that they should serve without pay before the session was called, but they seem to have become a distinct minority now. The application of the Governor's order would mean a reduction of 20 per cent in individuals' pay and 30 per cent on mileage allowances, etc. One member of the Legislature has volunteered the information that no stone would be left unturned to prevent the Governor from carrying into effect these reductions.

Booze and Business Recovery.—

The political leaders of the country have insisted that repeal is one of the things necessary to industrial recovery. We wonder if they really believe what they are preaching? It seems almost impossible. They have at their disposal the minds of the greatest scientists and statisticians of any age. Truly none is so blind as him who will not see. In an address before the National Retail Dry Goods Association some time ago, Dr. Paul H. Nystrom, professor of Marketing of the School of Business of Columbia University, had this to say: "Prohibition with all the arguments pro and con, undoubtedly is diverting not less than five billion dollars a year, which would normally be expended on alcoholic drinks, were it not for prohibition, to other classes of commodities and to saving. Place whatever estimate you like on the amount of bootleg liquor sold in the country and I am sure you will admit as I have been forced to admit, that a return to the liquor consumption of pre-Volstead days will mean several billions of dollars less business in home furnishings, automobiles, musical instruments, radios, travel, amusements, jewelry, insurance, education books and magazines." Yet, the battle cry is "Booze and business recovery." And Mr. Citizen falls for it.

Will They Unite?—

There seems to be another organic union of kindred church bodies in the offing. Advocating union with the Evangelical Church, The Telescope, official organ of the United Brethren Church, points out that the two churches are as nearly alike in teaching, spirit and organization as it seems possible for two separate bodies to be. They also have a very similar historical background, so similar that the wonder is that they began as separate organizations. The proposition for union came first from the Evangelical Church. At the General Conference of the United Brethren, Bishop Baze of the Evangelical body, addressed the Brethren, and in reply Bishop Fout had this to say: "By the ties of history, doctrine and spiritual kinship, we are more closely related than any other two of the Church of Christ in America. Behind us there is a common history, before us a common destiny. Multiplied thousands of the good people of both communions are hoping and believing that the time draweth near when the springs which were so near to each other in their origin, and so alike in the healing qualities of the waters, will flow together in a river which shall make glad the City of God." The negotiations are to be conducted by committees selected from each of the Commissions on Church Union, with instructions to complete the work at as early a date as possible.

Virginia's Liquor Legislature Meets.—

Although other legislation may receive the attention of the special session of the Virginia Legislature which convened last Thursday, provision for allowing Virginia to help the nation rid itself of "the curse of prohibition" and the legalizing of "non-intoxicating beer" are the items of prime importance. Governor Pollard, who yielded almost under compulsion to call the special session, has asked for the requiring of a $500.00 bond from those who would sell beer and an excise tax of $3.10. The Governor's plan is having stiff opposition from the wet "wets." (To distinguish them from the wet "drys.") He says: "I find those who insist we must have beer for revenue . . . favor licenses and excise taxes so low that Virginia would derive very little in excess of the cost of administering the law. . . . If the administration bill is materially weakened . . . the most deplorable conditions will follow." The Richmond Times-Dispatch, speaking editorially, contends that "this malt beverage, declared by Congress to be non-intoxicating, should be handled as any other soft drink." It thinks that by the requirement of a $500.00 bond from a dealer in beer "the way will be opened to bootleggers. They will get the profits and the State will lose the revenue." Evidently they have forgotten that the bootlegger is to be repealed along with the Eighteenth Amendment. Quoting again from the Governor: "Much to my surprise I have found a disposition to fight every restrictive provision in the suggested bill. It is evident that an effort will be made to make Virginia the most wide open State in the Union." Only one voice seems to have been raised in absolute opposition to the legalization of beer. This is from Mrs. Howard M. Hoge, president of the State W. C. T. U.: "We are opposed to the sale of beer because it contains alcohol. Alcohol is a habit-forming, poisonous, narcotic drug. Any number of resolutions declaring it non-intoxicating do not make it so. Some bodies might resolve that a rattlesnake was not a rattlesnake, but this would not change the nature of the rattlesnake. Facts are stubborn things. . . ." Rattlesnake or no rattlesnake, Virginia is destined to have beer—and unless we miss our guess, to vote for the repeal amendment. If there were a religious press in Virginia, conditions might be different. The church is again paying for neglecting to educate its people to support its own publications.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Dr. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, after a month's vacation in Texas visiting his daughter, has returned to Greensboro and occupied his pulpit there last Sunday, August 20th.

Rev. J. F. Morgan, of Rosemont, Rev. O. D. Poythress of So. Norfolk, and Dr. I. W. Johnson, Suffolk, were among our ministers who spent their August vacations at the Massanetta Bible Conference, Harrisonburg, Va.

Rev. C. Arthur Lincoln, of Daytona Beach, Fla., has been appointed by Governor Sholtz to membership on the State Board of Public Welfare. When the new board organized, Mr. Lincoln was elected vice-chairman.

Rev. F. C. Lester, pastor of Waverly Church, has been called to, and accepted, the pastorate of First Christian Church, Berkley, Norfolk, Va. He is to enter upon his new pastorate the first Sunday in October. Brother Lester has made strong friends at Waverly, and the church there gave him up with reluctance.

Our heartiest congratulations, best wishes also to our friend (one of Elon's good graduates and successful business men), Harold Johnson. This is gratefully acknowledged: "Mrs. James William Markham announces the marriage of her daughter, Katherine, to Mr. Harold Weston Johnson, on Wednesday, August 16th, 1933, Durham, N. C. At home, Fuquay Springs, N. C."

A special to the Greensboro Daily News, from Henderson, N. C., August 18th, says: "Rev. S. E. Madren, pastor of the First Christian Church during the conference year now drawing to a close, was Wednesday night extended a call to that church for another year, and promptly accepted, at a meeting of the congregation held at the church. The meeting was presided over by W. A. Newman, lay member of the church."

It will be learned with regret that Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., has been for a month, and yet is, seriously ill. He is making his home with his son, J. C. Long, Florence, S. C. Dr. Long, so well known, honored and esteemed throughout the church, is now in his ninetieth year, having some time since passed the 89th milestone. We are sure lines from his friends will reach and cheer him, and will be appreciated.

Rev. G. H. Veazey, Wadley, Ala., writes as follows: "We closed a fine revival at New Harmony last Thursday night. The church was greatly revived. We received four members, and bright prospects are in the near future. Rev. G. D. Hunt was with us and did the preaching. I am at Rock Springs this week. Rev. C. W. Carter is with us and is doing the preaching. Prospects are good for a revival. This is my last revival for the conference year."

Dr. J. B. Thrall, formerly pastor of the Asheville Congregational Church, and chairman of the Court of Honor of the Daniel Boone Council, Inc., Boy Scouts of America, is now traveling in Europe as an official representative of the World's Boy Scout jamboree at Budapest, Hungary. He is a personal guest of the head of the Hungarian Scout movement during the jamboree, which is being attended by thousands of scouts and leaders from all parts of the world, it has been learned in letters from Dr. Thrall. He will be requested by the American Scout movement to make reports upon his return. He will probably be heard in Asheville under the auspices of the Daniel Boone Council.

Dr. George L. Hanscom, of Mt. Dora, Fla., died suddenly on August 12th, at Dansville, N. Y., where he and Mrs. Hanscom were spending the summer. Dr. Hanscom was for several years pastor of Union Congregational Church in Jacksonville, Central Church, Atlanta, the Congregational Church at Mt. Dora and Melbourne, Fla. At the close of that pastorate two years ago, he retired to Mt. Dora, where he had bought a home. Soon after going to Mt. Dora he was elected mayor of the city. The funeral services were held at Dansville, N. Y. Dr. Hanscom was a strong preacher, a very human and friendly man, who had a host of friends wherever he served as pastor. He also was widely known as a lecturer. He is survived by Mrs. Hanscom, who also has been widely known as an entertainer.

We rejoice with our Winchester, Va., Church, in securing Rev. A. R. Van Cleave as its pastor. Of the incident the Winchester Evening Star, August 8th, had the following to say: "Rev. A. R. Van Cleave, Wadley, Ala., prominent college professor and clergyman of the Christian Church, today accepted a call to become the pastor of the First Congregational-Christian Church of Winchester, and Timber Ridge Christian Church, Hampshire County, it was announced this afternoon by a spokesman for the churches. Rev. Mr. Van Cleave will succeed Rev. R. L. Williamson, pastor of the local church for the past four and one-half years, whose resignation took effect on August 1st. At a meeting of the Timber Ridge and Winchester Christian Churches recently, it was voted to combine the two congregations into one field. Rev. Mr. Van Cleave preached at the local church this past Sunday morning at 11 o'clock and at Timber Ridge at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Sunday afternoon, the Timber Ridge congregation extended a formal call to Rev. Mr. Van Cleave to become their pastor and at a special call meeting of the local congregation last evening, a call to the pastorate here was extended. This morning Roy A. Larrick telegraphed the call to Rev. Mr. Van Cleave on behalf of the churches and the latter's acceptance was quickly noted. He is expected to begin his local pastoral duties the second Sunday in September. Rev. Van Cleave is a graduate of the Union Christian College, Indiana State Normal, University of Indiana and the University of Chicago. For some years he served as pastor of churches in Indiana, later going to Union Christian College as professor in the Social Science department. Rev. Van Cleave came to the South in 1926, when called to a professorship at Elon College in North Carolina. He remained at Elon as professor of Social Science, his specialties being psychology, philosophy, sociology and religious education, until the fall of 1931, when he accepted a similar position with Southern Union College, Wadley, Alabama."

Recent statistics in criminology are startling in their teachings with reference to the value of the weekly day of rest and worship as a police agency. It is a moral bulwark against crime. Sabbath-keeping nations as well as cities have a far stronger and more efficient guard than battalions of police. The holiday Sunday does not recreate, it dissipates and destroys. It is an eating, wasting cancer in the body politic as history clearly shows.—Martin D. Kneeland in The Presbyterian.

BIRTHDAY PARTY FOR MRS. MADREN.

Saturday evening, August 12th, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Madren, Altamahaw, N. C., was the scene of a surprise birthday supper, the occasion being Mrs. Madren's birthday. Bro. Madren had planned the affair and his plans carried well.

Early in the afternoon, some friends of Mrs. Madren, lured her to Burlington and while away a host of relatives and friends gathered, made all necessary preparations, spread the table, and sat down to wait her arrival. About sundown, Mrs. Madren returned to the homestead, and what a surprise it was—brothers, sisters, friends and neighbors all greeted her with "Happy Birthday."

The table was then uncovered, and after this scribe had made a few remarks and returned thanks, the crowd took hold. Speaking about eating! I wish you could have seen this man Walter Wyrick, from Greensboro, N. C., eat. I have yet to see any preacher who can hold him on the chicken question. Well, anyway, everybody had plenty and to spare. This was only course number one, for following this Brother Madren brought watermelons, canteloupes and sliced them, and eating began again. This scribe was in a class with Wyrick on this round.

The Altamahaw String Band was present and furnished music, which was fine. All in all, the crowd was jolly and had a good time, but the time passed all too soon, for late the folks began to separate and return home, feeling that a great and good evening had been enjoyed together.

The writer joins with a host of others in wishing for Mrs. Madren many other birthdays, and may the heavenly Father spare her life that she may grace the folks around old Bethlehem with that great and pleasing smile that plays across her face. When the gatherings here below are all over, may there be that one great reunion in heaven where time will not speed by so swiftly, and "where friend holds fellowship with friend." God bless the Madrens.

TEN RULES FOR EXECUTIVES.

I am resolved:

1. To remember that this my task is God's work more than mine, and that he is more interested in it than I am.

2. To keep silent about my own feelings, experiences, and opinions. Much talking about these things weakens one's position.

3. To hold steady under a strain. Nothing is as bad as it looks. An orderly plan and a definite goal may clear away much confusion.

4. To hear both sides and take counsel before deciding large matters. Every man has something to teach me.

To leave important decisions until morning. God will meanwhile take a hand if I hold off a little.

6. To treat every man as my equal. Those who feel themselves below me will respond with new values; and those who seem above me are also timid.

7. To believe that every man intends to play fair. Better be imposed upon occasionally than be suspicious all the time.

8. To give my associates not orders, but responsibilities and credit for results obtained.

9. To remember that no case is hopeless, and to give to every man who fails at least three trials under varying conditions. It may be a matter of finding his place.

10. Having done all things, to decide; and having decided, not to change without good reason.—George S. Miller, in the Christian Advocate.

RESOLUTIONS TO DR. G. O. LANKFORD.

Whereas, at a meeting of the congregation of the First Christian Church, Burlington, N. C., held on the 16th day of August, 1933, for the purpose of considering the resignation of Dr. G. O. Lankford, our beloved pastor, and for the transaction of such other business as might claim our attention, to the great sorrow of our entire membership we learned of the resignation of our faithful leader, and listened with regretful hearts to the remarks made moving him to take this course.

Dr. Lankford has been with us practically thirteen years. Love and harmony have at all times prevailed between the pastor and his people. Not a word of bitterness has ever fallen from his lips in these many years of service. He is and has been preeminently a deep spiritual and a consecrated man, a faithful servant of God administering to each one the Bread of Life, and helping us all on our journey on the upward path. He will leave our pastorate with the love, prayers and best wishes, not only of the members of the church, and of the Christian Church throughout, but of every good citizen of every denomination or creed whoever came in touch with him.

It is with great reluctance that the church here would even enter upon the consideration of his resignation, and not until it had been made known by personal communication through the Board of Deacons and the assurance that he would be physically unable to resume his duties for an indefinite length of time, could any one be induced to frame and offer the necessary motion to accept his resignation.

The resignation was accepted amidst feelings of deep emotion and great solemnity. The following resolutions were drafted concerning his departure:

1. That the First Christian Church, Burlington, N. C., and the entire city of Burlington, as well as the best citizenship of Alamance County and the State at large, regret the physical inability of Dr. Lankford from continuing his work in our midst.

2. That for practically thirteen years, in season and out of season, Dr. Lankford has gone among our people teaching and living the beautiful lessons of love, of peace, of good will to all men, and by his walk and conversation has proven himself not only a good and faithful leader of his flock, but an humble and fearless follower of our Lord and Master.

3. That we believe the good seeds sown by him here have taken root, and we know our church has greatly prospered under his wise and faithful ministry. His deep spiritual life, his earnestness, his zeal, and with all his devotion to duty, both as pastor and preacher, in his Master's cause, has been seen, felt and experienced by all who have intimately known him.

4. That while he is temporarily disabled, due to his physical condition, it is the earnest prayer and the sincere hope of the entire congregation that he may soon be entirely restored to health and that he may be able to again give of his service for the Master with renewed strength and vigor.

5. That while Dr. Lankford will not be with us as our pastor and leader he will continually be present in our thoughts and in our hearts. His teachings, his life, and his inspiration will always linger with us, and we trust that the good seeds sown by him may grow and bring forth abundant fruits as a living monument to his faithful labors.

NO JOBS FOR THIS BOY.

Cigarettes, soda fountain "dopes," and strong drink have never yet strengthened the mind or character of any boy or girl, and they never will. Young people, if you want your life enriched by the finer things of this world, so that you may enrich the life of others as you go along, let such things alone.

A sad story is told by Bruce Barton about the kind of man that grew up from a boy who had wrong notions about such things. This noted editorial writer said:

"I know a man who 'knew more' than his father.

"'Keep yourself clean, son,' said the father to him. 'You'll never regret it. And some day you'll be glad you did.' But the boy knew more than his father. He knew that every young man wants to sow some wild oats. So he sowed right merrily.

"I saw him not long ago. He came to me about getting a job.

"He was pale, anaemic, and his hands twitched, and he was forever rolling cigarettes. He could not concentrate his mind on one subject for even two minutes.

"I couldn't give him a job; no man could.

God knows what will become of him. He would starve if it were not for the few dollars he gets from his father—the father who, he thought, did not know as much as he." W. F. M.

DOOR BELL DRIVE.

She rang your door bell, didn't she, and she asked if you were patronizing the concerns that are cooperating with the NRA?

You agreed to do this, and now you have a Blue Eagle pasted on your window pane.

This means that you are helping to put 5,000,000 men back to work in a limited time and are aiding in directing the flow of the nation's estimated annual income of $42,000,000,000 into the tills of the business firms that are "doing their part."

Women spend about 80 per cent of the money in the United States. This shows that the National Recovery Act cannot fail if all the women will buy from the preferred white list, composed of the business houses who fly the Blue Eagle.

"A depression," says the Minneapolis Star, "is a period when people do without things their parents never had."

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

BY THE SEASIDE.

(Editorial Correspondence.)

Virginia Beach, August 19th.

That is a very meaningful Scripture which John writes in Revelation 21:1: "I saw a new heaven and a new earth, and there was no more sea." In the new heaven and the new earth I guess there will be no more tired and troubled people who need the sea and so there will be no more sea.

In this troublesome world people resort to the seashore to play and relax, to indulge in fun and frolic, and so forget their work and worry, at least for a season. In that new time to come, when there is a new earth, people will be refreshed and renewed and rested in their daily pursuits and privileges, and they will not need a sea to rest and refresh them. Moreover the new earth John speaks of will be a pure, clean earth, and there will be no need of a sea for cleansing and purifying.

"Why does the sea stay in its bounds and not spill out over all the earth?" was a question put to this scribe today. Yes, there is enough water in the depths and breadths of the seas to cover all the earth to drowning. Why? God told Job why a long time ago, and neither science nor discovery has better and more conclusively answered. "Who shut up the sea with doors . . . and marked out for it my bound and set bars and doors, and said, Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further: and here shall thy proud waves be stayed."

Yes, indeed, man plows up, plants, sows and reaps from the earth, marks and mars it as he will, desecrates and deluges it at his will, but only God marks and manages the sea. And so the sea is as pure and perfect, as untrammelled and majestic today as it was in the beginning. The sea is indeed the good and wise God's domain. You can see his energy in its rolling, restless billows, feel his touch in its buoyant, bracing atmosphere, hear his voice in its melodies, murmuring words, and adore his greatness in its might and majesty.

But whether by the sea or on the mountain, whether in field, forest or meadow, one has but to look up and about, in any and every vicissitude and condition of life, to see the beauty of the Lord, and behold the wonders of our God. It is but a truism, though a good one, to see and say "Everything was created by God; continues under his guidance, is safe in his care. Love makes the world go round, and it is God's love.

"STONE THEM TO DEATH."

For misinformation, and misrepresentation of facts in the matter of prohibition and liquor, commend us, please, to the wet press. A case in point, like others of daily print and occurrence, comes to us now by way of the wet Norfolk, Va., Ledger-Dispatch, of August 16th. In its news columns of that date it carries a resolution offered by a Rev. A. J. Reamy to a Baptist camp-meeting at Heathsville, Va., where it is stated that "fifteen hundred Northern Neck Baptists were assembled." It is not stated as to what extent the camp-meeting was stirred by the resolution, but how it stirred the editor of the Ledger-Dispatch may be judged from the following editorial under the heading "Stone Them to Death." We quote the editorial verbatim in full:

"In something less than a stick of type, an Associated Press story dated Heathsville, Va., gives what purports to be the substance of a resolution said to have been adopted by a unanimous vote of 1,500 churchmen. According to the story, this resolution would 'prohibit the extending of relief through the church to families which may suffer from the effect of legalized liquors, should the Eighteenth Amendment be repealed.'

"If that means what it seems to mean, some person or agency or organization will make inquiry, in every case of need, to ascertain whether or not the needy family was reduced to want by the drinking or drunkenness of the person charged with its support. Then that person or agency or organization will ascertain whether or not the natural provider was led to permit suffering to fall upon his family by the use of 'legalized liquors' or of moonshine, bootleg or homemade liquor.

"If the investigating power is convinced that the delinquent did nothing so innocent as drink homemade corn or bootleg rye, but descended to the depths and drank liquor legalized by national and state governments, then, according to the reported resolution, these 1,500 good churchmen will, so far as their church is concerned, let his family starve.

"There's Christianity for us. Even the Mosaic Code, in its stern demand for an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, never went so far as to command that the eyes of an offender's children be blinded.

"And in the grimmest days of a cruel age, the cry was 'Stone him to death!' It was never, 'Stone his wife and children to death!'"

Having read this editorial with amazement that and religious assembly was so pagan and heartless as to adopt such a program, we began to look at the news columns of the same Ledger-Dispatch to find the revolting resolution, and to learn more if possible about an assembly that could adopt such a program.

Now, we hold no brief for our Baptist friends in camp-meeting assembled, fifteen hundred of them. For all we could find it was just a regular, peaceful, orderly assembly of good Virginia Baptist citizens and worshippers.

In big, bold type for a head line, we read, "Legal Liquor Victims Will Not Be Aided." Again we shuddered. Here indeed was a cruel, heartless assemblage. After reading something of the proceedings of the assembly, we came to the resolution that had stirred to wrath and fury the hysterical editor of the Ledger-Dispatch. Here it is and let every reader of this paper behold it as we quote it verbatim:

"Resolved that we earnestly request the next regular session of the Virginia legislature to make available such sum of money as may be necessary to relieve distress brought on by the use of intoxicants or alcoholic drinks purchased from licensed dealers who pay the State a tax for such license.

"That we point out to the legislature the fact that if no distress comes from legalized selling of alcoholic drinks, there will be no relief needed, but if innocent women and children suffer as they did in the days of legalized liquor, it is only fair that the State that gets the revenue should care for innocent suffering families.

"Second, that the churches shall not be asked to provide for such needy ones made so by the consumption of legalized liquor in any form."

And so, one wonders how an editor writing for the public can distort and misrepresent for his readers the facts as has the Ledger-Dispatch editor in this instance. At least one would wonder, unless one has already become accustomed to the daily misinformation of this sort in the wet press. We submit that the resolution which stirs to such ire and wrath the Ledger-Dispatch, carries not one line or word that would "prohibit the extending of relief through the church to families which may suffer from the effects of the legalized liquor." If the editor of the Ledger-Dispatch can read—or was he so delirious and frenzied over a church assembly having something to say about prohibition that he could not read?—he must have known that not a word in the resolution said what he was making it say. What sort of Christianity is that for you?

Of course, the above is useless so far as convincing anyone for or against prohibition is concerned. The politicians, with the wet press, have made up their minds that prohibition must go. But one does often wonder why such misinformation as the above must be resorted to, and why the readers of such misinformation embrace it as the truth and studiously adopt, quote and believe it?

IMPROVEMENT.

Was Thomas Carlyle right when he said, "The soul of all improvement is the improvement of the soul?" Was Jesus right when he taught that regeneration must precede reformation? "Ye must be born again," is a doctrine of eternity and so does not fade, fail or pass away.

Are we of the church, of government, of society improving the soul? If not, can there be any real, substantial, abiding improvement?

J. O. A.

It was a fact that the minister was rather long-winded. During his "Sixthly," a young wife of the congregation remembered that she left the gas on. She slipped a note to her husband, who happened to be an usher. Instead of reading it, he thought it was for the minister, so he went down the aisle and handed it to him. The minister paused, took the note with a smile, which turned into a terrific frown as he read: "Please hurry home and shut off the gas."—Exchange.

SOME PERTINENT SUGGESTIONS ON A COLLEGE EDUCATION.

By THOMAS C. AMICK.

The high school senior is confronted with many questions. On the day he receives his diploma, he is at one of the crossroads of life. One of these roads leads to college, another leads to work and the beginning of a career. Which road is the high school graduate to take? His teachers and the college speakers who have spoken at his school have advised the college course and because of this advice he is already predisposed to go to college. However, obstacles are often in the way as many of these high school graduates cannot surmount. One very definite obstacle is poverty and this has clipped the wings of many who would have gladly mounted higher.

This brings up the question of the value of a college education. Is a college education worth the effort, the struggle, and the cost? Many college graduates would be as well off if they had never gone to college. They have spent their money, their time, and they have passed their work by the race of their professors, and after the four years of college work they are neither cultured, nor have they learned to think through a difficult problem of life. On the other hand, other students after four years of college work, have their minds cultivated, their hearts uplifted, their wits sharpened, and they go out ready to meet and to solve life's problems successfully. For the first class the college course is not worth the cost, for the second class the value of their college career cannot be estimated in material possessions. The high school graduate should consider a number of things before deciding to take a college course.

Then there are different kinds of colleges—the state colleges, the privately endowed colleges, and the denominational colleges. To which should the expectant college student go? That also depends. The smaller college gives and does not profess to give anything but a liberal arts course of study. The privately endowed college and the state colleges offer a wide variety of courses preparatory for some of the most useful and dignified vocations in life. The ideal college education is a liberal arts course followed by a professional course. But this requires a great deal of time is quite expensive. To make this preparation for life requires about seven years of college work and the cost is prohibitive, except to the favored few. And the high school graduate must decide for himself how much time and money he has at his disposal. A few can earn their college expenses at the larger colleges by their work, but this means a longer time spent in college if the student is to get the most out of the college course.

Another thing that should attract the prospective college student's attention is the fact that each college has a personality, a character, that distinguishes it from every other college. This college personality stamps itself largely on each student who attends. Just like people, so with colleges, and the college personality should be considered before a decision is made as to which college to attend. Some colleges are not standard, they do not do standard work, their teachers are not well trained, and they are running along in the same ruts in which they have run for the last century. If the student does not wish a sickly personality stamped upon him, he should not attend one of this type of institutions. Other colleges are virile, strong, aggressive, and they command respect wherever they are known. They stand for the finest and best in civilization, art, music, science, and rigorous scholarship. They have high purposes and ideals, and they are the institutions from which the student should choose his alma mater.

It has been indicated already that scholarship is to be one of the first and foremost products of a college. But what is scholarship? Is it mere book knowledge? A man may be a walking encyclopedia and yet be one of the most ignorant of his tribe. A few years ago a young man graduated from college and secured work with a good commercial firm. He had amassed, during his four years' college course, a great deal of information and he had, from time to time, studied how to use this information for the advantage of himself and of his fellowman. The firm with which this young college graduate connected himself had new ideas presented and, as a result of the young man's work, found itself growing in usefulness, service and power. The young graduate infused new life into the firm and made it influential and powerful in its field. This young man possessed real scholarship. Also there was a young fellow by the name of Simon Newcomb, who had no money, but possessed boundless enthusiasm and energy and he had the highest of ideals. He studied at home, interested himself in mathematics and learned how to apply mathematics to life about him. He was called upon to do much astronomical work for the United States government and finally to head the graduate school of mathematics at Johns Hopkins University when this university was founded in 1776. Here was a man who possessed scholarship, although he had never taken a college course. In this same list are Henry Ford, John D. Rockefeller, Andrew Carnegie, Stienmetz, Edison, and others whose names are legion in the earth. Scholarship and culture can be gained outside of college walls, but the way is longer and more arduous. And the college whose chief aim is anything but the highest scholarship and culture is not worthy of the name.

The attitude of the college towards civilization is one thing to be considered also. Some colleges are so radical and their professors are so radical that they would discard the past and build only upon what they call the new. They forget how civilization has been laboriously built up, little by little, through the last six thousand years or more. Values are the bed-rock of life and it has taken all these milleniums for mankind to determine just what is valuable. No one people has of itself been able to determine where true value lies. We draw our values not from wells of shadow and stagnant water, but from wells that are more than sixty centuries deep, and what the centuries have determined to be good, true, and valuable are the values that the colleges should emphasize and teach. As H. C. Morrison says, "Our likes and dislikes have nothing to do with reflective thinking, and still less to do with the fundamental values of life. The standards which have come down to us are the result of untold centuries of social experimentation. The true values have survived and become standard values because they are the values which have been capable of constituting civilization. It appears to be clear that just as organic life has evolved from lower forms so the values which hold society together today have developed out of forms which served their purpose in holding together more primitive societies."

Speaking further, we might say that the most universally accepted forms of art go back through the Renaissance, the Gothic and Norman periods, through Rome and Greece into ancient Egypt and beyond. Some of the best designed office buildings today go back for their most essential features to Egyptian temples.

The same is true in literature. Not a piece of literature in which we have any confidence today but that, in its structure at least, goes back through a long process of racial learning through the Greek and western Asiatic until the story becomes lost in its pre-history.

Each college should have this attitude. Not that we should, like the Chinese, simply reverence and cling to the past without any idea of progress, but holding to the good and the true and the great ethical, moral and social values of the past, the colleges should go forth struggling to use these in building a better and nobler civilization than we now have.

In some colleges faculty members make no pretense towards professing religious convictions and some even avow their infidelity. For such men to teach the growing, developing mind is a tragedy. But, says one, colleges must be liberal. Yes, colleges must be liberal and they must be free, but they are to use their liberality and their freedom in such a way that civilization will be made better, life be made sweeter, and mankind will be made nobler than it has been in the past. And the past has shown us that no civilization has succeeded and that no people have prospered without religion, and that, if the future is to be judged by the past, no nation or people will ever succeed without religion. Religion, like civilization, will make progress but the new will be built upon the religion of the past. As Mr. Morrison again says: "The Hebraic Decalogue is as valid today as ever. It is not enough for modern civilization, but the differences are in the direction of additions in the spirit of the ancient law and not in the direction of subtractions." Humanity is sweeping onward and upward and man builds on the past in religion, and, utilizing the means at his disposal, he builds nobler structures than the past could build. The denominational college, in fact, all colleges must teach religion. They should not teach sectarianism, but it is incumbent upon them to teach religion. No man could or would object to any college professor's teaching religion in the sense as defined by James when he says:

"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and the widows in their affliction, and keep himself unspotted from the world."

Now it is incumbent on the colleges to keep these facts in the forefront of their work. Parents who send children at great expense and great sacrifices to college have a right to expect these same children returned to their homes better trained, with deeper feelings, with minds more civilized, with safe and sane religious ideals, with a mind cultivated and trained so that it can set itself to work on life's difficult problems and solve them with success, with a character that no man can gainsay, and with a reverence for the best, the noblest, the truest in art, literature and civilization, with a respect for decency, law, and order, and with a profound conviction that he has a work to do in life. To accomplish this is the great work for which our colleges and universities are founded.

An exchange says that alcohol will remove the stains from summer clothes. True. It will remove the clothes too. In fact, alcohol will remove the shoes from the feet, the furniture from the home, the groceries from the kitchen, the money from the pocket, the smiles from the face of the wife, the laughter from innocent children, the automobile from the garage, and the young people from college. It will remove happiness, honor, and self-respect. Yes, alcohol is a great remover.—Religious Telescope.

So should we extract from Christ whatever we require to complete our character. The short-tempered must take patience, the passionate purity, the cowardly moral strength, the domineering patience, the downcast comfort. We must not simply pray for them, but take them. This holy boldness is our right.—F. B. Meyer

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Rev. J. F. Morgan, Mrs. J. F. Morgan, Charlotte Morgan, Nelson Morgan, Rev. O. D. Poythress, Mrs. I. W. Johnson and the writer attended the Massanetta Bible Conference, which opened August 7th and closed August 20th. This conference is sponsored by the Presbyterian Synod of Virginia. It has been successfully conducted for twelve years. Special emphasis was given this year to Religious Education, Bible Study, Devotional Life, and general church needs. Dr. S. D. Gordon, of New York, gave a series of Quiet Talks on the devotional life; Dr. W. T. Thompson, of Richmond, gave an excellent series of addresses on Religious Education; Dr. Wm. Evans, of California, gave a series of Bible Studies on the epistle to the Romans; and Dr. James Black, of Edinburgh, Scotland, gave a masterful series of addresses and sermons on general topics related to the Christian life. Other great speakers were present and gave splendid sermons and addresses.

It was a great privilege to have the opportunity of attending this Bible School. Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, United Brethren, Christians and others spoke from the same platform with great acceptance: Dr. W. H. Denison, of Dayton, Ohio, delivered two addresses on Church Union and Stewardship, which received favorable comment. It was significant that Dr. James Black declared with much earnestness, that the Protestant Churches should unite in order to meet the serious challenge of this age. It is quite evident that the Christian and Congregational Churches took an advance step, in the Christian world, by successfully uniting these two great denominations. Let us hope that others may follow our example, and help to answer the prayer of Jesus Christ.

The school is located about four miles east of Harrisonburg, Va. It is in a beautiful location. A commodious hotel, several cottages and dormitories provide comfortable rooms and excellent board at reasonable rates, ranging from $11 to $22 per week, according to size and location of room, and number of persons per room. The Spring furnishes an abundant supply of water, and many people have been greatly benefited by drinking this water. This writer gained five pounds in weight during the conference.

This is a delightful place for ministers and laymen to spend a vacation. We have attended this school for six consecutive sessions. In conversation with a Presbyterian minister, who asked me if I was not afraid I would become tainted by Presbyterian doctrine, I replied: "Not as long as I can make it Christian." Every pastor should have the privilege of attending some school of this kind, or of a similar kind every year. It is informing, inspiring and uplifting. I know I am a better man and a more spiritually minded preacher and pastor because of this opportunity. It costs money, but it is worth the price. All education is expensive, if it is efficient and effective. No minister can become so wise he does not need to sit, as a pupil, at the feet of others.

We leave these beautiful mountains and return to our churches with renewed physical, mental and spiritual strength. How delightful these days have been. Our hearts are grateful to the good people of our churches who granted us a vacation for this high and holy purpose. Revival meetings will engage the time, prayers and attention of many of our country churches during the next month. Will you remember us in your prayers, that these meetings may result in a great revival of religion in our midst? Surely it is needed. This world needs a spiritual revival more than a recovery of material prosperity. The religion of Jesus Christ in our lives, will, under the blessing of God, solve many of our national problems. This world does not want that, today, but it cannot go forward without Jesus in our midst. I. W. JOHNSON.

VALLEY LETTER.

The recent session of the Virginia Valley Conference was held August 9th and 10th at Bethel, near Elkton, Va. Five out of the seven ministers who are members of the conference were present. Eighteen of our twenty-six churches were represented. Forty-one delegates and alternates were enrolled this year, and the same number were enrolled last year. Twenty-one churches have sent in their annual reports.

The conference was well attended and much enjoyed, I think, by all.

We were very much disappointed that Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Dr. L. E. Smith, and Superintendent C. D. Johnston were all unable to be present, and to take their places on the program. We were very fortunate, however, to have with us Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, who not only took his own place on the program, but very largely filled the places made vacant by the absence of the others. This was Dr. Harrell's first visit to our conference, and he made a fine impression upon our people. They were so well pleased that I am sure they will hail with delight any announcement of his coming hereafter. Brother John T. Kernodle was also present and added much to the conference. He will also be gladly welcomed again. Both of these brethren had their wives with them, and they also added a good word now and then, thus also winning for themselves a place in our high esteem. Dropping in also as visitors from the Massanetta Springs Bible Conference not far away were our good friends Dr. I. W. Johnson and Rev. J. F. Morgan. The conference was glad to recognize them and hear them speak. Rev. A. R. Van Cleave, the pastor-elect of the Winchester and Timber Ridge churches was present, and took part in the discussions. Bro. Van Cleave came as a stranger to most of our people. He made a very favorable impression and gave us reason to believe that his coming among us as a pastor will mean a real blessing to the churches he will serve, and to the conference as a whole.

It was the happy privilege of the conference to witness the licensing of Bro. Walton E. Brill, of our Timber Ridge Church, to preach. I have been Brother Brill's pastor for sixteen years, and know that he is highly regarded in his home church and community as a young man of unsullied reputation and unstained Christian character.

Our next August session will meet at Mayland on Wednesday and Thursday before the second Sunday in August, 1934. The midyear session will meet in March at such time and place as may be decided upon by the Executive Committee. Delegates should be elected to the March session just the same as to the August session.

SATURDAY NIGHT IN WHISKEY-RIDDEN EDINBURGH.

Putting a tax on whiskey doesn't keep it from making people drunk. Yet we are told that the remedy for too much whiskey sold by the law-breakers under prohibition is still more whiskey sold under a government license.

Our older citizens know exactly what happens when intoxicating liquors are sold under the license system. And the same things happen everywhere under the same sort of make-shift handling of the drink problem. Let nobody be deceived by those self-constituted fountains of all wisdom who talk oracularly about preferring the Canada method or the British method of control.

Just how much control there is under even the best of such license systems is pictured by an American gentleman, Mr. E. S. Bayard, one of the editors of The Stockman and Farmer, of Pittsburgh, Pa., who, with Mrs. Bayard, visited the British Isles in the summer of 1928—five years ago. Of his observations one Saturday night in Edinburgh, he wrote for his journal as follows:

"Edinburgh appears to have changed little, but having observed it on a Saturday night four years ago, I went around another Saturday night this time to see whether it had achieved 'practical prohibition' by means of taxation. We intended to count the intoxicated men and women we saw on the streets, but they came along a little too fast at closing time, when they appeared everywhere, some of them very drunk and others much exhilarated.

"Over on High Street, the seat of the rich centuries ago, but now the home of the poor, Saturday night is a sad sight, with its combination of poverty and drunkenness. One can't help wondering how people who live in such a place can get enough money to make them drunk at present prices of liquor, but many of them do, both men and women. There is practically no disorder aside from the noise made by those who were celebrating and no harm in that. The police had little to do but look on, for nobody was arrested so far as I could see.

"Those who are not accustomed to seeing drunken women may get a few thrills here or in Glasgow. We saw one well-dressed woman, wearing furs, who needed a large portion of the street for navigation. The other extreme was a frowzy, ragged old dame, very drunk and pouring out a horrible stream of profanity and obscenity. An old couple, both drunk, we followed a little way. They were kindly creatures, each trying to help the other, the woman smiling all the time. Evidently they were going home, but their course was not precisely the shortest distance between two points.

"All this, it should be said in fairness, was on Saturday night. Little drunkenness was seen on any other night in Edinburgh, but much drinking while the bars are open—they close at 10."

Mr. Bayard writes in the temper of a judicial mind opposed to the evils of drink, but deeply sympathetic with its weak and unhappy victims and open to the merits of any system that will achieve 'practical prohibition.' Evidently, he did not regard as 'practical prohibition' what he saw that Saturday night in the streets of Scotland's capital city.

We had just as well conclude that "if prohibition can't, nothing will." But prohibition can.

S. S. S- WORKERS ARE APPRECIATED.

The churches of the Carolinas and Georgia would like to heartily express their appreciation to Dr. W. Knighton Bloom and those back of him for making it possible to send such splendid Student Summer Service Workers to them this summer. Increasingly these churches realize the worth of having such leaders among them.

While we know we are honoring our churches by mentioning their names, yet we seek to give the blessing of these churches to the following students who have brought good cheer, inspiration, information and instruction to hundreds of our youth, and zeal to our churches.

In the Carolinas Scott Read Chatterton has served Chapel Hill and Niagara. Carl Key acted as pastor for Dr. Kirbye at Raleigh United, and ministered to Caroleigh, Six Forks, and Westover Churches and Sunday Schools. Ruth Scotford and Genevieve Chase, the Sophia Chapel Parish of four churches, namely: Brown's Chapel and Providence Chapel, a Presbyterian Church joining them at Spies; Bailey's Grove, at North Asheboro; Flint Hill community and Sophia community, at Sophia. Carl Herman Voss assisted Rev. William T. Scott at Wniston-Salem United, Salem Chapel and Belwus Creek. Miss Katherine Burt served with Miss Priscilla Chase at Albemarle and also with Miss Frankye Marshall carrying on in the Trinity Parish with Mr. Scott and Mr. Voss.

In speaking of these workers and the work in the Carolinas, let us not forget the fine work of the pastors. Rev. S. M. Penn and Rev. Arthur Swartz, with Rev. Wm. T. Scott, have stood right by in every activity. Besides this, they are holding a revival meeting in the very midst of it all. And we shall not forget the service of Mrs. Swartz and Mrs. Penn.

In Georgia, Charles Hoyt, Mildred Rister and Louise Butler are serving in North Georgia Association. Miss Rister is also engaged in Middle Georgia Association at LaGrange and with Rev. Lawrence Stanley in Fredonia Parish. And by the way, this active and growing young man had a revival at Woodbury. We wrote, and it was printed, that he received six new members. No, it was really fourteen, and we are glad to make the correction. And still more going to join soon. Miss Riste also served at Columbus. In South Georgia Association, and mostly in the Parish of Alan Jones, Miss Dorothy Grigsby and Miss R. Joy Grigsby, two sisters, who are called "a team" by those who have observed them on the field.

Eben Chapman has also served with great wisdom and vigor. Robert Barksdale and Nova Weatherby are working with Rev. W. Carl Parker, at Duncan's Creek, Lovejoy or County Line and Center Church, Atlanta. Of course, Miss Annie Campbell, extension worker, has been busy everywhere.

Next week these workers go to their respective homes. The churches they have served, without exception at this writing, are asking that they be returned next year. And we do not wonder. We have seen both their labors and the people whom they have served in part. What we need is an S. S. S. worker in every parish all the time. The time will come when this will be possible. And the youth of our colleges shall not fail! All hail to those who have served this year!

ST. SIMONDS ISLAND.

Have you heard of St. Simonds Island? This writer looked for it—or a report of it—in THE SUN. Said report supposedly had been written by another, but we could not find it. Well, the thing that made St. Simonds worthy of this page this year was Friendship Parish of which Rev. Alan Jones is pastor. Forty-two young people from these four churches gathered at Marion Camp, July 1st, for one week. They brought food with them. It was cooked under the direction of Miss Joy Grigsby, honor student at Boydton High School, Salisbury, N. C., graduating this year. She majored in Economics.

There were others who aided, but the main point is that these young people made it possible to be present by doing their own work. No one was paid. And did they have a good time? Yes, and studied, too.

Alan Jones, Annie Campbell, Dorothy Grigsby, led discussion groups. Problems and their solution, from a Christian point of view, were keenly considered.

Eben Chapman, another S. S. S. worker, had charge of swimming, recreation, and acted as preacher for the conference. He preached two good sermons.

Miss Race taught dramatics, conducted pageants, and aided in the candle-lighting service. Jean Fullington was secretary, and presided at the piano.

The pastor-at-large taught "Studies of Hymns and Hymn Singing." He also conducted a class in "Methods in Church Activities." Everybody leaped into the Atlantic every day, and some twice a day. Was it fun? Some had never seen the "Oshun" before. And they, with reverence and grace, participated in the impressive Communion Service, conducted by Mr. Sweet and Mr. Jones the last night. This was followed by what many who know said was the holiest and finest candle-light service ever witnessed. This was a great conference, because of the Friendship people and the New Jersey Church which contributed toward its expense, which was at a minimum. Coming again next year?

It is possible for you to preach a gospel which nobody else can preach. It is possible for you to know Christ as I cannot see him. Hence there is a gospel according to Matthew, a gospel according to Paul, and a gospel according to you. And if you do not mediate Christ and if I do not mediate Christ, the world will never get the full witness of Jesus Christ, never!—J. Stuart Holden.

What poor starvelings some saints are who live without the diligent use of the Word of God and secret prayer! If our piety can live without God it is not of divine creating.—Spurgeon.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary

REALIZING THE NEARNESS OF GOD.

But is it not true that he (Jesus) spoke most confidently of the near presence of God in the moments when he served, sympathized, sorrowed and suffered? Does not his experience support the statement, "We are surest of God when we suffer and when we serve?" And has not that been the experience of Christ-like disciples of modern times also suffering and serving, "as seeing him who is invisible?"

Not by searching shall we find God, nor in debate about him, but if we love one another he dwelleth in us. As we surrender ourselves to Christ, lead others to follow him, preach the gospel of the kingdom of heaven to the uttermost parts of the earth, and practice brotherhood in all human relationships, we move into a surer sense of the reality of God.—James H. Franklin.

THE UNSEEN PRESENCE.

It is related that the great Italian explorer, the late Duke of the Abruzzi, encountered a savage chieftain in East Africa to whom he gave, through an interpreter, the story of the revelation of God in the life, teachings and death of Jesus. When the story was ended the chieftain is said to have responded in words like this:

"Traveler, you bring us tidings for which we long have waited. Through the years I have seen the sun rise in the east and go to bed in the west, and I have asked who gives it wisdom to do so. I have seen the stars and the moon like lamps in the sky, and I have asked who hung them there. I have seen the clouds gather and the rain fall, and I have asked who made a reservoir in the heavens. I have also asked whence come the rivers and whither do they go. But in answer I have buried my face in my hands and sighed. Traveler, you bring us tidings for which we have long waited."

Many missionaries of the cross have had similar experiences. Job's aspiration is universal: "Oh, that I knew where I might find him." To answer that yearning is the great purpose of Christian Missions.—From the Never Failing Light.

THE HEART OF THE MISSIONARY PROBLEM.

What is the real heart of the missionary problem? Is it a problem of men? Or one of money? Or of method? Or of prayer? It certainly includes each of these phases, but it is deeper than any or all of them. I want to press past all secondary considerations right home to the real heart of the missionary problem. I believe that in the last analysis we shall find it a problem of love—personal love for the Lord Jesus Christ. And why? Because the very soul of missions is sacrifice, and nothing less and nothing else than divine love can call forth the sacrifice that is needed.

The spirit of missions is simply the spirit of Jesus Christ, and the spirit of Jesus Christ was essentially a spirit of supreme self-sacrifice. Those words, "He saved others, himself he cannot save," flung derisively at Jesus as he hung upon the cross, were nevertheless the expression of a profound truth. Had the Lamb of God, in retaliation to that mocking cry, come down from the cruel tree, our salvation would never have been an accomplished fact. He has saved us, but it cost him his own life to do it. The Son of God had to lay aside the glory, and come down to this earth and suffer and die that we might be saved.

This feature of sacrifice was true not merely of the culmination of his work upon the cross, but of his whole life from the manger to the tomb. "For we know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." Have you reflected upon the poverty of Jesus as a literal fact, not a mere figure of speech? Jesus was a poor man, the son of poor parents. He wore coarse clothes. He ate common food. His home, while he had one, was the home of a peasant, and many a time later he had not where to lay his head. Born in a stable, buried in a borrowed tomb, from first to last our blessed Saviour was poor. And this literal poverty was part of the price he paid for the spiritual riches he has purchased for us.

At the cost of his own physical weariness and hunger, he gave to that woman at Samaria's well sweet rest of heart and quenched her spiritual thirst. When the woman with an issue of blood stole to his side and touching the hem of his garment "straightway felt in her body that she was healed," we read that Jesus "immediately knew that virtue had gone out of him." She was quickened and strengthened, but he was thereby made the weaker.

Listen to his own words, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone, but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit. He that saveth his life shall lose it; he that loseth his life the same shall find it." Such is the law of the kingdom of God. Such is the law of missionary life and labor. Well did the old Baptist Missionary Society adopt as its symbol an ox standing between a plough and an altar, and underneath the words, "Ready for either or both." And when we quote the expression, "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church," let us realize that it is no mere sentiment, but an actual fact. We praise God for the missionary graves as well as the missionary stations, knowing that each of those precious lives laid down has contributed to the hastening of the kingdom of Christ.

I believe there is need today to re-emphasize this principle of sacrifice in missions as one that is fundamental, essential, vital.

We live in an age in which self-sacrifice is by no means popular. The aim and effort are to eliminate sacrifice and to indulge ease and selfish comfort. This same tendency is creeping into Christian churches and homes, and producing a spirit of complacency instead of concern with regard to missions. I suppose there is hardly a church or a Christian anywhere that is not perfectly agreeable to voting the heathen evangelized if a mere resolution will suffice. If individuals are not seriously disturbed or inconvenienced, can wear as good clothes, live in as comfortable homes and spend as much for pleasure or the whims of fashion; if home churches can still be as imposing and as luxuriously furnished, and as well equipped with musical talent; and if denominationalism can still be everywhere maintained, and every small town and many a mere village can have its three or four churches, albeit each with only a handful of worshippers and dependent still upon the general funds of its denomination; I say if all these interests can be assured, and the pittance that is over, both of men and of money, will suffice to break the Bread of Life to a thousand millions for whom nothing is prepared, then the missionary project will receive a unanimous vote of approval. In a word, if we could save the heathen without any appreciable sacrifice, without it seriously costing us, we would. But the hard fact is that we can't. Not merely is this clearly demonstrated by the actual facts of the missionary enterprise today—its insufficient forces, its embarrassed treasuries, its inability to overtake the needs and opportunities abroad—but it is equally plain for the reason that the conditions which we have just presumed are contrary to the very law, the divine law, of missions—the law of sacrifice. "He saved others, himself he cannot save." No more can we. God never intended we should. It would be to leave out of the missionary enterprise that which is its very essence and glory. God laid the foundation of this work of world redemption in sacrifice when it cost him his only begotten Son, and he will finish it in no less worthy a spirit or costly a means.—Dr. Robert H. Glover in The Alliance Weekly.

WHAT A CENT WILL DO.

A cent seems of little value, but if it is doubled a few times it grows to a marvelous sum. A young lady caught her father in a very rash promise, by the knowledge of this fact. She modestly proposed that if her father would give her only one cent on one day and double the amount each successive day for just one month, she would pledge herself never to ask of him another cent of money as long as she lived. Her father, not stopping to run over the figures in his head, accepted the offer at once.

But on the thirtieth day the young lady demanded only the pretty little sum of $5,368,-709.12!

Let some of our young readers who have a taste for mathematics just "figure up," and see whether this sum is correct.

Sometimes a cent amounts to more than that. I heard of eleven persons being converted by reading a tract that cost only half a cent.—Selected.

"AMERICA FIRST."

By HUGH VERNON WHITE.

"Why not make America Christian before sending missionaries to other countries?"

All of us connected with missionary education, promotion or administration, frequently hear this question raised. It requires a candid and honest answer.

The question is prompted by two or three considerations:

1. The largely un-Christian character of America, whether we think of its citizens as individuals or of the quality of its social, business and political life. Undoubtedly America needs to be more Christian.

2. The immensely greater influence missionaries would have if they had back of them a nation which genuinely embodied and exemplified the Christian ideal.

3. A lack of missionary interest, and the resort to an easy rationalization which makes that lack appear as a more genuine and practical kind of Christian zeal.

It may be a bit ungracious to list this last motive, but there is no doubt that it often exists, and we ought to be frank about it.

Regarding the two other assumptions, one must grant their soundness. But to draw the conclusion from them that no foreign missionaries should be sent until America is Christian is a violent non sequitur, because:

1. America's becoming Christian is a process that will always be going on; it is not an end to be accomplished in a few decades, or even centuries. A thousand years from now (unless the premillennialists are right) men and women will be devoting their best efforts to the more perfect realization in American life of the inexhaustible meanings of Christianity.

2. No nation or people is made Christian. It is strange that those who protest against "forcing our religion on other people" (a thing, by the way, which missionaries do not do) should think of making our own country Christian. Religion is essentially a realm of free choice and deep personal response. We may plant, and water, but God gives the increase. Or to use another New Testament figure, we may sow the seed, but the quality of the soil determines the yield.

3. Since this question takes America as a unit—an organic whole which can be called either Christian or pagan, it ought to be pointed out that this conception is basically wrong. Except for purposes of broad classification no nation is wholly Christian, or perhaps ever will be in any future that we can plan for. America is part Christian and part pagan. The process of making it more Christian will always be the concern of organized Christianity and of all truly Christian individuals. It is an infinitely varied task, and the focus of effort is constantly changing. All forces of good will and intelligence are required to make it effective.

4. The truer way of viewing the matter is to realize that America is already partly Christian, and then to expect Christian America to show to the rest of the world a truly Christian good will and service. This is exactly what happens when the church, which is the professedly Christian part of America, actively seeks the best good of other peoples by sending missionaries to serve them in the spirit of Christ and to make the power and truth of the Christian gospel available to them. The church has to do this to be Christian itself and to show the nation what being Christian means. A self-centered nation is not Christian, and for the Christian Church to teach the nation by its own program and example an attitude of selfish preoccupation, even with its own moral problems, would be to play into the hands of a vicious and dangerous nationalism.

It would certainly help to make America less Christian; in fact, it is hard to see how the church can continue to give effective support to an ideal of political world unity if it should decide to practice a rigid nationalism in religion.

In the foregoing paragraphs I have kept strictly to the assumptions behind the question as usually stated. It is apparent that they are shallow and spring from misconceptions of the religious character of a nation, of the nature of Christianity itself and of the actual working in individuals and society of the forces that produce Christian results.

The technique of modern business and industry intrudes, according to which the chief elements for success in any undertaking are: (1) efficiency of organization, (2) skilled workers, and (3) adequate financing. So we are to make America Christian by diverting money and personnel from the mission field to the homeland. Such a move would presumably be accompanied by an increase in efficiency, and it should certainly reduce the time schedule. Now, we need men, money and organization in religious effort, but to restrict our conception of the Christian task to what they can accomplish on a time schedule is utterly unrealistic. First, there is the fact that the total force of foreign missionaries and all the money that goes to support them would be, relatively, a small addition to similar lines of service in this country. And, second, the whole idea of Christianizing America in any such way is tragically wrong and superficial. The fate of the Inter-Church World Movement should forever deliver us from such an expectation.

There is something profoundly depressing in the continual recurrence of this question—not its threat against the financial support of missions, but its confession of an unhistorical, provincial and uninspiring conception of Christianity. The acceptance of such an idea would mean the adoption of an "America First" attitude by the church and the world mission is an inestimable asset to American Christianity just because it is a concrete, active denial of that attitude. One of the most potent influences for the making of America truly Christian is this world program of service and fellowship which Christian America carries on through its missionaries. Lincoln once said: "America cannot endure half slave and half free." President Roosevelt has recently declared: "America cannot go on half boom and half broke." So we cannot be content to let the world go on half pagan and half Christian. Either paganism will destroy the hopeful world vision that is essentially Christian, or Christianity will destroy the narrow nationalism which today threatens the world with new disaster. But if the latter alternative is realized, it will be largely because Christian America holds unwaveringly to its own purpose of world fellowship and service and refuses to be beguiled by the false strategy of "America First"—a strategy that is cramped and inadequate in any realm, but which in religion would destroy the essential characteristics of Christianity—The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty.

RELAYING THE MESSAGE.

In passing recently through the Egyptian desert between Gaza and Suez, and seeing train after train of camels plodding over the featureless sands, I was reminded of a custom which the Arabs observe when one of the caravans loses its way, and its supply of water becomes exhausted. One of the camels is relieved of its burden and turned loose. Feeling its freedom, the animal sets out, guided only by its find instincts. It is watched from the camp until it becomes only a speck on the horizon, when a rider mounts and follows in the direction of the disappearing camel. When he too is almost out of sight, a second rider mounts and pursues, then a third, and so on. When at last the leading camel has found a spring, a lovely, life-saving oasis, the first Arab who left the camp signals to the one nearest him, and he in turn to the one nearest him, and he in turn to the one who left after he did, and so on until the message is relayed to the famishing caravan, and hope is revived.

It is the story of the missionary, is it not? The Arab who sees must signal. What he learns he is in honor bound to convey. "Let him that heareth, say come." That is to say, MY having heard makes me responsible to those who have not. What I have received in grace I must give in love, else I shall come to penury in my spirit and the springs of my soul shall be stanchied. I can appropriate to myself the high and sacred name of Christian only as my life is daily the fulfillment of God's Word.—The Oriental Missionary Standard.

We shall meet our acts and words and influences again. A man will reap as he sows. We go on sowing carelessly, never dreaming that we shall see our seeds again. Then some day we come to an ugly plant growing somewhere, and when we ask, "What is this?" comes the answer, "I am one of your plants. You dropped the seeds which grew into me." We shall have to eat the seed that grows from our sowing."—Rev. J. R. Miller, D. D.

CHEER UP!

It is our duty and privilege to be of good cheer in every condition of life. The four occasions on which Jesus used the words, "Be of good cheer," are in themselves an interesting and instructive study. They were all in critical moments when exceptional encouragement was needed. The man sick of the palsy and suffering intense agony of body, and the woman who had been sick for twelve years were almost parallel cases. No star of hope gleamed upon them until Jesus said: "Be of good cheer."

On the other two occasions those words were spoken to the disciples in trying and critical circumstances. The first time they were toiling and rowing against a storm on the Sea of Galilee. They thought they were cut off from the Master by the violence of the storm. When Jesus did appear, walking on the sea, it frightened the disciples at first, but his gracious words, "Be of good cheer," enheartened them and dispelled their terror. The last time Jesus used these words was on the eve of his departure when his going away seemed to leave the disciples defenseless and forlorn and with the prospect of a cheerless future before them. In the face of what seemed to ring the knell of all their hopes Jesus said to them, "Be of good cheer."

Happiness is man's divine heritage. Joy is not just an accident. It has to be cultivated like all other graces. It is an unerring result of certain laws followed and laws obeyed. The world is an echo valley. If we send out a dirge a dirge comes back to us; or if we send out notes of joy, then joy returns to us. It is God's plan for us to keep sunshine and happiness in our lives.

Length of face does not necessarily indicate unusual goodness. The artist who pictures the Christ as having a long, sad face does not do him justice. Jesus was no grouch. It is true that he was acquainted with grief, but he did not let this acquaintance overcome him. The very fact that little children loved him is sufficient evidence that he was of a cheerful disposition.

Don't worry. It is unworthy, unnecessary, unavailing and unrelieving. How much better off the human race would be if we could be content with whatever our lot may be. Paul was happy in jail, Daniel was happy in the lion's den, John was happy on Patmos, Bunyon was happy in prison, Wesley was happy while dying. The happy people are the humble, the gentle, the thankful, and the holy. Anxiety or worry does not cure our sorrows; it only drains us of the strength which we need to overcome them.

The thing which we find at the bottom of most unhappiness is "self-pity." We imagine that our troubles are greater than those of anyone else. Then if our supply of trouble runs low we proceed to borrow. Half the things about which we worry never happen. We cross too many bridges before we get to them. If we could learn to "bless the Lord, and forget not all his benefits," as the Psalmist has exhorted us to do, then we would have a great deal fewer cases of despondency. We are prone to forget how good our heavenly Father is to us. When we think of the fact that we are objects of his continual care and recipients of bountiful blessings from his hand, we should realize that we have nothing really to worry about. James Whitcomb Riley says:

'Tain't no use to grumble and complain,
It's just as cheap and easy to rejoice,
When God sorts out the weather and sends rain
Why, then, rain's my choice.

So, let us try to assume the attitude of the poet, and try to realize that whatever is, is best. If we were running the world we think that we would have a lot of things different—and we would—they would be in worse shape than they are. So, let's strive to turn our trouble into victory. If we have a cross to bear, let's carry our cross with a smile.

The greatest recipe for happiness in the world is found in those four words spoken by Jesus only four times: "Be of good cheer."

Hymn—"True-Hearted, Whole-Hearted."

Introductory Talk—

Development of the Topic—

The following outline may be used:

The Power of Public Opinion.

How Public Opinion is Created.

Creating Public Opinion for a Better World.

Hymn—"Rise Up, O Men of God."

Benediction—Father, we would enter into larger fellowship with thee in building the kingdom into the hearts and lives of men and into the life of our nation and of the world.—Amen.

Observe the following suggestions in preparation for this topic:

1. Have someone prepare to read Acts 19:23-41 and discuss it.

2. Ask some mature person who was a student of world affairs at the time of the World War to discuss the ways by which public opinion was created in support of the war.

3. Recall some important civic achievement, describe the ways by which public opinion in favor of this improvement was created.

4. What are some national measures on which public opinion is being centered today? How is this opinion being created?

5. Appoint a committee of three to decide on some urgent need in your community and outline a plan for creating public opinion to meet the need.

6. Appoint another committee to study national and international needs, choose one and outline a plan for arousing public opinion to adopt some policy to meet this need.

There have been a few relatively static periods of history when public opinion was set in a certain mold and few things happened to jar or disturb it. But the present world situation is far from that. People are discovering that opinions that have been held for generations are wrong and must be changed. Institutions that seemed almost sacred are being stripped of their glory and sometimes the skeleton is not pleasing to see. Loyalties are being shaken. The whole world is in chaos and confusion. There is a restlessness both in the minds of individuals and in the group life of the world.

Conflicting interests are vying with each other for control of public opinion at the present time, knowing that the power for their survival rests there. If public opinion is blind, uninformed and easily deceived and misled as it has been throughout most of the world's history, a few clever leaders can organize the political and economic life of a nation to further their own selfish interests. An informed, intelligent, Christian public opinion is our goal, and our only hope of building a better world.

EVELYN B. RICHARDSON.

PIEDMONT CONFERENCE.

In speaking of Leadership Training Conferences, don't forget the Piedmont Conference. This included all of Georgia. Held at Piedmont College, July 24th-30th, there were three times as many students present as last year. And they were all happy. The regular work was well done by such teachers as Arnold Slater, Bible; Lawrence Stanley, World Friendship; Annie Campbell, Materials and Methods; Miss Race, Dramatics; Alan Jones, Problems; Charles Hoyt, Handcraft, Woodcraft, Recreation; Henry B. Mobray, Chapel, and M. J. Sweet, Dean and Vespers.

But this regular work was supplemented by the remarkable hospitality and friendliness of the pastor of the church, Mr. Mowbray, and Dean Rogers, of the College, and, in fact, the whole College faculty and townspeople themselves. One night the C. E. gave a supper out by the lake hard by owned by a member of the faculty, Prof. Percy. One night the music department gave a recital of high grade music, worthily rendered. One night Dean Rogers, wife and talented daughters gave an informal party at their home, which was properly enjoyed. And one night there was a formal reception given by the faculty. Well, it surely was a full eight days. But every student there vowed he or she would bring others with them next year.

The last service was held out on the hill looking up to the mountains where the vesper service had been held during the week. The vespers were carried into a testimony meetings in which every one shared. It was good to be there. The Communion Service followed impressively and this by the candle-light service which lengthened to the dormitory nearly a mile away. To see these lights burning as they were carried by inspired young people was a thrill not soon to be forgotten. It was something for young people.

Whoever allows himself to get out of patience, comes to the falling-off place before he is aware of it. By indulging in temper and saying cruel words, a man loses control of himself, and his tongue grows keener and more bitter and he affects and hurts forever the man he attacks. Do not turn friendship into hatred by hasty speech. "By conquering yourself, you have conquered me," were the words accompanying the capitulation of a great Indian chief to one of our colonial governors. Think it over.—John Wanamaker.

"He that negotiates between God and man as God's ambassador, the grand concerns of judgment, of mercy, should beware of lightness in his speech.—Cowper."

SAUL.

LESSON IX—AUGUST 27, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice."—I. Sam. 15:12.

LESSON TEXT: I. Sam. 15:13-26.

Samuel told Saul that the Lord commanded him to smite the Amalekites, and utterly to destroy them, men and women, and even children and suckling infants, and all their animals. It is difficult to harmonize this action as a command from the same God who was the Father of Jesus Christ. But we must remember that the Bible deals with a progressive revelation of God, and at this stage in Israel's history this was their understanding of and interpretation of God's attitude toward and will for the enemies of Israel. The thing becomes all the more irreconcilable with the spirit of the Father of Jesus Christ when it is frankly stated that it is a case of getting even with the Amalekites for what they had done to Israel as they came out of Egypt. The fact of the matter is that Samuel was living up to the light that he had, and that he was declaring what he knew to be the will of God. We are to interpret his action in the light of the God whom Jesus Christ revealed.

Now Saul and the Israelites set out with a right good will to do the thing that had been commanded. They went heartily to the task of wiping off the face of the earth the hapless Amalekites. But there were some very fine sheep and oxen and fallings among the spoil and these they spared, ostensibly to offer them to the Lord. And they spared Agag, the king of the Amalekites, probably on the presumption that it would be a good thing to taunt him and humiliate him. And by that strange way in which the Spirit of God often makes known the hidden things of life, the thing became known to Samuel. And here the lesson of today begins.

Vain Flattery.

"Blessed be thou of the Lord." Thus salutes Saul the prophet Samuel as he approaches him. It sounds as if it were flattery. It was, and is, a subtle weapon. There is many a man, alas, many a minister and Christian worker, who is so susceptible to flattery that he often becomes harmless when he faces those whom he should rebuke. Be it said to Samuel's credit, and to the credit of a legion of faithful ministers, that they refused to be turned aside from their duty by flattery.

The Bleating of the Sheep and the Lowing of the Oxen.

It was most unfortunate that just as Saul told Samuel that he had performed the commandment of the Lord, the sheep began to bleat, and the oxen began to low. But we all know that life is just like that. Our sins have a way of finding us out in the most unexpected ways and at the most inauspicious times. Let every one of us be sure that our sins will find us out.

The Right Thing in the Wrong Way.

"The people spared the best of the sheep and the oxen to sacrifice unto the Lord thy God." It was a splendid thing to offer the best unto the Lord in sacrifice. But God did not want sacrifice in this case; he wanted obedience. The Israelites were doing the same thing that multitudes of people do today—they try to justify the means by the end. They try to excuse themselves for wrong-doing by basing it on worthy ends.

A Brave Preacher.

"Stay and I will tell thee what the Lord hath said to me this night," said Samuel. It was an unpleasant task. It took courage for the prophet to tell the king of his sins and of his doom. But Samuel did it, and he did it courageously. He is an example to modern ministers to denounce sin and pronounce doom even in high places. A minister should play no favorites in denouncing sin.

But Samuel is an example also in the spirit in which he rebuked the king. It broke his heart to do it. Verse eleven states that it grieved Samuel and he cried unto the Lord all night. It is one thing, and perhaps not a very difficult thing to denounce sin and pronounce doom on the sinner, but it is quite another thing to do it out of such love that one's heart breaks in the doing of it. Ministers and teachers and all of us need to learn how to hate sin but to have compassion on and love for the sinner.

The Tragedy of Self-Sufficiency.

"When thou was little in thine own sight, thou wast made head of the tribes of Israel." When Saul was first called to his high position he was humble and obedient. But, alas, he became self-sufficient, and later on he lost that sense of dependence which is so essential in service in God's kingdom. There are so many today who are humble when they are poor or are in trouble, but who forget God when they become prosperous, and who feel self-sufficient. Nations as well as individuals are guilty of this sin of pride.

Passing the Buck.

"But the people took the spoil." Thus Saul passed the buck, to use a slang expression. It is always so convenient to have someone else to lay the blame on. But it is futile so far as God is concerned. As a matter of fact, it is futile so far as we are concerned. We know that in the final analysis we are responsible for our sins. One of the most difficult things to get a man to do is to confess his sin, to come right down to the place where he will take the blame for his sin. We blame our sins on environment, on heredity, on circumstance, on others. Confession of sin is a very stern thing if it is looked at in the right way.

Worship Obedience.

Worship stands high in the mind of God. He seeks those who will worship him in spirit and in truth. It is a privilege and a duty. But God puts obedience above worship. "To obey is better than sacrifice and to hearken than the fat of rams." The usual procedure of a great many people is to do the thing that they want to do, even though they know it is wrong, and then to ask for forgiveness. God demands obedience. Without that, worship and sacrifice are empty things.

Because I Feared the People.

That was Saul's excuse to Samuel. He was afraid of the people and obeyed their voice. In these words he speaks for us. Alas, that so many of us are afraid to stand by our convictions, are afraid to live by our ideals. Take, for example, the matter of drinking. There are a great many young people who are afraid to say "No," when they are invited to drink when out with the "crowd." And young and old compromise their ideals and deny and betray Christ because they fear the people and obey the voice of the people. But we ought to obey God.

You never acquire anything in this world without purchasing it—purchasing it by your own will and effort. You may attain high state office. It will never come to you as a gift. You may attain a high place in business; your name may be emblazoned in the newspapers, and other distinctions may come to you. They are at the end of a long, hard road that only men and women with ability and energy can traverse.—J. Ramsey McDonald.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

"O Lord, I beseech thee, let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of thy servant, and to the prayer of thy servants, who desire to fear thy name, and prosper, I pray thee, thy servant this day."

MONDAY.

LIP OR HEART SERVICE.

Lesson: Mark 7:6-13.

"This people honoreth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me. . . . Making the Word of God of none effect."—Curses 6 and 13.

This may be true of anyone who goes to church, reads his prayers, sing the songs, takes the communion, leads a decent life; yet is spiritually dead and has no consciousness of sin nor grace, and will not admit the necessity for repentance and a new birth. It is too bad, there are many such, even among those who are regarded as patterns of piety—they are without the daily knowledge of sin and the grace of the blood of Jesus Christ. They are severe in their pronouncements upon the children of the world, but they give short measure, top a basket of little berries with large, luscious ones, are willing to profit at expense of others, and drive hard bargains. These are the greatest hindrance to the church and the advancement of the kingdom. Let none think that such are truly pious.

It is time for us all to examine ourselves in the light of God's Word as in the sight of God. We should study to shun the very semblance of hypocrisy as the lowest of Satan's works. It is time we had a keen sense of obedience to God's Word and a conscience void of offense.

Prayer—Help us, O God, that our hearts may fear thee, and that we may in truth honor thee. Grant us grace to live in true holiness, in holy charity.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

SWEET WORD.

Lesson: Psalm 119:97-105.

"O how I love thy law. . . . How sweet are thy words unto my taste!"—Verses 97 and 103.

We ponder and wonder sometimes how many Christians felt as David did about it. We ponder just how much we ourselves find God's Word our greatest treasure. Then, when we find ourselves reading it on and on with delight, and suffering heartaches when observing so many about us who not only know nothing of its sweetness, but who know nothing of it at all, we begin to realize somewhat of its precious delights to us, and we pray God to make his Word a delight to us as it must have been to the writer of this Psalm.

Thousands read the newspapers, the magazines and books ravenously, play cards all day and all night, and the Word of life, happiness and peace lies covered with dust, or packed away for safe keeping. They have time for balls and banquets, but they are too busy to read his Word or go to church, and when they do go, it is not for the purpose of hearing what the Lord will say unto them.

What is wrong? They are not partakers of the blessings of the Holy Ghost. When so blessed, they will love the word and would not miss its truths for anything.

God's word is our only source of light; it shows the Father's tender love and leads us to our home above. Mediate upon it when you are not obliged to spend your thoughts with other work and do not forget that God is present. Then, walk faithfully in the light, hating every false way, and undertake nothing without inquiring for light. There are those who never tire of this and their lives bear the glory of transfiguration and they love the gospel.

Prayer—Merciful God, grant us the favor of delight in thy word. Enlighten us by thy spirit, and make it our holy desire to live according to thy precepts.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"THOU SHALT LOVE."

Lesson: Matt. 22:34-46.

What a beautiful commandment! Love is the best thing in life and there is no salvation without it. Love God above all things, and thy neighbor as thyself; this do and thou shalt live. (Luke 10:27, 28.)

What a just thing it is! It embraces everything that is good. All the other commandments are but reflections of this one.

Have we that love or have we lost it? If we have it not, we are unhappy, discontented, condemned and lost. Would that there were some way in which such hearts could give up their resistance, agree with God's law that the love and will of God might become their wills and desires. Yes, there is a way: By the gift of the Holy Ghost, through Jesus the Son, any one can be begotten anew—made a new creature and realize that love. Christ has fulfilled the love for us, has loved us with perfect love, and has secured pardon on the cross that whosoever believeth on him might live. The Holy Ghost gives us grace to believe this, to act upon it and partake of it. Thus we are in Christ and he in us. So born again, we can and will practice love by obedience to all the commandments and all that is to the contrary, love of self, hate, covetousness and all the lusts of the flesh—will die, that we may sit in the heavenly place of love.

Prayer—Dear Lord, enable us to make diligent use of the power which thou hast given us, obey thy voice, conform to thy spirit, and take Christ in our souls.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

WITHOUT BLAME.

Lesson: Eph. 1:3-7.

"That we should be holy and without blame before him."—Verse 4.

God has given us his Son, and by his life, death and resurrection, redeemed us from death and the devil; received us into his fellowship; forgiven us of our sins; created in us a new heart; given us spiritual light; and keeps us by his power unto the appointed end of glory. All believers are included in this salvation wherein "the spirits of just men are made perfect." "That we should be holy and without blame."

Prayer—Dear Lord God, we are deeply sensible of our unworthiness, but we are deeply thankful that in thy good pleasure thou hast redeemed us through Christ and adopted us into thy family. We will, then, by thy grace, serve thee with all our souls. So help us by thy spirit.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

IMPERATIVE THANKSGIVING.

Lesson: I. Cor. 1:4-8.

"I thank God always on your behalf." Verse 4.

We are told that Paul wrote to the Corinthians with a sad heart because of the wickedness of the church, yet his love for them, his insight into their lives, is occasion for continuous thanksgiving.

In like manner we should be able to see that the numerous infirmities of the church should never for one moment interrupt our thanksgiving. The Scriptures with their enriching life are open to us; we walk nowhere in darkness; we have all the knowledge necessary as a key to the highest life; there are many everywhere upon whose hearts the Holy Ghost has placed the seal of salvation; all of which should hearten us.

There may be reason for complaints, as Paul had, but likewise with him we have fellowship with God. Pure eyes look upon that which is pure and rejoice in every virtue. It is by this kind of life that society shall be delivered. All shall become perfect in holiness and the church shall stand at last an undefiled bride at the Lord's side.

These are things, it appears, which were continually before Paul and for which he gave thanks always.

Prayer—Give us, O God, the humble and grateful spirit of faith; and confirm us in the truth unto the end, for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

GATHERING TOGETHER.

Lesson: Eph. 1:8-14.

"He might gather together in one all things in Christ."—Verse 10.

Causing "all things to work together for good" and the gathering together all things in Christ, and to bring all things ultimately to praise him, seems to be the unquestionable pleasure of the Lord.

He who sees this cannot let him go. He expects salvation at his hands, worships with child-like love and confidence; and has his peace and joy in him. The longing after God, and the joy in God's love, is our seal which cannot fail to be valid.

Let not imperfection create any doubt. He shall not fail until every enemy is destroyed and the perfect is come.

Prayer—Our Father, praise be to thee. Enlighten us that we may know the excellence of thy way through the maze of this wicked world. Give us grace to gather together with thee all that be of thee and unite all in Christ.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

WITHOUT CONDEMNATION.

Lesson: Rom. 8:1-4.

"There is . . . no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus."—Verse 1.

What a secure and happy thing it is to have a clear conscience—to be guilty of nothing in which we can be condemned! To have a clear conscience void of offense presupposes of course, that we have a conscience, or that, having one, we have not seared it beyond feeling, or sand-bagged it into unconsciousness. There are some who fall into the ways of the world and reach the state where they have no sense or compunction of conscience about sin any more. May God be merciful until they come to life again. Frivolous, carnal, pleasure-bent, self-righteous persons do not know that they are condemned, and thus remain unmoved when they read or hear the words of life. Of course, they have no spiritual difficulties as the devil does not assail their faith. It is dead. At the same time, it is a fact which everyone can reasonably know that he who feels no condemnation and has no knowledge of the fight of faith, there is nothing for him. It is like closing the eyes to the beyond and glory of a full blooming flower garden and saying "there are no flowers."

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

VICES OF THE VIRTUOUS.

By DWIGHT E. STEVENSON.

(This sermon, which was awarded this year's Dean Brown Prize in Expository Preaching at Yale Divinity School, is reprinted from the Christian-Evangelist.)

"Now his elder son was in the field; and as he came and drew nigh to the house, he heard music and dancing. And he called to him one of the servants, and inquired what these things might be. And he said unto him, Thy brother is come; and thy father hath killed the fatted calf, because he hath received him safe and sound. But he was angry, and would not go in; and his father came out, and entreated him. But he answered and said to his father, Lo, these many years do I serve thee, and I never transgressed a commandment of thine; and yet thou never gavest me a kid, that I might make merry with my friends; but when this thy son came, who hath devoured thy living with harlots, thou killest for him the fatted calf. And he said unto him, All that is mine is thine. But it was meet to make merry and be glad; for this thy brother was dead, and is alive again; and was lost and is found."—Luke 15:25-32.

When we think of sin we usually think of something black and utterly abhorrent. Robbers, murderers, gangsters, prostitutes, wasters—these are sinners. We think of the prodigal sons and daughters of the world.

But somehow Jesus did not have as many words of denunciation for the prodigals of his day, the publicans and harlots, as he did for the outwardly respectable Pharisees and Scribes. He seemed to think that the case of the dyed-in-the-wool sinner was more hopeful than the case of those who covered up narrowness and hypocrisy with the cloak of orthodoxy.

Perhaps the reason that we have been so willing to brand the prodigals as sinners is that there is little likelihood of our falling into that kind of sin. We do not have to worry about becoming outcasts from society, going to the depths to which the younger son in the parable descended. The great masses of society, and we with them, are respectable, law-abiding, peace-loving souls. The most of us are more fittingly typified by the elder brother who remained at home on his father's farm, sharing the work and the responsibility. We are conventional and respectable.

Certainly these two brothers were different. The younger brother was the black sheep of the family. He was a spendthrift and a waster. Scandalous stories about him must have come back from the city every day. Not only did he waste his father's fortune, he went in search of thrills, dangerous thrills, which led him to the brink of physical and moral ruin.

In contrast, the elder brother was steady and reliable. Day after day he toiled in the fields grubbing out a living for the household. He kept his accounts straight. He must have been respected by his neighbors as level-headed and dependable. He didn't desert his father for the lure of the city; he didn't squander his inheritance. Indeed, he was a personification of thrift and reliability. He stood by the family like a loyal son. Yet, despite all this, we are not well impressed with his respectability as we read his story. We are led to suspect that he had at least some rather grievous faults.

First of all, he was ungrateful and ungracious.

On returning from the fields and hearing the music and dancing in honor of his brother's return, his first reaction was a wounded pride. Fuming with anger, he confronted his father with the charge, "You never gave me even a kid to make merry with my friends. But when this thy son came, who hath devoured thy living with harlots, thou killest for him the fatted calf." He seemed to have forgotten that his father had given him an inheritance equal to his brother's. He forgot that he had shared his father's companionship through the years; he had eaten at his table and had benefited from the comforts of a well-ordered household.

He made no formal response of appreciation. His reply was a surly charge of partiality and unfairness because his brother had been welcomed home. We suspect that he never had experienced a single day of real companionship with his father. For gratitude and appreciation are the doors through which we hold commerce with friends.

Ingratitude is not the crassest sin in the world, but it twists and stints the life that bestows it. It is a failure to comprehend spontaneousness and friendship in others. The ungrateful man sees the world through smoked glasses; having a cloud in his soul, he cannot see sunshine in the soul of another. So he cuts off the widest channel of human companionship, for friendship can never exist without a give-and-take involving appreciation and gratitude.

The elder brother had reduced life to a theory, an equation of duty, and in so doing had robbed himself of the essential humanity. In 1568 during the Spanish inquisition, Alva was in the height of power in the Netherlands and blood was flowing like water. A Calvinist preacher, pursued by a Spaniard, fled across a lake of ice weakening under the heat of a March sun. The lighter preacher reached the shore in safety and looking back saw his pursuer struggling for life and crying for help. Without delay he went back and dragged the sleuth of the Inquisition from the icy waters, with the result that the rescued man cast his rescuer into prison and himself lighted the fire which took his life on the next day. Such a paralysis of affection is something more than a fault. It is a gross evil. Because it can't see beyond its own nose and its own grievances, it blocks up the whole avenue of human understanding and human sympathy.

Living in a society built on the assumptions of rights, figuring life in terms of units of production, we see the vast social proportions of ingratitude. In 1929, one-third of our national income was going into the pockets of moneyed people. During the depression one-half the national income has gone into those same pockets, while the relief funds paid the unemployed have not equalled one-tenth of their normal wages. Because men have been reduced to factors in production, their contribution to economic life taken for granted, grinding poverty stalks abroad, starvation takes its toll of undernourishment and disease, and economic and political problems reduce the proverbial Gordian knot to absurd simplicity. Ingratitude is not a mere absence of virtue; it is a positive force of evil, ruinous in an individual life, but devastating when let loose upon society.

On the basis of his ungracious estimate of his father and his brother, the elder son built up a fiction of self-righteousness.

He began to recite his virtues: "Lo, these many years do I serve thee, and I never transgressed a commandment of thine." There they are: constancy, loyalty, hard work, obedience, unspotted character. These virtues are not to be despised, but the pride with which they are accomplished is so great as to cancel them out. We cannot escape from a feeling that all these years the elder son had remained faithful and morally irreproachable precisely because he entertained a superiority complex. How much better he was than that renegade of a brother!

Self-righteousness! What infamies have not been committed in its name! In individuals it creates moral inertia; a man becomes too satisfied with his present state to see his shortcomings or

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Every child who appreciates the home in which he was reared will want to return to the old home from time to time because it will hold some sweet memories of childhood days.

Children reared in an orphanage have the same feeling and want to visit the old home that has meant so much to them. The Christian Orphanage has made it a rule for several years to have a home-coming day once each year, and invite the boys and girls back home to spend the day together as brothers and sisters and talk over the days gone by and relate the many games they played and got by with it.

This year we will have home-coming day the first Sunday in September—the 3rd—it being the Sunday before Labor Day. We invite to be with us on home-coming day all the boys who were reared in this institution, and their wives, if married; all the girls and their husbands, if married. We want to have a family reunion of our children and hope a large number of those who have gone out will come home for the occasion.

We do request, if you can come, to drop us a card so we will know how many to prepare for. A warm welcome awaits you.

CARL VOSS AT WINSTON-SALEM.

Carl Voss is doing great S. S. S. work at Winston-Salem. One hesitates to say, "He's the noblest Roman of them all," but it is safe to say he has split more wood, swept more floors, painted more pews, washed more windows, put up more screens at church windows and doors, preached as many sermons, made as many calls, taught as many Sunday Schools, walked as many miles as any other S. S. S. man in the country. And now, with the splendid help of Frankye Marshall and Katherine Burt, and a few local young woman helpers, he is helping to carry on one of the largest vacation church schools in the State of North Carolina.

This new church has 130 or more enrolled in their school. It is remarkable how the people of this fine neighborhood appreciate the kind of service this church is giving. And Mr. Scott, the pastor, led his people into union summer services Sunday evenings in Ardmore and has preached twice already to the combined groups.

On one occasion the meeting was held in the United Church. It was packed. It is said that one lady said beforehand that she was not going, for "these people" (meaning United Church people) "did not believe in music in the church." It happened the pastor, without knowing of this, had arranged to have a large church choir of First Church, Greensboro, there that night. Thirty-five minutes was given to a much appreciated sacred concert. It must have been a happy surprise for some one! And as this is being written Mr. Scott, assisted by Mr. Swartz, of Albemarle, is holding revival meetings at Salem Chapel, fifteen miles away. Surely this is a busy church.

The fact is, we have to forget and lose ourselves in all that we do and say and look to Christ only for the light, for the life and for the uplift. They who are taught to launch out on the deep, to cast over the net, to do so then shall find themselves free from the load of sin and death.

Prayer—Dear God, our Father, help us in this most important of all concerns. Teach us and guide us, that Jesus may be to us the way, the truth, the life.—Amen.

THE SUN'S PULPIT.

to desire greater achievement. In races it is the parent of color lines and the whole spotted reality of racial prejudice. In nations it becomes nationalism; it feeds militarism and raises trade barriers, dividing the world into exclusive estates with high walls. As soon as a man, a group, or a nation begins to boast in its present achievement, it is time to hold a funeral, for a death has occurred.

As he was self-righteous, the elder brother was also selfish. He did not think of the needs of his brother, he thought of his own demands: "Thou never gavest me a kid (let alone a fatted calf) that I might make merry with my friends." Thinking of selfishness one is somehow reminded that just beyond the gates, in the Inferno, Virgil pointed out to Dante:

... the wretched souls of those Who lived with neither infamy nor praise.
For they are mingled with that caitiff choir
Of angels who were not rebellious nor Were faithful unto God, but were for self.
The heavens expelled them so as not to be Less fair; the depths of hell receive them not Because the damned would make of them their boast.

Selfishness is a sin that has been exalted to a virtue. Our economic system has been nurtured on it. In 1831 Richard Whatley, Archbishop of the Church of England, wrote for the edification of the school children of Great Britain: "It is curious to observe how, through a wise and beneficent arrangement of providence, men do the greatest service to the public when they are thinking of nothing but their own gain." For a hundred years now we have deluded ourselves with this poisonous teaching, glorifying cut-throat competition, browbeating of labor, profit-seeking, and the gospel of each man for himself and the devil take the hindermost. A few men are beginning to learn a lesson from these bitter days, and it is the old lesson of the Pale Galilean: "He that seeks to save his own life shall lose it." More than that, in a close-knit society constituted as ours is today, not only will a selfish man lose his own soul, he will damn the souls of a thousand of his fellows in the process.

Not only was the elder son ungrateful and selfish; he was also unloving.

The father whose goods had been despoiled and whose heart had been weighted down with his son's prodigality for many years, opened wide his arms to his returning boy. He gave to him more than a robe to cover him, a ring for his hand, shoes for his feet, and a feast for his hungry body. He gave him the immeasurable treasure of a father's forgiving heart. But the elder brother refused to go in. Had he been the one to meet the returning prodigal he would have slammed the door in his face. It made no difference to him that his brother returned with a chastened, penitent spirit. It made no difference that he came hungry for the companionship which he had been denied by his fair-weather friends.

Of all the faults of humanity none is so tragic as lovelessness. It robs life of human mercy and tolerance and reduces all human contacts at their best to a cold heartless justice, and at their worst to merciless exploitation. With a little introspection it does not take us long to know that if we were judged on the grounds of justice alone, half of us would stand condemned. But for parents and friends and a society which bestowed their rich treasures upon us before we deserved anything, we would not be alive today. And but for their willingness to forgive our blundering ignorance and our unwitting social crime, we would be behind iron bars.

We could say to the elder son in the parable what Portia said to Shylock,

... therefore, Jew,
Though justice be thy plea, consider this,
That in the course of justice, none of us
Should see salvation.

The elder son stands self-condemned because he condemned his brother.

How small and bigoted the elder son really was appears when he is contrasted with his father. For the father remained firm in his love of his sons through it all, "Son, thou art ever with me, and all that is mine is thine. But it was meet to make merry and be glad: for this thy brother was dead and is alive again; and was lost and is found." The father lost himself in an expansive interest in the needs of his sons.

Because he was carried by love into the very heart of his son he also suffered with him. It is the insight of love which sees the pain of men as the burden of the loving heart, and that can say, as from the heart of God,

All sin was of my sinning, all
Atoning mine, and mine the gall
Of all regret. Mine was the weight
Of every brooded wrong, the hate
That stood behind each envious thrust,
Mine every greed, mine every lust
And all the while for every grief,
Each suffering, I craved relief
With individual desire—
And felt fierce fire
About a thousand people crawl.

How immeasurably higher is the attitude of the father than that of the elder son. And how much more hopeful is the future of a prodigal who "came to himself" than the future of his brother who was "angry and would not go in."

OBITUARIES

BRIGGS.

Miss Arabelle Briggs was born December 31, 1912, and died June 23, 1933. At the age of 12 she professed faith in Christ and united with Fullers Chapel Christian Church. She was faithful to her church until death, doing what she could. She lived a pure consecrated Christian life and was esteemed by all who knew her.

Miss Briggs was the daughter of Mr. W. S. Briggs, a faithful member and deacon of Fullers Chapel, and the late Mrs. Snsie Edwards Briggs, who died in 1915. In addition to her father she is survived by six brothers and six sisters, and many other relatives.

Services were conducted by the writer assisted by Rev. S. E. Madren. Interment was in Fullers Chapel Cemetery, attended by a large crowd. The floral tributes were beautiful. She sleeps in peace. May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved.

The Church Paper.—

At the last quadrennial meeting of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, the following statement was issued to the churches of the country: "The Federal Council of Churches deplores the fact that, despite the high character of most of our church papers, the local church and the Christian home make but meagre use of them. We have failed to emphasize sufficiently the necessity for religious reading in the homes of our people. The great mass of our people are getting their views of life and of the supreme problems of our time, not from the church press, but from secular journals, scenarios and commercialized radio broadcasts. The loss in subscriptions has brought some of our most honored journals into financial distress and has greatly restricted their influence for good in the churches. We recommend that our constituent bodies be urged to use the most effective means possible to promote in the congregations the ideal of a church paper in every Christian home, and also to inspire the faithful reading of the same." Surely, in these days, more than ever, we need the church paper.

The World Wheat Situation.—

The "Big 4" among wheat raisers, Australia, Argentina, Canada, and the United States, have agreed among themselves to cut acreage and raise prices of wheat to a profitable level. But this agreement is contingent upon the cooperation of other wheat-growing countries. Twenty-seven nations had been invited to the "Wheat Conference," but only fifteen responded by sending delegates. There is hope that others may be brought into line. France, as usual, became a problem just as things might have shown a turn in the right direction. While the conference was getting under way, French wheat—nearly 3 million bushels of it—was being unloaded at a Liverpool elevator, and it was offered for sale at just one-third of the price that the French miller was paying for his wheat. Germany also was offering wheat at "dumping" prices. Neither of these nations is ordinarily a wheat exporting nation, but subsidies to farmers, to encourage national self-sufficiency have overdone the thing and they too have surpluses on hand. Secretary Wallace hopes to bring pressure to bear by threatening dumping from the United States, if the other nations do not cooperate. Premier Bennet, of Canada, seems optimistic, and says, "It will soon be settled."

A Good-man Makes Good.—

It requires self-confidence to make good at any game, including the game of life. This, however, is about one who is making good in golf as well. Born twenty-three years ago on the wrong side of the railroad tracks in Omaha, Neb., one of ten children, he lost his mother while still quite small.

His father, a laborer, was away from home most of the time, and he just grew up. When aged twelve, he applied for a place as a caddy on the local golf course, and his smile got him a job, notwithstanding his unusually small size, his bare feet and his overalls. When Walter Hagen came to Omaha some time later and asked for their best caddy, it was he who qualified. At the age of fourteen he played in the caddies' tournament and without a putter, won with a 37. Five years later the youth of nineteen stopped Bobby Jones, who had been, and still is, his idol, and this year, at the age of twenty-three, he is open golf champion of the United States. He is now tuning up for the national amateur title. If he can win these two titles in one year he will have shared with Jones the distinction of being the only other golfer to have won both crowns in a single season. We wish Johnny Goodman luck. May he play the game of life like he plays the game of golf.

Business Situation Continues to Improve.—

According to reports issued by Walter J. Cummings, executive assistant to Secretary of the Treasury Woodin, there are now 13,951 banks in the United States operating without any restrictions whatsoever. There are only 2,870 closed or operating on a restricted basis. These figures include all national banks, members of the Federal Reserve system, and non-member banks. They do not include, however, mutual savings institutions. The figures quoted below for member banks are as of August 12th, while non-member bank figures are up to July 26th. There are 4,961 national banks now doing an unrestricted banking business, with deposits of $16,938,145,000; then there are 740 State banks, members of the reserve system, with deposits of $9,741,987,000. The 8,250 non-member banks which were operating on a full-time unrestricted basis had deposits of $5,057,596,000. This makes a total of $31,737,728,000 on deposit in commercial banks. The amount of deposits in the postal savings system have increased from $150,000,000 to over a billion, and mutual savings banks should account for twice as much more, making the total deposits in all classes of banks at the present time not less than 35 billion dollars. This amount seems quite sizeable when we consider that we are in the midst of a depression.

Virginia Legislators Refuse to Take Dictation.—

When threatened with the same percentage of pay-cut that other State employees had received, the special session of the Virginia legislature, saw red. What had hit the other fellow's pocketbook was economy, what threatened to hit their own was —! Before proceeding to save the State from death because of the loss of beer revenue, they passed a special bill providing themselves full pay, and unanimously passed it over the Governor's veto. Thus the legislators receive $84.00 a week, plus other expense items. About two years ago, that is, before there were any cuts in the pay of State employees, we are informed that the average employee received approximately $1,400 a year. This average included heads of departments as well as stenographers and office boys. At the present time, after having received two reductions in salaries, the average is probably under $100 a month, with some receiving as little as $60. Yet the legislature refuses to take the medicine which it measures out to the other employees of the Commonwealth. What little they have gained in purse, they have certainly lost in worth to their State as law-makers. Possibly the least they could do to "save their face" would be to pass legislation enabling the Governor to do for other servants of the State what they have done for themselves. At least this would be in accord with the N.R.A. program launched the first of this week. There's too much difference between $15.00 a week for working and $84.00 a week and "mileage" for a trip to the Capital City.

Americans as Hobby Riders.—

The current issue of American Magazine gives us the hobbies of various famous Americans, and of some Americans who are not quite so famous. For instance, Franklin D. Roosevelt spends his spare time collecting pictures of old ships. J. P. Morgan—would you guess it?—is a student of ecclesiastical history, while Samuel Untermyer, the lawyer, raises orchids. Louis A. Hazeltine, once professor of mathematics, was a great radio fan. His hobby led him to the invention of the neutrodyne receiver, made for him a fortune, and now he looks upon mathematics as his hobby. George W. Wickersham, probably best known as chairman of one of Mr. Hoover's commissions, though famous before that, collects mezzotints, or engravings. He uses his spare time reading Dante in the original. Henry Ford, along with John D. Rockefeller, restores old inns and collects old machines. Newcomb Carlton, controller of telegraph lines, has a longing for ship models. However, hobbies are not confined to great men. "Joe Policastro," we quote, "bootblack in the American Magazine offices, is an authority on Penson du Terrail, the prolific but half-forgotten French novelist of the nineteenth century. . . . Robert Costello, conductor on the local subway trains in New York, reads the Greek classics . . . and carries a copy of Horace in his pocket to read between stations." He is also an authority on the ancient Irish language. Still another, a window washer, is an authority on the German campaigns in Africa during the World War, while a street car motorman writes poems for a past-time.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Now is the time for all good Christian fathers and mothers who have them ready, to start their sons and daughters to Elon College. A large opening is anticipated.

That was a parting tribute of praise and honor to Dayton, Ohio, paid to Rev. and Mrs. John G. Truitt, as they left to take up residence in Suffolk, Va. Brother Hermon Eldredge, in writing of the matter, says, rightly, "Dayton's loss is Suffolk's gain."

Our columns are enriched this week with two unusual contributions, "Reminiscences," from our beloved and venerable brother, Dr. S. Q. Helfenstein, editor emeritus of our Sunday School Quarterly, and "Looking Toward Sunset," by Rev. B. F. Vaughan, of Centerville, Ohio, who, before failing eyesight, as he climbed toward ninety, gave him a faltering and uncertain pen, used to contribute often to the joy and edification of our readers.

Dr. G. O. Lankford, one of our most beloved, capable and esteemed pastors, has retired from the pastorate of our Burlington Church, owing to continued poor health, and is to move with his family to Elon College. These beloved people will receive glad welcome at Elon, and here is hoping that residence in our quiet and wholesome village will witness the return to full health of our dear friend and good brother. It is given to few pastors to win the devotion of his people as has Dr. Lankford at Burlington, and also at Rosemont, in Virginia, where he served prior to coming to Burlington.

REVIVALS IN ALABAMA.

I have spent the last five weeks in revivals at the following places: Langdale, Corinth, McGuire's Chapel, New Harmony and Bethany. I have already made mention of the meetings at the former three churches, but it is of New Harmony and Bethany that I write at this time.

Rev. G. H. Veazey is pastor at New Harmony, and here we had a great meeting. The most loving fellowship was manifested throughout the meeting. Congregations were fine, order was excellent and the church was very happily revived.

I have rarely seen such a quiet demonstration of the spirit anywhere, at any time. It was a great refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Men who were hardened in sin gave reverence to the Word.

The young people gave a good musical program. My, how they did sing, "Home on the Banks of the River." I can almost hear them now.

Last week I was with Pastor Sheppard at Bethany. Here we had a revival from the start. The church was ready and God was waiting, and the glory of the Lord came down and crowned the mercy seat. Every service was a good one. The people were attentive and prayerful, and all rejoiced together. Under the influence of the old-time power, God's people will still have joy.

These weeks of arduous labor have been a source of spiritual blessing to me, and I am rejoicing in God, my Saviour.

We are planning to have a home-coming here next second Sunday. Our goal is to have every member of our church present in person, or by contribution, or in prayer. We have on roll some 350 members, and we are praying that we may be able to reduce our indebtedness $100.00 that day. We shall do our best by the help of the Lord. We are also planning to have with all former pastors who are living, and all members and friends who have moved away. The good ladies will provide lunch at the church, and a fine fellowship meeting will be had, and a great song service will follow in the afternoon.

We have had a hard year, but a good year at Lanett, considering the difficulties under which we have labored. We have reduced our indebtedness in a commendable way. However, we have many people who are absolutely unable to pay anything, and quite a few others who do not pay. Brethren, pray for us here; we need your interest. We have a great door open to us here, and there are many adversaries. It will take a strong fight to whip the devil here. The victory comes to the faithful finally. God bless his dear church everywhere.

G. D. HUNT.

DAYTON'S FAREWELL TO THE TRUITTS.

Dayton, Ohio, gave Rev. John G. Truitt and his good wife a double farewell on the eve of their going to Suffolk, Va.

On August 6th the seven Christian Churches of the Dayton District gathered at the Riverdale Christian Church, and with a fellowship supper and an evening service they sang praises and expressed regrets, through the pastors and church leaders, on the going of this popular pair with "the souls they had gotten in Haran" (Ann and John, Jr.). The event was one of the largest attended of the Dayton churches.

On August 13th, Brother Truitt gave his closing address to an audience of some twelve hundred in Library Park and left the next morning for Suffolk. The Library Park meeting was one of a series given by the Y. M. C. A. and for the downtown section of the city. A census of this particular meeting was held which revealed that over twelve hundred people were present from fifty churches of Dayton, and from twenty-three outside towns surrounding the city. The card census also revealed that visitors from fifteen cities and towns from eight states outside of Ohio were present, and on the blank asking if the attendant was a member of any church, fifty-five answered "No". Many did not reply to this question. All agreed that the address was one of the best in the series of out-door meetings.

This closing event also had a Christian Church flavor, since "Dad" Kershner (Rev. Watson Kershner of radio fame), the pastor of Pleasant Hill Christian Church, sang several selections. The writer was chairman of the meeting, and Mr. O. S. Walker, of the First Christian Church of Walnut Hills, was chief of the ushers.

Dayton's loss is Suffolk's gain. (Ruth 2:12.)

HERMON ELDREDGE.

Dayton, Ohio.

A FRUITFUL DAY.

On Sunday, August 6th, Rev. A. R. Flowers spoke to a large audience in the capacity of a Sunday School in a Missionary Baptist Church; from there he drove five miles and preached in a Freewill Baptist Church, at 11:30. In the late afternoon, he drove to a different section, ten miles away, and spoke on the subject of "Christian Education," at 8 o'clock, in the Methodist Church. Before he had finished the day's service, two ambitious young women, who had almost lost hope of being able to attend any college, had gone to him in quest of help that he might be able to render them. At this writing, arrangements had been completed for one of the young ladies to go to college and it is almost certain that the other will be equally successful.

This is the way that A. R. Flowers spends most of his life, and the kind of service he is rendering. Scores of young people who are, today, occupying some of the most responsible positions in life, readily give A. R. Flowers credit for much of their success. Brother Flowers is a very unassuming character, as most of us know, but a firm believer in the virtue of Christian righteousness and faithful work as a fundamental in all real and lasting success.

One of the greatest evils of all ages has been the disposition of so many people to follow the line of least resistance. How to inspire our young people with greater zeal is, to my mind, the great question of our times.

THE VIRGINIA UNION MEETING.

The three churches: M. E., Baptist and Christian, joined in a series of union revival services, beginning August 6th, and closing on the 30th. Rev. J. W. Dixon, pastor of the M. E. Church of Rocky Mount, Va., was the preacher, and Mr. Young, of Roxboro, N. C., was song leader.

Services began in the Baptist Church, which was filled to its capacity from almost the first service. On Wednesday evening we went to the Christian Church and continued there until the close.

Both preacher and singer delighted our people. There was a delightful spirit of fellowship and cooperation among the different religious bodies. Mr. Dixon preached in a fearless manner, and yet showed a beautiful spirit of brotherly love. His sermons were orthodox, plain and convincing. He dwelt on no specific evils, but denounced sin, and held up the crucified Saviour as man's eternal Deliverer.

The entire town and community were lifted up spiritually. There were some fifty professions of faith and many to join the churches.

Since my pastorate here we have entered into seven of these union meetings. All were good but none surpassed the recent one.

C. E. NEWMAN.

FROM WADLEY, ALABAMA.

I have just finished my last revival. They were not what I had expected. Rev. G. D. Hunt was with me at Corinth. We received four members on confession of faith. We held a union meeting with the Methodists at Cragford. No visible results. Rev. G. D. Hunt was with me at New Harmony. We had a mighty good meeting there, and received four members on confession of faith. Rev. C. W. Carter was with me at Rock Springs this week. We received three members by letter. I feel, however, that all the churches were somewhat strengthened.

I am leaving this P. M. for North Louisiana, where I will hold two meetings.

FROM CHICAGO.

Many of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN remember Miss Ethel Hurley in connection with her work at Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va. Since leaving Norfolk, Miss Hurley has been in Chicago, and from time to time notes of interest from her have appeared in THE SUN.

We are sure that she will not object if we reprint in full the newsy and interesting letter we received from her last week, and we believe that SUN readers will enjoy it. We congratulate Dr. Denison on this addition to his corps of workers.

Chicago, Illinois, August 22, 1933.

Mr. John T. Kernodle, Mg. Editor, Richmond, Va.

My Dear Mr. Kernodle:

I seem to always want to write too much for a postal card, so I'll use a letter this time.

Will you please change my address to care of C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio, beginning with the August 31st issue, as I want to continue to receive THE SUN without interruption.

Chicago has been a mighty fine place to be this summer, because friends from everywhere have come here to see the Fair. I was glad to see Dr. and Mrs. Smith, L. E., and Rebecca last week, as well as Mrs. Ben T. Holden and family (nee Miss Willie Staley) and Mrs. Annie Staley Calhoun. They had come to Chicago via Washington and Niagara Falls. I understand the other sister, Mrs. Bessie Staley Cheatham, and her son, William Cheatham, both of Washington, are to be here this week.

Then Herman Truitt and his sister, Jewell, of Glen Raven, N. C., and the Misses Gladys and Emma Woodson, of Burlington, N. C., were pleasant visitors here recently. I think I saw more of Chicago with them than I've seen before or shall ever see again.

Chicago folks have to have friends come to town before they'll halfway appreciate their city enough to see the beautiful and educational spots of interest.

Sincerely, ETHEL HURLEY.

LOOKING TOWARD SUNSET.

By REV. B. F. VAUGHAN.

How pleasant the backward view, when the days have been spent in honest toil and noble effort. "Live truly," said Dr. Bonar, "and thy life shall be a great and noble creed." Nothing calms the life, or satisfies the mind and heart, like a life of sincere purpose, pure desire, and simple trust in him who doeth all things well. Good companionship, strengthens the feet for such a journey.

Washington Gladden voices the language of one fired with such an ambition for noble living in his beautiful and inspiring hymn:

O Master, let me walk with thee, In lowly paths of service free; Tell me thy secret, help me bear The strain of toil, the fret of care; Help me the slow of heart to move By some clear winning word of love; Teach me the wayward feet to stay, And guide them in the homeward way.

A day's work well done, a task well finished secures its own reward, and opens the way to greater usefulness.

No survey of the past can be satisfactory and bring joy and peace, like that which can say:

Teach me thy patience; still with thee In closer, dearer company, In work that keeps faith, sweet and strong, In trust that triumphs over wrong; In hope that sends a shining ray, Far down the future's broadening way, In peace that only thou canst give; With thee, O Master, let me live.

Our aim in the foregoing has been to show that the finest veivs in life's sunset days can come only when the former days have been well spent; in which truth, honor, purity, righteousness, peace, love, faithfulfulness and good will have filled those days with the best that we could give. If our lives, through such virtues, have contributed to the welfare of our fellowmen, we may, with clear vision, behold the land that is afar off, yet near to those who seek.

The writer lives in a beautiful village on the divide between the two Miamis in Ohio, where the most picturesque and charming sunsets are sometimes to be witnessed. Cloud pictures of exquisite beauty and varied mingling of shaded blue and gray and gold lines with blended shades of soft light, all furnish such a pleasing picture as only nature can paint.

It is fascinating indeed to look toward such sunsets.

After one has almost reached the eighty-first milestone in life's journey, it thrills the heart and glorifies the mind to look toward life's blissful sunset.

The great divide that now shuts out our view of that undiscovered country of universal brotherhood, shall fade away and we shall behold him before whom every knee shall bow and every tongue confess to the glory of God the Father.

Such triumphant ending in life's great struggle is possible to all who seek his face, and have his name written on their foreheads.

The lines of Miss Catherine Lee Bates seem so appropriate here to us as a nation composed of individuals, that we cannot refrain from quoting from her grand American ode, "America, the Beautiful," to close these stray thoughts:

O beautiful, for heroes proved In liberating strife, Who more than self their country loved, And mercy more than life. America! America! May God thy gold refine, Till all success be nobleness, And every gain divine.

O beautiful for patriot dream, That sees beyond the years, Thine alabaster cities gleam Undimmed by human tears! America! America! God shed his grace on thee, And crown thy good with brotherhood From sea, to shining sea!

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

COMES THE STORM.

(Editorial Correspondence.)

Virginia Beach, Va., August 26th.

The writer remembers once standing on the peak of a mountain in Porto Rico from which he saw to the south the Carribean Sea, and to the north the Atlantic Ocean. It was, indeed, a scene of rare grandeur and glory, a mountain and two seas at one sweep of the naked eye. One wondered then what would happen if those two seas got into furious combat, or the one took up the fury of the other and added to it its own anger. For one recalled that Luke in Acts 27:41, told how the violent waves beat to smash the ship in which Paul the prisoner was being carried to Rome—with the gospel which was ultimately to smash things to pieces at Rome and throughout the world.

Well, the papers tell us that two seas early this past week added the other's fury to its own, and with the violence of their waves smashed things up of great value and volume.

The disturbance began in that far-off Carribean that this writer saw (it was very placid then), from the top of a Porto Rican mountain, transferred with increasing volume and velocity to the South Atlantic, and by the time it hit this Atlantic seaboard along the New Jersey, Virginia and Carolina coast it was as if ten thousand mad bulls and roaring lions were let loose all at once, and there was violence, death and destruction indeed. If one did not have to fear for one's safety it was indeed one magnificent and grand spectacle to look upon. The waves rolling forty to fifty feet high beat themselves into frenzy as they laved the coast, uprooting and undermining trees, cottages, houses and undergrowth along the beaches and the furious winds scattering them far and wide on land and sea and in every direction. The property damage goes into several millions as sea-walls, cottages, club-houses, pavilions and pleasure places were destroyed or dislocated, and will have to be replaced or rebuilt with months and years of toil and treasure.

The wonder was and is that instead of less than a hundred, many hundreds of lives were not lost. Thousands, by land and sea were in peril of their lives for hours, and had hair-breadth and breath-taking escapes. The Atlantic here at the Beach seemed Tuesday night and Wednesday as if it never could be calm and composed again, but Thursday A. M., the sun was shining gloriously, and the sea was as placid as a silvery lake and we were again bathing in its warm and welcome surf.

Anger and madness, like pain and suffering, may tarry for a day or night, but peace and righteousness endureth forever. He hath made his wonderful works to be remembered; Jehovah is gracious and merciful. He hath showed his people the power of his works and they are established forevermore. (Psa. 2:6.)

And this we have observed: The most pleasant places and pursuits are usually those closest to hazard and danger; vice is but a step from virtue; defeat and ruin press hard in the wake of victory and security, and as David said to Jonathan, "As thy soul liveth, and as the Lord liveth, there is but a step between me and death." Many of us lay down in seeming safety and security Tuesday night, thousands finding themselves in grave peril of flood and fury and foam before the next day came, and scores had gone to their eternal home.

But the storm is over, and the sea seems at sweet and calm peace with all the world. After the storm, the calm. After death—the life everlasting.

THE REPEAL ELECTIONS.

In taking a close-up view of the Tennessee election, some observations will be made which will be of general interest. Good citizens believe in fair play and are not inclined to whine if they are defeated in a fair fight. But the prohibitionists in this election will present evidence of the grossest fraud on the part of many of the liquorites. We are convinced that, while other states voted wet, Tennessee voted dry. It was, in reality, a notable victory in spite of the difficulties encountered and the fraud practiced.

The wet Democratic leaders are humiliated and put to shame at what is evidently a stolen victory. In the face of the majority of 30,000 for repeal by Memphis and 9,000 majority by Nashville, the total majority in the state was only 6,000. Sixty-three counties voted against repeal, and thirty-two in favor of repeal. The liquorites certainly have no cause for rejoicing. The Crump machine in Memphis is a stench in the nostrils of all decent citizens. Tammany Hall could learn lessons from this machine.

Nashville, the city of contrasts, with her many churches and universities on the one hand and her unscrupulous politicians and degraded slums on the other, is in the grip of these baser forces.

The red-light district ward in Nashville voted in this election four times as many wet votes as were cast in the Presidential election. An unhampered investigation will expose to the nation the conscienceless procedure of wet politicians.

According to the logic of the wets, the meager 2,000 dry votes in Memphis and 4,000 in Nashville were not members of Protestant churches, but bootleggers, racketeers and criminals. Have we not been repeatedly told by wet speakers and writers that this element who profit under the prohibition regime are opposed to repeal? I should like to know of any wet outside the insane asylum who really believes this.

In spite of the official victory of the wets in Tennessee, the election has struck terror to the hearts of wet politicians. The sorriest legislature, as a whole, that possibly ever convened in the state led some citizens to suppose that it was reflecting the wet sentiment of the people, which we now know was not true. The day of the political doom of many of these legislators is not far in the future. They will have the sympathy of Mr. Farley, who could smile only a very sickly smile over the declared result of the election.

An aroused and informed citizenship will not long tolerate the evident fraud at the ballot box, for which Memphis and Nashville have been and are notorious. The political corruption of these two cities is so open and flagrant that all good citizens, irrespective of partisan politics, should combine in removing it. We are able to visualize, at least in part, the flaming indignation with which an Isaiah or an Amos would deal with a condition like this.

An enumeration of the absurdities and inconsistencies of the wets would fill a volume. They now make the exultant claim that 3.2 beer is non-intoxicating. They have claimed that it was a substitute for whiskey, a good temperance drink, removing the demand for stronger drink. Having legalized beer, they then proceed to repeal the Eighteenth Amendment in order to license all kinds of alcoholic beverages that are admittedly injurious and intoxicating.

As a general consideration which is applicable to the entire country, it may be said that the liquor forces excelled in strategy in bringing the big wet states first in the election. Many people are sheep-minded. Party pressure, with the call to party regularity and the promise of reduced taxation, was too strong for the weak to resist. There has been beyond question a defection to the ranks of repealists of many members and leaders in the Protestant churches. If repeal finally wins, we cannot place the responsibility on Mr. Farley and his fellow Roman Catholics who for the most part have always been against prohibition. A victory for repeal will only be made possible through the votes of Protestant church members and the weakened morale of the Protestant preachers.

The disturbing fact is not that some good citizens might question the wisdom of the Eighteenth Amendment, but the fact that they would repeal it, when no constructive substitute has ever been proposed. The saddening revelation is that members of the church would be willing to exchange the prohibition law with its undoubted advantages and restraints for "a pig in a poke."

After all, it is very significant that in the fight against the prohibition law as a failure, that the elections which are to repeal the law are free from the drunkenness and rowdyism that belonged to the pre-prohibition regime. The very elections that go for repeal pay an involuntary tribute to prohibition. Conscienceless rascality continues in holding elections, but drunken disorder is conspicuously absent.

It may be said as a final word that our miserable debacle has resulted from the persistent and widespread propaganda of misinformation on the part of the wet press. The church has been, and I suppose will continue to be, handicapped by the small circulation of periodicals. The-thern Methodist Church, with only one-fifth of the members taking a church paper, presents a lamentable fact which is approximately true of the other Protestant churches.

A VISIT TO THE HOLY LAND.

By REV. ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, D. D.

[The following is the first of a series of articles by Dr. Helfenstein on his recent visit to the Holy Land, which series will be of very real interest and help to readers, students and teachers of our Bible—the Book which had its origin and setting in the land visited by Dr. Helfenstein, and portrayed in these articles.—Ed.]

INTRODUCTION.

A visit to the Holy Land is rewarding according to the length of the visit and the efficiency of those who give guidance and plan the itineraries. Naturally the ordinary touring companies directing cruising trips which give their patrons but two or three days in the whole of Palestine, and provide for only a single day in Jerusalem do not offer much opportunity for a person to become acquainted with "The Land of the Book." Those who visit Palestine under the direction of some expert Bible scholar or minister who has frequently visited the country and who provides at least for a week's stay in Jerusalem are indeed most fortunate.

It was my happy privilege last summer to be a member of the American University Seminar to Palestine, thus having the opportunity to spend three weeks in the Holy Land, making our headquarters in Jerusalem, and attending the Summer Session of the American School of Oriental Research, the mornings being given to hearing lectures by celebrated archaeologists and historians who presented the cultural history of Palestine as revealed by recent excavations. Our afternoons were given to making field trips to important Bible places.

Such an experience gives one a new Bible—a new understanding of the Book, a new appreciation of its setting and its teachings, a new evaluation of its authority, and a new zeal in preaching its truths. In response to numerous requests, I take this means of sharing that experience with others.

Our company was made up of professors from every section of the United States, all interested in the same objective—the truth about "The Land of the Book."

We also shared a common interest in retracing some of the missionary travels of the Apostle Paul. I had spent about ten days in Rome on my visit to Italy in 1914, after finishing my year of graduate work in Edinburgh, Scotland. At that time, the professor of history in the University of Rome was our guide for four afternoons. The memory of that visit proved a helpful background for my visit this time which was primarily in the interest of associating the landmarks with the ministry of St. Paul.

The ancient Roman Forum with its many points of interest, associated with the lives of Cicero, Virgil, and the Caesars, and familiar to the Apostle Paul; the ancient pyramid tomb on the Appian Way, just outside the city, which unique tomb Paul must have locked upon when coming to Rome, as he could not enter the city without passing it, the Pantheon, a great pagan temple erected in 27 B. C., "To All the Gods," so as not to miss any, still stands, and must have been visited by St. Paul; the Mamertine Prison, an ancient bottle-shaped dungeon dug out of the solid rock, in which prison St. Paul was twice incarcerated, the ancient catacombs 327 miles long winding around the ground outside and under the city, where the early Christians hid themselves from their persecutors, must also have been a familiar sight to St. Paul. All these and many other points of interest associated with the Apostle Paul, make a visit to Rome of double interest to the Bible student.

It is impossible to describe the emotions when visiting Puteoli on the Mediterranean where Paul landed when on his way to Rome. What thoughts surge through our minds as we drive along the Appian Way, thinking of that New Testament hero who traveled over that same road from Puteoli, fearless and unafraid on his way to the great cultural center of his day at Rome to preach the new gospel.

Also, our visit to Athens, viewing the ancient landmarks and buildings familiar to Socrates, to Plato and Aristotle, and standing on Mars Hill, where St. Paul preached the new gospel to the learned Athenians; our visit to Smyrna, Ephesus, and Tarsus, the birthplace of St. Paul, and to Damascus where "he was born again," created a greater appreciation than ever of the courage and genius of this great Christian hero. But I must not dwell longer on that feature of our pilgrimage. I may write more concerning the places which we visited that were associated with the life and work of St. Paul, in another article on that subject, or on the subject, "Retracing Paul's Missionary Travels."

The more we realize that the Bible tells us of real people and real places—real towns, cities and landmarks—places as real as those of the country in which we live, and people as real as the members of our own homes and our next door neighbors, the greater will be our appreciation of the reality of the Book itself, the higher will be our evaluation of the significance of its message.

I shall never forget the emotion that filled my soul the morning we crossed over the boundary line between Syria and Palestine on our journey from Damascus to Capernaum and the Sea of Galilee, spending the night at Nazareth. Could it be that the narrow stream of water I saw was the actual beginning of the River Jordan? Could these rocks and mountains, these valleys and wadies, these sky-lines and panoramic views which greeted my eyes be the same as those which were so familiar to the Man of Galilee and his disciples; and so well known by King David, King Solomon and the Old Testament prophets? Could these olive groves and numerous flocks of sheep, these caravans of camels, and these silent villages nestled among the foothills with their one-story, flat-roofed homes patterned after the model that has been used in that land for more than 3,000 years be quite similar to those known by the immortal Bible characters themselves? And could these Bedouins living in their black tents and herding their sheep and goats on the hillsides, and those peasant folk plowing in the fields with their wooden plows, or threshing their grain with rough bottom sleds drawn by oxen, and separating the grain from the chaff with the winnowing fork, be the same type of folk doing their work in the same way as their ancestors did down through all the centuries? Could they be the same type of people as those to whom our Lord ministered, and from whose lives he drew so many illustrations to make clear the meaning of his teachings? The fact that such is true makes the country itself the most interesting for study and reflection of any country in the world. And I shall be happy if in sharing that experience with others, I can help to create a greater interest in their minds and hearts for the reality of the Book and the reality of "The Land of the Book."

The American School of Oriental Research in Jerusalem, where we had our headquarters, is a splendid institution outside the city walls and only a few blocks from the American colony. One window of my room in the dormitory looked out upon the Mount of Olives and Gethsemane, where we went frequently at the sunrise or the sunset hour for devotional services. And the other window in my room looked out upon Calvary and Herod's Gate in the high stone wall around the old city of Jerusalem.

The visit to the many Bible sites in Jerusalem and environs under competent directors who give most illuminating lectures on the places seen, and the visits to Bethlehem, which is about six miles from Jerusalem, and Hebron where David had his first capital, and where Abraham had his tent under the oak of Mamre, the village of Bethany just over the Mount of Olives about two miles from Jerusalem, the trip on donkey back to Anathoth—the home of the prophet Jeremiah—one has to go on donkey back if he wishes to go, as there is no road, and the wilderness paths are too rough and stony for a horse to travel—these side-trips, as well as the trips to Jericho, the Dead Sea, Jaffa, the Philistine country, the Trans-Jordan region, etc., etc., all very practically supplemented the course of study we enjoyed in the School of Research at Jerusalem, thus making the entire visit to the Holy Land one of unique opportunity.

As one sees for the first time those ancient landmarks of Bible days, and realizes how little there was in the country itself to inspire the writers of the Bible, one realizes as never before that their inspiration must have come from God.

(The next article will be on "The Antiquity and Uniqueness of Palestine.")

A GOOD MAN PASSES ON.

We learn with deepest regret and grief of the passing away of our good friend and brother, Joe Stout, a trustee of Elon College, the contractor and builder of the present splendid plant, and a pillar in our Sanford Church. Of his departure the Greensboro Daily News has the following under date of August 22nd: "Joe W. Stout, aged 50, a widely known Sanford citizen and prominent contractor and builder, died in the Charlotte Sanatorium at Charlotte shortly after three o'clock in the afternoon today following an illness of several weeks.

"Mr. Stout was a native of Randolph County, the son of Mrs. J. A. Stout, now in Sanford, and the late Mr. Stout. Twenty-five years ago, he came to Sanford, and soon afterwards organized the contracting firm of J. W. Stout and Company, which erected a large number of buildings in North and South Carolina, Virginia and Georgia. Mr. Stout had served as president of the North Carolina Contractors' Association and president of the North Carolina division of the national association.

"Mr. Stout was active in civic affairs, having served for many years as a member of the board of trustees of the Sanford schools, and was chairman at the time of his death. He had served as president of the local chamber of commerce. Mr. Stout was also interested in political affairs, and wielded much influence in the councils of the Democratic party, although he had never sought office. He was a member of the executive committee of the eighth congressional district.

"He was an active member of the Sanford Christian Church, and had been for many years teacher of the young men's Bible class in the Sunday School. For several years he has been a member of the board of trustees of Elon College. He was a member of the Masonic and Junior Orders.

"Surviving are his wife, who before marriage, was Miss Maggie Allred, of Randolph County, four daughters, Mrs. Hall Turner, of Nashville, Tenn.; Misses Wiley, Grace and Pauline Stout; four sons, Joe W., Jr., Dan, Frank Page, and Robert Stout; his mother, two sisters, Mrs. A. M. Gunter and Miss Stella Stout, and two brothers, O. W. and Ray Stout, all of Sanford."

SUFFOLK LETTER.

"Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise; which having no guide, overseer, or ruler, provideth her meat in the summer, and gathereth her food in the harvest." (Prov. 6:6-8.) Four ants found a nice morsel of food. It could not be broken up in pieces small enough for each to carry a piece to their little home in the ground. So they hurriedly arranged to have each one do its bit in moving this food. It was an interesting study in ant cooperation. No man ever saw a finer example of insect activity and foresight. The way to the ant's home was covered with small cinders and bits of coal. The distance was about four feet. The ants carried that piece of food over cinders as large as marbles. At one time they faced a very difficult situation, and it seemed that the undertaking would be too much for them. At that moment a passing ant seemed to see the difficulty and quickly seized the opportunity of giving his companions assistance. As soon as they had lifted their burden over this difficult place, the friendly helper let go and went on his way in search of another piece of food.

This incident, which occurred this week, under the observation of the writer, is an object lesson of much value. The ant is a tiny insect. But he is industrious and busy with his little problems of life. A primary problem of the ant is to have a home. They proceed with great care and patience to build this home. When they have prepared a home for the family, the next objective is to provide food for the winter. They are very busy during the warm weather, laying up a food supply for the future. In this respect they are wiser and more provident than many people. So many people seem to take no thought of the morrow. Sufficient unto the day is the food thereof. Not so with ants. They provide shelter and food for the future. And there are many people who make no apparent effort to own a home.

Ants cooperate in their work. Many lost souls could be won for Christ and the church if four industrious, spiritually minded people would work together, in a cooperative effort, to win their unsaved friends one by one. If the task is too difficult for one person, it may be easy for a small group who will cooperate. What could be done if every member of the church would cooperate as fully and faithfully as the four ants?

No wonder the wise man said: "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways." Solomon had observed the industrious ant. He knew how they toiled to survive in the struggle of life. He saw the sluggard and indolent people of his time, unconcerned about their future prosperity and success. With great emphasis he sends them out into the fields to study the ants. If such small insects can find food and shelter why cannot a man, made in the image of God, do likewise? Work and common sense, patience and cooperation, if diligently pursued, will do much to end the depression, and bring back prosperity to the people of our land.

Spiritual depression may be ended by similar methods of spiritual living. The mania for getting money and finding pleasure has caused many people to drift away from the real spiritual work of the church. No one who is spiritually indolent can become rich in spiritual life. It takes time and effort to lay up treasure in heaven. Self-denial and sacrifice, prayer and earnest effort, must be the daily habit of those who wish to be strong in the Lord. Ants may teach us some of the fundamental lessons of material prosperity and spiritual salvation. I. W. JOHNSON.

DENOMINATIONAL LOYALTY.

There may be some question as to whether or not the Christian Church is a denomination. This question has been debated since the organization of the church. There are those who contend that we are a denomination and others who come forth with convincing facts to prove that we are not—that, rather, we are a church and we function along the same lines that denominations function. We have interests in common with other denominations and, of necessity, resort to a form of organization that easily lends itself to denominational propaganda. We have our mission board, our educational boards, our ministerial relief boards, our evangelical boards, etc. We have also church institutions—institutions that lock to the church for nurture and guidance. These institutions cannot fulfill their purpose completely, without the support of the church membership. If the mission board, for instance, is not to be supported by the church there can hardly be any point in having such a board. The same thing is true of our training school.

Elon College—our college—is the training school for our church. Every loyal member of the church must face the question as to whether or not he will support the church's college. If he does not support the church's college there might be some question as to his loyalty to his own church.

Sunday night I happened to turn on the radio and as soon as the connection was made there came a voice out of the air, with a ringing note of optimism. This voice declared: "Ours is a great church. We have a great membership. The membership of our church is loyal to the core. Of course, we will sign up the one million supporters. Already," said he, "the churches of this great city and of our great denomination are sending in long lists of people who have joined the Dollar-a-Month Club. We have at present over 700,000. Soon we will pass the one million mark."

I presume that the speaker was a Baptist and that he was speaking for the Baptist Church. They are making a drive for a million people who will agree to give a dollar a month to clear their church of its indebtedness. And I venture to prophesy that they will reach the number they are working for.

A little more than a year ago the Christian Church in the South launched a drive for five thousand members of our Dollar-a-Month Club for Elon College. There does seem that there should be this number in our entire convention who would be glad to express their loyalty in this material way. A dollar a month is a little more than three cents a day. It does seem that the average individual might be able to set aside that much for the support of his College. It may seem small to many, but even so it is more than 90 per cent of our church's giving. We have been working now for over a year trying to secure the five thousand members for the Dollar-a-Month Club. We have at present a little more than six hundred members. Wouldn't it be a fine thing if we could have the other forty-four hundred?

If we had five thousand people who would give us a dollar a month for the support of Elon College, we could then go through the year, meet all of our demands—including interest and payment of some debts—and close up the year without a deficit of any kind. I do believe that we have five thousand loyal members of the church who can and will join with us in this loyalty effort to support their College and to make it possible for the institution to render the service to the denomination that it ought to render. Just a few more days and we will open our doors for the beginning of the 1933-34 session. Prospects for the opening are unusually good. We have a larger number of applications from new students than we have had in some time. We have a long list of prospective students who have not reached a decision as to what they will be able to do. We are hoping that our enrollment this year at the beginning will go beyond the 300 mark and perhaps pass the 350 mark before the year is over. We can express our loyalty to our church by giving her institutions our approval, by sending our children—if we have them—and by making material contributions as we may be able for their support.

May I make this, another, appeal to the membership of the Congregational-Christian Churches within the Southern Convention of Congregational-Christian Churches, to come to the support of the College and make it possible for her to carry on, not only for today, but for the days to come?

L. E. SMITH,

President Elon College.

REMINISCENCES.

The first American Christian Convention I ever attended was in 1878, held at Franklin, O. Dr. McWhinney was then pastor of the Franklin Christian Church, I was then a student at the C. B. I., and pastor of Clove Christian Church. I met Dr. Craig at Dr. Warren Hathaway's of Blooming Grove, and came with them to the convention. I was passing through Franklin the other day and remarked to those with me as we passed the Christian Church, that the first time I was in that church was in the fall of 1878. Then my mind became busy in recalling incidents of the convention.

Mills Harold, L. McHinkle, Elder Lions and I were assigned to a home across the river something over half a mile to a friendly farmer's home. His grapes were ripe and we had the liberty of helping ourselves, which we enjoyed.

The first sermon I heard at the convention was by Elder S. S. Newhouse, and the only comment I heard on it was by Elder Lane, and he said there wasn't a word of truth in it. I do not know on what he based his statement, for Elder Newhouse was a good preacher and a careful student of the Bible. There were some warm debates when matters grew somewhat exciting and words were used for which apologies were made afterwards.

Various interests were presented to the convention, among which were the Christian Biblical Institute, The Herald of Gospel Liberty, and Merom College. Dr. Hathaway spoke in the inter-of the C. B. I., and Dr. N. Summerbell spoke in behalf of The Herald, and President T. C. Smith in behalf of Merom College. There were other interests, but the three mentioned were the most prominent.

Dr. Austin Craig preached one night on "The Prodigal Son," a memorable sermon and one that received many favorable comments. One expression that will linger long in the memory of those who heard it, was "Good-bye pigs."

Dr. Craig also had an interesting part in the program, in a questionnaire conducted by David Clark. This was both informing and helpful. At the close of this part of the program, liberty was given for questions, and Elder Warren Weeks whose zeal for temperance was eating him up, fired a few red-hot questions. It grew so exciting that the subject was abruptly closed.

In presenting the interests of Merom College, Dr. Smith did not receive the encouragement he expected and uttered words for which he afterwards apologized. He said he would have to go back home and report that the convention had kicked him out.

When the interests of The Herald were presented, Dr. N. Summerbell, being editor, spoke of "The Lean Season," referring to the summer time when new subscriptions were not so numerous as in the winter months. Dr. Weston, in his speech, said there was no such thing as a lean season. This drew words from J. J. Summerbell and others, and the spirit manifested was not of the mildest nature. In Dr. N. Summerbell's rejoinder he spoke calmly; he said he sought to pour oil on the troubled waters. Dr. Hathaway spoke and said, "Yes, the oil is vitriol." I think he was sorry, for when the time came for eating humble pie, he and President Smith both showed a contrite spirit.

I was sitting near Elder Wm. Lane when the announcement of the communion service was made, and I heard him say, "I would like to conduct that service," but he was not favored with the privilege.

When it came time to elect an editor for the Herald of Gospel Liberty, Dr. McWhinney was nominated, and in an eloquent and animated speech he outlined the policy he would pursue if elected. He was elected without much opposition.

Dr. Craig, by his gentle and loving spirit and deep knowledge of the Bible, completely won the respect and love of the Methodist minister, located in Franklin at that time. I have not met recently any who were in that convention. The three who lodged where I did have all passed on. Truly, "Time is winging us away, to our eternal home."

GIVEN OR KEPT.

The stalwart young father and the little mother stood at the altar as they dedicated their first born son to the Lord. As the officiating minister took the wee babe from his father's arms he asked the parents if they would take their hands off from the little life, letting the Lord use the life as he saw fit, to stay with them or to go on a special mission for the Lord, never putting anything in the way that would thwart the working of God's plan for his life.

Many centuries ago another mother dedicated her boy baby to the Lord by preparing an ark of bulrushes and daubing it with slime and with pitch. She placed the baby within this crude shelter and put in as safe a place as she could find, away from the cruel fate that had been decreed for all the boy babies, giving him to the Lord, for she could no longer care for him in safety. She had such great faith in God; she knew he would direct the steps of her son and had taken her hands off from his life. The bulrushes might be likened to her love for her babe, the slime for her prayers and the pitch for her faith in God. Her faith was rewarded for her son became the great leader of the children of Israel; God's hand was upon him as he lived in Pharaoh's court, and as he followed the flocks in Midian, preparing him for the great task.

So mothers today are confronted with dangers on every side which menace their children. The few short years that the mother has to lay the foundation are so short, for how soon they must mingle with the world, and how the mother heart yearns over them as she sees the evils which are so predominant. The time comes when she can no longer keep them with her nor can she follow them as they go out into the world. Then it is that she looks for a safe place to hide her loved one and the only safe place is in the Lord's hands. So mother love makes the ark, her prayers cement every part, her complete trust in God makes the finished safe place for her loved ones. Her prayer for her children was written many years ago by Horatio Bonar, D. D.:

Father, our children keep!
We know not what is coming on the earth;
Beneath the shadow of thy heavenly wing
O keep them, keep them, thou who gav'st them birth.
Father, draw nearer us!
Draw firmer round us thy protecting arm;
Oh, clasp our children closer to thy side,
Uninjured in the day of earth's alarm.

Them in thy chambers hide!
Oh, hide them and preserve them calm and safe,
When sin abounds and error flows abroad,
And Satan tempts, and human passions chafe.
Oh, keep them undefiled!
Unspotted from a tempting world of sin;
That, clothed in white, through the bright city gates,
They may with us in triumph enter in.

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary

PUTTING OUR POSSESSIONS TO WORK FOR GOD.

By JOHN JETER HURT.

A Japanese student stood before my congregation. For thirty minutes he had been giving a striking testimony to the power of the gospel in his own life. A small copy of the New Testament was clasped in his hand. A missionary had given it to him some years before. He guessed it had cost about twenty-five cents. He wished he might know now what American had contributed the twenty-five cents that had bought the New Testament, that had been given to him by the missionary, that had led him to Jesus. But listen to his own words:

"When I get to heaven I shall want to see my Saviour first of all, and fall prostrate at his feet in adoration and thanksgiving. Then I shall want to find the missionary who labored so faithfully in our district, and thank him as I have not heretofore. Then I shall go back to Jesus, and beg that he tell me what American it was who gave the twenty-five cents, that bought the New Testament, that led me to salvation—and I shall want to thank this unknown friend with all my heart for making it possible for me to be a Christian."

Wouldn't you like to have been that American? Wouldn't you like to be such an American many times over? I would. You and I can be. That's the reason why I am writing these lines.

Responsibility for the right use of our Lord's money is inescapable. Jesus was severe in his dealing with the man who sought to evade this responsibility. "Cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness," said he, concerning the one who hoarded instead of investing. Notice that the unfaithful servant had not stolen, nor misappropriated, nor borrowed. He had done nothing. His sin was passive rather than active. But sin is failure to do one's best.

I tremble at the danger of our persistence in seeing what we have as things only. Every man who looks at the latest model automobile this year should ask himself the question, "Can God and I turn that automobile into a missionary?" A consecrated layman told me that every time he saw a hundred-dollar bill he thought of a native evangelist in China. We talk about the equality of opportunity for every individual which is contemplated by our Declaration of Independence, and rejoice in it. The counterpart of this is the right of every individual dollar to prove what it may become when consecrated to the welfare of mankind, and transmuted by the divine favor into spiritual values. The mission of lumber is to provide life; of cotton to become character; of cereals to become sermons for the healing of the nations.

"Behold this dreamer!" should be the apt characterization of every man who bears in his arms the fruitage of God's favor and brings it to the altar. For every such man must dream of what such fruitage will become when the divine breath is put upon it. "I see an angel," said the sculptor, peering into a block of marble. "I see a new heaven and a new earth," said John on the lonely island. Livingstone could hear the croonings of a million black men redeemed from savagery when others heard in Africa nothing but the jargon of the monkey, the jackal and the tiger.

God changes things into personalities, when we give him a chance. The business man may evangelize, and educate, and enlist through his money, if he will. That is what money is for. We miss the value of it if we have not seen this.

Jesus said to the rich young man, "Sell . . . distribute . . . and thou shalt have treasure in heaven." Paul said in substance, "I know my banker, and am persuaded that he is able to keep my deposit against that day." I was away down in Egypt. I had no money. I presented a slip of paper, and got all the money I needed. That was because I had placed by money properly on this side of the Atlantic. I shall need my possessions some day on the other side of the grave. That means I must place them properly on this side of the grave.—From Stewardship Series.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The Missionary Review of the World says: "In Japan, seventy-five per cent of the people are still Buddhists, and all sorts and kinds of Christians number only one-half of one per cent. In China the Christians number only about one in a thousand of the population. Large communities of Tibetans, Mongols and aborigines are entirely untouched. In Siam there are vast areas in which there is not one Christian. In British Malaysia little is being done outside of a few cities, and in certain sections any attempt to convert Malays is strictly forbidden. In only 2,333 villages of Burma out of 35,000 are Christians to be found. In Moslem lands 100,000,000 women and girls are still unreached with the Gospel, and an equal number of men and boys are practically untouched. In Asiatic Russia the population of 20,000,000 is entirely inaccessible to evangelical approach except through scattered believers who make their homes there. In parts of Turkey missionaries are not permitted to reside. In Africa more than 2,000 tribes and sub-tribes are still pagan. At least 110,000,000 Africans await to be evangelized. In the Pacific Islands 650,000 are still unevangelized, and in South America it is estimated that 30,000,000 Indians are still untouched by any Christian agencies. And there are also 10,000,000 Jews almost entirely neglected by any organized Christian effort."

"PIONEERS THE 1933 GUEST BOOK."

A sample of this book will reach every pastor's desk very soon after Labor Day. The title is suggestive of the fact that all Christian service and living is a kind of pioneering and unless these missionaries of ours are "pioneers of life" they are nothing. Moreover the title has particular pertinency because the book this year aims to show some of the more progressive plans and policies that are being used in our missionary work at home and abroad. The cover is suggestive of the great variety of people, circumstances, localities and needs with which our missionary enterprise deals.

The book ought to be used not as an end in itself, but as a means to a more thorough going program of missionary education during the fall. It is designed to go into every home and to be read and studied by every person as the beginning this fall on the part of all our people of a more resolute attempt to understand some of the ways in which our Congregational-Christian Churches are attempting to deal with the problem of Christianizing our world. Never before was the need of the spread of the pioneer faith and hope and love of Christ more evident.

TRAPPED.

It was in Africa. The night was dark and stormy. The hunt was over; grim and powerful black warriors swarmed from jungle paths; armed and silent they gathered in their village stockade. The fires blazed brightly.

The scene struck terror to the heart of the American explorer. He and his party had been searching that wild region for pigmies, but he had become separated from his main caravan and had taken refuge in a native village.

He found himself a prisoner surrounded with naked savages. Barbarous men continued to gather from the bush, each savage claspng a wicked looking spear or a long, heavy knife. Danger was in the air. The explorer believed himself trapped. He would die fighting, back to the wall.

At this dramatic moment the chief appeared with twelve stalwart warriors. He ordered his braves to sit. They obeyed. The chief then slowly approached the explorer with a small bag in his hand, the kind in which the Africans kept their deadly poisons for arrowheads and spear points. The explorer now expected to be poisoned but he was alert and ready for the struggle.

In death-like stillness the chief stopped, put his hand into the poison-bag and slowly drew out—a New Testament! Could the explorer believe his eyes? Yes, the colporteur had been there before him. The explorer was in the house of friends.

Slowly the chief told how he had secured the Book from a white man who had taught him the story of stories and how he was trying as best he knew, to pray.

The watch-fires burned out in the night, but the explorer slept without fear.—World Outlook.

MISSIONARY HAPPENINGS.

By MRS. W. M. JAY, Editor.

The Young People's Missionary Society of the Holy Neck Christian Church has done some splendid work during the past year with Miss Lillye Holland as superintendent and Miss Mary Rawles Jones as president. The attendance has been good and splendid programs have been rendered.

On the second Sunday night in July this society was host to the societies of the Holland Christian Church, Holland Baptist Church and the Somerton Friends Church, who attended in a body. The following program was given:

Devotionals were conducted by Gordon Holland of the Holy Neck Society, using the theme "Youth," as a basis. Miss Lois Carr, of the Holland Baptist Church, very ably presented her subject, "Youth and Stewardship."

"Youth and Service" was discussed by Miss Catherine Wright of the Friend's Church.

The young men's quartette of the Holland Christian Church and a solo by Miss Nancy Eley were enjoyed by all.

Miss Frances Everett of the Holland Christian Church spoke on the subject, "The Value of Youth to the Church," and Miss Virgie Whitfield of the Holy Neck Church had as her subject "Youth and Religion."

It was a splendid meeting bringing together three denominations in one common cause.

The Junior Missionary Society of Christian Temple, under the leadership of Mrs. C. O. Marr, superintendent, has about forty members ranging in ages from 6 to 14 years. The last Sunday of each month in the church school worship period this society presents a well planned program, at which time a special envelope offering is received for the Juniors.

The study of the American Indian was presented by the six Junior Sunday School classes recently. This proved to be very interesting, as costumes and the Indian campfire were much in evidence.

The Junior Christian Endeavor Society contributes the fourth Sunday offering to this missionary society as an aid to their work. They are now working on their pageant which will be presented soon and they have completed their study on China also.

Their goal of $40.00 is about raised and they feel they have had a most successful year.

The Bethlehem Young People's Society has been having the distinction lately of being a banner society and at the last Eastern Virginia Young People's Conference won the banner and also was placed on the honor roll. Mrs. O. D. King is the wide-awake superintendent and knows how to lead young people. She started the society off last fall by dividing the forty or more boys and girls into two teams—the Blues and the Reds. This contest proved to be helpful in promoting attendance, interest and faithfulness. The losing side, of course, is to entertain the winners, and the sides seem to score very nearly equal. Mite boxes were also given out and each one was asked to contribute at least 2 cents per week.

At one of their meetings the Holland Baptist young people were present as guests and had part in the program. Two vesper services have been held and these were well attended by the church at large showing their interest and cooperation with the young people. They have almost reached their apportionment and they feel that the wonderful success of their society is due to the originality and untiring efforts of their superintendent.

Mr. Woodrow Piland is president of this thriving society and Miss Mary Effa Savage is the secretary.

GOOD BUSINESS IN BAD TIMES.

The good business we have in mind is the faithful paying of the tithe. Whether times are hard or good, tithing is always good business, so many declare who have tried it. Here are some testimonies to this effect:

It is desirable that the tenth of our means be dedicated to God, and it tends to bring a blessing on the rest. No one can tell the richness of the blessing that comes to those who thus honor the Lord with their substance.—William E. Gladstone.

What I want to say is in behalf of the acceptance of the principle of tithe-giving as the practical basis of proportionate giving. . . . I think every man will find, as every man who has passed through the experience can testify, that the acceptance of a principle like this marks a distinct era of spiritual enlargement in his life. The whole thought of God's love and presence and human duty becomes more vivid. I am speaking out of the experience of many.—Robert E. Speer.

Some years ago, with some doubts, but with a desire to prove without a shadow of a doubt that God's promises are true, I made a covenant to set aside at least a tithe of my income as an acknowledgement of God's ownership and my loving allegiance to him. At that time I had a mortgage on my house, owed heavily, and was burdened with cares and worries. But I determined to prove God. God opened my eyes to see his love and faithfulness.

Since that time I have been blessed beyond my expectations in every way, and prospered in everything to which I have put my hand. I have been through floods, an earthquake, and two fires without any ultimate loss. In hard times I have made money and I believe that at all times there has been a protecting care around me that has kept me from many mishaps or mistakes that would have been made if I had been left to my own judgment.—The Merchant Tither, Sand Springs, Okla.

THE FIELD IS THE WORLD.

At the outset of his ministry Jesus evaded two deadly dangers. First, he refused to become localized; second, he refused to become institutionalized. These two dangers have always beset the cause, and the church that avoids these two calamities will be the church that will succeed. As some one has said, "Jesus came not to be a town doctor, but a world's redeemer." He can never be imprisoned in a local provincialism. Christianity broke through the bounds of Judaism, the Roman Empire, and the bounds of Europe. It has crossed every new boundary, and the missionary passion is the same today. The Christian gospel is like yeast, not concrete; it should saturate and grow, not solidify, and the hope of the kingdom depends upon the persistence of the Spirit of Jesus in these regards. Bro. Butlerfield mentions a strawberry field that his father used to cultivate, and shows the necessity of the main plant being thoroughly established and rooted before it sends out runners for new plants. That is the nature of the strawberry plant and it is the nature of the church born of God, after being rooted and established, to send out new runners and reach out into new fields beyond its own local environment. A strong, spiritual growing church invariably will be found to be a missionary church.—Rev. J. S. Willett.

FREEDOM AND LAW.

There is no freedom except in conformity to law. One day I see a magnificent engine on the Southern Railroad. I speak to that engine and tell it how I admire its strength, its magnificent powers, its fleetness. Then I add, "But there is one thing I cannot but condemn. That is your narrowness. You allow yourself to be confined to a little track less than five feet wide. A miserable little road cart can go where you dare not go. When you get out in the field why don't you assert yourself and claim your freedom?" And that engine listens. And the next day when it is going fifty miles an hour, it takes my advice and turns out into the green fields. What happens? The papers come out next morning announcing a tragic wreck on the Southern.

Pacing back and forth on the deck of a great trans-Atlantic steamer, I cannot fail to admire the grace and beauty and comfort and power of this magnificent floating palace. I speak to it of my high admiration. But I tell the great vessel I cannot understand for the life of me why, with her more than forty thousand tons displacement she allows herself to be dominated and controlled by a little compass not larger than my two fists. "Throw the little tyrant overboard," I advise, "and do as you please." And the ship hears me, and overboard goes the compass. Is the ship free? It is not. It becomes a plaything of the waves. It is no longer mistress of the seas. It is a derelict bound for no port, destined to cast anchor in no harbor.—Dr. Clovis G. Chappell.

Men of God have always from time to time walked among men, and made their commission felt in the heart and soul of the commonest hearer.—Emerson.

LIFE'S LONGINGS.

"Of all the myriad moods of mind that through the soul come thronging, what one was e'er so dear, so kind, so beautiful as longing?"

Thus the poet speaks of our aspirations for the things that are beyond us, and ahead of us, and some day that may be realized. Dr. Marden says: "Our longings are the prophecies of our destinies. Life never wholly fulfills the expectations of youthful hope. The future can never pay all that the present promises. Providence holds back part of our wages, lest we quit work. The prophecy of immortality is written in our yearnings."

Chief among these yearnings of the soul is the longing for a safe and happy future. We have immortality on our hands, we know that. We must exist somewhere during the future of eternity. The fear of hell and the longing for heaven are both worthy and powerful motives urging us to qualify for a place of eternal security. Fear and hope are both powerful and legitimate in directing human destiny. Noah was moved with fear when he prepared an ark for the saving of his household, the Bible declares. The man who declaims against the urge of such fears in connection with the call of God does not know either his God or his fellowman very well.

It is not difficult to find in this world of ours creatures that excel man in some ability. Man has some strength, but his horse easily outdoes him in brute force. He can sing, but not like the birds. He can swim, but not like the fish. He can run and climb, but not like a deer or a monkey. The cunning of the wild animal frequently outmatches the skill of the hunter and enables the hunted to elude him. But man has a soul, he has eternity for his future, he is capable of companionship with God and angels, and these facts furnish a root for life's greatest longings.

A longing for holiness belongs to the true child of God. By this we may test the genuineness of our conversion and our present faith. And when this longing for godlikeness increases to a working stage that makes us real seekers after holiness, it may easily become one of the greatest passions of soul that we can know. It was this that kept John Wesley steadfast in his quest for a conscious Christian experience for some fifteen years or more of his early manhood. As he pursued the matter he learned that we are justified before we are sanctified, the first blessing, he learned, is preparatory and fundamental to the second, and this was realized in his "heart warming" experience of conversion in the mission of the Moravians on Aldersgate Street in London. He was determined to be a fully consecrated Christian, as he said, "I determined, through his grace, to be all devoted to God, to give him all my soul, my body, and my substance."

Here and there in life are moments of great awakening, when we glimpse a vision of the man or woman that we ought to be. Somewhere early in the journey of life you met a scholar, perhaps, and you were afire with determination, and said, "I, too, can be a cultured person." Or you heard some music that thrilled you and there came into you a determination to be a musician. Demosthenes, when he listened to the eloquence of Calistratus then and there resolved to be an orator, though he had apparently no qualifications. His voice was weak and indistinct and he had an impediment in his speech. But he began to practice faithfully on the seashore where he would be challenged to match his weak voice with the roar of the sea, and with pebbles in his mouth to overcome an indistinct articulation. The victory he won after a long struggle was an imperishable reputation as "Demosthenes the orator."

An important duty is to set up in life worthy ideals, the next is to keep them alive. A friend met the great artist Michael Angelo walking alone amid the ruins of the Colosseum. Expressing his surprise to see him so occupied the artist modestly replied, "I go to school that I may continue to learn." "From the lowest depth there is a path to the loftiest height," said Carlyle. "Too low they build who build beneath the stars."

A BUZZARD IN AN EAGLE'S NEST.

Finland won prohibition and had difficulty in enforcing the law. The wets would not obey it, just as they refused to obey the laws that Finland had before prohibition was adopted.

The lawless wets said that if prohibition was repealed and a strict regulation law adopted that there would be an end to bootlegging. So Parliament repealed the law and adopted the agreed regulations.

What happened?

The bootleggers continued to bootleg, just as they bootlegged before and during the prohibition era.

Then the wets set up a great shout demanding the modification of the restrictions. They said that the drastic restrictions were the cause of the bootlegging.

Some modern modifications were made, as far as could be done within the restrictive law. But the bootleggers continued to bootleg. They declared that the law itself must be modified materially so as to kill off the bootleg industry. They raised such a racket, that the government has now (September 30th) prepared a bill to be introduced into Parliament wiping out the major restrictions. Under the proposed law, liquor is to be sold on all week days instead of Saturdays, Mondays and various other days that have heretofore been dry or "black" days.

Besides this the government proposes to keep the grog-shops open seven hours instead of five, and to introduce beer selling. Further, it is proposed to force the drink-shops into various rural communities that have heretofore been dry.

With its tongue in its cheek, the government solemnly declares that removing all these restrictions will surely put a kink in the sin of bootlegging.

The buzzard of legalized drink got into the Finnish eagle's nest, and the result is the natural one.

Call to Worship—"Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet and declare unto my people their transgression."—Isa. 58:1.

Hymn—"Lead On, O King Eternal."

Scripture—Acts 5:25-29.

Hymn—"Faith of Our Fathers."

Introductory Talk—

Development of the Topic—

Hymn—"God Give Us Men."

Benediction—Father, may all that we do during these eventful days be to thy honor and glory, and the building of thy kingdom.—Amen.

1. Have three-minute talks prepared on each of the following persons who stood against public opinion in their day: The Hebrew prophets, Susan B. Anthony, who championed woman's rights, Frances E. Willard, who was a pioneer in the temperance movement, and Woodrow Wilson, who gave the world a new vision of international relations. In each case show why these persons stood against public opinion, and what motivated them to do so. What treatment did they receive from the public, especially in the early stages of their efforts?

2. Young people are often accused of being non-conformists. Ask someone to discuss this. What determines the type of amusement a young person engages in? The way he or she dresses? His outward interest? To what extent does "the crowd" constitute public opinion?

3. Ask another person to lead a discussion on the question, "When should we stand against public opinion? What principles should guide us?"

4. Ask someone to lead a discussion on, "How should we stand against public opinion? Consider the methods of violence and non-violence. What was Jesus' method? Will his method work today?"

5. Ask some thoughtful young person who is a good Bible student to discuss the points on which Jesus stood against public opinion in his day. Read Matt. 5:17-48; Mark 2:15-17, 25-38; 3:16; 11:15-18; Luke 25:1-7, 33, 34.

The world has reached its present stage of advancement because in every century there have been sincere, intelligent men and women who have stood against public opinion. The theory that the majority is always right is as erroneous as the old one, "The king can do no wrong." Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, in a striking study entitled "Above the Average," says, "The fact is that in any realm where judgment calls for spiritual fitness only the minority who are above the average are ever right."

If it becomes necessary for us to stand against our social group we should do so with dignity and firmness but in the spirit of friendliness and good humor. One never gains by assuming an air of superiority or by a spirit of conflict that stirs up ill feeling. We may use all our tact and ingenuity to change the group by substituting something good for something bad. It is a real test of our leadership. Before a person takes a stand against public opinion, he should be sure to which group he belongs. Is he destroying something without building something better to take its place? Is he motivated by selfish desires or by the desire to bring more abundant life to the masses? Is the issue on some trivial matter such as a social question or some profound problem such as war? He should ask himself whether his conviction is worth suffering for, and what price he is willing to pay.

DAVID.

LESSON X—SEPTEMBER 3, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Man looketh on the outward appearance, but Jehovah looketh on the heart."—I. Samuel 16:7.

LESSON TEXT: I. Samuel 16:4-13; Psalm 78:70-72.

It is one thing to have a position or an office; it is quite another thing to fill it, or to perform its duties. A man may get the one or the other by "pull" or even by buying it; he can fill it only by ability. Saul was a king in name, but he did not have the stuff that real kings are made of. He had been called of Jehovah to be the civil and the moral leader of his people, but he rejected Jehovah and Jehovah rejected him from being king. (I. Samuel 15:23.) Those who would be true leaders must be willing to pay the price. The parable of the talents finds ruthless fulfillment in life.

Samuel's greatness is nowhere shown to better advantage than in his attitude toward Saul. "Nevertheless Samuel mourned for Saul." The old prophet did not approve of Saul's conduct and attitude, but in his heart there was a great sorrow for the young man. He had something of the Master's compassion for those who have sinned. Our modern world needs more of this spirit.

God's work is not tied up with any one man or group of men. Saul might fail, but God's plan and purpose would not fail. He had in mind another man for king and he made known his purpose to Samuel. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him. To those who have open minds and responsive hearts God makes known his secrets.

Samuel knew what God wanted him to do, but he was not so keen about doing it. He naturally felt some hesitancy about anointing another king while Saul was still on the throne. It was no place for a nervous man. But when Samuel took up the matter with the Lord, God revealed his plan and purpose more fully, and Samuel set himself to do God's will, regardless of personal consequences. It takes courage to do the will of God, but in the long run it is easier to do God's will than not to do it. The way of the transgressor is hard.

There is an interesting side-light in the lesson. When Samuel came to Bethlehem, "the elders of the town trembled at his coming, and said, Comest thou peaceably?" There was something about the man of God that searched the hearts of men. As a matter of fact those who do wrong are more afraid of the righteous than of policemen. A good man shames the conscience of those who are not living right. These people of Bethlehem respected Samuel's integrity of character, and feared his moral power.

The story of how Samuel selected David is familiar to the general reader. When Eliab, the eldest son of Jesse, and therefore the natural one to be king came in, Samuel felt that surely the Lord's anointed must be before him. But the Lord made it plain that Eliab was not the one. "For the Lord seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart." How different are the judgments of men and of God as concerning men. Men so often look upon appearance, upon social position, upon education, upon family, upon financial rating, in rating men. God looks upon the inner life, integrity of character, attitudes, motives, possibilities.

It began to look like a false lead after all. Seven of Jesse's sons in succession passed by in review before Samuel, but in every case the Lord told Samuel that this was not to be his anointed one. God often puts us to the test. Even when we know we are trying to do his will, there are times when it seems so futile. We must walk by faith and keep on keeping on.

Finally, Samuel asked Jesse if all his sons had passed by, and Jesse in a casual way replied that there was another son, the "baby boy," but he was out keeping the sheep. He must have indicated by his manner that it certainly was not this lad who should be the prospective king. But as soon as the lad came in, ruddy, strong, good to look upon, Samuel knew that the king stood before him. He immediately took his horn of oil and anointed David before them all, thus in a symbolic way attesting to his kingship. And the Spirit of the Lord came upon David from that day.

In this simple story there is an abiding truth. God often passes over those who to all human appearances are potential leaders, and chooses those who are not thought of as eligible. The Old Testament abounds in instances, and the central figures in the New Testament are for the most part also instances. From the human standpoint it is not likely that you or I would have chosen a single one of the twelve disciples. In the quiet, out-of-the-way places God has his eye on those whom he will some day call to places of leadership.

Of course, there is point in the fact that David was a country boy. A careful check of those who are in positions of leadership, not only in religious life, but in economic and educational life, would show that an overwhelming proportion of them were the product of the country. For the most part the boys and girls from the country furnish the leadership in all walks of life.

The writer of the seventy-eighth Psalm gives a kind of summary of the nation's history, and as he comes to the part which David had in that history, he says, "So he led them according to the integrity of his heart; and guided them by the skilfulness of his hands." It is significant—character and training—the ideal combination. Mere character is not enough. Training without character is dangerous. But the man of character who has sound training and who dedicates that training to the service of God will have God's blessing upon him, and God will use him in a large way. This does not mean, of course, that God cannot use a person without technical training. God can use any one of us if we yield ourselves to him and give him such as we are and have.

FAITH MEETS THE CHALLENGE.

A great thing is said of Abraham when it is recorded that he "staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief, but was strong in faith, giving glory to God." (Rom. 4:20.) Of similar quality, we believe, was the faith of Sir Isaac Newton in the following quotation attributed to him: "I can take my telescope and look millions and millions of miles into space; but I can lay it aside and go to my room, and get down on my knees in earnest prayer, and see more of heaven, and get closer to God, than I can by all the telescopes and material agencies of earth."

The great scientist speaks for every believing heart in these words. It is only by the exercise of a sincere and childlike faith in God and his word that we are able to bring into our lives the power that makes us children of the great God.—Exchange.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

"O Lord, I beseech thee, let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of thy servant, and to the prayer of thy servants, who desire to fear thy name, and prosper, I pray thee, thy servant this day."

MONDAY.

WORK, CHRISTIAN, WORK.

"Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling."—Phil. 2:12.

This scripture is not intended to apply to the unsaved, but to those whose names are written in the book of life, to those who by the grace of God already possess salvation, exhorting them to work it out in a "growth in grace, the knowledge of the Lord, and the beauty of holiness." (II Pet. 3:16.) Unto the fullness of a growing better man, until perfection is reached; it is an exhortation to work not to salvation, but from it; it is an exhortation to work out our daily lives in a fashion that God may be glorified in us.

The words, "with fear and trembling," are interpreted to mean that we need to fill our lives with a deep sense of carefulness, earnestness and vigor, lest we obscure that glory and thus misrepresent Christ in our lives to others. There should never be the chance for anyone to say we are hypocrites. On the contrary we should be so filled with his grace that no one could make a mistake in judging us. The scriptures enjoin that we so walk that "they who see us may take knowledge of us that we walk with Jesus" (Acts 4:13). Who even walks thus finds the fulfillment of his word in himself, or it is said "it is God that worketh in us to will and do of his own good pleasure."

Prayer—Our Father in heaven, we pray that we may see ourselves and our lives as thou dost, that we may be what we ought to be in Christ. We ask this in Jesus name.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

UNDERSTANDING THE BIBLE.

"All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for instruction in righteousness."—II. Tim. 3:16.

"Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me; and ye will not come to me that ye may have life."—Jno. 5:39-40.

"Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit to his stature."—Matt. 6:27.

Read it slowly. It has been rightly said, "You cannot cram the Bible. You must chew and swallow what you get. Jeremiah says, 'Thy words were found and I did eat them.' In John's vision of Jesus, giving the book to the saints, the instruction was, 'take it and eat it.'"

Read it carefully. Let the words of the text and their meaning soak in.

Read it patiently. Much of it maybe you will not understand today, but maybe tomorrow you will. The understanding of God's truth comes to one in exact proportion to his use of the truth, thus its meaning to him will advance as he tries to practice it in his life.

Read it reverently. Remember that it is not only God's word, but it is his very breath and presence.

Read it prayerfully. What use is there to pray about it? Because it is God who opens the understanding. As he taught the disciples, it is said, "Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand" (Luke 24:25). Thus understanding of his word is a gift from him and can be received by us only as we lay ourselves in his hands, not with a doubting mind, but with a ready and willing mind; and that is done through our own prayers.

Read it constantly. Make it a daily practice to read some passages of it in these ways, no matter how little, and we find that "eye hath not seen nor hath it entered into the heart of man" what the Lord will do for him.

Prayer—Our Father, we thank thee for those endowments whereby we may know God, we pray for inspiration, spirit and a God-consciousness that will make us pleasing children of thine.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"For the commandment is a lamp; and the law is a light; and reproofs of instruction are the way of life."—Prov. 6:23.

I find beautiful language and charming imagery in the Bible, such as, "Their soul shall be as a watered garden." It bubbles over with poetry, with the heat of Sinai's flames; with the thrall of prophetic warnings; with the glories of vision; with the ecstasy of song; with the sob of woes; with the tenderness of angels; with the pity of contrition; with curses against sin; with the glory of the coming Lord.

I find in the Bible supernatural wisdom; it is the story of the earth, the sun, the moon and the stars revealed long before science gave us anything about it; from cover to cover there is royal dignity; there is not a silly line in it; its denunciation of sin; its continual cry for holiness, and its unity of design, is sublime. Nothing like it has ever been known.

Beyond all this we find the drama of our own character. Whoever one is, or whatever he is, his photograph is there. Whoever one is, or whatever one is, the life of peace and power in the paradise of God is his for the asking. "Blessed whosoever! That means me!"

Prayer—Our dear Father, be pleased to humble our hearts for knowledge of thy word and for service. This we ask for Jesus sake.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

BENEFITS OF BIBLE READING.

1. FAITH: "Faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the word of God."—Rom. 10:17.

2. JOY: David said, "I rejoice in thy word as one that findeth a great spoil."—Psa. 119:162.

3. PREPARATION FOR LIFE: "All scripture is given . . . that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto every good work."—II. Tim. 3:16-17.

He who reads the Bible as indicated will find himself walking in the light, able to meet his difficulties, and getting for himself an abiding consciousness of its truth and of the reality of God.

Prayer—Our Father, we beg forgiveness from sin, for the baptism of the Holy Spirit, and for a vision of the need of all thy benefits. Grant this, we pray, for Jesus sake.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

A PRAYER.

(From Prayers by Elinor Cochran Stewart.)

May our hearts become as a garden where beautiful thoughts may dwell like flowers, washed by the Heavenly Dew of Grace; may peace abide with us that the meeting with thee, great Father of all, may be recognized by us in the tenderness and softness of thy approach.

May the heart grow pure and untouched by the world, and the desire for possessions or worldly honor.

Make us of one mind and one hope and carry us through the dark ways with our faith untouched by sorrow or despair, and make us worthy children of thine.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

NARCOTIC NEEDS.

"Shall thy wonders be known in the dark? And thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness?"—Read Psa. 88:1-12.

A wise and prudent movement is afoot to study just how large a quantity of habit-forming drugs will meet the legitimate needs of this country. Morphine and its allies must be used to some extent to deaden pain and relieve extreme suffering, and, so used, are among God's best gifts to men; but the abuse of them brings terrible penalties.

It is the same with narcotics of the soul. It is well for us sometimes to forget the painful past, to put it behind us. Who has not passed through experiences for which he needs spiritual narcotics, experiences to which he wishes to become dead?

But dead souls are of no use in the kingdom of heaven, nor are stupefied souls that have wholly forgotten the meaning of suffering. They have lost sympathy. They have lost their sense of brotherhood. Our Lord on the cross refused the liquid that would have deadened his pangs. Every sorrow has its lesson for us. We can not know God's wonders in the dark. We lose God's righteousness in the land of forgetfulness. God wants his children to be completely alive.

Prayer—And so, merciful Father, we accept only the drink of the waters of Lethe which thou dost press to our lips. Thou knowest our frame. And if further pain and grief are best for us, we will bear them like men.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

THREE OUT OF FOUR THOUSAND.

"Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth."—Read Eccl. 12:1-7.

A New York judge says that more than four thousand boys under the age of twenty-one have been convicted of crime in his court, and only three of them have been members of a Sunday School. Moreover, out of 1,902 cases in which the sentence has been suspended, a minister, priest or rabbi being interested in the boy, only sixty-two boys have been brought back for breaking their parole, the reform of the remainder being permanent.

If figures prove anything, these figures prove the value of religious work for and with young people. It will mean sacrifice on the part of Christian people; the gift of a little money; the expenditure of much time and strength. It was the Son of God who said that the kingdom of heaven is made up of the young and of those like the young.

Prayer—Dear Saviour, may we refuse to see young life going down into the pit of worldliness and wickedness. May we all do what we can.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

Prayer clears the vision, quiets the nerve, defines duty, strengthens purpose, sweetens the spirit, and fortifies the soul. The unused forces of nature are great; the unused forces of prayer are still greater. Prayer relates the soul to the infinite resources of the divine.—Chas. L. Goodell.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

THE FLOWER OF NAZARETH.

[From the baccalaureate sermon by Rev. S. R. Martin, pastor of the First Methodist Protestant Church, Zanesville, Ohio, at the high school of that city.]

The world needs not a challenge so much as an ideal, and there is no ideal too high upon which to rest our ambitions. No text book of ethics will save the world from its woe. That lies entirely in the power of human personality. Laws are valuable only when actually applied to daily living. The heart problems of life can only be answered by life.

In searching for the ideal living personality we have rejected many fine characters among the sages, philosophers and writers, because of some flaw. Above them all there stands the peerless, humble carpenter who lived his life before a critical, unsympathetic world. Isaiah called him "Wonderful Counsellor, Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace," Matthew called him "King of the Jews," Mark called him "The Suffering Servant," and so each writer saw in him some outstanding quality that was attractive. The most beautiful name of all is one found in the Song of Solomon, second chapter, first verse: "I am the Rose of Sharon and the lily of the valley."

The great king of Israel saw in the valley of the Jordan a little white flower and in its tiny cup the symbolism of a pure humble life which was to be. On the western slope of the Shephelah, where the plains of Sharon slope to the coral strands of the Mediterranean, he saw a carpet of roses and in their various colors the many-sided beauty of that singular life. Prophetically he uttered these words, "I am the rose of Sharon and the lily of the valley." Between the valleys and the plain came forth "The fairest of ten thousand" and to us he came as "The Flower of Nazareth."

With the dreams of world empires, there rose the conception of the super man. He must be the most perfect man of the race—perfect in body and mind. Philosophers and scientists were willing to sacrifice everything to produce this mighty man of force. He must rule by annihilating all who were weak. Conceived in the mind of the Teuton, he became a mighty military machine rolling onward in mathematical precision, but, thank God, he met raw shock troops at the Marne, Chateau Thierry and Verdun and in the end crumbled in the smoke of battle.

In this wilderness of cruelties and human selfishness, God has placed the rose of Sharon and the lily of the valley that the desert might blossom as the rose and the jungles of hatred might become love's tenderest flower garden.

The first thought carried to the world, by the Flower of Nazareth, is the mysterious wonder of his incarnation, and this mystery begins in life as found in its earliest forms. It begins with the beauty of the lily of the field which was more glorious than all the riches of King Solomon's court, yet even these can but dimly reveal the beauty that lies in the heart of their creator. The lilies of heaven will be vastly more beautiful, but the "fairest of ten thousand" will be the most beautiful of them all. A higher creation than the lily is the image of God impressed upon the form of man, but the highest creation of them all was the incarnation of the "Flower of Nazareth." When God and man were formed together in a mystical union this was the masterpiece of all creation.

The lily of the valley is symbolical of him in the character of his purity of thought and action.

His willingness to occupy humbly his station among the thorns of pasture, which are so typical of the thorns upon his brow. The cattle of the field tramp it down in their search for provender, but it will ever come forth in a new resurrection of another springtime. The lily of the valley which bloomed so serenely for us set forth the humility of the Christ.

The rose of Sharon shows forth his sacrifice in the crimson of its petals. His departure from the emerald gates of heaven was a complete forsaking of that glory in the celestial presence of his Father. His incarnation was crimson. His suffering in the hands of enemies which terminated his life upon the cross was written by the drops of his own blood. The fragrance of these flowers will show forth to eternity the passion of his loving heart for a cruel world. Perfumes have ever been closely associated with the passions of man and no passion ever existed like that revealed in the last week of his life. An ungrateful world had crucified her greatest benefactor, and his great heart broke at the ingratitude.

The rose of Sharon belong to the althea family, the meaning of which is "to heal." The Flower of Nazareth was all of this for the rose of healing wove its fragrance around many a weary life. The lame were healed, the sick were returned to health, and even the dead were raised. But far greater than all, aching hearts ceased to ache, and sinful men and women were made to sin no more.

The curse of human existence has at last seen one ray of light in this lowly Nazarene, who lived for others while others lived for themselves. He gave, and gave, of his life to others, but little they gave to him. Pause in your busy life and marvel at this man of Galilee, for he was different than any other. His superiority as a teacher is admitted. His example as a prophet and a servant of men has never been equalled, but then these were not the measure of his life. No life is measured by unhampered progress in the thing attained. It is only in the time of adversity, danger and excitement, that men are really known. A supposed hero may live in the glory of unruffled existence for a lifetime until the trial of one moment brings to the surface a tinge of cowardice. Brave men may die bravely, yet show one weak link. The "Flower of Nazareth" went to his cross with not one flaw in his conduct or attitude toward his enemies. There was never a greater picture of heaven upon earth than this picture of God, as a dying man, for this "Flower of Nazareth" was the heaven-born incarnation of God, dwelling among men and he lived and died perfectly.

Mode of Life.

The second ideal that was carried into the world by the Flower of Nazareth, is his incarnation in the lives of other individuals. Other leaders established religious ideals to be imitated, but he gave himself and his truth is to be lived in the being of others. The "Flower of Nazareth" is more than an ideal, he is a mode of life.

The church has been open to criticism, and some of it has been very just, but the error is human. There is nothing about the conduct of the gentle Jesus of Nazareth that would condone the inquisition of the centuries of darkness just before the renaissance. There is nothing in his frank nature that would permit the hypocrisy that we see in many of his followers. This to me is not a problem. The thing at which I marvel is the purity of his influence on the world after 20 centuries of error have tried to crush the church and its influence. There are those who hate Jesus, but they cannot deny the influence of his personality today. His personality is with us and the world must ever ask the question that Pilate asked, "What shall I do then with Jesus who is called the Christ?"

The magnitude of his life was exceedingly small but his influence today is tremendous. If the length of his travels could be measured they would be probably less than eight thousand miles. The area of the territory in which he labored was perhaps not much larger than Muskingum county, yet today over 7,000,000 square miles have measured the sway of that personality.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

One goal we have not been able to reach, and we wonder if we will ever see the time when we will. It has been our desire all this seventeen years to reach the time when our income would be sufficient to carry on and we would not have to spend so much time digging after money to run the Orphanage, and could give this extra time to the little children in person. It would do them lots of good if we could be with the little fellows on the lawn and join in their play games.

The late Edwin Gould, of New York, a man worth twenty millions, got much of his joy out of life by mingling with little children and during all his life's career, though worth millions, he gave much to charity to help the needy children. He was never happier than when he had a crowd of the little fellows around him, asking them questions and having a good laugh. The children meant much to his life, and he has meant much to them.

Our seventeen years at the Christian Orphanage have been busy years. We had to have a plant in which to work for the best interests of the children. Building to do, land to buy to develop a farm to give the boys an outlet for their energies. A dairy to build up from two cows seventeen years ago to thirty milk cows now to supply all the sweet milk for the children, and to spare. All this has been accomplished and we thought we had about reached our goal, when the depression hit us hard and we had to put forth every effort with renewed energy to finance. Perhaps we will never reach that real joy that we had so much wanted to reach. But what a real joy it would be to have time to take off and get out with the little tots and play with them in the sand pile and help them build play houses, mountains and mole hills, engage in their little games and be a child again.

Don't forget the little children in your Christian Orphanage. They need your help, your love, your sympathy and your prayers.

LIGHT BEARERS.

In olden times in Scotland the kitchens of the farmhouses were lighted by splinters of bog-fir, held by beggars or wayfarers, called, peer-men, who in this way paid for their night's lodging, while the people of the house worked or amused themselves. Our mission in life is to light up the darkness of the world and give our fellow-men clear light upon the duties and enjoyments of life. We are wayfarers and pilgrims on the earth, and are to earn the cost of our entertainment by the Lord of the house, by this work of faith and labor of love.—The Quiver.

Millikan discovered the cosmic rays. What they are nobody knows. They penetrate 50 feet of solid lead. They bombard the earth with over 50,000,000 volts of power. Millikan thinks they are the "birth cries" of newly-born atoms in the cold spaces between the stars. Other scientists, notably Arthur Compton and Sir James Jeans, disagree, calling cosmic rays "death wails" of matter on stars.—Defender.

THE SUN'S PULPIT.

Limited Contact.

His contact was limited also. Those who heard him teach or preach were never more than a few thousand people. Only five hundred knew him intimately, and but eleven men shared his confidence. Today over 600,000,000 people—which is one-third of the earth's population—bow before that name and accept him as their Lord. The tremendous victory of his life can never be measured.

The fragrance of his flower-like nature has transformed races and masses. When his followers entered Rome, they were met with persecution, yet the purity of their lives and the influence of their Christ changed the cruel Roman to a gentle martyr. The raving Saul of Tarsus became the suffering Paul of Caesarea. With the torn and aching body he could lie in the cruel prison stocks and sing the praises of the hero of the cross.

A few months ago a prominent magazine published a series of articles entitled "The March of Eleven Men." Jesus had sent them forth and on they marched. James, who saw the transfiguration, perished by Herod's sword. Peter was crucified in Rome, and all the rest of the eleven save John died a tragic death, but on they marched in their martyrdom until you and I have heard the tread of their weary feet. In their pathway, hospitals have risen and schools have flourished and moneys collected for clothes and food for the needy. Jesus not only lifted the weak and the fallen, but commanded his followers to do so. He of all the earth issued the command, "Love your enemies." None other under heaven ever preached a doctrine like this.

THE HOLY SPIRIT.

Too largely, the Christian Church has neglected to give the Holy Spirit his rightful place in her thinking. What that place is, let us briefly and prayerfully consider:

He may be described as the executive agent of the Trinity. Jesus told his disciples that the Holy Spirit would be the agent of communication with them, bringing to their remembrance all things whatsoever he had told them. He is the "Remembrancer" in speaking to all men of Jesus through whom the Father reveals himself and his office he undertakes not only with the saved children of God but with the whole human family. He "lighteneth every man that cometh into the world" so that however feeble a flicker of light anywhere, the source of it is Christ conveyed by the Holy Spirit.

Every virtue we possess and every conquest won,
And every thought of holiness is his alone.

And he is the witness of God in the soul. Not only does he bring to us the grace of our Lord Jesus whereby our souls are healed but he bears witness within us of the reconciliation that is effected between God and the penitent wrongdoer, bringing joyful word to the anxious heart that "we are children of God and joint heirs with Christ."

And then the Holy Spirit is the Purifier. We read of Jesus, that he "is made unto us wisdom from God and sanctification and redemption." All potential gifts are in Jesus but they become our actual possession under the action and by the operation of the Holy Spirit.

Above all, he conveys the dynamic of God to the waiting heart. "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost has come upon you."

O Holy Spirit, Mighty God, Remembrancer, Energy of God, Witness Bearer, and Sanctifier, breathe upon him who reads these imperfect words and upon the church universal, and upon the hearts of great multitudes of men. Amen and Amen.—Bishop William F. Oldham in Heart and Life Magazine.

A TRIBUTE TO PETER.

Army, recently told a good story of his illustrious father and himself. "The old General," he said, "had a great liking for Peter, but I always thought him a rather wabby type. On one occasion I said to my father, 'How can you explain the circumstances of Peter's getting out on the water and seeing Jesus, and then, with all this to convince him, suddenly losing his faith, and sinking?' Well do I remember the old General's reply: 'Bramwell, my boy, you would never have gotten out of the boat!'"—Free Churchman.

BIRDS OFTEN MENTIONED IN BIBLE.

There are at least 290 references to birds in the Bible, say ornithologists. Of the birds mentioned 113 are general in the sense that they refer simply to birds and not directly to any certain species. However, 31 species are mentioned by name. The dove holds first place, being alluded to 35 times. The eagle is mentioned 32 times, the raven, and poultry, twelve times each. Reference is made 11 times to the owl, 10 times to the pigeon, 7 times to the sparrow, 6 times to the stork and 5 times to the pelican.

Four passages refer to the quail swallow, and vulture; three to the ostrich, bittern, peacock and cormorant. The crane, partridge, osprey, kite, cuckoo, hawk, heron, nighthawk and the lapwing are mentioned twice each and the swan and gier eagle once each.—Z. I. Davis, in Exchange.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING.

ELON COLLEGE, founded by the Christian Church in 1889, has fully justified the faith and hope of its founders during its 42 years of operation. Its graduates from the four-year course leading to a bachelor's degree, number 980, now living, 122 of whom are in the Christian Ministry and full-time Christian service. The majority of these are members of our own denomination. In addition, 449 are in educational work and are an active influence in the lay leadership of the Christian Church.

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING, and the definite religious atmosphere of the College, provide the very best facilities available for training for religious leadership, and offer the Church its finest opportunity to train the young people of the denomination to assume active leadership both in the ministry and laity of the local churches.

OBITUARIES

CAVE.

Mrs. Catherine Cave died July 12, 1933. She had lived to a rather ripe old age, although her exact age was not known. She is survived by two daughters and one son, and ten grandchildren.

It was my privilege to receive her into the Bethel Christian Church several years ago. Funeral services were held at St. Peter's Church, July 15, 1933.

A. W. ANDES.

BOWMAN.

Richard E. Bowman, little son of Brother and Sister Angelo Bowman, members of Joppa Christian Church, was born September 21, 1930, and died August 14, 1933, aged 2 years, 10 months, and 23 days. He had been sick but a few days, and his death came as a great shock to his parents and friends. It was so hard to give him up, and much sympathy is felt for them.

Funeral services were held at the home August 16, 1933.

A. W. ANDES.

CARTER.

Rachel Carter, thirteen-year-old daughter of Rev. and Mrs. E. M. Carter, was born in Wadley, Ala., February 25, 1920. She was summoned to her eternal home on August 9th, following an illness of only a few hours' duration at her home in Youngsville, N. C.

She became a Christian and united with the Youngsville Christian Church about two years ago. She was active in Sunday School and Young People's work in the church. She was a noble Christian and her sweet gentle disposition won for her many friends, who, with the family mourn her going.

Funeral services were held in the Youngsville Christian Church in charge of the writer and Rev. Mr. Parker, pastor of the M. E. Church, and Rev. Mr. Evans, a Baptist minister.

•• THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY ••

The Food Price Index.—

Reports from 51 key cities show that retail food prices advanced less than 2 per cent during the month of August. Out of 42 commodities, 32 showed an increase, however, while 8 showed a decrease, and 2 remained unchanged. The wholesale price index actually showed a slight decline during the month.

Fire Losses.—

According to the report of the National Board of Fire Underwriters, there should be much rejoicing on the part of fire insurance companies throughout the United States. Fire losses for July, 1933, are reported to have been nearly 40 per cent under those of the corresponding month in 1932. Losses for the first seven months of 1933 were 27.9 per cent less than for the same months of 1932. Fire insurance companies are optimistic about prospective profits this year.

Texas Pays Toll to Storm.—

Great damage to property and much loss of life is reported from the storm which swept in from the Mexican Gulf and followed up the course of the Rio Grande. According to the latest reports given before going to press the number of lives lost were in the hundreds while those injured would probably run far beyond the thousand mark. The 80-mile wind which piled up losses running into millions of dollars on the coast swept inward, carrying ruin to numerous towns and villages in its course.

President for Twenty-Four Days.—

Carlos M. DeCespedes, resigned as President of the Republic of Cuba on Tuesday of this week, having held that office just twenty-four days. The government was turned over to radical revolutionary forces headed by radical students and non-commissioned officers of the Cuban army. This second revolution within a month's time was accomplished without bloodshed, but it was greatly feared that violence would follow hard on its heels. An American cruiser and three destroyers were immediately dispatched to Cuba "to protect American lives and property."

Stainless Silver.—

For several years past now, stainless steel has been a boon to manufacturers and housewives as well. Now comes another stainless metal. After years of experimenting, Tadashi Tanabe, a Japanese engineer, has developed an alloy which will resist corrosion under normal exposure to air and moisture. Patent rights for this compound metal of silver, zinc and tin, have already been granted in the United States as well as in Japan. The feature of this Tanabe alloy is that it not only resists tarnishing, the bane of the careful housewife, but retains its natural silver luster. Although harder than the unalloyed silver, it is said to be easy to work. It will probably become quite commonly utilized in the industrial arts, which require about 36 million fine ounces of silver annually.

America is Becoming Air-Minded.—

If records of passenger-carrying airlines are to be taken at their face value America is rapidly becoming air-minded. One line carrying traffic from New York to Miami, by way of Richmond and Atlanta, reports that all previous records were broken during the month of August. A total of 9,260 passengers were transported during the month, and this despite the fact that weather conditions were less favorable than normally. This was the sixth consecutive month in which a new record was set, and was the first time that the 9,000 mark had been passed. The increase above the previous record month of July was 299 passengers, and the increase over August, 1932, was 5,411, or 140 per cent. Reports from other lines substantiate the statement that Americans are rapidly taking to the air as a mode of travel.

Three-Point-Two Becomes Legal in Virginia.—

For the first time in seventeen years Virginians drank legal beer on Labor Day, Monday, September 4th. But that is not all—there were sixty cases brought before the police court of the city of Richmond on the charge of drunkenness—possibly the record was better elsewhere. Along with this, there is cause for rejoicing on the part of the newspapers which have so valiantly upheld the cause of repeal. The beer advertisements in the local morning paper, Tuesday, amounted to not less than 40 per cent of all display advertising carried—a case of faithfulness rewarded. These ads will probably be supplemented by stronger ones, when the "right" time comes. The billboard people seem due to reap quite a harvest of advertising also. It pays to advertise. Who, though, does the paying?

Labor Day.—

Ripley, of believe-it-or-not fame, tells us that Labor Day is not a comparatively modern institution as many people believe. True it is that Labor Day was first celebrated in the United States by a parade on Monday, September 4, 1882. The day originated with the Knights of Labor, a labor organization started in Philadelphia sometime in 1869. It was first made a legal holiday by the State of Colorado, and since has become so in nearly every State in the Union. However, the first Labor Day in history was set aside by Solon, a Greek social reformer, more than twenty-five centuries ago. By strange coincidence, the day set aside was "the second day of the first decade (week) of Boedromion," which we are informed, corresponds to our first Monday in September. The day was a day of feasting and of remission of labor for the "benefit of the two lowest classes of Greek society, the Hektemors and the Slaves, thus foreshadowing in a most curious manner the American Labor Day."

Manhattan's Parks.—

When one speaks of Manhattan Island, one thinks of skyscrapers and crowded streets. Yet, while it is the center of the commercial activity of the entire world, more than 70 per cent of its area is still used for residential purposes, and the island has a larger park area than any other important population center in the country, the Bronx—another New York borough—excepted. These extensive park areas stand out boldly on a new map issued in connection with the unemployment relief. The largest park in the borough is, of course, Central Park, comprising 840 acres. The water front system, comprising Riverside Park, Fort Washington Park, Fort Tryon Park, Inwood Hill Park and High Bridge Park, extends from Seventy-second Street along the Hudson River to the tip of the island opposite Spuyten Duyvil and also along the Harlem River. In Washington Heights residential district no part of the district is further than 1,000 feet from a park, and numerous smaller parks are scattered throughout Manhattan. The entire park system contains 1,802 acres and totals more than one-eighth of the entire area of the borough.

Tammany.—

Most everyone has heard of "Tammany," the political tiger of New York City. Few, perhaps, know the origin of the organization. We found the story of its origin recently, and pass it on to our readers. It runs as follows: On the 12th of May, 1789, there died a very aged chief of the Delaware Indians, Tammany by name. Now Tammany was quite celebrated—perhaps justly—for his many virtues; and as the first Congress under the new constitution had met but two months before his death, someone suggested making "Saint Tammany" the patron saint of the young nation. Possibly the suggestion was a jest, but the idea was so far acted upon that Tammany societies sprang up in several of the larger cities, including New York. The object of these societies was the distribution of charity and benevolence. They were also of a social—not socialistic—character. Their officers bore Indian titles such as "Sachem" and "Sagamore," and much of their ceremony was borrowed from the Indians. None of these societies were long lived except that in New York. Years later it began, as a body, to take interest in politics. No doubt, at first it was animated by a desire for good government, but as politics became the chief topic of interest, the society's usefulness as a benevolent association began to wane. However, it still held a place of prominence in the life of the city, and it is not surprising that intriguing politicians sought and finally gained control of the society that they might wield its power in their own behalf.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Rev. and Mrs. E. C. Gillette have returned to Jacksonville after spending August in the vicinity of Waynesville, N. C. Mr. Gillette can be addressed again at his office, 117 W. Forsyth St., Jacksonville, Fla.

Rev. Trevor Mordecai, D. D., of Birmingham, Ala., has been spending the month of August at Daytona Beach. He is to supply several churches during September before returning to Birmingham.

Rev. A. R. Flowers is to be the speaker for the fourth time in eight years at the annual homecoming day, the second Sunday in September, at Roseburg Church, near Elm City, N. C. The members of five denominations have been making the second Sunday in September a great day for eight years.

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle began his work as pastor of Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., September 1st, and on Sunday, September 3rd, a large, expectant and happy audience greeted him at his first preaching service at 11 o'clock. Brother Hardcastle has undertaken a large task, but he is a man of large calibre, boundless faith, tireless energy, consecrated zeal.

Rev. John G. Truitt faced for the first time as pastor, his Suffolk congregation at 11 o'clock Sunday, September 3rd, and a happy and large congregation greeted him. Large responsibilities have fallen upon this man's shoulders, but like Paul, he has confidence in saying, "I have known in whom I have believed and I am persuaded that he will not forsake me."

"My Eight Years at Rosemont," will be the topic Rev. J. F. Morgan, pastor of Rosemont Christian Church, will use at the 8 o'clock service Sunday. Mr. Morgan will complete eight years at the Rosemont Church this week and he has asked that all members of the church who can do so, will be present. He has been conducting a revival at the Liberty Spring Christian Church but will be in the pulpit at both Sunday services.

Rev. Walter Metcalf, of Tampa, has been supplying the pulpit at Winter Park, Fla., during August, and has completed the series and has returned with his family to Tampa. He and Mrs. Metcalf received the hearty greetings and expression of appreciation on the part of the congregations. These services have been union services with the Methodists, alternating between the two churches. On September 3rd, Rev. C. DeW. Brown was the preacher. Rev. C. A. Vincent, D. D., has returned from his vacation spent at his farm in New Hampshire.

Rev. R. Lee House, who spent his vacation in Bible study at Union Theological Seminary, N. Y., writes a line of gratitude: "It was like a dream come true, being able to attend Union Seminary. I knew that Union is viewed with alarm among certain circles, for I have been advised not to attend there. Of course, one should not attend such a school if he is 'tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine,' for they certainly make one do some thinking. I do not think it has caused me to be a young heretic, but rather sent me away with a stronger faith in the efficacy of the gospel and the preaching of the same. Certainly a better vacation could not have been spent. I am grateful to my congregation for making it possible."

Quite an unusual record has been attained by Mr. E. W. Neville, a member and deacon of our Chapel Hill, N. C., Church. On Sunday, September 3rd, Brother Neville rounded out nineteen years of attendance at the local Sunday School, without having been absent for a single Sunday. We understand that this means he was in his own church school every single Sunday during that time. For over twenty-three years he has been present at every meeting of the Board of Beacons, as well as at the business meetings of his church. He was the first person to sign the charter membership list of the United Church at Chapel Hill. We wonder if there are others who can boast a record such as this. We know of none that approach it, except that held by Brother J. L. Cash, of the neighboring city of Durham, N. C.

Mr. Edward DuBois, wso is student pastor at Melbourne, Fla., for the summer under the Student Summer Service, reports much activity among the young people. He took the Cub and Tenderfoot Scouts on a two-day hiking and camping trip. The Cub Scouts had a ball team playing a series with Eau Gallie. The young people of the church have an executive council that meets Mr. DuBois and carefully plans the Endeavor meetings, and they also have a Young People's Church Council to help the pastor in all plans. The Women's Harmony Club prepared a buffet supper on Sunday nights for those who meet to plan the young people's meeting in the evening. One evening of entertainmet was a "College Humor Indoor Track Meet," which was greatly enjoyed. Mr. DuBois is carrying on in a fine way the work of the regular pastor, Rev. Orville D. Ullom, who is spending the summer in Pennsylvania.

Word comes from Rev. E. B. White that the Windsor, Va., Circuit does not expect to call a full-time pastor for the coming year, and for this reason, he says, "I shall be glad to do some supply preaching, as I feel that I can so arrange my work as to be able to do this." Mr. White has been called back to Damascus, Eure and Antioch for the coming year, and will probably return to Isle of Wight. However, leaving the Windsor Church he would more than likely be interested in locating another pastorate. Churches interested should communicate with him. The following recommendation from his former church, at Windsor, is signed by J. W. Roberts, Chairman of the Board of Deacons; L. Bailey, Chairman of the Official Board, and S. T. Holland, Treasurer: "Rev. E. B. White has been our pastor for the past four years, and we recommend him most highly as a gentleman of Christian character, a splendid preacher, a kind and true friend. He has been our leader in all the activities of the church, and has the confidence and esteem of a large number of the people of this vicinity."

ACCUSED OR EXCUSED?

Many times those around us find faults in what we do though we may be ever so careful, and accuse us of doing things contrary to the will of God. But resentment has no place in the heart of a Christian and it is better by far to be accused than to be excused. In being excused from any fault whether real or imaginary there is a tendency to point to a weak spot, a place that needs to be fortified. We do not want the confidence that people have in us to be misplaced, so when an accusation is made we need to take a step forward so as to get out of any dangerous territory. We do not want any habit of ours to offend or hinder those around us that are watching our lives. There may be nothing wrong in what we do but the Apostle Paul has written: "All things are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawful for me, but all things edify not."

Satan would have us brought into bondage to people or things, and we need to stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, not being entangled again in the yoke of bondage but delivered from bondage into the glorious liberty of the children of God. How careful we need to be as we enjoy this glorious liberty that we do not offend or hinder those around us for we do not want our liberty to be a stumbling block to them that are weak.

So when we are accused may we not try to excuse ourselves or desire any one else to do so for us, but may we look to him who alone sees all of our weaknesses and who giveth wisdom to all who ask.

Oh, it matters little what else we miss
If the will of God be done;
It is worth while giving up all for this,
From the dawn till the set of sun;
And the dusk brings joy when we learn the bliss
Of the Master's own "Well done!"

INFORMATION APPRECIATED.

We desire to have your denominational office up-to-date with accurate information. We may thus serve our churches and ministers more efficiently. Just a postal card sent promptly helps wonderfully.

We wish to know:

1. The new address whenever any minister changes his residence.
2. The name and address of new church clerks.
3. The date and place of any new ordination service.
4. The date and place of the death of any of our ministers.
5. The date of ordination of all our ministers if that date does not appear with the name in the 1932 Year Book of Congregational and Christian Churches.
6. The name and address when your church secures a new minister.

Promptness and accuracy are always appreciated.

CONFERENCES WILL MEET.

The Eastern Virginia Conference will meet with Holy Neck Christian Church, near Holland, Va., on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, November 1st, 2nd and 3rd. Opening session 10 o'clock Wednesday morning.

The Western North Carolina Conference will meet with the Ramseur Christian Church, Ramseur, N. C., on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, November 7th, 8th and 9th.

The North Carolina and Virginia Conference will meet with Union Christian Church, Alamance County, N. C., on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, November 14th, 15th and 16th.

The Eastern North Carolina Conference will meet on Tuesday and Wednesday, November 21st and 22nd. Place to be published later.

We will appreciate it greatly if the secretaries of the Georgia and Alabama bodies will supply the information as to dates and places of their meetings.

The Virginia Valley Central Conference was held in August.

When he has time, the writer likes to “figure.” He has in time past, seen men gather in the village store and whittle and whittle and tell stories, for want of something better to do. There are others who gather round the checker board and play checkers. But your writer likes to figure. Sometimes the figuring amounts to something—more often, perhaps, it does not. This time, at least, he hopes it will.

I was figuring the other day, wondering why Dr. Atkinson and Dr. Smith and Mr. Johnston and Mr. Lester and others who are trying to do things for the Kingdom of God in our Christian Church, were having such a hard time putting over their efforts. And I just figured it was because the thirty-odd thousand good people of our church didn't know—not didn't care—about our needs.

Yes, I know that there are some of them who know and don't care, but there are so many more that do not know.

I picked up a copy of the 1932 Annual and began figuring to see if I could find a reason. I believe I did. Glancing through the statistical tables, my eyes fell upon the names of two churches. Taking them all in all they are probably well matched for a comparison. Let's call the Church “A” and Church “B”. Church “A” cost quite a bit more to build; it is more modern in its equipment, and it has around 650 members. Church “B” has less than 450 members, but it is excellently manned in spite of its handicap of inferior equipment. The pastors are both excellent men, well educated, consecrated, and draw practically the same salaries, when differences in living costs in the two localities are considered. Not only that but these two churches raised almost the same amount per capita for their own expenses during the last year.

Here, however, our comparison begins to change. Church “A” last year paid $150.00 on its conference apportionment, or less than 25 cents a member; Church “B” paid $350.00, or more than three times as much per capita. Church “A” paid less than $175.00 on missions, about 25 cents a member; Church “B” paid about $1,100.00, nearly $2.50 per member. Church “A” gave nearly 30 cents per member to the Christian Orphanage; Church “B” gave $1.00. Church “A” tied Church “B” on other benevolences, but “other benevolences” usually include benevolences certainly half of which is spent at home.

Now, let's summarize our figuring: Church “A” raised for all purposes around $10.00 per member; Church “B” over $13.00. Church “A” raised nearly $1.00 more per member for her own uses, but while she was giving $1.25 a member to others, Church “B” gave nearly five times as much. While the larger church was giving less than $750.00, the smaller church gave nearly $2,500.00.

And then I asked myself again: “What can be the matter?” I wonder if it is because the people don't know what God is calling upon them to do? I think they would care if they knew. I turned to THE SUN mailing list, and I found this: Church “A” with its over 600 members, had less than a dozen subscribers on the list—even her pastor was in arrears. The other church has one subscriber for every ten members—not enough, but Oh, so much better than the first. At least one family in five in this church knows—and cares.

How easy it would be for our Mission Cause, for our College, and for our Orphanage, if they all knew.

Gratitude to God makes even a temporal blessing a taste of heaven.—Romaine.

There are only 11 forms of literature, says a critic, ranging for a period of 3,000 years from Homer to Kipling, and in that time every great thought that has come to us has been couched in these 11 forms or types. These are poetry—epic poems or epics, lyric poems or lyrics, dramatic poems or dramas, and ballads; in prose—histories, orations, biographies, letters, essays, novels and short stories. The Bible from Genesis to Revelation includes all of these.—Anon.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

GAMBLING SLOT MACHINES.

The Literary Digest in its issues of August 19th and 26th, has rendered the public invaluable service, if that public is of a mind to profit by glaring and startling facts. Of recent months the slot machine has spread its death dealing tentacles out into every state, city, village and hamlet of our nation. It was no respecter of age, sex, fortune, misfortune, rich, poor, learned or ignorant. It was worse, it still is worse, than the most violent epidemic, and to its wiles millions are victims daily. The Digest shows that this is one form of racketeering that was, and is, not confined to Chicago, New York or Philadelphia, much as the cities have lost and are losing, but has taken in small towns and rural districts as well, so that this game of the gamester is played with and to the everlasting hurt of innocent children and poor gullibles of every class.

But to facts in the case. Says the Literary Digest, August 19th:

"Sucker Money!

"That's what public officials call the millions of pennies, nickels, dimes and quarters that go annually into gambling slot-machines.

"Slot-machine gambling has become one of the nation's largest and most lucrative rackets—lucrative for the machine owners, but not for the gullible players. It is reported that the nation has been literally flooded with slot-machines in the past twenty-four months. The sucker-money intake has climbed into 'big-business' figures.

"Receipts for the nation run into millions of dollars a week, it is estimated. Officials merely shrug their shoulders when asked the extent of the racket. It is too wide-spread, too under-cover, for accurate analysis.

"When Joseph V. McKee was Mayor of New York City he called this form of gambling the world's 'meanest racket,' because it preys on the 'small fry' and children. But there is more than the purely moral side. The slot-machine used for gambling never gives the player an even break for his money. It is impossible to beat the machine by any manner of consistent playing. It is rigged to take his money and give nothing—in the end in return. Other games of chance reward the player in proportion to his skill. But the unsuspecting slot-machine player, lured on by many attractive 'come-ons' to risk his money in the hope of winning more money, rarely realizes what he's up against.

"Each machine has a coin slot at the top, marked for the proper coin denomination. The majority of the machines take nickels exclusively, although there are many machines that are also equipped to take any size coin. Usually at the right-hand side is a lever which the player pulls to operate the mechanism. Covering the upper face of most of the machines is a glass plate, behind which revolve three wheels, with the edges toward the player. On the edges are pictorial subjects, or symbols, such as lemons (how appropriate!), cherries, bells, and usually a series of bars. The bars or their equivalent are important to the player for it is only when all three of the wheels come to a stop with the bars lined up that the machine releases the coveted 'jack-pot,' a collection of money or slugs to the value of $2 to $6. As part of the lure, the 'jack-pot' is in full view of the player, but always behind shatter-proof glass.

"Operation of the machine is simple for the player. Certainly no intelligence or skill is needed, or can be used. The player drops in his coin, pulls the lever, and the three wheels whirl. One by one the wheels catch in cogs and come to dramatic stops. What the player gets in return for his nickel depends on the combination of symbols on the wheels.

"What are the chances of winning? As a matter of pure mathematics, the player has one chance in a thousand of winning a jack-pot on common-type machine, providing the machine has not been rigged. That is a long chance, indeed. The player could use up $50 in nickels before winning the big prize of a few dollars.

"Prof. E. E. Free, of New York University, calculated the chances of winning (more properly, losing) on a common type of machine. His deductions show:

"When the player drops a coin he has one chance in $8 \frac{1}{3}$ of getting 2 slugs back; one chance in $12 \frac{1}{2}$ of getting 4 slugs back; one chance in $8 \frac{1}{3}$ of getting 8 slugs back; one chance in 250 of getting 12 slugs back; one chance in 500 of getting 16 slugs back; one chance in 1,000 of getting a jack-pot."

The Digest article points out further that these machines are so made that at best they give back to "players" only 40 per cent of the money they put in, 60 per cent being carried by a mysterious device to a concealed box and thus retained for the owner of the machine. What is to be thought of a public that is spending millions monthly in "playing" machines so built as to retain 60 cents out of every dollar put in, even if one is lucky?

Finding out that such gangster methods and racketeering were being carried out openly in its drug stores, restaurants, and public places, Philadelphia has just recently smashed to pieces $50,000 worth of these slot-machines, and the pity is that Philadelphia police did not keep up their work throughout our land until this "innocent gambling" device, raking in millions for its masters, were totally blotted out. J. O. A.

VISITING THE AFFLICTED.

One finds comfort, as well as satisfaction of conscience, in visiting a person in affliction, especially when the afflicted one seems benefitted and grateful. We are not surprised, therefore, that James, the most practical and matter-of-fact of the New Testament writers, defines pure religion in terms of visiting "the widow and the fatherless in their affliction." One who does much of that is likely to get so much satisfaction and joy out of it that he will not find time for, nor get pleasure in becoming "spotted" with the world and worldliness.

One knows James' very workable definition of pure religion, "To visit the widow and the fatherless in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." One of the best antidotes to becoming "spotted" and worldly minded is to visit the widow and the fatherless in their affliction.

This is why a live, thorough-going, enthusiastic missionary church is never a worldly minded church, keeps itself "unspotted," untainted with false doctrines and practices, and does so much in every way to build up the kingdom of righteousness. The most afflicted widows and fatherless on this earth are those whose souls are hungry, unfed, starved—those who go daily without the gospel which is the bread of life. This is the true, this is real charity, that which Paul was speaking of when he said, "Though I give all my goods to feed the poor and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing." Giving "goods" to feed the body is not enough. We must make gifts of love and devotion to relieve souls, save the perishing, carry the message of eternal life to the needy and hungry of heart if we are to have and exercise real charity.

That is a sad, a tragic thing we are printing in the last paragraph on another page under the title, "Your Representatives Abroad." Sad and tragic because true and personal to each and every SUN reader. Look! "During the past four years, one-fifth of our missionaries have been brought home, and unless increasing financial support can be had, more will follow." Think of it. Those who have sacrificed all and gone out as our living links to visit the widow and the fatherless in their awful and fatal affliction, are being told by us, "Stop your soul-saving work; we no longer support you." J. O. A.

"BE OF GOOD CHEER!"

Have you observed what the last words were that Jesus spoke to his disciples before closing prayer in his last evening with them? The record is in John 16:33, and reads: "These things have I spoken unto you that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation, but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world."

This is one of the most appropriate scriptures we know for God's people at this time of wide-spread anxiety and distress. If Jesus were with us, as he was with that group in the dark hours just before his arrest and execution, perhaps he would speak the same words once more. This would remind us that the peace of God is the true foundation for contentment; having that we can face any disaster with courage, knowing that all will be well for a long eternity.

When Jesus told his followers to "be of good cheer," he was not making light of their grief over his imminent departure; he was not mocking them with empty and meaningless words. He followed the exhortation to good cheer with that great proclamation, "I have overcome the world." We follow a Master who has all power in heaven and in earth, and in due time his kingdom of power shall appear and all that he declared will have its realization.—Wesleyan Methodist.

A VISIT TO THE HOLY LAND.

THE ANTIQUITY AND UNIQUENESS OF PALESTINE.

(Article No. II.)

By REV. ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, D. D.

Palestine is one of the oldest countries of the world, and has been named "The Cradle of Civilization." The archaeologists tell us that more than ten thousand years before Christ, people were living in Palestine during what is called "The Early Stone Age," or "The Paleolithic Age." Many implements made of rough flint and other stone characterizing that prehistoric period have been found within recent years in the caves and caverns of Palestine substantiating that belief. These earliest people to inhabit Palestine were followed by the people of "The Neolithic" or "Later Stone Age," which fact is also substantiated by the findings of the archaeologists. As late as 3,000 years before Christ, parts of Palestine were inhabited by the cave dwellers. There are numerous caves and caverns and dens in many parts of Palestine today that have been there all these many centuries. This summer we visited one of those ancient caves of which there are so many in Palestine. The one we visited was at the base of the mountain on which the prophet Micah had his home, overlooking the Philistine plains or the Sheplelah—the lowlands of the coast region. Human skeletons have been discovered in some of those ancient caves showing that the cave dwellers were physical giants. We saw some of the skulls of those giants in the Museum at Jerusalem.

The name Palestine is of Philistine origin, it being originally the name given to the coast country which was inhabited by the Philistines and the name was later applied to the land of Israel.

The northern boundary of Palestine may be indicated by Mount Hermon at whose base the River Jordan has its beginning; the southern border might be indicated by the southern extremity of the Dead Sea; the eastern border by an imaginary line dropped from Mount Hermon to the lower point of the Dead Sea, the Mediterranean Sea of course forming the western border, always referred to in the Bible as "The Great Sea." The greatest length of Palestine is 200 miles and the greatest width is 160 miles. The average length of Palestine from north to south is approximately 150 miles, the average width being 50 miles. Palestine is about the size of the State of Vermont and about four times the size of the State of Delaware, having an area of 9,000 square miles. About two-thirds of the area of Palestine is on the west side of the Jordan and the other third on the east side.

Palestine has one of the most striking physical features to be found anywhere in the whole world as regards the nature of its great depressions. The topography of the country is most unusual. Practically the entire Jordan valley is below the sea level. The Sea of Galilee is 620 feet below sea level, and the Dead Sea is 1,300 feet below sea level, while the bottom of the Dead Sea is 2,600 feet below sea level. And as a contrast to these unusual depressions, many of the hills and mountains of Palestine are from 3,000 to 6,000 feet above the sea level. The city of Jerusalem for instance is 2,700 feet above the sea level, while the city of Jericho, seventeen miles from Jerusalem, is more than 1,000 feet below sea level. All the area which is below sea level is warm throughout the year, and extremely warm night and day in the summer season. The higher elevations such as Jerusalem find it cooler in the winter season, and in the summer while the days are very warm, the nights are unusually cool. We had to sleep under blankets in Jerusalem every night in the hottest part of the summer.

The Wilderness of Judea so often mentioned in the Bible consists of the barren mountainous region, rugged and forbidding, and has been practically uninhabited down through all the centuries past the same as it is today, except by bandits and robbers.

The plains and the valleys and the lowlands of Palestine have furnished the people opportunity to engage in agriculture for all these thousands of years, while the uplands have been used for pasturage. Never have the people of Palestine taken enthusiastically to agricultural pursuits. It has not seemed to be in their line. The Semitic people are not overly ambitious for hard work anyway, preferring instead the easier life of shepherding. But in recent years, more attention has been given to agriculture in Palestine. This new interest in agriculture is one of the contributions of the Zionist Movement.

The high hills and mountain tops provided sites for the cities in the Palestine of the past, and were so selected because of the natural protection they offered against approaching enemies. The valleys and plains of Palestine have been the scenes of many wars and great bloodshed, the battle grounds where generation after generation of the "the people of Palestine fought and spilled their blood with absolute abandon" in order to hold back the various invading armies, who sought to possess the country not alone because of its natural resources which were few, but because it was the gateway to the rest of the world.

Because of the fact that Palestine is surrounded practically by desert or sea, the people from the desert since the very earliest days were eager, of course to get into Palestine where the grazing was good for their flocks, and where springs of water were found for their families and flocks. The productivity of Palestine, though it would seem most unpromising to people in a country like ours, yet to those dwellers of the desert it seemed like paradise itself. That fact was the reason for numerous invasions by enemy tribes from the desert, thus causing Palestine to be the scene of war and bloodshed through all the early centuries.

Then again, as already referred to, the fact that Palestine was the only way of passage between the region of the Nile and the region of the Euphrates also helps to explain the many invasions and wars that kept ancient and medieval Palestine drenched in human blood.

The Plain of Esdraelon, which stretches from Mount Carmel in a southeasterly direction south of Nazareth, drained to the sea by the River Kishon, is said to be the world's greatest battlefield, more battles having been fought there than on any other field in the world. It is declared that the ancient city of Negiddo overlooking this historic plain has witnessed more sights of human slaughter than any other city in history. And this ancient plain drenched by human blood down through the centuries has been thought of as the site where the battle of Armageddon of prophecy would take place.

From any of the principal mountains of Palestine, one's vision can sweep the wide range of territory including many of the numerous plains, valleys and mountains mentioned so frequently in the Old Testament. For instance, while riding up the steep and winding road to the top of Mount Tabor, in looking backward or off to the side, we were able to see for miles and miles the villages nestled against the hillsides—the mountains and wadies here and there so familiar to the prophets and to Jesus, and so often referred to by name in the scriptures, for Mount Tabor is only a few miles from Nazareth where Jesus grew up. And then when we reached the top of that interesting mountain, we found a large monastery on the very top of the mountain. After being served tea in this Franciscan Monastery by the hospitable monks who were our hosts for the evening, we stood on the porch of the Monastery and again having the principal points of interest pointed out to us, we gazed off into the distance. No doubt, Jesus and his disciples often climbed to that same elevation when they wished to get away from the pressing crowd. Indeed tradition has it that that same mountain, Mount Tabor, was the Mount of Transfiguration. Mount Hermon is also thought of in the same connection, there being a difference of opinion among the Biblical scholars, as well as among the native guides.

As we stood on the top of Mount Tabor which was so familiar to our Lord, our vision took in Mount Hermon, Mount Hattin or Mount of the Beatitudes, the Sea of Galilee, the Jordan River, Mount Gilboa, the Valley of Jezreel, the site of the ancient village of Endor and the village of Nain, Mount Carmel, the village of Cana, Nazareth, the home town of Jesus, and the ancient city of Sepphoris, besides many other Biblical landmarks. Thus the landmarks of the Palestine of yesterday are still there to greet the visitor's eyes today and to remind one that while man builds towns and cities that may lie in ruins within a few centuries such as is true of scores of the places known to Jesus and the prophets when here in the flesh, that the valleys and plains and the mountains and hills of the Lord stand secure defying the ravages of time.

Those words of the Psalmist referring to the mountains have a new meaning to one who looks upon the mountains of Palestine and thinks how they have stood in their same eternal grandeur down through all the centuries witnessing the pageantry of history. And so when the Psalmist declares "As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people from this time forth and forevermore," one can understand something of the reach of the Psalmist's faith. For when one sees that circle of mountains rising around about Jerusalem, maintaining their same position down through all the centuries past and to remain the same through all the centuries to come—one has a new appreciation of the illustration those mountains afford of how the Lord keeps his protecting, loving power always and forever around about his people.

"DON'TS" FOR CHURCH ON SABBATH.

Don't stay away because company comes; bring them.

Don't stay away because it rains; that would not keep you from business.

Don't stay away because you won't be missed in a crowd; God misses you.

Don't stay away because it isn't your denomination; the same excuse will keep you out of heaven.

Don't stay away because you have no influence. The church-goer preaches a sermon as long as the way thither.

Don't stay away because you know more than the preacher. God may have something to say to you worth hearing.

Don't stay away because the church does not need you. Never did the church need more and better men and women.

Don't stay away because the church is imperfect. Should you find and join the perfect church, its perfection would cease.

Don't stay away because you do not need the church. 'Tisn't so. If you must look at the earth six days, take one to examine the clouds.—Exchange,

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The protracted meeting season, among the country churches near Suffolk, has been successful. The meeting at Cypress Chapel was held the week following the third Sunday in August. This church has experienced some wonderful revivals during its eventful history. The meeting this year was conducted by the pastor, Rev. R. E. Brittle. Thirty-one new members were added to the church during the meeting, and the church experienced a great spiritual revival.

During the past week meetings were held at the Bethlehem, Damascus and Liberty Spring Churches. At Bethlehem the meeting was conducted by the pastor, Rev. R. E. Brittle. Twenty members were received into fellowship. The congregations were large and attentive. It was good to be there. At Liberty Spring the writer was assisted by Rev. J. F. Morgan of Rosemont. He won the hearts of the people by his gospel messages in song and in sermon. It was one of the best revivals from the standpoint of church interest ever held in the church. There was a deep spiritual interest from the first service. A canvass of the congregation revealed that nearly every one who attended the services is a member of the church. Four new members were received at the close on Friday. Rev. O. D. Poythress assisted Rev. E. B. White, pastor, at Damascus. The attendance was good. There were eight or ten professions of faith. Several are expected to unite with the church at the next service.

Next week meetings will be held at Mt. Carmel and Oakland Churches. Rev. R. A. Whitten will assist at Mt. Carmel, and Rev. O. D. Poythress will preach at Oakland. These are strong churches and we are expecting an outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the people who attend.

Protracted meetings are conducted to give people an opportunity to do special work in winning people to Christ. The day of the revival has not passed. God honors this type of evangelism. It is not the only type, and, in some cases, it may not be the best type. But it is a method which has been greatly used of God to win souls.

The church has not lost its power. The gospel is still the power of God unto salvation to them who believe in Jesus Christ. It will never be discarded. The church is eternal. The gates of hell shall not prevail against it. It is as enduring as the Word of God. All the law of God must be fulfilled. No legislation can repeal the Ten Commandments and give man freedom from the operation of spiritual law. In spite of all political parties and legislatures, "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."

Congress may declare beer is not intoxicating. But the man of sensitive nervous temperament drinks it too freely and loses control of his nerves and muscles. Man must live under the code of Bible law. Men may defy God's authority and crucify faithful prophets who declare the gospel of Jesus Christ. Dogs bark at the sun but it shines. There is no escape from God. He will bring the world, some day, to bow at the feet of Jesus. Therefore, this is not a time to lose faith in the triumph of righteousness. Paganism is on the throne in America today. The land of religious liberty and free speech is fast becoming a land of cynicism and political intolerance. The newspapers which, a few years ago, sought to influence an assistance of the pulpit, are openly holding the minister up to ridicule and persecution. The present political, financial and moral upheaval is to be lamented by all right thinking citizens. But it is not hopeless. Beer gardens and booze distributors will make an army of staggering drunkards, whose hungry wives and children will knock at the door of the ministers and churches, for food and raiment. The liquor interests will not help them. But the ministers and churches will render assistance. And, some day, it may be soon, the preaching of the simple gospel will drive back the tide of greed which seeks, now, to destroy Christianity, and debauch humanity for gold. Righteousness will prevail. All wickedness shall perish. I. W. JOHNSON.

1933 OPENING.

By the time this article reaches the subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Elon College will have had its forty-fifth opening. Usually by this time, the College authorities are able to approximate what the opening will be. Three weeks ago I knew pretty well about how many we would enroll for this session. Things, however, seem to be considerably upset in these recent days. Up to August 10th, we had more than twice as many applications as we had a year ago at the same time. Efforts in behalf of the College for the past three weeks have netted us very little definite good. We are still hopeful, however, and are expecting encouraging results during the opening days of next week.

East Dormitory is completed and is beautiful throughout. It will be fully equipped with new furniture. The comfort and convenience of the students have been carefully considered in overhauling this building. The formal opening service will be held Friday afternoon, 2:00 o'clock, September 8th. The program will be featured by addresses delivered by prominent alumni and musical numbers furnished by the Elon Singers; these will be given in the afternoon, and the public reception to students and friends in the evening. A most earnest and cordial invitation is extended to all friends of the College to attend these exercises. Other buildings on the campus are being cleaned and partially overhauled so that they will be in order for the approaching session.

We shall have a number of new members of the faculty. Dr. Dodson, of Chicago, becomes the head of our Religious Education Department. He holds the doctor's degree, having majored in the field of Religious Education. Miss Wilma Potts, of Huntington, Indiana, will be teacher of Domestic Science. Miss Floyd Child, of LaGrange, Ga., will have charge of our Dramatic Department. Miss Lucie Landen, of Ann Arbor, Mich., will have charge of the Violin Department and the College orchestra. Mr. Frank Johnson, of West Virginia, will head up the religious activities organization of the campus and will teach physical education for young men. Mrs. Sue Craft Howell, of Raleigh, N. C., will have charge of the shorthand and typewriting departments of the College. These in addition to the members who were with us last year will constitute our faculty for 1933-34. We are able to present a very strong faculty, and we offer advantages to young people who are looking for college training that is superior.

This is a good time for friends of the College to show their interest in a very definite way. In the average community, there are always from one to one-half dozen young people who usually up to the last moment are undecided about where to go. They have had so many invitations, read so many catalogues, entertained so many college agents that they are simply bewildered and unable to reach a decision. A few minutes' counsel from an interested neighbor or friend will be of great service. Won't you who are interested in Elon College take advantage of this opportunity? Search out such young people and help them to reach a decision for Elon College. This is the kind of loyalty and service that really counts in the time of need. We are earnestly hoping that our enrollment will reach three hundred and fifty for the first semester. This goal can be reached by the help and cooperation of ministers, Sunday School superintendents, alumni, and friends of the College. Necessarily, we are dependent upon you. I know that you would not want to fail us in a campaign like this. Now is the time to show your interest and loyalty. A few words from you will help tremendously.

Tuesday is registration day for freshmen; Thursday is registration day for upper classmen; and Friday regular class work will begin. Any student arriving Monday or Tuesday of the following week will be enrolled to no disadvantage for the entire course. You will have time to put in some effective service; do not miss this opportunity.

Remember, we are expecting you at the opening of East Dormitory, Friday, at 2 o'clock.

PISGAH, ALA.

I am just back from Pisgah, and feel that I must say a word about our North Alabama field. Rev. J. H. Hughes has been at Pisgah now seven years, and I have been with him five summers in revivals, and I think I have observed some things about the people and the field there.

The Pisgah Church is composed of some of our best people. The work goes well considering the fact that they have had to struggle alone so far as having another congregation of the Christian Church associated with them is concerned.

The church was organized by Rev. J. W. Elder, who passed on to his reward ten years ago the 22nd of this month, and most of whose family still live in that section. Some of them are doing what they can for the church. Brother Elder was loved by all the people and his labors of love will be remembered for a long time.

Brother Hughes and his good family are there in the parsonage, and he, Brother Hughes, is not only the esteemed pastor of the Pisgah Church but has the confidence and is held in high esteem by the people of both the Methodist and Baptist Churches, and the community, and he is therefore the efficient leader in the community life, as well as in the church life.

Something must be done to enlarge our boundaries there, as the field is there and is open to us. Yes, there is a great and open door. The question is, shall we enter? Now, Brother Hughes is there and he is certainly qualified to do the work, and he knows the work and the field, and I pray that somehow we may get behind him with our prayers and our money and make it possible for him to establish other churches which can be done in the near future with our cooperation.

But Brother Hughes is helpless, as he is like most of us preachers without money. The Alabama Conference can make it possible for Brother Hughes to do this work and I believe that we will.

The meeting began there Saturday night before the third Sunday of August, and closed on the following Thursday night. We had a great meeting, but we had to close it and come home just when it should have gone on for a few days.

Brother Hughes and his good family are a real asset to our work in that section, and please let's lend to them a helping hand at this time.

NEW LEBANON REVIVAL.

This year seems to be a season of refreshing and spiritual awakening in church revivals and growth. From far and near has come the news that wonderful revivals are being held this year. The depression probably has brought us to our senses and again we are realizing our dependence upon the Supreme Being.

We are very happy to report that New Lebanon has recently experienced one of the greatest revivals in the history of the church. Rev. J. L. Neese, pastor of our church, was very fortunate in securing Rev. H. C. Caviness and his wife to assist in this meeting.

Our revival began July 16th, and closed July 30th. This gave us a two weeks' revival. Mr. Caviness surely was at his very best all the time he was with us. For three times every day for two weeks he came to us with stirring messages, which it seemed to us were fresh from the throne of God. Every message was of such a spiritual nature and such heart-reaching effect that men and women, boys and girls were easily moved and ready to find an altar. Verily, the Spirit of God worked mightily in the hearts of the unsaved. The professions and reclamations were more than we have known for years in the history of our church. Forty-five additions were made to the church. Many old people were led to remark that this was the best meeting they have ever witnessed.

We shall always remember Mr. Neese very kindly for bringing Mr. and Mrs. Caviness to our community. We feel that our church has been greatly revived. We trust this revival has just begun and will live for many years to come. We all learned to love Mr. and Mrs. Caviness, and we feel that our church has been strengthened and inspired spiritually.

We would like to pass this on to other churches that wherever Mr. and Mrs. Caviness go they take with them the true gospel, upholding our Christ and inspiring others to join in the great battle for our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Any church is fortunate to have them.

In the afternoon of the fifth Sunday in August, forty-two were baptized, some by immersion and others by sprinkling.

We are glad to say that Rev. J. L. Neese has been called to serve us as pastor again. This is the beginning of the third year, which is proof enough that we love him more and more. It has been a joy to us to have him serve us these past years and we trust he will have the hearty cooperation of all members.

A MEMBER.

LINVILLE, LA.

I began a revival at this place Sunday night, August 20th, and will close tonight, August 26th. Interest is growing at every service. There is no church in this immediate section and the authorities will not allow the high school auditorium to be used for religious purposes. We are holding open air services at night only. I have never preached to a congregation that seemed more appreciative.

This is a great opportunity for our church. The fact is, the churches they have within reach of this place are so narrow they cannot reach the young people. The young people are just as they are everywhere: bubbling over with energy.

The people here as a whole enjoy fishing and frolicking, but still they are hungry for the simple story of Jesus.

I am doing carpenter work in the day time and preaching at night. I have been greatly blessed, but realize I must take a little rest from manual labor.

I will begin a revival at Holmesville, about 25 miles from here, tomorrow. We have quite a few members of the Christian Church there.

I will write more in detail about my work when that meeting is finished.

There is a fine field for our church here if we only had the right man located here. Under the present conditions I see no chance to locate that man.

You know we have a Christian Church at Sand Hill, Texas, about 170 miles from here. I may go over there and hold a meeting, as I had an invitation from the pastor. G. H. VEAZEY.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

On Sunday, August 27, 1933, at the 11 o'clock hour, we filled our regular appointment at Concord Church. A large and appreciative congregation greeted the pastor after the revival meeting one month ago. At this hour a unanimous call was extended to the pastor for the ensuing year.

When we returned to our automobile after the service, we found it loaded with things good for a pastor's pantry. We mention some things that were included in this kind act by church and community: potatoes, tomatoes, beans, corn, meal, flour, chickens, onions, apples, canned goods, preserves, sugar, honey, etc.

Many thanks to one and all who had a part or intended to contribute to our comfort. May the Lord abundantly bless each one and help me to be a more faithful and appreciative pastor.

L. L. WYRICK.

DAMASCUS.

We have just closed a most successful revival at Damascus Christian Church, Sunbury, N. C. Rev. O. D. Poythress assisted our pastor, Rev. E. B. White, and preached strong, soul-stirring sermons. We feel that much good has been accomplished.

Capacity crowds attended the services. The music was a source of inspiration to all, especially the solos by Rev. Poythress and trios by Rev. Poythress, Rev. White and Bedford Brown. Our pastor led the song service and added much to the meeting by his splendid singing.

Rev. White and Rev. Poythress also assisted in the opening exercises of the Sunbury High School. They both made interesting talks and sang spirituals. A large crowd was present.

PRAYER.

Our God and Father, thou knowest when love and labor are directed wholly to thee. We thank thee that Christian effort never is lost; that, notwithstanding the peril and power of organized wicked propaganda, sometimes we can see the unfolding of thy purposes even as we ask. Give to the church spirit and strength valiantly to fight for those measures which most surely bespeak thy kingdom's reign and show us where and how to serve thee best. For Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

YOUR AMBASSADORS AND CHRIST'S.

[Recall, please, that those who have given up all for Christ and the gospel and have gone out as missionaries are our ambassadors, as well as ambassadors for Christ. We have sent them out because we felt that they were called of Christ to go out in his name and to reveal him to those who are in greatest need. The following is the final page in the 1933 Guest Book, which we trust every SUN reader will carefully and prayerfully peruse. Stop, Look, Listen!—J. O. A.]

The support of over 600 missionaries located at 97 stations in a dozen countries is the heart of the work of the American Board. These men and women are ambassadors of Christian civilization to the lands which need Christ most. They serve as living links between races. They dwell in the midst of the homes of the people. Their dealings are with the ordinary men and women as well as the ruling classes. By their faithful lives they are laying the foundations for that mutual understanding between nations upon which the peace of the world will ultimately depend.

No more difficult task can be imagined than that which confronts the missionary. His ultimate purpose is to penetrate so deeply into the hearts and lives of another people that the spirit of Christian devotion which is in him may become a part of their innermost being. By changing men he would transform nations.

In the pursuance of this aim the missionary is called upon to perform a great variety of skilled services. His first and most effective way of revealing Christ is through practical human helpfulness. In America the church has handed over to other agencies the responsibility for educating the young, caring for the sick and many forms of what is known as social service. In mission lands the church has been the pioneer agency in all of these fields, and is still active in most of them. As our missionaries serve humanity in even a greater variety of ways than do our ministers at home, they need a greater variety of professional training. As a consequence we send out not only ordained ministers, but also doctors, nurses and teachers, trained social workers and agricultural experts.

Few groups of people anywhere are more carefully selected than the missionaries of the American Board. Far more than mere technical skill in their chosen profession is required of them. They must be men and women of an abiding Christian purpose. Their faith must express itself through a winsome personality in order that they may inspire the love and confidence of the people to whom they are sent. Easy adaptability to the ways of another land and climate is essential. They must be ready to accept the hospitality and to share the food of these people.

The missionary is expected to delve deeply into the cultural and religious life of the people among whom he ministers. His mastery of the language is tested through a series of stringent examinations. He studies their literary classics; he seeks an understanding of their music and art; he approaches the traditional faith which he finds about him with all of the sympathy and understanding which he can muster. Like his master, Jesus Christ, he seeks not to destroy, but to fulfill.

The highest scholastic training is essential for success in such a field of effort. Aside from a very few men and women sent out for specific technical tasks the missionaries of the American Board are all college graduates, many of them of Phi Beta Kappa rank. In addition most of the men and many of the women have done graduate work. As they are expected to spend a portion at least of each furlough year in graduate study, missionaries have an unusual opportunity to keep their education up-to-date.

Yet today we are recalling to America these brothers and sisters, our sons and daughters who have carefully prepared themselves for the most exacting of callings, who have learned an alien language, made themselves homes in other lands! During the past four years, one-fifth of our missionaries have been brought home, and unless increasing financial support can be had, more will follow. In the name of economy the American Board is being forced to pursue a policy which involves a colossal waste in money, in life, in missed opportunities. To bring home men and women who are in the midst of useful careers in other lands to further swell the unemployed of our own land is almost criminal—and yet it cannot be helped unless our churches match returning incomes with increasing gifts.

MISSIONS A SUCCESS.

No other enterprise among men has succeeded as well as Christian missions. When the disciples were scattered abroad by the persecution that arose over the martyrdom of Stephen they went everywhere "preaching the gospel." This was a new message and it revived a dying world. Men found the heart to try to live again. Paul was the first world missionary and the books that would tell the story of the rest could not be written. Suffice it to say that the modern progress of the race in freedom, morals and manners, in knowledge, in idealism and even in material things is almost entirely the result of the faithful preaching of the gospel.

There are small and large illustrations of the great success of missions. Bishop Peter Trimble Rowe, of Alaska, recently told a New York audience how his work of thirty-six years in that cold northwest land has worked out. Science and invention have been called into service and the change seems next to miraculous. Where he once made parish visits on snowshoes, by dog sled or in canoes, he now goes in an airplane, making in a few hours trips that formerly required weeks. "Christianity has so won the Indians," he said, "that I doubt if you can find any who have not accepted the Christian faith. I have known them to come over a hundred miles for communion services."

The hope of civilization is in the missionary. He is the true pioneer of humanity. He leads men out of the jungle into plain paths. The race will not live without his word and his works. Unless the nations listen to him they will forever lag behind subject to misery, want, sin and degradations.

We have every confidence in the good influence of leagues, compacts, and treaties; but they are not and cannot be finally successful. The world must be saved from its sins. No wisdom is great enough to bless a man while he continues dead in trespasses. The missionary alone, with his everlasting gospel, can do the people full and everlasting good.

The missionary is the great man of the ages.—Christian Evangelist.

To a Chinese town where missionary work has long been established came a communist organizer not long ago, ready to stir up strife and paint the town his favorite color, but his stay was brief. "Why do you not stay?" he was asked on his departure. "This town is too Christian," he said, "to be of any use to us."—The Spirit of Missions.

PASTOR ASSAILS FILM'S USE OF GOD'S KEY WORDS.

Protecting against the use of religious words for irreligious purposes, the Rev. R. Lee House, pastor of the First Congregational-Christian Church, Newport News, Va., in a sermon recently declared that as a means of publicity picture producers have boldly taken the most sacred words of the religious vocabulary and played them up to catch the crowd. The Rev. Mr. House spoke on the subject, "A Plea for Reverence."

"We have been thinking together," the minister said, "concerning the place of reverence in the life of Christ and in human society today.

"Let us now remember that there are distinguishable influences in our midst that tend to rob us of the spirit of reverence. Such influences are bearing the generation in such way as to make it increasingly difficult, if not impossible, for them to be truly reverent.

"I make bold to mention one factor in the great conspiracy to break down the spirit of reverence, I refer to certain motion pictures. It is not my pulpit hobby to berate movies. But if 'I am set for the defense of the Gospel' there are some things which I must protest.

"I am referring not primarily to the content rather to the titles. What has happened? Just this: As a means of publicity the picture producers have boldly entered the religious vocabulary, taking the most sacred words and playing them up to catch the crowd.

"They took a play decently entitled 'I, Jerry, Take Thee, Joan,' and deliberately changed it to 'Merrily We Go to Hell.' They also changed the 'Pigboats' to 'Hell Below.' Here are a few other titles: 'Guilty as Hell,' 'Devil on Deck,' 'Hell-Fire Austin,' 'They Call It Sin,' 'Mayor of Hell,' and 'Sinners in the Sun.'

"Now in religion we depend on certain words to convey our meaning. Down through the years these words have been filled with religious significance and sharpened for spiritual purposes. Primary among these words are: God, Heaven, Hell, Sin and Devil. These are the tools or instruments with which we work. Now the picture producers have not been content to flash upon the screen those things which make a mockery of sacred things, but have laid hold with violent hands on the very words by which religious truth is imparted, dragged them down into the gutters of triviality and parade them before the public saturate and ripping with filth. Now the minister and the Sunday School teacher find themselves sadly disarmed. Their words now fall on a multitude of ears as 'sounding brass or a clanging cymbal,' for these words have been robbed of their spiritual significance.

"The thing I am protesting against is the use of religious for irreligious purposes. A father whose son has ruined his razor by cutting on coarse objects may secure another perfectly good razor. But if these people have dulled the spiritual edge of our religious vocabulary, the matter is not so simple for us.

"When Moses trod on holy ground he reverently removed his shoes from his feet. I declare that these people have trod carelessly and rough shod on holy ground. Therefore, in making this plea for reverence, I am also protesting against those influences which clip the wings of devotion and poison the atmosphere of reverence."—Newport News Times-Herald.

Kind words do not cost much. They never blister the lips. We never heard of any mental trouble arising from this quarter. Though they do not cost much, they accomplish much. They make other people good-natured and produce their own image on men's souls, and a beautiful image it is.—Pascal.

A Story for the Children

PEGGY'S FALSE FACE.

Peggy started to the store for a pound of butter. Mother told her to go to the cheapest place, because in that small town there were two stores in which the Allens traded. At Smith's butter was five cents cheaper than at Green's. As Peggy walked along her head was bent in thought. There was that lovely false face she wanted for Hallowe'en—it only cost five cents, but mother felt that she couldn't spare even that small amount this week. Oh, and Peggy did want that false face so badly—she was sure if her mother knew how much she wanted it, she would let her get it. All at once a thought came to Peggy—not a very good one, either. Why couldn't she get the butter at Smith's, but let her mother think she got it at Green's? She argued with herself for a few minutes, but finally the thought of the false face overcame everything else and she started off to Smith's.

After getting the butter, she stopped at the dime store for her false face. When she got home, she handed the butter over to her mother and went into the next room.

Mrs. Allen said, "But, Peggy, where is the change?"

"There wasn't any, mother," she answered. "I had to get it at Green's."

"But where did you get the false face? You had no money of your own."

"Oh, mother, you remember that blind man down on the corner that sells pencils? Well, when I went past him, he said, 'Here, little girl, is a nickel for you.' So I went right in and got my false face."

"Peggy! You don't mean to tell me that you took a nickel from that poor, old blind man? Oh, how could you?"

Peggy was beginning to feel a little ashamed, and just then Mrs. Allen unwrapped the butter, and the cashier's slip fell out with Smith's name on it.

Can you imagine how Peggy felt? It was the first time she had deliberately lied to her mother, and, oh, how terribly she felt when her mother told her that now she wouldn't be able to trust her little girl. How she cried—and after all, she didn't wear the false face. "I couldn't mother," she said. "And if you'll promise to trust me again, I'll never, never lie to you again."

Mother believed Peggy's lesson was learned, so she forgave her. Now that Peggy has grown up, she never forgets the lie she told about the blind man.—Margaret Metzger, in the Young Soldier.

HIS TREASURES.

Little Mary was sitting with her Uncle George one afternoon. Uncle George had told her to keep quiet, as he had some accounts to look over; so Mary busied herself with a picture book. For an hour all was still, then Mary heard her uncle say:

"There, I have quite a nice sum laid up against a time of need."

"What are you talking about, Uncle George?" asked Mary.

"About my treasures, little girl, that I have laid up."

"Up in heaven?" asked Mary, who had heard her father that morning read about laying up treasures in heaven.

"Oh, no, Mary; my treasures are all on earth—some in banks and some in other places," answered Uncle George.

"But haven't you any in heaven, too?" asked Mary.

"Well, I don't believe I have," said Uncle George, thoughtfully. "But run away and play with your hoop now, for I am going out."

Uncle George went out, and was gone a good while, but all the time he was thinking that, after all, perhaps he was not so well off if he had no treasure laid up in heaven, to be ready for him when he left this world and his money behind him. He was so impressed with the thought that he wisely decided to lay up treasures in heaven. He did so. Little Mary never knew until years after—when she also, with clear understanding of what it meant, began to lay up for herself treasures in heaven—that it was her childish question that started Uncle George on a generous, active Christian life.—Selected.

The writings of Martin Luther suggest to me ten qualifications for the ministry: 1. He should be able to teach plainly and in order. 2. He should have a good head. 3. Good power of language. 4. A good voice. 5. A good memory. 6. He should know when to stop. 7. He should be sure of what he means to say. 8. He should be ready to stake soul and body, goods and reputation on the truth. 9. He should study diligently. 10. He should suffer himself to be vexed and criticised by everyone.—J. E. Dinger.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

THE LABORING MAN.

Monday was Labor Day. One would think that it was a day set apart for work, but on the contrary it was a holiday, a time of rest for the laborer. It is a time when the leaders of the land are supposed to give some serious thought to those who labor, and when working people have a chance to breathe the open air, undisturbed by the necessity of work.

Far too many people in our own land know nothing of what life should mean in the way of rest, beauty, and friendship. They are driven by the god of hunger and the cruel hand of greed day and night. In mines and factories they labor long with but little share in the rewards of honest toil. Like quarry slaves, they are driven to their dungeon where more labor awaits.

It is difficult for those of us who enjoy the comforts of modern days to realize the sacrifices which others make for our joy. Those of us who burn gasoline and complain at the price, have little idea of the yearning hearts of youths in the oil fields of Kansas and California whose parents stay long and late at the oil wells and then receive only enough for their labors to furnish the bare necessities of life. They wish for culture, clothes and comforts; but they get nothing. I have seen such a youth, a fifteen-year-old girl, clad in ragged but clean overalls, who showed visitors from the East the wells from which came the crude oil while she talked with kindly and wistful, but crude, English of the things she longed to have but never hoped to get.

It may be that the laboring man is coming into his day. It appears that his voice is being heard and the wistfulness of his heart is being felt among people in high places. It is folly to claim that one man should earn millions while others who labor just as hard should starve soul and body. I do not claim to be a Socialist and do not agree with many of the ideas which they present, but I should be delighted to know that the "New Deal" which we are receiving in our day would mean that no one in these United States of ours would receive more than twenty-five thousand dollars a year until every person who works receives as much as three thousand a year.

I believe in the laboring man and the cause which he represents because the Master was a worker. In the carpenter shop he used his skill as a craftsman until he began to carve out human character and lay the foundation of the Church of God. He was in the earth not as a Dictator to give orders, but as a servant who ministered to the needs of men. If lepers should be well, he touched them and gave them health. If the temple needed cleaning, he drove out the cattle and moved the tables. If feet needed washing, he girded himself with a towel and passed about the room with his bowl of water serving those who needed such ministrations. Whatever might be the needed task the Master was ready to minister. He was a laboring man. We should be proud to follow him.

IF HE SHOULD COME.

If Jesus should tramp the streets tonight,
Storm-beaten and hungry for bread,
Seeking a room and a candle light
And a clean though humble bed;
Who would welcome the Workman in,
His hands all bruised and his garments thin—
This Workman from Nazareth?

Would rich folks hurry to bind his bruise,
And shelter his stricken form?
Would they take God in with his muddy shoes
Out of the pitiless storm.
Are they not too busy wreathing their flowers
Or heaping their golden store—
Too busy chasing the bubble hours
For the poor man's God at the door?

And if he should come where churchmen bow,
Forgetting the greater sin,
Would he pause with a light on his wonderful brow
Would he turn to enter in?
And what would he think of their creeds so dim,
Of their weak, uplifted hands,
Of their selfish prayers going up to him
Out of a thousand lands?

—Edward Markham.

WITH HIGH HOPES.

With high hopes thousands of young people go to college in September. They say farewell to home and loved ones and turn their faces toward an unknown future believing that much good lies ahead. The highest ideals they know call them away from all they have loved in childhood to make new friends and to build a new life for themselves. They hope that the future will be successful and happy. This hope, like the tides of the sea, will not be stopped. It must be given a chance for development, or the soul sickens and dies.

These free-spirited, eager, noble youths are dreaming of what the big earth is like, of things they may learn, of friendships they may develop, of the person they may become, and of the work they will do when school is over. They dream dreams and see visions. And well they may, for life, big with possibilities, lies ahead of them. The illusive Infinite beckons them, and their souls respond. They expect to learn what the schools have to offer, develop some ideas of their own, and then make a new world better than the one in which they now live.

This is the process through which progress has been made, and will be made. "Where there is no vision (hope) the people perish." Sometimes those of us who are older lose our clear vision of what ought to be, and hope fades away. Then we have to step aside for those who can see, and believe. Our feeble hands must pass the torch to those who are stronger, more eager, and whose hope still runs at high tide.

The prayers of mothers, ministers and friends will attend those who, with high hopes, answer the call to college. These prayers will rise from the hearts of those who have never had the chance to travel the high road that leads to learning as well as from those whose feet have trod the grinding sands and mountain paths that lead to knowledge. If these prayers are mingled with the prayers and determination of those who go, it may be that the fires of hope will burn even brighter four years hence when, as graduates of college, these eager youths, well trained and happy, launch out upon life's unconquered sea to make their way among their fellows. So may it be. And God bless each of you, my young friends. Let there be no shipwreck of hopes whatever may happen through the years.

ALWAYS A SONG.

Let me go where I will
I hear a sky-born music still;
It sounds from all things old,
It sounds from all things young,
From all that's fair, from all that's foul,
Peals out a cheerful song.

It is not only in the rose,
It is not only in the bird,
Nor only where the rainbow glows,
Nor in the song of woman heard,
But in the darkest, meanest things
There always, always something sings.

'Tis not in the high stars alone,
Nor in the cup of budding flowers,
Nor in the red-breast's mellow tone,
Nor in the bow that smiles in showers,
But in the mud and scum of things
There always, always something sings.

—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

PROGRAM.

Instrumental Prelude—"Lead On, O King Eternal."

Call to Worship—"Therefore, let us also, seeing we are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, lay aside every weight and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and perfecter of our faith who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross."

Hymn—"Lead On, O King Eternal."

Scripture—Psalm 37:1-6.

Prayer—

Hymn—"Marching With the Heroes."

Introductory Talk—

Development of the Topic—

Hymn—"Rise Up, O Men of God."

Benediction—"Father, may we not be swept from our moorings by waves of false propaganda. Lay upon our hearts a sense of responsibility for freeing our country from the grasp of the liquor interests. Go with us during the coming week and lead us in paths of righteousness.—Amen."

Additional Hymns—"Stand Up, Stand Up, for Jesus," "Dare to Be Brave, Dare to Be True," "Fight the Good Fight," "God Give Us Men."
Advance preparation:

1. Have one person interview a number of prominent citizens on the question: "What Hinders the Full Success of Prohibition?"

2. Consult a minister, an educator, an upright, law-abiding citizen, a law-enforcing officer, a lawyer, and a criminal court judge on conditions in your town and city.

Ask them the following questions:

(a) Is there more or less drinking than before prohibition?

(b) Is there evidence of an alliance between bootleggers and politicians in your community?

(c) Where and by whom is liquor sold?

(d) Where does it come from?

(e) Who buys it?

(f) Do you believe the liquor traffic could be abolished if the churches united in support of the Eighteenth Amendment?

If you cannot arrange these interviews, the above questions may be used for discussion by the group.

3. Ask some well-informed person to speak on the situation in regard to national prohibition at the time of this program.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

JONATHAN.

LESSON XI—SEPTEMBER 10, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "A friend loveth at all times." Prov. 17:17.

LESSON TEXT: I. Samuel 18:1-4; 20:14-17; 32-34, 41, 42; II. Samuel 1:25-27.

A boy once defined a friend as "one who knows all about you, but loves you just the same." He was putting in a striking and in a true way the words of the Golden Text, "A friend loveth at all times." It is quite evident, however, that in neither case is meant a "fair-weather" friend. The word friend as used in both cases means a friend in the highest and truest sense of the word. As a matter of fact the average person does not have many real friends, friends that would stick with him through thick and thin. Happy, indeed, is that person who has friends in the deepest sense of the term.

When we think of friendship we almost instinctively think of Jonathan and David. Their names are synonymous with friendship at its best. The story of their friendship is a classic, and is also an ideal for friendship. There were certain basic principles or characteristics about this friendship that underlie all true friendship.

First of all, it was a friendship unselfish in spirit. Jonathan had every reason, humanly speaking, to be unfriendly toward David. As the oldest son of the king he was the heir to the throne of his father, Saul. And yet here was David, an humble shepherd lad, destined to become king, and thus to shut him out from any opportunity to be king himself. Jonathan knew this. And yet his friendship was equal to the test. He saw in David those qualities which commanded both his admiration and his esteem. He harbored no jealousy, he plotted no intrigue, he demanded no personal privilege. Instead he aided and abetted David in every way. There is something refreshing, something inspiring, something challenging about the unselfish spirit of Jonathan's friendship. What a rebuke it is to those who often use friendships for furthering their own selfish ends. True friends do not take advantage of each other.

Jonathan's friendship is all the more remarkable because of the delicate situation in which he was placed. As the son of Saul, he was naturally under obligation to be loyal unto him. Jonathan's devotion to his father was strong and pure. He did not keep his friendship for David at the expense of his loyalty to his father. But so considerate and so tactful, and yet withal so sincere and so uncompromising was he, that he was faithful to both his obligations, to Saul and to David respectively. Of course, the time came when Jonathan had to make a choice as between loyalty to ideals and he refused to sacrifice his ideals of friendship to his father's unworthy attitude and action. So wise and pure was this young man that he kept faith with his father and his friend.

Then again it was a friendship courageous in spirit. Jonathan faced real danger, both of injury and death, in his friendship for David. His father was of a brooding, jealous spirit, especially susceptible to suspicion and fear. It would have been the easy thing for Jonathan to have had nothing to do with David after he found out how his father felt about it. But Jonathan actually risked his life on several occasions in behalf of David. He was willing to pay the price of friendship. "A friend in need is a friend in need." There are so many people who are willing to stand by their friends if it costs nothing to do it. Friendship in the highest sense of the word involves courage of the highest type.

Something needs to be said about David's side of the matter. It would have been easy for him to play the part of the hypocrite in his friendship for Jonathan. It was to his interest to "keep on the good side of Jonathan," and thus to further his interests. But there is no evidence that anything of the kind happened. David loved Jonathan even as Jonathan loved David. His friendship was just as sincere as was Jonathan's. The account states that when the time finally arrived when it became quite clear that the two must part, probably to see each other no more, David "exceeded," he was more broken up even than Jonathan was. And his lament over Saul and David gives abundant evidence that he was deeply grieved over their death, and especially over Jonathan's death. And as is well known David was exceedingly kind to Mephibosheth, Jonathan's lame son, for his father's sake.

In friendships like that of Jonathan and David are to be found the abiding values of life. Charles Kingsley, the great man of God when asked about the factors of success in his life replied, "I had a friend." And it is well to remember that beyond any earthly friendship there is the friendship of the One who so completely embodied and expressed the spirit of true friendship that he is known as The Friend. He has called us friends. We can count on him always. We ought to seek to live worthy of his friendship.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

4. Have someone discuss what the churches can and should do in light of the situation at present.

5. The introductory talk should be based somewhat on the status of prohibition at this time. The actual study of the topic can then be introduced by the statement that it is our purpose this evening to discover the hindrances to the success of prohibition and to formulate a policy for future action.

Our generation of youth was too young at the time national prohibition was adopted to have been greatly interested in or very well informed on that piece of legislation. It probably would be valuable for us to briefly review this history as a background for the study of the evening.

EVELYN B. RICHARDSON.

A GOOD REPORT.

Prof. A. R. Flowers closes the month of August with a very encouraging report with respect to the good work done by the young people. All the young people, by a goodly number, have not lost faith as some people seem to think. Brother Flowers reports that more than ninety young people from different States have written him for information as to how they might get into some college, hospital or place of training, since about the first of May. These young people are willing to work out their education which is sufficient evidence that they are deeply interested in their personal fitness for a place in the laudable undertakings of life.

They realize that their success in life, for the most part, will be in proportion to their preparation, and especially is this true in the high calling of the ministry, and other leaders in Christian work. Brother Flowers is putting forth his best efforts in making it possible for a goodly number of young people to have a chance.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

"O Lord, I beseech thee, let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of thy servant, and to the prayer of thy servants, who desire to fear thy name, and prosper, I pray thee, thy servant this day."

MONDAY.

ANOTHER WITNESS.

"But the wisdom that is from above, is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy, and the fruit of righteousness is sown in place of them that make peace."—Jas. 3:17-18.

The witness of gentleness toward others; the witness of personal desire to have the right view of God; the witness of the desire to win an opponent rather than to win the victory; the witness within of not being too critical of the faults of others; these bear witness of Christ within and that we are the children of God.

Prayer—Dear heavenly Father, we would love thee holy and wholly. We pray that our lives may embrace those traits of thy kingdom which radiate unto others, and will be a light for them unto thy holy way. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

A VOICE FROM HEAVEN.

Read Hebrews 12:18-29.

Verse 25: "See that you do not refuse to listen to his voice." (Moffatt Version.)

This lesson brings to our hearts the solemnity and seriousness of God's written word, the responsibility upon us when we come into his presence, whether it be in private prayer and meditation or worship at the sanctuary. Read again verses 22 to 25.

This is a responsibility we cannot escape. It is the cry of heaven to earth. It is the anguish of God's soul for his children. It is the plea of heaven for an opportunity to bestow its gifts upon the world. It is the promise of heaven to bestow its gifts at our call. It is a solemn warning of what will become of us if we heed not his voice.

The worst thing that ever happened to Jesus is said to be, "He came unto his own and his own received him not." Stolid indifference to him by his own. This fact is epitomized in person when he stood on the mountainside near Jerusalem weeping, and said, "Oh Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how oft would I have gathered your children as a hen gathers her brood under her wing, but ye would not." These along with the unfaithful are committed to outer darkness. There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Prayer—Say the Lord's Prayer.

WEDNESDAY.

HOW CHRIST ENTERS MY SOUL.

"He endured as seeing him who is invisible."—Heb. 11:27.

The late McGiffert, in "History of Christian Thought," quotes Bernard of Clairveux as he relates his experience in the manner by which he became conscious of Christ coming into his soul. It is being passed on to you here as illuminating to our own experience:

Bernard says:

"He did not enter by the eyes, for he is without color; nor by the ears, for he is without sound; nor by the nostrils, for he is not mingled with the air; nor did he enter by the mouth, for he is not food or drink; nor did I detect him by taste, for he is palpable. How then did he enter? Or can it be that he did not enter because he did not come from without, not being of those things that are without? But neither did he come from within, for he is good and I know that in me there is no good thing. How then, you ask, when his ways are altogether unsearchable, could I know that he was present? Only by the movement of my heart have I been aware of him. In the flight of vices and the restraint of carnal affections I have perceived the power of his virtue. In the examination and reproof of my secret faults I have admired the profundity of his wisdom. In the amendment, however small, of my ways, I have experienced his goodness and gentleness. In the renovation and reformation of my mind and spirit, that is of my inner man, I have seen the fashion of his beauty. And as I have reflected on all these things I have been overwhelmed by his greatness."

Prayer—Our Father, in heaven and in earth, Lord of our souls this day, give unto us a realistic consciousness of thy indwelling with us.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

COURAGE.

"Be strong, and let not your hands be weak; for your work shall be rewarded."—II. Chron. 15:7.

Do you believe in God? Do you believe that to cast your bread upon the waters will not be void, but will return to you in due season? Do you believe that we shall reap what we sow, and that this applies to good seed as well as to evil seed? Do you believe that "He shall not fail?" If so, you believe in a security that is better than property or life insurance.

It has been said that the presence of Napoleon Bonaparte on the field of battle was equal to the arrival of 40,000 soldiers because he gave them new undaunted courage. With him they felt they could do anything.

But what is Bonaparte to God? When we think that God is with us, our leader, our champion, our deliverer, our rewarder—that should give us courage. If God be with us, should we ever tremble?

Prayer—Our Father, we recall what David said, "Though the earth be moved and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea, though the waters be troubled, though the mountains shake from the force of the troubled sea, I shall be glad, for God is in the midst, the Lord of hosts is with us, and the God of Jacob is our refuge." Help us to trust this way for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

BROKEN EGGSHELLS.

"He hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted."—Read Isa. 61:1-9.

There is a man in England whose specialty is the mending of broken eggshells. He can make them as good as new, no matter how badly they are smashed, and men from the ends of the earth bring him rare and valuable shells that he may exercise his curious and delicate art upon them.

A broken heart is much harder to heal than a broken eggshell, but there is One who can mend it. For twenty centuries men and women have been taking their broken hearts to him. He is the great physician. "Here bring your wounded heart, here tell your anguish; earth has no sorrows that heaven cannot heal." There is no hopeless case with Christ.

Prayer—Thou, O Christ, dost know our secret anguish. It is thy anguish, too. In all our sorrows thou art afflicted. Thy ointments are blessedly sure. Thy very word has omnipotent healing. We bless thee for thy efficacy, O physician of souls.—Amen. AMOS R. WELLS.

WISE YOUNG MEN.

"Days should speak, and multitude of years should teach wisdom."—Read Job 32:1-10.

Elihu waited till the old men had spoken before he ventured to counsel Job; but when the modest young man did speak, his words went straight to the heart of the afflicted patriarch.

"Old men for counsel, young men for war," is an ancient saying. Henry Ford put it in 20th century language the other day when he declared that if all men fifty-five years old or more were taken from industry, "there would not be brains enough left to carry on." "Young men from thirty years on," he said, "are the best executives, but the best plans originate in older heads."

But the maxim is often reversed in practice. Often the young are the conservatives and the old are the daring executives. Courage may be the fruit of old age, and wisdom may hang on young boughs. Mr. Ford invented his automobile when he was young. There is no monopoly of either age or youth.

The substance of these considerations is: Be wise! Be bold! Whatever your years, be bold and wise! The old Book will give you wisdom. The Ancient of Days will give you strength and vigor. And there is no need of waiting for either.

Prayer—May we be wise and active young men, our Father, and active and prudent old men. Whatever we lack thou wilt supply, if we are bent on doing thy blessed will.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

TOM THUMB GOLF.

"Now all the Athenians and the strangers sojourning there spent their time in nothing else, but either to tell or to hear some new thing."—Read Acts 17:16-23.

The rapid spread of Tom Thumb golf is an evidence of human hunger for novelty and amusement. There are seventy-five courses already in Boston, costing from $5,000 to $15,000, and many of them running all through the winter. About 20,000 play on these courses every day, and they are thronged on Sunday as on other days.

Every sensible man believes in rational recreation, but the mad race for pleasure is irrational. Today it is one thing, tomorrow another. The latest craze drives completely from the public mind all the earlier crazes.

"Some new thing," the story of the Athenians over again. And Paul could make no impression there, nor can the higher life win a hold on these novelty-seekers. They are of the earth, earthy, and in worldliness is no real and lasting satisfaction. If one would have a pleasure that endures, let him seek the good news, the evangel, of Jesus Christ. Here is novelty that never loses its strangeness and absorbing interest. Over all the fancies of men, for two thousand years, it has calmly kept on its way, and men have been more and more fascinated with it all the time.

Prayer—May our abiding interest be with thee. That interest never ends. Rather does it grow upon us, and its splendor and delight will continue through all eternity.—Amen.

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

JEWELS OF THE LORD.

By JOHN BRUCE DALTON.

"And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels."—Malachi 3:17.

The Romans ransacked the world in order to find jewels. When Hannibal defeated them at Cannae he sent back to Carthage as evidence of his overwhelming victory, a whole bushel of gems taken from the bodies of the fallen Roman knights. Julius Caesar led his army into Britain and conquered the Tin Islands that he might come into possession of the fabled jewelry which the people on those coasts were said to possess. He sought for a breastplate formed of pearls. After his campaigns he presented his mother with a pearl valued at a quarter of a million dollars.

Greater than Generals.

But the Hebrew prophets were greater by far than Roman generals. They discovered truths that will be precious forever and ever. Malachi discovered that in the heart of God there was the same love for all mankind. He found something true to divine nature even as is found something true to human nature. The souls of men are the jewels of the Lord. "And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels."

And when the Lord comes to make up his jewels he will know the genuine from the imitation. He knows junk from jewelry. He knows the difference between sincerity and hypocrisy. If there is anything that it takes an expert to determine, it is the value of gems. There, if anywhere, is where one needs expert advice, for it is so easy to be fooled about jewelry. Many people who think they have precious stones have only so much glass, and many a pearl is only paste. What we need is the eye of an expert to determine the true values. When life is about over we may find some day that we have been giving all of our strength, time, mind and effort for the things that are not realities but only imitations of realities.

Why Jewels are Valuable.

Jewels are valuable because they are costly. Pliny tells us that Cleopatra gave a great banquet for Mark Anthony, and that during the banquet she took off one of the two pearls that adorned her person, valued at $400,000 each, and dissolved it in vinegar to make a costly drink. Then she proposed a toast to Anthony and drained the contents of that cup. But the cup which Christ drank was more costly in blood and tears than Cleopatra ever prepared. Children are the jewels of their parents because they cost them so much love and affection and work and worry and anguish of soul. We are jewels of God because we cost him so much of his time and his thought and his love.

Jewels are valuable because of their beauty. Celestial fires awaken in a jewel corresponding fires. Henry Ward Beecher used to carry about with him a handful of precious stones. He would show them to people and admire their rare and great beauty. There is something about beauty that causes us to think of God. Evidently God sees some beauty in us that we do not see. There are celestial fires burning in us that we know not of, but he knows of them, and that is why he values man. When we worship the Eternal we bring out the beauty that lies dormant within us. Contact with the sun makes the diamond sparkle.

Jewels Shine in Darkness.

And yet it is in a dark background that a jewel shines out best. The next time you go into a jewelry store, notice how the gems are placed in trays on black or dark green velvet. The blacker the background the more beautiful is the gem. This is also true of the jewels of God. The sick and the afflicted, the persecuted and the broken-hearted, all have a background that makes their souls beautiful. Stephen was glorious in persecution. The setting often gives additional beauty to the soul.

A jewel has to be found. They are all in a lost condition. Men have to discover them and polish them. Our Master had a way of finding the jewels of the Lord when he was here among men, and he still has. He found a gem at a well in Samaria. He found jewels in the streets of Jerusalem that others cared not for because they knew not their value.

Jewels Are for Glory.

Now a jewel is for the glory of its possessor. Jewels were never meant for safety deposit boxes. They were never created to be placed away in safes. During the reign of Louis XV a French peasant girl, Marie Jeane DuBarry, because of her charm and cleverness, became one of the favorites of the court, and the king gave her a beautiful pearl necklace. Then came the Revolution. The girl was guillotined, but the necklace was hidden by the family and their descendants for generations. Recently it was brought to a jeweler in Paris and offered for sale, but the pearls hidden in the darkness so long had lost their luster, and were practically worthless.

Now God wants us to add some glory to his being. He wants us to shine for him. He looks upon us as his jewels and as such we can be valuable to his person anywhere we happen to be in this world. When he comes to make up his jewels, he wants to gather all those who have made him glorious in the eyes of men.

Not long ago a man of wealth, who made it his hobby to collect rubies, stepped into a jewelry store and looked over a selection of his favorite gems. He was about to leave without purchasing when the manager asked him to wait and he would show him some rubies. The manager brought out the same tray that the clerk had shown before. He soon sold a beautiful stone to his customer. And as the customer turned to go, he said: "I saw this ruby before when the clerk showed it to me. I wonder why I bought it from you?" "Well," said the manager, "that clerk is a good clerk, but I love rubies." God loves us. We are his hobby. "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life."—Christian Evangelist.

BEARING THE CROSS.

The cross which my Lord bids me take up and carry may assume different shapes. I may have to content myself with a lowly and narrow sphere, when I feel I have capacities for much higher work. I may have to go on cultivating, year after year, a field which seems to yield me no harvests whatsoever. I may be bidden to cherish kind and loving thoughts about some one who has wronged me—be bidden to speak to him tenderly, and take his part against all who oppose him, and crown him with sympathy and succor. I may have to confess my Master amongst those who do not wish to be reminded of him and his claims. I may be called to "move among my race, and show a glorious morning face," when my heart is breaking.

There are many crosses, and every one of them is sore and heavy. None of them is likely to be sought out by me of my own accord. But never is Jesus so near me as when I lift my cross, and lay it submissively on my shoulder, giving it the welcome of a patient and unmurmuring spirit. He draws close to ripen my wisdom, to deepen my peace, to increase my courage, to augment my power to be of use to others, through the very experience which is so grievous and distressing, and then—as I read on the seal of one of those Scottish Covenanters whom Claverhouse imprisoned on the lonely Bass, with the sea surging and sobbing round—I grow under the load.—Alexander Smellie.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

It will be necessary for our churches, Sunday Schools and friends to be more liberal in their giving if you want us to keep our heads above water and the Orphanage to keep ministering to the fatherless. Prices of many things we buy have doubled. We are having to pay much more for coal this year. Shoes, clothing and everything we buy have advanced exceedingly, but our income has not advanced to meet the rise in prices. You have always come to our rescue in time of need. We have faith in you and believe you will not fail us now. Winter shoes, clothing, coal, school books to buy now and prices high. If we ever needed you we need you now.

The following articles have been sent in since our last report:

- Mrs. J. P. Barrett, Elon College, N. C., 1 coat.
 - Jas. P. Montgomery Glass, Burlington, N. C., 1 box of clothing for Lillie Mae Hunter.

HOWARD'S CHAPEL.

August 13, 1933, our revival meeting began here with a splendid congregation. On Sunday, at 11 A. M., and 2 P. M., the pastor delivered the sermon for the occasions to two appreciative audiences, apparently. The week-day services were held at 3 P. M., and 7:45 P. M.

Rev. T. J. Green, of Ramseur, N. C., came to our aid on Monday and broke to us the Bread of Life, until the meeting closed on Thursday night, August 17th. Bro. Green's messages were highly Biblical and instructive to the hearers in Christian things. Those who love the true gospel will remember him as long as memory is good. He is a man devoted to the cause of Christ, salvation for the lost, and the upbuilding of the kingdom of God upon earth in men's hearts. His efforts and fellowship are highly appreciated by Christian people.

There was one consecration, the church encouraged to press onward in spiritual matters, and good seed was sown as a result of the meeting.

May the Lord bless the Word that was preached and accomplish its designed end. We are thankful for the good done, and the blessings of the Lord that were received. May we all be faithful unto the end of our journey.

MARRIAGES

JONES—BARRETT.

On July 31st, in Salisbury, N. C., Mabel, the youngest daughter of Rev. and Mrs. D. P. Barrett, of Ponce, Puerto Rico, and Mr. Clifford F. Jones, of Hickory, N. C., were united in marriage by the Rev. Marshall Woodson.

B.

MADREN—BOSWELL.

Mr. H. M. Madren and Miss Myrtle E. Boswell motored to our home at Elon College, N. C., on the afternoon of August 12, 1933, where they were quietly united in holy wedlock. Only a few friends witnessed the ceremony.

Mr. Madren is the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Madren of northern Alamance County. Miss Myrtle E. Boswell is the accomplished daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Boswell, of Caswell County.

They are popular and highly esteemed young people in their respective communities, both of them having occupations in Burlington, N. C., where they will continue to reside. Long may they live with peace and happiness as their lot.

OBITUARIES

COCKRELL.

Nora Edison was born March 25, 1885, and died at her home near Lineville, Ala., August 10, 1933. She was married to L. B. Cockrell, September 23, 1909. To this union were born four children: three girls and one boy.

She professed faith in Christ and united with the Methodist Church twenty years ago. She later joined Spring Hill Christian Church where she remained true and loyal till the end of a very useful life.

She was a very patient sufferer for nine months, but during that time she enjoyed the presence of her Saviour and often caused her neighbors to rejoice with her, after she realized her days on earth were few.

About six weeks before she died, she lost her eyesight and hearing. At one o'clock, A. M., August 10th, her spirit took its flight to the paradise of God, where pain is unknown and parting never comes. Her emaciated body was laid to rest in New Harmony Cemetery at 11 o'clock A. M., August 11th, to await the resurrection of the just.

Funeral services were held at the home with this writer in charge.

G. H. VEAZEY.

CARTER.

On August 9th, the bells of heaven rang, calling Rachel, youngest daughter of Rev. and Mrs. E. M. Carter, to come home. She was ill for only a few hours and her death was a shock to the entire community. Though only thirteen years of age, she was a conscientious Christian girl, doing the Master's work wherever she could. She took an active part in the B. Y. P. U., being one of the leaders in the intermediate group. To know

Carter's family.
2. That in the Sunday School has been a great loss. There is no one can fill. She was a fine voice, studious and active in the singing, even though she could not advance to the next level.
3. That our sympathy be extended as a body to Brother Carter's family. We shall pray to our Father to sustain them in this time of sorrow and enable them to take up their cross so heavy to bear and press onward.

LAWRENCE.

Annie Delphine Lawrence, daughter of O. D. Lawrence and the late Ida Sugg Lawrence, died very suddenly August 16th, in Baltimore, Md., where she had been nursing for the past seven years. She was 35 years old. At the early age of 11, she professed faith in Christ and united with the New Center Christian Church. In 1920 she transferred her membership to the First Christian Church in Richmond, where she remained a member until her death.

Surviving are her father, stepmother, of Seagrove, one sister, Mrs. J. F. Atkinson, of Mullins, S. C., two half-sisters, Mrs. J. M. Farlow, of High Point, and Miss Maple Lawrence, of Seagrove.

Her funeral was conducted from the Christian Church in Seagrove by the writer, assisted by Rev. T. J. Green and American "Big Game."—

According to reports of the United States Forest Service, the big game census for 1932 shows a slight falling off from the total of 1,175,955 estimated in 1931. The total for the past year in the national forests of big game animals was 1,163,142. However, there has been an increase in the number over 1926 of nearly 40 per cent. The larger animals outside of the national reservations amount to only about one-fourth of the total.

Paying Tribute to Crime.—

Secretary Dern of the War Department, asserts that "the frightful crime conditions with which it is confronted," are costing the United States over thirteen billion dollars annually. The figures on crime give 3,000 persons kidnapped each year, 12,000 murdered, 50,000 robbed and 100,000 assaulted. Staggering figures. We would suggest to our Secretary of War that it is time war be declared on such conditions and we know of no better use to which the standing army might be put.

They Refuse Uncle Sam's Money.—

The Springfield Republican thinks that the Menominees, an Indian tribe of Wisconsin, are "setting an example to their white civilizers which is really embarrassing," by refusing to take money for a public works project. While another paper thinks that they are giving Americans a "lesson in patriotism." This Indian tribe was allotted $30,000 out of the Government's $50,000,000 highway fund. They refused it and sent two delegates to Washington to explain that for over eighty years they had held a record of self-sustaining independence, and that they would do their own road work with their own funds.

Astounding Words.—

These astounding words appeared recently in Brewery Industry, a trade journal published in New York: "Before prohibition, beer was regarded as a concomitant of a college career. Now not one-tenth of one per cent of the youth in college know what good American beer tastes like. To them it is little more than a name, simply because they do not know how to use it, or have not acquired the taste. . . . So it seems that elemental reasoning makes it plain that the brewers should begin their publicity campaign in college newspapers as soon as it can be prepared. It should be a cooperative campaign for good legal beer before it can be supplied to them, and to make them have an eager appetite for it." These brewers pronounce the college campus of today 99.9 per cent dry. They plan to use the college papers to debauch students and drag them down to the low pre-prohibition level when "beer was regarded as a concomitant of a college career."—The Watchman-Examiner, New York.

Of Interest to Men.—

A straight cut of 50 per cent in the price of Gillette razor blades was announced recently as an answer to the attack on that company's market by independent blade manufacturers. For a while after the "Blue Blades" appeared it seemed as if Gillette was about to re-establish its leadership by a rigid policy under which the two cent blade was retailed. But during the past year independents took a toll of 100 million blades out of approximately 300 million sold. Gillette tried first through subsidiary companies to squeeze out competition, and finally offered a "second" line in a two-blade pack for 10 cents. But shavers wanted either that company's first line or some other company's first line. The new prices are Gillette's forced answer to this demand.

Maine Is No. Twenty-Six.—

By almost a two-to-one vote, Maine, the stronghold of prohibition since the middle of the last century, voted for the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment last Monday. Three more States—Maryland, Minnesota, and Colorado—voted on Tuesday—two late for the returns to be included on this page. Prohibition, on the face of things, seems to be receiving a thorough spanking. The whole of the United States seems to have gone wild, and Mr. Farley, henchman of the liquor forces, announces that Mr. Roosevelt is "pleased with the manner in which the States are accomplishing ratification." The writer of this page, however, is not as downcast as are some of our dry contemporaries. The carnage will be awful, but there is a possibility that out of this carnage may come, at last, true temperance. We do not advocate that the fighting of the repeal amendment be stopped. We hope that the Southern States which have not yet voted will vote dry, but if they should not, we still believe in the ultimate triumph of the right. Out of the depths of the murky pond comes the white pond-lily.

Mechanizing the Small Farm.—

"It is the vast and ocean-like wheat fields which get into the movies," says Business Week, "but much of the wheat and most of the other grains come from acreage . . . not at all vast." Indeed the average farm is a comparatively small farm. The number of acres has steadily risen since 1870, but it now stands at slightly less than 160 acres. And of the 6,288,648 farms listed in this country, 57 per cent are under 100 acres. In order to reach the farmer in the smaller classes, there has been introduced a baby combine which will enable him to reap the benefits of mechanized operation. It is said to be much faster than the larger machines, low in first cost and economical to operate. It replaces the binder and the stationary thresher, and enables the farmer to cut his grain at the time most opportune for him. Several prior attempts had been made to bring out a machine of this character, but unsuccessfully. Selling for less than $500, it is of lighter construction, weighing 2,400 lbs., and much faster, being able to do the work as rapidly as the older machines weighing around 8,000 or 10,000 lbs., and selling for two or three times as much. It is powered by the tractor which pulls it.

Cuba.—

Within less than one month the small Republic of Cuba has been under four different governments. The present president—this is written on Tuesday, September 12th—is Dr. Ramon Grau San Martin, who was elected to office by the junta government of five just preceding him. There is still considerable opposition to him, and there is a possibility that De Cespedes may be returned to power. There has been no intervention on the part of this government, and the present president has made a strong bid for the friendship of the United States. "We desire American friendship. We never forget that American soldiers fought for our independence and we are grateful." He adds, however, that American friendship must be based on the absolute independence of Cuba. He insists that he is not anti-American, but is opposed to imperialism in all its forms. While keeping a strong naval force around the island, the Washington government seems ready to recognize any authority which can prove that it represents the Cuban people. If intervention should become necessary, this government should only do so in cooperation with the Latin-American countries on our south.

Mr. Green Squawks.—

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, lobbyist for the federation, charges that Washington is filled with "agents and lobbyists of great manufacturing enterprises." He contends that these "lobbyists, many of them have no conception of a new deal." He threatens to tell the American people the exact situation and adds, "there will be no fear or favor in our utterances." Mr. Green would like to hold the position that was held by Mr. Gompers during the Wilson administration and the World War. At that time Gompers demanded for the federation and got from twelve to fourteen dollars a day for laborers that were not, in some instances, worth their keep. At the same time the American soldier was receiving a dollar a day and board, to defend his country. The American working man deserves all that can be given him, but there should be no discrimination against him if he does not want to sign up with Mr. Green. During the World War, the country was infested with strikes. They seem to be on the increase now. What the government wants—what it should demand—is cooperation from both employer and employee. Mr. Green, stop squawking and learn to co-operate—if you really want to help labor.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Widespread fear that business may never return to normal isn't so great as the widespread fear that it has.—Life.

Rev. A. W. Andes, Harrisonburg, Va., was a pleasant caller at Elon College the past week, having brought his son to enter the College at its opening. Bro. Andes is one of our busiest and most esteemed pastors.

"Inclosed you will find check for $2.00 for my renewal to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, which expired in August. I have been taking THE SUN for many years, always enjoy reading it, and feel that I cannot do without it."

Dr. G. O. Lankford, until recently the beloved pastor of our Burlington Church, goes, with his family, at an early date, to Florida for the winter months, having been advised by his physician to withdraw from all ministerial and responsible activities for some months. Dr. Lankford is one of our ablest, most capable and most beloved, and many will be the prayers that his health shall be fully restored and that he will be ready to enter again after a few months' retirement into the activities of the pastorate which he so much loves.

Rev. A. R. VanCleave, former professor in Elon College, last year professor in Southern Union College, Wadley, Ala., was a visitor at Elon College the past week, gathering his household effects and moving with his sister to our parsonage at Winchester, Va., where Brother VanCleave has become pastor of Winchester and Timber Ridge Churches. These churches are to be congratulated on securing the services of this capable and consecrated minister, and his equally capable and consecrated sister. They carry the best wishes of their Elon friends to their new field of labor.

Rev. Cleveland R. Dierlamm, pastor of the United Christian Church of Chapel Hill, N. C., spent part of his August vacation supplying pulpits in Canada and giving chalk talks in Sunday Schools. Mr. Dierlamm was the guest of his aunt, Mrs. Litt, of Sebringville, Ontario. She celebrated her one hundredth birthday and is in good mental and physical condition. Her education in reading is entirely confined to the Bible and her church paper. She attributes her long career to taking a happy Christian view of life.

In a recent letter from Brother Chas. D. Johnston, he writes your managing editor that, "My health is improving and I hope to soon be strong again." If you really want to bring the color back to Brother Johnston's cheeks and hurry his return to full strength and health, we suggest that you send as large a donation as you can to help him with the Christian Orphanage. He needs your help, he cannot but worry over conditions as they are today, and worry does not help one back to health. Let's help him if we can.

Our heart goes out in sympathy for the bereaved, in sorrow for the passing of our good friend and dear brother, whom we knew and esteemed most highly in the Lord, Rev. A. H. Shepard, Glenn, Ga. The sad news comes in these lines from Brother Hunt: "Rev. A. H. Shepard died suddenly at his home, August 31st. We buried him yesterday. Funeral at Bethany, his home church. He was the beloved pastor of this church for many years. A large crowd attended the funeral. The following ministers were present: Revs. J. D. Dollar, W. T. Meacham, H. M. Gray, John Taylor, G. D. Hunt of the Christian Church, and Bros. Moore and Brown of the Baptist Church. It was a very sad occasion. He was pastor at the Bethany and New Hope Churches. He had scores of friends and he was a very lovable man."

AN ENJOYABLE MEETING.

I have just returned, for one day only, from one of the most helpful protracted services, to me, that it has been my pleasure to conduct this year. I spent seven days out in one of the most progressive sections of Johnston County, with Rev. A. A. Wells, of the Freewill Baptist brotherhood, and the thing that did me the most good, as it always does, and inspired me so much in each service, was the hearty cooperation and support that was given the pastor and myself, by the membership of the other churches of the community. There was no difference—Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian and Freewill Baptist—all entered each service as one body of Christian believers. First things were placed first and brotherly love and Christian affection was one of the most noticeable features of the meeting.

So often an audience is not conscious of how much they can help a speaker by entering a service in the spirit of unity. There has been much fruitless preaching because the audience was not in the true spirit of Christian service. Some times I find that it takes more time in getting my audience in the right frame of mind, for a series of discussions, than it does for the delivery of the messages I wish to bring.

I am leaving in a few hours for Elm City, N. C., to speak to people that I have known for many years and to whom I have spoken many times. I appreciate their invitation to speak to them again.

A. R. FLOWERS.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

We held our revival at Shallow Ford beginning the second Sunday in July, and closed Friday night following with 13 accessions to the church, besides several other confessions of faith, and the church much revived.

At the request of some, we tried to get in touch with Rev. J. L. Neese as helper, but in vain. However several of the brethren in the ministry were with us, and gave us inspiration and assistance in various ways for which we are thankful both to them and to the Lord for his blessings.

We held our meeting at Bennett the third Sunday in August and the week following, with Rev. H. V. Cox as helper, resulting in three professions of faith and one accession to the church. The church and community seemed very much revived.

Brother Cox did some good preaching, the Holy Spirit being in evidence.

The fourth Sunday in August we held our meeting at Pleasant Ridge (Randolph County), with Rev. J. F. Apple, Elon College, N. C., as helper. His preaching was very much enjoyed by all who heard him.

The meeting continued through the week, closing Sunday night, September 3rd, with two accessions to the church, including twenty or more professions and renewals, and the church much revived. Probably others may join the church as a result of the meeting.

Thanks to our helpers and the Lord be praised for his many blessings.

Besides our own meetings, we enjoyed being with Rev. S. V. Cox at Big Oak and Rev. L. L. Wyrick at Howard's Chapel.

T. J. GREEN.

LIBERTY (VANCE).

By request, may I tell briefly something about our revival held July 16th-26th, inclusive.

Rev. W. B. Fuller, of Harrisonburg, Va., assisted the pastor, Rev. S. E. Madren. We looked forward to this occasion with a peculiar joy that we had never experienced before, because Brother Fuller was reared in our midst and was the first one ever called from our church into the ministry.

More than twenty years ago he left the old home church to prepare himself for his great vocation in life. He had a hard road to reach the goal, but with little asset, save a mother's prayers and Him who can do great and mighty things with a surrendered and consecrated life.

Our first service was like a homecoming, and was enjoyed by all present. The text used was, "I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision" (Acts 26:19). "Why I Left the Old Home Church," was the subject. This was a splendid and inspiring message, and manifested the power of the Holy Spirit. For ten days he delighted his audiences with true gospel messages of inspiration and power, always centered around the Cross of Calvary. He believes in the old-time gospel that "the way of the Cross leads home."

The power of the Spirit was manifested over and over again, when scores of people testified to the saving and transforming power of God, and rededicated their lives anew to him, while a number of others accepted Christ and united with the church.

The attendance was extra good, the attention fine, the preaching good, and we trust the results will be lasting to those of us past middle age. The preacher was just a boy, a schoolmate, and we addressed him as "Walter" with no title attached.

He said he was glad to be home and feel free to shed tears and many others shed tears of rejoicing with him. We were happy because he left us in obedience to the divine call, happy because after 26 years he came back to us, still wanting to do God's will. Through all these years, he has kept the faith, and returned to us strong in faith, sound in doctrine and zealous in good works.

As he goes elsewhere may his time be filled in telling others the old, old story of redeeming love. We feel sure that any church in need of a pastor, will enjoy having him serve them. May the Lord bless Walter in his work, and call others from our church to help preach his gospel.

MRS. R. J. NEWTON.

CONFERENCES WILL MEET.

The Eastern Virginia Conference will meet with Holy Neck Christian Church, near Holland, Va., on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, November 1st, 2nd and 3rd. Opening session 10 o'clock Wednesday morning.

The Western North Carolina Conference will meet with the Ramseur Christian Church, Ramseur, N. C., on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, November 7th, 8th and 9th.

The North Carolina and Virginia Conference will meet with Union Christian Church, Alamance County, N. C., on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, November 14th, 15th and 16th.

The Eastern North Carolina Conference will meet on Tuesday and Wednesday, November 21st and 22nd. Place to be published later.

We will appreciate it greatly if the secretaries of the Georgia and Alabama bodies will supply the information as to dates and places of their meetings.

The Virginia Valley Central Conference was held in August.

REPORT ON EVANGELISM.

We are taking this medium of reporting to the many friends and readers of THE SUN something of our year's work since leaving the pastorate of the First Christian Church of Portsmouth, last September.

We know that many readers have been praying for us, and these having had a part in the work, they are entitled to know something of the results which have been achieved under God.

We, of course, hasten to state that all the things accomplished, the work wrought, the deeds done, were achieved through his grace, and a recapitulation thereof is had only for the glory of God. For anyone leaving, as we did last September, the pastorate of a church whose liberality and love distinguish its entire parish, launching out on faith, with no money, no human backing, no Board behind us, save the greatest Mission Board of Eternity, God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, we repeat, that anyone launching out in the field of evangelism in such a day as this, with depression and discouragement to face each day, is brought, or will be brought, to rely only and exclusively upon the Lord Jesus Christ; made to realize that the "just (just through God's grace) shall live by faith."

Looking back over the year's work we are made to rejoice in the constancy and communion of the blessed Lord Christ. Truly can we say that "bonds and afflictions have abided us in every city, yet none of these things moved us." And, truly, have we finished the year's work in joy. (Acts 23:24-25.) Our work of evangelization has carried us from the sea to the mountain; from the most exclusive citizenry to the poorest of the humble; into the largest churches, and the smallest and most humble hamlets; in rich, proud cities, in rural sections where bread was bargained for as a man bargains for grains of gold. We have been in homes so humble, and whose appointments were so poor, that the memory of their poverty haunts still our hearts, and through the blood and the Book we have seen them transformed into veritable mansions of his majesty. Again have we gone into veritable palaces with the finest of furnishings and seen a poverty there which words cannot describe, because of the absence of him who, alone, can make a house into a home, and there, praise God, we have seen the same transforming power convert a palace into a paradise. The same Christ had wrought it all in both places. We have seen homes saved from wreckage, lives snatched from suicide, whole communities stirred and stayed by God. We have conducted city-wide campaigns, spoken to thousands, then gone immediately from such place of vantage to the poorest, humblest church in the community. We thank God for this privilege of preaching anywhere. The street shall be our pulpit, the water hydrant our hatrack, the passing throng our parish, if need be, that the Gospel of Christ, of which we are not ashamed, shall be heralded and heard by those hearts which so long have heard their only hope with an empty wonder, and seemed satisfied with a show of things. Do we meet opposition, apostacy, hardship, heartache? Yes, of course we do. But it is met in the Spirit of Christ, and in the assurance of ultimate victory, for "My word shall not return unto me void. And, "not a word of the Lord shall fall unto the ground."

We have tasted more of the brine of our tears this year than ever before; and at the same time have known more triumphs through Christ. "He that goeth forth weeping bearing precious seed with him, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bearing his sheaves with him." We have had more heartaches, known more happiness, had less money, and at the same time we're richer in grace than ever before. In short, over 5,000 souls have been at God's altar during the year's work.

We continue pressing the battle to the very gates of hell for the glory of God that some soul marked and branded by the beast may be snatched as a brand from the burning, saved through the blood and the Book, then to be presented, without spot or wrinkle, in that morning of that day that shall never end.

If God should call us, we might enter the pastorate again next year. Pray for us. Romans 15:30; Hebrews 13:20-21.

REV. AND MRS. H. C. CAVINESS.

HEAVEN AT ANY COST.

There is an Indian legend that runs thus: A certain chief was wont to try the endurance and spirit of his young warriors by sending them to climb a mountain, and as evidence of the height they reached within the day's toil bring back some trophy of the highest point. On an appointed day four young men began to climb at the break of day. The first to appear in the evening carried a branch of mountain spruce, the second a twig of dwarf pine that struggled through the snows and cold of the thin air on the mountain height. The third returned with a little bunch of shrub. Late in the night the fourth appeared. He carried nothing, but a beam of satisfaction and victory shone in his eyes as he reported: "I climbed to the place of rocks and snow where nothing grows, and from the mountain peak I saw the western sea."

The simple legend seems to say to us that at all cost we must reach heaven, the Christian's goal that lies beyond the western side of life's day.

It is not enough simply to be religious; the Jews who put their Messiah to death were religious men. It is not enough to engage in social work; Jesus tells of men who argue that they "have done many wonderful works," but who missed heaven at last. It is not enough to claim a good conscience; Paul claimed that even when he was sending to their death the followers of Jesus. It is not enough to hope we are saved; and await the end to find out the facts; the Bible abounds in certainties and clearly points out the way to God. Let us determine to reach heaven at any cost.—Wesleyan Methodist.

We praise God at intervals with our words, but our whole life should be a ceaseless song of praise to him.—Augustine.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

A SAFE PLATFORM.

Some platforms fall. Others decay. Still others are torn away. Some are ignored. Some are made for show and are never used.

There is one platform of certainty. It never yields, it never weakens, it never wears or decays. Such a platform Rev. H. S. Hardcastle chose to claim as his own, and to stand upon, as he began his ministry with Christiana Temple, Norfolk, Sunday, September 3rd. His people were there in great numbers, and in coming months and years will witness as to whether he stands upon the unfailling platform that he has chosen. He called it "My Pastoral Platform." The justification and source of this platform is I. Cor. 2:2: "For I determine not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." He gave three reasons for choosing such a platform:

1st. Any other platform than this would be wholly inadequate for the great task which he faced. Neither culture, nor logic, nor eloquence, nor personal magnetism, nor social standing, or any other thing, could be adequate for the work in hand. Jesus alone, and him crucified, is adequate for the needs of every individual in his congregation, or with whom he might work and have to do throughout all his stay in Norfolk. Each individual has his own needs, trials, temptations, and while no preacher could be adequate to meet these, Jesus Christ, whom the preacher is to represent, is adequate and will prove adequate for every personal want and individual need.

2nd. There was a second reason for taking this platform to stand upon as he labored with his people, and that is that Jesus is adequate for all the needs of the great church which he has come to serve. A fine plant, a beautiful equipment, ample and comfortable quarters are wholly inadequate for the needs and demands of the church. Christ is the central figure of the church and he alone is adequate to meet the needs of the church, whatever those needs may be, or however grave the problems may become. The church that is indifferent to Christ, and him crucified, cannot succeed and go forward, because it has an inadequate platform.

3rd. The third reason for this platform as Bro. Hardcastle said, was that Jesus is not only adequate for the needs of the individual, and of the church, but for all mankind. The world finds itself in a terrible plight and pitiable condition today, living on edge, fighting desperately against an enemy called "depression," but the economic principle or platform cannot meet the needs of the world, and the world will never find its way out of the present condition until it adopts the platform which has stood the test of all trial and temptation since the day that Paul in an inspired moment gave it to the world, "Jesus Christ, and him crucified."

To this writer, there is one strikingly restful and beautiful thing about the preaching of the true and real gospel at present. It has, and it sounds the note of certainty. Political speakers, economic advisers, real and would-be statesmen, are in a maze and a fog of uncertainty, of doubt, of fear. It is, therefore, a positive relief, a glorious experience to hear in these days a man of God stand and tell us those things that we know are true, sound a note of absolute certainty, and point the way to sure and unmistakable relief, security, salvation.

J. O. A.

IN TIME OF WAR.

The affairs of our government at present can be condoned and embraced on the grounds that we are in a state of war. Our President differs from a Mussolini or a Hitler, or any other dictator, in that we have granted him the power such as no other President ever had, and we can withdraw that power by and through our suffrage when and if that power is abused or mis-directed. The President of the United States is still our President; not "your majesty" or "his eminence," but just plain, straightforward "our President." We have consciously and quite unanimously declared war and have chosen our commander-in-chief, and have bidden him to lead and we will follow. Economic conditions had become unbearable and had produced an enemy called and recognized as "depression." On this enemy we have declared war.

These are the grounds for doing the unheard of and unexpected things we are doing. Only in time of war are we called upon to tear down, destroy, kill. We are now tearing down an economic structure that we have spent years in building; we are destroying unripe and, therefore unharvested crops; we are killing four million pigs too small for pork and carrying to the slaughter one million expectant mothers of the swine family. It is beside the point to argue that all the growing crops are needed, or will be, for food and clothing if they were left and harvested when mature, and that there will be millions who are hungry whom the untold millions of porkers would have supplied with meat. In war the command is to destroy, to tear down, to kill.

Again our loyalty is appealed to as it was in the days of the World War. Then we were bidden to buy Liberty Bonds, "to do our bit," to make our contribution. A sense of loyalty held us steadfast and kept us going till victory was won and the battle was over. We will now "do our part."

Just as in time of war we were called on to pray, pray earnestly, for peace, to preach peace, to teach peace, to long for peace, so with every element and all the forces of war let loose around about us now; with the dogs of war barking at our door and the bloody hand of economic war doing its ruthless work of destruction and death, so surely are we called upon to pray for peace, to preach peace, to hope for peace. If ever the people of God were called upon to pour out their petitions at a throne of grace, daily, and to plead for light, the true light, and that wisdom that will lead us from the wilderness of waste and war out into the glorious heights of liberty and peace, that time is now. It becomes all good citizens to be loyal, faithful and true in time of war as well as in peace, but it also behooves all good citizens to pray, to plead and to long for that day when peace shall prevail and swords shall be beaten into pruning-hooks, and nations shall learn war no more.

RELIGIOUS READING.

Many surveys have been made of church parishes in the interest of the denominational paper. The results are not encouraging. It is a question as to the reason. It may be due to many causes, for example, the lack of interest, lack of money for such purposes, the lack of time to read, or, possibly, lack of interest in promoting a denomination or a party or a certain "brand" of theology. Church papers are often little more than propaganda sheets or "house organs" and many people have lost interest in promoting religion through narrow organs. Strange thing is the Christian mind today.

One reason why certain types of religious journals get little support in some parishes is because the larger city newspapers provide an immense amount of religious information in the course of the year. Many editorial pages present regular features devoted to moral, religious and æsthetic subjects. And the circulation of the cult organs is enormous. One can go into thousands of homes and find magazines of almost every description dealing with personal religion, prosperity religion, divine healing, astrology and theosophy. People seem to be reading them for the bookstores and newspaper stalls are overflowing with them.

I have often wondered why this is. Possibly it is because the individual who buys these cult journals is reaching out for something spiritual that he finds no where else. He thinks he finds it in these channels. His soul is nurtured somehow. It will do no good to say the material he gets is spurious, for he would not continue reading along those lines unless he secured some kind of help. I have concluded that all Christian leaders need to think more of the spiritual religion they profess than the machinery they seek to maintain. Too much of our talking, teaching, writing, exhorting echoes with the money motif. How can we convince anybody that the Christian religion is a religion of the abundant life capable of satisfying the craving soul overflowing with love and good will?

Dr. Fred Goodsell in a recent letter to corporate members of the American Board says most truly, "It is, then, not a matter of the amount of money, but a matter of the spirit in which gifts are made and used that shall effectively accomplish what lies inherent in the Name we bear."

If we can make our religious journals feed the hungry soul in a way to satisfy it there might be a feeling on the people's part that they must have that journal as a regular companion.

GALILEE, JERUSLEM, ROME.

My Dear Dr. Atkinson:

When I left home I thought I might have time to write several articles for THE SUN, but there has been no time that I could do so. So far, I have covered about 16,000 miles and have seen a great deal. If I were to say what is the most outstanding experience, I would find it hard to tell, but there are three that I can never forget—the Sea of Galilee, Jerusalem and Rome.

I had read so much of the Sea of Galilee, and pictured it so beautifully in my mind that I actually dreaded to look upon it for fear that I would be disappointed. It is difficult to make anyone understand this unless he has taken a ride over the dreary, stony hills of Palestine. But our car turned the corner and there, below us, was that wonderful sea just as I expected to see it. Blue, blue, blue, down at the foot of these steep, bare hills and nestling on its shore the little modern village of Tiberius. I have never seen anything so beautiful, and there it was just where it ought to be, and just where Jesus lived and sailed upon it. The same kind of small boats were there in which he sailed—some of the party went out in one of the boats and the boatmen sang "Galilee, Blue Galilee" for them. And that day, at the hotel, we had fish for lunch caught in that lake. After visiting Jerusalem and seeing so many doubtful sacred places, it was refreshing to see the lake that is genuine.

I can only write briefly now, but Jerusalem is also there where it ought to be. However, one rides into modern Jerusalem a long time before he sees the city walls. A new Jerusalem has grown up outside the walls extending many miles away from the enclosed city. This part is modern in every way. I put up at King David Hotel not far from the Tower of David. Directly opposite is the famous Jerusalem Y. M. C. A. building. From the balcony of my room I could look out upon the city wall.

Our first view of the famous city was from the Mount of Olives, and we looked down upon the City of David all spread out before us just as Jesus must have seen it on the first visit at the age of 12. The difference was, of course, in the Temple site. He saw the beautiful Temple with the golden dome and the white buildings while we gazed upon the rather somber Mosque of Omar where the Temple used to be. It was near noon and the sun was flooding the city so that Jerusalem looked rather drab and colorless. This changed, however, at sunset when the colors seem to appear in a soft and luminous tint. No one can look upon or into the Jerusalem of today and think of "Jerusalem, the Golden," as one man said in an article recently written, but when the sun rises upon it and when the sun goes down it is not so hard to see the golden aspect.

Jerusalem is full of interesting things. I could write at length of its streets for many of them are the worst in the world. David Street is full of steps and on either side are markets and stores. The street is narrow, and donkeys and people crowd it continuously. It is terribly hard on the feet of the uninitiated, but it is interesting to be walking in the old city. This street takes us in time to the Mosque of Omar.

There is much to see in this ancient city and enough to interest a devout person for many weeks. The Church of the Holy Sepulchre is intensely interesting and we spent much time there. In this brief statement I can say very little about other interesting things, but later perhaps I can. Again I wish to emphasize the feeling of satisfaction at finding Jerusalem just where it ought to be. Why do I say this? Because in reading one's Bible, one is impressed with the importance of the city, and so much of the gospels, as well as Old Testament history are tied up with Jerusalem. All my life I have had to accept the accounts on faith or almost on faith. But it is reassuring to go there and find that the things you have been cherishing in your mind all your life as real are, after all, real in fact. It did me good to see the Dead Sea and the Wilderness of Judea, Bethlehem, Nazareth and other places connected with the life of Jesus. I can now see him as he lived and worked and walked, and the whole story takes on new meaning and my sense of reality is strengthened. There are many "sacred places" that are pointed out that to me bear no marks of sacredness whatever, but these great things—mountains, lakes, rivers, cities and villages—these are genuine and sufficient.

As to Rome, one could write a book, but all I can say now is that I have seen Rome, and that in itself is stimulating. It means much to visit the Colosseum and think about what it meant to be a Christian in those early days, and I am still thinking of the implications of the Catacombs that I visited. I shall have much to think about in years to come.

St. Peter's Church captures one's attention quickly. I spent a long time there not only looking but thinking. It is the largest and richest church in the world, and it is the center of world activity. Thousands of people enter and leave it every day. A steady stream of worshippers, tourists, priests, societies, pilgrims, processions move through it. It is rich in mosaics, sculpture and other works of art. It is so large that the whole cathedral at Milan could be set down in St. Peter's bodily. I made notes of the measurements of various cathedrals that could be placed therein.

But something else attracted my attention. It is a religious center. In spite of the curious tourist and his loud talking guide, and the noise of the throng, religious services are being carried on in side chapels where Holy Communion is administered and large numbers come to pray and partake. There was a spirit of religion manifest and one day I saw a delegation of pilgrims from some foreign land, a hundred men I should think kneeling on the main floor near the high altar engaged in some ritual services led by a priest. I saw a procession of men and women march three times about the great open space singing some devotional song. All of this going on as if nothing else in the world mattered. As I left the church I met a company of green shirt boys entering in military formation. I understand they are something like our Boy Scouts in America.

This is all for the present, but I hope to write more in detail when I get home.

Sincerely yours,

E. A. KING.

OPENING INFORMATION.

We are in the midst of registration, opening exercises, etc., at the College. The arrival of new students has been very gratifying. Indications now are that the freshmen class will be a bit larger than last year's freshman class. The registration of former students is a bit behind the registration last year. We are opening one week earlier, however, and perhaps these losses will be overcome in the early days of next week. Many former students have jobs and will hold on for the week. Receipts compare evenly with the receipts last year at the close of the first week's registration. We are hoping for a good year.

The interest and cooperation of our friends is greatly appreciated. A more detailed report will be given later.

PROGRESS BY NECESSITY.

By TIMOTHY THOMAS.

It is the typical American spirit to boast of our progressiveness. We like to enumerate our progress in terms of railroad mileage, steamship tonnage, factory spindles, coal mines, schools, colleges, and other institutions for the betterment of human welfare. We take pride in pointing to the laws that govern us and of our ability to meet emergencies whether they be wars or financial depressions.

On the surface of things it would appear that we plan and push our methods of advancement to meet the needs and demands of the future. An analysis of this will prove a fact entirely different. Our progress is made through the narrow and painful avenue of necessity. The old saying that "necessity is the mother of invention" stands as a fact indisputable, and well can it be said that all our progress is made with the pinch and the pull of necessity.

So often the charge is made that too much of our legislation is for the classes and not for the masses. The charge does not go far enough. All our legislation is class legislation, not a part of it. We legislate on demand; not in advance of a need. We arise to meet a need but seldom have the governmental machinery already set up to meet an anticipated need.

It is through the urge, the appeal, the united effort of single groups that we slowly make our progress of advancement. It is the meeting of this urge, this appeal, this united effort that makes our legislation class. It is usually some pressure brought to bear that receives an answer in the form of some law aimed at bringing relief or meeting the demands of a definite class.

The fact that we have little or no legislation for the masses is always demonstrated at a time of great need. We substitute emergency legislation to meet the needs of the masses.

We are now slowly emerging from a period which should teach wise statesmen the fallacy and the folly of catering to legislation for the benefit of the few and not the many. Thousands of individuals throughout the land are under severe criticism, some under indictment, while others are serving terms for various financial offenses committed against society. Our laws have been on trial just as much as these individuals, but unfortunately we cannot convict a law. So often it is human error in the framing of laws that makes possible other human errors. The weakness and short-sightedness of men too often make possible the expression of weakness in other men.

We have been laboring under the impression that only politicians can be elected to bodies that make our laws. The new urge and the new era into which we are going demands statesmen of the highest order and not politicians of the ordinary variety. Most of our important elections seem far away at this time, but now, and not then, is the time to select seasoned timbers with which to build our future legislative structures.

A GOOD REMEDY.

Horace Greeley is said to have received a letter from a woman stating that her church was in a distressing financial condition. They had tried every device they could think of—fairs, strawberry festivals, oyster suppers, a donkey party, turkey banquets, Japanese weddings, poverty socials, mock marriages, grab bags, box socials, and necktie sociables. "Would Mr. Greeley be so kind as to suggest some new device to keep the struggling church from disbanding?" The editor replied, "Try Christianity."—The Christian.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Rev. John G. Truitt began his work as pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church, September 1st. He preached two great sermons on the first Sunday. Large congregations greeted him. The people were favorably impressed. He comes to this church, which, at the present time has the largest membership among the Congregational-Christian Churches of the Southern Convention. Christian Temple formerly held that distinction, but a revival of the church roll put that church second in the list of churches, in point of number of members carried on the active list. Bro. Truitt has a great opportunity, and those who know him believe he will measure up to this opportunity, and succeed in this field.

The protracted meeting conducted at Oakland Church during the past week resulted in a general revival among the church members, and the addition of nine new members to the church roll. Rev. O. D. Poythress assisted the writer. His sermons were deeply spiritual, soul stirring and convincing. He is a successful pastor-evangelist.

A united protracted meeting will be conducted at Berea Church, Driver, the week following the fourth Sunday in September. This meeting is sponsored by the Christian and Methodist Churches, and the people of the other churches are invited to participate. This year the pastors will preach during the meeting. It is believed that this plan will work well at this time.

The time of the next session of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference is near. Pastors and people in all the churches should bestir themselves during the next few weeks in a determined effort to meet conference apportionments in full. Many churches have had great difficulty in meeting local current expenses this year. Very few pastors have been paid up to date. Many will go to conference, in all probability, with salaries not paid up in full. If every member of the church would give according to his or her ability, it would not be difficult to meet current expenses and pay conference apportionments in full.

It is not too late now to make an effort to finish the conference year with all expenses and benevolences paid up in full. It will increase the interest in the local church, and the benevolent causes of the church will be greatly encouraged, by this forward looking step. No church should be willing to permit a debt for current expenses to be unpaid at the end of the year. Every church should seek to meet its obligations to the benevolent enterprises of the cause of Christ. It may be necessary sometimes for a church to go in debt. But it should pay up and get out of debt in due season.

It is our hope that every church will be able to secure a pastor before the beginning of another year. It is understood that several changes are to be made. God wants devotion and loyalty in the pulpit and pew. The promotion of the cause of Christ should be the primary consideration on the part of the minister who accepts a call to a church. The minister who has more interest in his salary than in his work is not worthy of a place in the pulpit. And the church which will stoop to the low level of trying to secure a preacher, just because he is willing to preach for a very small salary, will never prosper. Many churches have been pauperized, and almost wrecked, by ministers who were not faithful to the highest interests of the kingdom. Selfishness will kill a church. It will measure the days of a minister. It has no place in the kingdom of God. Put God first. God will provide for those who trust him and do their best, unselfishly, for his church. Provide for the church. Love the church. Support the church. Pray for the church. Attend the church. Live for the church. It is the one institution which will prevail.

I. W. JOHNSON.

RAINBOW'S END.

We left the College on August 6th, for Edgemont, N. C., for a few days' rest before continuing our westward journey by way of Asheville, Knoxville, Tenn., and Louisville, Ky., and on to Chicago. This trip westward was necessary for interviewing prospective students and holding conferences with certain educators whom the committee on faculty and budget were considering employing as members of our faculty for 1933-34, also for making contacts, which we hope may be beneficial to the College in many ways in the days to come.

Edgemont is a small town, situated among the peaks of the Blue Ridge Mountains. We were invited to Edgemont by Mrs. J. W. Patton, wife of Mr. J. W. Patton, of Elon College, N. C. At Edgemont, we enjoyed a number of delightful surprises. We thought we were going to a camp for a few days' rest. Upon our arrival, however, we found ourselves pleasantly and comfortably situated in a modern hotel. This was our first delightful surprise. The second, was an invitation to Sunday School and church early Sunday morning. Here a group of young girls who were campers had come to church for worship. The next surprise came when we visited the camp itself. This camp is called "Rainbow Camp," the site of which is a narrow stretch of lowland between high mountain peaks. From the side of one peak, falls briskly a stream of fresh, clear water. This furnishes the campers with bathing facilities and other conveniences. A large group of tents surround the mess hall. Here live between fifty and sixty young girls for six weeks during the summer, with excellent supervision and guidance. They live largely in the open.

The whole situation so impressed us that we inquired of Mrs. Patton, who has charge, "What about this camp?" She replied that it was "Rainbow Camp" and that "Rainbow" was an organization of young girls connected with the Masonic and Eastern Star Orders. The organization was formed April 6, 1922, at McAllister, Okla., by Rev. W. Mark Sexon. The purpose of the organization was to instruct young girls in the real value of fraternalism and to acquaint the daughters of Masons and Eastern Star members in different sections of the country with each other. This organization has grown to many active assemblies throughout the world. This organization offers to girls a very high type of vacation at exceedingly low cost and with special instruction along all lines of their ritualistic work.

"Rainbow Camp," located at Edgemont was established in 1926, largely through the efforts of Mrs. J. W. Patton. The camp owns twenty-five acres of land and has an option on the hotel and other valuable properties. The purchase is being made largely by the girls themselves. It is certainly a deserving undertaking, and anyone who may be interested in young girls, may search a long time before finding a more effective channel through which to make their contributions.

The daily program consists of rising with the ringing of the bell at 6:15, setting-up exercises conducted by competent directors, flag raising with the customary salute, then breakfast. It may be difficult to get all members up for setting-up exercises and flag raising, but usually all are ready for breakfast in advance. After breakfast, classes begin. Opportunity is offered to those who wish to study basketry, bead work, wood carving, and adventures into the study of nature. The afternoons are given over to outdoor exercises; such as swimming, tennis, and the like. Miss Lila Newman of the art department of Elon College, is assisting at the camp, and all who wish may receive lessons in art. All instruction given at the camp is given by accredited high school and college teachers, assuring the girls who come, the very best of advantages, among unusual surroundings, at a minimum cost. You will certainly be surprised to know the charge made for this opportunity and these privileges offered the individual. The cost this year for the entire time was approximately $40, no charges made for instruction in basketry and bead-work—the only charge is for material. They pay, of course, for instruction in art.

The camp is conducted on a very high plane, with capable and efficient management. The personnel of the girls is of very high type, indicative of the best families of the four states represented: North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee and Georgia. The workers and teachers in the camp serve without remuneration, and certainly deserve congratulations for the excellent service they render. "Rainbow Camp" thus becomes the "End of the Rainbow," that is, good times, good luck, and good fortune for the girls who are able to accept the camp's invitation and take advantage of this most unusual offer.

The "we" in this story are Mrs. Smith, Rebecca, L. E., Jr., and I. This article is written without request. It is voluntarily given to the public, and I am sure that those who are interested will appreciate anything the public may feel justified in offering.

L. E. SMITH.

LET'S PRAY MORE.

We are living today as a part of an economic structure that is very complex. At present the clouds are hanging low and there is much confusion. The sun seems to have stopped shining economically, socially, and morally. Many people, both old and young, are becoming discouraged as they look into the future. Some are giving up in despair, and as a result the newspapers are filled with the records of suicides. The way looks too dark and the problems too hard so they try to end it all. The trouble with people is that they are forgetting God, and that he answers prayer. We need not be perplexed; God is still on his throne ready and willing to help those who have the faith to trust him and call upon his name. We should lay our problems through prayer at the foot of the Cross of Christ, instead of brooding over them. Christ will settle them if we will let him. We need to pray as well as work and Christ will help us solve our problems and run our race. Paul tells us to pray without ceasing. That is to be in the attitude of prayer. Wesley says, "God does nothing but in the answer to prayer."

We, the young people of this age, who are launching out on life's tempestuous sea as leaders and workers for Christ in the church and the world, have a hard road to travel. We have a difficult race to run. It is not a primrose path lined with ease, but it is a steep and rocky road. In it we will meet trials and temptations, and it will take courage to keep on. But if we will have faith in God and go to him in prayer he will remove all the obstacles from our path and give us courage to go forward, and we will win.

There is no defeat where there is faith in God and prayer to God.

We remember that while the children of Israel were in the wilderness twelve spies were sent over to see and bring back a report concerning the promised land. Ten returned telling of the fruit and fertility of the land, but they said, "There are giants there and we cannot overcome them." When Caleb and Joshua returned they told of the fertility of the soil and the fruit of the land, and also of the giants, but they did not say, "We cannot go into the land because of the giants." They said, "We can go, for God will be with us." What was the difference between Caleb and Joshua and the other ten? Caleb and Joshua had faith in God to ask for his help and they knew that he would help them. Let us not be weak like the ten, but strong in faith in God like Caleb and Joshua, and lay our giant problems before him in prayer and he will solve them for us and lead us into the promised land of service for Christ and the Cross.

As we look back over the years, we find that it has been men of prayer who have left an imprint upon the sands of time. Men of prayer have been men that have been remembered. Caleb and Joshua are easy to remember. How many remember the names of the other ten? They are hard to remember. Caleb and Joshua looked to God in prayer.

Abraham of old was a man of prayer, and God called him out from his own people to become the father of his chosen race of people, the Jews.

Paul prayed, and he shook the world for Christ. God gave us more of the New Testament through Paul than through any other writer of the New Testament.

Martin Luther was a praying man, and he had courage to lead the sixteenth century reformation in Germany.

Mocdy saw the need of prayer, and prayed continuously, and today his name is perpetuated in his great achievements.

Today the need of prayer is just as great as it was in the days of those old saints of God. No Christian can be spiritually alive and influential except he be a praying Christian. Those men of old saw the need of prayer and prayed and God answered their prayers. God will hear and answer our prayers today, as of old, if we will ask in his name. So, let's pray more. We fail because we do not give God a chance through prayer. "Ye have not because ye ask not." "Ask and ye shall receive, seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you."

J. RAY DICKENS.

A TRIBUTE TO DEACON J. T. ROUNTREE.

With one mind and common impulse, the friends, fellow citizens, and acquaintances of J. T. Rountree, on the 23rd of July, 1933, turned to Cypress Chapel Church, the resting place of the church's dead, to pay their tribute of love, reverence and respect to the man who lived, loved and labored in their midst nearly eighty years.

In going back over a great period of years to meditate upon what "Our fathers have told us," and to contemplate "What work God did in their days in the time of old," we are made to exclaim, "What amount of precious truths lie hidden away in the great volume of the past?" In our brief haste we pause and look back over the road traveled to see wherever they failed or succeeded that we may take warning from the one, and courage from the other. They were the product of the dark days when the clouds of the Civil War hovered low over the nation, their fathers, brothers, comrades, and friends marched away to battle, to spill their blood and fill the graves of unknown soldiers, in defense of self-respect and independence. They were among the first men of their times, they lived in an age that is past, when to be a gentleman and a Christian was above all titles and place, without any taint of the commercial spirit of this age.

In the passing of this veteran of the warfare against sin and the influences of destruction of man, nature breathes the very soul of patriotism and love of country. When we pay tribute to the achievements and memory of this man whose life was largely devoted to the churches in Cypress Magisterial District, Nansemond County, Va., for three-quarters of a century, it is a happy reflection to feel that our admiration and love is universally shared by the people whom he directly served and by those of the whole country so fortunate as to claim personal acquaintance of familiarity with his career.

J. T. Rountree was the father of Chaplain H. E. Rountree, U. S. N., stationed at San Diego, Calif. (Chaplain Rountree accompanied President-elect Hoover on the "Goodwill Tour" to South America); A T. Rountree, Roanoke, Va.; Willie T. Rountree, Waverly, Va.; R. J. Rountree, Franklin, Va.; Mrs. Mary Rountree Smith (deceased), Portsmouth, Va.; Mrs. Inez Rountree Harrell, Portsmouth, Va., and Mrs. Addie Maude Taylor, Cypress Chapel, Va.

In the starry heavens which proclaim the handiwork of God, revolves great orbs where fires have long been quenched, but to the eye of man they are still visible. Their light streams earthward in apparently undiminished splendor. It is so with our dead friends. The radiant glory of their lives is not ended with death.

The great Master of the universe, who rules the destinies of men, called him to sleep everlasting on July 20, 1933. His career was ended, his work on earth was accomplished, he passed on beloved by all. He lies at rest among his friends, his neighbors and his kinsmen, in the beautiful cemetery of his beloved church, Cypress Chapel, Va. Peace be to his soul.

V. B. HARRELL.

Patience is a lesson to be learned. Christ is the teacher, but you are the scholar, and it is the scholar who must learn the lesson. Not even Christ can learn it for you to spare you the effort Nor can it be made easy for you even by the divine gentleness. It costs to grow patient, and you must pay the price yourself.—J. R. Miller.

PRAYER.

Our God and Father, thou knowest when love and labor are directed wholly to thee. We thank thee that Christian effort never is lost; that, notwithstanding the peril and power of organized wicked propaganda, sometimes we can see the unfolding of thy purposes even as we ask. Give to the church spirit and strength valiantly to fight for those measures which most surely bespeak thy kingdom's reign and show us where and how to serve thee best. For Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

MISSIONS IN BUSINESS.

Do Christian principles hinder success in business? The Omi mission is helping to prove the contrary. It is self-supporting in large measure through its architectural business, and more recently has developed the manufacture of mentholatum. Now a new factory has opened to make building hardware. Without any attempt to meet competition, but with a light, airy factory, eight-hour day, Sunday rest, and an attempt to produce hardware superior to that imported, good results are already being achieved. In fact, government architects are already specifying O. S. C. hardware on the finest of their work, and satisfactory orders are increasing.—S. S. Times.

THE LIFE OF A SONG.

A recent writer told of a song which he heard among a crowd of natives up the Zambesi River. This tribe had never had any dealings with the white men, and if a stranger should appear they immediately disappeared in the bush. The writer said he wrote down the melody as he heard them sing it and afterward showed it to an eminent musician who was interested in old music and who believed the song to be a pure bit of fifteenth century music. Upon investigation it was proven that a party of Portuguese missionaries traveled up the Zambesi River in 1586. The song was one of the melodies used in their services, and had been handed down for more than three hundred years. The missionaries died, but their song lived on.—Selected.

THE GUIDING HAND.

When Stanley was about to cross Africa the first time, many of the strong men of his party burst into tears as they set out. They were not cowardly, but they were overcome by the thought of the terrific hardships which they knew lay before them.

Every human life is a journey as difficult and perilous; and we might well shrink from it, had we no Guide. What absolute madness it is to set out alone!

I have read the story of a conceited young captain who would not wait off the shore for a pilot to come on board, to take him through the narrows of the harbor. "I am my own pilot," was the proud reply to all remonstrances, and he promised to be in the harbor by daybreak. He was cast ashore, dead, amid the fragments of his vessel. Such has been the fate of many a man who would be his own pilot amid the rocks and shoals of life.

When travelers climb dangerous places in the Alps, they are fastened to their guide. They have become a part of him. They may slip and fall, but he will not. So may we be bound to our omnipotent Guide; and, thus united with wisdom and security, we may travel through life without a tremor of fear.—Amos R. Wells.

WORLD FRIENDSHIP BOOKS.

Theme: "Christ and the Modern World." World Friendship Books (Mission Study Books) for the year 1933-34 are available to each and every church through the courtesy of The Pilgrim Press, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass. I am giving below the books I would recommend for local missionary societies for study books, where, perhaps, only one book will be used. A few reading books are also recommended. These books are for reading only, and should not be used for study books.

For Adults—"Eastern Women—Today and Tomorrow," by Ruth Frances Woodsmall.

A study of the tremendous changes taking place in the life of the women of the East. An unusual book with a stirring challenge.

Board, $1.00; paper, 50c. Manual: "How to Use" (Essential for each group to have at least one copy), 25c.

The book, "Builders of a New World," by Robert Merrill Bartlett, is also good for adult groups. See list for young people for description of this book.

Reading Book for Adults—"God's Candle-lights," by Mabel Shaw, missionary in Africa.

A reading book of great charm, giving vivid description of life in a mission station where an unusual educational experiment is being carried on. This book is imported from England.

Cloth, $1.00.

Home Mission Book for Adults—"The Christian Mission in America," by Hugh T. Kerr, minister of Shadyside Presbyterian Church, Pittsburgh.

A vigorous handling of the great issues facing the Christian forces of the nation. It shows through an abundance of thrilling illustrations how the gospel has transformed lives and renewed society wherever it has gone. Challenges the churches to undertake with deeper devotion and united strength the Christian mission in America.

Cloth, $1.00; paper, 60c.

For Young People—"Builders of a New World," by Robert Merrill Bartlett.

A striking book on the general theme of "Christ and the Modern World," developed principally through studies of great personalities both in America and in other nations.

Cloth, $1.00; paper, 60c. This one book will cover both home and foreign missions for young people.

In case a second book is needed, Harry Thomas Stock's book "So This is Missions," will give excellent material. This book is a six-session course on the general subject of present-day missions, furnishing discussion topics and source material.

For Seniors—"Today's Youth and Tomorrow's World," by Stanley High.

A book of great interest for reading and study that will be appreciated by adults as well as by seniors. In a very concrete and interesting way the author leads us to a vital consideration of the many subjects connected with the theme for the year. The book reflects the discussions on these subjects which Mr. High held with a group of high school students in his own church.

Cloth, $1.00; paper, 60c.

For Intermediates—"How Far to the Nearest Doctor?" Stories of Medical Missions Around the World, by Edward M. Dodd, M. D.

A reading book of stories from the work of medical missions telling of the work of Christian doctors, the training of national physicians and nurses, and the work of preventive medicine and research. This charmingly written book is full of interest and inspiration.

Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75c.

Home Mission Book for Intermediates—"Pioneers of Good-Will," by Harold B. Hunting.

A reading book of sketches of twelve great men and women who were pioneers in home missions.

Boards, $1.00; paper, 75c.

Manual for Leaders—To be used with "Pioneers of Good-Will," and other source material, "Good News Across the Continent," by Mary Jenness.

For Juniors—"In the African Bush," by Jewel Huelster Schwab, missionary to Africa.

A book giving stories, background material and practical plans for class sessions, worship services and various activities.

Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75c.

Reading Book for Juniors—"Follow the Leader," by Winifred Hulbert.

A series of unusual stories about girls and boys in many lands whose lives have been made happier by the spirit of Christ in our modern world.

Cloth, 75c; paper, 50c.

Juniors' Home Mission Book—"Young America Makes Friends," by Mary Alice Jones and Rebecca Caudill.

A Friendship Press text dealing with the problems of Christian living common to junior boys and girls such as going to school, keeping well and happy, being good citizens, earning and spending money. Offers guidance in understanding the experiences of such other groups as migrants, mountaineers, Negroes, Alaskans and new Americans.

Boards, $1.00; paper, 75c.

There are also several good reading books for this age group. Among them are "Jumping Beans," by Robert N. McLean; "Mr. Friend O'Man," by Jay T. Stocking, and "Stories of Brotherhood," by Harold B. Hunting.

For Primary Children—"The Call Drum" (Teachers' Edition), by Mary Entwistle and Elizabeth Harris.

A text giving stories, lesson plans and definite suggestions for worship services and activities.

Board, $1.00; paper, 75c.

Reading Book—"The Call Drum" (Children's Edition), by Mary Entwistle.

An illustrated edition of the stories contained in the Teachers' Edition. Children enjoy having these stories to read for themselves. Imported from England.

Boards, 60c.

Primary Home Mission Books—"Child Neighbors in America," by Elsie G. Rodgers and Dorothy F. McConnell.

A Friendship Press text, containing stories from various home mission fields together with source material, and suggested plans for teaching which are very practical and helpful.

Boards, $1.00; paper, 75c.

Reading books are: "Friends of Ours, by Elizabeth Colson (75c), and "The World in a Barn," by Gertrude Chandler Warner ($1.25).

Supplemental Material for Juniors and Primary Children—

"Picture Map of Africa," 30x50 inches, to be completed by pupils. 50c.

"Loose-Leaf Series, No. 1, Africa." A packet punched to fit a loose-leaf binder, containing background material, such as folk-lore, music, arts and crafts, games, etc., for the use of the teacher. Each teacher should have a copy of this material. 25c.

"Africa Picture Sheet." A folder of pictures to be used in making posters and notebooks and for classroom use. 25c.

"Picture Map of the United States," 30x50 inches, to be completed by the pupils. 50c.

For Beginners—"Kembo, a Little Girl of Africa," by Winifred E. Barnard and Elsie Anna Wood.

This book has been a favorite for several years. A little book after the pattern of "Peter Rabbit" with a colored picture opposite each page of text. Board, 50c.

AT WORK AND HAPPY.

After being away from our work for some time we are happy to report that our Master has restored both of us to our natural health.

Many thanks for the kindnesses shown by our Christian friends during our stay in the hospital.

Our work here is very encouraging. We had 118 in Sunday School and preaching at Rocky Ford last Sunday. Also, there are between 60 and 80 that meet each Friday night in Christian Endeavor. These are all young people. Remember to ask the Master to guide us in training the fine mountain boys and girls, that they may take him as their personal Guide through life. The progress of Christian work here is determined by the training of the young people.

Bro. H. C. Caviness and his good wife were with us Sunday. We enjoyed having these fine people with us. We do wish more of you could come and visit the work here before winter comes.

Come and see your Home Mission Station. We feel sure that you will then love the work and the people more.

We ask your prayers, that we may do the Master's will in the great task that lies before us here.

Yours in his service,

REV. AND MRS. R. T. GRISSOM.

HAW RIVER SOCIETY.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Haw River Christian Church has had a very successful year. Regular meetings have been held and the attendance has been good. The president, Mrs. Artelia Pool, has directed several helpful projects, and with the loyal devotion of the members has made a worthy record. Helpful devotional programs have been given at each meeting having been planned by some members of the Society.

The collections have been good, and the Society has tried to do its part in extending the kingdom of God by contributing both time and money. They have visited the sick and cheered the sad during times of trouble. In every way they have tried to make a happier and better community because of the Society.

For the coming year the following officers have been elected: President, Mrs. Artelia Pool; Secretary, Miss Emma Thomas; Treasurer, Miss Mary A. Thomas.

THE FRIENDLY ROAD.

One of the finest pieces of literature that I know of for vacation, or rest-time reading is the book by David Grayson, entitled "The Friendly Road." It is the kind of reading that takes one to the lovely places of earth and away from the worries. New friends are introduced, friends that may not have been friendly before because we did not understand them, but who are fast friends once we have found the way into their confidence.

On a spring day when work was plentiful on the farm, the author says he put a few necessary articles of clothing, a few books, and a bit of food furnished by the wife, into a little bag which he swung across his shoulder and started out on a long walk. He had no plans as to where he should go, but followed the impulse of the moment, which impulse usually led him into the fields and forests far from the big roads on which the multitudes travel.

By the time he was out of his own community he was also out of food and money. The story of how he made his way among the people whom he met by the sheer wit of friendliness makes a fascinating story. Sometimes he helped with the planting of potatoes, again he would blow his little tin horn, and again he would go to church with a lonely and discouraged preacher who in turn would invite him to dine in his humble home. Always there were friendly people along the way. They might seem hard, cold, and unfriendly, but David Grayson discovered the friendly side of the farmer, the horse-trader, the millionaire and the socialist alike.

It was his own friendliness that uncovered the same spirit in others. There is no preaching in the book. It is a simple narrative, beautifully told, of people whose hearts yearn for the abundant life, the life that is free from worry and filled with happiness. Often they do not know what it is that stirs within their souls, but the yearning is always there. David Grayson has given me a happy day's reading, and many good things to think about through other days as I try to travel the Friendly Road.

BUT NOW FOR THE WORK.

Those of us who write and read this page are in the hey-day of life. We should be dreaming our beautiful dreams, and doing the things that make dreams come true. This is our time for labor—and only the laborer receives a reward. Our churches, Sunday Schools, young people's societies, communities, and the needy earth in which we live call to us for service. Their need is our opportunity for service. And God expects us to do our best.

Now is the time to get all the old members back into the work and to get new members. This is the time to rally the forces of the church. Set aside a day a month for this purpose. Make a list of prospects. Then get as many people as possible to work on this prospective list. But remember that if you are to hold those who come upon invitation, there must be something worth their coming for.

That means that you must have good programs of worship, that discussions of important topics should be done in a fine way, and that tasks that are worthy of workmen be assigned to all. Yes, this will call for work on the part of the leaders.

But what are leaders to do but lead? If you are such a person, count it a privilege to work, and to lead your fellows in helping to make your community Christian. It is not enough to hold a service on Sunday. That will probably never make any community Christian. Find the needs of the people and see that those needs are met. It may be food, it may be fuel, it may be books, it may be ideals, it may be hope, it may be love, it may be faith in humanity and in God, it may be a thousand different things, but whatever it is try to meet the need. Then you can feel worthy to consider yourself a servant of the world's greatest servant. He was not content to hold a worship service on Sunday. He worked all the week in places where people were. So must we. And now is our one and only chance. We work today, or we work not at all.

SHOULD YOU FEEL INCLINED TO CENSURE.

Should you feel inclined to censure

Faults you may in others view,
Ask in your own heart, ere you venture,
If you have not failings, too.

Let not friendly vows be broken;

Rather strive a friend to gain;
Many a word in anger spoken
Finds its passage home again.

Do not, then, in idle pleasure,

Trifle with a brother's fame;
Guard it as a valued treasure,
Sacred as your own good name.

Do not form opinions blindly;

Hastiness to trouble tends;
Those of whom we thought unkindly,
Oft become our warmest friends.

—Author Unknown.

UNDER THE SHADE OF THE TREES.

For more than a month now I have been finding rest and renewal under the shade of the trees. Perhaps for more than a century these sturdy caks at my childhood home have been reaching out their long arms to gather the sunlight for themselves, make a home for the birds, and form a friendly shade for the comfort of man. Some sixty years ago my father and mother came into the forests here, cut down such trees as were needed to build a house and clear the fields, and here among the trees built themselves a home. Here in this log cabin ten children were born, and under the shade of these trees seven of us played and worked and grew to maturity. Here among these trees and hills we learned our childhood lessons and dreamed our youthful dreams. Out from here the others have gone to make for themselves a home, and I to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ.

After years of labor among peoples whom I have learned to love, and after travels that have taken me farther than my father's family ever dreamed of going, many little nerve-centers in my body began to yell for rest. The old oak trees at home beckoned me. A drink from the spring at home offered refreshment. Members of the family extended hospitality and love. And here I am, and have been for weeks, back in my old home and community. The little nerves are not yelling so loudly now. The trees, the sunshine, the water, the love of home-folks, the beauty of the earth, the goodness of God have all conspired to bring back my youth, give me new strength of body, mind and soul.

Soon I shall be going back into the busy places of the earth to share with those whose hopes are high but whose hearts are sometimes heavy, and I shall try to share with them their dreams and aid in their fulfillment while I absorb their heartaches and let my friends go free in the sunlight of God's love. There is no labor more rewarding than that of aiding others in the accomplishment of those things that lie nearest the heart, the things that come from God.

Sometime, somewhere, I know not when nor where, and it does not matter, the soul will call for rest that the old home trees cannot give. The tasks that lure us now will no longer charm. The love of friends and family will not renew us.

When earth's last picture is painted and the tubes are are twisted and dry,
When the oldest colors have faded, and the youngest critic has died,
We shall rest, and faith, we shall need it—lie down for an aeon or two,
Till the Master of all good workmen shall set us to work anew.

When this time so beautifully expressed by Kipling comes to each of us I have hopes that we may look to that beautiful land where the Tree of Life offers its fruit to the hungry and its comfort to the tired. Perhaps we can say in the last words of the great "Stonewall" Jackson: "Let us cross over the river and rest under the shade of the trees."

SOLOMON.

LESSON XII—SEPTEMBER 17, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise."—Psa. 100:4.

LESSON TEXT: I. Kings 8:1-11.

The temple had been finished. That magnificent building, undoubtedly the most beautiful and the most costly ever erected, stood ready so far as the building itself was concerned. It must have presented an awe-inspiring sight as it stood on its high eminence, in all its glory and grandeur. But it lacked one thing. It lacked that which represented the presence and the power of the God in whose honor and for whose worship it had been erected. Without that, it was only a magnificent building. With it, it was a place of worship and of prayer and of inspiration and aspiration. Plans were made, therefore, for the bringing up of the ark of the covenant, symbolizing the presence of Jehovah, and the vessels that were used in performing the sacred ministry in the temple.

It was a great occasion. King Solomon himself was there, all the leading men of the nation were there, thousands upon thousands of people were there. Amid much pomp and splendor, and yet with solemnity and deep feeling the ark was brought up and put in its appointed place in the holy of holies, under the out-spreading wings of the cherubim, which symbolized the overshadowing presence of God himself, combining the idea of the law and of mercy. The temple was dedicated with appropriate exercises extending over a period of seven days, and immediately following these exercises the yearly Feast of the Tabernacle was observed, making fourteen days in all, of religious services on a national scale.

In this account of the incidents connected with the dedication of the temple there are several suggestive truths. First of all, there is, of course, the suggested value of religious gatherings on a national scale. The Jews made much of such gatherings, and undoubtedly one of the strongest factors in binding the nation together, and in preserving its religious ideals, was this custom. One wonders what difference it might make in our national life, if we had something akin to these religious gatherings on a national scale. It would be impossible, of course, to get the people of our nation to meet at one place. But if the nation, as a nation, could have, for instance, a week set apart for a concerted and united religious observance, it would make a tremendous difference. It is a sad commentary on our national life that when such religious days are observed such as Thanksgiving and Christmas and Easter, there are all too little of the religious element in them. We are hearing a great deal these days about the NRA and prosperity. And there is something to be said in behalf of the NRA. But the NRA will never bring prosperity on a sound basis. If our nation as a nation would set apart a week for prayer and fasting, for confessing our personal and national sins, for repenting of our foolish and wicked ways, for making amends for our mistakes, God would bless us far beyond anything that we might ask or think. One wonders after all if we want prosperity unless we can get it with a new mood and spirit, a frank recognition of God's place in the national life, and a full consecration to his will. Then there is the plain truth that the house of God, no matter how imposing or impressive, is nothing but a house, unless it is filled with the presence and the power of the living God. The ark of the covenant, containing the "tables of the law" in the "holy of holies" were symbolic of the presence of Jehovah himself in the temple. How cold and lifeless even the most beautiful house of worship is, unless there is that intangible, but real atmosphere of the presence of the living God.

Again the arrangement of the cherubim with out-stretched wings over the ark containing the law is symbolic of God's justice tempered by mercy. He is a God of justice, but he is also a God of mercy. He remembereth our frame, he knoweth that we are dust. He will not break the bruised reed or quench the smoking flax.

And finally there is the lesson that as we empty our churches or ourselves, God will fill us. "When the priests were come out of the holy place, the cloud filled the house of the Lord. For the glory of the Lord had filled the house of the Lord." Our churches ought to be places in which men and women, boys and girls see the glory of the Lord, places which they know are indeed the house of God, the gates to heaven, places from which they go to live in the light of that glory through the days of the week in the every-day tasks of life.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

sion" and "Forgive Us Our Trespases," may be helpful here.

3. Ask one or more members to consult as many prominent religious people as possible out side of your group and discover what reasons they assign for knowing that they are Christians.

4. Secure three or four members of your own group who feel they have had personal experiences that give them assurance that they are Christians, to relate such experiences to the group.

Few topics relating to religion have been discussed more than the one now before us. For almost two thousand years millions of men and women have sought to answer this question. In the age-old quest for a satisfactory answer, bitter controversy has arisen. There are today about two hundred Protestant religious bodies. This large number with their separate enterprises and beliefs is a fitting testimony to the importance of this question in the minds of Christians. Men and women have sought for the answer with such diligence that when they secured satisfaction for themselves they felt assured that they alone had the truth.

Christian history points out the startling fact that past efforts to answer the question of our topic have dealt almost exclusively with matters of belief. Creedal statements worked out by one generation tested the Christian integrity of the next generation. Thus right belief rather than right conduct has been for centuries the basic criterion by which men have measured their standing as Christians.

In recent times there has been an almost violent reaction against the creedal and doctrinal interpretations of beliefs. Increasingly right conduct and right motives have assumed an important place as tests of one's acceptance with God. If we are looking for some formula that would give us scientific accuracy in our standing as Christians, we are doomed to disappointment. The best we shall be able to do will be to point out certain factors and practices that should serve to give us a clearer insight into the merits or demerits of our spiritual lives.

EVELYN B. RICHARDSON.

I have resolved to pray more and to pray always; to pray in all places, where quietness inviteth, in the house, on the highway, and on the street; and to know no street or passage in this city that may not witness that I have not forgotten God,—Sir Thomas Browne.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

"O Lord, I beseech thee, let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of thy servant, and to the prayer of thy servants, who desire to fear thy name, and prosper, I pray thee, thy servant this day."

MONDAY.

UP GRADE.

"I press on towards the mark of the prize of high calling."—Phil. 3:14.

The way of the new day is all up grade—a hard and steady pull. The Christian's desire is for the better and for putting forth an effort for a permanence that will become perfection. Face life like Paul, who said, "Press on," "Be faithful," and "There remaineth a rest to the people of God."

Does the road wind hill all the way?
Yes, to the very end.
Will the day's journey take the whole day long?
From morn to night, my friend.

But is there for night a resting place.
A roof for us when the slow dark hours begin;
May not the darkness hide it from my face?
You cannot miss that inn.

Shall I meet other wayfarers at night?
Those who have gone before:
Then must I knock, or call when just in sight?
They will not keep you standing at the door.

Shall I find comfort, travel sore and weak?
Of labour you shall find the sum.
Will there be beds for all who seek?
Yes, beds for all who come.

—Rossetti.

Prayer—Say the Lord's Prayer.

TUESDAY.

KEEP THE FIRES BURNING.

"The fires shall ever be burning upon the altar, it shall never go out."—Lev. 6:13.

Religious enthusiasm needs nurture as well as our personal interest. We do not fail to nurture our personal interests, and so much so that there is danger that our devotion to God will be impoverished.

History hands down to us the manner in which men have kept religious enthusiasm burning. They steeped their souls in God's Word. They steeped their lives in meditation upon his ways; they stood before him in daily prayer and consecration; they engaged in long sessions of contemplation of God and Christ; and as they mused the fire burned. We find, out of experience, that passion is born of thought; that we carry thereby in our hearts the secret (knowledge) of the Lord; we carry with us a conviction of our duty; and most of all there is born in us a desire to accomplish that mission.

But none honor God like the thirst of desire;
Nor possesses the heart so completely with him;
For it burns the world out with the swift ease of fire,
And fills life with good works till it runs o'er the brim.

—Faber.

Prayer—Say the Lord's Prayer.

WEDNESDAY.

RELIGIOUS ENTHUSIASM.

"He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire."—Matt. 3:11.

Enthusiasm and devotion for a person is based on a near and real intercourse with that person.

In the same way passionate religious enthusiasm attaches itself to the person of God, through Jesus Christ, and the nearer and more real our intercourse with him, the clearer will be our knowledge of him, and the more beautiful will be our holiness and more fiery-hearted will be our desire to live worthy of him.

In close real intercourse, Christ gives fervor by bringing the warmth of his own love to bear upon our hearts through the spirit, and that kindles ours, and thus our lives glow for him throughout life.

It must be known that the secret of religious fervor and devotion is not known by mere reading of the Gospel, nor by saying that Christ excites love in our souls. But this enthusiasm comes through our love for him. Christ loved us unto death, and our love for him must be the same. Make him and his way of living joint companions in daily thought. This truth alone makes the fire burst from our lives.

Prayer—Oh dear Lord, let us muse on thee in thy beauty; let us commune with thy loveliness every day; let us dwell more in thy secret place; create within us thy glory; shine into our souls with thy unspeakable countenance; create within us enthusiastic passion which shall be the baptism of fire, a fire in which everything un-Christian shall be burned out.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

HAVING THE LIFE.

"He that hath the Son hath life. He that hath not the Son hath not life."—II. Jno. 5:12.

One who knows when he has Jesus, the Son, in his life, by the impulse of his heart toward things of Christ and his righteousness, by the fight of vices and evil desires, by the desire to restrain carnal affections, by the feeling of the power of virtue, by the self-examination and reproof of faults, by amending all one's ways for good; he who experiences all this finds an inflow of goodness and gentleness with increasing power and joy. In one's renovation of spirit and mind, one sees the fashion of the Son's glory. Such living leads to where one is overwhelmed by God's greatness and love.

We are told of a girl who one day read an old book. The reading inspired her, and she paused and prayed "God to make me beautiful within." That was the beginning of a new and charming life. God touched her heart by the words of a book. So he touches any by anything incident to our lives, if we will.

Prayer—O Lord, our God, we pray for the great feeling within that testifies of thee. May we follow the gleam and do better, and be better.

FRIDAY.

THE CALL OF LIFE.

"Let us go up at once and possess it; for we are well able to overcome it."—Num. 13:30.

There are people who cry and people who try. They who try go right on doing the impossible, exciting envy in the faces of those who cry.

The problems which face us each day are not so important in their aspect as is the quality of our fibre. Calamity howlers will never succeed. Those who try are like the three men who put ten thousand others to flight. There is a way to try and keep on trying to succeed.

We are told of a French artist while painting his famous masterpiece, imagined all the artists of the world standing around him and watching him. No wonder it was a masterpiece.

Prayer—Say the Lord's Prayer.

SATURDAY.

ROBOTS.

"Eyes have they, but they see not."—Read Psa. 115:1-9.

The inventive mind has turned to the making of robots. In a recent show was an attractive lady who wrote on a screen invitations to visit a radio exhibition; a motor-car driver, who, when bidden through a telephone to start his car, stop it, sound the horn, and bring the car back, would immediately do these things; and a knight in armor, who, whenever anyone left the hall, would loudly say, "Thank you." All of these were ingenious mechanical arrangements, true to life, except that the range of their accomplishments was extremely limited.

That is what is quite too bad about the robot. He does well what he has been made to do, but he is incapable of variation or of imitation. Are any of us robots in the kingdom of God? Must we forever be moved, never be automotive?

Prayer—Our Lord, be the Spirit within us, moving us and guiding us, but may we be no automats, but moved and guided by thee because we love thee and have come to have thy mind.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

FIRES BY THE WAY.

"He that kindled the fire shall surely make restitution."—Read Exodus 22:1-6.

A very large proportion of the disastrous forest fires that lay waste our woodlands is caused by careless motorists who flip lighted matches from their cars as they speed along, or the still burning stubs of cigars or cigarettes. They light upon dry leaves or dry grass and at once we have wild-fire, which rages perhaps for days, burns over many square miles of lovely and valuable forest, and possibly destroys houses and human lives. Massachusetts now has a law, punishing with a fine of $25.00 every motorist who is guilty of this offense, whether a fire follows or not.

Such fires, by the way, are common in life, and they are not all confined to material affairs. Careless words and ill-natured remarks often cause horrible conflagrations in society. Sneers and ridicule, taunts and innuendoes, not to speak of more serious lies and slanders, burn for months and years, and destroy characters and happiness.

We should be strenuously heedful of what we toss out of our life automobiles. There is a Judge who takes cognizance of every idle word.

Prayer—Forgive, O Lord, the sins of our mouths. Cause us to remember what sad harm they may do. May no such mischief be laid to our account in the record book of heaven.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

A LITTLE HEROINE.

During the last Armenian atrocities an Armenian Christian girl was offered clothes and food if she would become a Moslem. Though hungry and with scant clothing, she refused. So she was taken to a den of dogs and cast in with the remark, "If you will not become a Mohammedan, we will leave you to these wolf-dogs." The door was made fast. In the morning her persecutors opened the door cautiously and found the little girl sleeping quietly with her head on the body of a dog for a pillow. Presently she opened her eyes and seeing her astonished enemies, quietly said, "I will not become a Mohammedan."—Selected.

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

DAVID BROUGHT BACK ALL.

I. Sam. 30:19.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"David brought back all." "There was nothing lacking, neither great nor small, neither sons nor daughters, neither spoil nor anything they had taken to them: David brought back all." Corrupt political dealing, loose religious life, and self-assurance had opened the doors of Israel to enemies outside. The Amalekites had slipped in while the king was thinking about self rather than the service he might render Jehovah and his people, and his kingdom had suffered the loss of much that was very precious.

In the meantime Davids' two wives had been stolen away. And although he was of necessity busy fleeing the wrath of his king, for Saul being jealous of him was seeking his life, David still found time to render a great service to his family and his country, and his God.

It was not unusual for David to be retrieving something. You remember (I. Sam. 17:37) how David went single-handed after a lamb which had been snatched from his father's flocks by a bear. He slew the bear and brought the lamb back alive. Another time a lion tried the same thing, and although David was but a boy he went after the lamb which he brought back safe and sound, leaving the lion dead after his hand-to-mouth combat. At another time the honor of the armies of Israel was being snatched away by the giant Goliath and the good name of Jehovah of hosts was being maligned, and looking into the pale faces of the soldiers and the king, David said he would go after that giant and retrieve the good name of God's armies! He did, and you know the story.

Now, through no fault of David's, Israel had been raided by the marauding spy-troops of the Amalekites. Valuables had been taken, lives had been lost and other lives were in jeopardy, and the honor of a great people was being injured, and the name of Jehovah belittled. David, with a small army of six hundred men, pursues the Amalekites, so hot was the chase that two hundred of his men fainted and fell by the way, but David, nothing daunted, kept up the chase until he drove his enemies into their cantonment. And when he was near enough to look over into the valley, what did he see? "Behold, they were spread abroad over all the ground, eating and drinking and dancing, because of all the great spoil they had taken . . . out of the land of Judah." And what did David do? What did he do when his father's flocks were attacked, and the little lamb was crying for help? What did he do when the armies of Israel had been cursed and the name of God taken in vain by an evil Goliath? He went to battle in the name of Jehovah! "And David smote them from the twilight, even unto the evening of the next day: and there escaped not a man of them, save four hundred young men, who rode upon camels and fled (Gallant, weren't they?) And David recovered all that the Amalekites had taken; and rescued his two wives. He left nothing, neither small nor great, neither sons nor daughters, neither spoil nor anything that they had taken to them. David brought back all! Briefly, then, let us learn a lesson:

we do often sense the fact that something precious is lacking. And, please God, may our spiritual sense of values be so keen as to feel pain whenever any place, power, or prestige of God's in our community and lives is in jeopardy. Israel lost national confidence and prestige. Who can say that our place of leadership among the nations is what it might be? Israel's family life had been broken—and here, my friends, is one of her severest losses—wives and mothers had been stolen away, and consequently, the community and nation was paralyzed, and faith was lost. To be sure the situation is not analogous, but as I cross the country, as I sit in my study, as I mingle with the people of a former parish, as I observe the workings of time, I must say the very foundation of our home life, especially in large industrial centers, is attacked.

Yes, in our lesson from ancient Israel, something precious was gone. Faith was gone, confidence was gone, courage was gone. The king's armies were paralyzed; the king was unseeing, and unheeding—but did I say faith was gone, confidence gone, courage gone?—not altogether, for David still had faith and he still had courage, and what is more he inspired his valiant followers with that selfsame faith and courage! "David brought back all." David, with his followers fainted by the way, but David and the others pressed on, and on, and when they had checked up the returned spoil, nothing was lacking!

May we not carry this lesson a bit further? Jesus is the Greater David. Jesus came at a time when "something precious was gone," and Jesus dedicated his life to the retrieving of the lost. "He came to seek and to save the lost." To the cross he went. Nothing daunted, to death he went. Nothing daunted, to his followers, after the resurrection, he went, and inspired them to "go." And how they have gone! And to retrieve all!

II. The Stolen Spoils Had to be Sought with Sacrificial Courage. It would not do for David to wait when the lion had the lamb in his clutches. It would not do for him to wait when Goliath had the armies of Israel dismayed. There was no halting, no indecision, no hesitating, no reserving of self. Swift and sure David took his life in his hands, laid it upon the altar of country, his king, and his God—and the record is: "He brought back all."

Has the Christian gone to his task wholeheartedly? Yesterday he fastened upon some fine faith, some beautiful resolution, some new start; today, "something precious is gone." The faith has waned, or the resolution is broken, or the start has stopped! Sin, selfishness, jealousy, idleness, or some evil has crept in and stolen them away. Yesterday he knew his course of action and was courageous, today indecision and doubt fills his mind. Shall he not well learn our lesson this morning and know that the Christ is calling him to go after his losses, and may he not hear that self-same Christ of "all power" saying, "And, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world?" Such a challenge brought the prodigal son to himself, and sent him on the road to recovery. Such a challenge brought Saul from the soil of Damascus road, and sent him to stand before the kings of the earth. Such a challenge heeded in your life and mine will cause us to walk with the king in our lives, and make us happy and useful Christians in our communities.

David knew the failure of self-counsel instead of conscience-counsel. David had the lion of evil passions to break down the stronghold of his own beautiful character, but David prayed his agonizing "restore" prayer as he walked in the valley of humiliation until he was again possessed of the powers of grace and goodness.

Has the church gone at its task wholeheartedly? Or has it listened to the song of a cynical press, and the counsel of a self-seeking people until "something precious has been lost" in power, prestige, and place in the hearts and lives of its people; and in the hearts and lives of the people of our country, and nation, and world?

Thank God for David. Thank God for the valiant, and brave army that followed him! Thank God for the restorations which they made, for the new territory of influence and honor which they won. Shall not you and I, with Christian courage, confidence, and conviction, place our hearts and hands to the business of being Christian in our own personal lives, and to joining with one another in bringing greater victories in our church, community, and world? May we, everyone, as unselfishly and courageously undertake our task as did David, looking unto that Christ who can make us more than conquerors through himself. Amen.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

We were very happy to have with us on Sunday, September 3rd, seventy-three of our old boys and girls. It was "Homecoming Day" for them, and we killed the "fatted calf." We also had five members of our Board of Trustees and quite a number of visitors from Norfolk, Newport News, Suffolk, Holland, Holy Neck, Virginia, and other churches. We are always delighted to have visitors. We want them to see something of the inside work of the institution and the opportunity for doing a real service for helpless boys and girls.

The boys and girls of former days seemed to enjoy the day and seemed to be delighted to be back home. Everybody was jolly and happy and they had a good time together. The Orphanage has meant much to them and they love their old home. One boy said there was no place like the Christian Orphanage to him. The writer well remembers the day he went for this little boy, and was met at the station between trains and received the little fellow. He was reared here and has made a man of himself, and now works for a big corporation. The Orphanage, through your contributions, dear reader, gave him, and many others, a chance, and if you could see and talk with him, and the other fine men and women who helped here you would feel proud of them.

Many others had nice things to say, telling how much the Orphanage had meant to them. When children come from distant points like Norfolk, Newport News, Suffolk, Richmond, Va., and Atlanta, Ga., to be here on "Homecoming Day," they have some love in their hearts for the Home that has meant so much to them. One of these days these same children will do something worth while for our Christian Orphanage. To start out in the world without a dollar, it takes some time to get on your feet, and have something to spare. One of our boys who is in the Navy and is now located in port in the State of Washington, would his regrets that he could not be with us.

After devotions in the morning session, conducted by our old friend, Dr. J. U. Newman, a special selection of music by Miss Dorothy Bunkley, of Eclipse, Va., a quartette by the Durham Singers, a program by the Orphanage children and an address by the president of the Homecoming Day Society, Mr. J. M. Darden, the audience was dismissed.

The Homecoming Day Society was called to order and transacted the regular business. Mr. J. M. Darden was unanimously elected president to succeed himself, and Mrs. C. A. Hughes was elected secretary for the ensuing year.

While a Christian man in Connecticut was dying, he groaned out, "Lost, lost!" The pastor who was at his bedside said in surprise: "I thought you were saved" "Yes," he replied, "my soul is saved, but fifty years of my life are lost." He might have been useful during that time, but now the opportunity is lost forever.—A. C. Dixon.

RELIGIOUS BOOKS

(Any book reviewed in this Department may be had of THE CHRISTIAN SUN at the publisher's price.)

The Protestant Churches and the Industrial Crisis, by Edmund B. Chaffee, B. D., J. D. The Macmillan Co., New York. Published September 12th; $2.00.

Dr. Chaffee graduated from Michigan University in 1909, and received the degree of Doctor of Jurisprudence from the same school in 1913. He finished at Union Theological Seminary in 1916, and was ordained by the Presbyterian Church. He has headed Labor Temple, New York, for the past fifteen years and has seen first hand the problems of which he writes.

Dr. Henry Sloan Coffin says that this book "contains Mr. Chaffee's social application of his Christian creed. . . . arrived at . . . through toilsome years on the thronged East Side of New York." The entire book is a ringing plea for the application of the principles of Christ's teaching to real life. The writer has little patience with the acceptance of the Bible as a book of platitudes, and evidently believes with the Apostle James that "faith without works is dead."

He believes that the "machine technique which has so transformed life in the last two centuries . . . has at many points been a curse, a menace to human happiness and human values;" yet he believes that properly used it could, and should, be a blessing.

Taking the crisis which was impending at the time of Christ, he shows how Christ worked out a perfectly possible plan of world redemption, and warns that unless the Protestant Church is willing to accept the responsibilities thrust upon it, it is doomed to defeat.

His perspective is somewhat marred by his closeness to the problems involved, and we do not agree with all of his details, but the reading of this volume gives insight into conditions not otherwise easily obtained. We recommend it to preachers and lay workers.

A Story for the Children

HER BEST.

Anna and Bob walked home from Sunday School with serious faces. A missionary from China had told them how God blesses the pennies, and how useful even Christmas cards are to the missionaries in their work. They talked the matter over earnestly, and, going to their pretty rooms, took out the cards they had been saving.

"I'm going to send the best cards that I have to those poor heathen children," said Anna.

"Oh!" said Bob. "they don't know the difference. I'm not going to send my best ones."

"But I am sorry for them," said Anna. "I feel as if Jesus would be pleased to have me give them my best ones. I love these beautiful kitties and cute little dogs best of all, and I am just going to send them."

"Why, Anna Turner; you said that you were going to keep those just as long as you live."

"I know that I did, but I'm sorry for the poor heathen children," and here something glistened in Anna's eyes.

"Well, you may be a goose, but I shall not," said Bob.

So they made up their packages and gave them to the missionary.

Five months rolled by. The little girl and boy had almost forgotten their cards when one day a missionary, opening her boxes in Peking, came across them again, and thought, "I must use them."

So she asked her teachers to write some verses in Chinese on the cards. The old Chinaman put on his big goggles, dipped his brush and prepared to write. Anna's pretty kittens attracted his attention, and he wrote on the back: "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

Then, selecting the little dogs, he wrote, "God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

That very day old Mrs. Chang and her grandsons called at the mission.

The missionary served tea and cakes and won the heart of the old lady, and then told her of Jesus and his love for the poor Chinese women. She showed the cards to the little boys, and then she told them to take their choice. Ting Ling quickly chose the kittens and Cheng Fu the dogs. All went away pleased, and out into the heathen home went Anna's cards on their mission.

"See, granpa! Look, see my kittens!" "And my dogs!" said the boys.

Grandpa was old and feeble, but Chinese are fond of pets, and the old man lay a long time looking at the wonderful cards. The boys, seeing his interest, stole away to eat their rice. After a while grandpa discovered the verses. He read them over and over, and finally laid them down with a sigh.

He was an honest Chinaman, and had tried to do right; but he had lost faith in his idols, and now, so near death, with no hope, his old heart was very troubled. He had heard of Jesus, but thought that he was a foreigner's God, and didn't know that he died for Chinamen and loved them.

Through the long hours of the night, when he coughed so hard that he could not sleep, the verses kept coming to his heart, especially the words—"God so loved the world—the world—whosoever."

The next day he was so weak that he could hardly speak. They thought that he said "kitty," and they brought him the old yellow cat; then they thought he said "dog," and they brought him the "Pewing Pup," the pet of the household; but the old man shut his eyes and turned his head away.

All at once the boys thought of their pretty cards, and when they were brought the old man smiled and motioned to his son to read.

The son read slowly the precious words: "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

"Again," whispered the old man.

Gradually the look of eager interest changed to a peaceful smile. The old Chinaman folded his hands and fell asleep, never to awake in this world.

I think the old man caught a glimpse of the love of God, and so was not afraid, and I am so glad that Anna gave her best cards.—Selected.

"Gladys, I never heard such a noise as you made coming downstairs. Now go right back and come down properly."

Gladys retires and tries again.

"Did you hear me come down that time, mother?"

"No, dear. Now, why can't you always behave like that? You came downstairs like a lady then."

"Yes, mother, I slid down the banister."—Ex.

OBITUARIES

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

On February 25, 1933, God in his infinite wisdom saw fit to remove one of our faithful and beloved members, Mr. William Henry Joyner. He was a loyal and active member of Johnson's Grove Christian Church. For a number of years he was almost helpless, but he bore his afflictions patiently and never was heard to complain.

In the death of our brother, Johnson's Grove loses one of its members whose memory will live with those with whom he labored, but the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away.

Therefore, it becomes us to bow in humble submission to his will, and the members of Johnson's Grove Church do resolve:

1. That we will be profited by the death of our brother, that we remember him as being a most faithful member, his loyalty was not surpassed. We commend his life to all our members and may the influence of it draw us nearer to God and heaven.

2. That we extend to the bereaved family our deepest sympathy and pray God's richest blessings upon them in their bereavement.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the church record, a copy sent to the family, and a copy to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

ALEX BRADSHAW,
MRS. B. F. HANCOCK.

AYSUCUE.

Miss Margelia Ayscue was born November 4, 1864, and died June 25, 1933. For many years she was a faithful member of Liberty Vance Christian Church. God needed one more angel so he touched her and she slept the deep sweet sleep of the just. A devoted daughter, a loving sister and a true and loyal friend.

VOLUME LXXXV.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1933.

NUMBER 38.

.. THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY ..

Is It an Awakening Conscience?—

An awakening conscience must prompt the Richmond News Leader to say that "... there must be the most vigorous, intelligent action by the States to put the liquor traffic under the strictest control (after the Eighteenth Amendment is repealed). Unless the States do this, there is danger that the liquor business will again get into politics. And that will mean another long, difficult battle for sane regulation. The wets can make no greater mistake than to press their advantage too far." Oh, Mr. Editor, why didn't you say this months ago, when it might have done some good? The liquor interests have had your assistance, little need have they for your advice.

A Contributors' Page.—

The Gospel Advocate, Baptist, of Nashville, Tenn., recently published a special "Contributor's Number." Fourteen page, or near-page, articles from ministers located all over the United States were featured in this issue. The subjects were varied, including: "Music in Christian Worship," "Essentials and Non-Essentials," "Which Church Should I Join," and "True Happiness and How to Obtain It." Others discussed Christ as the propitiator and as a developer of character. Indeed, the subjects were as numerous as the writers. There was little left for the editorial staff to do except edit. An innovation of this kind might work well with other religious papers once in a while. It certainly increases the general interest when new voices enter the pages of the church paper.

The Chinese Way.—

A student in Fukien Christian University who had never read "The Good Earth," gave his own autobiography in this way: "My mother was born in a village. Her father was a farmer. She had four brothers and two sisters. Conditions were very poor, and there was no chance for anyone to go to school. They were all working hard to support the family. At the age of twenty-two she married my father. They loved each other dearly. My father was a merchant and had a little shop in the market-place. She tried her best to help my father, taking care of both the shop and the family. Later she heard the gospel of Jesus. She was converted and became a good member of the church. Through her influence my father also became a faithful Christian. My mother never ceased trying to overcome the difficulties in the way of sending us to school. We must not forget that where there is a will there is a way. My father died a year and a half ago. Nothing could comfort my mother until her own health declined and she came down with the cholera. She knew she would die, but nevertheless she was happy all the time, until she breathed her last and passed away peacefully. From my mother's death I have learned that death is only a kind of change into another world. It has also taught me the meaning of life. Physical things are mortal, but spiritual things are immortal."—Congregationalist.

Mexico, D. F.—

At the request of the Mexican Government, the United States Government has ruled that all official mail addressed to the capital of Mexico shall be marked "Mexico, D. F." instead of "Mexico City." The initials "D. F." stand for "Distrito Federal," the equivalent in Mexico of our own "D. C." or "District of Columbia." The new ruling calls attention to the fact that there are three "Mexicos." The entire Nation uses the name; the Mexican State partly surrounding the Federal District is also known as Mexico, as is also the capital city itself. The name of the Indians who conquered the beautiful valley in which the present city of Mexico lies. These Indians called the region and its chief city Tenochtitlan. The name, which signifies "stone on cactus" (an allusion to the miraculous origin of the city), proved too much of a mouthful for the Spaniards, who chose instead a derivation of the name of the tribal god of the Aztecs, Mexitl.—Exchange.

The Passing of Rolfe Cobleigh.—

Under the above heading, the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty records the death of Rolfe Cobleigh, who was for twenty-two years associated with that paper, being managing editor from 1911 to 1926, and business manager from 1926 to 1933. To members of the Congregational Church his name had become almost a household word. Christians have not been so long acquainted with him, yet among them he was gaining new friends daily. Mr. Cobleigh suffered a stroke last April, but continued to improve until the last of August, when serious trouble developed and he was removed to the Boston City Hospital. He died at the hospital on September 1st, and his funeral services were held at the Newton Highlands Congregational Church. Interment was in the cemetery at Lyndonville, Vt., where the funeral services were held under the auspices of the Masonic Lodge. THE SUN offers its deepest sympathy to both his official and personal family.

The Struggle Between Capital and Labor—

The National Industrial Recovery Administration is rapidly proving itself not only the spearhead of the country's efforts toward economic recovery, but also the testing field for a major struggle between capital and labor. . . . The American Federation of Labor is the chief wage-earner's organization in this country, though there have been and are several other organizations, generally more radical. During the World War, when Samuel Gompers was president, circumstances made the Federation very powerful, and at one time it had over six million members. For a decade it has lost members steadily. For instance, in 1931, it had 2,889,000 members, and in 1932 barely over 2,500,000. . . . When the NRA was formed, in the law creating that administration, the right of labor to organize and bargain collectively was unequivocally recognized. It was this clause which precipitated the present vast, and perhaps, crucial struggle between labor and capital. . . . We raise the capital-labor issue not only because of its own importance, but also because it may very well determine the immediate future course of the nation. . . . An example of this comes readily to mind in the recent prediction of Roger W. Babson, statistician, that the "middle class" will tolerate the capital-labor conflict only a little longer and then will arise in its wrath and set up a dictator to give each his proper share.—Christian-Evangelist.

Would Eliminate Bootlegging.—

Writing in the September issue of the National Municipal Review, Harry Flood Byrd, Junior Senator from Virginia, says that in order to eliminate bootlegging of gasoline (not liquor), "The government" should "undertake the collection of a uniform gasoline tax to be remitted to the States on a fair basis of the motor cars licensed. This would collect millions of dollars of gasoline taxes now being evaded because of 'bootlegging' of gasoline between States where the taxes vary, and would enable the gasoline companies to establish uniform prices." In this article entitled "Two Many Governments," the Senator argues that unless some of the 200,000 different units of government in America are abolished and all are simplified and made more efficient there will be further political revolution. We are glad that Mr. Byrd is brave enough to voice such opinions at a time like this, when it seems that the politician's first aim is to "get his." What he said about the gasoline business is equally true of other things, especially of the products of alcohol. It takes no unusual intelligence to know that if the United States Government had to acknowledge that it could not police its borders, it will be an impossibility for the individual States to do so. If the country must have liquor, certainly there should be uniform laws governing its distribution, if bootlegging is to be avoided. Uniform marriage and divorce laws would also seem essential, if we would reduce the divorce evil. States' rights may become States' wrongs if insisted upon regardless of consequences.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

The Mission Board met in annual session at Suffolk, Va., last week and because of decreased donations to Missions the past year, faced problems it did not know how to solve and deficits it could not pay.

We know of no poorer "economy" for a church to practice than that of waiting without a pastor to catch up in paying what is due on the salary of a previous pastor. If a church ever needs a pastor and leader it is in time of financial stress and strain.

Mr. J. D. Kernodle, of Graham, N. C., who was for many years a member of the Publishing Board of the Southern Christian Convention, has been visiting in the home of his brother, Dr. P. J. Kernodle, in Richmond, Va. He has also visited THE SUN office while here.

If any one reading this shall wish to make a real contribution to the Christian Church and its enterprises, one can do that very thing by paying for a year's subscription to THE SUN. Now is the time for all good and loyal members to come to the aid of their church paper.

One denomination has adopted the slogan, "Rally and Recovery." Another church slogan passed around is "R. A.," which stands for "Royal Activity." We trust these slogans indicate that the churches are waking up to their responsibilities and opportunities.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill is spending most of the month of September at her home in Henderson, N. C. She expects to return to Jacksonville on September 26th, and will participate in a "Little Immokalee" week-end conference at New Port Richey, Fla., on September 30th and October 1st.

The Eastern North Carolina Conference will meet with Wentworth Church, McCullers, N. C., November 21st and 22nd. Dr. W. C. Wicker, Elon College, N. C., is president of the Conference, Prof. L. L. Vaughan, State College, Raleigh, N. C., is the secretary.

The Georgia Congregational and Christian Conference meets at United Church, LaGrange, Ga., Tuesday, October 31st, at 10 A. M., closing Wednesday night, November 1st. This conference takes the place of the Georgia and Alabama Christian Conference, which at its last session voted to merge and adjourned sine die.

Rev. and Mrs. H. C. Caviness were callers at Elon College recently and reported great and happy results from recent meetings and much joy in their evangelistic service. Any one desiring to reach them by correspondence, should address them at No. 210 College Place, Greensboro, N. C., from which their mail will be promptly forwarded in their absence.

The condition of Dr. P. J. Kernodle, who has been confined to his room since the early part of last June, continues about the same. He sees visitors occasionally, but his physical condition prevents him from having much company. While physically very feeble, he is mentally alert and appreciates greatly the many inquiries as to his health.

Our good Dr. Martyn Summerbell, Lakemont, N. Y., having some time ago happily celebrated the passing of his 80th milestone, still writes with a steady hand and vigorous pen and sends this glad word from his sanctum: "Somehow I am better this year than last, and so is my good wife, and that is some comfort. I hope the College starts off well and has a better prospect. Dr. Smith is a champion.

Rev. and Mrs. H. C. Caviness are engaged this week and next in an evangelistic meeting at Buxton, N. C., an extreme eastern section of the State. Under date of September 11th, Brother Caviness writes: "We have just closed a most marvelous meeting at Mt. Airy, N. C., and our meeting at Buxton is to continue till September 24th, from which place we go to Chicago for a service of two weeks."

Rev. J. L. Neese, Palm St., Greensboro, is assisting Dr. P. H. Fleming, pastor, in revival services at Long's Chapel. Brother Neese has been in revivals for many weeks now, and besides receiving large additions to his own church membership, has been mightily used in revivals and the ingathering of members with other pastors. Brother Neese is a tireless worker, a man of zeal and consecration to his Lord and his task as a minister.

The recent storm which passed over Florida did not do serious damage to any of our Florida Congregational Churches. However, the church and parsonage at Jupiter and also at Palm City were somewhat damaged, broken windows and damaged roofs allowing considerable water to enter the buildings causing considerable injury to plaster, etc. The worst effect was the damage to the fruit and other crops, seriously affecting many of the people in the Florida churches.

The First Congregational Church at Miami was the first church in the United States to officially receive the NRA insignia. There was an interesting and impressive ceremony when it was presented to the pastor of the church, Rev. Helen F. Lanham. This church also furnished one team of women for the house-to-house canvass for NRA. During the pastor's vacation the pulpit has been supplied by Dr. George Henry Bradford, well known lecturer and educator.

Dr. L. E. Smith, president of Elon College, was the chief speaker at the first meeting of the rural schools of Guilford County at Proximity last Friday. Of the address the Daily News reports: "The plea for education made by Dr. Smith was a challenging message to the teachers in the present crisis. They were told that the future of education depends in large part upon the attitude manifested at this time. If we do not educate, declared Dr. Smith, we will perish mentally, morally, spiritually and financially."

Mr. Edward DuBois has finished his Student Summer Service work with the church at Melbourne and has returned to the University of Florida. Rev. Orville Ullom and his family expect to return to Melbourne next week. Other pastors returning to their fields are Rev. James E. Parker, of Palm City; Rev. C. DeW. Brower, of Interlachen; Rev. Lawrence A. Gedcke, of St. Petersburg, and Rev. Clarence A. Vincent, D. D., of Winter Park. Dr. Vincent spent the summer at his farm at Henniker, N. H., and has preached at several New England churches.

An unusual and beautiful wedding ceremony occurred at the First Congregational Church, Miami, Fla., when Rev. Helen F. Lanham officiated at the marriage of her daughter, Helen Elizabeth Lanham to Robert Henri Barron. It was an unusual thing for a mother to perform the marriage ceremony for her daughter. The bride was given in marriage by Dr. Edwin C. Gillette and the best man was Rev. Leslie J. Barnette of Coral Gables. Dr. George Henry Bradford assisted Mrs. Lanham in the service, Dr. Bradford having been an old friend and associate of the bride's father, who was a Congregational minister. The ceremony followed the evening service. It also followed many delightful social affairs in honor of the bride.

The Seventh Annual Ministers' Convocation for the Florida Congregational ministers will be held at the hotel at DeLeon Springs, October 2nd-5th. Dr. J. Edward Kirby will give a series of lectures on "The Growth of Religious Independence in the South," especially tracing the growth of the Congregational and Christian Churches and the movement for their merger. Rev. Leslie J. Barnette, of Coral Gables, who has taken post-graduate courses at Union and Columbia in Religious Education, will deliver a course of lectures and lead in the discussions of "The Minister as a Religious Educator." Dr. King, of Miami Beach, will deliver a lecture on his recent trip to the Holy Land. There will also be informal discussion of current problems of the churches, and a meeting of the Board of Directors of the State Conference.

Dr. Elisha A. King reached his home at Miami Beach on Labor Day, after an interesting and profitable trip to the Holy Land and other countries. Dr. King traveled in all, 19,000 miles, not only visiting the usual interesting places on the Mediterranean, including Egypt, and Athens, but he also visited Russia. A welcoming reception was given to him at the beautiful home of Mr. Ashbrook at Miami Beach. Dr. King preached twice at Sunday services held upon the ship and also delivered one lecture which has been printed and distributed to members of the party. Dr. King is a real friend of THE SUN and SUN readers, and remembered us most fittingly on his recent journey to the Holy Land and during his summer travels in the Orient. In our issue of September 14th, Dr. King gave some graphic personal touches of Galilee, Jerusalem and Rome, and made us all feel anxious for more.

This statement from the business office, issued September 15th, will carry welcome and desired information to CHRISTIAN SUN readers: "Enrollment at Elon College has passed 300, it was announced today, with indications that at least 350 will enter for the fall term. At this time last year enrollment totalled 230. A number of the applicants for admission to Elon have had summer jobs and are working as long as possible before entering school. These students will be coming in during the next week. The freshman class is the largest the College has had in several years, and the number of departmental and special students is greatly increased. A good many of the special students are industrial workers and office employees who are taking special courses in their free hours. Registration for the fall term started September 5th and the year's work is now lining up nicely."

The following item from the Burlington Times News of September 15th, will be of interest and a source of congratulations, to the well-known parties, on the part of many CHRISTIAN SUN readers: "Mr. and Mrs. Egbert Truitt announce the engagement of their daughter, Jewell, to Rev. A. R. Van Cleave, of Winchester, Va. The wedding will be a private home wedding on November 1st. The bride is well known throughout the State and in Virginia because of her connection with the Christian Church as an educational field secretary for two years. She received her education in the Burlington city schools and at Elon College. Rev. Van Cleave came to Elon College as professor of philosophy several years ago. Last year he taught in Southern Union College, Wadley, Ala. He has been active in church work for some time, though he has been teaching. He was called to the Winchester Congregational-Christian Church, and took up his pastorate there the first of September."

If our readers omit, or fail to see, everything else in this week's SUN, we trust, for their own good, they will read the personal letter to the editor from our beloved missionary, Dr. A. D. Woodworth, under date of Karnizawa, Japan, August 14th, and also Dr. Woodworth's "Farewell to the Missionaries of Japan." When this copy of THE SUN is received, Dr. and Mrs. Woodworth will just be starting on the high seas (September 22nd) for their return home, back to the place from which they went, Merom, Ind., forty-one years ago. The whole church will receive these great and good people with praise and thanksgiving for their wonderful career in Japan, for the saving work they have done, for the eternal monuments they have built in that far-away land, and for their safe return. It would have been Dr. and Mrs. Woodworth's pleasure to remain in Japan for the rest of their days, then to be buried there in the midst of the work they love, but the Board was of opinion that they most richly deserve a well earned retirement and should be close to their loved ones, that they might be cared for, whatever eventualities might arise through the remaining days of their lives.

NOTICE OF CONFERENCE MEETING.

The Eastern North Carolina Conference will hold its annual session with the Wentworth Christian Church, at McCullers, N. C., November 21st and 22nd, beginning at 10 o'clock, A. M. All churches are urged to send up full delegations, all delegates and ministers are requested to be present at the opening session and remain until the close of Conference. There is great need for the churches to raise as much as possible of the apportionments requested. Our contributions last session were not up to the usual amount, but the needs were greater than ever. We should do our best for Christ. He has done his best for us.

W. C. WICKER, President, Eastern North Carolina Conference.

CONFERENCES WILL MEET.

The Eastern Virginia Conference will meet with Holy Neck Christian Church, near Holland, Va., on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, November 1st, 2nd and 3rd. Opening session 10 o'clock Wednesday morning.

The Western North Carolina Conference will meet with the Ramseur Christian Church, Ramseur, N. C., on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, November 7th, 8th and 9th.

The North Carolina and Virginia Conference will meet with Union Christian Church, Alamance County, N. C., on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, November 14th, 15th and 16th.

The Eastern North Carolina Conference will meet on Tuesday and Wednesday, November 21st and 22nd. Place to be published later.

The Alabama Conference will meet with New Hope Church, two and one-half miles from Abanda, Chambers County, Ala., on Tuesday and Wednesday, October 10th and 11th. West-bound train reaches Abanda at 12:55 P. M., and east-bound train at 8:40, there being only two trains daily.

REV. A. H. SHEPPARD.

The subject of this sketch was born September 12, 1891, and died August 31, 1933. He was 41 years, 11 months and 19 days of age.

Brother Sheppard joined the church in the summer of 1906. He was married to Miss Dovie Harry, October 16, 1910. To this union there were born five children: three boys and two girls, all living.

He was licensed to preach in 1916, since which time he has served acceptably many of our churches in Alabama and Georgia. Brother Sheppard was for a number of years resident pastor of the North Highlands Church in Columbus, Ga. He was highly respected as a man and as a minister, ever quiet and unassuming, but always true to his Lord. He was so gentle and loving, his friends were numbered by his acquaintances. Those who knew him loved him.

He died under peculiar circumstances. He was seized with a severe pain in his head and lived only a few minutes after he was carried home.

I was with him in his last revival at Bethany Church, just a few weeks before he died. He was rejoicing in his faith in God, and was zealous for the church he loved, not knowing how soon he must be called into the Church Triumphant. But he was ready to go.

At the time of his death he was pastor of Bethany and New Hope Churches. Brother Sheppard has ever been held in the very highest esteem by all of his people.

He leaves to mourn his going a devoted wife, five children, his mother, one brother and one sister. Their devotion to him was beautiful. Many friends were present to attest their love and respect for their comrade. The following ministers were present, and paid tribute to his memory: Revs. Moore and Brown of the Baptist Church, Revs. J. D. and J. H. Dollar, W. T. Meacham, H. M. Gray and this writer, of the Christian Church. Rev. J. D. Dollar had charge of the funeral. The services were held in Bethany Church, and his body was carried to the cemetery at Rock Mills, Ala., where it was gently consigned to its last resting place, and where it will sleep in peaceful slumber until awakened by our Lord's return. The grave was covered with flowers.

Dearest brother, thou hast left us,
Here thy loss we deeply feel;
But 'tis God who has bereft us,
He can all our sorrows heal.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

RECOVERY.

Government is making an energetic and sweeping effort at recovery. Codes, calls and commands have gone out from Washington to city, hamlet and rural district, to every business and industry of the nation to rally to new economic conditions and demands. Every department of government is speeding up under high power activity in a determined effort at recovery. The unemployed are given employment, the needy are being relieved, prices of commodities are soaring, and whether better permanent conditions will result or not, the fact remains that a desperate effort is being made to improve economic conditions.

What is the church doing to improve moral and spiritual conditions? This is a searching and a fundamental question. The basis, the firm, sure basis, of safe and sound economy is a safe and sound morality and religion. Unless we under-gird our economic procedure with sound moral and religious principles and practices, the structure, however beautiful, is sure to fall. Any economic structure, however beautiful and sublime, is built on sand unless the foundation is the rock of righteousness, justice and equity. The church must lay the foundations, and experience has proven that Paul was truly inspired when he wrote: "For other foundations can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."

Many of our churches have been on vacation during the summer months. Now is the time for all good churches to put on a Rally, to make a determined effort at recovery, not recovery of some plan or theory of government, but the recovery of our moral and spiritual conduct and character. The church belongs at the center of our lives, of our community and of our thinking. Instead of the church waning and its activities diminishing at a time like this, the church should rally its forces and seek with all its strength and power to recover its soul and spiritual place in the minds and hearts, in the thoughts and devotions of the people.

It is very easy to fall into grooves or ruts. Why not every pastor issue a ringing challenge to his church, put on a program of life and loyalty and devotion to our Lord and the interests and enterprises which constitute the church? Pastors' salaries, in most instances, are not paid. Our College is in desperate need of help and sustenance. Our mission work—meaning by that, every struggling church and the gospel at home and abroad which the Mission Board is seeking to sustain and promote—suffers fearfully. Our Orphanage, always in need, sounds a renewed call for help. Our church paper, the channel of our communications and the faithful friend and builder of all our enterprises, calls loud and desperately for more readers and for more renewals and subscriptions; our disabled ministers and the widows of ministers, our charge and our charity, hold out their hands pleadingly. Let the church learn its lesson and take its lead from government and put on a rally, redouble its effort, increase its zeal in a desperate and determined effort at recovery. We should bear in mind that while government is seeking to rally its forces, to recover our bodily and physical betterment, it behooves the church to rally with equal zeal and determination to recover our mental, moral and spiritual security.

A RELIGIOUS WEEKLY.

One should pity the home into which a good religious paper does not come at least once a week. Times may have been when the secular press would suffice. If so, these times have passed. It is difficult to conceive of how any intelligent person can get a right angle on the trend of the times, the real issues of the day, or the fundamental facts of experience as they occur weekly, if one's reading is confined solely to the secular press. For the sake of coming into the home and spreading before the family the sensational, the hysterical, the latest freaks and fancies, and then of carrying on their own paid and subsidized propaganda, for the sake of bringing these things into the home to create excitement and get subscriptions, the secular press will print many church items, notices of church meetings and services. But even in reporting and commenting on events of morality and religion, more often than not, the ministry and the outcome of religious conferences are held up to ridicule, if not to scorn and contempt. The home into which a religious weekly does not go simply has no safeguard against the distorted views and often the misleading propaganda of the secular press.

Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, called America's best mind in its broad sweep and firm grasp on our present conditions and needs, is quoted in these words as advocating the church paper:

"I urge every thoughtful citizen, whether a member of any church or not, to subscribe to at least one religious weekly. If you can afford more than one, so much the better. I take six, with several monthlies and quarterlies in addition, and I find them practically indispensable. Let us be as inquisitive about God's way among the nations as we are about those of men. This applies equally to Jews, Catholics and Protestants, and to all who would speak intelligently of the basic needs of the present crisis and appreciate the fact that repentance toward God and a renewed allegiance to his will must precede the successful solution of our temporal problems."

Now there must be a reason for this plea and a cause in Dr. Cadman's mind for this urge, for he is a man, and his the mind, that does not speak without safe ground and solid foundation. Dr. Cadman, in a recent article, "Why Publish Religious Weeklies?" in the New York Tribune (copyright 1933), tells why a religious weekly, the church paper, exists, should exist and should have a place in every home. Read his reasons:

"They exist to serve the spiritual needs of the churches, the nation and the world. In their columns important questions of the day are intelligently discussed. As a rule political partisanship is banned, moral issues are emphasized, and mankind's religious condition is illuminated. Nearly all of them, including the religious monthlies and quarterlies, have a comprehensive outlook. They acquaint us with progress of essential reforms, encourage social workers, and expose the activities of selfish and evil-minded groups and their organizations.

"The substance of half a dozen sermons can as often as not be found on their editorial pages or in their contributed articles. Aged priests, pastors, rabbis, as well as those active in service, eagerly absorb their contents, and bedridden saints of every creed look forward to these heralds of hope and faith. They circulate in familiar and unfamiliar places. The home, the sanctuary and the almshouse, even the prison, enjoy the privileges they confer. The printed word of these messengers of the Lord has manifold entrances which the pulpit cannot command."

If every family in the Christian Church of the Southern Convention would subscribe for and read weekly our CHRISTIAN SUN, all of us and the world would be amazed at what this branch of the Lord's church would achieve through its interests and enterprises, which are built and carried on for edification and for salvation in morals and in religion and righteousness.

BROWN.

Walter M. Brown, Burlington, N. C., died at Duke Hospital, after a brief illness, Thursday night, September 14th. He was sixty-one years old, a native of Guilford County, a graduate of Elon College, a former teacher in Alamance and superintendent of schools of Lexington, N. C. Of recent years he had resided in Burlington, having organized and become the owner of the Brown Hosiery Mills. He was not only a successful business man, but manifested a deep interest in the church, as well as in civic welfare and educational work. At the time of his death he was a member of the County Board of Education of Alamance.

Since moving to Burlington several years ago, he had been actively identified with the Burlington Christian Church, serving for some years as efficient and beloved superintendent of the Sunday School and later until his death being teacher of the Men's Bible Class of the school. Walter Brown knew what it meant to meet and solve difficult problems, having come to Elon College with meagre financial backing and worked his way through college, winning the high esteem of his fellow-students, the respect and admiration of the faculty and of the College community, who came to know and admire him for his courage, for his modest, unassuming but ever sincere and circumspect conduct. He graduated from Elon College in the Class of 1899. He came from Apple's Chapel community, which afforded him, in the early years, church membership and those steady virtues learned in a Christian home and a Christian Sunday School, and back to the cemetery of the church of his early youth, they carried and buried his earthly remains, on Saturday, September 16th.

Walter Brown lived a good and useful life, ever reflecting honor and credit upon the home and the family of his heart, upon the city and community in which he lived and upon the Sunday School and church which gave him security and strength of character, and to which he gave unceasing loyalty and energetic devotion throughout his active life. One is safe in saying that no man, in the city where he lived, was more highly respected, esteemed, admired than was he. The funeral services were conducted from the home by Dr. P. H. Fleming, of the Christian Church, assisted by Revs. W. A. Cade, M. E. Church, and David T. Eaton, of the Episcopal Church.

Besides a brother and sister of the Apple's Chapel community, the deceased leaves to mourn their loss a wife, the former Miss Pearl Vestal, and two children Walter M. Brown, Jr., and Miss Lyla Brown. To the bereaved we extend the sympathy and condolence of a friend.

WHAT ONE CENT WILL DO!

Here is a clipping "selected" from THE CHRISTIAN SUN of August 24, 1933:

"A cent seems of little value, but if it is doubled a few times it grows to a marvelous sum. A young lady caught her father in a very rash promise, by the knowledge of this fact. She modestly proposed that if her father would give her only one cent on one day and double the amount each successive day for just one month, she would pledge herself never to ask of him another cent of money as long as she lived. Her father, not stopping to run over the figures in his head, accepted the offer at once.

"But on the thirtieth day the young lady demanded only the pretty little sum of $5,368,709.12!

"Let some of our young readers who have a taste for mathematics just 'figure up,' and see whether this sum is correct.

"Sometimes a cent amounts to more than that. I heard of eleven persons being converted by reading a tract that cost only half a cent.—Selected."

Of course the point is that a little insignificant (?) tract that cost less than one cent saved a life for eternity.

It is said that if Jesus had put a dollar on compound interest at 6 per cent into the bank, and it had accumulated until our day, that it would pay all the debts of the world—public and private. (Financial debts, of course.)

That would have been a great thing. But he did a greater thing which we can do also. He invested a life and the interest and good of one true life through the centuries cannot be reckoned in millions or millions of billions of dollars. It is beyond price.

I am not a "young reader," and so am not called upon to "figure up" and see whether this sum is correct or not. But I suggest to "young readers" two things. First, did not this young lady lose fifty million dollars, more or less, in her figuring? Second, was she clever in selecting her month? If she had only selected a month with 31 days instead of 30, she might have had five million dollars or fifty million dollars (however it figures) for that last day. She (like a lot of us) stopped just when she should have begun. "Young readers" shouldn't make that error. They should begin with all the wealth of the past.

HERMON ELDREDGE.

Of all the things I know there is one that means more to me than all others, and that is, I know that my Redeemer liveth and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth.—J. Bryan Doshier.

FAREWELL ADDRESS.

By A. D. WOODWORTH.

Before the Missionaries of Japan at Karnizawa, Japan, July 26, 1933.

As this is probably the last time that I shall address my missionary brethren, I feel a little as Paul did when he spoke for the last time to his brethren at Miletus, having called them from Ephesus. The things which Paul said he did, I have tried to do.

It was sixty-four years ago, at the age of eleven, when I united with the church, but I think I drank in the truth of the gospel as I knelt at my mother's knee. At that time my theology was very simple, namely, that if there is a heaven, I wished to go to it, and there was a great fear in my heart of a place where the wicked go. The years have not changed either my desire or my fear.

It was thirty-five years after my public profession of my faith that I had the experience of the disciples on the Day of Pentecost. Then the Bible became a new Book, the Christian life a new thing while the great teachings of the Book began to shine like stars. Blessed Holy Spirit!

Primary among these is the amazing fact of the love of God for all men, a love which existed in the heart of God before the creation of the world, how many millions of years, or hundreds of millions of years ago, no one knows. As the Book says, "According as God hath chosen us in him before the creation of the world that we should be holy and blameless before him in love." As a man builds a scaffolding for the erection of a house in which he may dwell, God has made the world as a place for man that he might dwell in the hearts of men. "For it is God that dwelleth in you both to will and to do his own good pleasure." If this fact is some indication of the value, the dignity and the glory of man, all the other facts of the gospel of Christ are in keeping with it.

We are quite accustomed to the fact of the freedom of the will of man, but do we realize that God in working out his great plans has created a praying, worshipping animal who may defy him? We know that most men do.

But because man is free to go his own way and goes astray like a lost sheep, misled and deceived by the attractions of the world, how great indeed must be the love of God for him that he should exhaust the treasures of heaven in sending his only begotten Son to live and suffer and die for him that the saved may live forever. We talk of a free salvation, but can we ever realize how much it cost the heart of God? To emphasize a matter the Greeks talked of piling Ossa upon Pelion, one mountain on the top of another, but we can never emphasize these mighty facts enough—facts by which in the grace of God we become the sons of God by the new birth and the heirs of all that God possesses.

But this is not all. God gives himself, making our bodies his living temples in preparation for that greater giving when "The tabernacle of God will be with men, and he will dwell with them and be their God, and God himself will be with them and be their God, and when God shall wipe all tears from their eyes, and when there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying."

Not only so, but God has given us a guide-book for our lives, inspired of God and profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction and for instruction in righteousness that the man of God may be perfect and thoroughly furnished unto all good works. From whatever direction we look at Mt. Fuji, it is Japan's peerless mountain. And from whatever point we view the Bible, it is the peerless Book of the ages. It is history or literature, biography or poetry, its morality, its prophecies fulfilled or unfulfilled, its power over the hearts of men to inspire, to comfort, it stands peerless and unique, worthy of the unsearchable wisdom and knowledge of God. It is like a great river which ever increases and broadens in power while the systems of men are forgotten.

But in keeping with all these wonderful things of God is that marvelous saying of Paul, "That in the ages to come, he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in kindness towards us through Jesus Christ." Do we rightly read into it that in all the great future God is going to make use of all his infinite wisdom and power and love for our eternal satisfaction and eternal joy? So we who believe on the Lord may look forward to joys and glories beyond all our highest dreams. As Paul again says, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man the things that God hath prepared for them that doth love him." As compared with these things, all the things of earth seem very cheap.

These are some of the things on which my soul has fed and grown during the past sixty-four years. The Lord has done beyond all I have asked or thought; in untold instances the Book has proved itself to be true; in untold instances God has proved himself a loving Father and Jesus Christ a constant companion. So I make bold to say that if I had the opportunity to live my life over again, having all of God's dealings of the past as a guide, the Christian life above all others is the life I would wish to live.

I am sure that in the golden sunset of life there can be no greater satisfaction than that which Paul felt as he looked back over his life and was able to say, "I have fought the good fight; I have kept the faith; I have finished my course, and henceforth there is laid up for me the crown of life which the Lord will give me in that-day, and not to me only, but to all them also that love his appearing."

Since Paul's time many generations of godly men and women have carried on the warfare, exalting the Lord Jesus Christ as king of kings and Lord of lords. So this present generation who, in their turn, must lay their armor down, can do not more than Paul did in his words to the brethren of Ephesus: "I commend you to God and the Word of his grace which is able to build you up and give you an inheritance among them that are sanctified." "Take heed, therefore, to yourselves and to all the flock of God over the which the Holy Spirit has made you overseer, to feed the church of God which he hath purchased with his own blood."—Amen.

REASONS FOR FAMILY WORSHIP.

1. The family is the smallest, the most compact, and the most intimate social group. If there is to be any social worship of God, if persons are to express their adoration, love, and trust toward God by social groups, then it is most natural and necessary that they should do so by families.

2. A family exists for the nurture of children. The chief responsibility and the chief joy of the Christian family is the Christian nurture of its children. How can this Christian nurture proceed if it does not have in it the essential element of worship.

3. Family worship as a source, and as the consummation of a Christian family life, tends to perpetuate itself. A goodly heritage is precious not only in itself but also because it perpetuates itself through many generations.

4. Life in the family is a preparation and a training for life in the larger social groups. The virtues which the children learn in the Christian family are the virtues which when practiced in the large social groups will further the kingdom of God.—Selected.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

When the sale of beer was legalized in the States, the question naturally arose, "Should a church member sell beer?" Years ago it was generally agreed, in the churches of all denominations in this country, that church members should not engage in the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. At that time beer was regarded as intoxicating. Recently, the Congress of the United States has declared that beer is not intoxicating. In spite of this declaration of Congress it is quite generally known that beer is intoxicating to many people. There would be no demand for its sale if it were not intoxicating.

At this time many places of business have secured a special license to sell 3.2 beer. Why should it be necessary to require a special license to sell a non-intoxicating beverage? Why should any restriction be placed upon the sale of a drink if it is perfectly harmless? The answer to these questions, as related to the sale of 3.2 beer, inevitably makes it impossible for the church to substitute the pronouncements of political parties for the Bible, whenever they conflict with each other. If a church member sells 3.2 beer, why may he not also sell whiskey, after its sale is legalized by the States? Churches have not been accustomed to look to political parties, state legislatures or even Congress, in this country, for moral and spiritual standards for church membership and Christian fellowship. Until these groups of leaders are able to produce something better than the Bible, church leaders will likely seek to rely upon the Book of books as the rule of faith and practice.

What attitude shall the churches of the United States take on this question? Shall the churches quietly consent that it is perfectly proper for its members to engage in the traffic of any alcoholic drinks? Is it possible that the churches will be expected to favor such an attitude? As a matter of fact, is it not true that the leadership of the movement to repeal the Eighteenth Amendment, is backed by many people who have been apparently seeking to destroy the morale of the Protestant Churches of our country? At least many wet newspapers have been merciless in their criticism of the preachers and the churches who have been loyal to their convictions in seeking to promulgate temperance and sobriety.

The wet leaders profess to be very much interested in temperance. They have not yet given a clear definition of their view on temperance. Apparently they would invite the churches to follow them in making the manufacture and sale of ardent spirits so popular that even a minister would not hesitate to open a beer saloon for the moral uplift of our young people. It might be carried to the point of serving beer and other drinks in all church meetings. Where would this liberal interpretation of human privilege find its limit?

In this problem the church must not lower its moral and spiritual standards. It is not the function of the church, in America, to rule the State. Neither is it the function of the State to rule the church. Let us hope that the day never comes, in this country, when the State will rule the church, or the church will rule the State. God save us from that fate. The church should express itself, very clearly, on the issues raised by the return of the liquor traffic. The church cannot lose in a spiritual battle until it compromises with evil. The present stampede towards a "wet" nation, is not a defeat of the church. Neither is it a victory for the political parties and the government. America may yet see that the Congress and the State legislatures favoring the repeal of the anti-liquor laws, have brought defeat instead of victory. Fifteen years from now this question may be answered. Great changes may come in that space of time. In the meantime, let us hope that church members will refrain from engaging in the manufacture, sale or use of any beverage with alcoholic content sufficient to produce intoxication to any extent.

I. W. JOHNSON.

THE NINETIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

This paper was founded in 1844 by Rev. Daniel Kerr. The purpose of the paper was to make weekly visits to all the homes of the Christian Church and to carry the news of special and general interest of the church to the membership. It has been published through the years without any serious interruption. THE CHRISTIAN SUN, though not a large paper, has been one of the greatest factors in the growth and development of our church. I know of no church that has been able to go forward without the assistance and help of a church paper. Without a weekly periodical to inform the membership of a church, there can be but little organized effort. One section of the country must know something of what other sections are doing before there can be a united program for efficiency and progress.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN has been a most useful agency in the founding and growth of all the enterprises of our church. It was our principal means of information and inspiration in the founding of Elon College. Without a church paper, it would have been impossible to have informed the membership of the church successfully as to the needs of an institution for higher education. Through the columns of the paper, those interested expressed their views and decisions, thus carrying on the agitation until the membership of the Southern Christian Convention forty-four years ago arose to build for themselves and for the church, Elon College. Through the columns of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, the public has been informed as to the merits and efficiency of our College. People have given their money and sent their children to receive the benefits of the College because of the information carried in the pages of our paper. I hardly see how the College could hope to continue without this medium of communication.

What is true of Elon College is equally true, and perhaps, more so, with all the other enterprises of the church. The people first learned through THE CHRISTIAN SUN the desire and the purpose of a small group of our number to establish a home for the fatherless and motherless of our membership. A corner in THE CHRISTIAN SUN was dedicated to the orphans in our church; and from that day on, the needs of the unfortunate children have been kept before the public. Every issue now carries information as to the care and efficiency with which our orphanage is conducted. It also informs the people of the needs of the children and the anxiety of the administration for the children's comfort and safety. Mr. C. D. Johnston, a man of integrity, high ideals, and of unquestioned character, is the superintendent. He is constantly presenting to the membership of the church the needs of the institution and appealing to the loyalty of every member to support this institution. It is right and proper that he should. How could the orphanage continue without THE CHRISTIAN SUN?

Years ago, the Lord laid it on the hearts of a limited number of our people to carry the gospel beyond the established bounds of our own denomination. They felt compelled by the Spirit to carry the gospel to other lands. A Mission Board was organized, and efforts were begun to arouse an indifferent church to rally to the commission of our Lord. From that day to this, THE CHRISTIAN SUN has been a great missionary force in the church. The editors of THE CHRISTIAN SUN have all been men of wide vision and of great passion. It has been their purpose and desire to lay the responsibility for evangelizing the world upon the hearts of our people. Through THE SUN, they have called upon us to give of our prayers, of our efforts, and of our money that the Kingdom of Christ might come and his will be done throughout all lands. How could we ever get the pressing needs of our Mission Board intelligently before the entire membership of the church without the columns of our paper?

I might continue to write on and on as to the service that our church paper has rendered in the forward steps that we have taken; I might remind you of the particular and personal benefits coming to the individual reader himself, but, perhaps, this is unnecessary. I am writing this article to call the attention of the church to the fact that THE CHRISTIAN SUN, our church paper established almost ninety years ago, is greatly in need of the support of our church; and unless that support is forthcoming, the voice of the paper must of a necessity be stilled. A greater calamity could hardly befall us. We are able to support the paper. The paper is suffering today not from lack of ability on our part, but because of indifference on the part of so many.

This is the ninetieth anniversary of the church paper. We should add at least nine hundred new subscribers on this occasion. Can't every individual congregation in the Southern Convention celebrate this anniversary by putting on a CHRISTIAN SUN rally, the purpose of which would be the enlistment of every family in the church as a subscriber to the church paper? Certainly, we could if we would try. There are in the Southern Convention, 230 churches; this would mean an average of four new subscribers from each church to the paper. Of course, our stronger churches would not expect the small churches to do as much for the paper as they. I will undertake to see that six new subscribers go from the small community church of Elon College. I am now issuing this challenge to every pastor and church throughout the Convention to join with me in helping to put THE CHRISTIAN SUN on a sure enough foundation. It is folly for a great church like ours to sit down in indifference and allow the instrument that has made us and in whose life is our hope for the future, to perish. The Lord have mercy on us if, in our indifference and luxury, we allow this organ of inspiration and consecrated service to cease. May I say also that the ones of our membership who are in arrears with their subscriptions should rally to this call and send their payments in immediately. There is a large number of subscribers, running into the hundreds, who are behind. The total amount now due by subscribers for our church paper is around $4,000.00.

The Convention has given its contract and its note to pay the publisher for printing and mailing our paper weekly, but the Convention has no funds to fulfill this contract other than what may be given by the churches and paid by the subscribers. Please, won't you who are in arrears send a check immediately to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Richmond, Va., that the paper may continue to be published? You can't expect the Central Publishing Company to publish your paper and mail it to you at its own expense.

What do you say, brethren: shall we celebrate the ninetieth anniversary of our own organ of progress? If every member of the church will do his part, we can pay every dollar the Convention owes the publishing company and increase the circulation of our paper by more than half the present circulation. This appeal is made not simply in the interest of the publishers of our paper or in the payment of the obligations, but in the interest of our church and the general public. We have a good paper, and every member should read it. If the paper were read by the entire membership of the church, we would have but little difficulty in carrying on the enterprises of the church. This appeal is written without the knowledge of the publisher or anyone else; it is written because of my own personal feelings and convictions.

I will be glad to hear from others as to the question of observing the ninetieth anniversary of the founding of our paper—observing it in such a way as to settle all back accounts of subscribers and to add at least nine hundred paid-up new subscribers to the paper. We can do it if we will. It will mean confidence, progress, and security to all the enterprises of the church, and to the church as a whole.

L. E. SMITH,
President, Elon College.

LANETT, ALABAMA.

Dear Brother Editor:

I am sure you and some of your readers would like to know of our home-coming service at Lanett last Sunday. We had prayed and planned for a month for this service.

Last Sunday was the day, and a great day it was. Weather was fine, congregations large, attention orderly.

Sunday School was fine and many visitors made our hearts glad with their presence. Everybody and everything seemed to be praising God. The music was simply grand and all appropriate for the occasion, directed by Mrs. Ina Sorrel and Brother W. O. McGill.

Brother G. G. Partridge, the only living charter member, gave a short history of the church, which was quite instructive to the assembly.

At 11:30 A. M., this writer introduced the speaker of the hour, the distinguished Ex-Senator J. Thomas Heflin, of Lafayette, Ala., who for one hour held the great audience spellbound, in a masterly discussion of the "Church's Place in Community Life." Col. Heflin is not only one of the greatest statesmen of our country, but one of the greatest servants of the church of Jesus Christ. Everyone enjoyed every minute of his discourse.

After the discourse the offering was asked for, and a generous response was made. Approximately $100.00 was given. Everybody was justly happy. We then repaired to the rear of the church, where a long table was spread on the lawn, and such a spread. Well, I am powerless to describe the scene, and I doubt if even our editor ever saw a finer one. The fellowship was of the finest and the enjoyment was of the highest type. Song service followed in the afternoon.

At the evening hour the young people rendered a missionary program which was very fine. The offering of the evening was given for the benefit of the young people's missionary work.

We will, if not Providentially hindered by the time our next annual report is ready to be submitted to Conference, have our indebtedness reduced this year from $1,375.00 to practically $900.00, for which we do most earnestly thank God. Our current expenses are being met as we proceed. Ten per cent of our Sunday's offering goes to the Orphanage at Elon College. Sure it will make Brother Chas. D. Johnston and his family smile. It pays to take time to plan for the kingdom work, and pray for the plan.

ROANOKE, ALABAMA.

As another Conference year is almost gone, the Woman's Missionary Society of the First Christian Church, met in the beautiful suburban home of Mrs. Tom L. Head, September 7th, for our last monthly meeting.

Garden flowers were beautifully arranged in the rooms in which the guests assembled. Mrs. J. H. Crisler, led a beautiful devotion, after which we all enjoyed a very appropriate and inspiring program, entitled "Sharing Our Money," led by Mrs. V. E. Kitchens. This Society is hoping to reach our Conference goal for this year.

With the Junior Society invited, we engaged in a Bible contest. Miss Nellie Rea Sledge won high score and the honoree was presented with an attractive gift.

The hostess, assisted by her daughter, Margaret, served a delicious plate. We are looking forward for the best and most profitable Conference in our history, which will convene with our Lanett Church, October 8th, with Rev. G. D. Hunt, pastor.

THE INFLUENCE OF A SERMON.

John Newton preached in an English village. Such was the indifference that only a handful came to hear him. But among the number was Scott, the commentator. The sermon turned his thoughts towards the truth, and all the Christian influence of "Scott's Commentary" may be traced to that sermon. That restricted service, which seemed almost like wasting time, may have done more for the world than any other service in Newton's life. The world is listening yet to that sermon.—Selected.

PRAYER.

Our God and Father, thou knowest when love and labor are directed wholly to thee. We thank thee that Christian effort never is lost; that, notwithstanding the peril and power of organized wicked propaganda, sometimes we can see the unfolding of thy purposes even as we ask. Give to the church spirit and strength valiantly to fight for those measures which most surely bespeak thy kingdom's reign and show us where and how to serve thee best. For Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

THE MILLER AND THE MONEY.

[Editorial Note.—As one reads the following true story, one may be surprised at the attitude of the congregation and the old miller's conduct, but one should bear in mind that it was a mutual agreement, and whether the miller pursued the right course or not, he taught the people of his community and church a lesson that is worth learning. His story reminds one of the declaration of that sound philosopher who said that "ten persons in a church who tithed could support the pastor." But read the old miller's story and be governed accordingly.—J. O. A.]

SOMETHING ABOUT MONEY.

The story is told of a rather small church located in a rural community of one of our Northern states. The board of the church was greatly embarrassed on account of lack of funds to carry on the work.

Most of the members of the congregation were living on small farms. They thought of themselves as poor. They believed they were unable to take care of the church work properly.

Things went from bad to worse. The roof of the building leaked. Some of the lights were broken out. The treasury was empty and the situation seemed hopeless.

Finally a conference was called. The situation was frankly discussed. No one, apparently, could see the way out.

There was an old miller in the group. He operated the local grist mill, where practically all the farmers brought their grain to have it ground into flour for their families and feed for their stock.

After a while this miller made an astonishing proposition. He said he would take over the financing of the church for one year. He would make all repairs, pay all bills, on one condition. The condition was that no one ask him where he was securing the funds and let him explain everything at the next annual conference about a year away.

With great surprise and some doubt the congregation agreed to the old miller's proposition.

In a very short time the dilapidated building was transformed—roof, windows, broken seats—all made as new. There was no difficulty about the pastor's salary. Mission money was promptly forthcoming.

Naturally the congregation looked forward to the annual meeting with eager anticipation. They were all there when the first session opened. They wanted to know where friend miller had been getting the money which had been turned over to the treasurer so regularly.

When the day of the conference came the old miller arose, gave a report of the funds received and disbursed, adding that there was a balance on hand.

Then he said:

"My friends, you want to know where the money came from. It came from you, and you were none the wiser. Every time any member of the church brought grain to my mill I took out the Lord's tenth. This tithe of grain from the congregation I sold from time to time and thus received money to carry on our work, and," he added, "none of you here knew the difference."

A LETTER TO ALL SUN READERS.

Karnizawa, Japan,
August 14, 1933.

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

This is just to tell you that we are planning to leave Japan September 22nd, on a freight ship which will land us at Los Angeles. After a few days in that region we expect to journey eastward and land at Merom, Ind., the place from which we started out forty-one years ago. We feel that we owe a deep debt of gratitude to you and other members of the Mission Board that we have been permitted to spend these last six crowning years in Japan, being greatly blessed and, I trust, a blessing to others.

How many farewell meetings have we had? There seemed to be no end. But the crowning ones have been in connection with the schools where I have taught so long. I have had the N. T. Greek twelve years in the M. E. Theological School where I have had contact with one hundred students from year to year. As poor as they are, the students assessed themselves enough to buy a lovely Swiss wrist watch which I find very convenient.

But the great event was the farewell to the boys of the Azabu Middle School where for eighteen years I have been Bible and English teacher, trying to point the boys to the right road to heaven as well as the right road to English. Here the twelve hundred boys assessed themselves and raised 155 yen with which they bought a lovely gold watch for Mrs. Woodworth with the inscription inside: "In loving remembrance of eighteen years of faithful service, from the Azabu Middle School." But in addition to the watch they added 400 yen cash. I think, doctor, I have never witnessed such a display of affection as these students have shown for their old teacher.

I was told at the beginning of my career by an evangelistic missionary that it was a waste of time to work with students whose only desire is English, but some of these same boys are among the best gospel preachers in Japan. For me at least it has been no mistake to give my life and my love to these boys.

Of course, at the farewell meetings the Japanese outdid themselves in recounting all the remarkable (?) things I have done in Japan. So I have told them that I have the advantage over many people in having an opportunity to hear my funeral oration before I die. However, as the poet says, "To live in hearts we leave behind is not to die."

I am sending you my farewell address, delivered before the missionaries of Karnizawa. It may help to see how the Christian religion is so wonderful that all heathen religions are but the vapors of men. As Joseph Parker is said to have remarked, "There may be comparative religions, but the religion of Jesus is not one."

Of course, since this is true, one feels with deepening emphasis the necessity of making it known throughout the world. Oh, it is a wonderful gospel, a blessed gospel, and when I meditate upon it, my heart melts. Great indeed is the love of God and great his wonderful mercy to us sinful children of men.

Some day I shall hope to see you again in the flesh, but if not, we shall surely meet again.

All the rich blessings of God be on you and on your companion.

Your brother,
A. D. WOODWORTH.

MISSIONARY NEWS ITEMS.

By MRS. W. M. JAY,
Convention Editor.

The Holy Neck Junior Society has had an exceptional year in many respects as the following will testify. They held their meetings regularly every third Sunday morning during the church service hour, assembling in a Sunday School classroom in winter and out-of-doors in summer. Miss Allie Lee Norfleet, the superintendent, had charge of the devotionals on which special stress was laid. One of their greatest accomplishments is training the children in offering sentence prayers.

Miss Mary Rawles Jones, assistant superintendent, taught the study book and had charge of the story hour. These lessons proved very interesting through dramatization and various ways.

Each month in the year was set aside in some definite manner towards raising their quota. In October, they gave their public program; in November they urged 100 per cent paid up dues; in December they made Christmas stockings to fill with pennies; in March they asked for the worth of one Sunday's eggs. They entertained a Jig-Saw Puzzle Party, held an Easter-egg hunt for the children of the entire church, held a birthday party and are now working on the contest of raising a "mile of pennies." One month they called themselves "Real Willing Workers," and earned a penny a day. These plans all proved interesting and entertaining, and the children enjoyed doing them. They are hoping to be able to blow their "Victory Horn" at the close of this year.

Mrs. R. E. Parker, the president of the Liberty Spring Woman's Society, sends us the following bit of news concerning their work. They held their meetings regularly at the church with good attendance and splendid interest. Mrs. I. W. Johnson taught the study book in an acceptable manner, and Mrs. S. H. Rawles has had charge of the Spiritual Life department. A program under the direction of this department was given in the Sunday School during the month of August. All requirements for the year have been met and they are all looking forward to a better year to come. Mrs. Lewis Horton is secretary of this group.

Mrs. B. J. Ingram, secretary of the Dendron Woman's Missionary Society, writes: "Our society has been busy during the past year. We have held each of the regular monthly meetings; observed the week of prayer; studied the book, 'Lady Fourth Daughter.' March 3rd, we observed the World's Day of Prayer, using the program "Follow Thou Me." Had good attendance and very impressive and helpful service. Also held a public program on the second Sunday night in July, under the direction of the Spiritual Life department. Mrs. W. D. Harvard and Mrs. O. M. Cokes gave very interesting talks on the subjects, "The Need of a Revival" and "The Deepening of the Spiritual Life." There was special music by Mrs. Cokes and Misses Estelle and Frances Cotten.

"We are hoping and praying that when the last quarter's report goes in we will have reached our goal."

The Dendron Young People's Society has had a splendid year under the leadership of Mrs. Garland W. Spratley. They have held regular meetings, have completed the study book, "The Young Revolutionist," and are now reading the Indian story, "Three Arrows," and the Chinese story, "New Moon." They have held several socials for their own and other young people's groups, and an evening worship service was conducted during the pastor's absence. They are expecting to reach their financial goal and are already making plans for the new year.

WHAT'S WRONG WITH EDUCATION?

Warden Lewis E. Lawes, of Sing Sing, believes that our educational system trains hand and mind but not character; reduces illiteracy but creates a fertile field for tabloid literature. Whereas the inmates of Sing Sing were formerly seldom graduates of public schools, having dropped out in the fourth and fifth grades, today the average prisoner boasts of a complete elementary school record. Even the high schools are contributing a constantly increasing ratio of vicious offenders. Of new admissions to Sing Sing, 19.5 per cent in 1931, were high school graduates, while in the first four months of 1932 the ratio rose to 25.2 per cent. The youth of our day are more brazen, thinks Warden Lawes, more vicious and desperate than ever before in any civilized country.—Presbyterian Advance.

A Story for the Children

DOGS OF THE ARCTIC.

The big, strong dogs of the far north, able to live through the long night of the severe Arctic winter, receive a different training from that given to dogs in a warmer climate. They are never pampered. They are taught to obey, to work and take care of themselves. Their food is coarse and often scant. They have no beds except those they make for themselves. They sleep in the open air or in burrows which they dig in the snow. They lie down with feet folded under them and their bushy tails thrown over their eyes and noses. They are quite comfortable, for they are provided with two coats—an under one of thick wool; the other one of long, stiff hair.

The pups are usually born in a little snow house that the Eskimo makes for the mother dog. While they are young and helpless she cares for them in this shelter, but they soon venture outside, where they play and roll in the snow just like other pups. While they are still small they are each given a name, to which they answer in a short time. Now the training begins, for it is necessary that they should become obedient and broken to the harness while young.

Collars, reins and whips are made like those used for the larger dogs. A child often starts this training. The pups are taken into the snow house, or igloo as it is called, and the small boy plays with the pups just as his father works with his dog team. He fastens a rein to the collar of each pup, places a leader first, with the others in pairs behind him. He calls them by name, teaching them to obey him, and respect and follow the leading dog. With the reins in his hand, he drives them over the floor of the igloo. It is a game they all enjoy, one which is to be the real work of the boy and the pups when they are grown.

When the far north is under a frozen bed, these dogs are used to carry the Eskimo wherever he wishes to go. He sits sidewise on the sledge, holding the reins in one hand and a long whip in the other. The last is used to touch the leader's side as he speaks to him. If they have been well trained, they never dispute the leadership of this dog. They go swiftly, a mile perhaps in ten minutes, for the sledge glides easily over the frozen snow, and the team of eight or ten dogs can carry many pounds. Not even a reindeer could go where these dogs go willingly.

All the Eskimo's meat is brought home by means of this dog pack. The dogs carry loads of skins, and often the family. When the short summer comes and the sledge cannot be used to advantage, loads are strapped on their backs and carried from place to place. At this time the family leaves its snow house and seeks a new place for the summer home, which is made of skins and such things as the members are able to obtain. The dogs work as long as they are needed and fed by their masters.

When the work is over the dogs are allowed to run wherever their fancy takes them. They are no longer supplied with food, and are now obliged to hunt fish and game for themselves. They often travel long distances from home, are gone all the summer, but as soon as winter sets in all the dogs return to their masters, ready to work and be fed in return. This rarely fails.

The real Eskimo dog never barks, but makes a long-drawn-out howl like the wolf. It is said he may "acquire the habit" if raised among dogs that bark. He is usually good-natured, willing to work, and ready to obey his master. He is strong and intelligent, and able to take care of himself. He likes the cold, white North with its long night, and probably is never quite happy when removed from his Arctic home.—Evangeline Weir, in the Junior Weekly.

ROMP WITH THE KIDS.

By Rose Lee Loving.

If you're tired of this life,
Of the work and the strife,
And you eat things the doctor forbids,
You will find it worth while
To put on a big smile

And go out and romp with the kids.

Just pretend you are little;
Play Frog in the Middle,
Or the Farmer Who Lived in the Dell;
Run around and around
Till you drop to the ground,
And you'll find yourself getting well.

Tumble over awhile
In a gritty sandpile;
Get a few grains under the lids;
It will make your eyes shine
For there's nothing so fine
As a genuine romp with the kids.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

EASTERN VIRGINIA FELLOWSHIP.

On a recent Sunday afternoon, the officials of the Eastern Virginia Youth Fellowship met in Suffolk Christian Church and planned work for this fellowship for the coming year. They did more than dream: they really planned to do some work, as can be seen from the few facts which follow.

They decided to visit all churches in the conference during September and October in the interest of young people's work. The representatives who go will take with them literature and information concerning young people's work and will be ready to help the local churches in every possible way. If socials are needed they will tell how to plan them; if missionary material is needed they will tell where to get it; if the Sunday School classes need help, these representatives will be ready to aid, and if young people's societies of any kind are needed, these representatives will aid in their organization.

The conference is divided into eastern and western districts. Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Williams of Newport News are to look out for the eastern district by planning the rally and visiting the churches. The western district is divided into smaller groups with Misses Lillye Holland, Mary Jones, Elizabeth Sharpe, Evelyn Richardson, and Mr. B. B. Franklin as division superintendents, who will visit churches.

Some time in the near future each district will hold a rally. The western district expects to meet at Suffolk Christian Church at eight o'clock in the evening, September 29th, although this date is not absolutely sure. The theme for the rally will be, "Seeking! Finding! Sharing! the Jesus Way of Life."

The Fellowship has issued a Calendar of Work for this year, which will be used in connection with the "Program Guide for Young People." This latter is a 25c pamphlet issued by Dr. Stock and Miss Lucy Eldredge, in which they have outlined the work of young people.

Pastors, Sunday School superintendents, youth leaders, and key-workers in each church should do all within their power to get all the young people in the community to be present when the Fellowship workers visit them and to attend the district rallies. The Fellowship officials have made these plans not for their own enjoyment, but with the hope of helping the young people in the local churches to do more efficient Christian service. The rest of us surely will cooperate to the limit of all ability, and it takes no prophet to guess that success will crown the efforts of these leaders.

"IT'S CHEAP!"

We're on an excursion—some 500 Carolinians going to Norfolk, Va., for the week-end at a cost of $2.50 each. Mostly, we are young people—men and maidens in their late 'teens and early thirties. This appears to be a cross-section of young Carolina life.

Here is a chance to see what that life is when restraints are removed. Let us look and listen.

Across the aisle they discuss the fare and some one says, "It's Cheap." Cheap! That's it! Cheap! That's what we are looking for—something cheap. The Southern Railway Company offers us a cheap trip and we jump at it half a thousand strong. Cheap! The word seems to have a half-hidden meaning. It charms, fascinates, like familiar scenes long lost to view. Where have I seen or heard it before? Yes, it was cheap oil in my car that cost $50.00 for repairs that left the car worse than before the cheap oil ruined it. Cheap clothing piled on bargain counters—but it is soiled or shoddy. Cheap! Yes, but high at any price. There are such things.

But back to the car and this tumbling, tumultuous life of youth on its way to the play places by the sea. These are sons and daughters for whom mothers have suffered and fathers labored. They are the choice products of American homes. They are the citizens who will make America great or drag her fame in the dust. Their ideals will go down through the years bringing joy or sorrow to yet unborn children.

The youngster with a stubby moustache turns the flat flask to his lips with a toast to law—"Here's to all law, damn it!" A neighbor is handed the bottle and told to "kill it." Many of the fellows move restlessly from car to car. The more they move, the worse they walk. Some are quite noisy and seemingly very bold until an officer of the law comes through the car. Then these bold boys seek shelter in the quiet companionship of girls who have busied themselves during the day by reading books and magazines, with an occasional conversation. Cheap! Yes, it seems that the kind of life these fellows are living today is very cheap.

But it is only a few who make the noise, for most of the group sit quietly in their seats and talk with their friends, read books and magazines the whole twelve hours that it takes us to go from Reidsville to Portsmouth. Their conversation sparkles with wit and smiles light up their faces. One can easily believe that here is a group of young people who believe in things that are not cheap. They believe in life that is understanding, sympathetic, courteous and helpful. They seem to think that it is worthwhile to rest from honest toil, to see the beautiful places of earth, and to share with their friends days of happiness. As we ride into the terrific storm, which has come up from the South Seas; some of them think life is too dear to risk it in such a storm and are ready to return home on the next train. But most of the crowd take the disappointment of not getting into Norfolk tonight with a grin and wait for the rising sun. Some expect a beautiful and happy day. They are not cheap. They are happy, sincere, sturdy young people upon whom the destiny of the nation may rest securely.

RURAL MINISTERS' SUMMER SCHOOL.

The Virginia Rural Ministers' Summer School held its fourth successful session July 25th to August 4th. Members of the executive committee said it was the best from practically every standpoint that we have ever had.

Younger men were in attendance; the denominations were more evenly represented; our faculty was stronger, scholarships were provided by more denominations, and two new sources for scholarships were assured. The Northern Methodists promised ten or twelve scholarships which will add that many new men from a new source to the group next year; and the Freemason Street Baptist Church, of Norfolk, was pledged for three scholarships by Dr. Sparks W. Melton, pastor, who spoke on our program and got intimately acquainted with the school this year. Those responsible feel very much encouraged that the school should actually grow and become self-supporting at a time of such economic stress. There were twelve women and fifty men registered. They represented six denominations in thirty Virginia counties, and Pennsylvania, New York, Illinois, District of Columbia and North Carolina.

Members of the faculty included: Dr. Mark A. Dawber, superintendent, Department Rural Work, M. E. Church; Dr. A. E. Holt, Chicago Theological Seminary; Rev. William C. Shawen, Pastor, Chester, Va.; Dr. F. D. Goodwin, Bishop Coadjutor, Diocese of Virginia; Dr. Sparks W. Melton, Pastor, Freemason Street Baptist Church, Norfolk, Va.; B. L. Hummel, State Specialist in Rural Organization.

An accredited twelve-hour course was taught by Dr. M. A. Dawber.

Dr. Henry McLaughlin was director of this year's school, and Rev. Wm. C. Shawen was elected director for next year. It was decided to hold another school here next summer, and a mid-year meeting of the Virginia Rural Church Conference Board will be held in February to make plans for it. This board sponsors the school, and is composed of representatives of ten of the strongest religious denominations of the State. There are 50 men on this board from all parts of the State who are outstanding church men. It was designed for country preachers and is attended by country preachers, their worthy wives, and by rural church administrators. It is purely non-denominational and, according to all reports received from those who attended, is filling a great need in the lives of the rural and small town ministers of the State. The Agricultural Extension Division, the president, and those in charge of the rooming and housing of summer residents of V. P. I. cooperate splendidly in making this school profitable and pleasant for those who attend. The school provides a vacation period of good fellowship, profitable exchange of experience and ideas, inspirational and instructive courses, and recreational features for those who are fortunate enough to attend.

STILL THE SAME.

Our Lord is still the Way
Amid the twisting maze
Of all the world's perplexing paths,
Its many crooked ways;

Still plain and clear he waits
To lead our straying feet
Past quicksands, treacherous and deep,
Into his straight firm street.

Our Lord is still the Truth
Amid confusing lies,
The world's conflicting theories,
Wild guesses and surmise;

Still plain and clear he waits
To guide the seeking mind
Past doubts and false beliefs,
His certain Word to find.

Our Lord is still the Life,
Abundant, rich and free;
He longs to break our chains
And give us liberty;

Serene and calm he waits
Our poor, weak selves to take,
And like his glorious self
Our futile lives to make.

SOME EARLY LEADERS OF ISRAEL.

(REVIEW.)

LESSON XIII—SEPTEMBER 24, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Be strong in the Lord and in the strength of his might."—Eph. 6:10.

Imagine yourself in a reviewing stand as a group of twelve men and women pass by—the characters presented in the lessons of the quarter just closing. Here they come: Joshua, Caleb, Deborah, Isaiah, Gideon, Ruth, Hannah, Samuel, Saul, David, Jonathan, and Solomon. They lived in a far-off land in a far-off day, they lacked technical training in the schools, and social prestige in the communities, they had distinct limitations in many ways, and they were not perfect by any means. But they have written their names indelibly in Biblical history, and their influence upon human life has been incalculable. With the exception of Saul, and possibly Solomon, they served the Lord with sincerity and loyalty, and even these two men who fell far short of their privileges and promises, made a great contribution to the development of Israel's national life and its religious history. As they pass by one ought to get some general impressions as well as impressions of them as individuals.

One thing which ought to impress us is the fact that God uses varied instruments, and sometimes somewhat rough and unpolished instruments to accomplish his purposes. As has been noted above these men and women had their limitations, but God used them mightily to further his purposes. One situation demands one type of leader, another situation calls for another type. God respects the individuality of his children, and he has a place for everyone.

Then there is the lesson that the ultimate test of a man's usefulness in God's service is not necessarily equipment or technical training, but a willingness and readiness to be used. God used these men and women because they gave themselves to him. God can use us, with all our limitations, if we yield ourselves wholly to him. Education and training is important and desirable, but consecration is essential.

And finally there is the lesson that the secret of the success of these men and women who march by us in review was their simple but rugged faith in the living God. They had first-hand knowledge of him, growing out of their experience of him. They knew he had spoken to them and because they had seen his face they were not afraid of the face of man. There is nothing that so inspires and fortifies men as the conviction that the Most High God has spoken to them and commissioned them. For God empowers those whom he calls.

In addition to these general impressions of these men and women as a group, there are impressions of them as individuals. Only a few such impressions will be recorded here:

Joshua—He followed a great man, Moses, and did a great work, because he was courageous and obedient.

Caleb—Youth is not a matter simply of years, but of spirit. He was a man who was not afraid of the difficult.

Deborah—A good woman with a dauntless faith in God, who used her influence to inspire men to do great things for God.

Isaiah—A statesman and a fearless preacher of righteousness. He denounced sin wherever he found it. He obeyed the heavenly vision.

Gideon—A man who put his trust, not in material forces, but in God. Dependable men are more important than mere numbers.

Ruth—An example of grace of character and loyalty. A young woman who followed her best.

Hannah—A godly mother, who believed in prayer, who had a high sense of the mission of motherhood, who gave her son to God's service.

Samuel—A man of integrity, a true patriot, and a follower of the Lord from childhood to old age.

Saul—A young man who might have been.

David—A man who was after God's heart, not because he was perfect, but because when he did err, he turned again to God.

Jonathan—A true friend, unselfish, true, steadfast.

Solomon—A man of high intelligence and tremendous possibilities, but falling far below his possibilities because he compromised his religious ideals.

These men and women were men and women of like passions as we are. Essentially their problems were our problems. In their successes and failures we see how we are to do and what we are to do.

UNIVERSALITY OF THE BIBLE.

Born in the east and clothed in original form and imagery, the Bible walks the way of the world with familiar feet and enters land after land to find its own everywhere. It has learned to speak in hundreds of languages to the heart of man. It comes into the palace to tell the monarch that he is the servant of the Most High, and into the cottage to assure the peasant that he is the son of God.

Children listen to its stories with wonder and delight, and wise men ponder them as parables of life. It has a word of peace for the time of peril, a word of comfort for the day of calamity, a word of light for the hour of darkness. Its oracles are repeated in the assembly of the people, and its counsels are whispered in the ear of the lonely. The wicked and the proud tremble at its warning, but to the wounded and penitent it has a mother's voice. The wilderness and the solitary place have been glad by it, and the fire of the hearth has lit the reading of its well-worn pages.

It has woven itself into our deepest dreams so that love and friendship, sympathy and devotion, memory and hope, put on its beautiful garments of treasured speech, breathing of frankincense and myrrh. Above the cradle and beside the grave its great words come to us uncalled. They fill our prayers with power larger than we know, and the beauty of them lingers on our ear long after the sermons which they adorned have been forgotten. They return to us swiftly and quietly like doves flying from far away. They surprise us with new meanings, like springs of water breaking forth from the mountain beside a long-trodden path.

No man is poor or desolate who has this treasure of his own; when the landscape darkens and the trembling pilgrim comes to the valley named of the shadow, he is not afraid to enter; he takes the rod and the staff Scripture in his hand; he says to friend and comrade, "Good-bye, we shall meet again," and comforted by that support he goes toward the lonely pass as one who climbs through darkness into light.—Henry Van Dyke.

In conduct do not make trifles of trifles. Regard the smallest action as being either right or wrong, and make a conscience of little things.—Spurgeon.

AMERICAN STANDARD BIBLES.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

"O Lord, I beseech thee, let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of thy servant, and to the prayer of thy servants, who desire to fear thy name, and prosper, I pray thee, thy servant this day."

MONDAY.

TODAY'S LIGHT.

"I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever believeth in me shall never die."—Jno. 11:25-26.

Our lives are not different from those in the house of Mary and Martha. Conditions often bring us to grief, yes, often our hearts are torn open.

In this message to Mary and Martha, Jesus meant that the world should learn that of which this occasion was only a fragment, viz., "He who is united to me, he in whom I live, can never in any sense die, for I am the life, and as I live so does he."

Life is always a present thing and its continuance is a matter of course. If life as we live it today is full and abundant, the future is unthought of. It is only Jesus in this life today, whether full or not, that makes it happy and wins the fullness of life to come. The thought of quality of living today is far more prominent than the thought of duration.

Man chooses death instead of life and makes his living a sepulchre. Jesus stands forth here as sent from God trampling death, in all its forms under foot, and this marks a new epoch in the faith of that generation, and a new mile-post in the growth of the apostolic church. Is it not true that whatever Jesus touches receives life? Let him touch you.

Prayer—Say the Lord's Prayer.

TUESDAY.

THE COOL OF THE DAY.

"They heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the garden in the cool of the day."—Gen. 3:8.

God was heard, God was seen, God was understood "in the cool of the day." It is very well said that the cool of the day, usually referring to the evening when breezes blow up, is the time for leisure, for rest, for reflection, and a wonderful time for worship. Amid the stillness of relaxation and meditation there comes to pass just what is urged when he enjoins us to "be still and know that I am God." In the right spirit and mood we can in the reflection of nature hear God's voice borne on every breeze.

Morning is the time to act, noon to endure;
But Oh! if thou wouldst keep thy spirit pure,
Turn from the beaten path by worldlings trod,
Go forth at eventide, in heart, to walk with God.

Prayer—O Lord, my God, thou art everywhere walking in the garden of life. The burdens and the heat of the day, the struggles, the ambitions, the attractions of life, all perturb me and take my thoughts from thee. But when I am still, thy peace speaks to me, thy rest comes over me, thy presence calms me. Give me the cool breath of thy Spirit; and refresh me for the oncoming duties of the next day. Enable me to bear all the burdens that come to me, and every day, speak to my soul in the cool of the day.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

A PRIESTLY CHRISTIAN.

"I beseech you, therefore, brethren, to present your bodies a living sacrifice."—Rom. 12:1.

We are told that a priest is one who is in direct access to God; is appointed to offer up sacrifices; he is a mediator representing God to men. Man, in Christ Jesus, is all that, too. All of us may go to God beneath the very blaze of his Spirit, and go out and carry the light of that blaze to the world. In fact, that is the only way the world is to be saved. Jesus said, "I am the way, . . . no man cometh unto the Father but by me." His last commission was, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel unto every creature, baptizing them in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost." The apostles took up the commission and this is what Paul is urging each to do. "Present your bodies a living sacrifice holy acceptable unto God."

Prayer—Dear Father, thou who canst do all things, make us not only true priests of thine in this world, but true and humble servants for the salvation of the world. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

WORSHIP.

"When I thought to know this, it was too painful for me; until I went into the sanctuary of God; then I understood."—Psa. 73:16.

That is the privilege of every Christian soul; and, if it be true, isn't it wonderful? The soul of John Jennings must have felt the same as David when he penned the following words, and we wonder if we do not find God that way, too!

Wandering through the city,
My heart was sick and sore;
Full of feverish longing
I entered an old church door.

Dark were the aisles and gloomy;
Type of my troubled breast,
Mourful and sad I paced there,
Eager to be at rest.

Sudden the sunshine lighted
The arches with golden stream,
Chasing the darksome shadows
With brightly glancing beams.

A chord pealed forth from the organ
Tender, soft and sweet;
Trembling along the pavement
Like the tread of angel's feet.

The light as a voice from heaven
Bid all my cares to cease;
The chord, as a song of Seraphs,
Whispered of God's own peace.

Prayer—Say the Lord's Prayer.

FRIDAY.

ADVENTUROUS RELIGION.

"Thou shalt see greater things than these."—Read John 1:43-51.

Speaking to a county teachers' convention in Massachusetts, a professor in New York University declared that teachers with the "zest for adventure" are best equipped to understand and guide children. In saying this, he hit upon one of the chief desiderata not only for secular education but for religious education as well. For young people love adventure, and are hungry for movement. Old folks may shrink from change, but young folks welcome it.

Would it not be good for all of us to exult more in our privilege to live the adventurous life? There is so much good and beauty in this world; so many continents of learning awaiting our exploration; such glorious heights to which we may ascend; such marvelous depths of divine love that we may fathom!

Prayer—O God, fill us with thy zest for the untried. Make us creative. Give us the glory of discovery. May we launch out on the bark of faith and travel to the far lands of thy love. And wherever we go, wilt thou go with us.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SATURDAY.

HILARIOUS GIVERS.

"God loveth a cheerful giver."—Read II. Cor. 9:6-15.

The other Sunday, a pastor instructed the ushers, on passing the plates, to emit a good-sized whistle when a dollar bill or any larger amount was placed thereon. Soon the church resounded with shrill sounds of rejoicing and laughter. The ushers found it difficult to pucker up their lips and grin at the same time, but the collection was about three times as large as usual.

I do not suppose the pastor ever tried that plan again. Probably he merely used it as a sample of the "hilarious giving (for that is the literal rendering of "cheerful giving") enjoined by St. Paul. At any rate, he woke up his congregation to the gaiety of giving.

Theoretically the Christian enjoys giving. Practically, most Christians do nothing of the kind. If they did, pastors' salaries and mission boards' appropriations would take big jumps; and charities and reforms would vastly extend their labors. The joy of the Lord is our strength, and the lack of that joy, as manifest in stinginess, is the appalling weakness of the church of Christ.

Prayer—Infinite Giver, who hast withheld nothing from us, but hast given us the unspeakable Gift, open our hands. Open our hearts. Open our purses. And then at length our lives will be open to thy blessings.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

A TONGUE THAT WAS CAUGHT.

"Jehovah will cut off . . . the tongue that speaketh great things."—Read Psa. 12:1-8.

A five-year-old boy was making faces at his sister, sticking his tongue at her through the crack in the door at the hinges. Suddenly the wind blew the door shut. Instantly the boy was in great pain. His sister opened the door at once, but the doctor had to close up the gash in his tongue with three stitches.

There is a trap which snaps on every ugly action, every spiteful word, every mean and cruel thought. We are caught by the snare we set for others. There is no safety to the wicked. And if all this seems too large a moral to draw from the boy's tongue, we must remember that straws show which way the wind blows.

Prayer—May we know, our Father, that a hateful thought is in itself a wicked deed. May we realize that our only safety and peace lie in the love of thee and of our brothers and sisters on the earth. In Christ's name.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

Finish each day and be done with it. You have done what you could. Some blunders and absurdities no doubt crept in; forget them as soon as you can. Tomorrow is a new day; begin it well and serenely, and with too high a spirit to be cumbered with your old nonsense. This day is all that is good and fair. It is too dear, with its hopes and invitations, to waste a moment on the yesterdays.—Emerson.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

A PEOPLE PETITIONED TO PRAY.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"Pray without ceasing."—I. Thess. 5:17.

Paul petitioned his people to pray. This letter was addressed to a church—not an individual. It was meant to call a whole church to prayer. It was intended to call a whole church to constant and unceasing prayer. Of course, it enjoins the individual to pray. "Pray without ceasing." "Brethren, pray for us." It is here the heart-cry of a great warrior, calling the people to prayer for the church and for himself. This spiritual leader of the people, and "bond servant of Jesus Christ" earnestly desired the prayers of the people.

I. Why Should a Christian Expect to Get Along Without Prayer? David Livingstone was found dead upon his knees. England's great poet, Tennyson, says that more things have been wrought by prayer than the world has ever dreamed of. The names that bless the earth like beautiful showers in every age have been men and women of prayer. The Scriptures tells us to pray, but far more emphatically the Scriptures show us prayer. It is one thing to tell us—especially when it is God's Word; and yet it is another thing to show us—and that the Scriptures have done. From the first to the last of the Book we find men at prayer. When Seth, the son of Adam and Eve, held his own baby Enos in his hands for the first time it is recorded, "Then began men to call upon the name of the Lord."

Open the Bible wherever you will. There they are: praying Abraham, praying Hannah, praying Esther, praying Elijah; in the New Testament from Mary of Bethlehem, to John of Patmos, it is a grand procession of praying people. Yes, the Bible tells us to pray, and it shows us prayer in action.

Why should a Christian expect to get along without prayer, especially when Christ, after he is called, was preeminently a man of prayer? All night long we find Jesus at prayer. How beautifully John Oxenham pictures Jesus climbing the hills as a boy to pray! How replete with his times, places, and objects of prayer are the Gospels! Every act of Jesus has not been recorded—too many, "I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written" if all were set down—and yet we have many very definite instances of prayer, and many other times when Jesus says he prayed, recorded. Jesus must have walked in the very Spirit of God: "He and his Father were one," and yet Jesus found time, place, and need for definite prayer. It was a matter of constant moment to him. Jesus was a man of prayer. The disciples were impressed with his actual praying perhaps more than his commands to pray. Should that not be a suggestion to us? "And it came to pass, that as he was praying in a certain place, when he had ceased, one of his disciples said unto him, Lord, teach us to pray."

Much lies back of that picture. It shows the bodily presence of Jesus in an actual, designated—"a certain place." Jesus did not stop at "being in a prayerful mood" (fine as that is, and as much as it is used as an alibi for real prayer today), but he turned side to a definite place and put himself in the position of prayer. "When he had ceased," implies that the disciples caught him alone in prayer, that they reverently waited until he had finished, and that there was some time, long or short, before he did finish. It further shows that the onlookers became persuaded that prayer was worth while, and they desired to learn from a worthy teacher how to pray. Out of such a moment as that the world could be given its most used and most beautiful prayer—namely, The Lord's Prayer.

We well know that we should not expect to get along without prayer. Some, many, of our highest moments and most sacred memories are connected with prayer. Young mothers, keep it a memory of mother, even as it is a memory of your own mother. Woe be unto that people who shall have to speak of my grandmother's or my great-grandmother's prayers instead of that sweetest of all family phrases, "my mother's prayers." Young mothers and young fathers, let your babies remember you in all the years to come in connection with prayer. You will thus give them a great heritage.

II. Why Should a Church Expect to Get Along Without Prayer? Churches were never better organized than they are today. There is a committee for everything (and I almost said that the church is committed to everything, which would be far from true). We have gone from theories to methods, and from methods to meetings and movements, and the church moves like a well-oiled machine—but where is prayer? "My house shall be a house of prayer, but you have made it . . ." What? My friends, I am believing, praying, and trusting that your church and mine is a "house of prayer." I see many indications of it. It is in your actions, and in your spirit. If this church proves ever worthy of its great preachers and people of the past, it must go anew in these days and times to God in prayer. I wish I could say in such a way that my words would be heard and heeded in every nook and corner of this great church, and of every church, "let us pray."

Too many churches have demonstrated that the business and ongoing of the church can be done, after a fashion, without prayer. But where is the power, the might, yea, the glory of the church with a praying people? You expect your pastor to be a man of God. The world expects the church to be an institution of God. You want to look up to your minister, and feel that he knows the roads for you of comfort, peace, pardon and blessing. You should do that. And how anxiously the true minister's heart yearns to be just such a shepherd. The world wants a church it can turn to when it has enough of worldliness and sin. The world wants its church to be a haven of rest, peace, pardon, and blessing—"a place of prayer for all nations." How full we are of the trying of many things! How hungry we are for God! God comes to his people through a church of prayer.

III. A Church May Pray Without Ceasing. Just as Paul enjoined the Thessalonians, a church may pray without ceasing. Prayer is not something to talk about, it is something to do. It does not all have to be done at a mid-week prayer meeting. It must not all be done in public services. One of the beauties about prayer is: It can be done in secret, and when it is done in secret its results are openly seen. To my desk this morning comes a beautiful letter from a great and good man. He wants his pastor to be a blessing to him. He is already a blessing to his pastor. One of the greatest ways in the wide world for him to get a blessing from his pastor is to daily pray for that selfsame pastor.

He may, along with others, and yet others, pray daily for their minister. Paul wrote a fairly long letter to the Thessalonians. He loved them. He wanted to ask a great favor of them, for Paul had the "care" and anxiety of the churches upon his shoulders. So Paul told them to pray without ceasing. But that did not seem to satisfy Paul. He must make his plea a bit more definite—perhaps they would not yet see what he was longing for. So just before he put the "yours truly," he said plainly: "Brethren, pray for us." It is the heart plea of a pastor. It is re-echoed today in your pastor's heart—whoever your pastor may be.

Everyone must pray for his minister, that he may have the Spirit of Christ; that he may be willing to pay the price of spiritual leadership; that he may be loved, trusted, and used as a sympathetic and understanding friend; that he may never be "weary in well doing," nor unduly discouraged, but rather that he may be of good courage and strong. If you see and know your pastor you will see and know how to pray for him. And if you pray for your pastor, you pray for yourself and your whole church. Furthermore, you will want to pay for that particular part or work which you are called upon to do in your church, that the sum total of it all shall make your church a constituent part of the coming of the kingdom of God in the world.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

We want to insist on the Sunday Schools and friends making offerings for the Christian Orphanage as large as possible. We cannot make ends meet on the present income. We had to buy a car of coal last week. The grade of coal we use here cost us more than $200.00 per car. Two more cars to buy. Shoes for nearly a hundred children for the winter. Clothes, wraps, school books and supplies and a hundred other things to get ready for the winter. Income a little more than $100.00 per week.

If you were at the head of your Orphanage and two hundred and thirty-five churches with a membership of thirty-two thousand would send you a little more than $100.00 per week to care for nearly a hundred children, would you get blue? That is an average of $1.00 per week per child. $4.00 per month.

The Fall of the year is always an expensive season—seed to buy to put in the Fall crops, fertilizer to buy for wheat and oat crops. Please take these things into consideration and come to our rescue.

A BLIND GIRL TELLS HER OWN STORY.

In September, 1926, I began my work at the State Teachers College in Harrisonburg, Va., and being the first person without sight to attend that institution, of course, I was eager to succeed—to prove that blindness is not the handicap it seems; but those about me, even my closest friends, said it couldn't be done. I prayed, and God answered. But, I lost myself in studying and in the effort to gain and hold my place in my classes, I failed to enjoy the sweet communion with my Master which I might have had. The things of the intellect were crowding those of the spirit into the background.

In December of that year (and I count that date one of outstanding importance in my life) I received my first book from the Braille Circulating Library in Richmond, Va.; it was called "The God Planned Life," by James H. McConkey. At first I did not find much time for these books of Mr. McConkey's which were sent me as a free loan by the Library, but whenever I read them I was spiritually refreshed. I thought less of self and more of God and thus it was possible for me to accomplish more with less effort. My joy and satisfaction in him alone began then.

After college, came the trying experience of seeking employment, and as I read these precious books, I came to understand more clearly than ever before that there was a special work for each one of God's children and therefore I must trust him to lead me to it. I wanted to be where he could use me best. So, I kept praying and following the leadings he gave me and at last I was given a position as teacher of music in two rural schools. When I began to teach, I found that my difficulties were only just beginning. I read the McConkey books and clung to God. Then

I realized, as never before, how necessary it was for those who must do their reading with the fingers, to have access to books about the Bible as well as the Bible itself.

Eternity alone can reveal the good which has been wrought in my life by means of such reading—service has become purer, finer joy and life itself is different. My work now is that of teaching in an orphanage and it is my supreme desire to fill my little place in accordance with his will. If I have realized any degree of success as a teacher, it is largely due to the fact that I have learned from these pages truths which have brought me into a closer walk with the Master. Many times after a strenuous day, when everything seemed to go wrong, I have read and tired nerves were soothed and I was physically, mentally and spiritually refreshed. Despair would give place to hope and I would go forth in his strength. But I long to see other blind readers realize the importance of putting themselves in a place where God can speak to them and transform their lives. If only they would accept the free offer of these books and "look and live."

The New Testament idea of preaching involves three elements: The announcement of joyful tidings; the proclamation of truth as by a herald, urgent and authoritatively; and the conviction and persuasion of men to belief by means of argument.—J. E. Dinger.

"It is easy to lead a Christian life only when it is made the first business of life."—Selected.

NEWS FROM CAROLINA AND GEORGIA CHURCHES.

By M. J. SWEET.

In Atlanta the Central (Congregational-Christian) Church has had a committee working through the vacation season on the problem of its future activities. At a recent meeting the committee recommended a plan of expanded membership which might include, as active factors in the management of affairs, certain outstanding personalities who seek to enlarge the application of preaching to conditions confronting society today regardless of denominational affiliations. By this method, it is thought, the church would proceed steadily as a Congregational-Christian Church with the addition of strength in applied Christianity. This calls for an exceptionally strong pulpit utterance on the one hand and a strong religious educational and pastoral program on the other. Eventually this calls for two well equipped leaders. At present the pulpit will be abundantly cared for by the Rev. Ashby Jones, resident of Atlanta and well known as one of the greatest leaders that city has every enjoyed. He has accepted a call to the pastorate as "Guest Pastor" and will begin service October 1st. On that date the Sunday School will begin and other departments of the church life will cooperate in making this somewhat new departure a success. The missionary interests and obligations will remain the same as always in the past.

Outstanding in the Carolinas is the close of the unusually successful work of the S. S. S. people. Carl Key, graduate of Elon College, now going to Yale, did Raleigh, Westover and Caroleigh great good by faithful, wise and energetic endeavor. The pastor, Rev. J. Edward Kirbye, D. D., offers thanks that this fine young man was sent to these churches. William T. Scott tells another satisfying story of the work of Carl Voss. His calling in Winston-Salem created a vacation church school in the new church which was among the largest held in any church in this territory. For Samuel Penn of Sopia Parish comes the report that everybody wants Miss Genevieve Chase of Cleveland, Ohio, and Miss Ruth Scottford, of New York, to come back next year. Chapel Hill and Niagara Churches ask for Scott Read Chatterton again. And so it goes. These reports are given here to help churches which did not have such workers to realize the exceeding worth of the S. S. S. No church can well afford to be without this inspiration.

The Georgia Congregational-Christian Conference will meet with United Church, LaGrange, October 31st and November 1st. Some new developments in program making are being worked out by a good committee and a most interesting meeting is expected. In this connection it should be said that a year ago the old Georgia and Alabama Christian Conference effected a complete merger with the Congregational Conference of Georgia so that now there is but one body. The matter of becoming an independent State conference functioning through the New York and Dayton offices, will be considered and acted upon at this meeting. A strong committee of ten made up of officials of the Conference voted to recommend that Georgia become such an independent State Conference. If this carries through Georgia will be the first State of the Southeast fully to complete the merger.

The pastor at large recently included four of distinctively Christian Churches in his work in Georgia: Vanceville, Enigma, Ambrose and Richland gave him a most cordial welcome. He most thoroughly enjoyed his visit both with the groups and with individuals. It was delightful to sit for three hours in his automobile with Rev. C. W. Carpenter, discussing plans and programs for the Georgia Conference. He is pastor of three Christian and one Congregational Church and a more forward-looking, devoted minister and man of God one seldom meets. His churches are not strong, but congregations fill the pews—they love to hear him preach.

News comes from Georgia revivals that large numbers are being received into churches as the result of faithful preaching and pastoral work. In this the Ambrose parish, Friendship parish, Barnesville parish, Macedonia parish, Duncan's Creek parish, LaGrange and other churches share. Details may come later, but it is worth while to know that our Georgia ministers have worked all summer and the people like it.

Rev. J. H. Dollar, United Church, LaGrange, is putting on a vigorous campaign to complete the canvass to pay off all indebtedness of the church by November 1st, and then to celebrate on the Sunday following, November 5th. At that time he hopes and expects to have several national and state leaders present to rejoice on this expected splendid achievement.

I would have every minister of the gospel address his audience with the zeal of a friend, with the generous energy of a father, and with the exuberant affection of a mother.—Fenelon.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING.

ELON COLLEGE, founded by the Christian Church in 1889, has fully justified the faith and hope of its founders during its 42 years of operation. Its graduates from the four-year course leading to a bachelor's degree, number 980, now living, 122 of whom are in the Christian Ministry and full-time Christian service. The majority of these are members of our own denomination. In addition, 449 are in educational work and are an active influence in the lay leadership of the Christian Church.

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING, and the definite religious atmosphere of the College, provide the very best facilities available for training for religious leadership, and offer the Church its finest opportunity to train the young people of the denomination to assume active leadership both in the ministry and laity of the local churches.

OBITUARIES

STOUT.

Whereas our heavenly Father has seen fit to remove from among us our beloved member, teacher and fellow worker, Mr. J. W. Stout, we the Sanford Christian Church and Sunday School desire to express our appreciation for his faithfulness to his church, and his excellent teaching and service rendered for a quarter of a century. He will be greatly missed, but we know that our loss is his eternal gain.

Therefore be it resolved:

1. That as a member of his class, church and Sunday School, we press forward in the work with the same zeal that characterized the efforts of our departed friend.

2. That we have lost a loyal member, a willing worker, an excellent teacher, a sincere Christian, a life-long friend; the community a fine, considerate neighbor; the family a devoted husband and father.

3. That we wish to express our deepest sympathy to the bereaved family and loved ones. May they find perfect consolation in our Father above from whom all blessings flow.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, one to "The Christian Sun" and one kept on record.

MRS. J. F. ENNIS,
GEORGE BRANNON,
REV. T. F. WRIGHT.

MOFFITT.

Wm. Parker Moffitt departed this life July 22, 1933, being aged 84 years and 9 months. He leaves to mourn his departure a wife and seven children, as follows: E. A. Moffitt, of Statesville, N. C.; Mrs. E. F. Phillips, of Asheboro, N. C.; Mrs. H. T. Brown, of Summerfield, N. C.; E. M. Moffitt, of Oakboro, N. C.; B. F. Moffitt, Bonlee, N. C.; and E. C. Moffitt, Greensboro, N. C.

Also there are thirty-seven grandchildren and fourteen great-grandchildren, besides numerous other relatives.

Burial services were conducted by the writer at the Pleasant Grove Church where deceased had long been a member. May the heavenly Father comfort the bereaved.

A religion of effortless adoration may be a religion for an angel, but never for a man. Not in the contemplative, but in the active, lies true hope. Not in rapture, but in reality, true life. Not in ideals, but among tangibles, is man's sanctification wrought.—Henry Drummond.

English Girl Wins Largest Literary Prize.—

Miss Janet Beith, age 26 and former Kent County school teacher, recently won a prize of $20,000, said to be the largest prize ever offered by any book publisher. The novel which won the prize, "No Second Spring," was the first that she had ever submitted for publication, though she admitted writing several others which she had destroyed because she did not "think them worthy." She saw the announcement of the prize by accident, and submitted the novel which she had written after school hours "to take my mind off more boring subjects," without the knowledge of either her parents or friends. Miss Beith is an A. B. graduate of Cambridge, where she majored in English Literature. She is said to be fond of sports, including tennis, la-crosse and golf. She is adverse to publicity, and when asked to allow a public presentation of her prize check she firmly refused.

McWane Will Vote Against Repeal.—

The Republican nominee for Governor of Virginia, replying by telegram to an inquiry from the "State chairman" of the repealists, in Richmond, stated that he would vote against repeal. He said in part: "I have consistently taken the position that I oppose repealing the Eighteenth Amendment until a satisfactory control plan is offered in its place. No definite plan is yet offered. . . Nothing will prevent return of the saloon nationally between repeal and when Congress may or may not act. I cannot approve that situation. . . I expect to vote against repeal, preferring to retain my personal conviction to general rush of candidates to get on the bandwagon." Mr. McWane requested that his statement, if published, be published in full, which space prevents here. We have endeavored not to distort it. We know nothing of his qualities for political leadership except one—and that is essential to good leadership—his willingness to take a stand for what he believes right regardless of its cost.

Shenandoah Valley Producing Fine Black Marble.—

Quite interesting is the recent announcement that contracts for black marble for use in government contracts had been awarded to a Shenandoah Valley firm. For years the black marble wainscoting and terrazo floors found in American public buildings have been furnished almost exclusively by Belgian marble interests. The only competition offered by this country has been from a black marble mine located in Arkansas. Though the black marble deposits of Rockingham County, Va., had been long known to exist, they were not considered worth commercial development. Recently tests were made by the Bureau of Standards and by chemists in leading universities, and the black marble of Rockingham has been pronounced equal if not superior to the Belgian product. Complete equipment has been set up at the quarries, and already contracts have been received for the marble to be used in several Federal buildings, including the new Supreme Court Building in Washington.

Arc-Melted Pavement.—

Soviet Russia, with all its attendant evils, has no unemployment problem. Consequently, there has been no hesitancy in adopting improved mechanical methods in the Soviet Union. One of the most striking projects with which they are now experimenting is the melting of road soil so as to form permanent paving. The British-Russian Gazette, recently described a machine which plowed up clay, loam, sand, or gravel, and after having melted it by means of an electric current, poured it out behind the machine in 7-inch layer of glossy, polished deposit. The Electrical World, in a recent editorial, makes the following comment: "If such a process proves to have economic merit, it may well mean revolutionizing the construction of highways. Transport of raw materials to and from cement mills, seasonal restriction of operations, electrical energy consumption, might undergo profound changes if the new process is successful. It is not . . . conceivable that the surface can be laid as smoothly as is prescribed for the better highways. Nevertheless . . . it will warrant watching as a possible load of the future for utilities, so many of which have large-capacity power lines along the highways.

$10-Million Damage.—

Figures gathered in regard to the damage done by the storms striking the Virginia coast during the latter part of August show that a total damage of over $10-million was sustained. Most of the property damage was sustained in and around the city of Norfolk, where gusts of wind reached a velocity of 88 miles an hour. Trees were uprooted, houses un-roofed and many of the city's streets flooded to the depth of six feet. On Willoughby Spit the storm was especially furious, the water reaching the second stories of houses that were fortunate enough to withstand the wind, while many others were absolutely obliterated and washed out to sea. One family, the writer's personal friends, was marooned in their cottage until rescuers came. They waded in water to their waists from their home to a truck, and were taken to friends. Shortly after they arrived, the house next door split in half, the seaward side being washed away, then their friend's porch disappeared. They fled out the back way to a nearby barber shop, and the next wave crashed in its front. Finally they finished the night at the police station. They were there when the worst of the storm broke. Strange as it may seem, they would have been perfectly safe if they had stayed in their own cottage, for while the lower floor was washed completely away, the building was built on piles, and they, with the upper story, stood secure. One hundred and forty-one cottages were wrecked. Less extensive damages were suffered at Ocean View and Virginia Beach. The damage to farms and farm crops amounted to half of the total loss; corn suffering to the extent of $2,100,000; tobacco, $1,800,000; apples, $850,000, while other crops greatly increased the total. North Carolina suffered more from the second storm, but the total damage will probably be considerably less than that suffered in her sister State.

Some Astounding Figures.—

D. Leigh Colvin, Ph. D., prohibitionist and statistician, is the authority for the following statements. Keep these figures, and find out how near right his predictions turn out to be. He says that if the National Capital is a criterion by which the rest of the United States may be judged, then over five million arrests for drunkenness per year is one result which the repeal policy will bring. He says that since beer's return arrests for drunkenness in our National Capital have reached new all-time highs. We quote: "If the same rate applies in the whole country as in the Nation's Capital, which reflects the spirit of the Administration, and where the new (Wet) Deal is having its first fruitage, the aggregate arrests for drunkenness for one year in the United States would amount to the astounding figure of 5,263,000. Think what a scourge is being thrust upon us by the pressure of the wet administration. Over five and a quarter million arrests of citizens so poisoned that they endanger themselves and others, and have to be locked up—deprived of liberty." He continues his comparisons, showing that for every thousand who voted for Roosevelt in 1932, if the comparison holds, there will have been 233 arrests for drunkenness within the year. Further: If repeal should permit legalized whiskey to come back in December and should bring in increase in arrests equal to that brought by (non-intoxicating) beer, then the total number of arrests from September 1st to the end of the Roosevelt administration will approximately equal the popular vote cast for him in the Presidential election. Finally: "Can anyone imagine the debauchery, the degradation, the despoiling of bodies and souls which these colossal figures imply? Can anyone estimate the aggregate of misery which the repeal policy is about to inflict upon the American people?" Keep his statement for your consideration three years from now.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Miss Susie Elder, one of our good Georgia friends, a graduate of Elon College and always deeply interested in her church and church paper, makes a real contribution to our columns this week by sending us "Our Chaplains in the Navy," from San Diego, Calif.

Mrs. Elizabeth Sipe, secretary, Pleasant Grove Church, News Ferry, Va., requests that THE CHRISTIAN SUN carry this announcement: "The annual home-coming, for both church and Sunday School, will be observed at Pleasant Grove Christian Church, October 1, 1933. You are urged to be present."

Dr. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, First Church, assisted the pastor in revival services at our Congregational-Christian Church at Albemarle, N. C., the past week. Dr. Rowland's pulpit, Sunday morning, September 24th, was occupied by President L. E. Smith of Elon College, and at the evening hour by Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, Kernersville, N. C.

The North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference, Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, N. C., president, meets in annual session at Turner's Chapel, near Sanford, N. C., at 10 A. M., Friday, October 20th. The Eastern Virginia Woman's Conference, Mrs. R. T. Bradford, president, Route 2, Suffolk, Va., convenes in annual session at Cypress Chapel, near Suffolk, Va., 10 A. M., Friday, October 27th.

One of our fine Christian Endeavor boys, in sending a check for $5.00 for Missions from his Society, gives a word good enough to pass on to other Societies and CHRISTIAN SUN readers: "I wish you could have been with us tonight (Sunday, September 17th), and seen our young folks. We would have gotten more if we could have made the change. You can't tell me all young folks are gone into the 'jazz age,' as this modern age is sometimes called. Hoping you lots of success in our Mission work, and cordially inviting you to be with the C. E. Society, sincerely."

On Sunday, September 17, 1933, the Friendship Methodist Protestant Congregation and their pastor worshipped with the Monticello Christian Church. Rev. J. L. Trollinger, pastor of Friendship, preached the sermon of the morning. He warned the congregations of the danger of idleness, indifference and lack of enthusiasm for sacred things. Both churches were well represented. This was the second of a series of good-will services. Rev. F. Erwin Hyde, pastor of Monticello, presided over the worship service. Both congregations were delighted with the success of the service.

Our beloved friend and brother, Dr. D. A. Long, who was reported through THE SUN recently to be critically ill at his home in Florence, S. C., even with the weight of many years upon him, has shown remarkable resistance and vigor, as the following from the Florence, S. C., Morning News, September 20th, indicates: "Friends of Dr. D. A. Long will be interested in learning that while his condition remains about the same, he has overcome the attack of pneumonia with which he was seized some time ago. The fact that he was strong enough to resist pneumonia was considered a most encouraging factor in his condition."

One of our energetic and resourceful pastors in a personal letter puts a problem that the editor is unwilling to solve by himself. Says our correspondent: "If we are stewards in life, we should be the same in death; if we tithe in life, we should tithe in death. We are taxed in life and in death. People pay inheritance tax to the government but not to the church. So I would like for us to put on a movement throughout our Conference, giving each person the privilege of making out his will in legal form, leaving one-tenth of his possessions to his local church, Elon College, Missions, Christian Orphanage, THE CHRISTIAN SUN, or to some other benevolent cause which he may designate. In this way, over a period of years, our institutions would be able to build up a respectable endowment. It seems to me that this will be the real salvation of our institutions, and, therefore, of our denomination."

After an illness of a week with heart disease, our good brother, J. N. Malone, many years active and promising in the business life of Burlington, died at his home there, Friday, September 22nd. An honest, upright, faithful citizen; an humble, devout and loyal member of the Christian Church, Brother Malone made a real contribution to his day and generation, and his influence cannot be reckoned for its true weight and worth. Whenever this writer preached at Burlington Christian Church, he as much expected to see in the congregation the welcome, strong and congenial face of J. N. Malone as he expected to find the pews there. Not only through the contribution of his individual interest, but through the presence and devotion of his splendid family, his intelligent and active sons and daughters, he made a real contribution of strength and usefulness to the church as well as the community and city in which he lived. With the devoted wife, who survives him, he gave to the church and the world these children who rise up to call him blessed and to make his name memorable through generations to come: Roy N. Malone, Burlington; Charles, of Salisbury; Mrs. James Rosemond, Charleston, S. C.; Mrs. James White and Mrs. Dr. Branneck, of Burlington; and Mrs. Jake Woodall, of Durham. THE SUN's editor greatly esteemed and admired this man of stalwart character, and extends his sympathy to the bereaved family.

Saturday, September 23rd, was made a memorable and impressive day at Pleasant Union Church, Harnett County, N. C. They called it their "First Home-Coming Day," but they made it a real rally day of social and religious interest and enthusiasm. Rev. J. Lee Johnson is the beloved pastor and was in charge of the all-day exercises. In place of the old building that was destroyed by fire two years ago, they now have a beautiful brick structure, adequate and ample for Sunday School and church purposes for years to come. The building inside, with its Sunday School rooms, is not finished yet, but it is comfortably seated and enclosed for use in service and worship. In addition to the pastor, there were several ministers present and taking part: Rev. J. L. Foster, Dr. W. C. Wicker, and the Mission Secretary from Elon College; Rev. D. M. Spence of the local church; also the pastors of Methodist, Free-Will Baptist and Presbyterian Churches nearby, with interested laymen, who brought brief messages. Brother George McCullers was in charge of the music, with a varied program of congregational, duet and quartette numbers. A most bountiful barbecue with an elaborate dinner was spread at the 1 o'clock hour, and the good congregation enjoyed the great repast together. Brother M. E. Wilder read a very interesting history of the church from its founding and first service by Rev. John R. Holt, some 70 years ago, up to the present. The names of the ministers who wrought through trial, hardship and sacrifice, served and established the church in the early days were recalled with interest, reminding one keenly of the list of the faithful taken from the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, Sunday School lesson for September 24th. Faithful men of the past have labored, and we of the present have entered into their labors and reaped the blessings and benefits of their consecrated lives.

FROM LOUISIANA.

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

I thought SUN readers might be interested to know about my doings in this State. We closed a week's meeting, nights only, at Linville, La., August 26th. The congregations and interest grew with each service.

There is a fine opportunity here for the Congregational-Christian Church. There is a modern high school here and no church of any denomination within two miles of this place. The people are very favorably impressed with our church and its great principles.

If we only had a minister of the right kind living here we could soon have a thriving church. The people here are feeling the depression and could not make liberal contributions at present for the erection of a house of worship, but they would do what they could. There is a fine large group of young people full of energy, who are not engaged in any kind of religious work. The churches nearest to this place have no Sunday Schools. These people certainly need leadership.

I went from this place to Halmesville, about 30 miles southwest last Sunday and began a revival which was a decided success. It continued through September 1st, with two services each day. In that community we have quite a number of people who were members of the Christian Church in Alabama, also a great host of young people who lack the proper leadership.

This community has a community church building with only one organization, which is very weak. Here is another fine field for our church. There is no preacher of any denomination living in either of these communities. They want one of our own men, but it will require a great sacrifice on the part of any man to come here and put this work over. I could have organized a church with a building already, but would not without authority, and of course it would be useless without a preacher located here.

Do you think our Mission Board would be interested in a work here? I plan to take the matter up with the Alabama Conference when it meets October 10th, and I thought that if it gets behind the movement, probably the Mission Board might assist.

Fraternally,

G. H. VEAZEY.

NOTICE OF CONFERENCE MEETING.

The Eastern North Carolina Conference will hold its annual session with the Wentworth Christian Church, at McCullers, N. C., November 21st and 22nd, beginning at 10 o'clock, A. M. All churches are urged to send up full delegations, all delegates and ministers are requested to be present at the opening session and remain until the close of Conference. There is great need for the churches to raise as much as possible of the apportionments requested. Our contributions last session were not up to the usual amount, but the needs were greater than ever. We should do our best for Christ. He has done his best for us.

W. C. WICKER, President,
Eastern North Carolina Conference.

"I WILL FOLLOW THEE, LORD, BUT—"

There are a great many people who are really desirous of following the Lord, until they look at the hindrances in the way, until they count the cost of a life of service for him. They count the cost and stop at that, without ever considering the greater liberty, joy, peace and security which comes to his followers here, or the everlasting joy and life which awaits those who follow him through. They miss the highest goal by not going all the way with him. Many are willing to follow Jesus if they can make their own terms and follow in their own way. Our Lord never permitted anyone to substitute their plans or their way for his will.

We pledge ourselves to go with him all the way, but without being aware of it, many times we include an "if" or a "but" in our pledge of loyalty, which causes us to draw back when the service begins to cost. Jesus said it would cost, and told us what it cost. He was always fair and just with his followers. He never deceived in any way those he called to service. The promises, however, are to those who pay the price, and the rewards go to those who faithfully follow, not according to their own plans, but according to the Master's plans.

In the last verses of Luke's Gospel, ninth chapter, there are three men mentioned who really seemed to desire to follow Jesus, but in the path of each lay an obstacle. The first man volunteered to "follow whithersoever thou goest." It was his own offer to follow anywhere, through anything. He did not know Jesus was on his way to his crucifixion, and that there were things in his own life which would have to be crucified if he followed Jesus all the way. Jesus knew it and hastened to warn him of what true following meant. Evidently from Jesus' answer, the man was used to comfort and luxury, for Jesus at once tells him how extremely poor he is. The Son of man, he through whom the world was made, while in the world had not even a place to lay his head.

For his sake, houses, lands, luxuries, pleasures, everything the world has to give, must take second place in the lives of Christ's followers. They must even be given up entirely if he says so. He requires more giving up on our part than most of us think, until we spread our plans before him, waiting until the Lord makes known his plans, his will for us. Salvation is free, grace is free. They are God's free gift to man. God gave his Son because he so loved us. Christ gave his life a ransom for us. It was all freely given. It is ours by simply taking. Yet to become a true follower of Jesus costs all we have. We cannot hold anything back. He has first claim upon all our possessions, our time, our affection, our ability, our all. If the books were opened today, and we could see the amount we have spent for the things which were not necessities, compared with what we have given that the kingdom of God might be published abroad, could we look it over with Jesus without a blush of shame? Would what we have given back to him in money or service publish the kingdom of God very far.

There was another he called to follow him, but he came pleading home duties. Christ-appointed service never conflicts with any other duty. He takes care of the other duty, as well as equips the one called out for service. Not every one is called out, and those who are not called can attend to the home duties. He always leaves some at home. Do you not remember one who desired to follow Jesus who was sent back? His appointed work was to publish the kingdom of God at home. There are many ways of serving him at home if he leaves us there. But if he has chosen and appointed us to go and bear fruit for him in some other place, home duties are not to interfere.

Another said, "I will follow thee, Lord, but—" There was something wrong with the third man's heart. He considered the ties of kindred and friends first. He probably did not realize all that was in his heart, but Jesus did. The Master knew most people are influenced by what others say, especially those of the home. Jesus also knew if he came under the influence of his friends again, he very likely would not follow at all. Many a young man and woman has been turned from a life of usefulness in the Master's service by listening to the counsel of friends, instead of listening to God. In many homes a brilliant career in the professional or financial world, or the world of fine arts, is considered a greater achievement than a life of service for the meek and lowly Jesus. The influence is cast on the side of wealth and fame, instead of on Jesus' side. The vital point is to do the will of God, not our will or the will of another. When we are called to a life of service for him, the nearest and dearest of friends and kindred must take second place. The love which binds us to our Saviour must be the strongest love we know. His will must be the will which controls our lives.

Following Jesus means walking in the opposite direction from the crowd, and that is what most people do not want to do. They want to be in the crowd, and the paths through which the Master leads are never crowded. He leads by paths we have not known. But when we have to pass through temptations, trials, or trouble of any kind, he goes with us, holding our right hand, saying, "Fear not, I will help thee." He leads us through, and does not stand by merely looking on. Jesus never does that. He is there with us. It is even better than that. He is there before us, making a way through, straightening the crooked places, lighting up the dark places. "These things will I do and not forsake them," is the promise. He is there with the hand which never fails, reached out to us. He is there with a "Fear not, for I am with thee," and an "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." Has the world anything half so good to offer? Is it not worth all it costs to follow him?

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

PEACE OR WAR—WHICH?

It is well that the World Disarmament Conference is to meet and resume its work at Geneva, Switzerland, October 16th. This Conference has weighty responsibilities and a stupendous task. Christian people everywhere should be anxious over its deliberations and pray devoutly for its wise guidance. The need for wisdom and safe counsel in this Conference is great and pressing, indeed. We are assured that prior to the meeting of the Conference, October 16th, a thousand disarmament meetings will be held in Great Britain and France, and possibly that many or more in the United States. God be praised and let the good work go on, for the matter is of the greatest moment.

Right now, when the world is hungry for bread, gainful toil and peaceful pursuits, the nations are taxing their citizens almost beyond endurance in their preparation for war. Observant travelers, returning from Europe, also from the Near and the Far East, tell us that the nations are armed to the teeth and are arming, both in preparation for and expectation of war, war, war. Our United States has just ordered many millions spent in the building and equipment of warships, all of which, like their predecessors will go on the scrap heap in a few years, having seen their day and duty in war, or having outlived in a very brief span their period of service as the latest and most improved means of destruction.

Millions being spent in preparation, the nations armed and determined, it is no small task, indeed, that confronts a Conference on disarmament, a Conference whose findings, wisdoms and conclusions will affect the nations, stay even for a season the hand of preparation and, in a measure, calm the spirit of the war lords who clamor for the roar of cannon, the flash of sword and the tramp, tramp, tramp of the armies of death and destruction. In face of all this, Christian people, who seek peace and pursue it, will agree with our great Secretary of State, Cordell Hull, who says: "We cannot permit the obstacles and difficulties facing the Disarmament Conference to discourage us from efforts toward bringing it to a successful conclusion."

Nor should the difficulties in the way prevent us from doing our part by letter, petition and prayer to bring about that of which another of our great statesmen, Norman H. Davis, declares:

"If by a great act of faith each and every nation will now summon the courage to take a decisive step in general disarmament, conditions throughout the world will so improve that we can henceforth face the future with a real feeling of security and confidence."

For it is well enough that all Christians act with the sure promise of the prophet in view: "And they (the strong nations) shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid; for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it." (Micah 4:3-4.)

AND NOW PAUL.

For the past quarter, we have been studying certain outstanding individuals of the Old Testament, whose names become immortal through righteousness. And now Paul. For the next quarter, we shall turn to the last and greatest of Israel's leaders, possibly the greatest of all human leaders. The writer of fourteen of the twenty-seven books of the New Testament, speaker and defender of the faith at Athens, the world's intellectual center; at Corinth and Ephesus, the world's commercial centers, and at Rome, the world's political center, this man of small stature and "a thorn in the flesh," has done more possibly than any other human being to change the thinking, alter the history and shape the destiny of mankind. Dr. William T. Ellis, world traveler, says that we get the idea from history and traveling that there are more monuments and memorials to soldiers and heroes of war than to any other class of people. However, this is incorrect, when the reckoning is from a class to an individual. Says Dr. Ellis:

"There are more effigies of Paul, and stained-glass representations of him and paintings (of which I love best Rembrandt's peerless Paul) and churches and schools, bearing his name, than of all the great kings and conquerors and warriors combined. All over the world one finds the name of St. Paul attached to institutions that represent the highest interests of humanity.

More significant yet, Paul's present influence is greater than that of any other world leader who has ever lived. None of the famous scientists or philosophers or writers of all times can approach Paul as a shaping force in the thinking of today.

Take two instances. During this present week many millions of Sunday School members will be conning Paul's life and utterances. Thousands of ministers, the world around, will be expounding his words in sermons. A whole library of books and periodicals will be devoting their pages to Paul during the next three months. This insignificant little Jew from Tarsus, in Asia Minor, has his shaping hand upon the thought of the Twentieth Century."

And yet this man suffered hardship and trials in his day as few men have ever suffered. Is not this man's life partially if not fully explained, who acted as if he believed with all his soul: "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me." J. O. A.

THE SLOT-MACHINE RACKET.

The city of Philadelphia, through its police, got busy recently and smashed $50,000.00 worth of its slot-machines which were doing business in drug-stores, restaurants and other places of business. From an editorial in the Daily Times-News, of Burlington, N. C., it would seem, according to Editor Crowson, that it was about time the city of Burlington, along with other cities, was getting busy trying to stop that which has been discovered is one of the most widespread and successful ventures of the racketeers. September 19th, the Times-News says, editorially:

"The city of Burlington has become a veritable gambling den, equal to if not surpassing the famous Monte Carlo, off the tip of Southern France. Why this is so, no one seems to know. Evidently there is a general let-down in the moral standards around here. These infernal machines are found in the best drug stores of the city. Every filling station is equipped with one or more of these gambling devices. Sundays after Sunday School, seem to be a favorite time for their operation by young folks. This should not be, unless we wish to absolutely let down the bars and get busy and set up regular gambling houses."

In fact our neighbor thinks that it would be better to let down the bars and have gambling houses than to allow the present racketeer to continue, because little children, six years of age and upwards, are seen playing "these gambling devices."

As pointed out in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, September 7th, it requires no intelligence or skill to operate a machine, since it is only necessary to drop in the coin, large or small, pull the lever, and let the wheels whirl.

The Literary Digest, in its issues of August 19th and 26th, told by actual facts and findings that this "slot-machine gambling has become one of the nation's largest and most lucrative rackets—lucrative for the machine only, but not for the gullible players. It is reported," continues the Digest article, "that the nation has been literally flooded with slot-machines in the past twenty-four months, and that the sucker-money intake by these machines has climbed into 'big business' figures, running in fact into millions of dollars a week for the owners of the machines." It was further shown that these machines are so constructed that 60 per cent of the intake is retained by a mechanical device within the machine, and that at best, if the "players" win, only 40 per cent of the money put in can be given out to the players.

That these machines, this form of gambling and racketeering, can have taken hold of the public, especially in a time of depression, reveals to what a high tide the spirit of gambling has developed and the habit of taking a chance has grown. We are living in a perilous hour, when thought itself seems to be on edge, and when the defiance of law, or its evasion, seems to be a charm and a challenge to our citizenship. These gambling devices set up in respectable places have a tendency to make gambling and games of chance respectable and to lure the youth into the habit, a very dangerous and deadly habit, of trying to get something for nothing; take a chance of winning even when that chance has been so figured out before hand that there is no such thing as winning in any manner in proportion to the expenditure. J. O. A.

OBSTACLES TO PEACE.

Everybody I talk with seems to desire peace. Much is said about it and written about it. One may wax eloquent and quote prophecies and copy pacts and it all sounds good. I have devoted much time to the subject and will probably keep up the "fight" for peace. But I have had an eye-opening experience during the past ten weeks in the Mediterranean Sea. As our ship approached these foreign ports we met first of all the fact of armed defense! Forts everywhere. Soldiers, naval vessels and great bristling masonry full of port-holes. To we peaceful people, who dislike war the sight of these evidences of suspicion and fear hurt our very souls. How different along the Canadian border at home!

Take for example one center of power. Gibraltar is a formidable rock, almost a mountain, but as you see it for the first time it looks innocent enough. It is almost covered with green trees and vines. Nestling at its base is the city itself and the military establishment. But that is nothing at all compared with the inside. That mountain is honeycombed with underground passages and they lead to port-holes in the sides of the mountain where guns look out upon a peaceful world. It is a great natural fort provisioned for a siege lasting for years. Its water supply comes from the sky. There are great rain-water cisterns holding, we are told, five thousand million gallons of water! It cost the British government $2,500,000 to equip it and it costs them a million dollars a year to maintain it. Within the bosom of the rock, so to say, 6,000 soldiers are to be found. I was told that at present a less number of men are there. English people are not sure that this is a good expenditure of money, but it still continues.

Notice that this great fort is located on the tip of Spain and opposite Africa! It bottles up the Mediterranean Sea! And why? The very existence of that fort is a reminder of war, and naturally does not please Spain. And so it goes. These forts and armies and navies are a threat to peace. Why do men and nations have to suspect each other? Why is war necessary?

Well, I have concluded there is no hope of peace anywhere until peace reigns in the heart. People must really want peace before any kind of disarmament conferences can succeed. There are certain great political obstacles to peace and not until they are removed or softened can we expect nations to reduce arms. Nationalism is a menace to peace. A noted lecturer said recently that humanly speaking another war could not be prevented, but an application of the principles of Jesus' teachings would make war impossible. Let us work for that. E. A. K.

H. SAMUEL FRITSCH, D. D.

Rev. H. Samuel Fritsch, D. D., formerly pastor of Union Congregational Church in Jacksonville, died on Thursday, September 21st. The funeral service was held in Jacksonville and the burial was at Deerfield, Illinois. Dr. Fritsch came to Jacksonville in 1928 and served the church until May of this year when he resigned because of illness. In February, Dr. Fritsch was taken seriously ill and was for eight months a great sufferer. He leaves a wife and one daughter, a student in the Florida State College for Women.

Dr. Fritsch was a graduate of Valparaiso College and of Chicago Theological Seminary. He served churches in Somonauk, Ill.; Billings, Mont.; Medina, O.; Pilgrim Church, Chicago; and Hough Avenue Church, Cleveland, O., before coming to Jacksonville in 1928. In all of these churches he did distinctive work but in many respects his outstanding pastorate was in the Hough Avenue Church, Cleveland. In this church he became outstanding because of his building up a large evening congregation. Dr. Fritsch was a man of striking personality, originality and force. He was distinctive as being able to choose original themes and present his sermons and addresses in a modern, human, striking and forceful way. He was a man who always could compel a hearing and until his health broke in Jacksonville, he drew large audiences, especially for his unusual Sunday evening services, when he discussed the questions of current common life. With great fortitude and courage he carried a vigorous and aggressive program in church service in spite of the fact that for years he had suffered under a great physical handicap, concerning which he said little and bore with patience. His many friends throughout the country will regret to hear of his passing.—E. C. G.

A PROTEST FOR THE PRESENT.

[The eloquent Henry W. Grady—glory to his noble soul—was speaking to his native Georgians then, but the immortality of his words should appeal to every one of us now. He was then protesting, and his living spirit yet protests, does it not, the return of liquor? His words ring out even as the warnings of bells from heaven.—J. O. A.]

My friends, hesitate before you vote liquor back, now that it is shut out. Don't trust it. It is powerful, aggressive, and universal in its attacks. Tonight it enters an humble home to strike the roses from a woman's cheek, and tomorrow it challenges this Republic in the halls of Congress.

Today it strikes the crust from the lips of a starving child, and tomorrow levies tribute from the government itself. There is no cottage anywhere humble enough to escape it—no palace strong enough to shut it out.

It defies the law when it cannot coerce suffrage. It is flexible to cajole, but merciless in victory. It is the moral enemy of peace and order. The despoiler of men, the terror of women, the cloud that shadows the face of children, the demon that has dug more graves and sent more souls unshriven to judgment than all the pestilences that have wasted life since God sent the plagues of Egypt, and all the wars since Joshua stood before Jericho.

O my countrymen! Loving God and humanity, do not bring this grand old State again under the dominion of that power. It can profit no man by its return. It can uplift no industry, revive no interest, remedy no wrong. You know that it cannot. It comes to destroy, and it shall profit mainly by the ruin of your sons and mine. It comes to mislead human souls and crush human hearts under its rumbling wheels.

It comes to bring gray-haired mothers down in sorrow to their graves. It comes to turn the wife's love into despair, and her pride into shame. It comes to still the laughter upon the lips of little children and to stifle all the music of the home and fill it with silence and desolation.

It comes to ruin your body and mind, to wreck your home, and it measures the duration of its prosperity by the swiftness and certainty with which it does its work.

GREAT MEN AGAINST WHISKEY.

"Some of the domestic evils of intemperance are houses without windows, gardens without fences, fields without tillage, barns without roofs, children without clothing, principles, morals, or manners."—Benjamin Franklin.

"Whiskey kills one-third of our citizens and ruins their families."—Thomas Jefferson.

"The liquor traffic is a cancer in society, eating out the vitals and threatening destruction, and all attempts to regulate it will not only prove abortive but will aggravate the evil; there must be no attempt to regulate the cancer; it must be eradicated; not one root must be left behind."—Abraham Lincoln.

"By legalizing the traffic, we agree to share with the liquor seller the responsibilities and the evils of his business."—President McKinley.

President Taft, in 1906, declared himself a total abstainer and told young men it was the best plan, and in December, 1908, at a banquet he turned his glass down and said: "It is going to stay down forever."

"The legalized liquor traffic is the tragedy of civilization."—Abraham Lincoln.

"What is evil should not only be detected and defeated, but destroyed."

"The saloon has proven itself the greatest foe, the most blighting, withering curse of our modern civilization."

"Legalizing the manufacture of intoxicating liquors as a beverage is wrong—as all history and every development of the practice proves it to be—a moral, social and political wrong."

"The saloon and liquor traffic have defenders, but no defense."

General W. H. Harrison, when a candidate for President of the United States, made this statement: "I am one of a class of seventeen young men who graduated, and the other sixteen have filled drunkard's graves, all through the pernicious habit of wine-drinking."—The Canadian Baptist.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Conferences of the Christian Churches in the Southern Convention are being asked to consider, this year, several matters pertaining to the reorganization of the Convention. In uniting the Congregational and Christian Churches of the Southeast a number of changes are contemplated. The Executive Board of the Convention and several other Incorporated Boards have been working on these problems. The findings of these Boards have been incorporated in a series of recommendations, which have been published in THE SUN, and will be submitted to the Conferences for consideration.

It is understood that these matters are not submitted for final approval. The Convention will consider these matters more fully in the session to be held in the Suffolk Christian Church in May, 1934. It will require several years of careful planning to perfect a satisfactory adjustment of all the matters involved in uniting the work of these two denominations, especially in the Southern Convention. The work of the Christian Church was more closely organized in the South than in some other sections, where it was established. Many of the people are slow to accept radical changes in methods of church work. The tendency in other parts of the country is to have the Christian Churches abandon all their organization and methods and adopt the Congregational plans and policies in toto. If this can be done acceptably to all parties concerned, the problem is simplified and the work can be quickly adjusted. But that can not be so easily done in the Southern Convention. The Mission Board, the Orphanage Board and the Board of Trustees of Elon College are holding property in the name of the Convention and for the Convention. The Convention has a four-year contract for publishing THE CHRISTIAN SUN, with an annual financial obligation amounting to $4,000.00. These financial holdings and obligations can not be turned over to the Congregational organization without careful and mature deliberation and study.

Attention is called to these matters to suggest that they might be given ample time for consideration in the Conference programs this year. Every Conference will be asked to change its name to carry the form: "Conference of Congregational and Christian Churches." When the name is changed some legal provision must be made to care for church property now in the name of the Trustees of the Christian Conferences. When the name is changed the legal status of the old name disappears unless provision is made for this in the new organization. The same condition applies to all funds and notes held by the Conferences. Convention and Conference officials will carefully consider these questions in the forthcoming sessions.

Ultimately, the work in the South and Southeast should be organized on the basis of local and State organizations. It is apparent that all the Associations and Conferences of the Southeast are not favorable to the plan of having the Southern Convention to function in all the States of the Southeast. Unless all the Congregational and Christian Churches are willing to work through the Southern Convention, in this territory, the present plan of organization should be changed. Virginia and the Carolinas, under the present plans, will be the territory of the Southern Convention. If the other States are unwilling to unite in the work of the Convention, it seems to be quite unwise for Virginia and the Carolinas to continue the effort to maintain a Convention. It would be better for each of these States to have a separate State organization, and adopt their plans for financial support of the institutions now under the care of the Convention. Inasmuch as the institutions are located in North Carolina, it might be possible for the Carolina State Conference to hold the title to the property now held in the name of the Convention. A Southeast Convention might then be organized to include the entire Southeast for inspirational and promotional purposes.

I. W. JOHNSON.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOL TEACHER.

The public school system in this country has been a deciding factor in the progress of civilization. Next to the church it has been the greatest moral force operating in society. The public school system is a State institution organized and supported by the State. A large share of public funds has been allocated to the education of our children. Land is purchased; buildings erected, teachers employed, out of public funds. Between 1900 and 1932, teachers' salaries advanced rapidly until the average public school teacher in this country was paid a living wage. Our educational system was going smoothly, and illiteracy was rapidly disappearing even in the remote districts.

Simultaneously in the spring of this year, there seems to have been a united and determined attack upon the public school system from one end of the country to the other. This attack in the first round has succeeded; even greater, I think, was its success than the oncs making the attack had hoped for. The first contention was that entirely too much of the peoples' money was being invested in education. This attack was carried to the State legislatures. These legislatures listened to the arguments and gave way to the attack, with but few exceptions. Public school funds were reduced to an almost inconceivably low level; so that today, the average salary paid public school teachers in the State of North Carolina is around $70.00 a month for only eight months in the year. The State requires of those who teach, thorough training in State colleges or privately endowed institutions, and a certain amount of experience in successful teaching before they are eligible for a teaching position. The salary scale runs from $45.00 to $90.00 a month. The teacher has to pay board, room rent, and other living expenses out of this amount. This drastic reduction in teachers' salaries is justified by the public debt of the State. It would seem that the public school teacher is compelled to pay more than his share of the State's debt.

Yesterday, Friday, the superintendent of a high school in North Carolina came into my office and announced that he was looking for unemployed teachers. I remarked that, perhaps, he could find them, but that he could more easily find underpaid teachers. I asked what he paid, and he replied, "Fifteen dollars a week." We had three graduates of Elon College who could fill this position, but they were all three employed in minor industrial positions which pay $25.00 a week for fifty-two weeks. It is hardly conceivable that either of these would resign his present position for the privilege of teaching for the State on the salary mentioned by the superintendent.

There seems to be a bit of confusion and considerable uncertainty among the ranks of public school teachers today. It would be strange if there were not. A number of our best teachers are leaving the profession and going into business and other professions, but it seems that a larger percentage of those who had planned to teach have changed their plans and are not now preparing for the profession. The graduates of high school invariably tell you there is no need to prepare to teach as there will be no position open when they are ready, and if a position were open, the salary offered would be no inducement. The above statements are true, but I hope that no one will allow himself to be unjustly disturbed. Conditions will not always be as they are, and we can feel confident that our best teachers will not leave the profession and that those who have intended to prepare themselves to teach will not turn away from their purpose in life. We are not yet ready to destroy our public school system directly or indirectly. And we serve notice upon the enemies of the public school that this institution is here to stay; that we expect the facilities for the training of our children not only to be maintained, but to be increased and to be made more efficient. We know that education means culture, development, and efficiency along all lines. Our forefathers "set their hands to the plow," and we, in this enlightened day, will not turn back.

This seems to me to be a time when everyone interested in the development and forward steps of the nation should stand firm. It may, and it will, require a bit of sacrifice now, but the years to come will repay a thousand times over again. Elon College exists for the purpose of training young men and young women in the higher brackets of education. Our curriculum is built for the purpose of preparing young men and young women for the professions of life. Our graduates, who prefer, usually find positions to teach, and they have made good. We intend to stay in the business, and I appeal to the young people of our denomination and of the country at large not to turn aside and sacrifice your normal years for preparation to purely commercial interests. Aside from what you may be able to do as a college graduate, there is a contentment and a satisfaction derived from such privileges that cannot be had in any other way.

Our doors are open, and we are anxious to cooperate in every way possible with the ambitious youth of the country.

ROANOKE, ALABAMA.

At a recent church conference members of the First Christian Church unanimously elected W. Millard Stevens, local Roanoke boy, as pastor for the next year.

Though only a ministerial student at Southern Union College, Mr. Stevens is already a forceful speaker and his interest in his chosen work augurs well for his success.

Mr. Stevens succeeds Rev. A. R. Van Cleave, who went recently to Winchester, as pastor. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Stevens, this city, and the grandson of Mr. J. W. Payne, who is so well known throughout this State and those of the other Christian Conferences for his noble character and his interest in everything that pertains to Christian development.

Our church somehow rejoices that since we have had the privilege of having as pastor for several years the oldest minister in the Alabama Conference, Rev. G. D. Hunt, who is honored and loved by all, we can now look to the youngest minister in the Conference for spiritual guidance and leadership.

The most inexcusable failure is the failure to learn from one's mistakes.

A CHRISTIAN DEFINITION OF GOD.

By H. H. SMITH.

In his "Outline of Christian Theology," Dr. Newton Clarke gives a definition of God that is interesting and illuminative. With the revelation of God that Jesus Christ has brought us, this theologian ventures to give a Christian definition of God as follows: "God is the personal spirit, perfectly good, who in holy love, creates, sustains, and orders all." In his amplification of the definition the author reminds us that the first words tell us of the nature of God—God is the personal spirit. This means much more than that God is immaterial—the opposite of matter. He is a Being who thinks and feels and wills, for these are the essential attributes of a personal spirit. As spirit implies personality, the word "personal" may appear to be superfluous, but it is used here for emphasis. Man is a personal spirit, that is he possesses self-consciousness and self-direction, but derives his personality from God who is the personal spirit.

This part of the definition of God should have special interest for us. It shows how man is able to commune with God, and how God may manifest himself to man. "Come and let us reason together, saith the Lord," would be words without meaning if man were not endowed with personality, the power to think and feel and will. With this likeness to God man is able to interpret the works of God. The great astronomer, surveying the heavens, declared that he was thinking God's thoughts after him. God and man are alike in this respect, they are essentially spirit, and the result is a glorious truth—"Spirit with spirit can meet."

"Speak to him thou for he hears,
And Spirit with spirit can meet—
Closer is he than breathing,
And nearer than hands or feet."

The next words of the definition describe the character of God—He is "perfectly good." Good here means moral excellence, "unmixed with evil, unweakened by defect, unsurpassable in degree." Christ has revealed God as a being worthy of our fullest love and utmost confidence. Our faith in the infinite goodness of God must never be shaken by the inexplicable evil of the world—or anything else. While it is true we face mystery that can never be explained in this life, much of the evil in the world has been caused by man's disobedience to God's laws. It is not God's will but man's self-will that has brought so much sorrow and suffering into the world. God's goodness is shown in his efforts to redeem man from sin, which, after all, has been the most prolific cause of man's sufferings. With the assurance that the God and Father revealed by Jesus Christ is "perfectly good," we can trust him in every issue of life and believe that the "Judge of all the earth will do right."

The next part of the definition tells us of God's relation to other existence: "He creates, sustains, and orders all." Back of the universe is God the Creator. It came into existence by and through him. He not only brought it into existence, but also upholds and sustains it by his mighty power. "The marvel of the universe is force, by means of which it is sustained and held together. Force is from God." He is also governing and directing the universe to an end, and his character is the guarantee that the end is both noble and worthy. The three statements given above, that God creates, sustains, and orders all—the author reminds us—is parallel in meaning to Paul's three-fold saying: "Of him, and through him, and unto him are all things." (Rom. 11:36.)

If we are sometimes tempted to despondency because the work of God seems to languish, let us recall the dark days of the church during the past, and remember that God who "creates, sustains and orders all," guided the church through those dark periods and is with us today. We share the faith of the great Christian poet and truly believe that there is "one far-off divine event, to which the whole creation moves." God is surely and steadily moving the world toward that end, and it is for us to see that we cooperate with him to the fullest extent.

Lastly, we have the motive of God in his relation to other existence: it is "in holy love" that he creates, sustains, and orders all. By "holy love" is meant that "His love is always in complete harmony with that perfect goodness of character which is eternally his guiding principle. Love desires to impart the good, and holiness holds immovably to the right thought as to what the good is, and how it shall be imparted. Holy love is the combination of perfect goodness and immeasurable self-giving."

Sometimes the love of God is so emphasized as to overshadow the holiness of God, and when that is done the true character of God is misrepresented. God can and will forgive sin, but he cannot excuse or condone it. The Cross reveals the love of God, but more—the holy love of God. Because of its importance this truth of God's holiness was emphasized in the early days of the Jewish race, when God declared unto Moses his true character and gracious, long-suffering and abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin, and that will by no means clear the guilty." Because God's love is holy love he must take account of sin.

This brief definition of God may not be satisfactory to all, but it brings many comforting and suggestive thoughts that are in line with the teachings of Christ concerning God. Come what may, we should stand steadfast and unmovable, for the God and Father revealed to us by Jesus Christ is One who is "perfectly good," and "in holy love creates, sustains, and orders all." Glory be unto his name!

"How do you explain it?" asked one who heard an old saint tell of a wonderful answer to prayer. "I don't," she answered. "I just took the Lord at his word, and he took me at mine."—Christian Herald.

PRAYER.

Our God and Father, thou knowest when love and labor are directed wholly to thee. We thank thee that Christian effort never is lost; that, notwithstanding the peril and power of organized wicked propaganda, sometimes we can see the unfolding of thy purposes even as we ask. Give to the church spirit and strength valiantly to fight for those measures which most surely bespeak thy kingdom's reign and show us where and how to serve thee best. For Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

WE DO OUR PART.

It is quite easy to repeat and glibly pass on to others a slogan. "We Do Our Part." Millions of shops, stations, stores, have the words printed or posted so that even those who run may read.

When have we done our part? How can we do our part? The slogan covers a wide area of life. It signifies that we are measuring up; that as citizens we are meeting the demands of the situation. Great and good indeed for citizens to do.

Suppose every church and every church member were to adopt, not the sign or symbol, but the fact itself and make that fact central and vital. "We Do Our Part." If the churches were doing their part, would the hungry of heart and perishing of soul be crying aloud today for help and relief? The church is not a benevolent society or a fraternal order, great and good as some of them are. It is more than these. The church is a brotherhood of believers, seeking, under the leadership of our Lord, to feed hungry hearts, to save perishing souls, to supply moral demands, to meet spiritual necessities. It is that or it is nothing. It is a spiritual body, created, and carried on, in the name of our Lord, who, according to the inspired writer, is its Body and its Head. It was founded on the rock of the heavenly revelation. "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." To make known this revelation to men and women everywhere was that for which our Lord founded and is building his church.

"We Do Our Part." That is the slogan we are adopting as citizens for economic recovery. Shall we, as professed followers of our Lord, and a part of his church, adopt a slogan for moral and spiritual recovery? Are we doing our part? Is the church doing its part? Will the church do its part? It is, indeed, a vital question. If we do our part, why are we paralyzing the work of preaching the gospel and soul-saving in our missionary efforts at home and abroad? Why are preachers of the gospel on the home and foreign field being told to stop, being forced to quit their work? Why are mission stations closing up, missionaries being called home, the voice of the gospel being stopped and silenced in so many places? Are we, as Christians, doing our part while our mission work lags for lack of support, and the cry of needy souls is heard in the land?

ROSEMONT SOCIETY MEETS.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Rosemont Christian Church held a most helpful and enthusiastic meeting on the afternoon of Wednesday, September 20th.

The Society went over the top in its financial program, having raised its entire financial apportionment.

The following officers were elected for the new year: President, Mrs. O. S. Mills; vice-president, Mrs. H. R. Morrison; secretary, Mrs. A. E. Lewis; treasurer, Mrs. G. R. Odell; pianist, Mrs. J. P. White; superintendent of Spiritual Life, Mrs. H. C. Heddy; superintendent of Cradle Roll, Mrs. A. S. Morrison; superintendent of Willing Workers, Miss Mary Halstead; superintendent of Mite Boxes, Mrs. B. F. Gibson; press reporter, Mrs. H. L. Bondurant.

The Society has had a wonderful year, and every member was very happy as the final reports for the year showed the excellent work that had been done.

MRS. H. L. BONDURANT, Reporter.

NOTICE.

The Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference will meet with the Cypress Chapel Christian Church, Friday, October 27th. The morning session opens at 10:30 o'clock.

All ministers of the Conference are requested to be present, and each society is urged to send a large delegation. Let each member ask himself or herself this question: "Shall the Line Break Where I Stand?" and then make every possible effort to meet the Conference requirements.

The program will appear later.

MRS. L. W. STAGG, Sec'y.

"TWENTY MILLION PEOPLE CAN'T BE WRONG!"

That's a mistaken slogan—they CAN. And often ARE!

This familiar war-cry adopted by a popular advertising agency is a wise and effective aid in the sale of goods. It uses the testimony of the crowd to prove a point. "Twenty million people can't be wrong."

But history proves that the crowd often has been wrong; and God's minority has been right.

"Majority rule" is the slogan of democracy, and we are in favor of it; but majority rule is not infallible. It has made some grievous errors.

Of America's 122,000,000 population more than sixty per cent profess no religious affiliation—Protestant, Catholic or Hebrew. Is God's minority wrong?

Of the world's more than a billion and a half population, not a third are even nominally Christian. Is God's minority in the wrong?

In the United States thirty million children and youth are growing up without a definite, systematic training in religion, and constitute the greatest peril in our national life. Is it possible that the thirty million can't be wrong?

Abraham combed Sodom's population and could not find ten righteous. The cities of the plain drenched with fire and brimstone are everlasting testimonies that the "Twenty Million" can be wrong.

The opinion of the "Twenty Million" is not always the truthful yardstick. The bulk mind is often incompetent and fickle. One minute it applauds Brutus as he says of Caesar, "Because he was ambitious I slew him." Next it huzzas for Anthony as he says, "Thrice did he refuse a kingly crown—was this ambition?"

The "Twenty Million" gave a beaker of poison to Socrates, lighted the pile of fagots that roasted Savonarola, imprisoned Galileo, discouraged Columbus, and hee-hawed at the Wright brothers.

The "Twenty Million" stoned Paul, ostracized William Booth from the elite of the church, snickered when Franklin claimed to drag lightning from the clouds, and voted for the return of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes in the Dominion of Canada.

The "Twenty Million" led Joan of Arc to a martyr's death, crucified the Lord Jesus Christ, engaged in the villianies of the French Revolution, and time and time again has voted to seat corruption and graft in our legislative halls.

The "Twenty Million" can be wrong!
And we are only for them when they are right.

A Story for the Children

THE BIRDS' GARDEN.

When the children moved from the city to the country they found it very exciting to have a yard to play in. A yard that ran all the way around the big white house in which they were going to live.

"We must make a garden!" they cried, all together. "We must make a garden!"

And so they got spades and shovels and rakes and hoes and a wheelbarrow with red wheels and a watering can that was painted green and blue. And they went out together into the garden to plant things. For—I almost forgot to tell you this—they had seeds, too, in envelopes that were printed with very gay pictures.

And as they skipped along (all except the smallest of the children, who hadn't learned to skip, yet), the birds came out of the trees and followed them. And some of the birds sang funny little glad-songs.

And after the children had raked the ground and hoed the ground and shoveled the ground and watered the ground with the blue-and-green watering can, they planted the seeds in neat rows that they had made with their hoes and shovels. And then they covered the seeds with soil that they raked with their rakes. And all the time the birds circled around their heads and sang glad-songs. And their songs were ever so loud.

And that night when the children were going to bed in the nursery, just before it was prayer time (but after it was bath time—after the gardening dirt had been washed away!), the oldest of the children, whom they called Precious, asked Mother-dear a question.

"Why," this was the question, "why do the birds sing glad-songs all the time that we are planting seeds?"

And Mother-dear laughed, and Father-dear—who was also in the nursery—laughed too. And he laughed almost harder than Mother-dear had laughed.

And he answered:

"I guess, he said, "that the birds were very happy because you were making a garden for them!"

And all the children spoke at once: "But we weren't making a garden for them," they chorused, "we were making it for us."

And Mother-dear looked ever so seriously at Father-dear. And—

"Your daddy meant," she said, "that the birds were happy to know that they could see your flowers later on. That's what your daddy meant."

And Father-dear murmured something and turned away and his shoulders shook. And Precious, who was the oldest of the children, thought that she heard the words he spoke. These were the words:

"A good many bird-tummies will be full of flower seeds this night!" was what Father-dear said.

But Precious never told the other children. She never did! —The Christian Herald.

PEACEMAKERS.

Little Alice was a peacemaker. One day her sister Lettie came running into the room where she sat learning her Bible verse. She brought a fat puppy with her. Alice said, "Lettie, I am afraid mamma would not like him here, he is so mischievous." "Oh, I will watch him," Lettie said.

"Have you learned your verse?" asked Alice. "No, where is my Bible?" The child could not find it. "Here is Tom's, that will do," she said.

"O Lettie, don't use it, Tom would be so angry if anything happened to it," said Alice.

But Lettie did not care and began to study her verse.

Presently Alice was called away by her mother and Lettie dropped the Bible and went to get some bread for the puppy.

When the girls came back there was Prince with Tom's beautiful new Bible all torn and scratched and spoiled.

When Tom, a lad of fifteen, came in and saw it, he said, "I'll never forgive you, Lettie, as long as you live."

Poor Lettie sobbed and Alice tried to comfort her, but the child went to bed and cried herself to sleep.

The next day Tom would not speak to Lettie and it was Sunday. Alice kept thinking of the text, "Blessed are the peacemakers."

Towards night she went up and knocked timidly at Tom's door. No answer. "Tom," "Who's there," growled the boy. "It's only I," the little girl said, wishing she had not come up after all. "Come in," the boy replied.

"Tom, come down. It's too cold here." No answer.

"O Tom," she cried, with tears in her eyes, "I do wish you would forgive Lettie, she is sorry."

"What does it matter to you? Suppose it was your Bible. Forgive her, indeed, I'll never forgive her."

"O Tom," she said, sobbing, and stopped. "Well—what?" "Didn't you say, 'Our Father,' in church?" "Well, what if I did?" "Didn't you ask God to forgive you as you forgive those who trespassed against you, and, Tom dear, would you like him to?"

A long time the child stood by her brother and waited. At last looking into his sister's tearful face he threw his arms around her and said, "All right, Alice, I'll go down."

He walked bravely up to Lettie and kissing her said, huskily, "I was horrible cross, won't you forgive me?" The child burst into tears and cried out, "Oh, I am so sorry about the puppy destroying your Bible." "Blessed are the peacemakers," has a new meaning for her now.—Exchange.

The Wrong Way to National Stability.

On July 29th the Campaign Director of the Wets issued a statement to the press in which he stated that the Drys are a group of individuals "banded together to hinder and impede the advancement of national stability in the name of prohibition." Immediately the United Dry Forces issued a statement to the press challenging the Wets to explain to the people of North Carolina how the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment and the legalizing of the liquor traffic will contribute to the "advancement of national stability." The Wets have not met the foregoing challenge.

There is no way they can meet it. The liquor business, no matter what guise it wears, is destructive to the prosperity of every business that is beneficial to mankind. This fact was recently recognized in a very striking way by one of the oldest and largest advertising agencies in the world.

Reference is here made to the N. W. Ayer & Son advertising headquarters, Philadelphia. These people prepare advertising and plan advertising campaigns for manufacturing and business houses just as a lawyer prepares cases for his clients in court or an architect makes plans for his building customers. A valued client whom the company had been serving ten years decided to engage in the manufacture and sale of beer and whiskey after the repeal. The Ayers at once cancelled their agreement with this client. "Many decades ago," said the president, "my firm adopted the policy of not advertising alcohol." The return of liquor, in the opinion of the firm's executive head, "will divert an important share of America's mass purchasing power from essential commodities"—a diversion that "may run as high as twenty per cent."

This is the natural course for an honorable firm to follow. To have acted otherwise would have placed the Ayers in the unethical position of accepting pay from one client to build up a beneficial business, while at the same time taking pay from another client to tear it down.

When the issue is one of liquor traffic or no liquor traffic, there is but one way for a good citizen and a good business man to vote, if he wishes a return to national stability—and that is against the liquor traffic.

PILOT MOUNTAIN.

In the twilight I stroll out on the grounds of New Lebanon Christian Church in Rockingham County, N. C., to listen to the voices of the eventide, to gaze into the heavens as the first stars appear, and to wait for the friendship of him who walks with his friends in the garden in the cool of the day (Gen. 3:8). This is sacred ground. Well do I remember the ministry of Rev. L. I. Cox who organized this church and served so faithfully for nineteen years. I was a boy then, but I went with others about these grounds to talk with those who were not Christian. On these grounds and in this church we have knelt in prayer until God came down to talk with us and to bring into his kingdom those whom we loved. Here I have seen visions of what life could mean to those who love the Lord, and from here I have gone to tell others of the love of God in Christ Jesus. Now, I come alone to renew the old fervor and to dream a new dream.

It is a beautiful, quiet evening, the last day of summer. The sun has just gone beyond the horizon and is lighting up the cloudless sky with rays of red, old-rose and orange. That great orb of the day seems to be shielding itself behind a towering mountain in the Blue Ridge. And what a mountain! There it stands almost alone, directly between me and the sun, with its round dome reaching far up into the sky. They call it "Pilot Mountain." I have seen it many times before, but never like now. It is so clear in outline, so comfortably close, although sixty miles away, and so towering in its majestic strength that it seems to be a new vision.

When the Indians made their homes among the hills before the white man came they used this mountain to pilot them in their travels. Whatever race of men made their homes here before the Indians came probably also called this their "Pilot Mountain." For how many centuries this round peak has pointed men to the sky I do not know. As a mountain it is young, but measured by human life it is old. But there it stands through the centuries through sunshine and shadow pointing steadily to the sky and guiding men on their earthly way. Thank God for land-marks that do not change in a day! Thank God for truth that is as old as the hills—truth like this mountain tells, "Up is the way to climb."

The ways of the world lead one through the valleys of sorrow and of shadow until it is easy to forget the summits of light. I sit here in the deepening dusk and wish that my soul, and the souls of those whom I love, may be robed in righteousness and bathed in beauty like yonder Pilot Mountain is enfolded in the orange light of a setting sun, and the wish is a prayer, a prayer to the God who made the mountains and reflects his own beauty on earth through the sun by day and the stars by night. He is my Pilot. He is the Guide whom we can follow and always be right.

Among all the heroes and great men of earth there is one who stands out above all others. There is no man like the Master. His face always reflects beauty and his hand always points upward. So long as we can behold him the path we travel will be safe; we can find the way that leads home. Through all the centuries he has stood, and will stand, pointing men to the sky where there is beauty, love, comfort, and comradeship. Young people do well to seek out those quiet places where they can find the Master and hear his message. It will take time, but in those moments life will become rich and beautiful. In fact, it is then that we learn to live, for life is hid with Christ in God.

NOTICE TO EASTERN VIRGINIA YOUNG PEOPLE.

The annual Rally of the western district of the Eastern Virginia Youth Fellowship will be held in Suffolk Christian Church on Friday evening, September 29th, at 8 o'clock. Plans for the year will be presented. Rev. John G. Truitt, the new pastor of the Suffolk Church, will speak. All young people in the western district, which includes all churches west of Portsmouth, should attend this Rally. Not to do so will mean a real loss to you. Please remember the time and place, and be present.

THE BROTHERHOOD OF CONSECRATED LIVES.

In "The Philosophy of Elbert Hubbard" there is a story of an artist, his wife and daughter, who live in Denmark. They paint pictures, carve in wood, read George Brandes, and live in the Brotherhood of Consecrated Lives. The books of Brandes are kept in a little home-made cabinet before which is an ever-burning Roman lamp. Each morning before breakfast they read from the books and trim and refill the lamp. The writer says they worship at the altar of Love and Beauty, and then discusses the Brotherhood of Consecrated Lives. This is among the best parts of the entire book, and I quote some of the paragraphs to share with you the things I liked:

"Beauty is an Unseen Reality—an attempt to reveal a spiritual condition.

"To join this Brotherhood of Consecrated Lives requires no particular rites of initiation—no ceremonial—no recommendations. You belong when you are worthy. But do not for a moment imagine you have solved the difficulty when you have once entered. To pride yourself on your entrance is to run the danger of finding yourself outside the pale with password hopelessly forgotten.

"You know you belong to the Brotherhood when you feel the absolute nothingness of this world of society, churches, fashion, politics and business; and realize strongly the consciousness of the Unseen World of Truth, Love and Beauty. The first emotion on coming into the Brotherhood is one of loneliness and isolation. You pray for comradeship, and empty arms reach out into the darkness. But gradually you awaken to the thought that you are one of many who hope and pray alike; and that slowly this oneness of thought and feeling is making its impress felt.

Then occasionally you meet one of your own. This one may be socially high or low, rich or poor, young or old, man or woman—but you recognize each other on sight and hold sweet converse. Then you part, never to meet again, but you are each better, stronger, nobler for the meeting. Consecrated Lives! You meet and you part, but you each feel a firmer impulse to keep the light burning—the altar light to Truth, Simplicity and Beauty. No other bond is required than of devotion to Truth, the passion of listening in the Silence, the prayer for Wholeness and Harmony, the earnest desire to have your life reflect the Good.

"If your life is to be a genuine consecration, you must be free. Only the free man is truthful; only the heart that is free is pure. How many compose this Brotherhood—who shall say? There are no braggart statisticians; no paid proselytes with their noisy boastings. Two constitute a congregation, and where they commune is a temple. Many belong who do not know it; others there be who think they belong, and are so sure of it that they do not.

"But the Brotherhood is extending its lines; and what think you the earth will be like when the majority of men and women in it learn that to be simple and honest and true is the part of wisdom, and that to work for Love and Beauty is the highest good?"

TOMORROW I MOVE.

For six years the address of the editor of this page has been Waverly, Virginia. But tomorrow I move. Waverly has been my happy home. Good people invited me to serve them as their minister. And they ministered to my needs, and shared in the work of God's kingdom. I have been with them in the house of prayer, in the home of sorrow, and in the places of play. Our lives have mingled one with the other until they are so entwined that it is very difficult to separate them. But tomorrow I move.

During these years the church built an educational plant, put in lights and heat, and made several improvements in the church plant that cost about seventeen thousand dollars. They now owe less than seventeen hundred dollars. The educational plant is as good as will be found in our Southern churches. It was built to meet the needs of the community in which it is located, and it has done so. A fine corps of teachers meet with eager youth, active children, and sensible adults every Sunday. In this church people are being taught the ways of the Lord. I have been glad to have a share in this work, in the planning, in the building, and in the teaching. But tomorrow I move, and others will carry on where I have left off.

Centerville and Spring Hill share in this pastorate and help to make the minister happy who serves these good people. Some of the saints of God are to be found in the membership of these three churches. They have added more to my life than I have to theirs. Any man may count himself fortunate who may have the honor of serving them. I sincerely hope that the one who follows me will do far better than I in the serving. But I gave my best, and gave it freely, for the people are worthy.

But the time always comes when the minister moves. He gets a new home in this world or another. He makes new friends and takes a new start. Out of the loves and friendships of the past he is able to build a new life. Of course he does not forget the friends he has left. They are near to him and dear to him, and the churches he has served are always his churches for he has put years of his life into them. I can crave for my young friends who read this no greater blessing than that some day they may treasure in their hearts the joyous recollections of people to whom they have ministered as a servant of the Lord.

When you write to me now, please send it to 505 South Main Street, Norfolk, Va. It will be a pleasure to hear from you, and to aid you in every possible way with the work which you are doing in your church. The office of the Board of Christian Education goes with me to the above address. Don't forget. I move tomorrow. October will find me at work in the First Christian Church, Norfolk, Va. I should like to feel that you who read will now breathe a prayer for me as I undertake a new work. I need wisdom, courage, faith, and love. Your prayers will help.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

SAUL IN TARSUS.

LESSON I.—OCTOBER 1, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Today if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts."—Heb. 3:7, 8.

LESSON TEXT: Acts 21:39; 22:3, 27, 28; 26:4-7.

Next to Jesus, Christianity owes most to Saul of Tarsus, better known as Paul. He was a man sent from God in every sense of the word. His native ability and natural endowments, his education and training, his spiritual nature and experience peculiarly fitted for him his great career, and enabled him to fulfill his great mission. His sheer intellectual ability, his tremendous moral and spiritual passion, his boundless energy, his intense loyalty, his consummate wisdom, his cosmopolitan spirit, his indomitable courage, his uncalculating spirit of self-sacrifice, his reckless abandon, his abundant possession of the spirit of Christ have made him an example that is at once the despair and inspiration of thousands of Christian believers. He was undoubtedly one of the most dynamic figures who ever moved across the pages of history, and in a very real sense he changed the history of nations and of civilizations.

It is impossible to estimate his contribution to Christianity. He found it a narrow sect, without literature and without organization, without doctrinal formulation, and with exceedingly few influential adherents. He left it a world-wide religion, with a literature that is still a masterpiece, well organized and established in all the important centers of the then known world, with doctrines clearly formulated, and claiming as its adherents some outstanding men and women, and numbering thousands of adherents. It hardly seems possible that one man could accomplish so much against handicaps in such a comparatively short space of time. The more one knows of the conditions under which Paul worked, and when one realizes just what he accomplished, the greatness of the man increasingly looms up. Here indeed is one of the great men and the great souls of the all time.

The first lesson in this series of lessons on the life of Paul is concerned with the background of his life and work. It must of necessity be historical in nature, but it will be valuable nevertheless for the man is intelligible only in the light of the background of his early history and training.

Paul's Birth and Childhood.

Paul was born in Tarsus, "no mean city," as he proudly said, the capital of Cilicia in Asia Minor, a commercial city of importance, and the seat of a great university. It was a kind of meeting point between Eastern and Western civilization, and combined in its atmosphere and life Greek culture and Roman law, with Eastern or Oriental factors. This cultural background, and this cosmopolitan spirit undoubtedly influenced Paul's early life, and prepared him for the world-wide view of the gospel which he later held.

We know but little about his family. We know that he was a Jew, of the tribe of Benjamin, a Pharisee, and a Roman citizen. We know nothing of his father or mother, but it is quite likely that they were Jews of the better class and perhaps well-to-do. Paul never directly refers to them in his writings. We know that he had at least one sister (Acts 23:16). His Father was undoubtedly a Roman citizen.

Education.

Paul undoubtedly received careful training in the home at the hand of his mother. It was here that he probably laid the foundation of the wide and exact knowledge of the Scriptures which was such a factor in his work. He learned a trade as a tent-maker and he followed this trade even while on his missionary journeys, thus making himself independent of others.

We are not sure as to how much of his training Paul received in Tarsus. Acts 22:5 states in Paul's own words that he was "brought up in this city (Jerusalem) at the feet of Gamaliel." He may have been brought to Jerusalem when only a boy. In either event he had the privilege of studying under Gamaliel, the grandson of the still greater Hillel, an outstanding scholar, and a man of liberal spirit in spite of the fact that he was a strict Pharisee. We may be sure that Paul had the advantage of the best Jewish home-training, which meant careful and painstaking religious training. Paul's letters show that he was a brilliant Greek scholar, as well as a careful logician. He was also a gifted orator as extracts of his sermons and addresses show. As has been stated the fact that he had lived in Tarsus and the fact that he was a Roman citizen gave him that imperial and cosmopolitan spirit that made him think in world terms. He was exceedingly zealous in behalf of religion, so zealous that he was made the special agent of the Sanhedrin (he may have been a member of that body) to stamp out the "new" religion.

Conversion.

Heredity, environment, education—these three factors prepared Paul in a unique way for his great career as a Jew. But the thing that made Paul the world's outstanding Christian was his conversion which led him to bring all these factors in glad submission to Jesus Christ, whose servant he forever after became. The story of that conversion will be recounted in a later lesson. It is mentioned here simply to emphasize the fact that the turning point in Paul's life, and the explanation of all that he did is to be found in the experience on the road to Damascus when he met the risen Lord and yielded his life to him. He saw a vision, he heard a voice, and forever thereafter he had his vocation. In summing up his life later he says simply that the secret of it all was that he had not been disobedient to the heavenly vision. And he is a strange Christian indeed who can read the life of this man and not feel his faith kindled anew, his courage fired, his devotion quickened, his life undergirded with new power and new love.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

"O Lord, I beseech thee, let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of thy servant, and to the prayer of thy servants, who desire to fear thy name, and prosper, I pray thee, thy servant this day."

MONDAY.

GIFTS OF GOD.

"Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, coming down from the Father of light."—James 1:17.

The Moffatt translation says, "all we are given is good, and all our endowments are faultless." Another interpreter says, "every boon we receive is good."

There is no question that in God's grace, daily bread, the rest of the night, conditions of well being, wholesome enjoyments, inspiration of the beautiful, the love of folks, all are from God the giver of every good gift.

Neither is there any doubt that "man does not live by bread alone." There are spiritual graces which illumine our minds, sanctify our hearts, cleanse us of sins, sweeten our dispositions, instil in us hope, confirm heavenly assurances, quicken conscience, give joy in prayer, give power against temptation, and bestow a faith which overcomes the world; all these develop from God's spirit in the soul. How can any one not want these blessings? They are gifts of God ready to be bestowed for the coming and asking.

Prayer—Dear Lord, give unto our souls and our lives Jesus, the greatest gift of life. In him are all things. Give us Jesus. O, Jesus, we take thee this day.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

ANOTHER LIST.

Read Psalm 103.

Forgiveness, soul healing, redemption, consecration, satisfaction, perpetual youth, justice, revelation, mercy, tenderness, pity—how many other fine gifts of God can you count in this Psalm? Try and see.

Prayer—O Lord, we know that thou dost give only good gifts, but the greatest gift we want this day is that good gift of thy nature in all things of our doing, something that is like thee, and then we pray for the spirit never to abuse any of thy gifts, or in any sense forget thee and be ungrateful. This we ask for Jesus sake.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE DUTY OF HAVING FAITH.

"Jesus was the true light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world."—John 1:9.

This text is a testimony that Jesus was the real light which enlightens every man, and it was by this light that the right of being children of God was conferred upon all who would accept him. The conferment of this happy relationship makes our birth to God.

If it can be shown, yes, if it can be realized without being shown that we are heirs to the righteous life through Christ, and if it is true that the teachings of Jesus is the best faith and the road to success (as he counts success) and happiness, then, it is just a manly duty to accept these facts as it is for us to pay our just debts, or to be honest, or obey the dictates of conscience.

Prayer—Our Father, we bow down and pray to thank thee for thy provisions for our souls both in this world and in that to come. We pray thee to forgive us of our sins and baptize us with the spirit of thy kingdom now and always. In Jesus' name we ask it.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE CHRISTIAN PATTERN.

"Created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God afore prepared that we should walk in them."—Eph. 2:10.

No metal can be molded without first the pattern and then the imprint of that pattern set in sand. This is called the mould. That pattern is designed according to the purpose to which it is to be put and according to the conception of the master designer.

Christian character fits all phases and conditions of life. God's purpose for the world, which has hovered in his mind from the beginning, has been to make man like him, and the world like heaven. The heavenly world is still awaiting the godlike man.

In creating us God has fitted us with dispositions, aptitude, emotions, ideals, powers of conception, etc., to perceive the way which he has laid out for us that we may walk in it. He who walks in it obediently finds no experience that is unknown to him, and therefore no detail which he cannot well refer to him. If we are consecrated enough, there is nothing that God does not turn to good account. Dr. Atkinson said recently, "God is not making something for man, he is making something with man." This is what Paul calls "The measure of the fullness of Christ."

On the other hand we believe that God keeps no set moulds into which character must run. The way of some is a rose-strewn pathway, others the far-flung mountain slopes, others in morass and torrents, and others along a rocky road. Whatever our way, it matters little, if only we tread the ordained path of God. In none of them doth it appear what we shall be, but we know that when we shall appear we shall be like him. Thus, whatever our way, we may turn it to his account. Quoting from H. Champness, "When Joseph was in jail, he was in the path of Providence, and the fetters of iron were as much a part of the plan as the chain of gold he wore in the summit of his greatness.

Prayer—Say the Lord's prayer and continue thy soul's expression.

FRIDAY.

WE WHO HAVE WORK.

"No man hath hired us."—Read Matt. 20:1-16.

A man not far from where the writer lives had, not long ago, a good job at which he worked steadily, and a good home. The other day, sixty years old, homeless and penniless, he applied to a police judge and asked to be sent to the House of Correction, that he might live through the winter, as he had found it impossible to get work. The judge complied with his request, sending him there as a vagrant. That is what our civilization does for the willing workers.

No one realizes the blessings of work until he has lost his job and does not know where to find another. That is the spectre before millions of men and women in all lands today, as the result of the World War.

This is a time to give jobs to workers, all the jobs one can pay for. This is the time for those who are prosperous to share their prosperity; to cooperate with those who have in hand the national aspects of the great problem. All can do something; and when all do what they can, the need will be met.

Prayer—Thou who art the Son of the ever-working Father, what honest task fails of thy cooperation? Work thou in us and through us, we pray thee, that honorable and well-paid work may be plentiful in this thy world.—Amen.

BETTER MEDICINES.

"Heal me, O Lord, and I shall be healed."—Read Jeremiah 17:12-18.

A distinguished physician professor of surgery in the University of Minnesota, has said that medicine has before it as great triumphs as those of the past. In the art of healing science has many wonders yet in store for the human body. The inventor of a more powerful microscope, that will enable us to see germs now invisible, would lead in the conquest of some of the most dreaded diseases. Chemistry has much to do for us by the product of synthetic medicines of unsuspected powers. The plant and animal world hide many aids to health.

As we put ourselves in harmony with God and his laws, secret after secret will be disclosed to us. His mercy is everlasting, and the fulness of it will dawn upon us as soon as we are ready for it.

Prayer—Our Father, we will await thy will, and try to become like thee. Strengthen us. Purify us. Make us ready for thy grace. We ask it in the name of thy Son.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

LABELS THAT BELONG.

"Speak ye every man the truth with his neighbor, execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates."—Read Zechariah 8:14-17.

Once in France there was a bookseller who played a practical joke upon his customers by changing the "jackets" of the books for sale. A giddy novel was made to proclaim that it was written to please serious and thoughtful readers. A work on the "Psychology of Immortality" declared that it would make any reader almost die of laughter. And so the fantastic exchange proceeded.

As we look around among men and women we often note a very similar misplacing of titles. A genuinely kind heart wears a crabbed exterior. A presence of religious faith hides an eating cancer of doubt. Carelessness cloaks genuine earnestness.

We need to read the book. We must not depend upon the wrapper.

Prayer—Our Father, give us the sure insight of thy Holy Spirit. May we deal with our brothers and sisters as they are and not as they appear to be. May we not be deceived by appearances, nor deceive others.—Amen.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

CROWN HIM WITH MANY CROWNS.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"Thou art my king, O God."—Psa. 44:4.

It is a glorious thing to come into this house today, to feel here that Christ Jesus reigneth. It is a glorious thing to have a retreat like this where there is an altar of prayer and praise—a place where God can be found and worshipped. It is a glorious thing to feel the communion of the spirit of Christ with our spirits, and to know that we shall go from this house with our spiritual faces aglow with the light of love. It is a beautiful thing to crown Christ Jesus king in our hearts and lives.

1. He is a King. And how our confidence in the blessed old Book mounts when we know that it expected him to come a king, and that it had long before he came announced His coming as a King. In the prophecies of Daniel: "One like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him; his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." The prophet Micah (5:2) said, "Thou, Bethlehem, Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel; whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting." Zechariah (9:9) foretold his coming as a king: "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem; behold, thy king cometh unto thee; he is just and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass."

The angel Gabriel announced to Mary (Luke 1:31-33): "Thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." The blessed old Book records many other prophecies of his coming into the world as its king, and which, I say, give us confidence in that Book. For our seeing eyes have beheld his glory, "the glory as of the only begotten Son of the Father."

The New Testament has declared him king. In the New Testament we find Christ often speaking of his kingdom, others speaking of his kingdom, and Christ confessing in the court his kingship. But we have more than words of prophets, and priests—yea, even more than the words of the Angel Gabriel; we have the kingly life of the Christ himself!

With what confidence his kingly life inspires us. We can have faith in him even now. We need only look upon his life, and lift our hearts to him to feel his kingship. His life on earth was a battle royal, fit only for the King of kings! He fought with autocrats who held complete sway. Herod supported by the law could slay every baby boy in Israel and get by with it! Herod used a blade of steel; Jesus a sword of love. He fought monarchs whose very names were power to conjure with. An appeal to the name of Cæsar so weakened the will and judgment of the formerly strong Judge Pilate so that he could condemn the world's one innocent man to death! And yet the word of Jesus could forgive sinners. Jesus fought in a world whose women were slaves, and by taking a towel and becoming a servant he set forth the glory of service until womankind has come to fill a queen's place in the halls of humanity.

More still he looked into the faces of men, women and children, and challenged the best within them in such a way as to create an irrepressible kingdom of love. They learned to lay aside old, failing, faltering, sinning lives and live abundantly. Rejoicing at the result he said to them: "The kingdom of God is in you." And they were in the kingdom of God!

None but a king could have gone to the cross as Jesus went. Nor for the reason he went. And none but the King of kings could have overcome the cross as Jesus did. I do not wonder that Thomas fell at his feet and cried: "My Lord, and my God!" I do not wonder one whit at that. I pray God that I may learn to do likewise; None but Jesus, and he a king eternal could have said, and have nineteen centuries to confirm it: "All power hath been given to me in heaven and in earth." It is reassuring in these days to have confidence enough to look through the tangle of the times and see that king standing majestically still in the hearts of boys and girls and men and women!

2. "Thou art my king, O God." It is one thing to know academically that Jesus is king; it is another to know faithfully that he is one's own king. "Thou art my king, O God." "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." External profession of his lordship is not enough to place one inside his kingdom. Doing the will of God is required. It is of little use for me to say: "Thou art my king," and then follow the counsels of the ungodly. It is not enough for me to accede to formal ritualism, and then forget the informal kindness, justice, and righteousness which should characterize my daily living. "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." Jesus cannot be your king. "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."

I have come to believe that the supreme characteristic of little children is love. In every way, and manner of their living I see love. Love that longs to be near; love that trusts completely; love that is perfectly innocent; love that satisfies and feeds the loved with food like that of the angels; love that forgets wrong, and forgives evil; and love that finds peace, and joy, and composure when others are restless and ill at ease. The touch of their little hands; the lips of their little lips; the light of their little faces; and the call of their little hearts convince me of their love. They possess love. They give it, and they receive it.

Now if one desires full citizenship in Christ's kingdom he must be converted, and become as little children. Jesus is saying if your heart is becoming hard, if your center is becoming self, if for faith you are yielding doubt, if for love you are offering hate, if for purity of life you are yielding to evil passions turn round, you are on the wrong road. you are headed from God's kingdom of righteousness and love.

Let me go one step further. It is not enough to seek to fill one's life with a hazy sort of sweet sentimentality. Out of that sort of condition we can never say, "Thou art my king, O God!" Soft sentimentalism will never put justice on the throne, nor bread in the mouths of the hungry, nor give the gospel to the whole wide world—God did not just love, but God so loved the world," there was objectivity to his love. There was a workaday definiteness about it. It turned upon some object like sunshine upon a plant in life-giving goodness. And thus it follows that we cannot crown Christ king in our lives without loving him. Paul sang his most beautiful song of love in his first letter to the Corinthians, but before he closed that self-same letter he said: "If any man love not the Lord Jesus Christ let him be Anathema Maran-atha." If I am to say, "Thou art my king," then thou must have my love, my trust, my faith, O Christ!

Let us crown him with many crowns, the crown of love, mercy, forgiveness, bravery, patience, helpfulness—whatever we admire, whatever we need, full well we know we shall find it in him. In him we shall find the answer for conscience and conduct; in him we shall find norm and standard; and in him we shall find strength and power to live the constructive, kingly lives which we know in our heart of hearts we should live. Let us join with the psalmist in saying, in deed and in truth, "Thou art my king, O God."

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

What is more pitiful than a little helpless child left fatherless and motherless and no one to care for it?

The writer's first experience in work for an orphan happened when he was a small boy. Father had a nice flock of sheep. It was the writer's job among many other duties each morning to feed the sheep. One morning we went to feed the sheep and the mother of a little lamb was dead, and the little fellow was crying for its mother. The mother was cold in death and could not respond to the cry. The other sheep seemed not to care. We took the little fellow in our arms and carried it to the house and mother helped me to teach it to drink milk and it grew to be a large beautiful sheep and was the pet on the farm.

Little children are sometimes left just as helpless and people don't seem to be interested or care. The Orphanage goes to their rescue and often finds a real jewel that becomes a graduate nurse and renders a great service to humanity, or perhaps a teacher to train young minds to develop, or a stenographer to render faithful service to the State.

A few days ago a little squirrel fell from its nest in a tree on my lawn. My little boy, who is a great lover of pets, found it and brought it to the house and his mother has taught it to drink from a little doll bottle and we all get lots of pleasure out of seeing the little fellow take the little bottle in his paws and drink his milk. We get pleasure out of it because we take the time and trouble to care for it and feed it.

Why is it so many are not interested in orphan children? It is because they put themselves to no trouble and make no investment in helpless children. They lose lots of the real joy. The people who are interested in the Orphanage are those who make contributions to help the little fellows. Worldly pleasures are but for a season and will soon pass away and are unsatisfying; but the saving of a little child to society will be a lasting, living joy. Don't you want to have some real, lasting joy?

A CORRECTION.

I know that the church at large and the friends of Elon are anxious for information about our opening. There appeared a note in last week's SUN to the effect that the enrollment had gone past the three hundred mark and that we expected three hundred and fifty, all of which is untrue. The ones responsible for giving out such information will be reprimanded. I only wish that these statements were true, but they are not.

Our opening, however, has been quite satisfactory. We have enrolled to date two hundred and fifty-one students, with some special students to be added. At this date last year, we had two hundred and thirty students enrolled, including special students. This means that we have twenty-one students in excess of last year's enrollment; we will, perhaps, have twelve to fifteen more. This is not what we had hoped to have; but we feel it is quite satisfactory considering conditions at the College and throughout the country. I appreciate the efforts of the friends of the institution in our behalf. If the active membership of our church will cooperate and give its assistance, there is no reason why we should not continue to make gains. We earnestly covet such cooperation.

OUR CHAPLAINS IN THE NAVY.

In all of Uncle Sam's Navy there are about eighty-four chaplains who come from all parts of the United States and every branch of the Protestant and Catholic Churches. Out of this entire number there are two from the Christian Church: Lieutenant-Commander H. E. Rountree and Commander W. W. Elder. Both of these are Southern men, one from Virginia and the other from Alabama. Both are Elon graduates and are at present living as neighbors in San Diego, California.

I do not pretend to really know much about the duties of a chaplain, but thought perhaps a few things I have noticed during the last six months that I have been living with my brother would be of interest to some.

The duties of the chaplain are quite different from those of the minister of the usual field. Each day he has office hours lasting from about 8:30 to 4. He is responsible for the recreation of his unit. Movies are provided several nights each week for the men. Occasional dances are sponsored. Every unit has a library which he supervises. Other forms of recreation are provided by him: games, social contacts with outside people, and varied programs.

The chaplain listens to the men when they are in trouble and need advice. Not only to the men, but their wives bring the family troubles to him and he tries to help in a way so all will be happy. What he hears from them is held in strict confidence and never repeated, but judging from a few remarks it seems he listens in time to every kind of trouble men and women have.

A chaplain, like other Navy people, stays in one place only a few years, then moves to the place Uncle Sam selects.

Chaplain W. W. Elder is stationed at the Naval Hospital, San Diego, Calif., which is Uncle Sam's largest Naval Hospital. More than a thousand sick men can be accommodated in this beautiful institution of nearly a score of buildings. He visits the sick daily, and has charge of funerals and marriages.

On Sundays the recreation hall is cleared of its reading tables, ping-pong tables, pool and card tables, the movie screen is removed and chairs are put in place before a movable pulpit for "Church." The church flag floats outside above the United States flag and all is in readiness. Because only a few sick people can really attend service each bed is equipped with a radio head-phone that is in turn connected with the microphone used by Chaplain Elder. His service then really becomes a broadcast. There are two paid musicians to assist him.

He never knows who is going to hear his sermon—all branches of the Protestant Church may be represented, Catholics, Mohammedans, Philipinos and others. Imagine one sermon to suit these different people—and most of them sick.

One Sunday I was most fortunate in being invited to service on the U. S. S. Whitney, where Chaplain Rountree is stationed. Mrs. Rountree and I went over from the pier on the same motor boat with two ladies who were to assist with the music. We found his place for service away down "deep" in the ship. It looked like a little chapel there but really it was a compartment curtained off with canvass. Above our heads hung the sailors' cots on which they slept, but the fresh flowers on the piano, the good fresh salt air coming through the portholes, through which the calm, blue Pacific could be seen, all lent an air of unusual reverence to the little chapel. Those sailors really sang, too. They requested certain hymns and it was interesting to note the deeply religious ones they chose.

These two Southern ministers are carrying on here in the Navy. They still love their watermelons, their jokes and fun—they are great pals—like to play golf, but when work is to be done, their's is a work with great possibilities and heavy responsibilities, but they are most capable, Our Two Chaplains in the Navy.

SUSIE ELDER.

San Diego, Calif.

It is not necessary to make long prayers, but it is essential to be much alone with God, waiting on his will, hearkening to his voice, lingering in the garden of Scripture for the coming of the Lord God in the dawn or the cool of the day. No number of meetings, no fellowship with Christian friends, no amount of Christian activity, can compensate for the neglect of the still hour.—F. B. Meyer.

PROOF OF LIFE.

A man has no right to call himself a Christian unless the virtues of Christianity are in his life. I do not ask for degree, but I do ask that they be there. If you have a plant in a pot that for ten years, through summer and winter, sunshine and cloud, rain and shine, has never put out a leaf, nor shown the least symptom of life, what reason have you to believe that it is alive at all? It looks uncommonly like a bit of dead stick.—Alexander Maclaren in Exchange.

Man grows inevitably. He is becoming Christ-like. If he bears the image of Christ he will share his glory. If he grows into the world's image, what choice remains but he must at last share the world's fate?—Isaac Edwardson.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING.

ELON COLLEGE, founded by the Christian Church in 1889, has fully justified the faith and hope of its founders during its 42 years of operation. Its graduates from the four-year course leading to a bachelor's degree, number 980, now living, 122 of whom are in the Christian Ministry and full-time Christian service. The majority of these are members of our own denomination. In addition, 449 are in educational work and are an active influence in the lay leadership of the Christian Church.

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING, and the definite religious atmosphere of the College, provide the very best facilities available for training for religious leadership, and offer the Church its finest opportunity to train the young people of the denomination to assume active leadership both in the ministry and laity of the local churches.

20,000 Auto Fatalities.—

Reports compiled by one of the leading automobile insurance companies, show that nearly 20,000 persons have been killed, and more than 570,000 injured in the over a half-million automobile accidents which occurred during the first nine months of 1933. On the basis of current trends, it is estimated that this year's fatalities will exceed last year's record of 29,000.

Huge Chinese Road System.—

The question of a huge national road system for China, has recently been revived. As originally outlined some three years ago, it was proposed by the national government to build two systems. One of these would be a commercial road system, while the other would be primarily a national defense line, following the frontier. The entire project called for the construction of nearly 22,000 American miles of roadway, at an estimated cost of over $350,000,000.00.

Buying and Costs Continue to Increase.—

Dun & Bradstreet again report a sharp gain in retail buying. Housewives, who, during August, raised department store sales 16 per cent above the same month in 1932, were said to be flocking back for more. Automobiles and trucks, also, continued in demand, there being 236,400 produced in August, showing an un-seasonal increase of 3,000 more than in July, and 146,000 or 160 per cent increase over August, 1932. Cigarette production for August, 1933, reached the enormous total of 11 billion. Living costs showed an increase of 2.3 per cent, but were still 23.6 per cent below August, 1929.

An Alarming Situation.—

Aside from the question of prohibition, the small number of votes cast in the referendums in the various States, gives cause for concern. It is indeed an alarming situation when on such an important economic and moral issue two-thirds of the possible voters stay at home. And this is what has happened up to the present time. The first twenty-nine States voting, cast a total vote in the last presidential election of 27,710,672. Of this number, less than 11,000,000 have approved the repeal amendment, while a considerably smaller number have voted against it. A ballot which is easily obtained, is lightly used, or not used at all.

Volstead Declines to Serve.—

Andrew J. Volstead, better known as the author of the Federal dry enforcement act, has refused to serve on the Liquor Control Commission of the State of Texas. In declining the appointment, he wrote Governor Olson: "Those who have opposed prohibition have posed as friends of temperance and law enforcement. Personally, I am willing to give them a chance to make good.

They ought to have a free hand to deal with the matter and be responsible for results." Personal observation would incline the writer to agree with him when he continues: "The suggestion that the State may become the sole dispenser of liquor does not interest me. It is a toss-up whether the so-called Canadian liquor control system is better than the saloon."

World Wonders.—

For centuries the pyramids of Egypt have looked down upon wayfarer and native alike. Truly the wonder of all times, they required the work of a hundred thousand men for more than twenty years. Yet only recently there has been completed a wonder—which, to us, seems commonplace—that is more marvelous than even the pyramids. The Khedive Ismail Bridge, crossing the Nile at Cairo, is 1,260 feet long. It has two spans of 66 feet, electrically operated, which open to give passage to river traffic. The bridge, itself, also has a width of 66 feet. In its building man harnessed machinery, while the pyramids represent the labor of slaves.

Von Hindenburg Observes 86th Birthday.—

President Von Hindenburg, familiarly known as "the grand old man" of Germany, observed his eighty-sixth birthday on Monday, October 2nd, at his private estate in East Prussia. His request that public demonstration be avoided was respectfully observed by the entire nation, although the standing army observed the anniversary by parades before divisional commanders. Von Hindenburg is said to be in excellent health notwithstanding his more than four-score years. Tied by tradition and inheritance to East Prussian soil he is now, by action of the national government, in possession of two large estates once owned by the Hindenburgs. Not only have these estates been returned, but they have been declared free and unincumbered for the future.

Jesus Retried by the Jews.—

From the Hebrew Messenger we glean further details of the recent retrial of Jesus by the Jews. It took place in Jerusalem during July before a packed assembly. The judges were composed of a number of highly educated Jews, and the case was opened by Dr. Beldeissel, a prominent Jewish jurist. The prosecutor was Dr. Blandeisler, whose speech covers a document of a thousand typewritten pages, and who spoke to uphold the judgment of the Sanhedrin. The defense was led by Dr. Reichswehr, who stated that he would prove that the judgment of the Sanhedrin in the case of Jesus was unjust, and that his crucifixion was judicial murder. He spoke for five hours and then the judges retired to consider their verdict. When they returned they announced that by a vote of four to one they affirmed the complete innocence of Jesus, finding that the complaint against him was based on a "dreadful mistake," and declaring their belief that divine judgment would follow upon the Jewish people until they freed themselves of their horrible sin. Perhaps the "blindness in part" is about to pass from Israel.—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

Governor Pollard Turns Repealist.—

On the eve of the election in Virginia, Governor Pollard, who has, until recently, been one of Virginia's most consistent dries, climbed on the bandwagon of repeal. In announcing his decision he said: "If I cannot fight (the liquor traffic) with the weapon I want, I will fight it with such weapons as I can get. The right of the people to rule must be recognized. I deplore present conditions, but I cannot ignore them. . . . I shall, therefore, vote for the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, and from now on join the friends of temperance in re-establishing once more the long and tedious processes of education upon the evils of intoxicating liquors. I shall, furthermore, exert myself to secure the very best liquor-control law which public opinion will support to reduce intemperance to a minimum." Possibly comment upon the above is out of order, yet one cannot refrain from wishing that the venerable Governor had continued to wield the weapon which he wanted until it was ruthlessly torn from his hand, rather than doing the more expedient thing of yielding that weapon without striking a last blow.

The Fair of Phantasy.—

During Chicago's well-known Century of Progress our architects have been able to cut loose from their ancient dependence upon beams and buttresses and thus give their imagination the fullest possible scope. With artificial light and ventilation, windows need no longer intrude upon the architect's flight of fancy, while the modern door is simply a piece of the wall on hinges. The result of these tendencies is now on display on Chicago's lake front. The visitor is guaranteed this satisfaction—he knows he has never been there before. A minister (who had evidently passed by the side shows) remarked, "There isn't a beautiful shape on the lot." Yet the architecture of the Chicago Fair has its brighter moments. Like most barns, it looks better by moonlight than daylight, while the twilight is a moment of whimsical beauty. Because of the better control of lighting, the interiors are often more pleasing than the exteriors. Many rooms are quite remarkable. The parts are rather better than the whole, as neighbors have a tendency to detract from one another. But the garishness and gaudiness with occasional moments of loveliness is altogether typical of the city which created the Fair. It belongs to Chicago.—John R. Scotford, in the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Rev. M. T. Sorrell changes his address from 2003 North Main Street to Third Avenue, Danville. Though changing locations, Brother Sorrell remains at his post as pastor of our Danville Church.

The Miami First Church, Rev. Helen F. Latham, pastor, reports the accession of nine more members on September 24th. Six members had previously been received in September. Dr. Geo. Henry Bradford has been voluntarily assisting in the services and has preached during the pastor's vacation.

Rev. Thomas H. Derrick, of DeLand, formerly pastor of the Congregational Church at Orange City, Fla., has been called to the Associate Church at Baltimore. Mr. Derrick has accepted for three months, serving during that time as interim minister. Mr. Derrick left his home in DeLand on September 27th.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill has returned to Florida from her vacation spent at her home in Henderson, N. C. She attended and participated in the week-end young people's conference known as "Little Immokalee," held at New Port Richey, Fla. Others participating were Rev. Walter Metcalf, Dr. E. C. Gillette and Rev. Lawrence A. Gedcke.

Early returns from the special election on prohibition repeal in Virginia, indicate that the State has followed the example of the thirty-one preceding her. The vote, possibly three-fourth complete, stood 90,000 for repeal and 52,000 against. Many of the counties voted dry, but practically every large city in the State went overwhelmingly wet.

Dr. G. O. Lankford, who recently resigned his pastorate at Burlington, N. C., because of his health, will leave about the middle of this month for Penney Farms, Fla., where he expects to remain for the winter months. Mrs. Lankford and his younger son, Wilbur, will accompany him. Another son, Eugene, is now in school at Elon College.

Dr. L. E. Smith, president of Elon College, delivered the principal address at the annual Christian Endeavor Convention of the Central North Carolina District, at the Asheboro Street Friends Church, Sunday evening, October 1st. Between 400 and 500 delegates and visitors were in attendance. Dr. Smith's theme for the occasion was "Living for Jesus."

The Laymen's Missionary Movement, fifty-two communions and denominations cooperating, have set November 19, 1933, as "Men and Missions Sunday." It is expected that there will be more than one thousand community men's missionary dinners between November 13th and November 18th, the carefully prepared program calling for a missionary service and sermon in every church on November 19th. This will be the third annual observance of "Men and Missions Sunday." The Laymen's Missionary Movement having been launched on November 15, 1906, celebrated its 25th anniversary three years ago. The general topic of the observance this year is "Christ and the Modern World." Both a statement as to the importance of observing "Men and Mission Sunday," and also the program outline, with further information and details regarding the activities of the Movement, may be obtained by addressing a post-card request to the Laymen's Missionary Movement, 19 La Salle St., Chicago.

We join with the Burlington Times-News in the following commendation: "Judge John S. Thomas demonstrated his fitness to grace the court of Alamance yesterday when he ordered a clean-up of slot-machines in Alamance County. For some time now the entire county has been virtually overrun with these machines, operating in the city of Burlington under license. Governments today are so hard put for cash that they are ready to grasp at almost any means of bringing in more revenue." Judge Thomas has given the operators of slot-machines until November 1st to clear up and clean out, thus following the lead of some other cities and counties in putting out of commission these machines that were extracting millions from innocent children, incidentally teaching them also the gambling habit.

MISS LOHR'S ARTICLE.

I hope that many have read Miss Minnie Lohr's article in the issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN of September 28th, and that the editor will permit me to tell her, in this way, with what interest at least one reader read it. There is nothing new in the article, except as all truth is always new.

Two sentences struck me. One is, "Our Lord never permitted anyone to substitute their plans or their way for his will." The other is, "Following Jesus means walking in the opposite direction from the crowd, and that is what most people do not want to do." This is like a saying of Dean Inge, that the big crowd is not around the narrow gate. Of course, crowds did, at times, follow our Lord, and "common people hear him gladly," but in the opposition of the leaders there was no crowd to stand by him.

Is not the chief work of the church to increase the number around the narrow gate, rather than to bother itself directly about political problems? Do not the Gospels show that this was Christ's way? In fact will not this method be the more effective way of helping to better political and social conditions? Is not the primary need that of increasing the number of people who have the bravery, in spite of opposition, to think right and do right?

NOTICE OF CONFERENCE MEETING.

The Eastern North Carolina Conference will hold its annual session with the Wentworth Christian Church, at McCullers, N. C., November 21st and 22nd, beginning at 10 o'clock, A. M. All churches are urged to send up full delegations, all delegates and ministers are requested to be present at the opening session and remain until the close of Conference. There is great need for the churches to raise as much as possible of the apportionments requested. Our contributions last session were not up to the usual amount, but the needs were greater than ever. We should do our best for Christ. He has done his best for us.

W. C. WICKER, President,
Eastern North Carolina Conference.

THE RELIGIOUS PRESS.

By TIMOTHY THOMAS.

The editor of a church paper is always confronted with the problem of problems. The routine of editing "copy" is small compared with the unlimited problems that are known only to the editor himself. The financial problem of the church paper, which is too often upon the shoulders of the editor (either directly or indirectly) is a typical ordeal that few realize. It is the one ever-present grind that must be met and can never be eliminated. Week after week it remains the unsolved problem. Every financial need of the church must be presented through the columns of the church press, but when the paper itself must cry out because of its own distress, too often it is considered out of place. Many are ready to tell the management how to make the publication pay.

Tradition has always been the greatest drawback to the circulation of the church press. With the exception of form and style of typography, the church paper of today is about what it was fifty years ago. It is the mouthpiece of the denomination it represents. It must preach the doctrine of the doctors that brought it into being. It must remain so denominational that no devout member of any other communion cares to read it. The local churches into which it goes may change their programs to meet the social needs of their respective communities, but if the editor of the church paper strikes a new note, some moss-back is ready to "crack down" on him as being too liberal, too much of the world, and offering the criticism that the publication is becoming secular. Page after page, because of tradition, must be one plea or preachment after another. It must be a publication for the saints; nothing for the sinners until they become converted. If the local church is a suitable place to go, why not put something into the church paper to interest the man of the world? The editor consciously or unconsciously falls into the habit of making every editorial a little sermon, thus duplicating what every pastor is doing. The church paper is a pastor-at-large in the fullest meaning of that expression, and because of such, should have the fullest latitude of thought.

It seems to be beyond the understanding of the devotees of the church paper why all members of the church do not read it. No one answer will suffice; but that which will cover the ground better than any other is the lack of interest. But why the lack of interest? After an observation of many years, as well as having endeavored to be a student of the church press, I have come to the conclusion that the lack of interest lies in the variety of subject matter offered by the average church paper. Over a period of more than a hundred years the appeal of loyalty has not given the church paper sufficient support. Condemning church members for not taking their church paper has been of no avail. People usually buy what they want, and this applies to church members and non-church members.

There are very few church papers that carry anything of interest to the children. The hapitual reader of the church paper, with very few exceptions, started that habit in early life. The child of today is the man of tomorrow, and the man of tomorrow will reflect the child of today. But if there be no appeal in a paper for the child, how can this interest be expected?

Because of tradition, custom, and mostly out of deference to the feelings of contributors, articles appearing in church papers are merely edited for grammatical errors. The daily press with its well-manned staff takes every item accepted for publication and re-casts it in conformity with its policy and in the most readable style, adding striking headlines that appeal to the imagination.

Some day some denominational leader with a vision will start a church paper that is different. It will be a paper containing something for every member of the family. It will even include comics that depict a moral lesson. Every article appearing in it will be brief and to the point. It will be a household necessity. It will have more news than views. Its readers will like it so well that they will like every enterprise it represents. It will be so free of the denominational label that it will unconsciously become the greatest missionary of the church promoting it.

This article is not to be taken as a criticism, but a comment, and is written in the hope of a better day and larger support of the church paper, as well as a plea for a changing church press for a changing age.

Patience is a lesson to be learned. Christ is the Teacher, but you are the scholar, and it is the scholar who must learn the lesson. Not even Christ can learn it for you to spare you the effort. Nor can it be made an easy lesson for you even by the Divine gentleness. It costs to grow patient, and you must pay the price yourself.—J. R. Miller.

OCTOBER.

When summer is done, with its bright, gorgeous weather,

The air growing keen with the first tonic chill, All trees don their brightest and gayest together, To welcome the autumn and winter's first thrill.

The bees hum their deepest, to goldenrod listening, While asters, assenting, nod gently their head; The gentian unfurls its blue petals glistening

And the last of the butterflies soon will have fled.

The birds have been gathering—a serious matter Is the long autumn flight to their warm Southern home—

Till the call of the Bob-White and the Kingfisher's chatter

Are the last of the notes ere the birds have all flown.

The great golden ears of the harvest are ready, The purple grapes cling to the fast withering vines,

The red apples hanging, ripe, luscious, and heavy With nuts of the forest and scent of the pines.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

CRIME AND DEPRESSION.

We have both. As an evidence of the latter, there are some six million out of employment. If this is not sufficient evidence, there are ten times that number employed, but with salaries or wages either underpaid or not paid. As an evidence of the former, an estimate, more or less authentic, is that crime and criminals are costing us of the United States three billions annually. Possibly more. Desperate efforts are being made, judging from press reports, to lift the depression and wipe out crime. For the former, we have the N. R. A. (National Recovery Act); for the latter, we have the M. R. A. (Moral Recovery Act). Here is wishing a strong arm and all success to both.

However, neither depression nor crime can be lifted and uprooted from without inward. It must be from within outward. No governmental fiat can satisfy want or abolish poverty, or permanently relieve hunger. Government may afford opportunity, lighten the burden of taxation, enact equitable laws and deal out justice. The individual must learn thrift, practice economy, cultivate frugal habits, and apply himself industriously if he is to recover.

And certain it is that the individual must be sober, refrain from crime, remain within the law and deal honestly with his government, if the crime wave is to subside.

Neither the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment nor the drive of the N. R. A. will lift the depression and abolish crime without a sober, energetic, industrious and honest citizenship.

The Saturday Evening Post recently called for a facing of realities, and then put a question that we could wish every CHRISTIAN SUN reader would give heed to and think over not a little:

"Let us face realities. Repeal of prohibition will not repeal crime. Crime conditions in America must be attacked from the inside instead of from the outside. There can be no real improvement in them until we go to the root of the evil and break up the unholy alliance between the crooked politician and the criminal, and take the police out of politics. Prohibition has been a smoke screen for crooked politicians behind which they have tried to conceal their protection of vice and crime, while they fostered them, and so far as possible corrupted and debauched our law-enforcement agencies. But the smoke has been steadily clearly away and we know these fellows for exactly what they are. What are we going to do about them?"

After millions of money, that the Government is now pouring out, shall have been spent and after repeal is an act, as now seems likely, the question arises to sober and serious consideration: "What are we going to do about it?" How are we to get rid of the crooked politicians, a corrupt police, debauched enforcement agencies, dishonest and corrupt men in high places, and what are we, as individuals, going to do to make for recovery, economically, morally, spiritually? These are questions of deepest concern and greatest moment—NOW!

FARMERS AND PREACHERS.

The editor of the North Carolina Christian Advocate, declares that "the farmer who loafes in June when his wheat should be harvested is a simpleton. The preacher who loafes in October is a failure." There is somewhat more in this than Editor Plyler indicates. While June is a good harvest month for ripening grain, October is usually a great month for activity in the pastorate. In most instances, the annual conference approaches, harvest time begins, the preacher must garner in the sowings of the year. Through the year he has been busy feeding the flock. Shearing time has come. The late, lamented Dr. W. W. Staley used to put it that unless sheep were sheared, they lost their wool and, in so doing, became shabby looking animals. The only safe method was to shear closely at the proper time. The shearing of the flock may take several forms, because every pastor who does not wish to be a failure will realize:

1. Money is to be raised for the church. Balance of pastor's salary to be paid. Conference apportionments to be raised. Church claims to be met. The pastor who neglects this part of his work will soon find himself without a church. A church does not keep a pastor very long after he reports to his annual conference a few years that he has come up with the enterprises not looked after and church claims not met, and pastor's salary not paid.

2. Plans and programs for closing the present, and opening the coming year, are to be made and executed. The churches in closing up the work of the year, almost invariably lay their plans for the coming year. Pity the pastor, indeed, who in October does not begin to lay before his people some plans, some marks of energy and activity, some purposes for the coming year. Unless he adopts some plan, he may not expect his church to adopt any. After all, maybe Editor Plyler said it all in one sentence: "The preacher who loafes in October is a failure."

SENATOR SMITH SPEAKS OUT.

It is noted that United States Senator Smith, of South Carolina, differing from many other Congressmen, will vote against repeal. While Senator Smith feels under obligations to his party, he declares that he has discharged that obligation in voting to submit the question of repeal to the States in the last Congress, though at the time declaring himself personally and politically dry. Whether sound and safe, politically, or not, Senator Smith declares that he has some paternal obligations, saying: "I have two young sons, and I am voting for prohibition because I do not want them to get started on the road to hell.

I threw aside everything and followed the dictates of the Democratic party in voting to submit the repeal question to a vote of the people," he said.

"Now, as a private citizen of my State and not as a member of the Congress, I expect to express my own personal views. The people of South Carolina have known this all the time. They know I have always voted dry and know I personally intend to vote against repeal in November."

As to how many fathers there are in Congress who feel under personal obligation to their family other than their obligations to their party, we are not advised. At any rate, it is refreshing to hear the confession of this father and the declaration of this Senator.

READING THE BIBLE.

It is easy to tell people that they ought to read the Bible. Preachers often do that. But how many actually read it? Presumably ministers and Sunday School teachers know what is in the Bible, or think they do. Nevertheless, there is a woeful ignorance of the contents of the Bible on the part of people generally. Not long ago, a group of high school students took an entrance examination into a university and they flunked on the biblical section. Even boys and girls who have been attending Sunday School failed. I have been living recently with a large group of tourists touring the so-called Holy Land and the general ignorance of biblical history was appalling. Who knows the Bible, anyway?

My reason for writing thus is to relate an experience. I took with me a copy of Moffatt's translation of the New Testament on a recent cruise of the Mediterranean Sea and read it through beginning with the Acts of the Apostles. I read Acts in connection with visits to Damascus, Cyprus and St. Paul's Bay at Malta. The story of the ship-wreck read at the place where it occurred put new meaning into the story. And so it was in reading Paul's letters. I read much in the Gospels regarding Bethlehem and Nazareth and Jerusalem. Moffatt's translation reads as if the translator had been over the historical landmarks and had verified it all in his choice of words and the formation of sentences. But to see this with one's own eyes is to make the Bible read like a new and interesting book.

I wish to advocate the reading of whole sections of the Bible at a time. Read the Acts at one sitting, if possible, or read it as you would read any other book, consecutively. Then it is that the story as a whole is seen and felt and understood. Read one of Paul's letters in full just as you would read a letter from a friend. Too many people read the Bible in bits, here a paragraph and there a sentence. The book is often treated as a store-house of material worth quoting for one's purpose. As a matter of fact history should be read as history, biography as the interesting account of some important person and correspondence as any good letter should be read.

The value of this kind of reading is easy to be seen. It gives one a knowledge of the contents of the book. It provides an atmosphere that gives reality to sacred things and widens one's outlook on life. Reading in this way leads to the search for further knowledge. It forces one to use a Biblical dictionary, a geography and other helps prepared for Bible students. It makes it possible for one to know that Jesus' triumphal entry was not in Damascus! It furnishes information enough to carry on an intelligent conversation about ancient history, biblical themes, religious leaders and the Christian movement.

HONOR TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE.

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS.

Churches honor ministers with degrees and donations; and they give banquets to leading laymen. But the most deserving group of church workers get the least attention and the smallest praise—the teachers in the Sunday School.

May I propose something new for all the churches of North America—a nation-wide celebration of the service of the Sunday School teachers?

My thought is a simple one, but it will take a year of large-scale planning and activity to carry it out. All denominations, Sunday School associations and local congregations would have to enlist in the enterprise. The endorsement and approval of public officials, educators, editors and other leaders in national life would be sought.

In a paragraph, the plan is that, upon a night in some week to be agreed upon, not less than a year hence, there should be held in every community in the land the largest and most imposing demonstration possible of the nation's debt to that great host of unsung, unsalaried servants of God and of man, the Sunday School teachers; who have modestly carried on, week after week, year after year, the priceless and immeasurable work of holding aloft before the youth of the land the teachings of the Bible. Their usefulness has been beyond any man's power to measure.

Indirectly, such a spectacular tribute to the Sunday School teachers would do more to arouse interest in the Sunday School, and to recruit into its membership the millions now without any religious training whatsoever, than any other method possible. By directing attention to the functions of the teachers, and by expressing in every way possible appreciation of their work, the whole picture of the Sunday School would be brought anew before the public eye.

Existing denominational and interdenominational agencies should welcome the opportunity to do the promotional work for this great and unique celebration.

RENEW THY CHURCH

O God of all, renew thy church
In every clime and clan;

In every land may love be born—
The love of man for man.

In this good year of growing hope
May no proud strivings mar
The spirit of true brotherhood
That binds us, near and far.

No more let war's embroiling strife
Despoil our friendly earth;
May hate no more imperil life;
O bring at last to birth

The kingdom of the loving mind,
The country Jesus saw—
Where it is royal to be kind,
Where friendliness is law.

Renew in us high reverence,
Transform our hearts by prayer;
May righteousness and godliness
And justice be our care.

Thou God of all humanity,
In every realm of earth
Breathe thou thy spirit over us
And bring thy day to birth.

—Thomas Curtis Clark.

ADVICE TO YOUNG PREACHERS.

First, get religion. Be certain of your call. Be determined to be a man of one work. Get the best preparation possible. Variety is the spice of the pulpit. You cannot be versatile without a large stock of materials. If every pigeonhole of your brain is not crammed with information you will soon become sounding brass and a tinkling simpleton. He who fails to study, but depends upon the Lord to fill his mouth as he opens it, will find the filling to be hot air.

Don't despise the day of small things. When matriculates of "Brush College." Times have changed. The pews have been lifted nearer to the level of the pulpit. Popular education has put in its work since "the fathers fell asleep." Science and philosophy are challenging divine revelation today.

Don't despise the day of small things. When ready, begin. Take what you can get. Preachers are long-lived. The big ones do not often resign. If you want a large church make a little one bigger. The best way to get out of a small place is to work out.

Don't choose the largest church. If you have the choice between two churches choose the smaller. Should you fail in the larger, the smaller church would not want you, the larger one will. Then when you grow up you will leave your mistakes behind you.

Don't winnow chaff in the prayer meeting. Grind grain. Give bread. Butter it if you can. Occasionally sandwich it with jelly.

Don't always talk to yourself. A preacher always before the public with his mouth open will breed contempt. Dr. Holmes says, "A dull preacher, hearing no one but himself preach for thirty years, will finally die a heathen for the want of the Gospel."

Don't keep a circulating library. Books are, as seldom returned as they are read.

Don't give money to beggars. Give a card to the secretary of the Associated Charities. It will seldom be presented, and you will gain time and save money.

Don't read anonymous letters. Burn them unread. By so doing you will "fire out" their cowardly writers. "Ashes to ashes" is the cremation liturgy.

If unmarried, don't become a "beau." Indulge in no clandestine correspondence. Be no candidate for the universal admiration of the young ladies. Have a view to a wife suited to a minister's work. Forecast your improvement and provide for it in advance by selecting a woman who is adapted to its meridian. Don't get snarled in a set of ribbons, or tangled up in the fussy frills of a bobbed-haired belle, or deluded by the artificial charms made by a skillful toilet. The ornament of a "meek and quiet spirit" will never lose its charm.

Don't neglect the lambs of your flock. Know them by nature as well as by name. Attach yourself to your young people. Attend their meetings. Interest yourself in their affairs and they will become interested in you and your messages.

Don't speak ill of your predecessor. Those who treated him well are apt to be your best friends.

Don't speak disrespectfully of the community. See its excellencies, and be silent as to its defects. The love of the locality is one of the strongest instincts of human nature.

Don't exalt any part of your work thinking it will cover the neglect of other duties.

Don't neglect the poor. Prove to your people that you seek them and not what they have. Love them for what they are and not for what they own. Do what you can for the church without regard for what it does for you. Earn your salary and you will get it. Work wins and wears.

Don't show your wounds. Hide them. Be deaf as possible to censure.

Don't fear your people. Fear God only. If you try to be literally "all things to all men," you will be nothing to any. Let nobody own you.

Don't be ever less than your best. A poor sermon added to a rainy Sunday won't improve your wet-weather congregations. A little congregation and a big sermon will help to even things up. Jesus preached one of his greatest sermons to a lone woman at the well. God's work can never be too small for your greatest powers.

Don't apologize. If you are hoarse it will advertise itself. If you are unprepared it will not help your case by confessing it.

Don't confound violence with energy, nor perspiration with inspiration. Be in earnest, but affect no unwonted zeal. It is the steam in the cylinder, not in the whistle, that enables the locomotive to walk away with the train.

Don't try to make a poor sermon good by continuing to talk when you have finished preaching. Quit. The congregation will appreciate it and you will save yourself much embarrassment.

Don't brood over an innocent mistake. Add that to your stock of knowledge and go forward. A man who never makes a mistake never makes anything.

Don't preach to the people while on your knees supposed to be offering public prayer.

Don't scold people in your prayers. That is cowardly.

Don't raise more devil in the pulpit than you are able to down.

Don't apologize for the truth; preach it.

Don't try to defend the truth; the truth is its own defense.

Don't be a loan association. The best way to get friends to hate you is to have them owe you money.

Don't appoint another preacher to take your place when you are unable to keep your appointment. Assume that those who invited you are competent to choose a substitute satisfactory to themselves.

Don't beg, indirectly, by telling "hard luck" stories about yourself in your sermons. If you are a child of the King, act like it.

Don't take advantage of your position on the platform to get an audience to commit itself publicly with reference to a matter that properly belongs to the Board. Courtesy and Christianity are perfectly compatible.

Don't take advantage of your position as a worker in a camp meeting to take an offering for some special interest without permission from the proper authority. When invited by another, do what you are requested to do and then stop.

Don't take advantage of your position in the pulpit to say things to or about those in your audience that you would not say to them personally.—Rev. W. W. Holland in God's Revivalist.

QUALITY OF DEVOTION.

A musician is commended, not that he played so long, but that he played so well. And thus it is not the days of our life, but the goodness of our life; not the length of our prayers, but the fervency of our prayers; not the measure of our profession, but the sincerity of our profession, that is acceptable unto God.—Spencer.

What a school God keeps! What stubborn scholars, what dense minds, what rebellious hearts! Yet the school is not closed. Still the school goes on, still the scholars are reading and writing, praying and thinking. Now and again God visits the school and sheds tears over it, but still he will not close its doors, or withdraw his light from its windows.—Joseph Parker.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Week-end visiting is on the increase. The five-day week for working people will add another day to the week-end visit. People who live in the city will be inclined to visit their country relatives and friends on Saturday and Sunday. They have time and opportunity and many are taking advantage of this privilege and pleasure.

The week-end visiting makes it difficult for churches to carry on their regular work. How often church members are compelled to stay at home on Sunday, to entertain their company. A regular attendant and Sunday School worker missed Sunday School recently. The superintendent said, "You were not at Sunday School last Sunday." "I had company, and could not come." In such a case two churches probably suffered by this visit. The visitors were missed from their church; the hosts were absent from their place in the work of the kingdom. Probably eight or ten people were denied the privilege and duty of attending the religious services because of one visit. This visit opened the way for a return visit, and the chain becomes endless.

It would be interesting to know how many family visits are made in Virginia on Sunday. It would be a revelation to know how many people in our churches are using Sunday as a day for going out to spend the day. This is not written to raise the question of whether it is wrong to visit on Sunday. Many people seem to have no other time for visiting. But it is a very serious matter if Sunday visiting interferes with church attendance and religious work. People who visit on Sunday should be willing to attend church, if their hosts are identified with the work of the church. A visit should never interfere with church attendance.

On the other hand, church people who entertain visitors on Sunday, may hold the key to a great opportunity. They may have it clearly understood that the church work is of primary importance on Sunday. If plans are made for the visit, emphasize the point that Sunday School and church will not be omitted for the day, and guests will be expected to go also; and the social hours in the home will be richer and happier because of this standard for the Sabbath day. The visiting friends will appreciate this standard, and there is no valid reason why they should be unwilling to cooperate, when it is possible to do so.

No one knows what Jesus would do in the matter of Sunday visiting. When he was on earth, he visited on the Sabbath. He was, at times, compelled to do so; for he had no where to lay his head, except in the homes of others. His visits were always more than a social call. He lifted the visit to a high religious standard. He transformed every home where he was received with a cordial welcome. Then the home became a sanctuary, where love was elevated and life redeemed from the sordid and secular and selfish. It requires no stretch of the imagination to believe that Jesus would visit on Sunday, in this age, if he were on earth, in human form. However, he would go from the home to the church, or from the place of prayer to the abode of his friends.

There is no desire to prevent visiting on Sunday, when it is made the occasion for social, moral and spiritual uplift. A delicious dinner, a season of delightful fellowship, the renewal of home ties, the social intercourse of friends and loved ones—all these leave a pleasant memory when the day is done. But do not forget God, and duty, and religion in the midst of your social opportunities. There is a danger that the Lord's Holy Day may become a day of pleasure and self-indulgence, void of all religious associations. This is a plea that church people seek to keep the Sabbath holy by faithful and punctual attendance upon the work of the church of Jesus Christ.

CHURCH FINANCES.

The church of the New Testament is a spiritual organization. Its origin was spiritual; its purpose is spiritual; and its fruitage must of necessity be spiritual. However, there is a financial responsibility connected with every successful movement that embraces the human element. The church is no exception. Permanent and suitable places for meetings and worship must be provided. Heat, light, and other conveniences are necessary for the comfort of worshippers certainly in a day such as ours is. An adequate and thorough-going program must be provided if the church is to advance in accordance with the command of Christ. It is unscriptural to expect an adequate program of worship to be planned and executed without financial cost. The Scriptures plainly teach us that the laborer is worthy of his hire. It further enjoins that the messenger himself should not be careful about the material things, but should expect his necessities to be provided by the ones to whom he administers.

The local church, constituted by a number of individual believers, is considered a unit. In our denomination, which is congregational in its government, the local church is a law unto itself. However, experience has taught us that for the greatest good, it is advisable to form conferences, associations, and conventions; that is, a number of local churches in contiguous territory are bound together as a conference. The contiguous conferences form associations and conventions.

Local associations and conventions go to make up our national council. An organization of this kind, if made to function efficiently, requires a considerable outlay of funds. Through such an organization, we endeavor to carry on the necessary work of the denomination. Funds must be provided for what we call "overhead" expenses—stamps, stationery, office rent, travel expenses, salaries, etc. These are all necessary in order that we may be in a position to do the essential and compelling things of the kingdom. We endeavor to provide for helpless and dependent ministers and their families, the orphans of our constituency, the education and the training of our youth, the proclaiming of the Gospel both at home and abroad: these all require money, considerable money.

The finances of the whole program of the church must necessarily rest back upon the individual in the local church. He is expected to provide for the program of his church indirectly through the organization itself or directly through special interests about which he, personally, may be concerned. This is as it should be, as it was intended in the beginning of the Gospel. The Scriptures themselves lay the responsibility for the financial support of the kingdom upon those who are the recipients of the spiritual blessings of the Gospel. As a rule, an individual's material contributions for the support of the church and the extension of the kingdom on earth is an indication of the genuineness of his own religious experience. As a man receives, so he will give and as he gives he may expect to receive. In a day like this when financial returns from labor, business and investments are so uncertain and meager, it is a temptation to withhold gifts for the church and the kingdom, feeling, perhaps, that money "given" in this way will bring but little or no returns. On the other hand, there is an inclination to spend money rather freely on particular interests that reflect themselves almost entirely along selfish lines. For instance, a man who is a perfectly good Christian will risk money rather freely in an investment which is absolutely questionable but promises rather large returns; and at the same time, will tighten his purse strings almost to the strangling point when it comes to the support of the church and the kingdom. He persuades himself that what little he gives for the church means denial; whereas, in reality, he is denying himself when he refuses to invest in the Kingdom of God. If he would only give in the right spirit and with the right motive, he has the assurance of God that he will receive in return "good measure, pressed down, shaken together, heaping up and running over." The average professing Christian measures his faith by his gifts. Small gifts evidence little faith; large gifts evidence large faith.

In a few weeks, the conferences of our Southern Convention will begin to gather in annual sessions. Local churches are expected and requested to send to the local conferences a full and complete report of all activities throughout the year. Each local church is requested to send a definite amount of money to its local conference. This money is used to carry on the work of the larger organizations of our church. Through such contributions, we help to provide for the needy; we help to provide for the education of our youth at Elon College and other colleges; we help to provide for our aged and dependent ministers and their families; we help to carry the Gospel to the ends of the earth, through our mission boards.

I trust that the individual members in the local churches and that the local churches as units in our whole program may consider carefully and prayerfully the needs of the institutions, boards, and departments of our denomination, and in the face of such appalling necessity that as individuals and churches may give freely and generously out of what they may possess, in order that our church, that has been the instrument in the hand of God in bringing to us light and hope and which becomes for us the medium of expression for our faith, and ambitions, and hope may be supported as it should. I trust that, because of our gifts, the church may be enabled to go forward as God intends that it shall. It is time that we all, individually and severally, who constitute our church consider well and prayerfully our obligations to our church, from a financial standpoint. Are we sure that we are doing our part? If every individual member will do his part, then there will be no question about the result.

As we send our reports to the conferences, let everyone make a determined effort to see that these reports are evidences of great faith on the part of the individual contributor.

ROSEMONT CLOSES GOOD YEAR.

The annual business meeting and fellowship supper of the Rosemont Christian Church, was held Wednesday evening, September 27, 1933, in the Fellowship Hall of the church. The meeting was largely attended, and was enthusiastic from the beginning. Reports from the various departments of the church showed that good work had been done during the year. The report of the treasurer showed that all outstanding bills had been paid, and that there was a small balance in the treasury. One of the features of the meeting was the report of the finance committee, rendered by its new chairman, Miss Lowrine Halstead. Many of those present said they had never heard a more tactful or helpful report made. Miss Halstead is the first lady chairman our finance committee has ever had, and she certainly set high standard in the beginning of her work.

The following officers for the new conference year were elected:

Sunday School superintendent, H. R. Morrison; treasurer, H. L. Bondurant; assistant treasurer, Miss Mattie Bondurant; secretary, Miss Mary Halstead; assistant secretary, Miss Lowrine Halstead; custodian, W. H. Farrow; pianist, Miss Elizabeth Mills; assistant pianist, Mrs. J. F. Morgan, choir director, H. C. Hedley.

Official board: W. H. Bradshaw, H. L. Bondurant, Mrs. J. R. Morrison, Mrs. O. S. Mills, H. C. Hedley, Rev. J. N. Cutchin, W. F. Hodges, Mrs. H. E. Roane, W. H. Farrow, Miss Elizabeth Russell, Miss Lowrine Halstead, T. W. Knight, and Mrs. B. F. Gibson.

Ushers: A. S. Morrison, A. B. Dobbs, D. A. Dennis, W. M. Sparkman, J. R. Morrison, Jr., Stanley Mills, Robert Halstead; honorary ushers: Rev. J. N. Cutchin, Mrs. H. E. Roane, H. R. Morrison and Mrs. J. R. Morrison, Jr.

Finance Committee: Miss Lowrine Halstead, D. A. Dennis, Mrs. E. C. Casey, W. M. Sparkman, Mrs. M. S. Laubach, H. L. Bondurant.

Delegates to Conference: Mrs. A. L. Gynn, Mrs. Mary Spain, Mrs. B. F. Gibson; alternates: H. R. Morrison, Mrs. O. F. Smith, H. L. Bondurant.

The pastor, the deacons and the trustees are elected to serve an indefinite period, and hence are not included in the annual list of officers.

The new officers of the church will be installed at the morning service Sunday, October 1st, and the service will also be one of consecration on the part of the whole church to the task of the new conference year, which begins on that day.

It was also voted to make the first week in October, "Fellowship Visitation Week," that the church in this way may begin her work of service for the new conference year.

A delicious supper was served by the ladies and young people of the church, to whom a hearty vote of thanks was given.

It was indeed one of the best annual business meetings our church at Rosemont has ever had. Everybody seemed happy, that the year's work should be closed with a successful business session.

The church expressed its appreciation to the pastor and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. J. F. Morgan, and declared its gratification in the fact that although many changes had taken place in this section in the coming and going of pastors, the relation of the pastor and people of Rosemont had not been disturbed.

REJOICE.

The Apostle Paul was an optimist and his epistle to the Philippians shows forth the joy in Christ which he had even though he was confined in a Roman prison. He wanted all men to know and enjoy the same joy and peace that was his. Paul's prayer life was full of joy and as he prayed for his friends at Philippi the requests were made with joy especially because of the blessed fellowship which they had in the gospel. He rejoiced that the gospel was being preached in Rome even though it was not being preached in sincerity and truth, for he could see how good would come out of it all.

Paul also portrayed to them the joy of real life, the more abundant life in Christ Jesus, and desired the Philippians to make his joy complete by continuing steadfast in the faith. He realized that God had a plan for his life and also for the lives of those he was writing to. He wanted them to rejoice with him in the great day of Christ that he had fulfilled God's plan for his life, and through him the Philippians also had found and followed God's plan for them. Paul gloried in the fact that he could magnify the name of Christ telling of the humiliation through which it was necessary for Christ to go that he might redeem men from the guilt and power of sin; and of his exaltation both now and forever.

Paul called upon them to rejoice in Christ Jesus and have no confidence in the flesh. Paul had gone in the power of man, but God's power had prevailed in his life and he gloried in the power that could so transform counting all his knowledge and attainments as nothing for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus his Lord. He urged them to follow on in the path marked out for them being careful for nothing; mingling their prayers and supplications with thanksgiving; giving them the blessed promise that the peace of God which passeth all understanding shall keep their hearts and minds through Christ Jesus.

How Paul must have loved the church at Philippi and we can feel his intense desire that they should go on in joyful fellowship with the Lord, searching out the deep things of God. May we too take this epistle to our hearts and follow Paul's admonition: "Rejoice in the Lord, and again and again I say, Rejoice."

Also, we unanimously welcome him to our pulpits any time he may feel able to conduct a service or care to take part in the Sunday Schools.

Deacons present were as follows: Dendron Church—W. S. Barrett, E. T. Atkinson, Luther Presson; Union Church—R. T. Brittle; New Lebanon—N. H. Savedge, O. M. Cockes, J. W. Maynard, O. V. Cockes.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary

THE C. R. A. (CHURCH RECOVERY ADMINISTRATION).

By CHARLES C. MERRILL.

Secretary of the Commission on Missions.

This outstanding fact confronts our missionary treasurers and administrative committees at this moment: If the rate of decrease in contributions from the churches for the regular work of the missionary societies and State conferences, as shown by figures for the calendar year up to September 1st, continues until the end of 1933, the depression will have cut down these contributions from the church by one-half.

In 1930 we were receiving approximately $3,100,000. In 1933 we are receiving approximately $1,500,000.

While it is true that the decreases from other sources of income have not been at as large a ratio as that of contributions from the churches, this detracts but little from the outstanding nature of the fact just given. This missionary work is primarily dependent upon living donors.

As the result of decrease in income, two things have happened.

First. Indebtedness has been incurred to the amount of $534,000 (this figure is exclusive of the State conferences). Of this indebtedness, $312,000 is for the American Board, and $222,000 for the Home Boards.

The second thing that has happened has been the giving up of work, the closing of schools, the discharge of workers, the reduction of salaries, and turning of sails all along the line in order to meet the storm. Details are, of course, available.

I do not care here to argue the legitimacy and the importance of the work for which the missionary societies and State conferences stand any more than I care to argue for the legitimacy and the importance of the work for which our local churches stand. If any of my readers are not now convinced of this, I cannot convince them within the space at my command. Instead, I think that most of my readers have already begun to ask what they can do about it.

It is a situation that must be handled church by church, and the fair thing that it seems can be asked of each church is that it shall put this situation alongside its own financial situation and, during the months of this fall, use the utmost of effort in order to alleviate both.

First, get the facts as to where your own church stands:

How much money has been sent to the State conference office (or to the missionary societies direct) for Congregational and Christian missionary work this year?

To what extent have pledges to missions been paid and how much may be expected from outstanding pledges?

How much more is needed in order that the total for 1933 shall at least equal 1932?

Second. Set a goal. It does not seem enough to say, "We will raise as much as we can. Usually we raise a good deal more if we set a definite amount. As suggested in the preceding paragraph, this goal might well be the amount needed in order that the total of your church's contributions for 1933 shall at least equal 1932. If that cannot be your goal, let it be as near that as possible.

Third. Reach the goal. Here there will be variety of method. Evidently something must be done to supplement the amount coming in from the regular envelop system and from the pledges. With returning prosperity, it may be possible for some to restore their pledges to the amounts of previous years, for the remainder of the year. Your state conference office will supply you with coin boxes and with special envelopes that can be distributed among the people and into which contributions, day by day, or meal by meal, can be put. Sacrificial offerings can be taken on one or more Sundays, and in this way people who have been obliged to give up definite pledging can make their contributions. Individuals can be seen and it may be that a few individuals can subscribe a substantial part of your goal and, on the basis of their help, the rest can more easily be obtained. The point simply is this, to do the things that can best be done in each church, so that that church shall have its full share in "holding the line where we stand."

You will pardon me for saying that these next few weeks, from now until January 10th, when the books close for 1933, seem critical. They are critical for 1933, and equally so for 1934, since a good many churches will make their Every Member Canvass and Enlistment during these weeks. Can it not be that a veritable word of the Lord shall come from the churches to the missionary societies and State conferences "that they go forward," and not retrench or retreat any further?

Two months ago in the columns of this paper, I ventured to say: "The future of our Congregational and Christian Churches is largely bound up in their continued interest in missions. Let that die out among us and we will ere long cease to be a force in the Christian life of America." Now that we seem definitely to have turned the corner away from the depression, shall we not, even at deep cost, begin to restore our missionary work, at least to its former standard?—In Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty.

SPIRITUALIZING FINANCE.

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

I want to tell about the "banner meeting" of the year in our Woman's Missionary Society, September 20th. We were rather anxious about our apportionment, and previous to this meeting had put forth some effort to arouse interest. Our Spiritual Life Superintendent, Mrs. Oscar Smith, planned a stewardship program, using Dr. Denison's article, "Spiritualizing Church Finance" (which is great). She had about ten copies, which previous to the meeting she had given to that many persons, marking the part for each to read and comment upon. This was well done and the spiritual atmosphere was wonderful. Our pastor was with us and told of the time he first begun to tithe.

This was followed by a most appropriate solo, "Living for Jesus." An article from the Guest Book was read.

A short talk on "Why I Love the Missionary Society," was made. Then a true story of Chinese life was told. Rather a full program, but since we had completed our study book, this was a miscellaneous program. We try to use as many women as possible, believing this a good way to get them interested.

When the dues and offering were taken, the Birthday Box money, we had $60.00, which simply put us over the top. Every one was so happy for they had carried out the sentiment in Dr. Denison's article—they worshipped as they gave.

I learned later that several women, even though they had given generously, came prepared to give more if necessary. It shouldn't be a very hard task to be president of a Missionary Society like this, do you think?

Thirty-eight members and friends were present, and we closed by singing, "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow." Refreshments were served by Mrs. J. F. Morgan and Mrs. D. D. Johnston.

MRS. O. S. MILLS.

MISSIONARY NEWS NOTES.

By MRS. W. M. JAY, Convention Editor.

HOLY NECK.

The Woman's Society of Holy Neck Christian Church has had a successful year in spite of difficulties. At the beginning of the year they decided to raise their money through sacrificial giving instead of money making methods like suppers, teas, fairs, etc.

Members were asked to give $1.00 per quarter and dues if possible, and they have been delighted with the response.

Mrs. N. G. Newman is the Spiritual Life superintendent, and has had charge of the devotionals at each meeting. A splendid thank-offering service was held under the auspices of this department last November.

Dr. Newman, the pastor, taught the mission study book, using two chapters each Sunday night for three weeks. They met at the church and invited the young people's society to meet with them and enjoy this opportunity.

The annual birthday anniversary of the society was celebrated in January, at which time each member invited her husband or a friend. This event always proves to be a happy and joyous occasion.

The World Day of Prayer was observed with the Holland Society, at which time the program was carried out in an impressive manner.

Mrs. Nelle Langston is the president, and Mrs. J. O. Davidson, secretary, of this loyal band of Christian workers.

RICHMOND.

Mrs. J. E. McCauley is the president of the Richmond Woman's Society, and as the following evidences, she must have an enthusiastic group to work with.

Their first objective at the beginning of the year was to raise their apportionment and they are happy in this achievement. Once each month this society has had charge of the mid-week prayer service, using a missionary theme for their program. Mrs. W. T. Parsons, the Spiritual Life superintendent sponsored the planning of these meetings which have proved very helpful and beneficial.

Rev. J. E. McCauley, the pastor, taught the mission study book, "Lady Fourth Daughter," and the World Day of Prayer was observed, using the program, "Follow Thou Me." Both of these phases of the work were well attended.

In April, a birthday social was held at which time a period of wholesome fun and entertainment was enjoyed.

A Silver Tea was given June 22nd, and a neat sum was realized. They are already planning for a better and bigger year next year.

CYPRESS CHAPEL.

The Cypress Chapel Woman's Society sends us an encouraging report of regular meetings held each month and good attendance. One unusual feature of this society is, that the men show an interest and attend the meetings. They have laid special stress on their devotionals and Bible study, and feel that they have been greatly enriched and blessed.

They are planning to give a public program soon, under the direction of the Spiritual Life Department. They have reached their financial goal and are making plans for the new year.

Mrs. C. Wesley Rountree is the president of this splendid society.

FRANKLIN.

The Franklin Woman's Missionary Society had laid special emphasis on good programs during the year, two of them being public programs.

An out-of-town speaker was guest at one of these public programs, and the other was a unique Christmas program. Members representing America, Germany, Italy, Portugal, France and Austria, gave the story of one of their Christmas carols and the carol was then sung as a solo, quartette or duet.

A musical reading, "The Voice of the Christmas Angel," was given and the poem, "The Gift," was read.

While the organist played "Send the Light," each member went to the front and placed her gift at the foot of the miniature manger, which was attractively arranged in white, surrounded by tall candles. As they placed their gifts they lighted their own candle which they carried representing the sending of the light of Christ forth to all the world. Above the manger scene was a beautifully lighted star shedding its light on the manger. This proved to be a beautiful and impressive service.

Mrs. W. J. M. Holland sends us the above information, and it shows that Franklin has a wide-awake group of women interested in the cause of Missions.

COMMITTEE REPORT.

No doubt, some of you are wondering about the program committee that was appointed at the Southern Convention Woman's Board meeting last May. This article is to assure you that your committee has been at work and has the envelopes of program material almost ready for distribution. These envelopes contain material for every month in the year and it is stamped so the president or program committee chairman will have no difficulty in assembling it for each month. As you will see, the devotional is planned for each month also, and if careful preparation is made and originality used, your missionary programs this year ought to be worth while. Special music may be added when needed or wanted.

A sheet of instructions is enclosed in each envelope to help the leader and this contains our acknowledgment of our indebtedness to the publishers and authors who gave us permission to use their materials. Please read this carefully and pass the information on to your society.

Then we are especially indebted to our offices in Boston and New York for their fine spirit of cooperation in this effort. They were most willing and eager to help and all we had to do was to make our wants known and the material was sent. There is no excuse for missionary leaders to say they have no materials, with such fine spirited people at 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass., or 287 Fourth Ave., New York. Materials will be sent to you if you will send for it.

We hope you will take and use these envelopes to the very best of your ability and let this be one of the best years ever. Envelopes are provided for Women's, Young People's and Junior Societies.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

WHAT SHALL I DO?

Were you ever in a jam? Perhaps it was a traffic jam in which automobiles seemed so hopelessly tied up that no one could move. Or maybe you said the wrong thing to the hostess or to a new acquaintance. Or it may have been some problem much more serious which seemed to be impossible to solve, and yet a solution was absolutely necessary.

If so, you can appreciate the story told by Jesus (Luke 16:3) of a man who had lost his job because of his carelessness. This fellow saw what a mess he was in and said to himself, "What shall I do?" When he really began to think about what he should do, he found a plan that would work. That is always true. It takes thought to solve problems, but most of us do not want to think. It is easier to take what others think, and drift with the crowd.

Have you thought about what your Sunday School class, C. E. Society, or Missionary Society should do this fall? Have you been planning things for your group, or have you been content to let things drift along without making about it? Perhaps you had better read the story Jesus told as recorded in Luke 16, before you decide that you can do nothing about your job as a Christian worker.

I have recently seen Sunday Schools that open and close just like they did fifty years ago. I have seen most of the group sitting listening to a small group sing when there were no books for the mass. I have seen children amusing themselves and disturbing their elders in an adult service when they should have been in a room by themselves having a program all their own. I have seen young people walking the streets at the time for church, Sunday School, or Christian Endeavor. In every case it appeared to me that something could be done about it if someone with the spirit of youth would seriously say, "What shall I do?"

There can be some fine socials in your church with other young people who do not know the joys of such meetings; there can be missionary programs and money given to missions; there can be Thanksgiving and Christmas programs in your church, if you will study for a while about what you can do to get these things. Don't be afraid to use your head; it won't hurt it. In fact, it is head work that we need in most of our churches. Most young people (and older ones, too) I know are good enough in heart to do great things for the church, but not many are willing to do serious thought that is necessary in order to keep the church from begging.

What will YOU do about your church work this fall? The time is upon you. No one can force you. It must be of your own free will. I know some who have outlined much to be done, and now they are happy in the doing. Will you join them?

UP IN OHIO.

A personal letter from Ohio gives a glimpse of Youth Fellowship, which they call Youth Congress, in that fine State. On September 10th, the Southwestern group met at Troy, where Rev. J. H. Lightbourne is pastor. The leaders met on Saturday night and Sunday morning, but the Rally was Sunday afternoon. And such a Rally! With 431 young people worshipping, making plans for the year ahead, and entering into group discussions on topics like world friendship, Sunday School hour, Sunday evening meetings, finance, key-workers, and adult leaders. One can believe that the Christian Church is safe in Ohio.

The same day the Northwestern group met at Lime and did similar things. To hear of such meetings makes one want to grab his hat and run away to Ohio to see these young people in action. It is easy to believe that when they get back to the old home church they find a way to do some of the things the church has been needing for years. The Ohio young people are taking seriously their responsibilities as Christians, and they are finding great joy in doing so.

My friend, in referring to another such conference, says: "Life has held a much deeper and fuller meaning since that time . . . and I got hold of a few things which have helped me since to grasp a firmer hold on the things that count . . . and Christ has seemed much more real to me. I was lifted out of a rut . . . and I don't think I will ever get into that one again. There may be others, but something will come along and assist me out."

This is the kind of thing that happens to those who attend these Youth Conferences, and that is why the leaders are so eager to hold meetings in Virginia, the Carolinas, Georgia, Florida, and Alabama. You who miss these conferences must limp through life not having something in the soul that is yours by all good rights. Don't let it happen to you.

PATIENCE, PLEASE!

A stack of letters lie on my desk unopened. Perhaps the senders are wondering why they do not receive an answer. There is a reason. For two months I have been away from my office, and have tried to forget the thousand things that usually claim my attention. This page for THE CHRISTIAN SUN is the only duty that I have kept with me through the months of rest and renewal.

But I now feel like a new person, and am eager to get at the tasks that lie about me. And there are many tasks. Just be patient, friends, and your request will be met, your letters answered, and the Bibles for the ten-year-old Sunday School children sent. It won't be long now. And someone has said that patience is a virtue. Here's hoping that you have it. Most of us do not. Virtues come through cultivation, and cultivation sounds just like work.

THINGS WE SHOULD GET THE HABIT OF DOING.

A philosopher suggests that you check off as many of the following good habits as you can conscientiously subscribe to, and say: "That I do.":

- Get the habit of early rising.
- Get the habit of early retiring.
- Get the habit of eating slowly.
- Get the habit of being grateful.
- Get the habit of fearing nothing.
- Get the habit of speaking kindly.
- Get the habit of radiating sunshine.
- Get the habit of seeking the sunshine daily.
- Get the habit of speaking correctly.
- Get the habit of pronouncing correctly.
- Get the habit of closing doors gently.
- Get the habit of neatness in your appearance.
- Get the habit of relying on self, always.
- Get the habit of a forgiving spirit.

- Get the habit of being industrious.
- Get the habit of apprehending no evil.
- Get the habit of anticipating only good.
- Get the habit of always paying as you go.
- Get the habit of promptness at meals.
- Get the habit of quiescent concentration.
- Get the habit of daily physical exercise.
- Get the habit of being accommodating.
- Get the habit of being a good listener.
- Get the habit of economy—not stinginess.
- Get the habit of eating but one hearty meal a day.—From Inkings.

FORGET IT!

Last night I dreamed of hearing a very tall man speak. He was really tall, for he was almost twice as tall as I, and I measure six feet. He was a big man, and made a big speech, and for aught I knew, he was a good man.

This morning I read a little poem with the title of this article, and in the morning mail received an inquiry about a man I know who is a leader in his profession. So far as I know he is a good man. He is my friend, and I am his. Perhaps someone has said something about him that was not complimentary. But such has been said about all the rest of my friends. I think the only wise thing to do with such reports is to forget them. The poet was right. Listen to him:

If you see a tall fellow ahead of the crowd,
A leader of men marching fearless and proud,
And you know of a tale, whose mere telling aloud
Would cause that his proud head in anguish be bowed:

It's a pretty good plan to forget it.
If you know of a skeleton hidden away
In a closet, and guarded, and kept from the way,
In the dark, and whose showing, sudden display
Would cause grief and sorrow and lifelong dismay:
It's a pretty good plan to forget it.
If you know of a thing that will darken the joy
Of a man or a woman, a girl or a boy,
That will wipe out a smile, or the least bit annoy:
It's a pretty good plan to forget it.

PERSISTENCE PAYS.

The Penn Mutual News Letter tells of a life insurance agent who called upon a big business man at the close of a busy day. When the agent had been admitted the big fellow said:

"You ought to feel honored, highly honored, young man. Do you know that today I have refused to see seven insurance men?"

"I know," said the agent, "I'm them."

If it's a good story for the Penn Mutual News Letter, why is it not good for the church paper? If persistence is a good thing for insurance agents, why not for church workers? I'm not asking you; I'm telling you—IT IS!

A PRAYER.

Dear God, grant to me
The graces of simplicity:
A gentle voice, an open hand;
A heart of love to understand;
Courage strong, a humble mind,
Obedient will, a spirit kind.
Show me, dear God, my work today,
Help me to serve in love's true way.
—Grenville Kleiser in the Methodist Protestant Herald.

NOTICE.

The Young People's Missionary Conference, of the Eastern Virginia Conference, will meet in the Christian Church at Holland, Va., at 8 P. M., Tuesday, October 24th. This is a change in date and place from that previously announced, and it is hoped that all concerned will take notice of the change.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

SAUL IN DAMASCUS.

LESSON II—OCTOBER 8, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Wherefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; the old things are passed away; behold all things are become new."—II. Cor. 5:17.

LESSON TEXT: Acts 9:1-12, 17-19a.

God had a great work for Paul to do. He, therefore, gave him a great experience. He made himself known to Paul through Christ in such a vivid and vital and personal way that Paul once and for all knew that if any man were in Christ he is a new creature, and he knew that Christ was adequate for the needs of any man and every man. As a matter of fact, Paul's dramatic career found its source and its continuing power in that experience, and Paul's theology was simply the interpretation and application of that experience with the living Christ. It was Paul's experience of Christ on the Damascus road that alone can make intelligible the man's life and ministry. Paul knew that Christ could make men new because he had made him new. So radical was the change, and so complete the transformation that Paul never had any doubts about the gospel because he had no doubts about Christ.

Now it is not to be expected that every one should have Paul's experience of conversion, that is, the accompanying signs and wonders, such as the exceeding bright light and the voice. Nor is it to be expected that every one shall remain three days in darkness and in fasting. But we do have a right to expect that we shall have something that corresponds to the certainty which Paul had, and that we shall experience a change such as Paul experienced. And if we yield ourselves as completely as Paul yielded himself we shall have that certainty and experience that change. Paul would be the last man in the world to claim that he had a unique experience in the sense that other men could not have its fundamental characteristics. He believed and he preached that any man and every man could know Christ if he yielded himself to Christ, wholeheartedly, unreservedly. God can do for us, according to our needs and abilities what he did for Paul. He can change, he can renew, he can transform.

Of This Way.

The disciples of the Lord, against whom Paul breathed out threatenings and slaughter, were called "of this way." The phrase is significant. At the beginning Christianity was primarily a way of life, and it is the same thing today. By their fruits ye shall know them. A true Christian is one who lives the Christ-like life.

A Light from Heaven—A Voice.

There were supernatural elements in Paul's conversion. It cannot be explained on natural grounds. The second birth is a supernatural event. Let cynics and scoffers and the intelligentsia rule out all the things that they cannot explain by mere natural law, but the fact still remains that those who have experienced the new birth know that they have been born of God. Only one who has experienced the new birth is qualified to write about it. There may be factors which are mysterious and inexplicable, but there is no doubt in the mind of the man who has been soundly converted that it is a fact.

Persecuting Jesus.

"I am Jesus whom thou persecutest." Paul thought he was defending the faith. As a matter of fact he was persecuting Jesus. There are those who would deny that they would persecute Jesus. But by their indifference, by their disobedience, by their unwillingness to yield themselves to him, most of all by their mistreatment of their fellowmen, they persecute Jesus.

There is no anger in the Master's voice. Indeed the thing that broke Paul's heart was the note of tenderness and yearning in Jesus' voice.

The Difficulty of Going to the Devil.

"It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks." Paul had been desperately unhappy all the while. And while we have no reason for doubting his statement that he had lived in all good conscience, which he made later, there is evidence that in his heart there was doubt about his course, and a hunger for spiritual reality which the Law could not give. The way of the transgressor is hard. We talk about the difficulty of being good. As a matter of fact, it is difficult in the final analysis to be bad. God has put so many barriers in the way of the man who would give himself over to a life of wrong-doing and sin. There are a great many people today who are desperately unhappy because they are rejecting Christ and fighting against his constant wooing in the Spirit.

"Arise."

Christianity puts men on their feet, causes them to stand upright, helps them to see things from the proper perspective, helps them to see things straight and to see them whole. Its message to those who are down is "arise."

It Shall Be Told Thee What Thou Shalt Do.

Light did not come all at once. It seldom does. But he who sets his feet to walk in such light as he has will come eventually to the full light.

"What Wilt Thou Have Me to Do?"

The question indicated full and complete surrender. Paul did not want to do his own will; he wanted to know what God would have him do. It involved the willingness to do what God wanted him to do. The obedient spirit is an absolute essential to the full experience of God's grace.

Ananias.

There is seldom a conversion, indeed it is doubtful if there is ever a conversion in which there is not some human factor. Even in the case of Paul to whom there was granted a unique vision, God sent Ananias as one of his agents. Let every man be alert to resound to the impulse which God gives as concerning this matter and let him take heed lest he disobey.

Confession.

Paul immediately began to do something for Jesus. He made public confession and witnessed for him.

THINGS MATERIAL.

At no time in their history have the American people been so engrossed with interests purely material as they have been during the last decade. To get gain and to revel in the things of sense have been their chief interest and occupation. And the irony of it all is that never in the memory of man have riches so speedily taken wings. The pleasures have been "like poppies spread." These things in which men and women trusted most departed as quickly as frost in the morning sunshine. Instead of riches and the worldly living of the rich man, broken fortunes and suicides have been the order of the day. Truly the things in which men put their trust have failed utterly. May we learn that the unseen things abide.—N. C. Christian Advocate.

"A man that is young in years may be old in hours, if he have lost no time."—Bacon.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

"O Lord, I beseech thee, let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of thy servant, and to the prayer of thy servants, who desire to fear thy name, and prosper, I pray thee, thy servant this day."

MONDAY.

"Be strong and of good courage . . . for Jehovah thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest."—Joshua 1:9.

A God-consciousness in all the turns of life—in everyday events—is one of the highest achievements; and yet not so high but that it may be achieved by any person who believes and trusts. A poem quoted in a recent Sunday service:

"Other ships were blown and battered,
Other ships were sore distressed,
But the minds that seemed to drive them
Brought to us a peace and rest."

A motorist the other day had a puncture. Very philosophically he went to work to shift wheels. Just as he was about to put on the spare the jack fell down and his car was flat, too low for any jack. The only possible way to lift his car was by fulcrum and lever. He looked about him for something that would answer. There it was, a cement building block and a two-inch iron pipe about sixteen feet long. His problem was solved. For that man the Lord provided the block and pipe just for that occasion.

There are many hard places in life (we need them), but the Lord delivereth us out of them all. On the contrary it is easy to trace many sore misfortunes to disbelief or faithfulness of the individual. "Trust also on him, and he will bring it to pass." The glory of God.

Prayer—Our dear Father, show us thy way and help us to walk therein. We want the surety of heaven. Make us willing to believe and trust thee to the end.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

"Who hath sealed us and given us an earnest of the Spirit."—II. Cor. 1:22.

Moffatt says, "Who consecrated me, who stamped me with his seal and gave me the Spirit as a pledge in my heart."

Which version means more to you? The latter is explanatory and clarifying to the former. Paul never failed to realize that God had called him, had laid his hands upon him, and who with him giving him vision and heaven's word; and he never failed to acknowledge that fact. They at last killed him as a heretic; but they only killed his body. That death, like our Lord's, set in motion in this world the greatest good that mankind has ever known.

Contrast with Paul the rich young ruler who came to Jesus and asked him what he must do to inherit eternal life. Jesus said, "Keep the commandments." The young man replied, "I have kept all of them from my youth up. What do I lack?" Jesus told him to give his wealth to the poor and come and follow him. The young man went away and we have never heard from him since.

Which life are you living, Paul's or the young ruler's? You know.

Prayer—Dear Lord Jesus, take away from us our selfishness and pride. Teach us how to give ourselves to the world for Christ's sake.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

FAITH IS NECESSARY.

"Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God."—Romans 5:1.

How far does faith go to save us?

First: Faith is necessary. Faith is confidence in the reality of something unseen and known to exist in all life's relations. Without this faith things would soon perish. We have faith in our abilities; faith in things around us; faith in people, faith in business, etc., and with the interchange of faith life is successful and happy. Lose that faith, and things go to pieces.

Thos. Guthrie said, "Faith is the backbone of the whole social and commercial fabric. Remove faith from between man and man and society and commerce falls to pieces. There is not a happy home on earth but stands on faith. Our heads are pillowed on it, we sleep in its arms at night with greater security; we depend upon it for the safety of our lives, peace, prosperity, more than bolts and bars can give."

Faith is equally as important to our salvation. It is that power which, based on well recognized facts about God, sweeps away the doubts and fears lying in the veil of mystery about it all and lifts one into the realm where God is felt. No power in the world can sweep away the everlasting love which the heart feels and knows in Christ. Therefore it is the means of the life of love; it is the source of the courage of the soul; it is the road through the dark veil of the mysterious through which we pass from worldliness to heavenly mindedness; and it is the sense of surety in the unseen, without which we could not feel God nor hope for heaven.

Prayer—Our Father in heaven, we pray to thee as thou hast taught, to give us simple and unbending faith that unlocks the cabinet of thy treasures, that knows right makes might and that turns discord to harmony and gives us peace.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

HOW FAR?

"He that believeth on the Son hath eternal life."—John 3:36.

Alexander Maclaren said, "Given a man full of faith, you will have a man tenacious in purpose, absorbed in one grand object, simple, in his motives, in whom selfishness has been driven out by the power of a mightier love, and indolence stirred into unwearied energy."

If this is true, and we think it is, faith is the one great qualification for heaven, and is the supreme motivation of all Christian activity.

Having exercised faith, one is then ready for action. It may be compared to one's education: A young man graduates with a knowledge and training that equips him for life. It is up to him to put his knowledge and training into practice for the good of himself and mankind. His training is necessary but it gets him no where if not applied. In applying it through the years one fills up his life with the substance of things that make the goals of life a reality.

It may also be compared with the empty house which has been constructed and completed for occupying and living. It means nothing further than that until persons enter it, furnish it and make it a happy home.

Faith is thus in our lives: The embodiment of the knowledge and thought of God; the realm into which one casts himself for living, there he furnishes it with living traits that make God and heaven a reality. To do this, Peter says, "Add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to god-liness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity."

These are the Christian traits. Then the Apostle says, "If these things be in you, and abound (that is, increase) they will prevent you from being idle or unfaithful and furnish you with every good work."

Prayer—Our Father, give us a faith that is strong, and inspire us to the greatest action in clear and deep convictions for good and God. Teach us how to fill the temple of our souls with Christian traits that shall be fit for glory. In his name we ask it.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

A POSITIVE FAITH.

"Be no more children tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine by the sleight of men . . ."

"But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things . . . even Christ."—Eph. 4:14, 15.

Goethe listened to the doubts of others until one day he exclaimed, "If you have any faith, give me, for heaven's sake, a share of it! Your doubts you may keep to yourselves, for I have a plenty of my own."

Would that we all had the faith not to listen to the doubtful or the unseemly in others, but to admonish those who would shed doubt and unholy thought to keep all that to themselves. We all have enough of that. To enjoin them to give out good, if they have it, or nothing at all. All of us have too little of that, and if we all possessed all the good that is known by everybody, no one would then have too much.

"Grow up unto him in all things"—that is, union in Christ.

Prayer—O God, help us to live no longer in any perverseness or doubt. Give us courage and strength to listen to doubt, or dark understandings, but to warn others who engage in these things against the evil of such a thing and of the wrath to come. We pray thee, Lord, that we may share in the life which thou dost give. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

ACQUIRING FAITH.

"Looking to Jesus the author and finisher of our faith."—Heb. 12:2.

M. R. Vincent said, "Not infrequently persons are looking into their own hearts trying to discover whether they have faith or not, instead of looking away from themselves altogether at the object of faith.

Take note: Every person of the entire Bible story who became a Christian—follower of Christ—was made so through and by looking to Jesus. John looked upon him and became an apostle. Thomas could not find himself believing, but when he looked he said "My Lord and my God." Zaccheus would have nothing to do with him until he climbed a tree to see him, and when he looked at him, he forever after that was the Lord's.

Paul was not only a disbeliever but a murderer of those who did believe but when he met Jesus on the road to Damascus his whole life was changed.

'Tis true that we see by faith, but who has looked and failed to find him, and who has ever found him without first looking?

Every day men are seen to climb out on the boom of the ship, grab a line (geswarp) that holds a boat to the boom and slide down it to the boat. Before he thrusts himself to that line he may say, "I have faith in that line that it is made good and strong, and it will hold me," but only when he takes hold of it, trusts his weight

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

PRAISE IS COMELY.

Psalm 147:1:

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

Praise is beautiful, flattery is foolish. Underserved praise is flattery. The first great object of praise is God, and godliness in others may be praised. The very stating of kind acts, good deeds, pleasant and wise words in others is praise. It is better than cursing, far better. It is better than abuse, and condemnation. If we read the whole verse we shall find that praise is pleasant; and praise is comely." Pleasant and beautiful is praise. It is a pity that more of it is not done.

I. The lips index the life. Often words reveal far more than is intended. They reveal, as it were, too much. They show the listener the invisible things of life. They reveal age and outlook, attitude and hope, purpose and program of life to a far greater extent than is often realized. It is not always what is said that counts. The fact that anything is said, or that something is not said; the way in which it is said and when; the object of the words, and why—all of these things come into a sort of mental review as the listener takes in the situation. "Praise is beautiful, and praise is comely."

I can think of no better place to learn the art of beautiful and worthy praise than in the realm of religion. Yes, I mean religion, for what religion has there ever been on earth that has not had as its central activity praise? Pagans lay emphasis on lip-service—praise that is from the lips only—for there is no life in their idols that the deep things of the soul of the worshipped may respond to the depths of the soul of the worshipper. The difference in pagan praise and Christian praise is that the Christian's life must be a living pean of loving performance or the praise is looked upon as deception.

There is no better place to learn the art of Christian praise than in the church. From the time the little baby is carried to the cradle roll class, where its little ears—yea, its whole little being takes in the sweet, gentle songs of praise, and prayer, until one reaches a full appreciation of the hour of worship in the church service, there is no better place to learn the true art of praise than in the church.

The gentlest, finest lives I have ever known have been lives filled with praise of others—and first of all praise of God. They have been lives cradled in Christian homes, and cultured in the Christian Church; they have been people who loved much, and have always put their church and church people first in their affections. My friends, they have learned a wisdom of words finer than the logic of rhetoric, or the rules of grammar, for some of them have "butchered the King's English," but have not blasted the lives of their friends nor marred their own opportunities for usefulness. They learned a culture at the house of praise; they learned that praise is pleasant; praise is comely.

If wisdom's ways you wisely seek,
Five things observe with care:
Of whom you speak, to whom you speak,
And how, and when, and where.

II. Kind words are stronger than the king's armies. Once upon a time there was a kingdom with kings good and bad. Bad kings had jeopardized the welfare of that kingdom. Its enemies had been greatly multiplied. Then came a good king. He was one who went regularly to the temple of God to pray and to worship. He taught his people to go to God's house for the same purpose. He had a great choir organized to lead the people in song. "And it came to pass that the children of Moab, and the children of Ammon, and others besides the Ammonites, came against Jehosaphat to battle. Then there came some that told Jehosaphat, saying, There cometh a great multitude against thee from beyond the sea on this side of Syria. And Jehosaphat feared and set himself to seek the Lord, and proclaimed a fast throughout all Judah." And the leader of Jehosaphat's great choir said unto King Jehosaphat: "Thus saith the Lord unto you, Be not afraid nor dismayed by reason of this great multitude; for the battle is not yours, but God's. And do you know what he was instructed to do? When his armies began their march against the enemy the singers were placed in front of the spearmen—song before the sword—and as they marched they sang: "Praise the Lord, for his mercy endureth forever. And when they began to sing and to praise, the Lord set ambushments against the children of Ammon, Moab, and Mount Seir, which were come against Judah, and they were smitten." Song saved the day. Praise performed where the sword had failed.

O, that men and nations, today, would learn that force has lost its favor; that the Prince of Peace has placed love on the highest pinnacle of human relationships; that kindness is still king; that praise is comely! Have you ever compared the kings of Jesus' day with Jesus? Herod fought with the sword, severing even the heads of babies from their little shoulders. Jesus fought not at all—only loved. Herod is forgotten as a power; Jesus was never more alive! Caesar's legions subjected others to him with engines of warfare. Jesus said simply—"Come, follow me." And what lines of loving allegiance have been formed behind him from that day to this—a never-ending army of loving servants from every walk and station in life have given themselves gladly and unreservedly to him.

I wish we could visualize that army. Plowboys from every agricultural section of the world have heard his call and they have come; girls in every land have listened eagerly to the Christ-story of love and the half has never been told of their loyalty and devotion; men and women from humble places have been fired with a great desire to do yeoman service for their Lord; and men and women of great talent, learning, and influence have loved the peasant Teacher, become as little children at his feet, and dedicated their all to him. The greater the pain and suffering that they have had to undergo, the more steadfast they have been.

Faith of our fathers living still
In spite of dungeon, fire and sword;
O, how our hearts beat high with joy
Whene'er we hear the glorious word.

III. We may practice the art of proper praise. Kind words or none is a very good slogan. And I wish to insert just here that I found the subject and thought of this sermon in the hearts of the people of Suffolk. Not only have you said kind words about me—and I would be inhuman indeed if I did not appreciate them—but more to my edification have been the kind words of love and appreciation you have unceasingly lavished upon my predecessors. And how kindly you have spoken of one another, and of your neighboring churches of other denominations and the ministers thereof. Your words have been a constant pean of praise, and so when I heard, saw and felt the sincerity of it, I wanted to join with the psalmist in saying: "Praise is beautiful, praise is comely!"

How the world hungers for kindness and love! If sincere kindness could be sown across the earth as it is sown across a truly God-fearing community, how blessed the world would be. And on the other hand, how the seeds of fear, and jealousy, and slander, and falsehood can blight and sting as they wend their slimy way through ugly hearts and cruel lips! They leave their deposits of poison, and everyone who gives wings to a false or ugly word is far worse himself for having done so, and others have been hurt besides.

Boys flying kites haul in their white-winged birds;
But you can't do that when you're flying words.
"Careful with fire," is good advice you know;
"Careful with words," is ten times doubly so.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

October, November and December are the three months set apart by the Convention to lay special emphasis on the support of the Christian Orphanage. This week is the beginning of our period of special activities. Financing the Christian Orphanage is no one man's job. It is no one church's job. It is no one individual's job. It takes the united effort of every church, every Sunday School and every individual. It takes the co-operation of all combined to make the work a success. The Christian denomination can easily support the Christian Orphanage with a hundred children if each and every one will do something to help.

Let everybody be a booster for the Orphanage for the next three months, and help us raise the largest Thanksgiving offering we have received for several years. Last year the weather was so bad through the month of December many people could not go to church—hence the offerings were small and disappointing. It has made financing hard this year, as we had no surplus to carry us over the lean months as we usually had.

Now, we want an organization in every church to help put the Orphanage over during the three months, making Thanksgiving the crowning goal.

First. We want the pastor to head the organization in each church and urge the members to lay aside something to help swell the Thanksgiving offering in the church.

Second. We want the Sunday School superintendent to head the organization in the Sunday School in each church, and talk the Thanksgiving offering from time to time and get the Sunday School interested and anxious to take part in it.

Third. We want each teacher of a Sunday School class to talk to her class from time to time and ask them to lay aside something each week for the offering, and help swell the offering and make it something to be proud of.

With this organization in each church and Sunday School, and each department doing its duty, I feel sure our Thanksgiving will be a success this year.

Will you accept the responsibility placed on you in your department?

THE SUN'S PULPIT. (Continued from page 13.)

If we truly worship, regularly and earnestly, in God's house, it will sweeten our words and lighten our lives, and place a song upon our lips even in the days of hottest battle. The Saviour, dying on the cross, quoted a song he had learned in the sanctuary. A refrain from the music of David came to his lips, and after that he was able to say, "Into thy hands I commend my life." Neglect not the opportunity to praise God in the holy hour of worship. Let it open the gates of your lives in sincere gratitude and loving appreciation for all the goodness of God to you, and it will cleanse your souls and freshen your lives as open windows on a sunny morning!

A Story for the Children

CLOCKS.

There is scarcely a home in our land that has not a clock or watch in it. Think of the confusion there would be at the stores, banks, schools and churches if there were no timepieces. We would have to get up with the sun and go to bed when it sets, just as the birds do, and as far as the noon hour goes, our stomachs would tell us that.

There was a time when there were no clocks such as we have. Jesus didn't have any in his home in Nazareth. The method of computing time in his day was by means of a sundial. Perhaps you have seen one, a flat, round slab with an upright rod in the center. When the sun shines, the rod casts a shadow on a number on the slab. As the earth keeps turning, the shadow moves on indicating the hour. But when the sun didn't shine how could the children of that day know when to come home from the fields? How could one tell when it was five minutes of two or eighteen minutes after the hour?

The American Indians, who used to own our country, reckoned time by the moon. When they had been away a certain place for several months, they would say, "Many moons have passed since I was there."

One old chief planned a war in which several tribes were to take part. These tribes lived many miles from each other. He visited each camp and gave each chief a bundle of sticks. "Throw one away every day," he said, "and when you have one left, meet me at my village and we will begin to fight." Sometimes they counted time with "wampum," or beads made from shells.

King Alfred invited a different method. He lit a large candle which was marked with rings. As the candle burned from ring to ring, he noted the passing of the hours.

Then there was the water glass arrangement so that water trickled from one vessel to another. Some were made to represent children crying with water dripping from their eyes like tears. When the water stopped flowing, the measured time was up.

Our ancestors used hour glasses. These were two glass globes connected by a narrow tube. One was filled with sand which ran from the upper globe into the lower. When the sand was all out of the upper one, an hour had passed.

These various ways were neither practical nor accurate and so our modern clocks were invented. Just who did it is not known. The Chinese claim the honor as early as 2000 B. C., and the Germans in the eleventh century. The oldest clock of which we have complete description was set up in the tower of Charles the Fifth of France in 1379 by a German named Charles DeVick. Upon his principles most of our modern timepieces are constructed.

Resolved to live with all my might while I live. Resolved, never to lose one moment of time, to improve it in the most profitable way I possibly can. Resolved, never to do anything which I should despise or think meanly of in another. Resolved, never to do anything out of revenge. Resolved, never to do anything which I should be afraid to do if it were the last hour of my life. —Jonathan Edwards.

FAMILY ALTAR.

to it and swings down over the sea to leap to his boat can it be said that he knows that line and believes in it. It is no mere opinion then, it is an act. He lets go everything else and thrusts his whole life to the braided strands of hemp.

Prayer—O God, our Father, give us confidence to accept the free gift—the Son—as our Saviour, and may we rest absolutely upon the merit, power and love of our redeemer.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE SOUL GOES MARCHING ON.

"I will take the cup of salvation and call upon the name of the Lord."—Psa. 116:13.

So faith is not only believing in something as a matter of fact, but it is believing in it by casting one's all upon it. It is not only believing that Jesus is right, but it is going with him where he leads us. We may believe that the analysis of water may be so virtuous, but unless we drink of its purifying power it is of no use to us. The soul that has not actually taken Christ and drunk of him can never be purified of sin. It will not save us to know that Christ is the Saviour, but it will save us to trust on him as our Saviour.

It is in this way that Alexander McLaren has summed up the whole process of salvation: "If one has faith, then new birth; if new birth, then sonship; if sonship, then heir of God and joint heir with Christ."

Prayer—Our Father, dear Lord of our souls, we cry unto thee, "Abba Father." O, hear our cry that we may lack nothing in this vital need of the soul. Grant, we pray thee, the soul of Christ in our souls and send coursing through us the nutriment of thy blessed wine, the Lord Jesus.—Amen.

OBITUARIES

COOK.

On August 25, 1933, God in his infinite love saw fit to remove from our midst, one of our beloved members, Mrs. Eliza Jane Cook. She was a devoted mother, a loyal member of Bethlehem Christian Church and Ladies' Aid Society.

The members of the Ladies' Aid Society tender the following resolutions:

1. While we regret and mourn our loss we humbly submit to the will of him who doeth all things well.

2. That the influence of this sweet spirited woman will linger with us, making more real the loving Father whom she served so faithfully.

3. That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the devoted family.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to "The Christian Sun," a copy to the family of the deceased, and a copy placed in the minutes of our Society.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, Our Heavenly Father, in his infinite wisdom and love, has called to his eternal home, our beloved sister and friend, Mrs. Mollie Lee, who was a loyal and faithful member of the Franklin Christian Church for nearly forty years, and was called to her reward on June 12, 1933. She was the widow of Deacon Albert T. Lee. For a long time she was afflicted and remained in bed, but was a patient sufferer and was kind and considerate.

We, therefore, offer the following tribute to her memory:

1. That we mourn the loss of this good woman, but bow in submission to his will.

2. That we hold in loving remembrance

Mosquito Eradication.—

Virginians, and possibly other readers as well, will welcome the statement which appeared in the daily papers, that Maryland and Virginia are to be included in the area designated for mosquito control work. It is quite good news that the mosquitoes who inhabit these two States are not the kind which carry malaria, but they can nevertheless bite as well as any breed yet bred. The "eradicators" cannot come too soon.

A Pocket Radio at Last.—

While the general trend in radio equipment recently has been toward a larger instrument, the smaller, or midget, models are getting still smaller. Beneath the mantelpiece and table-top sizes which some manufacturers feared would ruin the business, has appeared a new class of candy-box sizes. Last year small radios operating on any current available were introduced, and now comes a pocket size edition, weighing but two pounds, two inches thick and four and a half inches wide. This new midget sells for $12.50 and will receive anywhere.

A Boulder Dam Shut-off.—

Business Week, in the issue of September 30th, shows a picture of one of the eight big shut-off valves which are to be installed in the giant 32-foot intake gates at Boulder Dam. There are to be eight of these monster shut-offs or gates located in four intake towers. They are to be used for controlling the volume of water fed to the hydraulic turbines. They required in construction 2,300 tons of steel plate, ferrous castings, bronze, copper, monel metal and stainless steel, fabricated with 8½ miles of weld. This first valve, which has just been completed, required eleven freight cars for its shipment.

The Bible in Spain.—

In Madrid a week was recently set apart by the government for the public exhibition and sale of books. All the important publishing houses of Spain took advantage of the opportunity to display the best they had. "To our astonishment," says Dr. Ganzalez in The Watchman, "the Bible Society booth was the best attended and their sales larger during the whole week than those of any other publishing house. The Minister of Education, Professor Fernando de los Rios, and the Mayor of Madrid, Don Pedro Rico, visited the booth and allowed themselves to be photographed with some of the evangelical leaders. Professor de los Rios ordered several hundred Bibles for the new public libraries.—The Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

The Flying Pullman.—

The Pullman has come out with a new design in Pullman construction. Airplane designer William B. Stout once condemned the railroads for sticking to precedent and thinking in terms of "Civil War railroading." Asked what he would do about it if he were in the business, this new Pullman is the answer. This new railplane is built on aircraft principles. It has chromium-molybdenum steel tube frame, a shell of duralumin welded with wind-tunnel lines. It is powered by two automotive engines which drive the wheels of the front truck, and has a speed of 90 miles an hour because streamlining has reduced wind resistance over 50 per cent. It carries 50 people in air-conditioned comfort, weighing only 25,000 pounds against the standard weight of 160,000 pounds. Providing speedy, spacious transportation at low rate, the Flying Pullman is another answer to airplane transportation.

Shall We Never Learn?—

Premier John Mowinckel, of Norway, in opening League of Nations Assembly at Geneva, declared that the world is still threatened with the menace of war, and urged a strengthening of the credit of the League in the eyes of the world. "Fifteen years after the close of the great, fratricidal crime, the Great War," he said, "we find to our shame that we have made little progress toward a better understanding, a purer atmosphere and a healthier mentality among people. On the contrary, the thought of war and the possibility of war are ever present, hanging over the nations as a constant menace." Referring to disarmament, he said the conference session earlier this year was held without concrete results, but declared, "We still cherish hopes."—The Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

Beer vs. Milk.—

When beer was outlawed folks took to milk drinking, until the milk business increased beyond the producers' fondest hopes; and they were obliged to install new machinery and equipment to care for the business. Now, after four months of legalized beer, the milk dealers are in such a plight from the drop-off in business that the government found it necessary to give them $30,000,000 partially to make up for the wrong done. When the thirty million is spent, is Uncle Sam going to donate another thirty million? In other words, how many thirty millions are going to be required to keep beer legalized? What profit can the United States Treasury count when the $5 tax collected on a barrel of beer must be turned back to the industries that the beer business has wrecked? Whiskey, brandy and gin are not yet legalized. It is not too late yet to turn back. Internal revenue figures show that for every dollar paid by liquor in taxes (1862 to 1919) the drinker spent more than $28.—White Ribbon Herald.

Movie Influence.—

"What will your child see at the movies this week?" This pertinent question is asked by Fred Eastman, in a recent issue of The Christian Century. Mr. Eastman continues by enumerating some of the influences of the present-day moving picture, as follows: "He may see one of the good and great pictures, but the chances are that the principal picture will be saturated with crime and sex out of all proportion to normal living. It will contain at least one or two murders and various other forms of exciting violence. It will be set against a background of luxury. It will contain drinking, represented as either funny or the accepted thing in American society. It will be peopled by a cheap and tawdry population often vulgarly overdressed, often shady in character, sensual, unrestrained, lascivious, much given to crime and sex, with little desire or need apparently of supporting themselves on this difficult planet . . . but poor, beglamored, unprepared adolescents may be moved to imitate them and to their heavy cost. What effect will such a picture—and the 51 others he will see this year—have upon your child's imagination, his health, his emotions, his attitudes, his conduct?"

Dr. Newcomb Heads Virginia University.—

After a delay of two and a half years, Dr. John Lloyd Newcomb, who has during that time been the acting head of the University of Virginia, was on October 7th unanimously elected president of the institution by the board of visitors. The appointment, said Fred W. Scott, rector of the board, is effective as of October 1st. Dr. Newcomb is the second man to occupy the chair of president of this many-year-old institution, having succeeded the late Edwin A. Alderman, who died in the spring of 1931. The choice of Dr. Newcomb will prove a most popular one at the University, his selection having been urged in recent resolutions adopted by 110 of the faculty members, as well as the student body and several alumni clubs. The date of his formal installation has not yet been announced. The first president was a North Carolinian, coming to Virginia from the position of president of the University of North Carolina, in early part of the century. The present president is a native of Virginia, having been born in Gloucester County in Tidewater Virginia, on December 18, 1881. He received his A. B. degree from William and Mary in 1900, and later graduated in engineering at the institution he now heads. He served as a division engineer on the Norfolk and Southern Railroad for a while, returning to the university as an adjunct professor in 1905. He became an associate professor in 1909 and a full professor in the school of engineering in 1910. He became dean of the engineering school in 1925 and assistant to the president in 1926.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

The happiest man I know does not have much, but he has learned how to do without a great deal—Milton Lee.

The Managing Editor, John T. Kernodle, is attending the Alabama Conference this week, at New Hope Church, near Abanda, Ala.

Haw River Church will observe its 38th anniversary Sunday, October 15, 1933. All former members and friends have a cordial invitation to be present. A picnic dinner will be served. Rev. G. C. Crutchfield is pastor of this church.

The meeting at Hopedale, Rev. J. Everette Neese, pastor, closed Sunday night, October 8th. The pastor's father, Rev. J. L. Neese, assisted in the meetings, which lasted a week. There were 49 conversions and eleven joined the church.

The Woman's Mission Board of the Eastern Virginia Conference, was in all-day session at Suffolk Christian Church, Thursday, October 5th, and the Woman's Board of the North Carolina Conference was in session at Burlington Church, Monday, October 9th, each planning for their annual sessions which come soon and for the work of the Missionary Societies for the year.

Rev. Carl H. Corwin, superintendent of the West Tampa Mission, reports that the Day School of the Mission has opened finely. The teachers report an attendance larger than at the opening last year. All the workers who have been connected with the Mission for the last three years have returned to the work and have vigorous plans made for the clubs and Sunday School and various church activities.

The Eaton, Ohio, Congregational-Christian Church, of which Rev. E. T. Cotten is pastor, entertained about four hundred ministers and delegates during the district convention of Congregational-Christian Churches, which was held on October 5th and 6th. A full program kept the convention busy both days, as there are about ninety churches in this organization. Many ministers known to us in the Southland were present, including Dr. O. S. Thomas, Rev. E. B. Flory, and Rev. M. J. Sweet, who was a visitor from North Carolina. Rev. E. T. Cotten is himself a son of Eastern Virginia, and an alumnus of Elon College. The musical programs of the convention were under the direction of Mr. Cotten, who is a musician as well as a preacher. Mrs. Cotten also is a singer, and rendered several selections, while the Junior Choir rendered an anthem at the Thursday evening session.

LONG'S CHAPEL REVIVAL.

On the third Sunday in September, we began revival services at Long's Chapel, the pastor preaching at the morning hour. Rev. J. L. Neese of Palm Street Church, Greensboro, N. C., did the preaching at the evening hour at each service thereafter, until the close of the meeting. His messages were well received by attentive and interested audiences. The meeting continued until Friday evening. There were some twenty-five or thirty consecrations and professions. At the close of the meeting, thirteen were received into church fellowship.

THE FLORIDA CONVOCATION.

The seventh annual Florida Ministers' Convocation was held at DeLeon Springs, October 2nd-5th. This was the first meeting in this delightful place and the fine fellowship made possible because all were living and meeting under one roof added greatly to the enjoyment and success of the Convocation. Nearly all of the Florida pastors were present and also some of the wives and friends. The program was a solid one and was filled full, but was thoroughly enjoyed by all and regarded as one of the best programs in the series. Dr. J. Edward Kirby, of Raleigh, gave a series of five lectures on the general subject, "The Growth of Religious Independence in the South," with vivid, human, interesting, and thoroughly historical knowledge. He was able to make all to feel the strength of the movements which are the backgrounds of the Congregational-Christian denominations in the South and to give us a vivid sense of the importance of our contributions to the developing life in this region. It was the feeling of all that Dr. Kirby should further develop these lectures and that they should be issued in a book.

Rev. Leslie J. Barnette, of Coral Gables, who has had some years of post-graduate study in Religious Education in Union Theological Seminary in New York, and who has had a rich and successful experience in building a real educational program for a church, gave a series of lectures on the subject: "The Minister, a Religious Educator." He especially developed the two-hour religious education program for Sunday mornings, a program which his church has adopted in Coral Gables, combining the Sunday School with the morning service, and yet maintaining the regular preaching period. His full discussion of a Communicant's Class program was rich in suggestion as to method and also as indicating what splendid materials are available for the pastor who searches for them and is keen to adapt them to the psychology of a child or youth.

Dr. E. A. King, of Miami Beach, gave two vivid and interesting lectures on his recent Mediterranean trip. One was upon "Red Russia," and the other on "The Land and the Book."

There was an informal discussion on current pastoral problems led by Rev. Frank Atkinson, and a discussion of conference and missionary problems led by Superintendent Gillette. The devotional periods were conducted by Dr. C. A. Vincent, of Winter Park, and Rev. C. DeW. Brower, of Interlachen. Rev. J. Bernard Root, of Sanford, was elected Convener and Rev. Lawrence A. Gedcke, of St. Petersburg, Secretary.

Resolutions were passed concerning the deaths of Rev. Charles L. Fisk, D. D., Rev. George L. Hanscom, D. D., and Rev. H. Samuel Fritsch, D. D., and also concerning the death of the mother of Rev. Helen L. Lanham, whose death prevented Mrs. Lanham from attending the Convocation.

It was also heartily voted to hold the next Convocation at DeLeon Springs.

NOTICE OF CONFERENCE MEETING.

The Eastern North Carolina Conference will hold its annual session with the Wentworth Christian Church, at McCullers, N. C., November 1st and 2nd, beginning at 10 o'clock, A. M.

All churches are urged to send up full delegations, all delegates and ministers are requested to be present at the opening session and remain until the close of Conference. There is great need for the churches to raise as much as possible of the apportionments requested. Our contributions last session were not up to the usual amount, but the needs were greater than ever. We should do our best for Christ. He has done his best for us.

W. C. WICKER, President,
Eastern North Carolina Conference.

LANETT, ALABAMA.

We closed our conference year at Lanett last night. I think we are making a commendable report to our annual conference. During the year just closing we have paid all current expenses, and practically all small accounts against the church, have reduced our church building debt from $1,367.77 to $907.67. Our church has elected officers and Sunday School teachers for another year. Our Sunday School is gaining in attendance and interest. It has been reorganized and is doing fine work now.

Through the efforts of our missionary women, we have been able to beautify the interior of our auditorium, and will stain our pews immediately after conference.

We have raised something over $1,800.00 for church work for this year. We have added 34 new members to our roll, lost none by death and only two by letter. We are praying and planning for a great revival in the near future. Our conference meets tomorrow, at New Hope Church. We will have a great meeting. Thus closes in many ways the hardest year of my ministry, but a very pleasant year. I have asked the Lord to give me hard work to do, and sustain me with sufficient grace to do it. And so he has. Next year, if it is his will, we must do greater things for him. And we will if we expect greater things from him. Pray for us at Lanett. It takes a lot of prayer, if one stays close to Jesus.

G. D. HUNT.

NOTICE.

The Committee on Education, Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, will meet in the Y. M. C. A. Building, Portsmouth, Va., Monday, October 16th, at 2 o'clock, P. M. All persons having business with the Committee are requested to be present, or communicate with the Committee on that date.

I. W. JOHNSON,
Chairman.

CONFERENCES WILL MEET.

The Eastern Virginia Conference will meet with Holy Neck Christian Church, near Holland, Va., on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, November 1st, 2nd and 3rd. Opening session 10 o'clock Wednesday morning.

The Western North Carolina Conference will meet with the Ramseur Christian Church, Ramseur, N. C., on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, November 7th, 8th and 9th.

The North Carolina and Virginia Conference will meet with Union Christian Church, Alamance County, N. C., on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, November 14th, 15th and 16th.

The Eastern North Carolina Conference will meet on Tuesday and Wednesday, November 21st and 22nd. Place to be published later.

The Alabama Conference will meet with New Hope Church, two and one-half miles from Abanda, Chambers County, Ala., on Tuesday and Wednesday, October 10th and 11th. West-bound train reaches Abanda at 12:55 P. M., and east-bound train at 8:40, there being only two trains daily.

The Georgia State Conference will meet with the United Church, LaGrange, Ga., Tuesday and Wednesday, October 31st and November 1st. Rev. J. H. Dollar, president of the conference, is also pastor of the entertaining church.

There is transcendent power in example. We reform others unconsciously when we walk uprightly.—Madame Swetchine.

GIVING GOD THE GLORY.

There are times when complimentary remarks are addressed to Christians as well as to other folks. To one of God's children it has always seemed that they could not be accepted as her due, and she often remarks that if there is anything loveable or desirable in her it is only because God's grace has been poured out upon her.

The Psalmist has said, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory." It seems that all such remarks tend to vanity, to the feeling that it is our own goodness. But there is no genuine goodness only of God; so when something nice is said to us or of us, we should give God the glory. It has been said that to be humble, the pride of life must die; to be meek the will must be fully yielded to his will. As Christians we must realize that "the service of Christ is the business of life; the will of Christ is the law of life; the presence of Christ is the joy of life; the glory of Christ is the crown of life." We know that all of this is true and because of this anything we do or say that is at all worth while is only because Christ controls our lives. "We are nothing; God through Christ, must be everything." When we think of the humiliation of Christ in his death upon the cruel cross for our sins, we should ever magnify his name, for "The cross is the symbol of the overwhelming love of God for his children. The life of Christ is glorious to the Christian. But it is in the cross that he seeks absolute, unspeakable love reaching down to him and suffering all things to reach him."

Christ gave his all for us, he gave up all that we might know him and the power of his resurrection. Shall we not fellowship him in his suffering that the precious name of our Saviour Lord shall be magnified? Yes, some folks will think us queer, but some will be helped as we say, "Not I, but Christ," and we will see the brightening face and the uplifted head of some one who needs the encouragement that our testimony gives. W.

THE DAYS FOR HIGH ADVENTURE.

These are the days for high adventure in the realm of the spirit. It is a season that calls for holy daring. We should seek to call back the Spirit of '76, with Patrick Henry as its fiery spokesman, and King's Mountain and Guilford Courthouse the climax of its daring. There seems also to be a call for the spirit of Martin Luther and John Knox and other mighty leaders in the struggle for civil and religious liberty.

It is time, as Edwin Markham says, when men should dare "to walk alone and vote with God." Read if you will what Markham says about the demands of the hour:

Fling forth the triple-colored flag to dare
The bright, untraveled highways of the air.
Blow the undaunted bugles, blow, and yet
Let not the boast betray us to forget.
Lo, there are high adventures for this hour,
Tours to test the sinews of our power.
For we must parry, as the years increase,
The hazards of success, the risks of peace!
What do we need to keep the nation whole,
To guard the pillars of the state? We need
The fine audacities of honest deed;
The homely integrities of soul;
The swift temerities that take the part
Of the outcast right—the wisdom of the heart.
We need the Cromwell fire to make us feel
The common burden and the public trust
To be a thing as sacred and august
As the white vigil where the angels kneel.
We need the faith to go a path untrod,
The power to be alone and vote with God."

—N. C. Christian Advocate.

MY PRAYER.

I do not ask, my God, for mystic power
To heal the sick and lame, the deaf and blind;
I ask thee humbly for the gracious dower
Just to be kind.
I do not pray to see the shining beauty
Of highest knowledge most divinely true;
I pray that, knowing well my duty,
This I may do.
I do not ask that men with flattering finger
Should point me out within the crowded mart,
But only that he thought of me may linger
In one glad heart.
I would not rise upon the men below me,
Or pulling at the robes of men above;
I would that friends, a few dear friends, may know me,
And knowing, love.
I do not pray for palaces of splendor
Or for amid the world's delights to roam;
I pray that I may know the meaning tender
Of home, sweet home.
I do not ask that heaven's golden treasure
Upon my little blundering life be spent;
But oh, I ask thee for the perfect pleasure
Of calm content.

—Amos R. Wells.

PLANT A CONIFER FOR THE BIRDS.

One or two evergreens on the lawn not only add dignity to the landscape gardening scheme, but they are a Godsend to birds at all times of the year. In winter you can scarcely pass a Norway spruce without starting out a flock of birds which have sought shelter in it. They are safe from storm; safe from cats; for it takes a brave and persistent cat to face the stiff bristles of a spruce. Bob-whites have been repeatedly known to seek shelter in the well-known circle under a spruce, heads pointing outward. Then, if disturbed, they are all fixed for scattering to all points of the compass in flight.

Evergreens may be planted either in the spring while dormant or in late August or September. In the spring the ground is usually moist. In the fall this moisture must be supplied artificially. Soak with water each week, if transplanted in the fall, and mulch freely for winter protection. It is the fashion now to buy small potted Christmas trees. This is an excellent custom, and all such trees should be carefully planted and cared for. This will largely obviate the so-called "slaughter" of Christmas trees and place them on a sure footing in the forestry plan.—Bessie L. Putnam, in Our Dumb Animals.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

WHERE IS THE HOLY SPIRIT?

This searching question comes with new emphasis from a convert to Christianity, now a world-renowned Christian preacher and statesman of Tokyo, Japan, viz., Dr. Kagawa, the famous author of "The Law of Love," and other volumes. Dr. Kagawa is moving Japan as possibly no other living man is doing, or has done in a decade. This flaming disciple of our Lord, who, by his love and learning, his zeal and consecration, has caught the ear of the Japanese, is thinking in terms of the recent Laymen's Report on "Rethinking Missions." Dr. Kagawa wants to know what the laymen did "about the Holy Spirit and why they left him out of their report and reckoning." He believes that the only safe guidance in doing missionary work is that of the Holy Spirit, and that missionaries may well be sent out and go when and where he leads. Quoting this man of God, who is heading the Kingdom of God Movement in Japan, we find these searching lines:

"Jesus Christ sent out his seventy disciples to evangelize without purse or scrip, without even extra sandals. They believed in the guidance of the Holy Spirit. In their train followed the Moravian missionaries. The John Williams' missionary party, too, in the time of the Napoleonic wars, left London for the South Seas on the same basis. If money is not forthcoming, then money is not needed! Have we not dedicated our very lives to Christ?"

Dr. Kagawa thinks that those who were rethinking Missions were thinking in terms of retrenchment rather than in a new strategy of attack or the power of advance. He declares that while money helps and is essential in Mission work, it is not the only resource, and that where the Holy Spirit leads resources follow. This is a very bold statement:

"When there ceases to be money in America, then America may cease to send out its missionaries. Nevertheless, there must remain many young people who desire to dedicate their lives to foreign missions without receiving such high salaries as are paid now. Those who are led by the Holy Spirit succeed in a wonderful, mysterious manner. The Holy Spirit makes them successful. No evangelism is possible without prayer. The prayer-answering God leads on through his Holy Spirit."

That which comes home to this man of God is that the report was written from an economic rather than from a religious point of view, and on this account the report does not inspire him nor move him by its cultural plan. He is in no frame of mind to retreat, but, with Gideon of old, declares that if any wish to retreat, they had better do so, "but let others who have been led by the Holy Spirit continue to cross the Pacific Ocean, bearing the Cross of Christ. The harvest is plentiful but the laborers are few. I am still rising for prayer at midnight. This present age is evil. The age of Nero was also evil. But Christ's teachings at length conquered the Roman Empire. I am convinced that the Good News of Love through the Cross of Jesus Christ will lead the Orient and the whole world into the light."

Again and again in this summons to the task of helping save the unsaved, this great man of God comes back to his original question: "Can those who think of continuing the movement started in the Book of Acts attempt to do so without the help of the Holy Spirit?" In the light of the facts recorded in Acts, and being studied now in our Sunday School lessons, of the life of Paul, we realize the necessity of having the guidance of the Holy Spirit, if our machine age is to recover its soul, and the world is to be redeemed through the Son of righteousness. With this notable Christian of Japan we may well ask ourselves, "Where is the Holy Spirit?"

J. O. A.

THE LARGEST DIVIDENDS.

We naturally like to get the highest dividends possible for our money invested. One may say, without fear of successful contradiction, that the highest dividends in actual values for any money invested in the cause of benevolence, charity or righteousness is that invested in Missions. The money invested in Missions has been instrumental in producing more wealth, saving more souls, doing more for civilization and the cause of righteousness than that invested in any other cause whatsoever. It was a converted Brahman from India who gave a convincing answer once and for all to the question, "Do Missions Pay?" Speaking before a great audience in Philadelphia some years ago, The Missionary Review of the World quotes Dr. Sheshadri, of India, who said: "This cultured audience convinces me that Missions pay. Long after India had reached a high state of civilization, your ancestors were barbarous and degraded heathen. It was foreign missions in the early days of Christianity that lifted them out of this state and gave them and you, their descendants, the Christian civilization and enlightenment you now enjoy. You owe what you are to foreign missions."

We often quote the economic slogan: "Trade follows the flag." We need to be reminded that the Bible and the Gospel had to precede the flag before it could be carried to some of the richest marts of trade and make trade possible and profitable.

With the small amount of money now being spent to maintain the Gospel in mission fields at home and abroad, more is being realized, more achieved than with the same amount of expenditure in any other cause whatsoever. Had it been otherwise, the Lord Christ would not have instituted Missions.

THE LAND AND THE BOOK.

In a recent article in this paper, Dr. R. C. Helfenstein says: "The more we realize that the Bible tells us of real people and real places, real towns, cities and landmarks, places as real as those of our own homes and our next door neighbors, the greater will be our appreciation of the reality of the Bible itself, the higher will be our evaluation of the significance of its message."

This is a splendid paragraph and I wish to approve it with my whole heart and mind for I have had that experience this past summer. I took with me a copy of Moffatt's translation of the New Testament and I read every word from Acts first to the end of Revelation. Some of it I read on the ship, some in Jerusalem, some in Damascus, some in Malta where St. Paul's Bay makes the shipwreck of Paul seem so real, and parts of it in bed in my stateroom. I never enjoyed reading the Bible so much in my life. And I read much in the Gospels. Somehow it all seemed new to me. I understood it better. It seemed real.

It was a great thrill to find the book and the land fitting into each other. I do not mean that the so-called "holy places," fitted the Book or made it seem more real. As a matter of fact, I think many of those spots are manufactured for the benefit of pilgrims. It may be a good thing for some of them, but the land, hills, rivers, lakes, mountains, villages and the general impression of everything like these agree with the descriptions given in the Book. There are the people and their customs, the shepherds and their sheep, and many other things that give proof of reality.

Those who read the Bible as I have done all my life, without any personal proof of the existence of the Land, they feel reassured that the Land is there just as the Bible reader would expect to find it. Now that I have seen it myself, I desire to pass on my experience to others to help them feel the same sense of reality.

OUR WASHINGTON WINDOW.

By W. KNIGHTON BLOOM, D. D.

The summer is almost in the past as this message is written. It has been one of urge and stir and strength, in thinking, teaching, preaching and doing. It has sounded the call for explorers, and the response has been a larger conception of the Jesus way of living. The outreach has enlarged horizons and revealed unexpected powers. The music of an eternal quest has been heard in the midst of throngs of children in glad, well-organized play hours. Youth has revelled in study groups, in prose, poem, woodcraft and needlecraft contact. Fun has been jolly and genuine. Boys and girls under competent direction, and youth from eighteen to the age limit of being young, helpful minded, with wonder-lure and service-lure, have passed the threshold of the open door and, taking the ordinary things of life, have woven them into tapestries of loving doing for others.

In "Stature," by Eleanor Chase, the author says:

On white nights I see the house
That God built in the sky;
The clouds its smoke, the moon the lamp
He lights his door by.
Some white night I shall be
A celestial caller;
I could reach the door-latch now
If I were a little taller.

The door-latch has been reached by many during the summer days of 1933. From Maine to Florida and from the Atlantic Seaboard to the Gulf of Mexico the growing service activities of the Eastern Division of the Congregational Church Extension Boards and the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches marked both breadth and height.

One can easily believe in the never failing power of human life to respond to great and commanding tasks. If it is true that anything worthwhile has to be an experience before it is an expression, then some thrilling stories may be looked for. In the States comprising the missionary units in the territory served, and in cooperation with other States, pastors in industrial, rural and mountain-top parishes have gone forth in the daring spirit of the explorer and, of course, something has happened. There has been the translation of rough character into beautiful living, and hard conditions into high thinking and gracious doing.

Summer conferences have again challenged our young people, and groups of adults have gathered in many places to inform and inspire. Ten major conferences were held: Blue Ridge, N. C.; Elon College, N. C.; Florida (two sections); King's Mountain, N. C.; New Iberia, La.; Piedmont College, Ga.; St. Simon's Island, Ga.; Sealacon, Ala.; Wadley, Ala. Numerous week-end conferences were also held, and not less than three thousand folks were enrolled.

Student Summer Service young people from twelve States served in ten States, representing the following educational institutions: Bangor, Brown, Elon, Georgia Tech, Hartford, Mt. Holyoke, Ohio State, Pembroke, Piedmont, Schaufler, Talledega, Tillotson, Union Theological, University of Florida, Vanderbilt and Williams. This group of forward looking youth led in a constructive, educational, Christian movement, centering their lives where they were most needed; living with and for the handicapped in education and religion. Fifteen other fine young people shared in such service under special appointment for one month of Church Vacation School work. It was a happy summer of beautiful doing.

Now we are facing another church year and should be ready for those who depend upon our leadership. From the weekly calendar of a great industrial church, whose minister has a mighty passion for spiritual doing, there comes this message:

"Let us pray that we as church members in our daily living may be true to our profession, and so remove the church's commonest reproach; that we may, by our sympathy and intelligent interest, challenge the staff to do their best work and to put first things first; that we may be intelligent about the organization and work of our churches; that men and women of ability and consecration may be led to accept church offices and devote their time and strength to them; that our members may have a keener sense of their duty to attend public worship and to keep Sunday holy for themselves and others; that they may exercise the individual priesthood of every believer by their personal, daily approach to God; that they may never be ashamed to speak a good word for Jesus Christ, especially among people who try to be cleverly irreligious. Keep us, O Lord, from breaking our vows and denying thee; from spiritual decline and moral defeat; from going beyond thy purpose and resisting thy will; from being unable to hear thy voice; and from ignorance of the things that belong unto our peace."

A VISIT TO THE HOLY LAND.

"PALESTINE AND ITS PAST."

By REV. ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, D. D.

[This is the third of a series of articles by Rev. Helfenstein, pastor of the People's Church, Dover, Del., on his recent journey to the Holy Land.]

Palestine of the Past reaches far back into the beginnings of the human family. According to the latest opinion of scholars, the first Semitic immigration into Palestine took place about 2500 B. C. These nomad people migrating from the North Arabian deserts were the ancestors of the Hebrew people. They were called Amorites, and being a nomad people, subsisted almost entirely upon their herds, living largely on milk and the products of milk, and dwelling in tents made from the skins of sheep and goats and cattle, and also making their clothing from the skins of their animals. Theirs was indeed a most primitive life. And yet Palestine today has hundreds of thousands of Bedouins who are the descendants of those early peoples. These Bedouins are also a nomad people, and live today in the same primitive manner as did the people of Palestine in the days of Abraham.

When the Amorites came into Palestine they found the Hittites already in the North. Later other Semites migrated down into Palestine from the desert, and when Abraham came from Ur of the Chaldees, he found in Palestine the Amorites, the Jebuzites, and the Moabites.

The Canaanites settled in Palestine in about 2500 B. C., and in 1200 B. C. the Israelites under the leadership of Joshua came to possess the land. And then in 1184 B. C. the Philistines, a seafaring people from Asia Minor or from the islands of the Mediterranean, began their immigration, settling along the coast region of the Mediterranean Sea in the lowlands of the country, and pushing their way up from the coast region into Palestine.

The Philistines were the stronger group of the two peoples. They greatly outnumbered the Hebrews or Israelites. They were also a bigger race—almost giants as compared with the Israelites in physical stature. They were more advanced in their culture, and seemed to be the dominating race of the two. And for centuries these two races were pitted against each other in bloody combat to determine the supremacy of one or the other, and to determine which race would dominate Palestine. The odds seemed to be against the Israelites. But the religious convictions of the Israelites gave them a strength greater than the strength of numbers or size, so that they were victorious over their rivals, the Philistines. In the year 1030 B. C. the Israelites federated under Saul of the tribe of Benjamin and the Philistines were not able to prevail against the new coalition. And when David became king of Israel in 1000 B. C., he completed the work of finally establishing the Israelitish supremacy in Palestine; setting up his capital in Jerusalem. Strange to say, the Philistines passed into oblivion and the race has been entirely lost somewhere in the stream of human history—no trace of it being found anywhere today.

For more than sixty years under the reigns of David and his son Solomon, the Israelites enjoyed the experience of being a free people, a free nation, and a people of power. But when Solomon died and his son Rehoboam assumed his dictatorial and abusive leadership as king in 937 B. C., the kingdom was divided—the northern kingdom, Israel, going its way and the southern kingdom, Judah, going its way—both ways leading to their downfall and ruin.

The northern kingdom fell before the power of Assyria in 722 B. C., multitudes of the people being taken into captivity. The southern kingdom, or Judah, came to an end when Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, captured Jerusalem in 586 B. C., and took the people into captivity.

Then in 538-520 B. C., under the Persians, a return of the Jews to Palestine took place, and Judah again became the home of the exiled Jews.

In 333 B. C., Alexander the Great conquered Syria and from 320 to 142 B. C. Palestine was ruled by the Syrian Greeks.

The Hebrew people were molested, oppressed, and persecuted as has been no other race in all the world's history, until their spirit and initiative were crushed, and they became a subservient people, suppressed and despised by their adversaries. During this period, the Jews suffered a bondage more ignominious in many ways than what they suffered as slaves during their bondage in Egypt.

The only power that preserved the Hebrew people as a race, and prevented it from passing into oblivion as did many of their contemporary races, was the power of their undaunted faith in Jehovah.

Antiochus, IV, of Syria, sought to crush out the Jewish religion in 168 B. C. He knew that never would the people give up their hope and their dreams of a future for their race as long as they had a religion based upon a God of Justice, and hence his pernicious effort completely to stamp out the religion of the Jews.

But the Jews rebelled and gained their independence during the Maccabean Age from 142 B. C. to 63 B. C.

During these years of independence when the Jews of Palestine were free from persecution from without, and when they had an opportunity to go forward and develop a great future for the race, strife among different factions of the Jews themselves began to kindle. And these divisions between the people themselves opened the way for an outside power again to enter, and the Roman Empire took advantage of the situation of weakness which the divisions occasioned. As a result, Pompey captured Jerusalem in 63 B. C.

Then in 37 B. C. Herod the Great became king under the mandate of the Roman Empire. Again the Jews revolted, but it was too late. Titus, with his Roman army, quelled the dissension and destroyed the city of Jerusalem in 70 A. D. And again sixty years later when another revolt took place under the leadership of Bar-Cochba from 132 A. D. to 135 A. D., Emperor Hadrian put down the rebellion with an iron hand, slaughtering the Jews with fierce contempt, and completely despoiling Jerusalem. Hadrian then rebuilt and renamed Jerusalem, calling it "Aelia Capitolina," and drove the Jews all out of the city forbidding any to return. Their homes were destroyed and their property confiscated. The Arabs and Syrians then settled in Jerusalem. The fate of Jerusalem in all its history was the fate of Palestine as a whole. Palestine remained a part of the Roman Empire and the Byzantine Empire until the seventh century A. D.

From the reign of Constantine in the fourth century A. D., to the Persian invasion in 616 A. D., Jerusalem was the center of Christian interest in art and literature. And then with the coming of Mohammed in 636, Palestine passed into the control of the Moslems until 1099 A. D.

In 1099 A. D., the Crusaders gained control of Palestine and between 999 A. D. and 1187 A. D., established the Crusader's Kingdom in Jerusalem. But in 1187, the Moslems regained control. And in 1516, Palestine passed directly into the hands of the Turks who held it in their power until it was taken by the British in 1917, when General Allenby rode into Jerusalem conqueror, to claim the land again for Christian powers to control.

The Palestine of the Past is what makes the Palestine of the Present of interest. Because of the great lives that were lived in the Palestine (Continued on page 9.)

SUFFOLK LETTER.

One year ago (October 9th) Dr. Staley passed to his reward. The anniversary of his death is a reminder of his remarkable life. Some people became identified with the people and the events of their day and generation. They are recognized as essential to the work of the kingdom of God. Such a man was Dr. Staley. He was deeply interested in the development of the church of Jesus Christ. Nature endowed him with remarkable gifts of common sense, good judgment and sincere consecration.

As the Christian Church goes forward with its work, a greater appreciation of this leader and prophet will be recorded among the archives of its history. Someone, who is skilled in interpreting the lives of great men, should face the task and privilege of writing a comprehensive biography of this faithful minister of the Gospel. His life and work deserve this tribute. Older members of the church would find such a work refreshing and helpful. The young people of the future would find much encouragement and inspiration in reviewing the fascinating story of his career. The story of his struggle for an education should inspire every young man to devote his energies to that end regardless of poverty or any other handicaps. He worked incessantly to develop the gifts which God had bestowed upon him.

The other day several colored men were standing in a group watching the incoming tide during the recent severe storm. One of the young men called attention to an expert driver of an automobile, and said: "Dat fellow shore knows how to drive a car. He has a gift for his job." There was a moment of silence. An older man said: "Man, dat ain't no gift; you does dat by hard work. A gift is somethin' dat walks right up an' smacks you in de face, and you dunno where it comes from." There is no better definition of a gift to be found in the dictionary, from the standpoint of real life. The man who depends upon his gifts will not ascend the heights where God invites and holds a waiting crown of success. Hard work must be the means of developing such gifts as God has bestowed. Small gifts may be increased and multiplied.

In the early part of his ministry, Dr. Staley was told by a very close friend: "Billie, you should not undertake to be a preacher. Your delivery is poor, and you should give up the ministry." He appreciated this friend's interest and advice, but did not take it to heart. He used it as an incentive to greater effort and application. That friend did not know his young friend as well as he thought. A physician told him on one occasion that he had tuberculosis (consumption, it was then called), and he could not possibly live but a few years. About a year before his death, someone was giving him advice about taking care of his health. He listened intently and replied: "I have lived a good deal longer than a lot of people who have given me free advice about how to be well and strong."

This "Parson of Suffolk" was a man of great business ability. Under his leadership and counsel the Suffolk Christian Church developed a liberal spirit among its members. The contributions of this church are a witness to his keen insight in dealing with financial problems. He was thoughtful and careful about the small items of financial receipts and disbursements. The Southern Christian Convention and the local conferences adopted and developed progressive methods of church finance. He was economical and conservative in all his financial plans. He was first and always a preacher and a pastor. The two were inseparable in his own life. He was at home in the palace of the rich and the cottage of the poor. He loved and sought to win them for the church and the kingdom. It is time that some fitting memorial should be planned to pay tribute to our friend who has gone on before to enter into his reward.

MORE ABOUT CHURCH FINANCES.

Paul said in his letter to the Romans: "None of us liveth to himself." Life alone would be impossible. We are dependent upon each other for personal development, individual holdings, and intelligent communication. We are also dependent upon each other for Christian fellowship and spiritual enrichment. In our meditation and communion with God, we may behold him in a very definite way and may receive intelligent revelations, all of which will amount to but little so far as this life is concerned unless we have the opportunity of touching other lives and imparting to them the inspiration and revelations that have come to us. Paul was aware of this fact when he said on another occasion: "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together."

As it is necessary for individuals to have association one with the other, so it is necessary for the church as such to have association and fellowship with other churches. Seldom, if ever, does a church prosper without intimate relation, and constant fellowship with other local churches. For the individual's growth, development, and usefulness in the Kingdom, it is the divine plan for him to associate himself together with others who have had like experiences and who agree as touching the vital things of religion. Such association has been designated a "church." Christ himself recognized the church. He declared, "Upon this rock, I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

The church has come down to us from the days of the apostles. It has grown and developed; its organization has become more or less complicated. Multiplicity of organization has, in the minds of some, hindered the church in its program of service. It is not necessary to have an elaborate program for the work of the church, but a reasonable one is necessary. For instance, a company of believers must have a meeting place. This meeting place should be dedicated for the worship and service of God. In a country of changing climatic conditions, it is necessary to keep the place of worship comfortable for worshippers. In this day, it is mandatory on the part of the local congregation to provide experienced and talented leaders in spiritual things. If the congregation be Christian in its motives and purposes, it must of necessity heed the command of Christ—to carry the Gospel to those who have received it not.

We cannot provide for ourselves a place for worship and carry the Gospel to the "ends of the earth" without financial obligations. If we are to enjoy communion and fellowship with other churches, certain demands are made upon us. We must provide a larger organization and should employ efficient leadership, all of which costs money. It is expensive to live a Christian life. The rich young ruler discovered this fact; he turned back; he was unwilling to pay the price. Christ said to another, and speaks to us today: "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." It was never intended that a Christian living on the earth should become rich with this world's goods unless he would use his riches for the furtherance of the Gospel of him, by whom he has been saved, but it was intended that the individual Christian living in the flesh should become rich toward God.

Could it be possible that undue emphasis has been placed upon material things in this materialistic age in which we live and not a sufficient emphasis placed upon the things of the spirit? There is, however, a superficial notion on the part of some that they may labor and earn and pile up material things in their own names and then talk spirituality without giving of their substance for the support of the church. Christ perceived this danger and warned against it. It is not possible for a man to worship God with his mouth and be grafty with his hands. It is not possible to lay up wealth on earth and at the same time pile up riches in heaven. Christianity claims not only the man himself, but lays claim to what he produces. "Ye cannot serve two masters." Unless we keep these facts constantly and clearly before us, we will find ourselves literally worshipping the things of this world and forgetting the things of God.

The local church, through its leaders, is often to blame for individual members failing to do their part toward the financial support of the local church and the enterprises of the denomination. We of the Christian Church have been woefully negligent in planning for individual Christian development along the lines of Christian stewardship. It seems to be our practice to preach that the Gospel is free, and then allow the individual to do what he pleases about supporting the Kingdom; that is, we have offered to him no convincing plan whereby he may use his money for the support of that which means much to him. Recently, I was present at a ministers' meeting, where each pastor was asked what plan he had to induce the membership of his church to contribute for the support of the church and the denomination. Everyone present seemed to be puzzled as to what to do or which way to turn. If I mistake not, not a single church represented had made the "every-member canvass" within the year, or in any way approached its membership as a whole for the financial support of the church. I am wondering if this is true of our church in general!

I believe that experts in matters of church finance say that the most effective way to induce every individual member of the church to do his part in matters of church finance is by the "every-member canvass"; that is, for a committee to approach every other member of the church with the full program of the church and the necessary budget for church expenses and ask each member to contribute both for current expenses and for the enterprises of the denomination. Then later, each member receives envelopes in which he is to place his contribution, that he might cast into the treasury of the church and be given credit for the same. If every local church in our Convention would put on the "every-member canvass" conscientiously, consecratedly, and thoroughly and then follow up this canvass in a spiritual way, there would be no question as to the support of the church.

The trouble with the average Christian is that when he gives for the support of his church, he pays out his money about as he would give it to some dependent. He considers it a gift and not an investment and not an act of worship. When a Christian makes his contribution for the church and the Kingdom, this ought to be for him an act of worship and of great spiritual import. He is really making an investment in the Kingdom of God that spiritual things may be more evident and more vital.

This is the season of the year when every individual church should face its financial program, weighing carefully all financial requirements local and otherwise, and then plan to induce every individual member to make a reasonable contribution toward the budget of the church. This responsibility rests upon the officials of the church and ultimately upon the pastor himself. Try the "every-member canvass"; try the duplex envelope; try weekly offerings and see if your church will not be enriched in every particular.

NEWS FROM MY FIELD.

In the three churches of which I am pastor, we had three blessed revivals.

Rev. O. D. Poythress, of South Norfolk, Va., was with me at Bethlehem, near Elon College, N. C. Rev. L. A. Nall was with me at Mount Bethel and Kallams Grove.

Bro. Poythress is a great preacher, filled with the Spirit of Jesus Christ, and preaches with ease, faith and love; but fails not to tell people of the power of sin, the danger of hypocrisy and the "Thus saith the Lord." He has only few who surpass him in preaching the truth of God, and warning people, both in and out of the organized church of the "Judgment to come."

Rev. Luther A. Nall is also a great power for God in the pulpit. He is fearless, plain and potent for souls. In his strong appeals to people to turn from sin, it is no surprise to see grown people arise from their seats and come to the altar, fall upon their knees, and call, even aloud, for God to have mercy on their souls and pardon their sins. May I say just here, that I have no patience with nor much confidence in a simple hand-shaking profession. "If you will accept Jesus Christ, just come and give me your hand." I am afraid of a hand-shaking profession of Christianity. When a sinner, lost, sees himself, he is not ashamed nor afraid to go to the altar of prayer, kneel at the "old" mourners' bench and pray to God for deliverance that light may flood his soul and he may be born into the kingdom of God. Then shall the statement of the Messianic prophet, Isaiah, chapter 55, verse 12, become an experience: "For ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace; the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands, etc."

In these three churches of which I am pastor, there were approximately ninety-six professions, seventy-one accessions and sixty-two baptisms.

From Kallam's Grove and Mount Bethel, I baptized at one time forty-six by immersion and six by effusion. And be it known, that but few of them were children.

To God be all the glory. Indeed, the Gospel of Jesus Christ has not lost its saving power. "Preach the Word." J. W. PATTON.

YOU CANNOT TELL THE STRENGTH OF A BEAST BY THE WAY HE BELLOWS.

By TIMOTHY THOMAS.

Late one afternoon I dropped into the office of a friend, the managing editor of a metropolitan morning paper. In the large news room across the hallway the news of the day was beginning to come in through teletype machines, telegrams, radios, by messengers and reporters. As the minutes passed, these special service media carried the increasing load of the daily happenings out into the big world.

One of the "copy" editors was absent for the evening. Would I substitute for the absent editor? my friend inquired. Accepting, I took a desk amid the din of machines and assisted in chronicling the day's events among the peoples of the world.

As the evening spent itself there was added to the excitement numerous calls over the city's police radio station, summoning police radio scout cars for thefts, holdups, fights, suicides and murders.

Midnight came. Most of the people of the native land had retired. The noise had greatly subsided. The paper was almost ready to be "put to bed" for the grinding out of a hundred thousand copies to serve the eager eyes of the morning reading public.

I sat silent for several minutes. Was the whole world in turmoil? Was all mankind bent on devilry? Was the world one big mad-house? And finally the age-old question—was the world growing worse?

I slipped out into the night and hied home. The great hustle and bustle of a big city had vacated for a few hours. Almost quietness prevailed. A city had retired to rest. A nation had reposed. To me, a world had been quieted.

I am an optimist. I believe in humanity despite all its faults and frailties. From humanity must come every success, as well as every failure. I believe in progress of every kind, and from humanity must come progress as well as backward moves, or what at times we think to be the backward step.

Out of this experience and before the glamoring canvas depicting sad and sordid happenings of my land and your land, my world and your world, I saw another picture—a picture of millions of quiet homes where saneness of thought and sobriety of opinion prevailed. I saw the world's churches, the nation's churches, with spirals reaching heavenward and domes typical of rest and strength. I saw our splendid schools, wonderful colleges, and great universities standing like the Rock of Gibraltar. I saw friendly and goodly neighbors, millions of them, law-abiding, peaceful, helpful, following their quiet, daily pursuits of life. They make no news for the front page; their deeds go unheralded. Only their misfortunes, when such come, find their way to a reading public. The misdeeds of a few may often be the wrong appraisal for the many.

Today's headlines are not today's heart. Today's news may not be today's views. The blast from a hundred guns cannot equal the right emotion of a million hearts.

Yes, I believe the world is growing better. To say less is an admission of our misunderstanding of humanity—real humanity.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary

PRAYER.

Great God, our Father, thy love and mercy are never failing. Continually thou art seeking to lead and help all whom thou hast called to be thine own. We praise thee that forever Jesus is interceding for his faltering ones, and that through Jesus thy mercy flows into every trembling, trusting child of thine. We pray for faith, and for light and for love and to do whatever is thy precious will. In Jesus' name.—Amen.

MISSIONS. THE CHURCH'S RESPONSIBILITY.

Our Lord Christ laid one responsibility upon his church. That responsibility is implicit in the most emphatic command he ever gave. He withheld giving this command, and placing this responsibility, until he realized that he had the power to do so. "All power is given to me in heaven and in earth. Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." To this end he established, and, for this purpose he is building, his church in the world. This is self-evident from the fact that the church is the only institution in the world that is even trying to carry out that command. The missionary task is confined to, and carried on by, the church. Unless and until the church assumes and bears the burden of that responsibility, it will never be done.

Can a Christian shun or shirk this responsibility? Every true and brave soldier realizes his responsibility. And well he should, for the one who shirks responsibility is a coward and fails; the one who faces and embraces responsibility is courageous and conquers. After all is said and done there is a certain romance, a certain amount of hazard and daring in responsibility. Every movement for righteousness, every undertaking for Christ, has the weight of responsibility on it. When the eleven disciples of the Lord heard his command, they marched forth to battle beneath the weight of a responsibility that was more daring, dangerous, and even tragic than they at the time could ever have dreamed of. And down through the ages, those who have gone out to build in the name and for the sake of the Lord, have gone upon a mission of daring, of hazard, of uncertainty as to immediate results. The missionary enterprise has always been an enterprise fraught with danger, hazard and daring. When a Mission Board, or a group of Christians, decide to send a missionary or to build a church, or to establish a school in the name of their Lord, they assume an immense responsibility and they venture out in faith not knowing what the consequences shall be, but pressing forward. What a venture in responsibility David Livingstone made when he led, in person or by influence and example, a line of missionaries into darkest Africa! Lives have been lost, bloodshed has followed, danger and death lurked in a thousand places. Facing responsibility in righteousness calls for courage and brings hazard and danger. We think of the heroes of the faith like Carey, Judson, and a host of those who, since Paul's day, have gone forth, having assumed the responsibility of carrying the Gospel of peace and righteousness to troubled souls and hungry hearts.

Or here in the homeland where there are a thousand opportunities, a Mission Board or a church, or a group, may decide upon establishing a new church, starting a mission point in a city or by the sea, or in the mountains. It is all fraught with hazard and danger, but it is a responsibility which the Christian must face if he would be brave and courageous and not a coward.

But responsibility in the mission work has its resources. Christ is its one unailing strength and power. "All power," said he, "hath been given unto me; therefore, go ye and I will be with you to the end." If we are to share the rich resources and the victorious fellowship of our Lord, we must venture forth to do his bidding and to partake with him the responsibility of reaching the unreached and saving an unsaved world. The church is the only institution that has the promise of these riches and the reward of these resources, in Christ Jesus; for the church is the only institution that undertakes the missionary task. He did not challenge the doubt and danger, the daring and hazard without offering to supply the resources, and if we are to draw upon those resources, to know the fellowship of his suffering, and share the joy of his conquest and have him with us unto the end, we must get beneath the responsibility he laid upon us. This is the spiritual task, the one real task of the church—that of shouldering with our Lord the responsibility of making his love and life and power known to the world, and then we have the promise of his presence and the assurance of his fellowship.

Moreover, in assuming responsibility for Christ, and through Christ, we are forced to visions, to prospects and to promises. "Where there is no vision, the people perish." And the reason why so few church-members even have visions of conquest and victory and glory, in the name of our Lord, is because they shirk and side-step the responsibility of making him known to the world. Not all of us can go forth to carry the message, but we can go forth in prayer, in faith, and in contribution of substance, as we have visions of a world conquered in his name, of nations doing away with war, of people everywhere dwelling in peace, under the leadership of him who said: "All power is given unto me; therefore, go ye."

Mission a responsibility? Yes! But rich and abundant resources are promised those who expect his appearing, and venture forth to obey his command.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

Adjournment.

The depression has cost our Mission work heavily. For the year ending September 1, 1932, we women of the South, through our Missionary Societies, sent up to Missions, $10,490.98; for the year ending September 1, 1933, we sent up to Missions, $8,234.05, a decrease in donations, through our Societies the past year of $2,256.93.

Our Government has adopted, and is putting in operation, the National Recovery Act. When do we in our Missionary Societies, begin to recover our souls and our contributions through a Spiritual Recovery Act?

Governments, benevolent societies, fraternal orders, are pouring out millions to relieve physical need. When will we awake to the fact that the world depends solely upon the church as the only institution doing missionary work?

Our United Congregational-Christian Churches now have 622 missionaries in the foreign field, with 6,520 nationals at work; 740 native churches with 102,769 members; 90,402 students (in Sunday School and day school) under our instruction.

Total receipts for all our foreign work ending August 31, 1933, was $1,426,884.66, a tragic decrease from the previous year. It is time every true soldier of the cross was saying: "The line shall not break where I stand."

"AMERICA FIRST."

By HUGH VERNON WHITE.

"Why not make America Christian before sending missionaries to other countries?"

All who are connected with missionary education, promotion or administration, frequently hear this question raised. A candid and honest answer is offered herewith:

1. America's becoming Christian is a process that will always be going on; it is not an end to be accomplished in a few decades, or even centuries.

2. No nation or people is made Christian. It is strange that those who protest against "forcing our religion on other people" (a thing, by the way, which missionaries do not do) should think of making our own country Christian. Religion is essentially a realm of free choice and deep personal response. We may plant, and water, but God gives the increase.

3. Since this question takes America as a unit—an organic whole which can be called either Christian or pagan—it must be pointed out that such a conception is basically wrong. Except for purposes of broad classification no nation is wholly Christian, or perhaps ever will be in any future that we can plan for. America is part Christian and part pagan. The process of making it more Christian will always be the concern of organized Christianity and of all truly Christian individuals. It is an infinitely varied task, and the focus of effort is constantly changing. All forces of good-will and intelligence are required to carry it on.

4. The truer way of viewing the matter is to realize that America is already partly Christian, and then to expect Christian America to show toward the rest of the world a truly Christian good-will and service. This is exactly what happens when the Church, which is the professedly Christian part of America, actively seeks the best good of other peoples by sending missionaries to serve them in the spirit of Christ and to make the power and truth of the Christian gospel available to them. The church has to do this to be Christian itself and by so doing it shows the nation what being Christian means. A self-centered nation is not Christian, and for the Christian Church to teach the nation by its own program and example an attitude of selfish preoccupation, even with its own moral problems, is to play into the hands of a vicious and dangerous nationalism.

5. Christian America must hold unwaveringly to its purpose of world service and fellowship and refuse to be beguiled by the false strategy of "America first"—a strategy that is cramped and inadequate in any realm, but which if adopted in religion would destroy the essential character of Christianity.

6. Finally, this question draws a false and arbitrary line between Christian effort at home and Christian service abroad. If we should keep the total force of foreign missionaries at home and all the money that goes to support them it would make, relatively, a small addition to similar lines of service in this country and to budgets that support them. On the other hand the deepening of genuine Christian insight and devotion which the world mission brings gives it a vital part in the process by which America becomes more Christian—not in isolation, but in responsible union with the rest of the world.

CHURCH GIVING—IN PROSPERITY AND DEPRESSION.

The total contributions to Protestant Churches of the United States in 1932 were $378,000,000, in round numbers, according to a study made for the conference of the promotional executives of the principal denominations, held in New York under the auspices of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America on September 27th.

The figures on the giving of the churches were contained in a research study on trends in church finance, made for the conference by A. C. Marts, president of Marts & Lundy, Inc., a well-known New York firm of financial counsellors.

The contributions to the churches in 1932, as analyzed by Mr. Marts, were approximately 40 per cent below those of 1929, as compared with a larger drop of 54 per cent in the national income during the same period. The fact that the giving to the churches had declined less than the income of the nation during the depression was interpreted as an exceedingly hopeful sign.

The 1929 contributions to the churches were reported as $581,000,000, falling to $378,000,000 in 1932. The 1929 national income was eighty-five billions; the 1932 national income was set at forty billions.

The advantage which the churches have enjoyed in suffering a smaller decline than the national income was, however, set over against the fact of the small amount of the churches' share at any time. The total share of the churches in the national income during any of the years for which Mr. Marts had gathered data was not quite one per cent. Moreover, the churches did not share at all in the especial growth of national income during the "boom" years 1927 to 1929. On the contrary, the income of the churches actually declined about three per cent during those years.

Expenditures for recreation in the United States, on the other hand, during 1927 to 1929, greatly increased. Since 1929 expenditures for recreation have equally rapidly declined, the drop being 65 per cent.

Commenting on the significance of the figures presented by Mr. Marts, Dr. Samuel McCrea Cavert, General Secretary of the Federal Council, said:

"It is highly significant that in the so-called 'era of prosperity,' when the national income was shooting upward to its highest peak, none of the increased resources flowed into the channels of Christian service. The people had more money, but apparently the surplus was spent for personal indulgence and the satisfaction of material wants. But when the period of depression came the people stood by the church with noteworthy loyalty. Hard pressed though they were, they did not—in the aggregate—curtail their gifts to the church as much as their income had been curtailed. This is most heartening evidence of the hold that the church still has on the hearts of the people."

FRANKLIN WILLING WORKERS.

The Franklin Willing Workers Society has had a very active and successful year. They have held their meetings regularly using the study book "Ling." They presented a public program quarterly and these programs added new life and ardor to the society. Their apportionment has been sent in in full and new and bigger plans have been laid for the new year. Mrs. E. P. Jones is superintendent of this group of loyal and faithful children.

of the Past; because of the greatest life the world has ever known, having been born and spent in Palestine; because the world's greatest religions, Judaism and Christianity having come from Palestine; because Palestine gave us our Bible; because of these facts the Palestine of the Past makes the Palestine of the Present and the Palestine for all time to come a place of appealing interest to Christians and Jews alike. There is something fairly haunting about the memories of its scenes, something commanding about its landmarks, something entrancing about its history. Every mountain, every valley, every river, every sea speaks to us today of the Palestine of Yesterday.

NOTICE.

The Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference will meet with the Cypress Chapel Christian Church, Friday, October 27th. The morning session opens at 10:30 o'clock.

All ministers of the Conference are requested to be present, and each society is urged to send a large delegation. Let each member ask himself or herself this question: "Shall the Line Break Where I Stand?" and then make every possible effort to meet the Conference requirements.

The program will appear later.

HINDRANCES THAT HELP.

It was the time of day that the late George Studdert-Kennedy called the time "when the Great High Priest of Nature robes himself in garments of gold and goes forth to the evening sacrifice." I had been to the hospital to see a very sick man and was walking back to my home across the Berkley Bridge. I had walked through the negro section and less attractive parts of the city on my journey to and from the hospital. Deserted stores, a junk yard, tumble-down houses used for homes, children playing in the street, men and women closing the day's work and preparing for the night, noisy street—cars with their mass of moving humanity, burley policemen, swinging their clubs as they walked their beats—these were some of the scenes that came before me and filled my mind as I journeyed from the sick room back to my home, my mother, and my supper. It was a pretty dreary world about me. But in the midst of it I was happy, for I was trying to think of something to say to my young friends who read THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

The Berkley Bridge is high up above the Elizabeth River, but not high enough to permit the passage of many ships that ply those waters. To me at the time, this costly bridge was simply a passage-way back to my home away from the turmoil, dirt, and noise of the city. But suddenly I found my passage blocked. Red lights and gates warned me not to go further, for danger lay ahead. Two spans of the bridge lifted steel arms some fifty feet into the air, and beneath on the bosom of the rippling waters glided a tug with its barge. I had to stop and look.

The sight that I saw was fit for a king. Beneath was the quiet waters of the river giving themselves freely to the progress of the boats which sent little wavelets trickling the surface of the water until they lost themselves on the shore. Round about were ships that sail the seas, others that busy themselves about the business on the banks of the river, and still others that are laid up for repairs. To the west was the city of Portsmouth, which could be seen mainly by its spires that pointed skyward, its curling screens of smoke, and its twinkling lights that seemed to gather something of the glory of the star God had just set shining in the high heavens above the city streets. God had spread a cloudless blue above and sent the golden rays of a setting sun piercing through the smoke screen of earth. It was a glorious scene—but I was walking home to supper, with eyes blinded to the beauty about me.

The raised span of the bridge hindered my progress towards home, but it gave me one of the most beautiful visions to be found anywhere. It made me forget the dirt and death created by human hand, and for the moment think of the clean clear sky and the radiant light with which God has filled the earth. It stopped my walking, but aided my living.

Oftentimes hindrances help us. Sickness is not an absolute curse. It has its value, if used right. We become so busy doing things that we fail to take time to live. We see so much of human frailty and sin that we forget the beautiful. We rush hither and yon so that there is no time for meditation, thought and prayer. Then comes sickness. And at the most inconvenient time! But we must be quiet for a while so the springs of new life can course through our systems. And while we wait for the healing streams, there comes a Friend who tells us how to be well indeed.

New thoughts purge our minds of the base ones that have gathered there. A new hope chases out the despair that had been gathering its maddening host to annoy us. To our surprise we find that the hindrance was but a help, that we are much nearer our goal by waiting a bit.

Or a disappointment comes our way. We are unable to get the job or do the thing we wished to do. We feel defeated, and may complain at the Fates that hold us back. Then comes something better. Lincoln couldn't be Senator, so they made him President. They didn't want Wilson at Princeton so they elected him Governor, and from the governorship he went to the White House. It is difficult to take defeat, but there may be a blessing in the bottom of the package. Many a person who has grieved greatly at the loss of a lover has said later that it was best they never married; and many who married wish they hadn't. If they had waited a bit, things might have been so much happier. No helpful barrier came in the way, and they suffer through life.

Death is the great hindrance to life—so we seem to think. It stops the progress of the person, and crushes life away. But does it? Can it not be that the hindrance to human progress by the thing we call death is but the liberation of life, the setting free from human limitations of the person who seeks for fullness of life? I fancy that the twinkling stars in the beautiful blue beckon us upward to a new home where there are no dilapidated streets or homes. The eventide of life may be as lovely as the close of a perfect day. It is only the hindrance of death that sends one singing down the shining trail to the home of the soul.

Then welcome each rebuff, and thank God for the hindrances, for in them he may be speaking to the heart in the language of beauty.

NORFOLK TRAINING SCHOOL.

The annual standard leadership training school for the Congregational and Christian Churches of Greater Norfolk, will be held this year, October 15th to 20th, at the Christian Temple. The ten churches which share in this school pay all expenses without any charge to the individuals who may attend.

Rev. Joe French will teach course No. 2, on the Principles of Teaching; Mrs. J. M. McArdle has course No. 21, A Study of the Child. Course No. 43, Junior Department Administration, will be taught by Miss Priscilla Chase. Dr. F. L. Fagley, of New York City, will teach course No. 107, Training in Worship and the Devotional Life, and will lead the chapel services. Rev. H. S. Hadrcastle will teach course No. 120, The Development of the English Bible. Course No. 308, on World Missions, will be taught by Dr. Charles Eldred Shelton.

Pastors, Sunday School workers and young people who live near enough to Norfolk to attend will find it very profitable to share in this training school. These courses and instructors are among the best. The tasks of the church demand preparation on the part of those who would be leaders.

The Board of Christian Education is eager to help any community in the Southeast put on such a training school. If you are interested in this work, please write to the editor of this page, who is chairman of the Board of Christian Education of the Southern Convention.

OPPORTUNITY.

With doubt and dismay you are smitten
You think there's no chance for you, son?
Why, the best books haven't been written
The best race hasn't been run,
The best score hasn't been made yet,
The best song hasn't been sung,
The best tune hasn't been played yet,
Cheer up, for the world is young!

No chance? Why, the world is just eager
For things that you ought to create;
Its store of true wealth is still meager,
Its needs are incessant and great.
It yearns for more power and beauty,
More laughter and love and romance,
More loyalty, labor and duty,
No chance? Why, there's nothing but chance!

For the best verse hasn't been rhymed yet,
The best house hasn't been planned,
The highest peak hasn't been climbed yet,
The mightiest rivers aren't spanned;
Don't worry and fret, faint-hearted,
The chances have just begun,
For the best jobs haven't been started,
The best work hasn't been done.

Sunday School Lesson

LESSON III.—OCTOBER 15, 1933.

PAUL IN ANTIOCH.

GOLDEN TEXT: "For I am not ashamed of the gospel; for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyon that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek."—Romans 1;16.

LESSON TEXT: Acts 11:19-30; 12:25.

We left Paul in Damascus in last Sunday's lesson. We find him in Antioch in this Sunday's lesson. Thirteen or fourteen years had intervened, and some important things had happened in the meantime. A brief summary will help us to understand the situation better.

Between Damascus and Antioch.

When Paul was converted, he went into Arabia (Gal. 1:17) into a quiet, out-of-the-way place, to think things over and to think things through. It was a very strategic point in his life, for when he came back to Damascus, he came back with new certainty and with new power. He had thought through things, he had seen his life and his work in the light of his experience of Christ on the Damascan Road, he had his gospel not at the hands of men, but direct from God. Paul emphasized this fact again and again. He was an apostle called and commissioned by God.

Upon returning from the seclusion of the desert (Arabia) he began to preach Christ in the synagogues of Damascus, and he preached with such power that the Jews could not refute him. They therefore took counsel to kill him. From that time until the day of his death they hounded him and persecuted him. The disciples in Damascus got Paul out of the city by night, and he went up to Jerusalem.

The disciples in Jerusalem were afraid of Paul, in fact they did not believe that he was a disciple. But Barnabas, big-hearted, sympathetic, believing Barnabas, took Paul in hand, spoke a good word for him, and vouched for him to the apostles. Paul then spake boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus (9:29), especially to the Greeks, and they went about to kill him. He was again saved by his friends, and this time he was sent to Tarsus, his old home.

We have no direct record of Paul's life in Tarsus and vicinity, a period covering about ten years. It would be interesting to know how his parents received him. We do know that Paul was not idle or inactive or unfaithful in the work of Christ. He was not that kind of man. And his reference in Galatians 1:23 indicates that he was busy preaching the "faith" which once he had tried to destroy. His work was undoubtedly among the Greeks and Greek-speaking Jews, and he undoubtedly had a measure of success in his work in Cilicia and Syria.

It was while he was engaged in this work that he received his invitation from Barnabas to help him in Antioch. The lesson today tells of the background and the development of that work. But the sketch which has just been outlined embodies some great truths. They will be stated without elaboration in full.

1. Solitude, meditation, silence, deepen and enrich and stabilize the religious life, and enrich the religious experience.

2. The inestimable value of a friend, one who believes in us, and who stands by us.

3. A man's life work is simply the expression or the fruitage of the years of preparation.

4. God teaches us by periods of waiting as well as by working.

5. Testifying for Christ develops spiritual strength.

Persecution—Growth.

The Jewish authorities thought they could put out the fire of the new religion by persecution. They drove the disciples far and wide. But instead of putting out the fire, they scattered the burning embers and started a hundred fires. Religion thrives on persecution. Religion grows and develops under stress of circumstances. To use present-day conditions as an excuse for the failure of the church to do its work, is to misunderstand Christianity altogether. Today's situation is not an excuse for the church, but a challenge to the church.

Unto the Jews Only.

They "preached the word to but unto the Jews only." They thought the gospel was for the select ones. They did not believe it could be for the Gentile "dogs." Alas that today after nineteen centuries there are so many professing Christians who do not believe in "foreign missions." They believe the gospel is for the American or perhaps for the white race, but they do not believe it is for all men. This narrow, selfish conception of religion is the curse of Christianity. Unto the Grecians—And the Hand of the Lord

Was With Them.

Some of these disciples understood the true nature of the gospel. They preached the Lord Jesus to the Grecians, too. And the hand of the Lord was with them. It always is. Whenever and wherever we try to share with others the blessings of Christ, the hand of the Lord will work with us. And men and women, boys and girls will be turned unto the Lord. One reason why the church at home is so impotent and formal is because it is not possessed with a passion to preach the Lord Jesus to others.

Barnabas the Great-Hearted.

Barnabas was a good man, one of those plain, honest-to-goodness fellows whose manner of life was an argument for Christianity. He was full of the Holy Spirit and of faith. He was a generous giver. He was a friendly fellow. He was free from jealousy. When he came to Antioch and saw the work of grace that was being done there, "he was glad." He belonged to that comparatively small group of people who can rejoice in another's success, especially when the other is in the same line of work. Barnabas put the interests of the kingdom above his personal fame. He was willing to decrease if the work of the Lord would increase. And because he was the kind of man, "much people was added unto the Lord." A true Christian life is a wonderfully effective evangelistic agency in itself.

Paul.

"Then departed Barnabas to Tarsus for to seek Paul." He saw the work was too big for h'm. He remembered the young fellow whom he had befriended and who had given promise. He went to Tarsus and brought him back to Antioch. Barnabas and Paul—what a team they were! No wonder the work grew at their hands.

Christians.

"And the disciples were called Christians first at Antioch." In this church where Jews and Gentiles met on a common basis, where fellowship was inclusive, the disciples were first called Christians. They had previously been called "of this way." The new name is suggestive. Christians are really people who are trying to live Christ's way. Christianity is a way of life. It is Jesus' way of life.

To Send Relief.

This Christian way of life found practical expression in sharing not only spiritual things but substance. Every man according to his ability tried to help those who were in need in Jerusalem. According to his ability—if only the members of the church would do what they could.

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

"O Lord, I beseech thee, let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of thy servant, and to the prayer of thy servants, who desire to fear thy name, and prosper, I pray thee, thy servant this day."

MONDAY.

WHY WE FAIL.

"Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed until the day of redemption."—Eph. 4:30.

We, like Paul, often look back over our past and realize not only that we have failed miserably, but that "when we would do good, evil is present with us." Over these ruins of our failures we cry and fret, and pray to God as though he were unwilling to meet our needs.

Why? The answer is easy. We have "grieved the Holy Spirit," and we have so ignored his presence, and therefore are insensible to his presence. The fact is, he is in us and with us, and the chief thing we need to do is to realize it. To practice his presence will open channels through the soul whereby he speaks—and with such channels opened up, like a radiating sunshine, his likeness is felt and makes it a radiant soul.

The following are ways in which we may grieve him: Depending upon our own power when he has the power; by mixing with sinful things or walking in the way of sinners, though we intend no wrong ourselves; Christ says, "Come out from among them and be ye separate and apart; by trying to reform things without being born again; the great commission is, "Preach the Gospel," that is gospelize the world and not just reform it.

We are trying to make the world good by legislation, but government very little looks to God, nor does it adopt his methods to make itself good. We say the world is growing better, and we like to think it is; at the same time the world is growing more perilous. But perilous times are but the fulfillment of the Scriptures, and we like to think that even perils "may work an exceeding greater weight of glory" for him ultimately. If sufferings have their spiritual values and hard times their moral and spiritual compensations, likewise will perilous times contribute ultimately to the glory of God.

Prayer—O Lord, teach us thy will and inspire us to a living faith; that we take thee at thy word, and have a living faith in the promises. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

"WITHOUT SPOT."

Lesson: I. Tim. 6:1-21.

"Follow after righteousness, Godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness."

"I give thee charge in the light of God that thou keep this commandment without spot."—I. Tim. 11-14.

"The beloved of Jesus Christ—purge your conscience—to serve the living God."—Heb. 9:14.

"Be diligent that you may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless."

We are full of worry and fret, carelessness and pride, unworthy ambitions and lust. We regulate our lives not by the rules of the kingdom nor by the reality of God's presence, but by hopes, or fears, personal pleasures or gain, selfishness or selfish aggrandizement. Then we wonder why we have no answer to our prayers. We preach to people that Christ offered himself without spot, and that men are to submit their lives to God and live without spot; but we fail to set the example. Souls are inspired only by example and not by preachments. Such have been called like the prophets of Baal; build the altar, lay on the wood, dig the trench, pour on the water, and agonize in prayer, but there's no fire; and there is no fire because there has been no burnt offering of self. Let us not make the mistake of giving God everything and withholding ourselves.

Prayer—O God, we give thee not what we have but what we are ourselves. Grant us the spirit to nail ourselves to the cross and to die to our "spots" daily. Baptize us with fire from within, O Lord, for thou art the flaming, cleansing fire. Help us to climb to Carmel's heights, and die to ourselves and rise to the tireless Spirit of the living God. Grant us the spirit of Jesus among our fellows to guard the words of cheer, hope and faith, and help the lost to find their way. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

OUR TWO NATURES.

"The flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; These are contrary the one against the other."—Gal. 5:17.

Every Christian is of these two natures, the natural and the spiritual self. The presence of God in the soul and the gift of salvation does not destroy the natural self. One still feels the forces of sin and temptations just as strong, perhaps stronger. But do not give up; this is God's battle ground.

When tempted, know this: that in being born again a spiritual nature and a sense of God has been communicated to you and the devil is using the nature of the flesh to kill that spirit; that while you live in the flesh you can use the spirit of God to starve the spirit of the devil, yea, to kill him, and it can be done in the smallest of things as well as in the larger ones. Squelch wrong, however insignificant, and you've killed the devil in you. The uprising of the flesh or the feel of temptation, in the very nature of regeneration, is an evidence of Christ in the soul and he is there to subdue the flesh and train it Godward. Temptation is not an evidence that one is not a partaker of Christ, but that he is a partaker.

The first lesson for any young Christian is that of how to deal with this dual condition, how to starve the enemy, fight the good fight of faith and to feed the spirit unto a triumphant victory in God. If all Christians would first learn this supreme lesson they would be spared the disappointment and humiliation of their Christian profession.

Prayer—O our dear God, may we comprehend ourselves by generations, and also by regeneration through Jesus the Son of God, and, fighting the good fight of faith, may never backslide, but be an ever intelligent being stalwart in following Jesus. In his name we ask it.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE FIRST SIN.

"They hid themselves from the presence of the Lord."—Gen. 3:8.

The first sin of the Scriptures is a sort of type of all our sins; it is even peculiarly typical of present day evils, viz., revolt against the pressure of rule and obligation, and, religiously, a rebellion against God.

First man reveals both the inward and the outward consequences of such sins. When one commits a sin, first there comes an estranging cloud between the soul and God. Then he is led to shame and the fear of death ("They hid themselves from the presence of the Lord"). First man also reveals an awakened conscience which became their accuser and pursuer; and it prompted him to set up false excuses. Adam said the woman was to blame. The woman blamed it on the serpent. We are familiar with the fact that sin makes us dare to brave the worst, and then when the worst comes to lay the blame on some person or thing, and make believe that it is no fault of ours. This is hiding from the truth, and hiding from the truth is hiding from God.

This result has trickled down through all history. It is the same today as always. Shakespeare make King Richard say of his conscience, "I'll not meddle with it; it is a dangerous thing; it make a man a coward; a man cannot steal but it accuseth him; he cannot swear but it checks him."

Prayer—Our Father in heaven, we would be courageous and strong. Forbid that we should be hiding in sin, on the contrary we pray for the gift to be all that man should be in courage and strength for the truth and good.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

WAYS OF HIDING FROM THE LORD.

"Let God speak with us lest we die."—Deut. 5:25.

By careless living. We cannot be obsessed with appetite, pleasure, intellectual interest, or business, and use these as an example for shirking the serious aspects of our lives without denying the spiritual facts that lie at the foundation of religion. He who is so obsessed must remain unknown to God, he must forfeit the power of seeing the invisible, and he cannot worship in spirit and in truth.

We are face to face with the fact that this kind of hiding from God is imbedded deeply in human nature. It has come out of a nature which God has given us, to be sure, but it represents a perversion and a distortion of our God-given natures. It has come by giving ourselves over to personal desires until our lives bear a fruit never intended by God and perceptions are dimmed toward the Maker of them. "Let God speak with us lest we die"—and we must hear him daily, "lest we die."

Prayer—O Lord, we come to thee for vision. We lay ourselves, our sins, our all at thy feet and pray for a whole consecration and a full baptism. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

BETTER PLASTERING.

"Well done, thou good servant."—Read Luke 19:11-17.

The Christian Science Monitor puts on its editorial page the story of a fine new parish house which was opened with a banquet to which were invited representatives of the various workmen employed in the building. After the banquet, the pastor thanked all these workers, and introduced some of them. One who responded was a plasterer, who made the first speech in his life. He said that was the first time he had ever attended such a meeting, and added, "I'm pretty ashamed of myself. We skimped the plaster in one of the rooms; in fact, we did a rush job. But I think the plasterers would like to do the job over."

That reminds us of the great meeting for praise that is to be held some day in heaven, the meeting when the Master of all good workmen is going to say, "Well done, good and faithful servants."

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

SEEKING, FINDING, SHARING, THE JESUS WAY OF LIFE.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"Ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye search for me with the whole heart."—Jer. 29:13.

You have assigned me a most delightful subject, you young people of this great young people's rally: Seeking, finding, sharing, the Jesus way of living. It is something we can always be seeking, always finding, and always sharing—and, indeed, I believe that either one without the other two is well-nigh impossible. However, each does have a separate and distinct place, and upon each of them we are to think this evening.

I. Seeking the Jesus Way of Living. One of the finest names left on the pages of history is the name of the young prophet quoted in the outset of this message. If being a young man with a deep love for his country counts for anything Jeremiah was great; if being a heroic young man who when offered soft places of security elsewhere turned them down in undying devotion to his own people means anything, Jeremiah was great; if having the courage to listen for the word of Jehovah of hosts when everyone else was discouraged, disappointed, and giving up was anything then Jeremiah was great; if having the courage to love with all his young heart, and speak with utmost conviction words displeasing to hear was anything, then Jeremiah was great. This young prophet of a great race says thus saith the Lord: "Ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye search me with your whole heart." No half-hearted hunt for God will avail! It is this whole-hearted abandon with which young people can search for God that has helped to add glory after glory to the church.

One of the heroes of our hearts is Israel's prince charming, the youngest son of Jesse of Bethlehem-Judea. Whether we look on David as a shepherd lad in the valleys and mountain passes of Palestine, or whether we see him as the sweet singer of Israel's beautiful prayers, or the mighty warrior of unnumbered battles, or the friend of Jonathan, or God, "a man after God's own heart," he is our hero. It is he who says: "But they that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing." They that seek the Lord shall not want—never shall they lack!

They are the words of a young man of experience and wisdom and bigness enough about him to keep his name fresh for three thousand years. If you are desiring the words of a lowly, humble follower of the highest known to the heart of man, you have it in David; if you are seeking the word of a royal king, and one who could envelope the nations of the earth in his thought, then you have it in David; if you are seeking the word of one who tried most of the glories and vanities, and opportunities and privileges of life, then you may hear the word of David, and he says: "They that seek the Lord shall not want any good thing." And in the 119th Psalm he adds: "Blessed are they that seek him with their whole heart." There you are again: "With the whole heart." Israel's great young men—Jeremiah and David—challenge us to a whole-hearted hunt for God.

The world has criticized many people, and many things. It has called young Jeremiah a weeping prophet; and it has not yet overlooked the sins of David; it has found fault with the Bible, and has sharply criticized the church. But whether the name of Jesus has been defended or defied, it still stands above every name. Looking upon his perfectly holy life, and his absolutely unselfish love the world has joined its foremost spokesman in saying: "I find no fault in him." And beyond all others he has challenged us to seek God with our whole heart: "Seek ye first (above all, and before all) the Kingdom of God." And in another place he says: "He that seeketh, findeth, and to him that knocketh, it shall be opened."

II. Finding the Jesus Way of Living. The search is amply rewarded by the goal. And let us not think we have to mystify the search, by some special processes or paths that any and all cannot follow. Was there anything mysterious about the two disciples of John's going home with Jesus one day, and returning to their brothers at nightfall, saying: "We have found the Christ." There was nothing mysterious about that, and there is nothing mysterious about your finding him today. The paths to him are plain: private devotions, public worship, Sunday School, youth meetings, Christian fellowships and friendships are some of the beautiful paths to the presence of God. My young friends, you may seek many things, and find many pleasures and preferments in life, but you will never find more nor better than Jesus Christ. When those two young chaps returned that nightfall to their fellows and said: "We have found the Christ," they announced a new day and a new era in their lives and in the lives of the world!

There is no profit to gaining the whole world if you do not have for your friend and companion the Christ. The beauties of today become the vanities of tomorrow without Christ, and even disappointments with him become appointments of joy and peace which are beyond the measure of man. Find all you may, wherever you can, but find God first, put God first, let honor and honesty crown your acts like a sheen of glory and you, too, will be able to join with David in saying: "They that seek the Lord shall never want."

Did the two fellows who went home with Jesus that day, and returned with their faces aglow with the glory of God ever rue the find they made, or the choice they announced? Never! There came days of disappointments, and days of great sorrow; but if I turn to the Book that is honored above all books I find there their names, and in that Book we are told there that their names adorn the foundation stones of the eternal city of the New Jerusalem. Finding the Christ they found a place in making a new and better world, and while they drank the wine of sacrifice they discovered a peace which passeth all understanding.

III. Sharing the Jesus Way of Living. It is one thing to seek God, and seeking him is to find him, but the divinely heroic, challenging thing to do is to share him with others.

For thou must share if thou wouldst keep
That good thing from above;
Ceasing to share, thou ceasest to have—
Such is the law of love.

When I was in Princeton I had some very fine friends. One I wish to mention here in particular: Paul Moore. Paul was a handsome chap, born and bred of fine folks in the beautiful old city of Philadelphia. He was loved and admired by a great Presbyterian Church in that city. The members of it, seeing his fine character, his Christian devotion, wished to help him along. They offered him pleasures, business, profits. But he said nay to it all and turned his charming face, and devoted heart to follow the call of the Christ into deepest Africa. I treasure the fact that during our seminary course he chose to join with me and another mutual friend each evening at nine o'clock in prayer. And every night I still remember him by name in my nightly, private devotions. When I hear from him he is so happy making a new world, following the blood-scarred hands of Jesus across the black continent, and does he want to turn back? Never! He is seeking God and finding him, for he searches for him with his whole heart.

The pages of history, and the hearts of humanity are filled with the names of young people like yourselves who have chosen God, and have followed him through every honorable avenue of life. You are not all called to the same place or position, but you are all called to the same Christ; and in whatever walk of life you can surely share your Saviour and your Friend with others.

Christian Orphanage

We have mailed a copy of our plan for the activities of the Orphanage for the special three months—October, November and December—to each pastor and to each Sunday School superintendent, with copies for each teacher. We truly hope the pastors will read the plan and give it their consideration. We want the Sunday School superintendents to read it and pass a copy on to the teachers. We do this to save expense. It is necessary that we save every penny we can.

If each Sunday School superintendent will start now and get his Sunday School organized and begin planning the special Thanksgiving offering, I feel sure we will not be disappointed. This is one year we want the united effort of each church member and each Sunday School scholar to help us raise a large Thanksgiving offering. Let everybody get to work now and do something, then all of us can justly feel proud. We may have to make some sacrifices to help the Orphanage, but if you can help some little child in real need, don't you think it worth while?

Looking ahead to that day, does our conscience prick us with the remembrance of any job skimmed for the Master?

Prayer—Our dear Lord, may we not lay up shame to ourselves against that day. May we ever bear in mind the great day of praise and blame, the day of just appraisal. In thy name.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

OUR ANNUAL WAR.

"The blood ran out of the wound into the bottom of the chariot."—Read I. Kings 22:29-36.

The Bible contains many terrible stories of the deadly effect of ancient war chariots, but they are all as nothing when compared with the horrible record of our modern war chariot, the automobile.

In the United States alone, 36,000 men, women and children are killed by the automobile every year. Every nineteen months our automobiles kill a thousand more Americans than were slain, with all their scientific gunnery and horrible gas, by the enemy during our nineteen months of participation in the World War.

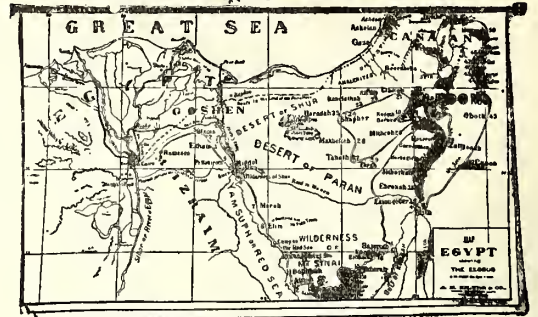

The cause? There is but one: we go too fast. We are speed mad. We are careless of life, the life of another, our own life. God has a strong word to say to every driver of an automobile.

Prayer—May we realize the responsibility of power, our Maker. May we be content to be moderate. May we never take chances with human life. In the name of Christ, the merciful.—Amen.

POLLY'S PLANS.

"I'm going to make a list of one hundred plants that grow wild in our country," announced Polly. "It teaches you a lot about botany, and I do love flowers so."

"Yes, and the names of the plants are no trouble after they're written down," remarked her brother Jim, with seeming innocence. "They don't need to be weeded, or watered, as a garden bed does."

"I think you're horrid," said Polly. "How could I help that long drought last season? With just a few rains, my garden would have been lovely."

"Reba's garden next door looked all right, I'll say," said Jim, teasingly.

"Reba's a queen, isn't she?" said Polly, teasing in her turn, and silencing Jim for that time.

Polly started her list next day. She soon had over fifteen flowers and ferns listed. Then the next ten plants were harder to find. By this time, too, Polly had started to collect stamps—used ones, of course—to cut up and make colored patterns on dinner cards. It was more interesting than the plants, and all her time went to it.

Just as she had made five or six cards, more or less neatly, she went away on a visit. When she came back, she was enthusiastic over a new kind of braid embroidery that looked exactly like that lovely Italian cut work. It turned out to be very tedious work, and Polly gave out before the second yard of trimming was made.

Besides, Jean White had a wonderful pattern for a bead bag, very easy to do, and so effective. The materials were too expensive for Polly's allowance, so she asked her mother to help her out.

It was a great surprise to Polly when her mother refused. But the surprise was nothing compared to what followed.

"I have a good reason, Polly, dear," said her mother. "I have been watching you to see if you would carry out a single thing that you have started. But your list of plants is only two-thirds done, your embroidery stopped at one yard, your set of dinner cards never has been finished, and yet you have another plan on hand. I am not going to encourage you in such a lack of patience and perseverance, because I ought not to."

Polly flushed. She wanted to protest. But what could she say? Everything her mother had said was the plain truth.

"You can carry out almost anything with perseverance," her mother went on, "for you have clever brains and quick fingers. I want to help you out of this habit of planning what you do not finish. I will give you the materials for the bead bag if you will finish one of your plans thoroughly and well—any one you choose."

"I'll finish them all," replied Polly, somewhat grimly, "and you needn't give me the beads and silk till I'm through with the very last one. I'm just ashamed of myself, mother. I feel like never making a plan again."

Polly kept her word. In keeping it she found a pleasure she had never known before, the pleasure of completing a hard task. She hated plants when she was nearly through the list, but she loved them better than ever when the last name went down on it. She felt almost sick when she saw a stamp before her last card was begun, but she enjoyed the last card tremendously as she did it.

When her mother gave her the materials for the bag at last, Polly hugged her. "I'm so glad you didn't give it to me at first, mother," she cried, and she meant it.—Barbara Griffiths, in the Girl's World.

THE FIRST THANKSGIVING.

The Pilgrims landed on Plymouth Rock about three hundred years ago in the cold winter. They plowed and planted in the spring, and God gave them good times. So in the autumn they thought it right to keep a day of Thanksgiving to God for his goodness. They invited the Indians to come and keep Thanksgiving with them. The Indians were heathen, and did not know about the true God, but they were willing then to be friends to the whites. King Massasoit was the chief of the Indians, and he led a band of ninety warriors into old Plymouth at sunrise on Thanksgiving Day. Each Indian was dressed in his best, with long feathers, pretty beads and bright paint.

When the drum sounded, for that was all the church bell they had, the people all went to church. Then the women and girls spread the long table and got dinner. After that Captain Miles Standish had his soldiers drill. They marched around with the flag flying and the drums beating, and shot off a cannon.

What would the Indians think of that noise, when they had never heard a cannon fired before?

And that Thanksgiving did not stop with one day; it lasted three days. The Indians brought five deer, and the Pilgrims had turkeys, oysters, roast meats, fruits and other good things.

When you are keeping your own Thanksgiving, we are sure you will like to know about the first Thanksgiving Day in New England such a long time ago.—The Picture World.

The opinions of an atheist about religion have as much value as the visions of a blind man about the colors of sunrise.

of the

CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES OF THE SOUTHEAST

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING.

ELON COLLEGE, founded by the Christian Church in 1889, has fully justified the faith and hope of its founders during its 42 years of operation. Its graduates from the four-year course leading to a bachelor's degree, number 980, now living, 122 of whom are in the Christian Ministry and full-time Christian service. The majority of these are members of our own denomination. In addition, 449 are in educational work and are an active influence in the lay leadership of the Christian Church.

THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BUILDING, and the definite religious atmosphere of the College, provide the very best facilities available for training for religious leadership, and offer the Church its finest opportunity to train the young people of the denomination to assume active leadership both in the ministry and laity of the local churches.

OBITUARIES

IN MEMORIAM.

Whereas, in the course of human events, our beloved friend and brother, John Walter West, who for more than forty years was a deacon and the treasurer of the Waverly Christian Church, and over a long period of time teacher in our Sunday School, was on the 25th of June, 1933, removed from our midst; therefore, be it resolved:

First. That we, as a church and Sunday School, have sustained a great and irreparable loss, and that we hereby give expression to our feelings of sorrow, and our appreciation of his life as a Christian gentleman and citizen, a devoted and loyal member of his church and Sunday School, a kindly and affectionate husband, and a friend to man.

Second. That we extend our deepest sympathy to his wife and son, praying God's richest blessings upon them in their hour of bereavement. May they find in him that comfort, consolation and peace of mind, which we have tried to express.

Third. That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of our church and Sunday School, a copy sent to his family, and a copy sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

HERRING.

Edward Herring was born October 10, 1844, and departed this life August 21, 1933, at the age of 88 years, 10 months and 11 days. Brother Herring was a faithful member of our Mt. Olivet (R) Church, and did a large part toward having the present splendid house of worship built there. Brother Herring came into the church rather late in life, but from that time on he was a very active and interested member, and often expressed his regret that he had not come into the

The Tide Turns for Telephones.—

In September, subsidiaries of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, reported a gain in the number of telephones of 20,000—the first monthly gain to be reported in nearly three years. Towards the end of 1930, American citizens began to realize that they could do without telephones, and disconnection orders so far outnumbered connection orders that the system lost some 2,000,000 subscribers.

Holding Second Place.—

Among the list of popular exhibits at the Chicago Exposition, the Hall of Religion is holding second place, with an average of more than 10,000 visiting the hall daily. Up to the first of August, there had been three-fourths of a million registered visitors. If the interest in this building continued to increase at the rate then noted, the number of registrations may reach the two-million mark before the closing date the last of this month.

An Antidote for Ether.—

In an effort to make the use of anesthetics more safe, much experimentation has been done recently with anesthetic antidotes. One of these is a "recall acid" which when injected into the blood restores consciousness quickly to those who slip too far under anesthetics in surgery. Announcement of this phase of safety in surgery was made recently at Massachusetts General Hospital, where eighty-seven years ago the use of ether to avert pain was first demonstrated.

Disciples of Christ Meet in Pittsburgh.—

From the Christian-Evangelist of October 12th we clip the following: "Two days after this paper goes to press, the 1933 International Convention of Disciples opens in Pittsburgh. Many leaders of the brotherhood were already in the convention city as we went to press, and hundreds from all over the country were either on their way or getting ready to leave." A smaller attendance was anticipated than at the 1932 meeting, as Pittsburgh is further from the center of the Disciples' strongholds than was Indianapolis, the scene of last year's meeting.

Two-Hundred-Fiftieth Anniversary.—

Six thousand Presbyterians made a solemn pilgrimage to the eastmost counties of Maryland and Virginia recently, there to celebrate the 250th anniversary of the founding of Presbyterianism in the United States. In 1683 an Irish-born Scotch Presbyterian, Rev. Francis Makemie, journeyed to the colonies and established in Maryland "the first five truly Presbyterian churches." Later he established the first U. S. Presbytery and became its first moderator. He was, in 1707, arrested in New York as a "strolling preacher" by order of the much-hated Lord Cornbury. He was jailed for two months, tried and acquitted, but was forced to pay nearly $500 in "costs." He returned to his homestead in eastern Virginia, now known as Makemie Park, where he died in 1708. In this celebration commemorating his memory as well as the beginning of Presbyterianism in the United States, the Northern and Southern branches of the United States Presbyterian Church joined in a common enterprise for the first time since the War between the States.

Great Construction Projects of Today.—

Boulder Dam, where seven western States have joined with the United States in harnessing the waters of the Colorado River, is one of the projects about which everyone knows today. Another well known project is that of Muscle Shoals, started during the World War, and now being pushed toward completion under the re-employment program. There is, however, a third program of construction being carried out, of which little is known outside of the territory which it is to serve, that eclipses either of these in magnitude. It is the Colorado River Aqueduct, being built by Los Angeles and twelve neighboring cities of Southern California, to guarantee them an adequate water supply. The famous Boulder Dam will cost the federal Government approximately $100,000,000, but this aqueduct will cost these cities nearly two and a fifth times that much, and is to be paid for by the citizens of the region benefitted. The territory to be served is credited with a population of 1,665,883 by the 1930 census, while in 1920, there were less than one-half of that number, 737,000; and in 1910 only 392,000. It is this constantly doubling population that started the quest for a more adequate water supply, and the Colorado River Aqueduct is the answer. The preliminary work necessary before real construction could start, involved 180 miles of water pipe for the workers and for concrete mixing; 220 miles of high-power transmission lines; a complete telephone system, and 172 miles of modern highway. Contracts for over $40,000,000 have already been let.

The Center of the Universe.—

Pan-American Airways recently opened up a new route across Central America. Tri-motored Ford planes with capacity for twelve passengers, make weekly flights from Guatemala City on the Pacific Coast to Tela on the Caribbean Sea, returning the same day. Flying over dense jungles which hide the secrets of Mayan civilization, the plane stops midway on an island where is located the ancient city of Flores, whence comes the chicle for American chewing gum. Asked why the city was built on an island, the native gives the following explanation, which we quote from Review of Reviews: "Flores is the center of the universe. After Montezuma had conquered the world, he desired to build a city that would be equally distant from all parts of his kingdom. Four messengers were sent to the four corners of the earth—one north, one south, one east, and one west. These four traveled inland toward one another, over mountain and through jungle, until at last they stood face to face on the shores of a great lake. Sadly they returned to the conqueror and told him that no city could be built at the center of the universe, for that point was covered with water. 'Return, ignorant slaves,' said Montezuma, 'place a leaf in the center of the lake and sprinkle it with earth. Then build me a city.' Once more the men sought out the lake in the wilderness. They carried a leaf to the middle of the water, spread sand over it, and built a city." And to this day, we are told, Flores is the exact shape of a leaf upon the waters, as can be seen without difficulty from the air; and the city still thrives, surrounded by tropical jungles.

Sea Food Contributes to Health.—

A bulletin issued recently by the North Carolina Health Department calls attention to the health-giving qualities of sea foods available in that State. What it says applies equally to other States. We quote: "In our coastal section the people of North Carolina have available an abundant supply of salt fish, oysters, and other sea food. More of it should be utilized by the up-State people. This food, together with a great variety of vegetables produced throughout the trucking belt in the eastern half of the State, is rich in natural iodine. Iodine is an element absolutely necessary to normal health. It would be impossible for a person to obtain a sufficient quantity of iodine through food consumed alone, but such food is much to be preferred and does contribute some of the necessary iodine to maintain normal health. The principal source of natural iodine for the people is found in the drinking water. The water throughout the eastern half and most of the south central section of North Carolina contains a sufficient amount of iodine to supply normal needs. When the supply of natural iodine found in the drinking water is supplemented with sea food and vegetables from the eastern half of the State, a plentiful supply of iodine is assured. In such people goiter is seldom seen. In one or two sections of north-western North Carolina, notably some parts of Wilkes County, the goiter problem among children is a serious one. If the people of that section could exchange some of the glorious Wilkes County apples for Carteret County oysters and salt-water fish it would be an exchange which would benefit the health of the people in both counties. The people of eastern North Carolina should consume more apples and other products from the western half of the State, and those of the west should eat more sea food from our coast."

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

One of the most useless of all pastimes is playing with the remnants of things that might have been.—Milton Lee.

Rev. G. H. Veazey, president of the Alabama Conference for the coming year, wishes it announced in THE SUN that "we want all the ministers of our Conference, and as many laymen as possible of the Conference, to meet at the Christian Church, Wadley, Ala., at 2 o'clock P. M., Sunday, October 29th, that we may finish the work of the Conference and plan for the future." This arrangement was made owing to the fact that at the two days' annual session recently the business of the Conference and plans for the coming year were not finished.

October 1st was observed as Education Sunday at the church at St. Petersburg, Fla. The assistant pastor, Rev. Lawrence A. Gedcke, had an interesting program arranged. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill spoke at the Sunday School Rally, and also at the Rally Meeting of the Christian Endeavor Society in the evening. Mr. Gedcke preached at the morning service upon "The Educational Program of the Social Church," and in the evening Superintendent Gillette spoke on "The Larger Educational Program of the Denomination." There was a large attendance at all services.

Mr. Hermon Eldredge, of Dayton, a recent visitor to the South, writes encouragingly in this paragraph: "There is a new note of progress among the churches of the South and East that we have visited in the past ten days. It is not based so much on improved economic conditions as upon an improved morale in the churches. No longer are our best churches waiting, Micawber-like, for 'something to turn up,' but they are beginning to turn things up. Pastors and people are better adjusted to conditions and are beginning to think more in terms of Kingdom service and less about their own 'hard times.'"

The Missionary Herald for October carries this item which will be of interest to many CHRISTIAN SUN readers: "Rev. and Mrs. A. D. Woodworth, who retired on the field two years ago, but continued teaching, had their preparations for departure from Tokyo, Japan, in September, continually interrupted by farewell meetings and parting gifts. They were each given a watch, by the theological school and the middle school, respectively. To the teachers of the latter school, with which Mr. Woodworth had been connected for nineteen years, a dinner in his honor was given. The display of affection and appreciation was very striking. There were 'about a dozen' farewell meetings and many speeches."

Writing under date of Mid-Ocean, September 25, 1933, our beloved Dr. Woodworth, coming home from Japan, where he has labored as a most faithful missionary for forty years, says: "This is simply to say that we are on the way to 'the land of the free and the home of the brave.' We are having a pleasant voyage, with six other missionaries returning on the same ship. We have had two Sundays together and a sermon on each day. Goodbye and blessings on you." Dr. Woodworth, though passed the period when missionaries remain on the field, returns to the land and the loved ones who sent him out to spend his remaining days (many, many may they be) among those who love him for the service he has rendered in the name of our Lord and for the sake of righteousness in fields afar.

This personal is of historical interest and enthusiasm sent in by Mrs. D. A. Long, Florence, S. C.: "I regarded myself as a member of the Christian Church on the day I married Dr. Long, twenty-five years ago. My former membership was with the M. E. Church (South), at Tupelo, Miss. Dr. Long's membership dates with the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference, as a minister, since 1867. THE CHRISTIAN SUN and Dr. Long were born the same year, 1844. The above was dictated by Dr. Long last week, and soon after that he was taken with a fever that went to 104 degrees, caused by pneumonia. At this writing, October 13th, he is very much better and his physician thinks it wonderful how he rallies."

The first thousand copies of "Pioneers" (the Guest Book for 1933) allotted to the Mission Secretary's office, Elon College, N. C., have been distributed on demand of pastors and Missionary Societies, and a second thousand is expected for distribution by the time this is in print. The Guest Book carries to its readers a sketch of twelve missionary personages or projects with which all of us should be acquainted. In addition to these twelve personages, the front page is filled with pictures of a challenging and suggestive sort, while the inside cover page and the two outside cover pages are filled with essential facts that all pastors and Missionary Societies should have. The Guest Book is, indeed, a valuable contribution to our literature, and no one can become host for twelve days to the twelve guests presented without becoming more deeply interested in the work of world-wide Gospel and brotherhood.

The National Council of the Young Men's Christian Association has designated November 12-18, 1933, "World's Week of Prayer for Young Men." One could wish, because of the great need, that a full week of prayer could be given for the young men of our day who are confronted with so many problems, temptations and unsettled conditions. To observe this week of prayer, the National Council of the Y. M. C. A. has issued a booklet of twenty-two pages entitled, "The Uniqueness of Christ," in which booklet is set forth a page for each day of the week—Scripture reading, suggestions as to how the hour of prayer may be observed and special subjects for intercession. It is a most hopeful and promising event, and any pastor or layman interested who may desire to look into the matter further, may get the Week of Prayer suggestions and also the twenty-two page pamphlet by addressing his request to Geo. Irving, Secretary, 347 Madison Ave., New York City. The suggestions and the booklet are certainly worth reading, whether one may or may not follow in full the same.

Facts carry no weight and logic, no conclusive argument when appetite, passion and mania seize the people. It will do no good to herald it now from a thousand housetops, that deaths from alcoholism have decreased and are decreasing under prohibition and that Keeley's Institutes and other places of cure for inebriates have, for the most part, been put out of business. The Metropolitan Life Insurance Company issues a bulletin in which the figures are given, showing that there is a decrease in the death rate due to alcoholism of those insured. These figures given by the year for the past ten years, showing the number of deaths per 100,000 of insured persons, reveal the stubborn fact that the figures for 1932 are the lowest since 1922. But what difference does it make? What does a subsidized press and paid propaganda and political manipulation care about the deaths of a few hundred thousand citizens? Taxes must come, at any rate, even if they have to be paid by and with the last penny of the drunken father or brother, who, rather than buy milk and bread for the family, will spend the last dollar for the demon, strong drink. But, as stated, facts in the case no longer convince and logic carries no convictions.

Rev. M. T. Sorrell and family are all smiles and happiness, and well they may be. Our Third Avenue Church, Danville, Va., of which Brother Sorrell is pastor, has now brought to completion from cellar to garret and from curb-stone to the last line in the backyard, a flawless, comfortable and beautiful parsonage. The Sorrells were installed in their new home on Third Avenue, just across the street in front of the church, Monday, the 9th, and THE SUN's editor shared the joy and hospitality of the "house-warming" at a bountiful dinner with several invited guests of the congregation at the parsonage on the evening of October 12th. We were told that the congregation which Brother Sorrell serves with such acceptable fervor and enthusiasm, is as happy over the home for their preacher and his family as the occupants themselves are. Brother Sorrell is a magnanimous mania for building and expansion. Large additions to Sunday School rooms and equipment have been made to the church building since he began his pastorate, and these are all now paid for, but are already quite inadequate and more rooms must be added to meet the growing demands of the Sunday School, Young People's Society and Christian Endeavor. A revival was in progress last week, the congregations being large, the interest deep and the results gratifying.

Dr. Charles Eldred Shelton, Portsmouth, Va., was assisted by Rev. R. Lee House, pastor, First Congregational-Christian Church, Newport News, last week in observing religious emphasis. Bro. House writes of Dr. Shelton: "His sermons are charged with spiritual power and are examples of literary excellence." A further item of interest from the Newport News pastorate is that officers for the coming year were recently installed. At this service Bro. Wilbur H. Baker presided: The program included a prelude by Miss Louise Baker; the anthem, "There is a Blue Sky Smiling;" "Our Debt of Gratitude to the Retiring Officers," talk by Mrs. J. J. Baker; prayer led by A. G. Todd; "What We Have the Right to Expect from Our Sunday School Teachers," talk by E. L. Scott; response by R. O. Hitz; offertory; talk, "The Sacred Task of a Church Officer," W. L. Rilee, and response by W. B. Williams, and "Why Are You Here As An Officer?" by the pastor." In connection with the last item, the pastor placed multigraphed copies of his address, "Why Are You Here As An Officer?" on the table beside the collection plate. Each one taking a copy of the sermon made a small donation, and thus the sermon realized the church $4.70, which is the means of raising money for paying for the pipe organ. "We plan to do this at least once each month," writes Bro. House. Evidently, here is a resourceful sort of pastor. There are many in a congregation who would like to take a sermon home with them and are willing to make for that purpose a contribution, the same to be used for church improvement. The trouble with many of us pastors is that we feel we must go on in the same old way without variation or of introducing any idea other than those used for half a century or more. Paul realized that there was need for venture when he wrote to Timothy, saying: "Be instant in season and out of season."

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

UNDER CRITICISM.

Everything for which money is expended now comes under close scrutiny and easy criticism. When money is easy and abundant individuals, churches, societies and even Governments are not so particular as to why and for what. But in time of few dimes and still fewer dollars comparisons are made, often invidious comparisons, and criticisms are rampant. "I can purchase more of this with my money than I can of that. If I have money to give, I can give it and get more for it in my local church than I can by sending it to Missions or to any enterprise that I know so little about." So there you are. Meanwhile Missions suffer and the pastors who are sent out to preach the gospel, the saving gospel, either in the fields at home or abroad, must suffer the consequences—be called home, in many instances, put out of business, turn to some other occupation. If ever courage was needed on the part of the church, that need is now. It requires heroic courage to meet and face the criticism so easily and glibly made now, and to go forward with the work of Christ and the cause of righteousness.

The trouble with, and the curse of criticism is that it is an excuse for not doing. When one sets one's mind and heart against an enterprise, however unselfish and Christ-like, one immediately turns for some excuse and, as a rule, cheap criticism is the easiest and the most self-satisfying excuse. Many are excusing themselves in these days from making a contribution to the cause of righteousness by finding some fault and making some criticism of the cause and the call of righteousness. We are told that a murderer, before he commits his crime, justifies himself by some grievance or excuse. The thief who steals first justifies his conduct by some claim of want or necessity. The dishonest man who cheats, first excuses himself with some criticism against his victim or the scheme of things under which he lives and carries on. The danger of our time is easy criticism of things that are sacred and divine by cheap excuse which only justifies him who makes it. Beware of the cheap and ready criticism heard anywhere and everywhere now of all institutions, enterprises, movements that make for righteousness, peace and virtue.

CONSCIENCE AND THE CODE.

A code, like any other plan or program, will not run itself. However good a plan may be, it has to be worked in order to be effectual. We have codes a-plenty. Our neighbor, the North Carolina Christian Advocate, parodies a familiar spiritual after this fashion:

"I gotta a code,
You gotta code,
All God's chilluns got codes."

So, we shall not lack in codes, so far as numbers are concerned.

There is no law to enforce these codes. Our Government, which has confessed that it is unable to enforce a prohibition law, and, on that account, advocates repeal, has already recognized that it cannot enforce a code which contains a thousand prohibitions of acts touching all lines of industry and enterprise. The enforcement of the code becomes a matter of conscience. Unless a man of industry has a conscience to sustain and move him, he will find some way to evade or avoid the code. If the conscience of the American people, of employers of labor, masters and managers of industry, is sufficiently keen and alert, then the code will be sustained; otherwise, it will be evaded in one way or another, in spite of all the threats, appeals and promises that can be made. There must be an individual response to the call for the common good. All of which means that economic recovery is based on religion. If our religious training, convictions and conscience have gone far enough in America to furnish the foundation and sustain the building, then we are putting our house on a rock, for it is not conscience merely, but an enlightened, quickened Christian conscience that can supply the durable foundation. The inspired writer had in mind Governments, as well as individuals, when he said: "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." Again, let it be said that the success of the code depends upon the good conscience of Christian citizenship, and unless we have this, no code will carry.

We are in a terrible conflict. All recognize that. We are waging a battle against chaos and depression. Such a conflict calls for courage, cooperative, and sanctions of a good conscience. Unless we can cooperate now each for all, and all for each, we are headed for a fall. J. O. A.

A WAR TO END WAR.

That was the dynamic (or was it the deadly stroke of lightning?) that sent us rushing across the seas and hurled us into the maelstrom of the World War. For that awful holocaust the nations paid the inconceivable cost of: 10,000,000 known dead soldiers, 3,000,000 presumed dead soldiers, 13,000,000 dead civilians, 20,000,000 wounded, 3,000,000 prisoners, 10,000,000 refugees, 9,000,000 war orphans, 5,000,000 war widows.

But, according to latest reports, the war clouds are lowering again and threatening more human destruction and more unspeakable human misery and suffering. Those returning from Europe tell us that the nations are armed as they never have been and, in many particulars, are better prepared for war today than they were in 1914. The armies of the nations number 5,500,000 men, ready to go to the field of blood on the briefest notice, and that there are 20,000,000 reserves held in readiness, and that these armies are better equipped for destructive warfare than ever before. Air fleets are being rapidly developed; and more money is actually being spent upon armies, navies and air forces than before the World War began. We have not kept faith with the dead who gave their lives in the "War to End War." And the only way we can keep faith with them is to cultivate everywhere and under all conditions the spirit, the life and the teachings of the Prince of Peace, who, in love for all mankind, gave his own life a ransom.

Man's greatest ingenuity, most highly developed skill, and the larger part of his public revenue have ever been used to destroy and kill his fellowman.

OF WHAT WORTH HIS SILVER AND JEWELS?

"Gus Winkler," a Chicago gangster, died last week as the hunted beast dies. Before the burial of his body, one hundred and eleven shotgun slugs were taken therefrom, and then, according to the associated press, what was left of this penetrated and mangled corpse was buried in a $10,000.00 silver coffin. When he was slain, shot in the back by other gangsters, he was wearing a jewelled belt buckle made of gold and set with twenty-four emeralds and five large diamonds; and in addition to this, he carried a platinum watch set with sixty diamonds and a gold watch chain set with ten diamonds. In his pocket-book was $330.00 in bills. He had lived like a prince, and in recent years had fared sumptuously every day. And so ends the career of Gus Winkler, living by outlawry, mercilessly extracting millions from banks, individuals and corporations, defying the laws of man, of Government and of God!

What a travesty on this human kind! What a comment on man made in the image of God, is a character and a career like this! Surely there is nothing that can be said in behalf of such a life, for its history is its own worst condemnation. Neither gold, nor silver, nor priceless jewels could shield him, or his name, from the infamy his lawless life brought upon itself.

THE PRESIDENT EXHORTS.

In these days of materialism it is good to hear the President of the United States tell his radio audience that in the tasks we all face we shall not succeed unless the people hold the spiritual values just as high as they do the economic values. I heard him say that the churches are valuable institutions and they ought to be supported adequately.

It is good to have a President who can say such things and mean them. While he was talking, I wondered if anyone was tuning in over there in Russia. I hope so. That kind of talk would do them good. I can never forget what our guide told us about churches and religion there. He said that anybody could go to church who wanted to. We asked him if anybody did, and he said that some folks do, but children and young people do not. The educational system is against it, and the young people do not want to go.

It is very important to have our children instructed concerning God and religion and brought up to observe Christian ways of living. Life without the solaces of religion is barren. One may live on, perhaps for years, with good health, a good job and a good income, but when these are gone something greater than these is needed. Religion is the answer.

HOW MUCH IS LEFT OF PROHIBITION?

By REV. GEO. N. EDWARDS.

Is there any reason left for voting against the repeal of Prohibition in South Carolina?

From Maine to California, we see the mounting roll of States joining the repeal column. It is one long retreat. Why not make it unanimous? There is no use to think a few States, even a quarter of these, could enforce Prohibition on the remainder. Why not adopt the economic argument and get the revenue of the liquor business? Never mind how it is collected. "We need the money." Why not admit that the nation made a mistake when it adopted the Eighteenth Amendment, and that the liquor business should have the right of way? Put it back on the street corners; why force it into the blind alleys? The people want it, don't they? Of course, the "trade" must be made to support the government. And if we drink sufficiently deep, we can make a handsome revenue.

So runs the current argument. The States are making a retreat. Let us ask from what? From a long advance toward temperance culminating in abstinence for millions of people. Intemperance has proved itself the enemy of the human race, at least from the days of Noah. We found it not diminishing but increasing with the advance of civilization, with the multiplying of high-powered drinks, and with increasing ease of their distribution. The making of alcoholics and the care and attempted cure of them became an engrossing occupation of the nation. Bars and saloons were widely and temptingly placed by the tens of thousands. The newspapers and the countryside were placarded with invitations to drink. The saloon was advertised by its front and the breath that issued from it. Its products became a heavy charge on every city and State where it existed. The reform movement which culminated in prohibition was a resolute determination to take away the cause rather than to potter with the effects and pay for the consequences. Repeal is a retreat from this sane conclusion. The movement for repeal has already been accomplished in some States by the repeal of the States' own liquor laws, with an evident intention to leave the States wide open to all the old evils that promoted intemperance.

Repeal is a retreat from the position that the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors is an illegitimate business because too dangerous to the body politic to be tolerated. There has been no evidence adduced to show that intoxicating liquor is any less dangerous than it ever was. But many people have come to think that revenue and the pleasure of drinking are more important than physical health and public morality. When the amendment made liquor illegitimate, it put the business of handling it on the same plane as the smuggling of drugs and the kidnapping of children. It became the duty of government to suppress it rather than to derive income from it. To repeal the amendment is to retreat from the honest belief that the government has the power to do what we gave it the authority to do.

We believe that the government can bring us out of the depression; a group of delegates go up to Washington and demand of the President that he fix the price of cotton at a price profitable to them, and expect it to be done overnight. There are some who fondly hope that disarmament of the world may be brought about by the President's word to the Conference in Geneva, but we are making up our mind, as a nation, that the government is incompetent and impotent to enforce liquor laws among our own people. We can suppress the opium traffic to a minimum, we are finding a way to suppress kidnapping, but we expect our agents to connive with the manufacture and sale of the most dangerous drug in the pharmacopeia of nature. John Barleycorn is too much for us. He insinuates himself into the hearts of those that love him, and feelingly persuades them that they cannot get along without him. He tickles the pocketbooks of those who will serve him, and makes them believe he has a fortune awaiting them. The nation retreats because there is dissolution in the ranks. If liquor is invited to return it is because the majority want it. They want it cheap, convenient and reputable; and a minority expect to make easy money out of it. For many it is a surrender to appetite and greed.

For others it is a kind of moral fatigue. The liquor evil is hard to fight. Its forces are indefatigable. It knows no law nor moral compunctions. Prohibition started on a wave of moral idealism at a time when the nation had learned to do a great many things and do them together. It had prohibited liquor in war-time conditions; most of the States had prohibited it; it seemed but a short step to make an end of it for the nation. It did succeed well for a few years. The country expected the law of the nation to be observed. But the law-breaking forces persisted—they found a market for their wares. The smart set with plenty of money to spend made a mockery of the laws. The enforcement of the law lacked the vigor of conviction and felt the full touch of money. The school and church felt that the matter was now in the hands of the government and there was little for them to do. The battle was won. Never can we think again that because the stage is set the action is over. Repeal is a retreat from moral idealism for the nation. It is too long and hard a task to hold this advanced stand on the liquor question. It is to admit that the wets have more endurance than the dries. It is a lot easier to yield and go backward than to hold advanced ground won with difficulty and hardihood. We are called upon to admit that we have gone too far. The rest of the world is pretty wet; why should the United States be different?

There is something to be said for the wisdom of retreat. Retreat is not surrender. Wise generals sometimes retire to save their armies and return with new vigor. To put the control of the liquor business in the hands of the States does not mean that most of them will give it free license to do as it pleases. But it does mean to try again a method that has already been found unsatisfactory. If a State like ours already has prohibitory laws it behooves us to see that they are maintained. If the individual State can enforce its laws in this regard so much better than the nation, here is the chance to prove it. The temperance people who urge repeal of the amendment can now prove their sincerity by supporting and observing the liquor laws of their own State. If a State has no strict liquor laws, here is a chance for new, if less noble, experiments.

Those who do not know what the legalization of hard liquor means will have a chance to learn. Those who have never seen the newspapers and roadsides vocal with invitations to drink whiskey will have a chance to learn in a new field the subtle power of advertising; and added thereto will be the power of the persuasive voice into every home that has a radio. Add to this the force of the argument "The government permits it; it must be all right!" Perhaps there is even a suggestion that the government advocates it—we had better drink to help the government get out of debt.

There is still a chance for good fighting all along the line for temperance people under State control. Maybe the responsibility may be more keenly felt and the lines more closely drawn. This is, after all, a social problem and we live in a day when social responsibility is deeply felt. We have every kind of measure for the relief of the unemployed; we have, or should have, Workmen's Compensation Acts. A friend of mine has very pointedly suggested that "A government that legalizes the traffic should care for the wrecks of the traffic." Hazardous occupations are cared for, why not the hazardous occupation of drinking liquor? The automobile wrecks of even the slightly drunken drivers bear witness to its danger. Why not take funds from the revenue of the liquor traffic to provide for the families left destitute through intemperance, and the individuals suffering through drink-caused accidents?

There is a chance also for the re-education of the industrialists who in the decade from 1910 to 1920 were very sure that the men who used liquor even in moderation were not profitable as machinists. The railroads who refused to have engineers who even came out of saloons with the smell of liquor were solicitous for their engines and their passengers. Is alcohol any safer now than it was then? The age has become more and more mechanized. Millions of railroad passengers have left the trains to drive their own engines on the public highway. They drive on a smooth road not on tracks. The slightest swerve may mean a collision. They drive at will, not upon a schedule; almost anybody can drive, not tested engineers alone. The young people who are to learn to drink are most frequent drivers. There is an automobile to every eight persons in America. Other countries may jog along with their old drinking customs. Their speed is slow. They still use the horse and the ox, or go afoot. Eighty-five per cent of all the automobiles in the world are used in the United States. Safety in the midst of speed is one of the most pressing problems of the hour. About 30,000 deaths are caused by autos every year. It is slightly decreasing under the prohibition we now have with all its imperfections. What will it be under legalization? When Canada adopted State control and sale the number of accidents went up 42 per cent. Is it likely to go down in the United States? There never was a time in the history of the race when a steady hand, a clear eye and quick response were so needed for life and "the pursuit of happiness" as in the United States at the present time.

Even if National Prohibition is no longer feasible in the present state of the public mind, it seems to me that a State that has dry laws and means to keep them can best express itself by voting against repeal. When so many States have already voted against the Eighteenth Amendment, the vote of this State can hardly affect the national issue, but a large vote for repeal might be taken to mean that the State is ready to repeal its own prohibitory laws also.

Let the retreat end here. Let us take a stand in this State that a judgment about National Prohibition is not a decision about State prohibition; that a business that was cast out less than twenty years ago shall not be invited back, that we are more concerned about the safety of our people than about the money that can be made by pandering to their appetites. We should ill serve the State to give legal standing to a business that while it gives to the State with one hand, takes with the other from the pockets of the people ten times what it gives, and takes not only money, but life and health and happiness that it can never give back.

The recent progress of medical science, largely accomplished through animal experimentation, has satisfied me that even the moderate use of alcohol is objectionable; that the habitual use of alcohol in any form is lowering to the intellectual and nervous power."—Former President Eliot of Harvard.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

An old home was burned in the county last night. Hundreds of people gathered to watch the fire consume the old building. This home has protected people for many years from cold and storm. It has been the birthplace of distinguished people. Children have been cared for within its walls. Old age has looked out from its windows, and dreamed of a happy past and a glorious future prospect with abiding faith. Now the old home lies in ashes. Its day of comfort and service is done.

But the gathering of the crowd to witness the fire of destruction sets one to thinking. Why did the crowd find the fire interesting? Because it was interesting. Destruction is always interesting. Some people are more interested in destruction than in construction. The crowd will not drive many miles to inspect the building of an ordinary home. But if it is on fire they will be on hand. It is in keeping with human nature to be interested in destruction.

This is the philosophy of the present movement to repeal the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution. Many people have been led to believe that the Eighteenth Amendment is detrimental to the morals of our country. It was marked for destruction. This movement caught the imagination. Step by step the leaders of this movement paved the way for a final dash of destruction-repeal. It has worked. It always works. The American people could not be enlisted in a program to build up a great traffic in liquor. That would not appeal to their imagination. But they are interested in destroying an amendment which outlawed the liquor business years ago. They are thrilled with any movement which heads toward some type of destruction.

War is another illustration of this strange element in human nature. War is destructive. Every gun, every warship, every bombing plane is a potential instrument of destruction. Strong young men are induced to join the army because of this inherent interest in destroying property and human life. The immediate incentive is victory over the enemy. The objective is the destruction of the foe. Nations do not fight for peace; they fight for victory. Defensive warfare is nothing less than an attempt to destroy the enemy who threatens one's own security. If nations could lose their lust for destruction, the Prince of Peace would come to the throne with healing in his wings.

Jesus took the opposite view of life. He came not to destroy but to fulfill the law. The program of his life was construction and not destruction. "I am come that they might have life and that they might have it more abundantly" (John 10:10). Herein he differs from all other great national leaders. It is true he came to destroy the works of the Destroyer. But these works of the evil one are all destructive to human life and character. Jesus did not come to destroy anything uplifting to humanity. He came to save. When the five thousand were fed he commanded the disciples to gather up the fragments that nothing be lost. Nothing is to be wasted in the program of God.

Man may find himself, and his place, when he accepts the Jesus way of living. Human life is sacred. The property of a Christian should be as sacred as his life. All property belong to God. Man holds it in trust for the Creator. Every dollar, every home, every place of business, every factory and every life should be recognized in this spiritual relation to God. The place to begin this recognition is in man. When man is right with God, and understands his true relationship, the whole perspective of human rights will be changed. Man needs to get right with God. Then he needs to learn God's will until he may say with Jesus: "Not my will but thine be done."

ALABAMA CONFERENCE CHANGES NAME.

I thought SUN readers would like to know about our annual conference which was held at New Hope Church, October 10th-11th. Their pastor, Rev. A. H. Sheppard, having died a few weeks ago, a cloud of sorrow naturally hovered over the community, and the entire conference as well.

The churches were well represented, only two churches having no delegates present. All of the churches sent their reports. Our pastors were all there. Reports were better than last year. Salaries increased with most ministers. There was an increase in conference apportionments of more than 50 per cent, yet a very small amount was received. Prospects look much brighter than they did a year ago.

Rev. C. W. Carter preached the annual sermon. Holy communion was administered by Revs. G. D. Hunt and F. P. Ensminger. A bountiful feast was spread that was greatly enjoyed by all present; then conference work was resumed. The work continued very harmoniously until about 3:30 P. M., when conference adjourned. Then the young people had a very enthusiastic meeting led by Miss Marguerite Davison. Among other items, Rev. J. H. Dollar delivered an able address.

At 7 o'clock conference met for another session. This session was not largely attended. Most of the people had gone home for the night. Rev. E. M. Carter preached a very able sermon on Proverbs 29:18. We were delighted to have him with us again. His presence added greatly to the success of the conference.

The second day was full of reports and discussions; in fact, we did not get through. Rev. J. H. Hughes preached the 11 o'clock sermon. We all enjoyed to the fullest extent another sumptuous dinner. Among other things, the conference passed a resolution asking the Southern Christian Convention to pass to this conference, when it is duly incorporated to include all the Congregational Churches of the State, the title of Southern Union College.

Next session of this conference will meet with Rock Stand Church, Wednesday instead of Tuesday after the second Sunday in October, 1934.

We found an increase in membership of 43, besides Beulah Church, Phenix City, with 79 members, which was received into this conference, having formerly been in the Georgia and Alabama Conference.

There are six Congregational Churches in this jurisdiction. Five of them have merged with the Christian Conference, the name of which has been changed to the East Alabama Association of Congregational-Christian Churches.

We were delighted to have with us at this session our good friend, Mr. J. T. Kernodle, managing editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and appreciate very much his contribution to us. We feel that we will have more SUN readers because of his visit with us.

Officers were elected as follows: President, G. H. Veazey; Vice-President, Rev. J. P. Bean; Secretary, H. P. Beard, Roanoke, Ala.; Assistant Secretary, Rev. D. W. Sheppard, Phenix City, Ala.; Treasurer, J. W. Payne, Wedowee, Ala.

AN ECONOMIC SOCIAL CONSCIOUSNESS IS BEING BORN AMID DYING VOICES OF THE GODS OF GREED.

By TIMOTHY THOMAS.

Silently the leaves are falling, the never-failing sign that winter is on its way. By many it is a welcome season; by others it is a period to be dreaded.

The winter of 1933-34 will be an unwelcome season by millions, who, in normal times would gladly hail the coming touch of frost, the sight of snow, the Christmas time, and all of the attending thrills of nature in her full glory. These millions are the unemployed and those on almost starvation wages.

For three winters, two of which have been unusually hard, burdens have been great amid problems too difficult for the individual to solve. The patience with which these millions have borne their burdens is a loyal and lasting tribute to their love and respect for an orderly government. They are due the thanks of our national leaders as well as a just reward for their heroic part in the conflict. But the experiences through which these millions have gone, and the sufferings they have borne, can be no justification for their being called upon again to fight the battles of winter without the necessities and comforts of life. The past makes the approach of winter only more dreadful.

America has always successfully met her foes (with one exception), whether panics, depressions or alien enemies. These achievements, however, have been only by a united and concerted action.

This country is now fighting its greatest battle—the battle of economic readjustment. Poverty and tragedy stalk the earth because of hunger, and this deplorable situation is largely occasioned because of greed, selfishness and short-sightedness upon the part of a few. What a picture—the presence of hunger and plenty, while children cry for food with surplus foodstuffs going unbidden on glutted markets. Overproduction of food on one hand and empty stomachs on the other. What a shame upon civilization that proudly calls itself Christian!

America is now called to a council table to solve problems greater and more difficult than those faced by our forefathers when they met to frame our National Constitution. Theirs was a problem of making a beaten path; the problem of the hour is a complex situation aggravated by a multitude of ideas, the pressing of a social education, the awakening of a social conscience, and the dying voices of the gods of greed. It is now or never. It is a battle of ideas and ideals, principles and practices. It is the greatest gunless battle the world has ever fought.

Will America succeed? Only by united effort and concerted action on the part of every man, woman and child. This effort and action should be swift so that the possible suffering during the approaching winter may be reduced to a minimum.

Every true and tender thought is of thy in-breathing, every holy desire is the prompting of thy spirit. Too little have we sought thee; too long have we struggled and stumbled alone, when thou wert near and eager to help. Forgive our blindness and neglect, and open in our hearts a fountain of prayer for our cleansing. Thou Balm for our woes, thou Answerer of our cries, teach us how to pray for the health of our souls that we may go forth strong and joyous in thy blessed will and way, for Christ's sake.—The Builder.

A FLYING TRIP.

No, it was not a trip by airplane, but a flying trip nevertheless. Your managing editor left Richmond on Saturday, October 7th, going by way of the Seaboard Airline to Atlanta, and thence to LaGrange, Ga. We spent Sunday night in the home of Rev. and Mrs. Jesse H. Dollar. We found them in the midst of a campaign to pay off the last thousand dollars due on the LaGrange Church. During the two years which Bro. Dollar has been at LaGrange, this debt has, despite the depression, been reduced from $9,000 to $1,000, and it is expected that this amount will be raised during the present month and the church dedicated before the first of November. Our short visit with this alert pastor and his wife was most enjoyable and we hated to leave.

Our next stop was at Wadley, Ala., where we visited with the good people of Southern Union College. There is a nice group of students, numbering around fifty, at Southern Union, and one who has more money than he can profitably use for himself, could make no better investment in the future than by helping this school. We ate supper at the college dining hall that night and went to Rev. G. H. Veazey's home for the night and for breakfast. We were most royally entertained there. Mrs. Veazey knows the art of making one feel perfectly at home and making them want to come back again.

Leaving Wadley on Tuesday morning, we drove with Bro. Veazey to Abanda, where the Alabama Conference, of which he was secretary and Bro. C. W. Carter was president, was in session at New Hope Church. The conference was one of the best attended and most interesting ones that we have ever attended. A synopsis of the conference is given elsewhere in this issue by the secretary; we will not attempt to add to it. Lunch was served on the grounds both on Tuesday and Wednesday, and nothing was missing in the way of good food. We spent Tuesday night in the home of Dr. and Mrs. J. T. Clack, who also entertained Dr. F. P. Ensminger, and Revs. C. W. Carter and J. D. Dollar. Dr. Clack is one of the most remarkable men that we have ever met. Although totally blind, he carries on his ministrations of mercy to the sick throughout the entire community. His wife has truly given her eyes that he may see. She drives his car through sunshine and rain, and in many other ways makes possible the work that he does. It is truly a wonderful couple. Our life will be better through the coming years for having known them.

When we left New Hope Church Wednesday afternoon we rode with Mrs. G. L. Stephens to Lanett, Ala. With us in the car was Rev. E. M. Carter, who had gone from Eastern North Carolina to visit relatives in the conference area. Bro. Carter conducted the prayer meeting service for Rev. G. D. Hunt, the pastor at Lanett, that evening, and the writer was also given the opportunity to say a few words. The night was spent at the parsonage with Bro. Hunt. He and his good wife have certainly gained a lifelong friend by their courteous hospitality. The next morning Bro. Hunt took us for a drive around the big cotton mills of Lanett, through a vast pecan orchard, and then to West Point, Ga., where we caught the Crescent Limited back to Atlanta.

We had to change to a local train at Atlanta, and went from there to Cornelia, Ga., where Rev. H. B. Mowbray met us at the station and carried us over to Demorest, the home of Piedmont College. We were most delightfully received there by President Newell and the various members of the faculty. There are around 250 of the finest young men and young women that we have ever seen enrolled in school there this year.

It was necessary that we reach Richmond on Friday morning, and in order that we might do so, Mr. William Ensminger, son of Supt. Ensminger, carried us 55 miles over the Georgia mountains that night, to Atlanta, Ga., where we caught the 10:18 train and reached Richmond the next day at 11:30.

We believe that our readers will agree with us that it was a "flying trip." It was nevertheless one of the most enjoyable trips that we have ever made. One could talk all day about the good times that we had and yet not the half would be told. We hope to go again at a not-too-distant date.

WITH PREACHER ANDES.

"Some of us call it Autumn and others call it God."

How forcibly this line, appearing on the front page of the current issue of Bible Class Quarterly, came to me on that glorious first Sunday morning as we glided up and down through the hills of that most beautiful section of the State of Virginia, the Shenandoah Valley. Riding with me on this occasion was Rev. A. W. Andes. He was preaching that day at Newport morning service, baptizing at Mt. Olive in the afternoon, and preaching again at Leaksville in the evening. Nearly a hundred miles of mountainous driving, a wonderful treat to me, but my friend, the preacher has been going over this tortuous trail these many years, through weather conditions and many other things too numerous to mention. To him it could not always have been what one would term glorious, especially when the sun was not there to help glorify the scene. Traveling over dangerously steep and crooked highways and by-paths, often sleety and stormy, is not conducive to high spirits, to say nothing of times when this faithful man of God left the comforts of his home to obey the call to duty when to remain would have meant much to him.

"Preacher Andes is never late," has become a byword among the good, genial mountain folks whom he faithfully serves. Not a job for a predatory animal, you say? And so say I. God bless Brother Andes, his family and his work.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary

PRAYER.

Great God, our Father, thy love and mercy are never failing. Continually thou art seeking to lead and help all whom thou hast called to be thine own. We praise thee that forever Jesus is interceding for his faltering ones, and that through Jesus thy mercy flows into every trembling, trusting child of thine. We pray for faith, and for light and for love and to do whatever is thy precious will. In Jesus' name.—Amen.

THROUGH THE KITCHEN DOOR.

Dr. John R. Scotford, writing under the topic of "Our Awakening World," in The Congregationalist, says that in many of our churches "Missions usually got into the church through the kitchen door, which door was held open by the good women."

In many churches the women are still holding the door open, and it is about the only door which missions enter.

Possibly this is why we are beginning to hear something about Missions in some of our churches. The women are holding open the kitchen door, and some of them, having entered, are calling quite loudly so that all in the house may hear. It is high time. "Giving," continues Dr. Scotford, "was considered a work of super-erogation carried on by women, children and saints, while the hard-headed trustees concerned themselves with such essential matters as the coal bill and the pastor's salary." Missions should come in at the front door, and have the seat of honor at the table, since it was the chief concern of our Lord in his most emphatic and parting command to his disciples. We have not made it the chief concern, but many of our women are determined that we shall do so, and, even against the will of many, they are giving Missions a place in the center of the picture at the very heart of church life and activity, and this is as it should be. The task is not yet accomplished, and the good women have a long way to go, but they have never tired of the journey, provided they could realize that their Lord was at the other end of that journey beckoning and calling them on. After all, the men folks still feed from the kitchen table and maybe they will get some (spiritual) nourishment in the kitchen whose door is held open by the Woman's Missionary Society.

J. O. A.

STOP THE DROP.

Dr. Chas. C. Merrill, of our Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, sends this challenging appeal to all of our Congregational-Christian forces, an appeal which we must hear and heed if we are as a church to shoulder the responsibility that our Lord laid upon us, his church, when he said: "Ye shall be my witnesses unto the uttermost parts." We can only share the joy and the rewards of victory as we shoulder and carry with our Lord this weight of responsibility. Read and meditate upon Dr. Merrill's clarion call to conflict and conquest:

"The loss in apportionment contributions for the first eight months (up to September 1st) of the calendar year is $302,191.00 or 30.1 per cent. The American Board had a loss of 29.6 per cent, the Home Boards 32.1 per cent, the States 20.7 per cent. The loss during the summer months (June, July, and August) was 23.6 per cent, which substantiates previous indications that on account of the bank holiday in March and its consequences, there was of necessity in the first months more serious falling off in giving than has more recently been the case.

"If our people can give the attention to the matter which its importance demands, it seems clear that before January 10th, when the books for the year close, we can bring down this percentage of loss in a very perceptible way. At the same time we can be organizing the finances of the church for 1934 so that the drop in giving shall be wholly stopped.

"Washington Gladden once used this phrase: 'It is better to say, This one thing I do, than These forty things I dabble in.' So our Congregational and Christian Churches throughout the country must gird themselves for this very definite goal: Every church will exert itself to the utmost between now and the end of the year to bring its giving for 1933 up to its giving for 1932. 'This one thing I do'."

A LIFE INCOME.

During the few months in which I have been connected with the Laymen's Advisory Committee, I have become much interested in the annuities which are being obtained through our various Congregational Societies. I feel strongly that these annuities constitute a safe and reliable investment with an adequate return.

The history of all our Societies in the handling of their invested funds has been exceptional, and their record over the last three years compares more than favorably with that of financial institutions.

I will be pleased to send more information about these annuities to all persons who desire it and who send me their name and date of birth.

A VISIT TO THE HOLY LAND.

By REV. ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, D. D.
Minister, People's Church, Dover, Del.

ARTICLE IV.—"CHARACTERISTICS OF THE PROMISED LAND."

Palestine has always had but two seasons—the rainy or winter season beginning in November and continuing until May—rain and snow characterizing that entire period. Then the summer season lasts from May until November, during which time there often is not a single rain. The days are hot and the nights cool all through the summer season. If it were not for the relief given by the long cool nights, the summer season would be almost unbearable.

Much of the land in Palestine is useless for agricultural purposes, the great number of rocks, large and small, making much of it absolutely useless even for pasturage purposes. But the land that is tillable seems to be remarkably productive. The hills and mountains and the valleys provide pasture that keep the thousands upon thousands of herds of sheep and goats in excellent condition.

The fact that the land is without any rain whatsoever for six months of the year during the growing season would naturally cause one to wonder how the people can raise anything at all in such a country. The answer is that because of the extremely hot days and the unusually cool nights, the dew is extremely heavy each night. The moisture from the nightly fall of dew is the secret. Then, too, irrigation is used in many instances, the soil thus being made very productive. The long, dry season, the intense heat of the dry season, the scarcity of water and the heavy dews that in the past and in the present characterize Palestine, are often reflected in the Bible as the writers have expressed in simile their thoughts of God. A glance in the concordance at the words mountain, hills, sun, heat, dew, water, etc., will impress this fact upon one's mind.

The valleys and mountains, the hills and the plateaux of Palestine are all said to be covered with green grass and beautiful wild flowers of every color during the months of April and May, the whole landscape looking like a fairy garden.

But by July, the wild flowers have faded and died, and the green grass has become parched by the hot sun. Nevertheless, the grass though crisp from the prolonged droughth, seems to have an unusual amount of nutriment as judged by the thousands of fat herds of sheep and goats and cattle that depend upon it for food.

During all the past of Palestine, the people were such as they are today—a pastoral people—living in the open country, caring for their herds, keeping watch over their flocks by night and by day.

In the Old Testament we read of the huge bunches of grapes that the spies who had been sent out by Moses to explore the Promised Land, brought back. It was the Valley of Esheol where they found those great bunches of grapes, the pomegranates, and the figs of such marvelous size. The Valley of Esheol mentioned in those early days of Moses so many centuries ago, has seemed to many people but a name in the fairy land of the world's yesterdays. But the Valley of Esheol still produces its prize specimens of fruits of many kinds. The Valley of Esheol has surprises for visitors in our day the same as it had for visitors in the days of Joshua and Caleb. Nowhere in all the world will you find larger grapes or grapes sweeter than you will find today in the Valley of Esheol a few miles out from Hebron. Never have I eaten elsewhere such delicious grapes of such large size as I ate in the Valley of Esheol.

And all down through the centuries past, the grapes in Palestine have been grown in the same manner—namely, the vines left to grow flat on the ground, no trellis support of any kind being used. When I first saw the vineyards in Palestine with the grapevines running along the ground, I thought how stupid to fail to give the vines a chance on stakes or on wires that would keep the vines up in the air off the ground. And then I learned that if they put the grapevine on stakes or wires the vines would not be able to stand the heat, much less bear fruit. But by allowing the vines to run along on the ground as squash or pumpkin vines do in this country, the moisture from the heavy dew which falls each night is held longer in the soil and thus the vines, being better protected from the terrific heat of the sun, are able to produce such wonderful large bunches of marvelously big grapes. For more than three thousand years, grapes have been raised in this manner in Palestine.

Palestine has always produced besides wheat and barley and certain vegetables, many of the most delectable fruits, such as dates, bananas, figs, olives and grapes, and in the recent past, orange growing has been instituted by the Zionist movement with great success by the aid of irrigation in the coast region around Jaffa which in B'ble times was called Joppa. A group of us procured a box of fine oranges at the cold storage plant in Jaffa, and they were indeed delicious. A tropical climate exists in parts of the Jordan Valley where the tropical fruits are found in great abundance and with rare quality. However, where anything grows in Palestine great labor and attention is required from man in his cooperation with nature. But with that cooperation because of certain chemicals in the soil, marvelous results are accomplished in some localities. In other sections of the country, the barren hillsides and bleak rocks defying man in any attempt he may make to wrest a living from the soil, make one marvel at the faith and hope the children of Israel cherished for their Promised Land. When one travels over the Bible lands which look so unpromising for the most part, he ponders: "If Palestine was a Land of Promise for the children of Israel—think what a Land of Promise America is for our generation and the generations to come." And one concludes that the only reason the barren rocky lands of Palestine held promise for the children of Israel was the fact of God's promise that he would be with them. And without an appreciation of that promise of God to every people and every generation that seeks to please him, there is little promise for any people of any land, regardless of the wealth the land may possess in material resources.

DOWN IN DIXIE.

Mr. Hermon Eldredge, associate editor of the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty, visited Elon College on a recent Sunday, when both faculty and students heard his stirring messages with hearty and happy approval. The writer (who was not present on the happy occasion), was told by many that no visitor of recent months had moved his audience with such inspiration and hearty appraise as had Mr. Eldredge, and he himself seems likewise to have been moved, as the following from his pen in the Congregationalist of October 12th indicates:

"If one wants a note of cheer for these days of depression he can get it by spending a day or two on the Elon College (N. C.) campus. In five quite varied group meetings we were able to catch the spirit of a new Elon in hope and in purpose.

"This does not mean that Elon has solved all her problems or that she is not in dire need of students and finances, but it does mean that with the coming of its new president, Dr. Leon Edgar Smith, there is a note of joy and of optimism in the faculty and among the student body which is a delight and inspiration to behold.

"Dr. and Mrs. Smith have made a real sacrifice in leaving their great work at Christian Temple in Norfolk, and taking up the work at Elon in splendid love and loyalty of the faculty and student body in a way and to an extent seldom found on any college campus.

"Incidentally the student body is ten per cent increased in number over last year, and if we are any judge, we would say that it has increased more than that in quality. It is indeed a delight to see the splendid Christian cooperation between college and president, which is only possible in a smaller Christian college (of less than 300) where the president knows every student individually and is considered a friend and adviser. All this is said with fullest recognition of the splendid backing of Dean Hook and the faculty, which have carried on through the years in most strenuous times.

"But our two days convinced us that there were better days ahead for Elon if the church and friends carry on in any way commensurate with the college force."

He that will believe only what he can fully comprehend must have a very long head or a very short creed.—C. C. Colton.

HOW CHRIST HAS CHANGED LIFE IN MISSION COUNTRIES.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR OCT. 22, 1933.
Scripture: Acts 19:9-20.

(For daily Bible readings, see THE CHRISTIAN SUN for October 12, 1933.)

Most missionary hymns are appropriate. Some of them are: "Jesus Shall Reign Where'er the Sun," "We've a Story to Tell to the Nations," "Lead On, O King Eternal," "The Whole Wide World for Jesus," and "The Morning Light is Breaking."

Helpful information can be found in the World Call, Missionary Review and the Missionary Herald. Our Mission Board furnishes a great deal of helpful information. Interesting books along this line include the "Survey of Service," "The Preacher and His Missionary Message," "Roads to the City of God," "The Rural Billion" and "Christ Comes to the Village."

The chapter headings of "Christ Comes to the Village" indicate something of the results of mission work. These headings are: "He Enters the Homes," "He Heals the Sick," "He Gives Skill to the Laborer," "He Trains the Mind," "He Offers Eternal Life."

The meeting can be made very helpful by having different people bring concrete information similar to the stories which are given on this page. Most of us have little idea concerning what Christian workers have done in non-Christian lands. The books listed above and many others tell in a graphic way things which all of us should know about the progress of Christianity. The Christian Endeavor World gives a number of interesting incidents which can be used in the meeting. Some of them are given below on this page.

Abolishing Ancient Evils.

In 1804, William Carey discovered that within a radius of twenty miles of Calcutta, India, 300 widows had been burned to death within six months. He made a report of this to Lord Wellesley, which was the first protest against this practice of burning widows ever placed on the records of India. In 1829 the law ended this ceremonial crime.

Carey reports on the burning of a leper in this way: "A pit about ten cubits in depth was dug and a fire placed at the bottom of it. The poor man rolled himself into it, but instantly on feeling the fire, begged to be taken out, and struggled hard for that purpose. His mother and sister, however, thrust him in again, and thus a man who might have survived several years was cruelly burned to death. I find that the practice is not uncommon in these parts. Taught that a violent end purifies the body and ensures transmigration into a healthy new existence, while natural death by disease results in four successive births, and a fifth as a leper again, the leper, like the even more wretched widow, has always courted suicide."

Carey did not rest until he had brought about the establishment of a leper hospital at Calcutta, near what became the center of the Church Missionary Society's work.

Changing India.

Dr. E. Stanley Jones in "Christ at the Round Table": "There are many fine movements for reform going through India, and Hindus and Moslems are carrying them on. Caste is being challenged and modified; the low caste are being raised; widow's homes are being established; widow-remarriage is beginning to take place; hospitals are being established; orphanages have been set up; woman is being emancipated. It is a glorious list, but the disturbing thing is that their religions do not seem to be backing the finer movements going through the soul of India. These movements are carried on in spite of them . . . for religion says that the world is 'maya' or illusion, while the patriot feels that the conditions can be changed and that the kingdom of God should come on earth. The country should be united, but religions seem to be keeping it divided. One was constantly impressed with the fact that the power of (non-Christian) religion was on the whole not with reform, but against it."

Changing the Customs of China.

Tyler Dennett in "The Democratic Movement in Asia," relates this incident of the twentieth century:

"A few years ago the mayor of the city of Yenping of the Province of Fukien, came to Dr. James E. Skinner, the physician in charge of its mission hospital, and asked his advice concerning the health of the city. What could be done to improve the health conditions? Dr. Skinner pointed out how the filthy conditions of the streets facilitated the spread of disease, and explained how every American city has a street-cleaning department. Immediately a street-cleaning brigade was organized and set in operation.

"Then the doctor took the magistrate out, and showed him where the city was drawing its water from contaminated sources. He explained how western cities protect their water, even bringing it long distances from the mountains to insure pure and ample supplies. Yenping immediately started the development of a new water supply under the direction of the medical missionary.

"At length the doctor approached the most difficult problem. 'How about all these unburied coffins?' he inquired. It is the custom in China to delay burial until the astrologer can name an auspicious day and place. The result of this custom of delayed burial is that China is cluttered up with an enormous number of unburied coffins. One finds them in back yards, by the roadsides, and in every field. The doctor explained how dangerous to public health were these unburied coffins in Yenping. The magistrate had a census taken, and discovered sixteen thousand of them, the population of the city being only about twenty-five thousand. The disposal of this obstacle to modern progress was a delicate question. It would not do to attack the validity of the astrologers' judgment, nor to blast away the solid rock of Chinese traditions and sentiment. But it was entirely within the mayor's province to levy taxes. Forthwith he issued a proclamation fixing a tax of fifty cents on all unburied coffins. The Chinese may be superstitious, but they are even more thrifty. Therefore, Yenping cast astrology aside for a while, and devoted itself to funerals at the rate of a thousand a week. Today this little isolated Chinese city in the wilds of Fukien is on the road to health."

Marriage in China.

Despite the fact that the family has been the center of the social system in China, family life was anything but ideal. There was a terrible amount of "suffering, friction, suppression, and injustice due to the nature of family life." Miss Mary Kelly, a missionary in China, tells us that according to the Chinese custom, "the wife was purchased to serve her mother-in-law and bear sons to her husband. If she were successful in this last venture, she could look forward to respect and love from her sons and service from their wives. Should no sons be born to her she must expect her husband to take wives to bear sons for him."

Childhood and Christianity.

Since the day Jesus took little children in his arms and blessed them and said to his disciples: "Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not; for to such belongeth the Kingdom of God," childhood has occupied a central place in Christianity. In a series of talks by Dr. Stanley High over the National Broadcasting Company's network on the topic, "The World of Religion," the speaker gave a fascinating account of the influence of Christianity for the protection and well-being of childhood since the days of the Roman Empire. We quote a few lines from that address:

"I've seen children and I've seen religion on four of the earth's five continents. Take it from one newspaper man, who went to find out and did—that there are no Fabiolas and Robert Raikes where there has been no Christianity. There's China. Who unbound the feet of China's girlhood? The Christian missionary. Who built rescue stations for the unwanted children of China's famines? The Christian missionary. Who started China's first kindergarten, its first nursery, its first orphans' home, its first children's hospital? The same Christian missionary. Or take India. Who started the now growing movement against child marriages? Not Katharine Mayo or the British Government—but the missionary. What is the first higher institution of learning for young women in all of Asia? The Isabella Thoburn College—a missionary institution in Lucknow, India."—The Christian Endeavor Guide.

PAUL IN ASIA MINOR.

LESSON IV.—OCTOBER 22, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation."—Mark 16:15.

LESSON TEXT: Acts 13:1-5, 13-15; 14:19-23. Study also Acts 13:1-52.

The foreign missionary enterprise was born in the mind and heart of God. From the beginning he had included in his redemptive plan the whole world. The Old Testament is the story of the unfolding and development of this plan. Jesus gave new emphasis and meaning to it. And the Holy Spirit was patiently and progressively leading the early Christian Church into a recognition and adoption of it. From Jerusalem, into Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth was the order according to Jesus (Acts 18). When Paul and Barnabas set out from Antioch the larger program of Christianity began. It was in a sense the real beginning of "unto the uttermost parts of the earth." It is significant that from Antioch where Jewish Christians and Gentile Christians met on an equality, there began the world mission of Christianity, especially to the Gentiles. The story of the beginning and the development of that movement is suggestive.

"As They Ministered to the Lord, and Fasted."

These men were serving the Lord. They were definitely giving themselves to his service. They were trying to do what they could for him. It was no mere coincidence that there came to them the vision of the larger work. The reward for work well done is the capacity to do more work and to do it better. The man who is not serving the Lord as best he can, need not be surprised if he does not have given to him the blessings of the Lord, and the vision of spiritual things. Willingness, obedience, service, these are the pathways to vision and to power.

It is no coincidence, either, that the vision came as they "fasted." Full stomachs, comfort on the mere physical plane, and a Spirit-filled mind seldom go together. Simple living is an aid to the spirit life. It is usually among those who live simply that one finds high thinking. "Greater simplicity of living would be more conducive to a clearer perception of the mind of God."

"The Holy Spirit Said."

The foreign missionary enterprise as we know it, was born of the Holy Spirit. It was the Holy Spirit which told the church at Antioch to send Paul and Barnabas to the Gentile world. The Spirit of God was simply making known the will of God. We do not know how the Spirit spoke to the church. It may have been in an open vision or by an audible voice, or it may have been by an inner compulsion. In either event the church knew that God had spoken, and they made haste to obey. God has not left himself without witness. And to those who will to do his will, he makes his will known. Obedience is the organ of spiritual knowledge.

"Barnabas and Saul."

Barnabas and Saul were undoubtedly the best and most valuable men in the Antioch Church. But God laid his hand upon them. His foreign missionary work demands the best. How easy it would have been for the church at Antioch to say that they could not spare these two men, that they could not think of giving up their best leaders, that there was no sense in such a thing! If ever a church had an excuse for not doing foreign missionary work, it was the church at Antioch. Think how much poorer the world would have been if the church there had kept its best. And think how much poorer the church itself would have been if it had kept its best. The Antioch Church found itself because it lost itself.

"Being Sent Forth by the Holy Spirit."

They fasted and prayed and laid their hands upon them, and sent them away. It was a high enterprise upon which these men were entering. The church, therefore, made it deeply religious and impressive. Conceived by the Spirit it was sanctified by him. These men were indeed and in truth sent forth by the Holy Spirit. That is the secret of their success. They were men who were filled by the Holy Spirit, they had been sent forth by him, and they continued in him. That is the formula for any successful religious work. It is the Spirit that quickeneth.

"They Proclaimed the Word of God . . . They Preached the Gospel."

These men went to strange countries and among strange people. But wherever they went they proclaimed the Word of God, they preached the gospel. And that gospel had power. It was the power of God. It struck a responsive chord in the hearts of the people who heard it. And to those who accepted it, it became unto them a power unto salvation, the word of life that was life. But to those who because of envy or hardness of heart, rejected it, it became as it were a sentence of death. Wherever Paul went he seemed to have a revival or a riot, or both. The gospel in its true power divides men. It does not leave them the same.

Persecution.

Wherever Barnabas and Paul—this name is given him during the journey—went they stirred up opposition and hatred and persecution. But they were made of stern stuff. They were heroes in a true sense. They are later referred to as men who have hazarded their lives for Jesus' sake. How pale our lives are as tested by their lives.

Confirming the Souls of the Disciples.

When they started back to Antioch they went back to the cities from which they had been driven, and they visited the churches which they had established. They confirmed the souls of the disciples, exhorted them to continue in the faith, warned them that through much tribulation they should enter into the Kingdom of God, appointed elders, "older men," in every church, prayed with them, and then commended them unto the Lord, on whom they had believed. It is not enough to get new members of the church. They must be trained, looked after, encouraged, exhorted, helped, commended to God, who alone is able to keep them.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

"O Lord, I beseech thee, let now thine ear be attentive to the prayer of thy servant, and to the prayer of thy servants, who desire to fear thy name, and prosper, I pray thee, thy servant this day."

MONDAY.

THE DIVINE INFLUENCE OF THINGS.

Consider the lilies how they grow; they toil not, they spin not; and yet I say unto you, that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these."—Luke 12:27.

There is a divinity and an expression of the Supreme Being in nature. It is called "the handiwork of God." There is likewise this Divinity about the commonplace things of everyday life. To have such a view and such a faith in things has a primary influence on character. That character is the basis of man's enduring happiness in this life as well as the basis for eternal happiness.

What is the glory of man's character? One may have all the virtues that appeal for their quality, but if strength is lacking to put those virtues in action, one stands condemned. To whom does the country look for help in the time of need? Is it the brilliant speaker, or is it the man who knows, and, through opposition and contempt, can carry his knowledge through to achievement? Who is the woman looked to for true companionship in the battles of life? Is it the brilliant woman, the gifted talker and the charming ornament, or is it the woman of fidelity who is true and loving when all others have deserted you? The answer is universal; it is the latter to both these questions. These are the first things, and, having them, one can build on them afterwards anything he wishes. Without them anything one may build will fall to ruin.

Thus the glory of character is strength. But strength comes only from a great experience; and, in the highest sense the greatest experience is a vision of God in everyday life.

TUESDAY.

A PRAYER.

Our Father, we desire to be blessed with a vision of that reality of thyself in life as we meet it today. In the storms and stresses of life grant to us the assurance of thy will to bring color to our souls; in time of cloud grant us to feel thy heartbeats for glory as well as in times of sunshine; be with us in the night as well as in the day; come thou to us in everything we see and dwell with us in every passion; make every pain, sorrow and suffering a gift of thy hand; set our hearts on fire with thy spirit and warm us by thy love of humanity which finds its common ground in the cross of Jesus. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

GOD'S LANGUAGE.

"If any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come into him, and will sup with him, and he with me."—Rev. 3:20.

The only tongue that God can speak, the tongue by which he can fling the fire and the flame of truth into the inmost soul, is his written word. There are many ways by which we can recognize his voice, such as in the appeal of right, the charm of love, the ministry of justice, the establishment of peace, etc., but they all are couched in his written word.

We are often failures in life and especially in religious experience, and the reason is not far to see—we do not open his Book to our hearts, then, when we do, it is often with doubt. We allow men to hold it up and tell us that it is not free of errors, and another to tell us that it is a composite of divine foolishness. We even dare to exalt such men to places of honor and control, and call them our saviours. Russia has abolished God. Germany calls Hitler the Messiah. If God's word is right, and, from what we know about the history of the world, such cannot be done. It must stop; a crash is imminent and terrible conditions will follow, but when it is over we believe that out of the debris will come the silent, glorious figure of our Lord, and men will fall down and cry, "My Lord and my God."

Prayer—O Lord God, our Father, we would abuse no earthly friend as we do thee. We pray for that something that acknowledges thee in all thy ways. We pray for that something of thee that makes us know thy will. We pray for ourselves for divine submission that thy will may be done on earth as it is in heaven.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE ENDURANCE TEST.

"Let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith."—Heb. 12:1.

Paul had been an athlete and in describing the course of Christian living he used terms of the race course to convey the idea to his hearers. He said the same sort of training, discipline, energy, ambitions, and perseverance is necessary in Christian experience.

Thus, as a vision of the goal is the athlete's inspiration, so a vision of God is the essential goal to life's works. That vision gives willingness, ambition, courage, continuance, tenacity, and perseverance. We said that strength is the glory of a man's character. In winning the race, perseverance is the glory of his life's work.

Would you see this more clearly? Observe two young men going to the city for their life's work. One is brilliant without tenacity and perseverance; the other is plodding but tenacious. What do you find after a few years? Almost invariably the plodding one wins his race and makes his mark over the other.

If this be true of common life, how much more so of the Christian race! "The Christian life is not a hundred yard dash, but a marathon race in which they alone can win who run with patience, endurance and perseverance."

FRIDAY.

A PRAYER.

"One step more, and the race is ended;
One word more, and the lesson's done;
One toil more, and a long rest follows
As the set of sun.
"Who would fail for one step withholden?
Who would fail for one word unsaid?
Who would fail, for a pause too early?
Sound sleep the dead.
"One step more, and the goal receives us;
One word more and life's task is done:
One toil more and the cross is carried
And sets the sun."

—Rossetti.

"Take my feet and let them be
Swift and beautiful for thee.
Take my lips and let them be Filled with messages from thee.

"Take my hands and let them move
At the impulse of thy love.
Take my voice and let me sing
Always, only, for my King."

Prayer—Our Father, be then our strength, our buckles and shield; be then our courage, fortitude and endurance; be then our perseverance until the last step is taken, the last word is said and the last act performed, and then at the goal grant us to be ready to say, "Lord Jesus take us," and in our bonds receive thy reward of, "Well done, good and faithful servant."—Amen.

SATURDAY.

DROWNED IN SAND.

"Set thy house in order; for thou shalt die, and not live."—Read II. Kings 20:1-7.

A man in Newport, R. I., was working on a sand pile on the city dock. Suddenly the sand began to slip and swept him into the sea. He was dead before his body could be recovered.

Daeth has a way of coming unexpectedly and strangely. We can never be too ready for it. However sure and safe is our path, we can never be certain that death is not just around the corner.

It is not morbidness to be always ready for death, it is only ordinary prudence. We do not call it morbid to lock our house at night, or to put out fire in the woods, or to take out a life insurance policy. We provide carefully for every contingency, and we avoid thinking of that as long as possible. This is the central folly of humanity.

Prayer—Lord of life, thou art also Lord of death. Thou art as friendly and loving in one aspect as the other. Grant that we always may be ready for thy coming.—Amen.

—AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

TWENTY-NINE BUYERS.

"Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all the nations."—Read Matt. 28:16-20.

A Massachusetts swindler probably made a record when he succeeded in selling the same house in Salem to twenty-nine different persons. He is now in Canada with his ill-gotten gains.

What a contrast is this to our gospel transactions! We are to sell the same thing to all men in the world. It is the free gift of salvation through Jesus Christ. It is to be bought "without money and without price." The more rejoicing passengers there are, the more there may be and will be. That is the wonderful difference between Christianity and worldliness.

We have the greatest thing in the world to offer and we are keeping it to ourselves. There is not a Christian in all the world but believes all this with his head, but how many believe it with the belief of their deeds?

Prayer—Help us to be evangelists, dear Lord, bearers of the evangel, of thy good news. Oh, grant that we may understand and practice the blessed paradox of thy truth!—Amen.

—AMOS R. WELLS.

The little I have seen of the world teaches me to look upon the errors of others in sorrow, not in anger. When I take the history of one poor heart that has sinned and suffered, and represent to myself the struggles and temptations it has passed through, the brief pulsation of joy, the feverish inquietude of hope and of fear, the pressure of want, the desertion of friends, I would fain leave the erring soul of my fellowman with him from whose hand it came.—Longfellow.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

SUNRISE IN A SACRED CITY.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"The dayspring from on high hath visited us."—Luke 1:78.

To watch the sunrise is an experience. To see the day spring from dawn is inspiring. I have watched it rise across the mighty expanse of the Atlantic and marveled at its beauty.

Our text says there was a sunrise in old Jerusalem. "The dayspring from on high hath visited us." Would you not like to watch the sunrise over that sacred old city?

And then the full, resplendent glory of the sunrise!

"The dayspring from on high hath visited us."

We have been recounting the whole life of Jesus, from Christmas to Easter. Christmas brought that first great sunrise of which we are thinking, and Easter the second.

"Unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his wings" (Mal. 4:2). "The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light; they that dwell in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined" (Isa. 9:2).

The dayspring from on high was Jesus. The sunrise in that sacred old city was his coming forth from the tomb. The light of that day has shown across the lands of the earth, and into the realm of the eternities.

II.

The promises and prophecies are beautiful. Did they work? And how? We have said the light of that dayspring has shown across the lands of the earth. Not so, until it had first shown very definitely in the hearts of a few individuals.

It drove out the darkness of the souls of such men as Peter, James, John, Paul and others. Had it not shown in their hearts and the hearts of their contemporaries, and successors, we should not have its glory today.

It drove false hopes from their hearts. High places in some political kingdom were no longer sought after the Dayspring arose in their hearts; rash, but unkept promises, were no longer made after the Dayspring arose in their hearts; the value and place of their own lives were lost in the value and place of the life of Jesus Christ after the Dayspring arose in their hearts.

For instance, the disciple Peter was afraid of the simple accusations of a little girl before Jesus was crucified—after he arose Peter was unafraid of the severest condemnations of the authorities of Jerusalem. Before the resurrection of Jesus, Peter was not able to win one word of sympathy for him; in fact, his own words belied his heart, and denied his Christ.
