NUMBER 1.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Independence for the Philippines.—

The United States Senate has passed a bill giving the Philippine Islands their freedom in 1944. There have been many arguments advanced both for and against this action, but it has at last been taken. On first thought 1944 may seem a long way off, but the time since the Spanish-American War has passed quickly when we look back upon it, and 1944 will come more quickly than one thinks. It is hoped that in the time that intervenes the Philippines will make every effort to prepare for the task which is before them.

Poultry Population Too Small.—

The Progressive Farmer is authority for the statement that the farmers of Virginia and the Carolinas are raising too little poultry. It says: "The poultry yard is now the brightest spot in the whole farm picture. The latest United States Department of Agriculture figures report cotton prices as only 48 per cent of pre-war, while chickens are 89 per cent and eggs 121 per cent of pre-war." It continues: "There ought to be a persistent and continuous drive to increase poultry production. We have the mild climate, the long growing seasons and the cheap land; while nearly every farmer has plenty of labor available for handling three or four times the present number of fowls." Virginia has only 10 million hens, North Carolina 8 million, and South Carolina, 4 million, while Kansas has 23 million, Missouri, 30 million, and Iowa, 34 million. Why should we let these States, with California, which is 3,000 miles away, supply New York, when we are within 500 miles of that market?

The Marines Leave Nicaragua.—

After twenty years the last of the Marines have been withdrawn from Nicaragua, and all Americans can well sigh with relief. Several attempts have been made previously to retire gracefully from the Nicaraguan field, but in each instance the withdrawal was blocked by fresh developments. In 1926, it was even necessary to send a much larger detachment of these sea dogs, in order to restore a semblance of order to that civil war-ridden country. They remained after this with the two-fold purpose of organizing and training a non-partisan native constabulary and of supervising the elections of 1928, 1930 and 1932. Both of these objectives were ably carried out. Juan B. Sasca has been inaugurated as president, and he has been given a force of 2,500 American-trained Nicaraguan guardsmen to give weight to his administration. There is doubt as to whether America's altruistic efforts have increased the love which the rest of Latin-America bears her, but she seems to have done a good job, and it is to be hoped that Nicaragua will be able to maintain the seemingly stable government she now possesses.

Richmond's Symphony Orchestra.—

Approximately six months ago, a group of music lovers of Richmond, Va., decided to attempt the almost impossible task of giving to that city a symphony orchestra. The final concert of the series was given on Tuesday evening of this week, and proved most conclusively that Richmond did want and would support an organization of this kind. While much of the credit for the successful completion of this series of concerts is due to sponsors and the officers of the concert organization, most of it must necessarily go to Wheeler Beckett, the youthful conductor of the orchestra, in whose mind the project first originated. In the writer's humble judgment, this last performance of the season has not been surpassed by any of the symphonic concerts of the older and larger orchestras to which he has listened. The task of welding the seventy-odd separate instruments into a perfect whole in so short a time, was little short of marvelous. Plans have already begun to be laid for the continuation of the orchestra next season, and we wish these plans the greatest success.

People Who Throw Stones Take Note.—

"Glass houses strong enough for people who throw stones to live in, are promised by further development of the glass brick," says the January 5th issue of Business Week. The first glass brick tried was a five-sided affair laid open side down, and it did not prove satisfactory, but "the new blocks are six-sided, made by pressing a five-sided unit and adding a lid. The result is a hollow glass brick, hermetically sealed, which is supported by a full bed of mortar in the manner to which masons are accustomed." The bricks are coated on the sides normally in contact with the mortar with a cement paint before leaving the factory. This gives suction, acts as waterproofing and eliminates air-pockets next to the brick. The cement paint is colored in the desired hue, giving the effect of colored glass at a small cost. This makes the glass brick a big possibility for commercial work. Store fronts, service stations, or even large commercial structures may carry designs in color. "In a glass wall," we are told, "light is transmitted without glare," sunlight being diffused into a soft and restful light. The thick, tough glass most successfully resists breakage, a stone in the hand of a small boy being nothing to be afraid of.

National Council of Women Picks Leaders.—

As a result of a nation-wide poll conducted by the National Council of Women, conducted to ascertain whom American women considered the twelve outstanding contributors of their sex to the nation's progress during the past hundred years, Mary Baker Eddy, founder of the Christian Science Church, was given first place with a vote of 102,762. The votes for the others chosen were as follows: Jane Addams, founder of Hull House and winner of the Nobel Peace Prize, 99,147; Clara Barton, founder of the American Red Cross, 96,139; Francis E. Willard, founder of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, 90,303; Susan B. Anthony, suffrage leader, 84,321; Helen Keller, author, noted for her own outstanding achievements despite being both deaf and blind, 84,239; Harriet Beecher Stowe, author of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," 73,999; Julia Ward Howe, poetess and author of the "Battle Hymn of the Republic," 72,276; Carrie Chapman Catt, suffrage leader, chairman of the National Conference on the Cause and Cure of War, 70,489; Amelia Earhart Putnam, aviatrix, first woman to fly across the Atlantic alone, 43,399; Mary Lyon, founder of Mount Holyoke College, 40,831; Mary E. Woolley, president of Mount Holyoke College and only woman representative on the United States delegation to the Geneva Disarmament Conference, 36,855.

Credit of American Cities Good.—

There has been much talk of the poorness of our cities' credit during the past several months. Especially have the daily newspapers stressed this matter. Yet it becomes apparent to one who will take the trouble to analyze the facts that the credit condition of the vast majority of our cities is far from bad. Chicago, the pet example of those who point out that our cities have gone to the dogs financially, has met promptly all of its bond maturities as well as the interest. It is true that she has had difficulty in placing short time loans during the past three years, but this has been due to a faulty taxation system possibly, rather than to a lack of resources. In the United States there are 309 cities with a population of more than 30,000, and of these only 11 are in default on bonds. Furthermore, the entire bonded indebtedness of these 11 cities amounts to only 1.8 per cent of the total debt of the group. All of these cities except seven have balanced budgets. These figures speak well for our larger municipalities, and among those smaller than 30,000 population the showing is also quite good. Their number of defalcations naturally runs much higher, but the percentage is quite small. These figures do not, however, excuse the fact that many of our cities are being operated on antiquated systems and for the benefit of the political "ins" rather than for the citizens at large. There were eight cities in the United States which, in 1930, had larger revenues than the States in which they were located, and corporations of such huge size call for real business administration. The 25 largest governmental units with the largest revenues for 1930 included the federal government, 14 States and 10 cities.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, of Suffolk, Va., was a welcome visitor for a short while in the home of the Managing Editor last Monday. We are always glad to see him, and hope that he will soon come again.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN extends its sympathy to Mr. J. D. Kernodle and his family, of Graham, N. C., in the passing of his wife. To know her was to love. The Graham Christian Church, also, has sustained an almost inestimable loss in the going of this faithful, consecrated leader.

Rev. A. R. Flowers has been invited to spend the coming months in sections of South Carolina. Bro. Flowers spent the fall months of 1930 in South Carolina with the result that about one hundred and forty young people, mostly high school students, identified themselves with the different Christian Churches through his lectures on Christian Endeavor work.

Mrs. Bessie Staley Cheatham, of Washington, D. C., daughter of the late lamented Dr. W. W. Staley, is in the Memorial Hospital in Richmond, Va., as the result of an automobile accident on Christmas Eve night. She was badly cut on the forehead and received a fracture of the shoulder. Her condition is much improved at this writing. Her son, William Staley Cheatham, who was with her, also suffered minor bruises, but did not find it necessary to go to the hospital, and returned to his position as secretary to the sergeant-at-arms of the Senate on Tuesday morning.

Rev. E. T. Cotten, now of Eaton, O., but a native of Dendron, Va., says, "I cannot afford to be without either THE CHRISTIAN SUN or THE CONGREGATIONALIST and Herald of Gospel Liberty," so he is making use of the Special Combination Subscription Offer. Bro. Cotten was recalled for the seventh year at the recent annual church meeting, when the books showed a balance of $654.00 after all debts were paid. The Southeast Young People's Chorus, of which he is director, led the community in Christmas Carol singing in front of the courthouse Christmas Eve; sang for a Christmas party in the high school; and also renders special music at the union services every Sunday night. We reprint in part, in this issue, an article from the Eaton paper which should prove of interest to Bro. Cotten's many friends in the South.

ADVERTISING THE CHURCH.

Advertising the Church is almost a new question in the realm of publicity. It is gaining its ground slowly, but surely. There has always been a misconception about advertising the church. The church is, first, a sacred institution and has fought well and hard to keep itself free from the world. But as the church has fought to keep itself free from the world, it has not always differentiated between true business and worldly things. A business may be of the world but not necessarily worldly. So as business has always taken advantage of publicity, the church feeling that business is of the world, has been slow to follow in the advertising field.

There is another misconception that the church has—and that is, it has felt that the church was good enough in itself without advertising its merits. All this is truth, but not all of the truth. The very fact that the church is good enough to need no praise likewise augurs that the church should seek to attract those who are not naturally inclined to the church and its institutions. Every man who is out of the church is not necessarily out of it because of deliberate choice but in most instances because the mind has not been directed toward the church. Church publicity serves to help fill up this gap and to direct the minds of men toward the church that they may become interested enough in the church to be followers.

There can be no harm in publicity bringing the cause of the church before the people. The church has always been a pioneer and must continue to be a pioneer. In this day of many activities and things to attract as well as detract the attention of the people it is, it seems to us, more necessary that the church should endeavor to keep its cause before the people.

We believe that the average pastor is throwing away one of his best opportunities, that opportunity being the use of the public press to keep his church before the community. All papers are very liberal toward the church with their space, and there is no special reason why every pastor should not keep the cause of his institution constantly before the public.

EASTERN N. C. MINISTERS IN SESSION.

The ministers of the Eastern North Carolina Conference met in the United Church, Raleigh, December 13th, with Dr. Warren H. Denison, D. D., for a one-day session given to the study of Stewardship and Church Finance.

The meeting proved to be very interesting and profitable to those in attendance. Dr. Denison very ably presented, in a round-table discussion, "A Standard Financial Policy for the Local Church."

1. A Christian Budget. A Christian budget is an ample, comprehensive, properly proportioned, attainable budget based upon the goals and program of the whole church.
2. Constituency cultivation program.
3. Weekly payment plan with envelope system, founded upon an annual every-member enlistment program.
4. Conservation and continuation program. A continuous program throughout the year of education and enlistment, with follow-up of pledges, adjustment of pledges, and securing new pledges.
5. Accurate records, accredited audits, and regular reports to constituents.
6. Prompt payment of bills of local budget items and monthly remittances on benevolence budget items.
7. Training of financial officers.
8. Legitimate supplemental methods.
9. Reinforcement of stewardship education apart from any financial campaign.
10. The purpose of the financial program of a church should be not alone to produce money, but to relate each member properly to God.

Each of the foregoing ten points was discussed freely by the group and very helpful suggestions were made by Dr. Denison concerning the problems related thereto. Any group of ministers are fortunate to have Dr. Denison present the subject of Stewardship, with which he is so familiar.

His approach to the financial problem is not merely to reach a goal in the raising of money, but to relate the whole of life to this phase of our work. We look forward to another visit of Dr. Denison.

THE MISSION NEEDS IN NORTH CAROLINA

By J. B. LAWRENCE, Executive Secretary
Home Mission Board.

The total population of the State of North Carolina on April 1, 1930, as given by the United States census, was 3,170,276. There were in the State 2,234,948 white people, 918,647 Negroes, 16,579 Indians, with a small number of Chinese, Japanese, Filipinos, Mexicans, and others.

The white population included 2,208,563 native born, and 26,285 foreigners.

There are five cities with 50,000 population and over. Asheville, 50,193; Charlotte, 82,675; Durham, 52,037; Greensboro, 53,569; Winston-Salem, 75,274. In each of these cities there is need for missionary work. The Baptists of the South should make it possible for the Home Board to launch a city mission program designed to help the State forces in tasks of this sort.

The big field, however, for mission work of a Southwide character in North Carolina is among the Negroes, the foreigners, and the Indians. There are 918,647 Negroes, 26,386 foreigners, and 16,579 Indians. This is the largest group of Indians found in any State east of the Mississippi River. The race problem throughout the South is the same. During the past ten years the Negro population has increased 20.3 per cent. The white population has increased 25.3 per cent.

The Home Mission Board has been doing work among the Indians in North Carolina for some time. It could multiply its work many times and still not meet the entire need if the gospel is to be given to the red man in the State.

But there is the brother in black. In the State there are 918,647 Negroes. Surely Southern Baptists should be doing very much more than they are doing for their brother in black.

Heretofore the Negro has not needed our help so much, but he is needing it now. Every sort of ism is making its appeal to him. There are three Negro Mohammedan Mosques in Chicago, and three in Detroit. Three years ago Mohammedan Negroes held a convention in Chicago. There were representatives from fourteen States and more than 3,000 delegates were present.

The Catholics are also making their bid for the Negro. In 1927 the Catholics claimed 47,499 members among the Negroes. Now they claim over 300,000 members. They have 138 parish schools for Negroes, with over 30,000 enrolled. They have two seminaries with over 200 Negro priests and about 1,000 Sisters of Charity.

But the most deadly foe of all is Communism. From Russia with its atheism and its social creed of equality, there is coming a deadly poison to seep into the thinking of the race. There must be understanding between the white and colored races in the South, or else we are headed for untold trouble. There is only one place we can meet for mutual understanding, and that place is at the foot of the Cross of Christ.

The only solution to all of our problems is a closer walk with God. The evangelization of the homeland is the hope of the world's evangelization, but it is more, it is the only hope of our own peace and prosperity.

The task of the Home Mission Board is the evangelization of the homeland. Its objective is to transfuse all the life-forces in the homeland with the spiritual potencies of the Kingdom of God. The forces at work in our midst are mighty and sinister. There is the modern world spirit, the passion for possession, the revolt against tradition, the throwing off of the restraint of authority, crass materialism, atheistic communism, racial antagonisms, and the casts of labor and capital. In this field of cross-currents and adverse elements the Home Mission Board is laboring to bring out of chaos, cosmos.—Biblical Recorder (Baptist.)

MRS. M. J. W. WHITE WRITES.

Dansalan, Lanao, P. I.,
November 5, 1932.

Dear Home Folks:

I wrote you of the privilege we had in having Mr. E. K. Higdon, who is secretary of the National Christian Council and also agency for the American Bible Society, as a guest in our home in September. Just recently we have received a letter from him giving comments on his trip through Mindanao. He says: "The lines between Catholics and Protestants seem more closely drawn in Mindanao than in other parts of the Philippines where I have been. For example, the priests in Cagayan, Misamis did their level best last year to prevent Dr. Laubach from speaking at the high school commencement. He had been invited in due form by the Senior Class and the proper school authorities and, of course, went ahead with his lecture. Other illustrations might be given of a similar nature."

"Arriving in Cagayan, Rev. Pedor Royola, efficient pastor at Cagayan, called soon after breakfast and we made out a schedule for the three days or more I was to be in Cagayan. On Friday afternoon at a special school convocation, I had the privilege of again meeting the principal, Mr. Jiminez, whom I had last seen nearly two years ago in Vigan. The 600 students gave careful and courteous attention to my address."

As another example of the constant opposition we meet with in Cagayan soon after Mr. Higdon left Cagayan the high school principal, Mr. Jiminez received a letter from the local priest wanting to know why they were allowing Protestant speakers to come to the high school, when a majority of the pupils were Catholic. (There had been two others this year.) The principal replied that he welcomed any speaker who had a message for the students, and they were not speaking on religion, anyway.

"That evening at the church, I preached to an audience of 150 on the subject, 'A Religion for a Democracy.' The next morning I met a group of ten and spent two and one-half hours with them in discussing Bible distribution. That afternoon, Dr. and Mrs. White took me out along the road where the high school students had gone to fight locusts. The farmers in all the provinces I visited feel the effects of hard times. Locusts have marched upon the forces of nature and put them to rout along many a battle line. In Surigao and Oriental Misamis where I had the best opportunity for observation, cornfields are stripped and other crops in the growing stage have suffered. At many places along the way the 'hopping locusts' blackened the road for two or three hundred meters at a stretch, as they moved from the ruins of one field to new conquests in others. Men and boys, women and girls, dug holes and ditches and swept these voracious pests into them by the millions. But that's no way to farm.

"At church that evening there were between 175 and 200 people. My subject was 'Catholic, Protestant or Christian?' The Sunday morning service was not so large. There were probably 125 present, and I spoke on 'A Spiritual Autobiography.' At 4 o'clock that afternoon, 80 or 90 young people came to the Christian Endeavor meeting, where I preached a short sermon on the 'Message of Christianity,' and answered general questions about the Christian faith. At 7 o'clock that evening the members of the Dorcas Club, the Men's Brotherhood and the Christian Endeavor came to the church for a forum discussion on community needs. We began as we usually do by asking the people to enumerate the most pressing needs. We then proceeded to a discussion of what was being done to meet the needs. In the third place, we took up some projects that ought to be sponsored to further help the people of Cagayan vicinity.

Our New Year Faith

By C. REXFORD RAYMOND.

*The New Year bids man venture. God knows where His tides and winds may bear the Ship of State.
Dawn lights the sky; nor wind nor tide will wait.
Cast off, break out the sails, with courage dare
To plow uncharted seas. Far forth we fare
Mid storm or calm to seek a nobler fate,
By brotherhood to banish fear and hate
That human life may breathe an ampler air.*

*Faith points the way. At dawn we bravely sail
Beyond the sunset skies of yesterday.
The swift sure tides and winds of God will bring
Our tiny bark to port. We shall not fail.
Up anchor! Sail! Adventure while we may!
New shores, new stars, new hopes; by faith we sing!*

Ten persons at Cagayan met for two hours and a half to discuss Bible distribution. We canvassed one another, studied salesmanship, methods, answered objections, outlined three or four sermons on the Bible, and considered some ways for church groups to earn money selling Scriptures on the commission basis. The group decided to launch a literacy campaign and to set up some institute. Dr. Laubach is carrying on his work in Dansalan Lanao, only 125 kilometers from Cagayan, and the Bureau of Plant Industry has a representative stationed in the town itself. Cooperation from other sources can be secured.

"Rev. Royol arranged with the principal of the elementary school for an address to about 500 pupils there at 7 o'clock on Monday morning. I again spoke on the subject, 'Some Traits that Win.' I found the work of the Mission Hospital under the directorship of Dr. M. J. W. White, in thriving condition. Dr. White showed me through the entire building the first day I was there. Later, I went the rounds with him one evening as he visited the patients. Twice he demonstrated the value of the X-ray equipment by showing me a number of pictures. His efficient Dr. DeAsis, Major in the U. S. Army, was away on a field trip, but I met his wife, Dr. Ching, a Chinese lady who has a good private practice in Cagayan, and who maintains a vital interest in the work of the hospital. On two or three occasions, Dr. White and I discussed hospital management. He asked me about my experience as business manager of Mary Chiles Hospital in Manila. We talked over a plan or two for his own work, and he asked me to secure materials for him when I returned to the city. He gave me three or four books on the care and feeding of children and suggested that I ask the Anti-tuberculosis Commission to translate one of them into the dialects for distribution. I gave him a large supply of health charts and pamphlets both in English and the dialect.

"The Evangelical Church in Mindanao is only about half as old as it is on the Island of Luzon. Preliminary investigations and some work was begun on this large island in the south nearly thirty years ago, but no intensive campaign was launched until 1915. The progress has been rapid since that date. The church possesses a vigor that promises well for the future. However, it is evident that the Evangelicals in Mindanao have not made the advance of their older brethren in Luzon. The idea of self-support has not yet taken very firm root. Some of the churches I saw are not well organized and do not render much community service. On the whole, I believe the churches in Mindanao are probably stronger at present than those in Luzon were a decade and a half ago. The leadership, both lay and pastoral, is remarkably strong in nearly all the congregations I had opportunity to visit. I believe there is no group of pastors anywhere in the Islands who have a larger vision of the purpose of the church and a deeper consecration to the service of Christ than the men in this field."

MRS. M. J. W. WHITE.

If He is revealed at all, it will be through infinite repugnance and contrarities; through forms, colors, motions, words, persons, or personalities; all presenting themselves to our sense and feeling, to pour in something of the divine into our nature. And a vast circle of mystery will be the background of all other representations, on which they will play and glitter in living threads of motion, as lightning on a cloud; and what they themselves do not reveal of God, the mystery will—a Being infinite, undiscoverable, therefore true.—Horace Bushnell.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

NINETEEN THIRTY-THREE.

We welcome the New Year! It brings new hope; it comes with fresh courage; it stimulates renewed faith. This for the reason the Psalmist gave. "Thou crownest the year with thy goodness (Psalm 65:11). And surely God blessed 1932 and crowned it with his goodness.

This is written in the knowledge that millions went hungry, unemployment was widespread, and destitution prevailed. This was man's folly, man's wickedness. There was no famine in the land as fields, forests and factories yielded their abundance. There was no pestilence—save the pestilence of plenty. The source of the world's distress was neither flood, famine nor disease. God's bounty was in evidence everywhere, God's resources yielded their rich increase. Yea, indeed, God crowned 1932 with his goodness.

We enter the New Year with increased assets, with increased wisdom. "Days should speak, and multitudes of years should teach wisdom." (Job 32:7.)

Nineteen thirty-two taught us thrift, economy, how to "do without," how to curb and curtail our wants. So as we hang up the year in the art gallery of memory we will view the picture with gratitude because of what it taught us, if not because of what it brought us.

With gratitude for the past, a last farewell to 1932, we hail and greet with joy and thanksgiving Nineteen Thirty-Three!

Christians need to realize this as their true nobility and their only power with God—the right to claim and expect that God will hear prayer. It is only as God's children begin to see what intercession means in regard to God's kingdom that they will realize how solemn their responsibility is.—Murray.

THE PILGRIMS AND WHAT THEY GAVE TO AMERICA.

By ELISLA A. KING, D. D.

First of all it should be stated that the first Thanksgiving Day ever held in America was held in Massachusetts after the first winter the Pilgrims spent in Plymouth. As a result of the cold and lack of food and of sickness nearly half of their company died. Later they planted corn and some other things and secured a harvest. They met together for thanksgiving to God for his blessings. Indians came bringing wild turkeys and these with other game were cooked and enjoyed by the assembled people. In the morning they went to church, then had their dinner and after that many games and athletic stunts. Out of this experience came the Thanksgiving custom, but it was not observed annually until during the Revolutionary War. It was discontinued from 1784 until 1789 when Congress recommended Washington to name a day for Thanksgiving for the adoption of the Constitution. President Washington named another day for Thanksgiving in 1795 and President Madison named a day to give thanks for peace. In 1863 and 1864 President Lincoln named a Thanksgiving Day and recommended that it be held annually. Since that it has been an annual event.

Every now and then you will hear public speakers and others use the terms Puritan, Separatist and Pilgrim without distinction as if they were all the same, or you will hear the word Pilgrim or Puritan which in the speaker's mind covers them all.

The Pilgrim movement, which is separate and distinct from the Puritan movement, though it began in the tumult of the English Reformation, is one of the most interesting episodes in history. The Pilgrims were Separatists. That is they separated from the English Church. They were independent and sought liberty of action and freedom of conscience. They would not conform.

In this short period allotted to me, I will call your attention to one trail in Pilgrim history that reaches from the little town of Scrooby, England, to Plymouth. It shows how long it takes to develop an idea and put it into operation. I have visited this little English village, and have seen the church and the manor house where the first Independent Church in history was organized. Scrooby is a little village which has a railway station that serves as hotel, restaurant, store and post office. There are few buildings, but it is a beautiful settlement as viewed in the summer time.

One of the outstanding personalities in early New England history was William Brewster. His career is interesting and highly romantic. William Davidson was secretary under Queen Elizabeth and he met Brewster and took him along to Holland as an assistant. The death of Queen Mary involved Queen Elizabeth's Secretary Davidson, and he was arrested and imprisoned. This left Brewster without employment and he went back to the little town of Scrooby and became postmaster, where he remained for 17 years. Ultimately there came to Scrooby three other men of parts, viz: William Bradford, Richard Clifton and John Robinson. They were all Separatists and these were the men who organized the Independent Church in the manor house in 1606.

They and the small company of Separatists were continually persecuted by the authorities. As William Brewster had lived in Holland with Secretary Davidson, he proposed that they all go to Holland where religious liberty prevailed. They moved to Amsterdam and lived there one year, going thence to Leyden. Here they remained for eleven years. Brewster taught English one year and became a printer.

Here in Holland they found four things that influenced them greatly. There was religious toleration in actual practice. They existed as united states under a constitution. The flag was red, white and blue. There were free public schools. There was a free press and the motto of the country was "In Union There is Strength."

Toward the end of the eleven years' residence in Leyden, it was decided to migrate to the new world about which there was so much excitement. It offered them considerable inducements because they would be able to avoid persecution, it would give them a chance to organize a new type of community life based upon religious conviction.

The migration to America was not a helter-skelter, wild adventure by fortune seekers. The church at Leyden was presided over by John Robinson, a prince of a man. In all the controversies carried on by critics and persecutors it was admitted by them all that John Robinson was an educated man of high character. He it was who guided this move to America, though he himself never reached the new settlement.

The company selected to go to America numbered 102 persons. They were the younger people found to be healthy and able to stand the strain of pioneering in a new country. There was no minister among them because Robinson expected to go later, so William Brewster was chosen elder until Robinson might arrive. For the most part they were people of character and education, but history shows that they were not all saints.

It took the ships of Columbus 70 days to cross the Atlantic. The Mayflower was 76 days in crossing. A few weeks ago the new Italian ship Rex crossed the same ocean in four and one-half days.

Two hundred years after the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth, Daniel Webster made a great speech at the anniversary celebration of the landing of the Pilgrims on Plymouth Rock. Probably no one will doubt the integrity of Mr. Webster, and no one will question his knowledge of Pilgrim history. Among other things, he said: "The morning that beamed on the first night of their repose saw the Pilgrims already at home in their country. There were political institutions, and civil liberty, and religious worship. Here was man, indeed, unprotected and unprovided for on the shore of a rude and fearful wilderness; but it was politic, intelligent and educated man. Everything was civilized but the physical world." It goes without saying, almost, that the ideals and practices of eleven years in Holland left an indelible mark upon their lives and the principles of government that were gradually worked over into pre-revolutionary and post-revolutionary days show conclusively that they influenced the texture of our American civilization.

The Pilgrims, as they came to be called, had tasted of liberty under law. That is the reason that they drew up their compact before leaving their good ship Mayflower. This document is one of the treasures of the American government. Before leaving the ship each person signed the document. It was the first time that civilized man had drawn up his own laws and agreed to obey the laws he himself had made. Here is the compact in part:

In the name of God, Amen: We, whose names are underwritten, the loyal subjects of King James having undertaken for the glory of God and the advancement of the Christian faith, and honor of our King and country, do by these presents solemnly and mutually in the presence of God and one another, covenant and combine ourselves together into a civil body politic for our better ordering, and the preservation and furtherance of the ends aforesaid; and by virtue hereof to enact, constitute and frame such just laws, ordinances, acts, constitutions and offices, from time to time as shall be thought most mete, and convenient for the general good of the colony unto which we promise all due submission and obedience. In witness whereof we have hereunto subscribed our names at Cape Cod the 11th of November, 1620."

It is not difficult to understand that this document was the seed planted in the new world that grew, in time, into the Declaration of Independence. The influence of the Pilgrims upon American life were, like all similar influences, gradual, indirect and perhaps subtle, but history reveals the fact that the influence was actually felt.

These are the people who celebrated the first Thanksgiving on American soil. No program of thanksgiving would be complete without some reference to the Pilgrims. It might be well to remind you that the Puritan movement was quite a different one. In England the Pilgrims (or Separatists) were not on very good terms with the Puritans. But when the Puritans came to America organizing a separate settlement, they were brought together by the kindly ministries of the Pilgrims to the Puritans and they subsequently united their forces. Thereafter the two worked as one, their interests were merged and history knows them all, usually, as Puritans.

The first Thanksgiving Day was made sacred by a religious service. The preacher of the occasion recalled the blessings of God and pointed to the labors and opportunities that were before them. It only remains to be said that if the Pilgrims could render thanks to the Great Father of us all surely we, who live in this wonderful age, should find many things to be thankful for.

PASSIONATE PREACHING.

The following paragraph is from our esteemed exchange, the Biblical Recorder, the official organ of the Baptists of North Carolina:

"Some of our exchanges are lamenting the decline of passionate preaching. In former days there were many manifestations of it. Sometimes and with some preachers passion was nearly all. The preacher from the elevated pulpit would shout at the top of his voice and turn from side to side with clenched fists and bulging eyes and charge so violently forward as to cause the small boy on the front seat to pinch a hole in his mother's silk dress as he clung to her for protection. Possibly the day of such preachers is gone forever, but let us hope that the day of the passionate preacher is not."

Yes, we remember those days and those preachers. There were some circuit riders among the Baptists and Methodists who used to get red in the face and steam up until their eyes bulged and their suspenders gave way. The noise they made was equal to any broadcasting station long before the announcers who belabor us now.

But after all this criticism is lodged against these pioneer preachers who were vociferous and tempestuous there is something to be said in their favor. They may have majored more in spiritual firecrackers than earthly poise and learning, but they had something that some modern men badly need. And with all the improvement we have made in our equipment and attainments there is great need for the downright earnestness these men felt as they went out to call sinners to repentance. They may not have had degrees that would start them off in the First Church in Tranquility City in 1932, but they had what the fathers called Unction.

And that Unction, which was an inward fire kindled from a divine spark, carried them through. They were men who felt with all their souls they were Watchmen upon the walls whose duty it was to warn those souls who were in danger and call upon them to flee from the wrath to come. They were like firemen trying to get helpless ones from a burning building and they lost no time nor did they quibble over dotting the i and curling the q. People who heard these men pour out the earnest fire of their souls were impressed that they were moved by the Holy Spirit of God and their preaching carried what we need much today in the congregation—CONVICTION.

The great hosts of Methodists and Baptists will be the everlasting losers if they lose out of their ministry this fire and earnestness, no matter what valuable substitute takes its place. Culture and attainments in the realm of mind cannot take the place of spiritual earnestness that believes in the eternal reality of SIN that damns the human race and Jesus the Crucified Christ who is the only remedy for that sin.

God send us a new baptism of that plain earnestness of our old-fashioned preachers. In this modern age of materialism and cynicism we need that zeal to set the church on fire.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

"Blessed is the one who has the gift of making friends; for it is one of God's best gifts. It involves many things, but, above all, the power of going out of one's own self and seeing and appreciating whatever is noble and loving in another."—Selected.

THE NEW YEAR!

By GEORGE CROSWELL CRESSEY.

Mysterious time, the inner face
Of change that through the ages runs,
That counts the heart-throbs of the race
And marks the courses of the suns.

From out thy depths the new year springs,
'Tis glad, we grasp it as our own.
Rich laden with the old it sings
I bring the new—and the unknown.

We know not what of joy and pain
Shall fall to us in yearly span,
Whate'er it be, but bring it gain
In wisdom and in love to man.

For all around the fertile fields
Lie open to the sun and showers,
The gifts the care of heaven will yield,
The sowing and the toil are ours.

O thou in whose eternal thought
The ages move not, years are one,
Bring sweeter peace than we have sought,
Send deeper joy than we have known.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

On Monday night, December 19th, the Baraca and Philathea Sunday School classes of Liberty Spring met in the church. After the usual business sessions which were held in the Sunday School rooms, the classes assembled in the main auditorium. Revs. J. F. Morgan and O. D. Poythress rendered an interesting program of vocal solos and duets. At the close of this program, they requested the pastor and his wife to follow them as they marched down the aisle to one of the Sunday School rooms. The folding doors were opened and we saw a large table beautifully decorated and loaded with food.

Brother Poythress began to make a beautiful speech about the pastor and his wife, and the Liberty Spring people—and the kind spirit shown in planning this surprise pounding. It was such a complete surprise to both of us that we were unable to find words to express our appreciation and thanksgiving for such generosity and kindness.

We accepted the call to this church in September, 1903, and took up the work as pastor in November of the same year. For twenty-nine years we have labored together in this church. During this period many have been called from labor to reward. Others have been received into the church and the work goes on. The people are frequently expressing their love and appreciation by many gifts from garden, field and pantry to the pastor and family. But this pounding was the climax of many other generous expressions of good-will. If space permitted it would be interesting to see the list of givers and gifts. But this would be too long for this space. However, the list of gifts included the following articles: one ham, four chickens, 47 pounds of lard, 45 pounds of sugar, two fruit cakes, one bag of potatoes, one bag of peanuts, pecans, thirty cans of fruit, pickles, preserves, chow-chow, jelly, honey, and tomatoes, soap, meal, butter, sausage.

This expression of good-will made our hearts glad. It is a happy privilege to serve people who are loyal and devoted in their support of the cause of Christ. It is an incentive to greater consecration and effort to render more efficient service. God is surely good to those who seek to honor him.

We are entering upon a new year. People are making plans for a new beginning. Now is the time to take inventory. What is the profit or loss for 1932? Profit and loss have engaged the attention of many people. Life cannot be reduced to cold figures. There is something larger than profit and greater than loss in life. Scales, yardsticks and dollar marks are not the final measurements of mankind. The great question is not how much money has one made by work, but how much has work made in your life and character? Something happens on the inside of a man when at work and play. How much more of love and kindness and truth and integrity has been stored up in that invisible bank of your heart? That is the question. A great bank account and a lean soul may lead to destruction.

For many people 1933 will be the final year on earth. That may be true of many who read these lines. God only knows. But this thought may give us light and hope—God reigns and life belongs to him. Life came from him. Life should be consecrated to him. Spiritual fellowship with God is made possible through Jesus Christ. Begin the New Year with a spirit of good-will. Forgive all wrong doing and wrong doers. Smile away the frowns which have marred our faces. Be at peace with God and mankind. Cease to do evil and learn to do well. In the beginning God.

In the beginning the Kingdom of God. In the beginning the Kingdom of God in my own heart. In the beginning the Kingdom of God in my heart and in my fellowship and in the world.

EVANGELISM THAT WAS DIFFERENT.

Thorsby, Ala., has just experienced a type of evangelism that was different. That the usual type of evangelism, carrying with it much noise, excitement, and emotional strain, does not meet the needs of the present day is agreed by all students of modern conditions.

The first out-of-the-ordinary thing connected with this meeting was the conditions laid down before the meeting began by the minister conducting it: That money should not be discussed during the meeting, and that no definite amount should be promised for the minister conducting the meeting, and that only a free-will offering should be taken without the slightest high-pressure effort being made to secure the money. No "financial committee" should be appointed, merely a statement be made that an offering would be taken for the visiting minister, with no more ado than at the collection taken at any ordinary Sunday morning service in any church.

And then there was to be no "evangelistic machinery" installed to help work up an interest—not even an extra choir—nothing that any ordinary Sunday morning worship service could not have. In fact, the services were, in reality Sunday morning worship services, dignified, quiet, worshipful. The pastor did not have a lot of "revival machinery" to junk at the close of the meeting.

Dr. William T. Morgan, minister of the Independent Congregational Church, Birmingham, Ala., conducted the services. His preaching was based upon the conviction that even the Twentieth Century church group does not understand the fundamentals of religion nor the theological language in which it is presented by the ordinary minister. His preaching was, in reality, simply a school of religion taught in a language understood by young people and their elders. Dr. Morgan is preeminently orthodox, yet he is modern and fully abreast of the best thought of the times. He believes that sin is sinful and that God has provided a guaranteed cure.

Only three or four times did Dr. Morgan make any kind of a "proposition," and when he did, only once was there even a hymn sung, and not once did he ask the audience to stand during the invitation. Whatever he asked the audience to do to indicate its acceptance of Jesus as Saviour, he made sure that nothing whatever was done under the influence of a worked-up emotional state. Without singing, without the audience even standing, men, women, and young people quietly made their decisions. It was beautiful, it was inspiring, it was sacred, it was worshipful to see decisions made in that way.

For a number of years Dr. Morgan lectured in schools and colleges upon vocational and life guidance subjects. During these engagements he held conferences with thousands of young people throughout the United States concerning their personal problems and a choice of life work. During these meetings at Thorsby he held such conferences with practically every student of Thorsby Institute and with many young people about town. The good he accomplished in these heart-to-heart talks will never be known this side of judgment. The young people hear him gladly, not only in private conferences but from the pulpit as well. He completely won the friendship and confidence of the young people of this city—in fact, he is a young people's preacher.

Thorsby has her problem of young people's life. Before closing the meetings Dr. Morgan got together about a hundred of the leading young people and outlined a program of sane, safe, and Christian social life, which was enthusiastically accepted by the group. An organization was immediately formed with the purpose of including not only the young unmarried people, but also of the young married group. A large hall has been secured for social meetings and is being put into the best of condition for club rooms. Besides the regular weekly stunt nights they plan to organize dramatic and glee clubs, besides providing various games for the entertainment of the different groups. The entire social life of Thorsby will be enriched by this organization which will be under the supervision of the churches. Dr. Morgan believes that the churches have no right to say to their young people: "Don't do this and don't do that," until they have provided safe and sane social life for them. He has shown Thorsby how to answer the question, "What can Christian young people do for amusement that is safe, sane, Christian?"

The audiences outgrew the capacity of the Congregational Church and the invitation of the Baptist Church was accepted and the Sunday services were held in that church. A large group will unite with the Congregational Church.

It is understood that Dr. Morgan can accept a limited number of engagements with churches for meetings. His address is 2017 N. 15th Avenue, Birmingham, Ala. S. E. NORTON.

ARE YE COMFORTED?

(II. Cor. 1:4.)

"God does not comfort us to make us comfortable, but to make us comforters."—Jowett.

A letter full of heartbreak came from one whom God had comforted, and who had comforted others who were in need of comfort which she could give. Her home had been broken up because of unemployment and being dependent upon others, after years of comparative comfort, was hard to bear. With a prayer for guidance we tried to find some comforting words to cheer her heart. Be comforted by the thought that God has placed you there for a purpose to wait for him to work that purpose out in your life.

George Matheson has written: "He is even more served by waiting and by bearing. The heart which can tarry for him in the solitudes of the wilderness is to him the dearest heart of all." You are waiting there in your wilderness for deliverance. Jesus, your great Deliverer, is there with you, for he will never leave or forsake those who put their trust in him. Such precious promises are given those who wait upon the Lord. Isaiah 40:31; 42:16; Psalm 27:14; Romans 8:24-28 have such blessed words for our comfort. He gives power to the faint (Isaiah 40:29); he wants to rest you from all of earth's sorrows (Matthew 11:28). Rest in the Lord and wait patiently for him, for his rest shall be glorious. Read the blessed rest chapter (Heb. 4), and then remember that God is faithful and will make a way of escape into his haven of rest.

So may the Lord bless thee and keep thee; the Lord make his face to shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee; the Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace. W.

REV. E. T. COTTEN ACCEPTS EATON, OHIO, PASTORATE FOR ANOTHER YEAR.

One of the most active and most largely attended annual congregational business meetings of the Congregational-Christian Church took place Wednesday night, October 19th. The church voted to approve the plans of Rev. E. T. Cotten, the pastor and Rev. J. R. Stanforth, to begin the Union Sunday night services for the second year.

The church voted to continue the services of Rev. E. T. Cotten as pastor for another year. Having become pastor here in the middle of the local church year, Rev. Cotten has already served six and one-half years. This bespeaks the confidence and appreciation of the members for the faithful service of the pastor and his capable wife, who has so ably assisted him in choir directing and other musical activities.

The financial report of the church was encouraging, the amount of cash in the church and auxiliary organizations being $940.19, with only $286.00 in debts not yet paid, which means a balance of $654.19 after all debts are paid.

The pastor offered the following recommendations:

1. That our church declare a moratorium for six months on all financial appeals to our members, unless the money thus obtained is to be placed immediately in the church treasury, and thus lighten the financial burden of our members.

2. That we ask all auxiliary organizations to approve this moratorium, as business organizations in our country have done, and that these auxiliary organizations of our church for the next six months, make no financial appeals on our members for suppers, or other money-making schemes, unless the money thus obtained is to be placed immediately in the church treasury to help pay running expenses as they come due, and thus lighten the financial burden of our members.

The resolution was adopted by a vote of 60 to 11.

Two of the largest Sunday School classes—the King's Daughters and the Charity Circle—at their monthly meetings the following night voted to approve the recommendation and to cooperate.

The following officers were elected: For the church: Trustee, Harry Mettert; official board members, Harry Mettert, Russell Locke, Henry Kelly, Paul Fudge; Clerk, Russell Locke; Treasurer, L. D. Bailey.

For the Sunday School: Superintendent, W. A. Spring; assistants, Harry Mettert, Delson Cox, secretary, Lloyd Kramer; assistants, Dorothy Montgomery, Vera Barber; pianist, Mrs. F. C. Barber; assistant, Geraldine Ashworth; treasurer, Edith Hart; chief usher, John Bailey; assistants, Charles Hart, John Runyon, Ed. Campbell, Mart Swain, L. P. Barnes, Howard Hart, Chester King, Earl Wolf, Lloyd Kramer, Frank Ashworth, Forrest Welsh.

HOW BIG IS YOUR TOWN?

How big is your town? We do not mean its area in feet or miles or blocks. We do not mean the number of men, women and children. We do not mean the number of houses or the miles of paved sidewalks or hard surfaced roads. We mean, is your town big in heart, and if so, how big? We mean, is your town big in purpose, and if so, how big? We mean, is your town big in ideals, and if so, how big? We mean, is your town big enough to protect the weak, the innocent and the helpless? Is your town big enough in thought and purpose and motive to have fine churches, and good preachers, and good schools, and the things that elevate and educate? Does your town have a heart, a purpose, and an ideal? How big is your town? Give the answer without the use of the dollar mark.

TIMOTHY THOMAS,

WHAT DOES IT ALL MEAN?

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS.

Every day, and every hour of every day, in all corners of the earth, men and women are talking about the present depression, and trying to find the hidden meaning of it all.

Is it not high time that we accept the rather obvious truth of a divine purpose in this discipline?

Our world has grown very naughty. We had disdained the simplest and surest teachings of the experience of the ages. In audacious egotism, we had flouted God and the elemental moralities. Our intellectual pride had exceeded that of the builders of Babel. An apotheosis of man—and not of man at his best—had characterized thought and conduct.

In grim humor, God has seemed to say to us, "Now let us see what man can do about it."

Whereupon we have witnessed the humiliating and unbelievable collapse of human leadership. Our figures of pride, in business, in politics, in philosophy, have shown themselves to be but glittering drum-majors, instead of captains or generals. The revealed incompetence of our boastful and prideful "strong men" has been one of the major tragedies of the depression.

Now we see, and suffer while seeing, that restoration is not to come by legislation or by financial measures or by new economic theories.

Today the world stands dazed and helpless in the presence of one of its major calamities.

Is it not time, therefore, that those who know somewhat of history, and of the revealed nature of divine Providence, should boldly declare, like the hairy Herald on Jordan's banks: "Repent! Repent!"

This is an hour for humanity, in new humility and contrition, to recognize the inescapable will of God, and to turn to him for deliverance.

Only the old road, which leads by Sinai and Jerusalem and Galilee, is the way out for the world. We are being taught by chastisement that the Almighty still rules.

As England was saved from the revolution by the Wesley revival, so our day may escape disaster only by getting right with God—which is the one shortest way of getting right with one another.

L.

OUR NEIGHBOR—INDIA.

Our "Neighbor India" is the oldest nation in the world with a continuous history of three thousand years, and the second largest in population. It has produced one of the world's great and honored men, Gandhi. Under his leadership, India has been struggling for political independence. Through the efforts of our Christian workers in Christian education, much has been accomplished toward this great movement. When we think of this great work we think of the seven great attributes that Christian education has.

Illiteracy is being greatly decreased among the Christian people of India. There are more illiterates among the Mohammedans and Hindus than among the Christians.

Christian education is helping to build the character of Indian boys and girls of all castes. They are being taught honesty, self-respect, truthfulness, service and devotion to Jesus Christ.

An effort is being made to reform criminals which is one of the most needed strides in Christian education. One thousand children of criminal parents are in Christian schools. These parents are gradually being reformed and are given opportunities to earn their living honestly.

The blind children are being taught to be self-supporting.

Mission schools are doing much toward the education of women and girls. Eighteen per cent of Indian Christian women can read and write, while only one and one-half per cent of Hindu women can read and write. India is striving to become more civilized, and to do away with old social customs. Gertrude Chandler of the Lucy Perry Noble Institute of Madura is rendering excellent service toward the education of women. She is training them to support themselves and to make their homes attractive, healthful and Christian. Eliza Agnew has had part in the education of more than a thousand girls in her school. Therefore, she is known as the "Mother of a thousand daughters." Her motto was, "I'll tell the Master."

Another great contribution that Christianity is making to India is college work for students. The study of the Bible forms a part of the daily schedule.

There are Christian training schools in India where leaders are being trained for rural service.

Doctor and Mrs. Manshardt, two young American social workers of Bombay have charge of the "Neighborhood House." This is the common meeting place of the Mohammedans, Hindus, and Christians and they are taught the Christian spirit of true neighborliness.

Vocational Middle Schools have been established for the benefit of the village boys and girls. In these schools the boys and girls are given opportunities to learn special industries that will adjust them to the village life. Rev. Robert Fairbank, of Vadala, of the Marathi Mission and

Rev. Clarence E. Wolsted of the Madura Mission, have charge of such schools.

Rural reconstruction holds a great place in the mind of India at this time. A great effort is being made to rebuild her broken village life. Lester and Rose Beals, both doctors and both missionaries, are doing a wonderful work in the hospital at Wai. To quote them: "We would consider we had failed if we sent a patient to his village merely cured of a disease or with a wound healed. We try to awaken interest in a new way of life and give him ideas of health and religious living that will keep him well."

India is in need of Christian leadership. She needs educated Christian men and women to show them the great need of Christ as their personal Saviour.

There is a great opportunity confronting us and our missionaries to help lighten the burden of India. In the story of the Good Samaritan, the Lord has taught us that we must love our neighbor as ourselves, and the one that loves God, will love his neighbor. We know the great need of India and this need should make us strive to be of more service. God forbid, that we should fail to catch the vision of helpfulness and to reach out a helping hand to our neighbor, India. God of love will help us who share our prayers and Christian service to our neighbor, India.

In Christ there is no East or West,
In him no South or North,
But one great fellowship of love
Throughout the whole wide earth.
In him shall true hearts everywhere
Their high communion find,
His service is the golden cord
Close binding all mankind.

MISSIONARY PROGRAM.

(Prepared by Mrs. Edward D. Gaylord, Los Angeles, in the Missionary Herald.)

Worship Approach.

Leader—Before we begin to discuss this subject of such great importance let me read to you this story from the life of Jesus which can make the background of our thought. (Luke 2:39-52).

Prayer—(By one of the group, for quickness of thought, clearness of vision, forgetfulness of self, as each one tries to present truthfully the ideal relationship of the church and the family.)

Program Suggestions.

Round Table Discussion—Five or six persons participating with a leader as informally as possible, seated about a table in front of the audience. The outline should have been prepared the week before and topics assigned to each one.

I. What is the purpose of the church? What is the purpose of the family? The church is the one institution engaged in exactly the same special work in which the family is engaged, therefore is its natural ally.

(a) Both exist primarily for persons. Buildings, adornments, accessories, are but tools toward this end.

(b) Both claim that to the least we owe the most ("the child in the midst").

Are these ideals true of our church? Have we a real family type of program? If not, the fault lies in us: we are the church. (Suggestions for improvement in our program.)

II. The modern family and its difficulties:

(a) Economically: (1) Factory life; (2) Machinery; (3) Woman's emancipation; (4) Luxuries.

(b) Urbanized Living: (1) Apartments; (2) Restaurants; (3) Loss of space to breathe.

(c) New attitudes toward marriage: (1) Companionate; (2) Communal; (3) Trial.

(d) Is the ideal family able to exist in spite of these destructive tendencies? What forces can make a home in any surroundings? (1) An atmosphere of love which makes each one live for the good of all, and all live for the good of each one in the family. (2) A sharing of all experiences and responsibilities; joys and sorrows borne as far as possible together; work distributed according to ability. (3) Loyalty to ideals—a constantly enlarging vision of the good life and an inner urge to choose the best—an emotional stimulus which can be provided only through a beautiful home life. Perfect adjustment to society rarely comes to those whose early years have been spent with no family loyalties. Like lost souls they go into the turmoil of life with no solid foundation beneath their feet. Is it any wonder they stumble and fall? (4) The spirit of self-sacrifice in both parents and children. No home can be happy if even one member is thinking only of himself. (5) A spirit of trust that the law of the universe is loving and that "we cannot drift beyond his love and care;" a spirit which disarms fear and makes for peace and confidence, providing for each member of the family a sense of security which is the foundation for strong living.

These forces are entirely independent of material surroundings and can make a tiny flat a real home. What can the church do to help such homes to develop?

III. The church and family adjustments:

(a) As interpreter of Jesus: (1) Family relationships are the core of his teaching—brotherhood, sonship, fatherhood. (2) His principles are the bases for happy relationships in the home; the beatitudes; the Golden Rule; the Sermon on the Mount; parables of the sower, the prodigal son, the house built on the sand; his attitude toward childhood, toward his mother; his insistence upon self-forgetful love—all these show the conditions for a happy home. (3) He believed in humanity; that in spite of temptations to follow animal instincts, to lower standards, to escape reality, men and women have within themselves the divine power of God which can deliver them and lift them to glorious lives.

(b) As teacher: (1) Classes for adolescents with frank facing of facts; (2) Classes for parents (preferably young) on child training and happiness in marriage; (3) Series of lectures by minister (or by someone else of knowledge and spiritual vision) on home and marriage topics, followed by opportunity for private interviews.

JANUARY PROGRAM FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

By PRISCILLA CHASE.

This program is intended for young people. Prepare for it ahead of time, don't wait until the last minute to assign parts. If you don't have a "Guest Book," get one from Dr. Atkinson. The hymns may not be familiar, don't dismiss them, but practice them a bit ahead of time and use them. If they are not in your hymn book, find a hymn book that does have them. If you must substitute others, make sure they fit and do not express ideas of superiority. Incidentally, the next time your church buys hymnals insist that it shall be one with good World Friendship hymns.

This program is the second one based on the "Guest Book," and is adapted from suggestions in the Young People's Bulletin, No. 48, Autumn, 1932;

Hymn—"When Cross the Crowded Ways of Life."

Scripture—Eph. 2:13, 14, 16-22.

Leader—In the early days missionaries went to foreign lands simply "to preach the gospel." It did not take them long to discover that there were other ways than the one traditional way of preaching. Men who were sick and hungry needed medicine and food, as well as the Word, needed education and a chance to earn an honest and adequate living. So the preacher became the teacher, the doctor, the publisher, the social worker, the friend.

Our program is based on those emphases in our missionary task.

Several speakers now tell of these phases of work as exemplified in various individuals:

1. The Medical Worker—pages 15 and 22 in the "Guest Book."
2. The Social Worker—page 20.
3. The Teacher—pages 17 and 19.
4. The Publisher—page 14.
5. The Friend—page 18.

Hymn—"In Christ There Is No East or West."

Leader—But one of the chief jobs of the missionary is to keep himself in the background and train Nationals for places of leadership among their own people.

Three people now tell of three such Nationals:

1. Chinese—page 16 in the "Guest Book."
2. Zulu—page 21.
3. Mexican—page 13.

(Bring out that Mr. Soto is an excellent link between foreign and home missions.)

Prayer—For those workers and the great host they represent. For all who are in need and suffering. For children denied the right to play, and grown people denied the chance to work. For those in the famine regions and those in the slums of great cities. For our own church that its members may share with the rest of the world the message and the abundant life of Christ.

Hymn—"Christ for the World We Sing."

Benediction—May the love of Christ, the Great Friend, his peace, his joy in people, his touch with God the Father, be in our lives always, and touch the lives of those who meet us. Amen.

OUR FOREIGN NEIGHBORS.

By CUMIE WALDREP.

Jesus sent his disciples forth with the charge: "As ye go, preach." His imperative command was: "Ye are witnesses unto me." The Christian Church, each church, is a witnessing institution if it belongs to the founder and to its mission. The early churches, the churches of the first century, were invariably the outcome of missionary endeavor. It is a fact, if you take the missionary program out of the New Testament, you have virtually nothing left. Almost all the epistles were written by foreign missionaries to foreign mission stations, for the strengthening of mission converts. The missionary movement in apostolic days saved Christianity by keeping it true to its redemptive mission. The local church is not a terminal—it is a transfer point. The past generation is ever saying:

"To you from falling hands we throw
The torch, be yours to hold it high."

The evangelization of the lands from which our own land has been settled is another range of the hills for the background of this topic of ours. "God sifted the finest of the wheat of Great Britain and Europe for the planting of America" When Augustine, the Roman Monk, brought Christianity to the England of the Sixth Century, what did he find? Earlier traces of Christianity had been obliterated by the Angles and Saxons. They worshipped their Druid gods with human sacrifice. They sought favorable omens for their warfare by burning living prisoners in wicker hampers covered with pitch. They ate human flesh at their feasting.

Our heritage in America of language, of law, and of literature harks back to the formative influences of the pioneer missionaries on the British Isles. Every American church traces back its foundation to the age when God lifted the Angles and Saxons, the Picts and Scots out of the mirey clay, and set their feet upon the Rock, Christ Jesus.

Through the centuries the Christian Church kept aloft the missionary torch, but when the Protestant Reformation came with the temporary absorption in questions of ritual and doctrine, then for a time the Protestant Churches lost their missionary zeal. It was the Moravians of Germany who sent the Gospel to Greenland and the West Indies. Zinzendorf, their leader, said to the group of humble Moravians with him on the deck of their ship: "What will you do, on landing, if you find that all your brethren who came here months ago to work among the slaves have perished?" They answered: "We will take their places." Count Zinzendorf exclaimed: "These Moravians, indeed, come of noble lineage. Begotten of the generation of Bohemians and they of Hussites, and they of Cyril and Methodius, and they in turn of a man who 'Counted not his life dear unto himself,' and he on the Damascus road had been begotten of the Spirit of Jesus, the Son of God, who came not to be ministered unto but to minister and to give his life a ransom for many."

But what of those heroic souls who endured again and again all the privations of primitive travel, and again and again, "Compassed the same frontier, always homeless, always seeking those more needy than themselves, without adequate subsistence, enduring exposure, exertions and discomforts unknown in olden communities?"

Many of our strongest churches are the outcome of the sacrificial labors of these followers of the missionaries.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS LETTER.

Dansalan, Lanao, P. I.,
November 3, 1932.

Dear Friends at Home:

I am again in Lanao, 80 miles from our station where we had such a fine vacation this year. Baby and I came here because Dr. White had to go to a far-away province to help out a fellow missionary who was sick and needed a vacation, and had no one to take care of his hospital for him. This young doctor of our mission has worked here for six years without relief. So I am glad that Dr. White was able to leave at this time and go there for the change is benefiting Doris and myself, too. We enjoy the cooler climate and baby has such an appetite and rosy cheeks, I dread taking her back to the lowlands.

I have told you before about this village, Dansalan, which is situated on a beautiful lake. There are several thousand Mohammedans living along the shores of this lake. It is an interesting sight on market days to see them crossing in their vintas bringing brass and food-stuffs to sell. They squat all day on the ground in the hot sun trying to sell a few centavos' worth. There are many different kinds of fish caught in the lake, but the Americans do not eat them because the waters are so polluted. A professor from Leipzig University who visited here, said there were 14 kinds of fish in this lake which were found in no other part of the world.

In this province there are about 120,000 Mohammedans who are almost continually fighting among themselves. And although there is a fine high school and a farm school, too, near here with books, tuition and everything free, there are very few of the Moros who take advantage of them. They are suspicious of the schools. English is taught and they do not want to learn a foreign language. Then the teachers are Christian Filipinos and they have hated and fought against them for three centuries now. Only six years ago, 50 school-houses were burned by the Moros. So they have advanced very little in the education of their children.

When Dr. Laubach, of our mission, first came here at the same time we reached Cagayan, his plan was to start a normal school so the Moros themselves would be capable of teaching, but he soon found his plan could not be carried out because there were so very few with a high school education. So he began in another way. He mastered their language and after much work invented a key system which enables them to read in an amazingly short time, in one lesson or two or three hours. It would take a long time to describe this system in detail, but it is attracting wide attention not only in the Philippine Islands, but in other parts of the world, for he has adapted it to many different dialects and languages. He is on a tour now starting classes in the northern provinces among the Filipinos. I am now studying a Visayan chart so I can teach our hospital patients who cannot read when I go back. It would be a great thing to have them say they learned to read in the Mission hospital.

This literacy campaign is certainly the best approach possible to these people for the Mohammedans are the most difficult to reach. May write you again of this work here before going back to Cagayan. Mrs. Laubach too is having some new experiences in conducting a kindergarten for Moro children. Many of them no doubt will be led to the public school through this.

Sincerely yours,

RITA T. WHITE.

MORE ABOUT MOVIES.

"A sinister element" is the way Rev. James H. Dickson of Pasumalai, South India, characterizes American movies in India—for most of them seem to be American made. Lord Irwin, until 1931 Viceroy of India, in reviewing the situation in the East generally, said that the prestige of the white man as standing for a higher life and morality has been almost entirely lost through the movie. Not long ago Mr. Dickson says, a European was seated by a cultured Indian in a movie in India. They were strangers but suddenly the Indian turned to the other man and said with feeling: "I am an Indian. I suppose you white people would call me a 'nigger'. I am unacquainted with other sides of Western civilization but what I have seen here tonight and on numerous other occasions in these places convinces me that the ordinary middle classes in England and America are the most debased and immoral creatures any race or nation has ever produced." Well, that's that! But Mr. Dickson adds "The revolting indecency and appealing vulgarity that are allowed to appear on the screen is making an appeal to the eye far more lasting and permanent than any appeal through the other senses. And yet there are multitudes who think it is all right for America to export her movies but all wrong for her to export the Gospel. Reports of American movies shown abroad lead one to believe that little, if any, censorship is exercised over the films sent overseas.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

THE NEW YEAR VENTURE.

A hundred and twenty million Americans faced the rising sun of 1933 with greater fear and hope than ever filled their hearts on a New Year. They knew that if this year is like the last more people will be killed by automobiles than were killed by guns in France in the same length of time, that seven million savings accounts will be wiped out, and that forty to fifty million people in our land of plenty will face hunger and cold because ten to twelve million laboring people have no jobs even though they want them. Just a glimpse of recent history chills the heart with fear.

But in my little village the New Year's sun rose in a clear sky and sent its radiant beams down on a quiet earth. The wind, rain, storms of the old year were gone, and a new day brought good cheer to the calm earth. One felt like saying with the ancient singer of Israel: "This is the day which the Lord hath made; we will rejoice and be glad in it." New hope crowded out fear as worshippers turned to their churches.

A friend of mine—and yours—sent me a greeting which expresses beautifully my own sentiment concerning the New Year. I shared it with my church people, and now pass it on to you with a prayer that it may encourage you to venture into the New Year with high hopes of making this year better than the past:

(Note.—The greeting referred to above is in the form of a poem by C. Rexford Raymond, and appears on page three of this issue of THE SUN.)

SHALL WE DREAM OR DRIFT?

The Church of Jesus faces greater opportunities for service and expansion today than in any age. The world feels more keenly than ever before the need for a Saviour. The teachings of all great leaders are being sifted for the truth that will transform society and bring back the security which is needed for happiness. The message of the Master becomes more convincing daily. It is Jesus or nothing.

This is no time for the church to drift. It is the time to dream of possibilities, and to make dreams come true. If we fail this year, it will take a century to recover.

Call your officers, committees, workers, together and lay definite plans so your group can do the most possible service this year. You may need to feed the hungry. You will need to guide people in right living. A sad world is calling desperately for the Christian cheer which you can give.

Don't hesitate! The water may be cold, but people are drowning whom you can save. Plunge in, and work with all your might. Then you will forget that there are difficulties for you will see only opportunities.

Dream dreams! "Let no man take thy dream from thee." Plan, pray, and work for the fulfillment of your dreams. Nothing but driftwood should drift in a time like this. And nothing else will.

DEFIANCE CHRISTMAS CONFERENCE.

On December 28th, last, sixty-five young people gathered in Defiance College (Ohio) for the 8th annual Christmas Conference of young people. It was the purpose of these leaders from all over our church to lay plans for the new year, and for two days and three nights they wrestled with the problems of building a new world.

Those attending from the South were Herman

Truitt, president of Youth Fellowship of the Southeast; Carl Key, president of Youth Fellowship of the Western North Carolina Conference. Ethel Hurley representing the Youth Fellowship of Eastern Virginia; Priscilla Chase, extension worker for the Carolinas, and Barbara Chase, a senior at Elon College and a member of Youth Fellowship of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference. It appears that these representatives from Dixie proved their value to Conference by serving on important committees and getting elected to office. Herman is vice-president of the Conference for this year. Also their names appear in the Fountain Icicles, a daily publication of the Conference.

A report of the Conference is to be made by the young people themselves in next week's paper. Watch for their report.

The motto adopted for the coming year, was: "Making Christ Real in the Life of Today." Definite plans were suggested and adopted by the Conference to aid in the accomplishment of their motto. This is a challenge to you and your church group, and I feel sure that you will do your very best to make the motto a reality.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

TOPIC FOR JANUARY 15, 1933

"How Selfish Should We Be?"—Matt. 16:21-27.

"What I am is God's gift to me.
What I become is my gift to God."

The Western world has gone money mad. Time and energy formerly used for the welfare of men is now absorbed to a great extent in the pursuit of wealth and the power which wealth can bring. The impulse to unselfishness is as strong as ever; but customs of society urge men onward to giving less thought and consideration to unselfish endeavor. Is it true, as some say, that slow and sure decay is setting in on the Western world because we are so organized that unselfishness does not play the paramount part it should in our lives? I should not like to be so pessimistic, but we do realize that this is a matter for serious thought, and is a challenge to do something to bring about a change in such a condition. Unselfishness in our daily living, in the business world, in everything we do, would go a long way toward bringing about a new social order we need and making Christ real in the life of today.

A study of Jesus' standards of life gives us his unselfish spirit in dealing with men, but it is so easy for folks to say: "Yes, that may have been all right in Jesus' day, but it won't work now." Yet, we have an outstanding leader today, Sherwood Eddy, who has applied the principles of unselfishness to every phase of life. Mr. Eddy has worked for years without salary. He inherited a small fortune which made it possible for him to take care of his family. Some years ago he moved from a palatial residence into a small apartment. He felt that his efficiency was not dependent upon his living in a mansion. He changed his mode of living so that his family did not spend a thing which was not necessary for their efficiency and for their service to mankind. This meant quite a considerable saving over former expenditures. This saving went to worthy causes.

What about carrying this principle over into religious work? Many feel virtuous when they over-work for the Kingdom's sake. Such service is often inefficient and often of questionable value. Time and energy given in unselfish service should be in keeping with our ability to make the gift effective and at the same time leave ourselves physically and mentally able to carry on all necessary tasks of life.

The purpose of this meeting should be a thoughtful consideration of a positive approach to the elimination of selfishness from our lives and a sincere effort to practice the presence of the Master in our lives.

"Draw thou my soul, O Christ, closer to thine,
Breathe into every wish, thy will divine.

Raise my low self above, won by thy deathless love,

Ever, O Christ, in me, let thy light shine.

"Lead thou my soul, O Christ, one with thine own,

Footsteps to follow thee through paths unknown.
In thee my strength renew, give me thy work to do,

Through me thy truth be shown, thy love made known.

"Not for myself alone, let my prayer be,
Lift up thy world, O Christ, closer to thee,

Cleanse it from guilt and wrong,

Teach it salvation's song,

Till earth as heaven fulfill God's holy will."

Suggested songs for this meeting: "O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee," "I Would Be Like Jesus," "Somebody Did a Golden Deed," "Master, No Offering Costly and Sweet," and "Love Thyself Last."

E. H.

The Young People's Missionary Society of the New Lebanon Christian Church held its regular meeting on Sunday evening, December 4th, with a splendid attendance, and an interesting program. Mr. O. V. Cokes, superintendent of this live society taught the mission lesson and Mrs. O. M. Cokes sang the beautiful song, "In The Garden," while it was pantomimed by Miss Elma James. The society decided to have a Christmas program and a committee of five were appointed to look after this project. A special offering was received to apply on the Thank Offering. John Savedge is the president and Miss Lou Ray Edwards is news editor of this interesting group of young people. The benediction was pronounced by Rev. W. D. Harward

I WILL!

"Few things are done because we can,
Or not because we can't.

To will is something greater than
To wish, to only want.

We do not lose because the day
Was dark, or high the hill;

We do not win because we may,
We win because we will.

"Men lose who might have won success,
Who couldn't, yet they could,
Men win who nothing more possess
Than hope and hardihood.

Because they can't men do not lose,
Because they can, achieve;
The winners win because they choose,
And nothing else believe.

"Who thinks that he can fail has failed
Before he makes a start,
But 'can't' has never yet prevailed
Against a dauntless heart.
The man who 'can' may be too sure,
Who 'can't' is weaker still;
But no misfortune can endure
Before the man who 'will'."

Sunday School Lesson

JESUS AT WORK.

LESSON III—JANUARY 15, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "My Father worketh even until now, and I work."—John 5:17.

LESSON TEXT: Mark 1:21-35.

The title of the lesson is significant. "Jesus at Work," puts a new light, gives it a new meaning, invests it with a new sanctity, puts the stamp of divine approval upon the dignity of work. Work is a blessing. Work is an integral part of the divine plan of God for the development of his children and the redemption of his world. Those who work are workers together with God.

Jesus Teaching.

"And straightway on the Sabbath day he entered into the synagogue and taught. And they were astonished at his doctrine for he taught them as one that had authority, and not as the scribes." It is difficult to discern when Jesus was teaching and when he was preaching. But whether teaching or preaching, there was something vital about his work. He taught with authority, he taught first-hand. He knew God, and out of that experience he taught with freshness and with power and with interest. Ministers and Sunday School teachers should teach the same way. They should be able to speak at first-hand of the things they teach. If we know God we, too, shall be able to speak with authority.

Jesus Healing.

"A man with an unclean spirit." Whatever interpretation we may put on those words, we know what the writer was saying, for we know men and women with unclean spirits. We know, too, how they fear the presence of Jesus in his purity and his power. We know how they are troubled when they are with people, or in an atmosphere, that remind them of him. We know, too, that there are those who have had unclean spirits who have been redeemed and made clean by Jesus. This is, of course, our task—to bring all such to the influence of Jesus so that he may drive out the unclean spirit. Jesus does have authority over unclean spirits.

Jesus Visiting.

"And when they were come out of the synagogue, they entered into the house of Simon Peter and Andrew his brother, with James and John." Peter and Andrew took the "preacher" home with them for dinner. It is a fine thing to have Jesus not only as a guest, but as a permanent member of the family.

"But Peter's wife's mother lay sick of a fever, and anon they tell him of her." When our loved ones or friends are sick it is well to tell Jesus about them. That does not mean that we should not call a doctor. It does mean that even though we call a doctor we should also bear them up to him who is the Great Physician.

"And he came and took her by the hand, and lifted her up." Jesus was a great believer in the power of the personal touch. Our modern world desperately needs this personal touch as concerning those who are sick of body, as well as sick of soul. We do too much of our charity and our church work at a distance. There is no substitute for the personal hand-touch of those who are well and strong on the lives of those who are sick of body or sick of soul.

"And she ministered unto them." Alas, how often do those whom Jesus helps in emergencies forget to minister unto him. Peter's mother-in-law showed gratitude by action.

It is to be noted that Jesus went from the synagogue to the house of Simon and it was there that he performed his gracious service. Let him that hath ears let him hear. Services of worship in the church ought to prepare for and inspire to service to the needy outside.

Jesus Praying.

"And in the morning, rising up a great while before day he went out, and departed into a solitary place and there prayed." Great crowds of people gathered about him the night before and he had healed them. But Jesus knew that the people then, like people now, were not as eager for spiritual blessings as they were for healing. He knew that although the healing of the sick then, as reputed healing of the sick now, always awakens great interest in any community, it seldom leads to any deep or permanent spiritual results. He saw the spiritual purposes of his ministry imperiled by the fame that was going out as a mere healer of disease. He, therefore, got away from the crowd, he got away even from his intimate companions, and departed into a solitary place and there prayed.

There is significance in the words, "and there prayed." Remember it was Jesus who prayed. He who was the Son of God felt the need of inward renewal, the need of deepening his fellowship with God, the need of replenishing his spiritual resources before he went again to the people, the need of strengthening himself against the sudden or subtle temptations that might come. If he felt it, how much more do we need it!

"Very early in the morning"—He would put it first, when spirit was fresh, before the things of the day had crowded it out—he went out, and departed into a solitary place—he got away from folks and things for a while, he shut out the things that threatened to swamp him, he sought the Father in secret communion—and there he prayed. He had communion with God, speaking with him to be sure, but just as surely listening to hear God as he spoke to him. Prayer is something more than simply asking God for things. Prayer is conversation—it takes two to have a conversation—with God. One of the supreme values of prayer is its power to prepare us to do the things that God has for us to do. Prayer gives us the power to do things we ought to do. Prayer helps us to say, "Not my will, but thy will be done." Prayer brings us into harmony with the spirit and purpose of God. Jesus prayed! Do you?

NEW CORRESPONDENCE BIBLE COURSE.

The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago announces that its correspondence school has released a new course in scripture memorizing, the title of which is "Scripture Memorizing for Personal Work." It has been prepared by Rev. Oscar Lowry, who is eminent both as a Bible teacher and an evangelist. The basis of the ten lessons is the lectures given by Mr. Lowry at the Institute in the day and evening schools. The course covers not only the memorizing of scripture, but also its application to personal evangelism, which will be of practical help to people of all ages. It is the first course of its kind ever given by correspondence, and is already proving popular. A large number of students who are now taking, or have finished the course, indicate their gratitude for a way to so easily master scripture memorizing. One student reports having memorized more than 1,500 passages, with locations, before completing the sixth lesson in the study. The course will surely be a boon to those who have not before been able to retain in memory the passages from the Bible that they would like to command for instant use. Enrollments for this new course are reported as increasing rapidly.

For further details readers are invited to write to the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, 153 Institute Place, Chicago Avenue Station, Chicago, Illinois.

REMEMBER.

"Thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God hath led thee—that he might humble thee, to prove thee, to know what is in thine heart, whether thou wouldst keep his commandment, or no."—Deut. 8:2.

Despite the fact we are to forget some things behind us, there are some things we must remember. We are to remember what the Lord has done for his children; "remember Abraham, Isaac and Israel" (Ex. 32:13); we are to remember what the sinner finally suffers, "remember what the Lord did to Pharaoh." We are to remember what the Lord has done for us (text); we are to remember in humiliation how unworthy we are, "remember how thou provokest the Lord thy God" (Deut. 9:7); remember the hand of the Lord, in shaping the affairs of the world, "remember how I have walked before thee" (II. Kings 20:3); remember that no one has perished, being pure, true, honest, just, innocent and of good report (Job 4:7), (Eph. 4:8), (Prov. 11:21), (Psalm 37:25); remember to be charitable toward others, for we are only clay ourselves (Job 10:9); remember to endure for righteousness sake, for it is only the foolish who would reproach thee (Psalm 74:22), (Matt. 5:10); remember to be genuine and "play the part of a man" at all times (Isa. 46:8); remember to help those in distress (Heb. 13:3). Remember to repent of thy sins and come before the throne of grace daily in humble submission to his will.

Prayer—Our Father, thou art the Blessor of life and the Giver of every good gift. All goodness has gone forth in this world because of thy merciful outstretched arm. Thou hast paved the way from sea to sea and made the way of salvation so clear that none may be lost. Thou hast overwhelmed enemies in the depths and we confidently expect the wicked to be so overthrown. We would remember that birth that makes us thy children and members of thy family. May we never escape from the impression of this fact. May we never lose the sense of our indebtedness to thee.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

"UNWORTHY DUST."

"He remembereth that we are dust."—Psalm 103:14.

"Remember how thou provokest the Lord thy God."—Deut. 9:7.

An honest look at ourselves soon reveals experiences of our shortcomings too painful to be remembered. There are many of these eminently bad, unworthy of true discipleship and provoking to God. There are hours of distrust which challenge the power and goodness of God. There are moments when we have given away to impulses of anger and hatred, envy and maybe profanity, to sensuality or some kind of evil passion, which took us off the path of right and rectitude.

These things are too painful to be remembered, and why should we? For one thing at least, that we may understand the long-suffering of God and praise him for it. He is mighty good to us and gives us opportunities over and over again to make good for him.

There is another reason for remembering it, and that is, that we may repent and be done with it all. There is nothing more rehabilitating as a daily virtue.

Prayer—O Lord, our God, we set our lives this year under thy providence and guidance. We would know thy love where it is hardest, and if it takes privation to teach us that, we submit to thy will, and trust in thy Word that all things shall work together for good to them that love thee. Accept us Lord, and keep us true.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

OUR RECALLS.

"O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself; it is not in man that walketh, to direct his steps."—Jer. 10:23.

We ought to recall our life and recall it in this way—as a demonstration of God's presence, fatherly, providential care. We should be able to tell the influences, especially the personal ones, which have entered into our lives. We recall the times we have met our best friend, when some rival has taken a prize from us; we should also be able to recall when Christ met us on the way and opened a new world and a new life unto us. We should also be able to recall when our purposes have been crossed, our hopes frustrated, the aspirations that have not been fulfilled, and know why. If we can recall these things with an honest intention, we can determine fairly well that it is not we who have made our life what it is. It is not we. It is God.

Prayer—O God, the tendencies of life maketh us forget thee, and yet we know that thou givest us the power to be what we are and to do what is before us. We seek today to gather unto our hearts thy wisdom, and all that thou art to man in the world. In Christ's name, grant unto us all thou wouldst have us have, and make us thy true children.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

REMEMBER FORGIVENESS.

LESSON: Psalm 103.

"Who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases; who redeemeth thy life from destruction: who crowneth thee with loving kindness and tender mercies?"—Ps. 103:3, 4.

During these two weeks we have been considering the things we should forget and the things we should remember. In it all we have been reminded that it is not enough that our present life be remembered, while the ugly past remains as it was. We need the power which will purify the places of vanished joys as well as the power to give us hope in the undying sorrows.

Dante's purgatory gives a picture of one standing upon the brink of two rivers, and drinking of their waters which cleared the memory of all its stains and scars, its shadows and corruption.

"There is a river the streams whereof make glad the city of God." God in his infinite mercy has provided us with it. His forgiving love flows sweet at all times, and those who drink of it are forgiven of everything; not by forgetting, but by transfiguring the past into a new life—a new creation in Christ Jesus.

Prayer—Dear Father, we pray thee to redeem us by thy precious blood, and whatever memory we retain of past sins, may it be in the light of thy loving forgiveness and mercy, may we never forget how thy hand has led us, preserved us and kept us until now. Forbid that we shall sin or stray away from thy way. Draw us closer and closer to thee all the way.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

WHICH WAY?

"Remember the way." (Deut. 8:2) and a highway shall be there and a way, called the way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it."—Isa. 35:8.

Is the way we have traveled the way of the Lord or not? Some have to confess that it has not been. It has been their own way. They have mapped out their own way and been proud of their own achievements. They are self-sufficient and dependent on no one. Such is the way of hell (Prov. 7:27). It is a "broad way that leadeth to destruction."

But there is a way called "good and right" (I. Sam. 12:23); it is a "narrow way that leadeth to life;" a way of the "spirit of the Lord" (I. Kings 22:24); a way in which "the light dwelleth" (Job 38:19); a way that is called "truth" (Psalm 119:30); a way that knows no false things; a way of holiness; a way called peace (Isa. 59:8); this is the way of salvation.

It doesn't take long to observe that life on any other terms than by God's guidance is very unsatisfactory. There are experiences which obscure our vision and cloud our understanding, but if we can remember the way—God's leadership—we shall land safely. Religion means the guidance of God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Prayer—God, take us back to all the doctrines of thy providence, that behind the things which we see, and touch and handle, we may see thee. Make thyself conscious in our spiritual sense, that we can always say, "not my will but thine be done." In Jesus' name, we ask it.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

HE LED ME.

"He leadeth me in paths of righteousness for his name sake."—Psalm 23:3.

"Through all the old unquiet years,
Shadowed by failure and by sin,
When selfish grief and selfish fears
Made all the way I stumbled in A mystery of darkness—still
I think he led me. Looking back
It seems to me his blessed will Fashioned my life, and any lack
Of presence or of riches or of power
Were angels in disguise.
However much I hungered for
A present earthly paradise,
God held me!"

—J. W. Taylor in the Doorkeeper.

Prayer—O Lord, our God, help that this year we may recognize thy goodness and thy leadership in our lives even when we are far from meriting it. As we journey on lead us by thy love, and we take up that cross of love to bear it on to others. God help us.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

CROOKED STICKS.

"The crooked shall become straight."—Read Luke 3:1-6.

There is a man in New York City who makes it his business to go up into the forests in the northern part of the State and collect all the crooked sticks he can find. Then he puts them together into chairs and other pieces of furniture, whose odd shapes are very decorative, besides furnishing constant reminders of the delightful, rough ways of the woods.

It is tradition that our Lord, the carpenter of Nazareth, was especially skilled in the making of yokes. If that was so, he must have taken peculiar interest in every crooked stick in a woodpile, just as we know he took the deepest interest in every crooked stick of humanity, such as Zachaeus.

He came to earth, indeed, to show how all things crooked can be transformed from ugliness into use and beauty. Sometimes, as in the case of the yoke, the very crookedness of the stick be-

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher.

"TO WHAT SHOULD WE BE LOYAL?"

By REV. J. HOWARD SMITH.

Introduction.

If I should ask each of you what kind of person you admired most, some would say the friendly person. Others would say they liked successful people. Still others would say they liked another sort of person. You would not all agree. But I am sure you would all admire the man who is loyal to his convictions, because the one who is loyal commands your respect and admiration.

I.

It depends on what we are loyal to as to its validity. I suppose we could be loyal to anything, if we desired to be. The choice of deciding to what we will be loyal lies within our power. We make our contribution to society and civilization in proportion to the kind of fidelity we choose. Some choose a higher type than others. There are those of us who choose the type which may be classed with that of the wolf-pack loyalty. The wolf is devoted to his pack just so long as there is plenty of food to go around; but as soon as the food gives out, they turn and with great confusion kill one another. The strong, crafty wolves continue to live, while the weak cease to exist. The wolf can't be loyal to anything higher than himself. We have men in our civilization who have not yet risen above this type of fidelity. In the time of a crisis they cherish the wolf-pack loyalty and revert to the old idea of the "survival of the fittest." In utter disregard of others they exploit human life, and crush the very souls of men. When a goal is at stake, they turn and take advantage of their fellowmen for personal gain, or for the profit of their own small groups. And they are small in more ways than one. If every man cherished a loyalty no higher than that, imagine where we would all end.

There is a second group who do rise higher in their fidelity. It is a step higher than the wolf-pack type, and may be called the mechanical variety. A locomotive will run to the end of the track as long as it is fed with fuel, and looked after. But as soon as the fuel gives out, the engine ceases to move. It must be well taken care of, if it is to bring results. Many people possess this same type of mechanical devotion. They may be blindly loyal to any cause so long as the fuel keeps them going.

Some exhibit the mechanical loyalty in doing things just to get them done. They have no particular interest in the results, but accept the commands of their superiors. An example of this would be that of a crew. The crew leader may curse and direct his men to do a certain work, and they will proceed to do it. However, they do not obey him because of any devotion they have for him, but just to get it done. As long as they are fed, and receive their regular wages, they are loyal to their job.

A third type is loyalty to a single individual. In the play, "Strange Interlude," we find Nina loyal to a shadow. Her lover had been killed on a battlefield in France. She had regretted that there was not a fine son to commemorate the memory of her lover, Gordon. Because she had invested her devotion in a shadow, so to speak, she was willing to give her life serving as a nurse in a soldiers' hospital. In her devotion for Gordon we find her giving her body to the soldiers, thinking in that way to atone for the injustice she thought she had done to Gordon. She thought she had been unjust to him for not having given herself to him before he left for France, even though they were not married. Her idea of what loyalty implied was a perverted one. Loyalty to anything, if it is true loyalty, must call forth the highest and best that is in one. Because of her false idea of what loyalty really is, Nina's best qualities were not developed. We must not sacrifice the best and the beautiful that is in us by limiting our devotion to a single person.

In the life of the gangs of the underworld we find extreme devotion to single personalities. The gang leader commands the respect of his inferiors, primarily because he is the shrewdest of them. Their cause is so wrapped up in the leader who cherishes the lowest that the cause never rises higher than its leader. We find numerous persons in complete submission to the control of some crafty person who stands for those things which are low and degrading. Often these men will go the limit in showing their loyalty to the one who controls them. While this loyalty is higher than the wolf-pack type, even higher than the mechanical type, it is an undesirable type of devotion in a democratic order, and usually exerts great influence for evil.

Jesus came preaching that men should be loyal to the best and highest values of life. The cause of righteousness in the personal life, for righteousness in social relationships of all mankind, was the cause to which Christ wished that we should be loyal. True loyalty calls for unselfish motives. It is fidelity that rings out clear and strong. In each of us there is that innate sense of loyalty, of what ought to be, which is calling for the highest and best that is in us. There are moments when we fully realize this, and our conviction urges us to stand for the cause that embraces this highest type of devotion. Devotion to the finest and best is one of the most noble traits of man. We can either accept or reject this urge. This vision of duty involves a sense of responsibility to something beyond ourselves. The wolf can be loyal to nothing beyond himself. The mechanical type requires no responsibility beyond the work. The loyalty to an individual calls for loyalty no higher than the personality. But the kind of loyalty I would have you choose today is the kind that requires allegiance to something beyond ourselves, something beyond a single personality—an allegiance to Jesus Christ. We are all a part of a larger universe which needs our individual contributions to a great moral and spiritual adventure. Will we, by our choice of loyalty, help to make a better moral and spiritual world?

A HIGH WAY AND A LOW.

To every man there openeth
A way, and ways, and a way,
And the high soul climbs the high way,
And the low soul gropes the low;
And in between on the misty flats
The rest drift to and fro.
But to every man there openeth
A high way and a low,
And every man decideth
The way his soul shall go.

—Oxenham.

II.

Anything that is worth-while costs. If you choose the highest type of loyalty, it may sometimes mean a very heavy price. Shadrach, Meshack, and Abendnego were confronted with the king's command to worship his image. If they did, it meant that they would betray their God. The threat of death brought all the people in the kingdom to their knees, except these three young men. They refused, rather than prove traitors. Facing the king these men said boldly: "We have chosen to be loyal to the highest we know, and nothing can make us do otherwise." Because of their loyalty these men braved the fiery death, and were miraculously delivered.

Suppose Thomas A. Edison had failed to be loyal to the work he engaged in. He conceived the idea that he could contribute something to the world which would be of great value, and so he set about making his idea a realization. Suppose that in the midst of the making of the electric light bulb, he had said to himself, "I have undertaken more than I should have; I will give up my idea." The world might have been left in darkness. But he worked away faithfully until he had completed his task. He became so obsessed with his cause that he applied all the devotion and all the allegiance he possessed to this one thing. He paid the price of loyalty and his cause succeeded.

The cause of Gandhi has not failed, because he has been willing to pay the full price. Suppose that when he was in London a few months ago, he had accepted a bribe with a promise to cease his activities. Suppose that the British Government had offered him certain privileges if he would give up his cause. Would he have done it? No! Instead of even compromising, Gandhi returned to jail. Does it not take courage to do what he has done? Is it not a daring adventure (Continued on page 15.)

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

1536 East Broad Street, - - Richmond, Virginia

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The children had a real happy Christmas. We had enough chickens left from Thanksgiving to give them a nice chicken dinner for Christmas.

Our good friend, Mr. Edwin Gould, of New York City, mailed us a check for $50.00, to buy all of them a Christmas present.

Several Sunday School classes mailed in checks to help make their Christmas more joyful.

Mr. Gould also mailed us some nice candy, so all got a box of candy, too.

Many special gifts were sent to individuals. The First Church, Norfolk, sent us a special gift for each child. One little tot came to the writer, and said: "The people of Norfolk certainly are good; they sent me a pretty little train toy," and he was as happy as if he had received a real steam engine.

We want to thank each one who had a part in making our little folks happy for Christmas. If you could have been present Christmas eve night, when Santa Claus from High Point visited the Baby Home and gave out presents, and also visited the Johnston Hall, when Santa from Burlington came in and called out the names of those for whom he had presents, it would have made you happy, because you had a part in helping Santa get the presents ready to make them happy. The children in all three of the buildings had a nice Christmas program by the children before the gifts were given out. May the good Lord bless each and every one who had a part.

to be loyal to your vision of what ought to be? In response to his soul's vision the little man of India has said: "I stand here; I cannot do otherwise." And he faced the battalions of the British Empire with his moral adventure. His cause will go on, because of the price its leader is willing to pay.

We must get on one side of the fence or the other. No loyalty can be shown when you are trying to stand for both good and evil. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Yonder in the Garden of Gethsemane, Christ made his decision to pay the full price for what he knew to be right. We hear him praying, "Father, let this cup pass from me." And in the distance we hear a still small voice saying, "Without the supreme price there will be no Christ." And then the answer comes, "Not my will, but thine." It was through loyalty in response to what ought to be that he was able to go to Calvary and make atonement for us.

I am thinking now of a Chinese who has paid the price because of his fidelity to Christianity. How easy it is for us to take what is handed down to us! But for this Chinese lad the acceptance of Christianity meant paying a price. It meant giving up those things near and dear—family, home, friends. What a price to pay!

Emerson has said: "Whoso would be a man must be a non-conformist." In fact, men who have contributed most to the progress of the world have been non-conformists. What a price some men have paid for being loyal to the highest they knew! President Mendenhall, of Friends University, said in a sermon recently, "Minorities have always done whatever was worth doing. The larger the minority, the better. Majorities have to be led to acquiesce, but I am continually impressed by what even a few men and women can do who have some imagination and courage. It is a hopeful task, and everything they hold dear is staked on its success."

Whenever a person becomes obsessed with a new truth, he soon finds himself in conflict with the accepted social order. If his truth cuts across some tradition held sacred either in government or religion, all the mores of the day unite in pressure against him. If the man with the ideal is loyal to what he feels ought to be, he will not stop. He goes on, regardless of torture, whether jailed or freed, whether his friends still believe in him or not. His devotion to his cause will result in a few people considering his idea. As the years go by the number of those considering his teachings grows until it is no longer a minority but a majority. That is the point at which civilization has progressed, and culture has advanced. The world is a better place, and then the generation looks back to see where the great idea came from. Thy discover and call him a prophet, and build memorials to him. At the same time, they are closing the mouths of the new prophets of their own time. It is largely through the efforts of non-conformists that civilization grows.

Just what is our obligation to the world and to God? It is to leave the world a little better by our having lived in it. Each of us is individually responsible for handing to posterity a better type of civilization than was handed to us. This can be done only if we are loyal to the highest we know and are willing to pay the price demanded. What price loyalty? True loyalty demands nothing less than the very best that we have.

British Gold.—

When the Majestic recently brought to this country from England gold bullion to the amount of $15,000,000, transferred for the account of the British government on the war debt payment, she was met at the pier by a fleet of armoured cars and an armed guard. Incidentally, this same gold was carried to the English dock in an open cart, and, we are told, left all night on the pier under a tarpaulin. Further comment on this incident is unnecessary.

House Considers Farm Relief.—

Among other measures now being considered for the relief of the farmer, is what is known as a "processing tax" proposed on wheat, cotton, tobacco and hogs. Under the provisions of this legislation, the farmer who complied with certain conditions would receive an additional amount above the current market price for his product which would bring it to a predetermined fixed price. The revenue for such payments would be derived from special taxes on the "processors" of these farm products.

Government Deficit for 6 Months Over Billion.—

The United States government ended the first half of its fiscal year 1933 on December 30th, with a deficit of $1,159,286,502. In the six months preceding, the government collected from all sources $1,022,885,840, and spent $2,182,172,342. The new "billion dollar tax measure" produced additional revenue of $117,000,000, but income taxes dropped for the same period $272,000,000, neutralizing this gain. The higher income levies of the tax bill have not yet begun to be reflected in the government's revenues as they applied on 1932 income and the first payment on last year's tax will not be received until March 15th.

Coolidge Life Comparatively Brief.—

The life span allotted to Calvin Coolidge was shorter by nine years than the average of all the presidents who had gone before. America, in this modern age subjects its chief executives to a strain that kills. In the days of the republic's infancy, it was different. John Adams, who followed George Washington, lived to the ripe age of 90, Jefferson, Madison and John Quincy Adams all reached or passed 80. The average has been gradually lowered as time has passed. Washington, it is true, died two years under the average, but his death was caused by exposure. Mr. Coolidge died as he had lived, passing peacefully to the beyond. His funeral was held in the Edwards Congregational Church, at Northampton, Mass., and his body was carried thence to Plymouth, Vermont, the tiny village where the former president was born.

Wiggin Sees Depression End.—

Albert H. Wiggin, who was until January 1st the chairman of the governing board of the Chase National Bank of New York City, recently stated that the fall of 1932 saw the definite turning of the depression. Discussing the situation in what he called his "valedictory as senior officer" of the bank which became, under his leadership, the world's largest bank, he said: "The panic of the spring and early summer of 1932 is over and financial confidence is greatly improved. For the first time in three years we had, in the autumn of 1932, a better than seasonal improvement in business. Although conditions remain very depressed, and political difficulties, national and international, are numerous, there is hope in the world. We are passing from the period of emergency credit devices into a period where the basis of credit can be restored by opening markets, starting the movement of goods, balancing budgets, and giving the farmers good prices by restoring their export marketing."

What War Costs.—

The last war cost the United States $51,000,000,000. As recently as 1885, $51,000,000,000 would have bought the whole United States, with everybody and everything in it, lock, stock and barrel. Today $51,000,000,000 would buy 16 states like Alabama, or three enormously rich Californias, with a couple of Colorados thrown in for good measure. It would buy the entire state of New York—including the metropolis, the wonder city of the world—and there still would be left over enough change to acquire four states like Maryland. If you had started throwing away dollars the day Christ was born, and kept it up ever since at the rate of a dollar a minute without pausing either to eat or sleep, you would only now be starting on your second billion, with 95,000 years more to go. At five per cent, $51,000,000,000 would provide an annual income of $2,550,000,000, or enough to pension 2,125,000 old and broken down workers at $100 a month, virtually abolishing poverty in this country. That is what the World War has cost you to date, and the end is not yet. Former President Coolidge estimated the total cost will be more than $100,000,000,000, or about the present value of all the states west of the Mississippi. The ransom of an empire burned up in battle.—William Philip Simms in the New York Telegram.

Pathfinder's Home to be Marked.—

It has been announced that within the next few months a large granite shaft is to be erected near Fredericksburg, Va., marking the birthplace of Matthew Fontaine Maury, "Pathfinder of the Seas." Maury was born in Spotsylvania County, eleven miles from Fredericksburg, in 1806. He graduated from the United States Naval Academy, and as a midshipman circumnavigated the world. He was author of a great work on "Wind Charts and Currents," often called "The Sailor's Bible," and of the once familiar "Maury's Physical Geography of the Sea." In a vote of the famous Berlin Congress of Scientists, he tied with Humbolt for the title of "the greatest scientist in the world," and we are told that before the lame Maury could rise, Humbolt stood up and said, "I yield that title to Matthew Fontaine Maury, the greatest scientist who has yet lived." Maury received more decorations from foreign governments than any American except Colonel Lindbergh. He furnished the brains for the laying of the Atlantic cable, and cast his lot with the Confederacy in the War Between the States. It was he who perfected the electrical torpedo. During his later years he served his native State in the chair of physics at the University of Virginia. Though honored by decorations from nearly every maritime country in the world, it has only been within recent years that his own country has shown the deference due his name and memory.

The Movies and Morals.—

The New Republic is authority for the statement that "Hollywood, so long bankrupt in all other respects, is now financially bankrupt as well." "This Golconda of the entertainment racket grew quickly from its humble beginnings," says Sidney Howard, playwright and motion picture adapter, "to proportions it acquired after the war, when the movie which cleared a mere $100,000 was accounted a failure." Still later, a picture might cost $3,000,000 to produce without causing the missing of a pulse beat. During all this time, however, nothing was done to make the motion picture business one worth supporting. When one picture was seen, the story of practically all of them was told—a story of vice and crime. In times of false prosperity such pictures passed, but today they feel the pinch of hard times. John R. Mott says: "I do not hesitate to say that my investigations in various parts of the world show that the movies can do more in one night to inculcate moral degeneracy by their sex appeal than the whole of the missionaries can do to counteract in a week." The introduction of the "talkie" did much to cut off the foreign field, reducing by nearly 40 per cent the gross revenue of the producers. This proved another roller under the already skidding industry. We hope that it also helped the missionaries 40 per cent. The potential value of the motion picture industry for good is too great to be lost. Hollywood seems never to have realized that it can be made a power. Now is the time for a "face-about" on the part of the producers. They should have the support of the entire Christian world if they will do this, and it may save them from financial oblivion.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

"Please find enclosed $2.00 to renew my subscription to THE SUN. I feel that I can not do without it, and hope many others feel the same."

At the request of Rev. Milo J. Sweet, we are printing in this issue the Constitution and By-Laws of the Georgia Congregational-Christian Conference. Due to its length, it is necessary to print same in two sections. The last part will appear in an early issue.

It is prayer which keeps open the road between the soul and its resources. That great line of communication is kept clear like a splendid highway, and the sacred transports are arriving every moment in an all-availing sufficiency. The supplies are waiting: prayer opens the way and receives them.—J. H. Jowett.

SUN readers will learn with deep regret that Rev. J. W. Patton, of Elon College, is ill at Charlotte Hospital, Charlotte, N. C., having been carried there after suffering a sudden attack while lecturing at Lexington, N. C., on Thursday of last week. Not having been well for some time, Bro. Patton was being treated and was going on with his work. The last reports are that he will be kept for some weeks at the hospital trying to regain sufficient strength for an operation which seems imminent. Great anxiety is felt for his recovery, and we bespeak the prayers and sympathy of his large circle of acquaintances and loved ones of THE CHRISTIAN SUN family.

Ernest G. Carr, musical director of First Christian Church, Richmond, and whom many of THE SUN's readers will remember as the director of the First Christian Sunday School Orchestra which played for the Elon Commencement exercises last year, has been quite ill, but was sufficiently recovered to resume his duties last Sunday. There has been quite a large amount of sickness in the church, the wife of Deacon W. J. Stephenson having been quite critically ill for some time past. The church has also suffered a great loss in the passing of Mrs. Maggie Smith Parker, who was at one time a member of Suffolk Christian Church, but has held her membership in Richmond since the organization of the church here.

Mrs. J. D. Kernodle, of Graham, one of the most beloved of Christian women, passed away at her home at Graham, N. C., December 25th, and was buried in Providence-Memorial Cemetery December 27th, Dr. W. C. Wicker, her pastor, and Dr. P. H. Fleming, a former pastor, conducting the funeral services. Her bereaved husband and family have our deepest sympathy in their sadness. Mrs. Kernodle was a devoted and very active member of the Woman's Missionary Society, as she was of the Graham Christian Church, and was a well-known and beloved person at our annual Woman's State Conferences and district meetings, always deeply interested in promoting the work of the church, especially through its missionary enterprises.

PATRIOTISM OF THE PILGRIM FATHERS.

Patriotism is not a thing that belongs to mere shouting; it belongs to dreaming. It belongs to a conception of the origin of your people, the greatness of your own family life, the security that comes from reverence for God and fidelity to a holy trust.

You and I glory in the fact that we belong to the American Republic. These United States of America had an origin as unique and as wonderful as that which belongs to the Hebrew race. The men and women who came 300 years ago and gathered together on Plymouth Rock were a unique breed and a unique type. Only one of them was more than twenty-eight years of age. All of them were mortgaged up to the hilt. They had not an axe, they had not a spade, they had not a pick, they had not canvas for a tent, they had not a chest in which to put their clothes, which was their own. Everything they possessed was mortgaged; every man and every woman was bound hand and foot by obligations to merchants who had lent them things at tremendous—at extravagant cost.

But there they were, men and women who had left a glorious heritage, a great tradition, because of a faith that burned within their souls, because they were lovers of freedom, lovers of an open Bible.—Dr. John Gardner in Record of Christian Work.

DRY FIGURES.

Before prohibition there were 176,000 open saloons in the United States; now there are 350,000 gasoline stations.

The saloon paid an annual revenue to the government of 363 million dollars; the annual tax on automobiles and gasoline is 779 million.

Since prohibition the drinking of liquor has decreased 64 per cent, and the drinking of milk has increased 28 per cent, while infant mortality has decreased 30 per cent.

Since prohibition 30 million new savings accounts have been opened.

Since prohibition 400,000 new homes have been built annually.

Since prohibition there has been an increase of 68 billion dollars in life insurance.

Since prohibition there has been 150 per cent increase in high school attendance, and 300 per cent increase in college attendance.

Since prohibition all but ten of the 250 institutions for the treatment of inebriates have been closed, and eight of these have no patients.

Since prohibition there has actually accrued to the United States in fines and confiscated property of liquor captives a profit of about 25 million dollars a year over the cost of enforcement.

Automobile fatalities in England, a wide-open beer country, are almost three times more frequent per thousand car registrations than in the United States.

Sixty per cent of our newspapers are wet. Beware of their propaganda. If not prohibition—What?—Selected.

RURAL CHURCH SCHOOL.

The School of Religion of Vanderbilt University announces the seventh session of its special Rural Church School for the spring of 1933. The dates will be April 17th-28th.

Previous sessions of this school for ministers in rural areas have met with such universal and hearty commendation that it is now accepted as a fixture among the activities of Vanderbilt University. It is for ministers of all communions. The willing cooperation of the officials of the several denominations concerned with the interests of rural churches has greatly encouraged the University administration, and has served as well to lighten the necessary financial burden. At the same time the numerous and continued expressions of appreciation coming from the student pastors who have attended the school lead to the conclusion that it is meeting a real and keenly felt need.

Arrangements have been made to offer, as has been done for several years past, as one feature of the school's program, the annual Cole Lectures.

The lecturer for 1933 is the Rev. Henry Sloan Coffin, president of Union Seminary, New York City.

The plan for the Rural Church School will be substantially the same as in 1932. Room and board in Nashville and free tuition will be offered to all accepted applicants. Correspondence is invited, both with prospective students and with denominational leaders who may be able to suggest names of prospects and, if possible, aid such students in meeting the costs of transportation and other necessary expense. All letters should be addressed to the School of Religion of Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn. The program of courses of study, with names of instructors, etc., will be ready for distribution early in the year 1933.

ELON CONTINUES ITS APPEAL.

I know you are wondering what we have been doing at the college. It is amazing how well we are getting along in the face of existing conditions.

I sent out an appeal to some eight hundred individuals in December, asking for assistance that we might be able to balance our current budget. I was hoping to raise at least $2,000 by this appeal—we fell short of the goal. The amount that we have received to date, from this appeal, including Dollar-a-Month Club dues is $825.70. The following individuals responded with the amount opposite their names:

You will observe that Sunday Schools, Sunday School classes, missionary organizations and churches are responding to the Dollar-a-Month Club appeal. Other churches, Sunday Schools, organized classes, missionary societies, etc., could just as easily join as the above mentioned. What a wonderful inspiration, and what a great help it would be if all would voluntarily join in! January and February are the two months on the church calendar in which the college is expected to make its appeal. This is when we need, not only the sympathy, but the cooperation of our friends, the entire membership of the church and the alumni. It will be absolutely necessary for us to raise at least $25,000 this spring. There is an urgent demand on the part of many that we employ some one and put him in the field for the purpose of conducting this campaign. This will cost money. Aren't there enough ministers and interested laymen in the church to make this campaign without additional cost?

Realizing the value of the college to the church, and her immediate needs, it does seem that a large number might rise voluntarily, offer their services and send in their donations. Some are advising me to take the field and make general solicitation for support of the college—others are advising strongly against such an effort. I am finding, however, that in the face of many exacting requirements, physical limitations practically forbid any general solicitation on my part. The executive responsibilities imposed on the administrative office, take a large part of my time. Then, there are so many creditors to counsel with and so many meetings, and associations to attend, if the college is to make the contacts it should, that my spare days are practically consumed. Therefore, I am calling on the ministers of the Convention, friends of the college and alumni, to join forces, together with the college, that every individual may be given the opportunity to do his part.

The Committee of Ten, in session at Raleigh, N. C., January 5th and 6th, greatly encouraged us by voting $2,000 out of Conference apportionments sent into the Conference by the churches last fall. This came as a life-saver. We were also fortunate enough to realize about $1,300 from the sale of the college farm. These two amounts, added to the contributions sent in as a result of the Christmas appeal, has made it possible for us including salaries, three months out of the four and one-half months, constituting the first semester. With spring ahead of us, and with the cooperation of everybody, we ought to be able to balance our budget for the current year. This is absolutely necessary if we are to continue. Of course, this has been made possible by the cooperation of the Virginia Trust Company and our bank creditors. I am soliciting your help. Won't you please volunteer to canvass your church—write into the office for material and suggestions?

NORFOLK CHURCH RE-DEDICATED.

December 11th was a great day in the First Christian Church of Norfolk, Va., when the church was re-dedicated after undergoing extensive repairs. Three great services were arranged by the acting pastor, Rev. P. Houlder Brown.

Several months ago it was discovered that the floor sills had rotted away to such an extent that they had to be removed altogether as well as all woodwork below the windows.

The official board requested the financial board to raise the necessary money among the members of the church without resorting to loans. Plans were made, the chairman of the financial board starting the drive with a personal subscription, and the others followed. The board of deacons set to work in their districts, the church being divided into ten districts, and secured pledges to be paid before the work was finished, and a willing response was received from the members and friends.

A building committee was appointed with Mr. J. D. Howard as chairman, bids were received and the work was started. The work was finished in two weeks, during which time services were held in the Red Men's Hall, placed at our disposal free of charge.

The bill was paid at the finish of the work, an amount a little over $700.00. We have a clean place now in which to worship, a new floor laid in light oak, the auditorium painted, and the old carpets removed and everything in fine shape.

The pastor in his welcome address said that the church had been long enough in "overalls," and he was glad to see her in her best Sunday clothes.

The morning service was a spiritual in which we felt God's power present. At the close of the service the pastor extended an invitation to the congregation to reconsecrate themselves to God for greater work and more activity in God's kingdom, and a large crowd responded to the call.

The afternoon meeting was held at 3 o'clock when Dr. Jason Noble Pierce, the pastor of the Christian Temple, was guest and speaker. A large congregation was present, and special music was provided. Rev. Dechild gave the invocation, Rev. Eagle read the Scriptures, Rev. Poythress offered the pastoral prayer, and our pastor gave the welcome address. Dr. Pierce delivered a wonderful dedication sermon that moved the large congregation.

The evening service was a thanksgiving service, well attended and fitting as a climax to a wonderful and happy day in the Church of God.

There is no better way by which a man can make what is best in himself such a wide and permanent influence for good in his community as by throwing himself heartily and vigorously into church work. To be an outside saint is better than nothing, but the best position is to be an inside laborer in the life of the church, thus helping to develop the finest character and bestowing the greatest blessings on mankind. A man is never more safe or more happy, never more useful, than when he has associated himself with the composite life in the spirit which the church provides. "Come thou with us and we will do thee good and thou shalt be to us instead of eyes."—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

COLLEGE DAY.

Next Sunday—January 15th—should be set aside, and will be in many churches, as College Day. The Council of Church Boards of Education gives the purpose of naming the day as that "of emphasizing the place of Christian higher education in the life and program of the church." The object is to stress the relationship of the church to its college, and in so doing, present to both parents and young people the opportunity and advantages offered in Christian colleges. The hope of our country is in the higher education of our youths in a Christian atmosphere—education directed by Christian men and women. The saving grace of America today is in the fact that more than half of the college students in America are being educated in church colleges and privately endowed institutions under Christian influence. Admittedly, the greatest Teacher of all time, the most profound, the most comprehensive and the most influential, was the Christ, and yet the State schools and universities are not permitted by law to teach religion, even the religion of the greatest Teacher of all time.

No education is complete that leaves Christ out. On this account, churches can well afford in all their pulpits to emphasize College Day, calling attention from the pulpit and from all sacred places to the need of the value of Christian higher education. The church college is not a luxury to be enjoyed by a few, but a necessity and a blessing to many. Through the pulpit and the pew, the church college everywhere reveals its power, or the absence of it, since the polity and prevailing principles of the church are savingly and intelligently interpreted and revealed by men and women, whose minds, as well as whose hearts, have been trained in Christian institutions of higher education.

It is not enough to build a church college. Any plant of buildings and equipment is wholly inadequate. Even a Christian faculty to direct with an efficient equipment is not enough. There are two other essentials—students and money.

1st. The higher institutions of learning must have students, and in order for these students to attend a Christian college, the advantages of the college must be emphasized and the necessity of Christian education must be realized. The church, through its observance of College Day, can do this.

2nd. Money is necessary. A college, least of all the church colleges, cannot run itself, cannot pay its own way. If tuition charges were made high enough to run the college, only the very rich could attend. The State long since recognized this fact only, however, after the church, through its colleges, had proven it beyond question to the State. Higher education costs money, but it pays, and it pays liberal dividends to the church, to the public that bears such expense. All of us of the Christian Church are blessed and directly benefited by and through Elon College, and all of us owe it a debt of gratitude, that even our most liberal donations cannot adequately express. On College Day we need to emphasize this debt of gratitude and the necessity on the part of great and small of making some contribution in kind to keep the college going.

January and February is a period set apart by our Convention as "College Months", and during these months, as well as on "College Day," the churches are requested to open the way for emphasizing the need, as well as the merit and the inestimable worth, of the Christian college.

BE IT ENACTED.

Whenever the economist is found to point the way out of "The Blunderland" into which we have stumbled, he will not be waving a magic wand, or pronouncing some mystical panacea. There are thousands of us expecting some great miracle of legislation, or some turn of congressional enactment, to lift us from the slough of despond, but relief will not come by any "Be it enacted." This is proven, if proof were convincing, by the fact that governments—county, state and national—have made as big a mess, and become as completely entangled, as private institutions and most individuals have. Our state government, along with other state governments; our national government, along with other national governments, are in desperate straits and in extreme need of resources with which to survive and carry on. There are comparatively few individuals in North Carolina who have managed their personal affairs more hopelessly and helplessly than has the state, and the same may be said of many, if not most, states in the Union.

All this aside. We might as well quit looking to the state or the nation to bring us relief. We must, on the other hand, look to our own efforts and energies, and to the homely virtues on which personal character is built, to solve our problems. It may be to many of us a beginning all over again, but the virtues of plain and honest living, of thrift, of integrity, of living within our own resources, must be cultivated and relied upon. It will not be by legislative fiat, but by individual thrift; not our reliance on human, but on divine government, that we shall recover ourselves and regain a firm footing and plant ourselves firmly in the path of progress.

There are those who would make us believe that the cause of our ills is "over-production," too much and too many of everything that is needed to make life comfortable. How thin and how ridiculous this crust is, is pointed out in cutting and sarcastic manner by a writer in the Atlantic

Monthly for January, who asks and answers a few questions:

"Why must so many thousands go hungry?" (To give the reply of unthinking and easy-going economists): "Because we have produced too much corn and wheat, too many apples and potatoes, too much food of all kinds."

"Why must anybody suffer from cold?" "Because we have produced too much fuel and fuel oil, too much wool, too many woolen mills, too much clothing."

"Why must anybody live in shabby houses?" "Because we have surplus lumber, steel, copper, cement, hardware, and surplus carpenters, plumbers, painters, masons, architects and contractors."

"But if we have surplus men and materials in one part of the country, and not enough in other parts, why do we not move the surplus to the parts where it is needed?"

The answer to that question is the plainest of all: "It is because we have too many railroads, too many ships, too many trucks."

Such irony serves to bring us, at least, to the use of our common-sense. The simple fact is that we are suffering, not from over-employment, but from under-employment; not from over-production, but under-consumption. A man's hunger does not create a demand for bread. It is his ability to buy bread that creates the demand, and unless he can buy, he creates no demand, but an unfulfilled desire which does not count in the economic world. And so we shall have to reshape our policies on the fundamental basis of curtailing our desires and supplying our needs, our actual wants, and this we can do only by individual initiative, individual economy, thrift, simplicity of living and the basis of those fundamental virtues that make up life and character.

And after all, this is what the American people appreciate and applaud. Ex-President Coolidge suddenly passed away from us enjoying widespread, almost universal, popularity and esteem. There can be but one explanation. In a time when the country was spending, and being spent, living high and neglecting the laws of thrift, President Coolidge, personally, stood for economy, for simplicity, for thrift. His cabinet and his country may have secretly laughed at him and ignored him, but he preached it all the same, and lived it in his personal life. And this, more than anything else, appealed to the popular imagination. We may ourselves ignore or lightly pass over the simple virtues of personal economy, thrift, individual integrity and simple faith, but we admire these virtues in others and applaud them.

We shall lay the foundations of a safe economic and state structure not by legislative fiat, but by practicing and adopting as our very own at the beginning of this good year 1933, the homely and simple virtues of belief in God, of faith in his blessings, and confidence in ourselves to earn our living and enjoy it in the sweat of our own brow. In no other way will our problems be solved.

J. O. A.

BROTHER.

There is something in the kinship of blood which counts. "Blood is thicker than water," is an adage which is as true spiritually as it is materially. If this does not come home to one fully in life, it does in death. THE SUN's editor does not obtrude upon the space he is supposed to fill in the editorial columns, nor flaunt his own feelings before the public, in using a brief space for a word of tribute to his own brother in the flesh, who recently went away. We lived a long way apart, as distance goes, and were seldom together for much more than two-thirds of our lives—he in early years in Georgia; in later years in Florida. But there was a kinship of feeling, as well as of blood, a tie of devotion, as well as of association. The big world did not appeal to him, neither did it know him. Only to the few who understood and loved him, did "Zeb" Atkinson reveal himself. In this revelation it was clearly discerned that he had higher ambitions for others than for himself, especially in so far as public applause and approval were concerned. He had the rather unusual trait of practicing for himself the most rigid economy, solely that his thrift and his savings might bless and benefit others. The comforts and even the luxuries for others whom he loved, he approved and applauded, while he denied willingly those comforts to himself and scorned the luxuries for his own use. He could be glad even in hunger, if he realized that his hunger was helping to feed another; he could go poorly clad, could he but realize that those he loved were comfortably and attractively clothed; he was willing to go without the blessings of academic training and collegiate education, if he could but realize that in such practice he was helping another to enjoy that benefit. "I can't go to college, but it will be a privilege and a pleasure for you to go by the sweat of my brow and the sharing of my wages." And so this writer went to college and to university while this brother of his wrought manfully, stoically, heroically, himself doing without, that we might have.

And so, when the message came over the wire from his son, Hollis, at Cocoa, Fla., on Christmas Day: "Father is ill," there was alarm and anxiety. The message next day was more assuring and hopeful, and when on Thursday, the 29th, "Father passed, burial tomorrow," the writer realized something more than the sadness and shock of separation. Something of his own life had gone away, somewhat of his very being was torn from him. It was physically impossible to be present when the erstwhile manly form, and strong body, was committed "dust to dust, ashes to ashes." But one resolve abides, one haunting desire tugs the heart and will not depart. It may be the longing of the flesh, but even the flesh in its weakness can pull very hard, and that desire is to one day visit the mound that covers him and place thereon some flower that will blossom, or plant that will grow, and this he shall do if God will permit.

It was not a big world that loved him, but the little world of his confidence, esteem and devotion loved him intensely, and now that he has gone the world seems a little less warm and intimate, and the hosts of those who have gone up higher seem to beckon with a more congenial smile, a more intense welcome, and a more ready and outstretched hand for those of us who tarry and linger for a season. "It won't be long, it may be soon," when the ties of brotherhood and sisterhood, fatherhood and motherhood, which were very sweet and sacred here, will be gathered up again and strengthened in that land of love by a tie that cannot be broken, nor severed on any account.

DANIEL.

(CHAPTERS 7-12.)

By NELLIE RHEA SLEDGE.

The 66 books of the Bible are ordinarily arranged in groups; that is, according to contents of the various books. For example, there are the books that fall in the groups of law, history, poetry, prophecy, etc., and the book of Daniel rightfully falls in the group of prophecy.

Now a prophet is one sent by God to reveal something about the future.

This book is called the Apocalypse or Revelation of the Old Testament. Daniel is the prophet of the times of the Gentiles and he belonged to the Chaldean and Persian period. He saw Babylon rise to power and witnessed its decline and then its fall to Persia. You remember that in both Babylon and Persia he held positions and saw Persia come to her distinction.

Placed in the midst of universal empires, it seems peculiarly appropriate that Daniel should be divinely appointed to receive and set forth these prophetic visions involving the four world empires, which as you know are Babylon, Media, and Persia, Greece, and the Roman Empire, in relation to God's purposes in redemption.

And since prophecy is a foretelling of such events as could be known only to God and the prophet is one who speaks or interprets the message he has received from God, we have evidence enough of Daniel's close communion with God and his intimacy with Jehovah.

Daniel was prospered during the reign of Darius and Cyrus, and he uttered his great prophecies relating to the times of the Gentiles.

Chapter seven, where we begin this discussion, gives Daniel's vision of the four beasts and its interpretation and this vision is the vision of the four world empires. We will think of chapters 7 and 8 together as they are very closely connected, and one would not be very complete without the other. The eighth chapter, however, gives the vision of the ram and the goat, and the two together complete the vision of the four world empires, namely: Babylon, that empire is represented in the first vision by the lion; second empire is Medo-Persia empire, and in the vision of the seventh chapter it is represented by the bear, and in the eighth chapter by a ram; the third empire is that of Greece, represented by a leopard in the seventh chapter and by a goat in the eighth; last important empire is the Roman Empire, and that is in the form of a dreadful beast, as chapter 7 tells us. It would be well to review the visions of the second chapter along with these of the seventh and eighth, and to think of chapters 2, 7 and 8 as a unit.

Chapter nine is Daniel's prayer and the divine answer and this may be called the prophecy of the Seventy Weeks. In this prayer, Daniel confesses his sin and prays for the restoration of the Holy City, Jerusalem. And then, after 16 verses, in which we have Daniel's prayer for Jerusalem, we find the divine answer in the 24th verse, which gives the prophecy of the Seventy Weeks: "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon the holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the most holy." In the next verse, or the 25th, we find the time of Messiah's advent after 69 weeks. "Know, therefore, and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah, the Prince shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks; the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times."

Chapters 10 and 11 give the prophecy of coming conflicts and troubles. Chapter 10 gives the prophecy of troubles—first for Persia and then for Greece. Then chapter 11 speaks of the conflicts of Alexander the Great. Notice verses 3 and 4 of chapter 11: "And a mighty king shall stand up, that shall rule with great dominion, and do according to his will. And when he shall stand up, his kingdom shall be broken, and shall be divided toward the four winds of heaven; and not to his posterity, nor according to his dominion which he ruled; for his kingdom shall be plucked up, even for others beside those." History tells us that the "he" referred to in those verses is Alexander the Great. The king of the south and the king of the north will then be in trouble and have conflicts as the latter part of the chapter prophesies.

Chapter 12 gives the prophecy of last times. First, it speaks of the time of great trouble; then, it gives the prophecy of the resurrection. So we find in Daniel 12:2 that the doctrine of the resurrection is taught. "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." The last of that chapter, beginning with the fifth verse, may be called the duration of the period of great troubles and Daniel is informed of the times. Daniel is then told to go his way for his words are closed up and sealed.

Then—we see that the principal idea of the Book of Daniel is the "ultimate or final triumph of the kingdom of God." It tells us in plainer language, than had been used before, of the subjection of the world to God, and clearly indicates the evidence of the divine rule, and assures us that the progress of God's kingdom is absolutely irresistible, and that all things will be ultimately brought into submission to God.

Thus we see that these last six chapters may be divided into four main heads:

1. Vision of the World Empires (chapters 7 and 8). (a) Vision of four beasts and its interpretation (chapter 7); (b) Vision of the ram and goat (chapter 8).
2. Prophecy of the Seventy Weeks (chapter 9). (a) Time of Messiah's advent.
3. Coming conflicts and troubles (chapters 10 and 11).
4. Prophecy of the Last Times (chapter 12).

And we see, through this brief outline along with the one last week, the great historical and prophetic range of the Book of Daniel.

Now let us think about the Book of Daniel as containing numerous interesting features that we may notice:

There are two miracles in the Book of Daniel: First, Daniel's three companions were saved in the fiery furnace; second, Daniel was saved from the lions. These incidents only go to attest God's power and providence.

All through the Bible there are special prayers and right here in the Book of Daniel, we have a special Old Testament prayer—that of Daniel for Jerusalem—chapter 9:3-19.

There is a prophecy concerning Jesus Christ too, about his "coming to judgment." This will be found in Daniel 7:13: "I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the ancient of days, and they brought him near before him." This prophecy is fulfilled in Matthew 24:3-30. Notice verse 30: "And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." And then in Matthew 25:31: "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." We can find other verses in the New Testament where this prophecy is fulfilled.

We have in the Book of Daniel references of Son of God, Son of man, Priest and King, and others and each of these prophecies is fulfilled in the New Testament.

We see from this discussion that as a result of special qualifications we learned last week, prophets were able to see facts and understand truths hidden from the eyes and minds of those who did not live in the same intimate fellowship with Jehovah.

Roanoke, Ala.

Oh, when shall we learn the sweet trust in God that our little children teach us every day by their confiding faith in us? We who are so mutable, so faulty, so irritable, so unjust, and he who is so watchful, so pitiful, so loving, so forgiving. Why can't we, slipping our hand in his each day, walk trustingly over that day's appointed path, thorny or flowery, crooked or straight, knowing that evening will bring us sleep, peace and home? —Phillips Brooks.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Many former Elon College students remember Miss Louise Savage, a former Dean of Women. On Wednesday, January 4th, her father, Mr. A. H. Savage, of Liberty Spring Christian Church, was in an automobile accident at Holland, Va. He was on his way to a garage at Holland to have his automobile repaired. As he reached the highway at the town limits his car was in collision with a truck. He was thrown from his car, and fell on the concrete road, his head striking the edge of the pavement. He sustained a fractured skull, was picked up unconscious and taken to Lakeview Hospital, where he died two and one-half hours later, at 12:30 P. M.

Mr. Savage was a son of the late Elbert and Ann Mariah Savage, and was born January 9, 1853. He was 79 years, 11 months and 26 days old. He was in excellent health for his age, and had the appearance of one who might expect to live several years. His parents both died before he was five years old. He is survived by his wife, one son, five daughters: Mrs. Annie Morgan, Horace E. Savage, Mrs. Linda Rountree, Miss Eulalia Savage, Miss Bertha Savage and Miss Louise Savage, fourteen grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

He united with the Liberty Spring Christian Church February 12, 1887, and was elected deacon January 13, 1889. He was elected teacher of a young ladies' class in the Sunday School in 1874, while he was a member of Great Fork Baptist Church. He and Miss Margaret Roberta Rawles, a member of his Sunday School class, were married December 23, 1877. He was superintendent of the Sunday School for one year (1877), was deacon for 44 years, and taught in the Sunday School for 58 years. He taught his class and assisted in administering the communion on Sunday, January 1, 1933, as his last official service for the church.

Deacon Savage was a man who believed in the Bible. To him it was the Word of God. In this Book he found food for his soul, and he grew in grace as he read and meditated upon its message. He did not have the opportunity of a liberal education in his youth, but he had read widely and thought deeply, and he had a real religious experience. His integrity of character and his sincerity of motive gave him an influence in his church and community.

He was a wise counsellor. He was tender and fair-minded in his approach. Yet he had deep and decided convictions concerning right relations to mankind and to God. The Christian religion was the foundation of his life and character. He loved truth and righteousness. He evidenced unusual foresight and common sense, in many cases, where a mistake would have seriously imperiled the future plans and purposes of the church. He seemed to be able to foresee the possible danger of a lack of caution and careful procedure in church discipline. He sought to be reasonable and just in his attitude toward all people.

The funeral service was conducted at Liberty Spring Christian Church on Friday, January 6th, by the pastor, assisted by Revs. N. G. Newman and R. E. Brittle.

Life has many surprises and disappointments. Many cherished plans and high hopes may fail. Life under the guidance of God is sweet and blessed. Death seems to be a cruel enemy. But Jesus conquered death and robbed the grave of its victory. It is terrible to see man in good health taken away in such a tragic manner. Yet every person is within a step of death every moment.

There is but a step—or a moment—between us and death. It will add to the glory of heaven to know that there is no danger of sickness and sorrow and death. It is more terrible to live without Christ in the heart, than to die saved by his blessed atonement. Wonderful Saviour. Wonderful fellowship with him.

ABIDING CHRISTMAS JOYS.

The Christmas holidays have come and gone once more, bringing joy or sorrow in such measure as we have let the Christ Child direct our pathway. There may have been circumstances which kept many from having perfect happiness, yet deep down in the soul of each one whose life is hid away with Christ in God there is a deep, settled peace, a joy, which ever flows like a tranquil stream though the surface waters may roll as an angry torrent.

Many Christmas festivities were put off until the day following, because of its being the special day set apart for the worship of our Lord, so filled with work in the Master's vineyard that there was no time for feasting. Such was the case in our own home, resented somewhat by the 'teen age boy, who soon got over it, and cheered us with Christmas carols which he played between times. It was a blessed day and the presence of the Christ Child seemed very near to us. The next day was blessed also, especially when some dear friends called and the Christian fellowship was so sweet. They brought with them a number of their church papers containing one of the best serial stories which I have ever read. It is so rich in heaven's own joy and blesses me so much. No doubt it is in book form now, and has blessed many hearts as it has mine. It is one of the books that one would want to keep near at hand so that it could be picked up at any time; yet that would be selfish for it is a book that one wants every one to read, so it would have to be on the go and not be idle anywhere.

It is the life story of Esther Carson Winans, entitled "The Trail of the Aguaruna," by Amy N. Hinshaw. As I read it, the thought came that one might be inclined to be discouraged when reading what wonderful things God has accomplished in other lives; but immediately I thought that must not be, for it should spur us on to new endeavor. It is the few who are called upon to undertake such stupendous tasks, but all who consecrate their lives unto the service of the Lord have a task to do which no one else can do. It may be humble and unknown, but it is a work that must be done to fulfill his great plan and we must go forward doing that which he would have us to do, never faltering nor dreaming of the great things we might do.

Esther Carson Winans was fully surrendered to the will of God and kept constantly surrendered and the story shows the richness of his grace and the power which he can pour through one who is fully surrendered to his will.

Full surrender and continued surrender means a perfect channel through which our Lord can work out his purpose in the lives of his children. It is possible and also a blessed privilege for each one of his children to be a channel of blessing to those around us. As we face the coming year with all its possibilities for a greater work in his service, may we purpose in our hearts that his will shall be our first consideration, that it shall be the ruling power of our lives. Our missionary work may encompass a very small sphere in comparison with others, yet it takes our little part to make up the whole. We may not be able to go, but we can send by our prayers, our influence, and our money, and so share in the great work of evangelizing the world. We can deny ourselves some of the things which the missionaries are forced to do without. We can ever meet the world with a face alight with the joy of the presence of God, ever giving him the praise, so letting the world know that his peace and joy ever abides in our hearts.

"Life's yesterdays forever more have passed
Beyond my reach; and now, O Lord, thou hast
Them in thy keeping. Let thy righteousness
Hide the dark stains they bear. Help me to press
On toward the mark. Humbly, dear Lord, I pray,
That, as each "morrow" merges in "today,"
I may surrender all I am to thee,
And that thy presence may abide with me.
For, so abiding, doubt and strife must cease.
With thee to lead me on, the perfect peace
That passeth understanding I shall know;
Alike through calm and gale I needs must go
My way content."

GROWTH DESPITE DEPRESSION.

Can a church grow in times of depression? This writer thinks so. Our Rosemont Church has experienced a steady growth during this depression. The attendance at our regular church worship services is increasing all the time, due to the splendid leadership of our pastor and his very helpful sermons.

Our Sunday School, under the leadership of our very efficient superintendent, R. H. Morrison, is doing remarkably well. The average attendance per Sunday for the year 1931 was 208. The average for the year 1932 was 247. A good school we think.

Our Christian Endeavor Societies are also doing fine work. Miss Elizabeth Mills is the president and efficient leader of the Young People's Society, and she is backed up in this work by a fine company of other young people.

Our Men's Bible Class is all enthused over their new teacher for the year, Mr. T. M. Rust. Mr. Rust has done some fine work during the year as president of the class, and the class is sure he will make just as good a class teacher.

We have something different in our church. We call it a Men's Missionary Society. We have some very fine meetings. The purpose of the Society is to study missions, give to missions, and create an interest in missions among the men in our church and community, and also to boost our church and Sunday School.

The new year 1933 will be a great opportunity for us at Rosemont. We expect to make it a great year. We hope to beat our own record of 1932, we are going to work to this end.

If you have an opportunity come to "Rosemont, the Friendly Church by the Side of the Road." We'll be glad to see you. W. H. FARROW.

THE PARSON'S PRAYER.

"I do not ask
That crowds may throng the temple,
That standing room be priced:
I only ask that as I voice the message
They may see Christ!

"I do not ask
For churchly pomp or pageant,
Or music such as wealth alone can buy:
I only pray that as I voice the message
He may be nigh!

"I do not ask
That men may sound my praises,
Or headlines spread my name abroad:
I only ask that as I voice the message,
Hearts may find God!

THE CHALLENGE OF THE NEW YEAR.

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, D. D.
Minister, People's Church, Dover, Del.

There is something mysterious, something thrilling about a New Year. Its unstained and unspotted days make a peculiar appeal to those who care. Every New Year is a challenge from God to appreciate our days and apply our hearts unto wisdom. The adversity that today characterizes the life of the world is a challenge to consider the reason for the present situation, the cause of it all, and the way out. The writer of Ecclesiastes knew the challenge of such a time as this when he admonished his readers: "In the days of adversity consider."

The year 1933 has a special challenge to humanity because of the industrial and economic peril which is menacing the happiness and well-being of all classes. There is today special reason to consider the plight in which humanity finds itself to ascertain just where the trouble lies, and what is the remedy needed.

We know that the world's trouble today is not due to any failure on the part of God or of his divine providence in supplying all the needs of the human family. The world's trouble all rests upon the human factor. Man himself is to blame for "the mess we are in." And the challenge of the New Year is that the leaders of the nations and the followers of the leaders shall repent, and seek the wisdom of Almighty God in righting the wrongs of the world in every realm of life. There is absolutely no excuse for the tragic plight in which humanity now finds itself.

God has not become poor. God has not gone into bankruptcy. You might think so to hear some people talk. But his blessings have suffered no shortage because of the depression. The blessings of the Lord are from everlasting to everlasting.

"Our Father is rich in houses and lands,
The wealth of the world's in his hands."

Nor has he grown tired in bestowing his blessings. Neither has his love slackened to cause him to cease planning better things for his children than they have ever known. God would not be God if he had made all his plans, and determined all his blessings in the far remote past and then closed the book making no provision for future consideration. He is "the same yesterday, today, and forever," because he always has been and always will be a loving God, a planning God, and a progressively creative God—ever planning and ever creating new blessings more blessings and greater blessings as an expression of his increasing love for a responsive humanity, blessings which are waiting for mankind as soon as it has proven itself worthy. God's greatest blessings for humanity have never yet been realized. The happiest and most secure social state the world has ever known is ahead of us and not behind us, because God is continually planning greater things for humanity. But humanity must meet the conditions to receive those blessings that are in keeping for whatever generation first meets the condition. Humanity must please God!

No doubt God at times becomes discouraged in giving, giving, and ever giving to some people to cause them to love him, when they refuse to recognize him as the author of their blessings, and refuse to use his blessings for his honor or for humanity's good.

The world was never so full of the blessings of God as it is today. Yes, the world is favored with more of the blessings of God than it has been in all history. Never have the world's harvests, generally speaking, been so bountiful. But the trouble is that human selfishness and human meanness, and human trickery have thwarted God's planning and have misappropriated blessings intended for others, or blocked the way to keep others from securing the blessings which the God of all mankind designed for all.

The New Year brings its challenge to our nation to lead the way in the family of nations in solving the problem of human want in the face of a divine plenty. The New Year challenges America to smash once and for all the Frankenstein of predatory wealth built by man's inhumanity to man, and to crush the serpent of political chicanery which too long has deceived the people with false hopes.

The New Year challenges our nation to set its national house in order—to clean and refurnish every room in the house. A thorough housecleaning is demanded, a complete revision of our economic, industrial, social and international policies. They have served their day. But something different is demanded for today and the days ahead.

The New Year challenges the world to put "first things first," to put religion first in the thinking and living of the people. Too many people have left religion clear out of their consideration. That is why humanity has lost its way in the wilderness of social and economic disillusionment. It is just as Lord Chesterton has declared: "Religion is exactly the thing which can not be left out, because it includes everything. The absent-minded person cannot very well pack his Gladstone bag and leave out the bag." Neither can individuals and neither can a nation live and leave out life—religion. Some say that we must get back to God. But God can never be found by going backward. We must go forward to find God.

The New Year challenges humanity, and in challenging humanity challenges every man and woman of us to include religion in our thought and life, to go forward to God. We have lagged so far behind him, that is why we have lost our way.

Religion demands that man's inhumanity to man shall cease, and that God's blessings for mankind shall be made possible for all who are worthy.

The church of Jesus Christ in this year of our Lord 1933, has a right to demand that the government shall free the people from the economic bondage and the political tyranny that are abroad in the land.

Our government should be equal to absolutely any task of economic and social readjustment necessary to start the wheels of industry to turning

An Appreciated Letter that Tells A Story of Its Own:

January 7, 1933.

MR. J. T. KERNODLE, Managing Editor,
THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Richmond, Va.

Dear Mr. Kernodle:

In renewing my subscription to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, the thought comes to me that this paper is ONE of the first two papers that I can remember reading when I was a lad on the farm. My father, at that time, took THE SUN and a farm paper, but has long since discontinued the farm paper, but still takes, and reads, THE SUN.

Further, I might say, had it not been for the close contact THE SUN has made, and kept, between the Christian Church and myself during the past 12 or 14 years, my interest in that church would very likely have been lost to other things. For during these years I have been "on the go" from place to place, and seldom even been able to visit in our own denomination. In keeping this close contact, I am sure that it has repaid the Christian Church many hundred times in a financial way, for while I have given only between $2,500 and $3,500 to the many and different church enterprises, I am of the opinion that without a church-paper-contact none of this amount would have been received by the Christian Church.

I would say, therefore, that every home in the church should take and read THE SUN, for, in many cases, I am sure that no one will ever know of its lasting benefits.

Very truly yours,

C. S. STRICKLAND.

The person who interests another in taking their Church Paper never knows how far reaching the results may be. We have known of other instances where THE SUN has been the only connecting link between those whom business has carried afar and our church. Pastors and lay workers can do no greater service for their church than by helping to increase the circulation of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. The church owes a debt of gratitude to Brother Strickland, but its debt to his father is just as great.

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

PRAYER.

O God, our Rock, in whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning, thou givest a security and peace that cannot be shaken, a strength that supports our feeble frames, a love that inspires and lifts to heights eternal and bathes with sweetest bliss our strivings to attain. For the glad New Year with its spirit of promise, efface thou from life the blot of unholy ambition and make our strivings pure. For Jesus' sake.—Amen.

WATCH PARTY.

A community Watch Night service, sponsored by the Holland Baptist, South Quay, Holy Neck and Holland Christian Churches, was held in Holland on the night of December 31st. Various groups met at 9 o'clock for a season of social enjoyment, the adults at the Baptist Church, the children at the Woodman Hall, and the young people at the Christian Church. At 10:30, the groups joined at the Christian Church, where refreshments were served, and at 11 o'clock, the entire crowd assembled in the auditorium for the worship service, with the following program:

- Song—"All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name."
 - Welcome—Dr. W. M. Jay.
 - Scripture and Prayer—Dr. N. G. Newman.
 - Song—"As With Gladness, Men of Old."
 - New Year Poems—Mrs. W. M. Jay.
 - Quartette—"Was It You?": Mrs. H. T. Jones, Mrs. S. L. Wright, Marshall Harrell and W. M. Jay.
 - Talk—Rev. W. H. Corbitt.
 - Song—"O Little Town of Bethlehem."
 - Story of the song, "Sunrise"—Miss Lillye Holland.
 - Solo—"Sunrise": Mrs. Vernon Holland.
- (A special feature of the solo was the beautiful and effective "sunrise scene" designed and made by Mrs. H. T. Jones.)

Pageant—"Candle Lighting," by 13 girls, each girl representing a month of the New Year. Miss Lis Rabey acted as leader with a lighted candle on the Holy Bible, while the church was in darkness, save the sunrise scene. As each girl came forward she was asked to light her candle from the Light of the Word and as they took their places, they formed a lighted cross. After singing "In the Cross of Christ I Glory," the leader sent them forth to light the candles of everyone present. This made a beautiful picture as the entire assembly sat, with lighted candles and bowed heads, singing softly "Have Thine Own Way, Lord." As a close to this impressive service the lights were snapped on, the organ pealed forth and the audience sang, "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow."

CHRISTMAS IN THE MOUNTAINS.

For the many children, and adults as well, in the mountains, there has been much happiness during Christmas time.

Thursday night before Christmas a program was given at Elk Spur Church, consisting of a Christmas pantomime, showing as follows: John the Baptist as forerunner of Christ, then Mary and Joseph denied room at the Inn. This was followed by a night scene of three shepherds watching the sheep. Then the three wise men followed the star from the front door of the church to the manger (on stage). This was a very beautiful scene. As the star stopped over the manger the wise men knelt to the Baby Jesus while Mary, Joseph, and four angels were around the manger, and the shepherds rose from their places and knelt. Following this, Mary and Joseph took the Baby to the temple where Simeon met them at the door and blessed the Baby. These scenes were made more impressive by a chorus that sang Christmas carols suited to each scene. Following the pantomime were readings and songs by all the children. The same program was given by the people at Rocky Ford Church on Friday night. After each program came the tree and Santa Claus.

All the smaller children received gifts from the beautiful trees. These gifts were sent by the good people of the Congregational-Christian Churches of Raleigh, N. C., and Winchester, Va. The generous treat was made possible by the good people of Burlington, N. C., who sent oranges, apples and candy; by Montgomery-Ward & Co., who sent a large bucket of candy; by the Old Dominion Peanut Co., of Norfolk, Va., and the Columbian Peanut Co., of Scotland Neck, N. C. Each of these peanut companies sent large bags of peanuts. There were about 250 bags of confectioneries distributed among the families of both communities.

We wish to thank Mr. and Mrs. S. F. Richardson, of Suffolk, Va., for their personal gift of two nice warm overcoats. These will cause two of the most needy ones here to be comfortable and happy during the cold winter days.

Although we have personally acknowledged the gifts, we again thank each of you, in behalf of the people here, for every sacrifice made to cause our Christmas to be brighter.

May your New Year be one of growth for him, who gives all good and perfect gifts.

Sincerely,

MR. AND MRS. R. T. GRISSOM.

J. O. ATKINSON, Sec'y.

Two boys from Mt. Silinda School, Mt. Silinda, East Africa, who went into Chief Ziiki's country across the Sabi River on an evangelistic tour, received a warm welcome. The people, they reported, were hungry for the Christian message. Three schools have been closed there for lack of funds. Other bush schools have been closed throughout the mission area for the same reason. Many of the native teachers are trying to keep on with their work. One such, Norah Tamele, is making heroic efforts. "It doesn't matter about the money," she says, "I want to help my people."

In July they had a conference of native pastors and delegates in Adams, Natal, South Africa. It was an unusual meeting, reports Rev. and Mrs. Henry A. Stick. One older missionary remarked that in all his years in Africa he had never attended a more remarkable conference of native folk; remarkable in the spirit of unity and fellowship manifested; remarkable in the intelligence shown by the natives in discussion and resolutions; remarkable in the unselfish eagerness of delegates to advance the work of Christ. With almost no opposition the native pastors, because of the depression, voted a decrease of from five to fifteen per cent in their own salaries.

A Chinese pastor held services in Foochow, China. He told his listeners that if they were to be saved they must confess all their sins. There was present the proprietor of a printing house. That night he couldn't sleep. He had something on his mind. The next day he came to see Dr. Willard L. Beard, and said: "Twenty years ago I worked for you as a printer. I stole some type. I wanted it to help set myself up in business. I have come to confess and make restitution. Here is some of the type—the rest has been taken from me. As near as I can remember it would be worth about four dollars. Here is the $4.00. I am now happy."

as of yore, to brighten with a smile of hope the faces of the tillers of the soil, and to send every person to work who wants to work and can work. That is what the government is for, namely, to insure to its citizens the rights of life, freedom to make the best use and largest development of that life, property and its protection, happiness and its legitimate pursuit.

Every well-regulated home easily finds work for each member of the family—something to do and their needs supplied. And every well-regulated society should find work for each worthy member of the societal family—something to do that their needs may be supplied.

When God deals so bountifully with nature's blessings in giving to us the largest harvests in the history of our national existence, more food provided, more fuel available, more clothing prepared than ever before, there is absolutely no excuse for a tenth of the population to go hungry or to suffer from the cold or from lack of clothing.

The year 1933 challenges the American people to solve this problem and to solve it now. It is a problem with which the law-makers of the states and of the nation must wrestle, and for which they must seek a satisfying solution. And no system of charity will solve the problem. No system of doles will meet the need. Such will but aggravate the problem, making it more complicated and more difficult of solution in the future, for the problem must be solved, and not shunted, else human society itself is riding for a fall.

The only solution is to get at the roots of the whole matter, for there is where the trouble lies, at the roots of our economic and social life out of the sight of the people. And if the government does not get down to the roots of the trouble, and lay the axe to the roots, those roots will grow until the very foundations of government itself will be imperilled.

The church is not saying what should be done. It is not the responsibility of the church to offer remedies, but to declare needs, to hold before humanity the ideals for society and to point them to God, the author of the wisdom and power needed by man to meet those needs. It is the responsibility of those in high places of authority to find out what should be done and how to do it, and to do it. That is why we send men to office—to serve the people. And unless the brains of the nation solve this problem of equitable distribution of God's blessings with reason, then fanaticism will attempt to solve it with revolution. If such should come, then God have mercy on us all!

The New Year challenges our leaders in Washington to thought and to action in the interest of the people.

"Nero fiddled while Rome burned." God save America from statesmen of the Nero type! Some of them are in Washington today. Some are in the legislative halls of every state.

The New Year challenges every federal and state leader to give his best thought and study to solve the problem. This is no time for muddling the brains of the leaders or of the followers with alcohol. The most disgraceful thing that has ever taken place on Capitol Hill in Washington has occurred this winter—people starving for bread and the nation's leaders scheming for beer, the bread lines of the nation lengthening, and yet a group of slyster politicians conniving to make those bread lines wider and longer by foisting on the nation a ten hundred million dollar a year beer bill in order to provide the government with two hundred million dollars of revenue. In other words, to take ten hundred million dollars from the working class, which already finds it difficult to buy the necessary food and clothing, so as to give the government one-fifth of the amount while the brewers get the other four-fifths, is a part of their senseless program of finance. Shame on any government that would take from the homes of the poor, whom it ought to help, in order to raise revenue for its own existence!

The year 1933 challenges America to stop its nonsense, to rise to its responsibility, and solve the problem it faces in giving all its citizens a chance to live, to work and to pursue happiness. The New Year challenges the leaders in state and nation to think this thing through, to think clearly, to think soberly, to think unselfishly and to seek the mind of Christ in it all.

The New Year challenges all leaders in state and nation to be done with their political bamboozling, their beer-guzzling dreams, their quackery and chicanery, and to get down to the real business of their positions in thinking and planning how to lead the people out of this wilderness of uncertainties and peril. The situation is not like that of an ordinary cold which will wear off with time, but instead is like that of a major operation which demands attention at once.

And the New Year challenges us all to go to our knees in prayer to Almighty God in behalf of our leaders that they may seek wisdom from above to find the way out of the present crisis. If the leaders and the people will but turn to God with all their hearts the way will open out into the most glorious days the world has ever known. There is no other way out but his way.

It is not enough for the church to admonish people to trust in God. That trust must be supplemented with demands upon men in responsible positions. God has done his part. He has made his move in lavishing his blessings upon humanity. It is man's next move on the chess-board of human destiny. The responsibility for man's material well-being now rests with man himself. We cannot honorably shift that responsibility upon God. He has already done more than his part. Man and man alone has failed. But pray God man may yet succeed! May he carry through in the realization of God's plan for the welfare of the human family instead of longer hindering God in the realization of his dreams or man.

A religion of effortless adoration may be a religion for an angel, but never for a man. Not in the contemplative, but in the active, lies true hope. Not in rapture, but in reality, lies true life. Not in the realm of ideals, but among tangible things, is man's sanctification wrought.—Henry Drummond.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

ON TO DEFIANCE AND BACK AGAIN.

The only regret we have after the wonderful time we had at the Defiance Conference at Defiance, Ohio, is the fact that all the young people in the Southeast Convention could not have been with us to share in the fun, fellowship, and inspiration which only such a conference affords. And how could a conference guided by Miss Lucy Eldredge be anything but worthwhile and inspirational.

Five of us left Virginia on the dreary, rainy morning of December 27th: Priscilla and Barbara Chase, Carl Key, Herman Truitt, all of North Carolina, and Ethel Hurley, Norfolk, Va.; but it would have taken more than mere damp weather to have dampened our spirits. Through the kindness and generosity of Rev. F. C. Lester, Waverly, who loaned us his Buick, we found our trip so much more enjoyable than one by bus or train could have been. We had our meals wherever we happened to be when meal time came around, and we stopped overnight both ways at a lovely new hotel in the mountains of West Virginia, at Gauley Bridge. The proprietor told us the Indians came, saw the mountains, the river, and said: "Golly, what a beautiful spot!" and no sooner said than done—it acquired the name of Gauley. Says we—believe it or not!

After 745 miles of rain, snow, fog, sunshine—etc. (Mr. Lester will tell you that "etc." is a synonym for flat tires), and two days' driving, we arrived at Defiance. Then followed two very wonderfully inspirational and helpful days. We all went expecting to sit back and listen, but we found that we learn most through shared experiences and we were happy if we could have made even a slight contribution to the conference as a whole. Herman, who was elected vice-president of the conference for the coming year, provided lots of fun for the conference with his "lazy mouth" and Southern drawl, especially on Thursday evening when he and five other young men entertained with a "Darky Stunt" which was very clever and unique. Carl was the "Key" to the situation, as usual, and made a big contribution by telling the group of the activities of Youth Fellowship in the Southeast and displaying the Western North Carolina Attendance Banner as a suggestive emblem for the whole fellowship of young people. We found there are no "fellowships" in the Ohio area, all organizations of young people being known as associations, leagues and congresses. It was decided to have a committee to work on the idea of a common name and a fitting emblem, to be presented for discussion at the Cleveland meeting in May.

To revert to the share each one took in the conference. Barbara Chase charmed all with her lyric singing; while Priscilla was, as usual, our all-round comrade, adviser, and inspirational leader; and although Virginia's delegate went to the conference for a vacation, they put her to work too, guiding a group discussing local church young people and their problems.

Now we're ready to tell you a little about the conference. Most of Thursday was spent in discussion groups, three of them being:

1. Local church work.
2. Young People's Congress.
3. Emphases for 1933 and the youth's part in the General Council meeting in Cleveland.

The first group adopted, with certain revisions, the "Guide to Achievement," prepared by the Young People's Department of the Church, Dr. Harry T. Stock, secretary, which has grown out of a need in young people's work for a helpful program which faces universal problems, gives practical suggestions as to meeting universal needs which at the same time is not dogmatic but encourage initiative and original thinking on the part of local young people's groups. The report of this group included these sentences: "Young people seem to outgrow local church work because of the sameness of service, lecture method of teaching is too much like a sermon, lack of cooperation between pastor and young people, lack of cooperation between parents and total church program, and lack of tact, patience and persistence on the part of young people who might become effective leaders in local churches. Certain remedies might be leadership training classes in place of lecture-type teaching, special courses of study, finding and utilizing special talents. A suggested study book is Dr. Stock's "Church Work With Young People."

The emphasis group brought together as a result of their cooperative thinking, those important issues which need to be foremost in our minds and hearts during 1933, with the added responsibility of really changing life to conform more fully to the abundant living, Christ wants us all to enjoy. They decided there is but one important issue: the building of a Christian social order, but this will not come to pass until we study such problems as recreational and leisure time activities, unemployment, alcohol, war, in the light of the principles of Jesus Christ and emerge from such a study with the determination to do something to bring about changed conditions.

This group also made the following recommendations regarding the part of the young people in the General Council meeting in Cleveland:

1. The young people would have a special conference of their own at the Cleveland meeting, beginning Saturday, May 27th, and closing Sunday noon, May 28th.
2. A goal of five hundred young people was set for this meeting, and we should begin at once to work up enthusiasm.
3. Promotional material would be sent to local groups as soon as it is available.
4. Discussion group material would be ready for local church groups in March, to be used five or six weeks preceding the Cleveland meeting—to form the basis of cooperative thinking at the general conference.
5. Begin now to plan to go to Cleveland—if you have friends in Cleveland, write them now to expect you then, for it will cut down on the expense to be entertained in someone's home.

The Congress group spent its time thinking through the problems in the work of associations of young people, the reasons for youth groups linking churches and groups of churches together, and the place the Congregational-Christian young people should have in the interdenominational youth movements, such as Yo-Pe-Di-O, in Ohio.

"Make Christ Real in the Life of Today," was adopted by the Conference for its motto for 1933, and I'm sure everyone left Defiance as we did with the determination to begin by putting Christ first in our own lives. We certainly had the promise that God is with those who strive to grow toward him by looking to him for strength and seeking those experiences which lead men in his way, sealed in a most vital way as we closed each day at Defiance with a wonderful "Upper Room" service. Led by the strains of "O Come, All Ye Faithful," from the soul of a violin, each one stepped what he was doing and quietly withdrew to an upper room where someone led us each night in one of the sweetest experiences of worship. In candle-light, with the picture of "Christ in Gethsemane" before us, we sang and prayed and communed with God until God was very, very real indeed. I know we all felt we received plenty of food for thought, bread for the soul, with plenty of ingredients necessary for good digestion—fun, fellowship, inspirational comradeship, and quiet devotional uplift.

Our return trip was full of many pleasant and interesting events, such as a visit to Dr. Raymond G. Clark and his Piqua Church, where the union of the Congregational-Christian Church took place; Rev. James H. Lightbourne at Troy; the C. P. A. building at Dayton, with visits with the Denisons, Rev. John Truitt, Dr. Minton, and the Eldredges. But we could not linger in Dayton, and we were soon off again, and the return trip was made much too quickly. Before we could realize it the car was returned to its owner in Waverly, with an additional fifteen hundred and three miles registered on the speedometer, and five people had parted to return to various duties and responsibilities.

But we should like to take this opportunity to thank all who made our trip possible, and to express the hope that much good may come to the whole united fellowship because of the happy days recently spent together in this worth-while and wonderful way.

Hoffman's picture of "Christ and the Rich Young Ruler," set before the Society so the light of the room is centered on it will add much to the value of this program. Some one should interpret the picture during the program.

Appropriate hymns are: "For the Beauty of the Earth," "Jesus Calls Us," "Rise Up, O Men of God," "I Gave My Life for Thee," "O, Master, Let Me Walk With Thee," "Take My Life and Let It Be," "Dear Lord and Father of Mankind," "Saviour, Like a Shepherd Lead Us," "Since Jesus Came into My Heart" and "O Jesus, I Have Promised."

JESUS FORGIVING SIN.

LESSON IV—JANUARY 22, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "The Son of Man hath authority on earth to forgive sins."—Mark 2:10.

LESSON TEXT: Mark 2:1-12.

Jesus was getting too much of the wrong kind of publicity. Mark says "he (the leper) went out and began to publish it much, and to blaze abroad the matter, insomuch that Jesus could no more openly enter into the city, but was without in desert places: and they came to him from every quarter." (1:45.) There was a danger that he would be known simply as a miracle worker, or healer, and that his spiritual ministry would be obscured. Later he entered into Capernaum, as he thought somewhat in seclusion. But Mark says, "it was noised abroad that he was in the house." Jesus cannot be hid. If he is really in a life he will manifest himself. If he is in the house, sooner or later people who visit in the home or who live next door, will know that he is in the house. If he is in the office or the shop or the school the fact will soon be known. If he is in the church that fact will also be known. The spirit of the living Christ cannot be hid.

Preaching the Word.

"And he preached the word unto them." The crowds had come perhaps in large part from curiosity. But Jesus took advantage of the opportunity to preach the word to them. That is the business of the preacher. He is not to lecture or to give book reviews or to quote others—he is to preach the gospel. This does not mean that he cannot make his preaching fresh and put it in modern terms and in acceptable language. It does mean that when people come to church they ought to hear the word of God interpreted and applied. As a matter of fact, that is why people go to church. They can get entertainment at the movies. They can get fellowship at the lodge or the club. They can get information at the lecture hall. But it is at the church that they should hear the word of God preached to them. Those who are constantly saying, however, that the preacher ought to preach the gospel, should keep in mind that the gospel is concerned with everything that concerns human life. The right use of money is just as much a part of the gospel as is the forgiveness of sins. Cleaning up dirty politics is just as much a part of the gospel as is the mere saying of prayers.

One Sick of the Palsy.

In Capernaum there was a man suffering from paralysis. He had some friends who believed that Jesus could and would heal him. They brought their friend to the house and when they saw that there was not the slightest chance of getting to him directly because of the crowd, they went up on the roof, cut through the clay or removed the tiles, and lowered the man with paralysis down in front of Jesus. Would that those of us who are Christians who have friends who are not Christians, would have as much patience, as much sympathy, as much persistence, as much ingenuity, as much vital faith in getting them to Christ.

Faith.

"When Jesus saw their faith." It was not mere assent to an intellectual proposition. It was not acceptance of a theological proposition. It was personal trust. Just that and nothing more. And religious faith at its best is just that. Not what we believe, but WHOM we believe and in WHOM we trust, is what counts most. Faith in Jesus Christ at its best is personal trust in him. It is something more than believing something about him; it is committing ourselves to him. And when we do that it makes all the difference in the world.

Forgiveness of Sins.

"Thy sins be forgiven thee." They are the words that the human heart so desperately needs. Until a man knows that his sins have been forgiven he can never have peace. But the Son of Man does have power or authority to forgive sins. If we confess our sins he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. Forgiveness of sins depends upon an inner attitude. Repentance alone prepares the heart for forgiveness.

It is to be noted that Jesus said, "thy sins be forgiven thee," before he told the man to rise up and walk. Soul health is more important than body health. There are multitudes of people today, however, who are very solicitous about their physical health who give but slight, if any, attention to their souls and spirits.

"Arise and Walk."

"That ye may know that the Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins . . . arise and take up thy bed and go thy way into thine house." He would give evidence of an inner experience by bestowing the power to perform a heretofore impossible act. Inner spiritual experiences usually have their outward manifestations.

"Arise"—get up to higher levels, stand up like a man—that is what Jesus does for men, puts them on their feet, sets them to walking in normal ways of life.

"And immediately"—it is a favorite work with Mark—"he arose, and took up the bed, and went forth before them all." Obedience to the divine command always brings the blessing. Do your part and God will always do his.

Critics.

"But there were certain of the scribes sitting there, and reasoning in their hearts"—they are always sitting around when any one is trying to do good, and they not only reason in their hearts, they speak out loud in carping and caustic criticism. Often, as in this case, it comes from envy and jealousy. It ought to help us to know that Jesus had his critics. We can profit too by his example. He did not allow them to keep him from doing his duty.

mobile Because My Neighbor Has One?" "What Is Wrong With Coveting?"

This closing prayer has been suggested: "Father, we would enter upon a quest for goodness, truth, beauty, love, and all the abiding values of life. Teach us to desire those qualities of personality that will enrich our lives and make us better citizens of thy kingdom. Amen."

WHAT ARE THINGS?

All day I've been a-wishing For things I haven't got:
A quaint old blue delft pitcher,
A rose-filled garden plot,
A dancing dress of silver,
A little gate that swings,
A gently-curving high-boy—
Ah, me, the lovely things!

All day I've borne my wishing
A weight against my heart,
And all my thoughts were longings
To burn and sting and smart;
But now that it is evening,
I sit me down and rest,
And watch the twilight soften
The hill's low crest.

Are stars; the night is still;
Deep are the inky shadows;
Grade is the distant hill;
My heart is hushed with beauty!
My spirit stirs and sings!
Tell me, what is wishing?
And what are things?

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"The opening of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."—Psalm 119:130.

MONDAY.

GO FORWARD.

"Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward."—Ex. 15:15.

Did it ever seem to you that God moves obstacles out of our way as we go on? It is much like climbing a mountain. We look up and the way seems impossible, but as we climb on when we get to where the way seemed blocked, the trail, or a narrow pass, or a way, opens up and we may climb on.

We are told that in Switzerland immense masses of ice and snow detach from the top of the mountain, and as it comes thundering down it seems as if it would overwhelm the whole valley. But before it gets to the valley it is shattered into a million pieces, and the dust of it simply cools the forehead of the traveler.

Sometimes it appears that we will be crushed, but eventually that which threatened disaster vanishes and the thing we feared becomes our inspiration and refreshing.

The new year's hopes call us forward, to "press on toward the mark of the prize of the high calling in Jesus Christ."

Prayer—O Lord, God, thou art our way, and guide, our inspiration, our hope, in whom all things are possible. We pray for courage not only to discharge our tasks aright, but to press on despite all obstacles. In and on him, our Saviour, we trust.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

TURN EVIL UNTO GOOD.

"We know that all things work together for good to them that love God."—Romans 8:28.

Have you ever observed how often God turns apparent evil unto good? Can't you look back over your past and now observe that experiences then which seemed evil and dark were the best thing that could have happened? Isn't it true that some of our worst experiences have put forth in our lives controlling influences, shaped our course, and made us largely what we are: that they have been those influences which have overruled something else that would have been worse?

We quote Dr. T. DeWitt Talmage of years ago, who says: "They have in the Province of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia what is called interval land. This is land that is submerged part of the year; spring freshets come down and all these plains are overflowed with water; the water leaves a rich deposit, and when the waters are gone the crops spring up, and there is the grandest harvest that was ever reaped."

It is not the heights of life that are the scenes of greatest prosperity; it is the soul over which the floods of sorrow have gone; over which the freshets of tribulation have torn their way, that yields the greatest fruits of righteousness, and the largest harvest of time, and the richest harvest for eternity.

Prayer—O thou most high, as we look forward into the new year, prepare us with the wisdom of foresight to see that thou canst make the evil day to serve us and thee. O God, make us faithful. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

DIVINE PROVING.

"Thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God hath led thee—to prove thee."—Deut. 8:2.

"Whom the Lord loveth, he chasteneth."—Heb. 12:6.

God's guidance is a guidance by discipline as well as a guidance by revelation. The Lord Jesus himself was not elevated to the fullness of Saviour until he had passed through discipline of the temptations. How much more do we need the crucible testings to make us fit for the particular work he would have us achieve?

Prayer—

"Hear me, O God!
A broken heart
Is my best part:
Use still thy rod
That I may prove Therein thy love.

"If thou hadst not
Been stern to me,
But left me free,
I had forgot
Myself and thee.

"For sin's so sweet
As minds ill bent
Rarely repent,
Until they meet
Thy punishment."

Amen.

THURSDAY.

OUR WILLINGNESS.

"That he might know . . . whether thou wouldst keep his commandments or not."—Deut. 8:2.

God finds out what we would do—whether we would keep his commandments or not.

It may be very little to us, but until we firmly believe that it is better to be pure than impure, truthful than false, honest than dishonest, it cannot be said that we have gone very far in Christian character.

To manifest this conviction comes to us in every act, word and thought of our waking hours, and it certainly represents to us the command of God, and we can certainly live for these things rather than for ourselves; we can certainly keep these commandments rather than our own; and we can certainly let God be our law-giver rather than being a law unto ourselves.

Prayer—O Lord God, embue our lives with purity, truthfulness and honesty, and with good deeds in life, lest the "wailing and gnashing of teeth" come upon us and the world be poorer for our lives. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE CROWN OF LIFE.

"Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."—Rev. 2:10.

Reverses of life come with giant stride, because of sickness, fraud, failure, unforeseen calamities; and oh, the anguish of heart that follows.

St. Paul was pelted and spat upon by boys in the street of his own home town, but there still remained with him an inalienable and abiding possession—himself, the peace of God, and a pure soul. The Devil himself could not rob him of this possession.

Misfortune may pass a man from mansion to cottage, from abundance to simplicity and necessity—and his influences may be reduced to a narrow path; wherein he once rode in comfort and grandeur, he now walks; but he still stands in the aisles of the church Sunday morning. Never was he more prayerful nor more useful than now. Never did his example count for so much. He has more time to visit the poor, to serve the needy, to give a cup of cold water to the thirsty; the note of victory is in his voice. Once he ruled great possessions, now he rules his soul; he is happy, and his happiness has come through despoiling experiences. He is living the Christlike life, and he challenges poverty to do its worst. When such an one comes to his end, it will be peace.

Prayer—O Lord, God, our Father, be thou our guiding star, and may our lives be unto others like the fixed star that knows no turning. Through thick and thin help us to stand firm, steadfast unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

ASCENDING THE HEIGHTS.

"Press on toward the prize of the mark of the high calling."—Phil. 3:14.

In climbing Mount Washington, N. H., one looks up and believes that the height immediately before him is the top of the mountain, only to find in reaching that height that there is another to be climbed. In this climb there are nine successive heights before he reaches the top where the glory of the panorama may be seen.

The ideal end for a man, as it exists in the mind of God, is only gradually being revealed to him, so that every height he attains discloses a height yet beyond it. He presses on toward a beckoning goal, which he is forbidden to attain, as it were a tomorrow that never comes. The light of one is passed only to discover another coming into view. It is not a case of passing from what is bad to that which is good, but "from the good to that which is best;" neither is it a case of disappointed hopes, but a token of achievement, each achievement being towards a new ideal of ourselves.

*"We climb, life's view is not at once disclosed
To creatures caught up, on the summit left,
Heaven plain above them, yet of wings bereft;
But lower laid as at the mountain's foot."*

—A. C. PIGOU.

SUNDAY.

THE SECRET OF THE LORD.

"The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him."—Psalm 25:14.

We are told that here "the secret of the Lord" means "the knowledge of the Lord." The godly soul can say with Jacob, "surely the Lord is in this place; and I knew it."

Moses saw the burning bush and became aware of God. There he entered into a solemn experience with God. He went forth from that scene with a secret; a new and deeper understanding of God's ways, and thoughts. Most of all in this experience there was born into his spirit a passionate desire to know God and a willingness to obey.

There is a holy place in a man's heart and life where God dwells and what passes there between God and his soul is a secret until it needs to be told. This holy place in one's life is where the light is burned and where the soul's bread is broken, and behind it all lies the communion with God, the hearer of prayer. Here is where the "rivers of living water" flow, where heaven touches earth and souls pass into eternal life.

Prayer—O God, lift us up daily from our daily state and common thoughts to thy holy mysteries and make each daily event of divine significance in the advance of our souls.—Amen.

Stay not until you are told of opportunities to do good; inquire after them.—Anon.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher.

THE CHURCHMAN'S NEW YEAR.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it."—Eph. 5:25.

Last Sunday I spoke to you on "The Christian and His Daily Devotions." Today we are thinking of the "Churchman and His Church," or what may a Christian do for his church during the coming New Year. Is it trite to say that the new year which is now here will hold such opportunities for the church as has never before been greater? It seems that to the ordinary business of announcing "Good News" to individual lives, of organizing the church also as a carrier of that same "Good News" to others, and of serving the needy at its doors, has been added such weighty problems as that of the readjustment of the whole social order as it relates to capital and labor, the settlement of international disputes, and that of equalizing opportunity across the world.

Nineteen centuries ago the church nestled in a little land much of which was below sea-level. It held towering hopes. Its cross was high above the fondest dreams of men. It began to follow the line of march to higher heights. As it reached higher its horizon increased, and became wider. "There is much land yet to conquer," but today it sees so much and so far it must either undertake its larger problems in a larger way, or admit it has been overwhelmed. It cannot do the latter. It will do the former. Therefore, our question is: "Where shall I, as a member of the church fit in, and how?"

The Apostle Peter has said: "Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye shall follow in his steps." The Christian must never forget this. The true Christian will find great comfort even in the privilege of walking in the steps of Jesus. The steps of Jesus? "Christ loved the church, and gave himself for it."

Many men and women have said—and they have said it in the presence of young people and children, both by their words and their actions—"I have lost interest in the church." In some way they accept the principles of the Christian religion, but they have abrogated the church. They have had their reasons for their conduct, and all too often their reasons have been little more than excuses. They have tried to say: "We can live good lives without the church." They have used great words, such as: "It is the life which counts." Again: "I believe if you do good in this life the next life will take care of itself." With such pretty phrases, they have forgotten the church. You and I must lament this fact very sorely. And we must choose another course.

Where shall we find the right course? Christ is our example, and "ye should follow in his steps." All right then: "Christ loved the church." The church meant something to Christ. He loved it. When he stood on the high mountains of his wilderness temptations, with Satan seeking to have him see the thrones of earth, he must have been seeing in his mind the church; when he came across Peter and the other fishermen on Galilee he must have seen his church; when he was dying upon the cross, and praying for forgiveness for sinner-men, he must have seen his church, for the Scriptures say: "Christ loved the church, and gave himself for it."

Jesus asked Peter: "Lovest thou me more than these?" In turn, we may humbly, and reverently ask Jesus: "Jesus, what is it that you love?" Money? Fame? Empire? Thrones? And our answer is: "Christ loved the church, and gave himself for it." And died for it? Yes, and died for it! So then may we not take as our first course that we shall love our church, and that since Christ went so far as to die for it, we shall stand a great deal before we are turned from our course of loving it?

Let us go a step further. Loving the church involves more than mere words of loving sentiment. It is striking to set Scripture phrases together, and often it makes their meaning glow the brighter. For instance: "God so loved the world," "Christ also loved the church." God loved the world and wanted it to become the church, and to that end he worked. Again: "God so loved the world that he gave," "Christ also loved and gave." In other words, one shows one's loving by giving. John Oxenham has well said:

"Love ever gives—
Forgives—outlives—
And ever stands
With open hands
And while it lives
It gives.
For this is love's prerogative—
To give—and give—and give."

I have noticed that those who love their church give to it. They know its need is real, and they get real happiness out of helping to supply its need. They are not forced by edicts, laws, or commands—none save the edict, laws and commands of genuine love. People who love their church give to charity as well as their church, but they do not ever excuse themselves from giving to their church by saying they have given to charity. To charity they may and will give, but their love for their church does not allow it to be neglected in their gifts.

"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son," "Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it." And that if the further consideration in our meditation this morning. God gave life—his own incarnate life in a far finer and fuller sense than our best orthodoxy can fathom—and in a far finer and fuller sense than our scientifically tutored minds can ever know—God gave himself! "Christ loved the church, and gave himself for it." Christ gave more than material donations, and more than his physical deprivations—he gave himself!

So we shall give ourselves for our church. Some of you will make a special consecration of your teaching talent as teachers in our church, some of you will help keep the records of the church as clerks, financial secretaries, and treasurers; some of you will help make official visits for our church and seek out its spiritual and physical needs as deacons; some of you will serve on boards, committees, and councils of your church, giving it the benefit of some of your very best thinking; many of you will, out of great love for your church, seek by word and deed constantly given, to make your church a place of prayer and worship for ever-increasing numbers; and others through the ministry of music will seek to give of yourselves to your church.

Our church stands in need of funds, but that is not the greatest need. Its greatest need is your love. Its very greatest need is that you and I should love it after the same manner in which Jesus loves it. Our church is entering upon a new year. Will we not make it the plan of our lives here and now to love our church: "Christ loved the church, and gave himself for it." Will we not do so? For if we have that sort of love we shall have the greatest year in the history of this church. Paul in writing to the church at Corinth showed how the churches of Macedonia, out of their depression and poverty, abounded in liberality because they had first given themselves. We read:

"Moreover, brethren, we wish you to know of the grace of God bestowed on the churches of Macedonia; how that in a great trial of affliction the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality. For to their power I bear record, yea, and beyond their power they were willing of themselves; praying us with much entreaty that we should receive the gift, and take upon us the fellowship of ministering to the saints. And this they did, not as we hoped, but first gave their own selves to the Lord, and unto us by the will of God."

How did they give? "Out of their joy and their deep poverty." How did they give? "For to their power, yea, and beyond their power."

And all because they had first given themselves to the Lord. What may a Christian do for his church during the coming year? Give himself to the Lord! And in loving service to his church, let his light shine before men!

The French government has ordered a gas mask for every person in France—50,000,000 of them. Orders are that they use them for ten hours without renewing the chemicals.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

This report closes our books for the year 1932. You will notice from the financial report that we raised during the year $16,666.84 to support more than one hundred children. Our church people, through the church offerings, Sunday School offerings and individual members, gave of this amount $12,223.56. We received of friends, not members of our denomination, the sum of $4,443.28.

I give you this information to let you know just how much our own church folks are doing. Do we love our Orphanage? Our income this year has been too small to meet expenses. We regret this exceedingly. We want to thank each church, each Sunday School and each individual for the support you have given us during the year 1932. We pray God's richest blessings upon you. We trust during the year 1933, that many blessings will come your way.

We trust that when you pray to God to thank him for the many blessings he gives you from day to day, you will remember the little children at the Christian Orphanage. Won't you? When blessings come your way, won't you divide with the Orphanage children, who need your help so badly?

Name.

The name shall be: The Georgia Conference of Congregational and Christian Churches.

ARTICLE II.

We humbly depend, as did our Fathers, upon the continued guidance of the Holy Spirit to lead us into all Truth, enabling us to walk in the way of the Lord, made known or to be made known to us.

ARTICLE IV.

RESOLUTION.

Resolution adopted at the annual meeting, November 2, 1932: That the annual meeting of the board of directors be held as a stated policy on the opening day of the meeting of the State Conference for consultation and for action upon such matters as shall require attention.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

It is recommended that provisions be made according to specifications given herewith for the examination licensure and ordination of candidates for the ministry.

These recommendations pertain first to the appointment of local association advisory committees. It is recommended:

I. That each local association appoint a committee to be called the Advisory Committee, consisting of five members, of which the moderator and registrar of the association shall be members ex-officio, and three other members, to be elected at the annual meeting, as follows: At the first election one member to be elected for one year, one for two years and one for three years; and thereafter one to be elected each year to serve three years. It is urged that special care be taken to secure the most competent membership for the committee.

II. The functions of this committee to be:

1. To know the churches and ministers within the bounds of the association, their character, needs, and conditions, and to keep a record of the same corrected to date and filed with the registrar.

2. To hold itself in readiness at all times to assist, inform, advise, and suggest, upon request, in cases where a change of pastorate, the organization of a church, the consolidation of fields or other exigencies affecting the common welfare of our churches, may call for such action.

3. To be in-active and constant communication with the board of directors of the State Conference; filing with it its local information; gathering from its larger files wider information; reporting to it at once any changes in fields or men; making investigation at its request, and aiding in all possible ways its effort to know Congregational and Christian life.

OBITUARIES

SMITH.

"Uncle Ike" Smith was born at Chapel Hill, Chambers County, Alabama, February 18, 1845, and died about five miles from where he was born December 10, 1932. He leaves to mourn their loss five children, 18 grandchildren, and 14 great-grandchildren. He professed faith in Christ in early manhood and united with the Methodist Church where he remained until about six years ago, when he moved into Rock Springs community, and united with the Rock Springs Christian Church, where he remained true and faithful till the end of his long life. He was one of the few remaining Confederate veterans. Funeral services were held at Mt. Zion Christian Church by his pastor, this writer, and his emaciated body was laid to rest in that cemetery.

Radio Typewriter.—

For some time past the long distance typewriter has been in use, but there has recently been developed a wireless or radio typewriter, which bids fair to revolutionize short-distance communication. The typist operates a standard typewriter keyboard, and the message is typed on a duplicate machine at the receiving point. It is a two-way system, and short aeriels at each end suffice. Only 40 watts power is required for operation between stations as much as five miles distant. It can also be utilized as a means of intra-office communication.

Bankrupt Pays In Full.—

Four years ago, we are told, the Roaring River Furniture Company of Wilkes County, N. C., was thrown into bankruptcy, owing at that time more than $200,000, and creditors thought they would be lucky if they received 10 cents on the dollar. Today stockholders have received back property well worth $85,000, with open accounts amounting to $25,000 more, and they had to put up only $16,000 in cash to square the deal. The plant is now in full operation, and during the time of its receivership paid out more than a million dollars for materials and labor. This is one of the few cases on record where a bankrupt concern paid out in full. Certainly those are still more few which have been turned back to their original owners as profit-making concerns.

Electric Color Matcher.—

The electric "eye" has been put to use for yet another purpose. This time it is used to match colors. "More accurate than the human eye is a new portable color-matcher," which Business Week tells us has recently been developed. "It matches colors at three points, so to speak, by the use of red, green and blue screens." In use, the sample to be matched is put under the red light, for instance, and the indicator adjusted to zero. The other sample is then inserted, and unless exactly the same amount of red light is reflected, the needle will be deflected. If the samples prove the same as to their red content, the test is repeated using the blue screen, and again with the green screen. The device will handle either very light or dull black samples, and is independent of either daylight or artificial light.

Jet Black Teeth.—

If a newly discovered South American plant which is said to prevent tooth-decay lives up to its reputation, black teeth may become the style, and dentists may have to change their profession. Decay can be prevented by chewing the plant which is a new species of a group scientifically known as the Schradera, a member of the coffee family. However, along with its reputed protection, the Schradera has the faculty of turning the teeth as black as coal. The plant is found in the jungles of Colombia, and children and adults chew the leaves of the plant until a protective film is formed over the teeth. It is only necessary after the first film is formed to chew the plant about twice a year to keep the film in a state of repair. Incidentally, the natives who inhabit these jungles think black teeth objects of great beauty, while white teeth are regarded almost as a deformity.

The Canadian System a Success?—

"Government control has set Canada back twenty-five years," says Dr. Waldemar Williams, of Sarnia, Ontario. He continues, "Of the three systems—the old saloon days, prohibition as it is today in the United States, and Canadian government control, the last is the worst of all. The wet forces which brought back beer and wine promised the saloon would never return, and the younger generation, knowing little of the facts, believed it, but not a single promise has been kept." He tells us that what is called control permits thousands of saloons and beer palaces to run wide open, and men and boys may drink all they want. It has crowded the jails with drunks and has greatly increased drinking among boys and girls. "The liquor traffic has been a criminal from the beginning," he continues, "and I trust America will never clothe it with respectability as Canada has done."

Chemistry Now Gives Us Synthetic Lumber.—

Teak is the hardest wood that grows, approaching the strength of ordinary steel. Yet the chemist of today can produce a synthetic wood that surpasses teak wood in strength. Cork also has its counterpart in synthetic wood, and if we can believe Professor O. R. Sweeney, of Iowa State College, there is no wood that grows which cannot be reproduced commercially from the waste products of the farm. Straw, bagasse, cornstalks, or cobs, are a few of the materials that may be utilized in the manufacture of this new lumber. "Maizolith, the hardest of the list of artificial woods," says Prof. Sweeney, in a report to the American Chemical Society, "has many of the properties of teak, and closely resembles it in appearance as well as in its properties of durability, density and strength. But its cross breaking strength coefficient is nearly twice that of teak." This wood can be manufactured for a cost of about $250 per ton, and if there is considerable demand for it the price will naturally be lowered as production mounts. The artificial cork can be produced in such quantities and at such prices as will make it available for insulating the walls of homes, as plaster base and for other similar purposes.

Repudiating Repudiation.—

Less than three months have passed since the American people repudiated the "tariff wall" that has isolated America from the rest of the world and, together with prohibition, brought rack and ruin to all of us!!! Today, the same people, led by the same newspapers, are raising the battle cry, "Buy American." Three months ago the Republicans were soft-pedaling the tariff question whenever possible, and Democrats could hardly find words strong enough to describe the iniquitous tariffs with which their opponents had cursed our country. Why has it at last dawned on the wise men who control our thoughts through the daily press, that it might be a good policy to pay more for American-made goods and less in gratuities to those who are thrown out of work because of the cheap foreign substitutes that have flooded our country. The American farmer stands to lose much if he loses the foreign market for his cotton, his wheat and his tobacco, but he stands to lose more if he fails to have the buying power of his own country to support him. When the average American changes his mind so often, one wonders if it will not be a bad idea to do away with the "lame duck" session of Congress.

Zinc Die-Casting.—

Only since 1926 has there been an appreciable amount of zinc die-casting, and 1932 has shown greater increase in the utilization of this metal for the making of castings than any previous year. Die-casting, itself, is not new, but its rapid growth in a time when other things have been distinctly backward, is news. Early alloys, because of their shortcomings, held back this process for a time, but with the perfection of these alloys its progress has become more and more rapid. In 1926 only about 2 per cent of the zinc produced went into die-casting, but in 1932 the consumption of zinc for that purpose will amount approximately 7 per cent. Not all die-castings are of zinc, many being of aluminum where lightness is essential. But zinc is not only less costly, but it casts at lower temperatures, with cheaper dies, and is consequently used where possible. Ordinary castings are poured in sand molds, and accuracy is impossible. The rough parts have to be machined to give accuracy. In die-casting, the molten metal is pumped under heavy pressure into the steel mold, and the castings are often so accurate and smooth as to require no finishing at all. Thus, though more expensive in itself, this process of making castings has so reduced the number of operations necessary in the production of parts that it has in some cases reduced the cost to one-fourth of the former price. Henry Ford is one who has availed himself of these economies, there being no less than three dozen die-castings used in the new V-8 car.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

In this issue there appears an "Appreciation" of the late Ex-President Calvin Coolidge, by Dr. Jason Noble Pierce, who served as his pastor while in Washington. An article from the same author appears in this week's Congregationalist.

President L. E. Smith, of Elon College, spent a portion of last week and this in an executive committee meeting of the General Council in New York, and also in attending the Association of American Colleges, going from New York to Chicago to attend the mid-winter meeting, January 16th-19, of the Commission on Missions and other boards of the General Council.

A very welcome visitor to Elon College was Dr. Roy Helfenstein, Dover, Del., who occupied the college pulpit Sunday, January 8th, using as his topic: "Things that Do Not Change." It was a great sermon and made a lasting impression upon students, faculty and community. On Sunday night, Dr. Helfenstein occupied the Burlington pulpit, Dr. Lankford, the pastor, being housed in with influenza. On Monday, the 9th, Dr. Helfenstein spoke at noon to the Piedmont Ministerial Association, using as his subject for discussion and a round-table, "Evangelism." The dozen ministers present very greatly enjoyed this timely presentation of the great theme, "Evangelism." Dr. Helfenstein has made quite a study of Evangelism and is an adept in presenting the various angles of that great theme to others.

PORTSMOUTH FIRST CHURCH.

On Sunday, January 1st, I concluded my services as interim pastor of the First Christian Church, Portsmouth, Va. During the two months we became so closely attached to the good people there that it was with sincere regrets that we bade them good-bye. A more consecrated and friendly group it would be difficult to find. They believe in their church and are loyal to it. So cordially did they receive us that we felt at home from the very first. They gave the pastor's family a generous "pounding" of good things to eat on Thursday before Christmas, and remembered the children with toys and many useful presents. The church presented a Christmas pageant of real merit under the direction of Miss Caroline Gort, which had its climax in a "White Gift for the King" service. Many baskets were sent to needy families in and outside the church, and plans are under way to continue this work every week throughout the remainder of the winter.

The First Christian Church is centrally located and has made a place for itself in the city of Portsmouth. The members are eager to have a permanent pastor on the field and I believe the right man can do a great work there. I shall not forget the days of happy fellowship and service at Portsmouth.

ALFRED W. HURST.

FLORIDA.

In the cloistered garden of Plymouth Congregational Church, of Coconut Grove, November 14th, a social was given which suggested a page from the past. It was in celebration of the 35th anniversary of the church, and the old-fashioned motif was employed in the entertainment. Rev. J. Delman Kuykendall, pastor for twelve years, appeared in the "claw-hammer" coat and stove-pipe hat worn by ministers of another generation, and the speakers' table, lighted with kerosene lamps and tallow candles in colonial holders, was surrounded by women in quaint old-time clothes. Mrs. Harlan A. Trapp, a charter member of Plymouth Church, who came to Coconut Grove as a bride just before its organization, was asked by the minister to "lift the tune, Sister," when the ancient hymns, "I Love to Tell the Story," and "What A Friend We Have in Jesus," were sung. She is the only living charter member and she loaned the lamps which were used. One of these supplied light in the original meeting-place, and the other used to be placed in the window by Mr. Trapp's mother to guide sailboats into harbor after darkness had fallen. Fifty-year-old gowns were worn, some with bustles and leg-o'-mutton sleeves and fichus of lace. Girls serving the tables wore dresses suitable for the teens when their grandmothers were young.

After an invocation, a generous supper was served (in keeping with the hospitality of by-gone days, several helpings of pie were passed). Then the minister read a Scripture lesson and hymns were sung. Over the walls of the church garden the rolling tune of "Faith of Our Fathers" resounded as all joined in. Many reminiscences were offered by the elderly women present. The guests lingered long after the moon had risen, loath to leave the pleasant atmosphere of the old-time social.

WITHOUT FEAR, FACING.

Churches should face, but without any delusions or misgivings, the present perils of the breakdown of human faith in everything; the blind, impassioned impulses of people rendered helpless by long economic hardships; the tendency to accept any promises that glitter, no matter how false they are; and the feeling that religion is more of a luxury than a creative factor and necessity in human life when in dire need.

If the church itself does not return with a mighty urge of new affection and devotion to him who gave it birth and message, the place of its lampstand will be removed. The activities in Christian service by every member should be increased in quality and multiplied in number. No church or minister or member should be content until every effort is expended in forms of evangelism, community service, personal fellowship with the needy and discouraged, and in the endeavor to create new spiritual forces and experiences. The consequences in present society of godless, reckless, character-breaking agencies and false theories of living demand imperatively the fearless and the efficient services of the churches. No church should take counsel from fears.

Only a reverent, law-abiding, personal godliness, marked by helpful, sympathetic fellowship with human kind everywhere, can make possible a social state and system in which common well-being shall be established. It is not a hopeful condition when the greater dependence of the American people is placed, more by necessity than choice, perhaps (upon political bodies elected often without reference to ability or experience in economic or social problems. Here party systems fail to measure up to national needs, especially when great emergencies arise, and partisan gains are valued more than common welfare. Learning by mistakes seems to be the school of instruction. The absence of skilled economists from potential public position is unfortunate and can speed calamity. The saving hope is that their counsel may be sought constantly.

Churches should accept, without hesitation, the immediate duty of bringing spiritual values and forces to the thought and activity of every community. For churches to fail now or even to evade or to neglect such need and opportunity would be a modern betrayal of the Gospel, and its Founder. Christian Advocate.

NEWS OF DR. M. J. W. WHITE FROM AN UNEXPECTED SOURCE.

By REV. WILSON P. MINTON, D. D.,
Secretary Commission on Missions.

One of the joys of life is to hear about our friends from wholly unexpected sources. It gives a new meaning to them and to their work, whatever it may happen to be. We have just had such an experience in regard to our good friends, Dr. and Mrs. M. J. W. White, of Cagayan, Philippine Islands, so well and favorably known in the South, and who are on the project lists of some of our churches.

This bit of good news comes in a round-about way which makes it even more interesting. I receive regularly the news sheets of our various Congregational-Christian State Conferences, and none is read with more absorbing interest than the Kansas Congregational-Christian News Letter, both because of personal contacts through the state and also because the merger has been so wonderfully well wrought out in that State.

In the December number we find this interesting article about our Dr. and Mrs. White, written by Rev. J. P. Jockinson, pastor of the Union Church of Manila. Mr. Jockinson went to Manila from the pastorate of the Congregational Church of Manhattan, Kansas, where it was my privilege to meet him at the Kansas State Conference of Congregational and Christian Churches several years ago. I want to share with you his description of this visit to Dr. White's hospital, and his impression of the work these splendid young people are doing. He says:

"After nine hours of almost continuous riding, we arrived at Cagayan, the third largest city in the Islands. We went to the Mission Hospital, where we were welcomed by Dr. DeAsis, Dr. White's assistant. He is one of the finest types of Filipinos I have met. Here we found a cool, quiet, retired, restful place, well screened and protected from the insects and bugs, as well as the heat and dust. Dr. Sarah Ching, his Chinese wife, welcomed us into her home. After an all-day trip, without food or water, the meal she served was most refreshing.

"That night I occupied a room in the hospital. This hospital is well equipped in every way with an operating room, a dispensary, an X-ray machine, nurses' quarters, etc. While we were there Prof. R. Wolterreck, of Leipzig University, came over 75 miles of road, in a swaying bus, with a broken shoulder blade, to have it X-rayed and the broken bones set.

"The next day I visited the patients, some of whom are tubercular. Here was a malnourished baby that had been given up for dead, being brought back to life. Here was a man who had been bitten by a spider which is very poisonous, and which is frequently found among the pineapples. (I saw, not far from Cagayan, one of the finest pineapple groves in the world, with pineapples growing to a length of two and one-half feet, and the second largest pineapple factory in the world.) The bite of this spider seems to paralyze its victim, who finally dies. When the first case was brought to Dr. White, he did not know what to do. There was nothing on record of anything that had ever been done. This was something new for science to conquer. He said to himself: 'What will I ever do to help that poor fellow? I cannot see him lie there in agony and die.' Combining his knowledge of medicine with an element of chance, he experimented with a serum, and lo, it brought relief to his patient! Since then he has been able to save the lives of at least a half dozen victims every year. He has been improving the treatment, and at some future time he will write up this treatment for the medical journal.

"I also met the Filipino nurses, and Miss Trinidad Manegdeg, who is acting superintendent of nurses since Miss Evelyn Fox has returned to the States on furlough. Under Miss Manegdeg's supervision the hospital looked clean, neat and attractive, the food was wholesome and the quality of service was excellent. The number of patients during the past six months has more than doubled.

"Dr. Sarah Ching, brought up in the home of Dr. Nash on the Pacific Coast, is one of the most attractive and capable women I have met in the Islands. She has been called upon to take charge of many of the maternity cases. It would be a splendid thing if we could have $1,200 extra and put her on the hospital staff!

"I met Dr. and Mrs. M. J. W. White and their lovely little daughter, Doris, later, for we took our vacation together. They are charming people, devoted to their work, and liked by everyone. Several times I went with Dr. White on some of his sick calls, and wherever he went there was someone who had the yaws, a virulent disease of body sores, or hookworm, or dysentery, or hardening of the liver, or some other ailment. A doctor could work night and day in this country, and yet his work would never be done. I think some of the finest work I have seen in the Islands has been done by our doctors. So many times, of course, people are not grateful, and take it as a matter of course, as a service we owe to them. And yet, through the healing of their bodies, we reach their spiritual lives and can awaken them to something better than the manner of life and conditions under which they have been living."

And so our friends, whom we have sent to one of the hard places of the earth, and whom, too often, we indifferently support, work on in their quiet, unassuming way, accomplishing for the kingdom through the ministry of physical healing and spiritual restoration a work the extent of which cannot be measured.

THE GOOD NEWS.

A Message for Lent.

The "Good News" is the gospel preached and lived by Jesus that God is the loving Father of the souls of men and that the relation of men to God is best expressed in terms of this affection. And this is the "Good News" that has been preached through the centuries and has brought salvation to millions.

The World Jesus Knew.

The world into which Jesus was born was one in which men everywhere were the victims of their own passions, views, prejudices and follies. They were unconscious of God as a God of love. Religion was thought of in terms of law and the religious leaders were occupied in propitiating God by rites and ceremonies. Greed and oppression were everywhere practiced; the poor groaned in fear and want, and the rich were arrogant and selfish.

What Jesus Did.

Jesus, understanding God's love for men, set himself to convert all men from this way of life to a life controlled by love, not hate; by unselfish service for the good of others, and not by vanity, treachery and indifference to the good of others which were often the natural motives of man's conduct.

Changed Lives.

The men and women who had been converted to this new way of life found that love of God and one's fellows gave life its highest quality. The men and women who took God's love to their hearts were so many more added to the new movement. The Kingdom of God is made up of those whose lives have taken on this right relationship, this unique quality, this inner adornment of personality, this inward strengthening of character.

The Inclusiveness of the Kingdom.

It was "Good News" that sinners and publicans could "join in" and to know that eternal life was a present, here-and-now relationship with God. Jesus told men that if they established this spiritual relationship with God, a loving, personal association, and communion with him, that if they knew this relationship, they would know there was nothing that would take them out of God's reach. That this relationship purified all human life and glorified all human experiences and made the soul something of such eternal value that it could never be shut up in the grave.

The God Quality of the Life of Jesus.

Jesus himself was an integral part of his message. He was the greatest part of it. People responded to his influence and experienced spiritual blessedness. This gave them victory over old sins, the sense of forgiveness and the possession of new energy and virtue. Jesus not only told men how their lives could be transformed, but he helped them to live the new life. His presence, among men, actually manifested God's love. That love saved men. There was no getting away from that life. Men could argue his teachings and challenge his doctrine, but none could gainsay the God-quality of his life.

The Life in the World.

The men and women who experienced the change of life through the God-filled life of Jesus, Zaccheus, Mary Magdalene, the Blind Man, Peter and Thomas—did not question his power. They had reached God through Jesus. This experience had cleansed and strengthened their lives. They had made contact with God, but it was Jesus who was the "way." It was Jesus they followed, and for him they served, and many gave their lives.

The "Good News" is that by God's love we can live a new life and the "best news" is that by Jesus Christ we are helped daily to live it.

FREDERICK L. FAGLEY.

There is an old story of an enthusiastic courtier who said to his king: "May your subjects all die before you." The irate king promptly ordered him beheaded. Another, with a flair for diplomacy, phrased the sentiment in these words: "May your Majesty outlive all his subjects."—He was knighted.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

YE HAVE THE POOR ALWAYS.

The words are those of Christ. There was unemployment in his day. There has been more or less unemployment ever since. There was poverty in his day. No one knew better than he the sting of poverty. No one, without such knowledge, could have pictured so keenly the condition of Lazarus, the poor man, and Dives, the rich man, and the great chasm that yawned between them. Moreover, Christ sympathized with the poor, and no man, who ever visited the earth, rich or poor, has done as much as he has for the relief of poverty and for the uplift of the man or the woman who was down and seemingly out.

One of the traits he wished to be known by was that, through him and by him, "the poor have the gospel preached to them." He never forgot the poor. He never ceased to care for the needy. He never withheld aid to the one in want. And yet he taught that there was another, a higher and a deeper love than the love for the poor and the care of the needy. And that was the love for God.

He drew this contrast when he put the love of God as the first and great commandment, and then the love of man second, "and like unto it." But in the 11th verse, 26th chapter of Matthew, and in the 7th verse, 14th chapter of Mark, he makes the distinction clearer, and further emphasizes the distinction between the love of God and his Son, and the love of man and his needs. A devout woman, out of sheer love to him, poured out a great love-offering on his head. The disciples rebuked the woman. Jesus did not: he praised her. "Let her alone. She hath wrought a good work on me. Ye have the poor with you always."

Even Jesus' disciples are still going on with their short-sighted work of rebuking those in our time who make gifts, out of sheer love, to their Lord. A consecrated Christian woman wrote the editor of THE SUN this week, saying she was ashamed to mention giving to missions. It seemed cruel, when the clamour on every side was to help the poor, the needy, the unemployed. Jesus is still saying, "Let the woman alone; she loved me enough to make a very precious gift solely out of love for me." And that is what our missionary offering is. We do not make a missionary offering to honor man, but to honor God; not to glorify man, but to glorify God; not to make human love known, but to make divine love known; not to share human love with other human beings, but to share divine love with other human beings.

We forget, do we not, that there is bread of life that feeds the soul as well as bread of meal and flour that feeds the body? In our missionary giving and efforts, we are simply doing what a woman at Bethany did: pouring out a love-offering, that we may honor our Lord and glorify him against his burial, that the world may know that Jesus lived, was crucified, went to his burial; that through him and the power of his resurrection, there is salvation. It will not hurt us in our gifts to the poor to take a love-offering now and then and pour it out for his glory, that we may anoint him for his task; and the task to which he set himself was through the one movement that he instituted in the world and for which he alone is responsible, viz.: The movement through the church to reveal himself to the world as the Son of the living God. If the church gives all of its gifts to the poor and needy about it, it has done no more than a benovolent society or a fraternal order. It exhausts its resources for the physical body. But the church is called to a higher and holier purpose, and that is, to give spiritual food to a perishing world.

The church is benevolent and charitable, but it is something more; it is itself a spiritual body and, as such, it is called upon, of all the institutions and agencies of the earth, to give spiritual bread to a perishing world, and it is the only institution and agency that undertakes to do this one thing. We agree most heartily with a statement recently concluded by the Board of Missions of the Methodist Church:

"The missionary movement is fundamentally a spiritual undertaking. While at the moment the onward march of the Christ seems to halt for lack of money, the problem is not primarily a financial one. Vast needs appeal to us, but the appeal is to a more faithful stewardship.

"We dare not trust any longer to spasms of generous giving. Our people must feel the cry of Paul, 'I have a stewardship entrusted to me.' The challenge of the hour is for this kind of consecration—that puts Christ and his kingdom first; that gnaws the persistent, joyful attraction of the cross. This is the victory that overcomes the world, even our faith!"

If, during the year 1933, we, of the Congregational-Christian Churches, are to win a victory and come out triumphant, we shall have to cultivate a faith in our Lord, who alone is able to overcome, and whose presence and fellowship we need even as we already have the poor with us always.

SPIRITUAL LIFE AND MISSIONS.

Bishop Mouzon, of the Methodist Episcopal Church (South), called together the presiding elders and a few other ministers of the various sections of North Carolina for an all-day meeting in Greensboro on Monday, January 9th. Bishop Mouzon announced that there would be seven meetings at strategic centers for Methodist ministers in North Carolina during the month of February, at which two Bishops of the church will speak. The theme of these meetings is to be "Spiritual Life and Missions."

Bishop Mouzon makes it clear in his announcement that the missionary objectives of the year must be clearly laid before the presiding elders and ministers of the Methodist Church, and they in turn must lay the same before their congregations throughout the State, and in so doing help to emphasize and deepen the spiritual life of the people, by calling them to spiritual activities and spiritual service.

The one spiritual task and work of the church is missions, since missions is the only work that the church undertakes which differentiates it from all other institutions and organizations. The church is a spiritual body, even the body of Christ of which body he is the head; and the Christ instituted missions as the one thing nearest and dearest to his heart, and founded the church, and is building it, that the message of salvation through him may be delivered to mankind. Until the church does this, it will not be done, as it is the only organization that undertakes to herald the Good News—the Gospel that Jesus Christ is the Son of the living God and in him is life, redemption and salvation, that life which alone is sufficient to solve all the world's problems and meet all the world's needs.

Spiritual life and missions go hand in hand, since God is a Spirit, and those who worship him, must worship him in spirit and in truth. So, through a spiritual body, the church, he seeks to bring his own in closer fellowship with him and share with his own his blessed presence and power. If we stop with benevolence and philanthropy, we are in accord and fellowship with fraternal orders and benevolent societies, but we stop before we begin the constructive work of that spiritual body called the church. Every missionary at home and abroad is sponsored and supported by the church, and the church is the only body on earth that undertakes to sponsor and support those who go out to preach the Gospel of righteousness.

BRADSHAW.

Funeral services for J. J. Bradshaw, 57, well known figure in business, fraternal and religious circles of Norfolk, who died yesterday (January 2nd), at 1:35 P. M., as a result of a heart attack at his home, 208 E. 39th Street, were held at the Christian Temple, January 4th, at 3 o'clock. Mr. Bradshaw, who was stricken yesterday morning at the offices of Johns Bros., coal dealers, of which firm he was secretary, went to his home where a second attack ended in death.

Mr. Bradshaw had been a citizen of Norfolk for twenty-five years, coming to Norfolk from Southampton County where he was born.

He was the son of the late James Madison and Mrs. Geneva Babb Bradshaw. Besides his wife, Mrs. Addie Cogsdale Bradshaw, he is survived by two daughters, Misses Bernice Estelle and Elizabeth Stuart Bradshaw, of Norfolk; one brother, John C. Bradshaw, of Franklin, and three sisters, Mrs. L. D. Clark, of Washington; Mrs. C. T. Lupton, of Denver, and Miss Lizzie Bradshaw, of Franklin.

Mr. Bradshaw was a member of the board of deacons of Christian Temple, and was affiliated with the following organizations: Owens Lodge No. 164, A. F. & A. M., John Walters Chapter, No. 68, R. A. M., Grice Commandery, No. 16, Knights Templar, Khedive Temple, the Mystic Shrine, and Junior Order United American Mechanics.

Rev. Jason Noble Pierce, D. D., pastor of the Christian Temple, conducted the services. Interment was in Forest Lawn Cemetery.—Norfolk Ledger.

GOD'S GARDENERS.

By WILLARD PRICE.

South Chicago. Tin cans. Cinders. Grimy factories. Pool halls. Pawn shops. Dust and smoke. We go down a street full of holes, steering around broken glass. Railroad tracks on the right. Shabby gray huts on the left. A depressing scene.

But then we come to an oasis in the desert, a brilliant spot of color . . . a rainbow of a front yard full of nodding flowers! The little house behind it—yes, that is the number we are looking for. Our knock is answered, and by the first man with a clean shave we have discovered in this part of the city—a quiet, intelligent, gentle person who does not seem to belong on this gunman type of street.

So he has made the street, or least part of it, belong to him. The house of Gabriel Vas, the Bible man, although as poor as the others, is subtly different—because it is a Christian home. It breathes comfort and peace. Its plain furnishings, its books, magazines, its open Bible, are redolent with the personality of those who live here.

But the true index to the character of the householder is his back yard. If his spirit is cinders and dust, so will his back yard be. If his soul is full of flowers and springtime, some of the beauty of it will escape into his back yard. Knowing this, we really should not gasp with astonishment, as we do, when Gabriel Vas throws open the back door and leads us into a veritable paradise of flowers. More than two hundred varieties luxuriate in this garden where six years ago there was not a blade of grass. The splendor of the color symphony is matched only by the fragrance of the blooms.

When we peer over the vine-covered fences we see that the contagion has spread. All up and down the street back yards are flowering from seeds and cuttings loaned by Mr. Vas. These gardens hardly compare with his, yet they show plainly the force of good example.

But a Christian who has come to share with his Creator the will to create loveliness and beauty does not stop with the back yards of South Chicago hovels. He goes on to the dusty, hidden back yards of men's hearts. I watch Gabriel Vas as he does it. With his bag full of Bibles, Testaments and Gospels which the American Bible Society has supplied to him one of its colporteurs, he goes out into the dust-swirling street. Yonder is a peripatetic grocery on wheels and a vendor with a raucous voice who is proclaiming that he has fresh carrots, beans and cabbages for sale cheap.

"But not so cheap as this," interrupts Gabriel Vas quietly, displaying an open Gospel of St. John. "Salvation is free."

How will a busy street grocer brook such interference? I soon see. After a moment of surprise he buries the silent Mr. Vas under a storm of abuse. But the Bible man comes up smiling. He replies calmly, persuasively. He is happy, because there is nothing he likes better than gardening, and he is going to plant seeds in this hard soil. The horses stand lazily, the scale swings empty, as the vendor, now silent in his turn, listens to the earnest message and turns the pages of the Gospel that Mr. Vas has pressed into his hand. He is listening to a great story, the greatest story in the world. Somehow his carrots and cabbages do not seem very important now. Finally it is the Bible man who must excuse himself, on the plea that there are many other people he must visit. As he passes on down the street, I see the vendor standing motionless beside his load, forgetful of everything except the little book which he is reading.

Anyone and everyone is a "prospect" for the Bible man: the street cleaner, who stands below the curb with brush and can, and smokes his pipe meditatively as he listens; a mechanic poised on a step-ladder, repairing the top of an automobile; two young men at the door of a pool hall; an unemployed father wheeling a baby carriage listlessly up and down the block, and glad enough to have a companion for a half dozen round trips; the proprietor of a Mexican restaurant whose white-scrawled windows proclaim the virtues of hot tamales and chili con carne. Vas loses them all. He has no fear. He will approach anyone, anywhere. His voice is low—yet the listener soon realizes that here is a man who speaks with authority.

He could accomplish much by the spoken word alone, but he uses it only to introduce the Book. He himself was converted by reading the Bible, therefore he has the utmost faith in its power. He wants to get a copy of it, or a portion of it, into the hands of everyone who needs help—and who doesn't? No one pays him a salary to do this work. He depends for his livelihood upon the commissions from the sale of Scriptures. And yet, time after time during the day, I see him give to those who cannot buy, thus not only sacrificing his commission, but cheerfully charging himself with the cost of the book he has given away.

When the last scarlet light of the afterglow is mirrored in the roses, I meet the Vas family in the little bower for evening worship. And as Gabriel Vas prays that the labor of the day may prove fruitful, I recall the many similar prayers I have heard, the petitions of Bible men throughout this land and beyond the seas who have dedicated their lives to making the beauty of holiness bloom in the neglected back yards of the hearts of men.

PARABLE OF THE PRODIGAL MOTHER.

One of the finest addresses at the Biennial in Seattle was that of Mrs. Ruth Karr McKee on "Spiritual Training in the Home." She concluded the address with the following parable:

"A certain mother had two children: they came to their mother and said unto her, 'Mother, we hunger for the bread of understanding. Give unto us the portion of your time, your counsel, and your companionship that falleth to us.'

"And she divided unto them her living, in that she gave them a diet rich in vitamins and the chemic base of endocrine hormones; she looked carefully to their health and to their manners; she sent them to dancing school and to a select preparatory school; but she said within herself, as for their question, Life will answer them.

"And not many days after, the mother gathered together her own interests, her social ambitions and cultural aspirations, and took her journey into a far country, into a land of lodge affiliations, bridge clubs, and golf tournaments, and other things for which children care not at all; and she there wasted her precious opportunity to draw near to her children, and to companion them in their years of growth.

"And when she had spent the best years of her life and had won much social prestige but had failed to find any satisfaction therein, there arose a famine in her heart and she began to be in want of sympathy and real companionship

"She went and joined herself to one of the great organizations of the land; they made her chairman of many committees and elected her president and chose her to be a member of the National Board; she fain would have satisfied herself with the husks upon which others fed and no one showed her any real affection.

"And when she came to herself, she said: 'How many women of my acquaintance have children in whom they are happy; who understand each other and are comrades together; and I perish here with heart-hunger. I will arise and go to my children, and say unto them: Children, I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight; when you were little, you asked for bread and I know now that I gave you a stone. I am not worthy to be called your mother; make me as one of your acquaintances.'

"But the children were exceedingly sorrowful. They said unto her, 'Not so; we wish it were possible. True we did wonder about life and love; we did want your counsel and companionship, but when we came to you, you were always too busy. We got information and we found companions, but they were the wrong kind; our lives are marred now, and you can do nothing about it. In the far country whither we have strayed, you cannot come; there is no bridge and the time of building is past. It is too late.'—Bulletin N. C. Federation Woman's Clubs.

WHO WANTS THIS KIND OF PROSPERITY?

"Of course, repeal will bring prosperity," said my advertising friend. "I can let you in on some things which are happening which will make it as plain as day to you. When you understand the situation there will be no question in your mind about it."

"All right, go ahead," I advised him.

"Well, here is the dope," he said. "You know what advertising has done for the cigarette business. It has popularized smoking so that now it is the ordinary procedure in the most refined homes. The advertising that has made that possible is not a circumstance to what we are going to do for beer as soon as repeal is a fact.

"Already tentative arrangements have been made to spend millions of dollars in beer and whiskey advertising. My house is in on the deal, so I have my information direct. We are going to use every art known to the advertising science to make beer a popular home drink for men, women and youth.

"The advertising will be followed by business activity. It will create the desire, then breweries long closed will open. That will put men to work, use the farmers' surplus wheat, aid public carriers. Hence exchange of money, work and prosperity. Now the whole thing is simple, isn't it?"

"Yes," I replied, "it does seem quite simple now that it has all been explained. Is this plan generally known? Do the newspapers know what is planned in advertising?"

"I'll say they know it. You didn't think that their headlines urging repeal were altruistic, did you? We let them know just as much as is good for them."

"But isn't there a moral issue? I am ready to admit that advertising put across cigarettes. It made them popular. But I still have a conviction that the use of nicotine by boys and girls is harmful. There certainly is a greater moral issue involved in the use of intoxicants in family circles."

"Perhaps. But that is not our problem. We are employed by a client to sell his product to the public. We must let some one else worry about the moral question. That is probably a job for your preachers."

"I think that probably it is," I admitted. "And I further think that they will do more than worry about it when they get this story. Perhaps they will do so much worrying about it that repeal will be prevented."

Anyway, I am glad to pass on this unique view of repeal and prosperity.—H. L. Williams, in Church Management,

SUFFOLK LETTER.

This is a time when much is being said about the poor. Many people are devoting much time to plans to help the poor in their need. Bread lines are formed in the cities and young and old receive food from the hand of charity. Many people are out of work and hungry in a land of plenty and wealth.

The word "poor" occurs in the Bible more than two hundred times. Eighteen different Hebrew or Greek words are translated "poor." In the Bible the word has many shades of meaning. In modern times the word is used more frequently in contrast to the word "rich."

Jesus said: "The poor have the Gospel preached to them" (Matt. 11:5), and, "For ye have the poor always with you (Matt. 26:11). From this it is inferred that Jesus conferred a special favor upon the poor. Furthermore, it appears that the time will not come when there will be no poor on the earth. Jesus was poor. He believed in the poor. He knew the needs and the blessings of poverty. The rich and the poor were alike to him. "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth (Luke 12:15). But the people of the world are not yet willing to accept the Bible measure of manhood and womanhood. The age-old question: "What is he worth?" has not been dismissed from human speech and history. "Let not the rich man glory in his riches" (Jeremiah 9:23). Neither should the poor man glory in his poverty.

Pride has magnified the glory of being rich and the handicap of being poor. But the bitter experience of unemployment and depression has sobered our thinking and rebuked our pride. People look with envy upon the palace of the rich, and pass the poor with a feeling of pity. Do the rich hold a monopoly on happiness and opportunity? Have the poor no open road to progress and greatness?

There are some advantages in being poor. At least you are not an object of envy. It may not be very convenient, but it may become a great blessing in disguise. It is worth something to be hungry. The ability to enjoy eating plain food and not have indigestion is something to be coveted by kings and queens. People usually have three meals a day. Poor people are not usually worried about the latest and most tempting ways of preparing their meals. Necessity and a limited supply simplify that matter. The poor man cannot say, with the rich fool, "Soul thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink and be merry" (Luke 12:20). His barns are not too small for his crop. His food supply is scanty and plain. His heart and mind must be concerned about the necessities of life. He has little time for ease; he must eat, drink and work.

Now, all rich people are not fools. They do not all take life easy. Many work harder than they did when they were poor, although the work may be different in kind. It is not easy to keep a fortune after it is made. Neither are all poor people industrious and wise. The poor do not always take life seriously. But the poor have a challenge to work to secure the necessities of life. Work is a blessing. It is a blessing to earn what you get and use. The "road bummer," and the "hitch-hiker" seek to ride in an automobile without paying for gas, tires and up-keep. Let the owner pay the bill. At the end of the journey, he boasts of having traveled without cost. Something for nothing, is the purpose in mind.

Poverty exacts compulsory self-denial. No man can amount to much if gets everything he wants. Sooner or later nature, or man, or God, or life will say "No" to every man. Then he has a chance to grow. Then he has an opportunity to yield to a higher will and a greater plan of life: A child cannot always have his way. He would be spoiled if he did. Poverty keeps many people from being spoiled. Jesus chose the way of poverty to go to the cross. Do not be discouraged because you are poor. Be like Jesus.

I. W. JOHNSON.

AN APPRECIATION OF CALVIN COOLIDGE AS HIS PASTOR KNEW HIM.

The passing of Calvin Coolidge at the early age of sixty years was a sad surprise. If his life be measured by achievement, it was so full of notable accomplishments that it was a great life. After graduating from college and studying law, Calvin Coolidge devoted his life to public service. He began at the foot of the political ladder in his local community, Northampton, Mass., and served through the various offices including the highest, being Mayor of Northampton. Then he entered the Massachusetts Legislature. I remember him as a State Senator, Lieutenant-Governor and Governor of Massachusetts. I was a pastor in Boston at the time and well remember his coming to my church to deliver a public address on a Sunday night. Like all of his addresses, it was full of common sense, patriotic sentiment, religious spirit and appropriate reference to the will and work of God.

In the spring of 1920, as I left Boston to become minister of the First Congregational Church, Washington, D. C., I told him that in scriptural phraseology, I was going to prepare a place for him. That autumn he was elected Vice-President of the United States. He came to Washington the first of March, 1921, and beginning with his first Sunday he was a faithful attendant at the church services for the entire eight years he was in the city.

Mr. Coolidge had grown up in a community where there was no organized church. His parents and grandparents had helped to build the little church building across the street from his father's home, but there was no membership, no minister, no home missionary. His father and grandfather had taken the lead in gathering the people, reading the Bible and teaching the Bible lesson. When Calvin Coolidge was an academy student he was so near home that he returned to spend Sundays in the family circle. When he went to Amherst College he found church attendance compulsory in the college church, so that there was no need of recruiting membership. Consequently he was a mature young man before he lived in a community where an invitation to join the church was extended. He declined such invitations then, but was present regularly in the Congregational Church on the Lord's Day. Later on, when he would have joined the church, he feared to take the step lest political opponents should misinterpret his motive as a bid for the votes of the church people.

Not until he became President and had been elected Honorary Moderator of the National Council of Congregational Churches, did he feel that his true motive would be understood and he gladly came at that time into full church membership.

It was my happy privilege to have innumerable contacts with the Coolidge family. Very rarely has America seen such a happy union of husband and wife, each supplementing the other's gifts, and both cooperating whole heartedly for the best interests of their home, their church and their country.

Mr. Coolidge never missed attending his own church every Lord's Day, if it were humanly possible for him to be present. He was a most attentive and kind listener. He supported the church generously in its financial budget. Religion for him was an inner experience and not an assumed attitude. He was a man of the highest personal integrity, hard working, plain living, devoted to the welfare of his fellowmen. His political principle was to do the right in confidence that an intelligent public would support such procedure. Irrespective of party politics, America needs such men, especially at the present time. May the mantle of his spirit and dedication fall upon the youth of today.

"THE BEGINNING AND THE END OF THE ELON DOLLAR-A-MONTH CLUB."

The Dollar-a-Month Club for Elon College had its inception in a meeting of the Alumni, called by Dr. L. E. Smith, at Elon College, March 19, 1932. It was the writer's privilege to suggest that such a Club be set up to help finance the college. Following that meeting, definite plans were set forth by a committee appointed by Dr. Smith. By the first of May memberships were actually enrolled.

The mechanics are simple: Each member is to send one dollar a month to Elon College. That is, one dollar a month constitutes a membership. However, many persons generously subscribed to three, four and five memberships. It was felt that this contribution would work no hardships on the contributor. As a matter of fact, the plan is adapted for the small contributor. It is a plan through which the person of small means can show his appreciation to his Alma Mater. As such, it predicted a large number of members. Five thousand memberships! $60,000 brought in through the dollar-a-month plan would mean an amount equivalent to a million-dollar endowment. At present, there are approximately five hundred persons in the Club. One-tenth of the way already! It is by no means impossible for the total membership to go steadily up to the goal. There was no concerted drive for members until recently. The Alumni are now actively soliciting by classes, and the total enrollment should mount perceptibly during the coming weeks. At the same time definite efforts are being made for memberships in the churches. Many friends are enlisting. In short, it looks as if the interest is becoming contagious.

The ministry of the movement is apparent. Elon College has justified its existence in the past. It is carrying on during the present financial crisis. Hundreds of people have received their preparation for life there. Its contribution to the total education of North Carolina and Virginia, as well as to other states, is incalculable. A strong and progressive faculty, blessed with an equipment second to none in the South, promises much for the future, if the financial support can be managed adequately. The present crisis has perhaps brought severely to test mass education in America. We must turn to the small, well equipped college to make definite contributions to the educational and spiritual development of our citizens.

What of the future of Elon? Dr. Smith has made the statement that if he can have five thousand persons who will contribute one dollar a month to Elon College for ten years, the institution will be placed on a sound, progressive basis.

There are approximately one thousand graduates of Elon. Several thousand have received one, two and three-year preparation there. Consequently, a sufficient number of former students could be mustered to swell the enrollment considerably. Beyond those who have attended Elon, there are church members and friends who will enroll, once they can be assured that the people whose lives the college has touched directly are behind the movement. Thereafter the success of Elon will be assured.

Many people have received invaluable aid in their life-preparation from Elon College. Now, if it is as blessed to give as to receive, the appeal just now for members to the Club cannot go unheeded. Join the number now, doing what they can for the college. Encourage others to become members. Your personal assistance is essential, indispensable. M. L. PATRICK, '24.

AN EVENING TALK.

We sit by the fire, my wife and I, and I tell her of a brother of mine who, fifty years ago, had a cornfield in Ohio in which he wanted to raise a crop of corn and a crop of pumpkins at the same time. Being very busy, he engaged a young man to go to the field and plant the pumpkin seeds. Three weeks later he looked for signs of his pumpkins and saw none. Six weeks later, as he walked through his field, he came to a big decayed hollow stump which was profusely decorated with pumpkin vines, and the mystery of the seed was solved.

Did the boy want to go to a ball game? Did he want to go fishing? Anyhow, he wanted a day off, and thought he had found a way to get it without being found out.

A cartoon I saw when a boy, represented the little Negro boy as standing in front of his master, who had accused him of stealing chickens. The small boy wore an old straw hat with a big split in the crown on the side from which six little chickens were sticking their heads. With an air of innocence the boy was saying to his master: "Massa, I ain't been stealin' no chickens."

Do we remember how David tried to hide his sin and failed? Ananias and Sapphira failed.

Some people say there is no truth in the old Book, but all about us we see the truth of the saying that "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." (Gal. 6:7.)

In the case of the boy and the pumpkin seeds, as I heard the story from my brother, the boy in the final settlement had deducted from his wages the price of the seeds, the loss of his time, the loss occasioned by not planting the seed, and the loss of his position, not to mention the reputation he established as a dishonest, unreliable boy.

Some one has said: "You may break the Ten Commandments, but if you do, they will break you."

In the recent Japanese papers there is an account of twenty-three members of the Tokio City Council who are in prison for bribery, all of whom are politically ruined and held up to public contempt with the loss of money in fines. In Proverbs 13:15, Solomon says: "The way of the transgressor is hard."

This led us to talk of a book by Dr. Chas. E. Jefferson, in which he refers to the idea held by some people that there is no hell. If God is too good to permit so much suffering in the next world, why does he permit so much of it in this world? We agree with Dr. Jefferson that many people, because of their sins, find this world a hell. One of the questions about which we need to think is whether the Master knew what he was talking about when he gave us the parable of Dives and Lazarus.

One of the most heart-breaking things in the Book is the tremendous emphasis put on the love of God and his great desire that all men be saved and come to a knowledge of the truth. I. Tim. 2:4, "What more can he do for his vineyard that he hath not done?" What stronger motives can he set before a sinful world to have them love the good and hate the evil? But is it not very wonderful that we mortals, creatures of a day, can defy him? That we can go our own way, if we like, even though the result be our ruin?

But we have talked long enough, and it is bedtime. A. D. WOODWORTH.

THE FORGOTTEN BOY.

The forgotten boy—not by father and mother, especially by mother—but forgotten by society, the state or nation, is among our major problems today. On the street, the highway, and freight car, this boy may be seen. He is the future citizen of this great nation. He represents a cross-section of the American home broken by economic and social conditions. He is from the cottage, the cabin, the mansion. This boy is not to be condemned, but instead he needs our love, our sympathy, and above all a guiding hand and a steadying influence. In many instances his home has been changed, broken, or otherwise reconditioned so as to fail in meeting the needs, the hopes, and the ambitions of this boy.

This forgotten boy has been thrown upon his own initiative, upon a cold world, and at a time when the public has assumed a negative attitude toward all assistance, or if not in this way, the spirit of generosity and helpfulness is so handicapped that the net result is the same. This boy may survive and he may not. Dangers, temptations, all lurk in his way. Unless he be made of the stronger fiber of life he will fail to meet the temptations and the tests. He may fill responsible places in our business, social, and educational life, or he may fill our jails, our penitentiaries, and our almshouses.

Senator James Couzens, of Michigan, has introduced a bill providing for the shelter, food, care, and training of this boy by our army camps and army officers. The problem is national, the army posts are our own, built and maintained by our taxes—your taxes and mine, and this forgotten boy is your boy and mine. No greater testimony of America's spirit could be manifested than to accept the opportunity to shelter, feed and train this forgotten boy. It would be better that he be a willing charge upon us now when we have an opportunity to save him, than a future enforced charge upon society, the courts, and the penal institutions of the land. It is our choice willingly to support this forgotten boy now or be compelled to support him in the future. Wise Americans should make a wise choice.

TIMOTHY THOMAS.

Christianity is not a voice in the wilderness, but a life in the world. It is not an idea in the air, but feet on the ground, going God's way. It is not an exotic to be kept under glass, but a hardy plant to bear twelve manner of fruits in all kinds of weather. Nothing we can say to the Lord, no calling him by great or dear names, can take the place of doing his will. We may cry out about the beauty of eating bread with him in his kingdom, but it is wasted breath and a rootless hope, unless we plow and plant in his kingdom here and now. To remember him at his table and to forget him at ours, is to have invested in bad securities. There is no substitute for plain everyday goodness.—Selected.

The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance. In size, 3¾x4½ inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and nonouncing text. The edition on India paper is ideal, and we know of no better gift at the price than one in the finer bindings.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

PRAYER.

O God, our Rock, in whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning, thou givest a security and peace that cannot be shaken, a strength that supports our feeble frames, a love that inspires and lifts to heights eternal and bathes with sweetest bliss our strivings to attain. For the glad New Year with its spirit of promise, efface thou from life the blot of unholy ambition and make our strivings pure. For Jesus' sake.—Amen.

LAYMEN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY INQUIRY

Papers and magazines far and wide are given divers opinions, reactions and conclusions as to the appraisal of missions recently made by self-constituted laymen who went abroad, visited mission fields and for two years studied, and have now appraised, foreign missionary work. As one reads the report, one realizes that one is in a dissecting room rather than in a nursery or a school-room. So far, from the common run of such reports, this one now in the public eye, is variously termed not the "Appraisal Report," but the "Betrayal Report," and, instead of a "fact-finding committee," may call it a "fault-finding committee."

One may say, however, that if a committee of laymen were to go out to analyze and dissect and dismember the work of the churches of America, the results, the criticisms, the failures would be about the same here as are found in this report about the mission work in the foreign field. We presume that these laymen did not expect people to agree with them, certainly people who have a passion for soul-saving and a zeal for carrying, at all hazards and all costs, the Gospel of the Son of God to the uttermost parts. We presume not a member of the Laymen's Committee, for instance, would have cared to go, or would now care to go, to fields afar to burn out there, to live, to die and to be buried there for the sake of the divine One who instituted missions, who, even through the folly and blindness and prejudice of man, has carried on his work of saving souls and enlarging his kingdom.

We would have been afraid of the report, indeed, if this committee of the intelligentia, this self-constituted committee of laymen, this appraisal committee, had come back praising, applauding, approving all the men and women, the methods and measures used on the foreign field in promoting the Kingdom of our Lord. If one wishes the church at home, with its measures and methods, stripped of its soul and held up to just and unjust criticisms, commend us to a body of self-constituted laymen who have more knowledge of natural causes than they have zeal for divine causes; and who, in their own wisdom, reckon and rate the men, the methods and the measures that God has used through the years of building up his church and carrying on his work in the world. Verily, God's ways are not man's ways, and somewhere it is pointed out also that "the weakness of God is stronger than the strength of men, and the foolishness of God is wiser than the wisdom of men."

This writer has read the large volume embodying the report of the appraisal committee, and enough to make other volumes about the report, and he feels that he has read it with profit, though, certainly, not in any measure agreeing with many of the findings and recommendations of the report. Those who know most about missions and who have studied and given their hearts and lives to missions through the years, many of them, welcome the facts and the constructive suggestions of the committee, but condemn and repudiate in severest terms many of the conclusions and recommendations. Possibly the most complete summing up of this report and appraisal of it comes from no other source than the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, made up of the mission boards of practically all Protestant denominations, and this we commend to SUN readers:

"The Foreign Missions Conference of North America recognizes gratefully the earnest and unselfish services of the Appraisal Commission of the Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry and its constructive proposals. We are at the same time solicitous with reference to unfavorable reactions throughout the church to the press releases given out in advance of the appearance of the report, and also to a number of points in the report itself.

"We recommend that in the measures adopted by the boards for fostering the study of the report special attention should be given to clearing up misunderstandings and to removing wrong impressions, and that we seek to take to heart and profit by the timely and forward-looking recommendations of the report.

"The Conference, in the light of the present most critical world situation, and of the inspiring challenge of the Herrnhut meeting, as well as of recognition on the part of the Appraisal Committee of the need for adequate aims and message for the missionary enterprise, wish to reaffirm the Message of the Jerusalem Meeting of the International Missionary Council, and the findings of the meetings of the Council at Oxford and Herrnhut, dealing with the basis and central emphasis of the world mission in which we are united with the older and younger churches throughout the world.

"The most recent of these three statements of the aims of the missionary enterprise is that of the Council meeting at Herrnhut, Germany:

"We are convinced that our missionary task is to proclaim in word and life God's revelation and redemption in Jesus Christ. If we have anything to bring in the name of God to a world in need, it is certainly not our own piety, our own way of life, our own modes of thought or our own human help. What the church has to give in its world mission is the good news of a divine act in history, of the Word made flesh. Apart from this there is no Christian mission."

THE COMMISSION ON EVANGELISM AND DEVOTIONAL LIFE.

To Congregational and Christian Pastors:

As we approach this Lenten season we realize that our people are facing problems and are carrying burdens as in no other year of our memory. For many, these sorrows and evils are not of their own making. Truly the victims of our social order suffer. That many of those responsible for the evils of our common life do not bear a full share of the suffering makes life even harder for the poor.

In such a time as this the church has its immediate responsibility to those in great want. It must see that people are fed and clothed, and cooperate to the fullest extent with community and state organizations for relief. For many the chief need is not for material but for spiritual things—faith, courage, steadfastness and these blessings the church must bring to needy men.

Above all else we must help our people to know that the evils of this day are due to human failure and short-comings and are contrary to the will of God as taught by Jesus. God has blessed us, but we have not made good use of his blessings. To bring about a permanent change in human welfare requires that men have a new ideal of life. The "get all you can and give as little as you must" spirit has led men to woe and disaster. This is God's world and it must be organized and conducted by the eternal principles of righteousness.

These are days when our preaching of God's law, as well as of his love, should be strong and convincing. We must reach the roots of being and change lives. We must build the kingdom of good-will on earth. Only that kingdom has enduring foundations. The church must make real the spirit of Jesus in the world and must say to men with all earnestness that the sufferings of the world are due mainly to the selfishness and short-sightedness of men. We believe it is God's will that all men shall be blessed, and we must not permit the greed and selfishness of men to thwart his purpose.

The church has a responsibility for social rebuilding it can in no wise evade. This is a time of crisis, when the message of Jesus for men and for nations must be vigorously proclaimed.

May this Lenten season be richly blessed in your church through your ministry. May we help one another in every way in these days of fellowship in suffering and of great responsibility.

We shall be pleased if you will let us have your requests for Lenten material and if you will give us your suggestions for making our common work more effective in these anxious days.

Sincerely yours,

FREDERICK L. FAGLEY,

FELLOWSHIP OF PRAYER.

The Fellowship of Prayer, a devotional booklet for daily use during Lent, is ready for distribution. This year it has been prepared by Dr. Chas Gaius Glenn Atkins. The devotional studies begin on March 1st, and continue to Easter. This is the fifteenth year for the Fellowship of Prayer, which has become a very helpful part of the Lenten program of the churches throughout the nation. The booklet this year is one of the best ever issued and the cover-page one of the most attractive.

Churches may order the booklet from the Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life, Room 913, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York City. Price, 3c per copy; 25 or more, 2c per copy.

SPECIAL PROGRAM AT HOLLAND.

News comes from the Holland Woman's Missionary Society of a special program they had at their last regular meeting. This Society is the combined or merged effort of the two Woman's Societies of the church, and the merger is a delight to all and is already proving that in union there is strength.

Mrs. A. J. Holland is the efficient president, and Mrs. Chas. Daughtrey, secretary, and they hold their meetings at the parsonage. A splendid group of programs has been outlined and the Society has taken on new enthusiasm and zeal.

Mrs. W. M. Jay, spiritual life superintendent, conducted a beautiful devotional entitled "The Leadership of Jesus," in which all took part.

The special feature of the program was an address by Mrs. J. E. Cartwright, of Norfolk, Va., who spoke on the "Merits of the Mission Study Courses." Only those who have heard Mrs. Cartwright speak, can appreciate what a feast they enjoyed, for she is a forceful, earnest speaker, and brought many words of encouragement and helpfulness to her audience.

Mrs. Dudley, of Cypress Chapel, a sister of Mrs. Cartwright, Mrs. N. G. Newman and Miss Lillye Holland were guests.

Dainty refreshments were served by the hostesses, Mrs. B. J. Beale, Mrs. Chas. Daughtrey and Mrs. B. F. Morgan.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

GOOD NEWS.

Young people in the Western North Carolina Conference are planning a week-end conference for April 1st and 2nd, with Miss Lucy Eldredge present to aid them in making plans for their work. Carl Key, a ministerial student at Elon, is taking seriously his job of being president and is doing some real work. From all reports, the young people are responding readily.

Plans for a similar conference in Eastern Virginia will soon be announced. This date will likely be March 25th-26th. It is expected that Miss Eldredge will be in this meeting also. One of the Youth Fellowship leaders is hoping to visit all churches of this Conference soon in the interest of young people's work.

All young people in these conferences will want to plan to be present, if possible, for those who attend with a will to learn will find life much richer after sharing in these programs.

PUBLICATIONS.

Another rung has been scaled in the ladder of time. We have embarked on the New Year of 1933. Some have made resolutions as sign-posts along the way. Many have given no serious thought to the problems to be faced and goals they would like to attain.

Being interested particularly in our Christian Young People's work, this writer wonders if the leaders of our groups and the officers in our "Youth Fellowship" have thought seriously of their duty and responsibility as servants of our Master. We are thinking particularly of those persons in charge of our publications. The beginning of the New Year is an excellent time to begin soliciting your fellow church members for subscriptions to our church publications. A goal adopted by several groups reads like this: "One hundred new subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN." Will we reach our quota?

It would be a fine thing if each supervisor of publications in our "Fellowship" groups would select a plan of procedure for the next six months and work the plan.

And in conclusion, we would suggest that as many young people's groups as possible organize "Reading Circles" in the local churches. The purpose of this "Circle" would be to read as many books as possible pertaining to our young people's work. Several of the best books have been suggested in our "Fellowship Calendar." Another book recommended by Dr. H. T. Stock is, "Young People and Money" (from the Young People's Department, 15c).

LEADERSHIP TRAINING ON THE JOB.

In these days of "cuts" in every phase of church work, it is natural to feel that some of our leadership schools and classes must be suspended, unfortunate though it be. But there is a way, as many churches are discovering, of keeping the program of leadership improvement going. This way is through a more careful planning of the workers' conference. Nor is this time-honored method a mere substitute; it has distinct values of its own. It is easy to set up; it has no imposed "standards," "red-tape," or "credits"; it is local church "centered"; it develops a "home-grown" leadership; it costs practically nothing.

The Department of Leadership Training of the Education Society has for these reasons prepared two series of suggestive programs for these workers' conferences, each series containing a program for each month in the year. Themes like these are treated: "Taking Stock of Our Teaching," "Encouraging Pupils to Study," "How to Use the Bible," "Preparing the Lesson," "Jesus, the World's Teacher," "Handwork: Its Use and Abuse," "Building a School Consciousness." These programs are issued in mimeographed form and are available at 5c each or 50c for a series of twelve. A descriptive leaflet, "Helps for the Church School Workers' Conference," will be sent upon request. The editor of this page will be glad to supply you from his office in Waverly, Virginia.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

TOPIC FOR JANUARY 29, 1933.

"What Good is Our Church Doing?"—Matt. 5:13:16.

Monday—"Calls to Worship," Psalm 100:1-6.
 Tuesday—"A Witness to Truth," I. Tim. 2:15, 16.
 Wednesday—"Brings Salvation," Acts 4:11, 12.
 Thursday—"Transforms Lives," Eph. 4:20-24.
 Friday—"Teaches Law-Observance," I. Peter 2:13-16.
 Saturday—"Influences the Community," Matt. 13:33.

All Christian Endeavorers pledge their loyalty to the church and undertake to work "For Christ and the Church." In order to be loyal it is necessary to understand what the church is and what it is doing. That is why many denominations have set apart January 29th as Denominational Day, and why we are studying this particular topic in Christian Endeavor.

This is also the beginning of Christian Endeavor Week. Many societies will plan special programs for the entire week, which will be kept in memory of the founding of Christian Endeavor at Portland, Maine, on February 2, 1881, by Dr. Francis E. Clark.

The Disciples of Christ have planned a radio missionary program for this occasion. It is a good idea. A radio is placed in the front of the gathering and connected up with an adjoining room, so that representatives from various home and foreign mission points can speak and tell of the work which they are doing. Information for such a program can be gathered from The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty, The Missionary Herald, THE CHRISTIAN SUN, The Guest Book, and many other sources. The station would probably be called ABCFM (meaning American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.) This kind of program, if well done, will prove to be both interesting and helpful.

You may want to present the local work of your church in all of its phases, as well as the missionary enterprises. Every Christian Endeavorer would be well informed concerning all of the work of his own church, both locally and as a denomination.

There are many critics of the church today, and some of the criticisms seem to be deserved. We should try to discover the weaknesses of our churches and correct them by putting in those things that are helpful. Dr. Stock, of our own church, writing in The Christian Endeavor World says: "The church reminds me of God, the church interprets Jesus, and the church shows the meaning of life." An institution that does these things is certainly worthy of our best services.

The hymns for this program will be such as: "I Love the Church, O God," "The Morning Light Is Breaking," "Christ for the World, We Sing," "The King's Business," and other missionary hymns.

During the program there should be prayer for the various enterprises of the church, such as our orphanage, colleges, boards of education and missionary work of various kinds throughout the world. The closing moments should be consecrated to the good which our church is doing.

CHRISTIAN TEMPLE.

A very unusual and interesting series of worship services have drawn capacity audiences to the Christian Temple, Norfolk, on Sunday nights, where Dr. Jason Noble Pierce is beginning his fourth month as minister. Selections from plays and dramatic poems have been presented by Dean Walton Pyre, well-known actor-interpreter to illustrate the sermons preached the first four Sunday nights of the month of January. Immediately following the sermons by Dr. Pierce and using the pulpit platform as his stage with the lights in the auditorium turned out and a spot-light playing upon him, Dr. Pyre acts the play chosen to illustrate the subject of the evening. The following inspirational and uplifting subjects are included in the series:

January 1st—Sermon theme, "Brotherly Love." Illustrated by scenes from Charles Rann Kennedy's play, "The Servant in the House."

January 8th—Sermon theme, "The Right Kind of Home." Illustrated by dramatic selections, "Home," by Edgar Guest; "The House by the Side of the Road," by Sam Walter Foss, and by Richard Harding Davis' one-act play, "The Littlest Girl."

January 15th—Sermon theme, "The Soul's Destiny." Illustrated by dramatic selections from Rudyard Kipling, the poet of achievement.

January 22nd—Sermon theme, "Many Men With Many Minds." Illustrated by dramatic selections from Robert Browning, the poet of aspiration.

The writer was out of town for the first of this series of services, but she would like to share with every SUN reader the inspiration of the second service. It was a real treat as Dr. Pyre caught the spirit of Dr. Pierce's message and emphasized the importance of the fact that love never faileth (I. Cor. 13:8) in a real, Christian home; that true fathers and mothers do not give their children a stone when they ask for bread (Matt. 7:9), but give them love, devotion, tender care, watchful guidance, the right kind of influence and training. How sad is the fact that so many fathers and mothers deny their children the right of a Christian heritage or else send them to Sunday School to learn right living, Christian teaching, but hold up before them such a selfish, harmful, vicious way of living that it is little wonder the children do not learn to "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness," and are denied the privilege of abundant living through Jesus Christ, our Saviour, Friend, and Lord.

What food for thought and meditation for those who are fathers and mothers and those young people who are to establish homes in the future. Our civilization will only be basically Christian when the homes of the nation are founded on Christ-like principles. ETHEL HURLEY.

When we want to make anything a success in worldly affairs we put our whole heart into it. And is this not much more necessary in the service of a holy God? Is he not worthy? Does not his great holiness, and the natural aversion of our hearts from God, demand it? The whole heart is needed in the worship and service of God.—Murray.

JESUS AND THE SABBATH.

LESSON V.—JANUARY 29, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath; so that the Son of Man is Lord even of the Sabbath."—Mark 2:27, 28.

LESSON TEXT: Mark 2:23-3:5.

The Sabbath in Jesus' Day.

The Sabbath in Jesus' day had become so hedged about with laws and traditions that it had become a burden instead of a blessing. Furthermore it had lost its spiritual significance because of the exacting demands of the letter of the law. We have two instances in point in today's lesson. In the first instance the disciples were walking with Jesus through a field of corn (probably our wheat or barley), and being hungry, they plucked a few heads of the grain, rubbed them out between their hands, and ate them. Immediately the carping Pharisees condemned them on the grounds that they had "worked" on the Sabbath day. They were, of course, technically correct—the disciples had "threshed" on the Sabbath day. But, alas for the Pharisees, while they were so alive to the finer points of the law. Their blind adherence to the petty details of law had withered their hearts. They had no compassion for hungry men. They were exact in ceremony; they were dead in spirit.

Jesus lifted the whole question out of the realm of the letter of the law and showed it against a background of the spirit of the law. He answered the criticism of the Pharisees by reminding them that on one occasion, David and his men, because they were hungered, ate the shew bread, which it was not lawful for any but the priests to eat. Human need must take precedence over ceremony and ritual, said Jesus. Whenever a religious form or ceremony, or whenever ritual, comes before human need, it must be put aside.

But Jesus goes further. He announces an abiding principle. "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath: therefore the Son of Man is Lord also of the Sabbath." The Sabbath is not an end in itself. It is not an arbitrary thing imposed by a capricious God upon his people. It has been made to serve the highest interests of man. It is a means to an end. It is a day of rest and worship, designed to minister to the highest well-being of man. It is to be used in the light of its relation to him who is its Lord, the Son of Man, and the Son of God. It is to be used in such a way that it will help men and women, boys and girls to come increasingly unto the measure of the stature of fullness in him, who is its Lord, and in whose spirit it must be used. The ultimate test which we should apply to what we do on the Sabbath is whether it is making for a well-rounded and full grown Christian. To be sure we ought not to go back to the straight-laced Puritan Sabbath. But we ought not to go to the other extreme and make Sunday just like any other day, which America is fast doing.

"The Son of Man is Lord even of the Sabbath." He is. We Christians do not observe the original Sabbath. Instead, we observe Sunday, the first day of the week, the day on which the Lord was raised from the dead.

Jesus' Use of the Sabbath.

The story of the healing of the man with the withered hand is suggestive of at least some of the uses to which Jesus put the Sabbath. In the first place, "He entered into the synagogue." It was his custom to do it. He recognized the value of regular public worship in the house of prayer. And he did this not only because it gave him an opportunity to speak his message; He did it because it gave him an opportunity to renew his spirit. Alas for the men and women who go through the weeks and months without the help and strength and inspiration which worship of God in common with their fellowmen in the house of God brings. And in these days that make such demands upon us, how desirable and necessary to renew our inner resources through public and private worship.

Jesus used the day for helping others. The scribes and the Pharisees, if they had helped the man at all, would have made him wait until the morrow. In keeping with the principle which Jesus announced, human need must have precedence over ritual and ceremony. His question, "Is it lawful to do good on the Sabbath day, or to do evil?" goes to the heart of the matter. We are to use the Sabbath day in such a way that we not only enrich our own lives; we are to enrich the lives of others.

What inconsistent things men are. Here were these Pharisees condemning Jesus because he was about to heal a man on the Sabbath day, but justifying themselves in pulling a sheep out of the ditch on the Sabbath day. It was not the first time, or the last that men have thought the animals and things are worth more than men.

Jesus' use of the Sabbath would give sanction to many things in modern life, which as works of necessity, or works of mercy, are concerned with ministering to the abiding needs of human life. But it would condemn many things which have crept into the observance of the Sabbath in America today.

The healing of the man with the withered hand deserves a few comments. Jesus healed by the word of his power. He asked the man to do the seemingly impossible. He demanded obedience before he gave his blessing. He was righteously indignant at the hardness of heart of those who were supposed to be religious. He responded to the faith of men.

POUNDED AGAIN.

The members and friends of Antioch Christian Church again showed their appreciation of the pastor and his family when on the evening of January 16th, they visited the parsonage and left many good things to eat.

I mention some of the articles given, and many of them were in abundance: Flour, meal, butter, sugar, milk, eggs, sweet potatoes, Irish potatoes, side of bacon, fresh pork, two shoulders, fresh sausage smoked sausage, canned fruit, pickles, preserves, greens and a chicken. One truckload of wood was given by a Methodist friend, and some sausage was given by Baptist friends.

For all these and the fine spirit manifested, the pastor and his family are thankful. God bless these good people, that they may be the richer because of their generosity.

The record of automobile fatalities in England is one to 118 cars. Automobile fatalities in the United States (dry) are one to 1,121 cars. Yet England has better traffic and better enforced laws. What, then, do our countrymen anticipate the return of liquor to this land will do? It will mean nine deaths to every one when dry.—Central Christian Advocate.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy.

"The opening of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."—Psalm 119:130.

MONDAY.

ALL OTHER GROUND IS SINKING SAND.

"My flesh and my heart faileth; but God is the strength of my life."—Ps. 73:26.

"I can do all things through Christ that strengtheneth me."—Phil. 4:13.

"Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff they strengtheneth me."—Ps. 23:4.

It is darkness that makes a light so welcome. It is the darkness of the sick-room or the house of mourning in which the "night-lamp" shines so softly. Of all the good books we read, and as much as we neglect the Bible, it is the latter that we will value most when life is slipping away and eternity is dawning.

If this is true, why not face that fact and give the Bible its place in our lives now? Honest obedience to its precepts is the only way to happiness and the only source of power to give victory over adversities.

Our three texts today is the record of every true child of God in revealed and conquering faith. It is the record of the way by which the redeemed love of God is made known. It is the holy place of every soul where he may meet God, and where God draws near to him and declares to him his will unto salvation—the holy place of unqualified faith.

Prayer—O Lord, our God and our Father, certify in our hearts and consciences this day the witness of thy Spirit, whereby we may be assured that none other than thou is able to speak to our souls the words of eternal life.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE OPENING OF GOD'S WORD.

"The opening of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."—Ps 119:130.

The opening of this Family Altar page of THE SUN is intended to be the opening of God's word in every home where it goes. First, there is the question of God's word. That is given to us so plain that the most simple can understand. Second, our comments are intended to be an unfolding and as the opening of a door to a beautiful room. May it be so.

This 19th Psalm is a gem of spiritual beauty. To read its verses is like walking into a room of attractiveness, beauty and glory. From verse to verse we are led through places of religious faith and love, and our guide seems to be conversant with the holiest secrets of the Christian's way.

As we contemplate every department of this faith and experience, our life swells with fuller trust and devotion. New longings are born into the soul and it pants for the Spirit of God as one pants for the happiness of a home he does not possess. Desire for the purity of life is intensified, anxiety for deliverance from sin increases, and the soul yearns for the heavenly state, where no power shall enslave or blind.

Prayer—O Lord, our God, shine thou upon us like the sun from heaven. We want to live in thy light; we want our hearts to be like thine. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE WHISPER OF JESUS.

"Come and let us reason together."—Isa. 1:18.

The first requisite of all wise action is thoughtfulness. We often hear someone say, "I didn't think:" to which comes the reply, "But you should have thought."

What is this but a partial answer to the divine invitation, "Come and let us reason together?" There would be less foolish action and more wise, good, and happy action, if every one would take the pains, upon entering the chamber of the soul, to reflect upon who he meets there and whose shrine that chamber is. It is God's place in the soul, where God speaks in a still small voice, telling us what is right and what is wrong.

There is a story of a child on being asked to tell what is conscience, he could not tell. The teacher asked, "Did you ever feel anything inside of you when you were about to do something, which seemed to say to you, 'You ought not to do that?'" "Oh, yes sir!" "Well, what is that?" "That is Jesus whispering to you."

We all have these whispers of Jesus. They will not fail us if we take the time to reason with him about it.

Prayer—

"Gracious spirit, dwell with me;
I myself would gracious be,
And with words that help and heal
Would thy life in mine reveal,
And with actions bold and meek
Would for Christ, my Saviour, speak."

—LYNCH.

THURSDAY.

BEYOND CONSCIENCE.

"Without faith it is impossible to please him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him."—Heb. 11:6.

A trained conscience may tell us very plainly what is right and what is wrong; it may be a very good judge, and in it we may be conscious of the whisperings of our Lord, but we ask is it complete? To be sure not.

Beyond conscience there is a providence of watchfulness and regulated care. There is something in the revelations of Jesus to the soul that gives us a foundation of righteousness so transcendent that it corroborates the teachings of conscience and enables one to proceed in a line of action manifestly God's will. This is a spiritual intelligence that comprehends the magnitude of human sin, and that understanding does something for us that conscience can never do. It is a field where forgiveness for sin takes place and where brightest hope ensues; it is the field of the daily, hourly work of God's blessed Spirit in all those who diligently seek him.

Prayer—

"Truthful Spirit, dwell with me;
I myself would truthful be,
And with wisdom kind and clear
Let thy life in mine appear,
And with actions brotherly Speak my Lord's sincerity."

—LYNCH.

FRIDAY.

THE SANCTUARY OF THE SOUL.

"Thus saith the Lord, stand in the ways and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls."—Jer. 6:16.

This is a picture of one doing just what he is called upon to do when he reasons—consults his conscience and enters into the Holy Place of his soul where God is and reveals himself to him.

Reference here to the "old paths," is to purity and truth. We must more and more believe in the absolute safety of purity, truth, honesty, justice, love and mercy. This field of thought and living must become the infinite domain wherein the soul is bidden to range with insatiable desire. As this field grows wider and clearer, men will cease to talk or think of position, honor, self-glory, yea, even orthodoxy, and stand out free for God. These truths are the truths of life from the foundation of the world. Let us all stand in them and ask for them and live in them.

Prayer—

"Holy Spirit, dwell with me;
I myself would holy be;
Separate from sin, I would Choose and cherish all things good,
And whatever I can be,
Give to him, who gave to thee."

—LYNCH.

SATURDAY.

READY FOR EMERGENCIES.

"Now the Lord Jehovah hath sent me, and his Spirit."—Read Isa. 48:12-16.

Several vessels of the U. S. Navy are being employed for use as emergency power stations. The ships will move here and there along the coast and up the rivers, going where, because of drought the local power supply has temporarily failed.

This is a new and valuable use for old ships that would otherwise lie idle or be dismantled and go to the junk-heap. At the same time it furnishes a capital parable for human beings.

For the flexibility of spiritual power is an important element in its usefulness. If a man can not work for Christ except in one place or with certain sorts of people or under certain limited conditions, his value for the kingdom of God is sadly restricted. The Master needs servants who will come when he says "Come," and go when he bids them "Go."

Prayer—Thou, our Father, knowest we are needed, and where we can do the best work for thee. Commission us, direct us, guide us to our tasks.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

WELLS.

"Thou shalt call thy walls Salvation, and thy gates Praise."—Read Isa. 60:15-22.

Mary Slessor, the eminent missionary to Africa, was, when at home in Scotland, so shy that the presence of a man in the audience prevented her from speaking, and so timid that she would not cross a field if a cow was in it. Yet when she went to Africa she left the coast alone, and made her way into the black horrors of a savage land. She thought nothing of walking unarmed, by night as well as by day, through the dense forest to save some poor woman who had been cast out because she had given birth to twins. The secret of her amazing courage was her steadfast trust in God. Once she said to a young colleague: "Do lassie, do? You've not got to do, you've just got to be, and the doing will follow."

We need not be missionaries to go to African jungles to feel our dependence on God and the strength it gives us. We have to resist many attacks of the evil one, and we must constantly keep within the walls of Salvation and the gates of Praise. God is our strong tower. God is our invincible defense.

Prayer—Our Saviour, we trust in thee. Our Redeemer, we rest in thee. Our Comforter, we rejoice in thee. Our Father, we are thy children, and in thee we will ever confide. —Amen.

AND AFTER BABYLON.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"And after they were brought to Babylon." Matt. 1:12.

Reading the Bible through from cover to cover causes one to read some chapters that perhaps otherwise one would not take time to read. I was reading the genealogy of Jesus in the first chapter of Matthew, when this strange line leaped before my eyes: "And after they were brought to Babylon . . ." Like a flash it occurred to me that there was a "before Babylon," and then there were the days of "Babylon," and then there were the days "after Babylon." The days of Babylon would have been the finish of any ordinary nation.

It was not enough to stop the line. It is remarkable that there is any further story to tell—but I read: "From . . . Babylon unto Christ are fourteen generations." Babylon could not stop the line which was fed by the faith of Abraham, and the devotion to Ruth. It might go into captivity, but not into oblivion. The promises of God are sure promises, and they will be fulfilled.

I.

In the second book of Kings, after the story is told of the destroying of the city of Jerusalem, the sacking of the silver and gold of the great temple, the murder of many men of arms, and the carrying away captive many thousands of others this succinct sentence follows: "So Judah was carried away out of their land." Nebuchadnezzar's armies had stolen their wealth and pillaged their Promised Land, but their unseen treasuries of faith and trust in Jehovah their God had not yet been taken! They still held on to the promise God had given Abraham: "And I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing; and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse them that curseth thee; and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed;" and to their great king David: "And thine house and thy kingdom shall be established forever before thee: thy throne shall be established forever"; and now they were remembering the covenant made with them in the days of Moses: "The Lord thy God will turn thy captivity, and have compassion upon thee, and will return and gather thee from all the nations, whither the Lord thy God hath scattered thee." Upon such promises as these a record of faith had been written. It is true there was transgression, much transgression; but all along the line had been the keepers of the faith.

The promises to Abraham; the mercies of Joseph; the deliverance and laws of Moses; the victories of Joshua; the judgments of Samuel; the triumphs and songs of David; the glories of Solomon; the performances of priests; and the predictions of prophets was a religious heritage than which there was none more glorious.

They had had prosperity, triumph in war, accumulation of wealth, writing of great laws, and the making of a great literature. A feeling of security and blessing, power and might, had caused their leaders to betray the country into countless evils, and had set a net for their own captivity. Much of the same story could be written of our own country, and the points of parallel would be striking.

II.

Then they were swept loose from their moorings. Nearly seventy thousand men, not to speak of women and children, were carried some six hundred miles beyond the sands of the great Syrian desert into Babylon. Hitherto great colonies of them had been carried down into Egypt. Dr. Foakes-Jackson says: "The captivity of Judah is one of the greatest events in the history of religion. With that captivity the history of Israel ends, and the history of the Jews commences." Dr. Thomas Nicol, of the University of Aberdeen, says: "Placed in the midst of heathen and idolatrous surroundings they recoiled from the abominations of their neighbors and clung to the faith of their fathers in the God of Abraham. Exposed to the taunts and the scorn of nations that despised them, they formed an inner circle of their own, and cultivated that exclusiveness which has marked them ever since."

Too often we are chafed by the chastisements of God, when we should be disciplined and blessed in the end thereby. Judah was about to lose his life, and the history of Israel about to be finished. They were at the bottom level of their loyalty to Jehovah. They were beginning to lose their courage and self-respect as a people. Every year found them more disintegrated. And their enemies found them easy marks for their campaigns. They were suffering, and losing. The armies of Babylon came along and captured them, took their treasuries, and their gold and silver; destroyed their altars, and their temple, and beat down their city walls. Only a few of the poorest of the land left they to take care of the vineyards for them.

Families must have been wiped out wholesale, other families must have been broken to pieces; and as in the case of the transporting of the Arcadian farmers, there must have been great heartache, and heartbreak. I guess we would call that trouble. Indeed, we cannot minimize the present-day distress that is actually apparent on every hand. We must be too brave, and honest to exaggerate it. We will remember that we are the inheritors, through Jesus Christ and his followers, of their religious traditions, courage and faith.

Why did not they give up? Was it not time? Had they not had enough? Despised and rejected, robbed and persecuted, uprooted and transported like dumb driven cattle, surely they were having enough. But when the outside altars were torn down, the altars within their souls were being built; when their sacred vessels of gold and silver without were being stolen, new and finer treasuries within were being found full of eternal faith and trust in Jehovah their God.

Had not God delivered and blessed their Abraham, their Joseph, their Moses, their Joshua, their David, their Elijah, and their people always in time of distress? Yes, he had promised and he had performed. They had sinned and they must suffer, and for his name's sake he would still lead them in paths of righteousness. So will he lead us. For we likewise trust him, his own Son is our Saviour and Leader, or Redeemer and our Intercessor, we are a part of his church against which the gates of hell shall not prevail. Truly for our sins there shall be suffering, but with our discipline divine courage and faith shall arise, a new humility and understanding shall come, and we shall yet see the travail of his soul and be satisfied.

III.

"So all the generations from Abraham to David are fourteen generations; and from David until the carrying away into Babylon are fourteen generations; and from the carrying away into Babylon unto Christ are fourteen generations." Captured, but not conquered! From the depths of despair they arose. The line from Abraham to Christ is not broken. In trying times they did their part. They did not quit. They did not give up. Their young Daniels flung open their prison windows to the east, and facing toward their Land of Promise, prayed their prayers of supplication and faith to Jehovah their God. Their young devotees dared the flames of furnace and young mothers taught their first born sons that they were the successors of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. In some humble place a King would be born! Isaiah had said so, and other prophets, too, and all the nations of the earth should be blessed of him. Their old people must have constantly looked to God, but let it not be forgotten that their young mothers, and young fathers, with their tiny babes in their arms, taught that sublime

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends

The report this week is the beginning of our work for the year 1933. As we look back over the year 1932, while we had many disappointments, we find that we have had many blessings for which to be thankful. We passed through one of the severest droughts we have ever experienced, and our crops almost a failure, our income the smallest in years, the cry of the widow and the fatherless more appealing than ever before.

Our people have been kind and considerate and we are not suffering. We are thankful to God for his many blessings. We had no sickness to amount to anything during the entire year. The doctor was called only a few times during the year. We had no accidents. We had no deaths. We feel that we have much to thank God for.

We start the new year with new hopes and renewed energy, hoping and praying that God will let his blessings continue to rest upon us in this work, and that the friends of the little children will stand by the work with renewed enthusiasm and loyalty. May the churches and the Sunday Schools make greater efforts in their offerings that a larger work in behalf of the little children may be done.

We ask you to remember the Christian Orphanage and its workers in your daily devotions. Pray that those who are in charge may be strong in the faith and walk in his steps each day. Pray that the institution may reach out and help the little fatherless ones, who need a home here.

If we could but know that every member of the church was praying for us, that each church and Sunday School would remember us each Sunday in the services, what an inspiration it would be to us. Don't forget to carry us to the throne of mercy when you pray.

Some years ago we had a scourge of pneumonia in one of our buildings. As soon as one would get better another would take it. We had seven cases at one time. It was continued for weeks. We had three critically ill at one time—it seemed that we would lose them in spite of all that could be done. We hardly knew which way to turn. We had reached the point of being discouraged. We almost felt that the tide was against us. We received a letter from a good woman in Atlanta, Ga., one morning. She had this to say: "We have heard of the critical illness of the children in your institution. Our church had a special prayer in your behalf in its service today." No one will ever know the joy that letter brought to my heart that day. It was a joy to know some one was praying for us. Remember us in your prayers this year.

CONSTITUTION AND BY-LAWS OF THE GEORGIA CONGREGATIONAL AND CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

(Concluded.)

4. To act in conjunction with the pastor of the church where a meeting of the association is to be held, as the program committee; with a view to suggesting, from its knowledge of the field, vital and practical topics, presenting plans of progress or extension, and increasing the interest among both clerical and lay members of our churches, in the meetings and work of the association.

5. To be the missionary committee of the association.

These recommendations pertain, second, to ordination and examination on the course of study:

I. Inasmuch as under our present system, ministerial standing vests in the local association, it is recommended that to the same body be accorded the function of passing, after due examination, upon the credentials and fitness of candidates for ordination. It is suggested that the procedure be as follows:

1. A church seeking to induct into its pastorate a man who has not been ordained, may present the candidate for examination at a meeting of the local association with which the church is connected; notice of such intention having been previously given to the registrar and printed on the program of the association meeting.

2. The said association to examine the candidate thus presented in regard to his intellectual, moral and spiritual fitness for the ministry, and if approved, to present a certificate of such approval to him and to the church presenting him.

3. Upon the basis of such certificate the church to proceed, either then or thereafter, to the ordination of the candidate through a council of good fellowship; the same being either the association or a group of churches elected by the church and the candidate.

II. Inasmuch as this Conference has provided a course of study for those applicants for ordination who have not received collegiate and seminary education, it is recommended that, for the sake of uniformity, the examination of candidates on the course of study be conducted by a committee of the State Conference; and that the certificate of said committee that he has completed this course satisfactorily shall be required in all such cases by the local associations before it proceeds to his examination for ordination.

DUTIES OF COMMITTEE ON LICENSURE AND COURSE OF STUDY.

There shall be a committee of three on "Licensure and Course of Study," to be elected for three years.

It shall be the duty of this committee to prepare a three-year course of study for licentiates and candidates for ordination who have not received a college degree or its equivalent, which shall be approved by the committee.

This committee shall advise and help all candidates in every possible way properly to pursue this course of study. They shall provide for examinations at such times and places as may be mutually agreed upon by themselves and the candidates, and shall issue certificates of licensure to such as shall be eligible for them. It is understood that the advisory committee of local associations will consult with this committee of licensure before recommending candidates for licensure for a second or third year.

Candidates for ordination pursuing this course, not having previously received a college degree or its equivalent, shall first receive the recommendation and approval of this committee before proceeding with an ordaining service.

The course of study and method of procedure adopted by the committee October 27-28, 1931:

GEORGIA CONGREGATIONAL AND CHRISTIAN COURSE OF STUDY FOR LICENTIATES.

Purpose.

1. The purpose of the course of study is to prepare licentiates who are engaged as pastors of Congregational and Christian Churches in Georgia for ordination to the Congregational and Christian ministry. Such licentiates, with certain designated exceptions, are required by the joint action of the Conference and the Local Associations to complete the course as prerequisite to ordination.

Committee in Charge.

2. The committee in charge is known as the Committee on Licensure and Course of Study, and is composed of three members elected by the State Conference.

Relation to Associations.

3. The relation of the Local Associations to the work of the Committee, in general, is defined in certain recommendations of the Conference to the Associations, which have been adopted by the Associations, and published in the minutes of the Conference. To secure efficiency and reasonable uniformity, the following suggestions are offered to the Associations:

4. Upon receipt of a request for licensure, the Advisory Committee of the Association may determine if the completion of the course of study is to be required of the candidate, in accordance with the following principles:

5. The completion of the course of study is to be required of all licentiates, except those who are not candidates for ordination, or, who, being such, hold academic degrees from acceptable colleges or have completed a full course of instruction in an acceptable theological school.

6. Only under exceptional circumstances are licentiates over forty years of age to be regarded as candidates for ordination.

7. On the granting of a license by the Association to a person of whom the completion of the course of study is to be required, the registrar should immediately notify the superintendent of the Conference.

8. If, at the expiration of a term of licensure, the Committee on Licensure and Course of Study shall have notified the Association that the candidate has not entered upon the course of study or has made unsatisfactory progress in the same, the renewal of the license may be denied until recommendation is made by the Committee.

9. Ordination is not to be granted until certification is made by the Committee that the candidate has successfully completed the course of study.

Method of Procedure.

10. Each student, upon beginning the Course of Study shall pay to the State Conference a fee of two dollars.

11. Each of the three members of the Committee shall have particular charge of the work of one study group as outlined in the course of study, as instructor and examiner. The student shall be free to consult with his instructor by mail or through personal conference.

12. The instructor shall arrange for the examination of students, such examination preferably being held in connection with an annual Conference.

13. Examination in required studies shall be in writing, and the passing of a student to the work of a succeeding group or to graduation shall be upon passing the examination with a minimum grade of seventy-five per cent in each subject. Credit shall be given for required readings upon such oral examination as shall satisfy the examiner that the reading has been faithfully and profitably done. Credits shall be filed by the Committee with the State office and a certificate shall be given the student. A final certificate, signed by the chairman of the Committee and the superintendent of the Conference, shall be given on completion of the course and the payment of a fee of three dollars to the Conference.

14. Real equivalent for separate subjects may be accepted and credited by the Committee.

15. Each student shall provide his own text books and also such reference books as are required. Books designated for reading may be loaned to students by the state office, but it is recommended that such books be purchased by the student.

16. The Committee is empowered to arrange an annual institute for the instruction and examination of students, at a time approximately midway between the meetings of the Conference. This institute is to be devoted not only to examination upon work already done, but to the discussion of text books, methods of study, and practical problems of the field. Attendance of students at the institute may be required by the Committee, and the necessary expense of travel and entertainment for instructors and students shall be provided by the Conference. A session of the Committee and students may be arranged during the annual meeting of the Conference, for discussion and examination.

COURSE OF STUDY.

17. The course of study is divided into three subject groups, each group being designed to cover the work of one year, and half of the studies of each group being completed in each six months' period. A minimum of six months' work is required on the entire group. The work of each group must be completed before that of the following is entered upon.

18. The course is indicated by the following named books, which are designated as books for study, for reading and for reference, the Committee being empowered to make such substitutions as, from time to time, it may find necessary or advisable:

faith to their little ones. As long as young mothers with little children remember God, and as long as young fathers, fighting their first hard battles for family, forget not their worship of the true God, any society is safe and any government is secure.

"And after." And when the records are written, the records of your home and mine, the records of your faith and mine, the records of your generation and mine are written, will there be a setting forth of the fact that faith failed not with us? That devotion to duty, to right, to God still shone in our lives? That there is something to begin on after our records are written? That the level of love is not lowered? That there is a chance for the continuation of the line of God dealing with his people? And that we have not blocked progress, nor set aside the eternal assets of faith, and honor, and friendship, of which we may justly be the proud possessors?

Please God, may it be so? May we never forget the name of Jesus! Of Paul! And of the unnumbered princes and princesses of God that have suffered persecutions and privations that the fruits of faith might flourish after them. "And after they were brought to Babylon," the line still persisted, and the promises of God still prospered. Amen.

OBITUARIES

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

An honorary member of the Girl's Missionary Society of the Suffolk Christian Church from the time of its organization twenty years ago, our beloved Dr. Staley made a distinct contribution to the work. His presence at the meetings, his good, fair, honest and righteous counsel in matters pertaining to missions was always of inestimable value to the society.

Dr. Staley was rich in the things pertaining to the Kingdom, and of his riches he gave freely to his fellowman. He had the ability to rise above the standard of human limitations and to see things in a truer light, and he gave us the benefit of this rare quality.

Such a noble example is worthy of emulation, therefore, be it resolved:

1. That the members of the Girls' Missionary Society continue to live and to work under the influence of this man of God, and to use the riches which he so freely shared with us to the good of all, both individually and collectively, being always mindful of the fact that such riches come from God himself.

That we seek to follow the example of our departed friend and counsellor in sharing with others the blessings that are ours, and to do our part to make the world better by our having lived in it.

That a copy of these resolutions be admitted to the records of the Girls' Missionary Society, a copy be sent to "The Christian Sun," and copies to the members of his family.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

God in his infinite wisdom saw fit to remove one of our beloved members, Mrs. Ada Teague. She was a devoted mother, a kind neighbor, and a loyal member of Pleasant Hill Church, and the Woman's Missionary Society, and attended the services regularly. The members of the Society offer the following resolutions:

1. That we, as a Society, have sustained a great loss.
2. That we hereby give expression to our feeling of sorrow and our appreciation of her life.
3. That we extend our deepest sympathy to her family, and pray God's richest blessings upon them in their bereavement.

4. That these resolutions be recorded in the minutes of the Missionary Society, a copy sent to the family, and a copy sent to "The Christian Sun."

Federal Income Taxes Continue to Fall.—

Largely due to shrinkage in income taxes, the government's revenue income fell off $84,504,169 in December, as compared with December of 1931. Income tax collections amounted to $256,522,096 in December, 1931, while the total income tax for last month was only $141,033,327, making a loss in revenue from this source of over $115 millions. Miscellaneous levies imposed during the past year increased the taxes from other sources about $31 millions, leaving the net decrease as given above.

Stalin Gets the Air.—

On last Easter the Soviet government distributed free photographs of Comrade Stalin to all of the school children throughout Russia, with the injunction that this portrait of the dictator should be hung in a prominent place in the pupil's home. The following incident reminds us that though conditions may be bad in our own country, yet we are possibly blessed beyond the rest of the world, and certainly more than our Soviet friends. After the free distribution above referred to the teachers were instructed to question the pupils as to whether they had obeyed instructions. "Did you hang up the picture of Comrade Stalin as you were told," asked the teacher of a small lad. The child slowly shook his head. When pressed for the reason for such disobedience, the child answered: "I couldn't." And upon further insistence that his reason was insufficient, the child slowly replied: "We live in the middle of the room." Packed "like sardines in a can," their individuality subdued, their personality subjected, the poorest of us live in a paradise by comparison. Take his God from him and you rob a man of his all. We submit that Comrade Stalin is a very poor substitute.

Einstein and the Disarmament Conference.—

Prof. Albert Einstein, who was among those in attendance at the disarmament conference at Geneva, seems to think that the outlook for peace is less optimistic than could be well wished. He says: "We are no nearer peace fourteen years after the armistice than we were the day before the armistice was signed. The politicians and statesmen who promised us peace have cheated us. They have fooled us! We should be standing on roof-tops, all of us, denouncing this disarmament conference as a travesty. From now on, the people themselves must take this affair into their own hands if they sincerely desire peace. . . . I am convinced that, left alone, peoples would not hate each other. If they were not stirred into hating each other they would live amicably together; especially now, since science and intelligence have conquered most of the diseases and have made it possible for everyone to live in plenty and in happiness and health." Mr.

Einstein says that "no one can deny that we are passing today, not only through an international crisis in economic life, but also through as severe a crisis in international commerce, and quite generally in international cooperation in all domains." He believes that these things are vitally connected with emotional tensions between governments and peoples, and that impartial and dispassionate investigation of their causes is necessary in order to start the world on the road to recovery.

Would You Use Your Opportunities?—

We are told that the young man who would profit by tomorrow's rich possibilities must, in the present extremities, sell not only his ideas but himself. Jobs are not to be had just for the "asking," but the job hunter must "sell" himself. Dr. S. M. Kitner, vice-president of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Co., in charge of the engineering department, recently addressed a group of college students. In the course of his talk he urged upon his audience the importance of deciding what one wanted to do and where one wished to work, and then selling an executive of that company on the desirability of hiring him. A short while after this a young man presented himself at Dr. Kitner's office in East Pittsburgh, and after introducing himself, said: "I've decided that I want to go into the electrical manufacturing field and I've come to work for Westinghouse." To which the Doctor made the reply usually heard today: "We haven't any jobs here now." The young man was not surprised at the reply, but insisted, "I am doing what you told me to do. Will you listen to me?" The Doctor, amused, agreed to listen, and the young man so successfully sold himself that today he is not only on the Westinghouse payroll, but is one of its promising employees. Much of the unemployment now existing would be vanquished if more people would cultivate their ability to sell themselves.

Sixteen to One.—

Just two days ago a cry that was familiar in the late nineties rang again in the United States Senate. Remonetization of silver at a ratio of 16 to 1 was the battle cry flung far and wide by the late William Jennings Bryan, and Senator Wheeler, of Montana, revived the historic issue in the Senate the first of the week with the declaration that the boosting of silver prices would cure the world's ills. The issue was placed before the body in the form of an amendment to the Glass banking bill, and Senator Wheeler said that he challenged anyone last year to disprove his claim that the remonetization of silver at 16 to 1 would double the value of the world's primary money and would more than double the prices of wheat and cotton and the purchasing power of silver nations. He continued: "Since that time nobody in either side of this chamber has disputed that. Not only that, but since then we have seen an increasing number of foreclosures of mortgages and increased bank failures, and country after country has gone off the gold standard until now forty nations are using other standards. Referring to the statements made by President Hoover and other authorities that depreciated foreign currencies were lowering American tariff protection, he concluded: "Remonetization of silver will do more to make the tariff effective than any other piece of legislation before Congress."

"Lame Duck" Amendment Ratified.—

The ratification by the Missouri legislature of the so-called "lame duck" amendment to the Constitution, wrote into the Constitution its twentieth amendment, providing that after this year, both the President and newly-elected Congress shall take office in January following the November elections. In order to be the thirty-sixth State to ratify, the time set for bringing up the question was moved up from 2:00 P. M. to 10 A. M., last Monday. The question was to have come up in the Massachusetts legislature at 2 o'clock, but due to the fact that standard time was one hour faster in New England than in the Middle West, this would have enabled Massachusetts to have ratified one hour sooner than Missouri, and to have been the thirty-sixth State. Rather than have this "honor" taken from them, the Missouri speaker rounded up his members for the morning session, and the job was done. By the moving up of the dates as is provided in the amendment, Congress will convene on the third of January following the election instead of the first Monday in December, the newly elected representatives going in on that date. The President and Vice-President will assume the reins of their respective offices on January 20th. Senator Norris, who for the past ten years or more has worked for this change, says: "The new amendment will do away with the necessity for filibustering and will make it practically impossible for any unjustifiable delay." He says that the "greatest achievement, in my opinion, is that permitting the will of the people to be expressed more promptly." There are quite a few advantages in connection with this amendment, but it is questionable whether his "greatest achievement" can be rated among them as an unmixed blessing. The holding over of the old legislative body has, at times, proved a blessing to the people who had just previously voted it out of office. More than once in the history of this country, has the electorate voted a faction out of office, and before the year had passed had faced about and compelled their successors to do the very things for the doing of which they had been defeated.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Mrs. Annie Staley Calhoun writes: "I don't believe I could exist without THE CHRISTIAN SUN. That is the only way I can keep in touch with the work of the church."

It is learned with joy and gratitude that Rev. J. W. Patton, who underwent a major operation in Charlotte, N. C., hospital last week, is improving, and there are now high hopes for his speedy recovery.

The absence of Alabama, Georgia and Florida notes in THE CHRISTIAN SUN is due to the absence of the Congregational editor, who has been attending meetings in New York and Chicago for the past two weeks.

The 1932 ANNUAL is unusually late in its appearance this year. Two Conferences are yet to be heard from. As soon as all of the copy is in it will be rushed to completion and mailed to the various organizations.

Rev. J. L. Foster preached at Bethlehem for the pastor, Rev. J. W. Patton, Sunday, January 15th, and greatly enjoyed the occasion of meeting many friends of former days and worshipping again amid familiar scenes and surroundings.

SUN renewals have been coming in in larger numbers since the Christmas holidays. We cannot acknowledge each subscription individually, but we wish to take this means of thanking those who have been so thoughtful as to look at their labels.

We learn with regret of the great number of cases of "flu" which have been at the Christian Orphanage lately. Brother Johnston has enough on his shoulders for any one man, and sickness among his large family of children does not tend to lighten that load.

Don't fail to look for your name in the SUN subscription list, which appears the first or second week of each month. If you have made a payment on your subscription, and your name is not on the list, please notify the managing editor at once.

A record breaking report for 1932 comes from one of our Florida pastors. Rev. Carl H. Corwin, of the West Tampa Mission and Pilgrim Latin Church, reports as follows: Sermons, 91; prayer meetings, 235; Sunday School sessions, 85; addresses, 219; pastoral calls, 2,545.

Rev. A. W. Hurst moved last week with his family to Chattanooga, Tenn., where Bro. Hurst becomes pastor of our Congregational Church in that city. With deep regret Elon gave up the Hursts, father, son and their families. They hold a warm spot in the affections and esteem of Elon College and village.

Dr. John R. Scotford, editorial secretary of the Commission on Missions, will make a tour of Florida during the last week of January. Dr. Edwin C. Gillette, Florida superintendent, will accompany him on part of the tour. One of the immediate results will be the featuring of Florida in the March American Missionary.

Dr. L. E. Smith and Rev. R. A. Whitten exchanged pulpits Sunday, the 22nd, Dr. Smith

preaching at Henderson, Bro. Whitten at Elon College, where he had a splendid audience and preached and conducted a very helpful and commendable service. Dr. Smith has just returned from a meeting of the American Board of Commissioners for Missions in Evanston, Ill., where he reported a very pleasant and profitable session.

The following telegram will be of interest to many SUN readers: "Halifax, Va., 8:30 A. M., January 23, 1933. Dr. J. O. Atkinson: Mr. Crutchfield operated on yesterday. Appendicitis. Doing well this morning. (Signed) Mrs. H. E. Crutchfield." Bro. Crutchfield has been suffering periodically and was taken suddenly Saturday evening, when it was found necessary to operate at once. Here is hoping for his speedy and complete recovery.

Rev. J. L. Neese, pastor, rejoices in a most timely Christmas gift of a nice Pontiac sedan, presented him by his churches: Palm St., Hines' Chapel and New Lebanon. The members of these churches have a fondness for the company and fellowship of their pastor, and so, in a most practical way, expressed the same by making it possible for him to come to see them. We congratulate the churches on this splendid mark of esteem and the pastor, the happy recipient, of such favor. The work goes well in Bro. Neese's field, with especially good results at Palm Street.

A Citizen's Educational Meeting has been called to assemble in Raleigh, N. C., January 31st. It has been proposed that January 29th be designated as Educational Sunday for North Carolina, and that pastors announce the Raleigh meeting for the coming Tuesday. It is a mass meeting sponsored by the Parent-Teacher Association and other educational and civic organizations of the state, that the people may give expression to their convictions about proposed school legislation by the General Assembly now in session at Raleigh. Many bills and resolutions touching the present status and system of education in the state have already been introduced, and the object of the proposed Citizens' Meeting is that nothing shall be done to hurt, and all possible shall be done to help education in the public schools and colleges of the state. Changes in the present system, both as to cost and method of carrying on the state school system, could be and should be made. But these changes should not be of a nature to cripple education in the state.

WEEK OF PRAYER IN CHARLESTON, S. C.

A rather unique observance of the Week of Prayer January 1st-7th, was brought about in Charleston, S. C., through the initiative of the pastor of Circular Congregational Church, Rev. G. N. Edwards. He suggested to the pastors of several denominations in the lower part of the city that they come together on the basis of the program issued by the Federal Council, and meet in their respective churches in succession each evening of the week. This was done after the ministers had held one conference to arrange the details.

The churches uniting were several of the oldest in that old city—the First Presbyterian, St. Michael's Episcopal, First Baptist, French Protestant (Huguenot), and St. John's Lutheran. Each pastor spoke once, each conducted the service in his own church in his own way. The choirs were present, with organists in their several churches, but as a rule there was no special music.

The emphasis was laid on prayer before and after the sermon. Some form of a "bidding prayer" was used. The usual ritualistic forms were laid aside, or adapted to an informal service in which all could join. No joint meeting was held on Sunday, but all the pastors introduced the services by announcements and sermons. The attendance was excellent, not large but averaging at least a hundred.

During the week a "Call to Prayer" was issued daily in one of the papers. This included announcement of the place and purpose of the meeting, a poem and prayer for each day, and the Scripture reference. The other paper carried a daily report of the meeting the night before with paragraphs from the sermon. The observance of the "Week of Prayer" had been given up for years. There were warm expressions of the value and spirit of the services from men and women of the churches as the week went on. E.

RELIGIOUS CAMPAIGN BEGINS FEB. 5th.

Three weeks from today the Rev. H. C. Caviness will open the 1933 Charleston Evangelistic Campaign, preaching in the Spring Street Episcopal Church daily under the auspices of the Laymen's Evangelistic Brotherhood and Young Men's Christian Association. Mr. Caviness comes from Portsmouth, Va., where until a year ago he was pastor of the First Christian-Congregational Church.

This is the third annual campaign to be conducted by the laymen's organizations who promoted the meetings with the cooperation of the churches of the city. A city-wide organization of men and women with Clarence W. Legerton as chairman, has been formed and the support of the Protestant forces of the city is assured.

The meetings are located centrally in the Spring Street Church. Last year in the course of fifteen meetings, in Citadel Square Church, approximately 15,000 attended.

The campaign opens on Sunday, February 5th, and will close on Sunday, February 19th. The Rev. W. J. Snyder is pastor of the Spring Street Church.—Mrs. Caviness will assist in the field of women's work especially.—Charleston News and Courier, January 15, 1933.

HOW TO BE UNHAPPY.

Be suspicious; look for slights; feel keenly any seeming thrusts.

Be sensitive; take best care of "number one," be sure to protect yourself; "be good to yourself;" safeguard yourself.

Be revengeful; give tit for tat; let them have just as good as they send. Be sure to return evil for evil; take care to get down with a "dog" on his own level.

Be slow to forgive; the other fellow deserves it, he will only gloat over an easy deal; he is incapable of appreciating courteous treatment; he has not asked to be forgiven; just let him severely alone.

Be still slower to forget. It's enough to forgive—if you do; it's quite too much to add forgetfulness to the injury done; life might be too prosy without periodically digging up those old bones.—Exchange.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

LOCAL CHURCH FINANCE.

Recently, the United Stewardship Council has been making an exhaustive study of church finances in the local churches. It believes that permanent and priceless good to thousands of our churches may result from the present debacle if they will turn their attention in a positive and constructive way to improving the weaknesses that the present crisis has revealed in the church's business methods, just as in the business world. Methods used in prosperous times have revealed a lack of spiritual content and educational values, and have proved to be defective and inadequate. Far greater than the temporal loss that has come to the church as a result of the depression is the temporal and spiritual loss it has suffered because Christian stewardship principles have not been applied in its financial processes and procedure.

Four fundamental lessons on church finances must be learned, or re-learned, and applied if the church is to reap advantages from this world-wide disaster:

(a) Not money, but life, is the major problem of the local church. The greatest need is not more money, but more of life. The primary requisite is the offering of self to God in such a spirit of abandon that he can come into each life. We cannot give self without our substance. The supreme task of a church is reaching, developing, and enriching the lives of individuals.

(b) Wealth has no value apart from persons, and no worthy purpose apart from the Kingdom of God. The true function of money is to minister to life. The only reason a church has for raising funds is to minister to individuals; evangelize in the deepest sense; Christianize its own members; do its share of the task in the world.

(c) Insofar as a church's financial system enhances its life, its financial plans and policy become a primary matter. The first consideration in a church's finance is to raise money in a way that will grow character, promote giving for the Lord's work helpfully to the giver, and develop its members as well as to provide its funds. We must seek to find a system of finance that will make for better Christians and create a wholesome atmosphere, and graciously yield to such plans no matter how strongly we have been bound to other methods.

(d) A church should honor Christ and bear witness to him through the management of its business, just as a Christian does in his business. It must set a worthy example of good stewardship in its finance program. Its finance methods should by all means be a convincing sign to the outside world of the faith by which it lives. In the light of the teachings of Jesus, the money question is not only an economic question, but a moral and spiritual question.

It would seem the part of wisdom, then, for a church to make a survey, a scientific investigation of its habits of giving, and re-examine its methods in the light of Christian stewardship principles. The following questions might well be applied: For what should a church raise money? Who should contribute to the support of the church and its work? Should the budget system be discarded or perfected? When is a church budget Christian? Has a church solved its financial problems when it has raised its budget? Is a church ever justified in conducting its temporal affairs in an unbusinesslike manner? Should a church's financial officers be trained for their task? How does our financial system appear from a Christian point of view? Is Christian stewardship related to church finance?

The United Stewardship Council has recommended a standard financial policy for local churches, based on sound principle and tested by experience:

1. A Christian budget—A Christian budget is an ample, comprehensive, properly proportioned, attainable budget, based upon the goals and program of the whole church.
 2. Constituency cultivation program.
 3. Weekly payment plan with envelope system founded upon an annual every-member enlistment program.
 4. Conservation and continuation program—A continuous program throughout the year of education and enlistment, with follow-up of pledges, adjustment of pledges, and securing new pledges.
 5. Accurate records, accredited audits, and regular reports to constituents.
 6. Prompt payment of bills of local budget items and monthly remittances on benevolence budget items.
 7. Training of financial officers.
 8. Legitimate supplemental methods.
 9. Re-enforcement of stewardship education apart from any financial campaign.
 10. The purpose of the financial program of a church should be not alone to produce money, but to relate each member properly to God.
- It is to be hoped that all our Congregational-

Christian Churches will avail themselves of the valuable recommendations of the United Stewardship Council. WARREN H. DENISON. Dayton, O.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

SHOULD JESUS COME.

In their attempt to be different or to weaken the church today, not a few humanists, radicalists and other "ists" are saying, that if Jesus were to come to the world today the church would not receive him; that he could not get any farther than the door. Just how these critics justify assertions like that, we are not advised, but for the sake of argument, grant that the criticism is just, the reply would be:

1st. That once before "He came unto his own and his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he the power to become the sons of God." And so without the facts with which to justify their fling at the church, it can still be said that as many as believe, to them he gives the power to carry on, and they do carry on, to the building up of righteousness and the kingdom of heaven on earth.

But secondly, let the critics bear in mind that not man, but Jesus Christ himself is building the church, and the church of the present is the very best that the divine hand and power could build with the material that the divine hand and power had to work with. If the church is a failure, then Jesus has failed, in that he declared that "He would build the church and the gates of hell should not prevail against it," and now that the gates of hell have prevailed, Jesus has failed. Moreover, the church is the body of Christ, of which he is the head, and if the body of Christ, directed by the mind, wisdom, soul of Christ—a spiritual body—has failed and would not receive him, nor recognize him, we have indeed, a strange picture, a defeated Christ, a worse than a crucified, but a completely conquered and banished Christ.

It may be that some of the intelligentia themselves are mistaken even in their wisdom, since we are told that "the foolishness of God is wiser than men; and the weakness of God is stronger than men. And ye see how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called; but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty."

And so one may ask with Paul in his inquiry to the church established in the scholarly city of Corinth: "Where is the wise? Where is the scribe? Where is the disputer of this world? Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world? For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." (I. Cor. 1:20-27.)

The church, of course, has its weaknesses, since it is made up of men and women, who, in the flesh are weak and who, for the most part, have been persuaded to turn their faces and hearts from a life of waywardness and sin to a life of righteousness and Christ. And certain it is that no institution on this earth has done as much and gone as far by a million miles toward the relief of human suffering, the betterment of the condition of the poor, caring for the needy and the distressed, for the relief of human suffering and sorrow as the church of the living God. What all the institutions than the church have done for mankind are as nothing compared with the contributions that the church has made and is making. And so, if the church would not receive him, it could still be said that "as many as received him, to them gave he the power," and perhaps, after all, they constitute the spiritual body called the church.

LIBERAL RELIGION.

An Institute of Liberal Religion was held in Greensboro last week. A "Liberalist" from New York, or a New England church, spoke each night. The morning daily of Greensboro each day gave a report of what the "Liberalist" preacher said. These reports made interesting reading. They were from the liberal, the cultured, the masters of correct speech. They knew how to confine their remarks to the topic in hand and also to define for their hearers and readers, in select words, just what they were saying (?) Possibly some of our SUN readers did not see these reports and are not thoroughly acquainted with the exact language and ideas of these preachers of "Liberal Religions." So, for the benefit of any and sundry, who may have missed these reports, we lift a paragraph bodily from one of the "sermons" of the series (Greensboro Daily News, January 17, 1933):

"In the modern concepts of Jesus we see the sublimation of the altruistic and sthenic impulses of mankind. All our true hope of the future lies in our social development of the Jesus-type life. It alone has been the motivating spirit behind the parabolic curve of civilization; it alone can maintain the rise of the parabola and without it social history is doomed to increasing disaster, with more of those terrible pictures to be seen by way of warning in Ernst Friedrich's 'Krieg dem Krieg.'

Now you have it. If you do not understand the modern concepts of Jesus, you have only yourself to blame, in not allowing your mind to seize upon the very simple (?) and easy definition of "the sublimation of the altruistic and sthenic impulses of mankind." And so instead of the old doctrine of accepting Jesus Christ as the personal Saviour and Redeemer, we must substitute "the sublimation of the altruistic," and in so doing, get somewhere.

And instead of basing our hope on him who said, "I am the way, the truth and the life," we shall have to base our hope on our social development as the type of life. And instead of feeling as we have been taught to feel, that the spirit of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ has been the motivating spirit of the church and of righteousness, we must now think of this as a motivating spirit behind the parabolic curve of civilization. And instead of a rising tide of evangelism or a rising tide of spiritual activity in the name, power and leadership of our Lord, we are to think in terms of maintaining the rise of the parabola. And instead of having any fears of being lost, unsaved, un-redeemed or of punishment in the world to come, if we do not accept Jesus Christ, we are to think of terrible pictures, and they must be terrible beyond all description, "Krieg dem Krieg.

All of which is very interesting, in that it is so amusing and ridiculous were it not given under the name and sanctity of religion.

But in all this, our Liberalist speaker did not reach the climax. He reached the grand climax of Liberalism when he gave his substitute for the Messiah, for he said that instead of looking for a Messiah from without to redeem and to save us from the sin within, we must "seek deliverance from our troubles through the progressive multiplication of life by significant ordering."

And if you wish to know just what these Liberalists think of the Christ, take this from the Liberalists' own definition, viz.: "As a psychological variation of the human species, a variant in human consciousness." In reading such hyperbolic nonsense and psychological scintillations, one wonders how serious-minded people can either call it Liberalism or Religion. There can be nothing liberal about it, since its attempted definition allows one to indulge any prejudice or harbor any intolerance that one may desire. And there can be no religion in it, since there is nothing attached to it that indicates the way from darkness to light, from weakness to strength, from defeat to victory.

Our Lord himself preached the most liberal religion that ever fell from human or divine lips. when he said: "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." And then to seal the matter and make it perfectly clear so that the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein, he said: "I am the way, the truth and the life. No man cometh unto the Father but by me."

A BENEVOLENT TIME.

We take it that other states are faring as well as North Carolina in the distribution of relief funds for the destitute. In fact, this being a rural state in which bread lines are few, if there are any at all, since rural states do grow most of what they eat, no doubt many other states are receiving more from the government for the relief of their destitute. Be this as it may, the state director of relief has released figures which show that during the last three months of 1932, $2,252,821 were given by the government, local, state and federal, the federal government giving $1,147,069 and local or state units contributing $1,105,572. In other words, the federal government contributed about 50 per cent, and the local governments about 50 per cent. The amounts given by months were as follows:

October	$ 444,576.00
November	779,319.00
December	1,028,926.00

The number of families actually aided during the period were:

October	57,886
November	83,449
December	122,281

Every dark cloud has a silver lining. We are living in a time of distress and depression, but the spirit of benevolence was never so apparent, so active and so fruitful. On all sides and from every source the hand of benevolence and charity is extended and helpfulness of man to man prevails. Surely, the fountains of benevolence and of charity have been broken up and are pouring forth their rich and abundant streams of helpfulness and service to those in need.

But a cloud is fraught with danger as well as fringed with a silver lining. If this benevolence shall increase the feeling of dependence and shall take away from any the spirit of independence and support by daily toil of self and family, then the blessing of benevolence is turned into a burden and transformed into a curse. Every man in a time like this should do his utmost to maintain his self-respect by honest and faithful toil, if a task can be found, and every person should seek employment even for the sake of maintaining self-respect and the respect of his family. There is something worse even than in not helping the poor, and that is being poor by one's own indolence and thriftlessness, being in need by one's own prodigality or lack of energy and willingness to work and earn an honest living. "Be not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord," is a divine injunction that cannot be unheeded with impunity.

DANIEL.

CHAPTERS 1-6).

By NELLIE RHEA SLEDGE.

The Book of Daniel falls naturally into two parts: The History of Daniel, and The Visions of Daniel. The first six chapters deal entirely with the history of Daniel and the last six chapters of the book deal with the prophecies that Daniel uttered. We remember that Daniel was the last of the four major prophets. Now, a prophet towers above his contemporaries or the men of his age through:

1. Purity of character—Was Daniel pure and clean?
2. Strength of intellect—Was Daniel intellectual? Was he competent for his tasks?
3. Sincerity of purpose—Was Daniel sincere?
4. Intimacy of his communion with God—Did Daniel commune with God? Have we proof of this?
5. Special illumination by divine spirit—Did God give him wisdom? Did God enlighten him?

Let us think of these things as we discuss the first half of the Book of Daniel.

Daniel lived during the reign of three kings: Nebuchadnezzar (and you will find the first four chapters of his life during this time); Belshazzar (the events related in the fifth chapter occurred during the reign of this man); and lastly, Daniel lived in the time of Darius and Cyrus (as the sixth chapter tells us). So we may say that we have three distinct historical periods for the life of Daniel.

As proof of this, turn to the Book of Daniel. Notice the first chapter, verse one: "Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon," and if you will look at the first verse of each of the next three chapters you will find "Nebuchadnezzar the king" mentioned. In the fifth chapter we find our second king—Belshazzar—notice the first verse, and also look at verse two at the phrase, "his father, Nebuchadnezzar," which shows that Belshazzar was the son and rightful successor of Nebuchadnezzar.

In the last verse of the fifth chapter we find the third king—Darius taking charge of the kingdom, and in the last verse of chapter six, we find Cyrus reigning and we know that Darius was the king of the Medes and Cyrus king of the Persians.

Now since we have the historical periods of the book let us think of Daniel's life by chapters.

Daniel was of noble descent. He was the son of David (notice I. Chron. 3:1): "Now these were the sons of David which were born unto him in Hebron—the first Ammon . . . the second Daniel . . ." In that verse, besides finding the name of the father of Daniel, we also find his birthplace—Hebron. Now Hebron is a small town south of Jerusalem in the country of Judea. So Daniel was the son of David and was born near Jerusalem.

In the third year of Jehoiakim, Nebuchadnezzar besieged Jerusalem and carried away many people to Babylon, among whom was the lad, Daniel. And it was in the court of Babylon that Daniel spent his youth and on account of Daniel's comeliness and talents he was educated for royal service.

King Nebuchadnezzar asked the officer of the court in general to bring before him certain children that were skillful and cunning in knowledge and understanding, and men of ability. Among the men brought in were Daniel and three of his companions. The king was to nourish them with his wine and meat for three years. But Daniel proposed that, instead of eating the king's meat and drinking the king's wine, he and his three friends be given pulse to eat and water to drink for a ten days' test, for Daniel had resolved that he would not defile himself with the king's meat and wine. At the end of the ten days' test they showed a better condition than the others and so were released from eating and drinking what the king had commanded.

These four friends were greatly favored, too, for God gave them knowledge and skill in learning and wisdom; and it seems that God favored Daniel a little more than the other three, for Daniel had understanding in all visions and dreams. When King Nebuchadnezzar communed with them he found that they were ten times better than all the magicians and astrologers.

Nebuchadnezzar had a dream that he had forgotten. He called upon the magicians and astrologers to restore and also to interpret the dream. This they could not do. The king ordered them to be slain along with all the wise men of Babylon, for none of them could restore the dream. But Daniel interceded for them and promised to satisfy the king. Then Daniel and his three friends invoked divine assistance and that night in a vision the secret was revealed to Daniel. Note Daniel's thoughtfulness of God's mercy by his thanking God in verses 20-23 of chapter two. Then Daniel related to the king the dream of the image and then he interpreted it as related to the four Universal Empires. King Nebuchadnezzar was greatly pleased with Daniel and his wisdom, especially since he was able to give the significance of the image, and the king made Daniel chief ruler of the nation and overseer of the wise men of Babylon. Daniel kept this position throughout the entire reign of Nebuchadnezzar.

Then Nebuchadnezzar built a golden image and required that all the people worship it. The penalty for those who did not worship the image was for them to be cast into the midst of a burning fiery furnace. Here Daniel steps out of the scene and only his three friends play their part. Daniels' three friends refused to worship the king's god. The king asked them about it, and I call your attention to chapter 3, verse 17: "If it be so, our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace, and he will deliver us out of thine hand, O king." Notice their faith in God. These three companions were then cast into the fiery furnace that had been heated seven times hotter than usual. But their faith was so great that they were preserved by the mighty hand of God. The faithfulness of these three companions and their loyalty to God really influenced the king and they were promoted in the province of Babylon. See how the right wins out!

Nebuchadnezzar had another dream, that of a great tree; Daniel interpreted this for him, too. According to the dream the king was to be driven into the field for a time to live with the beasts. The dream was fulfilled and at the end of that experience the king acknowledges and honors the Most High.

The next great scene in which Daniel figures is at the end of the kingdom of Babylon in the reign of Belshazzar. Belshazzar made a great feast and he and his thousands of lords drank wine and praised the gods of gold, silver, brass and others. In the midst of the revelry hand-writing appeared on the wall. The wise men were unable to interpret it. The queen told Belshazzar about Daniel and Daniel was brought in to interpret the mysterious writing on the wall. Daniel had wisdom and courage to interpret the hand-writing which spelled the doom of the empire. That night Babylon fell.

Upon the fall of Babylon new honors awaited Daniel in the Medo-Persian State. When Darius became king, Daniel was placed above the presidents of the province and set over the whole realm.

Then the presidents and princes became jealous of Daniel and induced the king to sign a decree that anyone offering a petition to God or man, except unto the king, should be cast into the den of lions. So the king forbade all prayers, except unto him, for 30 days. Daniel refused to obey this decree. He went into his room and kneeled upon his knees three times a day and prayed and gave thanks unto God as he had done before. For this, Daniel was thrown into the den of lions. God delivered him out of danger, while those who had arranged the plot were cast to the lions.

So Daniel was taken back to the court, retained in his office, and held in still higher esteem.

I think now, since we have reached the end of the chapters that deal with the history of Daniel, that we have arrived at certain conclusions about the points that were brought out at the beginning of the discussion.

Is there any doubt as to Daniel's character? None at all. We know that he was pure and clean as he would not defile himself or lower his ideals of living by indulging in the rich stuff to which the king was accustomed.

He was quite intellectual for God granted him wisdom and knowledge; he was certainly educated for his tasks and for his honored position, as he was trained in the court of Babylon. Daniel really reminds us of the Jews who were raised to honored positions in foreign states: Joseph, prime minister of Egypt; Moses, trained in court of Babylon, and Daniel was at the head of Persian princes.

Daniel was sincere and faithful. Let us notice chapter 6, verse 4: "Then the presidents and the princes sought to find occasion against Daniel concerning the kingdom; but they could find none occasion nor fault; forasmuch as he was faithful neither was there any error or fault found in him."

Daniel communed with God and never forgot him as the last part of verse 10, chapter 6 tells us: "He kneeled upon his knees three times a day,

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The milk-man delivered a bottle of milk a few minutes ago, and when I put it in the refrigerator I had a new experience of admiration for the cow. Think of the thousands of cows in America. Thousands of men are needed to feed and milk these cows every day. The cows keep men busy, and the men keep the cows busy. Men work for the cows and cows for men.

A cow needs sympathy and kind consideration. If you will stand at the cow barn in the early morning, after milking time, and watch the cows go out to the green pasture, and follow them until milking time again, you will learn some impressive lessons for life. Every good cow goes about her task of gathering food with a solemn earnest look on her face. She does not know what it is all about, but as soon as she reaches the pasture she begins eating very earnestly. She must eat grass and drink water from the watering places until she is full and satisfied. When she has finished her feeding she usually lies down, or stands in some quiet place and begins "chewing her cud"—a necessary part in the process of good digestion for a cow.

The day passes by and cows find their way back to the barn for milking time again. The milk man comes to her side and fills the shining pail with rich milk which is cooled and put in bottles to be delivered to people who use it for their daily food.

The cow is not selfish. She eats and drinks and converts food and water into milk not for her own use, but for others to live. All she gets back for this work is her living. Her owner furnishes a part of the food and provides shelter for her. But she receives no other reward. When she gives milk to be used as food for man, she is making a contribution to a life higher than her own. She converts grass and water into one of the best foods on earth for mankind. I pay tribute to a beast which can provide sustenance for the highest form of life on the earth. A cow really assists nature to make man stronger and healthier for his work in life. She has saved the lives of many babies and put the touch of health upon their rosy cheeks.

When she can no longer furnish milk for the kitchen and the table, she makes the supreme sacrifice and her flesh becomes food for man, and her hide is tanned to add other contributions to our comfort. She lives and dies for man.

There are so many people who make no contribution for others. They do not even feed themselves. Others must feed them. It does seem reasonable to expect every man to be self-supporting. It is a challenge to think that someone is looking to us for help and partial support. Eating and drinking and sleeping would be one dull, monotony without work. Who has been helped because you are fed and clothed? Who has been made stronger because you have lived and toiled? Are you feeding yourself for your own pleasure and profit, or for others? Will someone come by in the evening time of your life and gather out of your toil and labor a rich harvest of spiritual blessings?

Life is too important and too short to be spent in indulgences and pleasures, in a selfish way. Eat, drink and be strong, and use that strength for a higher end than self-indulgence and self-profit.

THE SECOND SEMESTER.

At the mid-year meeting in Chicago, I heard a man speak on prayer. He spoke out of personal experience, having himself waited in an atmosphere of petition for a solid week. There was something wholesomely refreshing and most encouraging about his address. He did not, at the close of his week's prayer, behold a divine person, hear an audible voice, or feel the living touch of a strong personality, but coming out of that unusually wholesome experience, he was conscious of a definite change within and a more hopeful outlook for the cause that he championed.

In the course of his remarks, he quoted a hard-pressed soldier in battle as having said: "The line shall not break where I stand," and then making a spiritual application, made this affirmative for himself: "The line shall not break where I stand."

Elon College is facing the most strenuous task of her existence and her friends and supporters will be called upon to bear the heaviest burdens they have yet borne for their beloved institution.

The first semester, which is now closing, has been one of uncertainty, and yet of perceptible accomplishments. We have succeeded even beyond our expectations. Things have gone unusually smooth at the college, and the financial matters have been adjusted far more agreeably than it seemed, many times they could be. It looks now like we shall be able to balance our budget for the first semester. This looks good, but as we stand and look out on the requirements of the remaining four and one-half months, it is like locking out into the gathering darkness. We search the skies of the future for a ray of light, but there seems to be none.

It is like being halted on the mountainside before you have the privilege of seeing the flowers and fruits and the far-stretching plains on the other side. It is like the setting of the sun when there are no moon or stars. Fortunately, however, we do not have to walk by sight. We have been given the glorious privilege of walking by faith—faith is both light and assurance. Faith is the victory that overcomes the world.

I see standing about Elon College, the fathers of the past—the sons and daughters of the present—the members of the church—the friends of the institution and the alumni of Elon. They form a line—a line for both defensive and offensive—defending the institution in the light of her past record, and fighting in the hope of the coming years. Truly, the fight is on—the battle rages on every side. Will you not say together as the soldier of the past years: "The line shall not break where I stand." During these days the college is sending out her appeal—her appeal for help—whatever help you can give. She does not expect any friend, supporter or alumnus to do more than he can do, but she does expect everyone to do what he can. Can you give but little, don't fail to give that. Your mite added to others will make a commendable sum. Can you give much, do not withhold it, for the college needs your support. To those who give, comes the promise of him who has the power to give or withhold to the end that their giving shall not be in vain. Don't wait until it becomes necessary for someone to spend a part of what you would give in bringing the appeal to you, but take this matter of the college's need, and your ability to contribute, under prayerful consideration—reach your decision—be sure it is right, and send in your contribution. In this way, you may be assured that every penny of your donation will go for what it was given and will accomplish the greatest possible amount of good. Please do not lay this appeal aside without doing your duty.

Yours in hopeful expectancy,
L. E. SMITH.

PIOUS PLATITUDE OR TESTED TRUTH?

By J. EARL CUMMINGS.

"All things work together for good to them that love God." Is this a pious platitude or a tested truth? Is it a reality upon which we can build our faith or is it a fallacy which ought to be discarded in this modern and scientific age? Are these words, "all things work together for good to them that love God," only an opiate to dull our sensibilities so that we dumbly and passively experience the tragedies and the inequities thrust upon us and still go blindly and blunderingly on through life for what or why we never seem to quite comprehend? Or, are these words, "all things work together for good to them that love God," a tonic to strengthen and fortify our lives so that even though we do experience and face up with seeming failure we can still walk uprightly with our heads unbowed and know that ultimately our life will not have been in vain for out of the crucible of human experience, pain and comfort, failure and success, sorrow and joy, darkness and light, the Divine Alchemist is transmuting the dross of our lives into the gold of all eternity, goodness and righteousness?

And yet, are there not times in your life and mine when we want to believe with all our hearts that "all things do work together for good," but on every hand we seem to see only sorrow and suffering and failure even in the homes of those who have seemed to be the most Godly and righteous? We seem forced to question the truth of Paul's positive affirmation. What made him make such a statement? Wasn't it just a rash statement that he made when he was in a happy frame of mind? To be perfectly honest this affirmation of Paul is easy to quote but often quite hard to believe. Haven't we seen evil and designing individuals apparently succeed, and good and up-standing men apparently fail? Do not the pages of history reveal this fact, that tyrants and immoral humans have received honor and worldly comforts? Have you not read that the seats of the mighty were often occupied by the base and licentious and that often upon their heads were glittering crowns and at their beck and call servants to minister to their slightest whims? And have you not read that the finest, cleanest and most righteous were often abused, persecuted, beaten and cast into prison? Have you not read that many men and women who have dared to stand for the truth were burned at the stake? How then can we think of Paul's assertion, "that all things work together for good to them that love God" as being anything else but a pious platitude?

But there is another side to this story, there is another tale to be told which cheers our hearts and gives us faith to believe that the words of Paul are not a pious platitude but a tested truth. But before we proceed to set forth adequate and convincing reasons for our faith in St. Paul's tested truth, "all things work together for good to them that love God," let us examine the situations that cause us to frequently doubt and become the victims of despair. Just why do we sometimes cry out that it doesn't pay to be good and do good, that it doesn't pay to be square and on the level with our fellowman, it doesn't pay to love God and follow after righteousness? Why do right and be honorable? Look at John Doe who lives at 9999 Will O' Wisp Boulevard, just look at him—biggest scoundrel in town—liar, cheat, skinfint, hypocrite, and yet the milk and honey of the land seems to be given unto him in superabundance. Yet, apparently this is so, and yet, let us remember that there is an eternal and certain law that whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap. Though many of the wicked seem to be having a glorious time fiddling through life, the truth is that under their forced gaiety they are unhappy, uncomfortable, and utterly miserable creatures. Hear the words of David: "I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay tree. Yet he has passed away, and lo, he was not, yea, I sought him, but he could not be found." Listen further to the testimony of David: "The wicked have drawn out the sword, and have bent their bow, to cast down the poor and needy, and to slay such as be of the upright way. Their sword shall enter into their own heart, and their bows shall be broken." What is the import of this observation of David? Is it not that the wicked cut their own throats, that the very things that seem to be the source of their delight and prosperity is the very instrument that utterly destroys them? Hear the truth of the whole matter! The short view of life with our eyes concentrated on the flickering, glittering, tinsel and venerated successes of the wicked is the reason for our sinking into dependency and despair and causes us to cry out that it doesn't pay to be good or do good. The names of the wicked, why are they remembered? Take Pilate, the only reason his name is familiar to the average man and woman is because he once sat in judgment and was a contributing factor in the crucifixion and death of the Son of God and the Son of Man. What about Judas? The only reason you and I know his name is that he was the betrayer of Christ. How about Booth? The only reason you and I know anything about Booth is because he was the assassin of President Lincoln. The names of the wicked have only become by-words because they have attached themselves to the great as barnacles to a vessel.

Still another reason why we sometimes conclude that right and righteousness do not pay is because we set up false standards for our lives. We demand material rewards and a royal easy road in exchange for morality and goodness. We forget that goodness and integrity have their own rewards and that place and power and possessions are mere dross to the gold of clear and clean conscience and the pure and upright heart.

God hath not promised skies always blue,
Flower-sureworn pathways all our lives through;
God hath not promised sun without rain,
Joy without sorrow, peace without pain.

But God hath promised strength for the day,
Rest for the labour, light for the way,
Grace for the trials, help from above,
Unfailing sympathy, undying love.

Hear the words of the Master: "In the world ye shall have tribulation, but of good cheer, I have overcome the world." Are we to be more favored than the Son of God? Are we not too, to suffer tribulation? What of it, if in the world our affections are accepted, utilized and then unappreciated? What of it, if our ideas are rejected? What of it, if we are ignored and our life's labor unhonored? Did not the world reject Jesus? Did it not send him to the cross? "Must we be carried to the skies on flowery beds of ease?" "Ye fearful saints, fresh courage take," even though it be a cross, heavy and burdensome, if you follow "the way, the truth, and the life," ultimately good will triumph over evil and joy and undiluted happiness will be yours in the long, long road of Eternity.

Yes, Paul's affirmation, "We know, that all things work together for good to them that love God" is not a pious platitude but a tested truth. He did not utter these words when he was in a hilarious mood. They express the ripened and mature judgment of one who had tested them not once but many times. Though he was beaten and stoned and cast into prison he knew that if he lived straight and put Christ at the center of his life, his life could not be futile and fruitless. The spread of the gospel unto this day is conclusive evidence that he was right.

In these days the whole universe is being shaken and the principles upon which individuals have builded their lives are being subjected to a severe testing the like of which none of us have seen heretofore. What shall be the outcome? Shall we venture a prophecy, amply supported by history? Yes, it is simply this: that he who is overcome by evil, that he that takes the broad way, taketh the road to destruction, but he that taketh the narrow way taketh the road that leads to victory and to God. For be ye well assured, that Paul knew whereof he spoke. He knew wickedness could never triumph, and that no matter how complicated and difficult the way of life, if the Christian pilgrim really loved God and lived for God, "all things would work together for good."—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

THE THANKFUL HEART.

If one should give me a dish of sand, and tell me there were particles of iron in it, I might look for them with my clumsy fingers, and be unable to detect them; but let me take a magnet and sweep through it, and how would it draw to itself the almost invisible particles by mere power of attraction! The unthankful heart, like my finger in the sand, discovers no mercies; but let the thankful heart sweep through the day, and as the magnet finds the iron, so it will find in every hour some heavenly blessings—only the iron in God's sand is gold.—O. W. Holmes.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary

PRAYER.

O God, our Rock, in whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning, thou givest a security and peace that cannot be shaken, a strength that supports our feeble frames, a love that inspires and lifts to heights eternal and bathes with sweetest bliss our strivings to attain. For the glad New Year with its spirit of promise, efface thou from life the blot of unholy ambition and make our strivings pure. For Jesus' sake.—Amen.

WHY THE CHURCH?

Rev. M. Raymond Plum is supplying very valuable suggestions in the Missionary Herald for our Women's Societies. Detached from a specific meeting, the following program suggestions are of value to other groups than Missionary Societies, hence this re-print about missions from the Herald:

Let the leader direct and summarize the developments of the following paragraphs, as presented by several prepared individuals:

1. Christ is the head of the church. The church is his body, the "corporation of Jesus," deigned to "body him forth." It exists to do in the world what Jesus did in the flesh among men. It is the world's best agency to realize the hopes and purposes of his spirit.

2. The fundamental reason for any corporation, any organization, is that which underlies the church. It is a partnership of Christ's followers organized to do his work more effectively than any number of "lone soldiers," however earnest, could possibly do it.

3. This is the one work of the one church for the one end. There is no real line between the work of the church at home and abroad. The cleavage is between Christianity on the one side, and, on the other side, paganism, vice, ignorance, exploitation, industrial and social wrong, wherever found. Christianity is challenged on every front. Defeat in China is as bad as defeat in America! Advance in the foreign sector as important as advance in the home sector; support of "missions" as strategic as support of the local church. This is the most important corporate enterprise in the world. We want the whole church to carry on the whole work for the whole purpose of Christ!

4. Develop the above paragraph also by a reading or report of "Why Christian Missions?" by Hugh Vernon White (pages 35-37).

(This booklet of four programs may be secured for 10c from an office of the Commission on Missions, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass.; 287 Fourth Ave., New York; 19 South LaSalle St., Chicago.)

5. The importance of the church as a means of supplying religious power for practical righteousness is brought out in the article by Dr. White in this issue of The Missionary Herald, "Christianity and the New World."

6. Illustrate how the churches at work in the various countries "body forth" the one head, by a brief report of the article in the October issue concerning an important council which met this summer: "A report of the Herrnhut Meeting of the International Missionary Council."

7. Refer to "The Five Hundred Weeks." Point out what they declare as to the new conditions, new motive, new approach, and new method of the task of the church.

(This may be secured free in leaflet form from an office of the Commission on Missions.)

8. If desired, portray our part in the work of the whole church by outlining the organization of the Congregational-Christian Churches. This may (1) emphasize the merger of the denominations; and (2) name our boards and commissions for service, each and all cooperating for the "up-building of the body of Christ."

(The first two programs of "Our Congregational-Christian Body at Work," give this material in concise form. This booklet may be secured for 10c from the Commission on Missions.)

9. The leader may close by exhibiting a copy of The Missionary Herald, rapidly pointing out interesting pictures or articles to which reference has been made in this program, or which help to answer the question: "Why the Church?"

J. O. ATKINSON, Sec'y.

"We press forward against theoretical or practical materialism. We admit the validity of no claims to bring justice and happiness by sowing violence and hate. The modern enterprise of missions is an indispensable agency for peace and we regard it as the one thing we can least afford to neglect in a day of international suspicion and fear." From the message to churches from the Montclair, N. J., meeting of the American Board.

MISSIONARY PROGRAM FOR FEBRUARY.

By Mrs. W. M. JAY, Editor.

This is the second program from the little booklet, "Christianity in Revolutionary China," by Rowland McLean Cross. This booklet contains all the material for the program, and may be secured for 10c by sending to the Commission on Missions, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass.

I hope all of you are seeing the weekly programs that are being published for your help and convenience, and making use of some of them. Surely, out of all the program material that is in THE SUN from week to week, no society will lack for suggestions for a good missionary program.

By the way, how about sending in a news item now and then, telling us about your work. Perhaps something you are doing will help some other society.

PROGRAM II.

Talk—"Students Join the Peasant Ranks."

Sing "Blest Be the Tie that Binds," as a benediction.

PROGRAM FOR JUNIORS AND WILLING WORKERS

The leader should have assigned "find-out" topics last month. Some possible subjects are: Chinese homes, Chinese schools (old and new style), Chinese language and books, games and holidays, geography and history.

"What Do You Know About China," by Sadie Mai Wilson, may be borrowed from the American Board Loan Library. "The Spirit of Chinese Youth," by Grace McConnaughey, has helpful information. This material may be secured from Rev. J. L. Lobingier, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass. "Games and Holidays," would be a good theme for this month.

As the children gather, teach them a Chinese game. Some may have brought material for the Friendship Scrapbook started last month. Take time to talk about it and arrange pictures in the scrapbook that have been prepared in advance by the leader.

Lead the children into conversation about the holidays. "What holiday do you like best?" "Christmas," is the usual answer. "Do you suppose that Chinese children have holidays that they enjoy as we enjoy Christmas?" "Christmas?" "Yes, those who have become followers of the Jesus Way do celebrate Christmas, but there are still thousands of Chinese children who have never heard of Jesus and Christmas, but for hundreds of years they have celebrated New Year and do then some of the things that we do at Christmas time."

Tell or read the story, "A Chinese New Year," by Esther E. Nelson, Here and There Story, Vol. XV, No. 2, which may be secured from Rev. J. L. Lobingier, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass., for 5c.

Follow with a worship service planned and conducted by the children. The leader should have helped them plan it in advance so that each child participating knows exactly what he or she is to do. The following suggestions may be incorporated, if desired:

Call to Worship—"Enter into his gate with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise; be thankful unto him, and bless his name, for the Lord is good; his mercy is everlasting, and his truth endureth to all generations."

Hymns—"In Christ There Is No East or West," "We've a Story to Tell to the Nations," "God's Children Live in Many Lands."

Prayer—Have one of the children write a prayer and memorize it in advance.

Story—A "Here and There" story may be used. Begin to plan now for the next session. Ask you the children to find out all they can about Chinese schools, language and books. "What Do You Know About China?" and "The Spirit of Chinese Youth" will be helpful. If the leader has access to a copy of "New Joy," by Sewall and Jones, and "Youth and Revolution in China," by Alfred D. Henninger, she will find helpful matter.

WEEKLY MISSIONARY PROGRAM.

THE CHURCH AND THE COMMUNITY.

"Facing Its Group Conflicts."

The weekly missionary program, as prepared by Rev. Hugh Vernon White, D. D., in the American Missionary, is as follows:

Worship Approach.

Hymns—"O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee," "Where Cross the Crowded Ways of Life," "O Beautiful for Spacious Skies," "Blest Be the Tie that Binds," "Christ for the World, We Sing."

Scripture—Gen. 13:1-12; I. Cor. 1:10-17; Rom. 10:1-13; Gal. 3:23-28; Luke 10:25-27.

Prayer—For breadth of human sympathy and depth of Christian love that will free our church and each one of us from partisan bitterness. For a sincere appreciation of the feelings and needs of all groups and for the guidance of the Spirit of God in our endeavors to create good will in our own community.

Program Suggestions.

In this study of "The Church in the Community: Facing Its Group Conflicts," some searching questions arise about the responsibilities of the church to the community and the inner life of the church itself. There are groups in nearly every community, whether rural or urban, that are in some form of opposition to each other.

The first question for a church group to ask is whether it has learned in its own common life how to preserve a genuine unity among groups with different interests, such as young people and older ones; conservatives and liberals; missionary-minded and anti-missionary.

Have we as a congregation practically adopted the motto of the National Christian Council of China, "We agree to differ, but resolve to love?" If so we really have something to offer to conflicting groups in our community.

It will be well to limit this discussion to one or two group conflicts that actually exist in our own community. What are they? Are they conflicts between racial groups? or religious? or industrial groups? or is there some social stratification that creates antagonism?

Again, in studying such conflicts, get the broader background. Supplement your own personal and local observations by a study of the same problems in their broader aspects. Seek the thought and vision of able minds. Some suggestions of literature for such study are made below. But other sources of such wider knowledge should be sought. As Christians we must rise above personal prejudices and the limits of personal experience if we are to give any community leadership toward group harmony.

1. If it is Conflict of Racial Groups: Read "Blind Spots," by Henry S. Leiper; "Christianity and the Race Question," by J. H. Oldham; "Aggrey of Africa," by Edwin W. Smith. What did Jesus think about racial exclusiveness? Read John 4:1-26; Mark 7:24-30; Luke 4:16-39; What did Paul say? Read Romans 10:1-13; Gal. 3:23-28.

Get acquainted with the different racial groups in your community and if possible have representatives from them take part on this program.

Ask why the conflict; just what each group wants; how a better cooperation can be secured.

If it is a case of Whites vs. Negroes, or Orientals, the church as being a part of one group has a peculiar responsibility to find a Christian way out.

2. If the Conflict is Between Social or Industrial Groups: Read "A Statement of Social Ideals," adopted in 1925 by the National Council; "What Your Church Can Do in Social Service and Industrial Relations," 5c; "Our Common Social problems," Herring and Terrill, 10c; "The Church and Social Relations," Herring and Landis, $1.00; "The Christian Ideal and Social Control," McConnell, $1.75. (These publications may be obtained from the Congregational Education Society, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass., except the books, which may be purchased from the Pilgrim Press.)

Many other books, pamphlets and periodicals furnish material for this study.

If possible, get Rauschenbusch's "Prayers of the Social Awakening," and read his introductory interpretation of the Lord's Prayer; then use the Lord's Prayer in the meeting. Read one of the prayers "For Social Groups and Classes."

Study in unbiased and sympathetic attitude the aspect of the class struggle in your own community. Try to learn just how each side views the issue. There are usually two sides to a case. If possible, get one of the sanest, best spirited leaders of each group to attend and share in this discussion.

If there is an unemployed group an active program of help can go far toward getting below the level of conflict. (Read "Rehabilitation in the Coal Fields," by James Myers, in the Christian Century for August 31, 1932. In that same issue of the Century is a masterly editorial on the Christian's role in this world of pagan self-seeking entitled "The Rewards of the Meek.")

The study of such social conflicts leads out into the economic and political realms and challenges the foundation of Christian ethics. A church must face the local and particular form of those conflicts, yet constant and serious study of the larger principles must be carried on. The church should preserve the Christian spirit as it seeks the Christian way out of these conflicts.

The lesser conflicts between political or social groups or between those cliques into which a community sometimes divides call for the same frank, sincere and Christian study and treatment.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

EASTERN VIRGINIA NOTES LIST

For a long time the Board of Christian Education has been eager to do a progressive piece of work in Eastern Virginia, as well as elsewhere. We have stood back of the Youth Fellowship and have done all within our power to promote young people's work. There were extension workers in all areas of the Southeast except Virginia, and we have been eager to place such a worker in Virginia. Lack of funds has not permitted us to do this.

I am happy to announce that beginning with next Sunday, Miss Irene Cotten, of Dendron, Va., expects to visit the churches of the Eastern Virginia Conference in the interest of the work of young people and leadership training. She is doing this work without charge, but I feel sure that it will mean a great deal to our churches and more especially to the young people.

A schedule is now being worked out, so that she can visit two or three churches each Sunday. I am sure that pastors, superintendents, Christian Endeavor workers and leaders, leaders of Missionary Societies and all young people who are eager to learn more of the work of the church will welcome Miss Cotten into their midst and will do all in their power to see that she has a good audience at whatever time she may be able to come.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTIONS.

It is none too early for officials of the Sunday School Conventions to begin making plans for the coming sessions of their conventions. No doubt, there were goals set and resolutions passed in the last convention, which should be worked out during this year. It is now time to check up on those matters to learn how much has been accomplished and what needs to be done before the end of the convention year.

It has been the custom of the Board of Christian Education to supply report blanks for all of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions.

Recently requests were sent to the officials of the conventions, asking that these officers aid in revising the report blank. So far no response has been received from any of these officers. Unless we hear what the wishes are, we do not know how to provide for your needs. Suggestions from anyone relative to annual report blanks for Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies will be gladly welcomed by the chairman of the board, who is also editor of this page. The sooner the suggestions come in the more valuable they will be.

SUMMER SCHOOLS.

Pastors, churches, Sunday Schools and young people will please take notice that the Elon Summer School will be in session at Elon College, N. C., July 24-30, 1933, and that the Wadley Summer School will be in session July 27th, to August 3, 1933.

It is very important that leaders and young people attend these summer schools so that they may receive the information and inspiration which is needed to live efficient Christian lives in these days of great opportunity. Please arrange revival meetings and other affairs so there will be no conflict with these dates.

The costs are exceedingly low, and yet some very promising people can not attend unless they are aided by someone else. Sunday Schools, churches, Christian Endeavor Societies, Missionary Societies and other church organizations can do no finer piece of work than to assist worthy young people to attend one of these summer schools. If plans are made now the chances are that several worthy young people can be found in your church who can be sent to one of these schools and who will return to be a real help in your community.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Officers of Eastern Virginia Youth Fellowship are eager that the key-workers in each church busy themselves with securing subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. These officers believe that the young people need to read our church paper, and that it will do the young people good to secure subscriptions to our church paper.

Attention is called to the advertisement in the paper of a combination subscription offer to THE CHRISTIAN SUN and The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty for $2.75 per year. One may have both of these excellent church papers coming for this small price. This is only about one-third of what the cost is to have a good daily paper and is probably worth three times as much.

CHURCH GIVING.

Recently I sat in a group of men who were transacting business while they smoked pipes, cigarettes and cigars. Funny thoughts ran through my mind—thoughts like these:

Some of these men were members of a church which has difficulty in meeting financial obligations and whose pastor's salary is almost half a year in arrears. I wondered how much the cost of smoking amounted to. A little bit of figuring showed that if the members and friends of this particular church, about which I knew, were to contribute to their pastor's salary the sum of one cent per day the salary would be paid in full. I just wondered if they spent that much for tobacco and matches.

I am wondering if young people give as much to their church as they spend for useless personal pleasures. What do you think?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

FEBRUARY 5, 1933 (CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR DAY.)

"How shall we determine our ideals?"—Psalms 119-129-136; Matt. 5:1-9.

Daily Readings for this Week.

Monday—"To Be Like Christ," Romans 8:29, 30.
 Tuesday—"Test Ideals by Scripture," I. Cor. 10:6-12.
 Wednesday—"Do Our Ideals Please God," Jno. 8:28.
 Thursday—"Jesus' Ideals," Jno. 5:19-20.
 Friday—"Following a Great Man," I. Thess. 3:1-9.
 Saturday—"Changed Ideals," Gal. 1:13-17.

Among appropriate hymns are: "Wonderful Words of Life," "O, Master Workman of the Race," "Into My Heart," "Fairest Lord Jesus," "Jesus Calls Us O'er the Tumult," "Just As I Am Thine Own to Be," "God Send Us Men," and "I Would be True."

Talks can be made by members on: (1) Ideals from my favorite poems; (2) From books I have read; (3) Ideals from my companions; (4) Ideals from my home; (5) Ideals from my church; (6) Ideals from great personalities I have known; (7) Ideals from the Bible; (8) Ideals from the life of Christ. These talks can be of real value if they come out of the individual's experience.

Ask your pastor or some adult leader to summarize what has been said with a short talk on "Ideals for Youth in 1933."

A discouraged young woman read in Good Housekeeping a poem by Grace Crowell, the first line of which was:

"The day will bring some lovely things."
 She decided to keep a diary of "lovely things" for a year, and by so doing she discovered and recorded beautiful sunsets, songs of birds, kindly deeds, and a happy heart for herself. At the end of the year she was able to say in the words of the poem: "No day has failed me yet."

With each of the suggested topics discussed in some such fashion as this the meeting should be very profitable.

Ideals are more important than some are inclined to believe, for the happiness and success of an individual depends in a large measure upon the character of the ideals which the individual has. For instance, the person who has high ideals of friendship gathers about him or her, friends who have high ideals.

The day of ideals is by no means gone for there are thousands of young people today who are fighting difficult battles and are winning success over selfishness, anger, greed, appetite and many other things. It was a high ideal that sent Dr. M. J. W. White to the Philippine Islands, where he is now at the head of a great hospital and doing wonderful work in helping bodies, minds and spirits.

HE LIVED A LIFE.

What was his creed?
 I do not know his creed; I only know
 That here below, he walked the common road
 And lifted many a load, lightened the task, Brightened the day for others toiling on a weary way:
 This, his only creed; I do not know his creed.
 What was his creed? I never heard him speak
 Of visions rapturous, of Alpine peak,
 Of doctrine, dogma, now or old;
 But this I know, he was forever bold
 To stand alone, to face the challenge of each day,
 And live the truth, so far as he could see—
 The truth that evermore makes free.
 His creed? I care not what his creed;
 Enough that never yielded he to greed,
 But served a brother in his daily need;
 Plucked many a thorn and planted many a flower;
 Glorified the service of each hour;
 Had faith in God, himself, and fellowmen:
 Perchance he never thought in terms of creed,
 I only know he lived a life, indeed!

A State, or nation, or individual that would make a man drunk in order to collect taxes off of him is in the business of selling the virtue of men and women for money. The old barrooms used to make individuals drunk and rob them while in such a condition. Some people today want the State to take up the practice.—Exchange.

"There are briars besetting every path
 That call for patient care,
 There is a cross in every lot,
 And an earnest need for prayer;
 But a lowly heart that leans on thee
 Is happy anywhere."

JESUS CHOOSES THE TWELVE.

LESSON VI—FEBRUARY 5, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "I chose you and appointed you that ye should go forth and bear fruit."—John 15:16.

LESSON TEXT: Mark 3:7-19a.

Jesus' action on, and teaching about, the Sabbath had so enraged the Pharisees that they began to plan how to destroy him. He, therefore, "withdrew himself with his disciples to the sea." He used common sense about things. He did not presume upon the Father's care. In the open country, and among more open-minded people, there was not the danger of assassination that there would have been in the city, and among his enemies. Jesus was simply carrying out into practical action the principle which he established when in the Temptation he refused to throw himself down from the pinnacle of the temple, and thus to presume upon God's care.

The Multitude.

"A great multitude from Galilee followed him." Some of them came from sheer curiosity. Some of them came because they had seen some of his great works. Some came because they had heard what great things he did—there is power and value in personal testimony. Some came because they wanted to be healed. Some came because they wanted sincerely to hear his teaching and to know all about him. Wherever Jesus is at work, he attracts people. But as in this far-off day, they come from many motives. And as in that far-off day, crowds sometimes interfere with the work of Jesus. And today as then, reports of healing men's bodies usually attract larger crowds than reports of healing men's spirits.

"For he had healed many, insomuch that they pressed upon him for to touch him, as many as had plagues." Then as now, people were more concerned about being healed of their physical infirmities than about being forgiven of sin and healed of their spiritual infirmities.

"And he straitly charged them—the unclean spirits—that they should not make him known." He did not want the testimony of unclean spirits. It was a recognition of his power and his purity, but it was not from the heart. It was of fear and not of adoration. He, therefore, commanded them to keep their peace.

So great did the crowd become that he had to get into a boat and push off a bit from the shore, lest he be injured in the crush of struggling people who were seeking to touch him and thus be healed of their plagues. They thought of him as a healer and not as a teacher.

The Twelve.

The Master's most effective and most lasting work was not done with the multitude; it was done with a small group. The church began, not with the multitude, but with the small group of twelve men, whose names are given in today's lesson. If only ministers and teachers in the Sunday School would see that crowds are not always a measure of what is being done! When Jesus started his work, he began with a small group of men, whom he had trained, and to whom he had imparted his spirit.

"And he goeth up into a mountain, and calleth unto him whom he would; and they came unto him." Luke says that after he had continued all night in prayer, he made his selection from those who were with him. The Twelve were the inner circle within the small circle of sincere followers.

twelve." Perhaps because there had been twelve tribes of Israel, and symbolic of his mission not to destroy but to fulfill. But only twelve men, to whom he ultimately entrusted the future of Christianity.

"That they should be with him." He wanted them for fellowship undoubtedly. But he wanted them also that he might train them, and that he might impart to them his spirit. Contact with the Master himself is the first prerequisite for those who would do his work.

"And that he might send them forth to preach." They were to learn of him. And then they were to share what they had received with others. First-hand experience with him would prepare them to tell others. They were also to learn by doing. He sent them out to preach that they might learn to preach. We can learn to do in Christian work only by doing. The person who thinks that he must wait until he gets final training before doing anything, is ignorant of the first law of pedagogy. Young people will learn to worship by worshipping, to teach by having some part in teaching, to pray by praying, to speak in public by speaking in public, and so on.

"And to have power to heal sickness." They were to have a ministry to the body. The Gospel has always emphasized a sound mind in a sound body. But first of all it has emphasized a sound spirit.

"And to cast out devils." Modern science has made much progress in the treatment of mental diseases, but by whatever name such work is done, the fact remains that the human spirit still needs the experience which the Bible refers to as "casting out devils." Jesus Christ has the power to drive the evil spirits and the devils out of human hearts. And he gives this power, as he gives the power to heal, to his followers. We can live in such a way that we can help to cast out devils.

"And he ordained twelve"—men of varied temperament, of varied previous history, of varied ability. The twelve are symbolic of Christ's power to take all kinds and types of men and use them in Kingdom service. The story should teach us, too, the place and importance of the "unknown disciple." We knew only a little of the best known ones: Peter, James and John; still less about several of the others, and nothing whatever about some of them. But the Master used them all in his service.

And there is, of course, the sad story of Judas. He is simply the "man who might have been." He had good qualities and fine possibilities. Jesus would not have selected him if he had not been disciple timber at the beginning. But Judas did not respond to the best that was in him, or to the appeal of Jesus. And throughout history he will be known as Judas Iscariot, "who betrayed him."

DANIEL.

and prayed, and gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime."

Thus we see that these first six chapters were indeed a preparation for the last six and that Daniel was well fitted to become a major prophet.

Keep in mind this brief outline of Daniel's life and each division will be the heading for a single chapter:

1. Daniel's youth and education.
2. The dream of the image and its significance.
3. Faithfulness of Daniel's companions and their deliverance from the fiery furnace.
4. Nebuchadnezzar's tree dream and its fulfillment.
5. The feast of Belshazzar and the hand-writing on the wall.
6. Daniel's fidelity, and his deliverance from the lion's den.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE

"The opening of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."—Psalm 119:130.

MONDAY.

UP GRADE.

"I press on towards the mark of the prize of the high calling."—Phil. 3:14.

The way of the New Year is all up grade and a hard and steady pull. Every desire is for better conditions and an effort for permanence that will become perfection. Hence the great call of Christ to us is to "press on," "be faithful," and "there remaineth a rest to the people of God." The death bequest is peace.

"Does the road wind up-hill all the way?"

Yes, to the very end.

Will the day's journey take the whole long day?

From morn to night, my friend.

"But is there for the night a resting place?"

A roof for when the slow, dark hours begin.

May not the darkness hide it from my face?

You cannot miss that inn.

"Shall I meet other wayfarers at night?"

Those who have gone before.

Then must I knock, or call when just in sight?

They will not keep you standing at the door.

"Shall I find comfort, travel-sore and weak?"

Of labour you shall find the sum.

Will there be beds for me and all who seek?

Yes, beds for all who come."—Rossetti.

TUESDAY.

THE CALL OF LIFE.

"Let us go up at once and possess it; for we are well able to overcome it."—Num. 13:30.

There are people who cry and people who try. They who try, go right on doing the impossible, exciting envy in the face of those who cry.

The problems which face us each day are not so important in their aspect as is the quality of our fibre.

Those who cry or are listless and depend on others are pessimists, calamity howlers, who find their tasks too hard. Those who try are like the three men who put ten thousand criers to flight.

We are told of a French artist while painting his famous masterpiece, imagined all the artists of the world standing around him and watching him. No wonder it was a masterpiece.

We are also encompassed with a cloud of witnesses. At the head of these witnesses is God. "Quit you like men and be strong." "Let us play the part of a man."

Prayer—Say the Lord's Prayer.

WEDNESDAY.

RELIGIOUS ENTHUSIASM.

"He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire."—Matt. 3:2.

Enthusiasm and devotion for a person is based on a near and real intercourse with that person.

Passionate religious enthusiasm attaches itself to the person of God through Jesus Christ, and the more near and real our intercourse with him, the more clear will be our knowledge of him, and the more beautiful will be our holiness and more fiery-hearted will be our desire to live worthy of him.

In close real intercourse, Christ gives fervor by bringing the warmth of his own love to bear upon our hearts through the spirit, and that kindles ours, and thus our lives glow for him through life.

It must be known that the secret of religious fervor and devotion is not known by mere reading of the Gospel, nor by saying that Christ excites love in our souls. Christ loved us unto death, and our love for him must be the same. This truth alone makes the fire burst from our lives.

Prayer—Our Father,

"Come Holy Spirit, our souls inspire,
And lighten us with celestial fire."—Amen.

THURSDAY.

KEEP THE FIRES BURNING.

"The fires shall ever be burning upon the altar; it shall never go out."—Lev. 6:13.

Religious enthusiasm, like any other enthusiasm, needs nurture. There is danger that our various interests in life will diminish and impoverish our devotion.

History hands down to us the way others have kept this enthusiasm burning. They steeped their souls in his Word; they stood before him daily in prayer and consecration; they steeped their lives in meditation upon his ways; they engaged in long sessions of contemplation of God and Christ; and as they mused the fire burned. Passion was born of thought; and they carried thereby in their hearts the secret (knowledge) of the Lord; they carried with them a conviction of their duty; and most of all there was born in them a desire to accomplish that mission.

*"But none honor God like the thirst of desire;
Nor possesses the heart so completely with him;
For it burns the world out with the swift ease of fire,
And fills life with good works till it runs o'er the brim."—Faber.*

Prayer—Oh! dear Lord, let us muse on thee in thy beauty; let us commune with thy loveliness every day; let us dwell more in thy secret place; create within us thy glory; shine into our souls with thy unspeakable countenance; create within us enthusiastic passion which shall be the baptism of life, a fire in which everything un-Christian shall be burned out.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

A QUESTION OF LIFE.

"Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."—Matt. 4:4.

Life strides out before us to meet us in desperate duel, as Goliath did David, and we go forward in the combat wondering what will be the outcome. Life is not an enemy, but it is a struggle to gather from it our success.

Take Jesus with you. Our text is the words of Jesus used in his combat with Satan. We are told that he went forth in that combat full of the Spirit, and that his motto was the fulfillment of all righteousness. As we follow him through we find that he overcomes as a pious man. He knows the Bible, and God's right word leaps spontaneously to his lips when he needs it. He knows what his mission is, and nothing can deter him from executing it. He desires to do the Fathers' will, and nothing can attract him to change that desire.

This question of Christ's life is the same to us: His word, a conviction in him, and a fixed and steady purpose to live by that, let come what will.

Prayer—Dear Father, how shall we live? We recall thy teaching, "He that loveth life shall lose it," and we know that there is disaster when the material things of this world are treated as our highest end. We know that we eat and are not satisfied. Give unto us a consciousness of thy meaning that only the bread of purity, truth, honesty, justice, love and righteousness satisfies. In Christ's name, we ask it.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

WEATHERSTRIPS.

"I would haste me to a shelter from the stormy wind and tempest."—Read Psalm 55:8-19.

The improved wood and metal weatherstrips are a great advance in the art of home-building. When the wind blows in, the dust and the wintry cold or summer heat come with it. With the windows and doors protected with modern weatherstrips, the cost of heating is much less, and the home is far more sanitary.

We need something to keep from the houses of our souls the dust of worldly frets and worries, the cold air of doubt, the torrid blasts of temptation. What are the weatherstrips of the soul? They are Bible-reading, and prayer, and thought about the higher things, and sweet converse with those in whom abides the Spirit of Jesus Christ. Thus sealed, the house of life will be a safe and blessed home.

Prayer—Shall we not be thine, O blessed Spirit? Blow upon us, airs of heaven, and prevent the influx of the deadening air of earth. For in thee we would live and breathe and have all our being.—Amen. AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

REFRAINING LIPS.

"In multitude of words there wanteth not transgression, but he that refraineth his lips doth wisely."—Read Prov. 10:11-21.

This proverb might well have been chosen by Calvin Coolidge as his motto. His remarkable taciturnity first won the country to him. He has taught us all to think thrice before speaking once.

But what did Solomon mean when he said that this flood of words is actually sinful, not wanting transgression?

The multitude of words is sinful because speech is one of God's greatest gifts to mankind, and should be used with reverent care. It is by speech mainly, that we influence others, and we can influence them to stability, to thoughtfulness, to manliness, to reverence, only if our speech possesses these fine qualities. The more we watch those whose lives till for God, the more clearly we shall see that they weigh their words, and make sure that they count for the kingdom of heaven and not for the kingdom of this world.

Prayer—Make us speakers for thee, O Christ. May our words carry cheer and healing, love and courage, faith and hope. In thy name, O thou that spoke as never man had spoken before thee."—Amen. AMOS R. WELLS.

Prohibition has raised the level of the lower classes in America by reducing drink-caused poverty. The Salvation Army should know. Evangeline Booth says: "A record is kept of the causes of poverty where Christmas baskets are given. Before prohibition, the cause in three out of four families was drunkenness of one or both parents; less than ten years after prohibition took effect, in a study of 1,000 families, drunkenness was the cause in only one out of ten." Employers have not been without benefits from prohibition. The same authority is responsible for the statement that: "In a great corporation employing 101,000 workers, there were only 30 discharged in 1927 for intoxication; whereas in 1915, there were 202 employees out of 8,755 dismissed for drinking."

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

HOW JESUS GAVE THANKS.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"He took the cup, and gave thanks."—
Luke 22:17.

I.

Jesus gave thanks with a cup in his hand. That is one of the most significant pictures in all the world. Jesus is standing at the table about which his disciples are gathered. It is the very night on which he is betrayed. In a few hours he is to be rushed to his death, like the breaking of a mighty dam. Of this he is now conscious. He, a man now, un-arrested, un-arraigned, free; but in a brief space of time he is to be betrayed, arrested, tried, crucified—in less than twenty-four hours it is all to be finished. This he knows. And it is to be done first by his own follower, Judas; and after that all his picked disciples are to forsake him and flee—Peter is to break bitterly that he ever saw him, or had anything to do with him. Then he is to be hastily arraigned before the unfair courts, for an unfair trial, and to be beaten unmercifully and then to be driven to the Hill, and hanged upon a tree. Of that he is aware.

But all this is as nothing. And that which is the real thing is beyond our present apprehension. He was to die for a sinning world; to take its burdens upon himself, and bare them upon the tree. Other men have died at cruel hands, and as a result of brutal torture—they have done it bravely. In fact, it is usually the rule that it is done more or less bravely. Mere death was not what mattered with Jesus. His heart was breaking with a great and overwhelming love. His heart was breaking with a sense of the world's guilt; with the eternal longing of his Father's heart for all his children to be at one with goodness; right in the sight of Right; right in the sight of God. The fixing of the gulf between the goodness of God and the waywardness of man was far more to Jesus than the mere death of a Nazarene.

And even so, with a cup in his hands he gave thanks. Forgetting the pain, bitterness, shame, he also forgot the cross for the joy that was set before him in being able to change the meaning of the cross from cruelty to love! The cross was to become a symbol of love that never fails! Jesus took his cup in his hand—accepted its suffering—and gave thanks for what he could see beyond.

II.

Jesus gave thanks with his disciples in his hopes. Weak, or strong as they were, with them in his future hopes for the wide, wide world he gave thanks. They were just men—not angels—not yet, even, saints—not by a great deal. How they would fail him, and how they would love him. How they would help break his heart, and how they would give their very lives for him. Of this Jesus was aware. And on the very night in which one of their band betrayed him unto death he gave thanks.

On them he would depend. To them he would entrust the News. A commission would he give them that would encircle the globe, and save the world. It was his hope. And he placed it in mortal man's ability, God helping, to show courage and keep the world's greatest trust.

Thinking of them that night, he gave thanks. Their friendship he had, and how happy it made him. "Drink ye all of this cup, and as often as you do it think of this friendship between you and me." When we give thanks we shall certainly do well to remember friends. How Jesus has made the world ring warm and true across millions of hearthstones in a needy, and often unfriendly world! When Jesus gave thanks he took his friends into his hopes, and believed in them.

III.

Jesus gave thanks with the cross in his head. The thorns were pressed upon his brow—he had come to the night in which the image of self-surrender would be written on his reason. It was not some foolish sentiment that drove Jesus up to Calvary. It was not some blind devotion, called by all sorts of pretty names. It was not the yielding in a single night to a great ideal. It was "being about my Father's business." From a boy in the temple to the man held in contempt by its devotees he was following his Father's business—coolly, deliberately, and after the manner of the steadied, best powers of reason. The lifting of the load of sin, and guilt was in his thoughts, in his plans, in his reason. From his first discerning questions in his first great quest the beams of the cross are in his mind.

Young people, you will find a great deal wrong with the world when you enter your classrooms; you will find a great deal wrong with the world when you look upon the burdens of your brethren; you will find a great deal wrong with the world when you examine the institutions of society of your day and generation; and you will have an urge in your hearts to help right some of the world's wrongs. When you reason it out you will find plenty of room for sacrificial service—plenty of room for giving yourselves; plenty of logic there will be for your conclusions that the world will not be made better unless somebody pays the price. You may become first class skeptics somewhere along the line. But look on all sides of your problems and on all sides of your solutions before you take the Cross of Jesus Christ out of your histories, or out of your heads. It will stand the test of your sanest reason, and only your sanest reason will reach it—and even then you will not be able to fully comprehend it. And when you give thanks you will learn to give thanks for the element of sacrifice in the logic of your lives.

IV.

Jesus gave thanks with a world of sinners in his heart. "He ate with publicans and sinners." with the common man and woman, yearning for a larger life; but ever finding himself handicapped—when he would do good finding evil present. To that world of individuals with half-chance, and half-hope, he came. And with a love that would not let them go, he went to the cross for them. With them in his heart of boundless love he would cry on the cross: "Forgive them, for they know not what they do." Poor, ignorant people, whom he would help, not hurt; and heal, not hinder nor handicap. With that world of misguided folk in his heart he gave thanks for the visions of life which he had for them.

Are we really and truly Christians? Have we learned what it is to give thanks for cross-bearing opportunities in life? Have we learned what Jesus meant when he said: "Let him take up his cross daily and follow me?" Again have we gone outside ourselves for something to be thankful about? Have we taken our co-workers into our hopes for their future, rather than into our jealousies? Have we been willing to see them increase as we decrease, and found that something to be thankful for? Or do we look at the harvest which has been reaped for self, and think that it is that for which we should be grateful. Again in our thanksgiving, have we been able to thank God for the discipline of enemies; and to pray for their forgiveness if they have wronged us? Perhaps we have learned so to thank. And perhaps we have not—most likely we have not. But we can thank God that that is what our Christ did, and that that is our goal, and our aim. Setting ourselves such a task religion will be worth while, and life will be full of real purpose, and what is more we shall be saints of God in a needy world, and many lives will be blessed because we have lived.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The "flu" seems to like the Christian Orphanage. It visited the Baby Home several weeks ago, and more than thirty children have had it.

The pretty weather during the last week has given us the garden fever, and we have planted garden peas, cabbage, lettuce and mustard.

Last year we needed a refrigerating plant for our dairy. We did not have the money to buy it. We asked the Sunday Schools to donate Octagon scap wrappers to pay for one.

We have one other need that the good women have always supplied in a beautiful way and in a beautiful spirit—dresses for the girls and little suits for the little boys.

The Mideastern Supply Company, Henderson, N. C., sent us a box containing eight nice coats for girls, 25 pairs curtains, 22 draperies, seven pieces of tapestry, nine striped curtains, three spreads, 47 pairs voile curtains, and thirteen sweaters.

Other gifts include: Mrs. W. R. Sellars, Burlington, N. C., 1 coat. Hines' Chapel Church, 1 blouse, 1 overcoat, three pair trousers, Irish potatoes, etc.

OBITUARIES

WELLS.

Mabel Yarbrough Wells, daughter of Brother and Sister John Yarbrough, of Semora, N. C., was born October 9, 1886, and died suddenly at her home, Edgerton, Va., Friday morning, October 28, 1932. Age 46 years, and 19 days.

The deceased joined Lebanon Christian Church when young. She was educated in the public school and at Elon College.

On July 12, 1911, she married Mr. C. H. Wells of the Southern Railway, and made her home at Edgerton, Va. Mrs. Wells was from childhood very active in church work. She was a leader in the Sunday School, missionary society and every other enterprise of the church.

She is survived by her father, Deacon John Yarbrough, her husband, C. H. Wells, three daughters and one son as follows: Virginia, Elinor, Annie and Robert Henry. Her mother, Mrs. Lu Yarbrough, died on June 7th of this year.

A service was conducted at the home in Edgerton by Rev. O. B. Carter of the M. E. Church, and the body was brought to Lebanon Church for a service at 2:30 P. M., by the writer and Rev. C. L. Coggin of the Baptist Church. Burial was in the McCadan Cemetery nearby the church. A very large crowd of friends and neighbors from Edgerton and practically all the people of Semora and community.

An excellent Christian lady, a true companion and an ideal mother has gone to her reward.

My prayer is for God's sustaining grace to the father, husband and children and may the example of her noble virtues and faithful Christian service live on in the lives of her children to bless them and others.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Again the Ladies' Benevolent and Social Union of Suffolk Christian Church has felt a blow administered by the hand of death, taking from our midst, on November 10, 1932, our friend and honorary member, Mr. Hersey Woodward, Sr.

For many years, Mr. Woodward attended the meetings, contributed of his material substance toward the benevolent work of the society, and enjoyed with us the kindly fellowship that has always prevailed in the organization.

His Christian spirit has lived with us throughout the years, and his going has left a vacancy in our ranks that will be felt for years to come. Mr. Woodward's kindly and genial disposition, his loving sympathy with the work at hand, and his untiring efforts toward the building up of the Kingdom have made him an example worthy of emulation; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we submit to the will of an all-wise Father in taking from earth to his home in glory our friend and co-worker.
2. That we may endeavor to carry on the work which he loved and of which he was so much a part.
3. That we seek to emulate all that was good in the life of our departed friend and brother.
4. That a copy of these resolutions be made a part of the record of the Ladies'

Benevolent and Social Union, a copy be sent to "The Christian Sun" and a copy to his family.

HARDIE.

Mattie Carlyle Hardie, daughter of Henry Herbert and Fannie Roberta Hankley, was born July 4, 1902, and died October 6, 1932, aged 30 years, 3 months and 2 days.

When a young girl she united with Catawba Baptist Church, Nathalie, Va., and later transferred to Liberty Christian Church.

She was married on December 30, 1931, to Mr. Sandy L. Hardie, of Nathalie. Mrs. Hardie was loved by all for her lovely disposition and kindly spirit. In her home she was always faithful to duty. In Sunday School, Christian Endeavor, and other activities of the church, she will be greatly missed. When she could render service to those of her community in times of sickness and trouble, she was with them.

Mrs. Hardie is survived by her mother, Mrs. Willie Landrum, one brother, Dewey Hankley, two half-brothers and five half-sisters.

The funeral and burial were at Liberty Church, conducted by the writer. A large congregation of friends and relatives was present. The floral tributes were many and beautiful. The sympathy of the entire community goes out to her husband and relatives. All are confident that one who lived such a beautiful and useful life here is extremely happy in her heavenly reward.

WHITE.

Whereas, the death angel visited our community and took from our midst a consecrated member of our church and missionary society, Mrs. Sarah Anna White, of Isle of Wight Christian Church, and,

Whereas, she had been a faithful, efficient worker and exemplified in her daily life the principles of the religion she professed; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we are grateful to the Master for her happy and useful life of service, though we miss her presence which was ever a joy and inspiration to us.
2. That we emulate her noble example, cherish her beloved memory and seek to carry forth the work of the church which was so dear to her heart.
3. That the removal of such a life from among us leaves a vacancy and a shadow that will be deeply realized, and will prove a great loss to the community.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, a copy be placed on the missionary society records, and a copy sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1933.

NUMBER 5.

An Anti-War Program for 1933.—

Only recently there was held the eighth annual conference on the cause and cure of war. At this conference which is making a noble effort in the cause of war abolition, five objectives were outlined for the year 1933: Immediate ratification of the World Court protocols; declaration of an embargo on the shipment of arms to nations at war; continued fulfillment of the pact of Paris by non-recognition of situations, treaties and agreements brought about by means contrary to its covenants; definite results from the Geneva disarmament conference; and entrance of the United States into the world disarmament conference. All of these objectives seem to be reasonable and possible, and will help to block the bloody Martian chariot. In this connection it is gratifying to note that President-elect Roosevelt has signified his intention of carrying out the policy of the present administration in regard to the situation in the trans-Pacific area.

A Record of Which to be Proud.—

The Methodist Protestant-Recorder is authority for the statement that "Not one mission under the auspices of the Board of American Missions of the United Lutheran Church in America was closed during the last year." We are also told that during the year, 682 mission congregations and 78 preaching stations showed a net increase of 32,000 members. Rev. Dr. Franklin F. Fry, executive secretary of the board, reports that 38 of the missions, which are located in various parts of North America and the West Indies, became self-supporting on the first of January, freeing funds formerly used for their maintenance for other enterprises. Thus there have been forty-two new missions started in their place. Over $1,000,000 was expended by the board during the past year on home missions and church extension work, and there are 525 missionaries in the service of the board. This is a record of which our Lutheran brethren may be justly proud, and we congratulate them.

Hunger Revolt in Northern Caucasia.—

News has again filtered through as to the conditions in various parts of the Soviet Republic. This time it tells of starvation and revolt in Northern Caucasia. It has been the policy of the government to do farming as well as manufacturing on the communistic plan, and the grain and produce raised is then practically confiscated and sent into what might be termed headquarters. An Anti-Soviet Russian paper published in Paris says: "The Cossacks, who form a great majority of the population of the Kuban Region, rose up against the Soviet Government in five districts which have a total population of about 150,000. The 'army' which they formed was led by regular Cossack officers. All Cossacks capable of standing under arms, including old men of sixty and seventy, joined the ranks of the rebels and fought against the Soviets. It was a real war." However, their strength was comparatively small when the strong arm of the Red government was brought against them, and numbers were ultimately slain. "By order of the Red commanders, no prisoners were taken—those who surrendered were killed," we are told, "on the spot."

Survival of the Fittest.—

Under the above caption the Literary Digest for January 28th, tells us that "one out of every twenty-two business and industrial concerns went into bankruptcy during the past three years, and one out of every six banks has been closed." The churches, colleges, and hospitals have given a much better account of themselves, and we learn that "only one out of every forty-four colleges has been closed because of financial lack, one out of forty-five hospitals, and one out of every 2,344 churches." Two reasons have been assigned for these differences. The first is that the last named group is naturally more conservative than are banks and industrial concerns. The second reason given for this survival is the unselfish attitudes of ministers, college presidents and faculties, and hospital employees. In conclusion we are told by Mr. A. C. Marts, of New York, who has furnished the figures quoted: "Our churches, colleges and hospitals have shown themselves thus far to be sound of heart and body. The winter will prove a tragic test for many of them, but their friends are proud of their seaworthiness thus far, and are wishing for them a safe voyage to the quieter seas that are before us."

The Soviet Government and Religion.—

Writing in the Sunday School Times on "The Religious Situation in Russia," Ernest Gordon says: "On the one hand we have the Five-Year Plan for the destruction of all religion, closing of all churches and houses of worship, prohibition of religious publications, and the like." On the other hand, he quotes the commander-in-chief of the Red army, Woroschilov, as saying that the tendency toward religion in the army has "in these years strengthened immensely. One finds," he says, "in the army, more commonly than elsewhere, religious Communists who do not conceal their sympathy with religion, who have no intention of parting from it. While the reports of army secretaries represent atheism to be one hundred per cent in the army, in reality religion has advanced to an extent to which we would not have dreamed before the war. The army is infected with it." From another source comes the following: "On the Caucasus coast of the Black Sea, on the Volga, in Siberia, in the North, everywhere, religious organizations are forming. . . The return to religion which is ever more apparent among the people of the Soviet Union is found not only among the older people, who are disillusioned by the present form of government, but even among the young. Especially great is the movement among the Russian women who insist on a revision of the opinions forced upon them and display a deep hunger for belief. Religious secret societies which have come up lately among the Soviet youth are spreading rapidly." Religion is not so easy to kill!

While Flags Fly at Half Mast.—

While flags still fly at half mast in honor of the late Ex-President Calvin Coolidge, it seems appropriate that the following letter, written in 1924 by Rev. E. C. Carpenter, of New Haven, Conn., who taught in the Plymouth district school in the winter of 1884-85, and recently reprinted in The Christian Advocate, be given here: "There is nothing strange or startling about Calvin Coolidge's boyhood. He was brought up like hundreds of other boys in those quiet rural towns. There was not a thing about him to mark him out for greatness. He was quiet, methodical, a fairly good scholar, punctual, with a dry and solemn sort of humor. He had a queer, nasal twang to his voice that frequently caused the other children to imitate him. . . . What they (the newspapers) say about his 'silence' is mostly nonsense. He is simply the old-fashioned New England Yankee, who thinks a great deal and says little. He gets all of that from his father. Plymouth has 250 people. It is ten miles from a railroad, twenty miles from a trolley, forty miles from a college. It never had a saloon in the town when Coolidge was growing up, and, as far as I know, never had a bathroom, an electric or gas light, a coal fire, a graded school, or a high school, and scarcely anything that could be called a church. And yet I have known of five ministers of the gospel, one governor of the State, and now the President of the United States who were brought up in Plymouth." The Wesleyan Methodist in this connection, quotes Dr. Orison S. Marden, who says: "The sturdy, vigorous, hardy qualities, the stamina, the brawn, the grit which characterizes men who do great things in this world, are, as a rule, country bred. If power is not absorbed from the soil, it certainly comes from very near it. There seems to be a close connection between robust character and the soil, the hills, mountains and valleys, the pure air and sunshine. There is a very appreciable difference between physical stamina, the brain vigor, the solidity and reliability of country-bred men and those of the city." And our contemporary adds this comment: "All of this and much more that might be said should serve to keep the church deeply interested in the success of its country and village societies. The country pastorate is still a great field for the man who has a good appreciation of human values."

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Rev. J. Bernard Root, of the First Congregational Church of Sanford, Fla., has been elected president of the Sanford Protestant Ministerial Association for the coming year, succeeding Rev. Wm. J. Brooks, Jr., of the First Baptist Church.

Attention is called to the notice of Bro. T. H. Barritt in another column of THE SUN. Bro. Barritt is favorably known where he has worked as a competent and consecrated man of service and leadership in song. Any church desiring help will certainly be benefited by having him.

Dr. Chas. H. Beale is again drawing large audiences to the First Church, St. Petersburg, Fla. For instance, last Sunday every available seat was taken with listeners sitting in the pastor's room behind the pulpit, over 2,000 being present. Dr. Beale also gives weekly morning lectures on current literature to audiences of over 500. He is ably assisted in the work of the church by Rev. Lawrence A. Gedcke.

Rev. C. Arthur Lincoln, of Daytona Beach, underwent an operation for appendicitis on January 24th. The operation was successful and was taken just in time to prevent a very serious condition. His many friends of the Southeast and elsewhere will sympathize with him in this trying experience. We are glad to report his steady improvement, and we all wish for him a rapid recovery.

Bro. H. C. Caviness returned for a week's evangelistic campaign in Palm Street Church last week, and found the revival spirit in that church and community very much alive and quite active. Many young people have been reached and scores have united with the church. There were 380 in Sunday School last Sunday. Pastor Neese and his good people are greatly stirred by the continued work of grace in church and community.

Rev. J. W. Patton, recuperating from a very serious operation at Charlotte, N. C. hospital, returned to his home at Elon last week, but found it necessary, from weakness and because of immediate medical and surgical attention, to return to the hospital, which he did on January 27th. His friends, and they are many, feel anxious for his complete recovery. Rev. J. L. Foster and other ministerial friends are caring for his congregations during his enforced absence. Bro. Patton may be addressed at Charlotte Sanitarium, Charlotte, N. C.

Writes one of our anxious pastors: "Times and conditions are desperate with many of our people, and I see no indication of better conditions under the promised and prospective legalized (?) and regulated sale of liquor, wine and beer. I wonder what will be the consequences of such regulation (?) If, however, the church would come upon her knees and turn her heart fervently to God, there would come victory in spite of the present outlook." Not a few, even, who are not anxious pastors, are wondering just how a nation is to drink itself to progress and prosperity.

Rev. John Scotford, New York City, editorial secretary of the Commission on Missions, has been making a rapid tour of the Southeast following the mid-winter meeting. He went first to New Orleans, and then visited the churches in West Florida with Rev. William H. Tillman, and also made a hasty tour of Florida, meeting the pastors, visiting the churches and securing material for illustrated articles in the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty. After visiting Florida, he will visit Birmingham, and other places in Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee and North Carolina.

Dr. L. E. Smith, president of Elon College, went to Holland, Va., January 29th, to conduct in the Holland Church a service calculated to deepen the interest of church and community in Elon College, its needs and its welfare. January and February are College months among our churches, and all of them, by vote of the Convention, should put on a program of information about the needs and work of our church schools of higher learning, and of the great contribution these are making to church life and progress. All our churches need to hear and know more about Elon College.

Dr. P. H. Fleming, Burlington, N. C., supplied the pulpit at Elon College, in the absence of President Smith last Sunday. Dr. Fleming was heard with gratitude and gladness by students and the community as he expounded and emphasized, with appropriate illustrations, the text: "Then Peter said, silver and gold have I none, but such as I have, give I thee." (Acts 3:6.) The main thought of the service was that when we are in a penitent mood and are anxious and in need of help, our Lord, through the service of his servants, is always ready to give us even better than we ask or deserve.

Every pastor and many laymen should have, and would greatly enjoy, a copy of the "Fellowship of Prayer for 1933." It is published by the Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life, 287 Fourth Ave., New York City. The price is 3c the copy; 25 or more, 2c the copy. This little booklet of 32 pages carries a most wholesome and suggestive devotional service for the individual with a citation of a brief Bible reading, comment and prayer for each day of the Lenten Season from March 1st to April 16th, inclusive. We cannot conceive of a more helpful and essential preparation, devotionally, for Easter and the preceding weeks than is this "Fellowship of Prayer." By all means, send 3c to the publishers and get a copy, worth a hundredfold its price.

Dr. Arthur E. Leonard, who went to the church at Coral Gables for three months, found it necessary to decline the church's call to the permanent pastorate, because of the very serious illness of Mrs. Leonard. Dr. Leonard immediately won the hearts of the church people, and they are eager for him to take the pastorate permanently, and he in turn was delighted with the church and the city. Mrs. Leonard was taken seriously ill shortly after their arrival and he felt that he would be unable on that account to continue the work. The church has invited for an interim pastorate Rev. Leslie J. Barnette, formerly secretary of the New York City Church Extension Board, and previously pastor of the Lewis Avenue Church, Brooklyn. Mr. and Mrs. Barnette were spending the winter in Miami, and he will continue to serve the church for the balance of this season.

Attention is called to the very important notice in another column from Dr. J. Edward Kirby, Raleigh, N. C., under the title, "Ministers' Retreat." The editor is personally acquainted with both Dr. Lewis T. Reed, and Dr. Brewer Eddy, and to think of sitting in council for two or three days with two such outstanding men and leaders in Christian thought and worship is re-assuring and certainly gives hope and courage to minds and hearts that are hungry for spiritual food and strength. It is to be devoutly hoped, and anticipated, that every one of our ministers and pastors who can do so, will take advantage of these services and avail themselves of the privilege of having their minds directed to things high and holy by these capable and consecrated men. March 14th, 15th, and 16th should be, and can be made memorable days in our United Church at Raleigh, and with ministers in reach thereof.

The annual meeting of the West Tampa Mission was held at the home of Rev. and Mrs. Carl H. Corwin on January 24th. The board, with guests, were entertained at supper, after which the annual meeting was held with the chairman of the board, Rev. C. DeW. Brower presiding. Among the visitors present was Rev. John Scotford, editorial secretary of the Mission, and all the members of the staff indicated a good year with the Mission. Real progress was being made in every department of the service, but especially in the development of the program of social service through the various clubs for young people and for mothers. Two branch Sunday Schools are being conducted in different sections of the Latin-American colony. The Mission is in great need of financial support and it is marvelous the results from the meager financial support. The sacrificial life of the members of the staff is most inspiring. There is cheerful devotion to the work in spite of the falling off of income. On the whole, there was a spirit of faith and optimism as the Mission faced its responsibilities for the coming year.

In 1932, the New York Bible Society distributed 802,563 copies of the Bible, or portions of it, in the city and harbor of New York. Four new languages were added to the list of translated Scriptures. At the recent 123rd annual meeting of this society, it was reported that during the society's 123 years of existence, a total of 18,177,452 volumes have been given out. Of the number of Bibles distributed in 1932, 143,271 were given to the crews of steamers and freighters; 58,546 were given to immigrants on their arrival on our shores; and 600,746 were distributed in hotels, hospitals, prisons, institutions and in the homes of the needy of all races. In his annual report, General Secretary Dr. M. L. Robinson stated: "Hundreds of letters from correspondents and reports from agents showed conclusively the increasing dependence upon the Bible during this most trying year of financial depression. Looking about for some security in the material world and finding none, a person becomes desperate indeed, until his attention is turned to the Word of God. In the past year, the New York Bible Society has been moved with a sense of its amazing responsibility to place the Bible in the hands of those to whom it may bring the only consolation and help that will sustain courage and even life itself."

Dr. John R. Mott, eminent statesman and leader in Christian thought and activity, does well to call attention, with clarion note, to the fact of centering attention of all Christian thinkers on the "supreme importance of listening to the Word of God—to God himself. All too much," Dr. Mott declares, "are we of the present prone to listen first, or chiefly, to almost every other voice—for example, the voice of the latest significant book, the deliverance of some noted authority, the voice of the findings of some conference of so-called leading minds, the voice of some eminent personality of the day, such as Gandhi—all good in their places, but never to be assigned the first place. And we may be sure that in momentous days like these, he does not wish us to be contented with simply maintaining the status quo. Is it not true that invariably, through Christ and through his followers in every generation, he summons to press into ever and ever wider ranges of unoccupied areas of human need?" Surely, in the babel of voices, clamoring on every hand and sounding from every scene and source, we do need to put at the center of all our attention, thinking and pursuits the summons, the challenge, the insistent call of the voice of God. "God hath in these last days spoken unto us." (Heb. 2:2.) God hath spoken, and is speaking, if we will only give heed and listen.

IT PAYS TO INVESTIGATE.

About eighteen years ago, a Texas boy went to school in another state, and, without asking anybody's advice, walked into a fine-looking bank and deposited two hundred and forty dollars. A few days later he went back to that bank to draw out some of his money. On the door was this sign: "Closed for liquidation." This schoolboy asked a passing policeman: "What does that sign mean?" "It means if ye got any money in there, yer out o' luck." The schoolboy thought the bank was sound. It looked sound to him! When he spoke of his "hard luck" to a business man whom he knew, that man said: "I am sorry that you did not ask me about that. I knew that bank was unsafe."

A good many people are as careless as this boy, and about a far more serious matter. They deposit their soul's welfare in institutions that the Bible says nothing about. They trust to enter heaven by plans that men have made and that God has never sanctioned. The schoolboy soon got over the loss of his money. The lesson was an adequate balance for the loss. But the man who trusts his eternal welfare to institutions and plans that God has not sanctioned will never get over that loss.

"Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven." Who said that? Jesus said that. And Jesus himself will be the judge of men at the last great day. (Matt. 25:31.)—Batsell Baxter.

WHAT SHALL IT PROFIT?

Theodore Cuyler says: "Put into the scales some hardships, self-denials and conflicts—and at the end of them, Heaven. Put into the other scales self-indulgence and a sinful life—and at the end hell. Weigh the two; weigh them for eternity. And while you are watching the scales, the loving Saviour will whisper in your ear the solemn question: 'What shall it profit you to gain the whole world and lose your own soul? What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?'"

Life is a series of choices, with human destinies trembling in the balances. If you do not see clearly the importance of these decisions, and the light seems dim, bring the light of eternity to bear upon the transaction. In that light decisions can be made that will not bring down bitter regret in days to come. Our Saviour's life was lived in the full glow of his knowledge of eternity, past and future, and as a result no critic has ever found a flaw in it.

The message of the prophet was, "Come to God, return unto the Lord"; but no prophet who ever lived ever dared to say: "Come unto me; learn of me."—Silvester Horne.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

MISSIONS—A SHINING MARK.

It is easy to criticize missions. It is the way of the world. It is also the way of some in the church, although the church is the only institution on earth that undertakes the missionary task, does the missionary work. There are three reasons why missions are so easily and vigorously assailed and criticized, both by the world and by some in the church:

1. Because missions is a work of faith. Our Lord instituted missions and only through him are missions carried on, and yet there are those in the world and in the church to whom he is saying: "Oh, ye of little faith." People still want to walk and work solely by sight, in spite of the fact that Paul, through inspiration, declared: "We walk by faith and not by sight." "There are so many calls for human relief at our doors that it would be folly in a time like this to give to missions, not knowing to whom the money goes." Some disciples in the time of our Lord made the same complaint, but he rebuked them, telling them they had the poor always with them. A very precious gift had been made out of love to, and because of faith in, her Lord, and that is the essence and the dynamic of all missionary giving—faith in the power of God to reach and save, and a love for him that constrains even to sacrificial giving. One of the main reasons why it is easy to criticize missions is because it is a work of faith, and in this virtue many of us are yet lacking.

2. It is easy to criticize missions because it is the most unselfish and Christ-like work ever done in this world. And the purely unselfish has ever been, and will ever be, a shining mark for the shafts of criticism. In all our other work, and certainly in all our other giving, we think, act and give with the hope and the thought in mind of helping individuals, of relieving some physical or material want. In our work for and giving to missions, we expect no human thanks or mortal praise or commendation. We have done our work and made our gifts solely in the name and for the sake of our Lord, since it is his love that must reach and save, and not any human love. We seek only to make him known to others and share with others his love through missions. That puts missions in the catalogue of the divine and makes it wholly unselfish and Christ-centered.

3. Missions is a shining mark and invites criticism because it is the one cause, wholly divine, instituted solely by our Lord himself, and carried on through him and for his glory. In this particular, the church is different from all other earthly institutions. When we give to benevolence, and the relief of human suffering, we are doing only what fraternal orders and benevolent societies and a friendly state are doing. When we give to missions, we are giving to that which only a spiritual body, the church, undertakes, and we are helping in a task for which the church was founded and for which it exists. Every missionary at home and abroad, every gospel message delivered in destitute and needy places, in the homeland and the foreign land, every minister and servant of God out in the home and foreign land, seeking to plant churches, preach the Gospel and build up the kingdom of God through righteousness, each and all are sponsored and sustained by the church through its missionary enterprise. And until the church, a spiritual body, does this work, it will never be done. If we give to benevolence only, we do that which any benevolent society around us will do. But in seeking to carry the message of our Lord to others and share with others the love of our Lord through the Gospel, we are engaged in that spiritual task to which the church is challenged, and for which the church was founded, and which the church alone undertakes. For a member of the church to say that he or she does not believe in missions, is for that member to say that he or she does not believe in the one work which the church alone of all institutions on earth undertakes and does. Missions was born of our Lord, and by him were laid upon the church as its distinct task, which would show the church to be a spiritual, and not merely a human or benevolent society or body.

Yes, indeed, missions are criticized, abused, crucified, but with no more frenzy and zeal than that with which the Founder of missions and the one Sponsor of missions was criticized, abused and crucified.

BLASTING THE FOUNDATIONS.

William Ewart Gladstone, then Prime Minister and "grand old man" of England, declared, in a book he was writing at the time, that many scholars and writers of his day were blasting at the "Rock of Ages." It was at the time when the so-called "higher critics" were directing their blows at the Bible as the inspired Word of God. Gladstone declared that they were at a poor business, and one fraught with danger, even to those who were setting off the blast. Explosions sometimes do damage and blow up more or less than was anticipated. There are certain foundations and formations which refuse to yield, even to the most ingenious devices of man. Dynamite has been in use a long time, but the ranges of mountains still point their unshaken peaks high into the blue, and the foundations of earth and sea and sky are still unshaken.

There are still those who, for the blinding and deafening effect they have upon their fellows, amuse themselves, inflate themselves, with blasting at the "Rock of Ages." Christ anticipated as much and gave to the world and to eternity one indestructible and imperishable thing that could not be destroyed and would not pass away. "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." And so if those who blast at the eternal verities should be successful, they would themselves suffer with the rest from the results thereof, for the same Lord said: "The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner. Whosoever shall fall upon that stone shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder." (Luke 20:17-18.)

Our Lord is himself not a way, but the way, and he spoke the words of eternal life, and is himself the revelation and the incarnation of the eternal life. In and through him the world builds, and can only build that which is to endure. Verily, he hath the words of life. And in him is man's only hope and safety.

REALITY IN RELIGION.

There is nothing in our universe more real and practical than religion. Because religion has in it a "mystical" element, there are always those who are willing to discount its worth, or define it as an illusion, a dream, or a "psychological phenomenon."

Religion is the most real of facts and phenomenon, because it is, first of all, an experience of God in the soul. One may not be able to define God; nor with the hand, touch God; nor with the eye, see him, and yet the experience of God is as real as breathing, as loving or as living; and unless there has been a first-hand experience of God with the individual, then there is no religion there. In this realm possession is experience and experience is possession.

Then to make the reality doubly sure, religion is a fact of constant testing and development. God has made this test clear and unmistakable and proof-positive. "We know that we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren." Or to put the matter in terms of philosophy and practical language: "We do not know how we are re-acting to God until we know how we are re-acting to man." We know that we love God, whom we have not seen, when we love our fellowman, whom we have seen, with a love that is more than human—a love that goes out, a love that helps, a love that gives itself. Jesus loved with infinite passion his fellowman because he was the Son of God, had the constant experience of the presence of God and realized that he himself was the revelation of God to man.

Out of this Reality in Religion has come the uplift of mankind from the low depths of pagan and barbarous precepts and practices to the high and holy heights of brotherly love and Christ-like conduct.

J. O. A.

GOD SEARCHING FOR MAN.

Among all the books published, the Bible is unique in one particular. From beginning to end, our Bible reveals and declares God's kingdom of righteousness on earth. There is not any other book that reveals God, the will or the way of God, in this particular.

In all other so-called sacred books, we have the quest of man for God, of the short hand of man reaching out to find God, or, not finding him, to make a god to satisfy the longing of his soul. Out of this human quest for God, all idol worship and heathen practices have come. Out of God's quest for man, as told and revealed by Hebraic patriarch and prophet, and portrayed with unerring accuracy by the Gospels and the Epistles of the New Testament, we have the Church of Christian philosophy, practices and precepts. Our sacred Book and Christian teachings reveal the fact that God is as much in quest, and in need, of man to carry out his plans, as man is in quest and need of God to carry out his own plans, provided those plans are worth carrying out. It will help much for us to bear in mind that God is depending upon us, men and women, made in his own image, to do his will and to make perfect the imperfect things around about us. God alone, through Jesus Christ, can save a world, but God, through Jesus Christ alone, cannot save a world. God needs and longs for man. Hence we are co-workers together with him in the infinite task of building the kingdom of heaven on earth. Through him we can do all things, and through us he can do all things. The Son of God became the Son of Man that the sons and daughters of men might be the sons and daughters of God.

"WHEN SHOULD A MINISTER RETIRE?"

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, D. D.

Some of the recent contributions in The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty on the subject, "When a Minister Should Retire," have provoked the following reaction:

I have always felt that a minister should be privileged to retire from active pastoral responsibilities when he is sixty-five years old, not because he will be incapacitated for effective ministerial service at that age, but because he should have earned such a privilege by the time he reaches that age. The idea that a man at sixty-five cannot preach so well as he did at forty is nonsense. I would hate to think that I will not be a better preacher twenty years from now than I am at the present time. Why should not the years add to one's efficiency?

There is no more reason to despise age than to despise youth in the ministry. I am still a comparatively young man. As Paul advised Timothy, so I would say to every senior brother in the ministry, especially those who have reached the proverbial "sixty-year dead line": "Let no man despise thy age."

I know dozens of men in their seventies who can preach better today than they did twenty years ago when I was a student, and more than that, they can out-preach hundreds of their juniors who wonder why "the old duffers keep on preaching."

The personal equation must always be the basis of consideration in such questions. Some men should have retired before they ever entered the ministry, for their own good and for the good of the church. Some men should retire at fifty, some at sixty, some at seventy, and some men should never be expected to retire if the churches continue to desire their services and if they are happier in work than in retirement.

As an illustration, my father, Dr. D. M. Helfenstein, tried to retire from the pastorate ten years ago at seventy, but the churches would not permit him to do so. Eight years ago he was prevailed upon to supply a church for a year while they located a young pastor. But at the close of each year, though he insists on retiring, the congregation prevails upon him to remain another year. They have been doing this now for eight years, and though in his eighty-first year of his life, he is feeding his people on "the Bread of Life," perhaps better than his youngest son can ever do. Though eighty years of age, no one enjoys a game of golf, a fishing excursion or an outing in the woods more than he. He, like many other ministers his age and older, is a living example of the old saying: "Age is not a matter of years, but of vision, ideals and enthusiasm." He is happy in his work and his congregation is happy in his ministry—a happier relationship between pastor and people being difficult to find anywhere.

Dr. Alexander Whyte was pastor of the historic Free St. George's Church in Edinburgh, Scotland, and at the same time principal of New College, until he was nearly eighty years of age. He drew the largest audiences of any minister in Edinburgh up to the end of his ministry. When I was a student in New College, I have seen the street in front of his church lined for two blocks with people a half hour before time of service as they waited, hoping to be able to hear Dr. Whyte. At that time he was 78 years old, and he used to declare to us students that from the beginning of his ministry to that late year in life he had followed the idea of trying to make each sermon the best he had ever preached. Hundreds of ministers have rendered their very best service when they were in their seventies.

So hard and fast rules as to age of retirement are illogical and impracticable. If the old saying still holds true: "Old men for counsel and young men for war," I presume there always will be churches where the young man can "get in action." But there will also always be churches that feel the need of a ministry of counsel.

I have always been glad to take off my hat to the older ministers, and shall always have profound respect for the veterans of the cross, because they are veterans. And, if they have kept their youthful spirit of open-mindedness, I can but revere them.

THE COMMUNITY HEART.

One of the joyful things of life is to know the heart of a community; and what is more joyful than this is the fact that every community has a common heart. We pity the child who is taught that in some places people are cruel and rough and selfish. We have never seen a man who did not have in his breast a spark of human sympathy, if only we took the pains to find it, or offered some opportunity for it to come to the surface. What the individual is, so is the community. We have never known of a group of people who did not have a common heart and interest and sympathy. It is easy to get ourselves into thinking that everybody is busy and in a rush and have no time for a kind word or a deed of kindness. It is the diminishing of the human understanding to so think.

"It is more blessed to give than to receive," says the Man of Galilee, and hidden in every human heart is the living acceptance of this unimpeachable statement. Men who do not accept the Christ, act upon this truth; men who do not believe in the Son of Man, live daily this eternal truth. There is no substitute for it that will satisfy the soul. Nothing unites a people more than to be called upon to act in unison in testifying to service of this wonderful truth—a truth unhurt and unharmed by the ages.

There is in every community a heart, united heart, of all the people in time of need. Let the need be little or great and some soul will rise to meet the occasion and be joined by a host of loving hands and willing hearts. The scene cannot be painted by the artist; it cannot be described by the master of languages; it cannot be expressed by pen. It is an inward picture of goodness and graciousness and loving kindness that only those who participate can understand.

Show us a man who has soured upon his community, and we will show you the trouble by pointing to that very man. Show us a man who cannot see the good in his neighbor, and we will show you a man who has not touched the heart strings of life—a man who has not discovered himself.

Every community has a heart. To know it is to appreciate life the more. And above all, and far better, is to be a part of that heart—that community heart—permitting self to serve and to know the joys of service.

TIMOTHY THOMAS.

INDESTRUCTIBLE CREATIVE FORCES.

We have been peculiarly and tragically reminded of the ephemeral nature of society, government, business, knowledge and human life within the last few years. Many people seem to have just realized this, and they are filled with fear. But this has no basis of reason, because the best is immovable.

Materialism, unbelief and evil forces all together cannot overthrow the things the Christian prizes; no matter what the foes, or how bitter the assaults, Christian things will stand. This view is based on history, reason, experience, and the words of Christ.

The church always comes in for criticism because it is in the field as leader of the human race, and is always jostling people out of their ease and out of their sins. People keep saying the church has failed, or is failing, or is ineffective, but the church refuses to fulfill these dark-browed prophecies, and goes on fulfilling her God-given mission. The church is the pillar and ground of the truth, and therefore takes front rank among those things which cannot be shaken.

If the church had not been indestructible, it would not be here today. It has been neglected, persecuted by its enemies, sometimes betrayed by its members, often and much neglected by its friends, and assaulted by the changes and devastating forces of time amid which empires have fallen and passed out of existence, yet the church still marches forth, the greatest power on earth.

The church will not cease to grow. When they buried Christ his friends and foes thought that it was all over with his cause, but behold it fills the world today with his name!

Along with the indestructibility of the church goes the indestructibility of the Bible and with that the presence of the pulpit, with its freedom, fire and power. It cannot be silenced and while now and then somebody may compromise with evil and worldliness, the pulpit remains the freest and most powerful force in modern life.

THE SAFETY OF THE MEEK.

"The meek will he guide in judgment; and the meek will he teach his way."—Ps. 25:9.

I believe that when a man or woman has reached the point of meekness, of absolute desire to know the will of God, then in his judgment he will choose the right.—W. H. P. Faunce,

SUFFOLK LETTER.

What is old age? When and where does old age begin? When is a person old? After all, age, like many other things, is a matter of comparison. The child of ten years thinks the man of forty is old. The man of eighty thinks the man of fifty is young. Just as the man who has no property thinks a person who has $40,000 is rich, and the millionaire thinks the man with $50,000 is poor.

Old age is a reality. There are people who are old. Some of these have passed four-score years. It is an interesting period of life. There is no definite line to designate old age. But as the years pass, and the shadows lengthen, many changes come to suggest that the evening time is drawing near.

The emphasis today is concerning youth. What is the most important period of life? Is it youth? Is it middle life? Is it old age? What is the most important season of the year—spring, summer, fall or winter? Inasmuch as life is not made up of sections, youth, middle life, and old age are vitally related. Each period is of equal importance. The day is not broken up into separate parts. Noon is related to sunrise. Sunset and sunrise are not waging a beauty contest, but they are different expressions of the handiwork of God. Sunrise is a promise of a glorious day. Sunset is a silent waiting for the darkness, when the stars shine forth to keep watch over tired souls at rest, with a faith that hopes for another new day of fellowship and affection.

Youth is the time of day dreams, vivid imagination and expectant hope. Youth believes in itself. It has not yet learned that plans may fail. The spirit of youth repeats itself in every age of human history. It is easy to forget that spirit when one passes into maturer life, and looks on life from the practical viewpoint. It is great to be young.

However, old age has its charms, and they are not to be discredited in taking an inventory of life. One of the greatest assets of old age is experience. The years have been a great laboratory. Many experiments have been made. Life has been tested and tried. Some of these days of adventure have ended in failure. Others have been successful, and new truth has been revealed. People with college and university degrees have worked side by side with those who have not had the advantages of scholastic training. Physically, mentally and spiritually they have been educated in the school of experience. They know something about life. They are wiser than youth. They may not be as enthusiastic as their younger friends, but they are up-to-date on the experiences of humanity. Old age has its place in God's plan for man. Old people are not to be cast aside and forgotten because they have lost the enthusiasm of youth.

There are no short cuts nor rapid methods of promotion in the school of life. It takes time to make a great life. It takes years to develop a great oak tree. Many spring days of budding leaves and growing branches; many summers of rain and sunshine; many winters of cold and bleak desolation. Sit down some day under a giant oak and meditate upon its history. It has felt the touch of spring and proudly waves its new green dress of velvet leaves in defiance of summer storms. It has felt the chill of autumn and blushed in crimson glory. It has stood, through many winters, calmly waiting for the return of a glorious resurrection, and the fellowship of singing birds and fragrant flowers.

Old age is as important as youth. The eye may be dim, the step may falter and strength may fail. It is a great time for meditation. The past comes to cheer you with its memories. The faces of the long ago are recalled. The playmates of youth sit at your feet. You have time to commune with the rich past. It is not a time for sorrow and distress. It is not sunset. It will be "Sunrise tomorrow," if you have walked with the Master and had fellowship with him.

I. W. JOHNSON.

DENDRON, VA.

In a recent issue of the Christian Century I noticed an editorial headed, "Churches Without Money." As it sounded quite home-like, I decided to read it and I had not read very far before I came to this statement: "We believe that American churches will have to operate on a greatly reduced budget for many years to come."

I soon found, however, that the churches referred to, for the most part, were out of my class, so I did not worry. But I could appreciate the thought that the enforced cutting down of church budgets need not involve spiritual defeat, and especially when with the cutting there comes the discovery of opportunities for volunteer service and the awakening of resources that are latent in most congregations.

This reminder helps too, that "The periods of the church's greatest power, in a spiritual way, have been the periods of its greatest simplicity." And a suggested conclusion is that a return to simplicity, to essentials, enforced though it may be, may prove to be an advance towards power.

Now just a word concerning our humble parish with its limitations and because of circumstances in a class almost unique. But with all the liabilities which I might mention, we have assets, which, in a hopeful way, offset these. I am thinking of an increased willingness to serve, on the part of our young people, and others, in the face of an enforced cutting of the budget from what it was formerly. In order to keep the church going our young people and others, too, are rendering volunteer service which before has been paid for by the church and they are doing this to save further cuts.

We have some fine talent among our young people and they give some splendid programs at their Sunday evening meetings.

Recently they sponsored a surprise for the pastor and his wife, and they came to the parsonage not only bringing their smiles and good cheer for our souls, but substantial things for the body.

We shall feel our loss in the going of Miss Irene Cotten and her helpers to visit the churches of the Conference in the interest of Youth Fellowship, but we are glad to make this sacrifice that they may render this larger service.

W. D. HARWARD.

A STRONG STAND FOR PROHIBITION.

As much is being said and written in regard to the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, I am giving the readers of THE SUN the stand taken on this question by our National Grange Convention, held in Winston-Salem, N. C., last November. Be it said first that the Grange is the oldest farm organization in America, with more than 7,000 subordinate Granges in nearly every State in the Union:

"Whereas millions of our people are in need of bread, rather than intoxicating liquor;

"Resolved, that we are opposed to the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment or the repeal or modification of the Volstead Act.

"The elimination of the legalized saloon was the greatest moral victory in a half century. Its return in any form would be the nation's greatest backward moral step.

"There is no common ground between right and wrong.

"The saloon is wrong—its political influence is degrading, it destroys the finer things of life.

"Christian America must see to it that dry States are protected in their right to be dry."

The above is sane and timely, and it shows the moral stand a great farm organization has taken.

Not is this the only moral force in America that is using its influence to keep the Eighteenth Amendment in force. The W. C. T. U. and other allied forces are working to keep the nation dry. More than 30 years ago the W. C. T. U. belted the earth with a "White Ribbon," as an emblem of its strength for the elimination of intoxicants.

It seems strange in times like these, while people are suffering for bread, that there is so much clamor for something to drink.

Votes have been taken to repeal and do away with a good law that has never had a fair chance. But I still believe there are enough people in America who will vote to keep this nation dry, when the time comes for them to speak their sentiments.

Surely, a great country like ours, that has taught the world its best lessons of liberty, will not fling those high ideals to the winds, and fall as others have fallen.

A CRUCIAL MOMENT.

There has never been a time in the history of our country such as we are facing today. Unemployment, cut salaries, more education, shorter working hours, and many other such phrases come ringing in our ears every day. The farmers are confronted with the problem of disposing of their produce at a "break-even" rate. There are thousands who are existing—not living—without even the necessities of life. The world has grown proud of itself and its war-time feasting. Many who had accumulated enormous fortunes during the war have awakened at this crucial moment to find themselves paupers. Still, they reckon their social standards with their former financial ratings. They cannot realize that a change must be made for the better or for the worse. We must adapt ourselves to the conditions of the period in which we live. We must judge a man today not according to his wealth, but according to his character and exerted efforts to make good in his calling.

A poor young man went away to college a few years ago. He worked hard and made good in scholarship, also was active in other phases of college work. Not long ago he returned to his home community for a brief visit among his old acquaintances. What did he receive? A hearty welcome? No, only a slight recognition here and there among those whom he had known as personal friends a few years before. His heart was broken. His deep love and feeling for the community died and was buried in the graveyard of forgotten memories.

This is only one case of the many that are happening day after day. People are growing cold and indifferent toward each other. But a Christian people cannot exist under such pretensions. Times must change. The world is at a crucial point now but it cannot remain so. It must move on. We, who claim to be followers of Christ, should take the lead. We must do as a great university professor once said. "Work, work, work." Then we will hear the Master say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

LANETT, ALABAMA.

I am really enjoying the hard work at Lanett. I find that there is much work here to do, and as I become better acquainted with the people and the surroundings, I enjoy the work more.

The epidemic of "flu" struck with much force in our town, and church work of every kind was greatly retarded during its prevalence, but it has almost left us, and our work is increasing in all departments.

Our Woman's Missionary Society is doing good work under the leadership of Mrs. G. L. Stephens. They meet once each week, and they are rendering some valuable programs.

Our prayer meetings are increasing in interest and attendance. We are making it a point to study some Bible truth at each meeting, with good results.

We are anxious to help some one to be saved every week, and surely it can be done if the church will do its duty. Our Sunday School is doing good work under the leadership of Bro. Willie McGill, who is a fine choir leader in addition to his duties as superintendent. He is a very competent and consecrated worker.

The depression has been very keenly felt in all our industrial centers, and many people are barely making a living as a result. We are hoping for times to get better, and when the people get better, times will improve.

There is a tendency among the people to go away from God, and we do not know what the result will be, unless there shall be a turning back to him.

I trust that in this new year many will be enabled to find him.

There are many who are hungry and whose bodies are uncomfortably clad, but there are many more who are starving and suffering for the Bread of Life. Shall the church of Jesus Christ refuse them this soul-food and shelter?

If the church fails to feed and clothe there will be suffering and sorrow more intense than we have seen. God forbid.

MINISTERS' RETREAT.

There is no place equal to an altar for all the difficulties of life. Ministers and churches are perplexed, hesitating and in need and we can in counsel and prayer together find light. All ministers are invited to come to the United Church at Raleigh, N. C., Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, March 14th, 15th, and 16th, and lodging will be provided by our families, including breakfast.

Dr. Lewis T. Reed, of New York, will be our spiritual director. Dr. Reed has been a great religious leader for more than a quarter century. Dr. Brewer Eddy will also be present. These meetings are for devotion, clarification of our vision, and it is hoped that all our Congregational-Christian ministers will want to take advantage of these days.

Dr. Wicker and I thought at first that we would hold this Retreat for our ministers in Eastern North Carolina Conference, but we really desire all to come who may be able. Meditation, prayer and sharing with each other will prove helpful to the churches which we serve.

J. EDWARD KIRBYE,

ARE YOU A SUCCESS?

Being sure of yourself is essential to real success. Some of us, however, go upon the idea that a bluff will go far toward making us notable in the eyes of the world. This is an error that some young men of the present age make—with the idea that they can fool the public. We should all have ideals—a goal that is worthy of attainment, and even of emulation of others. Our example, let it be understood, is far more powerful than a sermon. The young man in business can, by his close attention to the details of the position he holds, and by having the interests of his employer at heart, do more to make his present position secure and his future, one that will become moment to him. If we become imbued with the idea that our position cannot be filled by another we have reached a very dangerous point in our career. It is the road that soon leads to failure—later to ruin.

By becoming eager to learn from those who have gained their knowledge in the severe school of experience we place ourselves in a receptive mood, the information thus gained becomes to us something that cannot be taken from us—now or later. If we place two young men in the same establishment, side by side with the same opportunities, one will advance continually—proving his worth and value to his employers—while the other will either remain in the rut, or soon be dismissed. The reason is plain. It demands no special explanation, for we can see readily enough why persistent effort will bring its reward, while sloth and indifference will surely act as a millstone to drag the unfortunate down to his doom.

Let us have a care. Be not egotistical, overconfident, or indifferent, lest we become our own worst enemy. Success never comes to the man who is unwilling to learn to labor and to prove his worth by the best that is in him always. This is a simple rule and easy to follow.—J. H. Strickland in the Free Will Baptist.

MORE OF GOD.

"That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith."—Eph. 3:17.

This is what the world needs more than anything else. Not better technique, not more dollars—you can't calculate in cash the cost of the salvation of a soul—nor even more missionaries, but more of God himself in man.—Donald Frazer.

PRAYER.

Blessed Lord, to hearts that are fixed on the purpose and the power of thy love, how joyful is the way, how protected the path. O, loving Guide, who leadest thine own, shepherd thou every wandering life and bring all who know the strength of thine arm and the bliss of thy keeping to be truly devoted, with thee, to the mission of corralling souls for thine eternal haven both now and forevermore. Teach us that God's Kingdom may be accomplished even in this life. Amen. L.

MEETING OF COMMISSION ON MISSIONS.

The annual mid-winter meeting of the Commission on Missions and the Mission Boards of the Congregational and Christian Churches was held at the church in Evanston, Ill., January 16th to 19th. Previous to the meeting of the Commission there was held a two days' meeting of the Superintendents' Conference in Chicago.

The meeting of the Commission and of the Boards was a most important one in view of the financial conditions of the Boards and of the churches and also in view of proposed changes in the organization of the Commission on Missions as a result of the report of the Appraisal Committee. This committee recommended a reduction in the membership of the Commission and also in the membership of the Cooperative Council. It also recommended that instead of having three coordinate secretaries of the Commission there be one secretary with two or more assistant secretaries, one of whom should head up the woman's work in the country. After a great deal of discussion these changes were adopted. The committee also recommended a general schedule of reductions in salaries for all Boards, as well as the Commission.

There was a great deal of discussion in all Boards and in the Commission on the report of the Layman's Inquiry, and its effect not only upon foreign missions, but upon home missions. The general feeling was that the churches should study the report and try to adapt both the mission work of the churches, as far as possible, to any justifiable criticisms and any worth-while suggestions for the improvement of the work. Stress was laid upon the fact that the Layman's Inquiry expressed an unqualified faith in the importance of the mission cause and the absolute necessity for its continuance with adaptation to changing conditions.

The budgets of the Commission and also the Mission Boards were studied and revised; the report of the Survey Committee relative to the percentage for the various Boards was adopted and in all matters there was a courageous facing of the future and large measure of faith and an unconquerable spirit of devotion to the cause of Christ. From every section of the country came reports of sacrificial devotion on the part of pastors and the church people, and while the reports indicated great hardships, the effect of the reports was inspiring and challenging.

Those who attended from the Southeast were: President L. E. Smith, of Elon College, and Mrs. Marston Freeman, of Chattanooga, both members of the Commission on Missions; Rev. William T. Scott, of Winston-Salem, a member of the important Survey Committee; Secretaries Bloom and Minton; Supt. E. C. Gillette, of Florida, and Dr. C. Rexford Raymond, of the Congregational-Christian Foundation of Vanderbilt School of Religion. G.

LAYMEN'S MISSION REPORT TERMED "MODERNISM UNMASKED."

Referring to the Report of the Laymen's Foreign Missions Inquiry as "Modernism Unmasked," the Rev. Dr. C. E. Macartney, former Moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, evoked wide comment on a sermon preached recently at the First Presbyterian Church of Pittsburgh, Pa. He said in part:

The Commission set before itself as the first question: "Shall these missions continue?" Their conclusion is that they ought to continue, but when we read what they are to do and to teach, it sounds like a complete repudiation of historical and evangelical Christianity.

The disqualification of this Commission to pass judgment upon the work of the churches in foreign fields is glaringly set forth in the Foreword to the published report. In this they saw that while to some of their members the 'motive of Christian Missions can only be adequately expressed as loyalty to Jesus Christ—to others, this motive would best be called the spirit of altruistic service—to still others the desire for a deeper knowledge and love of God.' All this is in striking contrast with the historical motive of Christian Missions, for it was not an altruistic desire to share certain benefits with mankind, nor was it a quest after God, which sent the first apostles into the world, and after them, the great missionaries of the Cross.

According to the report of this Commission, one would conclude that Christianity is not the Eternal Gospel, the only way of Eternal Life, or the name of Christ the only name given under heaven among men whereby we must be saved, but just one of the numerous religions of the world. In the amazing statement of the Commission, we are to "look forward, not to the destruction of these religions, but to their continued coexistence with Christianity, each stimulating the other in growth towards the ultimate goal, unity in the completest religious truth."

The report of this Commission is, in its doctrinal statements, the most carefully elaborated creed of Modernism which has yet appeared. This is at once recognized as its chief significance by the Modernist paper, The Christian Century, which, under the title, "Is Modernism Ready?" enthusiastically endorses this report.

The question now before Christian Churches of America is this: "Is the organized church ready to abandon scriptural and historic Christianity?"

The published report of the Commission is a book of 350 pages. But in these 129,000 words, I cannot find one mention of the word "sin." The omission is significant. Nor do I recall seeing a single mention of the Third Person of the Trinity—the Holy Spirit, by whose authority Christian Missions commenced.

The fact that this Commission's report has compelled the middle-of-the-roads and peace-at-any-price men to break their silence, reveals the fact that what is called Modernism in our churches has now reached such a point of development that those who adhere to the standards of historic Christianity, can no longer pretend to ignore its presence or the fact that it is "another Gospel which is not another." Therefore, for this reason, evangelical Christians in all of our churches can thank the members of the Commission for their report. They have scattered the fog; torn off from the face of Modernism its mask and its disguise, so that he who runs may know that there is an irreconcilable difference between the Christianity of the Scriptures, of the Apostles, and of the ages, and that vague and inchoate collection of human thoughts and fancies which has been masquerading as a new and higher interpretation of Christianity.

MISSIONARY PROGRAM.THE CHURCH IN THE COMMUNITY: MEETING ITS RELIGIOUS NEEDS.

By REV. JOHN T. STEWART.

(Note to the Leader.—In preparing this program, above all things do NOT permit it to become just one more discussion of Religion as a topic. Rather try to give religion a chance to speak for itself. Most discussions of religion are dreary affairs and lead nowhere. For this reason, in order to keep your meeting on a proper level, the selection of all your material is most important. You may vary the usual order by holding the note and mood of worship to the end. Engage a competent person to lead in prayer at the close, praying for the unity of mankind in Jesus Christ. Avoid the impression that worship is an "opening exercise" to be gone through with in order to get to something else. Have the first hymn, then the first and second scripture lessons. Then use a few brief prayers from "A Book of Prayers" (a publication of the Commission on Evangelism, 5c), e.g., "For All Sorts and Conditions of Men," "For the Spread of the Gospel," "For Brotherhood," "For Missionaries." Later in the meeting, after the topics have been presented, the third scripture lesson and the second hymn may be used.)

Hymns—"Lord of All Being, Throned Afar" (Oliver W. Holmes); "Christ is Made the Sure Foundation." (ancient Latin).

Scripture Lessons—Isaiah 61; Mark 1:1-15, II. Corinthians 4.

Study Period (25 to 30 minutes).

1. First, let the leader present briefly the substance of two leaflets issued by the Commission on Evangelism: "The Mood for Public Worship," and "True Religion."

2. Let some member give the substance of an article in the August Missionary Herald, "A Message to Outgoing Missionaries," by Raymond Calkins. A few of his excellent paragraphs may be read in full.

3. Topic for a short talk: "How the Church Meets the Religious Needs of the Members of the Family." (Public worship for all, moral and religious training of children and their worship programs, Bible study in all languages, the rich treasure of music in our churches, the sacraments, comfort and companionship for the aged and shut-ins and the Gospel for the poor, the afflicted and distressed everywhere.)

4. Topic: "Why We Should Make Churches More Beautiful." (Why we should cultivate the finest in sacred music. The use of art and drama in worship. Under this topic ought to be emphasized our own settled policy for nationalizing the Christian Church in every land, using the national architecture and music and art and drama, as well as the native language.)

5. It might make the meeting more interesting if some member should give a brief description of typical churches in several lands, for example, one in Africa, India, an old English church, the New England type, on the prairie, in Southern California. What considerations ought to determine the type of church to be built in a community? What do we mean when we say that people ought to be "made to feel at home" in their church?

6. A good conclusion to the study might be a summary of the ways in which the church meets the religious needs of all the people in any community. (In this last topic avoid the lecture method and manner. Make the short talk human by filling it with human beings. This will have to be made by some one who reads the missionary magazines.) Start with the simple fact that religious needs—the deeply personal ones—are quite the same the world over. The factory girl in Japan, the factory girl in Chicago; the miner in South Africa, the miner in West Virginia; the farmer in China, the farmer in Iowa; the student, the professionals, housewives, merchants, strangers in big cities, vagrants; the very young, youth, maturity, middle age, old age; the rich, poor and middle class. Go on to the simple fact that the problems of life are also much the same, and the big occasions of life are always alike—birth and death, marriage and the coming of children; the passing of the one family in each generation while the stream goes on. In these major events is the chief ministry of religion. The church in the community meets these needs with (a) adequate equipment; (b) a competent staff; (c) the proper services both public and private. A friendly service in the language of the people—the people who are the church!—Missionary Herald.

MISSIONARY PROGRAM FOR FEBRUARY.

By MRS. W. M. JAY, Editor.

This is the second program from the little booklet, "Christianity in Revolutionary China," by Rowland McLean Cross. This booklet contains all the material for the program, and may be secured for 10c by sending to the Commission on Missions, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass.

I hope all of you are seeing the weekly programs that are being published for your help and convenience, and making use of some of them. Surely, out of all the program material that is in THE SUN from week to week, no society will lack for suggestions for a good missionary program.

By the way, how about sending in a news item now and then, telling us about your work. Perhaps something you are doing will help some other society.

PROGRAM FOR JUNIORS AND WILLING WORKERS

The leader should have assigned "find-out" topics last month. Some possible subjects are: Chinese homes, Chinese schools (old and new style), Chinese language and books, games and holidays, geography and history.

"What Do You Know About China," by Sadie Mai Wilson, may be borrowed from the American Board Loan Library. "The Spirit of Chinese Youth," by Grace McConnaughey, has helpful information. This material may be secured from Rev. J. L. Lobingier, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass. "Games and Holidays," would be a good theme for this month.

As the children gather, teach them a Chinese game. Some may have brought material for the Friendship Scrapbook started last month. Take time to talk about it and arrange pictures in the scrapbook that have been prepared in advance by the leader.

Lead the children into conversation about the holidays. "What holiday do you like best?" "Christmas," is the usual answer. "Do you suppose that Chinese children have holidays that they enjoy as we enjoy Christmas?" "Christmas?" "Yes, these who have become followers of the Jesus Way do celebrate Christmas, but there are still thousands of Chinese children who have never heard of Jesus and Christmas, but for hundreds of years they have celebrated New Year and do then some of the things that we do at Christmas time."

Tell or read the story, "A Chinese New Year," by Esther E. Nelson, Here and There Story, Vol. XV, No. 2, which may be secured from Rev. J. L. Lobingier, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass., for 5c.

Follow with a worship service planned and conducted by the children. The leader should have helped them plan it in advance so that each child participating knows exactly what he or she is to do. The following suggestions may be incorporated, if desired:

Call to Worship—"Enter into his gate with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise; be thankful unto him, and bless his name, for the Lord is good; his mercy is everlasting, and his truth endureth to all generations."

Hymns—"In Christ There Is No East or West," "We've a Story to Tell to the Nations," "God's Children Live in Many Lands."

Prayer—Have one of the children write a prayer and memorize it in advance.

Story—A "Here and There" story may be used.

Begin to plan now for the next session. Ask you the children to find out all they can about Chinese schools, language and books. "What Do You Know About China?" and "The Spirit of Chinese Youth" will be helpful. If the leader has access to a copy of "New Joy," by Sewall and Jones, and "Youth and Revolution in China," by Alfred D. Henninger, she will find helpful matter.

WORLD DAY OF PRAYER.

It is earnestly hoped that all of our women's groups throughout the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches will observe more seriously than ever before, the World Day of Prayer on Friday, March 3rd.

This year the program has been prepared by Mrs. C. C. Chen, of Shanghai University. Mrs. Chen is one of the great Christian women of the world. Her vision is unusual, and the dream of her life is to see the world led by real Christians. Write now for programs to our own literature headquarters, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass.

The offering will be used for Christian literature for women and children in mission lands, mission work among migrants, and for religious work in United States Indian schools. Send the offering to the Council of Women for Home Missions, 105 E. 22nd St., New York City.

Last year the International chairman of the World Day of Prayer, in giving her annual report made some statements that were not only interesting, but thought provoking. Among other things she said the women of the Far East are taking this movement far more seriously than we. Reports from Nationals of many countries showed that women gathered in groups of hundreds, many having walked over miles of almost impassable roads through bitter winter weather. The most interesting and enthusiastic reports did not come from America. One, however, was interesting, if a bit alarming. From a great city in the Middle West word came that in a group of nearly a hundred churches, ninety women gathered for observance of this great movement, while within a city block fourteen hundred women attended a cooking school at the same hour.

"The women of the Orient are looking to the future." Are we?

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA YOUNG PEOPLE TO HOLD WEEK-END CONFERENCE.

Word comes from the president of the Western North Carolina Youth Fellowship that there is to be a week-end conference of Western North Carolina young people at the Ramseur Christian Church, on April 1-2, 1933. The meeting will begin at 2:00 o'clock Saturday afternoon with a worship service. There will be discussion groups on devotional life, service and publications, leadership training, and moral standards. There will be a business session, a vesper service, and recreation.

The Saturday evening session will begin at 7:30 o'clock and will include a worship service, a general discussion on duties of officers and the methods of finance, and echoes from the Defiance Holiday Conference.

On Sunday morning the young people will attend Sunday School and church. Programs will be planned especially for them. The Sunday afternoon session will open at 2 o'clock and will include findings from the various groups, reports of committees, an address on "The Call of Youth" and a closing devotional service.

It is sincerely hoped that every church in the Western North Carolina Conference will be represented by two or more young people.

BIBLES AGAIN.

Here in this office are a number of copies of the New Testament and Psalms, which should be in the hands of 10-year-old boys and girls who attend the Christian and Congregational Sunday Schools. The man who paid for them wants them to go to the boys and girls; I want to send them to the boys and girls; and the boys and girls probably want the books.

But the books cannot leave here until somebody asks for them. Sunday School superintendents and teachers should write at once for the number of books they need. It will cost only a postal card to send the request.

If you happen to read this item, please remind your superintendent and the teachers of 10-year old children that the Board of Christian Education is eager to send these books to supply the needs of your Sunday School.

GRABBING.

It seems to be the nature of the lower animals to grab for whatever they want. This tendency comes over into the human family and is particularly noticeable among little children. Wise parents train their children to share, rather than to grab.

The teaching some times is poorly done. Recently I heard a man say that if relief funds could be had without having to pay them back, he wanted to get his share and he wanted the work to be done in front of his house. It is this spirit of grabbing which has caused the break-down of the economic order. When industry learns to practice the Golden Rule sincerely, then business will be on a sure foundation.

AN HONEST MAN.

It is pretty generally believed that an honest man is hard to find. In our serious moments we agree with Abraham Lincoln that "Honesty is the best policy," and yet many people fail to follow the best policy, when another will work to their immediate advantage.

I wish to testify that there are still honest men. Recently a man came into my office desiring to work on the highway so he could have money to pay taxes and buy a mule. When I explained to him that R. F. C. funds were intended for the needy only, to supply food and clothing to those who do not have it, he refused to sign up for the work. He said he needed money, but he would not take money that should go to the hungry.

This man was an honest and honorable person, much more so than many who have applied for similar work. He was a negro.

EASTER EVANGELISM.

Young people who have found the joy of Christian service and Christian fellowship are eager to share this joy, which is theirs, with other young people. In fact, there is no way to keep this joy other than to share it.

Easter is designated by many denominations, including our own, as a time for in-gathering. Some would call this evangelism. Surely, there is no more appropriate time of the year in which to enlist followers of the Master than at the season in which he left Galilee, marched with the multitudes down to the Holy City—Jerusalem—and out to Calvary where there was a garden and a new-made tomb.

The Commission on Evangelism, 287 Fourth Ave., New York City, will be glad to supply you with helps to aid in the campaign which you may wish to put on in your church. This writer will also be glad to give suggestions and help. But do not wait for help. If possible, get a few of your friends to share with you, then make a list of those for whom you wish to work, pray for them daily, and then at an opportune moment talk to them personally and privately about what it means to be a Christian and invite them to accept Christ and become a member of his church.

You will find this will bring you a great deal of joy and that you can accomplish more than you have thought.

INTERNATIONAL C. E. CONVENTION.

Milwaukee, Wis., will welcome the thirty-fourth International Christian Endeavor Convention July 8-13, 1933. This biennial meeting, including mass meetings, a great variety of forums and church work methods conferences, fellowship activities, a youth parade, and denominational rallies, is ordinarily attended by several thousand young people, pastors, and leaders of young people.

Because of the central location of Milwaukee, a large and representative attendance is expected at the 1933 gathering. Preliminary plans already made for the program provide for addresses by noted leaders in religious and civic affairs, and as before, a large number of young people and denominational leaders of young people will share in the educational conferences. The first public meeting will be held on Saturday evening, July 8th, at which time Dr. Daniel A. Poling, president of the International Society of Christian Endeavor and of the World's Christian Endeavor Union, will give the keynote address looking forward to the movement's objectives of the succeeding two years. Meetings of the board of trustees and other leadership groups will precede this session, continuing at intervals during the convention period. Several of the State unions of Christian Endeavor will hold rallies or separate convention sessions at some time in the week of July 9th. Carlton M. Sherwood, general secretary of the International Society, is in charge of the program and preliminary arrangements.

Local leaders who are preparing to welcome this gathering to Milwaukee include Frank J. Harwood, president of the Appleton Woolen Mills, and former moderator of the National Council of Congregational Churches, who is honorary chairman, and Charles E. Hutkamp, prominent layman of the Reformed Church in America and president of the Wisconsin Lord's Day Alliance who is general chairman of the Milwaukee committee.

Many tours to National Parks and other historic and scenic points will be arranged in connection with the Milwaukee convention. An unusual travel opportunity for delegates is that of visiting the nearby Chicago World's Fair when going to or returning from the convention without being obliged to seek accommodations in Chicago.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

FEBRUARY 12, 1933.

"When is Friendship Christian?"—Acts 9:26, 27; John 15:11-17.

Daily Readings for this Week.

Monday—"Friendly Acts." Acts 28:1, 2.
 Tuesday—"A Friend in Need." Luke 10:30-35.
 Wednesday—"Great Generosity." Gen 50:15-21.
 Thursday—"Principles of Friendship." I. Cor. 13:31-35.
 Friday—"A Test of Friendship." Luke 6:31-35.
 Saturday—"Help in Need." I. John 3:11-18.

Appropriate hymns will include: "I Have Found a Friend," "What a Friend We Have in Jesus," "Oh, Master, Let Me Walk With Thee," "Jesus Calls Us," "I Would Be True," and "Blest Be the Tie that Binds."

Talks can be made on "Jesus and His Friends," considering such things as (1) Jesus' choice of the Twelve; (2) His sympathy for his friends and services to them, and (3) The effect of his friendship on his friends. "Friendships I Have Known" can also be divided among several speakers who may tell of historic friendships and of their own personal friendships.

Much should be made of the statement of Jesus found in John 15:14: "Ye are my friends," and John 15:16: "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you and ordained you that ye should bring forth fruit." These verses on friendship, found in John 15, could be written on the blackboard or distributed on slips of paper or used as a call to worship, and perhaps as parts of prayers. The friendship of Jesus can be, and should be, a very vital factor in the life of young people.

It will be well to consider some of the things that make friendships un-Christian, and some of the things that make friendships Christian. Working together, thinking together, worshipping together, sharing talents with others—this is Christian friendship.

THE STIMULUS OF FRIENDSHIP.

Because of your firm faith, I kept the track
 Whose sharp set stones my strength had almost spent,
 I could not meet your eyes, if I turned back,
 So on I went.
 Because of your strong love, I held my path
 When battered, worn and bleeding in the fight—
 How could I meet your true eyes, blazing wrath?
 So I kept right. —Author Unknown.

The State should be our servant; we should not be slaves of the State. The State violates this precept when it forces us to perform military service, especially when this service employment has for its purpose the destruction of men of other countries or the infringement of their freedom.—

JESUS TEACHING BY PARABLES—FOUR KINDS OF HEARERS.

LESSON VII—FEBRUARY 12, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; and so shall ye be my disciples."—John 15:8.

LESSON TEXT: Mark 4:1-10, 13-20. Study also Matt. 13:1-30, 36-43.

Jesus was the world's Greatest Story-Teller. No one has ever lived who could put truth in a more attractive and interesting way than he, and he did this in a large way by telling stories. For in essence, a parable is just that. The word "parable" comes from two Greek words meaning literally, "to throw alongside," or a "throwing alongside." In other words, when Jesus had some great moral or spiritual truth he wanted to teach the people, he told a story in which the every-day incidents or facts would illustrate or throw alongside the moral and spiritual truth. And every preacher or teacher who wants to make his truth effective must know how to tell a story and to illustrate. He who would become an effective teacher ought to study carefully the parables of Jesus. Furthermore the parable had the added advantage of getting into the hearts of even the indifferent and unresponsive, truth that eventually become as leaven in the heart of the hearer because the original message had not been forgotten. Many a hearer of Jesus, not understanding, or not responding to the truth when he heard it, undoubtedly came to see it and to respond to it as he thought again and again of the parable in which that truth was originally proclaimed.

This parable has been called "the parable of the sower," but it had better be called "the parable of the soil." The emphasis in it is not upon the sower, or the seed—they were the same in every case; the point of the parable is in the different kinds of soil, representing the different kinds of hearers. In fact, the parable might be called "The Responsibility for Hearing." The parable undoubtedly grew out of Jesus' own experience thus far, and out of his knowledge of human nature. It represented the types of people in the crowd before him, and it represents the types of people who are in every congregation in our day. It represents the types of boys and girls who are in every Sunday School class, or for that matter, in every school room.

It is to be noted that Jesus begins his parable with the word "hearken." He wanted to get the attention of the crowd before he started. The wise preacher or the wise teacher will so begin his sermon or his lesson that he will get the attention of his hearers. The first sentence of a sermon should be carefully prepared. The beginning of the lesson should be carefully planned. There are many ways of getting attention legitimately. Effective teaching absolutely depends upon getting and holding attention. But the fault is not always with the speaker; there is a responsibility resting upon the listener, as Jesus shows in this parable.

The parable is so familiar that it need not be reproduced here. Suffice it to give the interpretation and application which Jesus gave.

Hard-Hearted Hearers.

"And these are they by the wayside, where the word is sown; but when they have heard, Satan cometh immediately, and taketh away the word that was sown in their hearts." The wayside was the hard-packed path that ran through the Syrian fields. It represents the heart that has become hardened by sin, because of the experiences of life, because prayer and a reading of the Word have been neglected, because a continued unresponsiveness has developed a callousness and hardness. Alas, there are those like this. And Satan immediately—the devil is always on the job, even in church—taketh away the word, even as the birds greedily pounce upon every stray seed that falls on the path. There are those who hear a sermon who in a sense never hear it.

Shallow-Hearted Hearers.

The stony ground—not full of stones, but rather ground that had only a thin layer of earth on a rocky foundation—represents those volatile, emotional, sensitive folks, who enthusiastically receive the word, and without any thought about what is involved, embrace it. As Jesus says, "they have no root in themselves." There is no depth. And just as the young plant or seedling, which all the more quickly would spring up because the soil was not deep, but which would not be able to stand the hot sun because it had no roots going down deep into the moist earth, would soon wilt and die, just so do these shallow-hearted folks fall by the wayside. Affliction, persecution, ridicule, demands for service, sacrifices soon reveal the shallowness of their religious life. "They are offended"—the word means, "they are caused to stumble."

Half-Hearted Hearers.

The thorny ground represents the hearer who is half-hearted. The ground is good soil all right. But there are thorns already in it—the cares of this world, the anxieties, petty things of life, mere "busyness," preoccupation with other things which crowd out the things of the Spirit; "the deceitfulness of riches"—the blind desire for material things, the belief that things are the measure of life, covetousness, greed; and "the lusts of other things"—the love of pleasure, the endless round of amusements, in short, the hundred and one whims and pleasures that occupy so much of our time and energy; all these things choke the Word, and it becometh unfruitful. There is point in Jesus' remark here. He did not say that the young plant would die. What he did say was that it would become unfruitful. Christians are to bear fruit. We must not allow the thorns, whatever they are, to keep us from being fruitful.

Whole-Hearted Hearers.

"And these are they which are sown on good ground; such as bear the Word, and receive it, and bring forth fruit, some thirty-fold, some sixty and some a hundred." This represents those hearers who really hear, who appreciate the Word, give heed to it, accept it as Luke says, "In an honest and good heart," and "hold it fast." And in them the Word springs up and brings forth fruit. It is to be noted, however, that even in the case of the good hearers where the Word and the soil is the same, there is a difference in the fruitage. God hath given to us according to our ability. We are to be fruitful according as God has given unto us.

"He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." We have ears in order that we may hear. But what we hear depends not only upon what comes to us from the outside, but what is already inside of us.

"The seed is the Word." As ministers and teachers and Christian workers, it is our business to sow the seed. We are to cultivate and water. But God giveth the increase. Mark gives a word of encouragement by using a term not used by Matthew and Luke. In the case of the failures—the first three—Mark used the word "some," which is singular. In the case of the last type, he uses the word "other" which is plural, indicating that what fell on the good ground was more abundant than that which did not do so. Wherefore, let us not be weary in well doing, but let us be faithful in sowing the seed, for we know not what might be the fruitage of our labors.

THE BEAUTIFUL LIFE.

MONDAY.

THE TRUTH AND THE PRINCIPLE OF LIFE.

Lesson—Matt. 5:3-12.

The day we are now about to begin is our life. It is full of everything from the sordid to the glorious; from failures to successes; from dejection to highest hopes. What is your lot? And how are you taking it?

If we can triumph over circumstances physically and intellectually, we rejoice to think we can triumph over them in morals, character and conduct.

Ordinarily, if you have a rose it must have the sun, a willow, it must have the watercourse; a fern, it must have a damp place. But there are variations from this rule. Flowers do grow in cellars. We have seen roses in winter, and lilies in cess-pools.

Dropping the imagery, have we not seen the noblest men and purest women in conditions and circumstances that utterly defy the presence of nobleness and purity? This is what Christ does for a soul. The grace of Jesus makes us to triumph over any environment and to walk, though in penury, in blameless honor.

As a delicate stem in the rocks, or under the paving, pushes itself through until it sees the blue of the sky, and feels the kiss of the sun, in the same fashion a soul may force itself constantly into the presence of God, where the power of Christ in the human heart makes us triumph over most uncongenial surroundings.

Dear Lord and Father of mankind,
Forgive our foolish ways!
Re-clothe us in our rightful mind,
In purer lives thy service find,
In deeper reverence, praise.

WORTH TRYING.

"I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me."—Phil. 4:13.

With the truth of life at our door constantly, the love of God in our hearts, and the power of God on our side, is there any stage of life we cannot reach?

There are valleys of humility and "sloughs of despond," to pass through, and heights of purity and exemplariness for a struggling climb; yes, services to render which tax life, but if the prospect is God, isn't it worth while?

When we look back, the saddest aspect of life is not that we have been dishonest, but that our life has been so meagre when it might have been so grand, so petty when it might have been so sublime, so poor when it might have been so rich.

Prayer—

In simple trust like their's who heard
Beside the Surian Sea,
The gracious calling of the Lord,
Let us, like them, without a word,
Rise up and follow thee.

Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

PURPOSE OF LIFE.

"I am the vine and ye are the branches."—Jno. 15:5.

"Herein is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit."—Jno. 15:8.

We are in this world a capacity for God, to see God, to represent him, and to work for him. That is the final spiritual purpose of life.

This purpose is seen in the sunlight, in the green and the fruit of the earth, in the leaves, in the graces and the intimacies of the home, and in those endearing friendships of every-day life. Seeing these things at their best is seeing Christ, and seeing Christ in life is seeing the triumphant end of man.

Prayer—

In clearer visions thou impart,
Grateful and glad my soul shall be;
But yet to have a purer heart
Is more to me.

Yea, only as the heart is clean,
May larger visions yet be mine,
For mirrored in its depths are seen
The things divine.—Walsh.

Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE PERFECTED LIFE.

"Be ye perfect even as your Father in heaven is perfect."—Matt. 5:48.

Begin the day with God!
He is the sun and day;
He is the radiance of thy dawn,
To him address thy lay.

—Horatius Bonar..

Let every dawn of morning be to you as the beginning of life, and every setting sun as its close; then let every one of these short lives leave its sure record of some kindly thing done for others, some goodly strength or knowledge gained for yourself.—John Ruskin.

After we have done our best we look back over the past and—and what mistakes we have often made!

The realization that God knows our infirmities and makes our weakness strong (if we turn to him), should give us faith and courage. He came "to seek and save the lost." Whatever is lost in us, he will save.

And so he came and raised us from clay,
While evil beasts went disappointed by.
He bears us home along the fearful way
In the soft light of his rejoicing eye.

And thou fallen soul, afraid to live or die,
In the deep pit that will not set thee free,
Lift up to him the helpless, homeward cry,
For that tender love is seeking thee.

—Faber.

Prayer—O secret Christ, Lord of the rose of dawn, hide us within thy silent peace, that throughout the turmoil of the day we may abide in the quiet of the daybreak.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

WHERE BEAUTY IS FOUND.

"The Kingdom of God cometh not with observation;

"Neither shall they say, Lo here! nor lo there! for, behold, the Kingdom of God is within you."
Luke 17:20, 21.

The beauty of life is to be found not in luxury, but in simplicity,
In sweat of the hand, sweat of the brow, and sweat of the heart;

In pride of work, without greed of gold;
In thoughts that rise above the needs of self;
In loving kindness to one's fellowmen.
To be honest in handicraft, loyal in friendship, strong in suffering, rich in laughter,
Is to be a good comrade in the workshops of life.
And to such faithful servants
God will pay fair wages of peace and joy.

—Edward Shillito.

The little sharp vexations,
And the briars that catch and fret;
Why not take all to the Helper
Who has never failed us yet?

Tell him about the heartache,
And tell him the longings, too;
Tell him the baffled purpose,
When we scarce know what to do.

Then, leaving all our weakness
With the One divinely strong
Forget that we bore the burden
And carry away ..the song."

—Phillips Brooke..

SATURDAY.

SPIRITUAL DEAFNESS.

"We have heard with our ears."—Read Psalm 44:1-8.

Workers with the deaf say that the child who is hard of hearing is the victim of more misunderstanding than any other child. Often he is ashamed to acknowledge that he can not hear and he is thought to be stupid, when he only can not hear what is said to him.

It is the same with those who are spiritually deaf; for there are those who are so formed that they have very little sense of spiritual things. The idea of God is vague in their minds. Christ means little to their souls. The Holy Spirit is a mere name to them. The ears of their souls are stopped up.

But there are more ways of reaching the deaf than through their ears. And there are various ways of reaching the spiritually deaf. The Holy Spirit knows them and can teach them to us. Christ, who unstopped deaf ears while in the earth, is still working that miracle of love.

Prayer—May our ears be keen to hear thee, O Word of God! Quicken our attention. Make us ready to listen and eager to impart.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

OUR PILOT.

"A man's heart deviseth his way, but Jehovah directeth his steps."—Read Proverbs 16:1-9.

The other day, near Rome, Italy, a mechanic started the propeller of a biplane and at the same time accidentally turned on the gasoline. The engine fired at once. Then occurred an amazing scene, for the airplane ran along the ground, rose smoothly into the air, and went through a series of complicated evolutions with a skill as perfect as that of the most expert aviator. Then the wind caught it, overturned it, and dashed it to the ground, where it burst into flames and was destroyed.

That is the way with our lives when we start off without having the heavenly Pilot on board. For a while we do surprisingly well, and think it is all nonsense, this talk about needing celestial guidance. But soon some contrary wind strikes our plane, and down it falls to ruin. The appearance of success without Christ is only an empty show, like the performance of that pilotless plane.

Prayer—Guide our lives, O Saviour. Without thee we will not start on any voyage, however short. Jesus, Saviour, pilot me.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

GOD IN THE COMMON BUSH.

"Christ is all, and in all."—Col. 3:11.

It is a great day when we discover our God in the common bush. That day is marked with glory when our daily bread becomes a sacrament. When we enjoy a closer walk with God, common things will wear the hues of heaven.—J. H. Jowett.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

THE KING'S BUSINESS.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"The king hath commanded me a business."—I. Sam. 21:2.

"I must be about my Father's business." Luke 2:49.

The above words are of David, and Jesus. The former, perhaps the greatest prince on earth, the latter surely the greatest Prince of heaven. Jesus says that the first three princes spoke concerning him. We know that the latter of these princes spoke concerning David—the former. Jesus must have admired David for what he did which causes the speech quoted from him to be remembered. In an hour of defense Jesus cited the occasion to his accusers. The Pharisees were finding fault with Jesus because his disciples were plucking and eating wheat on the Sabbath. They were breaking the law, contended the Pharisees. "Yes," said Jesus, in effect, "but David was your great king, your beloved prince. Have you not read what he did, and the soldiers with him? Why, he entered the house of God and ate the shewbread, and gave of it to his companions, which was unlawful." Jesus won his argument. And they remembered that he had won until the very hour of Gethsemane itself. But that is another story.

Let us think for a few minutes about the words of that first young prince: "The king hath commanded me a business." Would to God that every young person standing on the very threshold of adult life could say: "The king hath commanded me a business." It would be something to be ever conscious that we had a king-commanded business! That there was a mighty and impelling "must" moving our lives toward the greatest goal. David felt it. David knew it. How it burst forth in his beautiful psalms! How it crystallized in his courageous actions! He dodged death, for his business was king-commanded. "For his name's sake," was back of David, and David was unafraid.

Like Lincoln, David felt he was king-commanded. Lincoln's whole life, from the day he first saw the slave market, until he nailed the word "Closed" upon that market's doors, was dedicated to that great purpose. A business king-commanded. Like Washington, who gave so reverently and freely of his life, his fortune, and his future for the fashioning of the American colonies into a free nation, feeling all the time that his business was king-commanded. Like Columbus, who could not be stopped until he reached a new route to an old world, and incidentally (and what an incident!), a new route to a New World! Columbus felt his business was king-commanded.

Like Paul, the world's greatest missionary, and perhaps its greatest apostle of the Good News—Christ being the Good News—that has ever lived. Paul, who could say: "I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision"; Paul, who traversed land and sea to tell forth the Good News to Gentiles; Paul, who gave his life for that business, called himself "an ambassador of Christ," king-commanded to stand before the princes and potentates of the earth with a simple message of a saving Lord.

We could continue this comparison into any realm of worthy endeavor. What a galaxy of the great we could assemble. King-commanded persons who dedicated their lives to what they believed God had given them as a divine urge, and saying, "Here am I, send me," or "Woe is me if I . . ." do not do as the King commands. Joan of Arc, Edith Cavell, Madame Currie, Jane Addams.

But a very important question should be asked before we go further: Who is the king? "Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?" (Romans 6:16.) "No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon." (Matt. 6:24.) "And Elijah came unto all the people and said: How long halt ye between two opinions? If the Lord be God, follow him: but if Baal, follow him." (I. Kings 19:21.) "Choose you this day whom ye will serve." (Josh. 24:15.) Whom will you make king? Choose now; choose this very day, for every day counts. The deeds of the day are fixed forever. Make up your mind for your king this day. Will it be "sin unto death," or "obedience unto righteousness?" "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life." Let us rise up in the days of our youth, and cry out: "My God is King forever, and he hath commanded me a business," and let us be sure we make that King, the true and living God.

And a further question I should like us to ask is: "What is the business?" And to answer that question let us look to the words of the second Prince, quoted in the outset: "I must be about my Father's business." It would seem that from a study of the life of Jesus, and his mission in the world, that a radiant and joyous living of the abundant life—a living that brings an infinite satisfaction and joy, should be the desire of every one. Jesus said: "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly. I am the good shepherd, and the good shepherd giveth his life for his sheep." (John 10:10.) In order, that is, that they may have that abundant life.

Each of us is to have a king-commanded part in building up that kind of society, or world, in which that abundant life—that full-statured life—may be lived. We shall not all have the same task. We shall not all do the same things. But we shall all have a king-commanded part. And we dare not be disobedient to the heavenly vision. "Some will be apostles, and some prophets; and some evangelists; and some pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ (for the building up of the church); till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and sunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love may grow up into him in all things, which is the head even Christ." (Eph. 4:12-15.)

You and I have been trained in Christian homes, have gone to church schools, and have absorbed the Christian ideals of life. It will be easy for us to wish our lives to be lived under the challenging motto: "The measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." Easy to wish it. How shall we attain it? How did Jesus attain it? "I must be about my Father's business." But what was that business? Well, if Jesus succeeded in "being about it," it was obviously that of unselfishly and purposively loving others. What I am striving to say is: Looking at Jesus we would say, God is love! That reduces the whole business to the simplest possible formula: Love—unselfish, even to self-giving!

Who seeks for heaven alone to save his soul,
May keep the path but will not reach the goal;
While he who walks in love may wander far,
But God will bring him where the Blessed are.

Jesus sized it all up in a story that is final and full in measure: "Then shall the king say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world; for I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me. Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, When saw we thee an hungered and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink? When (Continued on page 14.)

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Why should we support the Christian Orphanage? We are obeying the command of God when he said, "Visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction." The Master said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these . . . ye have done it unto me." You are helping the helpless, the homeless, the friendless, the little fellow who has no one to help him, who has no chance in life.

We should help support it because it is an institution of our denomination. We should have pardonable pride enough to want to see it succeed and send out boys and girls to be of service and a blessing to humanity.

Whom should we ask to support the Orphanage? Every father should want to have a part in supporting the Orphanage to show his appreciation of God's blessing in giving him life so he can be with his little children.

If the cry of the orphan child should touch the heart of any one in the world, it should be that of a mother. No one can get closer to a child than a mother. How sad it is for a little child to lose its mother in its young and tender years. Had you ever thought how lonely a little child feels when mother is gone? What an aching void is in its life and heart?

Every young man and woman should support the Orphanage because of the joy it will bring to the life that is in sympathy with those who are in need. Happiness cannot be bought. If it could be, all rich people would be happy. It does not come from without but from within.

A man of wealth told his pastor on one occasion that he was not happy. He did not enjoy life. He seemed to get so little joy out of it. His pastor said to him: "On a certain street in this city is a poor family in need. They are all sick and have no food. You get up a basket of food for them and put them to bed at night, and kiss them and have prayer with them." He did so, and the next time he met his pastor he had a new smile on his face. He said: "Pastor, I have found a new joy, and life is different."

Every little boy and girl should want a part in helping the little children in the Orphanage because they have no father and mother to love them and put them to bed at night, and to kiss them good-night. Everybody should want to have a part in bringing joy into their lives.

In reporting the many articles of food sent in to the Christian Orphanage for Thanksgiving and Christmas, we overlooked reporting the truckload of canned goods, turnips, potatoes, clothing and many other things that were sent in from Ivor, Barretts, Burton's Grove and Wakefield Churches. It was an oversight of the head and not of the heart, nor for the lack of appreciation. It is just one of those things that occur some times, and we hardly know how they do occur. We appreciate this the more because of the fact that the men who brought it over here came over on one of the coldest nights that we have had during the winter. We regret the oversight very much, and beg forgiveness and promise to not let it occur again.

saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee? Or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee? And the king shall answer and say unto them, Verily, I say unto you, Inasmuch as you have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Ask God, the King, to show you his wish, and his will for you? Ask him for a command and a commission. He will point the way, if earnestly you seek it—if honestly you desire it, and are willing to say when it is plainly shown to you: "Here am I, send me." Then, you too, can say with Prince David: "The king hath commanded me a business." And on that same occasion David added: "The king's business requires haste!"

BRADY.

Wyatt Brady was born November 4, 1846, and died December 7, 1932, aged 86 years, 1 month, 3 days.

In 1866 he married Emily Welch, who preceded him in death in 1906. To this union were born two children: W. M. Brady, of Coleridge, and Mrs. Callie Shields, of Asheboro, who survive, four grandchildren, and fourteen great-grandchildren.

In early boyhood he professed faith in Christ and joined Pleasant Grove Christian Church, and served as deacon for forty-odd years, having the interest of his church and community at heart always.

A good man has passed to his reward. May the blessings of him who doeth all things well comfort the bereaved.

Burial services were conducted by his former pastor. T. J. GREEN.

BLAND.

Mrs. Clarinda Mann Bland wife of Bro. Willie Bland, departed this life on August 4, 1932, at the age of 76 years, 9 months and 26 days. Besides her husband, she leaves two sons, two daughters, one sister and three brother.

Through many years of affliction she retained her cheerful disposition, her faith in God and an intense interest in people. Like her brother, D. A. Mann, well known in our fellowship in North Carolina, the Bible and hymn book were favorite and familiar books to her.

In the presence of a large gathering of people her funeral and burial services were held at New Elam Christian Church, of which she had been a member since childhood.

The writer loves and prays for the bereaved ones of this family.

B. J. HOWARD.

LONG.

On the evening of October 27, 1932, Bro. D. S. Long departed this life at his home in Chapel Hill, N. C. He was 56 years of age. Surviving ones of his family are his wife and four children.

Bro. Long was a faithful deacon of the Chapel Hill Christian Church (now the United Church). He was a man of faith and action. No man spoke evil of him. His was a life of the positive. His enviable blamelessness was not traceable to a policy of merely fleeing from evil, but to one of joyfully pursuing the right. His work reflected his character in terms of accuracy, strength and beauty.

Revs. C. R. Dierlamm and W. T. Mattox assisted the writer in the funeral services. The local Jr. O. U. A. M. and Knights of Pythias honored their fallen brother and comrade in the burial service.

NUMBER 6.

South Carolina Objects.—

A proposal to repeal the prohibition laws of the State of South Carolina, was given short shrift recently, when the Judiciary Committee of the State Senate reported unfavorably on a bill which had been introduced to repeal the anti-liquor laws of that State.

The Common Search for Truth.—

Plans are under way for the erection within the grounds of the Japan University of a Three-Religions church building. It will serve Shintoists, Buddhists and Christians. It is sponsored by the Department of Religions at the University. Special lectures and study meetings will be held by the three religions in this structure.

French Cease Efforts to Balance Budget.—

It has been said that the French "like less than any other people to pay taxes." In an effort to please the French people, we suppose, the attempt to balance the government's budget was abandoned the first of this week by unanimous vote of the cabinet. The ministers rejected any proposal to reduce employee's pay, but did vote slight increases in gas and bank check taxes. Measures were approved designed to provide $232,000,000. This measure will be operative until another budget is drafted.

Senate Slashes Army-Navy Appropriations.—

The first of this week the Senate voted to accept the economy committee's recommendation to apply prevailing pay cuts to the enlisted personnel of the army, navy, marine corps, and coast guard, receiving not less than $1,000 per year. It also agreed by a vote of 22 to 31 to apply the cut to retired pay of enlisted personnel when it is more than $1,000. These two items are estimated to save around $8,000,000 a year. Another provision made by the Senate is that no retired officer of the army or navy, having an income of $10,000 or more shall receive retirement pay from the Government.

Real Faith is Greatest Need Today.—

Bishop Manning, in a recent sermon, declared that detractors of Christianity who contend that the teachings of modern science are inconsistent with religious belief, are "thirty or forty years behind the times." He said: "The trouble with many of our modern unbelievers is not that they have thought too much about the matter, but that they have thought too little. We may well say that many of these who so lightly dismiss the Christian gospel have not read a book by a first-rate Christian thinker in twenty years." A "real belief in God" was described by Bishop Manning as the chief need of contemporary society "in our colleges and in our homes and everywhere." And he concluded: "What we need is to stop discussing the existence of God and to get down on our knees in his presence. We need less abstract discussion about the deity of Christ and more acceptance of his help and following of his teachings." But one needs a deep-seated, whole-hearted faith to do that.—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

A Real Parish.—

He never knew the heavy burden of responsibility being carried by the elderly, loyal native pastor in Bailundo, West Africa, until he had to "pinch-hit" for him, declares Rev. H. A. Neipp. He says that he officiated at at least 30 marriages in one week, besides funerals and other church ceremonies. The native church is growing rapidly. Take, for example, one church—so many people attended that more than a third of the congregation was on the outside of the building. Ran the program: 39 babies and 49 grown-ups, and 50 taking their first step toward full Christian discipleship. "The native church is established to stay and to grow in spite of depression and retrenchment," declares Mr. Neipp. With rapid growth, however, there is the inevitable tendency for irregularities especially where groups are not supervised except in a desultory manner. To check this the central church organization is limiting the number of out-stations which may be opened and is sending out 15 reliable men to organize each out-station now operating into a self-supporting congregation.

No Salary Cuts for Them.—

Under the above caption, the Richmond Times-Dispatch says the following editorially: "The House of Representatives has made it plain that it has not yet awakened to the need for drastic economies in government, and it has indicated all too clearly that it will make no personal sacrifice to effect any general saving. Members of the lower house, who receive $9,000 annually for contributing to the national weal, have voted down measures which would have cut their pay to $7,500 or $5,000. 'No pay cuts for us,' is the ultimatum that has come from the House. Southern Democrats who introduced the offensive measures have been roundly denounced as merely playing to the grandstand. They are pariahs who have gone back on their own kind. The proposals were scorned as being simply for home consumption. And then what a whine! Reduce the pay of congressmen and you are opening the way for a millionaire control of the national legislature! Poor men could not scrap along on a mere $7,500! Only the wealthy could afford to serve their country. Well, one knows few congressmen who would be rated in private business as worth even $5,000 a year."

The Art of Staying Married.—

The, even for the present age, excessive divorce rate in Marion County, Ind., of 40.55 divorces to each 100 weddings during 1930, compared to a one-to-six ratio for the nation, has caused Butler University to institute an entirely new offering in the educational field—"a course in marriage." Dean Albert E. Bailey announced that they had "become convinced that some special degree of education now is needed for happiness in marriage," and lectures will be on the physical, psychological, economic, social, and religious aspects of the wedded life. The course, which is the first of its kind to be offered by an American college, will be under the direction of Charles E. Metzger, thirty-nine year old attorney and divorce referee. He will be assisted by Dr. Thurman B. Rice, famous pathologist, two psychologists and a Unitarian minister. The course will be open to students and non-students, married persons and single. The tuition fee is five dollars for single persons, or seven-fifty for a married couple. Dr. Bailey continues: "We will seek to present a realistic, scientific, and intelligent attitude toward the whole subject of modern marriage, with the hope that such an attitude may carry over into future legislation dealing with marriage and human relationships within the family group." The course is reported to be receiving popular support from the co-eds. Seriously, one of the greatest needs of America today is a uniform marriage and divorce code.

Motorists and Bad Habits.—

Bad habits are responsible for most of the accidents of the road today. Not only is this so, but they cause the motorist quite a bit of annoyance and loss of pleasure in the use of his automobile. One list of these habits, given by a traffic officer, who explains the shortness of it by saying he has "included only the very bad ones," is as follows: "Lack of knowledge of traffic regulations and failure to keep up with changes and modifications; inattention; failure to give signals, or giving them in an indifferent fashion; driving in the middle of the road; using poor judgment in passing vehicles going in the opposite direction; failure to keep the car in a safe mechanical condition, especially with reference to brakes, tires, headlights, and steering." Possibly every driver of a car violates one or more traffic rules in a day's driving. There are even times when he is justified in so doing, but these occasions are usually rare exceptions. Being asked, one day, why he arrested some drivers for traffic violations and sent others on with only a warning, a traffic officer replied: "You can nearly always tell which is the right course to take. The condition of the car is one thing—a man who will abuse his car has little regard for the rights of others, the one who is careful with his car is more careful of the other's rights." The dents in the fenders are worth considering, though they are only one of the many factors which enter in. Motorists should make every effort to cure their bad habits, and the best way to do this is by supplanting them with good ones.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Rev. J. W. Patton, returning to the hospital and suffering not a little the past week, is reported as somewhat improved, and his friends are anxious and hopeful of his recovery.

Rex. A. Craig Bowdish, pastor of the Babson Park Community Church, has been granted a two-months' leave of absence from his church and he and Mrs. Bowdish have left for Rochester, Minn., where Mr. Bowdish will have a serious operation on the nerve of his face. He has been suffering severely for considerable time, and his friends wish for him a successful outcome, and a full recovery.

Dr. Lewis H. Keller of Holly Hill, reports the organization of fifteen boys as Pioneers under the plan of the Y. M. C. A. As many girls have been organized as Reserves with the name "Service Seekers." Thirty-four young people were in attendance at the Young People's Society on Monday evening. He remarks: "This represents soil rather than crop, but the seed is going into the soil."

At the annual meeting of the St. Petersburg Church, it was unanimously voted that the present arrangement with Dr. Charles H. Beale, as pastor, and Rev. Lawrence A. Gedcke, as assistant pastor, be made indefinite, which is equivalent to a call. Dr. Beale spends about six months with the church and Mr. Gedcke acts as his assistant and has full charge of the services during the summer months.

It is gratifying, indeed, that our Lebanon Church constituency and their friends in Lee County, N. C., whose house of worship was burned some weeks ago, are going vigorously at the work of building an ample and better house than the one that was burned. Rev. J. A. Denton is the pastor of this faithful and loyal company, and he reports that not only members of the church itself, but members of other congregations are helping unselfishly and generously in the work of securing lumber and work on the proposed building.

Dr. J. Edward Kirby, pastor, United Congregational-Christian Church, Raleigh, has been asked to represent our church on the State Inter-Racial Commission, of which Dr. Howard Odum of the University of North Carolina is chairman. Dr. Kirby requests that our churches make some observance of the event on February 12th, calling attention to the item of inter-racial relationships. Dr. Kirby is to speak twice during the day—State College, 3 P. M., and over the radio at 6 P. M. His radio address is to appear in next week's SUN, and will be read with interest.

A special to the Daily News, Greensboro, carries an item of peculiar interest to CHRISTIAN SUN readers: "Danville, Va., January 30th—Rev. M. T. Sorrell reported here today that the Happy Home Church, one of his charges, near Draper, had been entered and robbed. When he went to conduct services Sunday he learned that a communion table and three pulpit chairs had been removed by a thief or thieves who gained entrance by way of a window which had been left unlocked unintentionally. The authorities were notified, but no arrests had been made today."

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill has been teaching in an Interdenominational Leadership Training School at Melbourne, Fla. Previous to that she was the responsible leader for a week-end conference of young people at Orange City. Delegates were present from several of the churches in the vicinity and the pastors of these churches assisted in the program. Both of these were quite successful affairs. Miss Coghill also visited several of the churches, accompanied by Miss Gladys Hall, of the West Tampa Mission. Miss Hall spoke for the work of the Mission and Miss Coghill spoke especially of her work in Kentucky last summer.

How is this for a unique and worth-while idea? Rev. J. L. Neese, deeply interested in the children, as well as the young people and grown-ups of his parish, holds a Friday afternoon service for children in his Palm Street, (Greensboro), Church. Recently he told his merry, happy crowd of children that he was going to give a copy of "The Gospel of John" to each child who came to the weekly meeting next Friday afternoon. It is a good thing, indeed, that Bro. Neese somehow had a premonition or a prophetic vision, and went to the church with an even 100 books. Exactly 100 children were on hand, each receiving the promised award, thus sending the pastor back home empty-handed but very full-hearted.

Dr. A. D. Woodworth, one of our faithful veteran missionaries in Japan, writes a direct message to CHRISTIAN SUN readers this week on what he thinks about the Report of the Appraisal Committee—the Committee of Laymen who studied missions for two years and have now presented their report under the heading: "Re-Thinking Missions." We invite SUN readers to turn aside from what the press is saying second-handed about the Appraisal Committee's report, and read what a missionary on the field has to say. Dr. Woodworth is a teacher, a scholar, a former college president, and speaks not only from a cultured mind, but from a great heart and from more than twenty-five years of real experience as a missionary in Japan.

At Pomona, Fla., Rev. and Mrs. R. E. Newton are doing a great deal of community welfare work during these days of hardship. Mrs. Newton is a graduate nurse and has rendered a great deal of free service to the poor people, both white and colored. As there is no resident physician, and the cost of securing one from a neighboring town is so great, a graduate nurse is a valuable asset to the community. Many colored people and several whites declare they owe their lives to Mrs. Newton's timely services. The physicians and county nurse seek her help and cooperation. She does not practice professionally. There is a large unemployment problem in the town and many receive Red Cross aid. Mr. Newton has been head of the Red Cross flour distribution and has rendered valuable service in other ways.

Rev. Richard Evans, of Key West, Fla., reports that they revised their Sunday School roll, dropping sixty-six names and adding thirteen new members, but in spite of that the average attendance for the quarter was an increase over the previous quarter. They also report an increase in the attendance of the morning and evening services, especially the evening service. The Sunday School is making an index file of all families and the church has had a successful "Every-Family Visitation." The pastor, in his annual report to the church, reported 479 calls, 16 infant baptisms, 15 funerals, 5 marriages. The average attendance for the entire year at the morning service was 61, evening 156, Sunday School 162. Mrs. Evans is arranging a pageant, "They Who Weave," written by Miss Race, of the Jacksonville Church.

The following comes by way of a special to the Raleigh News and Observer: "Portsmouth, Va., February 2nd—Rev. R. A. Whitten, pastor of the First Christian Church of Henderson, N. C., notified the congregation of the First Christian Church of this city yesterday that he had accepted the call to the local pastorate to fill the vacancy made when Rev. H. C. Caviness resigned last year to enter the evangelistic field. The new pastor of the local church is expected to take up his duties the latter part of this month or early next month. The call was extended to Mr. Whitten after a congregational meeting last Sunday. He officiated at the local church a few weeks ago. While the church was without a pastor, services were conducted by Chaplain J. B. Earnest, U. S. Navy, and Rev. A. W. Hurst." Our Portsmouth First Church will afford Bro. Whitten a great opportunity for consecrated and energetic service, and our congratulations and best wishes to pastor and people in their new relationship are herewith extended.

Bro. Plyler, of the North Carolina Christian Advocate, had better not be so plain about it, or he will get his "crown cracked": "The last legislature lingered in session six months in order to 'get the money where the money is.' Those solons adjourned with an unbalanced budget. The procedure of the present legislature is 'to get the money where the money ain't.' Will the budget be balanced this time?" Now! Now! Now! Why, of course, the budget will be balanced! Every woman in the State wants the budget balanced and says that it must be balanced—until the "weight" with which the balancing is done falls on the head or toes of one whose salary, or income, is touched, and then, O! my, the howl that goes up! Even one of the high officials of the State, whose salary is $6,000.00 a year, is clamoring for a balanced budget, but when a legislator suggested that his own salary might be cut, cried out that if a cheaper man was desired for the job, he could have it, and that before further cuts were made, the solons "better stop and consider."

THE CHURCHES AND THE GEORGIA BICENTENNIAL.

The 200th anniversary of the establishment of the colony of Georgia, which begins February 12th, is attracting attention in church circles, not only in Georgia, but throughout the country. The Federal Council of Churches has recognized the importance of the occasion and has called attention to two factors which give the event a religious significance. These are: first, the humanitarian interest of General Oglethorpe in the founding of the new colony; and second, the prominent place occupied by Georgia in the early work of John Wesley.

The Georgia Bicentennial Commission has invited the churches of Georgia to hold commemorative thanksgiving services for the blessings that have come through the settlement of this English colony upon American soil two centuries ago. Competent historians state that the founding of this English colony in the South was the chief factor in making the entire country an English-speaking nation, instead of a nation divided between the English and the Spanish.

Further information can be secured by addressing Albert R. Rogers, Executive Secretary of the Commission, Atlanta National Bank Building, Atlanta, Ga.

CLUB REPORT

It will soon be Springtime. Everything that is alive will begin to manifest itself. One of the livest organizations among us today is our Dollar-a-Month Club. It is taking on new life and forging ahead with every opportunity. Last week was a good week for the Club at Holland, Va. As you will find in another article in this issue, thirteen new members were added to the Club from the Holland Church, with the practical assurance of ten more, which will bring the memberships in the Club of the Holland Church up to twenty-five.

It is the purpose of the committee in charge to take steps immediately to present the opportunity for memberships in the Club to every Sunday School and church within the Convention. There are a lot of people who are interested in Elon College, who are encouraged for the future, and who are anxious to do their part to the extent of their ability when the opportunity presents itself.

At a meeting of the ministers of the Eastern Virginia Conference in Suffolk, last Wednesday Morning, February 1st, everyone present expressed a desire to have someone come into his church and present the opportunity for membership in the Club to his congregation.

On the invitation of Dr. I. W. Johnson, I am to speak at Liberty Springs Church the first Sunday morning in March, and at Oakland Christian Church in the afternoon. On invitation of Rev. J. F. Morgan, I will speak that evening at the Rosemont Church. It will certainly be a pleasure to meet again the members and friends of these churches, and I am sure that they will be glad for the opportunity to lend whatever assistance they may be able.

Affairs at the college are moving along very satisfactorily. We have enrolled twenty-three new students for the Spring semester. This will bring our total enrollment for the year on up toward the three hundred mark. As the membership of the church and alumni begin to manifest an interest in the college, it greatly increases the college's appeal to the public. It is imperative that we add twenty-five hundred members to the Dollar-a-Month Club between now and Commencement—that every present member of the Club and everyone interested in the college, use his influence to enroll at least one additional member. If the members of the Club will begin to multiply themselves, it will help us along tremendously.

In addition to the thirteen new members listed in another article in this issue from Holland Church, the following have joined:

- A. B. Owen, Gibsonville, N. C.2..... 2
- Dr. J. V. Dick, Gibsonville, N. C..... 1
- Lora Johnson, Fuquay Springs, N. C..... 1
- Lillian Johnson, Fuquay Springs, N. C..... 1
- Mrs. Emma Holland Rawls, Suffolk, Va..... 1
- John J. Ingle, Winston-Salem, N. C..... 1
- Mrs. D. S. Coltrane, Greensboro, N. C..... 1
- J. E. Smith, Greensboro, N. C. 1
- George A. Iseley, Raleigh, N. C..... 1

Since our last report, we have collected from old and new members, the total of $207.00, making a grand total received from Club members since its organization of $1,819.00.

L. E. SMITH.

THE FLAW IN HUMANISM.

You cannot serve God without serving your fellowman; but you can serve your fellowman without serving God. A paradox, but the everlasting truth. The one cry of the godless communists and atheistic "humanists" is "service to fellowman," and the all-sufficiency of such service. Their plea is that service to man is enough, and that God should be left out of the picture altogether, as he is both needless and non-existent. Rev. John W. Sutter, Jr., in "The Living Church," gets at the very heart of "humanism"—this "cup of cold water to drink and a sure reward philosophy"—in the following analysis:

"The flaw in humanism is that nothing is higher than humanity. Humanism fails in that it makes man self-sufficient. There is no place for God. For those who lack religious faith the Lord's Prayer would read: 'Our brethren who are upon the earth, hallowed be our name; our kingdom come; our will be done on earth, for there is no heaven. We must get this day our daily bread. We know we cannot be forgiven, for natural Law knows no forgiveness; we fear not temptation; we deliver ourselves from evil; for ours is the kingdom, and ours is the power, and there is no glory and no forever. Amen.' Religious faith is trust in something outside of self, an independent reality of its own, true whether we believe it or not. You cannot have religious faith without trusting in God. If you have doubts, move among people of faith, and draw your own conclusions."

TO THE UNKNOWN MISSIONARY.

Some sixty years ago, a Christian missionary found his way into Macedonia, which was then under Turkish rule. Among the converts was a young man named Kalaloff, who became a flaming evangelist and organized a little group of converts, whom he served as a lay-preacher.

Through war and persecution, he faithfully served this congregation. Today the work goes on in that little Macedonian village, which is now a part of Jugoslavia, under the leadership of the son of the lay-preacher, who is an ordained minister. But that is not the whole story.

In Port Colbourne, Canada, is another son, who keeps a confectionery store, but who is also known throughout the country as a leading Christian layman. Another son is on a farm near Simcoe, and two daughters are in Toronto; all are fine Christian characters.

The name of the original missionary has probably been forgotten, but down through the years his influence has lived on in the lives of these humble, but useful Christians.—From the Record and Missionary Review of the United Church of Canada.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

FACTS AT FIRST-HAND.

Maybe if more of our pastors and people had come in personal and intimate contact with Elon College as has Dr. W. M. Jay, Holland, Va., more of them would be ready and anxious to give President Smith and the College the consideration and warm welcome that Dr. Smith tells of in his "Elon Letter" to THE SUN this week. Dr. Jay came from the pastorate to a professorship in the College and then from a professorship, which he honored with his scholarship and loyalty, returned to the pastorate, being esteemed and appreciated there, as he was as a member of the faculty at Elon. Knowing the facts at first-hand makes all the difference in the world. But since all of our pastors and laymen cannot have these facts first-hand, they can have them from reliable and trustworthy and loyal souls.

On this account, if on no other, all our pastors and churches are safe in bringing to the immediate and forceful attention of their churches the worth and value of Elon College to the church, the contribution it has made and is making to our fellowship, and now to the urgent needs and demands of the institution. Much of February is still left, January and February being designated by our Convention as college months, and during this month every church that has not done so, should do as our Holland Church has done, and a few others—not that Dr. Smith, as president, can reach all, but the pastor with competent assistance can, at least, give all a chance at the Dollar-a-Month Club.

Not a little criticism has been passed by an unthinking public on the financing of church colleges. Trustees of church colleges have been held up to not a little criticism because they have allowed institutions to pile up indebtedness, etc. Recent authentic statistics were given to the press throughout the country showing that church colleges had been far better financed than even the banks themselves had been; and that percentages of banks that had been closed the last three years was far greater than the percentages of church colleges or higher institutions of learning that had been closed. The fact is that colleges had been better managed financially than had governments, municipal, county, state and national, the only difference being that governments now had recourse to taxation by compulsion; whereas, the colleges only had recourse to the loyalty, the devotion and the liberality of their constituents. Now is the time and the opportunity for all loyal and faithful Christians to show their devotion and care for the institution of their church, which is essential to its prestige and power. J. O. A.

POOR OLD WEARY DARROW!

The United Press sends out report from Chicago, February 2nd, that "If Clarence Darrow were 20 again and had his busy life to live over, he would not attempt it with the world's odds against the individual as they are." "It's a pretty silly world, from wherever you look at it," said Darrow, as he sat in his green-walled apartment home on the south side of the campus of the University of Chicago. "If I were a young man, with life ahead of me, I think I'd chuck it all. The odds are too great against you, and anyway, the world is all wrong nowadays." Quoting the press report further: "The golden age of Greece was the golden age of civilization; never since that time have men risen above their surroundings, their greeds, their pettyness, in such glorious fashion. Darrow is getting old. His voice flags now. He has to be prodded before he launches into 'sermons' that eschew God and ideology." The interview closes with a statement from Darrow, the noted defender and champion of evolution, as saying:

"Man is no different, by and large, than he used to be when he cracked down on a saber-toothed tiger with a tomahawk.

"Instead of tiger teeth, now he wants money. There used to be religion to usurp part of his time. Now the almighty dollar is left. It's a close race as to which is the worse—religion or money."

In reading the report of this interview with the noted atheist, reviler of religion, the church and Christianity, one is not surprised that now, as he faces a worn old age and an eternity without hope and without God, he declares that if he had it all to do over again, he would simply "chuck it all," put himself out of existence, before he had tried and tested life with its problems and difficulties. Poor old, weary, hopeless Darrow. Truly, indeed, as the Word of God says: "The fool hath said in his heart there is no God." A recent Christian philosopher, commenting on that Scripture, said: "None but a fool would say that."

One turns with relief from contemplating the life of atheism and folly to the words of another man of altogether a different type and belief, who, as he faced death and the future after a life of real trial and hardship in the flesh, said: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day." (II. Timothy 4:7-8.)

Defeated, hopeless, bemoaning Darrow!

Conquering, triumphant, victorious Paul!

What a contrast!

FORWARD WITH GOD.

One of our observing pastors related an interesting event to the editor a while ago. The pastor was presiding over a meeting of the Board of Finance of his church. One member, of prominent business interests of his city, related how he had but recently and successfully advocated taking forward steps to save his business and enlarge it during the present time of testing—he had increased his appropriation for advertising his business, had redoubled his force of salesmen—and related how he had put it up to those salesmen to prove their salesmanship, not only by selling to people who wanted to buy, but most of all, by selling to people who did not want to buy, and creating a new interest in, and demand for, his goods. He reported that after some weeks of trial his plan was working and his business was on the up-grade in the black, instead of down-grade in the red.

Now this very same business man, when facing the problems of his church and the kingdom, as a member of the Board of Finance, declared: "We must retrench. I see nothing in view, but to curtail the pastor's salary, and all the other expenses of the church, as well as contributions to the enterprises of the church until conditions are more favorable."

This pastor says he is still wondering if this layman has discovered the inconsistency of his own logic and the incongruity of his own counsel. There are just thousands who are advocating going backward, backward, backward" in the affairs of the kingdom and the work of God and the church. We challenge such to find, either in sacred or secular record, any evidence or indication that God goes backward. God never retrenches. God goes forward. If we are to have fellowship with him, we must go forward.

When the children of Israel were confronted with obstacles and difficulties too great for human wisdom and courage, "God said unto Moses, speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward." The only way to find God and to have fellowship with his blessed person and presence is to look up, not down; forward, not backward. We agree with the observation of the esteemed North Carolina Christian Advocate: "Somebody has said that God cannot keep step with a retreating church. That is because God does not walk backward. Crawfish walk backward, but they have never cut much of a figure in the world. Yet, crawfish do about as well as men who walk backward." J. O. A.

OUR SOUTHERN SEMINARY.

The theological seminary of our Congregational and Christian Churches of the South, now affiliated with the School of Religion of Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tenn., plans a friendly visitation throughout this area. Letters signed by the officers of the Seminary: Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, Dr. Edwin C. Gillette, Dr. Fred P. Ensminger, and Rev. Milo J. Sweet, have been sent to our pastors, asking them to set aside an entire week between February 12th and March 31st, to present the claims and needs of the Seminary.

When our Atlanta Theological Seminary went to Nashville in 1929, to become affiliated with Vanderbilt University, the agreement provided for complete autonomy and cordial cooperation. Our Seminary became a Foundation, retaining all the rights and privileges of the Seminary, and sharing in all the opportunities afforded by the University.

Now that the Vanderbilt School of Religion has launched a campaign to get a million dollars for added endowment, it is evident that our Foundation must raise at least $200,000 for our own endowment to maintain a responsive relationship with Vanderbilt. The Directors of our Seminary Foundation have invited Dr. C. Rexford Raymond to take charge of the financial campaign. During the effort for endowment the current expenses must be provided for and the Student Aid Fund must be increased. The friendly aid of the churches in the area to which the Seminary especially ministers must be sought. An Honor Roll of all contributing churches will be made, and will be a great incentive in the quest for endowment in the North and East. C. R. R.

CONVENTION NOTES.

The Executive Board of the Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches, and the Committee of Ten appointed by the Convention, met in Raleigh, N. C., January 5th and 6th. This meeting was to consider certain matters referred by the Convention, and to attend to issues that had arisen since the Convention met.

The Board considered the vacancies occasioned by the death of Dr. Staley. Rev. H. S. Hardcastle was elected to fill the vacancy on the Executive Board of the Convention. Dr. N. G. Newman was elected to the Board of Education vacancy, and Mrs. C. H. Rowland was elected a delegate to the General Council of Congregational and Christian Churches. The vacancy on the Mission Board was referred to that Board to make a nomination.

The Treasurer reported that the receipts from the Conference totaled $7,103.43. The amounts sent by the various Conferences were as follows: Virginia Valley Central Conference, $500; Alabama Conference, $78.43; Western North Carolina Conference, $750; Eastern Virginia Conference, $3,325; North Carolina and Virginia Conference, $2,050; Eastern North Carolina Conference, $400.

It was voted that the above amount should be distributed as follows: To THE CHRISTIAN SUN account, $2,500; Elon College, $2,000; Superannuation, $1,100; Board of Christian Education, $250; General Council, $300; Convention Expenses, $300. The balance was left on hand to take care of such emergencies as may arise.

The question of the distribution of funds that will be raised during the current year was considered. It was the consensus of opinion of those present that all the enterprises of the church should share in Conference apportionments. It seemed desirable that when a member of the church contributes to the fund asked for by Conference the contribution will be divided among all the benevolent causes which his church is sponsoring.

The following schedule of distribution was adopted for 1933: Missions, 10 per cent; Colleges, 25 per cent; Publications, 15 per cent; Superannuation, 15 per cent; Orphanage, 10 per cent; Southern Convention, 10 per cent; General Council, 5 per cent; Christian Education Board, 5 per cent; Foundation for Education, 5 per cent. This perhaps does not represent the most equitable percentage; but it does provide for all the enterprises to share in the funds sent to Conference, and is the first step toward getting back to a unified budget.

Methods by which the work of the Congregationalists and Christians within the bounds of the Convention may be more completely merged were considered. It was voted to recommend to the Conferences that the Convention set up a joint treasury through which all funds will be handled, and distributed. This is the first step toward the unification of all enterprises and interests of the joint bodies. This recommendation also provided for a united administration committee that would consider all the interests within the Convention.

A committee composed of Dr. L. E. Smith, Dr. J. E. Kirby, Rev. M. J. Sweet, and Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, was appointed to collect information as to the present financial methods in vogue both among the Christians and the Congregationalists, and the amounts raised by each. This will enable future plans that may be considered to be made in the light of all the facts.

A great deal of time and patience will be required to work out all the details of a complete merger. But if the meeting in Raleigh be any criterion, the plans will go forward in harmony, cooperation and brotherly love, to the mutual enrichment of the fellowship represented by both the Congregationalists and Christians.

STANLEY C. HARRELL,
Pres. of the Convention.

"BY THEIR FRUITS YE SHALL KNOW THEM."

Bishop Paul B. Kern, speaking before the Mid-Year Meeting of the Virginia Conference Board of Missions, said some strong words concerning the Lordship of Jesus Christ and the authority of the Word of God. In a few days Dr. Addison Moore, pastor of the Unitarian Church of Richmond, horned in on the front page of the Times-Dispatch in an attack on Bishop Kern for being so far behind the times in scholarship and wisdom. The news mongers and headline hunters, who have been kind to Dr. Moore in his publicity seeking in the past, gave him good space and placed the pictures of both men in the center of the limelight.

This is written neither to defend the Truth against such an attack nor to further gratify the publicity desires of any man, but to register a preachment that is well worth consideration in this connection.

In the first place Bishop Kern is known far and wide as a progressive and wide-awake scholar, and not as a fossil and a remnant of a tradition that is gone. In the second place, Dr. Moore's denomination in the last published census of the religious groups of the United States, is reported to include a little more than sixty thousand members and, according to that record they decreased nearly twenty-five thousand during the previous ten years. Thus instead of taking the United States with their diluted form of Christianity, they are receding, and at that rate, by the middle of this century, they will be extinct.

On the other hand, there are over eight million Methodists and about as many Baptists in these States, besides large armies of Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Disciples, Congregationalists and other branches of Evangelical Christianity, believing in the Divine Christ and the inspired Truth. Taking the two largest groups—Methodists and Baptists—we find that in the same decade in which the Unitarians, who claim Jesus was no more divine than Moses, and the Bible no more inspired than the Harvard Classics, lost nearly 25 per cent of their total strength; these other two groups made a net gain of one million and eight hundred thousand, or thirty times as many as the entire membership of the Unitarians.

Dr. Moore has a right to his opinion and his church has a right to its creed. They should be accorded the rights that go with religious liberty. We acknowledge the Unitarians as contributors of culture and strength to the development of New England, but it does look like the kind of religion this country wants is not a modified type like Mohanmedanism, Judaism, or Unitarianism, but a type that offers a Redeemer who can save men from their sins. "By their fruits ye shall know them."—Editorial, Richmond Christian Advocate.

DO YOU WORRY?

Lose the habit!

For worry, after all, is simply a habit—a most treacherous mental habit that is born of imaginary fears.

Worry paralyzes your thinking faculties, ruins your ambition and self-confidence, and makes you incapable of progressive action.

No matter is too trivial to cause worry to some people. The color of a hat, what your neighbors are saying about your last year's overcoat, why Willie doesn't write, and practically any question that can be thought up is worth a worry to somebody. Silly! Little fears clogging up mental action and spoiling digestion.

"He who fears being conquered is sure of defeat," said Napoleon. And he who worries over future misfortunes is sure to bring them upon himself. That's natural—and fair. It takes courage and vision to wrest honors and success from life. The coward's lack of faith in himself prevents him from becoming the victor. He has too many fears, and too little faith. His worries betray him to the enemy.

Someone has said that the reason worrying is so popular is that we cannot worry without feeling sorry for ourselves. But there is a great difference between planning future thought and action, and self-sympathy.

The past is over. No amount of worrying can change the things that have happened to you. They may be modified, increased or completely changed by new conditions that will come in the future. But worrying about what the future will bring is quite as fruitless as attempting to change the things that have already happened.

Plan, have faith and work for the kind of future you want—but expel fear from your heart, and worry from your mind. The road to your goal will be half as far, and twice as smooth.

One of the greatest enemies of self-sympathy is laughter. Use it! Instead of feeling sorry for yourself in disappointment, try laughing about it.

The man who is cheerful and unafraid of the future commands respect. His influence passes on to others who will admire his courage and aid his cause.

He is the "lucky" man—the confident man—the man whose faith is strong enough to remove the imaginary fears that cause worry.

Do you worry? Why??—Blade and Ledger.

MAINTAINING STEEPLES.

Three men, representing as many different professions, chanced to meet on a street corner one Saturday afternoon. The sunset augured a beautiful Lord's Day.

"Tomorrow is going to be glorious," exclaimed the busy doctor, "so people will not go to church."

"Yes," retorted the aged judge, "but we would not live in a community without steeples."

The doctor nodded his assent, and all parted with a cordial "good-bye." The minister pondered as he slowly meandered home. "To nice . . . people won't . . . without steeples unthinkable."

Would this not be the universal expression were the vote taken? And yet—and yet—sentiment does not keep steeples pointing skyward.

As necessary as dollars are, even they fail to accomplish that. Only people can attain and maintain this deeply cherished community ideal.

Our presence at the regular services of the church is the final arbiter.

Chasing a white pill in and out of the eighteen holes; balancing a rod over a rippling brook; lolling on silken couches; reading the Sunday supplement, while lazily listening in on some distant service, is voting to pull down the steeples. Every Sunday is an election day. By our deeds we cast a ballot either for or against the steeples. It is not by finely expressed sentiments, or wordy good wishes, but by our fruits that we are known and steeples are maintained.

Our personal support of the services of the church will determine the future of the steeples, and with them the moral and spiritual welfare of mankind. For history thunders the truth that where there is no spiritual vision the people perish.—Rev. Chas. E. Reidt in Church Business.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The ministers of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference were invited to meet in Suffolk on Tuesday, January 31st, for a conference with Dr. L. E. Smith, President of Elon College. This meeting was in the interest of the Dollar-a-Month plan for raising funds for the college. President Smith reported that all current expenses for this term have been paid to January 1st. The interest on the debt for the past four months was not included in this statement. According to this record the college would be able to meet its expenses, if all interest bearing debts were paid, provided outside assistance should be continued on the present basis. The inability to pay interest on a principal of debts handicaps the college, and works a hardship on those who hold the notes and bonds.

The ministers agreed to cooperate in giving the people an opportunity to make an offering to Elon College. The college is doing good work, but it is not self-supporting. No educational institution can exist upon its income from board, fees and tuition. In this campaign the people will be asked to give freely and willingly. The college desires gifts, but not at the expense of good-will. It is the earnest wish that the people may respond to the appeal for funds for the college.

The time is not far distant when there will be a more favorable attitude towards the small Christian college. For several years the pendulum has swung towards mass formation in every line of work. Population has been moving to the cities. Individuals are attracted to great crowds. When people are interested in big business, big corporations, big colleges, big universities and big churches, it is difficult for small churches and institutions to survive. But the history of civilization in education and religion, is a story of swinging from one extreme towards another. Not so many years ago, people who could afford to provide an education for their children, employed a teacher who lived and taught in the home. The one-room public school was a competitor with the private school. The private school has given place to the private tutor in the academy. The one-room public school has been abandoned for the great consolidated high school. After graduation they are enjoined to seek the large colleges and universities. The larger the better, for many people.

The home has been influenced by the same spirit. Before the development of the "big plantation," many of the early homes in America were small. Naturally larger homes were built on the plantations. At first these were called "great houses." For a number of years, a large home was regarded as essential to social prestige in the community. Now the sentiment is more favorable to a smaller home suited to the real needs of the family.

For several years the large church has captivated the attention and invited the support of public opinion. Strangers visiting the city, or changing their residence, sought the largest church for worship and inspiration. Large buildings, great choirs, immense congregations and up-to-date equipment have been capitalized in making an appeal for church membership and support. But the people have learned that the large groups do not have a monopoly on spiritual blessings and religious fellowship. And many are discovering that the small church has some advantages over the larger church, and has a real place to fill in the kingdom of God.

The attitude toward Colleges will likewise change. The challenge of richly endowed institutions with thousands of students will lose an appeal to people who appreciate the value of personality and real fellowship. The small institution of real merit will come into its own. It will be fortunate for Elon College if it never becomes a large college.

I. W. JOHNSON.

HOLLAND LEADS THE WAY.

At the recent session of the Southern Christian Convention, held in Burlington, N. C., by vote, the Convention endorsed the Dollar-a-Month Club idea for Elon College, and called upon the churches of the Convention and the friends of the college to join in this effort. A committee was appointed, but like so many other undertakings, it seemed difficult to get the movement under way.

Recently, the pastor of the Holland Church, extended me, as President of Elon College, an invitation to spend the fifth Sunday with his people and to speak at both the morning and evening services. In extending the invitation, Dr. Jay requested that I speak at the morning service on the general theme of education, but with particular reference to Elon College, stating that his people wanted to know something about their college—what its needs are and what the prospects are for the institution. He requested that I simply bring a gospel message for the evening service, but remain in the community for a day or two that I might have the opportunity of calling on the people individually and thus give them an opportunity to join the Dollar-a-Month Club. This was a most encouraging invitation—one that I gladly accepted. It was a most delightful day—good audiences, both morning and evening—attentive and responsive—the spirit was fine—the fellowship was inspirational. Everywhere I went, I found an evident interest in Elon College and a desire to help to the extent of ability. The following members of the Holland Church joined:

R. E. Hedgepeth	Mrs. I. A. Luke
Mr. Job G. Holland	Mrs. M. G. Britt
Mrs. J. T. Jones	Mr. B. W. Council
Mr. and Mrs. Holland	Mrs. Wilson Holland
Ballard	E. L. Daughtrey
Mr. R. E. Norfleet	J. D. Rawls
M. S. Harrell	Mr. R. M. Norfleet

There are a few things about the campaign in Holland that particularly interested me.

First. The pastor, Dr. Jay, had already manifested his interest by joining some months ago—he was the first member.

Second. I found an organized Bible class, the Ladies' Bible Class, Mrs. Charles Daughtrey, Secretary, and Mrs. L. J. Daughtrey, Teacher, already a member of the Club. Of their own accord, they joined some time ago, and theirs was among the first of Sunday School classes to join the Club. They are enthusiastic about it.

Third. Mr. R. E. Hedgepeth came forward at the close of the morning service, and said: "I am interested in Elon College—I feel that it is our duty to support it. I can't give much, but I can give a dollar a month, and will, if I have to give up smoking to do it." He requested that his name be put on the list. At the close of the evening service, Mr. M. S. Harrell came forward and said: "I want to join the Dollar-a-Month Club for Elon College. I don't have much money, but I never felt that I lost a dollar that I gave to a good cause. I can't pay the whole amount at once, but I can pay a dollar a month. Will you put my name down as a member?"

Fourth. A number of the fine members of the Holland Church were equally interested and equally anxious to help, but in the face of financial conditions, they felt that they were just unable to do it, at the same time assuring me that whenever they could, they would. Thus, Holland Leads the Way for the rest of the churches of the Convention. I trust that every church in the Convention will follow the lead, and give the college whatever support it can.

Appreciatively and gratefully yours,
L. E. SMITH.

"MY COMPANION."

Through the kindness of a friend, my Bible has returned to me with a new binding. It has been my constant companion for many years and the pages had become loose, the cover frayed and loose from the back, very dilapidated in general, yet the Word of Life is just the same as it always has been, with many penciled notes added for my own benefit. As I opened it and turned the pages, my heart was filled with joy more potent than I could have felt over an expensively bound new Bible, for it is a part of me.

A few years ago, I received a fine Bible as a gift, but it never has nor ever will be the same to me as my old Bible. It has been, and still is my Bread and Water of Life, with honey and wine and all the other delectable fruits of the Land of Canaan, a table that is ever spread and waiting for me to partake. It is also my Book of Revelation, for in it is revealed to me that I was not made for this life alone, but in the image of God; made for a never-ending life to commune with him upon the earth and then to live with him throughout the endless ages of eternity.

But it also reveals to me that I have sinned and come short of the glory of God, yet as I read on, I find that I have been redeemed, bought back, through the death of the Lord Jesus Christ who was made sin for me, that my sins have been blotted out through his shed blood; that he broke the power of cancelled sin and sealed my salvation with the Holy Spirit of promise.

Because of all this, I now walk in newness of heart and life and know that "Life is not a goblet to be drained; but a measure to be filled." The Psalmist has said, "Thy word have I hid in my heart;" and some one has said that to have God's law in the heart means to think about it, to store it in memory, to apply it to ourselves, to choose it so that we obey the will of God for our lives. The Word of God is a mine of richest treasure and as we search we find nuggets of fine gold with veins leading to other lodes. The Word hid in our hearts means the beginning of a lovely garden of the Lord's own planting which will blossom with fragrant flowers.

The Word of God in our hands becomes a mighty weapon for our defense. The Word of God upon our lips and acted out in our lives makes a message of power. Yes, it all reveals the Christ who is the Word that was made flesh and dwelt upon the earth and as many as received him, to them gave he the power to become the sons of God.

As sons of God, we have given unto us exceeding great and precious promises which are scattered throughout the pages of this Book. Some one who has tried to count them, says there are thirty thousand which makes eighty-two for each day of the year. These promises reveal to us the love of God, his mercy toward us, his care for us. So we can rest upon the Word of God for our salvation; for our strength and stay each day of our lives; for our guidance and comfort when the path of life is dim; for it abideth forever, the sure Word of God." "Bless the Lord,

O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name."

"So let our lips and lives express
The Holy Gospel we profess;
So let our works and virtues shine,
To prove the doctrine all divine.
Thus shall we best proclaim abroad
The honors of our Saviour God,
When his salvation reigns within.
And grace subdues the power of sin."

TEACHING MISSIONS IN SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Into a needy world so full of promise for evangelization and into a church finally awakening to its supreme missionary obligation, comes the modern Sunday School, gathering in its vast membership the most responsive ages in life and holding in its possibilities the key to the missionary situation.

The place of the Sunday School in the missionary enterprise is in every way important. For in the Sunday School there is room for everyone, and by this method the plan of reaching the childhood of the race, we shall reach not only this present generation, but shall also reach all coming generations to the end of time.

The missionary education campaign in every Sunday School should be comprehensive enough to reach all ages and continuous enough to produce lasting impressions. It is a law of our being that we cannot be interested in that of which we know absolutely nothing. Interest in missions will be commensurate with our knowledge of and attitude toward the enterprise which lies closest to the heart of the Master. Material for missionary instruction is now abundant and of splendid educational value. For in missions we see God at work in the world right now, and the victories of the Cross and the transforming power of the Gospel are the most effective apologetics for divine origin of Christianity. To withhold knowledge of missions from the growing youth, is to them an injury.

How true it is that everything vital in all Christian enterprise hinges on prayer. The vision of the expanded Kingdom of God has always come to men on their knees. Yet in our day of activity we are learning almost everything except to pray, and prayer has almost come to be a "forgotten secret of the Christian church." Prayer is vital to genuine Christian living. There is, then, a large place for such instruction in prayer as shall discover for the members of the Sunday School the paths which lead to power, and to peace, through the mighty ministry of intercession. For the youth and the adult there ought to be careful and prayerful instructions in the privileges of Christian stewardship. Children should early be told all the uses to which their offerings are devoted. This teaching should be a definite part of the regular instruction in the Sunday School, and for the missionary offering there should be a weekly pledge offering from every scholar.

It is altogether true that we learn by doing. Therefore, to keep the missionary motive bright and to make permanent the missionary impression, an abundant provision must be made for the enlistment of all in special forms of practical missionary service. Youth especially needs training in missionary service and this always carries with it great rewards, for however much we may do for another, we really do far less for them than the doing of it does for us in the development of Christian character, and so binding the Sunday School into an aggressive force is provided the mightiest missionary agency on our continent.

THE UNHERALDED GUEST.

Ten years ago, in one of our principal cities a certain man started a crusade, a fight, single-handed and alone, to procure a three-cent fare for school children of his city. This man was, and is, one of the largest stockholders of the transit Company of his city. This man's plans and pleadings in behalf of the children, in behalf of the poor homes, as he so well termed it, went unheeded and unheard by his fellow stockholders. The public utility commission was against him. He took his case to the local press, but with so many interests and individuals to serve, the press either ignored or minimized his pleadings. Feeling that he had failed in this step, he willingly bought their space at $300.00 per page, and laid his pleadings before the public. The response of appreciation and cooperation was generous, and soon he had sentiment so strongly cemented in his favor that he became news for the reporters and his cause good material for the editorial writers.

One day I climbed a lengthy, dingy stairway to find this man's office that I might personally thank and congratulate him for his unselfish efforts in behalf of the poor and needy, and in behalf of education's cause. I found an extremely modest man, in a modest office, no pretentious furnishings, and nothing to indicate the modern business man. His one consuming thought seemed to be the other fellow.

The other day the three-cent fare for which he had so courageously fought was made effective, thus financially benefiting a large per cent of the more than 80,000 school children of his city. He had won. Clubs and business organizations proposed and planned a testimonial dinner in his honor and recognition of his achievements. He tendered his thanks but not his acceptance, saying in his formal answer that he preferred that any money available from public or private funds for a reception and dinner be used for children going to school without breakfast or without money to provide lunch.

Great men still live, but not always are their names heralded to the ends of the earth.

TIMOTHY THOMAS.

LOVE, THE MOTIVATING FORCE.

Amazement overwhelmed Mrs. Mkanya, the Zulu teacher of Rev. and Mrs. Kenneth C. Bunker, of Adams, Natal, South Africa, when she learned how much it costs to send missionaries from America.

"I never knew before how much money was involved in missionary work, but I have always known that love was the motivating force; the love of the American Board and the churches that contribute toward its support," said Mrs. Mkanya.

"It brought a lump to my throat, the quiet, tender way in which she spoke," adds Mrs. Bunker.

The Bunkers have been assigned to Unzombe, Mrs. Mkanya's old home.

"Blessed be those hills!" cried the Zulu teacher, overjoyed. "We knew that the Board would not forget us. We have prayed and prayed for a missionary, and you are the answer to our prayers."

"It gives one a solemn and awed feeling to be called an answer to prayer," ends Mrs. Bunker.—Missionary Herald.

The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance. In size, 3¾x4½ inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and pronouncing text. The edition on India paper is ideal, and we know of no better gift at the price than one in the finer bindings.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary

PRAYER.

Blessed Lord, to hearts that are fixed on the purpose and the power of thy love, how joyful is the way, how protected the path. O, loving Guide, who ledest thine own, shepherd thou every wandering life and bring all who know the strength of thine arm and the bliss of thy keeping to be truly devoted, with thee, to the mission of corraling souls for thine eternal haven both now and forevermore. Teach us that God's Kingdom may be accomplished even in this life. Amen. L.

THE FIRST GREAT COMMANDMENT.

Some in Jesus' day were in doubt. They went to Jesus and said: "Master, which is the Great Commandment?" Then the Master said: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy strength." Having said this, and without their questioning him, he added: "And there is a second like unto it"—not equal, nor superior, but "like unto it"—"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two Commandments hang the law and the prophets." (Matt. 22:37-40.)

One of the most subtle and dangerous doctrines of our day is that of making the second of these Commandments superior to the first. On all sides one hears that "service to man" is service to God, and that if we serve our fellowman, we serve God. Modern day "Humanisms" and atheistic Communism" have made the second of the Commandments supreme and left God out. We are hearing it said: "If you give a cup of cold water to drink, you shall not lose your reward," or, "If one has done a kindness to one of these little ones, one has done a kindness to God," all of which is the subtle philosophy of the "Humanists" who leave God out. Jesus himself never taught such doctrine, and never preached such practice. Always and everywhere he put God first, and man second.

Jesus did not say, nor anywhere teach, that one should have a reward for giving a cup of cold water to drink to a thirsty person. That would have substituted the human motive, and the love of the human, for the divine motive and the love of the divine. Our human love for our fellowman is not enough. Atheists, agnostics, who deny and revile God, make their mighty plea for "service to fellowman," and they do serve. The most wicked renegade of a community can make the same plea, and, when it pleases him, will practice his plea and give a cup of cold water to a thirsty human being, only to rob that human being if he sees fit. Jesus always put God first and foremost, and so in the much misquoted Scriptures, Jesus himself said: "Whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily, I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward." But our humanists and those who substitute the second Commandment for the first, in every instance, leave out the essential words, "In the name of a disciple." See Matthew 10:42.) Or to make the matter even stronger as Jesus did after his transfiguration (Mark 9:41): "For whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward." Now in this and in all similar Scriptures, Christ makes it clear that the motive behind our conduct must be that of love of God, love that comes from God, love that is of the essence of God. Human love is not enough. We may love a human being today enough to give him a hand-out or a help, and that human being may deceive us, and we want to kick him tomorrow.

The motivating power must be more than human, that which moves us must be love divine.

And this is necessary because there is a Bread of Life that cometh from heaven, as well as the bread for the body that cometh from the earth.

In our present time, we are turning here and there to help the poor and the needy, and this is well. We need to help each other. But there is a need greater than that of the body, viz., the need of the soul. There is a need that is more than human, and that need is divine.

Our Lord suffered and does suffer, because of a sinning world. If we would help relieve him of his suffering, we shall have to do as the woman at Bethany did—pour out a love-offering of devotion, sacrifice and service, on his head, solely in his name and for his glory. It is not our human love that is sufficient to save; divine love only can do that. We are helping in the divine task of giving the Bread of Life to hungry souls, when we make an offering to Missions, pray for Missions, and help the missionary task.

This one task marks the difference between the church and all other institutions, also between the true Christian and the humanist. Our Lord instituted Missions and committed to the church the carrying on of that divine work in his name and for his sake. To this end and for this purpose, he founded the church, and the only avenue of growth to a church is through its missionary enterprise. Just as evangelism—te delivery in person of the Evangel at home—stirs, inspires and saves the local congregation, Missions—the sending of the message and the building of churches, where churches do not exist—stirs, inspires and saves the souls of others and enlarges the borders of the kingdom of our Lord. Through Missions the church is undertaking to increase its numbers, its prestige and its power for righteousness in the glorious work of building the kingdom of heaven on earth. In all works of benevolence, fraternal orders, friendly societies and benevolent movements will help in the good work of relieving the body and caring for the material wants of man. So also will the humanists. The church alone, however, undertakes to heed the cry and the command of our Lord to give the gospel, the saving gospel of his life and love to those who are perishing without it. Unless the church does this, it will never be done, since the church alone undertakes this task.

In the missionary work we are but emphasizing the fact that our Lord preached, "This is the first and great commandment." Missions puts God first and keeps him there, since it is his love, and not our human love, we are trying through Missions to share with others.

It is easy now, when the calls for help of the needy and the unemployed about us is so clamorous and insistent—it is easy now to ignore the call of those in need of food for the soul—the Bread of Life. Surely, while honoring the second commandment of service for physical relief, we will not forget the First and Great Commandment, that of love of our Lord, with all our soul and seeking, through this love for him, to give his soul-saving message to the perishing souls of men and women at home and abroad.

THE CHURCH IN THE COMMUNITY.

"BARRIERS BETWEEN SOCIAL CLASSES."

(Prepared by Mrs. Charles E. Reidt, in The Missionary Herald):

Leader—

All are architects of Fate,
Working in these walls of Time;
Some with massive deeds and great,
Some with ornaments of rhyme.
Nothing useless is or low;
Each thing in its place is best;
And what seems but idle show
Strengthens and supports the rest.

—Longfellow.

Today we are to think of ways by which we may relieve any strained relations that may arise between groups in any church because of different occupational or economic status. We hope we may come to realize with Emerson:

"All are needed by the rest,
Nothing is good or fair alone."

Hymn—"Teach Us, O Lord, True Brotherhood."
Leader—Paul teaches that we are one "Body," working together harmoniously. (Read Romans 12:1-18.)

Solo—"Take My Life and Let It Be."

Prayer—For new life in the church (No. 60, p. 23, in "A Book of Prayers," by the Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life).

Leader—In the Bad Lands of South Dakota rise vari-colored pinnacles of clay and rock, sculptured and colored by the hand of God in nature to so resemble beautiful cathedrals that the human spirit pauses to worship the God he loves. We pause but do not tarry, for these great cathedral spaces are silent and still.

No human beings work and worship there. The buildings are not our churches, but the group of people working and worshipping together for the common good of mankind and the glory of God. In any church body, there are various members all with many and varied tasks, yet:

"All are needed by the rest
Nothing is good or fair alone."

So, today, we are having people of various occupations and professions give us their story as to their contributions to our community and church life so that we may really feel that we are brothers in one great task (Secure, some time ahead, representatives from various occupations and professions suggested below. Instruct them to briefly state the importance of their tasks to the community and to their particular church. Take all these people from your own church group, if possible. Impress on each speaker that the real value of his or her talk is to create a strong feeling of kinship or oneness between himself and the other church or group members. His task, like theirs, be what it may, is honorable if it serves his fellowmen and glorifies his heavenly Father.)

Architect—(His plans determine beauty, comfort and future usefulness of our buildings.)

Carpenter, Mason or Painter—(Show the real skill they need to carry out above plans and that careful execution of details produces the comfort and beauty we all desire.)

Banker—(Dealing with finances in a sympathetic way makes possible our various activities.)

Engineers and Electricians—(Upon them depend our light, heat and ventilation, producing or aiding health.)

Artist—(Brings joy to life by reproducing nature and life for us.)

Gardener—(Artist of the soil, producing our food to sustain life.)

Teachers—(Great contribution to the life of our country through our children.)

Superintendent of Buildings—(Lack of proper heat, ventilation and comfortable rooms greatly hinder teachers' work.)

Musicians—(Inspiration of their music; the organist and singers can make a service.)

Janitor—(Can mar the inspiration of music and the sermon if he fires furnace at the wrong time or allows noisy doors to be heard.)

Farmers and Business Men—(Show their interdependence upon each other and their great service to all people.)

Social Worker and Doctor—(Reveal their ministrations to body and mind alike.)

Women—(Who do day labor in the homes.)

Minister—(His service depends upon the service of all his parishioners, their consideration of and their cooperation with one another. He needs all from all walks of life to uphold his hands as he ministers unto them.) (Lawyers, city officials, members of various charitable or educational boards, etc., may be included.)

Leader—(Repeat the two opening stanzas from Longfellow's "The Builders.")

Hymn—"Blest Be the Tie that Binds."

Prayer—"Grant, Lord, that what we have said with our lips, we may believe in our hearts, and practice in our lives; and of thy mercy keep us faithful unto the end, through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Amen.

FROM JAPAN.

Dear Bro. Atkinson:

Thanks for your very kind and appreciative letter of November 30th

Have you heard the story of the Negro who said to his wife: "Sarah Ann, what do dem white folks mean when dey uses dat big word propa-ganda?"

"I 'splains dat to you Sambo," she says. "You knows I lost my first man, and den I marries you. Well, when we marries I was de proper goose and you was de proper gander."

Some of us feel that the published report of the Laymen's Appraisal Committee is what the old lady said when she put the witness on the stand.

The fatal blunder of the report to my mind is the fact that in its modernistic spirit it leaves out evangelism altogether. Kagawa, considered the greatest spiritual leader in Japan, calls it "nonsense." A very successful Canadian missionary writes to me and says, "Why do you suppose that the committee in recommending the sending out of experts, left out altogether the necessity of sending out evangelistic missionaries?" Another of the missionaries says, "So far as the recommendations of the report are concerned, there is not one that we have not been working on for years." Did somebody say that Dean Brown called it "old stuff?" "It surely am."

There seems to be an idea in the minds of the Committee that they can revolutionize the work of Japan by sending out a few superman experts. I remember one such man who came out a few years ago. He had majored in Hebrew and Sanscrit and came to Japan with big ideas. But when he reached Japan, he found that the students he had to teach could not understand his English! Japan was not the field of glory he thought it was, and after a stay of about two years, he departed without much loss to Japan. When men like John R. Mott come to Japan, the Japanese listen to their spiritual addresses with deep appreciation. But any man who comes to Japan with the idea that he can, by his advice, overturn what the missionaries and Japanese have built up in more than half a century, is deceived. It simply can't be done. But if a man comes to Japan with his superior ideas and humbly gets down in the trenches and digs—a man who shows the superiority of his methods by his achievements—the Japanese would take him to their hearts. Anybody can give advice, but with forty years' of experience I have seen the futility of it. We want men of the Christ-likeness, men whose hearts overflow with the spirit of the gospel and a deep love for souls, a man who is able to forget himself in the love for his work, a man who can get down and dig; he is the man for this field—and, I trow, for every other.

Mrs. Harper Sibley of the Appraisal Committee, says: "By this report we have taken missions away from the sentimentals and we have rescued missions from the dust-pile where the colleges tried to put them, and we have placed missions at the forefront of the modern world movements making for a better world." (Christian Century, November 20th.) I do not know the dear lady, but if you can judge what is in a barn by looking through a knot-hole, I guess that the lady has a super-abundance of conceit. The work on the foreign field is not a dust-pile by any means. Anybody who has reached that conclusion is an ignoramus. Anybody who says the colleges have put missions on a dust-pile doesn't know even the surface of mission facts. Is Mrs. Sibley the spokesman for the members of the Commission? O tempora, O mores! The report smells to me a good deal of "proper gander."

The report comes down rather hard on the ladies who seem to lack "vision." Vision, of course, means that the supposed findings of the higher criticism have been accepted. There are several of us who do not accept modernism, and we are foolish enough to think we can see as deeply into a grindstone as anybody else, provided there is a hole in it. I have known personally quite a good many of these unfortunate women, and for zeal and success, for self-sacrifice and consecration, for the esteem in which they are held by the Japanese, no men missionaries I know are their superiors. One of these ladies lived out in the country, where she did not see a white face for months. She was greatly loved.

As to the need of American trained leaders, does the Committee know that in Japan, at least, there is a host of Japanese who have all the learning of the American schools and who are now teaching, preaching and are just as much leaders as mission boards can send out? Perhaps I ought to say that one of the young men who studied modernism in a distinguished American college, came back and told me that the modernism he studied in America would not work, and he had jettisoned the whole cargo. Another student came back and among other accomplishments he learned in a distinguished school was to smoke, and a smoking preacher in Japan is looked upon as having weak brains.

Among the people who do an immense amount of successful work in Japan are the Salvation Army people. I do not know of any great scholars among them, but we have had very intimate association with numbers of their men and women. They are keenly spiritual. They have a very deep reverence for the Word of God, and love it and preach it. In my judgment, there are no missionaries who do better work in extending the kingdom of God in this land. For it is just as true today as it was of old that "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." According to the Committee, I suppose that neither Jesus nor his disciples would measure up to the standard of fitness proposed by the Committee, notwithstanding they turned the world upside down, and continue to do it. More "proper gander."

It seems to be the idea of the Committee that the missionary should admit the religions of the Far East to an equality with Christianity. Let me give you a specimen of practical Buddhism. The head of the Salvation Army, Mr. Gumpei Yamamuro, says the son of a country farmer came to Tokio to study, fell in with evil companions, and was riotously wasting his father's money. The father came to Tokio to the famous Kannon Temple to pray to the goddess of mercy for his son. He threw the money into the big box, rang the bell and prayed thus: "O Kannon-sama, save my boy from his wicked associates and send him safe home back to me." He went away, and a brothel keeper came to pray. He likewise throws money into the box, rings the bell to gain attention of the goddess, and this is his prayer: "O Kannon-sama, this month I want to make fifteen hundred yen at my place of business. Send many rich young men to my house, and if I make fifteen hundred yen, I will have a big lantern made and I will dedicate it to you." He also departs. This is simply to show that these religions do not necessarily make for character.

J. O., you remember Sano, who graduated at U. C. C. in the time of Dr. D. A. Long, and afterwards studied under Dr. White in New York. Some time ago I said to him: "What use do you make of Buddhism in your religious work?" His answer was: "I have no time to make use of Buddhism whatever. I preach Jesus Christ, the mighty Saviour. If Buddhists hear my sermons and want to make comparisons between the gospel and Buddhism, they may do so. As for me, I am surrendered to Jesus Christ, body, soul and spirit." As a preacher and soul-winner, Sano is a great success. In all my stay in Japan, I have never had a case in personal work when all I know of Buddhism would have been of any help.

This leads me to say that some think we have passed the days of dogma in our preaching. If you aim to create in people the Christ-like life, it is necessary to teach some doctrines about him, and this is dogma. Even if you preach Unitarianism, you can't get away from dogma. I am glad that, in regard to Jesus Christ, we have such glorious dogmas to teach.

Now don't you think my letter is long enough? Sometimes I convince my friends that I am still sane by showing them that I still have terminal facilities. Good-bye and blessings on you and yours.

WHAT ARE YOU DOING WITH YOUR SMALL CHANGE?

If you feel that your small change does not work hard enough, keep it busy on the missionary budget.

Ten Cents—Buys two packages of chewing gum; buys a chocolate bar—or pays the salary of a Congo teacher in a girls' school for three days; provides a meal of rice and curry for six girls in an Indian school; buys clean straw for 40 mattresses in a girls' dormitory in West China.

Twenty-five Cents—Buys a nut sundae; buys a bottle of ginger ale—or maintains a bed for a day in the hospital at Mellore, South India; supports two children for a day in an orphanage in Assam or Bengal; pays the salary of a teacher in a school in Assam, Bengal, or China for a day.

Fifty Cents—Buys one ticket to a movie; pays one taxi fare—or employs a graduate nurse in a hospital in South China for one day; buys gasoline to run a hospital automobile for 35 miles in India; makes it possible for a woman to attend a short term Bible school in West China for a month.

Seventy-five Cents—Buys one golf ball; buys a pound of chocolates—or pays the salary of an Assamese woman doctor in the Gauhati Hospital for one day; buys a term's supply of oil for the lamps at an evening school for women in West China; supports a bed in a South China hospital for two days.

One Dollar—Buys one powder compact; pays for one finger wave—or pays the salary of a principal in a large school for Chinese girls for a day; buys a sari, chemise and blouse for an orphan girl in a mission school in South India; supports a trained kindergarten teacher or Bible woman for a day in Japan.—Reprinted from the Sunday School Herald.

"LET'S STARVE THE PREACHERS."

There is a very interesting article in a current issue of Church Business on the above topic. The author quotes Bishop Cooke as follows:

"If I had determined to destroy the Church of God, I would starve the preachers. Starve men of brains! I would make it impossible for real men to serve God and humanity by starving them out."

The writer makes some interesting comments of his own. Here is a paragraph:

"We church members are starving the minister, but we are only doing the job half-way fashion. We do give him enough to eat—we merely take from him his self-respect, his initiative, and his chance to broaden mentally, by reducing him to a pittance that will just provide the physical necessities of life."

One wonders if church people today are thinking seriously about what is happening in the church, when salaries are reduced beyond a reasonable living wage and then even that amount is not paid. Most ministers are real Christians and never make a plea that appears to be selfish. They are willing to sacrifice and do it gladly. Sometimes this sacrifice is paid for at a high price by the people whom these under-paid ministers serve.

It sometimes happens that business men use a great deal of skill in the collection of funds for themselves and for organizations with which they are connected, but use little time or energy

(so far as the preacher can tell) in collecting funds for the payment of church obligations. This kind of thing breaks down the courage and enthusiasm, if not the faith, of the man who is seriously trying to serve the church.

Let me urge you who read this to discover for yourselves what is happening to your pastor. It may be that you can render a fine Christian service by collecting money which is long since due to the man who is serving your church without even raising his voice concerning what the church owes to him for his services.

IS THIS THE TIME?

Is this the time, O Church of Christ, to sound retreat?
To arm with weapon cheap and blunt
The men and women who have borne the brunt
Of truth's fierce strife, and nobly held their ground?
Is this the time to halt, when all around
Horizons lift, new destinies confront,
Stern duties wait our nation, never wont
To play the laggard, when God's will was found.
No! Rather, strengthen stake and lengthen cords,
Enlarge thy plans and gifts, O, thou elect,
And to thy kingdom come for such a time!
The earth, with all its fullness, is the Lord's,
Great things attempt for him, great things expect,
Whose love imperial is, whose power sublime.

Prayer Thoughts.

"Almighty and everlasting God, be thou present with us in all our duties, and grant the protection of thy presence to all that dwell in this house, that thou mayest be known to be the Defender of this household and the Inhabitant of this dwelling, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen." (Prayer of the Early Church, A. D. 494.)

"O God, our Saviour, who didst deign to enter under the roof of Zaccheus, unto the salvation of the same and of all who were in the house; do thou, the same Lord, keep safe also from all harm those who have now desired to dwell here—blessing this their dwelling, and preserving their lives free from aspersion. Amen." (Holy Orthodox Apostolic Church prayer.)

Modern civilization is built on the basis of the home. Parents and children constitute a family. Success in the home life is more important than any other kind of success, for out of the home comes the faith and courage needed in all phases of life, or the disappointment and tragedy which leads to defeat in business and social realms.

From the earliest times, families have consisted of one man and one woman with their children. In some areas of the earth this is not true, but in most areas it is true, and seems to be based on the original plan of the Creator who sees to it that there are approximately the same number of men and women in the world, unless they, through war or some other way, destroy a large number of men or women. In our beloved America divorce is destroying, so I am told, one out of every six marriages. This is pathetic.

The finest dream that ever comes to a pure heart is the dream of a home with a pure companion. For this dream to end in a divorce court, or in a quarrelsome, doubting home life, is a tragedy which no individual can completely overcome. This is one of the modern problems which young people must seek to solve.

The best time to solve this problem is when planning for the future home. Physical, mental, social, and spiritual characteristics of the two parties entering into the contract should be sufficiently alike, and attractive to each other, to make possible mutual understanding, abiding confidence and love, or else there should be no marriage. It is said that many young people today marry in haste, and repent in leisure, without considering that the only reason for marriage is love.

Intelligent people who anticipate business partnership, consider carefully all angles of the business which they anticipate engaging in together, and the qualifications of each partner to help make a success of the business. The greatest contract any person has ever entered into, the greatest human partnership, is called marriage. It, therefore, seems reasonable that the contracting parties should consider carefully every phase of this partnership, and be reasonably sure that there is chance for success before they ever say, "Until death do us part."

This Christian Endeavor meeting gives a good opportunity for young people to think together concerning the traits that may be desirable in a life partner, and those that may be undesirable. To consider such things as money, vocations and religion in the marriage relationship. Above all things, be sure that the discussion is on a high and serious plane, for this is a very important topic.

HAPPY HOME.

O happy home, where thou art loved the dearest,
Thou loving Friend, the Saviour of our race,
And where among the guests there never cometh
One who can hold such high and honored place.

O happy home, where each one serves thee, lowly,
Whatever his appointed work may be,
Till every common task seems great and holy,
When it is done, O Lord, as unto thee.

O happy home, where thou art not forgotten
When joy is overflowing, full, and free:
O happy home, where every wounded spirit
Is brought, Physician, Comforter, to thee.

THE MISSIONARY APPRECIATED.

In a release from the headquarters of the China Famine Relief Committee, great praise is given the work of the missionaries who are aiding in the flood and famine stricken areas. Many workers have contracted typhus and 20 from the United States and Europe have died of the virulent disease. Many men, women and children are alive today in China, says Dr. David A. Brown, who, but for the work of these missionaries and the generous assistance from the people of America would have perished from hunger. Referring to the rehabilitation program now being carried on in China, Dr. Brown says that a spade is being substituted for a free rice bowl, a job for a dole, and a credit for a hand-out. As a result several hundred miles of motor highways are being built and important irrigation projects have been completed. In road-building projects the missionaries have again been of tremendous aid.

JESUS TEACHING BY PARABLES—GROWTH OF THE KINGDOM.

YESSON VIII—FEBRUARY 19, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "The earth shall be full of the knowledge of Jehovah, as the waters cover the sea."—Isaiah 11:9.

LESSON TEXT: Mark 4:31-34.

The first part of today's lesson is made up of isolated sayings, probably in proverbial form, and capable of other applications, but in this particular case applying to teaching in parables and in the interpretation thereof.

For instance, the reference to the candle being brought to be put not under a bushel or under a bed, but on a candlestick, applies to the inner meaning or the light of the Gospel which was to be manifested or shown by the disciples. In other words, it is the business of those of us who understand the Gospel to help others to understand. We are to let our lights shine. Just as the seed is sown everywhere we are to let our light shine everywhere. This saying has passed over into the English proverb of "Hiding one's light under a bushel," the meaning of which is well known.

Or, again, when Jesus says, "For there is nothing hid which shall not be manifested, neither was anything kept secret but that it should come abroad," he is referring to the inner truth of his parabolic teaching. He is saying in effect that "the truth is not wrapped in parables in order that unsympathetic hearers should never see or understand it, but that in the end they should become sympathetic and understand it. Things which are precious are hidden to prevent them from being misappropriated or misused." But his words have a wider application and contain an abiding truth. The hidden things of life eventually are made manifest. The sin in a man's heart sooner or later is made manifest. And certainly in the great day of judgment all the secret things shall be declared. And, of course, the principle applies to good as well as evil. Even though we are misunderstood, if there is good in us it will eventually be made manifest.

Once more the words, "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured unto you, and unto you that hear shall more be given," refer specifically to the parables in point. He who has a desire to hear and to understand, and he who hears, that is, he who gives attention and listens, will hear. In proportion to his sincerity and his earnestness a man will hear and understand the truth. And the reward of "hearing" or giving attention will be the enlarged capacity to hear and to understand more fully. But, of course, this principle applies to every phase of life, and was announced by Jesus in another proverbial saying which has become classic, the interpretation of which is given under the following heading:

Using or Losing.

"For he that hath shall be given; and he that hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he hath." This is one of life's fundamental laws that find application in every realm of life. If we do not use what we have we will lose what we have. The way to possess—that is what the word "hath" really means—is to use. If you have some of anything and wish more, use what you already have. If you have some money and want more money, you must use what money you already have. If you have muscle and want more muscle, use what muscle you already have. If you have some memory, and wish a better memory, use what memory you already have. If you have some truth and want more truth, use what truth you have, by acting upon and living up to it. A classic illustration of the truth that if we do not use we shall lose, is Darwin's testimony that because he had given himself wholly to scientific studies, he had lost the power to appreciate music and poetry. To him that hath, that is to him that useth what he hath, shall more be given. To him that hath not, that is to him that useth not what he hath, shall be taken away even such as he hath.

God Giveth the Increase.

The parable of the man who sowed seed and then slept and rose night and day and found that the seed sprang up and grew, he knew not how, teaches the human and divine phases of the kingdom. It is our business to sow the seed and to cultivate the growing plants. But it is God who giveth the increase. And in ways that we cannot understand and often cannot even see, the kingdom of God grows. It is a gradual, an evolutionary process, using the word "evolution" in a good sense. "First the blade, then the ear, then the full-grown corn in the ear." A man does not become a full-grown Christian all at once. The principles of the kingdom will not be applied to every phase of life all at once. We are to do our part. We may be sure that God will do his part.

Despise Not the Day of Small Things.

The parable of the mustard seed shows how the kingdom grows from small beginnings and becomes a mighty and all-inclusive thing. "A grain of mustard seed, the smallest of seeds—the greatest of herbs when it is grown"—the kingdom is like unto this. In fact the seed of the kingdom was in the heart of Jesus Christ, a single figure in an obscure province of a hated race. But from this small beginning it has grown until his spirit and his principles have become increasingly applied to every phase of life, and the end is not yet. Eventually the kingdom which found its original place in his heart shall include the kingdoms of this world and every phase of life.

The moral of it all ought to be clear. We are to sow the seed. Some of it will fall on good ground, and it will spring up and grow. And because of its inherent life, it will eventually redeem the world. It is for us to be faithful sowers of the seed.

GLEE CLUB TO VISIT VIRGINIA CHURCHES

Arrangements have been completed for the Elon College Glee Club to make a limited trip through Eastern Virginia. The Glee Club will be accompanied by Professor Steere, head of the Music Department, Miss Helen Chamblee, voice teacher, and President L. E. Smith and wife. The program will include Franklin, Thursday, February 23rd; Suffolk, Alumni Banquet, February 24th; Holland, the evening of February 25th; Suffolk, the morning church service; South Norfolk, at 3:30 P. M., and the Christian Temple at 8 P. M., Sunday, February 26th. Possibly Waverly or Wakefield on Monday evening.

This trip of the Glee Club will be purely in the interest of the college to demonstrate to the public something of the work that we are doing here in our Music Department. There will be between twenty-five and thirty members of the Club in the party. All in reach of these points are cordially invited to attend. There will be no charge or any offering for the college, but there will be given the opportunity for those who wish to take memberships in the Dollar-a-Month Club. It is hoped that this visit may result in a considerable increase in the membership of the Club.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

"The opening of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."—Psalm 119:130.

IT PAYS TO SERVE JESUS.

MONDAY.

A CALL TO WORSHIP.

"Put off thy shoes from thy feet, for the place where thou standest is holy ground."—Acts 7:33.

Be silent, be silent,
A whisper is heard;
Be silent, and listen,
O treasure each word,

Be silent, be silent,
For holy this place;
This altar that echoes
The message of grace.

Be silent, be silent,
Breathe humbly our prayer;
A foretaste of Eden
This moment we share.

Be silent, be silent,
His mercy record,
Be silent, be silent,
And wait on the Lord.

Tread softly, tread softly,
The Master is here.
Tread softly, tread softly,
He bids us draw near.

—W. H. Doane.

Prayer—Our Father, help us to begin this day aright, and with a consuming desire to spend the days of the week in the fullness of love. Show what the best things are—a sunny temper, a firm faith in eternal goodness, and a reassurance of thy power to overcome evil.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

"Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."—I. Tim. 4:8.

The service of Jesus true pleasure affords,
In him there is joy without an alloy;
'Tis heaven to trust him and rest on his words:
It pays to serve Jesus each day.

It pays to serve Jesus what'er may betide,
It pays to be true what'er you may do;
'Tis riches of mercy in him to abide;
It pays to serve Jesus each day.

Tho' sometimes the shadows may hang o'er the way,
And sorrows may come to beckon us home,
Our precious Redeemer each toil will repay;
It pays to serve Jesus each day.

It pays to serve Jesus, it pays ev'ry day,
It pays ev'ry step of the way;
Tho' the pathway to glory may sometimes be drear,
You'll be happy each step of the way.

—Frank C. Huston.

Prayer—Our Father, we pray for the power to summon all our energies against the things that are wrong and cast us down, and may we have courage and confidence and steadfastness of heart over evils great and small, to win. Forgive us our sins and enable us to lead a clean and upright life.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

REALITY OF GODLINESS.

"Draw nigh unto God and he will draw nigh unto you."—Jas. 4:8.

What is godliness? How can I realize it? Godliness is godlikeness—a character that is loving, helpful, beyond reproach, and inspiring to heavenly ends. Such a character we see in our Lord Jesus Christ.

We cannot attain this character without knowing him and fellowshiping him. If we would know somebody, we lose no time in cultivating their fellowship and communion. This is necessary to knowing them.

If we are to know Jesus and be like him, we must lose no opportunity to be with him. He is found in meditation, his Word, at devotions, at his church, in the sacraments, in prayers, and in service to humanity.

Prayer—O Lord, our God, give unto us daily a fresh baptism of thy love and a realization of thy divine help, that we may accomplish the miracle of newness of life as it is inspired by our Lord Jesus Christ.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

GODLINESS THE END OF LIFE.

"He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works shall he do; because I go to my Father."—Jno. 14:22.

"Herein is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit."—Jno. 15:8.

We cannot follow the Gospels through without understanding that godliness is the objective of life; and just as righteousness springs from recognition of right, so godliness springs from recognition of God. All lessons of life lead up to this, and until this lesson is learned, all others must remain incomplete.

Man is not called upon to establish an inner harmony within himself, nor to make his soul calm, serene and sober merely; nor is it intended that he should abstain from violence and wrong merely; yea, to do his duty toward others and cultivate the exercise of benevolence. The true end of man is in the development of the highest spiritual faculties of his nature and in the concentration of life's actions upon the proper object. That object is God. This concentration is the habit of godliness.

It is obeying his Word, which says: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul and with all thy mind."

Prayer—May each of us do our best, our Lord, to know and to show love, and begin and live each day for God.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

ONLY HE.

"Ye cannot bear fruit except ye abide in me."
Jno. 15:4.

Only the man who lives in habitual communion with God, earnestly relying on him and his grace, is able in any worthy manner to realize the glories of godliness. One would as soon build a farm in the middle of a swamp and expect a rich harvest, as attempt to produce in the waste of our baser selves the godly fruits of righteous living, without first establishing a living relation with the living God.

This is what we are called upon to do today as we go about our tasks, remembering that godliness must cover the whole life.

"Present your bodies a living sacrifice . . ."

Prayer—O Lord, our Lord, who art able to make of us anything we will, make us willing, keep before us this day thy truth, thy life, and thy way, that we may live acceptably in thy sight.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

HEAVEN BENT.

"Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall see God."—Matt. 5:8.

It is not heaven alone,
Which godliness attains;
It makes as much its own
The best of the world's gain.

From godliness there flows
A current content;
And ill to blessing grows,
By thought of blessing meant.

It keeps the mind from wrong
And so a peace secure;
It keeps the body strong,
Because it keeps it pure.

And thus a double bliss
To godliness pertains:
The world which present is,
And that it comes again:
The earthly good is heaven begun;
The promise rolls the two in one.

—Lord Kinloch.

Prayer—Dear Lord, as food to the body, we pray thou to be food to our souls, enable us to do our work without pain, without fear, and without murmuring. Make our bodies the dwelling of love, and the highest and best things, and may we put our bodies to pure and undefiled uses. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

MY PRAYER.

"I am the way, the truth and the life."—Jno. 14:6.

If the way be rough with thorns and stones,
May faith provide a balm
To soothe my weary, bleeding feet,
And fill my soul with calm.

And if the road be very long,
Still may there always be
The light of home to lead me on Through all adversity.

Although the path be narrow
And men jostle me at will;
I pray that love may warm my heart
And help me up the hill.

—Luch Corruith.

THE VALUE OF THE CHURCH PAPER.

(A statement officially adopted by the recent Quadrennial Meeting of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.):

The Federal Council of Churches deplores the fact that, despite the high character of most of our church papers, the local church and the Christian home make but meager use of them.

We have failed to emphasize sufficiently the necessity for religious reading in the homes of our people. The great mass of our people are getting their views of life and of the supreme problems of our time, not from the church press but from secular journals, scenarios and commercialized radio broadcasts. The loss in subscriptions has brought some of our most honored journals into financial distress and has greatly restricted their influence for good in the churches.

It is the conviction of the Federal Council that in the years which lie ahead the greatest possible emphasis should be placed on developing an intelligent and informed church membership, sufficiently interested in religion to read the publications of the church as a means of learning what the churches are doing and ought to do, and of securing a Christian point of view on all questions seriously affecting human life.

We recommend that our constituent bodies be urged to use the most effective means possible to promote in the congregations the ideal of "a church paper in every Christian home," and also to inspire the faithful reading of the same.

A New York chief of police says that three-fourths of the abandoned girls of New York were ruined by dancing. A Denver minister is reported to have said that there is no wrong in swearing, dancing, smoking and "stepping out a little," if one does not think they are wrong. The policeman did not profess to be a Christian, the minister, we suppose did.—Gospel Minister

HOW CAN WE WIN THE MINISTRY TO AN ENLARGED PROMOTION OF STEWARDSHIP?

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

(Delivered before United Stewardship Council of the United States and Canada, at Indianapolis, Ind.)

You ask a minister to tell you how to win the ministry. That is a commendable step in itself. You assume that you have the task of getting pastors sold on the promotion of stewardship. One of the first things you wish to have in mind, and I know you do, is not to assume that you are sold while they aren't—therefore, you are holier than they. As soon as you let the human animal know you are trying to catch him the harder becomes your task of catching him. In every way possible we must keep the pastor from feeling that on this point, or any other point, we are in anyway superior to him. He tries to feel all the time that people look up to him, and therefore he has developed a complex over which it will be hard for you to come, if you make him feel that you think he is mistaken in not promoting the message. Start with the general assumption that the minister is God's man, and that for God he is working quite well. Begin with him where he is. He surely is presenting the stewardship message in some way—our subject implies that—and by beginning with him with what he is already doing, you can lead him out to larger activities. You have made a special study of this message. You have a special stewardship of the stewardship message, covet to be wise as serpents and harmless as doves in exercising it in order that there be no cleavage between expert and mere pastor.

But you wanted some definite suggestion, not a scolding. I do not claim that there is any connection, or sequence, in these five brief suggestions. They are intended as suggestive only.

1. Develop for pastors a pastor's literature on "How to Do It."—Brief, concrete examples of enlarged promotion of stewardship to congregations by pastors and their people; told in the language of the pastor as he approaches his people; and setting forth what actually happens.

Many denominations would perhaps find it more effective if all who wrote for such a volume would be pastors of churches in a particular denomination. Many pastors have already been asked to write such literature, and many leaflets have been written by them, but handy books, edited by yourselves, and with additional helps would be valuable. Perhaps volumes of such mechanical make-up as are published for 15c by Kirby Page and Sherwood Eddy would be something of what I have in mind. At any rate a larger development of literature from pastor's pens along this line is suggested.

Under this literature discussion I wish further to suggest that a booklet, book, or pamphlet, well prepared either by some pastor, Sunday School superintendent, or teacher on "The Sunday School Teacher and the Every-Member Canvass" would be helpful. It is going to be easier to get the pastor to enlarge his promotion of the stewardship message when we get a larger number of the lay-workers of his local church themselves interested in teaching, preaching, and practicing stewardship. As a pastor I see this need and have selected at times courses already published suitable (these courses should be improved, and within a more definite purpose) to teach in every class, beginning with juniors, up through the entire school. A six weeks' course in every Sunday School in America just before the every-member canvass would re-awaken our churches, both as to finances and attendance. I made a suggestion like that sometime ago in a general church group and the several pastors present wanted just such a course.

2. Get pastors to present stewardship to pastors in pastors' meetings, conferences and conventions. Some of the finest work I know of along the line of stewardship promotion has been done by experts who put the pastors forward in the presentation of the message they themselves wished presented. It is generalship of the highest order. Economic conditions do not seem to warrant such, but as soon as it is possible, the bringing of a goodly number of pastors to just such a meeting as this, and the paying of pastors' expenses to strategic conferences and conventions whenever they present stewardship messages—or any other messages of major importance. I once knew a secretary who asked a pastor to attend a meeting for him, which made the pastor an enthusiast for the Federal Council of Churches as long as he lived—and the secretary's interest was not one whit lessened. This idea of getting pastors to present stewardship to pastors is the same as getting Chinese to present Christianity to Chinese. We experts may easily pack our bookshelves with stewardship books to be reviewed—we study them, think in terms of them, live them, practice them until we are so full of their message that our public utterances tend toward them until often times we are accused of knowing nothing but stewardship, but "stewed in steward" is the secret code!

3. Seek to find the pastors who are already presenting stewardship in an enlarged way, and encourage them.—One might say the pastors who are properly presenting stewardship are holding down the big pulpits—and even so, only a tiny portion of the people ever hear them preach or know anything about their work. But there are hundreds of pastors alive to the stewardship message, and in uninspiring places they are making a success of getting people to share in promoting the Kingdom of God. Magnify their number; encourage their work; study their records; and give them some sort of recognition. If a dog does a good piece of work in the city of Dayton, the people know about it. Some sort of a committee, like the Hall of Fame committee, might help to popularize business of pastors properly presenting stewardship in their local churches. This should be very informal and casual, but helpful wherever worthy recognition could be appropriately given.

4. Consider well the sources from which stewardship teaching should flow.—I remember when I was in college, I studied for one semester in a course called "Bible V. Modern Church Finance," by Dr. Albert F. McGarrah, which was ably taught by William A. Harper, now of Vanderbilt University. I have been interested ever since. I met one of my classmates last summer. He is a business man. He took the same course. He is a leading churchman in Winston-Salem, a standard-setter in giving, and a man of great usefulness. Later I went to one of the oldest, and I think one of the best seminaries in the country. There was not a specific course in stewardship while I was there. So much work has to be done of pure necessity after the minister comes out of seminary, by you experts, that it puts the thing out of balance and proportion. So then I suggest that if you would win pastors to an enlarged promotion of stewardship that you cause them to hear that message taught in their seminary training, yea, in their summer camps, summer schools for young people, and as children in their church schools. Further, that libraries, church papers, convention programs, etc., be induced to make a real worthy place for the message of stewardship. I would not suggest the change of the name of stewardship, but I would often modify its presentation.

5. Keep up the great work you are now doing. I thank God for this Council; for the work you have done, and are doing; for the literature you have developed, and the books you have written, and had written; for the scores of pastors who have been blessed by the fellowship and encouragement emanating from this Council as such, and more still from the fine Christian statesmen that make up its body. Keep up the great work you are doing.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Don't you want to help the Christian Orphanage get some kind of refrigeration for its buildings this summer? We have a proposition to pay for it with Octagon soap wrappers. If we can get 75,000 we can put the deal across. We already have 6,000 on hand, and just lack 75,000 more to get it. I want to ask the good women in each Sunday School to ask all the women to bring them to Sunday School, and get them together and mail them in. We would like to get enough by April 1st to make possible the purchase.

It will be a saving in ice bills and be more sanitary to handle our food. The Orphanage does not have money to make the purchase, and as every little child can join in this undertaking by collecting soap wrappers, we believe it can be easily done. Let us divide the task up by Conferences, as follows:

Eastern Virginia Conference.....	15,000
Valley Virginia Conference.....	5,000
Western North Carolina Conference..	15,000
Eastern North Carolina Conference...	15,000
Georgia and Alabama Conference....	5,000
Alabama Conference	5,000
North Carolina and Virginia Conf....	15,000

Total75,000

Let us see which Conference will get its quota first.

We are going to present to the secretary of the Sunday School sending in the largest number by April 1st, a nice gold pencil to write the Sunday School records with. In mailing in your coupons be sure to give name of the Sunday School so we can keep our records straight. This will not cost anyone any money, but will mean money to us.

The editor could not read my writing last week and got our letter mixed up some. We regret it, it was not his fault, however, it was our poor pencilship. We are writing this one on a typewriter.

Don't forget the Orphanage on Orphanage Days in your Sunday School. If the Orphanage ever needed your help, it needs it this year. Extremely dry weather last year, income far less than expense account, and one hundred children to care for. Remember us in your prayers! we need them. CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

REVIVAL AT WHISTLE'S CHAPEL.

By request of our church located at Quicksburg, R. F. D., our pastor, Rev. B. J. Earp, began a revival on Tuesday, January 24th, and closed Thursday, February 2nd, giving us twelve splendid sermons. Part of the time it rained and snowed, but Pastor Earp kept preaching, and with the help of the faithful few kept praying and working.

The second week large crowds came and received the messages which were delivered in great power and demonstration of the Spirit. The plan Bro. Earp used in this meeting was a little different from meetings formerly conducted in our church. He asked for volunteers to help in the revival. Our members, especially the young people responded in a very fine way. Every member who had not been in attendance, and who lived within a reasonable distance of the church, was first visited by the volunteers, who helped. Later this visit was followed by the pastor and one of the deacons. This was done the first week of the meeting. The second week the workers went out in the interest of the unsaved, and invited them to come to the revival, and accept Christ.

Another striking feature of the meeting was the response in leading in prayer on the part of our young people. Our pastor said this was one of the best revivals of all his ministry. It is certainly one of the best our church has had for many years. The church is located one mile from Shenandoah Caverns, and Bro. Earp is doing his part to make it a community center. One new feature was the Associate Membership which includes members who live in our community, who hold their active membership elsewhere.

There were added 27 members who were received on profession of faith, and are to be baptized, also 7 associate members. We are thankful for the wonderful revival we have enjoyed.

OBITUARIES

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Cora Hardeu Kernodle, after an illness of less than ten days, passed, almost suddenly, at her home in Graham, at 2:40 Christmas morning, to her rich reward as a devoted Christian woman. The subject of this sketch was a daughter of Peter Ray Harden and Sarah Elizabeth Holt Harden, both of whom were outstanding and favorably known Christian people in the town of Graham, N. C., until the time of their deaths.

Sister Kernodle was born on May 5, 1862, and was 70 years, 7 months and 20 days old at the time of her passing. She was the sixth of a family of nine children—six daughters and three sons—only two of whom are now living: Junius H. Harden and Mrs. Lura E. Montgomery. Mrs. Kernodle and J. D. Kernodle were united in marriage at the family home in Graham on the evening of April 9, 1884, the late Dr. William S. Long officiating. Since their marriage, their home has been in Graham. To this union were born seven children. The first, a son, died in infancy, and the surviving children are: Mrs. Sarah M. Proctor, widow of the late James D. Proctor, of Lumberton; Mrs. J. J. Henderson, wife of Major J. J. Henderson, of Graham; J. D. Kernodle, Jr., and Mrs. Lorena Stratford, wife of John B. Stratford, of Graham; Lieut. Michael Holt Kernodle, U. S. Navy, Norfolk, Va.; and Lovick H. Kernodle, Danville, Va. All were present at the sad funeral rites.

Three sons, the two living sons-in-law, and Dr. Graham Harden, a nephew of the deceased, were active pallbearers. The honorary pallbearers were H. W. Scott, Chas. A. Scott, C. P. Albright, J. Harvey White, Will E. White, Walter R. Harden, Robert B. Tate, McBride Holt, Jos. S. Holt, W. B. Green, Jas. S. Cook, Dr. W. R. Goley, J. Dolph Long, J. Clarence Walker, A. K. Hardee and Dr. W. S. Long, Jr.

Brief services were conducted at the home by Dr. W. C. Wicker, her pastor, assisted by Dr. P. H. Fleming, a former pastor, and continued at the Graham Christian Church, of which she was a devoted, loyal, faithful, active member until the end of life. The songs rendered by the choir, composed of loving friends, were: "The Christian's Good-Night," "In the Sweet Bye and Bye," and "Asleep in Jesus." Mrs. Ward sang "When They Ring those Golden Bells," as a solo. The many beautiful floral offerings were a most fitting tribute to one who loved flowers and lived such a beautiful life. Her full measure of three score years and ten were filled with loving service to her Creator and helpfulness and kindness and Christian service to others. She rendered beautiful, loyal service to her church in all its activities and made her home a happy meeting place for her relatives and many friends.

In her civic relations, she was ever active. She was president of the Graham Chapter of the U. D. C. for two or more terms, and was chaplain when the end came. She was active in the Parent-Teacher Association and the Garden Club. She was never too busy to render service in church or community wherever service was needed. She was a devoted companion to her husband, a faithful loving mother to her children, a sympathizing friend to the sorrowing, a devoted, loyal member of her church, a blessing to her community, and an un-failing servant of God—a beautiful example of Christian womanhood—an inspiration to all who knew her.

The host of friends who attended the services at the church and accompanied the funeral train to the cemetery at New Providence Memorial Church, where she lies sleeping, to sympathize with sorrowing friend and relatives, bespeak the high esteem in which she was held by all who knew her.

"Life's labor done.

Life's blessings all enjoyed,
Serenely to her final rest she passed,
While soft memories of her virtues yet Linger like twilight hues, when the bright sun is set."

W. C. WICKER.

GILLESPIE.

Hugh Wiley Gillespie, of Haw River, N. C., departed this life December 27th, aged 62 years, 8 months and 27 days.

His wife and one daughter survive him. He was a member of Haw River Christian Church and a deacon thereof. His prompt and regular attendance at church and Sunday School attested his deep interest in the church and its welfare. The funeral services were conducted by the writer at Haw River Christian Church, assisted by Dr. W. C. Wicker and Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, and his body was laid to rest in the New Providence Christian Church cemetery, Graham, N. C. May Jesus Christ, the healer of broken hearts comfort those who mourn.

Bryant, near Harrisonburg, Va., died December 31st, near Middle Town, where she had been living for a number of years. She was a loyal member of New Hope Christian Church, of Rockingham County. She and her family moved from that community, bought a farm near Reliance, and united with the U. B. Church of that town. She was the mother of eight children, seven of whom are still living.

Her funeral was held from the U. B. Church, by the writer, her former pastor, and she was buried in the Reliance Cemetery, January 2, 1933.

The floral offerings were large and beautiful.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

On January 11, 1933, God in his infinite wisdom saw fit to remove one of our beloved members, Mr. Claude A. Ward. He was a devoted husband, a kind neighbor, and a loyal member of the Ramseur Christian Church and Sunday School, and attended the services regularly.

2. That we hereby give expression to our feelings of sorrow and our appreciation of his life.

3. That we extend our deepest sympathy to his wife and pray God's richest blessings upon her in her bereavement.

Some Spenders. We!—

Each year, we are told, $750,000,000 is spent for cosmetics, $1,150,000,000 for soft drinks and cigarettes, and $550,000,000 for ice cream, cakes, candy and chewing gum.

Noted English Novelist Dies.—

On January 31st, John Galsworthy, English author and playwright, passed to the beyond. He was 65 years of age, and during his life had written many novels and plays. His short stories numbered more than fifty, and few, indeed, are those who have not read one or more of them. Most of his stories dealt with the upper classes of English society.

British Fliers Set New Record.—

Landing at Walfish Bay, Cape Town, South Africa, at 4:40 P. M., on February 8th, the British fliers, O. R. Gayford and G. E. Nicholeets, set a new long-distance, non-stop record. The total time in the air was 57 hours and 28 minutes, and they smashed the former record held by the American fliers, Jean Polando and Russell Boardman by 300 miles. The American record of 5,012 miles was set in a flight from New York City to Isanbul, Turkey.

To Cut Partial Disability Payment.—

If a bill introduced by Representative Manalocus Lankford of Virginia becomes law, partial disability payments for non-service injuries to veterans will be discontinued. This will apply to veterans of all wars. Mr. Lankford estimates that such course would mean a saving of from $300 to $400 millions annually. The bill would continue hospitalization of all veterans and allowances for veterans totally disabled regardless of whether their disability was incurred in service. All pensions to veterans above 65 years of age would also be continued.

Big Business in Virginia and Carolina.—

North Carolina and Virginia, respectively, hold second and third places in the payment of taxes to the Federal Government, being surpassed in this respect by New York alone. This State holds its place, of course, because of its commanding position in the world of finance and trade. Its population, too, is more than that of the other two States combined. North Carolina and Virginia owe their position to the raising and manufacture of tobacco. The former State is the leading community in the world in the manufacture of that product, while Virginia stands high in the manufacture of the same commodity.

A Spreading Jerusalem.—

A writer in the Empire Review states that two-thirds of the population of Jerusalem now live outside the walls, and the hotels and the larger business houses and stores are likewise moving in that direction. The city has enlarged its borders to the south, and west, and the north, reaching almost halfway to Bethlehem, nearly all the way to Ain Karim, the birthplace of John the Baptist, and to the foot of Mount Scopus. Eighty odd streets have been laid out and bear such names as Street of the Prophets, Herod's Way, Nehemiah Road, Street of Ezra, Street of the Maccabees, Isaiah Street, John the Baptist Street, Jeremiah Street, Hezekiah Street, etc. Jerusalem boasts a population of 90,000.—The Alliance Weekly.

Pneumatic Tired Railway Busses.—

Beset on one hand by the automobile and on the other by the airplane, the railroad has had to bestir itself. One of the answers as to what to do is a new railway motor-bus which is made of stainless steel and aluminum and runs on pneumatic tires. The car is a radical departure from the standard railroad steam equipment, and gives new riding comfort as well as operating economies. Each car is equipped with a 125 horsepower engine which is connected with a high-speed motor mounted upon the rear truck. This equipment has already been put in successful operation by several roads. By its use better and more frequent time schedules may be maintained, this being especially true where the passenger traffic has become unusually light. Still another type of car is being experimented with. Built of aluminum and shaped like a torpedo, it is said to be capable of a sustained speed of 100 miles an hour.

The Chickens Get a Treat.—

The large accumulations of waste leather have been causing a problem as to their disposal, and it was the Department of Leather Research of the University of Cincinnati that came to the rescue and finally found a novel way of utilizing this material. Many problems were started, but the one giving most promise is that of processing the raw leather stock into a portein concentrate food material for poultry. The process of converting leather waste into food for chickens is described by Scientific American as being quite simple. The material is heated until the moisture content is reduced to a very small percentage. At the same time the grease content is reduced and the material partially cooked. It is then ground and is ready to be used in conjunction with grain rations for chickens or hogs. Fed under conditions and in the manner recommended, leading poultrymen have found this leather meal to be equal to or slightly better than standard meat scrap. Meat scrap is usually sold on a 50 per cent protein basis, while this new food contains as high as 65 per cent. We hope that the chickens will enjoy it.

The Lincoln-Lee Legion.—

At a mass meeting held in Tremont Temple, Boston, Mass., on Sunday, February 12th, Lincoln's Birthday, a new temperance movement was formally launched. This movement is called the Lincoln-Lee Legion, after President Lincoln and General Robert E. Lee, both of whom were well known to be opposed to the use of liquor as a beverage. Many prominent citizens have approved this movement, and it also has the support of such young people's organizations as the Christian Endeavor and the Epworth League. The sponsors in launching the Legion say: "Millions of Americans oppose the use of alcoholic beverages. Their power will be all the greater when they enroll together against the beer deluge which threatens to engulf the nation. No people ever drank their way to prosperity, but a sober and righteous people is sure to stand." A contemporary, in commenting on the new movement, says: "The name itself is an argument for the cause. When good and great men like Lincoln and Lee, both of reasonable disposition, are found to have been against liquor, it ought to give thoughtful men pause. He who drinks in small or large quantities is not wise. He is first of all an enemy to himself, and then a foe to the whole community."

Savings Banks and Savings.—

Mutual savings bank deposits in the United States on January 1, 1933, amounted to $9,970,947,424. According to figures given out by the National Association of Mutual Savings Banks, this was a decline over the previous year of slightly more than one-half of one per cent, about $60,000,000. In the face of the decreases in all lines of business this seems almost incredible. Mr. Wilson G. Wing, the president of the association, says: "Hardly any other result of 1932 shows so clearly the strength of public resistance to the difficulties of the times. It is satisfying indeed to know that such a large number of people have had to draw upon their reserves for only slightly more than one-half of one per cent in a critical year." The number of depositors fell off 91,205 during the year to 13,268,466, but the average size of the accounts rose slightly from $750.77 to $751.48. There is another angle from which this matter might be viewed. If the nearly $10 billion now in the savings accounts of the country could be put into active use instead, there would be a vast impetus given toward the eventual recovery of industry. After all, money well spent is worth while. Money hoarded, even in savings accounts is worth little to anyone. It is a sin to waste money at any time, but it is essential to our national welfare that money keep in circulation.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Be sure to read, and remember, the offer and opportunity made in this week's issue of THE SUN by Mrs. Oma U. Johnson, Elon College librarian.

Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, Paces, Va., who recently underwent a major operation, is reported as steadily though slowly recovering. He sits up in his room several hours each day and hopes to be out and strong again in a few days.

Rev. Frederick Held, of Jupiter, Fla., reports as follows: "We are putting across a beautification project. We are making our church plant, parsonage, social hall and church into a place of beauty, depression or no depression. We don't stop for a little thing like that!"

Mrs. R. A. Whitten, Henderson, N. C., who, because of serious illness, was carried to Greensboro hospital some weeks ago, has sufficiently recovered as to be able to return to her home in Henderson, greatly to the joy of her friends. Here is hoping that her recovery will be complete and speedy.

Dr. C. Rexford Raymond, of the Congregational Foundation at Nashville, occupied the pulpit of the church at Daytona Beach last Sunday, February 12th. Rev. C. Arthur Lincoln, who recently underwent an operation for appendicitis, is sufficiently recovered to return to his home and expects soon to be back in his pulpit.

Remember if you put THE CHRISTIAN SUN in a family, you bring to that family circle weekly visits and messages from pastors, institutions and churches, and there is no influence greater for righteousness than that of building into growing character, and into every-day life, a knowledge of what the church and its institutions are doing.

Rev. William S. Beard, D. D., formerly Secretary of the Layman's Advisory Committee, and now connected with Rollins College, recently preached at Knowles Memorial Chapel in Winter Park, and also at the Congregational Church at Orange City, Fla. Dr. Beard expects to be in Winter Park for several months and has taken a house there.

Dr. E. A. King, of Miami Beach, has been recently elected to the Board of Governors of the Chamber of Commerce of that city. He has been an active factor in the life of the Chamber for the past eleven years. He recently gave a lecture on Mexico before the famous Committee of One Hundred, an organization of Miami Beach winter residents.

There is some misunderstanding as to the real meaning of a notice appearing in a recent issue of THE SUN, in which it was said that New Testaments for Sunday School boys and girls were "in this office." The notice appeared on page 10 under the general heading Youth Fellowship, and meant, of course that the books were in the office of the Board of Christian Education, and they may be obtained through the chairman of the Board, Rev. F. C. Lester, Waverly, Va.

Rev. R. A. Whitten closed his work Sunday, February 12th, as pastor of Henderson and Mt. Auburn Churches and goes immediately to First Church, Portsmouth, Va. He was tendered a farewell at a union service of the churches of Henderson at the First Methodist Church Sunday evening. Both the Red Men's Order of the city and the Kiwanis Club held meetings dedicated to honoring Bro. Whitten for his services in these orders.

Times are hopeful and prospects bright. One State official referred to in last week's SUN as drawing a good salary and, when before a legislative committee said if they wanted a cheaper man, or words to that effect, they could have his job, has since said to a committee: "I recommend that the salaries of those in my class be reduced by one-third." Fine! If all State and government officials and employees will come to a conclusion better times are ahead.

Rev. Ralph Krout, pastor of the church at New Port Richey, Fla., in a personal letter to the superintendent, says: "We had a Guest Book Banquet a week ago, which was followed by six very interesting after-dinner speeches, all of them by men. It was a great surprise to the ladies, who think they have a monopoly on missionary topics. This evening we started a Bible Study Class which will meet at our mid-week meeting hour for the next few weeks. There were nineteen present. Our study is planned from Good-speed's "Story of the New Testament."

SHARING ELON.

Sharing is Christlike—God gave to us and to the world. If we have the Spirit of Christ, we likewise will share—will share what we have for the progress of His Kingdom. Every member of the Congregational and Christian Churches in Virginia and the Carolinas is asked to give something for the support of our College. Every wage-earner, preacher, teacher, farmer, stenographer, merchant, clerk, drayman, agent, nurse, attorney, physician, etc. is requested to share his or her earnings however large or small the gift, that there may be no interruption in the training of our youth by the church and for the church.

Please send your gift, whether it be a few pennies or many dollars—it is no reflection to send a small gift—the reflection lies in not responding at all.

God will share generously with those who share adequately for the high purposes of life. Address your contribution to Elon College, Elon College, N. C.

L. E. SMITH.

The Congregational Church at Asheville, N. C., has resolutions of deep appreciation of the years of service of Dr. J. Bernard Thrall, who recently read his resignation which is to take effect April 1st. The church in its resolutions invited Dr. Thrall to become Pastor Emeritus, which invitation he has accepted. Of course, this honorary relationship will begin at the close of his long pastorate. The Asheville Citizen of December 17, on the church page, carried a picture of Dr. Thrall, and a brief sermon on the subject: "This Confidence that We So Sorely Need—Do We Have It? And if Not, Why?"

The church at Orange City, Fla., Rev. Gordon Brokenshire, pastor, is to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the organization of the church on February 26th-28th. On Sunday the 26th, the sermons will be preached, in the morning by Dr. Edwin C. Gillette, and in the evening by Dr. Lewis H. Keller. On Tuesday, the 28th, there will be a program with historical addresses and with a supper at which there will be addresses of felicitation. This year marks the 50th anniversary of two Florida churches: the church at Orange City and the church on Ormond, which is to entertain the State Conference in April.

Rev. J. L. Neese, Greensboro, pastor of Palm Street Church, reports a large number of additions to his church membership last Sunday, and such an increase in Sunday School enrollment recently that the church, with its nine Sunday School rooms, is filled to capacity at the regular Sunday School hour, and some have to stand through the regular preaching services. More room is essential and plans are being discussed for adding further to the church auditorium and Sunday School rooms. There is an attendance of a hundred or more at mid-week prayer meeting, and a hundred or more children come each Friday at 3:30 P. M., for Bible recitations and a good time together at the church.

The following tells who pays the big bills for so much wet propaganda: "The Association Against the Prohibition Amendment reported to Congress that it spent $364,544 in 1932, with receipts amounting to $360,757. Of this amount, Lammot du Pont, of Delaware, gave $55,000; Irenne du Pont, $32,000, and Pierre S. du Pont, $57,000, or a total of $144,000, in addition to loans of $11,000. So that the wealthy du Ponts contributed between a third and a half of the whole amount raised to fight the prohibition law of the land. The National Prohibition Board of strategy, on the other hand, collected $38,735, of which about $25,000 came from dime contributions."

Rev. Chas. E. Burton, D. D., secretary of the General Council of Congregational and Christian Churches, No. 287 Fourth Ave., New York, will be the preacher at the 11 o'clock service, Elon College Chapel, Sunday, March 5th. Dr. Burton is favorably known to many of our people and will be heard with profit and inspiration at Elon. On Sunday, March 19th, Rev. Lewis T. Reed, secretary Ministerial Relief of the General Council, will be the preacher at the 11 o'clock service, at the College, and will be heard with interest and profit. Dr. Reed is deeply interested in the work of ministerial relief and, as general secretary of that department, has endeared himself to the church and to that wide constituency who have benefited by his wise and sympathetic ministry.

The monthly table of receipts on apportionment sent out by Dr. Merrill of the Commission on Missions, has a very favorable report for the region of the Southeast. This report indicates that the receipts by the Boards up to December 1st, showed a sixteen per cent increase over the receipts for a similar period for 1931. This is the only group of States that shows any increase. Florida shows an increase of seven per cent and the Southeastern States, grouped together, show an increase of thirty-three per cent. The latter are the States which remit through the Washington office. Most of the percentages are preceded with a minus sign indicating a loss, but there are nine plus signs indicating a gain and two of those are in the Southeast. The report as a whole indicates a very serious loss in receipts for the eleven months, the loss being $189,071.00.

Dr. E. A. King, contributing editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, on December 18th, began the 12th year of his ministry in the important Miami Beach Community Church. Dr. King's ministry has been one of conspicuous success and his leadership in the city and state has been marked and appreciated. Dr. King has been a regular feature of WIOD for a number of years, where his short evening messages are listened to with great interest by many people over a wide area, but especially in the Miami region. He is "on the air" at 9:45 Sunday nights. Recently he was in-

ELON MUSIC DEPARTMENT PLANNING NEW ACTIVITIES.

ELON SINGERS TO TOUR VIRGINIA.

The Elon College Music Department is a busy place these days. Not only has it several large orders to fill before the end of this college year, but it is also planning a more intensive activity and increased production for next year.

The first task it faces this second semester is the first tour of the Elon Singers through Eastern Virginia. The Elon Singers is a mixed chorus of about thirty voices, made up entirely of college students, organized last fall to present worthwhile musical programs in various communities in this part of the country. It is under the direction of Prof. Dwight Steere, head of the Music tian Church there, and on Sunday afternoon it goes to South Norfolk. On Sunday night it appears in Christian Temple at Norfolk, the church where Dr. Smith was pastor before he came to Elon College as President. Its last concert will be in Waverly, Va., on Monday night, February 27th. The Singers return to Elon College the following day. It is planned that other trips will be taken in the future.

Elon's Music Department also plans to take a considerable part in the college's celebration of Easter. On the night of Palm Sunday, April 9th, the Elon Festival Chorus of about seventy voices, will present Dubois' oratorio, "The Seven Last Words of Christ," under the direction of Professor Steere. Considerable special music is also planned for Easter Sunday. The Festival be located either in Burlington or Graham. It is also possible that certain theory courses, such as harmony and history of music may be offered in the same way, by extension. If there is sufficient demand, certain general courses may also be offered in art and music appreciation, courses designed especially for those who have not had the opportunity to get a college education.

If hopes and plans mean much to their accomplishment, Elon College should expect much from its Music Department.

vited to speak on "Reading for Pleasure and Recreation" before the Committee of One Hundred. This committee is really a body of two or three hundred captains of industry from all over the country who winter in Miami Beach.

The women of our Missionary Society, First Church, Greensboro, had as guest, Mrs. L. E. Smith, Elon College, during an all-day session in the church, with luncheon served, February 9th. Of the event the Daily News, February 10th, says "Herself for several years a teacher on an Indian reservation in New Mexico, Mrs. L. E. Smith, of Elon College, was well qualified to review the mission study book, "Facing the Future in Indian Missions," for the Woman's Missionary Society of the First Christian Church at its day of prayer service yesterday at the church. Mrs. Smith, wife of the president of Elon College, brought an inspiring message to the interested group which gathered to hear her. She believes that work with the Indians is one of the most practical turns home mission activities can take and from her own experience testifies as to the worth of the work. Many personal incidents illustrated Mrs. Smith's review of the book. Mrs. J. R. Foster, president of the society, presided and presented the speaker. Mrs. B. F. Donkin conducted the morning devotional and Mrs. E. H. Brewerton closed the service. Luncheon was served at the church at mid-day."

From Rev. and Mrs. R. T. Grissom, Fancy Gap, Va., February 2nd: "There has been more sickness than usual here this winter, but God has wonderfully blessed us in sparing most of us. We had a very sad occurrence in one of our homes Tuesday of this week: a little girl was instantly killed by an automobile." And then an encouraging word: "We had more than 80 in our services last Sunday, and we voted to send our fifth Sunday's collection to the support of Elon College." Verily, our friends and fellow workers in "the hills" are coming to be a real part of us, as they seek to share with us the work of the kingdom. The reason why God created institutions, no doubt, was that there might be a medium of mutual burden-bearing and good-fellowship. There is nothing that unites us like a common task. Rev. and Mrs. Grissom wish to thank the giver or givers of a nice box of clothing recently received, but the sender failed to indicate from whom the things came, the clothing being already in service by the very needy ones who are grateful for this favor from some unknown friend. A member of the boys' class of the Sunday School writes this note to THE SUN: "Forty young men and women of the Sunday School classes of Rocky Ford Christian Church met Wednesday night, February 1st, at the church for a social given by the young ladies' class. The young ladies were defeated in a contest between the two classes. The social began about 7:30 and lasted until 9:30. During this time games were played and refreshments served. Everyone had a good time. We decided to organize a Christian Endeavor Society, which we hope will be in action soon."

Department. In it is the regular quartette of Elon College Community Church; the members of this quartette are Miss Helen Chamblee, head of the Voice Department; Miss Virginia Dare Black, of Hampton, Va.; Bill Cooper, Norfolk, Va.; and Lloyd Johnson, also of Norfolk, Va. Also in Elon Singers is a smaller chorus, made up of the honor singers of the Club, and known as the Elon Madrigal Club. The accompanist to the group is Fletcher Moore, Burlington, N. C. Its program is mixed, both sacred and secular groups being used.

The Elon Singers, according to the tour planned by President Elon Smith, will make seven appearances in six Virginia cities, under the auspices of the Christian Churches of the respective communities. The chorus leaves Elon College on the morning of February 23rd, and will travel by bus, accompanied by President and Mrs. L. E. Smith. Its first concert will be Thursday night, February 23rd, at Franklin, Va. On Friday night it appears at the Elon Banquet in Suffolk. On Saturday night it gives its concert in Holland. On Sunday morning the chorus returns to Suffolk to take part in the morning service at the Chris-

Chorus also is to present "Hiawatha's Wedding Feast," by Coleridge-Taylor, as the Commencement oratorio.

Another activity of the Music Department is the new Elon Music Club, made up primarily of students, and organized with the purpose of promoting all things musical on the campus. Its meetings, on the first and third Thursdays of each month, are occupied by student recitals and in planning. The Club sponsors the activities of the Elon Singers. It also plans to bring a number of concerts to the campus this spring.

Next year the college hopes to broaden its musical influence. First of all, it plans to add to its music staff a teacher of violin, a department that has been inactive at Elon for a number of years. This new teacher will organize a college orchestra and band, both of which the College has been without for some time.

From the nearby cities of Burlington and Graham has come a request for an added service from the college: a branch music studio. It is hoped that this fall this work may be inaugurated. Tentative plans are being made to offer piano, organ, voice and violin lessons in this studio, to

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

"PASSING THE BUCK."

That caption is not classic. In fact it is anything else but. It is just slang, if you say it, or jazz, if you sing it. But it will serve as a vehicle for more or less of a load. And we are quite universally engaged in the business, whether we use or abuse the words.

Governments and individuals are passing the buck; side-stepping, shirking responsibility; calling on some one else to carry the load and pull our load, too.

Take the State of Indiana as a fair, if not an illustrious, example. Reports through the press say that the legislators, those who were hitched officially to the State wagon, have shifted their responsibility to the shoulders of the Governor of the State and, by one sweeping act of legislation, given him dictatorial powers. By vote of assembly the Governor is allowed to make or unmake, pull down or set up, build or destroy, all departments and bureaus of the State, except that of the judiciary. They have put upon the Governor's shoulders the responsibility of thinking, acting and governing for them. They have passed the buck.

Our government at Washington is headed in the same direction, or given signs of suffering from the same ailment. As a news dispatch puts it: "Congress as now organized finds itself incompetent or unwilling to legislate and govern in the usual way, and is passing up the responsibility to the President or the President-elect.

In city governments the tendency is even more marked, and each city has, or is trying to obtain, its boss. Citizens, rather than face issues and shoulder responsibilities, pass the issues of government into the hands of one man.

It is all a symptom of the disease with which we are smitten. Not long since a writer of wide experience and observation pointed out that we still talk Jefferson, but exalt Hamilton; preach Jeffersonian democracy, but practice Hamiltonian autocracy. The ailment, or the disease, strikes low as well as high, and plows deep as well as broad. As individuals we shirk; we are bewildered; we call on the State or Society to save us. As a consequence, we are hearing much of the "social gospel" and preaching mighty little of individual salvation. We are ignoring or overlooking the person, and thinking and acting in terms of "the program." We talk much of "saving Society," and do mighty little about redeeming the individual. We are so absorbed in reforms that we have little time for regeneration. We are engaged in passing the buck. We refuse to think of our own individual responsibility, preferring to depend upon society, government and the powers that be to think for us and sustain us. Our Lord Jesus Christ founded the mightiest democracy that this world has witnessed, and he did so when he placed upon each individual a value of more worth than a world. "For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" (Matt. 16:26.) And then through inspiration and weighty responsibility, "of working out his own salvation with fear and trembling.

SERVICE THROUGH SACRIFICE.

Our Presbyterian neighbors, through pulpit, press and conference, are calling loud and long these days to their membership to put on their armor and go forth to do battle for God. Some of the conferences they have held with churches, or presbytery, as a group, have sounded the note that the only hope of saving the local church, and themselves, is to put on a program that looks to the saving of others. Their conferences are stressing the need of service, of world service, of spiritual service, of missionary service through sacrifice.

Our Methodist brethren have planned, and are putting on programs in the strategic centers and larger cities of North Carolina, the principal speakers being two Bishops, with the sole theme of "Spiritual Life and Missionary Awakening." The North Carolina Christian Advocate, speaking of these meetings and what is to become of them, says:

"Once more we wish to exalt the day of our opportunity here in this State to promote vital religion and to lift the moral standards of our people (that of calling together their leaders and key-men in more than a dozen centers of the State). This present effort in the spiritual life and missionary conferences in which thousands will assemble in town and country should count for much more than we know. If willing to pay the price," continues the Advocate, "we can stir new life in all our churches and arouse thousands to give themselves in a new way to the cause of God and humanity."

Our Baptist brethren, seeking to stir their members to the deepening of the spiritual life through missionary effort and activity, have set as their goal, "A Sacrificial Offering from Every Southern Baptist." In calling upon the Baptists of the South, a president of one of their State Conventions, says: "We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair." From these words of Paul (II. Cor. 4:8), assurance is taken and hope is found, that "every Southern Baptist may make a special offering between January 15th and March 1st, over and above gifts to their regular program. Not as a substitute, but supplementary to these special gifts, an appeal is made for gifts of old jewelry and other articles of gold and silver which will be smelted and disposed of to the Government."

From these and like pleas being made in other churches, the fact is obvious that the church faces a crisis, and realizes its obligations. Legislation, by enactment of laws, governmental economy, programs and pursuits, even benevolence itself, are not enough. If the present depression is to be dispelled, if difficulties that threaten within and without are to be overcome, we have, first of all, to be sure of the foundations. Our national and social life must be constructed, as much so as the individual life, upon the sure foundation of honesty, integrity and the way of righteousness. The church has now the greatest opportunity it has had in a century, and that opportunity is to turn "problems" into "privileges," promises into power and programs into practices. Until we realize in the church the necessity of quickening the spiritual life and giving ourselves, through sacrificial service, to the missionary effort of sharing with others the love of our Lord that means everything to us, we will not make progress.

One said a long time ago: "Other foundations can no man lay than that is laid, which is Christ Jesus." It is not enough to secure for ourselves and our families material bread for our physical bodies; nor is it enough to share that material bread with other physical bodies. Man does not live by bread alone, and if we would live, we must share with others the Bread of Life—the gospel of God and the message of our Lord. J. O. A.

PRESERVING CHURCH RECORDS.

Attention is called to the offer and opportunity of our Elon College library, spoken of in this issue by the Librarian. The library is fireproof and contains safety vaults and alcoves for particular documents of worth and importance. Our church secretaries and pastors would do well to bear this fact in mind, since there is no charge for receiving and preserving documents of this type. Some of our churches have records running back a century, and others running back for many decades. These records of other days have become matters of history and worth now, and would be a source of infinite worth to the future historian.

This writer chanced to be in a church at Bethlehem, Pa., some time ago, which church had built a department in which to preserve its own records, and the pastor told us that a fairly accurate history of religious progress and development, and of state and civic formation, from colonial days, more than two hundred years ago, down to the present, could be written from documents in that one church library. This is an unusual instance, but it should be said, and can be said, within a few years from now, if those in possession of valuable historical data and documents will cooperate, that one could write not only a history of the Christian Church, but of the progress and growth of the church and of our community from documents in Elon College safety deposits. The library has many such documents now, such as the Christian Annual from its first publication to the present, one of almost every issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN from its first publication until now, proceedings of Conferences and Conventions of the Christian Church here in the South for more than one hundred years. While this is a good beginning, church secretaries and others in possession of historical data and documents should take advantage of the liberal and wise provision made through the donors of our Elon College library, and have such documents preserved. All such will be gladly received and catalogued and placed in safety if sent to the Librarian, Elon College, N. C.

There is nothing the West can give us that we cannot do without, except Jesus.—Indian Editor.

IT IS OF GOD'S LOVE.

The beauty and glory of the missionary message, and the missionary contribution, is that it glorifies God and not man. In our benevolent activities we show our love to a human being by giving him relief. In our missionary activities we show our love to God, since it is his love, not our love, that is to reach and to save. Being at a mission station some years ago, a person in the congregation, after the services, took the writer's hand, and with tears streaming down her cheeks, said: "I am glad to see and hear today a man who comes from a people who love God well enough to have sent a man of God to us to bring to our souls the words of salvation." That is the whole center and theology of missions. It is not the love of man for man that the work of missions magnifies, but the love of man for God, that God may reach and, through his love, lift and save the unreached and the unsaved.

A writer in the Missionary Herald for February relates this incident, which closes, as every missionary incident closes, with the salient thought of seeing God's love and realizing the presence and power of God. Mrs. Berry, in the article spoken of, has in her possession a very highly prized garment, and the writer in the Herald says:

"This garment I once valued highly," said a Japanese lady, as she gave Mrs. John C. Berry a Buddhist burial robe fifty-five years ago. "To obtain it, I made several pilgrimages to temples, and at each temple the priest wrote on the robe excerpts from the Buddhist scriptures. You see it is completely covered with writing.

"But I have no need for it now. When I die I shall rest in my Saviour's arms in faith and awaken in his spiritual likeness. Please take the garment with you to your country and, as you may have opportunity, show it to your friends and thank them for having sent you to teach me of God's love as seen in the life and teaching of Jesus." IN OTHER DAYS OF DEPRESSION.

History travels in cycles. There is progress, but it is circuitous rather than straight-forward. The experience of the present does not differ far from similar experiences of the past. This depression may seem more depressing than those of the past, but, at any rate, there have been others. We of the present may take counsel from some of the preaching and practices of those who lived and lifted during other experiences similar to our own. Some industrious editor has pulled out from its hiding excerpts from an editorial by the late, lamented Henry Watterson, who made his Louisville Courier-Journal immortal. It reads as if Watterson is back with us again, and is trying to awaken us from our lethargy to a new hope and a larger faith. We quote him:

"Surely the future looks black, yet it holds a hope, a single hope. One and one power only can arrest the descent and save us. That is the Christian religion. Democracy is but a side issue. The paramount issue underlying the issue of democracy is the religion of Christ and him crucified; the bedrock of civilization; the source and resource of all that is worth having in the world that is, that gives promise in the world to come. If the world is to be saved from destruction it will be saved alone by the Christian religion."

Sounds more like a sermon than the utterance of a journalistic statesman and politician.

When one comes to fundamentals, minister, business man, banker and statesman differ very little in their beliefs and utterances. The papers are now quoting quite extensively what Mr. Babson, our efficiency expert in business and banking, has to say:

"For churches to close now or to 'let up' is like hospitals closing during an epidemic. We say this, because an epidemic of fear, such as is raging today, is as dangerous as an epidemic of flu such as raged in 1918. The need of the hour is not money, more real estate, or more stocks and bonds, but rather more self-control, unselfishness, and courage. Self-control, unselfishness, faith and courage are spiritual qualities which cannot be secured from bankers or stores, but only from ministers and churches."

We doubt if any preacher has sounded the alarm in a call that is clearer and a figure that is finer than this: "To close up churches now is like closing up hospitals in time of an epidemic."

Thinkers, real thinkers, of all kinds and classes are realizing truly that the real Saviour of ourselves and our civilization is the church in its ministry for him who said: "I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." J. O. A.

INTER-RACIAL SUNDAY FEBRUARY 12.

Our State Inter-racial Commission, with Dr. Howard Odum of the University of North Carolina as chairman, and with Dr. W. A. Stanbury of Durham as chairman of churches, has asked the observance of this day for the consideration of race relations. Personally I am very glad to respond to the request—my ministry of 34 years has been spent in South Carolina, Georgia, Missouri, and Iowa, and for the past six years in North Carolina. In these years in Georgia, Missouri and Iowa I have seen the fury of racial hatreds and been compelled in three cases to observe not only the unreasoning, but the uncivilized behavior of the mob.

The Christian Church as the custodian of the Gospel of Jesus, has not only the right but the sacred duty to see that the Christian name is not sullied by hates and passions whether the race be white or black, brown or yellow. The Christian must know that the social contact of the Gospel of Jesus is the same as its individual content and that both rise and fall together. It is a world issue that we face. There is but one solution, and that is the cultivation and extension of good-will. There can be no racial hatreds in the mind of Christ in China, Japan, or here in America. The Christian testimony must be given whether it is heeded or not. If not heeded there is nothing but catastrophe ahead.

In a brief space I can only mention three very simple rules which if followed will always bring their reward. These appreciations are common in the minds of all races and reach to the emotional attitudes of all. It is as true in Turkey as it is true in North Carolina.

The entrance of appreciation into the mind of any racial type is in the practice of integrity—justice. We can talk glibly about race relations as much as we please, but until that fundamental habit of mind and behavior is established there will be dread and suspicion. In proportion as different racial types sense integrity of purpose in others and rise to meet it will we have sound and cooperative relationships for the good of all. As long as white men think that force is the only method that can be understood by dark-skinned races, so long will we have discord. There are no human beings anywhere with glimmerings of intelligence that do not respond first and foremost to the elemental principles of justice—and as any social group maintains this principle it is providing security for itself best of all, whether white, or black, or brown, are within its borders.

The second principle is that of courtesy. Every race responds to it. When a furious Tartar in the Russian Caucasus called me a Christian dog, and told me that he meant insult, I smiled and thanked him and wished for him the kindness of God. His whole attitude changed at once. How many of our racial difficulties are produced among us because someone, some times white, some times black, has practiced discourtesy. It would be well for us all to go back to our childhood days and learn again the rhyme:

Politeness is to do and say
The kindest thing
In the kindest way.

Here is a little poem written by a colored writer which has merit, and carries to us its own message. It is entitled "Incident":

Once riding in old Baltimore
Heart filled, head filled with glee,
I saw a Baltimorean
Keep looking straight at me.

Now I was eight and very small
And he was no whit bigger
And so I smiled but he poked out
His tongue and called me Nigger.

I saw the whole of Baltimore
From May until December
Of all the things that happened there
That's all that I remember.

The old South, with its feudal institutions, disappeared with the war of the sixties. It will never come back—but it left some traditions which all of us should cherish. From the earliest years it cultivated courtesy and made it a fine art. White and black were taught the meaning of courtesy and the reputation of the section reached everywhere. Is it not time in all our schools, white and black; in all our churches, in all our homes to teach again this virtue and bring it into being as a part of our daily conduct?

And my third emphasis is an appeal for a common sharing of the toils and efforts that make racial life significant in both white and black—there is nothing valuable in our hates, our suspicions, our weaknesses. There is everything valuable in our educational endeavors, our economic rehabilitation and in a better church life.

These are common needs—common grounds for cooperation and common ends to be sought. The tremendous power of the Negro is at once apparent if a survey of achievements is made. Progress has been made and the struggle is on for a better life for all. There are now 238,732 Negro children in elementary schools, in North Carolina, and there are still vast needs to be reckoned with. There are now 16,817 Negro youths in high school, as against 4,715 in 1924-25. There are now five State institutions of higher education giving their time to the training for teaching and leadership. There are eight private institutions with more than 2,600 Negro young men and women in attendance. As we look at the whole problem of public education adequate to the need it seems stupendous. And yet in the State of North Carolina last year there was spent for Negro education alone as much as was spent some years ago for all education. Our State inter-racial commission is seeking justice, education, a fair economic opportunity, better health, and the State has set its seal of approval upon these efforts.

Our interests rise and fall together. If hates, and passion; if crime and cruelty rule, all of us suffer. If justice, education, courtesy and good-will prevail, our individual and social welfare will be secure. J. EDWARD KIRBYE.

THE BEST KIND OF PREACHING.

The ultimate test of the Christian religion among a people of other, or no, faiths, is "Does it work?" So the feeling of suspicion which quite naturally prevails when Christian workers begin in an area and before friendly contacts can make plain their motives, is often laid to rest by the observations of the daily life of the missionaries. Said an Indian woman one day to Miss Rachel P. Barnes, of Ahmednagar: "You never back-bite as we do; is that part of your religion?"

SUFFOLK LETTER.

In the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference there are 43 churches located in Virginia and Gates County, N. C. Of this number 23 are classed as country churches, 12 city, or large town churches, and 8 are village, or small town, churches. The total membership of the churches in 1931 was reported as follows: For the 12 city, or large town churches, 5,700; for 23 country churches, 3,700; 8 village or small town churches, 1,300. These figures would not be changed very much by the reports for 1932. The membership of the 12 city, or large town churches is a little more than 50 per cent of the total church membership of the Conference.

On the basis of the above figures it would appear that the city churches are more important than the country or village churches. On the average the membership is larger, the buildings more expensive and up-to-date, and the contributions for benevolences more liberal. However, if the inside history of these churches were written it would be discovered that nearly all of these churches had their beginning with a group of people who had been members of rural churches.

This is not said to discredit any church, but to sustain the claim that country churches have, in the past, made a great contribution to the city churches. Quite a number of these churches in the city are not yet self-supporting, and some of the country churches are making contributions to sustain them in their work.

For twenty-five years the emphasis in our Home Mission work has been in the interest of establishing city churches. Very little effort has been made to encourage the establishment of new churches in the country districts, or to add up-to-date equipment for the Sunday School work. A number of the older country churches have improved their buildings, during this period, without assistance from any mission board. Wherever good buildings have been erected the interest of the church has been increased. An attractive church building, well equipped, is a potent factor in developing and maintaining interest in the work of the church. This is true of the country as well as the city. A church building should not be discarded, or torn down, because it is old. But a few coats of paint, comfortable pews, attractive windows, new pulpit furniture and Sunday School rooms for the younger classes will put new life into many listless and discouraged smaller country churches. In some cases the need is a new building in keeping with the demands of the community. Above all other things it should be the aim of every church to be spiritually efficient. It is sheer nonsense to expect God to bless and prosper churches unless they are willing to use their heads, hands and money as well as their hearts. "The liberal soul shall be made fat; and he that watereth shall be watered also himself." (Prov. 11:25.)

The country church should be encouraged and supported. It has a distinctive place to fill in the religious life of this country. There are some communities where a small one-room church building will serve the spiritual interests of the people as efficiently as an elaborate building in a thickly settled neighborhood. In every place, whether great or small, the work calls for hearty cooperation and faithful support. It is inspiring to have great crowds and much enthusiasm increased by large numbers, but the work must finally be done by individuals.

No church member should make an apology for being a member of a country church. And the minister whom God has called to preach in the country parish has no occasion for thinking that his work is not comparable with that of his brother city pastor, from the standpoint of importance and opportunity. A real country pastorate calls for the best in any minister. No minister is too great nor too important to give his life and best service to a country pastorate, if God should call him to such a field. It is a great challenge and a great life.

PLAN FOR THE CHURCHES.

The Dollar-a-Month Club Committee, appointed by the Southern Christian Convention at its last session at Burlington, N. C., for the purpose of offering the opportunity to the membership of the church to cooperate in the support of Elon College by becoming members of the Dollar-a-Month Club, met at Elon College, Friday, February 3rd, at 2 P. M. Those present were Rev. Wm. T. Scott, Chairman! Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, Chairman for North Carolina and Virginia Conference and Mr. John Farmer, Chairman for Eastern North Carolina Conference. Dr. Milo J. Sweet, Rev. T. Fred Wright, Rev. F. C. Lester and Rev. T. J. Green were absent. After much discussion and quite a lengthy session, the Committee finally decided on the following:

1. That in view of the lack of fund, with which to finance a special representative of the College, that the pastors, themselves, be asked to cooperate in a plan to be worked out by the President of the College, whereby the churches of the various Conferences could be reached without cost to the College, but with the hope that great benefit from such an effort would be derived.

2. That our goal be 5,000 memberships for the Club.

3. That individuals, churches, Sunday Schools, organized classes, societies, or other organizations, were eligible for membership in the Club, and that either or all were permitted to take as many memberships as they might desire.

4. That every church having within its membership as many as ten memberships in the Club, would be designated as a Banner Church.

5. That every church having as many as 25 memberships would be granted a $50.00 tuition scholarship, to be awarded to any Elon College student that the church might select.

6. That every church having as many as 50 memberships would be given a $100.00 tuition scholarship to be awarded to any Elon College student that the church might select.

7. That the College prepare a recognition card to be presented to every church cooperating in the support of Elon College through the Dollar-a-Month Club plan.

It is fine to have new members join the Club, but, at the same time, we are not forgetting our old members. The one question we are concerned about now is that our old members do not forget us. There are a number who are behind with their dues. If they will pay up between now and the 20th, it will enable us to give a much better report to the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees. If you have forgotten to send your payments in, won't you please do so at once?

THE PERPETUTION OF SOUTHERN IDEALS.

The splendor of Greece and the grandeur of Rome have long left their impress on world history. We remember Athens for her great philosophers and Sparta for her great military leaders. America signifies liberty, equality, and a democratic government. But what comes to our minds when we think of the old South that was the home of Lee, Jackson, Washington, Jefferson, and hundreds of others who have left their names imprinted upon the pages of history? In glaring letters we see the words: "Southern Ideals and Southern Traditions."

For this her name will be remembered as long as time continues. The great ideals of our Southland will never die. Her hospitality, her generosity, her noble-mindedness have stirred the emotions of all peoples, just as the first shot of the American Revolution was heard 'round the world.

The old Cavaliers, who first came to Virginia, brought with them the spirit of love, affection, and chivalry. They believed that honesty, integrity and the Christian graces and virtues were the aims and issues of life. They preserved the Christian spirit of their forefathers in England. On down through the years we see these same ideals and traditions prevailing.

Later on we have the coming of John Wesley, Whitefield, and their spirit of Christian democracy into America. This spirit of revivals and regeneration in Christ has lingered to the present day. The South has striven hard to uphold these ideals of religion and Christianity. We are still working toward that goal.

Such high standards cannot be eroded from the memory of mankind. Paul says: "Hold fast to that which is good." The people of the South will not put aside that which was so sacred to their forefathers—Southern Ideals.

JOY IN RELIGION.

Experiencing joy in religion might well be the theme for emphasis at Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., where the minister, Dr. Jason Noble Pierce, has planned a worth-while program for each Wednesday night for all members of the church and congregation.

We sit down to a Fellowship Supper at 6:30 o'clock, and the ladies serve a dinner that could hardly be gotten anywhere else for the price. It is a free-will offering supper, and we welcome all who will come. After the supper there is some kind of diversified sociability, such as charades, illustrating the parables of Jesus, a candy pull, a conundrum contest, musical numbers by Mr

T. H. Barritt, of Ocean View, on his musical saw, glasses, and oboe. This past week the Christian Temple choir members were the guests of the church, and they provided entertainment which delighted all.

At various times throughout the year we anticipate honoring one of the Norfolk clergymen. So far we have had "Rustin Night," with Dr. John W. Rustin as the guest speaker, while "Mac-Millon Night" has been observed, with Dr. Jason Leon MacMillan as the speaker.

The evening closes before 8 o'clock, with family prayers conducted by the minister. In this way we spend the mid-week night in the church as a family, worshipping and playing together. It's a real inspiration, and such a fine time we have!

ELON COLLEGE LIBRARY AND CHURCH RECORDS.

Realizing that we have in our possession in the Elon College Library books, periodicals and other (printed) matter of priceless value to our church and that much more material could be collected from remote sections of our church communities, it has been my desire and dream for the past three years to make our library a safe and permanent home for all such valuable material.

Last year I secured permission from the donors of the Carlton Library to convert one of the large corner rooms, especially suited for this purpose, into a sort of memorial room. The room is to be used exclusively for the safe keeping of all church records, books written by or having belonged to any prominent members of our church, or any material relating to the church that is now or will be in the future, valuable church history.

All material sent in or collected will be carefully classified and indexed and arranged either by class, or if it is the wish of those sending in the material, it will be placed in a special collection and labeled as given by these persons or institutions.

It will be made known to our church membership that this material is assembled in this way, and that it will be possible for any person interested in studying or examining the same to do so under careful supervision.

Any SUN readers who have material and will send it to me, it will be greatly appreciated. Or if you know of any such that you think should be preserved in this way and will let me know, I shall make efforts to collect it.

STIMULATES BIBLE STUDY.

Prof. A. R. Flowers is creating a great deal of interest in Bible reading among the young people of this and other sections, by means of his lectures on Christian Education and Christian Endeavor work. Prof. Flowers is a profound believer in the Bible and the philosophy of Jesus Christ, and reads almost every book on the remarkable old volume through almost every year.

The pastor of our church (Baptist) is in hearty cooperation with Prof. Flowers in his work. No doubt most of the irreverence for God and sacred things among the masses is due to ignorance of God's Word, and we are trying to create a more lively interest in the reading of God's Book among the membership of our B. Y. P. U. from week to week; and we are always glad to have such workers as Bro. Flowers to come our way.

A GREAT SINGER TALKS ON PROHIBITION.

Some of my friends in New York City where I live are trying to make me believe that the Eighteenth Amendment is responsible for the present depression and all the difficulties which are distressing our country, that drinking is universal and increasingly prevalent. In the last eight years of touring in my profession throughout this country, appearing before large audiences from the Atlantic to the Pacific, I have been traveling practically every day by way of buses, boats, trains and airplanes. I have been sleeping in a different hotel nearly every night from Maine to California, from Canada to the Gulf. I have had the opportunity of coming in contact with thousands of people throughout the United States in all walks of life, with thousands of them I have had the privilege of shaking hands and never in my experience of this contact have I been able to detect any person under the influence of liquor, and during these eight years I have seen only eight people whom I knew to be intoxicated. Strange to say, my friends in New York City are under the impression that every person in our country, men, women and children, are using intoxicating liquor. The only explanation I can give of this is that many times these persons are compelled to remain in New York City by their business and profession and that they are influenced by the propaganda of the wet press.

It may not be out of order to say that I was born in America. When I was one year of age, I was taken back to Italy, where I was educated. But in early youth my family returned to this country, and my father and I are American citizens by our own choice, so my opinions are formed from a background both American and Italian.

During the intervening years I have crossed the ocean sixty times. It is my opinion that in the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment the American people have done the most noble deed they have done since Abraham Lincoln freed the slaves.—Zion's Herald.

A DEPOSIT FOR YOUR KNOWLEDGE FUND.

Dare County, N. C., the most isolated county in the Tar Heel State, has the lowest per capita wealth and the highest number of college graduates per capita.

On June 30, 1931, there were more than three hundred and fifty-one thousand pensioners on the government pay-rolls, the total payments for such being nearly thirty-five million dollars annually.

What embarrassments the ladies had before pins were invented in the 14th Century, is possibly a secret to them. And what a supply they had to buy at a time! The inventor was permitted to sell pins only on the first and second days of January of each year, and in open shop. Purchases were made from small amounts of money which husbands had furnished their wives from time to time—hence the expression "pin money."

Did you ever hear of "Jemmy Twitcher?" He was none other than the Earl of Sandwich, and it is said that he was so fond of gambling that at times he would not stop to eat, but would bid the waiter to bring him a piece of meat between two pieces of bread, which he would eat without stopping from his gambling play. From this person and place we have the word "sandwich."

PRAYER.

Blessed Lord, to hearts that are fixed on the purpose and the power of thy love, how joyful is the way, how protected the path. O, loving Guide, who leadest thine own, shepherd thou every wandering life and bring all who know the strength of thine arm and the bliss of thy keeping to be truly devoted, with thee, to the mission of corralling souls for thine eternal haven both now and forevermore. Teach us that God's Kingdom may be accomplished even in this life. Amen. L.

A STATEMENT WHICH STANDS.

While much is being said pro and con about the Laymen's Inquiry, "Re-Thinking Missions," Mrs. Pearl Buck, and others, departing from the beaten paths of the missionary way, it will be well for us to refresh our minds with a statement that has stood the test and, in all probability, will stand it for a few hundred years to come. It was the statement issued by the Conference of world-wide Protestantism, including some of the brightest and best minds of Christian statesmen of forty or more lands and languages, who gathered at Jerusalem for a conference on missions a few brief years ago, and, as a result of its findings, gave this to the missionary workers of the world:

"Our message is Jesus Christ. He is the revelation of what God is and of what man through him may become. In him we come face to face with the ultimate reality of the universe; he makes known to us God as our Father, perfect and infinite in love and in righteousness; for in him we find God incarnate, the final, yet ever-unfolding, revelation of the God in whom we live and move and have our being.

"We hold that through all that happens, in light and in darkness, God is working, ruling and overruling. Jesus Christ, in his life and through his death and resurrection, has disclosed to us the Father, the Supreme Reality, as almighty Love, reconciling the world to himself by the Cross, suffering with men in their struggle against sin and evil, bearing with them and for them the burden of sin, forgiving them as they, with forgiveness in their own hearts, turn to him in repentance and faith, and creating humanity anew for an ever-growing, ever-enlarging, ever-lasting life.

"We reaffirm that God, as Jesus Christ has revealed him, requires all his children, in all circumstances, at all times, and in all human relationships, to live in love and righteousness for his glory. By the resurrection of Christ and the gift of the Holy Spirit God offers his own power to men that they may be fellow-workers with him, and urges them on to a life of adventure and self-sacrifice in preparation for the coming of his kingdom in its fullness.

"If such is our message, the motive for its delivery should be plain. The Gospel is the answer to the world's greatest need. It is not our discovery or achievement; it rests on what we recognize as an act of God. It is first and foremost 'Good News.'

"Our true and compelling motive lies in the very nature of the God to whom we have given our hearts. Since he is love, his very nature is to share. Christ is the expression in time of the eternal self-giving of the Father. Coming into fellowship with Christ we find in ourselves an over-mastering impulse to share him with others. We are constrained by the love of Christ and by obedience to his last command. He himself said, 'I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly,' and our experience corroborates it. He has become life to us. We would share that life."

A SURE FOUNDATION.

I went one day into the office of a physician, a friend of mine. He was a man over sixty years of age. A great sorrow had just come into his life. His fiscal agent had proved to be a scoundrel, and had robbed him of some sixty-five thousand dollars, and in addition had made him responsible for the payment of another thirty thousand dollars. All this meant that the entire fortune of the physician had been lost. His home had to be sold to meet the forthcoming obligations. And at his advanced age in life, the physician stood hopeless, with the savings of a lifetime swept away. What should he do? Many a man in such an emergency has taken his life rather than face such a dark and dismal future. But not so with my friend. He had come to know Christ as a personal Saviour, and had implicit confidence in the life to come; and so instead of committing suicide, as many a man has done under such circumstances, he reached out his hand, took mine in his, and said:

"A tent or a cottage, why should I care?

They're building a palace for me over there!

Though exiled from home, yet still may I sing:

All glory to God, I'm a child of a King."

Here was a man undergoing a most severe and critical trial in life, who found not only resignation but comfort and blessedness in the thought that some day it will all be different; that there is another life coming in which all that hurts and pains will have passed away.—From Looking Beyond, by William Evans.

David, by inspiration and by experience, discovered that God's voice is heard and his love realized only when we are still. Sometimes the stillness is forced, as when we lie sick in bed. Sometimes we may be working hard and yet have quietness of spirit because we know that our Christ is near. Oh, these blessed moments.—Floyd W. Tompkins.

A PROGRAM FOR JUNIOR AND WILLING WORKER GROUPS.

If "find-out" topics have been assigned at the previous session, have the children report on what they have found out about the schools in China. (Their school geographies, "What Do You Know About China," and "The Spirit of Chinese Youth," will give information. Also "Youth and Revolution in China.") They should find out about the old type of school, the mission and government school, the Mass Education Movement. If possible, exhibit samples of Chinese writing. (See "The Spirit of Chinese Youth.")

In the old days a scholar never soiled his hands with labor, education was for the favored few, and it consisted mostly of learning the classics by heart. The boys went early in the morning and memorized the ancient literature of China, learned to make perfect characters with brush and ink-stick.

Fifteen years ago practically no one cared whether the common people in China were educated or not. Farmers and laboring people in general just took it for granted that they could not read or write, but during the World War there were hundreds of Chinese coolies who went to France to work behind the lines, making roads, etc. It was here that the change began. As they could not speak French, nor read or write their own language, life there was very difficult for them. James Yen was sent over to see what could be done in the way of keeping up their morale. "Jimmie Yen," as he is usually called, had had every opportunity for education a boy could have, even a foreign University, for he went to Yale. Now for the first time he came in close contact with those of his country who had never had any chance even to read. He realized how hard it was to be so far away from home and yet not be able to get letters from their own people (who could not read or write) or in turn to write them. To be a scholar and learn to read and write forty or fifty thousand characters means beginning when you are small and keeping at it pretty much for twenty years. No man working all day and tired at night can ever hope to do that. Jimmie Yen thought some more and finally decided that he would select the most commonly used characters, put them into little books and see whether the men couldn't get a knowledge of enough characters to make it possible for them to write letters home and to read news about their own country. Where would you begin?

There behind the lines in France they proved that common working people who had never had an opportunity to attend school when they were young could learn, and that quite readily. A strong characteristic of the Chinese—that of a good memory—stood them in good stead.

After the war, the movement was launched in China proper, and called the Mass Education Movement. They say that in 1929, 5,000,000 men, women and children of the rural and laboring class had mastered these 1,300 characters. Of course, this opens up a whole new world to these people, and many of them go right on adding more to what they have learned in what is now called "The One Thousand Character Classics."—From the "Spirit of Chinese Youth."

Until the mission schools were opened, girls in China did not go to school. Some forty years ago, a man in Shantung Province was pushing a wheelbarrow on which sat two girls. He was bound for Peiping. The magistrate of the district through which he was passing, stopped him, refusing to believe the man's statement that the girls were being taken to Peiping to school. "There are no schools for girls," he said. He kept them in custody until a runner had gone to the capital and brought back word that girls were being educated there. The institution was the Bridgman Academy (one of our Congregational-Christian schools), which this year has 470 students and is one of the feeders of Yenching College for Women, with its 200 young women.—From "Christianity in Revolutionary China."

There are also schools for younger boys and girls with students numbering about 8,000.

Today there are many like "Precious Gem," about whom Carolyn Sewall, the children's missionary tells us:

THE STORY OF PRECIOUS GEM.

Precious Gem's mother was sitting, sewing, on a low bamboo stool, just outside the door of their house. "It must be seven o'clock," she was saying, "and your father hasn't come yet. I wonder what delays him? He didn't have anything but his wheat to sell. I wonder how much it brought?"

"Your father will surely be here soon, and you had better be getting his meal cooked," she went on. "You can keep the millet porridge hot in the kettle and it will be ready when he comes. Come, Precious Gem, get the fuel."

A girl of thirteen or fourteen came out of doors. She looked most unhappy. Her eyes looked only at the dirty ground at her feet and she had not a smile on her face.

"What's the matter with you, child?" her mother asked. "Why can't you cheer up a bit? You have been grieving all day. Get your father's millet and perhaps he will bring some vegetable to eat with it. What are you crying for, anyway?"

"You know what's the matter. There isn't going to be any teacher at the Jesus-church this year, and I can't go on with my lessons. Farmer Li is going to send Spring Blossom to the Look-Up-to-the-Mountain School at Tientsin and I want to read some more." And Precious Gem drew her sleeve across her eyes.

"Well, what is the use of crying about that?" interrupted her mother in a tone of disgust. "You might as well cry for the moon. You know it is all your father can do to get over the days with seven mouths to feed, and this year's crops practically a failure, too. You'll be lucky if you can get anything to eat this winter, let alone reading. Reading! What are you so set on reading for? You know more characters already than your father does. Your mother-in-law won't want you getting any more foolish notions in your head. First thing I know you will be wanting to unbind your feet."

"That is just what I want now," burst out Precious Gem. "Spring Blossom has taken off all her bandages, and has big feet now, and she can run and walk and it doesn't hurt her at all."

"Yes, but how will she ever get a mother-in-law? No one wants to speak to a girl with such ugly big feet for her son's wife. It's a good thing we have your affair all arranged. Now, don't be trying to get too much learning, for your husband won't want you. He hasn't any and isn't likely to get much, pulling a ricksha. But you will get enough to eat and you had better be satisfied."

"But I am not satisfied. I don't want to be betrothed, and I want to unbind my feet and go to school. Oh, why don't they send us a teacher?" And this time the tears were really falling as Precious Gem went into the house.

At school Precious Gem had learned of a very new God, not like any her people worshipped. The teacher had said he was the only true God, not made of clay or brass or pasted on the wall, but one whom you could not see, and that he loved children and cared for them. And she had told them that he could hear when you prayed to him; that you need not burn incense either, or go to the temple, but just talk to him and he would hear. Precious Gem had tried it. Ever so many times after she was rolled up in her quilt on the brick kang at night she had said the little prayer she had learned at school, and then added, "And please, Father in Heaven, let me keep on going to school." Perhaps—perhaps—if she tried it again—very hard.

"Oh, you have come." Her mother's voice interrupted her thoughts and she looked up to see her father coming into the yard. "You are late, what delayed you? Your porridge is all ready. Here, Little Three go buy a pot of hot water."

"It was a busy market today; I saw many people I wanted to. Old Pastor Fu was there."

Precious Gem listened with interest. Pastor Fu was her teacher's uncle who had formerly preached in their village.

"He had a little affair to talk over with me, so I walked around by his village and am a little late."

"What affair did he discuss?" the mother asked.

"It was about Precious Gem. It seems funny, but he offered to send her to school." Precious Gem's heart almost stopped beating, but she went on ladling out the porridge. "He says his niece tells him she is pretty good at books and he wants her to study some more."

"Why didn't you tell him it would be a foolish waste of money; that she has already spoken a mother-in-law?"

"I did tell him, but he still wants to do it. These Christians are certainly queer. He says the locusts did not get his crops and they have been especially good, and he wants to make a thank-offering to the gods. Just one God, I believe he says there is. But why he should spend his money on our stupid child is more than I can see. If she were a boy now—well, I told him it was foolish."

"Oh, but you will let me go; you will let me go, father, mother," Precious Gem interrupted.

"We will discuss it," said her mother, with what seemed to Precious Gem like exasperating calmness. "You hurry and clear up and get yourself and the children to bed before you have to light a lamp. You had better go to sleep and forget about school."

She could go to bed, but sleep was out of the question, and she lay on the kang with wide-open eyes and busy excited thoughts. She could not quite catch the low conversation of her parents outside the door and she was too busy with her own dreams to try. But after a while they came in and she heard her mother say, "Did you bring home all the wheat money?"

"No," came the answer, "I bought some salt vegetable and a wash basin for Precious Gem to take to school."

"Oh, Father in Heaven," whispered Precious Gem, "You did hear me."

And so, two weeks later, when Farmer Li took Spring Blossom to Tientsin, Precious Gem went with them, her new basin, her quilts and her few poor clothes tied up in neat bundles.

That was such a happy year. Precious Gem loved her lessons and made rapid progress in them. The teachers were very kind, and, after the first strangeness had worn off, it was such fun to play and work, to eat and sleep with so many other girls. She would have been perfectly happy if there had not always been in the back of her mind the fear that some day she would have to stop. She received no letters from home; there was no one who could write them. But occasionally her father made trips to the big city to sell his crops or to bring her a new garment, and members of Spring Blossom's family often brought her word from home. Whenever a message came or a messenger, she waited in suspense until she knew that her mother-in-law had not yet sent for her.

But the first year passed without interruption, and a second and third. The longer she stayed the more she loved the school and her teachers and her playmates. She spent a Chinese New Year's vacation with one of her classmates, and saw how happy a Christian home could be.

She was sitting alone one afternoon, apart from the other girls.

"Your father has come, Precious Gem," she heard some one call, and she went to the gate to meet him, the same old fear in her thoughts. She greeted him respectfully and inquired for all the members of her family. They were all well. She took the new garment he had brought and thanked him. "Oh, by the way, your mother-in-law sent word," he began, and Precious Gem's heart sank. At last it had come, the thing she had been dreading. How could she leave now? She raised her eyes to her father's face. "She sent word," he went on, slowly, "that her son died last month. We'll have to be looking around again."

"Oh, but father," the girl cried, "you won't right away, will you? Then I can get my diploma next June, and after that if I cannot go on to school in Peking, perhaps I can teach and then I can help with the family. O, you will wait, won't you, please?"

"Well," he answered, "I guess there is no special hurry." And when Precious Gem ran back to join her mates, her face was shining.

The story might stop right here, but because it is a true story, we'll have to tell the next part. Precious Gem did graduate after a wonderful senior year. The next year there was money enough from America to invite a teacher again for her little home village, so they asked Precious Gem if she would teach there—her neighbors' children, and even her own little brothers. She went gladly, and she taught well. She shared with the children in that village all the good things that she had been receiving at Look-Up-to-the-Mountain School.—Adapted from a Here and There Story.

Suggestions for worship have been given in the programs for the past two months. Use those in building your program for this month. The above material contains information and a story about schools in China, from which you may build your own program. Continue work on the scrap book. If the children should decide that they would like it to go to a school in China when it is finished, send to Miss Mildred Widber, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass., for an address to which it may be sent. SUNDAY BASEBALL.

There is an effort in the present legislature to get a bill through permitting Sunday baseball in North Carolina. The big leagues and their friends interested in making money on baseball are leaving no stone unturned in an effort to legalize this sport on the Lord's Day. This is simply another effort to bring about an open Sunday for all sports. The effort to destroy the influence of the Lord's Day means the undermining of the best in our civilization. The good people of North Carolina who believe that the Ten Commandments still hold good should exert themselves on behalf of preserving the Lord's Day inviolate. We hope every reader of the Biblical Recorder will use his influence with his representatives and senator to oppose this movement to destroy the Lord's Day. Immediate action is necessary.—Biblical Recorder.

Amen, Biblical Recorder; THE SUN joins in this plea.

One of the outstanding reasons I believe there is a hell is, God acted as though there were. He sent his Son to die on the Cross to save people from that hell that he knew about.—Selected.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

FLORIDA NUMBER.

By MISS PATTIE LEE COGHILL.

SANFORD YOUNG PEOPLE ACTIVE.

The Sanford young people took charge of the regular church service on a recent Sunday evening when their minister was ill, Henry Witte doing the preaching. Just before the election in November, they had a "political rally," with some one speaking for Hoover, Roosevelt and Thomas.

NEW CLASS AT NORTH MIAMI.

A new young people's Sunday School class was formed in the North Miami Church recently, made up of Boy Scouts and girls of that age, who had been promoted. Mrs. O. H. Denny, the minister's wife, was made teacher. The twelve members had their first business meeting in the parsonage and chose "Comrades" for their name, and "Climb High and Hold" as their motto.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S COUNCIL AT MELBOURN ACTIVE.

The Young People's Council of the Melbourn Church has fixed up a room in the church for their meetings, and has been studying in a serious way how they may build up the young people's work in the church. They are starting a library of interesting books for young people to read as well as books of methods and program materials.

During the summer and early fall they had a "get-to-gether" each Sunday evening after their regular meeting, in the home of some member. These "socials" were greatly enjoyed, and were continued until the regular evening services at the church began.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S COUNCIL AT ST. PETERSBURG.

The St. Petersburg Church School has just made a fine step forward in creating a Young People's Division. Through a Young People's Council made up of representatives from the church school, Christian Endeavor and other organizations for young people, they hope to correlate their work so that fine things may be done for all the young people of the church. They will meet separately on Sunday morning for their worship service and hope the young people of the church will come to church school in the morning and to Christian Endeavor in the evening. In this way the work of Sunday morning and evening will be so planned as not to overlap, but to supplement and strengthen the other.

HERE AND THERE.

The young people of Pomona and Interlachen helped to put on pageants in their churches in a splendid way at Christmas time.

The Lake Worth Young People's Society has had a fine diamond baseball team all year. They play at night on a field which they, with the other church teams in Lake Worth, made.

The Young People's Class of Tampa Church School recently had an excellent picture of the group in the Tampa daily papers. The Christian Endeavor Society there has had some fine World Friendship programs recently.

The Lake Helen Society has been doing a unique thing recently in their weekly meetings in the use of interesting subjects with mimeographed programs and questions for discussion. These have been conducted by the minister, Rev. A. G. Lyons.

The Jacksonville Christian Endeavorers held a banquet last Friday, February 3rd, with eighty-two present.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND THE CHURCH TODAY.

By DORA BYRONS, Pomona, Fla.

(Given at Orange City Young People's Conference.)

Perhaps the first thing one would notice in the subject, "Young People and the Church Today," is the word "Today"—Young People and the Church TODAY!

In the yesterday of church history, the middle ages, for example, little was offered to young people in the church aside from regular clerical service or service within monastery walls. Thousands of young men closed themselves away from all the interests and pleasures of the world to devote their lives to the learned and religious pursuits of a monastery. But aside from this, which is not especially attractive to Protestant young people today, the ancient church gave little and asked little of its young people.

The same is true in the yesterday of our own Protestant religion in the United States. The Puritans with their rigid code of conventions and their lengthy hell-fire sermons presented a picture of the church which we think probably lacked in its appeal to young people. Sincere and worthy of all respect they were, yet we question the place of young people in the Puritan church.

As the years passed the church gradually adapted itself to changing customs and ideals, until today, of all ages, we have a church that can offer much to young people, and in turn needs young people to carry out its work.

Our church can offer us the opportunity for worship, inspiration to noble living, instruction in the will of God, and true Christian fellowship.

Young people today, as never before, are constantly coming in contact with those who are ready to sniff and laugh at religion, and to say that they have no need of these things that a church can offer us. Especially in colleges do we find many of these, proving, it seems to me that a little knowledge is a dangerous thing for many.

I was talking with a young lady the other day who was rather gloomy and despondent over everything in general. She seemed to be speaking mostly about how narrow and limited her scope of life was. "There is so much in life I am missing," she said, several times. Finally I said, "Well, I know one thing you are missing. That is a church, and some kind of religious interest." Her answer was an immediate "No," that she did not feel any need for religion at all.

She continued to wonder what she could do to drive off life's boredom, and I continued to wonder if perhaps, after all, she didn't need the church and what it could offer her.

As young people who have found that we want the church as part of our lives, we might wonder what are our obligations in the church. Perhaps the foremost are to live a good life and to be of service to our fellowmen. Other duties of young people as church members might be such definite ones as supporting the church financially in accordance with ability, aiding in the spread of the Gospel by contributions or personal influence, attending worship services, and helping in any work of the church, whether it be in Young People's organizations, children's bands, choirs, women's societies, or wherever the abilities of young people are needed.

Living a good life to the extent of our ability is an obligation that offers many problems to young people in the church today. Many are asking: "What is meant by an upright life? Is there such a thing as living a Christian life? What is Christianity?" Some one has defined it thus:

"In the home, it is kindness.
In business, it is honesty.
In society, it is courtesy.
In work, it is thoroughness.
In play, it is fairness.
Toward the fortunate, it is congratulations.
Toward the unfortunate, it is pity.
Toward the weak, it is help.
Toward the wicked, it is resistance.
Toward the strong, it is trust.
Toward the penitent, it is forgiveness.
Toward God, it is reverence and love."

Service to others, perhaps the keynote of the Christian Church, offers its challenge to young as well as to old. Jesus himself exemplified the religion of brotherly love when he went about among the people healing and helping. There are today numberless ways for the church to "touch the leper." Chances of service to others are always about us, chances to help in the little every-day things of life, both material and spiritual, and chances to do our part in great world-wide projects. We, as young people, must meet the challenge of service to our fellowmen.

And throughout our church work, whatever it may be, I know of no better lines for Christian youth to treasure than those from the famous poem, "Renaissance," written by Edna St. Vincent Millay, when herself a very young woman:

"Oh, God, I cried, no dark disguise
Can ever hereafter hide from me
Thy radiant identity.
Thou canst not move across the grass
But my quick eyes will see thee pass,
Nor speak, however silently,
But my hushed voice will answer thee.
I know the patch that tells thy way
Through the cool eve of every day.
God, I can push the grass apart
And lay my fingers on thy heart.
The world stands out on either side
No wider than the heart is wide.
Above the earth is stretched the sky
No higher than the soul is high.
The heart can push the sea and land
Farther away on either hand.
The soul can split the sky in two
And let the face of God shine through."

"How Can We Make Christ Attractive to New Americans."—Acts 2:1-11.

Daily Readings for this Week.

Monday—"Preach Christ." Acts 8:5-8.
Tuesday—"Power of Example." I. Thess. 1:5-8.
Wednesday—"Live Good Lives." I. Thess. 4:9-12.
Thursday—"Interpreting Our Hope." I. Peter 1:3-5.
Friday—"Interpreting God." Acts 17:22-31.
Saturday—"A Life of Love." John 13:35.

Appropriate hymns will include: "Christ for the World We Sing," "Jesus Shall Reign Where'er the Sun," "Jesus Saves," "The Morning Light is Breaking," "O Zion, Haste," "From Greenland's Icy Mountains," "The Whole Wide World for Jesus," and "We've a Story to Tell to the Nations."

The topic for tonight is not exactly applicable to most of our Southern churches because there are very few new Americans in this area. More foreign people are leaving our country now than are coming. This topic can mean a great deal if the emphasis is placed on making Christ attractive to the groups in each local community.

Young people in Florida have been interested in dressing up one of their members as an American Indian, and another member seriously undertaking to present the Christian message to the American Indian.

Sunday School Lesson

JESUS SHOWS HIS POWER.

LESSON IX—FEBRUARY 26, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "For I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to guard that which I have committed unto him against that day."—II. Tim. 1:12.

LESSON TEXT: Mark 4:35-41; 5:1-8; 15:18-20.

Mark wrote his gospel with the Roman world in mind. Rome emphasized power. Mark's gospel, therefore, sets forth Jesus as a man of power. In today's lesson, Mark recounts two incidents in which Jesus shows his power, in the first place, over nature and natural forces; in the second place, over demoniac powers.

This gospel which emphasizes power has a place also in our modern life, for power is a great word with us. In fact, this thing called technocracy which we hear so much about, insists that we shall measure things by their power instead of in terms of dollars and cents. The point in all this, however, is that now as then, we need to understand that back of and beyond all other forms of power there is spiritual power. The power of God in Jesus Christ is power in the highest degree.

Jesus and Natural Powers.

The Master had had a busy day. He was completely worn out. As soon as he got into the boat which was to take him to the other side of the lake, he curled up in the stern of the boat, put his head in a pillow, and soon fell fast asleep. So soundly did he sleep that he did not know that a sudden storm had swept down on the sea, had turned the usually calm surface into a frenzy of tumultuous waves that threatened at every minute to swamp the little boat in which they all were riding. It was not until his disciples, in despair, awoke him that he knew anything about the situation. He arose, rebuked the wind, and said unto the sea, "Peace, be still." And immediately there was a great calm, the wind having ceased. And if we are mystified at all this, the disciples themselves were like unto us. They were fearful, and plainly amazed at the whole procedure.

What is the significance of it all? What does it all mean? To those who have difficulty in accepting the story, it needs to be said that any significance which this story may have is to be found in the Unique Personality who is the central figure in it. It is true that we are not dealing with an ordinary event in nature when a man speaks to wind and wave, and they obey him. But we are not dealing with an ordinary MAN. Jesus of Nazareth stands to this hour as the supreme manifestation in history of the Ultimate Power, whom we call God, and he was its most highly accredited Agent. If this simple narrative staggers our belief, no less does his own character and the record of his redemptive efficacy as evidenced in historical vents which cannot be gainsaid. Underlying the story is the eternal truth that God, who is Spirit, is over and beyond natural forces. No enterprise that has him as a part of it will have to give way to natural forces. The stars in their courses, the winds and the waves, in the long processes of time, are subject to his will, and are servants to his purposes. And those of us who put their trust in him are safe with a God like that. Natural forces cannot do any ultimate harm to a man who has the Spirit of the eternal God in him.

Jesus and Demoniac Powers.

As he saw Jesus exercising his power over natural powers in the first part of the lesson, so we see him now exercising his power over demoniac powers. We do not know the exact nature of the Gadarene's affliction, but it was probably a form of insanity, mental unbalance, which had become violent so that he was a menace both to himself and to others. In Jesus' day they said such a person was possessed of demons, or possessed of the devil, and we cannot improve much on that description, although we may give it another name. Here was a man out of his right mind, violently mad, dominated by evil and powerful impulses and forces, a divided personality unable to do what he knew he ought to do.

"For he said unto them: Come out of the man, thou unclean spirit." Jesus, by the word of his power, drove the unclean spirit out of the man, so that when the people who came to Jesus saw the man, he was clothed—he had been naked and thus indecent—and in his right mind. Calmness, decency, serenity, where before there had been violence, indecency, and madness. And again the people were afraid—they knew they were in the presence of no mere man. Truly this man was the Son of God.

This miracle needs no comment. It has its modern witness in every church and every community. Jesus Christ has given abundant testimony through the centuries that he has power over unclean and evil spirits. He still has power to clothe people in their right minds. He can calm troubled hearts as he calmed troubled seas. He has power over spiritual forces as he had power over natural forces.

"Go home to thy friends and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee, and hath had compassion on thee." The place to start to show what Christ has done for you, the place to witness for him, is right where you are. One does not have to go to China to be a missionary; one can witness for Christ right where one is. And any one who lives a Christian life in his home and with his friends will not have much difficulty in living a Christian life anywhere else.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

If there are different social groups such as land owners and tenants, or office workers and day laborers in your church, you have an opportunity to consider what barriers may have arisen between these groups and to try to remove any un-Christian attitude that may be found.

Certain labor groups have taken an attitude of opposition to the church and its program. It would be very interesting and probably helpful to have one of this group appear on your program, and state frankly how these laborers feel concerning the church.

This is an opportune time to have a foreigner speak to your Christian Endeavor Society, telling of the way the Chinese, Japanese or other groups this person represents, feel toward Christianity.

Missionaries tell us that it is difficult to influence many of the educated natives of India and elsewhere because they know of our superiority over colored races. An African chief is reported to have objected to Christianity because of what so-called Christian nations did in the World War, as reported to him by his son.

Following the World War, Japanese youth turned toward peace. In 1924 our nation passed a law keeping Japanese out of this country, and one result seems to be that Japanese youths are turning back to the old war practices.

Christian nations have demanded such concessions in China and have protected this capital with gunboats that many Chinese have turned against Christianity and multitudes of them have accepted Communism.

Is there anything that young people can do to make Christianity attractive to the peoples of the world in which we live?

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

"The opening of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."—Psalm 119:130.

MONDAY.

LIVE WELL.

"Work not for food which perisheth, but for the food which abideth unto eternal life, which the Son of Man shall give unto you."—Jno. 6:27.

Live well today, today is thine alone;
Tomorrow is not, and may never be;
And yesterday is no longer thine own;
But now belongs to thee.

Then take the task that's nearest to thy hand,
And do it earnestly with all thy might;
Though men may cavel or misunderstand,
Heed not their blame or slight.

Work is the daily worship of thy hands,
The service thou dost render to mankind
Must be the measure of thy worth; it stands
The index of thy mind.

Thus, live each day, and so thy lowly life
Shall be to all around a beacon bright,
Whose beams shall lead men upward through
The strife,
To heaven's pure joy and light.

—Lawton.

Prayer—Our Father, who art in heaven, thou art our light and strength. Give us this day our daily bread, and strengthen our spirit and our hands to render unto thee a daily service.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

THINGS THAT MAKE STRONG.

"It is not by might nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord."—Zach. 4:6.

What makes the city great and strong?

Not agriculture's graceful strength,
Neither streets' extended length;
But men who see things that's wrong,
And give their lives to make them right,
And turn its darkness into light.

What makes a city so full of power?

Not wealth's display, nor titled fame,
Not fashion's loudly boasted claim,
But men who are rich in nature's dower,
Whose hearts, though humble, still are great,
Because of service to the State.

What makes a city that men can love?

Not things that charm our outward sense,
Not gross display of opulence,
But right, that wrong cannot remove,
And truth that faces every fraud,
And smites it in the name of God.

This makes a city that shall stand,

A light upon a nation's hill,
A voice that evil cannot still,
A source of blessing to the land;
Its strength not steel, nor stone, nor wood,
But justice and brotherhood.

—Chas. R. Sheldon.

WEDNESDAY.

HOW TO ENJOY WORSHIP.

"Exalt him in the assembly of the people and praise him in the seat of the elders."—Ps. 107:32.

"They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles."—Prov. 40:31.

1. Please do not stand in the aisles and visit while the ushers are seating the people.

2. Enter the church reverently, praying for a blessing as you come in.

3. Have a part in the service of giving. If the church is worth a dollar to you, don't express it with a nickel in the basket.

4. Sing with heart and voice. And don't look as if you had lost your best friend as you say "Amen."

5. Please don't talk or whisper during the service. Remember others.

6. Pray that the result of the service today may be the salvation of sinners.

7. Make it a joyful service. We are not burying anyone.

8. Help the preacher by thinking, if he says anything worth while.

9. Carry the spirit of the service home with you, and discuss the good of it across the table for the help of yourselves and your family.

—Chas. M. Sheldon.

Prayer—O Lord God, our Redeemer, give us thy grace whereby we may offer unto thee at the sanctuary a service pleasing in thy sight.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE NARROW WAY.

"Straight is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."—Matt. 7:14.

1. It is better to be narrow in your religion than broad in your irreligion.

2. It is better to have health and a clear conscience with a small bank account than indigestion and remorse with a big one.

3. It is better to work regularly at a daily task than to play irregular at a daily dissipation.

4. It is better to stick to the platitudes of every-day goodness than to lose your way over the brilliant philosophy of the newest vice.

5. It is better to continue to live happily with your wife when she begins to lose her beauty than to lose all your happiness chasing after it elsewhere.

6. It is better to be happy and live poor than to be miserable and die rich.

7. It is better to be called a fool for being a Christian than to be one because you are not a Christian.

8. It is better for a nation to suffer temporary loss for peace than to suffer permanent loss for war.

9. It is better to live for a principle than to die for a price.

10. It is better to sit at the feet of Christ than to stand by the throne of the devil.

—Chas. M. Sheldon.

Prayer—O God, make us as the good tree that bears its fruit in season. Daily we come to thee and daily we walk with thee. Forbid that we shall ever depart from the path of right and rectitude.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE GRAND LIFE.

"The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament declareth his handiwork."—Ps. 19:1.

"It is a grand thing to live—to open the eyes in the morning and look out upon the world, to drink in the pure air and enjoy the sweet sunshine, to feel the pulse bound and the being thrill with the consciousness of strength and power in every nerve; it is a good thing simply to be alive, and it is a good world to live in, in spite of the abuse we are fond of giving it."

Prayer—O Lord, speak to our souls from thy world about us. Open our ears to hear, and make obedience our watchword. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

ONE'S OWN LAW.

"Law is not made for a righteous man."—Read I. Tim. 1:3-11.

President Hutchins of the University of Chicago said to his graduates this year that "the first duty of a college is to organize itself so that a student who wishes to become a scholar will not have insuperable obstacles in his way." Those obstacles, he went on to say, are the hard-and-fast regulations of curriculum, recitation, and examination, preventing that free choice of studies and investigations which is the very heart of true scholarship. "In any well-organized college," he said with amazing candor, "there probably is not a single regulation governing the curriculum that a really excellent student should not break."

Note that "really excellent." College laws are made for the poor and average student, and are a heavy detriment to the fine student. All laws, as Paul said, are made for the unrighteous and not for the righteous. Righteousness has a right to freedom from laws. A man whose will is always for the good, the true, and the beautiful, needs no rules.

It should be every Christian's proud ambition to unite himself so firmly with the thought and desire of God that he possesses God's perfect freedom and is his own law.

Prayer—Lord of all liberty, we exult in thee. Enfranchise us, we pray thee, into thy perfect freedom. As Christ makes us free, we shall be free indeed.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

DISARMAMENT.

"Blessed are the peacemakers; for they shall be called sons of God."—Read Matt. 5:1-12.

President Morgan of Antioch College says that "military disarmament cannot be effective unless accompanied by disarmament in thought and feeling." He points to the students of West Point, virtually all believing in the necessity for war and preparation for war, and the students of the Friends' college at Swarthmore, practically all believing that war is avoidable and wrong. The first step in preparation for war is to put the people's minds in a warlike state. The first step if we want world peace, is to make peaceful the people's minds.

Every Christian is to be a peacemaker; that is, a maker, a manufacturer, of peace. If we live in a quarrelsome family, a distracted neighborhood, a disturbed church, it is our business as Christians to create peaceful conditions. There are chemical agents whose chief usefulness is that they promote chemical combinations. In their presence diverse elements will unite that never will unite without them. Such a combining agency is Christianity, and it is our business to bring it to bear.

Prayer—Dear Lord, we love thee, and love our brothers, and we pray for grace to shed abroad thy love among men. May we, wherever we go, this day and all days, make peace. In thy name, O Prince of Peace.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

ONLY SEVEN DIVORCES IN TWO THOUSAND MARRIAGES.

In a conference on "The Conservation of Home Life," held in Washington, D. C., on January 11th, under the auspices of the Washington Federation of Churches and the Federal Council's Committee on Marriage and the Home, Dr. Z. Barney Phillips, Rector of Epiphany Episcopal Church, reviewed his experience of twenty-five years in interviewing and counselling all couples who have come to him to be united in wedlock. Dr. Phillips reported that in the course of this period he has married about two thousand couples, and that there are only seven divorces in this total number.

If the average divorce rate for the country as a whole during this entire period had prevailed among the couples married by Dr. Phillips, there would have been not seven, but approximately three hundred divorces among them. In other words, among this large number of couples having pre-marital instruction by this outstanding clergyman, the divorce rate was less than one-fortieth of the general rate for the country at large!

Others are working in this field and are achieving very gratifying results. The members of the Federal Council's Committee on Marriage and the Home, hope that in the course of time all ministers will recognize it as an opportunity and a duty to render this kind of service to the young couples who come to them for assistance in establishing new families.

THE WINSOMENESS OF JESUS.

By REV. A. G. AXTELL.

Pilate said: "See there is the man!"—Jno. 19:5.

Paul said: "The love of Christ overmasters us."—II. Cor. 5:14.

Near the beginning of the present century a letter was discovered in the library of the Lazarist Fathers in Rome, purporting to have been written by one Publius Lentulus, an officer in Pilate's court. It reads:

"I have learned, O Caesar, that you desired some information regarding this virtuous man called Jesus, the Christ, whom the people consider a prophet, and his disciples as the Son of God, Creator of heaven and earth.

"It is a fact that every day one hears wonderful things told of him. To be brief, he makes the dead rise and he heals the sick.

"He is a man of medium size, whose appearance indicates great sweetness and such an amount of dignity that one feels in looking at him that he must love him, and at the same time fear him.

"His hair, down to his ears, is of the color of ripe walnuts and hangs down upon his shoulders as a light and blonde mass; it is parted in the middle, according to the fashion of the Nazarenes. His beard, of the same color as his hair, is curly and though not very long is parted in the middle like his hair.

"His eyes are rather severe and shine like the sun; it is impossible for anyone to look him in the face.

"When he scolds, he inspires fear, but very soon he himself begins to shed tears. Even in his most severe moods he is affable and benevolent. It is said that no one has ever seen him laugh, and that he sheds tears very often.

"Everyone finds that his conversation is agreeable and attractive. He is not seen very often in public, and when he appears he carries himself modestly.

"His manners are very distinguished; he is even beautiful. It is perhaps because his mother is the best looking woman in these parts.

"If you wish to see him, Caesar, as you wrote me once, write me and I shall send him to you.

"Although he has never pursued any studies, he is well up in every branch of knowledge. He goes around barefoot and without any head cover.

"Many people make fun of him when they see him coming, but as soon as they are in his presence, they tremble and admire him.

"The Hebrews say that they have never seen a man like him, nor heard teachings like those he imparts.

"Many believe that he is a god and others assert that he is thine enemy, O Caesar.

"These haughty Jews give me much trouble. They say he has never given trouble to anybody, but that, on the contrary, he tries to make everyone happy."

This pencil sketch, as it were, of Jesus, is interesting, at least, and it may be authentic. At the same time if true as a whole it may not be true in detail, since a part of it at least is hearsay evidence.

There have been many attempts to portray Jesus, and I think without exception they have been suggested by the character of Jesus as interpreted by the painter. In some he is sad; in others there is lack of definite expression; none, so far as I know, portray a smiling countenance. Yet, if we read his words, we cannot doubt that he had a sense of humor, and it is hard to believe that he never smiled or laughed.

Be that as it may, he is a winsome person. He won the allegiance of men, the devotion of women, and the love of children.

He knew men as no other person has known them. Undoubtedly it was after some acquaintance that he gave the invitation, but when the moment came all he had to say to James and John was, "Come"; and they left their life occupation and followed him. And so it was with Simon. He nicknamed Simon and called him Peter—a Rock; which was a recognition of his character and a prophecy. And he nicknamed James and John, Boanerges, that is, Sons of Thunder. John is generally known as the beloved disciple; Jesus loved him and John reciprocated that love; but we must remember that John was a boanerg, a son of thunder. Their mutual affection was that which one strong man has for another.

Some say that Christianity is effeminate. They have only to study the associates of Jesus and trace the history of Christian missions with open mind to discover that such is not the case. Christianity is not a matter of sex; and the sooner we recognize the fact the better. This is shown by incidents which give evidence that while Jesus chose men for his apostles, there was a group of women who accompanied this little band and ministered to them of their substance. Jesus was at home with Martha and Mary. He made to a woman—and to no one else—the plain statement that he was the Messiah. Jesus was man enough to talk to men and women without distinction; and when occasion called and his conversation was with women, it was without sentiment and without scandal.

He did not have to seek out children. It would seem that they were always about him. Mothers brought them; and when Jesus wanted to teach the apostles that these little ones belonged to the kingdom of heaven, he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them and blessed them; and when he wished to teach them humility, a child was at hand to serve as an example.

Christianity is without age or sex or condition. It is not only universal in the sense that it is world-wide, but also in the sense that it meets every human need and answers to the longing of every human soul. And the reason why the religion of Jesus does meet all at every stage of life's experience is because of the personality of its founder.

But how shall we represent him? Leonardo da Vinci portrays him with a sad countenance—meditative and downcast; Hoffman by an open countenance which attracts us by its light and suggests that the light is from within; Holman Hunt presents a picture of divine and majestic humility—the resurrected Christ knocking at the door of the human heart—a door which must be opened from within. Bruce Barton would have us believe that Jesus was brawny and athletic. Perhaps he was; but I confess that this seems to me at least a wrong emphasis. Very likely he was a strong man, since he won strong men, though that does not necessarily follow in its physical sense; and we may be sure that his winsomeness was something more than physical.

Peter and James and John had seen other strong men: John the Baptist was one of them; but they followed none of these except John the Baptist, and him only for a little while. The fact is that no single conception can compass all the aspects of Jesus' attractiveness. He must have been, as it were, an epitome of all that is best in our humanity. There was in him the gladness and joy of a happy people, free from care; the seriousness of those who are in earnest; the serenity of those who dwell in peace with all men and the world; the power of those who endure; and the winsomeness of all that is beautiful and sublime in personal character.

Strange, is it not? Strange, but true, that God does not praise himself in the Old Testament nor Christ in the New? God says, "I am"; Christ says, "I and the Father are one." But neither says, "I am good; I am desirable." They leave that to those who have learned. Their conquering of the world is the victory of attracting men to themselves. It is sheer winsomeness.

Jesus says: "Everyone whom the Father gives me will come to me, and him who comes to me I will never drive away." (John 6:37.)

Here we enter into a mystery. Why are some drawn to Jesus and others not drawn to him? We can allege no fault of Jesus. He was in the true sense of the word, winsome. We may, perhaps, lay the fact not all are drawn to him in part to the failure of the representatives of Jesus. And here with humiliation and shame we must confess that we not only fall far short of the glory of God, but that we fail disgracefully to reflect the character of Jesus in such a way as to draw others to him.

But there is another aspect of this saying. Can it mean that there is such a thing as foreordination; that some come to Jesus and others do not come by some fatal choice not their own? There is something of mystery here. Yet there is a fact involved within the saying that is no mystery.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Our good women are getting busy on Easter dresses. It has always been a joy to the good women to do this special work each year to make our children happy on Easter Sunday morning.

Is it a pretty sight to see them march off from the buildings to Sunday School all dressed in a new Easter dress? Come and see! It will fill your heart with a joy you have not experienced before. We had a good letter from Illinois last week, wanting the names and ages of the children. The Ladies' Aid Society in that church wanted to have a part in making them happy this year. Every mother should feel a keen interest in the work here because all the children here are some mothers' children.

A good mother brought two beautiful little girls to see us a few days ago, and asked us to take them for her. Not to just get them off on the Orphanage, and relieve her of the responsibility; but that they might get the proper training. They were twins, six years old. They had beautiful brown eyes, black hair and were perfect brunettes. They wanted to stay.

Beautiful children, just in the plastic age, when the impressions are made that will follow them through life. They were bright and intelligent, and how we wish we could take them. The mother had no support except her labor to make a living for them. She was willing to pay all she could out of her small salary after paying her board. She said she had to leave them through the day with a colored girl to look after them, and she knew something of the training a colored girl would be capable of giving. She has done her best for two years, since the death of her husband, to keep them with her, but she had reached the point where she realized it was hard to rear little children with just a colored girl to do most of the training. As she talked to me and I watched the little girls playing in the office, I could not help but look in the future fifteen years from now, and wonder what their future might be if left to a colored girl to train.

May the kind Father bless our church folks that they may be able to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction.

LIBERTY, VANCE.

Liberty Christian Church enjoyed the great pleasure of having Dr. L. E. Smith, President of Elon College, preach on Sunday, January 22nd. He brought a wonderful Bible message that more than delighted his audience.

On Sunday, January 29th, we enjoyed another rare treat, in having Rev. J. C. Cummings of Hemp, N. C., to fill the pulpit for both morning and evening services. Sunday morning, Mr. Cummings spoke from the subject, "The Word of God is Right," wherein he proved that if everything else failed God's Word was right, and would stand forever. He emphasized the truth as set forth in the Word, of the eternal saving power of the blood. "When I see the blood, I will pass over you," was God's promise to Moses, not when the lamb was secured or prepared, but when it was applied.

While Jesus Christ, the Lamb of God, gave his precious blood for all, it is only after that blood is applied that one is saved, and through his atoning blood one may be saved with an everlasting and eternal salvation.

At the evening service the subject was "The One Thing God Told You Not to Do, and You Are Doing." "Be not conformed to the things of this world." Mr. Cummings said all of us are conforming to world system, working for fame, honor, wealth, pleasure and material things that soon pass away. In this way the pulpit had lost its power, the church has lost its power; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof.

We were grateful for the privilege of having him visit our church. MRS. R. J. NEWTON.

THE SUN'S PULPIT.

I have been in city mission work; and I testify to you that the most disheartening thing about it is the lack of response. I have seen the saloon in operation and witnessed the effects of the brothel. I have seen poverty in its most sordid ugliness, and ignorance in its most hideous aspects, and sin in its burning shame. Against all these do city missions use every force at their command and they use them with skill and devotion. When all is done, what is the result? Too often—and we say it with a sense of defeat—too often, there is no response. Men choose ugliness and sin. They revel in them and despise better things. When God, through his ministers, offers them "beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness," they turn away. They will have none of it. And the fault is not in the representatives of religion, surely not always so. I have seen Salvation Army lasses visiting saloons; and they commanded respectful treatment. But did the frequenters of the saloon turn from their drink? A few here and there, yes; plucked as it were as brands from the burning. But only a few.

All that is noble and good and pure is offered men and they somehow do not answer to these things. It would sometimes seem that they cannot. At least they do not. And there is the mystery and tragedy of it.

Yet such things may be said not only of those who dwell in city slums, but of many who live in far better circumstances. It is a wholesome question to ask ourselves: How do we respond to that winsome personality called Jesus? When our eyes behold "the king in his beauty," do we respond?

There he stands, the figure of the ages, in all the glory and majesty of his eternal loveliness, yet with a gentle and smiling winsomeness unmatched and indescribable. Are we drawn to him; or do we reject him?

In one of the most significant hours in the life of that one whose every hour was fraught with meaning, the Greeks came to him. The Greeks were a people given to beauty. They had beheld the majesty of mountains, the entrancingly varied shoreline of their indented peninsula, the multiple changing colors of seascapes and clouds. They had developed architecture so that the trees of the forest were represented by columns and the sky by ornate roofs. Their marble statues of the gods seemed to breathe the breath of life; their paintings, if the few which have come down to us are representative, were exquisite and true; their literature was an art, and they made an art of living.

These Greeks were attracted to Jesus; for in him they found that supreme beauty, the beauty of character. Then Jesus rejoiced. This people, given to art, saw in him the sublime expression of art—in what he was. It was then that Jesus announced the supreme act which was to crown his life of beauty; in itself an ugly thing; but as experienced by Jesus, as glorified by Jesus, a thing of eternal beauty. He said: "And I, if I am lifted up from the earth, will draw all men to me." He said this to indicate the kind of death he would die.

It was a Greek—Aristotle—the founder of science, probably the greatest mind known to history, except the mind of Jesus—for in sheer intellect Jesus was supreme among men—it was the Greek, Aristotle, who said that God created the world by attracting it.

Out of chaos God created the cosmos by his steadying, almighty hand; he made the stars and set them in their courses, the planets and made them to move in their orbits. The galaxies in boundless and magnificent array beyond the comprehension of man are the work of his power, till we have an ordered universe. With respect to the earth, all the marvelous works of what we call nature—all trees and flowers and animal life, and humanity with all its manifold interests and deeds and hopes, are brought forth from chaotic mass by the attracting power of God.

Jesus proposed a similar and a higher task for himself. He would gain this humanity, all scarred and marred as it was and is by ugliness and sin, through his winsomeness; and the supreme expression of his winsome power was the Cross. That was and is the ultimate. Somehow our humanity has so interpreted Calvary, and we are not mistaken. That which was supreme to him must be supreme to the world.

He said, in this very conversation, "Now comes judgment upon this world; now will the Prince of this world be driven out." The reign of ugly-ness and sin is over; for sin is ugliness and ugliness is sin. "And I, if I am lifted up from the earth, will draw all men to me." The crucifixion of Jesus is the supreme expression of his winsomeness.

Do we respond? Do we respond to "The Godhead veiled in suffering, for our sins; an unimagined splendor poured on earth, in sacrifice supreme?"

Or, do we turn away from that sacrificial loveliness to the weak and beggarly elements of the world, and thus crucify him afresh and put him to an open shame?

"God grant that we all, with open face, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, may be changed into the same image, from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." (II. Cor. 3:18.)

SHARPE.

Mrs. Ada Thomas Sharpe, widow of Jesse Sharpe, died at her home near Haw River, N. C., December 30, 1932, aged 66 years, 4 months and 27 days. She is survived by three daughters and three sons. She was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Anderson Thomas and was related to Joe Thoma, the "White Pilgrim." Her life was a quiet, trustful, home life. She loved her home, her family and her friends. She gave evidence in life, in song and in words, as she neared the other shore, that her trust was in Jesus Christ.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer at Long's Chapel Christian Church, and her body was laid to rest in the church cemetery. May our heavenly Father comfort those who mourn.

P. H. FLEMING.

DREWRY

James S. Drewry was born November 3, 1861, and after years of intense suffering, died at his home in Wakefield, Va., December 11, 1932, at the age of 71 years, 1 month and 8 days.

On March 8, 1883, he was married to Miss Alice R. Judkins, and to this union were born six children, 4 boys and 2 girls.

Soon after marriage, both he and his wife united with Burton's Grove Church but when the Wakefield Church was organized in 1906, they transferred their membership there, entering as charter members.

On June 12, 1915, Bro. Drewry was elected to the office of Deacon, which office he held to the end.

The funeral was conducted from the home December 12th, by the writer, assisted by Dr. W. D. Harward and Rev. W. A. Orser, pastor of Wakefield M. E. Church and the body was placed in a vault in the local cemetery.

He is survived by his wife, one daughter, Mrs. H. W. Boothe, Newport News, four sons, H. J. Drewry, Waverly; B. G. Drewry, Richmond; T. M. and C. W. Drewry, Wakefield, 8 grandchildren, and 2 half-brothers, N. J. Holloway. Waverly, and Alley Holloway, Dendron.

In his active days he was loyal to his church, by his attendance and support, and to his God was he true.

His suffering was borne with patience and the end came quietly and peaceful, thus another splendid follower of Christ went to his reward.

Millionaires.—

There were 513 millionaires in the United States in 1929, 38 of whom had an income of as much as $5,000,000. In the past year that number had shrunk to 75. Indications are that the government will collect only half as much income tax during this year as it did in 1930, notwithstanding the fact that the exemptions have been lowered.

Amos Comes Home.—

On Friday and Saturday of this week "Amos," in private life Freeman F. Gosden, with his friend, Charles J. Correll, better known as "Andy," will visit his old home for the first time in many years. During their visit in Richmond, these comedians, who have brought laughs to millions over the radio, will personally appear at a local theatre. In a telephone interview with a local paper, "Amos" said: "My performances in Richmond are going to give me the biggest 'kick' of any I have ever done." Arrangements have been made for a national hook-up over WRVA, the local broadcasting station, that there may be no interruption in the regular radio programs given by these artists at 7 and 11 o'clock each evening.

Free Seed.—

Contrary to the usual belief, the trying years through which we have recently passed have not increased the use of vegetable seed by the small user. In other words, in spite of the plant-a-garden idea, the use of vegetable garden varieties of seed has shown small increase. On the other hand there has been quite a remarkable increase in the purchase of flower seed. One large seed dealer, in commenting upon this, said that during his father's life-time it was customary in sending out vegetable seed to send a couple of packages of flower seed, with the instructions: "Plant these in your vegetable garden." He now thinks the time may be ripe to send one or two packages of vegetable seeds with the order for flowers, with the recommendation that they be planted in the flower garden.

Sentenced to Eighty Years.—

Pleading guilty on four charges, Giuseppe Zangara, who made an unsuccessful attempt to assassinate President-elect Franklin D. Roosevelt, and who wounded five of Mr. Roosevelt's party, was sentenced to eighty years in prison. Asked if he had any regrets as to the shooting, his reply was that he was sorry that his weapon had missed the intended mark. He had no animosity for Mayor Cermak or the others, but explained that he "no like the way capitalists take all money," and considering the President-elect as their representative, decided to put him out of the way. He disdained to plead that he was insane, and stated that if given the opportunity he would again attempt the assassination. We offer no brief for this lone criminal, but if he be sane, he is evidently the product of the insidious propaganda which has been spreading throughout the country during the past ten years. He calls, by this dastardly attempt, attention to the crying need for cleaner politics, a cleaner press, and a cleaner and better citizenship than our country can now boast.

Non-Inflammable Gasoline.—

At the instance of the United States Naval Bureau of Aeronautics, there has been perfected a gasoline which is said to be non-inflammable. Even though a lighted match were dropped into the gasoline tank, we are told that it would be snuffed out rather than the expected explosion occurring. The construction of the modern automobile with the gasoline tank in the rear, tends to minimize the danger from gasoline, but with the motor boat or launch conditions are different, and the accidental ignition of the gasoline tank is usually followed with dire consequences. The airplane has also had its difficulties on account of gasoline's explosive nature, and it is the habit of fliers to cut off their ignition systems when compelled to make forced landings. It is with the lighter-than-air craft that the demand for a safe gasoline has been most insistent. Non-inflammable helium has almost entirely replaced hydrogen as a lifting medium in such craft, especially in the United States. But the United States Navy authorities have felt that large quantities of gasoline aboard its fighting ships was a source of great danger. The goal sought for and apparently reached was a fuel which would be free from the danger of accidental ignition under normal temperature and under present operating conditions. The new gas is said to be also superior to the best aviation gas of the explosive type.

Bank Concentration.—

"Americans fondly believe that because we have 20,000 banks in contrast to some 17 banks in England, 12 Federal Reserve Banks to one central bank in England, there is no concentration of bank funds here. And once again," Business Week tells us, "the year-end banking figures have belied this belief." These figures show that ten banks, constituting one-twentieth of one per cent of the banks of the United States, have over one-fifth of the deposits of the commercial banks of the country, while one-half of one per cent of the banks have over half of the total deposits. Concentration of bank deposits has occurred in the larger cities of the United States, and during the past ten years more than 10,000 small town banks have been wiped out of existence. The small bank, composed of local business men and directed by these same men, once filled, and filled well, the need for which it was created, but it is now becoming a thing of the past. Our authority continues: "Whether we like it or not, this situation has changed. In place of the unit store, we now have chain stores; in place of the small independent manufacturing plant, we now have the local link in a vast industrial enterprise; in place of the small utility, we have the town served by what is likely to be a region-wide utility. The hotel, the newspaper, the garage, and scores of local enterprises are now managed by employees of larger corporations, the corporations themselves doing their financial business in the industrial centers. . . . This changing tendency in American life in itself is largely responsible for the concentration of banking assets, law or no law, and it cannot be checked by making branch banking illegal."

Repeal Measure Passed On to States.—

Following the earlier action of the Senate, the House of Representatives, passed the resolution offered by the upper body on Monday of this week by a vote of 289 to 121. This was sixteen votes more than the two-thirds necessary to pass the measure. After having been asleep for the past several years, dry forces have during the past few months been most rudely awakened, and, cornered, Edward B. Dunford, counsel for the Anti-Saloon League, declares that "the wet prohibition repeal program will be fought to a finish at the State capitals, before the people in the election of delegates, and in legal proceedings if necessary." In speaking against the resolution, Representative Christopherson of South Dakota, voiced the sentiment of the majority of the dry voters when he said: "The resolution might be in conformance with the Democratic platform, but I do not believe it is in conformance with the views of a majority of the people." While Representative Moore, of Ohio, stated that in the action taken, "we are going back a hundred years." On the other hand there were Representatives who voted for the resolution under what they considered a mandate from the voters of the United States, though they personally oppose the repeal. Realizing that this page should be devoted to the facts rather than to editorializing, one hesitates to offer opinions. Yet one cannot refrain from offering the suggestion that if the church people are really opposed to the liquor traffic, they should not sit idly by and allow its return. Despite the propaganda of a united wet press, backed by the dollars of those who would profit by the return of the saloon, it can only return by acquiescence on the part of the church. We are honestly of the opinion that there is no middle ground. It is the saloon with its attendant evils or prohibition with gradual lessening of the drink evil. The church must choose.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

The sage, when asked how it was that he had more wisdom than his fellows, replied: "Because I spent more on oil than they spent on wine."

Winston-Salem is reporting splendid progress with the organization of the new church. A building lot of large proportions has been bought and building plans for the first unit of the plan, which includes parsonage and church, is ready for the contractor. Rev. W. T. Scott is pastor.

Evidently the pastor of our Newport News Church has the upward look for himself and his flock. On one of his recent Sunday morning programs he had the following notice in plain print: "Wake up, sing up, preach up, pray up, pay up, stay up, and never give up, or let up or back up, or shut up, until the Cause of Christ and the World is built up."

Albemarle, N. C., is rejoicing in the fine service of Rev. Arthur Swartz, whom they called to their pastorate last fall. The church auditorium is crowded twice every Sunday and the Sunday School grows with increasing numbers every month. A full pre-Easter program is prepared, including a Pastor's Training Class for youth. Mr. Swartz expects to have a large increase in membership at Easter.

R. L. Leggett, former superintendent of the First Christian Sunday School at Richmond, Va., who was factory representative for the Perfection Stove Works, has been transferred to Albany, N. Y. Mr. Leggett occupies the same position in Albany that he formerly held in Richmond. His many friends miss him and his wife and little son, Warren, but they are sure to make friends in their new surroundings, and the loss which the Richmond church has sustained will be a gain for the one in Albany.

Rev. Arnold Slater, who has recently returned from England, where he went to visit his people last fall, is busy organizing his two churches at Cochran and Doerun, Ga. In his absence he was called to the pastorate of the Poplar Arbor Church at Roberta. This is a promising rural church with many young people active in church life. Much is expected of this group of people under the leadership of the new pastor. Both churches are to be congratulated on their choice of a minister. Cochran called Mr. Slater before he left for England last fall.

Miss Annie R. Campbell, Extension Worker for Georgia, concluded a three-months' program of work in Doerun with a very large Christian Life Conference for the churches of South Georgia January 28th and 29th. This was a very happy culmination of her work there, and a very happy beginning for the ministry of Rev. Arnold Slater as pastor of Poplar Arbor Church. Mr. Slater gave a thrilling sermon at the Sunday morning session. The conference was a huge success and the entertaining churches—New Light, W. C. Carpenter, minister, and Poplar Arbor—entertained splendidly. We thank you!

The Carolina Conference of Congregational and Christian Churches will hold its annual meeting at Elon College, May 2nd and 3rd, next. The officers are Rev. C. H. Rowland, president; Rev. William T. Scott, vice-president; Rev. Ruth Sergeant, secretary; M. J. Sweet, registrar and superintendent. Dr. W. C. Wicker is chairman of the Program Committee. A new constitution is being prepared for adoption which will more closely unite the two groups. Also during this meeting the Executive Committee of the Southern Convention will hold an informal meeting to consider further developments of the merging in the Southeast.

John Chapman, senior at Yale Divinity School has been called to become pastor of the Asheville Congregational Church to succeed Rev. J. Brainerd Thrall, D. D., eighty-year-old veteran who has been pastor here for nearly twenty years. Mr. Chapman is expecting to begin his pastorate about June 1st. He became acquainted with this church during the summer of 1932, when he was assigned to this field as a Student Summer Service worker. He instituted a progressive program for young people which gave the church new hope and aggressive workers pushed forward. Asheville is to be congratulated upon securing this stirring young man as its pastor.

It was quite fitting last Sunday night when the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., had planned to think through the question, "When Is Friendship Christian?" that about sixty sailors from the Navy Y. M. C. A. should be present as guests. All of the young people were the guests of the men of the Christian Temple at a Fellowship supper at 6 o'clock, during which time the sailors provided entertainment with Miss Frances Blackney at the piano. After an hour of worthwhile fellowship, the group adjourned to the young people's department rooms where Miss Susie Mae Toxey led the group to think of the things which make friendship Christian, emphasizing the best friendship which may be ours if we will only let him come into our lives—Jesus Christ.

The church at Jupiter, under the leadership of Rev. Frederick Held, is doing a most unusual and successful work with the young people. The pastor is Scoutmaster for the Jupiter Troop, and they recently held their first anniversary celebration. A Boy Scout family dinner was held with a large attendance and with Mr. Held as Toastmaster. The principle speaker was Mr. W. J. Von Behren, one of the leading laymen in the West Palm Beach Church. There were interesting contests among the Scouts. The Junior Christian Endeavor Society of this church recently held its second anniversary party at the church parish house. Mrs. Held is supervisor of this group. There has recently been organized an Intermediate Christian Endeavor Society, which starts off with a fine membership and much enthusiasm. On a recent Sunday evening, the State superintendent preached in this church and was pleased with the large congregation in spite of the rain, and was especially glad to see a large proportion of young people. This church is in a rural neighborhood and is demonstrating what such a church can do for its community.

Comes to hand now properly printed programs of the Sunday services in the First Congregational-Christian Church, Newport News, Va., for both Sunday, February 5th, and Sunday, February 12th. These must have been very helpful services to the church and to the city. Of these services, the pastor, Rev. Robert Lee House, in a personal letter, writes: "We observed the third anniversary of our new church yesterday. The congregation was unusually large at the evening service. Eleven people united with the church at that time. Truly this was a great service for us. Also on February 5th, we observed the 52nd anniversary of the founding of Christian Endeavor.

This was a most impressive service, and five people united with the church at that time. Christian Endeavor is doing a good work in our church. It is really an organization of infinite possibilities. We have the young people to sing in the choir at the Wednesday evening worship service. This is quite a stimulus to the attendance. We usually have special music at this time. Our Standard Training School was held last week. Rev. H. S. Hardcastle was a member of the faculty."

In November, 1931, Mr. Jefferson M. Canoy, a licensed minister, came at the request of the pastor-at-large to Niagara, N. C. The small church there had been almost inactive, save for a Sunday School, up to that time, since the death of the former pastor, Rev. Frederick G. Aylmore. Under the careful leadership of Mr. Canoy the church steadily increased in interest and the desire of the people to have a strong church rapidly grew. Recently the church was reorganized, a new constitution and by-laws were adopted, new officers elected and a demand for help in the educational department received attention. The first of February, Miss Priscilla Chase went there, studied the situation carefully, suggested new plans and in general set the Sunday School to rights. Soon she is going back to hold a school in teacher training which will add still further to the advancement of this work. The membership of the church has almost doubled, and the vigor of the people to continue to grow is manifest. Besides being pastor of the church, Mr. Canoy is active in all the life of the village. He is called upon for every phase of life of the community. He acts as lawyer, superintendent of the Red Cross distribution of aid to the needy under the Government, helper in building the streets of the city and, in short, he is a marked leader and everybody thinks well of him. Niagara is a growing winter tourist village three miles from the noted Southern Pines attractions.

Mrs. Pearl Buck, who has won world-wide fame as the author of "The Good Earth," "Sons" and "The Young Revolutionist," has this to say in a recent Christian Century article: "I am weary unto death with this incessant preaching. It deadens all thought; it is confusing all issues; it is producing in our Chinese Church a horde of hypocrites, and in our theological seminaries a body of Chinese ministers which makes one despair of the future. Let us cease our talk for a time and cut off our talkers, and try to express our religion in terms of living service." Now, there you go! Just count on a person who springs into fame or fortune by a leap, to say something or do something that reveals unspeakable folly and nonsense. Who was it that said: "It takes great people to make great mistakes, and the people of fame to say things that are infamous?" After all, we are just human, the greatest as well as the least. Over against this utterance of our famous author, put, will you, the words which have never been successfully disputed nor denied: "It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believed." One has a notion that missionaries are in China to bear testimony of their Lord, and, verily, their testimony has borne fruit and their works do declare their worth and merit. Ours is not the only battle against the Evil One. A certain writer, by divine authority, tells us that Satan was once in heaven and they "Cast him out by the Blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony." Bearing testimony of our Lord and his power to save is the method by which Satan and sin have been driven out of any stronghold where sin abounds. The Blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony will drive the Evil One out of China, or nothing will!

CHARLESTON, S. C., HOLDS FIFTEEN-DAY REVIVAL.

In a recent issue of the Charleston, S. C., Evening Post is a lengthy article announcing the beginning of revival services by two ministers well known throughout the Christian constituency of the Southeast. The Post says in part:

"The initial service of the 1933 city-wide evangelistic campaign conducted each year by the Laymen's Brotherhood and the Young Men's Christian Association will be held Sunday afternoon at 3:30 in Spring Street Methodist Church. The general public is invited to greet the evangelist, Rev. H. C. Caviness, of Portsmouth, Va., who will be the preacher throughout the fifteen-day series of meetings. Chaplain H. E. Rountree U. S. N., will lead the singing and the general chairman, Clarence W. Legerton, will preside at the meetings.

"With the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Caviness, the final details of the campaign were completed and Mr. Caviness gave hearty approval to the plans of the local committee. He will speak each Sunday afternoon and every night, all the services being held in Spring Street Church, corner of Coming Street.

"Mr. Caviness will also speak in special meetings at other hours which are being arranged in industrial plants, service clubs, Bible classes, schools and elsewhere.

"Chaplain Rountree is contributing his services as song leader and has been invaluable to the committee in the preparation for the campaign. He will be in the closest accord with the evangelist for he and Mr. Caviness have been friends and associates for years. Commander Rountree possesses an excellent tenor voice, and he will sing special solos just before Mr. Caviness preaches each night.

"The Rev. Mr. Caviness will preach in the Circular Congregational Church on Lower Meeting Street Sunday morning at 11:15."

Accompanying the article in the Post are the photographs of Mr. Caviness and Chaplain Rountree. Under these are short sketches of these ministers, which are given here:

"Rev. H. C. Caviness, evangelist, and founder of the Gospel Missionary Movement, with headquarters at Portsmouth, Va., which is unique in that collections for his work at meetings by the passing of plates is not allowed and no one identified with the Movement will receive a salary, except living expenses. A native of Raleigh, N. C., he practiced law in the western part of that State until he was converted ten years ago. Since then he has engaged in the study for the ministry, was general evangelist for his church, then for six years pastor of the First Christian Church, Portsmouth, resigning last year to give his full time to evangelistic and missionary work. His conviction is that 'the just shall live by faith,' and that money drives in connection with evangelistic meetings have brought the taint of commercialism to evangelism.

"Lieut.-Commander H. E. Rountree, Chaplain U. S. N., song leader for the evangelistic campaign and personal friend of Evangelist Caviness, is a native of Nansemond County, Suffolk, Va. He was a farmer, but found it too expensive to practice. He is a graduate of Elon College, N. C., and Crozier Theological Seminary, Pennsylvania, and served as pastor during fourteen years in three churches: Waverly, Va., Greensboro, N. C., and Portsmouth, Va. He resigned his pastorate in 1917 and went into war service as U. S. Navy Chaplain. He was assigned as Chaplain of the Naval Prison at Portsmouth, N. H., during the war period, and had the distinction of being Chaplain to President-elect Hoover in 1928, during the latter's goodwill cruise on the U. S. S. Utah to South America.

He has been Chaplain of the Charleston Navy Yard since 1930, and his friends hope for his continued duty here."

Our churches are older than our nation. From the pulpit have come those ideals whose measurable achievement have made our people great—the attainment of political liberty, the eradication of the curse of slavery, and the outlawing of the traffic in intoxicating drink. The need of our nation today is for new ideals towards whose attainment she can bend her efforts. Our people hunger for causes about which they may wax enthusiastic. We need the moral stimulus of new crusades. The greatest service which the Christian Church can render to America is to focus her energies upon inspiring goals.—The Missionary Herald.

All about you are discouraged people. Many a man showing a brave front to the world is only practicing the holy hypocrisy which Christ speaks of when he tells men to anoint their heads and appear not unto men to fast. They are bearing heavy loads bravely, but they need a word of encouragement.—Maltbie D. Babcock.

BOY DROWNS TRYING TO SAVE FRIEND.

That part of the river's edge lying just off Bute Street in Norfolk, Va., is a spot where the children love to play. Very recently a young boy of twelve, Irvan by name, was starting off to go wading there when a little six-year-old friend, Bobby, begged to go, too. Bobby's mother was afraid he might be hurt, but when Irvan promised to take good care of him and "if he does not come back neither will I," permission was given.

The two boys set out merrily on Irvan's wheel. Neither came back.

Bobby stepped in a hole. Irvan tried to save him, but the weight was too much for him, and he could not get the child to shore. Faithful to his promise and true to his little friend, he struggled valiantly. Assistance, however, was too far off, and before any one could reach the spot, both boys went down.

It is a story briefly told, but the valor and devotion of that young lad must rank in magnificence with the noblest accounts of the truly great of all ages.—Southern Churchman.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

SUNSHINE!

(Editorial Correspondence.)

Orlando, Fla., Feb. 18, 1933.

It seemed to be Florida, sunshine and the broad open, or the bed, medicine and four walls. I chose the former, and am basking—basking in fact—in the sunshine. When one thinks of it, it does not seem real, but dreamy. Lunch at Elon at 1 P. M. Wednesday—cold without, raining, melting snow and ice, atmosphere murky and the open to be avoided. Next day at 1 P. M., lunch at this liberal and lovely sanitarium situated in a grove of pine and palm, sunshine flooding a glossy lawn and a soft blue lake without, roses, petunias, dahlias, zinnias, asters, hibiscus and scores of others in full bloom and fragrance everywhere. And the mocking birds sing from earliest dawn to challenge and coax you to come out and enjoy God's fresh, free air and the beautiful broad-open of his universe. Coming out of the cloud and rain and sleet, sleeping through the night as our faithful locomotive sped steadily and rapidly Southward, the first glad greeting of Florida came a few miles south of Jacksonville, when the eye fell on a wild plum tree in full fresh blossom of snowy white. It looked as if Spring had leaped, Sphinx-like, out of the bosom of Winter, full grown and ready for Summer. And then at the first railway stop out of Jacksonville an industrious and artistic station agent had made a real rose garden. It wasn't large—just a dear, fertile, fragrant spot, say ten by twenty feet, and yet on that spot were roses of every hue and tint, only one or two to a stem, large and little, glorious indeed to look upon, beautiful to behold. With the cooperation of some soul that cared, God had made a picture of love, life and beauty right here on this little spot beside a railroad station, such as no artist on earth, with paint and brush, could even rival, much less equal. And the warmth of a summer sun gave welcome and gladness to all who looked upon it.

Only a few miles away a ghastly tragedy had occurred during the night, and the front pages of the papers were screaming their tale of bloodshed and hatred and murder. Men and women were excited, eager to tell and discuss every detail of the dastardly deed, and curious about every incident of the crime that carried bullets to four and amazed a world that an attempt had been made to murder the President-elect of our nation. It will possibly be so until the end of the ages; God consecrating, man desecrating; God giving life, man taking it; God loving, man hating; God blessing the day with sunshine, man making horrible the night with crime.

"But if God is wise and good and merciful, why does God permit folly and crime and injustice?" queries one. The answer to which is that God is not working out something for man; he is working out something with man. God has a "high calling" for man, but man must press forward to that high calling of God in Christ Jesus. But instead of pressing forward with, many of us in sin, press downward, against the will and loving desire and compassion of our Lord. God in his infinite love and mercy has condescended to allow us to be co-workers together with him in beautifying, adorning and saving this universe. But many depart from him and will have none of his help and guidance in their rebellious and obstinate way.

I am writing now in the sunshine, too warm for comfort, save in shirt-sleeves. A placid blue lake, a mile long, half mile wide, shimmers in the golden sun, or ripples from a soft breeze; tall and graceful pines laced with hanging moss to perfect thin robing; thick-set, fan-leaved palms with outstretched, wide and winsome branches, a velvety lawn lapped by this lake, adorned and glorified with these and other growing things, bordered on all sides by sprawling orange groves, or strong and giant little grapefruit trees—only a good God can create this. He, by the help and cooperation of man, can keep it dressed, adorned and beautified. One of the pursuits amounting almost to a passion, of this sanitarium is to keep its grounds and surroundings beautiful. They have their hot-house for seeding and sprouting tender plants, and in their own flower garden are grown the roses that supply, three times daily, every one of the thirty or more tables of their spacious dining room. In writing and reading rooms, in parlors and corridors, and then to sick rooms where there are shut-ins, go ever and always huge roses of richest coloring. The ministry of beauty and fragrance is no mean part of restoring health, happiness and strength. And God's good sunshine is his free, as it is his best gift, to all the physical needs of man. I thank God for sunshine, and even when the day is damp and cloudy for me, I know and rejoice that there is sunshine and gladness for others elsewhere.

J. O. A.

THE HOUR OF WORSHIP.

If there is that which the soul of man needs, and sometimes desires, more than anything else, it is a time and place of worship. Nothing can take the place of this. We have talked about "work" until we have almost lost the art and joy of worship. We have preached the gospel of "service" until we have almost obscured "the sacred." We have gotten to be so rational, we have ceased to be reverential. We have brushed elbow with our fellows in civic clubs, benevolent societies, fraternal orders, until we have forgotten the distinction between the club and the church.

We meet as good fellows in our social clubs, and tell jokes, and try to be hilarious and "have a good time," until we feel we must tell jokes when we start a sermon, at the beginning or during the period of worship, in the House of God. In brief, we have turned our worship into work, and our church into a benevolent society.

A recent correspondent writes THE SUN's editor: "Why is it that we do not sing the great old hymns, which never grow old, as in days past? Why, at our church service, do we sing patriotic and special songs instead of hymns based on the Rock of Ages and the love of him who is the light and the life of the world? If we are to benefit by worship, it seems to me we must be brought into a worshipful mood, and this can only be done by singing hymns of reverence and devotion, not to human beings or to the country, but to the God of ages and the Redeemer that saves the soul from sin." Well, the answer to the above question comes from the attitude that we have assumed in putting the church on a level with the club, and making a worship period a period of mental amusement of indulgence.

A correspondent asks of the editor this question: "Why does a preacher, even at the beginning or some time during his sermon, feel that he must tell a joke and make people laugh, even at the hour of worship on Sunday? This, it seems to me, takes away the solemnity of the occasion, as well as its dignity, and certainly diverts the mind from religious thoughts and the soul from spiritual meditation." It seems to be a part of spirit of the times. Although our Lord and Saviour said: "The first and great commandment is this: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy strength," he said there was a second commandment "like unto it. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." A recent national figure writing in a religious journal said if he had to choose between the two, he would take the second as the supreme commandment, despite the fact that the Lord had told which one came first and was supreme. This indicates the loss of authority of our Lord, certainly in the mind of that writer, since he made his own choice even contrary to the words and declaration of our Lord. It is a part of the subtle philosophy of our times to drag the high and the holy down on a level with the low and the worldly. There is a time, there is a place, there is a need, for sincere and devout worship of the living God. The soul of man is not different today from the soul of him who sang centuries ago: "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God." (Psalm 42:1). The soul of man still longs for God.

WHY NOT TRY GOD?

"Without me ye can do nothing"—Jno. 15:5.

In the British Weekly, a few months before Sir William Robertson Nicoll died, he wrote an article with this strange title: "Why Not Try God?" He was speaking of the difficulties of the hour then, and he was looking at what men were doing. They were trying this, that and the other, trying organization, cleverness, wit and wisdom, and they were not getting anywhere. "Why not try God?" Why not get back to the one fundamental thing of our faith? "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit!" saith the Lord.—G. Campbell Morgan.

"Not one-tenth of one per cent of the youth in college know what really god American beer tastes like. To them it is little more than a name. They will have to be educated."—From Brewing Industry, November 9, 1932, proposing an advertising campaign in college magazines.

WANTED: STATESMANSHIP OF THE GEORGE WASHINGTON KIND.

By the Disciple With a Duster.

Anyone who keeps his ears open today can hear strange talk about the Government and its possible future. There have been more than a few strong hints that the United States ought to have a dictator. One thought a Mussolini might get us out of our complexes, while another became enthusiastic over the machine age, as we call it, and suggested technocracy as our salvation. One preacher even wrote a hymn on technocracy and had it sung in his church. In fact everything from anarchy to communism has been talked, but none of it has "taken." But it all goes to show that something different from existing patriotism is needed to lift us out of the present trouble which has paralyzed the world.

In the midst of all this I suggest that the kind of leadership manifested by George Washington is our only salvation. We have just celebrated the bicentennial of his birth and are approaching another of his birthdays. This calls for a review of his life and conduct, which in itself is a study of intelligent statecraft, and a renewal of true patriotism in our own hearts.

The whole of last year was taken to memorialize Washington, and I understand that every bit of writing, every scrap of letters, everything connected with his life that could be found has been brought together and will be published. The book will run into many volumes. In the meantime, many muckrakers were busy. They said they were trying to prove that Washington was only a man. That was an unnecessary task. Washington never claimed to be anything more, and none of us have ever thought of him as a demigod. It is a great thing to be able to say that out of all this minute search not a sordid thing was discovered in Washington's history, not a thing to turn the affections of the people away from him as an ideal, or to break down fervor and faith in the government he did so much to establish. He is still the ideal patriot and worthy of the tallest monument ever erected to mortal man.

I repeat that the George Washington kind of patriotism is our greatest national need today. It will save us.

In the first place, Washington made himself a worthy man and a worthy citizen. It is said, and truly I believe, that he never told a lie. Scoff at it as we may, this most remarkable tribute stands. No dishonorable thing has been found in his record. He made himself intelligent and strong, and from the very first had the most serious and unbreakable ideas of what a government ought to be, and he related himself to it because it promised to make a world fit to live in.

Whatever the temptations of life, he never allowed anything to dim his ideals. He believed in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States, and a government strictly for the welfare of the people. No selfish act was ever charged against him. He sought no privileges for himself that were not open to all. This is peculiarly striking, in this age when we are told that swarms of special lobbyists bear down on Congress like locusts on a Kansas meadow, each seeking something special for some group. Washington kept himself so far above any charge of being selfish or mercenary that he received no remuneration at all for the forty-seven years of public service he rendered to his country. He accepted the position of General of the Armies and the presidency of the United States on the condition that he was to have no pay for any of his public work.

Washington refused to be downed by discouragements. There were many hours so gloomy during the Revolutionary War that it is a wonder the hearts of the people did not fail. They did fail often, and it fell upon Washington to restore courage. He had to contend with traitors like Benedict Arnold, and near-traitors, like some of his generals and many of his soldiers. In him almost alone came the task of keeping up the morale of the army, and keeping alive the purpose of the people. Important battles were lost. He was sometimes overmatched by soldiers of the enemy. There was the gloomy winter in Valley Forge, with its hunger and cold, and an army of discouraged soldiers, yet his spirit was so superb, his belief in God so firm, his prayer so persistent that he did not accept these discouragements, but pressed on in spite of them to final success.

Washington's statesmanship was above sectionalism. Readers of history of the time will recall the bitter antagonism that arose between Jefferson and Hamilton, and will remember how earnestly Washington tried to reconcile these two statesmen, and, as it has been called, their schools of thought. Had he succeeded in doing this, the country would be different today. There is little doubt that out of the two doctrines which grew came the Civil War. They are still with us in growing strife and partisanship in the country until a definite agreement can scarcely be gotten on any great question. Washington wanted a country in which there was harmony and cooperation. He saw that all sections must be treated alike, and in his farewell address, one of the great and treasured documents of America, he especially mentions this and tries to forestall the contentions that arise by them. All sections must be "protected by the equal laws and a common government." We have had our strife between the North and the South. In the late election and others the feeling between East and West came to the front. Unless we can recover Washington's ideas and spirit of unity, selfish and sectional cliques and rackets will weaken the country and make progress difficult, if not impossible.

Another thing, and it is great, Washington was not office-hungry. We have no reason to believe that any tinge of ambition ever entered his heart or induced him to accept positions either as commander of the armies or as president of the country. When the Revolutionary War had been fought through the country was so discouraged and exhausted that a movement arose among the soldiers to make Washington king. We remember in the story of the Master how once they came to Christ to make him a king and he refused and immediately dispersed the crowd. Probably Washington's anger never arose to greater height than when that suggestion, to be made a king, was borne to him. It appeared to him in the hideous guise of turning traitor to the country. He only accepted the presidency of the country under high pressure. He did not want the second term, and refused the third term, which set a precedent no one has ever been able to break down. Who can imagine with what scorn and withering indignation he would receive the effort to make any man a dictator, if he were living today. Even the suggestion shows a heart alien from the soul and laws of this country.

The lust for office in our country is as dangerous as the lust for money. It changes good men into traitors and demagogues. Men should be sought by the office instead of seeking the office. Office should be sought as a service and not as an adornment to a career.

Another great thing to mention is that Washington held himself strictly to the observance of the law and to the honor of the Constitution. He never lost his head and imagined that he was "above the law." That was for lesser breeds like Napoleon, Caesar, and Alexander. As an executive, Washington showed neither neglect, fear nor favor in enforcing the laws. And we cannot imagine him trying to frame a law so tricky and evasive that even the Supreme Court could not reach it.

The most notable and striking instance of law enforcement by Washington was when he put down the liquor rebellion in western Pennsylvania. He used all reasonable appeal, and then sent the army over and suppressed those who had rebelled against the liquor tax. He was not to be trifled with. Government was a serious and meaningful thing with him. He was in earnest about it. It was not the plaything of "big men."

The taproot of Washington's statesmanship was trust in Divine Power. He believed Government was answerable to God and he sought to bring him into the Government. He called on God for leadership in his work as a statesman. There can be no true patriotism without genuine faith in God.—The Christian-Evangelist.

PROHIBITION ANNIVERSARY STATEMENT.

By EDWIN C. DINWIDDIE, Supt., National Temperance Bureau.

On this 13th anniversary of the Eighteenth Amendment the country is witnessing some remarkable and interesting situations with respect to it. The wets have, during this entire period, derided and scoffed at it and used every method which human ingenuity could devise and money could provide to render it obnoxious and impossible of enforcement. During the life of the law up to now, their task has been comparatively simple: denounce prohibition as a policy and as a method; deny any and all of its beneficent results; emphasize its defects, which are largely administrative, and chiefly local at that; charge up to prohibition all evils that exist in the country, whether prohibition has any connection with them or not; and lastly, as has been done during the past several years, capitalize the world-wide business depression and ride the high wave of popular discontent with "whatever is" in the interest of booze.

They staged, or more accurately speaking, "gal-leried" the mob acts at the national party conventions last June, and with the political hysteria which ruled the country through the campaign, and now with the results of the election known they are face to face with problems which some of us knew they would meet, but to which they were apparently oblivious and with which they had little or no concern.

They could not have secured the ear of the people except through reiterated promises of "no return of the old saloon"; "full and adequate guarantees of protection of dry states from liquor invasions" from wet ones. They loudly insist that platform pledges shall be kept, but they demand that the minority pledge shall be disregarded in the interest of unrestrained booze; and that the saving promises of the majority shall be completely "scrapped" so that only naked and unconditional repeal be submitted, while simultaneously they want a nullifying beer proposal rushed through Congress.

All the methods which are now proposed as substitutes for national prohibition had been fully tested in our states before the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment, and all had proved ineffective in coping with the law-defying liquor traffic, and the claim for their support now lies in their prohibitive and not in their permissive features.

It is a poor type of Americanism which boasts the impossibility of enforcement of a duly enacted Constitutional mandate and America will rue the day if and when her answer to gangsters and law-breakers is a meek and subservient repeal of a salutary law.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Suffolk Christian Church celebrated its twenty-first anniversary, Monday evening, February 13th. The Society was organized in February, 1912. Mrs. W. H. Dick was the first president. The Society has been fortunate in having the following presidents: Mrs. W. H. Dick, two years; Mrs. W. J. Kendrick, two years; Mrs. I. W. Johnson, two years; Mrs. W. R. Mitchell, two years; Mrs. John King, two years; Mrs. W. H. Andrews, two years; Mrs. C. C. Rawles, four years; Mrs. W. H. Yates, three years; Mrs. J. T. Hancock, one year, and the present incumbent, Mrs. H. P. Murphy, one year.

Invitations are issued each year for a birthday party in February. Every member is requested to bring "a penny-a-year" as a birthday offering. The offering this year amounted to $26.00.

The following interesting program was rendered, under the direction of Mrs. H. S. Hardcastle: Devotionals, Mrs. J. A. Parker; "How the Artist Forgot Four Colors," a story, by Miss Page Jones; Song, "World Children," Miss Bettie Jones; prayer, Miss Marjorie Luke; pantomime, "In Christ There Is No East or West," Misses Bettie Butler and Virginia Wilkins; a dramatic play, "Two Masters," presented by Mrs. J. A. Parker, Mrs. C. W. Harrell, Mrs. George Earl Rogers, Miss Alice Yates, Mrs. F. W. Oxley, Mrs. Minnie Philhower, and Mrs. W. H. Yates.

After the program the eighty-five persons present were invited to the Fellowship Hall, where dainty refreshments were served in honor of the occasion. A large birthday cake was placed in the center of the table with twenty-one candles. Ten large candles were lighted in honor of the ten presidents who have faithfully sought to carry forward the work of the Society.

This Society has made a real contribution to the local church and to the Kingdom of God. It is safe to say that it has given more than $10,000 to Missions since it was organized. The Young Girls' Missionary Society, which was an outgrowth of the Woman's Society, has given several thousand dollars. In addition to this several other societies in the county have been inspired to do efficient work. No one can measure the blessings which have come to the faithful workers. Missionary books have been read, and the whole vision of spiritual life and responsibility has been enlarged and enriched. Women who are deeply interested in the missionary activity of the church are usually active and concerned in all work of the church. Some great religious impressions were made by those who took part in the program of the birthday party. I like to encourage this work. I am a member of four Missionary societies. My wife is a member of five societies. We believe in them.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Berea (Nansemond), met with Mrs. Russell T. Bradford Thursday afternoon. In the absence of the president, Mrs. A. S. Hargraves, vice-president, called the meeting to order and presided. The collection of dues and specials amounted to $10. This Society is not large, but it is interested, liberal and faithful. Plans were made to observe the Day of Prayer on Friday, March 3rd. The Mission Study Book for this year is "Lary Fourth Daughter of China." Mrs. R. T. Bradford will teach the first chapter in this book at the next meeting.

Holy Neck Christian Church held a church social in the hall last Wednesday night. About 100 members of the church and Sunday School were present. The entertainment committee presented an interesting program. A birthday cake was presented to the pastor, Dr. N. G. Newman. Some one bravely put sixty-five candles on this cake, and the friends piled an automobile load of many good things to eat around this cake as an expression of love and good-will. Dr. Newman is one of our best beloved pastors. He is growing in favor as a preacher of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. He is a wise counsellor and faithful soldier of the Cross. Congratulations to him, and a wish for many more happy returns of his birthday.

I. W. JOHNSON.

THE NINETY-FIRST PSALM.

The ninety-first Psalm is exclusively a song of trust; a word picture of the children of God who fear him and to whom he has revealed the secrets of his greatness and power. It is also a Psalm in which each verse is a promise to be cherished with the words "I will" and "thou shalt," which are so emphatically used. It is not ascribed to David, yet we think of David as we read it, for each promise was worked out in his life.

In the twenty-seventh Psalm, which is a Psalm of David, the words of the fifth verse are so full of the same trust which is displayed in this Psalm. How much we need to take this Psalm as our own each day of our lives, using the words of the second verse as our testimony. He is my refuge in every trial and trouble: not "he was" or "he shall be," but right now he is. Such promises are like checks on the earthly banks—they must be signed and presented for payment. The bank of heaven stands secure against the storms which cause earthly banks to fail.

God is our refuge in every circumstance of our earthly life; he will cover us with his feathers and under his wings shall we trust and rest. He is my fortress and he is also my rock, and my deliverer from every adversity of life so I need not be afraid of anything that man or devil may do unto me. When it seems as though the powers of evil will prevail, he intervenes and turns away the destroyer so that his darts do not inflict mortal wounds. Many times wounds are inflicted but God in his infinite love and mercy heals the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds. If we are dwelling in the secret place and abiding under the shadow of the Almighty, we only lean the more upon the Everlasting Arms, knowing that they will bear us up because we have made him our habitation.

The trials of life make the promises of God the more blessed to us for they show us our weakness and inability to meet them in our own strength. Then it is that faith mounts up to take God at his word and he never fails his trusting children. Oh, it may not be our way, and it may be long delayed, but in his own time and way he brings us to his haven of rest. He leads us in hidden paths, in unknown ways; yet his love ever brightens the way and makes the crooked things straight. In his own wisdom and love he does not reveal to us the path over which we must go, for we would falter and faint if we knew, but he gives us strength as our day of grace every step of the way.

So, we must not pray that we may be kept out of troublous times and the struggles which they bring, but that we may ever get deeper into his rest, where we may know the peace and safety which ever abides. So may we ever dwell in the secret place of the most high, that we shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty, and say, with the poet:

And now my home is God, and sheltered there,
God meets the trials of my earthly life;
God compasses me around from storm and strife,
God takes the burden of my daily care.
O wondrous! O home divinely fair!
And I, God's little one, safe hidden there.
Lord, as I dwell in thee and thou in me,
So make me dead to everything but thee;
That as I rest within my home most fair,
My soul may ever more and only see
My God in everything and everywhere.
My home is God.

LUCID LINES OF LUXURIOUS LIFE.

The expense of the House of Representatives exceeds four million dollars annually. Added to this snug little sum is the pay of nearly four hundred and fifty representatives and delegates at a yearly salary of $9,000 each.

The salaries of officers and employees of the House reach the high mark of over one million dollars every twelve months. This is in addition to salaries paid to members and delegates.

The Senate pays out more than $950,000 in yearly salaries, and adds to this from $45,000 to $50,000 for mileage, or traveling expenses.

The salaries of officers and employees of the Senate, not including salaries of Senators, amount to an excess of $1,500,000 each year.

The cost for investigations and inquiries in a recent year touched the purse-strings of the taxpayers to the tune of more than $420,000.

Although Congress is composed mainly of lawyers, an annual disbursement in excess of $50,000 is spent for legal services in the preparation of bills.

On special committees we spend more than $100,000 every year; nearly twice that sum for stationery, and more than a dozen other items ranging from a few hundred to more than twenty thousand.

Though we boast of being the most law-abiding nation in the world, it is costing the American tax-payer nearly $100,000 each year to give police protection to Capitol Hill. This is not to be confused with the metropolitan force of Washington.

A recent survey of pay records of Senators and Representatives revealed that about one-fourth of all members of Congress had on their office pay-rolls some one by the same names as their own. It is left to the public to decide if these instances be mere accidents or coincidences.

The cost to operate Congress is $125,000 per day. If we allow eight hours as a working day, our national law-making bodies cost us in excess of fifteen thousand dollars per hour, or about $250 per minute.

A DANGER SIGNAL.

It was with the decline of persecution that the decline of the church began; worldly prosperity and not adversity brought in spiritual death. And it is lack of this element—of real privation and deep suffering for Christ's sake—that enfeebles the energies of the church at home, and causes the limited success of her missions abroad.

"The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church," has become a proverb, a proverb true, however, so long, and so long only, as the church sees and approaches her calling.—J. Hudson Taylor.

He who will not forgive others breaks the bridge over which he himself must pass.—Herbert.

THE JIG-SAW PUZZLE.

It has got us. When we saw these puzzles in the high-class game shops we passed them by but since they have come to the "five and ten" they have caught us. Some of the family like them and our dining room table is littered with jig-saw puzzles. The things look foolish. They take a lot of time. There is nothing to do but break them up when you have worked them. But we confess, with apologies to our high-brow readers, that we like to work the things. We justify our waste of hours by saying it is a simple recreation and a rest to the tired eyes after a day at the office. Of course we know that it is an eye strain but it certainly rests the mind. One must forget the problems of the Methodist Protestant Church while wondering why the nose of a cow will not fit in the space designated for the tail of a lion.

Working a jig-saw puzzle is very much like working a church. The game is to get a lot of pieces of assorted colors and shapes and make of them a lovely picture. Some of the great masterpieces of paintings are now reproduced in these puzzles. The task of the ministry is to get a parish of all sorts of people and to organize them into a church which "may adorn the doctrine of God, our Saviour in all things." The pastor is appointed to "set in order" the things that are wanting. Sometimes he finds things badly mixed and has on his hands a game as fascinating as any jig-saw puzzle. It frequently requires a lot of time to get all the parts in proper place and secure harmony and beauty in the field. There is always a fine joy when design shows up out of the medley.

The first kind of puzzles were made for little children in square blocks. These are so simple that they are not interesting. Our modern jig-saw puzzle is made of wee bits of wood or cardboard, strangely colored, of every conceivable curve and angle, interlocking and every piece necessary to make the complete picture. How like a church! Ideally the church is made up of four-square folk, well rounded Christians, exemplifying the perfect triangle of body, mind and spirit in exact balance, but really, a church has a lot of people with queer angles and uncertain curves and a multitude of inharmonious colors. It is a job to fit each in his own place, and, like a jig-saw puzzle of the ten-cent variety, they will jump out of position if you touch them the wrong way. Some are hard to fit anywhere. We feel at times like we would like to throw some away or to make some new ones just to fit in certain places that bother us. That is not the game. If we threw away anyone that we could not fit in, at the end of the task we would find we had marred the picture.

From the jig-saw puzzle let us learn that the smallest, the queerest and the most colorless person in the church has his place in the plan of the Master. Knowing this great truth of the transcendent value of the least of our brethren, we will be able to make a thing of beauty and design of the pastorate where God has commissioned us to set things in order and adorn the doctrine of God.

Nothing useless is, or low;
Each thing in its place is best;
And what seems but idle show
Strengthens and supports the rest.

THE LOVE OF CHRIST CONQUERED.

In the course of the Armenian atrocities, a young woman and her brother were pursued by a Turkish soldier, cornered in an angle of the wall, and the brother slain before his sister's eyes. She dodged down an alley, leaped a wall, and escaped. Later, being a nurse, she was forced by the Turkish authorities to work in a military hospital. Into her ward was brought one day the same Turkish soldier who had slain her brother. He was very ill. A slight inattention would ensure death. The young woman, now safe in America, confesses to the bitter struggle that took place in her mind. The old Adam cried, "Vengeance"; the new Christ cried "Love." And, equally to the man's good and to her own, Christ conquered, and she nursed him as tenderly as any other patient in the ward. The recognition has been mutual, and one day, unable to restrain his curiosity, the Turk asked his nurse why she had not let him die. She replied, "I am a follower of him who said, 'Love your enemies, do good to them that hate you.'" He was silent a long time. At last he spoke: "I never knew there was such a religion. If that is your religion, tell me more about it, for I want it."

Some of the Armenians believe that they are specially called to carry the gospel to Moslems.—Friends Witness (English.)

THE SALOON.

The American saloon had no conscience. It never did a good act nor failed to do a bad one.

It was a trap for youth; a destroyer for the old; a foul spawning place for crime; a corrupter of politics; knew no party, supported those men for office who it thought could be most easily influenced; had no respect for law or the courts; debauched the city councils, juries and every one it could reach; was powerful in the unity of its vote and created cowards in office. It flattered, tricked, cajoled, and deceived in order to accomplish its purpose; was responsible for more ruin and death than all the wars the nation has ever engaged in; has corrupted and ruined more lives, widowed more women, orphaned more children, destroyed more homes, caused more tears, broke more hearts, and undermined more manhood than any other influence in our land.—Judge Kenyon, United States District Court.

Near the harbor in Waterford, Ireland, there once stood a church known as "Crook's Church," and not far away was the "Tower of Hook." When the ships of Strongbow were entering Waterford, he would say "we must take the town by Hook or Crook," and hence we have the expression, "by hook or crook."

A MISSIONARY THOUGHT.

By FRANCIS SHUNK DEANS, D. D.

"Christ—The Spiritual Dynamic."

A friend in First Church, Berkeley, recently sent me a statement by Charles P. Steinmetz, a portion of which I want to share:

"The greatest development in the next fifty years will be along spiritual lines. . . . The scientists of the world will turn their laboratories over to the study of God and prayer and the spiritual forces which as yet have hardly been scratched. When this day comes the world will see more advancement in one generation than it has seen in the last four."

In Christ are the spiritual forces which alone can save and redeem a human life and the life of the world.

It is Christ who makes the spiritual world real, accessible and satisfying.

Through a church that is spiritually minded and spiritually empowered will Christ become available to the whole world.—Exchange.

THE PROGRAM.

1. The Nation Needs Church Trained Children." (Psalm 119:105.)

"My church is an adult church," a pastor said. Why?

The unreached child for the Sunday School: A superintendent reported the decline of the rural churches because of good roads and the desire to attend "a church with a pipe organ and a good preacher." Shall such churches then send to the abandoned rural church groups of their young people to train the children religiously?

Sunday visitors from the city prevent attendance at country services. In the city late rising, the golf clubs, with the need for the family car, help in the leakage.

Ought Christians to revise their Sunday programs? Can we use a neighborhood bus to gather children systematically?

Seventy-seven per cent of the inmates of Sing Sing over a period of twenty years had never been in Sunday School.

Have we allowed the children to find their interests in other character building agencies rather than in church groups?

2. The Nation Needs College Youth Trained for Church Leadership.

"The strength of our country is the strength of its religious convictions."—Calvin Coolidge.

Those who are working with the teen age groups in our churches realize that there is a tremendous leakage after the age of sixteen years.

Dr. W. H. P. Faunce said: "Here, then, is our national peril—that the supremely important task of our generation will fall between church and state and be ignored by both. The church may say: 'Education is no longer in our hands.' The state may say: 'In all religious matters we are silent.' Thus millions may grow up—are actually growing up in America today—without any genuine religious training. It is time, therefore, for church and school to cooperate."

Can we of the Congregational and Christian Churches develop Sunday School teachers capable of training our youth religiously so that when they reach college their faith may not be wrecked by studying science and philosophy, when taught by men with no religious convictions? Have we a responsibility in asking that our own denominational student pastors be placed at all state universities by our Education Society to prevent, if possible, the student leakage? And shall we contribute funds sufficient for this purpose? (See "What College Did to My Religion," Atlantic Monthly for June, 1933; "Universities and Religious Indifference," Atlantic Monthly, September, 1932.)

3. The Nation Needs Religiously Trained Second Generation Leadership.

"For years America has been praying for the so-called 'heathen' across the seas and has sent them money and men. Now God has set some of these people right down beside us and made them members of the body politic. And the church persists in having little or nothing to do with them because, forsoothe, they are of another race, color or creed, and are near at hand.

The future American is not going to be a full-blooded Yankee, but a composite of some of the very strains that Providence has brought to our shores. The future Americanism is going to be a blend of much that these people bring." (Malcolm Dana.)

The Japanese-American Citizens League met in Los Angeles in July, in their second biennial national convention with two hundred delegates from twenty-two chapters in various sections of the country. All were second generation Japanese. A platform or "guide in pushing the citizens movement" was drafted.

These young people have been educated in our schools and colleges for both cultural and economic life. They ask how shall they find their social adjustment? We have Armenian, Bulgarian, Finnish, Greek, Scandinavian, Slavonic, German, Japanese, and Chinese churches. The second generation are Americans by birth and training. The nation needs their allegiance. Politicians are seeking their votes.

"Missionary work is the best of all Americanizers and the best friend of the foreigner is the church of Christ." (Rev. Andrew Gavlik.)

The day schools are a melting pot. Is your church a melting pot? List foreign groups in your area, foreign children in your child's school. What is any church doing for their religious life?

(Leaflets on related subjects may be procured from an office of the Commission on Missions, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York; 14 Beacon St., Boston; 19 S. LaSalle St., Chicago.)

ATTENTION!

Don't forget the date, March 3rd. The World's Day of Prayer for Missions is one of the most important, if not the most important of all the days to be observed by our Missionary societies. The program this year is especially good, and has a real significance to us, since we are studying China. It was prepared by Mrs. C. C. Chen, University of Shanghai, Shanghai, China. The subject of the program is "Follow Thou Me," and these may be purchased from the Commission on Missions, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass., at 2c each.

A beautiful "Call to Prayer," arranged by Mrs. Ruth Muskrat Bronson, an Indian American, may be secured free. These are to be distributed before and at the meeting, and used as a special guide to prayer.

The children's program, "Follow Thou Me," is 1c each, and is fine for Willing Workers' superintendents. There is also a "Service of Consecration, Looking Unto Jesus," by Miss Jean Grigsby Paxton, for 5c, which would be helpful for preparatory meetings of leaders and committees, or for the morning session at an all-day meeting.

The annual observance of the World Day of Prayer on the first Friday in Lent is promoted jointly by the Council of Women of Home Missions, the Federation of Woman's Boards of Foreign Missions of North America, and National Council of Federated Church Women. Union services may be planned for young people and children as well as adults. This program is to be adapted to the community using it. The service is essentially one of prayer. Some communities may want to have the churches open on March 3rd for individual meditation and prayer throughout the day.

Let us all work and pray together that this day observed world-wide may accomplish much in the Kingdom, for while we here in America are praying, the same program is being used in every country of the world where Christ's name is known.

MRS. W. M. JAY.

A DISTURBED WORLD.

Rarely in history has the whole world been so thoroughly disturbed as at this hour. When the Germanic hordes sacked Rome in 410 A. D., and then devastated Europe, reducing vast regions to an utter desert, confusion and chaos reigned over a part of the world, but the East went serenely on its way. When in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, the crusades aroused Christendom to strange depths of fervor and excitement, the old order was upset and a new order begun. Then in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries the wars of the Reformation convulsed Europe, though the remainder of the world was largely undisturbed. The so-called "industrial revolution," which followed the break-up of feudalism, the introduction of steam-driven machinery and the development of the capitalistic system, witnessed widespread disturbance and change throughout the Western world. The democratic revolution marked particularly by the war between England and American Colonies, and the Napoleonic wars on the Continent, broke down the prevailing order and introduced a new era.

Nearly all of these far-reaching changes, however, took place in the West. The East, where the majority of the people of the world have always lived, went serenely on in its accustomed ways, with only minor disturbances here and there. But with the beginning of the nineteenth century, the East enters the world stream of the West, and thereafter we have one world, in which every section is responsive to whatever happens in any other section.

The twentieth century brought the greatest shock that civilization had yet been called upon to withstand—the World War conflagration in which the nations farthest advanced in arts and sciences engaged in a death struggle that wiped out the lives of some ten million men and destroyed uncounted millions of wealth. This war, with all its attendant circumstances, broke up more of the world's old moorings than perhaps any other event in history. During the seventeen years that have elapsed since Germany declared war and proceeded to invade France, more revolutionary changes have taken place in human life than in any century since human history began.

The present world-wide economic depression is a necessary consequence of the disturbances and changes which mark a transition from one world-order to another. Just what this new order will be, God alone knows. Some think that it will be a modified form of Russian Sovietism. Others think it will be a type of socialism or communism. Some think we shall revert to autocracy, and fall back on the authority and leadership of a dictator, or world-emperor. Others grow pessimistic and forecast a period of anarchy, when law and government will be overthrown. Still others think that affairs will go on about as they have, with certain political and economic and social adjustments that will restore the world to normalcy.

On one thing we ought to agree—it is a time of marvelous opportunity for the preaching of the Christian gospel, and the winning of the lost to Christ as Lord and Saviour. When the fallow ground is being ploughed, it is time for the planting of seed. When old buildings are being razed it is time to erect new structures. The world always has righted itself after a storm, and it always will until God has achieved his purpose among men.

History clearly demonstrates that it is in a disturbed world that New Testament Christianity has its best chance. Jesus came at a time of unrest and upheaval. The greatest victories that he has won have not been in times of peace and prosperity, but in times of chaos and disturbance. The old molds of thought and conduct have to be broken occasionally in order for new patterns to be constructed. Is not this possibly the philosophy of history—the old order must change, giving place to the new, and in order for it to change, periodic upheavals must take place.

The old order ought to change. It has not put God at the center. It has not obeyed the will of Christ. It has not released, enlarged, developed human personality as it should. It has had an essential core of selfishness, exclusiveness, disregard of human life and spiritual values. Even churches have grown careless of their Master's Commission and have been living for themselves, complacently content with a traditional round of ecclesiastical performances. The world is ripe for a change.

Why not give Christ a fair chance to remake the world after his heart's desire? He has the key to human life, the way to peace and happiness. His lordship, genuinely accepted and intelligently followed, would restore order and prosperity and bring in the reign of peace on earth, good will toward men, of which the angels sang. The day of mission over? Why this is the greatest day of missionary opportunity since the star first appeared in the East and the wise men traveled to find the promised Saviour! Let us beat not a retreat, but a charge that will challenge the world to take Jesus seriously at a time when men everywhere are confused and disturbed, and longing for a sure world of authority and hope.

In the disturbed conditions that prevail everywhere today, Christian missions is the hope of the world.—Editorial in Home and Foreign Fields.

OUR OLDEST LIVING MINISTER.

By HERBERT D. RUGG.

The 100th anniversary of Augustus Field Beard, oldest living minister of the Congregational and Christian Churches, oldest living graduate of Yale University, and oldest living graduate of Union Theological Seminary in New York City, will be observed this coming May 11th, with appreciative tribute to his work for the advancement of human brotherhood. His direct influence upon men and institutions has extended from France to California and Hawaii and from Alaska to Porto Rico.

Many individuals in the United States among Indians and Eskimos, Mexicans and Porto Ricans, Chinese and Japanese, Hawaiians, Koreans and Filipinos and Southern mountaineers have enjoyed benefits from Dr. Beard's labors. The larger part of his career, however, has been devoted to securing greater educational opportunities for Negroes.

Paul D. Cravath, international lawyer and president of the Metropolitan Opera Company, heads a group of sixteen who are commending to Dr. Beard's many friends the recognition of his centennial birthday. With Mr. Cravath are associated Mrs. Lucius R. Eastman, chairman of the committee of direction of the department of race relations of the Federal Council of Churches; the Rev. Dr. Charles Emerson Burton, general secretary of the General Council of the Congregational and Christian Churches; President Jas. Rowland Angell, Yale University; President Henry Sloane Coffin, Union Theological Seminary; President William J. Hutchins, Berea College; Principal Robert Russa Moton, Tuskegee Institute; Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, secretary of the interior, and president of Leland Stanford, Jr., University; Dr. William Pickens, field secretary, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; the Rev. Dr. Joseph Cochran, pastor, American Church, Paris, France; the Rev. Robert Bruce, pastor, Plymouth Church, Syracuse, N. Y.; the Rev. David Logan Wilson, pastor, Central Congregational Church, Bath, Me.; the Rev. Dr. Ernest Frank McGregor, pastor, First Congregational Church, Norwalk, Conn.; the Rev. Dr. Clarence H. Wilson, Boston, Mass.; Dr. James Hardy Dillard, Charlottesville, Va.; William Spencer Beard, Winter Park, Fla.

Dr. Beard has been invited to preach a centennial sermon on Sunday morning, May 7th, in the First Congregational Church, Norwalk, Conn., where he was christened. He has also been invited by the National Broadcasting Company to speak that afternoon over coast-to-coast hook-up.

Abraham Lincoln's Cooper Union address in New York City, in 1860, converted Dr. Beard to his passion for human brotherhood. Of that address he has recently written:

"I was near enough to mark the features of Lincoln's strong face and to note his emotions as he rose in his plea for human rights and for the integrity of his country, and without realizing it, I was undergoing the process of conversion. I, who went without sympathy, was listening with sympathy."

After pastorates at Cape Elizabeth, Me., Bath, Me., and Syracuse, N. Y., he went to the American Church at Paris, France. There he preached the funeral sermon for young Leland Stanford, Jr., son of the senator from California. To the bereaved parents, Dr. Beard suggested as a memorial the university which they established, now Leland Stanford, Jr., University, at Palo Alto, California.

Dr. Beard has had a leading part in the advancement of higher education for Negroes in the Southern States. Seven Negro colleges founded by the American Missionary Association are indebted to him for unwavering support during the period when cultural education for Negroes was in its infancy and had few friends. One of these colleges was Fisk University, whose founder and first president was the Rev. D. Erastus M. Cravath, father of Paul D. Cravath.

Keen in mind, vigorous in body and with his senses little impaired, Dr. Beard still gives highly valued counsel to the American Missionary Association, and even comes occasionally unaccompanied, by train, from Norwalk, Conn., his present suburban home as well as his birthplace, to the offices of the Association in New York City.

During the reign of David I of Scotland, a young brother of the powerful Clan Chattan entered the ministry and became Abbot of Kinross. His older brother died childless, and the chieftainship devolved upon the Abbot. Desiring to marry the daughter of the king's companion of Calder, he obtained permission from the Pope, and as a result of his marriage, a large family of boys came into being. The people of Iverness-shire called them "sons of the parson," which means McPherson in the original Scottish dialect.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."
REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

BUILDING YOUTH FELLOWSHIP IN ALABAMA AND WEST FLORIDA.

By MISS MARGUERITE DAVISON.

It is good for us to take account of stock so that we can consider the accomplishments of the past year before plunging into plans for the future. What did the young people of Alabama do in the heavy program they carried on last summer? Nine Alabama young people served in the Student Summer Service or as special workers in their own State. Six of them came from Piedmont College, one from Vanderbilt, one from Southern Union, and the others from Thorsby Institute. You can see leadership growing up over night in these Alabama young people. Besides the Alabama group there were five workers from other States, three of whom were Piedmont College students.

What a busy summer these young people spent working in our churches all over the State. They carried on Vacation Church Schools, Young People's Classes, Revival Meetings, Summer Schools and Camps, organized Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies and did whatever they could to help our churches and people.

In the North Alabama Association, Robert Barksdale acted as pastor of one of our churches during the summer months, taught Bible schools and assisted in revival meetings and Bible school programs in other churches of the district. He endeared himself to young and old during his stay in the section. This fall he returned to Piedmont to gain further training for the position of church leadership which he hopes to make his life work.

Gerald Smith graduated from Thorsby Institute last spring and went directly into summer service in the Bible School at Thorsby. The rest of the summer he spent in the churches of North Alabama, helping in the building of the new church at Rock Springs, assisting in revival meetings, and conducting Bible schools in five of our churches. His wife joined him in the middle of the summer and did most helpful work with the children. These workers feel that much work for the children and the young people of these churches must be done and they hope a more complete program may be conducted in the coming summer. Gerald is now continuing his studies at Piedmont College. We are sorry that poor health has prevented his wife from carrying on her studies during the second semester.

Verla Barnett of Southern Union College was able to do some work in North Alabama in addition to her program in East Alabama, where she spent a very busy summer in the Christian and Congregational Churches. The Bible schools were conducted in connection with the revival services of these churches, but the people and Miss Barnett hope that they may be held at different times in the coming summer, so that they may receive the undivided attention of the young people and children. Miss Lillian McKee, teacher at Thorsby Institute and former Student Summer Service worker, was able to help Miss Barnett in several churches. She also served as teacher in the Wadley Summer School and as leader at the Young People's Summer Camp for the Midland City group of churches. Once our young people taste the joy of Student Summer Service they wish to continue in that type of helpful giving to others. It is hoped that the East Alabama Christian and Congregational Churches may have a more complete program for the coming summer and that more leadership for Bible School work may come from the Christian Churches. The Annual Summer Training School held at Wadley has done much to build leadership among the young people of the Christian Churches of that section, and gradually the Congregational young people are taking advantage of the opportunity it offers. It is hoped that this Training School may be considered by our church leaders the leadership training center for the State. We look for a larger enrollment each year. Leaders from the Board of Christian Education and from the Extension Boards, with help from special instructors, try to provide the most helpful training course possible for our rural and town churches.

In Central Alabama a very well conducted Bible School program was carried out in several of the churches by Miss Dorthula Dadey, assisted by Miss Hazel Maddox. All of these schools were not held in connection with revival meetings, and good attendance resulted. Miss Maddox had already endeared herself to the church people of this section an only responsibility at home kept her from giving full time service as she had in previous years. In these churches a steady improvement in program can be seen. They are rendering real service to their communities. Miss Dadey worked in one of our North Alabama churches at the close of the summer, and was able to conduct a very good Bible School, although revival meetings were in full swing and some of the public schools had started.

Tallassee and Mt. Olive Churches had good Bible Schools and Young People's meetings under the direction of Miss Viola Veler. These churches have grown in strength and are placing special emphasis on young people's work. Miss Veler also directed an all-church Bible School at Crestview, West Florida. The attempt to make this school a union project with a division of responsibility has had some measure of success in the three years it has been held, but we are hoping for greater results in the coming years.

Summer workers divided their efforts between the Columbus Church, Georgia, and the Phenix City Church, Alabama. Bible Schools, young people's classes, special club work and other activities were carried on by Miss Mildred Rister, Miss Dorothy Griggsby and Gregory Williams, under the direction of the pastor, Rev. David Shepherd. A wonderful program for 1932 and we hope it can be made even stronger in the year 1933.

A helpful Bible School program was carried on in the Midland City group of churches by Miss Nova Weatherby and Miss Annie Lou Arthur. At the close of the summer work, the young people of this area met in a Summer Camp and enjoyed three days in the out-of-doors. They slept on the pine needles, cooked over a camp fire, studied out-of-doors, worshipped in the open, and enjoyed many kinds of recreational activities. Two of our summer workers, Miss Arthur and Miss McKee, with the pastor and other leaders, conducted the camp with so much success that the young people demanded a longer camp in the coming season.

In the Andalusia group of churches, Miss Ina Adams and Miss Eunice Williamson conducted ten Bible Schools and gave the young people's work of that section a great boost. Ina is making plans for the coming summer and in another season she hopes to strengthen the many activities started this year. Other young people in the community assisted the two workers and gained experience in leadership along with a feeling of responsibility for the work of their churches.

West Florida churches were assisted by Rev. G. Staley Hunt during the summer. He conducted some Bible Schools but spent most of his time working with Rev. W. H. Tillman in revival services. We look forward to carrying on a real educational program for the young people and children of this large group of churches so that the Sunday Schools and Young People's Societies may be strengthened. This can be done with more assistance and we hope to place more workers in the area next summer, if possible. The yearly young people's Christian Life Conference has done a great deal to bring the young people together and to inspire them to greater efforts in their local churches. There has been a vast improvement in the conduct of these conferences since their beginning, particularly in the leadership developed among the young people.

This is a brief survey of the work of our young folks for the churches of Alabama and West Florida. Through their summer work the young people themselves have grown in a remarkable way and through their fine example, they have helped others to gain new ideals for their own lives and the courage to work to attain these ideals. More and more of our S. S. S. people are coming from our Southern institutions. It is a splendid test of the spirit of these institutions that they inspire the students to pass on to others some of the good they have gained through their advantages. It is education for service that counts. With many of our young people that service begins right at home in their own section during their summer vacations. Our slogan for the year 1933 is "A Bible School in every church and a Christian Life Conference in every Association." At the regular Association meetings the young people have been given increasing responsibility for their own special sessions and for their share in the whole church program. Each year we take a few forward steps toward building up the ideal church which shall help all of its people to work together in the building of Christian character.

Prayer—We come tonight in the age-old quest for the good life. We recognize, our Father, that our lives are very imperfect in thy sight. We live in a world that is perplexed and disturbed. We meet problems we are unable to solve. May we in our meditation tonight get such a vision of thy will for our lives that the solution of tomorrow's problems might be easier and more satisfying. Give us alert minds, broad sympathies and adventurous faith that we may be able to discover the principles of Jesus for our lives.—Amen.

As advance preparation for this meeting:
1. Assign a member the task of discovering the difference between a principle and a law. (There should be a definite effort to get before the Society the exact nature of a principle.)

JESUS GIVING LIFE AND HEALTH.

LESSON X—MARCH 5, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Jehovah hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."—Ps. 126:3.

LESSON TEXT: Mark 5:21-24, 35-43

The stories of Jesus' miracles of healing and of raising people from the dead have a practical message for us. They are simply historic accounts of what is eternally true, of what Jesus is constantly doing in life, even today. In other words, Jesus is a source of health and life today. Religion and health are related. Religion gives life and health. Jesus, the highest embodiment of what we call religion, heals and helps.

Fortune in Misfortune.

The ruler of the synagogue thought misfortune had struck his home when his daughter became seriously ill. Of course it had. But good fortune had come in disguise, for out of this misfortune he came to know Jesus, came to receive Jesus' ministry, came into a new relationship with Jesus. Furthermore, he had his daughter restored to him. It is the way of Jesus. When we take him unto our sorrows and troubles and apparent disasters, he overrules them and gives us more than we ever hope.

The ruler's sorrow drove him to Jesus. It caused him to lay aside his false pride. It made him take life more seriously. It begot in him such a change of spirit that Jesus could help him. It is thus with our sorrows and misfortunes. Many a man never comes to know Jesus Christ until sorrow or adversity has stripped him of his false pride, revealed to him his own insufficiency, and driven him humbly and sincerely to Jesus.

Fear—Faith.

Word came that the girl had died, and the ruler's heart sank within him. Jesus was quick to see it. He said, "Be not afraid, only believe." How fear stalks as a dark tragedy in so many lives! But perfect love casteth out fear. As we believe, fear loses its devastating power. Jesus' message to all is "only believe." Jesus is not talking about intellectual belief, or creeds, or dogmas. He is talking about personal trust in him. The man or woman who sincerely trusts Jesus Christ finds deliverance from fears. The more we trust the less we fear. Not what do we believe, but whom do we trust, is what counts. In these trying times men need faith in a living, loving God.

The Inner Circle.

"And he suffered no man to follow him, save Peter and James and John, the brother of James." He would make no parade of his miracles. Furthermore, these three were perhaps the better prepared to enter into this intimate experience. God reveals his secrets and imparts his spiritual blessings to those who are prepared to receive them.

A Rebuke.

"Why make ye this adieu, and weep?" Jesus enters sympathetically into our sorrows. In fact he takes them upon himself. But he would rebuke many of us for sorrows that do not have an adequate source. There is much sorrow that is pagan, that should have no place in a Christian's life. Jesus is always displeased with undue lamentations over departed friends and loved ones. His remark, "Let the dead bury the dead," was his striking way of telling us that we should not allow our sorrow or even respect for the dead, keep us from entering upon the privileges and responsibilities of living.

Not Dead, But Sleeping."

"The damsel is not dead, but sleepeth." This remark of Jesus taken on its face value would indicate that the girl was not really dead. Whatever may have been the facts in this case, however, his words are true. Those who die to all appearances, really fall asleep. We shall awaken some day in newness of life. We have not lost our loved ones and friends—they have simply gone from us for a while. They that sleep in Christ shall awake. We shall have them again.

Ridicule and Scorn.

"And they laughed him to scorn." One of the most difficult things one has to face is scorn or ridicule. This is especially true of a young person who is trying to live a Christian life. It might help us to keep in mind the fact that Jesus had to face scorn and ridicule. But he went quietly on, doing his duty, and being true to his ideals. It might help to point out that those who believed even against what seemed to be reason, were vindicated. The so-called "wise" folks do not know it all. Science cannot speak the last word on some of the deeper mysteries of life. Faith is as valid as are some of the propositions of scoffers of religion. There is no more difficulty in believing than in not believing.

The Personal Touch.

"And he took the damsel by the hand"—the Jews thought that they would be contaminated by touching a dead body. Jesus did not hesitate to disregard this superstition. He took the damsel by the hand. Mr. Sunday School teacher, if you want to do effective work, you must maintain the personal touch. Mr. Minister, you must do pastoral calling. There is no substitute for the personal touch.

"I Say Unto Thee, Arise"—And She Arose.

In him was life. He himself said, "I am the Life." He has power over death. At his bidding we shall some day awake from our sleep and rise. We shall be restored to our loved ones. The family circle shall be re-united again. Wherefore, be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord.

God's Part—Our Part.

"And commanded that something should be given her to eat." Jesus brought the girl back to life. Her parents, nor anyone else could do that. He did not give her anything to eat. Her parents could do that. God does for us what we cannot do for ourselves. He does not do for us what we can do for ourselves.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NOTES.

ment and consultation with ministers and others, what are the principles of Jesus' teaching.

In developing the topic have a well organized discussion on "Some of the Major Principles of the Teachings of Jesus," such as:

(1) "The Value of Life," (2) "The Principle of Service," (3) "Turning the Other Cheek," (4) "The Principle of Love." Then follow the above discussion with "How Do We Discover these Principles?"

The religion that Jesus found among his own people was largely dependent upon rules and regulations. He was harassed by the crowd continually to give them some definite teaching that would solve their life problems. But he very skillfully avoided making rules and regulations.

It is reasonable to suppose that a Creator—God, who gave his Son—would not leave us without a means of discovering the fundamental principles that his Son has for our lives. The task for this meeting would seem to be that of discovering the "Major Principles of Jesus' Teachings, and How We Can apply These to Our Own Living."

"The opening of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."—Psalm 119:130.

JESUS! WHERE?

MONDAY.

JESUS ALWAYS AT HOME.

"Wist ye not that I must be in my Father's house?" (Revised Version.)—Luke 2:49.

The parents of Jesus had lost him, and they sought him everywhere without avail, until they located him in the temple of God. There he plied the question of the text, and

Within their home they saw the child
That lived the perfect love,
A love like that which rules the heart
Of the great God above.

That simple, wondrous, lovely life
Betrayed itself from heaven;
He was the child that should be born
The Son that should be given.

—B. Waugh.

This home was the realm of full liberty to be about the work which he had been sent to do and to which life called him.

This house was the realm of responsibility to the supreme object of all his actions in life. That object was God the Father. He belonged to the Father, first of all and nothing must interfere. This is the work to which he referred at last and said, "it is finished."

Is this not our question: "What doth the Lord require of thee?"

Prayer—Our Father, the Father of Jesus, hast thou work for us to do? Give us a conception of that duty, and send us on. Here we are Lord, send us.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

JESUS AT WORK.

"Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" (Revised Version.)—Luke 2:49.

The work of Jesus seems first to be a claim to sonship to the Father in Heaven, not to Joseph. All through his life, Jesus called God, "My Father." He taught us to do this also when he said, when we pray, say, "Our Father." We are "joint heirs with him." In this respect we are brothers with Jesus. So when we go to God, if we can remember that he is our Father, what a field of life and love it opens up to us!

The work of Jesus was that of complete surrender to the Father and the Father's cause in the world. He says: "I must." This word is used thirty times in the New Testament in relation to his mission. In connection with compelling power, there were other things he must do, "suffer many things," "rejected," "delivered," but, said he, "all things must be fulfilled," then he "must rise," "must reign," etc.

This suggests not only the higher necessities of Jesus, but the higher necessities of our lives. Our manhood for life and for God begins at our necessities. God is found at the foot of extremities where necessity drives us to the barest possible good. Life begins joyful and hopeful and free only when we respond to the urge of necessity, triumph over it.

Prayer—Teach us to say "Our Father" aright; reveal to us our work for thee in life, and give us the great heavenly urge to rise from what we are to what we ought to be.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

JESUS IN BAPTISM.

"Where all the people were baptized . . . Jesus also having been baptized."—Luke 3:21.

This was the first event in Jesus' ministry.

A voice by Jordan's shore;
A summons stern and clear—
Reform! Be just! And sin no more!
God's judgment draweth near!

A voice by Galilee;
A holier voice I hear—
Love God! Thy neighbor love; for see,
God's mercy draweth near!

O, voice of Duty! Still Speak forth; I hear with awe—
In thee I own the sovereign will,
Obey the sovereign law.

Thou higher voice of Love,
Yet speak thy word in me—
Through duty let me upward move
To thy pure liberty!

Luke informs us Jesus came forth from his baptism praying. This is a solemn hint as to the spirit of devotion which not only life's call should be regarded by us, but in which all divine ordinance should be received. Upon such a consecration the heavens open and the voice of the Father's approval is heard. Jesus is in consecration.

Prayer—O God, our Father, give us this day intense perceptions and understanding of the great and holy calls of life that we may not only become religious ourselves, but that we may aid others to become religious for God.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

JESUS IN PRAYER.

"And it came to pass in these days, that he went out into the mountain to pray; and he continued all night in prayer to God."—Luke 6:12.

The praying Christ is a prominent figure in all his ministry.

If Christ must pray, how much more do we need to do so. Aside from the harmony with God's soul which it brings us, there is something in a physical attitude which helps the elevation of the soul. Jesus is found in prayer.

Oft when God we ask
For fuller, happier life;
He sets us some new task
Involving care and strife.
Is this the boon for which we sought?
Has prayer new trouble on us brought?

This is indeed the boon,
Though strange to us it seems,
We pierce the rock, and soon
The blessing on us streams;
For when we are the most athirst,
Then the clear waters on us burst.

—Anon.

Prayer—Repeat the Lord's Prayer.

FRIDAY.

JESUS IN SERVICE.

"If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his."—I. Peter 1:11.

The outstanding work of Jesus was service. He seems never to have been called to preach, but "to do the work of the Father which sent me." That work seems to be to heal the sick, open the eyes of the blind, heal the lame, bind up the broken-hearted, raise the dead to life, and point to the way of life that gives perfection of life, happiness, peace and tranquility.

Then he said, "Greater works than these shall ye do because I go to my Father." He opened the eyes of the blind, but to us he has given the power to open the eyes of the blind morally and spiritually.

How can we follow him in such service? With all our sins, selfishness, and false propensities, it seems impossible. Yet he himself has told us that even to give a cup of cold water to a thirsty one is a thing that he will notice, if it is done in his spirit.

"In his spirit"—that is the word. The spirit should animate all the actions of every-day life. Therein lies the perfection of our souls. He knows all our failures, weaknesses, temptations, etc. He enters into all of them, because he has passed through all of them himself. But if we can do everything "in his spirit," that, he has promised, will bring perfection.

Prayer—Dear Father, by thy spirit, the spirit of thy Son, iterate and reiterate by all the lessons of human experience, the spirit of thy Son in all our service, that in all we do and say we may completely fulfill thy will. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

MORE THAN OUR SHARE.

"To the weak I became weak."—Read I. Cor. 9:18-23.

In many ways the richer and more populous States are taxed for the less wealthy and less populous States. For example, for every ten dollars paid by Idaho in Federal taxes she receives back from the nation nine dollars for the building of roads; but for every ten dollars paid by Massachusetts in Federal taxes she gets back only ten cents for her road construction.

What is true of States is true also of individuals. If we have more than average possessions, we have more than average duties, and should be glad to have them. To be called on to do more than our share is a patent of nobility. The burden of responsibility is the weight of a crown. Let us be grateful if we are called on to do more than our share of work for the weak. It is a high honor; it is a token of strength.

Prayer—Continually, O thou Omnipotent, art thou sharing thy power with us puny mortals. Receiving from thee, we would imitate thee, as thy Son gave himself for us.—Amen.

REPUTATION'S RESPONSIBILITY.

"To whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required."—Read Luke 12:41-48.

In a wise leaflet Olvan Macauley, the president of the Packard Motor Car Company, says that "we sometimes speak of winning a reputation as though that were the final goal. Reputation is a reward, to be sure, but it is really the beginning, not the end, of endeavor. It is a reward, but in a much more profound sense it is a continuing responsibility."

No man's well doing is his alone. If God had not helped him, he could never have succeeded. He owes a future to his past because it is far more God's past than his. He is responsible for continued reputation because God's honor is in his charge. If he should let down, it would be, in a real sense, the letting down of all the host of heaven.

Prayer—Be our perseverance, our Saviour. We are thine, may men never call us thy failure. We will hold sacred the honor of thy cause forever.—Amen.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

SHALL WE ADJUST OURSELVES?

By ELWOOD W. JONES, D. D.

"I can do all things through Christ, which strengtheneth me."—Phil. 4:13.

From membership in the Sanhedrin, Jewry's highest ecclesiastical and legislative body, Paul the Apostle had descended in the material scale to the task of a tentmaker, working at his trade for bread while he preached the Gospel of Jesus Christ. For the sake of Jesus, to whom he had dedicated his life, Paul had taken his course. He could say by the grace of God, "I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content. I know both how to be abased, and I know how to abound; everywhere and in all things I am instructed both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to suffer need."

Surely Paul had adjusted himself to the radically changed order of things which began when he became a disciple of Jesus Christ. What of ourselves in this radically changing era! Shall we adjust ourselves to safeguarding our fundamental institutions? Let us consider this question as our subject.

I. To say we are living in very trying times is simply to state what everyone knows and experiences.

These trying conditions are not local simply, nor are they confined to the nation; they are world wide. The newspapers bring us fresh reminders of these conditions every day.

II. The reaction to these conditions varies greatly:

1. Some lose their morale and give up the effort to cope with the times: (a) A portion of these become objects of charity, and do not mind that such is the case. I do not thus refer to multitudes who, because of unemployment which they cannot avoid, are unable to help themselves. I have in mind those who have ceased to try, and are content to be cared for by the communities where they happen to be. (b) Another group that has lost its morale gives way to temptation, and furnishes the law-breakers of our day. These become a menace, and a great expense to the state.

Both of these groups are partly the products of these times, and must receive consideration for a considerable time.

2. Still others try to go on largely as usual, without thinking of the possible consequences. There are many in this group. They are trying to stem the tide of these days, but they are trying to go on as usual, not stopping to consider what effect this way of doing will have upon their future.

3. The vast majority of people are trying to adjust themselves to the radically changed conditions of these days. Some one has said: "The recognition of a task is a long step toward its accomplishment." Those in this group are in the great majority, and it is upon these thus minded that our social fabric must largely depend.

III. In the adjustment to present-day conditions, we ought to bend every effort to safeguarding our fundamental institutions.

Practically everyone has to economize in these times; but along what lines? I firmly believe that any effort to economize which tends to decrease the efficiency of home, church, school, and welfare aid is certain to prove very costly in the end. It isn't essential that a child shall be stylishly dressed, but it is essential that he shall have good home influences, wholesome food, and be a regular attendant at the public school. It is essential to child welfare that our public schools shall continue the normal period, and that attendance shall be maintained at a high level. It is essential that our churches in all their organizations shall be maintained at the highest point of service and influence. Children should be in Sunday School every Sunday, and they should come on time. Our school is operated as a school, beginning at the appointed time, and the worship service of the school has great value. All of us should be in attendance at the church services even to the point of sacrifice. Whatever you can do, and everything you can do to make the church influence strong, you are doing to help your fellowman. The church should be supported financially to the very best of our ability, because it is a fundamental institution. It is not essential as to how you are dressed in church, but it is essential that you be there.

IV. In normal times adjustment is not so vital, but these times call for much adjustment that the vital institutions of life may be maintained. Some will think they can begin adjustment by decreasing or omitting their offerings to the church. About two years ago the only bank in a small Maryland town failed, causing great loss to its depositors. The only church in that town called a meeting of its members to consider closing its doors as one means of adjustment to the conditions forced upon them. We do well to be much in prayer that we may adjust ourselves in the spirit of our Lord.

I commend the action of the Men's Bible Class of the Franklin Christian Sunday School, which had been planning an oyster roast, but decided to abandon the feast in order to give the cost thereof to caring for the poor. We need contacts in a social way, but these social contacts can be maintained without the expense usually involved. Those who have the Christian bravery to declare their unwillingness to continue spending precious dollars in social pleasures, will be pioneers in a real service to their fellows. Money spent in any needless or extravagant way is badly needed for Missions and local church support, as well as welfare aid. If we shall eat less lavishly, we shall feel better physically and spiritually. Thus we can do more for those in need.

Shall we adjust ourselves to safeguarding our fundamental institutions? We can do it, and I believe we shall, as we pray for and receive the help of God. "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."

BEGINNING AGAIN.

By SUSAN COOLIDGE.

Every day is a fresh beginning,
Every day is the world made new;
You who are weary of sorrow and sinning,
Here is a beautiful hope for you—
A hope for me and a hope for you.

All the past things are past and over
The tasks are done and the tears are shed;
Yesterday's errors let yesterday cover;
Yesterday's wounds which smarted and bled,
Are healed with the healing which night has shed.

Yesterday now is a part of forever,
Bound up in a sheaf, which God holds tight;
With glad days, and sad days, and bad days which never
Shall visit us more with their bloom and their blight.

Let them go, since we cannot relieve them,
Cannot undo and cannot atone,
God in his mercy receive, forgive, them,
Only the new days are our own.
Today is ours, and today alone.

Here are the skies all burnished brightly,
Here is the spent Earth all reborn,
Here are the tired limbs springing lightly,
To face the sun and to share with the morn,
In the chism of dew and the cool of dawn.

Every day is a fresh beginning,
Listen my soul, to the glad refrain,
And, spite of old sorrow and older sinning,
Take heart with the day and begin anew.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

We received a box this week from our good friend, Rev. E. Carl Brady, containing four beautiful quilts. They were donated by the good women of Brown's Chapel Christian Church, Providence Congregational Church and Piney Grove Baptist Church, near Hemp, N. C. We appreciate this contribution very much.

The good Baptist people coming to our rescue reminds the writer that when he was a young man, living in the little town where we had no Christian Church, he attended a Baptist Church and Sunday School, and taught a fine class of young ladies in a Baptist Sunday School, and was later elected superintendent of the Sunday School and served for more than a year. We always considered it quite an honor. We shall never forget how we had to study to be able to teach the class, as they studied their lesson and knew it, but it was interesting, and we enjoyed it. We always appreciate donations from any denomination and friends of any denomination who want to help us will always find a warm welcome.

If a little child came to us in need, and it was homeless and helpless, it would be hard for us to turn it away because it came from some other denomination than the Christian denomination. The largest gifts we have received since we have been here have come to us from other denominations. Those who were interested in little helpless children and wanted to see them have an opportunity in life.

WHEN THE MANNA FELL.

It was the night that gave manna to the tribes of Israel. What the Scriptures style "bread of heaven" and "angel's food" was brought to them out of the thick darkness. And so the manna of divine truth comes to us from the night of sorrow, and the believing, living soul feeds and feasts on convictions and sentiments which ripen for it amid the shade of affliction.—Christian Index.

Nearness of life to the Saviour will necessarily involve greatness of love for him. As nearness to the sun increases the temperature of the various planets, so near and intimate communion with Jesus raises the heat of the soul's affection toward him.—Spurgeon.

OBITUARIES

FOLTZ.

Texana Foltz, wife of Reuben Foltz, died January 13, 1933, at her late home in Harrisonburg, Va. She was 76 years old. She was married to Reuben Foltz 52 years ago. Surviving are her husband, six sons, and two daughters.

Sister Foltz was a good woman, and highly esteemed by all who knew her. She was a faithful member of Mt. Olivet (R.) Church, and always interested in every enterprise of the church. It was her great delight to attend her church whenever she could.

Funeral services were conducted at St. Paul's Lutheran Church in Page County, January 15, 1933. Services were conducted, as per her request, by Rev. W. B. Fuller and the writer.

A. W. ANDES.

SHERRAR.

Nannie Windsor was born in Randolph County, Ala., December 13, 1933, died in the same community January 24, 1933. She married Roy Sherrar, in October of 1912. To this union were born six children, four girls and two boys.

She accepted Christ as her Saviour and united with Corinth Christian Church in 1916. Hers was a beautiful Christian life. She loved her home, her church and her God. Her husband preceded her to his final reward about two years ago. Her health has been failing since. While her body grew weak, her spirit grew stronger. It was an inspiration to this writer, her pastor, to hear her talk of her undying faith in her Saviour. She always wanted to hear a part of God's Word read and have prayer when we visited her.

She leaves to mourn their loss a widowed mother, three sisters, two brothers, six children, many other relatives, and friends numbered by her acquaintance.

Her pastor, her church, and community feel very keenly their loss, but we know God's grace is sufficient. She revied a short time before the Spirit took its flight and gave the most beautiful testimony I ever heard, and then peacefully went to sleep to awake on the other side of the river, where parting never comes.

Funeral services were held at Broughton Baptist Church, in charge of the writer. The emaciated body was laid to rest in this cemetery to await the resurrection of the just.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, our heavenly Father, who so graciously granted us, for nearly half a century, fellowship with a chosen man of God in the person of Dr. William Wesley Staley, and now has called him to his reward, the members of the Junior Philathea Class of Suffolk Christian Church desire to take this means of expressing their love and esteem for him, and of paying tribute to his memory. Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That in the going home of Dr. Staley, our class has lost an unusually wise counsellor, a veritable pillar of strength for numerous emergencies, a devoted leader and minister, a man who put God first, one whose entire life was consecrated to the high calling of his mission.

2. That while we acknowledge the providential dispensation which has removed his gentle spirit from our midst, our hearts are filled with sorrow and that we extend to each member of his family assurances of our deepest sympathy, pointing them to the divine consolation: "I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors and their works do follow them." 3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of his devoted daughters, a copy sent to "The Christian Sun," and a permanent record of them be made in the minutes of the Junior Philathea Class.

"For though I be free from all men, yet have I made myself servant unto all that I might gain the more.

"And unto the Jews I became as a Jew, that I might gain the Jews; to them that are under the law, as under the law, that I might gain them that are under the law.

"To them that are without the law (being not without the law of God, but under the law to Christ), that I might gain them that are without the law.

"To the weak became I as weak, that I might gain the weak; I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some.

"And this I do for the Gospel's sake, that I might be partaker thereof with you." (I. Cor. 9:19-23.)

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, our heavenly Father, in his infinite wisdom and love, has called to his eternal home our beloved pastor and friend, Dr. William Wesley Staley, we, the members of the Suffolk Christian Church, offer the following loving tribute to his memory. Be it resolved:

1. That God, in his love and all-wise providence, doeth all things well, so while we mourn the loss of one who "went about doing good," and whose faithful life on earth was according to the teachings of our Saviour, we bow in humble submission to his divine will.

2. That we hold in loving remembrance his faithfulness as a pastor and as a friend to all, and that we pattern our lives after the goodness and brightness of his life in such a way that our lives may reflect the same spirit of Christian sunshine as his did, and we believe his wholesome and glorious example will continue to draw us nearer to our heavenly Father.

3. That we extend to his family our deepest sympathy and love, realizing the sisters have lost a loyal brother, the children a loving and devoted father, the community a consoling, cheerful and encouraging friend and the Christian Church at large, a faithful and efficient executive, a Christian scholar, a liberal contributor and untiring worker.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to his family, one to the "Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty," one to "The Christian Sun" for publication, and one be spread on the records of the Suffolk Christian Church.

Billy Sunday Collapses.—

During a meeting in Des Moines recently, Rev. William A. Sunday collapsed and was taken to his hotel in a delirious condition. Diagnosed as being caused by "a general run down condition," his ailment will compel him to rest for two or three months at least. The noted evangelist is nearing his seventieth birthday, and has been a hard worker for many years. Our readers will learn with regret of Mr. Sunday's illness.

Dun and Bradstreet Consolidate.—

An agreement has recently been entered into by which are consolidated the two best known credit houses of the country. Wall Street Journal tells us that R. G. Dunn & Company have acquired the assets and business of Bradstreet and its subsidiaries, and that the new company will begin operations as soon after March 1st as it is possible to complete necessary legal proceedings. The name of the new corporation will be Dun & Bradstreet, and the present officers of the R. G. Dunn Corporation will continue in charge of its affairs.

A Dumb Doctor.—

William A. Daniel, associate executive of the Department of Missions of the American Missionary Association, happens to hold the degree of doctor of philosophy from the University of Chicago. He is also uncle to a diminutive little lady, to whom he sent a doll's house for Christmas. His niece made the following observation in her "Thank you" letter: "I don't know you, but you are one of those doctors like Uncle Robert. You can't go to see people when they are sick. You can't pull teeth. You can't even stay in a drugstore. Whoever heard of a doctor like that? I am six years old. I am in the first grade."—Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty.

Unemployment.—

Unemployment in the United States reached an all-time peak in January of more than 12,000,000 wage earners out of work, according to an estimate issued recently by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor. There was an increase of 200,000 over December, and the trade-union figures increased from 24.9 per cent of the membership in December to 25.5 in January. "This new peak of unemployment," says Mr. Green, "is the worst tragedy of the depression. It makes the need of shortening work hours more than ever urgent. Hundreds of thousands of jobs have been completely eliminated during the depression; the only way we can ever put our working population back on a basis of self-support and turn our man power to creating wealth, is by shortening the work week." In quoting Mr. Green, one does not necessarily have to agree with him. The attitude of the American Federation of Labor may possibly be all wrong. One cannot conceive of improving conditions by simply spreading present available work among more people than those now employed. Work begets work, and there is enough work for everyone, without reduction of work day or work week, when buying power is once restored. Mr. Green is working at the wrong end of the puzzle.

Uncle Sam or Uncle Shylock?—

In a recent issue of The Christian Evangelist, a quotation is carried from the Melbourne, Australia Argus, of which our contemporary says: "The whole article is so fine in its spirit that we would like to reproduce it entire were it not for the fact that it would take all the space on this page." Written by Herbert Brookes, former representative of Australia in Washington, the quotation says: "What shall we think and say of the United States, the great creditor? Is it to be Uncle Sam or Uncle Shylock? We know our own predicament; we know that of Great Britain. Do we appreciate the situation in the United States? Let us recall a few facts before we make up our mind. The Congress of the United States, which is the personification of the spirit of the people, and which stands before the world as the spokesman of Uncle Sam, passed an act with the following provision in 1921, when it set up the United States Debt Commission—It wanted no debtor to pay beyond its capacity. The debtor must be permitted to preserve and improve its economic position; to bring its budget into balance; and to place its finances and currency upon a sound basis, and to maintain and, if possible, improve the standard of living of its citizens. 'No settlement which is oppressive and retards the recovery and development of the foreign debtor is to the best interests of the United States or of Europe,' it was stated. Settlements were made accordingly with the debtor nations in the terms of this resolution. Great Britain being the first to arrange her terms, did not receive as favorable consideration as was meted out to those other nations which delayed the settlement. This was her misfortune; it did not arise from any desire to discriminate. Does this considerate and generous act justify us in regarding Uncle Sam as Uncle Shylock?" It is upon the attitude of Mr. Brookes and other like citizens of both the British Empire and America that we must depend for the future good will between us. No greater service can a patriot render to his country, than helping to preserve a spirit of good will between it and its sister nations.

Pawnbroker or Fire Department?—

Under the above caption appeared one of the best editorials of the week in the magazine, Business Week. In the discussion of the recent events in Detroit, which culminated in the suspension, by the Governor's order, of all the banks in the entire State, the question is raised as to the real function of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It is contended that the crisis might have easily been avoided by prompt action on the part of that body. It is acknowledged that the assets of the institutions were "frozen." On the other hand, they were probably worth the amount of the loans sought. This gives rise to the question: Is the Reconstruction Finance Corporation a pawnbroker or a fire department? We quote: "If it is a pawnshop in which necessitous borrowers are compelled to hock assets worth two or three times the amount of the loan, we are opposed to it, and so we think will be most business men. We see no reason why the government should be engaged in a careful pawnbroking enterprise, niggling over security, haggling over interest, competing with other lenders. If only the choicest of business houses are to be allowed to survive this depression, we hardly need the R. F. C. Nature will take care of that." On the other hand, if the Finance Corporation is a fire department, there is little sense in the idea of counting out buckets of water when there is a fire. "What is the idea in saving only the virtuous and prudent? Isn't fire dangerous wherever it may break out? The closing of a bank is a terrific blow to public morale and to business—it doesn't make much difference whether it had good collateral for an R. F. C. loan or not." Certainly the loss to business, due to the temporary closing of the State's banks greatly exceeded the possible loss that it would have taken to avert such a "holiday." And a few more such holidays, and we are told that the commitments already made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will be worth little if anything. To continue quoting: "What this country needs at this juncture more than it needs any other one steady influence, is 60 days without one bank closing. If the R. F. C. would boldly announce that, as a matter of policy, no bank in the United States would henceforth be allowed to close . . . we predict that it would restore the spirit of consumers and of business as no other act could. . . The Reconstruction Finance Corporation was born of emergency, to meet an emergency. It was intended, or so we are told, to restore shattered morale, preserve calm and order in the business world. In practice, it has tiptoed in dread of Congressional criticism. It has dared cautiously. Worst of all, it has done a piece-meal, ineffective job." The indictment by Business Week is a grave one, but one which seems evident. With the incoming of a new administration in the White House, one can but hope that there will be insistence that the members of this Corporation carry on in the spirit in which it was intended, originally, that they should, or resign and give others with greater fortitude a chance.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Commander Evangeline Booth of the Salvation Army, spoke at the morning service at the church at St. Petersburg on February 12th.

The many friends of Dr. and Mrs. Clarence A. Vincent sympathize with them in the loss of their little three-year-old grandchild, who recently died at the home in Winter Park, Fla.

A Round Table Conference on the Woman's Work of the churches was held in connection with the 50th anniversary of the Orange City Church. The presidents and officers of the Woman's Societies and the churches in the vicinity of Orange City were invited. The guest speaker on that occasion was Mrs. Charles Fisk, formerly superintendent of Woman's Work in the Conference of Ohio.

The church at North Miami, Fla., has recently received a legacy of $500.00. The pastor, Rev. O. H. Denny, conducted the funeral of a man who had not shown particular interest in the church. After the funeral he was told by the man's lawyer that he had left this sum to the church. It was a very pleasant surprise. The church at Winter Park has also received a legacy of $1,000.00 recently.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill has been teaching in the Interdenominational Training School at Fort Myers. She also spoke at the morning service and also to the young people and the women of our church. Rev. O. T. Anderson is pastor of this church. At a recent Sunday evening forum there was an address on "What Science Has Done to Religion," by Professor Twiss of Ohio State University. Professor Twiss is a son-in-law of Washington Gladden.

The pastors of the churches in Miami lunched together with the State Superintendent on Monday, the 20th, several Congregational ministers also attending. It was a very pleasant affair, and matters of importance were discussed. Dr. C. Rexford Raymond was present and spoke concerning the work of the Southern Seminary Foundation (formerly the Atlanta Seminary Foundation), at Nashville. Dr. Raymond also spoke at the Coral Gables Church and the Miami Beach Church and later left for St. Petersburg and Jacksonville, at both of which places he was to speak on behalf of the Seminary.

THE NOBILITY OF WORK.

Let us live hard, work hard, go a good pace, get to our journey's end as soon as possible—then let the post-horse get his shoulder out of the collar. I have lived long enough to feel, like the old post-horse, very thankful as the end draws near. . . . Long life is the last thing that I desire. It may be that, as one grows older, one acquires more and more the painful consciousness of the difference between what ought to be done and what can be done, and sits down more quietly when one gets the wrong side of fifty; to let others start to do for us things we cannot do for ourselves. But it is the highest pleasure that a man can have who has (to his own exceeding comfort) turned down the hill at last, to believe that younger spirits will rise up after him, and catch the lamp of truth, as in the old lamp-bearing race of Greece, out of his hand before it expires, and carry it on to the goal with swifter and more even feet.—Charles Kingsley.

FRUITS OF HEROIC GIVING.

In the first place, heroic giving will increase our faith. For faith grows by its exercise. Faith does not come by wishing for it. Faith does not even come by will power. Faith comes by the exercise of faith. "Cast your bread upon the waters," we are told. Cast it there; act upon what infinitesimal morsel of faith you may have, and you will have more. "Prove me now herewith, saith Jehovah of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." We are asked to do something, to "prove" God for once. Faith grows by its exercise.

In the second place it ought to increase our love. For we love those whom we serve. If we give to the great cause which lay so close upon the heart of Jesus, we shall love God and our neighbor with a new devotion that we have never known before.

In the third place it will increase our joy. For it satisfies that desire within every healthy soul for self-sacrifice. It gives one the joy of self-mastery and self-respect, which is the foundation of peace and joy. If our giving fails to do this; if it fails to give us this joy, then something is wrong with it. And that brings us to the final step.

This whole truth rests upon the full personal surrender to Jesus Christ. With what winsome austerity Jesus looked into that young man's face, and said, "Come, follow me." All that has been said has been said in the light of the full surrender. Apart from this, it will all seem foolishness to many. Some parts of God's word are not very savory to those who have not made the great surrender. But to every one who has made the surrender of faith, every single part of God's word has a solemn joy and wonder. And the teaching of stewardship is perhaps the crowning glory of it all.

"One thing lackest thou: sell all that thou hast and distribute to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, follow me."—Ex.

TRULY HELPING THE POOR.

Any impartial reader of Jesus' Gospel must realize that helping the poor was one of the three chief things that he urged upon his followers. The only Christian excuse which we business men—or even those readers who live on salaries—can make for enjoying the income which we do, is that our efforts give employment to others or benefit others in some direct manner. Our only excuse—in the sight of Jesus—for having a share of stock or a bond or a savings bank account is that this money furnishes capital which supplies employment and the necessities or comforts of life to others.

Jesus certainly would not approve of us laying up treasures for ourselves. Unless our primary motive is to supply employment and useful goods or services to others, then every church organization should destroy its invested funds, and every Christian college should return its endowment to its givers. Then every consistent Christian should depend upon the petition, "Give us this day our daily bread," instead of depending upon coupons, dividends, savings banks or life insurance policies. There is no alternative. In fact, the indifference of the churches to this responsibility is largely the cause of our present lack of influence. We cannot serve God and mammon.

Now there are only two ways to help the poor—notwithstanding the speeches that are made in Congress or by my good friends at Ford Hall in Boston. These two ways are as follows:

(1) One way to help the poor is by giving doles; that is—direct aid. Surely it is our duty to give doles rather than to let people suffer; but doles give only temporary relief. Furthermore, all forms of direct relief both undermine the character of the recipient and use up the resources of the country. I know that some of my radical friends will dispute this statement, but if they will make a careful study of the situation they will unanimously agree that the statement is correct. Doles, furthermore, relieve present distress of the poor today at the expense of the poor a generation or more later. Statistics further show that to the extent doles help the poor today, they make it just that much harder for the poor in years to come.

(2) The other way to help the poor is to provide employment for them. I do not mean by this, the building of public works merely to create work. This policy is especially dangerous when paid for by borrowed money which burdens future generations with interest charges, or when paid for by increased taxes which take money out of general circulation. It is very important that every reader should remember that when men pay taxes, they do not use idle funds, but are compelled to go to the bank and draw out money which the bank is now loaning to some one else. For every dollar which the government spends on public works, there is so much less money available by the banks, corporations and individuals for the building of homes and other forms of private construction work. Therefore, "by providing employment," I mean the hiring of men to build houses, manufacture merchandise and perform other services which raise the standard of living and for which there is a definite demand.

Therefore, as Christians, Dr. George W. Coleman, Mrs. Babson and I are devoting our lives and fortunes to interesting young men and women to go into business for themselves and assume the risks of starting new industries, performing additional useful services and thereby helping the unemployed. Of course, in the early stages of the present business depression, drastic deflation was necessary before there could be a recovery. All necessary deflation, however, has now taken place, and we, in order to bring back prosperity, only need men and women willing to take the risk that our forefathers took. Yea, we do not need, in order to bring back prosperity, to take even as much risk as they took. They risked not only all their possessions, but also their lives to found this country in the interests of their children and other descendants.

Yet today I find very few people within or without the churches who are willing now to take economic risks to help the poor. Almost everyone with whom I talk is looking for something "safe." Unwilling to perform a service and trust God for the result, he is looking only for seasoned stocks or bonds of some company which, in order to pay him interest, is discharging its employees and increasing the suffering of the poor; or else for some bank which is 80 per cent liquid and refuses to loan any money; or else for a safe job on a salary. In other words, the real difficulty today is that almost everyone wants to "ride on the cart," and almost no one is willing to pull the cart. Not only is such a program uneconomic, but it is thoroughly un-Christian and contrary to the teachings of Jesus. The present business situation will improve only as men and women are willing to take business risks and be "enterprisers"—starting new industries, performing new services and aiding in the distribution and consumption of goods already being produced.

It is solely with this thought in mind that Dr. Coleman and the Trustees of the Babson Institute and Webber College are giving their time to the training of young men and women for business. Mind you, we are not interested in training these young people to "play safe" and merely ride on the cart while others are pulling it through the millions of unemployed and poverty-stricken. We are not interested furthermore in teaching these young people how to get "something for nothing" from the stock market or in any other way. We are, however, intensely interested in having them get the vision that unemployment is decreased only by people who have the ability being willing to risk their lives and fortunes in enterprise and thus give employment—depending themselves, meanwhile, wholly upon the profits of the business after the bond-holders and salaried workers are taken care of. Only in this way can the poor truly be helped and can economic conditions, in which Jesus was always intensely interested, really be improved. Therefore, I make the following statements:

(1) The investor who will follow Jesus will today buy stocks of legitimate companies and thereby show his confidence in the country instead of merely "playing safe" by confining his investments to unquestionable bonds. Depending upon profits is today far more Christian than depending upon interest. . . Of course, just the opposite was true from 1926 to 1929. Then the most Christian thing to have done was to sell stocks and "store" cash; but then the average church member wanted to buy stocks! Furthermore, until the last two hundred years—or before Calvin set the whole church adrift economically—it was wrong to collect interest. Certainly, there is a happy medium between being a Communist and a mere bond-holder. Furthermore, remember that those who are depending on banks and life insurance companies also have a moral responsibility.

(2) The employee who will follow Jesus will today be willing to work on a commission or a sliding scale in order to rehabilitate the industry, instead of insisting on definite wages at this time. With the national production index down to nearly 50 and with the standard of living reduced to what it was 20 years ago, every earnest Christian should be glad, in the common good, to work on a contingent basis for the sake of getting industry back again to normal. It is beyond my comprehension how Christian people who were willing to risk their lives for about $30 a month in a so-called war against oppression are now unwilling to make any practical sacrifice in this war against depression.

(3) The student who will follow Jesus will today train to be a salesman or an enterpriser or a business man instead of being content to work on a salary. Today we have enough people engaged in production, but there is a tremendous shortage of courageous men and women in distribution, selling and advertising. The trouble with technological unemployment is that when a man loses his job on a machine—instead of joining the sales force to sell the product of that machine—he goes home and mopes and berates research, manufacturers and other business men. The only practical way to help the poor is for the brains of our country to go into business as enterprisers, only we must be very sure they are actuated by Christian principles, motives and ambitions.

Reducing the Supply of Labor.

To avoid arguments with economists and others I realize that unemployment can be relieved in another way than by enterprisers raising the standard of living and increasing the rate of speed that money circulates. Although I am interested in helping the poor primarily through research, experimentation, salesmanship and advertising, yet there is another way by which unemployment can be reduced and the poor can be truly helped. This other way is through the reducing of the supply of labor. Dr. Coleman and I are personally interested in increasing the demand for labor; but similar results may be obtained by reducing the supply of labor. This can be accomplished through education, birth control, segregation of the unfit, the restriction of immigration and the forbidding of child labor and night work. In fairness to social workers, we will grant that all of these things should be done.

Just one word in conclusion: This article is not written in any defense of capitalism in all its phases. There are many aspects of capitalism—all of which are indulged in by church members—which are a disgrace both to the system and the church. Gambling in stocks in the New York Stock Exchange is no better in the sight of God than gambling at horse races or in Chinese opium dens. The exploitation of labor for selfish purposes is immoral and cannot be condemned too strongly. It is beyond my comprehension how church members, and especially church boards, can invest their funds in companies which are so ruthless with their employees or so deceptive to their customers. I also have my doubts as to the justice of inheritance. I seriously question whether it is right for my child to inherit a million dollars, and some neighbor's child, equal in every respect, to inherit only a mortgage to pay off. Hence, the above is no defense of capitalism. I will go further and say that we are all going to learn a lot of good from the experiments now being tried in connection with Communism.

I do, however, wish to emphasize that whether this nation operates under a capitalistic or a socialistic or a communistic or (what is probably more likely) under a Fascist economic system, we can help the poor only by encouraging enterprisers and men who are willing to assume risks for profit. These "profits" may be in the form of money as distributed in the United States, or in the form of "knightships" as distributed in England, or in the form of "power and authority" as distributed in Russia. The fact remains that all short-cuts, such as are now being considered in Washington and by many well-meaning social workers, are merely schemes of "robbing Peter to pay Paul." In the end these plans will simply make the entire country poorer, and, if seriously tried, will be a crime against future generations. We can truly help the poor only by increasing legitimate employment through improved methods of distribution, salesmanship and advertising, whether done privately, cooperatively or by the State.—Roger W. Babson in the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

SHARING.

(Editorial Correspondence.)

Florida Sanitarium, Orlando, Fla.,
February 25, 1933.

On a long, lone walk, two hours ago, the writer passed a vacant lot (there are myriads of them in Florida now), on which some kindly hand had in some previous year planted a bogan-villa. All else on the lot was gone—house, garden, folks and fixings. But here was the gorgeous and glorious bogan-villa arrayed and aglow in all its purple beauty. It alone kept silent sentinel and remained to remind the passer-by that someone who cared had been here, and someone who cared to share. And this, one finds, is the deepest and divinest trait of our human make-up. First and foremost of all God shares. This is evidently fundamental to his nature, as well as to our own. I am listening now to the notes of a mocking bird holding, as he is, high carnival in the branch of a tree close by. The only excuse for his song must be his joy and delight in sharing its rich melody with me and all who will listen. He makes no charges for admission and his concert is free to all. I guess God has taught him to share his song with those who love it, but can't sing.

No prince going to his coronation was ever more royally arrayed, or more tastefully costumed, than my bogan-villa, and it isn't going any place; just waiting and watching here in all its heavenly radiance, to share with others its rare, rich coloring. "Truth, goodness and beauty," they tell us, are the three elements of the divine nature, the three attributes of God. And all of us know that the potential factor in each of these is sharing. "Ye shall know the truth and the truth will make you free." The truth is for all who will seek. Knock, find, take.

The One who went about doing good, said: "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me; for my yoke is easy and my burden is light." All are invited to share in the joy, gladness, victory of that life in which there was no evil.

And beauty abounds everywhere in God's good universe, and the very nature of beauty is to share its charm with everyone. I love these orange trees for they have a three-fold beauty. Their rich, deep green foliage is most restful of all colors to the human eye. The late lamented Dr. W. W. Staley used to say that God created more green than he did of any other color, because green was the most restful color to the eye. Then the orange tree hangs with its golden yellow fruit—yellow being the richest, as well as the rarest color to the human eye. One reason we prize gold above all other metals is because it is the richest of all metals in color. And now the orange trees, imagine it, hanging with ripe, rich fruit, thick with deep green foliage, are unfolding to the world their fragrant blossoms of pure, dreamy, delicate white. There you have it—green, yellow, white. And such a perfect blending as no artist's hand can rival. In this one tree, hundreds of which are lined out before me around the borders of this placid, blue lake—in this one tree God shares in white the emblem of his blessed purity, in green the glory of his eternal life, and in yellow the richness of his grace and bounty in supplying his world with that which relieves human want. "He is my Shepherd, I shall not want."

Our human nature partakes of the divine and becomes one with it when we seek to share with others the bounties and blessings that have come to us. This we may do from an impulse of benevolence when we share bread with a body that is hungry. And this we do from an impulse of spiritual longing as we seek to share with others a knowledge of our Lord, whom to know is life eternal. John R. Mott, in speaking of the world conference which convened in Jerusalem in 1928, says: "The Christian leaders there assembled from all parts of the world, came to realize as never before that the world mission is pre-eminently a sharing enterprise. Jerusalem is to be thought of not as a landmark, but rather as a new creation. Those who were present were conscious that they were in the midst of one of the great creative hours of the world mission and expansion of Christianity. And one of the words, one which I venture to say will ever be associated with the occasion, was 'Sharing'."

In this benevolent time many of us are willing to share material bread with physical bodies. Are we willing to share the bread of heaven with spiritual bodies—souls that are perishing for the bread of life. I find that the Adventists, who keep this and other similar sanitariums, work away at their benevolent task of relieving human pain and want and in so doing earn money with which to share the Gospel in which they believe with souls in the pagan world who are perishing without it. All their Sabbath School offerings, all their public church offerings, added to continuous offerings from individuals, all go to the one purpose of missions—foreign missions. Sharing with those in greatest need the Gospel as they receive and teach it.

Many of us are more benevolent than we are missionary. We are more ready to share physical bread with hungry bodies than we are spiritual bread with perishing souls. The world's greatest need is not for bread for our bodies, but the bread of heaven for our souls. There is an abundance of material food for the physical body. We never had so much—even in our most prosperous times—as we have now. Dairymen are pouring out milk on the ground, armers are burning wheat and corn for fuel, or letting it rot in the bins. But there is a dearth of spiritual food. The souls of men and women are perishing, and our Lord who has given us his all is saying to us who know him: "Give ye them to eat." We need now to share the bread of heaven with perishing souls. And this is what the church undertakes to do through its missionary work. And the church is the only institution on earth that undertakes to share with others the spiritual food, that bread that came down from heaven.

Favored Florida has shared with me its sunshine, its flowers, its song of birds, the willing and efficient service of this sanitarium, and for this one can but be grateful and rejoice.

REPEAL: THE BEGINNING OF DISMEMBERMENT OF AMERICA'S SOUL.

(The following is an address by Senator Morris Sheppard, of Texas, delivered in commemoration of the 13th anniversary of the Eighteenth Amendment, on Monday, January 16, 1933):

Shall this nation retreat from an ideal—an ideal which has demonstrated its necessity and worth? Thirteen years ago America planted the ideal of prohibition in the organic document of its being—the Federal Constitution. It is now called upon to reverse its action. A nation can not trifle with its ideals.

The repeal of prohibition would be the beginning of the dismemberment of the soul of America. The Constitution of the United States as it now stands is the best answer of the ages to the aspirations for freedom and self-government. Its provision for prohibition is the loftiest peak the march of man has reached.

Alcohol a Menace to Human Rights.

Prohibition marks an advance in the application of government and law to human rights of such significance as to justify every effort for its retention in the Constitution. What greater protection for human rights may be conceived than the preservation of the ability to enjoy these rights to the fullest possible extent? Beverage alcohol is a menace to human rights. It imperils the right to life at its very foundation, diminishing the chances of the unborn child of a drinking parent to see the light of day. It impairs the right of untold millions to a normal existence because, to use the language of a noted pathologist, Dr. Emil Bogen, no other poison causes so many deaths or leads to and intensifies so many diseases, both physical and mental, as does alcohol in the various forms in which it is taken. It threatens the right to live, because drink-crazed men will maim and kill. It endangers the right to security of life and limb, because drink-influenced men at machine controls will make lanes of travel welters of death and mutilation. It destroys the rights of human beings to food, to shelter, to clothing, comfort, decency, culture and the general facilities of civilization—to freedom from terrorism and abuse. It violates the right of society to a moral healthful, thrifty, intelligent and foresighted citizenship. It annuls the right to liberty, because liberty is the power of individuals to exercise their entire faculties for the most beneficial conduct of government and life. The prohibition of beverage alcohol conserves the fundamental rights of men.

Alcohol Destroys Sources of Normal Life.

To repeal prohibition is to put the appetite above the rights to life, liberty, and to happiness in their true significance. It is to defile an ideal, the ideal that places the higher liberties above the lower and the obsolete ones. In restraining the lower liberty of appetite for alcohol prohibition makes room for the higher liberties of thrift and health, efficiency and judgment, of rightful conduct, and moral discrimination, which carry society to happier, more prosperous, and more exalted levels.

The human organism is built upon discipline, coordination, restraint, reactions, developed and communicated by brain and nerves into conduct and action. Alcohol taken as a beverage poisons the tissues of the brain, cripples and disorganizes nerve activity, and thus pollutes, distorts, destroys the sources of normal life and progress. It attacks first of all the most delicate and vital brain centers, whence emanate conceptions of right and truth and justice, of policies of enterprise and government; impairs the capacity of the nerves to carry the impulses of efficient action; and long before its effects on the body are visible, long before what is commonly supposed to be intoxication visibly develops, it has started a human unit on the road to moral collapse, mental incapacity and physical enfeeblement. Of course, individuals pause at different stages on that road. Some halt and some retrace their steps. But multitudes go on unable to combat the lure of the drug until they form a load beneath which civilization staggers and descends.

Alcohol Out of Place in This Machine Age.

The danger to the United States of a return to legalized alcohol can not be overstated. The scale on which machinery and enterprise must operate to preserve and to increase in this country the widest diffusion of the facilities of modern life any nation has ever known produces an exhaustion and a strain calling for the most serious attention. Add to this the problem of caring for millions of the homeless and the unemployed, of finding relief from the most devastating economic upheaval in human annals, and the need for a sober nation with all the abilities of its people intact and militant becomes so pressing as to admit of no denial. The temptation to find a temporary forgetfulness in a deadly, narcotic drug like alcohol becomes more formidable as the crisis lingers and modern demands and responsibilities on the human make-up multiply. We are now cultivating the substitution of healthful and normal forms of relaxation and recreation for the use of alcohol. The repeal of prohibition would be fatal to this fundamental step in human progress.

Face One of the Most Critical Decisions in History.

And so we confront one of the most critical decisions in all history. National prohibition and the most productive years of the mechanical era began together. Prohibition was the culmination of a succession of welfare measures which paralleled the growing application of machine power and scientific knowledge to human industry, a movement which acquired its full momentum in the United States shortly after the Civil War. The purpose of these enactments was to bring scientific knowledge to the doorsteps of the people, to enable them to meet the exactions and the emergencies of the mechanized regime, to protect them against the vast concentrations of machinery and wealth rising on every side and converting the once independent masses into tenants and employees—to shield society against the accidents, calamities, diseases, vices, crimes, and deaths attending the new period—to equip humanity for the operation and the mastery of the machine. General addiction to alcohol which in a less strenuous time had been permitted under more or less rigid limitations became intolerable in an age of mechanical transport and manufacture, of numberless units and mighty masses of machinery, or organizations and enterprises of gigantic scope, requiring muscles like iron, nerves like adamant, integrity like granite, minds with the accuracy of the modern instruments and engines to be operated and controlled.

Industry and Commerce Made a Discovery.

But for the realization by industry and commerce that liquor was an obstacle to their expansion prohibition might have never done. The liquor trade had itself been made the subject of mass production, one of the chief features of the machine epoch, and had become one of the most powerful, dangerous and insolent of the special interests. In the effort to maintain and to extend its sway it became an agency of corruption in practically every unit of government, from precinct and township to county, state, and nation. It took on nation-wide proportions, causing the American people to spend for intoxicants over $2,000,000,000 a year, consuming annually an amount equal to an average of more than twenty gallons for every man, woman and child within our borders. Its suspension during the World War emphasized its wasteful, nonsensical, evil, and antisocial nature, and it was thrust aside not only in the interest of morals but of efficient quantity fabrication of useful things and of safe and effective operation of machinery.

Liquor Propagandists Capitalized "Depression."

Then ensued that marvelous period of machine production from 1920 to 1929, which, accompanied by national prohibition, amazed and thrilled the world. It was marked by the greatest efficiency and the largest pay per individual worker the world has ever witnessed. Next came the collapse, due to speculation, which made the Mississippi bubble and the tulip craze conservative in comparison; and a time of loss, stagnation, want and unemployment that might well have been succeeded by revolution and by chaos had the liquor traffic been in operation on a legalized basis. Liquor propagandists, bountifully financed, capitalized the general dissatisfaction and depression to start a movement against prohibition, a movement artificial in its character, venal in its origin, and false in its representations. As a result of that movement declarations appeared in both party platforms for repeal or alteration of the Eighteenth Amendment. These declarations had no place in political party platforms, because prohibition is not a party question. I stated during my speaking trip in behalf of the Democratic ticket in the last campaign that I had not changed my views on prohibition, that I was opposed to both Democratic and Republican planks on that subject, that I supported the Democracy on economic grounds. The present movement for repeal obtained its principal impetus from the plethora of pocketbooks of a few millionaires, determined to shift the weight of taxation from their own shoulders to the masses even if it doomed the masses to perpetual poverty and woe.

The Right of "Submission."

I am a believer in the people's rule and in the right of petition. Ordinarily I favor the submission of any question to the people whenever there is a genuine desire on the part of any substantial number for submission. Indeed, I said as much in this Senate when speaking in behalf of the submission of the Eighteenth Amendment, adding that I would vote for submission, even if I were an anti-prohibitionist, in order that the matter might be decided by the proper tribunal. That situation, however, is no precedent for this. The present condition is the result of paid propaganda and not of any spontaneous movement among the people. I am opposed, therefore, to submission under the present circumstances and at the present time. The country has been saturated with such subtle and such vicious misrepresentations regarding prohibition that it would be impossible to secure a fair hearing on the facts at this juncture. A feeling amounting almost to an obsession has been widely established to the effect that the return of liquor will solve the farm problem, conquer the depression, supply the needed revenue, balance the budget, restore prosperity. The treatment of dry speakers by the screaming mobs of both the great party conventions at Chicago is a sample of the difficulty at this time of securing a fair and decent hearing for prohibition. . . . The controversy over prohibition involves more than the immediate merits of prohibition itself. It involves the ability of this nation to make the most of the machine age in the interest of the people. If prohibition is repealed and the liquor traffic restored, economic and industrial advancement cannot be resumed on the scale of its former hope and promise. Repeal will mean the definite arrest of human progress. We were well on the way before the crash of 1929 to a point where there would have been available for all our people on terms within universal reach a full share of the commodities, facilities, requirements, comforts, and refinements of modern civilization. If the masses are again to be doped and drugged with alcohol on the immense commercial basis contemplated by the beer bill and the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment—to be compelled to exchange sobriety and efficiency for the misery and incompetency of an alcoholized status—then neither government nor industry will ever see the time when the best possibilities of our country will be realized. The golden age of plenty for all, which seemed so near a short while ago, when our over-optimism and unfortunate governmental policies temporarily disorganized and suspended the forward trend, will have been postponed indefinitely. Henry Ford has well said no one wants any drinking man to be at the mercy of machinery, and that no one wants to be at the mercy of any machine in the hands of a drinking man; that machinery must be soberly made as well as soberly driven.

A Lesson from Great Britain.

As an indication of what may be expected in the event of repeal observe the accidents on the highways of wet Great Britain. The number of persons killed on the roads of Great Britain in 1931 was 6,691, or about eighteen a day. The number injured was 202,119, or about 561 a day. The authorities agree that the principal cause of these deaths and injuries is the legalized and regulated liquor traffic; the liquor traffic "brought into the open," as the American wets like to say. There are approximately 1,500,000 motor vehicles in Great Britain, 26,500,000 in the United States. On the basis of the number of cars on the highways of both countries we would have, in a wet United States on the same ratio, 113,000 killed and 3,400,000 injured in this country every year—more than twice as many killed as we lost by battle deaths in the World War, nearly ten times as many injured. In dry United States the number killed per annum by accidents connected with mechanical traffic is between a third and a fourth of the figure in wet Great Britain in proportion to the number of cars on the road.

A Shout of Joy from Criminals Throughout the World.

Evangeline Booth, commander-in-chief of the Salvation Army in the United States, who was in intimate touch with the effect of the liquor traffic on American conditions when it was in legalized operation and who is in reliable position to predict the result of its legal reinstatement, says that to repeal the Eighteenth Amendment will be to fling again wide the gates of our country to an army of slaughter such as never tramped its relentless heels upon any blood-soaked fields of war, to give carte blanche to a monster of destruction which has strewn the shores of time with more mangled forms than any other instrument of death: that if the Eighteenth Amendment were to be abandoned there will not be a drinking den in

SUFFOLK LETTER.

One of the outstanding events in Suffolk during the past week, was the annual meeting of the Eastern Virginia Elon College Alumni Club. This meeting was held in the Fellowship Hall of the Christian Church, Friday evening, February 24th, from 7:30 to 10 o'clock. One hundred and forty-eight members and guests were registered.

Dr. J. E. Rawls, who has been the honored president for two years, presided. A brief business session was held before the annual banquet. At this session, the following officers were elected for the next two years: Dr. I. W. Johnson, president; Rev. F. C. Lester, vice-president, and Mrs. Annie Staley Calhoun, secretary-treasurer. All items of expense are included in the price of the ticket for this banquet. In this way there are no other fees assessed against the members.

The purpose of the Club is to renew the fellowship and college spirit among former students of Elon College. The response each year has been very satisfactory, and the attendance this year was the largest since the organization of the Club.

A delicious banquet was served by the ladies of the Christian Church, at a cost of 60c per plate, including other small items of expense incurred in sending out invitations to the members. The program included musical numbers by the Male Quartette of the Waverly Christian Church, composed of Messrs. Oscar West, J. F. West, Jr., Oscar Baird and J. R. Moss, with vocal solos by Mr. Oscar West. The Elon College Glee Club, under the direction of Prof. Dwight Steere, assisted by Miss Helen Chamblee, head of the Voice Department, rendered several vocal numbers, with solos by Miss Chamblee and Miss Virginia Dare Black, and a quartette by Miss Chamblee, Miss Black, Mr. Will Cooper and Mr. Lloyd Johnson. The entire musical program was artistically rendered and enthusiastically applauded by the audience. A musical program rendered by the Elon College Glee Club is a very favorable advertisement for the Music Department of Elon College. Any institution would be honored by such a Glee Club.

Dr. L. E. Smith, president of Elon College, brought greetings from the College to the Club, and briefly emphasized the efficiency of every department of the work offered to students at the College. Regret was expressed that Dr. Jason Noble Pierce could not fill his engagement to deliver the principal address on account of illness. The writer was called in as a "pinch hitter," to make a brief address on "Why Should the Church Have a College?"

The ties of friendship formed among college students is a valuable asset in after life. Young people who work together, sharing each other's burdens, joys and sorrows, create a strong spirit of good fellowship. This spirit is sometimes referred to as "college spirit." Whatever it is, every college student who enters into it, knows something of its power and value. The impression and influence of school days will remain after many other things have been forgotten. Hard work in school will bring memories, as rich as high-seasoned banquets and expensive social functions, in after years, when one sits in quiet meditation and calls from the past the joys of the long ago. It is a great joy to look back upon school days with a clear conscience, and an inner conviction that one tried to work honestly, play fairly and live above reproach. A school reputation will follow a student through life. Three things should engage the attention of every young person in school: thorough work, reasonable recreation and faithful worship. Sunday should be a day of rest and worship for every young person in school, and all school books should be untouched for that day. No person who neglects spiritual culture can be well rounded in the development of character.

I. W. JOHNSON.

OCEAN VIEW, VA.

Just after our conference at Waverly, Va., last November, I was stricken with an acute attack of appendicitis. Before I was able to work, we lost our home by fire, including all our furnishings, more than a thousand books, our clothing, the loss totaling not less than $3,000. Our church at Ocean View is a mission church, and is having a very hard time to find enough money to meet expenses. They have not been able to pay but very little salary for the last four or five months. They are doing some vital things for their pastor and family.

On February 14th, a large number of the church people visited our new home with good things for the house and pantry. Those who have helped are as follows:

Mrs. Brown, president of Ladies' Aid Society; Mrs. P. Martone, Mrs. Harrell, Mrs. Fisher, Mrs. Brewer, Mr. and Mrs. Bartholomew, Mrs. May Whitehurst, Mr. and Mrs. N. C. Gay, Mrs. Duncan, Mrs. Paschal, Mr. George Tines, Mr. Harrell, Miss Isabel Stout, Mrs. Jacobs, Mrs. Nordhoff, Dr. J. W. Manning, Dr. Floyd.

This remembrance gives us great encouragement. We thank every one.

J. H. WARREN, Pastor.

DANVILLE, VA.

Third Avenue Christian Church held its first quarterly conference, February 8th. It was, indeed, a very good conference. The treasurer reported about $402.00, with all bills paid up to date, and no indebtedness against the church. It may be interesting to the readers to know that six years ago we did away with the envelopes and personal pledges, and take up a free-will offering twice each Sunday. The church school superintendent reported that the average attendance for the winter in the school had been better than 325. The Christian Brotherhood of the church had a very good report. During the past quarter they have organized a Sunday School on the River Road, which has had an average attendance of about 75. Their work here is hopeful for a church in the future. The Welfare Organization and other societies reported over $100.00 given to needy families of the community. The prayer groups reported from five to seven meetings held each week, with many souls being saved during the quarter. These groups hold shut-in services, cottage prayer meetings, country church services, etc.

During the quarter the Bible Class presented the pastor with $20.00; the ushers $5.00, and the church $50.00. The Ladies' Aid Society and the Missionary Society gave the church two communion trays. The Brotherhood presented the church with two additional collection plates. Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Alderson presented the church with a nice communion table with the following inscription attached: "In loving memory of our daughter, Gaynell, 1911-1932. Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Alderson."

It has been gratifying to note in this time of depression, when people have had so little to give, the church has continued to grow. Our church school has had the best average attendance in its history for the winter months. The congregations are larger at the church than ever before. If our church increases as much in the spring over the winter as it has hitherto, we will have to build additional room.

May we ask the readers to join us in prayer that God will continue to bless the efforts we are endeavoring to put forth in his blessed name.

M. T. SORRELL, Pastor.

ROSEMONT CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Rosemont Christian Endeavor celebrated its 20th anniversary in this church, Wednesday, February 1st.

Miss Elizabeth Mills, the president of our Young People's Society, made the address of welcome, which was followed with short talks by several of the charter members of the Society, as follows: Mrs. B. M. Herbert, Mrs. Irma Spencer, Mr. J. R. Morrison, Jr., Mrs. A. B. Dobbs, Mr. J. N. Cutchins, Mrs. H. M. Brickhouse, and Mrs. O. S. Mills.

Our pastor, Rev. J. F. Morgan, made a nice speech in honor of those present who had a part in organizing Christian Endeavor in our church twenty years ago.

Our Juniors rendered several vocal and instrumental numbers, followed by a humorous debate.

The meeting was greatly enjoyed by all those present, numbering about one hundred and forty, fifteen of whom were charter members.

The success of this meeting was due to the efforts of Miss Lowrane Halstead. Miss Halstead is one of our very fine Endeavorers and Sunday School teachers. We are very fortunate to have Miss Lowrane and all of the Halstead family in our church and Sunday School.

ENTERING THE HEARTBREAK HOUSE.

March 4th, at noon, Franklin D. Roosevelt, following a custom nearly as old as our government, will, after being administered the oath of office as President of the United States, ride in gala procession up historic Pennsylvania Avenue. He will then enter the Heartbreak House.

A prison cell, a torture chamber, the privilege of abiding there is sought only by men who deeply love their country, or are driven there by ambition.

In the early days it was known as the President's House, but in more recent years has been called the White House, and is so typified because of its color.

To every tourist who visits Washington, the White House is the one place eager to be seen. The thousands of school boys and girls who visit the National Capital every year take back as their one central theme their pilgrimage to the White House.

The White House is a symbol of purity, the grounds a model of beauty, the kindly and courteous treatment of every attendant toward the public deserving of praise and childish thanks. It is the Welcome House as well as the White House.

But while the people know it as the White House, the Welcome House, to all its principal occupants it has been the Heartbreak House. No man ever dwelt there unburdened by crushing care, unbowed by sorrow.

Washington's home it never was, but he saw it built. Jefferson worked and worried there. He knew its tortures and pains. Bitter the lessons learned under its roof, and bitter the pain of learning.

Jackson, Lincoln, and Grant, as well as others, lived and labored and suffered there. They knew it as a Heartbreak House, and rightly so, because of the pain they bore.

Roosevelt, while the most robust, youthful, and jovial of all our Presidents, tasted the cup of sorrow and bitterness, and the strains and pains and pangs of the Heartbreak House sent him back to Sagamore Hill, a partial wreck, soon to lay down his colorful career.

Taft, though serving in most tranquil days, found the burdens many and heavy. His great physical body tottered under the load, and it was only in the performance of a duty so congenial with his training that kept him in the public service, even alive, little more than a dozen years after leaving the Heartbreak House.

Wilson came into power one of the most enviable of men. Of towering eminence in his profession, with a record of great achievement behind him in scholarship, in literature, and in public affairs, he had millions of enthusiastic followers. He left the Heartbreak House shattered, scarred and broken in body and spirit—slandered, villified, and hounded fairly into the grave, not for his own faults alone, but for the frailties of all humanity. He committed the crime that, throughout the course of human history, has been most certain to bring swift and relentless punishment in its train—the crime of living ahead of his time. It was the crime that prepared the block for Raleigh and the stake for Huss.

Harding not only found the White House the Heartbreak House, but a house where his thought-to-be-friends turned it into a House of Betrayal. Millcens cannot be far wrong in their conception that he trusted his heart to others and they broke it—broke it in the Heartbreak House.

Coolidge bore the brunt of a re-adjustment, after a world upheaval, as well as that of an exploded political pot that sent its stench throughout the nation. He checked a people from reckless spending, without which national bankruptcy and not merely a depression, would have been the ultimate result. He placed a restraint on a wild Congress and became a national symbol of honesty. Family sorrows added to his burdens, and he left the Heartbreak House soon to enter the sunset valley, to which he was hastened no doubt by worries only he knew.

Hoover entered, well and world known, experienced in statecraft, trusted, and seemed indeed the young Henry, come to the kingdom under a favorable star, to ease the burden and purge the land of its accumulated economic ills. He moves out of the Heartbreak House, despised, crushed in defeat of his high hopes to bring order out of world chaos. Figuratively, and momentarily at least, he has been handed the cup of hemlock. In the traces of his terrible disappointments his friends can see no disfigurements, but merely honorable scars. What these friends consider memorable about Hoover is that he failed, but that he tried. Time, working hand in hand with the true historian, will place him properly in the annals of history. TIMOTHY THOMAS.

MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE.

The 27th conference, commemorating the 96th anniversary of the birth of its founder, Dwight L. Moody, was held at the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, Ill., February 5th to 9th. In spite of a severe blizzard, with the coldest weather reported by the Chicago bureau in thirty-four years, great interest was indicated by the fact that registered visitors numbered 1,800. The large audiences were prompt and eager, attesting the power that rested upon the session. Well-known speakers filled the platform during the conference, coming from all over the world.

Christian Defense Day, Tuesday, presented Rev. William Lamb, of Australia, Prof. John E. Kuizenga, of Princeton Seminary, and Dr. T. T. Shields, of Toronto. Mr. Lamb was heard at the first period on three mornings in prophetic studies of gripping interest. Professor Kuizenga, of the chair of apologetics in Princeton Theological Seminary, gave a masterly defense of the historic faith, with incisive comment on the Laymen's Report on world missions. His first address will appear in the March issue of the Moody Monthly. Dr. Shields, incisive in utterance, mellowing hard facts with gentle wit, contrasted the finished work of Christ with the repeated offerings of all false faiths.

Thursday, Home and Foreign Missions Day, presented programs of vital interest touching both phases of activity. Peter MacFarlane made vivid the meaning of the rescue mission task as he told of the work at the Union Gospel Mission of St. Paul, Minn., adding that the missions of America are providing 1,000,000 meals a day, and giving 350,000 lodgings each night to the unfortunate. But the great mission is to rout trouble by spiritual triumph. The vast range of the Sunday School mission field was visualized by Rev. E. E. Spencer, Bloomington, Ill., for the States, and by Rev. J. Lloyd Hunter for the great Canadian Northwest. Courage, devotion and much sacrifice are demanded to touch this field in any adequate manner.

Rev. George W. Rhoad, Africa, representing the Ethiopian Branch of the Sudan Interior Mission, carried with him into an hour of marvelous meaning an audience that thrilled to his earnestness, spiritual power, vivid description and unflinching faith. He closed with this word: "In these days when men's hearts are failing them for fear, lift up your eyes and look—He is, and He triumphs still in every life, in every mission, on every field, where He is loved and trusted and obeyed."

A consecration service of profound and tender meaning, conducted by Dr. James M. Gray, president of the Moody Bible Institute, brought the conference to its close, but its benefits and spiritual meanings will live in the hearts and lives of multitudes of grateful believers.

We must make our choice between the way of ease and the way of the cross.—Anon.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary

PRAYER.

Father, God, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life. Oh, that men would love the Lord with all their heart, soul, mind and strength. Oh, that men would serve the Lord with gladness and thanksgiving. Oh, that men would praise the Lord for his wonderful works to the children of men. In the name of our living, reigning, coming Saviour, we humbly pray. Amen. L.

MISSION PERIOD.

Our Christian Churches have designated March 1st to June 30th, inclusive, as Mission Period. Most churches, we observe, of other communions, choose the spring as Mission Period. It covers the Easter season with all its significance of the risen and triumphant Lord. During this period we come face to face with newness of life, quickened life, regenerated life, and the crowning act of our Lord's career and command on earth. He gave to the season its spiritual significance and power. The resurrection completed the act and the fact of regeneration and redemption through Jesus the Christ, and in this power the Great Commission was given to the world: "Go ye and preach the good news to every creature."

Thus the church, a spiritual body, had its spiritual task and message. If the church is to maintain, or recover, its spiritual power and progress it must more and more become missionary in spirit and in activity, and in sacrificial giving and service.

These four months—March, April, May, June—give all our pastors and churches an opportunity to emphasize this spiritual task and privilege of the church. Surely, no pastor or church will fail of this opportunity.

Our American Board of Congregational and Christian Churches puts the matter pointedly and emphatically: "We will not let the depression defeat our missionary passion. We will summon our energies. We will pray mightily. We will contribute our substance sacrificially. That the plan of God for the world may not fail in our generation."

We must not—we will not—allow our financial bankruptcy to create in our churches spiritual bankruptcy. And the only way to prevent, or escape, spiritual depression, is to exercise courageous faith in God, and follow, without faltering, him who said: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, take up his cross and follow me." MISSIONARY PROGRAM.

THE CHURCH AND NATIONAL LIFE—THE NEWER PATRIOTISM.

A Program outline prepared by Rev. Albert Buckner Coe, in the American Missionary, March 1933:

(Note—The older patriotism stressed love of country, but in doing so frequently made love of country synonymous with militarism, imperialism and racial superiority and other generally accepted social evils. The newer patriotism stresses no less our love of country but insists that true love of country emphasizes the right of every man, regardless of color or creed, to the respect of his brothers; it debounces racial unfairness; it opposes war as an instrument of national policy; it denounces nationalism as selfish and suggests that we love our own country best by recognizing that we are a part of a great family of nations.)

Hymn—"These Things Shall Be, a Loftier Race," (Pilgrim Hymnal, No. 532.)

Invocation—

O thou, who hast made of one blood all nations of men, help us to see the largeness and wisdom of thy ways. Thou dost love all men and dost yearn to bring them into the fullness of thine own rich life. While we glory in the Christ whom thou hast given us, preserve us, heavenly Father, from spiritual arrogance and race pride. Open our eyes to the goodness and truth thou hast revealed to others. Make us more like Christ who rejoiced in the faith of the Roman centurion and praised the noble deeds of the good Samaritan. Hasten the day when race pride and prejudice shall vanish from the earth and universal good-will prevail. Forgive, O Lord, our narrowness, our selfishness, our pride and lead us into the fullness of thine own infinite life. Make us in truth thy children; through Christ our Lord. Amen. (McComb.)

Scripture—John 4:5-14. Jesus talks with the woman of another race; Matt. 5:3-12, The Beatitudes.

Hymn—"Where Cross the Crowded Ways of Life," (Pilgrim Hymnal, No. 534.)

Discussion.

Leader—(Presenting the dark side of the world's life):

1. Race Discrimination.

A judge in the United States Court was charging a Negro for bringing disgrace upon his race by selling liquor in a cellar "dive." The judge concluded his philippic by asking the prisoner why he did not lead a clean life, to which the defendant replied: "Your honor, I was once a soldier for Uncle Sam. I fought in France for what you call democracy. I was in the thick of the fight and was twice wounded. When I returned home there was no Chamber of Commerce delegation to meet me at the station and offer me a job. You say I am a fine looking, healthy fellow, but it has meant nothing to me here. I could find nothing to do. I took to bootlegging. It was the only decent thing I could find to do. No prejudice here. White and colored will buy from me now, but if I am straight, I am just a 'nigger with nothing to do'."—Negro Workers, 2. War Implements of the Future.

Concerning a new lethal poison gas, Dr. Hilton Ira Jones says: "It is a deadly poison and would destroy armies as a man might snuff out a candle. War, if it comes again and is to be deadly, will never again be fought with shot and shell. It can't be, for it is much cheaper to destroy life wholesale with this new gas. It may be manufactured at the rate of thousands of tons a day, and it costs much less than powder and cannon, yet it will destroy armies more thoroughly, more effectively, more quickly."—National Defense, by Kirby Page.

3. Slogans and Phrases.

"My country; may she always be right, but right or wrong my country!"

"Bigger and Better."

"One hundred per cent American."

"The World's Greatest Newspaper."

Let the members of the group discuss in order the quotations above. Additional examples may be brought out by individuals. It will be the duty of the leader to stimulate active discussion on the part of all members.

After the discussion have a report from a Findings Committee, appointed at the beginning of the hour, in which the thought of the group is made definite.

PROJECTS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE AND CHILDREN.

What does the word "Missions" mean to you? Is it a nebulous something, without form and void, or is it something concrete and vivid? In order that the work of our young people's and children's groups may be definite and vivid, the writer has chosen from the State project lists specific items of interest to young people and children and toward which we may direct our study and our gifts:

For Virginia Young People—Santee Training School, a school for Indians at Santee, Neb.; Dr. Fred E. Murdock, Ryder Memorial Hospital, Humacao, Porto Rico; Wen Shan School for Girls, Foochow, China.

For Carolina Young People—Fort Berthold, educational and religious work among the American Indians at Elbowoods, N. D.; Rev. William Allen, extension worker, Washington, Alaska, North Idaho; Wen Shan School for Girls, Foochow, China; Katherine Hardeman, a teacher at Capron Hall, Modura, India.

For Virginia Children—The Santee Training School, Santee, Neb.; Dr. Fred E. Murdock, Ryder Memorial Hospital, Humacao, Porto Rico; Schools in China.

For Carolina Children—Fort Berthold, Elbowoods, N. D.; Schools in China.

These are the institutions and individuals whom our contributions support. Those of you who wish to build your own programs may secure material from the undersigned, or direct from the American Board, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass., on the foreign projects, or Miss Helen Smith, 297 4th Ave., New York, on the home projects. Each month there will be a program in THE CHRISTIAN SUN related to one of these projects.

PROGRAM FOR YOUNG PEOPLE'S GROUPS.

Re-read programs of previous months regarding adequate preparation, choice of hymns and worship material and observe them all in preparing for the meeting.

Read the article on "Projects for Young People and Children," on page 8 of THE SUN.

This program is built around the Wen Shan School for Girls. If you would like more material, write to the undersigned. Program I in "Christianity in Revolutionary China," by Cross; "As It Looks to Young China," chapter 3; "Introducing Young China," pp. 77-79; "Living Issues in China," chapter 2; "Lady Fourth Daughter," chapter 5, will give additional help on the educational problems in China.

Leader—One of the enterprises in which we are interested and to which our money goes is Wen Shan School for Girls at Foochow, China (indicate on map, if possible). Since the Chinese Revolution, the whole trend of education and the conduct of educational institutions has changed. Every school must be registered with the government and comply with certain regulations, the chief of which are a Chinese principal and the barring of compulsory chapel and religious teaching. Our first speaker will tell us of the way in which this is working out at Wen Shan:

"Miss Hwang Wen Yu was persuaded to be our first Chinese woman principal. She is a graduate of our own school, with her home still here, a stone's throw from our front gate. After her graduation from Ginling, she had three years' study in America, so by experience and training she was well prepared for her task here.

"The Chinese staff has very materially improved. Instead of one or two college graduates teaching here, we have six Chinese women and three men with college degrees, besides the three American teachers. This makes the greatest difference in the way we approach our school problems together! In our faculty meetings we speak the same language, and I don't mean English! The lively, modern, self-expressive students with whom we now have to deal need all the expert guidance we can give them through the maze of experience the Revolution has brought them.

"Enrollment has more than doubled. In spite of no advertising of any sort for five years, and in spite of much anti-Christian propaganda, our Christian schools have been more in demand than ever before, and we have turned away more than we have received. We now have about four hundred students divided fairly evenly between the two departments—high school and primary—each covering a six-year course and housed in its own separate enclosure. A day-kindergarten is rather expensive to maintain, but we continue it as our best contribution to the immediate neighborhood of the school.

"Not boasting, I think we may claim to have made good in our relations with the government, since our school was registered. The Department of Education has our respect and I believe we have theirs. We have met their requirements, and won some honors at their hands. Their standards are high, and it is a stimulating challenge to try to keep up to them.

"Financially, progress has been made, which I, in my appointment as treasurer, am in a good position to note. The budget has greatly increased. In one item alone—teachers' salaries—more is paid in one term than was before paid in a year. This is to be expected in a country where prices are going up with leaps and bounds. But the interesting thing to observe is that the increase is all met on this side of the Pacific. No increase of appropriation has been made by Boston for Wen Shan in ten years. Chinese money meets the enlarged budget of the school which shows an appreciation of the work it is doing.

"Finally, I would like to write in italics the statement that the school is no less Christian under the Chinese regime than it was in missionary hands; perhaps it is more Christian. I have no measuring-stick to determine the degree. I only feel the Christian pulse beating in our school body vigorously, in the students whose worship and Bible study and service is now all voluntary instead of compulsory, and in the teachers, a great majority of whom are active Christians. A heartening number of students joined the church after the Lenten services in the school, and after the Sherwood Eddy campaign in Foochow last fall, but numbers cannot report the measure in which the Christian idea and purpose is being lived out here. We have a long way to go, but the way is being found."

Leader—Being an American teacher in a Chinese School demands a person of many abilities and iron constitution. Our next speaker will tell us something of Betty Cushman and her work.

Betty Cushman is a Rhode Island girl, a graduate of Oberlin, who with her sister went to China about eight years ago. In January 1930, she wrote the following:

"We have twenty-seven new students, as I told you. Wen Yu is lying awake nights over my schedule. You see, last term I had two assistants—I Ching helped with organ pupils and Ming King helped with the junior high school gym. But this term neither of these girls is available. I have two extra singing classes and forty piano and organ pupils (just about twice as many as last term). Needless to say, I can't tackle the whole line-up—and Wen Yu has no idea of letting me try to. It's terribly difficult to get gym or music teachers, but she is going to get one or two, or bust. I am finishing this letter on Monday afternoon. Wen Yu has gone South-side on the trail of someone to relieve me of all the sports. She has secured a part-time music teacher, one of our former students, to take ten of my organ lessons. I am to have setting-up exercises only four days a week instead of six. This leaves me with six hours of history, ten hours of singing, and thirty piano or organ pupils as my piece de resistance. Wen Yu still thinks this is too much, but I think I can swing it all right. I am still adviser to the Y. W., but am planning to slide out from under the Christian Endeavor choir. And I am working on a scheme whereby I can combine my thirty music pupils into ten classes, instead of trying to do them individually.

"I have a lovely big room in the junior-senior wing of our larger dormitory. It's lots of fun being big sister to our 'top' classes—twenty-four girls in all. Education for girls is still so rare in China that when girls get to be juniors in high school they are like college students at home. If you knew these charges of mine individually, you would never talk about my 'living with the natives'."

Leader—To most of China's millions, New Year's—January 30th—is the great festival of the year, but to the girls and boys in Christian schools, Christmas now has a real meaning. Our next speaker will tell us of our Christmas celebration at Wen Shan, as described by Betty Cushman:

"But I must get on to giving some sort of an account of myself and my doings for the last age since I wrote. We had a perfectly glorious Christmas—the most strenuous of my whole life, I'll admit, but it was a lot of fun. Our girls have so much pep these days that they never seem to get worn out, and they make us teachers feel about ninety-five years old. Somewhere early in November, the juniors and seniors came to Miss Hwang and said they wanted to give a nice Christmas pageant this year, and that they'd work awfully hard if the teachers would just help them a little. Of course, we had nothing but approval for a suggestion like that, and set them to work to think up what to do. Miss Thomas had the bright idea of acting out that familiar little Christmas story. 'Why the Chimes Ring.' By the time we got through translating and adapting and 'China-izing' it, I'm afraid the author would not have been able to recognize her own story! Instead of the poor woman who was freezing to death in the snow, we had a first-class Chinese beggar lying by the side of the road. The girl who took the part threw herself into it so perfectly that she actually cried in pouring out her tale of woe upon all passers-by. We introduced two old women, a troop of soldiers, a crowd of gay young folks, the king and queen—all of whom 'passed by on the other side,' as far as the poor beggar was concerned. Big Brother played the Good Samaritan, taking the beggar home to get something to eat, while Little Brother went timidly along to the cathedral to offer Big Brother's small gift..

"For the second act we staged a regular cathedral service, with bishop and dean, vested choir and candle-lit altar, and all the ceremonial dignity we could manage. The 'bishop' (one of our leading seniors) preached an excellent sermon (which she made up herself), exhorting the people to bring their gifts to the Christ-child in sincerity and humility, with the hope that the chimes might break their long silence and ring out in joyous song. I wish you could have seen how well the girls did with the procession to the altar. All the people who had been indifferent to the beggar in the first act now came down the broad aisle, one by one, bearing their gifts, laying them on the altar and kneeling in prayer. Each one, arising, looked up hopefully toward the bell tower—then, disappointed, went slowly and sadly to an inconspicuous seat in the audience. The 'king' (president of the junior class) was especially good. He placed his crown upon the altar (you remember the story) and then arose proudly in the full assurance that at last the chimes would ring. When Little Brother, frightened to death, but determined withal, came stealing up during the singing of the last hymn, the girls all acted as if everything was over—so the pealing forth of the chimes came as a real surprise to the audience. We drew the curtain upon Little Brother, kneeling at the altar, his little hand just withdrawn from the offering of the two-dime piece, which was his gift to the Christ-child. Then we showed Big Brother and the beggar (on the road a long way from the Cathedral) walking along in delighted amazement, listening to the wonderful bells and wondering 'why' the chimes rang."

"There! I'm afraid my description will give a very poor idea of the pageant, but I wish you might all have been here to see how much happiness the girls got out of giving it."

The material for this program was provided by the Project Department of the American Board.

PRISCILLA CHASE.

THEY CAME—THEY SAW.

Visual education has become an important part of the social service program in Adana, Turkey. Not long ago a local newspaper started propaganda against the playground and Turkish friends advised the leaders to secure from the police a special permit to show films. The Police Commissioner was asked, accordingly, to send men to look the pictures over. As the officers sat and sipped coffee the missionaries darkened windows and soon the films were unwinding. After "The Life of Edison" and an Inkwell Comedy they arose, saying: "We do not need to see any more of your films or take any more of your time. We had no idea your films were so valuable. Every child in Adana should see 'The Life of Edison.'" Their friendly interest has not abated.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

SUMMER SCHOOLS.

This should be our best year for the summer schools, and can be if young people and youth leaders will plan from now until summer to get as many as possible to attend the summer schools.

Remember the following dates, and plan accordingly:

Elon College, July 24th-30th.

Southern Union College, July 27th-August 3rd.

Young people, please begin saving now in order that you may have this week of high adventure in the Christian quest.

FELLOWSHIP BANQUET AT NORFOLK.

We are launching out on another year in Christian Endeavor here in Norfolk, after a fine Fellowship banquet on Thursday, February 2nd, at Parks' Restaurant, observing the 52nd anniversary of the founding of Christian Endeavor by Dr. Francis E. Clark.

Dr. Jason Noble Pierce was the speaker of the evening, and his message was especially timely because of his personal acquaintance with "Father Endeavor Clark," and the intimate things he told us about Dr. Clark, the man.

Dr. Pierce emphasized three things seen in the life of the founder: He was an immigrant orphan and took the name of his uncle who adopted him; he chose the ministry as his profession; and he pinned his faith in young people. He lived to see his movement grow in 25 years to 80,000 Christian Endeavor Societies scattered all over the world, beyond the confines of his own denomination, boasting 4,000,000 members.

ABOUT THOSE BIBLES.

Since the recent article appeared on this page concerning copies of the New Testament and Psalms which are supplied by the Board of Christian Education, Waverly, Va., many requests have come from people throughout the South, and 300 copies of the book have been mailed. This is the finest response we have ever had to any call sent out.

Perhaps the statement was not entirely clear concerning the conditions under which the books are given. Several seem not to understand, and hence the restatement here.

A young business man pays for the books, and the Board of Christian Education, Waverly, Va., mails them to those who make requests.

The books are to be given to boys and girls in Christian Church Sunday Schools on or near their tenth birthday. We cannot supply other members of the Sunday Schools, but we are delighted to furnish all the books needed for ten-year-old boys and girls.

Also, please remember that requests for Bibles should be sent to the Board of Christian Education, Waverly, Va., and not to THE SUN office.

YOUTH FELLOWSHIP AT WORK.

It is a delight to be in touch with the youth movement in the Congregational and Christian Churches. Those who think young people are all bad should spend a while in this office reading reports of what is being done, and then take a journey to some of the conferences, training schools, and churches to see just what young people are doing.

Most people will work for money, and some have said that people will not work without pay.

Young people today are doing a tremendous amount of church work without hope of financial reward. On my desk lies a pile of bulletins announcing the Week-End Conference of Eastern Virginia young people to be held in the Suffolk Christian Church on March 25th-26th, bulletins which have been prepared for the sheer joy of aiding a good cause.

Several young people in this conference have taken it upon themselves to visit the churches of the conference in the interest of young people's work. They go through snow and over muddy roads in order that they may tell of Christian Endeavor, missionary work, religious education, recreation, and all phases of happy Christian life.

Young people throughout the church are becoming more and more aroused, interested, and eager concerning the work of the church. Those who have not found the thrill of this modern youth movement should search for it immediately, and join hands with those who are eagerly seeking the best ways of life.

 Benediction.

An able thinker and leader should be chosen to lead this discussion. In preparing the discussion ask in advance several members to write a description of his earliest conception of God, and of his present conception.

This will provide the background for a very interesting discussion. Most of us have had some queer ideas of God. How did we get them? Where did they come from? Were they wholesome and satisfying? Were they in harmony with Jesus' revelation of God?

Some of the primitive ideas of God should be pointed out. There is a wide gulf between that primitive idea of God, and the God Jesus revealed to the world through his life and teachings. We cannot trace all the changes in this idea of God, but we must notice that the prophets of the Old Testament attempted to give their people a conception much more like that which Jesus revealed.

Seen against the background of any idea of God the world had known previous to the coming of Jesus, what a wonderful God he revealed to mankind! The idea of Fatherhood of God was not new, but Jesus gave it a new meaning. All through the life of Jesus he revealed a God of Love. The parables of the lost sheep, the lost coin, and the prodigal son, are stories of God's yearning for his children who wander away from him. Read and discuss the incidents from the life of Jesus and show how they reveal the nature of God.

THE SEARCH FOR GOD.

All over the world I wander, in lands that I never have trod,
 Are the people eternally seeking for the signs and steps of God.
 Westward across the ocean, and Northward ayont the snow,
 Do they all stand gazing, as ever, and what do the wisest know.
 —Sir Alfred Comyns Lyall.

REPEAL: THE BEGINNING OF DISMEMBERMENT OF AMERICA'S SOUL.

the world, not a gambling hell in the remotest seaport, not a haunt of vice in the most pagan city, not a purveyor of opium and other drugs, not an organizer of the white slave traffic, not an exploiter of the native races of Africa and Australia that will not raise a shout of joy in triumph over the foremost nation in the world, where the forces that retard human progress, destroy human happiness, and disfigure the image of God imprinted on the human face would have vanquished that righteousness which exalteth a people

Youth Slandered by the Wets.

The charge that drinking in the colleges has increased since prohibition was exploded by a questionnaire sent to 257 college presidents in forty-five states in 1930. Forty-four replied that there was no drinking among the students. Forty-seven reported that drinking among students was, as it always had been, unknown or almost unknown. One hundred and forty-six answered that there was less drinking than before prohibition. Eight stated that drinking was about the same. Three—only three—declared that conditions were worse than before the passage of the Eighteenth Amendment. The statement that the drink habit has grown among young people in the secondary schools is equally unfounded. Some time ago I placed in the Congressional Record a communication from Dr. Charles E. Barker, of Grand Rapids, Mich. He has been a lecturer in the high schools of this country for more than eighteen years. During all that time he has spent eight months a year speaking almost every day before the students, his work taking him into almost every state in the country. In answer to an inquiry from me last year he replied that with the exception of a few high schools in some of the large cities located in what might be termed the wealthy residential sections, the principals had informed him that drinking among students was practically nil and that the Eighteenth Amendment had been of immense benefit to the country.

Resist Repeal!

Let the movement for repeal be resisted by every element in America that would preserve the essence of our freedom, the meaning of our history, the basis of our advancement, and the character of our most sacred obligations to humanity.

JESUS MINISTERING TO THE MULTITUDE.

LESSON XI—MARCH 12, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many."—Matt. 20:28.

LESSON TEXT: Mark 6:32-44.

The disciples had just returned from their preaching tour, or their first missionary journey, and they told Jesus, both what they had done, and what they had taught. The order is significant—they naturally put their deeds, including their miracles, before their teaching. People like to do things, and they like to talk about what they do.

Jesus suggested that they get away from the crowds for a little rest. He knew the value of relaxation. He knew its necessity as well as its value. "Come ye yourselves apart and rest a while" is sound advice for all, and it applies just as much to Christian workers of all kinds as it does to anybody else. Such times are especially needed to renew the spirit as well as the mind and body of man. Worship, both private and public, has tremendous potential value in this respect.

Sheep Without a Shepherd.

Jesus and his disciples got into a boat and started across the lake to a secluded and deserted place. The people saw them going, however, and they went on shore around the end of the lake, and made such good time that they reached the proposed place before Jesus and his disciples did. A great crowd awaited them when they arrived. "And Jesus when he came out, saw much people, and was moved with compassion toward them, because they were as sheep not having a shepherd; and he began to teach them many things." The sight of that great crowd of people, unconscious of their deep needs, lacking any adequate spiritual leadership, ignorant of their privileges as children of God, seeking satisfaction in material things, untaught in the things that made for the abundant life, strangely and strongly moved the heart of the Master. "He had compassion toward them"—he suffered with them. And he began to teach them many things. Just so today does the Master look upon the hungry in body, and the hungry in heart. And just so today does he know that even before the needs of the body there are the needs of the soul. Man cannot live by bread alone. These desperate times are not the times to be slighting the cultural and spiritual agencies that make for the more abundant life.

And His Disciples Said—And Jesus Said.

The disciples said, "Send them away." Jesus said, "Give ye them to eat." It was thus in that day. It is thus in our day. In so many instances the church is turning men and women away. The spirit of Jesus says, "Give them to eat," not only of the physical things, but of the spiritual. The church has resources for the needs of the world. God expects us to meet these needs out of what he has given us.

The Impossible—The Possible.

It was a seemingly impossible task which the Master assigned to his disciples. Their query, "Shall we go and buy two hundred pennyworth of bread?" implies that. But that which is impossible in human terms becomes possible in divine terms. When they brought such as they had to Jesus, he blessed it and made it adequate to meet the need. "How many loaves have ye?" Face frankly your resources, even though they be limited, and allow him to use them, and miracles will happen.

And He Gave Thanks.

"And looking up to heaven, he blessed, and brake the loaves." He was thankful for such as he had. And he expressed that thanks. As a magnet sweeps through a mass of sand, attracting to itself any iron filings that might be in the sand, so a thankful heart sweeps through the day, finding many, many things for which to be grateful.

Divine Order.

"And he commanded them to make all sit down by companies upon the green grass." If they had stood up, there would have been a wild rush that would have caused confusion and also perhaps unfair distribution. Let all things be done decently and in order. Religion puts no premium on shoddy methods of doing things. Let there be dignity and order and thoughtfulness about the services of worship and the work of the church.

And He Gave to the Disciples.

"And gave them to his disciples to set before them." Jesus did not give direct to the people. He gave to the disciples who gave to the people. God gives to others through us. There are some blessings, of course, which he can confer directly. But there are many ways in which God depends upon us to meet the needs of others.

Divine Economy.

"And they took up twelve baskets full of the fragments, and of the fishes." Waste is sin. The fragments of time, of money, of materials, have value. The Master of all values would teach us that conservation is a part of his divine plan.

There is no hint as to how the loaves and fishes were multiplied, and conjecture is both idle and futile. Back of this historical incident, however, there is the ever recurring miracle of the multiplication by God of natural things. A man plants one seed and from that seed there springs a plant which in turn bears many seeds. And the way in which God performs even the natural processes is as much a mystery and a miracle as is this story of the multiplication of the loaves and fishes.

SUNDAY SCHOOL SHOWS GROWTH.

According to the superintendent, the enthusiasm in the Sunday School of the First Christian Church, Norfolk, Va., is rapidly growing. During the past four weeks the attendance has increased from 100 to 129.

On Sunday, February 5th, the classes of Mrs. W. S. Smith, Mrs. Joseph Haynes, Miss Genevieve Divers, Miss Edna Fulcher and Mrs. A. F. Hozier had 100 per cent present; on Sunday, February 12th, the classes of Mrs. I. M. Copeland, Mrs. A. F. Hozier, Miss Kathryn Morgan, Miss Frances Jones and Miss Genevieve Divers had 100 per cent present, and February 19th the classes of Miss Edna Fulcher, Mrs. A. F. Hozier, Mrs. W. S. Smith, Miss Frances Jones, Miss Kathryn Morgan and Miss Genevieve Divers had 100 per cent present.

The week of February 13th has been one of intense activity for the Sunday School. On Monday night, the classes of Mrs. A. F. Hozier, Mrs. Joseph Haynes, Miss Kathryn Morgan, and Miss Edna Fulcher held a valentine party in the Men's Bible Classroom; Tuesday afternoon the Primary Department held a social in the Sunday School rooms; Wednesday night the little folks from the classes of Miss Frances Jones and Mrs. Gregory celebrated Valentine Day with a party at the home of Miss Jones, and Thursday night the classes of Mrs. I. M. Copeland, Mrs. W. S. Smith, W. J. Thomas and C. E. Warrington, spent an evening of fun celebrating St. Valentine's birthday with a party in the Men's Bible Classroom.

"The opening of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."—Psalm 119:130.

MONDAY.

AN EARTHQUAKE PRAYER.

"And when they had prayed, the place was shaken where they were assembled together."—Acts 4:31.

What was that prayer? This: "Lord . . . grant unto thy servants, that with all boldness they may speak thy word." Read the whole chapter.

This was a prayer for "fearless courage" in preaching the word, healing the sick, etc—in spite of the threatenings of the enemies.

When we pray that way, we are apt to precipitate some sort of earthquake. It represents an abounding and irresistible vigor of faith and power of the Spirit.

This is a wonderful message to the church—let the church pray for fearless courage, forgetful of safety and self and intent only on proclaiming Christ. No greater message is needed this day: that of proclaiming a spiritual universe amid a growing fashion of materialism; that of proclaiming a gospel of moral austerity in a day of tolerated license; that of proclaiming a gospel of justice and brotherhood in the face of powerful forces of exploitation.

Prayer—O Lord, God, our Father, we humble ourselves before thee to praise thee—to thank thee, and to ask thee what we need most to face the issues of life.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

CHRISTIAN TOLERANCE.

"And they of the circumcision, which believed, were astonished—because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the Holy Ghost." Acts 19:45.

Those of the circumcision were Jews. These Jews were amazed that others—foreign to them—could also receive the Holy Ghost.

The Gospel and the gift of the Holy Ghost is for all the world and all people of the world.

Have we enough grace in our hearts to renounce all patronizing attitude and not only be glad, but be anxious for an equal amount of God's spirit to fall on other people?

Prayer—Our Father, teach us thy spirit of love and give us the love for salvation that includes all the world. Whatever we can do, give us the ability and grace to do it.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

BLOCKING THE ROAD.

"Trouble not them which, from among the Gentiles, are turned to God."—Acts 15:19.

It appears that the Christian Jews did not like the idea that Gentiles were also becoming Christians, and in this dislike they made trouble for the Gentiles. This was wrong, and the apostles had to put a stop to it.

"We have no right," they declare, "to put obstacles in the way of others." Jesus had said that "better a millstone were hanged about one's neck and he be cast into the sea than that he should offend one of these little ones." This is the great principle of the Christian faith. There are not rites or performances that qualify discipleship. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." That means anyone.

Yet down through the centuries to this day, men have done the thing that is here condemned. The big "I" and the little "you" has stood in the way, and the essential simplicity of Christianity has been lost by many. Let it not be so with us.

Prayer—O Lord, our Father, help us to recover from our time the faith and vision of the apostles, able to distinguish the essential from the incidental in salvation, and to present Christ to one and all along our way.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

MOBBING THE CHRISTIANS.

"The Jews which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them certain lewd fellows (idle rascals) of the baser sort, and gathered a company and set all the city in an uproar, and assaulted the house of Jason, and sought to bring them out to the people."—Acts 17:5.

It was pretty touch times in those days to try to be a Christian. The Jews who did not believe were determined that others should not be Christians.

This represents the mob mind which existed then and which still clings to society. In truth, it is no mind at all. It is a wild contagious impulse which puts the mind out of action. The mob mind is like a wild buffalo on a stampede.

All progress depends upon freedom from this kind of mind. The hope of the world lies in an individual judgment, unclouded by fear or hate, and a granting to all alike to receive the word, follow its precepts, and work out their own salvation.

Prayer—O Lord, our God, thou art our love, our spirit, our life. Make us right and help us to see all things and all men right.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

PAUL STIRRED.

"While Paul waited for them at Athens, his spirit was stirred in him, when he saw the city wholly given to idolatry."—Acts 17:16.

Moffatt says that Paul was "irritated" at the sight of idols. We do not think that this interpretation is a necessary one, for Paul could be moved mightily without becoming irritated. His mighty soul-stir against idolatry was born of God, and God gave him power to move against it. The preaching of Jesus and him crucified for salvation, was a thing which declared unto them the wrong of idolatry and set up in their midst altars and temples.

We believe if Paul was ever irritable it was connected with the higher centers of the mind. His irritability was a sympathetic passion, and his energies were for converting the situation.

Where do we stand in the scale of life? Are we "stirred," moved with passionate love, moved against wrong and injustice; or are we irritable in a defective way, focusing on wrong objectives? Are we alive to God and good, or are we just a bunch of nerves exploding over any little thing?

Prayer—O Lord, our Father, make all our passions and impulses like Christ our Saviour's. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

DUST GRAINS AND RAFTERS.

"Why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is thine own eye?"—Read Luke 6:39-45.

Comic exaggeration is said to be a characteristic quality of American humor, but here it is in the sayings of Christ nearly two milleniums ago. You fault-finders, captiously fishing for dust grains in your brother's eye, while a big rafter is sticking out of your own eye! Pull out the rafter, and then perhaps you can see to extract the dust grain!

Few of our Lord's sayings have application to more persons than this. The sensualist finds hints of impurity in an innocent child. The embezzler suspects a petty clerk of willful errors in making change. The man of harsh temper accuses every one else of picking quarrels. The hypocrite believes all Christians to be false in their professions. The only safety is for every one to suspect himself of a rafter, and make sure that he is not harboring one.

Prayer—Show us ourselves, O Christ, as thou dost see us! Disclose us to ourselves, our Father, as others behold us! May we not cheat ourselves as we surely do not cheat thee!—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

RADIO LIGHTHOUSES.

"That we might humble ourselves before our God, to seek him a straight way."—Read Ezra 8:21-23.

The Government is building eight powerful radio stations, scattered over the country, for the purpose of guiding airplane pilots. These stations will have a much greater range than the sixty-five similar stations now existing. They will send out radio messages constantly, and will obviously add much to the security of flights, as well as advancing air transportation.

Have we anything analogous to this in the difficult passage through our mortal lives? We certainly have, only our guiding stations are far more intimate, far more efficacious. They are our prayers to the heavenly Father.

He will tell us where to go and what to do. Yes, and he will send through the viewless ether the very strength we need to do our work, the very wisdom we need to plan and to execute. What no radio station will ever be able to do for the airplane pilot, this radio station of prayer will do for us and has been doing through all the ages for God's believing children.

Prayer—Great Guardian of our destinies, we confide in thee. We reach out toward thee and thou dost at once respond with just the direction we need. How glorious it is that we have a Guiding God!—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

RALEIGH INSTITUTE, MARCH 14th-16th.

The spiritual objective is a conference of ministers and workers that in sharing our problems and knowing what each other is trying to do, we may, in courage and faith, go forward. Therefore, it is desired that every minister and worker have a part. Will every minister planning to attend be prepared to tell us the work he is doing, the problems in his parish, and how, in his preaching and pastoral ministry, he is meeting the issues?

The program will be so flexible that the leadership of the Spirit and prayer will be followed. In sharing, in prayer, in testimony, a spiritual blessing will come to us all. Dr. Lewis T. Reed, of New York, Dr. Sparks, of Dayton, and Dr. Brewer Eddy, and others, will be with us.

But unless every minister and worker who comes can give to us not only his difficulties, but his encouragements and the things which are helpful for these times, the conference will not reach its highest meaning. If, in this sharing of experience, we can go back to our churches with a deeper consecration and a stronger zeal, the days together as friends of Jesus and ministers of his grace and message will not have been in vain.

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

THE VALUE OF LIFE.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"The gift of God . . . Life."—Rom. 6:23.

There are great gifts and small. One of the most remembered, and talked about gifts in my family was one given by an orphan girl who helped keep our children. On Christmas Eve we gave her some money and told her that she might go into the downtown district—see the sights, and get herself some Christmas. She was requested to get gifts for herself—something that would make her happy, and make Christmas brighter for her. It was only a small sum, but Christmas morning revealed that every cent had gone to buy gifts for each of us. Each gift was very useful, and carefully wrapped, and lovingly tied. Tears of genuine gratitude came into our eyes as we recognized what had been done.

It is something to be able to give gifts. It is more to have some one to whom to give them! It is something to be loved. It is more to have someone to love. We often hear the expression: "People are simply dying for a little bit of love." Maybe! But there is a greater need than that. People are impoverished not so much because of the lack of being loved, as they are for not having learned to give love to others. It is great to be loved. It is greater to love. It would be a lonely life without someone upon whom to bestow gifts of love, and acts of loveliness. The orphan girl gave her gifts to others. It is the deep abiding hunger of the human heart. It comes from God.

The father is full of love for his children. Jesus revealed God to us as a Father. He loved us. He had someone upon whom he might bestow gifts. "Do not err, my beloved brethren; every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father." The human heart yearns to be able to give unto others. It is considered a great joy. It thrills one as few other things can. "It is more blessed to give than to receive." "If ye, then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him." "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." And the beloved disciple says of Jesus: "In him was life; and the life was the light of men." Jesus himself says: "I came that they may have life, and that they may have it more abundantly." And the Apostle Paul says: "Your life is hid with Christ in God."

What is the value of this gift of life? One of the first tests of the value of a gift is the giver. "A gift without the giver is bare." Show me a gift that you greatly prize. Name its giver, and I will tell you the name of a person you greatly honor and perhaps deeply love. In an autograph album there are many names. Those names are prized for the persons back of them. Life is a gift from God. Prize it as such. Your life is from God—holy, pure, good, perfect. Your life is from God, who loves eternally and is long-suffering. Your life is from God, who counts life his highest gift, and plans yours with infinite love and concern.

A gift is further prized in the light of the care and pains exercised in its making. The creation of this universe is far beyond our conception. It is vast beyond the calculations of the astronomer's telescope; it is old beyond the facts and figures of the geologist; it is mighty beyond the measurements of the physicist; it is beautiful beyond the fairest conceptions of the artist; and it is rich and great beyond words to describe; but after all its creation, as a crowning work, came man made in the very image and likeness of God, and into him was breathed the breath of life and he became a living soul. Personality towers high above the former creations of God. "What is man that thou art mindful of him, and the Son of Man that thou visitest him? Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and thou hast crowned him with glory and honor." God's crowning creation—life. Heavens' greatest gift—life. And oh, how little some people seem to prize so precious a gift!

Further, a gift is often valued according to its lasting qualities. One of the most beautiful poems I know is about a baby born dead. It was written by its mother. The child had lasted long enough to be a precious memory. Maybe a child has lived but a few years, and yet how it is valued! Maybe a person dies young, like Jesus did—the life is yet incalculably great; or maybe the three score and ten is reached—and if no further, then life is still the greatest thing we know; but when we are assured that it is eternal, everlastingly forever, we stand aghast before the thought of its expanding, and ever increasing value. A day old is beyond valuation—eternity old is infinite. Why do folks trifle with life?

Maybe you are digging away, looking for "pay dirt," and finding something that looks good, you carry it to an expert, and value it according to his opinion; or maybe you have found what looks to you like a jewel; you take it to an expert, and prize it according to his estimate; or maybe you have found an old coin—you carry it to a connoisseur and value it according to his word. What is the value of this gift of life tested in such a manner? Jesus is our expert. What does he have to say? Jesus thought so much of life that he declared it his business to seek and to save the lost. Lost? What does it mean? Look your streets and alleys over! Look your jails and penitentiaries through! He came to seek and to save the lost! Look into shops and offices, and palaces of wealth and power, wherever the soul is imprisoned, and the meaning of life is impoverished, and you will find the "lost." For this remnant, high or low, here or there, Jesus thought it worth his investing all to find and to fill with the real value and meaning of life. "He came that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." Jesus estimates the life of a person to be worth more than all his enlarged barns might hold. "Thou fool," he said of the rich farmer, who valued his horses, hogs, and haymows more than his fellowmen, and warned him that that very night his life would be required of him!

Again Jesus thought the person of the poor beggar at the gate of the rich ruler was of more value than all the personal pomp and power which wealth might add; and in one of his discourses he asserted that a man's life was of more value to him than all the world of things besides. He put it thus: "For what shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give for his soul?" In the light, then, of the life and love of Jesus, the gift of life is supreme. It is God's greatest gift. For it Jesus was willing to die upon the cross. The murderous act of crucifixion did not make men worthless in his sight. They were still worth everything. For them he died praying: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

Just this, then. What is your life worth to you? Everything? Improve its every moment, then, by having it "hid with Christ in God." Save it! And how will you save it? By using it up in service and sacrifice for others. By loving folks, and by giving deeds of loving kindness at whatever the cost. By helping Jesus make a redeemed world. By yourselves living holy, noble lives right where you are.

A shipbuilder was once asked what he thought of the Rev. George Whitefield, the great evangelist. "Think!" he replied, "I'll tell you, my dear sir, every Sunday that I go to my parish church I can build a ship from stem to stern under the sermon; but under Mr. Whitefield, I cannot lay a single plank."—Christian Herald.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

I want you to take time to figure with me for just a few minutes. After you read the figures I present to you, then ask yourself the question: "Am I doing my duty toward the Christian Orphanage?"

Up to and including this report, we have received from all sources since January 1st this year, the sum of $1,520.38. How much of this amount do you suppose came from our Christian Churches and Sunday Schools? Eight Hundred and Nine Dollars and Ninety-Six Cents! Seven Hundred and Ten Dollars and Forty-Two Cents came from sources other than from the Christian Church.

The Christian Orphanage has one hundred children in its care.

Out of the total amount of $1,520.38, we must take the salaries of all the helpers and superintendent for January and February. We must take out the expense of a car of coal. We must take out several premiums on insurance on the buildings. Expenses we cannot help and must have, and many other expenses that naturally come in this work. You see that there will be only a small amount left. You see for yourself that we cannot make ends meet on this income.

It is the church's institution, to care for the orphans and the needy and through it to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, as God has commanded us to do. Now we want to reach our goal this year. We are making it within reach. We are setting it at $22,000.00 for the year 1933. We want every church and Sunday School to help us reach it. We will give your school the amount we want you to raise in a few weeks, just as soon as we have time to make the calculation.

We want each Sunday School to select some one person, either man, woman, boy or girl, to be Orphanage Secretary in your Sunday School to keep the Orphanage before the school, so we can furnish information from time to time for them to present to your school in order that you may always keep in touch with the Orphanage work and its needs. If we can get one person in each Sunday School to help us, you will see that the Orphanage will be better supported.

Our good friends of Catawba Springs Church sent us a truckload of potatoes, soy beans, two shoulders, lot of canned goods, twenty nice fat hens, corn, wheat, etc. Fine! How many more church communities will follow their fine example? You need not wait until Thanksgiving—the children eat all through the year.

The Board of Trustees of the Orphanage met in its annual session on February 22nd. They had a very pleasant meeting, and we hope good results will follow. The superintendent's report showed that the income last year was less than the necessary expenses, although the salaries of all the workers, from the superintendent down, had been cut, and every other department had been reduced in expense; but with all the economy used, it was not possible to compete with the falling off in income. Let us all take a little more interest in our Orphanage and see that it gets more of our sympathy.

Never let us be discouraged with ourselves; it is not when we are conscious of our faults that we are the most wicked; on the contrary, we are less so. We see by a brighter light; and let us remember, for our consolation, that we never perceive our sins until we begin to curse them.—Francois de la Mothe Fenelon.

The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance. In size, 3 3/8 x 4 1/2 inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and pronouncing text.

The edition on India paper is ideal, and we know of no better gift at the price than one in the finer bindings.

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller.

It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength.

One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together.

The size, 2 1/2 x 4 1/4 inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

OBITUARIES

BEAN.

Whereas, it has pleased our heavenly Father to call to his eternal reward our brother worker and Deacon of the Union Christian Church, Bro. D. E. Bean; it, therefore, seems pleasing to our heavenly Father that we who were active associates with him in life should express our esteem of him in death. That his life among us and his service with us, has left us a good example of loyalty and devotion to his church and to his home; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That in the death of Bro. Bean the church has lost a true Christian worker, a devoted and loyal member. He was faithful and true to his church.

2. That while we cherish the memory of him, we bow in humble submission to Him who doeth all things well.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, also a copy to "The Christian Sun," "The Randolph Tribune," and "The Courier" for publication, and also recorded on the church record.

Whereas, we feel our loss is his eternal gain, therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we submit to the will of an all-wise Father in taking from earth to his home in glory our friend and co-worker.

2. That we may endeavor to carry on the work which he loved and of which he was so much a part.

3. That we extend our sympathy to the family in their sorrow, and that we may seek to emulate his virtue.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be made a part of our church record, a copy sent to the family, a copy to "The Christian Sun," and a copy to the Burlington "Daily Times," for publication.

Respectfully submitted,
CLYDE ISELEY, Deacon,

INGRAM.

Francis Emma Abbott was born December 27, 1856, in Georgia, and died at Alexander City, Ala., January 19, 1933. She was married to M. M. Ingram February 11, 1873. To this union were born nine children, six boys and three girls.

She professed faith in Christ and united with the Methodist Church at Daviston, Ala., in August, 1873. In 1892 she united with Christiana Christian Church, where she remained true and loyal until the end of a long and useful life.

They lived in Christiana community for thirty-three years, until age and toil began to prey upon their bodies, when they left their old home seven years ago to make their home with their son, J. M., at Alexander City, where she died and the lonely husband still resides in feeble condition. He was unable to attend the funeral.

Left to mourn their loss, are four brothers, four sisters, her devoted husband of almost sixty years, four sons, three daughters, forty grandchildren, twenty great-grandchildren, and a host of other relatives and friends.

•• THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY ••

Urged to Rally for Prohibition.—

E. J. Richardson, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Virginia, has called upon church members to rally to the cause of the prohibition forces in that State. Mr. Richardson says: "The real question is, what are church members going to do about it? Shall those who profess the name of Jesus Christ and pray 'thy kingdom come,' on Sundays and in their closets, vote on election day the same ticket voted by the distillers, brewers, vintners, and selfish multimillionaire financial interests. . . . Where there is reasonable doubt, shall the votes of church members be cast for the re-establishment of the outlawed liquor traffic, or shall the church and society have the benefit of the doubt?"

Radio and the Quartz Crystal.—

Quite a serious problem has been presented to broadcasting authorities by the overlapping of broadcasts. The law requires that these variations be kept within one-tenth of one per cent, and there being no automatic method of maintaining this fine control, it has been necessary to give it the constant attention of radio engineers. The quartz crystal has been used for keeping constant the frequency waves, but its performance has been somewhat erratic, even temperature changes causing trouble. In order to overcome these changes it became customary to submerge the crystals in an oil bath kept at a constant temperature. But for the past year something better has been tried. This was the advanced method of cutting the crystals, which has been under operation test at the Westinghouse station in Pittsburgh. These new piezo-crystal controls shows variations of less than five-thousandths of one per cent, which is twenty-five times better than the standard required.

Banks of the Country Take Holiday.—

First by proclamation of various Governors, and then by Presidential proclamation, the banks of the United States have been closed for five days, beginning Monday of this week. We cannot but recall the editorial from which excerpts were printed on this page last week. Possibly when THE SUN reaches its readers some definite action will have been taken to remedy the situation, but at the time this is written, those in control seem to be uncertain as to the exact procedure that will be taken to enable the country to carry on its necessary business activities. There is no doubt as to the ultimate outcome of the situation. Necessary remedial legislation will have to be passed by a Congress that should have passed such action more than three months ago. The expense of the "holiday" will be great but bearable, and if it causes the passing of legislation that will create a worth-while banking system for the country, it will be well worth all its costs.

The President's Cabinet.—

President Roosevelt has shown good judgment in the selection of his Cabinet members. Each one seems to have been chosen for his especial qualifications, and while politics may have had a hand in the selection, it seems to have played a smaller part. The list follows: Secretary of State, Senator Cordell Hull of Tennessee; Secretary of the Treasury, William H. Woodin of Pennsylvania; Attorney General, Homer S. Cummings of Connecticut; Secretary of War, former Governor George H. Dern of Utah; Secretary of the Navy, Senator Claude A. Swanson of Virginia; Postmaster General, James A. Farley of New York, chairman of the Democratic National Committee; Secretary of the Interior, Harold Ickes of Illinois; Secretary of Agriculture, Henry A. Wallace, of Iowa, son of the former Secretary of Agriculture under the Harding administration; Secretary of Commerce, Daniel C. Roper of South Carolina, now resident of Washington, D. C.; Secretary of Labor, Miss Frances Perkins, head of the Labor Department of New York State. Incidentally, Miss Perkins is the first woman to occupy a cabinet position.

Sing-Sing's Church Population.—

According to Father John P. McCafferty, Catholic chaplain of the prison, Catholic prisoners outnumber the combined Protestant and Jewish population of Sing-Sing. He gives the following figures as to the religious affiliation of the prisoners: Catholics, 885; Protestants, 518; Jews, 177; Christian Scientists, 20; Mohammedans, 2; Buddhists, 1; no religion, 8. In commenting on these figures, the Father says: "One can say, as a general thing, that most of the men in prison gave up active practice of their faith before they faced the judge for sentence. A good Catholic, practicing his religion, rarely comes into conflict with the law on a major issue. The same is true of a church-going Protestant and a devout Jew. The indictment is not so much against the church as it is against the men who have cut themselves off from the influence of the church." Father McCafferty attacks the theories of the present-day criminologists, and adds: "They are willing to put the responsibility of crime anywhere except on the shoulders of the men who break the laws, and that is where it justly belongs."

An Odorless Onion at Last.—

If you have been denying yourself the joy of eating onions with your turnip salad for fear of offending others with the odor, it is time to take heart, for we are told that a Japanese scientist has perfected an odorless onion. The story is told that Dr. Tokugawo is an ardent lover of narcissi and tulips, and that several years ago he received from a friend who loved a prank, a box of bulbs labelled "selected tulip and narcissus bulbs." These he planted carefully and tended carefully and waited patiently for their blooms to appear. Finally he became impatient and started to investigate. To his disgust the unmistakable odor of onions assailed his nostrils. But being a scientist, he pondered the question, "If onions, tulips and narcissus bulbs are so much alike, why such an unpleasant odor cling to one and not to the others?" And he started out to find, by cross breeding or otherwise, an onion that would have no odor. But the new odorless onion is not a cross between the onion and another lilaceous plant, but a real onion. It is the result of more than five years of inbreeding, in very fertile soil and under artificial light. The new onion is said to have all the flavor and "bite" of the usual onion, but has not its unpleasant odor. The difference is "as great as that existing between the sour Concord grapes of nature and the sweet seedless grapes created by Luther Burbank." The new onion is more appetizing than the ill-odored variety.

Death Takes Two National Figures.—

While last week's issue of THE SUN was being run from the press, word was flashed across the United States telling of the death of Senator Thomas J. Walsh. Senator Walsh had been especially prominent in his attempts to uncover unethical business activities. Had he lived he would, of course, have become attorney general of the United States, and he was regarded as well fitted for that post. Although 74 years of age, he was on his honeymoon at the time of his death, being on the return trip from Cuba to Washington, after having flown to the Island for his bride. The other death was that of Mayor Cermak, of Chicago. Wounded by the assassin's bullet which was intended for the then President-elect, the Chicago mayor made a gallant, but vain, attempt to recover. Death followed a series of complications which might have been overcome by a younger man, but which were too great a handicap to a man nearing his 60th birthday. Cermak was not a native American, but was brought from Bohemia to this country at the age of one year. Working in the coal mines of Illinois at the age of eleven, at 22 he owned a coal business of his own, and at the age of 29 was a member of the Illinois legislature. Twenty years later he became president of the Cook County Commission, and at the last city election became mayor of Chicago, defeating William Hale Thompson for re-election. His death may truly be called a sacrifice on the altar of the country of his adoption, for the incident which caused it has done much to solidify the people of the country in their support of the incoming administration in a time when united support is absolutely necessary.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

We are glad to learn that Dr. Jason Noble Pierce, pastor of the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., who has been indisposed recently, was sufficiently recovered to fill his pulpit at both services last Sunday.

During the past few weeks, Rev. J. E. McCauley, pastor of the Richmond Church, has been putting on a special series of sermons Sunday evenings. These services are being held jointly with the young people, who have been making important contributions to the program. First of the series was "An Ideal Young Man," in which the young ladies took charge. The second, "An Ideal Young Woman," was under the leadership of the young men. The other topics in the series are: "An Ideal Wife," "An Ideal Husband," and "An Ideal Home."

Says the North Carolina Christian Advocate: "It is good to hear of the meetings being held in the interest of spiritual life and missions all over the State. This next forty days should be great occasions in every district and charge. All who make the most of these weeks will doubtless have a great Easter occasion." Our Methodist brethren realize with us of the Christian Church, that the spiritual life and missions are identical, and that the only hope for the church to reveal and deepen its spiritual life is through its missionary activity and service. Now is the Mission Period, the church's challenge to go forward spiritually.

Congratulations, with our heartiest and best wishes, to Dr. and Mrs. M. J. W. White, Jr., our medical missionaries at Cagayan Hospital, Philippine Islands. Writing under date of January 21st, Dr. White says: "We are glad to send word of the safe arrival of our little son, born January 5th, in the Mission Hospital. He is a big boy—weighed 9½ lbs, at birth, and is gaining right along. We named him Nyack Walter, after a brother of mine and my Dad. We are very happy now with a little boy and girl, and feel we have so much to be thankful for this new year. Mrs. White is getting along fine. Thank you very much for your cordial Christmas greetings just received. With prayerful wishes for your work and the Department of Missions for this year, I am, yours to serve."

Our obituary columns carry Resolutions of Respect from our Suffolk Christian Church to the names and memory of two faithful members recently fallen asleep, namely: Mr. H. Woodward, Sr., and Mrs. John M. Butler. No one could visit this church and congregation without coming in touch with and remembering the faces of these two faithful followers of their Lord. In transmitting the obituary, Bro. J. D. McClenney, deacon of the church, very appropriately adds: "The grim reaper has exacted a heavy toll of our valuable members the past year. Our hope is that there are those who will rise up and carry on the work where these faithful hands laid it down." The highest tribute that the Suffolk Church can pay to these departed members and their fallen leaders is to see to it that the work they begun shall be carried on to greater achievements than they reached.

It is learned with deep regret that Rev. Daniel B. Atkinson, D. D., Dean of Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., passed away on the night of March 1st. The announcement reaching us says: "His going was quiet and without pain. The funeral services will be held Saturday, at 2:30 P. M., at Demorest and the interment will be here." Dr. Atkinson was well known, much beloved and highly esteemed throughout our fellowship. For several years he had been vice-president of the General Convention, and since the merger one of the vice-presidents of the General Council of Congregational and Christian Churches. In the absence of President Coffin from the National Council at Seattle last May, Dr. Atkinson presided and did the honors in a most satisfactory way for the Christian Church. He had held two positions of trust in our executive councils, as well as in our ministerial and educational activities, and his untimely going away will be regretted and mourned throughout our entire brotherhood. Rev. Dale O. Sander, pastor of our Reidsville, N. C., church, is a son-in-law of Dr. Atkinson, and to him and his wife, as well as to the other bereaved members of the family, we extend sympathy and condolences.

A well organized Christian Endeavor Society in each of our churches in Carroll County, Va.—Rocky Ford and Elk Spur—is reported, with more than sixty young people as members, and working. This, indeed, is hopeful, since reaching and training the young people is essential in the life and growth of any church. Rev. R. T. Grissom, pastor, says: "We recently gave a play at Elk Spur and Rocky Ford, making $7.55, which money is being used to repair the roof of our Elk Spur Church. We are endeavoring to secure and include every family of our section in a 'Home Garden Club.' This, too, is encouraging, since intelligent 'Home Garden' activity is essential in this year of grace not only to the home itself, but to the church, whose business it is to find and develop better living and better avenues of activity, physically, mentally, spiritually. Bro. Grissom writes, further: "There has been much suffering, because of under-nourishment, in our section this winter; and we have a plan on foot to get every family interested in planting a garden. The Red Cross has promised to furnish good seeds to those who have none, and we plan to organize a Garden Club in the center of our Fancy Gap and Rocky Ford communities. We are to give a prize for the first basket of nice vegetables, having a set time to each family to display their products."

ELON SINGERS COMPLETE VIRGINIA TOUR

Late on Tuesday afternoon, February 28th, a bus-load of tired but happy students pulled into the Elon College campus after a busy six days. They were the Elon Singers, returning from a tour of over five hundred miles through Eastern Virginia. Accompanied by President and Mrs. L. E. Smith, and under the guidance of Professor Dwight Steere and Miss Helen Chamblee, teachers in the Music Department of the College, this group of twenty-seven singers had made eleven appearances in five days—a strenuous schedule. It is estimated that during this time they appeared before between 3,500 and 4,000 people. They presented full programs in the Christian Churches of Franklin, Holland, Suffolk, South Norfolk, Norfolk, Wakefield, and Waverly. They also appeared at the annual banquet of the Eastern Virginia Club of the Elon College Alumni Association, held in the Fellowship Hall of the Suffolk Christian Church, February 24th. The Singers made three additional appearances not originally planned: they sang for the Baraca Class in the Suffolk Church; they also presented short programs before the high schools of Franklin and South Norfolk.

A number of the satisfying experiences went together to make the trip a happy one. One of the high points was the Alumni Banquet at Suffolk, by far the largest that Association has had; here the students and alumni enjoyed learning a little more about each other. A trip to Virginia Beach was an especial pleasure, for a number of the Singers had never before seen the ocean. But above all, the Singers will never forget the cordial and sincere hospitality of the Virginia homes in which they were entertained, and the whole-hearted, enthusiastic reception they received from all the audiences before whom they appeared. It should be said in passing that the greatest difficulty the chorus experienced resulted from "light" breakfasts and other meals which made no pretense of being light; there is no question but what each member of the party ate far too much to sing with comfort or ease; they were almost too well entertained. From the viewpoint of the Singers the trip was in every way delightful. It is their hope that they carried with them a worthwhile bit of the College's life and spirit; something which may draw Elon College a little closer to its friends in Eastern Virginia. Other trips are being planned for the Elon Singers in the near future.

GENESIS AND REVELATION.

A STUDY IN CONTRASTS.

Genesis begins the history of earth, mankind, sin, and temptation; Revelation records the end.

In Genesis redemption is promised; in Revelation redemption is completed.

Genesis records Satan's first attack on human welfare; Revelation records his final doom.

Genesis describes the origin of man; Revelation tells of his eternal destiny.

God's first recorded words to mankind appear in Genesis; his last in Revelation.

Genesis tells of the removal of the tree of life; Revelation records its restoration.

Genesis begins with "In the beginning, God." Revelation ends with "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen."

In Genesis God made the earth habitable for mankind during Time; in Revelation appears the new heaven and the new earth to be inhabited for Eternity.

Genesis begins the self-revelation of God, which continues through the Bible culminating in the glorious "Revelation of Jesus Christ which God gave unto him."

Genesis lays the foundation of the Bible, it is quoted more than sixty times in seventeen of the books of the New Testament; Revelation completes the structure.

In Genesis Satan begins to build his kingdom among men; in Revelation it comes to its culmination and its final doom.

In Genesis God begins the unfolding of his plans of redemption, a progressive plan leading up to the full establishment of Christ and his eternal kingdom in Revelation.

In Genesis man's fall allowed sin and Satan a mortgage on the earth; in Revelation Jesus appears as the Redeemer who paid off the mortgage and takes possession.

Genesis comes out of the eternity of the past; Revelation leads into the eternity of the future.—The Wesleyan Methodist.

ROSEMONT CELEBRATES SECOND ANNIVERSARY.

On Wednesday night, February 15th. Rosemont Christian Church celebrated the second anniversary of the dedication of the new building. The pastor, Rev. J. F. Morgan, presided, and led the song service. Miss Charlotte Morgan read the Scripture lesson, and H. C. Hedley, led the opening prayer.

A brief historical sketch of the building of the new church was read by Rev. J. N. Cutchin. Mrs. H. E. Roane read the account of the dedication services, as it appeared in THE CHRISTIAN SUN of February 22, 1931, which reminded us anew of the beautiful way in which the church was dedicated two years ago.

Then followed an informal discussion of the "Most Interesting Points" in connection with the raising of the new church fund.

Following this discussion, there was a brief recess, during which two girls passed around beautiful white sticks of candy, which became known as "depression refreshments." While this candy was being enjoyed, Mr. Morgan sang "Rosemont Is Calling You," the words of which were written by himself. He was accompanied on the piano by Miss Elizabeth Mills.

Following this there was a most interesting discussion on the subject, "The Best Things About Rosemont." Quite a few took part in this discussion, with the principal speaker being Mr. O. F. Smith, who was the chairman of our building committee. His subject was "Cooperation," and he declared that to him the finest thing about the whole program of the building of our new church was that it was directed by the Lord, and therefore the fine spirit of cooperation was made possible. Mr. Smith's address was very much enjoyed by the large audience.

The celebration was continued through Sunday, February 19th, with an attendance of three hundred in Sunday School, and a large audience at the morning worship hour. The pastor preached, using as his subject: "The Salt of the Earth," delivering a very searching and helpful message.

The Christian Endeavor Society held a great meeting at 6:45, with the Hon. A. O. Lynch, Commonwealth's Attorney for Norfolk County, as the speaker.

The second anniversary services were concluded with the evening service, when Mr. Lynch was again the speaker, using as his subject: "Prayer." His message was greatly enjoyed.

Thus ended two very successful years at Rosemont. We have great opportunity here to do much for Christ and his church. Rosemont is calling you; what will the answer be?

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religions teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

FORWARD WITH CHRIST.

The last great command of our Lord, and his most emphatic, was "Go!" It was a ringing challenge to his church. And the march of the eleven through the ages since has been one of travail and triumph, pain and power, sacrifice and victory, suffering and conquest. The church Christ planted and is building has had to go forward under a cloud, and always make her progress through sacrifice and suffering, but she has come a long way, "and the gates of hell have not prevailed." And her one avenue of progress, her one path to power, has been through and by her missionary endeavor.

The church reveals her glory, and the fruit of her toil is benevolence, human betterment, charitable uplift; but her labors for growth, achievement, enlargement, are her missionary activities, her sacrifices, her self-denial, that the Gospel shall be preached and the Good News shall be told to those who perish without it. Right now, while benevolence is abundant and while charity abounds, many will be disposed to forget or maybe to "kill the goose that lays the golden egg," to ignore or help destroy the tree that bears the fruit, the soul that sustains the body, the life that gives the light; namely, its missionary achievement.

The crowning act and fact of the life of our Lord was his death on the cross (self-effacement) and his glorious resurrection—the promise of life over death. And now, in our Mission period in the Christian Church, we are called upon to herald these facts to the world which was never as much in need of him as at present, and then to deny ourselves, that through this denial the church may grow, and the kingdom may enlarge through the preaching of the Gospel.

The church at home grows through her home missionary activity; and the same church grows in spiritual prestige and power through her foreign missionary activity. A non-missionary church is a powerless church, a paralyzed church a hopeless church. The one avenue of growth for a church is the missionary avenue, that avenue through which the church reveals its soul and the soul of its Lord to communities in the homeland that need the Gospel, and to peoples in pagan lands that know him not, and are perishing without him.

Yes, we have now "economic depression" and a time for benevolent activity and energy; but there is spiritual depression also, and this must be relieved before the other; and the only hope of relieving spiritual depression is through self-denial of body and physical wants, that the name of our Lord may be glorified, and that Christ Jesus may be preached in purity and simplicity, to a world that is perishing without him. In this time of benevolent deeds, it will be suicidal for a church, fatal to its life and progress, to forget or ignore its missionary plea, its one call to spiritual activity, its challenge to advance on the highway of our God to victory through him. During our Missionary Period it will be shortsighted and harmful ministry, indeed, that will forget or ignore the challenge of the church to go forward for God, and to advance through its one avenue of advancement, through the preaching of the Good News to a world that is in despair. A crucified, suffering, but triumphant Lord calls for his church to advance by giving the Gospel to the world. J. O. A.

CASTING GOD OUT.

The world waits with bated breath to see the outcome in Russia. That this land of infinite variety and resources faces a fatal and terrible future, no one who believes God and studies history can doubt. She has now started on the second of her 5-year plans in which the most hazardous adventure in history is being tried out. In her revolt from the tyrannical and overlord rulership of her Czar, and those in authority, Russia has gone to the extreme and declares that there shall be no authority on earth, in the regions below, or the heavens above, greater than the communistic authority of her people in its "Soviet leadership."

And so this swing of the pendulum from all authority and high rulership attempts, as a part of its major program, to abolish God and eliminate any track or trace of him either in heaven or in the lives of its people. They are declaring that not only must her adult population ignore the name and meaning of God, but that her children shall be ignorant even of the name of Jesus, and that the Bible shall be discredited and discarded.

The following statement, reported in press correspondence, jars the mind of the reader and reveals the desperate and deadly limits to which Soviet Russia has come in the process of her first 5-year program:

"On May 1, 1937, there must not remain on the territory of the U. S. S. R. a single house of prayer to God, and the very conception God will be banished from the boundaries of the Soviet Union, as a survival of the Middle Ages which has served as an instrument for the oppression of the working masses. In the first year it is proposed to suppress all religious schools. . . In the capitals all churches and prayer-houses are to be closed on May 1, 1934. . . The printing of religious books will be strictly prohibited. Special attention will be devoted to the inculcation of the principles of 'reasonable unbelief' among the masses, and one of the main instruments for achieving this purpose will be the production of atheistic films."

Poor, pitiable, deluded Russia. There can be but one outcome unless she turns and repents of her folly and madness, and that outcome is the doom pronounced against the nations that forget God. A long time ago a writer, in the wisdom and knowledge of inspiration, said: "The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all nations that forget God." (Psalm 9:17.) And the same writer in another place beseeches: "Consider this, ye that forget God, lest I tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver." (Psalm 50:22.) And it was a rich and true proverb, proven true now by the history of the centuries that have passed since the proverb was spoken, which pronounceth a doom for those who "forsaketh the guide of her youth, and forgetteth the covenant of her God. For her house inclineth unto death, and her paths unto the dead." (Prov. 2:17-18.)

In her rebellion against authority, which was oppressive beyond measure, Russia lost her soul in identifying her own human rulers with divine rulership and, in her extermination of the one, she attempts to destroy the other. Verily, the blind are leading the blind in Russia today, and her only hope is in recovering that Name which she is teaching her citizenship and her youth to hate. Pray for Russia, and the few faithful missionaries who have taken their lives in their own hands and gone to Russia to preach the Gospel of the Son of God. J. O. A.

PRAY FOR OUR PRESIDENT.

The time, the opportunity, and the invitation have come for every man, woman and child in our land to pray for the President of the United States. Not that we have been without this privilege and exhortation heretofore, and many have obeyed. But now conditions have forced upon us more than an invitation; we are faced with facts that impel us. Conditions under which we now live demand spiritual as well as economic insight. Whether of his own choosing or not, President Roosevelt has a spiritual as well as a physical task, and must bear the burden and responsibility of moral and spiritual restoration.

Certainly, not since the day of Lincoln has any man assumed the presidency with such weighty responsibility, and such opportunity, as does the President inaugurated on March 4th. No man with a conscience could face that ordeal without realizing the need of guidance more than human, and of his reliance, not on the wisdom of statesmen, but on the guidance of God. So it is not surprising that on the morning before the President went to his inauguration, he went to church for prayers for divine guidance.

Prior to his inauguration, plans had been laid and consent given, that President Roosevelt should have almost unlimited powers to act, authority to proceed, opportunity without hindrance, to relieve the distressed. What a task! What a problem! The Jackson (Miss.) Daily News, as quoted by the Literary Digest, bids us look at the "picture flung into the face of President Roosevelt":

"Ships are tied up in harbors and their hulls are rotting; freight-trains are idle; passenger-cars empty; 11,000,000 people are without work; business is at a standstill; the treasury building is bursting with gold, yet Congress wrestles with a deficit mounting into the billions, the result of wild and extravagant spending; granaries are overflowing with wheat and corn; cotton is a drug on the market; food crops are gigantic and unsalable, yet millions beg for food; mines are shut down; oil industries are engaged in cut-throat competition; farmers are desperate, taking the law into their own hands to prevent foreclosures; factories are idle; industry is paralyzed; 200,000 to 300,000 heedless boys are drifting aimlessly along the highways; an active smokestack is a curiosity."

While this may seem to some a dark picture, many will realize the stern facts which create the background for such a picture, and will agree with the author quoted in concluding:

"To figure out something definite, to propose ways and means of getting back on the highway, to formulate constructive policies, to lash a laggard Congress into action, is the task of Roosevelt—the most stupendous task any human being ever assumed."

A stupendous task, indeed, our President faces, and his task is the common task of all the people of the United States, for while in our prosperity many forget God, in our poverty and despair, we may be inclined to declare that God has forgotten us. It was in the darkest hour of gloom that our Lord Christ cried out: "My God! My God; Why hast thou forsaken me?" For a people to forget God is ruinous; but to feel that God has forgotten us, brings despair which leads to destruction.

Let it be borne in mind that the only way out of our economic depression is through moral regeneration and spiritual expression. Before America can recover her body, she must recover her soul. Before she can return to material prosperity, she must return to spiritual progress and power. If ever we needed prayer and the guidance of God, that time is now upon us, when thousands of our youths are given to idleness, and when tens of thousands of those in maturity are disconsolate, despairing because they face conditions that human hope and help cannot relieve. We need, indeed, to turn our faces and our hearts to God that he will guide our President, and all who are in authority, that we may have that wisdom from on high which alone can clarify and save us from our present desperate condition.

J. O. A.

A REVOLUTION OF MIND.

Not in the 150 years' existence of our national government have the people become so interested in it as they are today. The policies and programs of our national leaders occupy the foremost place in the minds and the hearts of the American people—with all the peoples of the world.

There is more written and spoken about our national government, and less real understanding of it, than of any other institution in the world. There is a reason: Every government department and agency has its publicity bureau, sending out only favorable propaganda to court public favor and the support of the taxpayers. The public press is largely concerned, as a news gathering agency, with headlining sensational stunts of our senators and representatives, and buck-passing of our multiplicity of government agencies.

In this maze of coloration of facts by the publicity bureaus, and the printing of long columns of news matter, which the average citizen does not take time to read, Rome burns while the real truth as it affects the millions who toil, or desire to toil, is buried beneath an avalanche of waste in time, energy, and public funds.

A revolution of mind is greater and more far-reaching than a revolution of arms. Our great principles of life, liberty, and happiness were born first out of a revolution of mind. Agree with me or not, but we are now in the midst of a mental revolution, and when this revolt has fashioned itself into a united front, our government will then become in reality, of the people, by the people, and for the people.

PROGRAM FOR YOUNG PEOPLE'S GROUPS.

In preparing for this program assign the parts far enough in advance so that those taking them will not have to read but can tell them in their own words. Prepare the worship service carefully. Write it on the board or a large piece of wrapping paper so that announcing will be unnecessary. If you would like to know more about India, the following books, which may be borrowed from the American Board, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass., will be interesting and helpful. A report on some such book as "The Star of India," "India on the March," or a novel by Mrs. Rose, "Red Blossoms," "Diana Drew," or "The Measure of Margaret," will add to the interest of the meeting. "India Today," and mimeographed sheets furnished by the American Board contains valuable information about Congregational-Christian Missions in India.

Worship Suggestions.

Hymns—"In Christ There Is No East or West," "We've a Story to Tell to the Nations," "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross" (Gandhi's favorite hymn).

Scripture—Acts 17:22-31, emphasizing verses 26 and 27.

Prayer—"For Racial Reconciliation," from "Book of Prayers," written for use in an Indian College, by J. S. Hoyland:

FOR RACIAL RECONCILIATION.

God of all nations,
We pray thee for all the peoples of thy earth;
For those who are consumed in mutual hatred and bitterness:

For those who make bloody war upon their neighbors:
For those who tyranniously oppress:
For those who groan under cruelty and subjection.

We pray thee for all those who bear rule and responsibility.

For child races and dying races:
For outcast tribes, the backward, and the downtrodden:
For the ignorant, the wretched, the enslaved.

We beseech thee, teach mankind to live together in peace,
No man exploiting the weak, no man hating the strong,
Each race working out its own destiny,
Unfettered, self-respecting, fearless.

Teach us to be worthy of freedom,
Free from social wrong, free from individual oppression and contempt,

Pure of heart and hand, despising none, defrauding none,
Giving to all men—in all the dealings of life—
The honour we owe to those who are thy children,
Whatever their colour, their race, or their caste.

Leader—.....will tell us what it would be like if we went to school in India:

If You Went to School in India.

First, you would go to a village school. What is a village school? Mud walls about 7 feet high, 2 or 3 windows about 2 feet square, thatched roof, mud floor, and any where from 15 to 30 or 40 children squatted on the ground, with one or two teachers trying to conduct one to five grades in a single room. The teacher probably has a three-legged stool and a table, and there may be some wooden benches without backs. If so, at copy-writing time the child gets off his bench and uses it as a desk while crouching on the floor. Reading, writing, arithmetic, with perhaps some history and geography in the last two grades; such is the village school. Bible reading and prayer open school in the morning and during the day some time is found for religious instruction. Efforts are being made to improve the buildings and the teachers of these schools and progress is being made through the gifts of you Americans.

Then, if you are lucky enough to still be allowed to go to school, you would go to a boarding school away from your village. Both boys and girls go to these schools; a married missionary is in residence, and the usual arrangement is a girls' dormitory on one side of the mission house, a boys' dormitory on the other side, with the classrooms somewhere between the two.

If you are still fortunate and do not have to go to work, you may next choose between two schools: the normal school where you may study in your own language, and the high school where you may study in English. Here the boys and girls are separated. Capron Hall is one of these schools.

Step four comes to only a few—college. The girls go to the Union Women's College in Madras, and the boys to the American College in Madura.

Remember that only one in five of the Indian children of school age are actually in school, and three-fourths of this one-fifth never get beyond the first grade. The pity of it is that a child who goes to school for one or two years forgets what he learned and becomes very ignorant.

Leader—.....will tell us what Madura is like. (Have it located on map if possible):

Madura City—First of all, Madura City. It is a vast city, really a collection of villages—a city of dust, dirt, sorrow, drabness, color, song and discord. It is an Indian city as Madras, Bombay and Calcutta are European. It was a city existent as a shrine in the time of King Solomon. It is built around the temple shrine now, and the city corresponds to the North Tower, the South Tower, East Tower, West Tower by sections designated as North Gate, South Gate, East Gate and West Gate. Consequently the streets run to the North, South, East and West from the temple. The temple and the palace in the old days, covered thirteen acres of land; and, today, a large part of that remains.

The Streets—Down these dusty, crowded little streets one sees life as strange and foreign as an Arabian Nights' tale. There is the flower bazaar street, with its pasmine wreaths, rose wreaths and chrysanthemum wreaths for sale. Here the scent in the air hangs with exotic charm, and the worshippers flock to buy wreaths as offerings to the gods. Or women come to buy pasmine for their hair, which they braid in, or pin into a knot of hair at the backs of their necks. This rite has a finish, a groomed, dressed look that we feel in America with the last dash of powder on the nose.

Then comes the onion and garlic bazaar. The rank odors of onion and garlic, mixed with the dust and dirt of passers-by, and the odor of old gunny sacks. One feels faint, overpowered, sickened.

Here is a street filled with cows—the sacred beast of India—goats, pigs, dogs, chickens, babies, children, men, women, street-vendors beggars, idlers, and cloth-weavers, stretching their looms upon the street. Here is a woman sweeping a corner of the street to put her paddy (rice in the shell) out to dry. Here is a dog sleeping in the middle of the street, a poor, skinny, mangy creature. Here is a little dohbi donkey, with its ears back, its sad eyes, its kicked-out shins—all of it a cause for laughter and tears—and our automobile must pick its halting way through it all.

Leader—.....will tell us what it will be like if we went to Capron Hall:

North Gate and Capron Hall—Here at the North Gate of the city is Capron Hall. On one side of a stream of water, the outlet of the river at high flood, nothing more than a drain—is the street. To the left of it is the new and lovely Webb Memorial Church. To this church flock, for chapel on Sundays, girls, bright and fair. Bright, on account of their eyes and their personalities; fair, with their gay saris, their silver anklets, their bangles, the pasmine braided in their coal black hair. Across the stream, in the cool green compound, stands Capron Hall, a group of dazzling white buildings in a setting of green gardens, palm trees, flamboya trees, almond, tamarind and margosa trees. SUFFOLK LETTER.

Sunday evening, February 26, 1933, about 7:30 o'clock, Mr. James Walter Duke was suddenly killed by a passing automobile. He lived near Liberty Spring Christian Church, Nansmond County, and was walking along the highway. Two automobiles were going in the same direction, and one passed the other at a high rate of speed. The driver saw Mr. Duke in time to avoid hitting him head-on, but in making a sudden turn the car swerved and evidently hit him from the side. Death was instantaneous.

The deceased was born in Nansmond County, July 1, 1859, and died at the age of 73 years, 7 months and 26 days. He was a son of the late Nelson and Mary Brothers Duke. On November 27, 1884, he married Miss Sarah E. Walls, now deceased, and by this marriage one daughter, Mrs. Mamie Powell, survives. On December 30, 1914, he married Miss Rosa Turner, who survives him. In addition to these named, he is survived by four grandchildren and several other relatives.

Brother Duke united with the Liberty Spring Christian Church, August 17, 1872, more than sixty years ago.

The funeral service was conducted in Liberty Spring Church by the writer, assisted by Rev. R. E. Brittle, and he was buried in the church cemetery. He lived a consistent Christian life, and enjoyed the confidence and respect of the church and community. Quiet and unassuming in his manner, loyal and interested in the church, he lived his life and rendered his service with acceptance to the people who knew him. He was not inclined to take a place of leadership, but he had a spirit of co-operation with others who sought to advance the work of the kingdom of God.

Such a horrible accident and sudden death brings sorrow and trouble to many hearts. Quite naturally one thinks first of the bereaved family. In a moment joy is turned into sorrow and contentment into distress. It is not unusual for those who survive to think that something might have been done to prevent such an accident. On the other hand, the driver of the car and his family and friends are in great distress. These constitute another group who should have the considerate sympathy of the public and all the persons affected.

Life is complex and closely related in these days of stress and strain. We are all members one of another. Rejoicing sends out waves of happiness beyond the horizon of our vision. Sorrow and human distress have likewise lengthened the outreach of their sensitive touch. We are living in a time which needs great caution in human society. Death may appear in the midst of our most active hours of life. It may be there is but a step between us and death. This thought should call us to serious meditation and deep consecration. God does not directly cause the death of all his people. He does, however, speak to his people through every bereavement and sorrow. All things work together for good to them who love God.

The automobile, which has done much to add comfort to travel and efficiency to transportation, has become a national menace to the safety and life of the people. On the average, about eighty people were killed every day during the year 1932. That is a terrible toll to pay for speed and comfort. These figures and facts do not begin to complete the story. Probably more than 300,000 people were bereaved by these tragic deaths.

Surely, our country will make some effort to teach every automobile owner the importance of careful driving.

ELON SINGERS MAKE THEIR BOW.

Thursday morning, February 23rd, the Elon Singers, accompanied by Professor Dwight Steere, director and head of our Music Department, Miss Helen Chamblee, voice teacher, President and Mrs. L. E. Smith, left the College for a tour through Eastern Virginia. There are twenty-seven singers in the group. Mr. Fletcher Moore, of the student body, is the accompanist.

The Elon Singers are a group of mixed voices. They are not expert singers—they lay no claim to excelling in voice culture, but they do believe in their College and are enthusiastic for its success. They have worked hard to be able to present a program of merit to the public in behalf of Elon. Beginning with Franklin on Thursday evening, they were at the Alumni Banquet Friday evening; at Holland Saturday; at Suffolk Sunday morning; South Norfolk Sunday afternoon; the Christian Temple Sunday evening; Wakefield and Waverly Monday evening. They also gave a program at Franklin and South Norfolk High Schools. They were favored with large audiences—full houses—and most enthusiastically received. It was certainly a pleasure to have some of the friends of the College meet this fine group of young people and a great satisfaction to have the privilege of demonstrating in this way something of the kind of work that we are doing. Expressions of appreciation continue to come in from the churches visited. This is most encouraging. May I take this opportunity to thank the pastors, churches and homes, that were open to us, for their kind consideration and most cordial hospitality. It was a strenuous trip and hard work, but every individual in the party enjoyed every minute of the time and is most enthusiastic in his praise of the hospitality extended. Our only regret is that we could not visit all of the churches. We hope you may let us come next year.

The trip was made at the expense of the College, not any cost to the churches; the offerings taken went to the churches, themselves. Of course, the College doesn't have the money to pay for such trips, but we are hoping that by seeing what we are doing for the young men and women who come, you will be encouraged to speak well of your school; that you will be proud to say: "Our College;" that you may consider sending your son or your daughter, and that you may find it possible to send us at least a small donation to help along in this time of need. Your College needs your support now as she has never needed it. If you are not a member of the Dollar-a-Month Club, please send in your name, applying for membership. With your help, the College will continue to go and grow. Elon is depending upon you.

ALABAMA SUNSHINE IN THE HILLS.

While we look once more to the blue hills of Old Virginia and view the work which has become dear to the hearts of many, we must stop and lift our hats to one more noble soul—Miss Calhoun.

Our "Hilly Grissoms" have, by their love and works, won a place in the hills and seem a part of them now. They, of course, have been recognized as great, long ago. But just now we find that our Grissoms are not alone. Miss Calhoun, from Alabama, or "Alabama Sunshine," has made these hills "sit up and take notice." She has been working for small pay all along, but now her pay has been cut off entirely.

Still, this "Torch" burns on, shines on, and sheds her light afar. Her smile is just as broad and her singing just as sweet, as when she drew her pay. Of course, I know that words are like dry leaves fluttering about, when the fall by a life like this. They may rattle, but they are dead leaves and not to be compared with a soul like hers. However, as Miss Calhoun scatters her life-giving sunshine among the hills, I just feel that, in my hilly way, I'd like to say a word, "that others may see her good works and glorify our Father in heaven."

Soon now spring will be here, bringing new life to our hills, and taking away a lot of want caused by cold winter in the hills. And I feel that the coming year will be the greatest in the history of our church. For no one could view the untiring efforts of our Grissoms, and hear the sweet singing of "Alabama Sunshine" without feeling that there has dawned a brighter day for our "hilly mission."

Winter is hard on our church and Sunday School up here, but due to the endless striving of our workers here, and the cooperation of the people, the Sunday School is still going. And for a Sunday School to live through the winter here means a lot. That is, there is a lot between the lines—a lot that will never be written, passes among these rugged peaks during the cold winter time. So I ask once more for your prayers to aid our workers in these hills.

LOOK OUT FOR THAT GOLD-BRICK!

If we heed the slogan of the Better Business Bureau: "Before you invest, investigate," we shall not take that gold-brick being forced upon us. Before election it was declared worth two billion dollars, now only one and a half or two million! Investigation proves that it is a gold-brick and a deadly boomerang!

"Beer is the poor man's drink," and to get even two hundred million in beer revenue would take from the pockets of wage-earners about five times that amount—one billion dollars—leaving them and their families that much less for food, clothing, shelter, and other necessities and comforts. Also earning-power and hence buying-power of drinking workmen would be further decreased.

According to a statement of S. W. Luitweiler in the Contributors' Column of the Boston Evening Transcript, founded on figures from the Census Office, "It takes 484 men in ordinary industry to produce as much as 100 men produce in the brewing industry." Loss to other industries of one billion dollars spent for beer would throw many laborers out of jobs while taking on slightly more than one-fifth that number in the beer industry. So the return of beer would increase unemployment!

Diverting one billion dollars from productive industry to beer would retard business recovery. Furthermore, an appalling amount in taxes and private charity goes for medical, nursing, and hospital care for the poor, and drink would increase their number. Wet physicians admit "alcohol is a poison," and there is much of it even in 3.2 point beer in the quantity ordinarily drunk and it slowly but surely poisons the body and injures health.

The National Tuberculosis Society stated: "Alcohol opens the door for tuberculosis," the disease that until our intensive campaign against it carried off more victims than any other disease.

Money spent for beer instead of food results in undernourishment, malnutrition, sickness and disease among the members of the family.

Beer of low alcoholic content will not be revenue producing; if high it will be intoxicating—as will also a large amount of beer of low alcoholic content. What matters it to you what per cent of alcohol is declared non-intoxicating if one who is easily susceptible—the amount varies with different persons—is just enough affected so he cannot stop his car instantly, resulting in the death of you or your child?

It will be easier for bootleggers to avoid detection with beer legalized than under prohibition, and brewers have already asked to be protected if beer comes back. They tremble at thought of what the racketeers will do.

The wets are now silent about the return of the saloon, they know it will return with legalized beer.

Underneath all this cry for return of beer and for repeal the real underlying motive is greed. It is the bewers, liquor interests, and those holding stock in these interests who are clamoring for the return of beer and for repeal, and some millionaires who want to shift taxes to the shoulders of the working people, and also want to pave the way for the return of high-powered legalized intoxicants for themselves, also some foreign-born, the smart set, and those who ape them.

Shall we rob millions of our children of food, clothes, health and happiness to enrich the brewers, liquor dealers and millionaires? Will our church people stand idly by and see our children robbed, and the souls and bodies of our people sold for an illusive liquor revenue? Are we, as a nation, willing to fall so low? It is unthinkable! If we do we shall hear the voice of God saying: "Thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground."

MEN AND MANKIND.

By HERBERT D. RUGG.

The doctrine that "God has blessed men, but mankind has not made good use of its blessings," is urged for emphasis in pre-Easter preaching this year to the pastors of the 6,434 Congregational and Christian Churches of the United States by the united denomination's Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life in its annual Lenten message. Lent begins March 1st, Ash Wednesday, and continues until April 16th, Easter Sunday.

The chairman of the commission is the Rev. Edward W. Cross, D. D., pastor of the Union Congregational Church, Richmond Hill, New York City; the vice-chairman is the Rev. Roy C. Helfenstein, D. D., pastor of the People's Christian Church, Dover, Del. The commission is composed of nineteen ministers, four laymen and four women, elected by the General Council of the Churches.

The message reads:

"God has blessed men, but mankind has not made good use of its blessings. These are days when the preaching of the law of God as well as of his love should be strong and convincing. The church must say with all earnestness that the sufferings of the world are due mainly to the selfishness and short-sightedness of men.

"We believe it is God's will that all men shall be blessed and we must not permit greed and selfishness to thwart his purpose. We must help people to know that the evils of this day are due to human failure and shortcomings and are contrary to the will of God as taught by Jesus.

"To bring about a permanent change in human welfare requires that men have a new ideal of life. The "get all you can and give as little as you must" spirit has led to woe and disaster,

"In such times as this the church has its immediate responsibility to those in great want. It must see that people are fed and clothed and it must cooperate to the fullest extent with community and state organizations for relief.

"For others the chief need is not for material but for spiritual things—faith, courage, steadfastness! and these blessings the church must bring to needy men.

"For many, their sorrows and evils are not of their own making. Truly the victims of our social order suffer. That many of those responsible for the evils of our common life do not bear a full share of the suffering makes life even harder for those who are most oppressed.

"The church must make real the Spirit of Jesus in the world. This is God's world and it must be organized and conducted by the eternal principles of righteousness."

A pastor's class to prepare young people for church membership is recommended by the committee on evangelism and devotional life as an important special activity for every church during the Lenten season.

"The purpose of the class," it is stated, "is that young people may gain a knowledge of religion and come into a personal experience with the Spirit of Christ and then be prepared to take their places in the church as full members. The ideal aim to be sought for each boy and girl, as has been well expressed, is 'that potential good may so grow in wisdom, in stature and in favor of God and man, that the child will never know itself as being otherwise than of the nature of the eternal goodness.'"

RALEIGH RETREAT.

All our ministers and church workers are invited to the Raleigh Retreat, March 14th-16th. The meeting is for religious meditation and prayer for the work that belongs to us. We will have with us Dr. Lewis T. Read, of New York, Dr. Brewer Eddy, of Boston, Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, Rev. A. W. Sparks, Miss Priscilla Chase, Dr. Wicker, and others. Entertainment and breakfast will be provided for all. Dr. Reed will preach two evenings and Dr. Brewer Eddy for one evening. Please come, if you can, is our invitation to our ministers and workers.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary

PRAYER.

Father, God, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life. Oh, that men would love the Lord with all their heart, soul, mind and strength. Oh, that men would serve the Lord with gladness and thanksgiving. Oh, that men would praise the Lord for his wonderful works to the children of men. In the name of our living, reigning, coming Saviour, we humbly pray. Amen.

MISSIONS, MISSIONS. MISSIONS!

God help the church to save our missionary situation in order to save herself, as well as carry the Gospel to the whole world as commanded by our resurrected Lord. A missionary church or individual cannot fail religiously and a non-missionary church or individual cannot be a religious success. "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. . . Lo, I am with you always."

Isn't the dead spiritual condition of many of the churches and others a complete failure because they do so little for the great cause of missions? May all of our churches and Sunday Schools try honestly and sacrificially to pray more and do more for our denominational missions than they have attempted heretofore. It will be a great impetus in the conquest of the world for Christ and a glorious resurrection of church life and activity everywhere.

Easter Sunday will occur this year on April 16th. We have prepared a most excellent Easter program consisting of music, pageant, recitations, sacrificial offering envelopes and decision cards for use in all Methodist Protestant churches and schools. While these supplies cost the Board of Missions considerable they will be furnished free to churches and schools. Please send orders at once and begin preparations for a great Easter service in the interest of missions. Sample copies of Easter supplies are being sent to all pastors and Sunday School superintendents as far as we have their addresses. If anyone fails to receive the same, let us know.

We are perfectly willing to cooperate in the interest of a great and glorious Easter occasion. A most liberal offering for the cause of missions is so much needed at this time for the continuance or discontinuance of Methodist Protestant missionary work at home and abroad depends solely upon offerings for missions from the churches and missionary organizations. Our missionaries at home and abroad are pleading for funds with which to carry on.—From the Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

TEACHING MISSIONS IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

The following article by Shirley Swetnam Still, of Atlanta, Ga., gives another practical plan that has been tried and not found wanting:

"There are two groups of women in the church who study missions, but many who are in the Sunday School are not a part of either group. We believed that if these other women could learn about missions they would pray and give toward the cause; also they would be likely to come into one or another of the missionary organizations as they became interested. These women will probably never become interested unless it can be accomplished in the Sunday School.

"There is a missionary committee in the women's class, and this committee decided to select some field to be studied each quarter. At the beginning of the lesson period, the teacher gives two minutes only for the presentation of a missionary fact. Then the missionary book is passed through the class to receive the offering. If India is the subject for the quarter then the committee brings facts on India or India's missionaries every Sunday. In this way, by twenty-six minutes' brief and intensive presentation of facts on India, the women are much better informed. The chief danger is lest the committee overstep its two minutes. This must not be done or it will make the class resentful at the loss of time from the Bible lesson.

"In the next to the last Sunday of the quarter, the committee gives out a list of ten questions and answers on the country studied and on the following Sunday these questions are taken up and answered by the class. On this Sunday also the missionary bank is opened and the money sent to some missionary in the country studied. Then a new field is chosen for the next quarter and a new fund is started. This plan has proved very effective in spreading missionary information and in arousing missionary interest."—Missionary Review.

MISSIONARY PROGRAM.

THE CHURCH AND NATIONAL LIFE—THE NEWER PATRIOTISM.

(Prepared by Mrs. Albertis Montgomery, in The Missionary Herald, March, 1933.):

Call to Worship—Psalm 33:1-4, 11, 12.

Hymns—"O Beautiful for Spacious Skies," "God Save America."

Prayer—For candor and courage in facing the problems under discussion.

Announcement of Theme—It is no new thing for the church to be concerned with national life and patriotism. The early Hebrews regarded Jahweh as their own tribal god, and identified religion with patriotism. Our scripture readings show their changing ideals of patriotism:

(1) Narrow attitudes portraying a vengeful God (Deut. 23:3-6.)

(2) A "live and let live" attitude, revealed in the rebuke of the Book of Ruth (a Moabitess who became the progenitor of great King David and the Messiah) (Ruth 1:1, 4, 6; 4:13, 17), and in the story of Jonah, whom God rebuked for his narrowness (Jonah 3:4, 5, 10; 4:1, 4-11.)

(3) The "live and help live" attitude, revealed in the ideals of Jesus. (Matt. 5:38-48; Luke 10:25-37.)

Poems—Such as "Patriotism," by Susan Coolidge, and "Live and Help Live," by Edwin Markham.

Discussion.

1. This program is to be a discussion, the entire group participating, with brief reports interspersed to help clarify the points under discussion. In preparation the leader should familiarize himself with books and articles listed below, and should assign topics from them. Parenthetical references by letter are to these items:

(a) "The Young Revolutionist," by Pearl Buck. Paper, 75c.

(b) "The Prophets and Problems of Life," by S. A. Weston. Paper, 35c.

(c) "Was Jesus a Partiot?" by Kirby Page. (Pamphlet Dept., 311 Division Ave., Hasbrouck Heights, N. J.), 5c.

(d) "How Test Patriotism?" by George E. Haynes, in the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty, May 12, 1932.

(e) Church and Society, (monthly bulletin of the Department of Social Relations, Congregational Education Society), 50c a year.

2. The change in ideals shown in our scripture lesson is paralleled in the life of one young Chinese student, Ko-sen, as depicted in "The Young Revolutionist."

(a) Have a 5-minute summary of this story, emphasizing the successive stages, as Ko-sen learned the meaning of patriotism first in terms of hatred for foreigners and the northern army, then in terms of tolerance, and finally in terms of service, as he determined to give his life to the Master named Jesus.

3. What is patriotism? Does it involve hatred of other countries? Is there a difference between nationalism and patriotism? (b. pp. 204-206.) Is internationalism inconsistent with patriotism? Are "America for the Americans" and "One Hundred Per Cent American," patriotic slogans? Special report (d).

4. Is it possible to be a Christian and a patriot? Was Jesus a patriot? (c. p. 17.)

5. Is it practical for an individual to take seriously Jesus' teachings concerning turning the other cheek, the second mile, the coat and the cloak? Jesus and Paul thought so; Francis of Assisi and Tolstoi thought so; Gandhi and Kagawa think so. Would it be practical for a nation to take these same teachings as guides to its actions? What possible effects might be the result of such a policy?

6. Can any individual seeking his own selfish ends within a nation be a true patriot? Can any group or party within a nation seeking its own selfish ends, be truly patriotic? Can any nation, seeking its own selfish ends among the nations be considered Christian?

7. One of America's underlying principles is that of separation of church and state. Should this silence the voice of the church on the nation's attitudes toward bread, beer and bonus? On the tariff and international debt question? Can a church be patriotic and criticize its country's attitudes? Can a church be patriotic and ignore its country's attitudes on such matters as the Scotsboro case (e), the coal-mine situation (e), the Oriental Exclusion Act (b. p. 293), the MacIntosh case (b. p. 33), disarmament (e)?

8. A special report (c. pp. 8, 9) may summarize the attitudes of the church toward the Newer Patriotism. "To follow Jesus obligates one to love his countrymen and to seek after the highest ideals of the nation. But to serve as Jesus did may involve humiliation, suffering, or death. The real question before us, therefore, is this: Do we have the love, the faith, the courage, the endurance to accept all that is involved in the patriotism of Jesus?"

Conclusion.

Prayer and Meditation—directed by the leader, of confession of the sins of our nation, gratitude for the ideals and example of Jesus, and petition for the insight and courage necessary to apply the principles of Jesus to individual and national life.

Hymn—"Rise Up, O Men of God."

PROGRAM, YOUNG PEOPLE'S GROUPS.

ven Hall—the recitation hall, very new and very proud. Here is Capron Hall with its pillared verandas, the dormitory upstairs, the classrooms downstairs. Here, behind, is the Kindergarten Building, a tiny immaculate little place, but getting too small and inadequate as the days go by. Here is Sterling Brown Hostel, the dormitory for the training of school girls. It stands new and proud, too, and full of girls that are achieving and working, girls who go to the little villages to teach, girls who go to Women's Christian College in Madras, or St. Christopher's in Madras for later study. Capron Hall has girls from the Kindergarten (and little boys in the lower grades) through High School and Training School. Here is the bungalow before the garden, with its horse-tail creeper vines, hanging over the two-story verandas, over the balustrades. Here is the fern garden beside it. Here the American young ladies are. From the bungalow one hears a music lesson going on, which Miss Noyes is conducting. One hears a group singing over in Capron Hall, where Miss Stenger is helping. Out on the playgrounds Miss A. Wallace is helping with a drill class. Over in the Hostel, in Miss Gaylord's room, a Christian Endeavor meeting is in session. Everyone is busy, working hard, and the birds and flowers there to see it, and seem to approve, for they go serenely on their way singing and growing.

We have 788 on the rolls, of whom 303 are boarders and 485 day pupils. In addition to the ordinary boarders there are 30 who have their noon food in the school, and a host of other day pupils bring their lunches and eat them under the trees or in the classrooms or wherever they can find room.

There is a somewhat higher percentage of Hindu children in the school since many Christian children unable to obtain the scholarship help needed, were not able to continue their studies and their places have been taken by Hindu children. Of the 788, 594 are Christian, 186 Hindus and four Mohammedans. We are very much interested to have these feeble beginnings from year to year from the Mohammedan community, for it means that they too are beginning to wake up to the need of higher education for their girls.

Mention has already been made of the opening of the Domestic Science Department. Fifty-four students have chosen this subject as their optional subject and their laboratory work is taking a very practical turn in that it has been possible to give them a small hostel in which to live. They have no servant but do their own work as a part of their course. Those of us who have been privileged to be guests in their home, feel that they already deserve credit as cooks and as hostesses. When they asked for the privilege of coming and washing dishes once in our home for the experience that it would bring them, we were able to invite them for tea and thus help them to have some experience in western social ways.

Leader—Miss Katherine Hardeman is our representative in India. She is a teacher at Capron Hall.will tell us something of her work as director of physical education:

After ten years of patient waiting, we have at last been able to reopen the Kindergarten Department. This is a department of work which is sorely needed in India and though no stipends were available from the government, the work has been started through the help of private scholarships and four students are happily at work in this department. These students have already had their two years' course of Teacher Training, and are now specializing in Kindergarten Training. Miss Genevieve Wallace is in charge of this department and is bravely carrying on her work with no additional expense to the school.

The presence of Miss Katherine Hardeman on our staff has made possible the opening of the physical education department. This too, is something that has long been before us as an urgent need. One has only to see the faulty posture and frail weak bodies of most of our pupils to realize how great is the need for Physical Education throughout India. This department, too, is having to get along this year without government grant, and is being largely financed by private funds. Miss Hardeman herself is able in addition to carry on the supervision of all the Physical Education work of the school since the class teachers do most of the actual teaching as in the past.

We have had the annual medical inspection. We are always appalled at the amount of malnutrition pointed out to us and when we see the amount of cod liver oil prescribed, we wish that friends in America would send us the funds with which to buy the gallons of cod liver oil and the nourishing food rather than dolls and toys. The health of the school for the most part has been very good.

Leader—will tell us of a Christmas pageant as witnessed and described by Miss Hardeman:

There are, in our mission, schools for girls in the villages and girls in the city; they are called Hindu day schools and they are similar to our ordinary day schools in function, that is as similar as things of the East can be to things of the West, which really isn't very similar at all. These schools are for the little Indian children whose parents are laborers, if they can find anything to labor upon (we are by no means economically different from the rest of the world which is suffering economic pressure). These schools are merely bare rooms with whitewashed walls and an occasional blackboard, because the Indian people sit on the floor.

Although the majority of these school children are Hindus and a minority Mohammedan, the teacher is a Christian. All the mission observes Christmas, and so these schools both celebrate and observe Christmas. They usually present the Christmas Story from Luke, and immediately afterwards they have a Christmas tree.

When one enters the room, one hears in rather Tamilized English, the harmonies of those beloved Christmas Carols. Little bronze children follow the white visitors with eager eyes for the white visitors carry presents; and plantains (similar to our bananas), and cudderley (a grain which is to the Indian as popcorn is to us). Regardless of color, children are the same the world over and just as dear and lovable and bad and dirty as our own children are.

After one swallows the first few pangs of homesickness caused by the memories of past Christmas seasons, one notices in a tucked-away corner Mary and Joseph, and the Christ Child. In one little school Mary was a beautiful Mohammedan child, cafe au lait in color, with beautiful brown eyes and soft delicate features. She was draped in a somber sari, but from beneath its folds, crept the brilliance of embroidered trousers. Joseph was a rich dark brown Indian, scarlet turbaned, and characteristically standing upon one foot as he leaned upon his staff. In the manger was the Christ Child, and do you know, he was represented by a white celluloid doll with a Brahmin caste mark upon his forehead? International fellowship, international relationships, world friendship, all great social movements were unconsciously represented in this picture, poignant with meaning, framed in utter simplicity.

The material for this program was provided by the Project Department of the American Board.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

A MESSAGE TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

As springtime and summer are drawing near, all young people's societies and classes should follow nature's example, and take on new life. Now is the season of Lent (meaning Spring), and we ought to increase our efforts to make our meetings more deeply spiritual, and our daily lives more consecrated and helpful to others. Have you thought of the approaching Eastertide, and what you can do to make it more meaningful in your church and community? Why not give an Easter pageant? If you don't know of a good one, ask the Extension Worker in your area or the Board of Christian Education, Waverly, Va., for suggestions. It is a splendid idea to cooperate with some nearby church, selecting characters from both groups and giving your program at both places. That is what we are doing at Salem Chapel for Easter. In this way we will reach a much larger group of people with our Easter message in scripture, song and drama. Since there are so many good plays and pageants for the year round, no group need lack ideas for worth-while projects, and no community go without entertainment of the better kind. Oriental costumes are easily fashioned of cheap materials, and stage decorations require only shrubs and flowers (for Easter), plus a bit of your originality in arrangement. Don't confine your activities to the Christmas season, but work along on something during the rest of the year. Have a costume box so you won't have to begin over again when you need robes, etc., for some program.

Now is a splendid time to organize a new Christian Endeavor Society. If you have none in your church, why not start now? A number of experienced workers will gladly help you; and you need not worry about the outcome if you give of your best. Large crowds are now a necessity, but if others see that a few find joy in united service, they will want to have a share with you. Just remember that it is a Christian Endeavor, and that Christian means Christ-like. No where can there be found a sweeter spirit of fellowship than that which is enjoyed by a group meeting week by week to learn of life and God. Keep it on a higher plane than simply working on projects for raising money, and the making of plans for socials. These will have a place, but are not the reason Christian Endeavor exists and grows today. Diagnose your local needs, then prescribe a program that suits. No two groups are exactly alike so you can be original in adapting your program.

It is not too soon to think of the church school and Christian Endeavor conventions, and of the young people's conferences of leadership training at Elon and elsewhere. Talk about those events in your church so others will become interested, and include them in their plans for the summer. We hope to have an especial emphasis on Christian Endeavor at the convention. Come and contribute a part.

Write more often for THE SUN. What are you doing, and how, and what do you think? Let's make this Lenten season full of spiritual growth, always remembering especially young people in other lands.

TEN COMMANDMENTS TO SUCCEED.

Cultivate the habit of persistence which is the most necessary element of success.

Plan the first step to be taken—then begin.

Make up your mind to do things you dream of doing.

Believe in yourself, believe in the thing you mean to do, and be proud of it.

Do not be turned away from your purpose by your failure, nor expect too much at first. Achievement is not a swift ride in an elevator; it's a hot, hard climb up a long, steep hill.

School yourself to disregard discouragements and oppositions, and to get along, if need be, without praise or approval.

Do not interfere with others nor try to direct their lives. You'll find it all you can do to make a success of your own.

Cut out all ill humors from your disposition, and disabuse your mind of the thought that you are being slighted or overlooked.

Finally, be of a cheerful countenance. More battles have been lost by frowns, and more successes won by the narrow margin of a smile than this old world can dream of.—United News.

BEFORE YOU WRITE.

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH.

Think twice before you write a letter,

The things to say; the words to find.

Will it make someone happier, better,

More pure of heart, more clean of mind,

Or make the eyes a little wetter

With thoughts unkind?

Think twice before you write a lover,

Think twice before you write a friend,

Shall what you write seem sweet as clover,

More firmly bind and closer bend,

Or shall it say that all is over—

And at an end?

Think twice, life's sea may more divide us,

Or may unite us; good or ill;

Our letters ships to those denied us

That make them near, or farther still.

Yes, they may come and sit beside us,

If we but will.

Think twice before a letter leaves,

And if your pent was dipped in gall,

Though friends are false, though love deceives you,

Though visions fade, and castles fall—

Then you had better, though it grieves you,

Not write at all.

2. Business and industry and the worth of the individual.
3. The state and the individual.
4. Our own estimate of the value of man.
5. Jesus' estimate of human life.

Hymn—"O Jesus, I Have Promised."

Benediction.

Secure a member of your society who is fond of history, and ask him to make a study of the worth of the individual in different periods of history, and also make a study of the main countries of the world today, such as: Russia, Africa, China, etc., with a view to discovering the different attitudes toward the worth of the individual. We frequently hear that a man of wealth has the advantage in our courts. Try to get specific information on this point.

Some good questions for discussion are:

To what extent do we fail to have Jesus' estimate of human life in our attitude toward the (1) policeman, (2) janitors, (3) foreigners, (4) people of a different race, (5) people of different classes, (6) icemen, postmen, grocers? What is the usual attitude toward those: (1) who defeat us in athletics and other contests? (2) who prevent us from being popular? (3) who get business promotion over us? Compare society's treatment of homeless, unemployed persons with Jesus' estimate of the value of human life.

The teachings of Jesus about the worth of personality never has been very popular. Life was a very cheap thing in the Roman Empire. A few who were counted as citizens of the Empire had certain rights and privileges that gave value to them as individuals. But the great mass of people that made the Roman Empire possible were slaves. The Greek state, during the age of Pericles, reached a condition in which there was a marked flowering of genius. Some of the greatest thinkers, sculptors and dramatists of all time belong to that civilization. But the Greek state had its foundation in slavery. During the Middle Ages the masses were held in serfdom. The state and the church conspired to keep the masses down. The church did little to enhance man's value here in this life. But the Renaissance and Reformation sought to free the individual and give him new prestige. Some gains were made. These, however, seemed to be of little consequence when we witness the tragedy of Industrial Revolution.

Many despair of the morality of our present world, but with all their pursuit of this money-mad age, there is in our midst a sensitiveness of human values never known before in the world's life.

What was Jesus' estimate of human life? In Mark 10:13-16 we have the incident of Jesus blessing the little children. The disciples sought to remove them from Jesus' consideration, but the Master so revered their personalities that he gave them a central position.

Even the most wretched specimen of the community had value for Jesus. For example, read in Matthew 8:1-4, of Jesus healing the leper.

Many evils exist today, such as child labor, suppressed races and classes, slander, gossip, without Christian people making an effort to protest. A vigorous and positive approach to the remedying of these ills must be made before we can realize Jesus' standard of values.

"The rich and the poor meet together;

The Lord is the Maker of them all."

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

THE EFFECTS OF ALCOHOLIC DRINKS.

LESSON XII—MARCH 19, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder."—Proverbs 23:32.

LESSON TEXT: Proverbs 23:29-32; Isaiah 28:1-4; Daniel 5:1-4.

This lesson is timely. Sooner or later—and the wets want it sooner in order to take advantage of mob psychology—the people of our nation will have the opportunity to express themselves as to whether they want the Eighteenth Amendment, which prohibits the manufacture, sale and transportation of alcoholic liquors, repealed, or whether they want it retained. The wet press, the carefully planned and highly financed propaganda, the compromising Congress, the over-emphasized volume of "demand for repeal," have been much before the public, until a great many people, good people, people who ought to have better common-sense, have become either grossly deceived, or at least shaken in their faith about the value of sobriety. It is only fair that we should hear the other side at least once in a while. It is very important that before we vote, we should at least know just what our vote involves. And there is one advantage in having a straight out-and-out vote on the matter—ministers and members of the church can get whole-heartedly into the thing without getting into "politics." When the vote comes it will be on the question: "Shall we repeal the Eighteenth Amendment?" and the answer will be an unequivocal "Yes" or "No". That at least simplifies matters.

Now laying aside all controversial questions as to whether there is more drinking now than before Volstead days, as to what form of control we are to have, as to whether State control will end rum-running and bootlegging, as to whether repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment will "promote temperance" (ha-ha, tell us another joke, Mr. Wet) let us look frankly and clearly at just what is involved. In brief, it is just this: Here is an evil, age-long, that has always been the enemy of all that is finest and best in human life, that has never been amenable to law, that has corrupted politics, degraded manhood and womanhood, wrecked homes, squandered fortunes, and undermined nations. After thousands of years of trial under all kinds of conditions, and with every opportunity to make good, it gradually grew worse and worse, until our nation, having tried every other way, finally in desperation, put the stamp of outlawry upon it. It put the stamp of disrespectability upon it. It refused to recognize it as legitimate business even though it cost it a large revenue which liquor paid the government. And now this liquor traffic—for back of all this "demand on the part of the people" there is the same old liquor traffic—is asking the people of the United States to give it again respectability, to legalize it, to give it the right to make and sell as much as it can—aided and abetted by high power salesmanship and advertising—to turn it loose again on young men and young women, to salve their conscience by taking license money and thus to help balance the budget. It promises that it will behave itself, that it will keep out of the States that do not want it, and that if we really turn it lose, instead of making people drink more, it will really make people drink less. Back of all the arguments there is eventually this situation: it is simply a question of whether we shall turn our faces to the past instead of toward the future, whether we shall give our influence to the thing that will increasingly, and eventually, even if slowly, eradicate the liquor traffic, or whether we shall compromise our position, give liquor a legalized foothold, and make it possible for it eventually to come back in its old power and with its old blight. It is idle talk to talk about protecting dry States when States all around are wet. It is idle talk to talk about legislating against the return of the old saloon. It is idle talk to talk about "protecting our young people" by giving legal sanction to the liquor traffic. It is idle talk to talk about being against the Eighteenth Amendment, and at the same time to say that one is against liquor. The folks who vote for repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, whether they know it or not, will be voting to bring back ultimately the liquor traffic in all its former evil phases, even though they are under new names.

Before a man casts his vote to repeal the Eighteenth Amendment, he ought to look around a little to see what company he keeps. Who are the folks who want the Eighteenth Amendment repealed, anyway? Well, there are, of course, some good, honest people, who will vote to repeal it. And there will be a larger number of such good people who will vote to repeal it because they have been completely fooled by the reports of the wet press and by the tremendous amount of propaganda which has been released during the past few years. But the demand for repeal, and the largest number of supporters for repeal will come from the following classes. 1. The rich who are concerned primarily with having their taxes reduced and who are willing to have this done by voting to put our government in the liquor business again. 2. The brewers and all those who deal in liquor who are concerned about making money, no matter what happens to the character of those who drink liquor. 3. The large group of people who are slaves to the liquor habit, who want to indulge themselves in liquor, and who want it to have the dress of respectability. 4. All the underworld, the gangsters, the brothels, night clubs, the lawless element of our country. In large measure, back of the agitation for repeal there are two powerful factors, the love of money, and the love of personal indulgence. A man ought to think twice before he casts his vote on the side of the thing that is dominated by these unworthy features. One thing is certain—the liquor traffic can never come back without the vote of the members of the Church of Jesus Christ. The forces of righteousness hold the balance of power. If church people will vote their honest convictions in the light of the teachings of the Bible and in the light of the mind of Christ, there is no question as to the outcome.

All of this may seem far afield from the Sunday School lesson proper. But read carefully the lesson text, let the Bible itself speak about the evils of strong drink, about its curse upon the nation that gives it place, about what it does to men and women when it has them in its power, and he will see the point in all that has been written. For the issue is deep-seated. Back of all other questions is this fundamental question, "Shall we give our moral approval and spiritual sanction to the thing that stands condemned in the Bible, and the history of which confirms all that the Bible says about it, or shall we stand steadfast and courageous against it, believing that in the program of God the time has come, not for retreat and compromise, but for advance?" For the Christian, at least, this ought to be said. Before you cast your vote on this question of far-reaching consequence, try to learn the mind of Christ on the matter. As his representative, how would he have you vote?

"Oh, thou invincible spirit of wire, if thou hast no name to be known by, let us call thee—devil."—Shakespeare.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

"The opening of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."—Psalm 119:130.

MONDAY.

A LIVING WITNESS.

"Neither count I my life dear to myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and, the ministry which I have received from the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God."—Acts 20:24.

Paul is preaching, and here certifies to his commission to preach the gospel. He states that beyond this one supreme motive actuates his life, that is, that his life shall be consistent to that commission. Everything else is subordinate to that "one thing I do" (as he puts it) unto the end.

Every Christian has the same commission to know the gospel, live it and teach it. Our lives are required as a test and a proof of the reality of God, and should be a daily evidence by which others can recognize God.

Prayer—Dear Father, our Lord, we pray thee to make thyself so real to us that to be a Christian means more than talking or singing about it. Help us this day to prove thee in our lives by a more considerable undertaking.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

LIVING OUR POETRY.

"Every way of man is right in his own eyes; but the Lord pondereth the hearts. To do justice and judgment is more acceptable to the Lord than sacrifice."—Ps. 21:2, 3.

"Come, let us live the poetry we sing," said Edwin Markham. That reminds us: we do sing a lot of poetry, lots of good hymns that have a lot of gospel in them; but how many of us live the sentiment of these songs? It is the duty of every one of us to make our good songs an expression of our everyday living. The world will be better when we do so.

Some one has aptly said: "It is not enough to sit together in heavenly places; we must stand together in unheavenly places," if we would be acceptable unto the Lord.

Prayer—O Lord, God, our Father, give unto us unblurred vision of Jesus and the true Christian life. Embue our livcs with his mind and spirit, and may the gospel of grace shine through us.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

JESUS OR SELF.

"I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."

"And be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God."—Rom. 12:1, 2.

In our efforts to see Jesus, comprehend him and follow him, we frequently only portray ourselves and make him and his standard to conform to our view.

It is a weakness we have when making a portrait, "to construct" as one has said, "a mirror for ourselves instead of a portrait of the subject."

We are apt to think more of accessories and incidentals of life than of the person about which they cling.

The same is true in our conceptions of our Lord Christ and our patterns after him. We fail in our Christian living to prove the true gospel of God and the grace of Christ because we are self-centered and we love to twist his standard to conform to ours.

Prayer—O Lord, our Father, we love thee, we love thy way. We confess our weaknesses and sins, and dedicate our lives to thee to do our best to keep Christ thy Son with us as "the apple of our eyes," until we shall be like thee.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

WHEN DO YOU STOP LISTENING?

"They gave audience unto this word, and then lifted up their voices and said, away with him."—Acts 22:22.

Moffatt interprets this passage this way: "Until they heard the last statement the people listened."

Paul came to Jerusalem and spake to the people. He told them the story of his conversion and declared unto them the power of God unto salvation. But when he told them that God had commissioned him to take this message to the Gentiles also, they rallied on him. They would not tolerate this. They said, "Away with such a fellow. It is not fit that he should live."

These Jews were sympathetic until Jesus had touched the sensitive nerves of their prejudices; their sense of pride and superiority; until his gospel interfered with their personal rights and privileges. This done, in their estimation, he was an enemy to public good and not fit to live.

How modern this sounds. How like yesterday's meeting; today's conversation the talk about last Sunday's sermon!

Many of us are like Jews. Everything is fine until it clashes with our favorite aversion, our cherished animosities, our profits and purse-strings, then we begin to shove off and quit cold. We can be good Christians and Christ is all right unless, of course, there is no altering of the things to which we have grown accustomed.

Prayer—Our Father, in heaven, show us where we have quit thee and teach us thy will. Day by day may we ask ourselves frankly and honestly, "Where have we quit thee?" And make this query a growth in grace to our souls.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

FINDING TIME OR MAKING IT.

"When I have a convenient season I will call for thee."—Acts 24:24.

Moffatt translates this passage thus: "When I can find a moment, I will send for you." Goodspeed translates it this way: "I will find time later." I expect we would say in terms of our every-day parlance: "Go ahead, when I have more time I will listen to you."

This is one of the most fallacious and pernicious habits of the human mind, "I haven't time." The fact is that we usually find time to do what we most want to do, and that time is spent as we desire it.

There is a legitimate and wise postponement of action at times when such postponement is in terms of right action thereon. But when that strange delusion of time hangs before the mind it is like a mirage—we never arrive and its borders are never reached. Under such a delusion of not having time, it is usually found to be a disagreeable task we are trying to escape.

Here is a good thought to remember: "We can lose time, but we can never find it. We have got to make it." There is a lot of common advice which serves us well here: "Take your time."

That is, sieze it; if you do not, some one else or something else will take it for you.

Prayer—O Lord:

"What is this life, full of care,

We have no time to stand and stare?"

Make us, Lord, to take time for all good words and deeds that may help somebody.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

DIFFERENCE IN FOLKS.

"There is one glory of the sun, another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars."—Read I. Cor. 15:35-44.

In a sermon preached in Westminster Abbey, our American Bishop Oldham bade his hearers remember that in spite of our common history and common tongue, the American and English peoples are essentially different, and that the surest way to an abiding fellowship is frankly to recognize those differences. We must agree to disagree in customs, methods and ideas, but we must stand together for the great essentials of Christian civilization.

That is just as true of individuals as of nations and of all cooperative enterprises whatever.

Let us who are of the sun learn to recognize the glory of the moon. Let us who are Arcturus learn to recognize the white beauty of Vega. Glories are as majestic though they do not coincide or even resemble one another. The Creator has built up his universe through the coalescence of opposites.

Prayer—We worship thee, O Triune God! There is the Father, the Son, the Holy Spirit, each adorable for himself, each with his own work, yet the three are eternally one. Be thou our example.—Amen. AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

ARSON AGAINST INDUSTRY.

"He that searcheth after evil, it shall come unto him."—Read Prov. 11:23-31.

In New Jersey the other day a man set his stepson to work in a lumber yard to pay off a debt the man owed. The boy was eighteen years old and got none of the money. So he set fire to the lumber yard, that he might not be obliged to work there any longer. The yard was not insured, and the owner lost $12,000. Now the boy must stand trial for arson, and probably go to prison.

The morals of the tale are mingled, but at least it is certain that one wrong never relieves one of another wrong. Not by setting fire to one's workshop can a worker get out of work. He may effect a change of masters, from a stepfather or a lumberman to a jailer, but work he must, just the same.

Prayer—May heaven preserve us from our foolish thoughts! May our God keep our hands from folly! May we think less of ourselves with every day, and more of others!—Amen.

YOUTH ANSWERS.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"Here am I; send me."—Isaiah 6:8.

When Isaiah was a baby boy, King Uzziah was already a great king. As Isaiah grew up, and began to go to school, the praises of Uzziah were being sung on account of his great victories. For a long time they had needed a great king like Uzziah. The people were prosperous. The city of Jerusalem was fortified. The warring Philistines had been driven to terms of tribute, and the marauding Arabs had been subdued. The Ammonites, ancient foes, had been forced to pay tribute; and the powerful rival cities of Gath, Jabneh and Ashdod had been razed to the ground. Such things were coming to pass, one by one, as young Isaiah grew to manhood, and the people's attention were upon so mighty and victorious a ruler.

Isaiah becomes a young man, a scholar and in the school of religion, he seeks out some apprenticeship in or about the king's court. He was pleasing to the king, and the king was promoting him. Happy were the days when his country was so prosperous, and he was being promoted. How he admired and loved the king, old and honored throughout the land. Uzziah was a good king, and himself worshipped Jehovah, although he was tolerant toward those who worshipped other gods. Isaiah was a young devotee of the worship of Jehovah.

But the news spreads quickly abroad throughout the land that Uzziah is dead! Mourning is in the land. Perhaps enemies will rise up again. Perhaps tributes will cease to pour into the treasuries of Jerusalem, and the people themselves will be greatly taxed. Depression is likely to follow, and perhaps despair. The youth's heart is sad, and he is thinking long, long thoughts. He goes into the temple to pray. He sees a vision. "In the year that King Uzziah died, I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple . . . and above it stood the seraphims . . . and one cried unto the other, and said, Holy, Holy, Holy, is the Lord of hosts; the whole earth is full of his glory."

Young Isaiah had studied about God, but he knew his king. His king was his king, but now God also sits on a throne! That is a vision, young people! Uzziah was not perfect, he had tried to do things not allowed, and had become a leper; but this Vision-King is perfect, and there stand before him only those who cry: "Holy, Holy, Holy!" Uzziah's kingdom was great, but even so it had limitations; but of this Vision-King it was said, "The whole earth is full of his glory!"

A young graduate, then, goes for himself, not led by his tutors, into the temple when his beautiful house of cards has fallen down, and his great hero-king is dead, and his great country is perhaps facing decadence and destruction, to pray. He catches a vision of a holy, heavenly King, and a world-wide kingdom. In such a place and moment he recognizes his own unholiness! That, too, is worthy of a pause. "Then said I, Woe is me! For I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips (In other words, I am like the people, and we are all unlike God—all unclean and undone), for mine eyes have seen the King (the sure-undone King), the Lord of hosts."

II.

"Mine eyes have seen." The eyes of Isaiah had seen. Isaiah, who served in Jerusalem under four kings: Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz and Hezekiah. Isaiah, who saw the coming of one "born of a virgin," "Behold, a virgin shall conceive and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel"; and again, "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." His eyes had seen, indeed! "He is despised, and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief . . . He was oppressed and afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth; he is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth. . . . He was wounded for our transgressions; he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed." Isaiah's vision grew: his king dead, himself unclean, his God holy and King of Kings, and God's Son with an eternal sceptre and world-wide.

Peter lived in a new day. In the day of Jesus on earth. Seeing him, Peter still thought of his own nation and his own race. But somewhat like Isaiah, he too, saw a vision. In the vision he found his own littleness, and the transcending power of God, and like Isaiah he learned of a kingdom that would cover all nations, and races. Peter, speaking to Cornelius, says: "Ye know how it is an unlawful thing for a man that is a Jew to keep company, or to come unto one that is of another nation; but God hath shewed me that I should not call any man common, or unclean. . . . Of a truth, I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted of him." Peter's vision grew.

Paul, another young man that answered: "What wouldst thou have me do, Lord?" had ideas concerning the people of God. They were Jews, and just in proportion that God's family would increase, the Jews would increase. He put forth his best energies to suppress any other way. But he, too, got a vision "at midday, O king." And he was not disobedient to the heavenly vision. His first vision showed him the Lord. And for that Lord he labored. His second vision: "And a vision appeared to Paul in the night; there stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying, Come over into Macedonia and help us. And after he had seen the vision, immediately we endeavored to go into Macedonia," showed him that expanding kingdom, reaching across race lines, reaching across national boundaries! Isaiah: first vision, God; then God's people of all races; Peter: first vision, God, then God's people of all races; Paul: first vision, God, then God's people of all races and nations.

III.

In each case youth answered: "Here am I, send me." We could multiply the number of young men and young women in the Bible who had visions. God's young people see visions. "Your young men shall see visions." But their names are remembered, and humanity is bettered, because they were not disobedient to their heavenly visions. Youth, ready. Ready with its open eyes. Ready when trained as Isaiah was trained; when trained as Peter was trained; ready, when trained as Paul was trained. Each of them was taught the holiness of God, the sanctity of life, and the glory of worship. Give us a generation of young people—and the church is giving them to us—who love God, and reverently worship him, and our nation shall not only be kept from the pitfalls of past nations, but it shall continue to lead out in a day when old national lines are breaking, race prejudices are tottering, and the worship of mere man is dying.

"Youth has taken the Stars and Stripes in one hand, and the white flag with the crimson cross in the other—28,000 of them—and have sought to find their way to the hearts of the whole wide world for Christ's sake. They have been joined by thousands of volunteers from every other Christian land. Young people have kissed their homefolks goodbye at every Christian port, and set sail for every non-Christian land, with the words of the Young Galilean ringing in their souls: "All power is given unto me in heaven and on earth, Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations. . . . I have commanded you, and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

And the vision is broadening. And the youth of all races are respecting the youth of all other

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

A child likes to work for a prize. I remember when I was a small boy, my teacher offered a prize to the student who got the most head marks in spelling for the entire term. We had four months' school in those days, and four months was a long time to work for a prize. I will remember that a little girl with red hair and the writer led off in getting head marks. She was a good speller and had Webster's old blue backed speller well in hand. I remember how hard she made me work to keep up with her in head marks.

The matrons here sometimes offer the children in their building a weenie roast if they got "A" on deportment, and a certain number on their studies. We find that it is a good plan and inspires the children to do their best. Miss Horne, one of the matrons, offered the baby girl in the Johnston Hall a little party if she would make "A" on deportment and on all her studies during last month. The little thing studied hard all the month and her report card had a whole column of "A's".

She gave her the little party in her room and allowed her to invite two of her little friends and when she went to one of the other buildings to invite her little friend there, she also invited a larger little girl, too. The matron asked her why she invited the larger little girl, and her answer was, "She got all 'A's', too, and I want her in my party." They had a lovely time eating tea cakes, etc.

Children are interesting and can do lots of interesting things. Give the Orphanage your support, that it may in some measure brighten the lives of these little unfortunate ones.

ELON COLLEGE PLAYMAKERS.

The Playmakers of Elon College, under the direction of Miss Virginia S. Fitzhugh, will present their second production of the year in the College auditorium, Friday, March 10th, at 8 o'clock. This production will consist of three one-act plays. Two of these: "So This is Fame," and "When Angry Count One Hundred," are light comedy.

The third, "On Vengeance Height," is a moving tragedy of the Tennessee mountains, and is the main feature of the evening. This is Elon's entry in the North Carolina Dramatic Tournament and will be given at Chapel Hill on April 1st. "So This is Fame" is a light sparkling play concerning the difficulties of an authoress who puts her relatives into a book. "When Angry, Count One Hundred," is a most unusual dialogue between two lovers.

The actors in the three plays are as follows: Marguerite Harris, Mrs. C. M. Cannon, Walter Latham, Jape Rawls, Elmina Thodes, Lillie Horne, Thelma Morris, Patricia Holden, Frances Chandler and Paul Taylor. C. M. CANNON.

Our Christian fathers and mothers have faith to believe these mighty things can be done, but they are experienced enough to know that only by hearing and answering the call of God can they be done.

INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2 1/2 x 4 1/4 inches x 3/8 inch

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller.

It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength.

One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together.

The size, 2 1/2 x 4 1/4 inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

OBITUARIES

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT

On January 28, 1933, God in his infinite wisdom, saw fit to remove one of our beloved members, Mrs. Dora E. Seldon. She was a devoted wife and mother and a loyal member of our Society. Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we, the members of the Ladies' Aid Society of Timber Ridge Christian Church bow humbly to the will of God and say: "Not our will, but thine be done."

2. That we extend to the entire family our deepest sympathy realizing they have lost a loving mother.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to "The Christian Sun," and to the "Hampshire Review," for publication, and a copy be recorded in the records of our Society.

Respectfully submitted,

MRS. MINNIE MUSE,
MRS. DELIA JOHNSON,
MRS. BERTIE SPAID,
MRS. FANNIE BRILL.

WOODWARD.

In the death of Hersey Woodward, Sr., the Board of Trustees of the Suffolk Christian Church sustained the loss of a revered and trusted friend and associate, whose wise counsel and sound advice will be greatly missed.

He was a Christian soldier, a true proponent of the Master's teachings, a stalwart defender of what he believed to be right, a scholarly gentleman, and an exemplary member of his church, an excellent citizen, a loyal friend and a devoted father and husband.

We have every reason to feel assured that he has gone to dwell in the land where he will reap the reward for the many kind acts and noble deeds done by and performed by him, during his lifetime, in the service of his Master and in the service of humanity.

To his bereaved ones we express our sincere and heartfelt sympathy and for them we offer the following prayer:

"O pity them, Father; hold thou their hauds; give them the message of comfort that they need to sustain them, and may the place of their vision and the faith of their souls be also at the foot of the Cross."

Resolved, That a copy of this feeble tribute to his memory be submitted to the church for its adoption, a copy transmitted to his family and a copy duly recorded in the Minutes of this church.

Respectfully submitted and adopted by the Suffolk Christian Church.

W. W. BALLARD,
E. E. HOLLAND,
J. E. WEST.

BUTLER.

The death angel has again visited the Suffolk Christian Church and claimed another faithful worker and loyal friend, Mrs. John M. Butler, who on November 26, 1932, was called upon to relinquish her claim of life in the flesh for that larger and better life beyond.

Her passing has left a vacancy in the church, in the home and in the community that will be felt throughout the coming years.

Mrs. Butler was a leader, and God needs such leaders to carry on his work here in the world. Truly her works will follow her, for through the medium of the church, the Sunday School and other religious organizations the fruit of her efforts will live for the betterment of mankind.

Mrs. Butler, with a few co-workers, organized the primary department of the Sunday School, and acted as superintendent in this department for many years.

So deeply did this work become rooted in the life of the church that it has grown to vast proportions, and today one has only to visit the primary classes in the Sunday School to get a glimpse of her efforts put into action many years ago. In the life of our departed friend, we have a worthy example of gentleness, kindness, loyalty and a desire to be of service to humanity.

Therefore, may we resolve:

1. To reconcile ourselves to the will of our Heavenly Father, the God who gave and the God who, in his own time, taketh away.

2. That those of us who are privileged to remain for a while may do our part to carry forward the work which she began in a manner wholly acceptable unto God.

3. That we seek to emulate all that was good in the life of our departed friend and co-worker.

That a copy of these resolutions be admitted to the church record, a copy be sent to the family, and a copy to "The Christian Sun," for publication.

•• THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY ••

The Bank Holiday.—

Since the last issue of THE SUN went to press the United States has been passing through a period possibly more critical than the memorable "Black Friday." The way in which the public made the best of a bad situation, shows that the nation has yet a modicum of moral stamina. When this is written many of the banks in the larger cities of the country have reopened without restrictions, and when it reaches the reader many of the smaller cities and towns will have banking facilities at their disposal. It will be well for the public to bear in mind that the failure of a bank to open immediately does not necessarily mean that the bank will not reopen.

Passage of Economy Bill a Certainty.—

There seems to be no doubt that the bill giving the President power to cut Veterans' appropriations and Federal salaries will pass. On Monday of this week a motion to recommit the bill was killed by a vote of 60 to 20, 20 Republicans joining with 40 Democrats to keep it before the Senate. The bill has the limited sanction of the American Legion. Ray Murphy, chairman of the Legion legislative committee, made the following statement: "In the presence of existing conditions, the American Legion, unwilling that the basic structure of World War veterans' relief be destroyed, is willing to make its full contribution to sound national credit . . . by supporting a 25 per cent reduction in . . . veterans' benefits."

The California Earthquake.—

The earthquake which wrecked a goodly portion of Southern California, caused deaths totaling 115, while the Red Cross has made public a list of 2,000 persons injured in various degrees at Long Beach where the shocks were severest. Property damage in Long Beach was estimated at $50,000,000, and the total in the quake district will probably pass the $75,000,000 mark. By Tuesday of this week the situation seemed to be well in hand. Not only was the Red Cross at work, but sailors and marines from many vessels off shore and the National guards aided in the relief work. Already the first stages of reconstructive work are under way, and rebuilding will give employment to many who have been long out of work. Even out of disaster itself may come some good.

The President's Beer Message.—

"I recommend to the Congress the passage of legislation for the immediate modification of the Volstead act, in order to legalize the manufacture and sale of beer and other beverages of such alcoholic content as is permissible under the Constitution; and to provide through such manufacture and sale, by substantial taxes, a proper and much needed revenue for the Government. I deem action at this time to be of the highest importance." His message shows close kin to the pledge in his party's platform. There is little doubt as to the passage of legislation in keeping with his message, and it seems to accord with the wishes, if not of a majority of the people, certainly with an organized minority that has the ability to make its wants known. This seems to be more than the "dry" forces of America can do. From the standpoint of taxes alone, we regret to see the shifting of the burden from the hard-pressed wealthy to the even harder-pressed working classes.

What About Darkest Africa?—

From a recent issue of The Christian Evangelist we learn that Africa has a population of around 140,000,000. 40,000,000 of these live in Northern Africa, and are almost without exception Mohammedan in faith. In South Africa there are 10,000,000 people, most of whom are Christians. "Between these," we are told, "are 90,000,000 black people, among whom 150 evangelical missionary societies are at work, employing 6,600 missionaries. Of the natives, 1,800,000 are evangelical Christians, and 720,000 of them are under tutelage for baptism. . . Madagascar has 250,000; the Gold Coast, 134,000; Kamerun and Nigeria, 166,000; Uganda, 131,000. In the former German colonies in Southwest Africa, half of the natives are gathered into the congregations of the Rhenish Mission Society. There are 30,000 Christians in East Africa, and 86,000 in French Kamerun. . . There are 8,500 Catholic mission workers in charge of a total of 5,300,000 Christians." Everywhere, it seems, the door is open among the natives, and there is a general longing for the Gospel of Christ.

Religion in the Inauguration.—

Under the heading, "Religion in the Inauguration," the Methodist Protestant-Recorder's editor, Dr. R. L. Shipley, tells us: "It is our habit to see the best in things, and so it is with some joy that we report our reactions to the press reports which tell of the recognition of religion in this great event. . . The President, his family and cabinet, before going to the White House and Capitol, went to old St. John's Church for a service of prayer. This service was requested by Mr. Roosevelt, and so far as we can remember, is new in the inaugural celebration. . . The first act of the new Congress was the prayer by the chaplain of the Senate. This was in the usual order, but the very fact that it is the custom bears witness to the conviction of our people that our life and joy as a nation are the fruit of the goodness of God. The Holy Bible on which the President took the oath of office was an ancient leather bound volume printed in Dutch, brought from New York by the President. It was the family Bible of the Roosevelts. The place selected by the President, on which his hand rested during the ceremony, was the thirteenth chapter of the First Epistle of the Corinthians. Like a gleam of light there leaped to the front pages of the newspapers of the earth the Apostle's great hymn of love. In the midst of the confusion and change of this uncertain hour the world read: 'And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity.'" The inaugural address, itself, is filled with a spirit that is distinctly Christian, and all Christians can join with the President in the conclusion of that address which is itself a prayer: "In this dedication of a nation, we humbly ask the blessing of God. May he protect each and every one of us! May he guide me in the days to come!"

Dr. Koo Denies Chaos in China.—

Asked as to whether or not conditions had become chaotic in China, Dr. Willington Koo, Chinese statesman and representative of that government at Geneva, emphatically denies such to be the case. "It is true," he says, "that measured by Western standards, China has much to do in consolidating the authority of the central government. But to speak of chaos . . . is nonsense." Asked to give concrete evidence of what he said, he replied: "You remember the grave problem presented to China by the terrible floods in the Yangtse valley early in 1931. Well, despite the special difficulties created for us by Japanese aggression, both in Manchuria and Shanghai, we have built 6,500 miles of dikes, ten feet high at a cost to our central treasury alone of more than $25,000,000, in a period of eight months. Between ten and twenty million people have been engaged in this work. Again, consider China's currency. During the past year when we have balanced our national budget without borrowing from abroad, our currency has, if anything, appreciated in value, while the Japanese yen has fallen to half its value in September, 1931. These facts speak for themselves." Asked as to conditions in Manchuria and the Japanese problem which confronted his country, he said that the Chinese were confident that in the long run they would, if necessary, reconquer the three eastern provinces now in Japanese hands. However, he continues: "We are still hopeful that the League will see that justice is done, not only because of China's claim to help under the Covenant, but because failure to defend Right against Might now would have disastrous effects upon the system of pacific settlement established after the War, which system is the only hope of permanent peace not only in the East, but in the world." He believes that Japan would yield if sufficient pressure were brought to bear.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Only as the church gives the Gospel to the world will the world ever get the Gospel. For it is the only institution on earth doing the missionary task as embodied in the Great Commission.

The church is the only institution engaged in the missionary task—that of giving the Gospel to a sinning, perishing world. Unless and until the church shall do this, it will never be done.

Dr. L. E. Smith, with his son, L. E., Jr., and Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, were in Richmond a few hours Monday of this week. Mr. Hardcastle left with Dr. Smith and is conducting a series of meetings at Elon College, much to the joy and delight of church, faculty, student body and community.

"And he said to them all, if any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me." (Luke 9:23.) Through self-denial we give to a sinning, perishing world the bread of life, the Good News of our conquering Lord.

If missions were only a benevolent task, the church might keep silent about it, indifferent to it and withhold its gifts, but being a spiritual, and not a benevolent task, the church alone, a spiritual body, is called upon to do this task, and is the only body on earth that is seeking to give the Gospel of salvation and life to a world that is unsaved and in darkness.

Among the interesting services and events in the Miami Beach Church, of which Dr. Elisha A. King is pastor, have been an evening of American Folklore, by Alaloe and Te Ata; also a costume recital given by Josef Kallini, lyric tenor of Philadelphia. The pastor has recently preached on the themes: "The Vision Splendid," "Living Stones," and a practical evening sermon on "Kitchen Religion."

Many pastors have sent in the name of a missionary committee in the church who will distribute literature and help to cultivate the missionary spirit during our Mission Period—March, April, May, and June. It is hoped that all pastors will appoint a committee to assist in getting across to the membership the missionary message through the rich and wholesome missionary literature now being offered for free distribution.

At the communion service on March 5th, at the First Church, St. Petersburg, Fla., 1,100 communicants were served. The attendance at the services of the church taxes the capacity of the church, which seats over 2,000, and regularly during the winter season, many are turned away, sometimes literally hundreds. Dr. Charles H. Beale is the preacher and pastor during the winter season. This church prints in its church bulletin the missionary projects of the church with the amount designated for each.

Rev. R. A. Whitten, Portsmouth, Va., was a welcome visitor at the College and THE SUN office, March 10th. Bro. Whitten feels much encouraged, as well he may, at the opportunity of service afforded him at our First Church, at Portsmouth. He has entered upon his task as pastor with fervor, consecrated zeal and enthusiasm, and he is finding willing response on the part of the church. He is gratified with the challenge, while burdened with the task, of a great responsibility and opportunity.

March 1st to June 30th, Spring months—new life months—resurrection period—should, and can be made glorious months for and by the churches in reviving their activities and deepening their spiritual life through the missionary challenge and opportunity afforded of sharing with others the life of him who conquered all temptations and came out victorious over the last enemy, which is death. In his name, and for his sake, the church observes its Mission Period and seeks to proclaim his Good News to the world.

An interesting event sponsored by the Woman's Union of the Congregational Church at Winter Park was an Antique Pilgrimage and Exhibit. An exhibition of antiques was collected, many priceless heirlooms being loaned for the occasion, and there being also a program of music given by young women dressed in early Colonial costumes. There were not only rare old pieces of furniture but old crockery, china and glassware, hand-woven linens, old jewelry, coverlets, shawls, etc. The exhibition was largely attended and greatly enjoyed.

Dr. G. O. Lankford, pastor, Burlington Christian Church, has been constrained to seek strength and recovery in a hospital and medical treatment, and was unable to occupy his pulpit Sunday, the 12th. The Mission Secretary, counting it a great privilege, preached at the 11 o'clock service, and Dr. Brewer Eddy, of Boston, at the evening service. It is always a joy to meet and to worship with the congregation of our Burlington Church. Here is hoping that Dr. Lankford, the beloved pastor, will soon be back at his work recovered fully of strength and health.

A correspondent from Sims, N. C., writes: "Prof. A. R. Flowers is visiting some of our high schools in this section in the hope of securing patronage for Elon College. Mr. Flowers is a great believer in Christian education, and has spent most of his life in an effort to help deserving girls and boys find their way into some Christian college. Few people have made the sacrifice in this cause that he has, and it can be said that few people have had more success in this work than he. Somehow he has a way of inspiring young people to press onward and upward.

Many pastors, not having previously done so, are appointing missionary committees in their respective churches to aid during the Mission Period in distributing literature and in creating an interest in the congregation in missions. Every church should have a missionary committee, since the essential and vital work of the church is carried on through its missionary endeavor. The church at large has one avenue of growth and enlargement, and that is through its missionary activity, and certainly every pastor needs the help and cooperation of such a committee in his church.

Mrs. L. W. Stagg, secretary, Eastern Virginia Woman's Conference, calls attention to the District Missionary Rallies in Eastern Virginia: At First Church, Berkeley, Tuesday, April 4th; Cypress Chapel, Wednesday, April 5th; Richmond, April 6th. The Rallies are held not for the Missionary Societies of the District only, but for the benefit of the churches of the District, and Mrs. Stagg is anxious that all churches and Sunday Schools, as well as all Missionary Societies, have delegations at one or the other of these Rallies. It will be a day well spent, since the women of these districts always have meetings worth while and very uplifting.

In a time when communities, states and nation are giving millions to benevolence, will the church dry up the fountains of its own life by withholding its gifts to missions, the one spiritual task laid upon the church of sharing the life and love of our Lord with souls who are perishing without it? If benevolent societies and a benevolent people can out of their want and need share material bread with physical bodies, can the church of the living God refuse to share the bread of life with perishing souls? This is the missionary task, a task that no state, nation or benevolent society undertakes, viz: that of giving and sending to perishing souls that bread which cometh down from heaven.

Dr. Brewer Eddy, of the Mission Board, and of the Prudential Committee, from Boston, was the speaker at chapel, Elon College, on the morning of March 10th, and one who has attended practically all the chapel services of the year, said, without discrediting any others, that "no greater address had been delivered to the students during the year; an address whose might and power would never be forgotten." Dr. Eddy was also the welcome guest and preacher at the 11 o'clock hour, Sunday, the 12th, and at Burlington at the 7:30 P. M. service. Dr. Eddy knows his world and the need of it for the Gospel of righteousness, and his great mind has a grasp of that truth in Christ that makes for righteousness, for power and for salvation.

Shall we glorify what is left of March-April-May-June with an honest effort to deepen the spiritual life of the church by increasing our knowledge and zeal for the missionary task and achievement? Or shall we ignore the opportunity and lose ourselves in the mist and the fog of worldly things, worldly problems, worldly difficulties? When our Lord Christ had conquered all and realized that he was now in possession of all power, his one desire was that he might share that power and glory with his followers. And in order to do this, he gave the one command after his resurrection: "Go ye, into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." That is not a burden to be borne, it is a blessing to be shared by all who will obey and enter into that privilege. Because our Lord wanted his church to have power and to share his glory, he laid upon his church that one task and gave to his church that one challenge.

The second of a series of group meetings of the officers of the Woman's Societies and others, called in the interest of missionary program and promotion, was held at St. Petersburg, Fla., on March 2nd. Representatives from the Woman's Societies and also the pastors were present from the Woman's Societies and also the pastors were present from the St. Petersburg Church and the churches at Tampa, West Tampa and New Port Richey. Superintendent Gillette was in charge of the meeting and the principal speakers were: Mrs. Marion Ballou Fisk, formerly assistant superintendent of Ohio and leader of the woman's work of that State; and Miss Pattie Lee Coghill. Matters concerning missionary program and other subjects of special interest to the women of the churches were discussed. Miss Coghill and Mrs. Fisk also spoke at Winter Park and Avon Park. The meeting which was called for a similar group at Miami was postponed because of the difficulties attending the bank holiday.

Dr. Charles E. Burton, secretary of the General Council, Congregational and Christian Churches, was the preacher at the 11 o'clock service at Elon College, Sunday, March 5th. It was, indeed, a great sermon—soul-searching, spiritually uplifting, edifying. It was a fortunate and happy congregation, indeed, that heard him on this occasion as he expounded the theme: "Doing Good," in which it was emphasized that our Lord faced real temptations in his forty days' experience in the wilderness and came out from the temptation stronger and better equipped for mastery of himself and of his surroundings. God permits evil, calamity, tragedy in the world, but he, who recognizes as the Lord Christ did, that there is a power about us and above us which enables us to overcome temptation, will be master of himself and of his circumstances. Dr. Burton has visited Elon before, but certainly was never heard more gladly or more appreciated than on this occasion. The College and community will ever have a warm welcome for this man of God, who, in the name of his Master, "goes about doing good."

The Fiftieth Anniversary of the Orange City Church was impressively celebrated with programs occurring on February 26th-28th. The special program of the event occurred on Tuesday afternoon, February 28th. There were historical papers with regard to the church, the Woman's Society, the Sunday School and the Christian Endeavor Society. This church being one of the oldest in the State has had an important place in the denominational history in Florida. The second annual State Conference was held with the Orange City Church and it was at that Conference that definite action was taken looking toward the first college in Florida. Orange City was one of the communities seriously considered for the location of the college and a generous offering of land and money was made by the citizens of the community. However, Winter Park was finally selected and Rollins College was the result. The celebration of the anniversary closed with a banquet which was largely attended and there were a number of interesting addresses. Rev. Thomas H. Derrick, formerly pastor, presided at the banquet. The pastor of the church is Rev. Gordon Brokenshire, and he and the special committee are to be congratulated upon the success of the celebration. Mrs. F. C. Gerhard was chairman of the general committee.

Several churches nearby met in a missionary study with the Henderson Church, Wednesday, March 8th. Mrs. L. E. Smith, of Elon College, was the principal speaker, taking most of the time in giving a lucid and comprehensive review of the Home Mission study book—"Indian Americans." Mrs. Smith, having spent a year teaching among the Indians, gives a personal review of the book, and her acquaintance with Indian life, religion and habits, enables her to make the review of the book very comprehensive. She approaches in her study the question of missions from its human side, and reveals to her class the human need, the human attitude and the human response to the work of righteousness. The Mission Secretary was present and took part in the program, seeking to approach missions from the purely divine side; revealing the fact that our Lord himself was burdened, even more than we ourselves are, for the salvation of the unsaved, and that he is seeking, even more than we are, to reveal himself to others, and that his need calls out to us to become co-workers with him; and while we cannot supply the human element, he is willing and anxious to seal the same with the powers of heaven and the strength of his own love and life. Miss Margaret Alston, superintendent of the district, presided. Several pastors were present who made brief remarks, encouraging in the missionary work: Rev. E. M. Carter, Rev. H. C. Hilliard, Rev. J. L. Foster. Rev. S. E. Madren of the district sent his regrets, himself being confinied to his home with "flu." The good women served a bountiful dinner at the church, and the sixty to seventy-five learners of missions felt that a great and good day was spent in profitable and pleasant service.

DANVILLE CHURCH.

It was good to be there at Third Avenue Christian Church, Danville, Va., last Sunday. I have heard it said "If you manufacture a good article in the woods, the people will make a beaten path to your door." They must make a mighty good article in that church, for though it is not in the woods, there are plenty of woods to be seen close by, and the beaten path is there, and the people were there, great crowds of them. Just think of it! Sunday School; children and grown-ups, not only on time, but fifteen minutes early. The writer was taken in charge as soon as he "hit the hill" by a fine young fellow whose face shown as if God had done something with his heart recently, and in the tour of inspection of the plant and equipment which included a veritable whirlwind of introductions, handshakes and exchange of pleasantries, winding up in a room where a group of splendid young men were engaged in intercessory for those who had been reported sick or in trouble.

Then the Sunday School assembled (with communicating doors) 385 strong. Inspirational singing, routine work, orderly retirement to respective classrooms. In the adult class it seems to me every available seat was occupied with one eager for the message. After Sunday School, a sickly looking faithful few straggling in to hear the morning sermon? Not a bit of it! The place was thronged with happy hearts from rostrum to and including a communicating room. Bro. Sorrell had a telling message. It was plain to all that he was not foolin'.

Sunday School and church service at a mission point outside the city in the afternoon.

Christian Endeavor at 6:45—well attended, beautifully conducted. Evening service at 7:30, when the pastor, to a packed house, let go another "broadside" at the devil.

A beautiful and fitting conclusion making perfect the end of a wonderful day was the designation of Mrs. Verlie Townsend, president of the C. E. Society, to full-time mission and social work in the community.

God bless Bro. Sorrell, and those who hold up his hands. R. B. Wood.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

SHALL WE DRY UP THE SPRINGS AND CHOKER THE STREAMS?

Every church, like every individual, has its problems now. This, however, should be borne in mind, that back of the problem lies a privilege, and in the exercise of a privilege, there is power. Our Lord instituted his church and carries it on, not that he may face us with problems that vex us, but give us privileges that challenge and bless us. The biggest problems some local churches have are problems that they make for themselves, create out of their own fear and faithlessness. On this account, our Lord enjoined: "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. Sell that ye have; give alms; for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." Our Lord is building a world-wide kingdom of righteousness, and much of the fear that kills comes in applying human, rather than divine, arithmetic.

There are short-sighted localized pastors and church members who will not give even the Gospel to others because they fear they cannot care for their own. In this way, they dry up the springs, and choke the streams, that give life, and strength to their own local church, for which they are over-anxious. This sentence caught our eye, and can be put down as a truth that cannot be disputed: "No church can solve its local financial problems by merely diminishing its gifts to missions. The congregation which ceases to give (the Gospel) to others, ultimately dries up the springs of its own support."

It is difficult now for many churches to pay their pastor his salary. In fact, many are far behind in paying their pastor. Will it help, on this account, to withhold the mite to missions? Will the pastor get paid any more or any earlier by keeping silent about missions and by keeping hand and voice out of taking the missionary offering? Nay, verily. Ten times, no. Taking a missionary offering, teaching missions, preaching missions, urging the claims of missions have never yet blocked or for long, if for a day, delayed the payment of the pastor's salary. On the other hand, failing to do so has caused such delay, because the pastor that is non-missionary and the congregation that withholds its gifts from missions, are together drying up the springs of their own support. The church always more rapidly and more willingly pays its pastor when that church has a pastor who is looking after and urging the missionary claims, bringing home to the hearts and consciences of the membership the burden of our Lord's commission and desire that a knowledge of him may be shared with others, and not kept to ourselves. When any church, by indifference and inactivity, tries to keep within its own membership, and its own walls, the preaching and the teaching of the name of Christ, it takes the heart and soul out of such teaching and preaching, and does violence to the name that it has been called upon to exalt and to honor above every other name. Truly, yea verily, the congregation which ceases to help give the gospel to others through its missionary effort, dries up gradually and ultimately the springs of its own support. The counsel of the now sainted and wise Phillips Brooks, to the bewildered pastor, who inquired what to do when the church was in debt and behind in paying his salary, was: "My son, preach missions to your church until there shall be a zeal in your membership that will enable them to give a liberal offering to missions, and then they will pay their own pastor his salary and solve the problems of the local church."

In this day and time when the church has a challenge and a privilege, such as seldom come to it, it cannot afford, by a short-sighted policy, to dry up the springs of its own support.

J. O. A.

OUR MISSION PERIOD.

Our Mission Period—March, April, May, June—cannot with impunity be overlooked or ignored. The church will be stronger for this privilege or weaker and more impotent for ignoring it. It offers the opportunity of lifting our minds from that which distresses and distracts to that which saves and redeems. The Mission Secretary has for gratuitous distribution literature, rich in all that pertains to the peace, progress and power of the church. The distribution and reading of this literature will help any cause, bring blessing and benefit to any mind that reads it, and any soul that embraces its fervor and its richness.

Mission Period gives an opportunity for learning some of the richest truths the church has to offer to a dying world, some of the most wholesome facts that face a bewildered people. Our Mission Period gives the opportunity of learning what is the depth and the height, the breadth and the width of the Gospel of the Son of God, and it has power to reach and to save to the uttermost. There is more, ten thousand times more, in missions and in the teaching and spirit of missions, than the mere money that is given to missions, or any offering that is taken for missions. The money and the offering are only incidentals, fruits in fact of a good and glorious planting, a safe and secure cultivating. We, all of us, need the spirit of missions, which is the spirit of our Lord; the desire to share with others the glories of his resurrection, the power of his life, the lifting and saving influence of his love. We need to be missionary-minded, that our souls may share with our Lord the burning desire that his name shall be exalted and that his power may be felt at home, abroad, everywhere throughout the earth. Not that we ourselves, with our meagre effort, limited desire or slender contribution, can carry that message to the uttermost parts, but that we ourselves may be developed, under divine leadership, into a personality, into a soul adorned with a holy desire, a consuming zeal that our Lord shall be enthroned in the hearts of others, even the most needy, and in this holy desire have him enthroned in our own lives and hearts, poor and needy as we ourselves are.

We cannot believe that any pastor will be so short-sighted, that any people will be so indifferent to their own spiritual welfare, as to overlook, or ignore, the wonderful opportunities the Mission Period offers. Marvelous privilege, opportunity of growing stronger spiritually ourselves, that through faith we may overcome the dangers and difficulties of this present time, and come out victorious, and more than victorious, through him who loved us and gave himself for us. It is a time of testing; it is a time of trial. By the grace of God, we will change it into a time of triumph and a period of rejoicing. Mission Period is a glorious time, because it challenges us to a spiritual task, to a holy, unselfish task, to the glorious task of becoming co-workers together with our Lord, in building up his kingdom of righteousness on earth, and glorifying his name in the world.

J. O. A.

A GLORIOUS TIME.

This conversation was heard by the writer: "These are strange and perilous times in which we live. Banks closed, industries idle, unemployment amazing." And then the one addressed, replied: "These are glorious times. Churches are open, opportunities for righteousness, privileges for great tasks of faith are ours. Now, faith is challenged, and faith is that which overcomes the world." And with this, the writer was left, not bewildered, but hopeful and expectant. We are living in a great and glorious time. One may recall that Job, of ancient and inspired literature, had fortune, and lost it; had health, and suffered affliction; had friends, who fell away from him; and when one asked him what he had left on which he could depend, and from which he could get assurance and security, said: "I know that my Redeemer liveth." In our day, over night, fortunes have crumbled, and the rich of one day are the paupers of the next. Institutions and enterprises of a lifetime in building have gone to the scrap heap, rendered futile in the brief expanse of a few hours. All these things have taught us that that which is of man is temporary; that which is of God is eternal.

There is a treasure-house, whose doors are never closed and whose keeper never sleeps. That treasure-house our Lord knew about and told of when he urged us that "to lay up for ourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal; for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." There is a treasure-house safer than the strongest bank, more secure than any earthly institution—the treasure-house of our Lord, the place of the soul, whose vaults are presided over by the all-seeing eye and the protecting hand of a gracious and loving Father who never sleeps.

Dr. Charles E. Burton, in his great sermon at Elon College recently, told of two men of recent acquaintance in his vicinity. One lived in a palace and controlled millions which the present depression swept from him. He went to the top story of a sky-scraper, from whose heights he leaped to his sudden and tragic death. He had centered his heart on earthly treasure which was now gone. There was nothing left, and his end was tragic and pitiful.

There was another neighbor. He, too, had fared well in the days of prosperity and had reached the salary and income of more than $50,000.00 annually. He lost his job, and that which he had accumulated was swept from beneath him. Today he is working for $12.00 a week, supporting himself and family with the bare necessities to be purchased with such a modest income, but his hope was fixed and his faith was unshaken in the God who tries men's souls, but in the trial never fails them, and this man is happy at his work, and his soul is being refined and his life adorned with a joy that the world cannot take away.

We are living in a glorious time, glorious in opportunity for self-denial. Right now the church is calling us, our own Congregational and Christian Church is calling us, to think in terms of a world-wide Gospel, to deny ourselves even of a portion of the meagre income we have, that in this time of trial and refining our souls may have the joy of him who went to the Cross and came through the resurrection, victorious over the earth and glorified with the presence and the power of the God of all creation. We are living in a glorious time, if, through a faith that will not be shaken, a hope that will not be dimmed, a love for our Lord that shares his burden, we press on and push forward and, through self-denial, give the light of his love to others.

J. O. A.

SHE LOVED MUCH.

Under this title, the writer is thinking of Mrs. Joe Bynum Gay (before marriage, Miss Annie Lee Gardner), Franklin, Va., who departed this life after a brief illness, Tuesday evening, March 7, 1933. She was fifty-eight years of age, but in that brief period put into lie so much of loyalty, love and service, that one cannot think of her in terms of years. It was achievement, and not years, that made priceless her life and permanent her name. She loved much, and therein is written the story of an unusual and victorious character and career.

In all of this writer's travels he never found a home of more willing, abundant, and careful hospitality than that in which this royal soul presided. She loved her home and the radiance of this love reflected itself in every attitude and activity therein. Happy, indeed, were those (and their name is legion), who came under the wholesome influence of the gracious hospitality of that household. Here where the great-hearted husband and devoted son entered equally into the generous hospitality of the house, the Proverbs of a wise man were exemplified in marked and marvelous manner: "The heart of her husband doth safely trust in her, so that he shall have no need of spoil. She will do him good and not evil all the days of her life." In fact, one feels that the wise man had her, and only her sort, in mind, when he wrote: "She openeth her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of kindness." She made a good and happy home because she loved much.

Her church felt constantly the power of her great love, and profited by her wisdom which had its beginning in the fear of the Lord. Every pastor that served Franklin Christian Church in her day bears testimony to the fact that hers was a wise, a wholesome, and inspiring love for her church. If love and loyalty are the two streams that make up the one current of life, then here, indeed, was a life of momentous vigor and volume, giving its unselfish service, that her church might be strong in all the works of righteousness. Deep and sincere in her own opinions and convictions, these expressed and defended, did not deter her from yielding to the convictions and opinions of others when the welfare, the harmony, the progress of her church demanded it. She put the unity of the church, her love for the church, its fellowship and welfare, above any personal preference, prestige or prejudice. She loved her church with nothing less than a consuming passion.

Out of this love grew a devotion to all the interests and enterprises of the kingdom of her Lord with which her church had to deal. Elon College had no truer friend, no heart more devoted, no soul more anxious for its safety, security and welfare than did this child on the institution, who, graduating from it in early girlhood, carried with her through all her years a love and a loyalty that could not be shaken. It is significant and characteristic that her last visit from home, only a few days before her untimely death, was to attend a meeting of her Alumni Association. As she left the meeting, the remark was made: "I felt too unwell to come, but I am glad I came, and feel better because of it."

She loved the spiritual activities of her church and at the time of her death was president of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference, the largest and most active of all our missionary conferences. She loved also the benevolent and relief activities of church and community, and her heart went out for all that made for human betterment. She loved much.

The funeral, which was held from the Franklin Christian Church was very largely attended, the floral designs being among the most beautiful witnessed in a life-time. Many ministers of her own and other denominations were present, more than could be accommodated on the platform, the following taking part in the brief, but impressive, funeral exercises: Dr. Stephenson, pastor of the Baptist Church of Franklin; Dr. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, former pastor of Franklin; Dr. N. G. Newman, Holland, Va., former pastor; Dr. L. E. Smith, president of Elon College; the writer, a teacher in Elon when deceased was a student, and Dr. J. Ellwood Jones, her present pastor, who presided and had in charge the exercises of the sad occasion.

The fond husband, Bro. Joe Bynum Gay, Sr., the devoted son, Joe Bynum, Jr., the aged father, Bro. A. Gardner, the only surviving sister, Mrs. Pierce of Danville, Va., and other close relatives have our sympathy and condolence, but in the hour of their separation and sorrow, they can truthfully say, "She loved much, and so has left to us the rich, imperishable legacy of a great and good life."

J. O. A.

THE WONDER OF MONEY.

One of its wonders is that it has wings. And these wings are parts of a fickle fancy which may waft it hither and yon, often without control of its temporary possessor. In the world of business and material things, it is a non-dependable object. Its possessor may have millions today and, in spite of himself, be a pauper tomorrow. The great, good God of heaven and earth made it so, in order that we might have a more dependable object to rely upon. That more dependable thing is character.

Then Gaius Glenn Atkins points out another and a more marvelous wonder of money:

"The wonder of money is that we may change it into life. It comes out of life—somebody's labor, and labor is life. The money you inherit is the life of the past minted into coin; the money you make is your own life—minted into coin.

It is the coldest, dearest thing in the world until you change it back into life again. It is trivial if we use it in little ways—wicked if we use it in wicked ways—holy if we use it in holy ways. There is nothing which offers us a more splendid opportunity to change money into service and inspiration than a church."

The church is the only institution organized on a spiritual basis and thus constitutes the only spiritual body on earth. The church is the body of Christ, of which he is also its head. And it is significant that the church is the only organized body that does mission work, that calls on its membership to deny themselves of things helpful to the physical body, that through this denial they may gain that which is helpful to the spiritual body—the soul. Through its missionary effort, the church is doing the spiritual task of proclaiming the gospel of the Son of God, of giving the bread of heaven to souls that are perishing. There is no other task like the missionary task, and there is no other body like the church, the task being spiritual, since it is the one task that only a spiritual body, the church, carries on.

J. O. A.

THE VISION SPLENDID.

Not long ago, an eminent educator said that the present trouble with our times is due largely to an over emphasis in the past on the physical and mental life and an under emphasis on the spiritual and ethical life. It has taken eons of time to bring the physical to some degree of perfection and the mind has been centered upon an attempt at scientific control. Meanwhile the spiritual side of life has been neglected. The logical conclusion of such a state of affairs is that when physical properties and achievements give way, and when the mental strain concerned over the collapse of the physical exceeds the power to control it, then life becomes depressed, barren, empty, unless there has been developed within the soul a deep spiritual reserve, which becomes a reservoir of hopefulness and comfort. This inner life is, in reality, a religious experience and is made exceedingly real to those who attend to its cultivation.

This is one of the reasons why the Christian Church emphasizes the Lenten season. It does emphasize the reality of religion, and ever keeps the mind and heart alive to the realization that the source of our inner wealth is in God. The tendency to forget God and the reality of the unalterable and eternal laws of all existence is checked by the lessons of Lent, and selfishness and egotism are much modified by contemplating the unselfish and ever bestowing Christ. We all need new vision, or improved vision, or some kind of enlightening revelation if we are ever to learn to live triumphantly.

It is customary yet in these United States to use the Christian's Bible upon the occasion of the inauguration of a president. It is a solemn moment when the chief citizen takes his oath of office. Sometimes the Bible is opened at a particular verse upon which the president places his thumb. On one occasion the president's thumb rested on verse 18 of Proverbs 29, where it reads: "Where there is no vision the people perish." The remainder of that verse is equally potent: "But he that keepeth the law, happy is he."

The first part of this verse contains one of the greatest truths in all the world. A nation without vision goes bankrupt. A man without vision loses his reckoning. He is without resources. It may be quite worth our while to meditate a while on "Vision."

As Christians we have something the rest of the world does not have. We have a Saviour who

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The words "depression" and "prohibition" are often used by writers and public speakers. Many interesting articles have been written upon these subjects. In many cases the suggestion has been made that the depression and prohibition should both be ended. It is significant that many leaders are locking somewhat to the church for help in their efforts to end the depression and inspire public confidence in business and mankind. The church has a message for a time like this. It is a message of faith. People have lost faith in themselves, in others, and in God.

A lack of faith made it necessary for the President of the United States to issue a proclamation closing the banks of this country. Many people withdrew their funds from the banks and crippled the credit in the great business centers. An abundance of money cannot overcome fear. Without faith it is impossible to please God, and without faith it is impossible to maintain the expansion of business and commerce. If the members of the churches of the United States would follow the teachings and example of Jesus Christ in their personal living and business relations, the depression would be unknown in our midst. When the church is neglected and the Word of God is unknown, idols take the place of God in worship and interest.

It is quite evident that Congress will make an honest effort to restore confidence in the financial stability of the banks and the government. The success of Congress will depend upon the faith and integrity of the people. The strong arm of law can be palsied and paralyzed, in the field of finance, unless it can increase faith in the people themselves. When character becomes stabilized, dependable and righteous, faith will be increased. When faith in God becomes universal and righteousness directs our national conscience, a "new deal" will be more than a political by-word. The nation will be exalted. Under the guidance of God business can be conducted without great booms and consequent depression.

Prohibition is another much discussed subject. Many people have very strongly declared that this is a question which should be left entirely for the State to settle. Judging from the newspaper editorials in many of the secular papers, an increasing effort is being made to silence the voice of the pulpit and church concerning prohibition. Ministers who have championed the cause have been ridiculed and persecuted. Some of the "wet" leaders have become advocates of temperance in their arguments for the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. What is temperance? What is the difference between prohibition and temperance? Has anyone discovered a standard of the moderate use of alcoholic liquors which is safe for every person to adopt? Have the liquor advocates made any definite contribution towards making people sober? How can it be possible for the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment and the return of the legalized manufacture and sale of alcoholic drinks to decrease the amount of liquor consumed each year?

These are questions which cannot be answered in one column of a church paper. And they are questions which have not been answered, in a favorable way, by all the literature yet written on the subject by those who want to end the period of prohibition. Sweeping statements do not answer these and similar questions. But there is cause for alarm if a majority of the people of this country are willing to favor the return of the legalized liquor traffic. The Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act are not perfect acts of legislation, and they are not the only solution of the liquor problem. If all the existing laws should be repealed is there any reasonable assurance that the legalized manufacture and sale of liquor will be conducive to the moral and spiritual uplift of our country? If prohibition is ended what will follow? I. W. JOHNSON.

RELIGIOUS LIFE OF COLLEGE CAMPUS.

Man is a three-fold being, physical, mental and spiritual. To make his maximum contribution to society, all three sides of his personality must be adequately and equally developed. If you develop his physical life, and only his physical life, you have a pugilist. If you develop his mental self, and only his mental self, you have a skeptic. If you develop his spiritual life, and only his spiritual life, you have a fanatic. But, if you develop all equally and adequately, you have a man made and developed in the image of God, who, in turn, becomes an invaluable asset to society. If ever in the history of the human race, well chosen and well developed leaders are needed, this day is that day.

The colleges of our country are the training stations for such leaders. It is the purpose of Elon College to develop the whole life. Our curriculum is purposely designed to that end. Being a church institution, we are at liberty to arrange our curriculum and plan our work to the end that the emphasis be placed upon physical training, mental development and spiritual culture, without deference or neglect to any part of the student's training.

In a conference recently, with a prominent educator and minister of the Gospel, the question of student training became the topic of the discussion. I remarked that we were training our students in matters of religion in a safe and sane way. The educator replied: "And so are other institutions." I said that we were striving for results in this department of our training, equally, as we were striving for results in other departments. The educator replied: "But you are not changing men's lives at Elon College." I replied, "That is exactly what we are doing." He said: "You do not strive for the conversion of young people on the campus." I replied, "That is what we are doing." He said, "Your institution should live and her influence should go out to every section of our country."

We are planning now for a Religious Emphasis Week. The Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church, has been invited to lead us in this religious effort. He will arrive at the College Monday evening, March 13th. There will be two services each day—10 A. M. and 7:30 P. M. The purpose of these meetings is for the deepening of the religious life on the campus, the enrichment of the religious experiences of these of us who are Christians, and for the consecrated purpose of bringing those of the student body and of the community, who are not Christians, to a definite acceptance of Christ, and into a richer and more blessed experience with God through Christ.

As you read this article, this series of meetings will be in progress at the College. Will you not make this effort a matter of prayer to the end that it may accomplish this purpose and that the blessing of God may be upon our institution and our church?

L. E. SMITH.

"THE PEOPLE HAVE NO MONEY."

How often we hear this statement in these troublesome financial times!

The statement has an incorrect aspect as well as a correct one. We have more money per capita now than we had in 1929. The correctness or incorrectness of the statement depends upon what is meant by "the people." A fewer number of people have money today, and if this is what we mean by the statement, it is true—otherwise the fact remains that the statements of the national treasury show that the money in the hands of the people amounts to nearly $5.00 more for each person than was in circulation in 1929.

In the final analysis it is not cash on which we are short, but credit. Relatively few people actually possess cash or real money at any time. It is credit they have and use, and when credit shrinks, or is curtailed, they say they have no money. The correct statement would be to say they have no credit, or that channels of credit have been closed to them.

A man owes a thousand dollars. He does not have the cash with which to pay this debt. He has collateral, security, or personal credit, and borrows the thousand dollars from his bank. He draws a check against the deposited credit and pays his debt. The man who receives the check deposits it and against that deposited credit pays many bills, and in this way credit expands, or credit is put into circulation.

Credit is based on confidence—confidence in your collateral, security, or personal credit. Inflated values have lessened the worth of collateral and security. Personal credit is based on a man's record of paying his obligations, plus his property worth to pay. If his credit opportunities are curtailed, and if the value of his property worth has diminished, he becomes a risk regardless of his record or his good intentions.

Our chief financial problem is not to restore circulation of money, but confidence in credit, and thus put credit into circulation. Credit is essential, a market commodity, and those who advocate the elimination of all credit have not measured the consequences. You cannot do away with credit because a few abuse it, any more than you can do away with other essentials merely because the few choose to abuse their presence and value.

TIMOTHY THOMAS.

WORLD PEACE.

We are a peace-loving people. So are the masses of every civilized country. Even from the birth of our nation, our desire and aim have been to create world peace. These objectives, however, have not been reached—far from it.

Although we are not totally responsible for the lack of world peace, we do not consider that we have done our part in creating this peace between nations. If we can establish a friendlier spirit on the part of our masses, who for years have been contributing their means to support foreign missions, we can extend our work in the mission field, and as a result create a greater understanding of peace. We must achieve world peace by laborious and sustained effort, along well thought-out lines. The time to stop the next war is now.

Why do we desire world peace? Surely it is not for temporal gain but for eternal gain. In this day of foreign relationships, we cannot say that we are independent of other nations, for we are all neighbors. Even in our own country we come in contact with people of other races every day. This interracial problem is one that is facing all people more strongly than ever before. Peace conferences are being held, peace pacts have been signed, and other measures have been attempted; but the real solution of the problem of world peace lies in the youth of today. We see things differently and have a broader view of the other countries than our forefathers had. We see that the primary conflict in the world today is not white against color, not East against West, but right against wrong, or Christ against anti-Christ. There are several ways, however, by which we might establish world peace.

Abolish battleships! Since they are expensive, their destruction would be economy, as well as a preventive of war. When battleships are done away with, a great expense will be cut down, and still the safety of the five great naval powers—United States, Great Britain, Japan, France and Italy—will be maintained.

We should teach among the young people a love for other nations and destroy any hatred that might develop in their hearts. Talk peace in the schools, teach it, stress its importance, and instill a desire for it in the minds of the youth. We are told that France and Germany are stressing, very emphatically, in the schools, the importance of peace. If these two countries had started this teaching about ten years prior to 1914, there would have been no World War. The teachers in geography and history, particularly, can promote or prevent world peace.

In an address relative to world peace, one of the great statesmen said: "There is only one answer to peace. That is the settlement of actual differences and removal of ill will. All else is talk, form and pretense." He also said: "Between friends any difficulty can be settled. There is no substitute for good will. There is no mechanism of intercourse that can dispense with it."

It is time we were waking up to the real facts about misions and international relations, and stay awake until our missionaries are supported by Christian people. And may we carry on until the voices of the youth of all nations forms one chorus that shall echo and re-echo this joyful amen: "All for Christ and Christ for all."

J EVERETTE NEESE.

Elon College, N. C.

GIVING GOD ALL.

The evangelist was leading the congregation in the singing of choruses and the pianist was playing the music from memory. As she glanced toward the window nearby, she saw the reflection of her hands against the darkness outside. Somehow those hands did not seem to be a part of herself and her thoughts went back to her girlhood days when she had such an intense longing to learn how to play like the organists in the religious services which she attended.

Her organ came much later, as a gift, but there was no money for lessons. A certain amount of music was taught in the city schools and some one gave her a very little keyboard instruction, so that with much labor and a method of her own, for she had not the faculty to "play by ear," she picked out some simple tunes. But it was so slow and discouraging, and one day as she sat at her organ, she put her head down on the keyboard and prayed: "Lord, if you will only help me to learn how to play, I will never play anything but sacred music." She knew nothing about consecration, and she did not know that when she prayed her hands were given to the Lord.

Phillips Brooks said: "The ideal life is in our blood and never will be still. We feel the thing we ought to be beating beneath the thing we are." The ideal life ever reaches toward God and in her heart was that which answered to the divine. The years passed, filled with laborious practicing as leisure time was given. Even when the body weakened the practice continued. Then when the dire circumstances came which took from her home, loved ones, and her precious organ, and she was cast upon the mercy of the world, the love of God was so wonderful as he opened the way so she could practice in a house dedicated to his worship. God had been speaking to her soul through the years and she had answered the call and had given her soul into his keeping. Her hands had been given, and later her voice, but God wanted not alone hand service and lip service, but the consecrated service of the heart and the surrendered will.

Not many years later the call came for her to use this talent, but she said: "I can't play in public." Too often, "I can't" means "I won't." "I am too independent to rely on God." It was not so with her, for she knew she was relying on God, and she knew that she must answer the call to service. Though we may think that we cannot do, yet if we will answer God's call to service, he will show us what we can do if we will let him. He never asks us to anything that we cannot do, for if we are obedient to his call he will work through us, however unworthy, or unqualified, we may feel.

The little lad gave his lunch, and because Jesus blessed and broke it, it fed five thousand people. "When God enables I am impotently strong all the time." One little talent, yet it must be faithfully used and not buried. The time came in this life of which we write when God showed to her the place which he would give her to fill. It was not a high place, it was not an especially definite place, yet it was the place where he wanted her to be. It meant to be ready at any time to fill any place where a pianist was needed, when more skilled players were not available, to be willing to serve or to wait his bidding. She fills that place now, though many years have passed over her head. She gives God all the praise for his gracious work in and through her, and her only desire is to be faithful to the trust that he has given her.

"I am the Lord's! Yet teach me all it meaneth,
All it involves of love and loyalty.
Of holy service, absolute surrender,
And unreserved obedience unto thee.
They nearest draw to joy's sublime perfection
Who seek it in the depths of full subjection."

THE COMMISSION OF THE CHURCH.

"Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," is just as important and potent today as it was when Jesus gave this command to his disciples. It is just as essential, just as compulsory to obey that command today as it was when Paul started on his campaigns among Gentile peoples, or when William Carey, Robert Moffatt, Adoniram Judson, David Livingstone, Robert Morrison, J. Hudson Taylor, and a host of others went forth in obedience to the call of the Spirit and the command of Christ to give the Gospel message to the pagan and heathen world.

Christian missions is the one supreme task of the church of Jesus Christ. To withhold the greatest gift made to all mankind from any part of the human race by our own neglect or selfishness, offers great hindrance to the work of the Lord in his effort to build his church.—Wesleyan Methodist.

LETTER FROM JAPAN.

Dear J. O.:

You have heard the Lincoln story of how, in a certain lawsuit the opposing lawyer made a long two-hours' speech. When Lincoln got up to reply, he said he did not know what the brother said, or whether he said anything. He was reminded of a steamboat on the Mississippi which had a four-foot boiler and a six-foot whistle. The boiler could not generate enough steam to run the engine and the whistle at the same time.

So when the whistle blew the engine had to stop. In the same way, when the tongue of the opposing lawyer began to wag, his brain ceased to act.

Mrs. Pearl S. Buck (Christian Century, November 23rd) attempts to settle all mission problems ex cathedra. She says some good things, but listen to this: "I am weary unto the death of this incessant preaching." Surely, her trolley was off when she said that. Not infrequently I come across people who are wiser than God. Her idea of the ideal missionary would be one who simply lives a good life among the people, but a man who does no preaching. But his labors should be along scientific and technical lines. If I were to pass judgment on the lady's dictum, I should say that with her method she would not establish a church in a hundred years. Evidently there are a good many of Sister Buck's opinion, and that is the reason why they don't go to church.

A few days ago I heard a lady say: "Well, I think the Apostle Paul is behind the times." She doubtless referred to such things as greeting the brethren with a holy kiss and his forbidding women to speak in public. In those days it was as common for men to kiss one another as it is for us to shake hands. Considering the condition of women in those days, the advice concerning women was dictated by common sense. Oberlin College had reached its 50th anniversary when I was graduated. But at the beginning of that noble institution, while women could study on an equality with the men, it was not considered proper for them to read their graduating essays from the public rostrum, but one of the professors kindly did it for them! If it has taken two thousand years to reach the present condition of honor for our good women, probably Paul's advice to women who had no education and no books, was as much for their benefit as it was for the church. Probably no man ever lived except the Lord, who has done so much for the emancipation and uplift of women as Paul, and when it comes to the beauties and graces of character which he teaches, most of us are still shamefully behind him.

The Laymen's Report on Missions seems to have the idea that in the missionary army all the soldiers should be major generals. A few days ago, one of our missionaries named over to me a half dozen men who had come to Japan as experts. When men come to Japan to show off, they show they belong to that class of whom Kipling writes:

"It is not good for the Christian's health
To try to hustle the iron brown.
For the Christian riles and the iron smiles
And weareth the Christian down.
And the end thereof is a tombstone white
With the name of the late deceased,
And the epitaph drear, 'A fool lies here
Who tried to hustle the East'."

Now, all the high powered above mentioned left Japan after a very short service. At the time of the war there were altruists who went from England to the front. But when it came to dealing with wounds and dirt and bugs and the hardships of the soldiers, they all found excuses to go back where they came from. The Japanese tell me that it is not the high powered men that they want. They do want the earnest, capable spiritually minded men, men who are willing to work and, if need be, to suffer for the kingdom of God.

The Christian Century of November 30th quotes William P. Merrill as saying: "Stated crudely, our purpose is to inform the people in order that they may liberate the boards, that the boards may liberate the missionaries, so that the missionaries in turn, may liberate the nationals and thus set free the Spirit of God in the churches of God." I have asked dozens of people what it means, and nobody knows. Pure meaning, less verbiage! Do the members of the committee think we are such fools as to be impressed with verbiage? I think I read somewhere in the Word that "Where the Spirit of God is there is liberty." And anyone going into some of our spiritual meetings would feel that the Spirit of God is already at work.

In conclusion, may I say that to my mind the need of Japan is that of spiritually minded men and women who live the Gospel—men and women who show their love by everything they do and say. To my mind, the committee has made about as many mistakes about our business as we would have made if we should attempt to tell them how to run theirs. The missionaries may be ordinary men, and we admit we are, but the work which has been built up in Japan is monumental and a glory to those whose prayers and gifts have made it possible. Your brother,

A. D. WOODWORTH.

A NEW LEADERSHIP AROUSES FIGHTING SPIRIT.

By HARRY EARL WOOLEVER.

Coincident with the coming in of a new administration in Washington, there were gathering in the Federal Capital representatives from nearly every State and every Christian group in America for the purpose of combating the most menacing of all organized national enemies, the beverage liquor traffic and its allies. The Prohibition Emergency Conference, called by representatives of thirty-seven religious denominations, met on March 7th and 8th at the seat of national government to confer as to how best to defend and maintain in the Constitution the Eighteenth Amendment. This consultation of dry forces had much the spirit of the meetings of three generations ago, when similar gatherings of citizens convened to promote the interest of human liberty, except that in this recent case there was no East nor West, North nor South, no exclusion of any section or of any religious group of temperance organization. All were here seeking means to defend the national life against the return of the legalized liquor traffic.

The spirit of the conference was voiced at the outset in the challenging address delivered by Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, who was elected as chairman of the gathering. Bishop Hughes issued a ringing call for a united front. In the following sentences from the address of this dynamic leader for national righteousness and social progress, is caught the spirit which dominated the two days of discussion in committee and in conference:

"I need not stress heavily the fact that the period is a critical one for our endeavor. . . . Now we are not only on the defensive, but we are on the quick defensive. If there are times when 'haste is waste,' this is a time when slowness is suicide. Our plans are not to be made for a distant Armageddon with a shadowy Commander, but for the immediate Waterloo with a living Wellington. While we are not to be indifferent to the necessity of a long-run program of education, we are not in the meantime to give to our opponents all the advantages that come from the disastrously educational power of an evil law. Legislation itself may become the patron of thousands of deadly schools known as saloons that cannot possibly run unless our homes send them scholars to be trained in intemperance and iniquity. . . .

"We are here to serve notice on our country that, while our primary emphasis is upon one phase of our national life, we still believe that our reform is closely related to the total moral problem of our people. There are not wanting evidences that the acid that would dissolve the Eighteenth Amendment is of a kind that would destroy our Sabbath with noisy sports; enthrone commercialism as the king of our legislation. . . .

"The final and high purpose of our meeting is that once more we may commend our cause to God and may seek his benediction and wisdom and strength for our plans and endeavors. Our enemies in the Wet Camp have probably filled all of their offices save one—that of Chaplain! Not even the most wobbling and compromising of our preachers would care to invoke God's blessing upon the proposed return of beer; . . . or suggest that the fumes of malting and distilling were other forms of incense! . . .

"We ourselves are so sure of our moral and political stand that we cannot favor even a compromise of temporary halting in order that there may be later progress. Some good, but, we think, mistaken men, have said that if we let the wets do their worst and most terrible part, the reaction toward our cause will be speedy and decisive. . . .

A strategic retreat is a difficult thing when you are traveling on a moral road. In this case we may be perplexed about conditions, but we are not confused about our direction. We decline to compromise by inaction. We refuse to give a free path to troops that they may have a chance for passing pillage. Or, to change the figure of speech, we cannot consent to submit to ad interim ravages of typhoid, smallpox, or the Black Death, in order that the people may directly be more impressed by the horror of the diseases. Our spiritual convictions shut us up to unceasing opposition. . . .

"Here in the House of God and in the name of God we again lift up our banners. We have the vision of our millions of comrades in beleaguered cities and in remote townships—literally millions of them. . . . We are ready to go to the last little election booth with our cause, if we be given the rights accorded to citizens in the making of even minor laws. We shall fight for fairly organized Conventions; and then for conscientious expression. . . .

"Declining to march in any procession that includes the Brewers' Wagon with the Big Horses, or the more destructive automobile truck, we reaffirm our purpose to follow the Chariot of Christ in which the King of all good life rides forward to his conquest of our dear land and of a world recreated unto sobriety by his idealism and his grace."

A Church in Action.

It is readily seen that a conference of some eight hundred Christian delegates, moved by this stirring message, was the church in rededication to the struggle to save the nation against the forces of greed and crime. After two days of conference, in which individual citizens of all creeds and sections were given opportunity to participate in making up the program for a new stand in defense of national prohibition, significant declarations were adopted. After the gathering had considered all the experiences through which America has passed in seeking to check the ravages of the liquor traffic, and after having listened to the best authority in Canada on the utter failure of the effort in the Dominion to regulate the liquor traffic through government control, the absolute economic, social and moral necessity for maintaining prohibition in the United States stood out before those in attendance.

Therefore, the conference unanimously sends forth this call: "That all prohibition and temperance organizations, and all other organizations supporting the Eighteenth Amendment and all persons opposed to the liquor traffic, unite in a nation-wide campaign under the leadership and direction of the committees to be appointed according to the plan adopted by this conference for the purpose of preventing the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment."

The agreement and call means that all the major recognized prohibition forces which have been in the field in the past, doing valiant service, shall unite under one directing leadership, with a united front. There is provided a National Prohibition Emergency Committee composed of members from every State in the nation. There is also a Constitution Committee which is to form policies and decide upon general outlines and provide for future conferences. This will have a membership of prominent dry citizens and representatives from recognized outstanding prohibition and temperance organizations and boards. The executive and administrative work of carrying out the emergency campaign is placed upon a Committee of Nine. This is composed of those who hold no official position in any of the prohibition organizations. It is largely a group of laymen of executive ability and experience, who will direct the raising of emergency campaign funds and the new campaign for meeting the present threat upon national prohibition.

A New Line-Up.

The Prohibition Emergency Conference resulted in giving a fresh leadership under experienced counsel for the critical issues now before the temperance people of America. More than this—it achieved what promises to bring together all the recognized and most worthy of the dry agencies authorized and promoted by the churches and to unite these behind one specific and organized front.

One of the finest experiences of the conference centered in the attitude of the leaders in the established agencies, which have rightly earned the gratitude of the nation, when these veterans of the fight for the dry cause volunteered to merge their strength and plans with the program growing out of the deliberations on this occasion. This paves the way not only for new leadership, but also for the combined force of a unity not before enjoyed, without losing the strength and valuable experience and contributions of these older agencies.

About Political Conventions.

One of the questions receiving most attention had to do with constitutional conventions as a means of changing the Constitution. The attempt of the wets to repeal the Eighteenth Amendment by conventions was discussed, with the following conclusions:

It is not necessary for a State to call or go to the expense of a convention. If no convention is called the attitude of the State upon the Eighteenth Amendment remains as when its legislature passed upon this amendment.

"In States where conventions may be held the election of delegates should be by established districts, either by the same districts by which delegates to a convention to amend the State constitution are elected, or by the districts by which the members of General Assemblies in the various States, or one branch thereof, are elected. This is the historical method of representation. The election of delegates by districts in which the candidates are known to the electorate tends to insure a larger vote and a more accurate expression of the sentiment of constituencies. We are, therefore, opposed to legislation which seeks, either through the gerrymandering of districts or by the election of delegates-at-large, to give undue advantage to great centers of population. We respectfully call attention to the platform of the dominant political party, which pledged 'purely representative conventions in the States called to act solely on that proposal!'"

The responsibility now before those who would maintain the Eighteenth Amendment is manifold. There must be prayer; generous cooperation in labor and in financial support for the emergency fund; a demand that fair, democratic elections be held where State conventions are called; and the continued effort to make known the truth about prohibition. Citizens should realize that a new Congress is in session and that they should write to their representatives in House and Senate to make known their convictions upon the liquor traffic. In the citizenship challenge of this new hour, we can not do better than catch the spirit of the closing words of the official statement of the conference:

"We summon the friends of prohibition to renewed faith and courage in this critical hour. We call upon the friends of the prohibition cause in America, both in and outside of our churches, to organize by precincts, counties, and States for the purpose of electing delegates against repeal and to face this mighty issue in the faith that the complete destruction of the liquor traffic is the will of God for our country and for humanity."

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA YOUTH FELLOWSHIP.

The leaders of our Fellowship have dedicated themselves to the task of "making Christ real in the life of today." With confidence and cooperation in our fellow young people in the local churches, we have been successful in our plans so far. Recently, we made definite plans for our "First Week-End Conference of Youth Leaders of Congregational and Christian Churches in Western North Carolina."

"The purpose of our week-end conference may be expressed in words like fellowship through worship, talking things over, sharing in meaningful and significant tasks; inspiration which comes through fellowship with other young people, adult leaders and the heavenly Father; understanding of what it means to be a leader, of the program in the denomination, of what a young people's program in the local church and the association may include; dedication of strength, mind, ability, and all of life to the unfinished tasks of Christianity."

Our program will be held in Ramseur Christian Church, Ramseur, N. C., Saturday afternoon and evening, April 1st. We are very sorry to say that, due to a recent epidemic of "flu" and a cut in wages and number of days for work in the mills in Ramseur, the good ladies of the Christian Church have requested that we limit our program to one afternoon and evening to make the cost of entertainment as light as possible. They have agreed to give us a "picnic dinner" at six o'clock in the evening. It will be splendid, for this writer knows the type of food those good ladies serve. Come and share the food, fellowship, inspiration and work with us.

Only the Sunday morning section of the original program will be eliminated. In the mind of this writer, the newly arranged program will be more interesting and snappy, and give us an opportunity to return home for church services Sunday. Remember the time is 1:30 o'clock at the Ramseur Christian Church, Saturday afternoon, April 1st.

LITTLE KINDNESSES.

You gave on the way a pleasant smile,
 And thought no more about it;
 It cheered a life that was sad the while,
 That might have been wrecked without it.
 And so for the smile and fruitage fair,
 You'll reap a crown sometime—somewhere.

You spoke one day a cheering word,
 And passed to other duties;
 It warmed a heart, new promises stirred;
 And painted a life with beauties.
 And so for the word and its silent prayer
 You'll reap a palm sometime—somewhere.

You lent a hand to a fallen one,
 A life in kindness given,
 It saved a soul when help was none,
 And won a heart for heaven.
 And so for the help you've proffered there
 You'll reap joy sometime—somewhere.

 Tuesday—"Worry in Wealth." Eccles. 5:10.
 Wednesday—"Worry in the Home." Luke 10:40-42.
 Thursday—"Worry Cured by Prayer." Phil. 4:6.

PROGRAM.

"Is It Practical to Live Without Worry?"

Instrumental prelude—Music to "Dear Lord and Father of Mankind."

Call to worship—"O, give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, for his loving kindness endureth forever."

Hymn—"God Will Take Care of You."

Scripture reading—Matt. 6:24-34.

Prayer—Father of all mankind, we know tonight that thy loving care is sufficient for every soul that trusts in thee. Yet, our Father, millions of us spend our lives in worry and destroying anxiety. May we come to know that in this time of the world's woe the Father God will strive with his children in the task of rebuilding the world. May we, in this hour, have a new vision of our part in all thy work. May we be so conscious of thy nearness and leadership that worry and anxiety shall not harass our souls. Give us untroubled spirits, alert minds and courageous souls to follow thy leadership.—Amen.

Hymn—"O, Love that Will Not Let Me Go."

Special music.

Introductory talk.

Development of the topic—The following is a suggested outline:

1. How prevalent is worry?
2. What are the effects of worry?
3. What light do the life and teachings of Jesus throw on the topic?

Hymn—"He Leadeth Me."

Benediction—May we go from this fellowship with a new courage to face our tasks heroically and with a greater desire to walk more intimately with the Master.—Amen.

In preparing this topic:

1. Consult a reliable physician and secure his estimate of the prevalence of worry and its effect upon our health.

2. Consult a prominent minister, and secure his opinion on the prevalence and effect of worry. Also discover if he has actual cases to show the difference between church members and others in the matter of worry.

3. Make a study of individuals whose heavy loads would naturally lead to worry, but who are able to throw worry off.

4. Have one or more study the four Gospels with the purpose of discovery. Discover the elements in the life and teachings of Jesus which prevent or eliminate worry.

You have probably heard people upon being asked about their welfare jokingly reply, "I am complaining of feeling better." There is a class of persons who, if they had nothing to worry about, will worry because they have nothing to worry about. Many depend upon worry for their main diversions. The world never knows of the burdens of many, but worry in such cases does its deadly work, making lives dark and dissipating human energy.

The task for this meeting would seem to be that of discovering the extent and effect of worry and then to find what are the main resources of the Christian religion for its cure and prevention.

It is difficult to determine the extent of worry without understanding of what we mean by the term. In this topic the term is thought of as undue solicitude. It is the over-plus element of anxiety or concern which can never contribute anything to the solution of life's problems, but which, on the other hand, hinders by sapping vitality and destroying stability.

One of the best resources for the cure and prevention of worry is faith. There is no place for worry in a life with faith. The cup of sorrow was drunk many times by the Master, but a large element of joy was present in all his own living. The examples of his life lived above the plane of worry provides a substantial resource for our own defeat of worry. We can trust ourselves to him with the feeling that the Father will multiply our own feeble efforts when we have done our best. Such a conception of God should enable us to rise above worry. E. R.

MORE AND BETTER WILLS.

By HERBERT D. RUGG.

With the Scriptural injunction in mind, "lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven where moth nor rust doth corrupt and where thieves do not break through nor steal," a conference on "More and Better Wills" will be held in Brooklyn, N. Y. (St. George Hotel), March 21st and 22nd, under the auspices of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.

William T. Boulton, treasurer of the General Council and national boards of the Congregational and Christian Churches, has ascertained that 1,747 bequests have been received by local churches or parishes of the united denomination during the last five years, an average of 349 a year. The total amount of the bequests was $5,-$41,226, or a yearly average of $1,008,245. The average for each bequest was $2,889.00.

Besides bequests to local churches, there was made available for missionary work abroad and in this country from other bequests during the five years a total of $3,586,633.00. Complete figures of bequests for educational purposes to the Congregational and Christian colleges have not

JESUS: OUR EXAMPLE IN SERVICE.

(REVIEW.)

GOLDEN TEXT: "Jesus of Nazareth . . . went about doing good."—Acts 10:38.

LESSON TEXT: (For reading) Isa. 42:1-7.

When Simon Peter wanted to sum up the life of Jesus in a few word, he said: "Jesus of Nazareth, who went about doing good." He saw in the life and ministry of Jesus the fulfillment of the prophecy of Iaisah that The One Who Should Come would come as a servant.

The lessons for the past quarter have been taken from Mark's Gospel and have dealt with the life and work of Jesus. In this review lesson we will simply select a few central truths from each lesson as a means of refreshing our minds on the main points of Jesus' work as presented in Mark's story.

- Lesson I. John Prepares the Way for Jesus:
a. Jesus is the Messiah, the One who should come, God's anointed, the Christ, the fulfillment of all prophecy and promise.
b. As one enters upon his work he should have God's blessing and a sense of God's approval.

- Lesson II. Jesus Begins His Work:
a. Power involves responsibility and is safe only as character assures its unselfish use.
b. Jesus depends upon men to carry out his program.

- Lesson III. Jesus at Work:
a. Work has divine sanction.
b. Prayer inspires to work, and work demands prayer.

- Lesson IV. Jesus Forgives Sin:
a. Health of soul or spirit is more important than health of body.
b. Jesus Christ can and does forgive sin.

- Lesson V. Jesus and the Sabbath:
a. Jesus is Lord of all the higher values of life represented by the Sabbath.
b. The Sabbath was made for man, to minister to the things that will make man like unto him who is its Lord.

- Lesson VI. Jesus Chooses the Twelve:
a. Jesus depends upon men to carry on his program.
b. In the work of the kingdom there is a place for all.

- Lesson VII. Jesus Teaching by Parables (1):
a. A man should give heed to how he hears.
b. Heeding, not hearing, is the secret of bringing forth fruit.
c. There are not only four kinds of hearers; we are one kind or another at different times and under different circumstances.

- Lesson VIII. Jesus Teaching by Parables (2):
a. The kingdom grows from within, out.
b. The kingdom grows from small beginnings to large outcomes.
Lesson IX. Jesus Shows His Power:
a. Jesus has power over natural forces. Spiritual power is superior to natural power.
b. Jesus has power over evil spirits.
Lesson X. Jesus Giving Life and Health:
a. Jesus is Master of death.
b. Religion has distinctive health values.
Lesson XI. Jesus Ministering to the Multitude:
a. Religion cannot be unmindful of the physical needs of men.
b. Religion that simply provides for the physical needs of men is inadequate.
Lesson XII. The Effects of Alcoholic Drinks:
a. Alcohol involves personal woes, national decadence, and spiritual tragedy.

MORE AND BETTER WILLS.

been compiled but it is believed they exceed the combined total of all bequests for local churches and for missions.

Bequests, Mr. Boulton observes, have to a large extent taken the place of theologically worded confessions of faith in wills. Among historic examples of such confessions is the preamble to Shakespeare's will:

"First, I commend my soul into the hands of God my Creator, hoping and assuredly believing, through the merits of Jesus Christ my Saviour, to be made partaker in the life everlasting."

Dr. Samuel Johnson, famous figure in English literature, wrote in his will:

"I bequeath to God a soul polluted by many sins, but I hope purified by Jesus Christ."

A Bequest is a Modern Confession of Faith.

The modern custom in accordance with a social interpretation of the Gospel, is to express one's faith through a specific bequest to a religious, educational, social or charitable cause. A business man who recently sent notice that he had put a bequest in his will, phrased this point of view:

"I am not much interested in castiron creeds, but am interested in seeing the Spirit of Jesus revealed to men, and I believe that men who 'would see Jesus' will continue going to 'meeting-houses' to find him, and that is why I am making a humble bequest to the church building society."

Gifts while living, however, were said to be better than a legacy by the late Clarence H. Kelsey, a founder of the Title Guarantee and Trust Company of New York, and chairman of the board of directors at his death. He left the American Missionary Association and the Congregational Home Missionary Society each $2,000 with this comment in his will:

"I have always felt it was better to give regularly and generously from income rather than from accumulated principals with the expectation of making large gifts at the end. I believe that money set to work immediately is better used than if accumulated with the intention of doing great things with it afterwards. These plans are often forgotten or fail to be carried out. The money never catches up with time, and good done with a little money now may be far greater than that done with a great deal more later and is more sure to be done."

MID-YEAR CONFERENCE TO MEET.

The Mid-Year Session of the Virginia Valley Central Congregational-Christian Conference will be held with our Mayland Church, on March 24th. There will be a morning and an afternoon session, the morning session opening at 10 o'clock.

MONDAY.

LIFE SELECTIVE.

"Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein."—Jer. 6:16.

Felix's vain and vague hope of finding time to be a Christian later on is a picture of folks who spend a vast amount of time lavishly, and make no selective choice in what they do with it.

Life makes innumerable demands upon us, and everyone is limited to his human possibilities. It is like going into a department store; there is much there he desires, but there is only a limited amount of money with which to buy, therefore, he must select of what he needs within the limits of his purchasing power.

Morally and religiously speaking, unless life is planned and directed on a painful and inflexible consecration, it is like a shopping expedition where one spends all his money at the first counter.

There are superior choices in principles of living. There are ways that lead to enrichment of soul and heaven. There are ways that lead to nowhere and accomplish nothing. Which way shall we take? Our text will help us. Daily instruction in the Bible will show us. God's Holy Spirit will empower us.

Prayer—Our Father, without thee we have no ability to live right. We love thee. Oh, come and bless our souls with constant heavenly wisdom.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

"A good man shall be satisfied from himself."
Prov. 14:14.

"My people shall be satisfied with my goodness, saith the Lord."—Jer. 31:14.

Christopher Morley is accredited with the following: "All time is wasted that does not give us some awareness of beauty or wonder." Masefield's lines tell us that "the days that make us happy make us wise."

Let us say that we will spend a day which, on the whole, is called happy—a day in which we believe we are touching realities of truth, peace and beauty, and in which we feel satisfaction. We begin, only to find that life offers everything from uncongenial work and vexations, sorrows and suffering, truth and talking nonsense, to triumphant experiences of success. The undesirable makes us feel ill and out of harmony. But here is where the blue begins, faith begins, and life is challenged to the things that satisfy.

Read our text again, take heart, ask God for divine spirit and strength to withstand the blue and follow the good. Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

STRIDENT IMMEDIACY.

"I will walk before the Lord in the land of the living."

"I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord."—Psa. 116:9, 13.

Every day has its moods. So many things must be done right away. Maybe we are sick and ill-tempered, or perhaps we have overcharged our stomach and the liver is bad. Our problems are subjective as well as objective, and how we meet life depends upon how we recognize this and set ourselves to overcome. The two must meet and the right and the good must be effected.

*"Take the name of Jesus with you,
Child of sorrow and of woe,
He will strength and comfort give you,
Take it then where'er you go."*

Life has no choices for the vagrant and haphazard liver; but to the God-fearing soul, planned for the choices which are so abundantly furnished us in the maze of demands upon us, life's every hour is enriching.

Prayer—Our Father who art in heaven. Because of thy love, thy care and thy promises for us, we love thee. Baptize our souls with thy spirit that neither our moods nor the moods of the day may detour us from the straight and narrow way to all good, God and glory.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

TRY IT.

"Because I doubted . . . I asked him whether he would go to Jerusalem, and there be judged."
Acts 25:20.

These are the words of a judge on the bench, with Paul at the bar to show why he should not be killed for preaching concerning one Jesus who was dead, but whom he affirmed was alive.

While the question at issue is a legal one, nevertheless it represents one who is at a loss about the method of inquiry as to how to investigate Jesus; and it represents also the type of inquiry into Jesus which we ourselves often make.

There is only one method of inquiry. Paul told Festus about it but he didn't hear it. That inquiry—the one and only inquiry—is experience. Sam Jones is quoted as putting it this way: "Get on the platform." He told the story of the method of watering steers out in Texas. It is an automatic watering trough. It is necessary for the steers to stand on the platform. This presses a valve and the water flows. That is experience. He said: "Some old steer comes up on the off side and finding no water goes away still thirsty and perhaps angry that he could not find water."

The only real satisfying method of investigating Jesus, is try him.

Prayer—O Lord, our Father, give us the living spirit for today. Give us the living waters of thy life, and flow thou in us and in all our doings. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

CHANGED SCENERY.

"My people have changed their glory for that which doth not profit."—Read Jeremiah 2:9-13.

A motorist noticed at night a peculiar formation among some rocks near Boston. In the glare of his headlights a white section of stone presented a startling resemblance to a woman holding a child in her arms. The attention of other travelers was directed to the phenomenon, and speedily there was a serious traffic jam every night at the place. Finally, police decided to destroy the public interest by destroying the beautiful picture.

Over and over the same thing has been attempted with the form of Jesus Christ as presented in the Gospels. The sledge hammers of hostile criticism and of angry infidelity have been at work upon it. But it is the Rock of Ages, and the harder they work, the more clearly and convincingly the picture stands out.

Have no fear for the Gospels. Have no fear for Jesus Christ. The Word will take care of itself. Fear rather for yourself, lest, falling upon this Rock, you yourself be broken. For it is unchanged and unchangeable.

Prayer—We look to thee, O Jesus, and our eyes are enlightened. We gaze upon thy graciousness, and are comforted. We are not anxious for thy safety, but preserve us from the sledge hammer of doubt.—Amen. AMOS R. WELLS.

SATURDAY.

VITAL RELIGION.

(Please read Romans 2:13-23.)

What a sense of vital religion is this! Dr. Moffatt put it as "approving the things that are more excellent." The chief glory of life is sincerity—living what we profess. This is one of the highest endowments of the mind and personality. It carries an instinct for the essential. It discerns between the outward, the incidental, and the living heart. Indeed the most of our failures come from a tragic absence of just this sense of the vital. Read the lesson again carefully.

Prayer—Dear Father, bestow upon us this gift of thy spirit. Furnish us with all reason to be true. Give unto us a keen sense of the vital, and fit us for every problem and every battle of life. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

REASON: MELANCHOLY.

"Our heart shall rejoice in him."—Read Psa. 33:16-22.

One of the leading business men in New York City took his own life the other day, and the official record of the suicide was: "Reason: melancholy." He was a very wealthy man and was happily married, but he had so organized his large business that he really had nothing to do; and he had no outside interest.

Christ, Christ's church, unselfish Christian work, would have been the making of that man. The days would not have been long enough to do all that urgently needs to be done to help mankind. And he would have found in his endeavors an exhilaration that would have made life a growing delight.

"Our heart," the psalmist sung, "shall rejoice in him." In reality, hearts rejoice in nothing else. What we need is to lose ourselves in love—love for God and love for man.

Prayer—Save us from melancholy, dear Lord, by saving us from selfishness. May we be exalted into the heaven of helpfulness.—Amen.

EDITORIAL.

has paid a great price for our salvation. It was not a sum of money paid to a Prince of Darkness, nor a human sacrifice to win the approbation of a displeased God, but it was a gift of love, the greatest and best that could be given by anyone.

It was an unselfish, completely devoted giving of life for every living soul. A spiritual acceptance of this immeasurable gift has redeeming quality for it saves one from his worst self to his best self, saves him from the evil to the good, and inspires him with hope for his future. No longer is he an aimless, roaming orphan in a fatherless chaos, but a conscious part of a plan of redemption calculated to save the whole world.

Our way through the Lenten season takes us over the Via Dolorosa a part of which is necessarily sad, but there are streaks of light along the way, and periods of rest and joy and at the end an Easter Day. E. A. K.

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

WHY I PLEDGE TO MY CHURCH.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"The church, which is his body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all."—Eph. 1:22-23.

In these days when we must choose between good, and the necessary in making pledges, we must examine the reasons for making our pledges to this church. We are stewards, and will want to give a good account of our stewardship. To pledge or not to pledge, that is the question. There are plenty of reasons why we should support this church in this community. We can not in a brief space enumerate them all. But we shall give a preponderance of reasons. They are given as from the man in the pew, as he debates this business over in his own mind.

I.

It is the spiritual headquarters of a large group of people. There are on toward a thousand of them. They look to this church as a symbol of living Christianity. It will be a tragedy in each of their spiritual make-ups if this church fails, lapses, or lags. Something will go dead in their hearts and lives. Because: 1. This church is more than a meeting place to them. It is a special sort of holy meeting place. There is nothing else like it in their thinking. It represents that to which and whom they should, and do, give reverence. Paul calls it "the body of Christ, which filleth all in all." People do not take off their hats when they pass this church, but there is something within them that prompts them to reverent thinking. I shall do something definite to keep this place alive.

2. If this church should fail, something would go dead in the hearts and lives of a great people because here are built up many sacred memories. There are children which can never as long as they live forget this holy place. Here they have gone to their first Sunday School; here they have learned their first songs and prayers. Before ever they went to day school, they made first little precious friendships here, and contacted outside adult lives in a loving friendly way. This is something to think about when you make your pledge. Here young people have met, planned plans of their own, under the finest possible supervision; have seen their fellows working with them in building their own characters, and in facing the realities of abundant living and sharing of life. There are a host of young people who go where they will, be what they may, can never, never forget this place and the influence thereof. I have the assurance of this from a big group of young people present here now, and from a number from more than a half dozen colleges and universities throughout our land. If this church should fail, something would go dead in their needy, young, aspiring hearts. I will think about this when I make my pledge.

Not only have the young people built up memories which shall be sacred throughout all the years to come, but older ones have memories too sacred here to ever die. Here their marriage vows have been said, or their children have been christened, or their dead have been honored; here they have seen their parents work and strive and serve; here they themselves have put in of the best of their best selves; here they have struggled with the building of this church, and developed many memories which now have become hallowed. Only the unthinking can pass up these sacred memories lightly, or tear themselves from them. They are gifts of God, and must be held sacred. I will think about this when I make my pledge.

3. And this church is a necessary adjunct to many scores of Christian homes and families. It is one of their best rooms. Their "living room", indeed! Their room where their children are given Christian concepts, and their youth a place to worship; and a place where parents may find that solace and blessing which only comes from communing with God. It should be as important as rent, or groceries, garage, or garret—yea, really it is far more important. I will remember this when I make my pledge.

II.

It works the necessary works of righteousness. It is the greatest training institution in the community—schools, colleges and universities not excepted. It is an adjunct to the home—God's own gift to society. To neglect the church is to neglect the founder and establisher of the Christian home, the public school, the college, the university. The family as we know it is found in the church's book—the Bible—in its first chapters. The public school and the colleges are directly from the church. Where there is no church, or its influence, orphanages, charity hospitals, and benevolent enterprises are the exception rather than the rule. Society is a divine thing—a different thing all together when the church prospers in its midst. I will remember this when I make my pledge.

It works the works of righteousness, because: 1. It righteously trains its constituency. As in no other place tiny little children are given their first steps in learning. Our Sunday School has two whole departments before the child reaches the school age—cradle roll and beginners. Expressional training is given, so that from the heart and hand children are taught to express what has been learned by the head. What is sweeter than a little boy like a little man, lifting his heart to the eternal God in prayer or song? And the little girls dressed in their "prettiest best" lisping their lines which are in themselves the very heart-utterances of the human race. Surely the heavenly Father will reward our support of the institution which does that so beautiful and essential work. Indeed, he asks us so to do, promising blessing upon children's children. I will remember this when I make my pledge.

Here in their Holy Place, and in the Holy Place of their fathers and mothers, young people are given the Christian side of the rightful training. They study, they worship, they express themselves in their morning sessions, and in their evening session they have their own especially prepared programs. To see them in action is to know that they will never be able to forget the hours they are spending together here. How very worthwhile it is only the coming years, and eternity itself, can tell! They need the help of the church. Life has been in a turmoil all their days. World wars, and world-wide depressions, with a complete confusion of curtailments and changes, until it has been difficult for even church-loving homes to hold to anything like a normal place in which our young people should live. Let us not blame our fine young people, but rather let us give them a great church program led by people of loving hearts and unquestioned loyalty. Our church has such a program, to the limit of its ability in actual process now. I will remember that when I make my pledge.

Then, too, the church is the one great institution which undertakes consistently and regularly to teach the great mass of post-school people. True, others are beginning to take it up, but not until the church had for more than a generation made it a specific part of its school. In our church school three of its largest classes are adults and their work is permanent and abiding. But even the church school is only a small part of the training our church is offering adults. They are trained by the work they are doing for the church, as officers, deacons, trustees, teachers, ushers singers, committeemen, and in dozens of gentle, unseen gracious efforts of friendship and blessing. Something indescribably valuable would be lost in scores of adult lives if this church should fail in being supported.

2. It forms and cultivates friendships. Friendships that are first and permanent in most families and individuals. Just think of the friendships! Between little folks, between little folks (Continued on page 14.)

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Saturday, March 11th, was one busy day at the Christian Orphanage. The ground was in fine condition. The weather clear, but cold. Boys out of school. The moon was right to plant Irish potatoes. We wanted to cut and plant thirty bushels of seed, while the boys were out of school. We started early in the morning. We formed our organization the first thing. One man opened the rows, another followed with the fertilizer drill, another followed him with a little plow to mix the dirt and fertilizer, five boys dropped potatoes, two boys carried potatoes to those who were dropping, two boys kept the fertilizer drill filled with fertilizer, two boys covered the potatoes with plows.

The day was ideal, the boys all happy and before five o'clock we had finished the job. Everybody worked with a will. Little boys can do lots of work if one is with them to tell them what to do and how to do it.

We trust that before this letter reaches you that the banks will be open and normal again. We are compelled to have money to run an orphanage. When the monthly offering is taken in your Sunday School, please make your offering liberal.

The following has been sent in since our last report:

and their teachers; between young people, and young people and their elders; between adults, and between adults and their younger. Where could better, and more lasting friendships be formed? And best of all, there is that friendship unseen, but all-effective, with Jesus, the lowly Nazarene!

3. The church interprets life in spiritual terms. Here babies are thought of as gifts of God, and their lives are looked upon as a divine responsibility; to this altar they are brought by their parents for God's blessings. Here the young people are wed. And marriage is seen as a sacred obligation under the divine injunctions of God. Here we are taught of the abundance of present life, and the glory of the life that is beyond. And so at the church, or by the aid of the church, our beloved dead are buried. The whole of life, if lived under the influence of the church has a spiritual meaning, and death has no sting, but is a transporting to a fuller life.

III.

I believe in the church, and will support the church, because of what it teaches. It is a day of such great change. National ideals are changing. Old doctrines are being questioned. International ideals are changing. Old shibboleths are being questioned. Scientific theories are changing. New ones are taking their places. Social standards are changing. Invention has lifted much of labor, and put the laborer out of anything with which to purchase bread; and the man with the machine cannot pay the monthly installments on it. Things are changing. And for the better, if the teachings of Jesus Christ can be allowed to permeate them all.

In a changing time it is great to have some place to go that still says God is fair. Rain falls on Jew, Gentile, rich, poor, high, low, all alike. God is fair. He plays no favorites. Nephews of rich uncles do not push real merit aside with God. It is something to find that doctrine still taught in a sacred place.

It is something to have an institution in the community that still teaches that forgiveness is right. That the weight of unforgiven ugly acts are loads which hold down and back, and mar otherwise happy, useful lives. And so on we could go. When I make my pledge I shall remember the church of which I am a part, and have obligated myself to support, teaches what the preacher calls "the eternal verities."

The man who has lived for himself has the privilege of being his own mourner.—Beecher.

OBITUARIES

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

We, the members of the Ladies' Aid Society of the Cypress Chapel Christian Church, at our regular monthly meeting, February 8, 1933, wish to express our deeply felt loss because of the passing into the great beyond of a most loyal and faithful member and co-worker, Mrs. Mary Riddick Jones; now, therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we hereby express our great appreciation for her blameless life and character, so rich in deeds of love and kindness, never hesitating to perform her part in the most difficult tasks, and for her unceasing and untiring efforts to promote the welfare of the church and community.

2. That as we think of the influence emanating from her life as a devoted wife and mother, as a friend, as a sacrificing follower of her Lord and Master, we will cherish affectionately in our memory her noble life, her unfailing generosity, her wise counsel and her deep and abiding interest in every movement which had for its object the glory of God, the improvement of conditions and the uplift of humanity, letting the sweetness, purity and beauty of her character inspire us to nobler, higher aims and ideals.

3. That we extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy in their hour of grief, assuring them that "earth hath no sorrow which heaven cannot heal."

"There is no death; what seems so is transition,
This life of mortal breath
Is but a suburb of the life elysian
Whose portal we call death."

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased, a copy sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication, and a copy be placed upon the records of the society.

WILLIAMSON.

Mrs. Virginia C. Williamson, of Meckleburg County, Va., was born April 17, 1864, and died at her home near Buffalo Lithia Springs, December 20, 1933, aged 68 years, 8 months and 3 days. She was the daughter of Joseph and Mary Moore. Her parents preceded her by a few years to the spirit land.

About the year 1889, she was married to Henry Williamson, who died in August, 1926. To them were born three children. Gela, the only daughter, died in 1914. The two sons, Willie and Greely, survive and live at the old homestead. She is also survived by one brother, Colie Moore, and two sisters, Mrs. Johnny Williamson and Mrs. Hiram Farlines, and three grandchildren.

Sister Williams since early life had been a faithful member of Hebron Christian Church.

The funeral and burial were at her church on December 22, 1933.

DENTON.

On February 20, 1933, Bro. Sam B. Denton, of the New Hope section, in Franklin Co., N. C., passed quietly from this life.

He was born April 26, 1896. He was married twice during his life, the first to Miss Lillie Deau in 1906, who died one year later. To this union was born one child, who is living.

His second marriage took place in 1910, to Miss Lela Dean, and to this union was born five children, four of whom are living. With his five children he leaves behind a wife, four brothers, three half-brothers and two half-sisters.

Bro. Denton was a loyal and faithful member of the New Hope Christian Church for twenty years.

May the bereaved family be blessed and comforted in the words of our Lord, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

Water Scarce—Oil Plentiful.—

When we think of oil, we usually think of Texas, Pennsylvania, and other well-known producing regions. We overlook Aruba, an island of the colony Curacao, Dutch West Indies, which is one of the largest oil producing areas in the world, in proportion to size and population. This island is only 69 miles square, has a population of 5,375, and in 1931 produced 2,500,000 barrels of gasoline, 22,000,000 barrels of fuel oil, and nearly 1,000,000 barrels of gas oil. In this region water is very scarce, which is a handicap for an even larger production of oil. Water is sold at a retail price of about 8c per bucket.

Millions in Gold Returned to Banks.—

Government officials have refused to state the exact amount of gold which has been returned to the banks since the declaring of the National bank holiday, but it is conservatively estimated that $400,000,000 in gold has been redeposited in the past two weeks. Virginia has fared unusually well in regard to bank re-openings, only about two dozen banks remaining closed at this writing. The whole of the Fifth Reserve District seems to be in better financial condition than are some other districts. With the passing of the bill to aid State banks as well as national banks, many others will soon be ready for business again.

France Takes Up Question of Payment.—

One of the results of the recent closing of the banks of the country, has been the taking up again of the question of paying the $19,000,000 installment which the French refused to pay last December. Deputy Rene Richards has introduced in the French Chamber a resolution calling for its immediate payment. There seems to be a changed front in regard to this payment. France realizes that a financially sound United States is essential to world affairs and she also realizes that a falling dollar is not to her advantage. It is a time when she can court favor with the American people and at the same time possibly save more than she pays.

Dr. Amos R. Wells.—

The world of religious literature suffered a real loss on March 6th, when Dr. Amos R. Wells, former editor of the Christian Endeavor World, died at his home in Auburndale, Mass. Dr. Wells was born in Glens Falls, N. Y., seventy years ago. He was a graduate of Antioch College, where he later served as professor of Greek and geology. He gave up his professorship to enter the Christian Endeavor movement, and it was in this field that he was best known to the general public. He was the author of many books and for many years has edited Peloubet's Notes, one of the best known of the various helps on the International Sunday School lessons. He was also for some time a contributing editor to the Christian Herald. Dr. Wells was very conservative in his thought, but was at the same time most tolerant. He was a member of the Congregational Church at Auburndale, and his funeral was held from that church.

The Church and the Social Order.—

It will be interesting to read a report of the results of the American section of the World Alliance of Presbyterian and Reformed Churches, which sat in the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., February 14th. This organization represents over three million communicants in the United States and Canada, and is the only general delegated church body representing both the Dominion and the Republic. The church and the social order were prominent in the discussions, as per the announced order of procedure. The most interesting, however, because of its radicalism, will be a report of the result of the discussion of the recent report of the laymen's commission on foreign missions, now a subject of wide discussion among Protestant Churches, and is a rock upon which Protestantism is likely to split or be ground to powder. The list of speakers includes leading Presbyterians from the sections represented.—Christian-Evangelist.

Automobile Tags at a Bargain.—

The Governor of Georgia promised when running for office to relieve the automobilist of some of the burden of taxation which he was bearing. Conforming to his campaign pledge, he asked the State legislature to enact legislation making the price of the license $3.00 instead of the present minimum of $11.25 for the smaller cars and a higher rate for larger ones. When the legislature failed to redeem his promise, he last Monday issued an executive order setting the price of all license tags at $3.00. When the head of the motor vehicle department hesitated about carrying out his order, he ordered the adjutant-general to "stand by" and see that his orders were obeyed. He said: "I have issued an executive order on the $3.00 price tag to carry out my campaign pledge to the people of the State, and if I can't enforce an executive order, I might as well resign. However," he added, "I have no intention of resigning." The reduction in price of the tags will leave $3,500,000 in the pockets of the people of the State at a time when they probably need it most. There is likely to be some embarrassment for the government, because of decreased revenue, but many people will rejoice at his decision.

The Status of the States on the Beer Question.—

Unless disapproved by the courts, it seems certain that 3.2 per cent beer will be placed on sale throughout many parts of the United States in the next few weeks. There are at least fourteen States in which beer can be sold immediately upon Federal legalization, which will be fifteen days after the bill is signed. These States are: Arizona, California, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Missouri, Montana, Nevada, New Jersey, New York, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Washington and Wisconsin. Three other States have set dates after which beer could be sold if legalized by the National Government: North Dakota, West Virginia and Wyoming, while beer can also be sold in Wilmington, Del., and Baltimore, and two counties of Maryland. The other twenty-nine States have laws of one kind or another which will still prohibit the sale of beer. Meanwhile the question of ratification of the Twenty-first Amendment goes on. Twelve States have made provision for constitutional conventions, and in twenty-one other States the matter is pending in the legislatures or in the governors' hands. This leaves fifteen States in which no action has been taken. Thirteen States can hold up the repeal, either by failing to call conventions, or if conventions are called, by voting dry. We predict that if the Twenty-first Amendment is not ratified in the next eighteen months, Prohibition will remain the law of the land. The swing is now slowly, but we believe surely, back to the dry side.

Prohibition Loses a Leader.—

In the death of J. Sidney Peters, who died in a Richmond, Va., hospital on Monday of this week, the dry forces have lost a most valuable and conscientious leader. Dr. Peters was born in Norfolk, Va., November 12, 1866. He received his undergraduate education at Randolph-Macon College, later studying law and serving in the Virginia Legislature. He was converted while studying law, and on the day upon which he was to take his bar examination, was licensed to preach instead. This was in 1893. Twenty-one years later, in the wet and dry election in Virginia, he was the enthusiastic and efficient organizer of the dry forces, and with the dry victory became the State's first prohibition commissioner. He was also at one time an associate editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate. A local daily paper, though in the opposite camp, said of Dr. Peters, editorially: "The waning cause of prohibition had no more devoted champion in Virginia than the energetic clergyman who died this morning. In his eyes there could be no true temperance without teetotalism, for he regarded intoxicants as dangerous at all times and in all amounts and for that reason an essential part of religion. No labor was too long, no campaign too arduous for him if it brought statutory prohibition one step nearer in Virginia." Even those who disagreed with him conceded his absolute sincerity, and many of his political enemies were his personal friends. Virginia is much poorer for his going. The dry forces of Virginia have suffered an almost irreparable loss.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

"This is the victory that overcometh the world even our faith."

The church is the only institution known among men which even tries to heed the command of our Lord Christ: "Go ye and preach my Gospel to all the nations."

March, April, May, June—spell opportunity and privilege in our Christian Churches for all who will avail themselves—privilege for progress in helping to enlarge the Kingdom of our Lord through our missionary effort.

Many churches are proclaiming the Good News in these days looking toward Easter and the resurrection. It is a time of soul-searching and spiritual examination and penetration, and the one question arising in the minds of many Christians is: "How may we share the love and the resurrection power of our Lord with others?"

Dr. Fred B. Smith, who has been speaking on a series of Forum programs in Florida, was entertained at a men's dinner at the West Palm Beach Church. Seventy-two men attended. Dr. Smith is a former Moderator of the General Council of Congregational and Christian Churches. He made an interesting address to the men of the church. The pastor of the church is Rev. Frank Atkinson.

It is with deep regret that we note the death of Mrs. Sallie I. Ellenor, of Suffolk, Va., mother of Mrs. I. W. Johnson. Our sympathy goes out to both Dr. and Mrs. Johnson in this hour of bereavement. Mrs. Ellenor was not well known to the writer, but in the few times in which he had come in contact with her, her lovable character had made its impress upon his mind. Her presence has passed to the great beyond, but the memory of her will continue to make this a better world in which to live.

Dr. Kenyon L. Butterfield, who is spending the winter in Winter Park, spoke at a union meeting of all the Protestant Churches of Winter Park upon the subject: "Rural Missions in the Far East." Dr. Butterfield was formerly president of the Massachusetts Agricultural College and later of the Michigan State College, and also of the American Country Life Association. He has recently been abroad in connection with the Layman's Inquiry, and made a special study of agricultural conditions in the Far East. Dr. Butterfield is a prominent Congregationalist.

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church, conducted a series of meetings at Elon College the past week, which meetings were deeply appreciated by, and a spiritual uplift to, students, faculty and community of Elon College. No preacher comes to Elon who understands student approach and young life better than Brother Hardcastle, and who more thoroughly grips the attention, sympathy and cooperation of college and community life than he. His sermons were plain, practical and spiritual. A most hearty welcome awaits "Hardy" at any time at Elon.

Our readers will learn with great sorrow of the passing of Dr. D. B. Atkinson, who died March 1st. Throughout his life of more than sixty years, he has been an uplifting force in the denomination to which he belonged. He filled many quite prominent positions in the Christian Church and was one of the presiding officers at the Seattle Convention. At the time of his death he was with Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., and his loss to that institution will be inestimable. Indeed, to quote Dr. F. G. Coffin, "His gracious manner, perfect poise, Christian perception and unyielding industry will leave unfilled a peculiar and important place in our church councils."

Our good friend, Mrs. W. B. Bagwell, Durham, N. C., was struck by an automobile on the night of March 1st, as she was crossing the street on her way to prayer meeting. One leg was fractured and she was badly bruised. She was carried immediately to the hospital where she has been receiving the best of treatment, and we are happy to report she now seems on her way to recovery. Sister Bagwell is one of the most faithful and ever-present members of our Durham Christian Church, and her enforced absence from services, because of the painful and deplorable accident, is felt and deeply regretted by the entire congregation, who as much expect to see her present at a church service as they do her pastor.

In one of his practical and gripping sermons at Elon the past week, Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, using as his text: "The Master is come and calleth for thee," emphasized a fact often ignored in our preaching and practice, viz., That the Master needs us even as much as we need him. He calls for us because of the need for human assistance and help. It is the way he has chosen to walk the earth and to save a sinning world and, though Sovereign Lord of all and Creator of all, made his work in the world dependent upon the attitude and activity of human beings. If perishing souls are to receive the bread of life, they will do so at the hands of those who are his friends and who are willing to take up their cross and share his burden with him.

When it comes to courage and Christian fortitude, commend us to the good women. Instead of being discouraged and ready to retrench and retreat in their missionary activities, the good women of the State Baptist Missionary Union in recent session at Winston-Salem, N. C., put a 10 per cent increase in gifts as their financial goal for Missions in 1933, making the total amount sought by their Board $196,000 for the year. One good woman, in addressing the State meeting and stirring it to a pitch of spiritual enthusiasm, said that "the world I refer to is not the physical world, but a spiritual world that God has set in spiritual hearts. The women stand for foreign missions," declared the speaker, "and God will empower his people by his Spirit to keep the world in their hearts."

Literature and suggestions for our Mission Period went to all pastors and Sunday School superintendents last week. Truly God hath spoken to us in these last days, and is calling us to adventure and spiritual activity in his name. If the church fails or falls down in its missionary morale and activity in a time like this, there can be no hope, since the one task for which the church is founded and being built of our Lord is its missionary task—that task which distinguishes and sets it apart as a spiritual body, a task which the church alone of all institutions undertakes. If other churches are to be built; if other gospel preachers are to be secured, supported and sent out; if the gospel is to be proclaimed elsewhere than in the churches already established, this must be done through missionary consecration and contribution.

Rev. Leslie J. Barnette has been called to the pastorate of the church at Coral Gables, Fla.

Mr. Barnette has been acting as interim pastor for the past three months, following Dr. Arthur E. Leonard, who had to give up the work because of the illness of his wife. Mr. Barnette was in Miami at the time and was immediately engaged as interim pastor and has now been called to the permanent pastorate. He was formerly Secretary of the New York Church Extension Boards, and before that was pastor of the Lewis Avenue Church, Brooklyn. Mr. Barnette has made a special study of Religious Education, and has published several articles along that line. He is welcome to the fellowship of the churches in Florida, and especially to the fellowship in Miami. Mr. Barnette is married and he and his wife have already made themselves beloved by the church and community.

The funeral of Dr. Harlan P. Beach was held at Winter Park on March 6th. Dr. Beach had been spending his winters at Winter Park in recent years. He was formerly missionary in China and later Professor of Missions in the Divinity School of Yale University. For six years prior to becoming Professor at the Divinity School, he was Educational Secretary of the Student Volunteer Movement. He exercised a wide influence in the missionary education of Protestant Churches. He was one of the originators of the present annual study books of the different missionary countries, and wrote a number of the earlier texts including "The Cross in the Land of Trident," 1895; "The Knights of the Labarum," 1896; "The Dawn on the Hills of Tang," 1898; and "Princely Men of the Heavenly Kingdom," 1904. Professor Beach was a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society, and a member of the American Oriental Society.

Hon. Ben T. Holden, who had been in ill health at his home in Louisburg, N. C., for two or more years, passed away on the morning of March 11, 1933. The interment was in the cemetery at Oak Level Church, in which church the family held its membership, Sunday, March 12th, the brief funeral services at the grave being conducted by Rev. E. M. Carter, pastor, assisted by J. O. Atkinson. A very large number of relatives, friends and acquaintances was present to pay tribute or respect, and the floral offerings were quite appropriate and beautiful. Mr. Holden had been a trustee of Elon College for several years, and usually attended the meetings, and was a very valuable member while his health and strength permitted. He was a son-in-law of our late, lamented Dr. W. W. Staley, having married his youngest daughter, Miss Willie, and leaves to mourn his departure a consecrated wife and four children. While active as able counsellor-at-law, he represented his county, both in the lower and in the upper houses of his State legislature, where his talent and ability as a statesman were highly prized. Our sympathies are extended to the bereaved family.

POUNDED.

Upon arriving at my car after finishing the service at Berea to return home, the writer could hardly believe his own eyes, for good friends of the congregation had taken possession of the situation and an old-fashioned pounding had taken place—everything that goes to swell a pantry and make eating enjoyable.

These dear people are always looking for things to do that rejoice the heart of their pastor. Perhaps there are other congregations just as good as the one at Berea, but none better. Always congenial, pleasant, agreeable in all things. The work goes well, not only at Berea, but at Haw River and Carolina as well.

G. C. CRUTCHFIELD.

THE CHRISTIAN'S VOCATION.

Jesus did not believe in a hermit life or a hermit church. We are here for a purpose, and each has a definite vocation. It is to manifest Christ to the world. We are not here to become critics of others, to find fault with others, least of all to force our principles upon others from the outside by external pressure. We are here to manifest Christ to the world, to be unto men as an angel or messenger of God. The great hope that fills the soul inspires it with a sense of responsibility to manifest Christ as our Lord and Master. Our present generation is very indifferent to the voice of the church, and I cannot blame it much. The reason is plain. We have offered the world in our time a Saviour too small for the tragic necessities of life. In easy times the Jesus of popular literature, the Good Companion always at our side may suffice, but in the deep moods of the spirit, in the sharp stress and strain of our mortal existence, the soul will cleave only of the world. There is a very pathetic feeling after God in our world today. We can sense it all around us. What is needed is to rekindle the fires upon the cold altars of our hearts, to make them flame and glow within us until the world can feel the light and heat. Then in that buoyant hopefulness, that calm and undisturbed peace, the world will see the manifestation of something beyond it, and will come again, as it always did, asking the reason for the hope that is in us, and we can say we have sanctified Christ in our hearts as Lord. For what the world is looking for now is not so much some new philosophy of religion, but typical personalities whose experience explains the vitality of the Christian faith.—The British Weekly.

'I'VE HAULED THE FLAG DOWN!'

The army chaplain sat in his hut planning his work for the day. The temperature outside was 40 degrees below freezing point; and it was none too warm inside.

There came a hesitating tap at the door, and in answer to a cheery, "Come in!" there entered a man looking the very picture of misery.

"Hallo, Smith, what's the matter?" cried the chaplain.

"I've hauled down the flag, sir."

"Hauled down the flag? Whatever do you mean?"

The man who stood before the Padre was his righthand man in all his work. He was the one to "beat up" the boys for services and meetings. He could always be relied upon. He was the man with the wonderful voice who so often had sung sacred solos at the evening services.

The man looked shamefacedly at the floor, and, hanging his head miserably, said:

"The boys got hold of me last night, sir, and made me drink, and I went back to my quarters, drunk! Yes sir, I'm that ashamed of myself; but I'm done for now. I've hauled the flag down!"

"But come, Smith, even if you have hauled the flag down, you know enough about Jesus Christ and his love and his power to haul it up again!"

"Well, yes, sir. I've done that—in a way. I've confessed my sin to God and I know he has forgiven me. We have his promise, sir, haven't we? If we confess our sins, he will forgive us our sins and cleanse us from all unrighteousness. You can't guess, sir, what a comfort that is to me. I'm forgiven by God, I know. But I can't ever face the boys again. I can't help you any more. I've hauled the flag down before them all and I'll sit in the back seat all the rest of my time here."

"Listen to me, Smith. We're going to kneel down right here and we'll both consecrate ourselves afresh to God. Then, tomorrow night, I'm holding a service in the hut, and I want you to sing a solo. Don't answer me now. Think it over and pray about it. But don't fail to turn up tomorrow night."

The chaplain waited. The time of the service was at hand. The boys were there in full force, but Smith wasn't. As the opening hymn was sung, the door was swung open, and Smith entered awkwardly. Yes, he would sing.

When the Padre announced that Private Smith would now sing a solo, the amazement of the boys knew no bounds. Some smiled. Others looked at each other knowingly. "Didn't the Padre know?" "Hadn't he heard?" "What an old hypocrite Smith was."

So they thought.

Meanwhile Smith had come to the front, and was standing nervously before their piercing gaze. His face was like a huge tomato! At least, it was red enough.

"Boys," began Smith, "you know all about it—and the chaplain knows, too. He's good enough to trust me. God is trusting me, too. I know I hauled the flag down two nights ago—but I've hauled it up again."

Then he told them of his quiet time of confession to God, of the certainty of God's forgiveness, and of his new resolutions. He touched on the wondrous love of Jesus Christ to give him a second chance.

And as he spoke, few eyes were dry. He was confessing his sin and his suffering and his Saviour before the men who had dragged him down. No indeed! Smith was no hypocrite!

"Boys," he cried in conclusion, "you know all about it. Will you let me sing to you again? Will you?"

"Yes, mate!" came a muffled murmur. And Smith sang. The words rang out clearly:

When I fear my faith will fail,
Christ will hold me fast;
When the tempter would prevail,
He can hold me fast.
He will hold me fast;
He will hold me fast;
For my Saviour loves me so,
He will hold me fast.

Tears coursed down the faces of some of the men, and smothered sobs were heard from different parts of the hut. That song was a more powerful sermon than any the chaplain ever preached.

Those brave men are back in the homeland today, but as long as life lasts no man who heard the solo will ever forget it:

He will hold me fast.

These words will ring in their ears till the music of heaven is heard.—A. E. Richardson in Glad Tidings.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

HEADED TOWARD THE SALOON?

Let none of us deceive ourselves. The wet propoganda has in view the return of the saloon. Nothing short of this will satisfy. Representative Claiborne, of Missouri, speaking before the Congress at Washington in behalf of the beer bill that was passed, is quoted in the press as saying: "As a good drinking man, I am interested in this beer bill for drinking purposes. I not only want a good glass of beer, but I want a good drink of whiskey, and I hope the time will come when I can walk into a decent saloon and get both of them openly." One will, at least, give Congressman Claiborne credit for his brutal candor. There are not a few people who are yet willing to sell their birthright for a mess of pottage and destroy the souls of others, if they may but themselves gratify their own beastly and animal appetites.

Let us not be deceived. Our whole country is excited with the desire for a change and the anticipation of conditions that are different. Thousands are willing to vote for anything, take any turn, subscribe to any creed, that will bring about a change from present conditions. Multitudes of us do not know just what we want, but seem ready to take the plunge into the cess-pool of change at any hazard. Any reasonable person knows that some changes are necessary, and some changes must come, but let us not deceive ourselves into thinking that we can drink ourselves into prosperity or that booze can bring us bounty and blessings.

Those who lived in the days of the open saloon, or who have taken the time to inquire, know that the open saloon is the most ruinous, most destructive, most deadly institution that ever cursed humanity, or burdened human society. The saloon was a menace to every community in which it was established. It defied and degraded the law, whose protection it evoked, and then evaded and sent more promising youths to untimely graves than all war, famine and pestilence combined. The saloon is Satan himself unleashed in a community to do his most destructive and dealy work to body, mind and soul.

It may be that our desire for a change, our mania and madness to try the untried, combined with the ignorance of many youthful voters who did not know the devastating work of the saloon, will bring it back again. If so, may God in heaven pity us, and have mercy upon our day and generation!

The politicians and the wet propogandists have managed to obscure the moral issue, and muddied the waters so that many cannot see their way out; but one cannot help believing that when the issue is drawn between bringing back the saloon or continuing its outlawry, the moral sense, to say nothing of the public conscience, will assert itself, and that our citizenry will stay the deadly hand of this hideous monster, the saloon. Representative Claiborne will never realize his hope of walking into a "decent saloon," for he well knows that there is no such thing, and never can be, since the saloon thinks only corruption, vice, crime, and all sorts of immorality, debauchery and death.

REMEMBERING THE SERMON.

Dr. J. M. Rowland, distinguished divine and editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate, lays this question before his readers: "How much preaching do we remember?" And then the erudite editor answers his own question by saying: "It is discouraging to think how little of our preaching people remember." He thinks that it would be quite humiliating for any minister to check up among his leading members a few days after as to what he had preached the Sunday before.

Maybe, after all, the preacher should not be humiliated. Is the preacher supposed to say the things that his congregation will remember, or to so expound the Scripture that it will be remembered? So far as this writer is concerned, the more important question is not how much preaching do we remember, but how much Scripture, by virtue of the sermon, lives in the memory, mind and heart of the hearer. As he thinks over it now, the writer can recall very few, if any, of the truly great sermons he ever heard, but he can recall the Scripture text, paragraphs or incidents recorded in Scripture that the sermon expounded and was built around.

For our part, we have decided long since that about the only preaching that counts is that preaching which makes a text of Scripture live in the mind and life of some who hear. It is not the preacher's word, but the Word of God that is to do the work. It is not the sermon, but the Scripture, which is the basis and the inspiration of the sermon, that is to be remembered and that does the work. "And the Word became flesh." When it can be said of a sermon that it made "the Word of God become flesh" in some person, or persons, of the congregation, that is a sermon. The highest commendation, in our humble judgment, that can be paid a preacher of a sermon is for some one to say: "Brother, I heard you preach one year, or five years ago, and I do not remember a word of your sermon, but I do remember your text. The text still abides and will ever be fresh in my memory." Now that is something to be said to a preacher of a sermon. The best preaching, the biggest preaching, the most lasting preaching, and the most eloquent, is that which makes a text of Scripture live in the mind and life of the hearer.

So let no minister be humiliated by the fact that his congregation does not remember his sermon, but let him hang his head in shame and defeat if he cannot make some Scripture live in the memory and become vital in the life of the congregation. The most that any minister can hope to do, and the greatest thing he can do, is to give hands and feet to a verse of Scripture so that it will walk up to a hearer and lay hold on him with a grip that will not let go. That, to us, is preaching and is the vital thing in any sermon. It is not the word of man, but the Word of God, that brings conviction, transforms life, lifts one to a higher level of thinking and of acting.

INCREASED HIS MISSION CONTRIBUTION.

Here is a very sane and refreshing letter, written by a contributor, and finding its way into the columns of the Southern Churchman (Episcopal): "I am pretty hard hit this year, by a loss of nearly $5,000 in my income. It means such close economy that I am resigning my membership in all patriotic and fraternal organizations, and cancelling my subscriptions to all current periodicals. in order to increase my contribution for missions.

"The fact that my income is reduced leads me to believe that many others who are hard hit will be reducing their pledges to the work of the church. It seems to me that I ought to increase mine rather than decrease, in order to make up for the losses from others. I am doubling my pledge to missions through my parish."

This is unique and refreshing for two reasons: 1st. Many church members put their membership in the church on a level with their membership in fraternal and patriotic organizations, and feel that they have done about all they can do when they make a contribution to physical and material needs through their fraternity or civic club or church. This Episcopal brother sees it differently, and feels that the call to show a preference for his church in its distinctive work of sharing with others the Bread of Life to perishing souls is to be preferred. 2nd. Most of us, on seeing others about us reduce their pledges to the work of the church, take it as an excuse for reducing our own by saying: "Since others are reducing, I must." This good brother sees it otherwise and increases his offering to help make up losses from others.

Here then is an example of singleness of purpose and devoutness of heart that may well be emulated by others, especially by those of our Christian forces who are called upon in our Mission Period to help see to it that our work of sharing with others the Gospel of our Lord shall not be further curtailed or paralyzed.

J. O. A.

DEALING WITH "HEATHEN" AT HOME.

One of the main reason why the church has so many "heathen" at home, and so many unsaved souls about us, is because the church has been so little concerned about obeying its Founder, Lord and Master. Jacob Riis, who came to our country as a poor immigrant and who, in later years, then President, Theodore Roosevelt, declared was the most useful private citizen in America, spoke of a paragraph from his own experience which is worth repeating:

"Every once in a while I hear someone growl against foreign missions, because the money and the strength put into them are needed at home. I did it myself, when I did not know better. God forgive me. I know better now; and I will tell you how I found out. I became interested in a strong religious awakening in my city of Copenhagen, and I set about investigating it. It was then that I learned what others had learned before me, and what was the fact there, that for every dollar you give away to convert the heathen, God gives you ten dollars' worth of purpose to deal with your heathen at home."

Mr. Riis was not a preacher, but author, writer and private citizen who had learned that which many even in the church will not learn. Just put it down that when and where you find people opposed to foreign missions, and insist on the needs at home, they speak either from ignorance, as did Mr. Riis in his former days, or they speak from an unwillingness to do their duty even at home. God, history and the census reveal the fact that the people who are doing today most for home needs are those who, through love to their Lord, are willing to make an offering in his name now and then, at least, that they may share his life with those who do not know him, whom to know is life eternal. J. O. A.

SHIFTING THE MORTGAGE TO HIS OWN SOUL.

The College of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church recently issued a call to all members of their church which sounds like an appeal from the hearts of our own people who are interested in the work of the kingdom and the salvation of the church. We feel that the College of Bishops issued a call which can be heeded with profit, not only by the Methodist Church, but by all churches and members who have a care for the kingdom of righteousness, and the cause of winning a world to Christ. The address to the church by the Bishops is too lengthy for our columns, but we quote this paragraph, which should come home with force to CHRISTIAN SUN readers at this particular time when we are moving toward the period of our missionary offering, and are in the midst of our missionary teaching and preaching. Says one paragraph of the address:

"With local obligations pressing the church, it is not always easy to maintain loyalty to the larger interests. But the man who takes money that belongs to missions or other sacred causes to pay a church debt shifts the mortgage to his own soul. To sacrifice any kingdom interest for any local reason is to impair, if not so destroy, the great structure of Christian ministrations. The entire circle of interests deserves and should have full consideration and proportionate support. It is a matter of deep regret that many of our great interests are now in grave peril. Our missions are in serious distress. The income from the apportionments has steadily decreased for three years, and our missions face imminent danger. A special effort is being made to bring in between now and Easter Sunday sufficient funds to save from calamity our mission work and other interests just as important. Unless the church heeds this call and out of its reduced income lays upon the altars of the Lord a generous and sacrificial offering, we will be not only recalling missionaries, but surrendering enterprises of God's kingdom at home and abroad which have been built up through years of toil and faith. This would be a tragedy."

It will be a tragedy, indeed, for our Christian hosts not to rally to the call of our Christ through his church and for which he founded the church, viz., that it might exalt his name and share the Good News of his love and life with those who know him not. J. O. A.

"EXCEPT FINANCES."

The accepted salutation to a layman is, "How do you do?" The ordinary greeting of a preacher to a preacher is, "How are things going?"

The usual rejoinder of the minister in these days is, "Everything is going fine except finances." There is no news in this response.

News generally is bad news and the word that all is well in a church does not contain much of interest. News ought to be specific and such a general statement is not arresting. News is supposed to tell of some new thing and financial difficulty in a church is far more common than Horace Greeley's "dog biting a man." But, though our fishing for information in our daily greetings does not bring us news it at least starts a few meditations.

For things to be going well except in finances is a continuous condition in the history of the Christian Church. It was so in the beginning. "The servant is not better than his Lord." The Author of our faith was rich yet for our sakes he became poor. He had not where to lay his head. When the temple tax became due he sent Peter to the lake to catch a fish. On the great feast day when he would be the host of his friends he was compelled to borrow a room to eat his last supper with his disciples. The first pope, if he was ever a pope, confessed on the porch of the temple: "Silver and gold have I none." The greatest of the apostles, while serving his strongest and richest congregation, worked at a side line to pay his personal expenses. He was in hunger and thirst, in cold and nakedness, having learned in hard experiences how to be abased as well as how to abound. The minister who feels the pinch of these times may know that he is keeping step with the holy apostles and martyrs for they knew financial distress.

We do not despise money. It is life and labor coined into a convenient symbol for the purchase of the things that make life full and beautiful. Money can do so many things that only a fool will discount its power and yet the man who regards it as the only and indispensable thing in life is not altogether wise. Things may go well when financial resources are at the lowest. Prosperity and power have not always been associated in the church. The Kingdom of God has sometimes seemed to be at its best when times were worst.

The homeless Christ went about doing good and bequeathed to his followers enduring and supreme values. The penniless Peter said to the lame man, "Such as I have give I thee; in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk." And he took him by the right hand, and lifted him up; and immediately his feet and ankle bones received strength. Dependent Paul made no apology for his poverty for he prided himself "as being poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things."

Financial difficulties should be a spur rather than a source of despair. Necessity is the mother of invention, also of industry. Receiving less from men should we not seek more from God? Realizing our depleted possessions in goods we would do well to seek more power in goodness. Having less of substance to give let us give ourselves with sublimer abandonment. A time like this demands that Christians make testimony to essential and spiritual values. We should prove to the world that if everything is well except finances that the exception cannot defeat us. "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth."—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

THE GREATEST TRAVELING LIBRARY IN THE WORLD.

One of the most fascinating libraries in the whole world is that of the American Merchant Marine Library Association.

It is the largest of all traveling libraries and its green, seagoing chests, each of which contains seventy carefully chosen books of fiction and non-fiction, travel in ships all over the globe. When a ship is loading for a long voyage these libraries are eagerly watched for; the seamen call them "life savers," as they mean so much on long voyages where there is no other diversion.

The successful operation of ships is due in large measure to a happy and contented crew and in this the traveling library plays an important part. It serves not only the crews of American merchant ships, but the men in lighthouses, light-ships, and isolated coast guard stations. These men, deprived of public library privileges because of their calling, have more time to read and fewer diversions than almost any other class of working men, and their appreciation of the A. M. M. L. A. Service is shown by the countless letters of thanks which they write to the Association, often accompanied by contributions of cash.

The work of this Association is barely eleven years old, and yet just before the depression it kept in circulation during one year alone nearly 400,000 books and distributed approximately 200,000 magazines.

Seamen are encouraged to make known their wishes for books not included in the "libraries," and the Association fills large numbers of such special requests, especially for technical books concerning the business of the ship, such as navigation, seamanship, and engineering.

Mrs. Henry Howard, president of this Library Association, served during war days as Chief of the Social Service Bureau of the U. S. Shipping Board Recruiting Service, and when she saw thousands of men going to sea for the first time in ignorance of the difficulties they might encounter, especially in foreign ports, she conceived the idea of a "Seaman's Handbook for Shore Leave," that would supply much-needed information.

This pocket-sized handbook has proved to be a veritable Baedeker for Jack Tar. It gives information about 366 ports or 401 cities in 95 different countries. It tells seamen about American Consulates, amusements, dental clinics, excursions, inexpensive hotels, legal aid, laundries, libraries, physicians, seamen's homes, banks, agencies and unions, etc.

As a special guide for medical service at sea, there is given a complete list of all ships carrying physicians, their regular routes and radio call letters, as well as a list of the coastal stations of the Radio-marine Corporation of America.

This "Seaman's Handbook" is the only book of its kind and is arousing much interest both in this country and abroad.

THE CLUB OR THE CHURCH?

Mr. Donald A. Adams, of New Haven, Conn., president of the New Haven Chamber of Commerce and past-president of Rotary International, who becomes an executive officer of the National Commission on Missions of the Congregational and Christian Churches April 1st, in accepting this position, said:

"The trying times of the last two years have been a searching test to many a business man's soul, bringing out hidden sordidness, greed and truthfulness and furnishing new evidence of how true it is that a man's life may be divided into un-connected compartments in one of which religion may be kept for us on Sunday only. If civilization is to be saved I am more than ever convinced that it will only be saved by the religion of Jesus. We laymen have got to decide which is more important, a country club or the church. We must make a re-appraisal of the values in life."

He that will believe only what he can fully comprehend must have a very long head or a very short creed.—Colton.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

"There is a light in the valley of the shadow of death for me." With smiling face a saintly mother lay upon her bed and triumphantly uttered these consoling words. Mrs. Sallie I. Ellenor was born in Nansemond County, Va., May 14, 1846, and died in Suffolk, Va., March 12, 1933, after a brief illness. She is survived by two daughters Mrs. T. O. Knight, of Whaleyville, Va., and Mrs. I. W. Johnson, of Suffolk, Va. She united with the church at the age of 12 years, nearly 75 years ago. During all these years she had been loyal and faithful. After she was 70 years old she read her Bible through eighteen times and finished the 45th chapter of Ezekiel for the 19th time during this period. She read a great deal, but she made it the daily rule of her life to read the Bible before reading anything else. If the daily newspaper carried sensational head-lines and her attention was called to some startling news, she would say, "I will read that after I have read my Bible."

She knew the end of her earthly journey was near. It was a long journey—nearly 87 years—for her. Sixteen years ago her husband was called to his reward, after more than 50 years of companionship along the way. She had missed him, and yearned for the reunion. During these years she had made her home with us. She had been happy and added much to the happiness of our home. She greatly enjoyed the visits of other ministers in our home. Her eyes were dimmed by age. Her mind was clear. She quoted many beautiful promises in the Bible. It was a precious Book to her. She had proven many of the promises. She believed they were all true. The words of the Psalmist were often upon her lips: "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, bless his holy name." The chorus of a familiar song brought joy to her soul:

"Some day, some day, some glad sweet day,
I shall with joy his face behold."

It seemed that light of heaven was shining in her face.

"Mother Ellenor" was a woman of unusual piety and strength of character. She had a keen mind, judgment and broad sympathetic spirit. She was industrious, looked well after the affairs of her household, liberally supported the work of the church and was deeply concerned about the salvation of others. She touched the young and the old alike by her modest, unassuming manner and deep spiritual devotion. After her death, two children who did not know her name, came to the door, and said: "May we see the lady who sat at the window, and smiled at us as we passed by?"

She went home early Sunday, March 12th, just as the daylight began to break the darkness of the night. The soft stillness of the night was unbroken. The pillow of suffering became a pillow of peace. Sweet rest followed years of toil and anxiety. "The light in the valley" was replaced by the sun of righteousness. God had given a choice spirit to earth, and he had taken it away. As we knelt for a moment and gave thanks for such a life, the thought came: "This is not death; this is another step in life—eternal life." Her room became a sanctuary. The Sabbath a sweeter day.

This letter may be too personal—but life is personal, and death is personal. And the church needs to be reminded that all people have not bowed the knee to Baal. God lives. Doubts will disappear for the people who walk with God.

Death will lose its sting for those who fully rest in his love. No skeptic can prevail against the testimony of a consistent Christian life. The Cross is the way home. It is sometimes a hard way, but it leads the faithful home.

RELIGIOUS EMPHASIS AT ELON.

The faculty, religious organizations, the College, church and Sunday School have felt the need of new emphasis placed upon the religious life of the campus and the community for some time. It was the feeling of those interested that some effort should be made to bring the question of personal religion individually and definitely to the attention of every individual connected with the College and those of the community. Accordingly, a period was set aside, to be known as Religious Emphasis Week. Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, an alumnus of the College and pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church, was invited to conduct a series of continuous meetings. There were two services each day—at 10 o'clock, A. M., the regular chapel hour, and at 7:30 P. M. The interest in the meetings increased from service to service. The attendance on the part of the student body was remarkable. A member of the faculty remarked that it was nearly 100 per cent.

Mr. Hardcastle brought very interesting and helpful messages. They were practical and convincing. It was a season of spiritual refreshment for us all. The very atmosphere of the meetings called for a rededication of life to the higher and better things on the part of everyone.

There were several public reconsecrations and three conversions. The meetings began with the chapel hour Tuesday morning, and closed with the evening service Friday.

It is the unanimous opinion of all concerned that the meetings were of great benefit and blessing to the College and community.

I am taking this opportunity of expressing publicly to Brother Hardcastle, the College's, the church's and my own personal appreciation of his stay and services rendered. The services were a benediction to all.

DOWN WITH CHILD ROBBERY FOR REVENUE!

It is unthinkable that a Christian nation can be willing to allow its children to be robbed of their food to furnish revenue to help balance the budget! But that is the plan!

"Beer is the poor man's drink," and when he spends his money for it he cannot buy the daily amount of milk, fruit, and vegetables that each of his children need for the proper development of teeth, bone and mental ability.

It is now well known that children who do not have the right kind of food in adequate amount will have poor, soft, defective teeth and bones resulting in various diseased conditions and retarding mental development that will handicap them for life.

The number of such handicapped children will be enormously increased by the return of legalized beer and other intoxicants—legalized for revenue!

Are our church people going to make no effective effort against this cruel robbery of our helpless children and their toiling mothers?

Is it sound finance thus to injure for life the nation's greatest asset—its children—for revenue? How many of them will later become inefficient citizens and public charges upon this community?

Legalizing beer and other intoxicants for revenue is but taking money out of one of Uncle Sam's pockets and putting it in another pocket. Beer and other intoxicants waste and destroy the earning ability of the people, and will put many of them in the breadline, the criminal class, and the charity wards of our hospitals, and starve millions of our children while increasing enormously the wealth of only a very few brewers, distillers, and liquor people, and those millionaires who, it is alleged, bought up controlling interests in large hotels that were hard pressed, expecting to reap large fortunes from the sale of intoxicants in them. These are the interests, it seems to have been clearly shown, that have put up the money to fight for the return of legalized beer and wine that will rob our children of their needed food.

How can one rise from his knees after praying, "Thy will be done on earth as in heaven, give us this day our daily bread," and then give his silent consent to such robbery of the children's "daily bread," or pray, "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil," and then sanction, or consent to, the return of legalized beer and the saloon with its constant temptation to evil and crime?

Visualize those millions of little children doomed to starvation rations and thus injured for life, and those boys and girls who will be debauched by the return of legalized beer and wine and of the saloon, and those drunken fathers reeling home as in the old days of licensed drink. Beer and wine will bring a flood of advertising as already promised, and they will also be the entering wedge for distilled liquors.

Will our nation thus bow down to the golden calf of "Beer for revenue to balance the budget," forgetting the divine command, "Thou shalt have no other gods before Me," and then expect His aid to save us from this sea of depression and wreckage?

GEORGIA ROBERTSON.

PORTSMOUTH.

We are glad to announce that we are now located in our new home and have taken up the work of the pastorate of First Christian Church, Portsmouth, Va. We are very favorably impressed with our new field of labor and the members of the church seem deeply interested in the work of the Kingdom and united in their purpose.

Tuesday evening members and friends of the church made an informal call on the minister and his family. As each one entered the living room, they passed on to the dining room, leaving a package on the table. After the visitors left we were busy stacking the pantry with the abundant food supply which had been so generously presented. During the evening, following the pounding, our guests entertained with songs, music and readings, and the fellowship was delightful to all present. The preacher announced that he would be at home every Tuesday evening.

The program of work for our Portsmouth Church is a full one and too large to be undertaken, save in the strength of Christ, who has said: "My strength is made perfect in weakness." We feel our weakness, but we can do all things through Christ.

During the year's pastorate, under the leadership of our devoted and consecrated minister, Rev. H. C. Caviness, the church began and now sponsors monthly service at Naval Hospital, weekly service at the jail, almshouse, two cottage prayer services weekly, and other services in various places. Pray for us.

PROGRESS AND PERMANENCE.

By TIMOTHY THOMAS.

The relation of progress and permanence is a most engaging and timely topic for discussion or study. What progress is, whether it be viewed from the standpoint of philosophy, or considered in the light of experience, leads into interesting fields of thought. That which was yesterday seemingly safe, fixed, and beyond improvement, is today antiquated and discarded. The philosophies of life that once aided in the guidance of men in their acts are today not considered in a good code of ethics. That which men have formed and fashioned endures but a day. Each development is not the final step, but a new beginning in the field of industry or endeavor.

The Psalmist raised the question of permanence and progress—of things permanent and things temporary—in the nineteenth chapter of that marked and marvelous and wonderful portion of Holy Writ. There are certain elementary needs of life and these remain unchanged, but the form and methods of meeting these needs do not remain the same. Food and sleep and raiment are among the outstanding elementary needs, but the methods of procuring these needs have been changed from time to time.

God created the world—created man, but he never finished the world or completed man. Progress is not of man alone; progress is the unfolding, the revealing, and the developing of God's program through man. The things which may seem a backward trend are none other than our failure to comprehend fully the greatness, the vastness, and the elaborateness of God's program of permanence through progress.

Religion is one of the absolute essentials of man. Man, created of the Divine, longs for the Divine. The hours and days and weeks of doubt may come; troubles, trials, tribulations, may wend their way across the beaten paths of our hearts; man may feel his independence and self-consciousness and feel that he needs no anchor for eternal hope. But the time does come in the life of every being when the soul yearns for God—longs to have hope and happiness in a higher and divine power.

There is nothing permanent save that which finds itself in line with God's eternal and ever-unfolding program. Great buildings and other great material undertakings do not, cannot, abide.

There is no real permanence in material things; only in the divine program can there be real, abiding, and everlasting permanence of progress.

JOHN KNOX AND JOHN WESLEY.

Among the long list of religious reformers, few names are more prominent or more important than that of John Knox, the founder of Presbyterianism, and that of John Wesley, the founder of Methodism. In leading up to the subject of the "Restoration" it seems impossible to omit a brief sketch of these great leaders.

JOHN KNOX.

John Knox was the leader of the Reformation in Scotland. He is not usually credited with being the founder of the Presbyterian Church. John Calvin is generally given this distinction. But the facts are that Calvin was not the founder of any particular denomination. His doctrines, known as "Calvinism" were more fully accepted by the Presbyterian Church than by any other, but he was identified with the Reformed Church of Switzerland until the day of his death. Knox, however, fought Catholicism in Scotland until it was finally overthrown and Presbyterianism became the established religion.

John Knox was born in a suburb of Haddington called "Gifford Gate," Scotland, November 24, 1505. He received his early education in the grammar school of Haddington and in 1521 entered the University of Glasgow. Here he distinguished himself as a disputant in theological questions. He also acquired here that freedom of political opinion and independence of thought that afterwards characterized his public life. At about the age of twenty-five he was ordained a priest in the Catholic Church, but soon after, his faith in the Roman Church was shaken by his study of the church fathers. In 1543 he openly professed himself to be a Protestant, whereupon he was degraded from his priestly office, and for fear of assassination fled for refuge to Douglas of Longniddry, where he remained till the end of 1545.

Cardinal Beaton was at this time head of the Catholic Church in Scotland. He seized George Wishart for preaching Protestantism and burned him at St. Andrews, while he looked out of a window and enjoyed the spectacle. Knox was a friend and companion of Wishart. Two months after the burning of Wishart, Cardinal Beaton was brutally murdered in his own castle. The castle was then seized by the nobles who had put Beaton to death and became a refuge for the Reformers. Knox took up his abode there, and soon the church of St. Andrews resounded with his indignant voice denouncing the errors of the popery. The castle was soon captured by the French. Knox was taken prisoner and spent the next two years as a galley slave on a French vessel. After his release, he went to England and became one of Edward VI's chaplains. He greatly influenced the English Reformation.

Upon the accession of Mary he was forced to flee to the continent. He finally settled at Geneva, where he became an ardent disciple of John Calvin, and helped to prepare the Genevan version of the English Bible.

He returned to Scotland in 1559 and entered upon his triumphant career as a Reformer. He fought many battles.

In the end of 1572 he died in Edinburgh.

JOHN WESLEY.

The name of no religious reformer is better known in this country than that of John Wesley, the founder of Methodism. He came of a long line of ministers of the Church of England, of Puritan principles. Some of them were non-conformists. John Wesley was the son of Samuel and Susannah Wesley. He was born at Ep-

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary

PRAYER.

Father, God, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life. Oh, that men would love the Lord with all their heart, soul, mind and strength. Oh, that men would serve the Lord with gladness and thanksgiving. Oh, that men would praise the Lord for his wonderful works to the children of men. In the name of our living, reigning, coming Saviour, we humbly pray. Amen. L.

FACING 1933.

We are yet in the early months of this good year. The question that faces every true and courageous soul is: Shall we conquer conditions or shall conditions conquer us? We, of the Christian Churches, will largely answer that question so far as the churches are concerned, during our Mission Period—March-April-May-June. Let us face a few facts that we may understand our situation and get our bearings. In our Congregational and Christian Churches, we have some over one million members in our six thousand churches. Although 1932 was a year of strain under economic depression, our churches gave $2,019,000 to their conference, conventional and international work. This was an average of a fraction more than $2.00 per member that our church members gave for benevolence, educational and missionary work, beyond their own local expenses. While this sum, as a total, is considerable, it was $412,000, or 17 per cent less, than we gave in 1931, and 0812,000, or 28.3 per cent less than we gave in 1930. The question we face now is what will happen in 1933? Shall we still show a decrease in our contribution in 1933, or shall we accept the challenge to go ahead through self-denial, that our Lord's work shall not suffer?

We have retrenched already. Shall we continue on the down grade? Our local churches have reduced their budgets and largely curtailed their pastors' salaries. Our conferences have reduced their calls and apportionments; the home boards have reduced both overhead and field expenditures, and while some home mission points have closed their doors, new buildings are not encouraged, and emergency aid is called for by congregations confronted with mortgage difficulties. The work in our home mission field is curtailed, handicapped and facing, seemingly, impossible difficulties. Furthermore, the American Board is closing four missions in the foreign field, with scores of churches and workers. About fifty missionaries have been either retired on the field or withdrawn from the service. A whole multitude of native assistants have been dropped from the work on the foreign field. The budget for the current year has been reduced $243,000, with a further cut of $70,000 ordered to be made. These reductions lay untold burdens on the Christians in mission lands. While we in the homeland, through our benevolent activities, are pouring out millions to give employment to the unemployed, material food, clothing and shelter for physical bodies, we are withholding, with an ever-tightening hand, our gifts and donations, that the Bread of Life may not be shared with perishing souls. One of the missionaries of the home board out West writes:

"We started our ministry here and began our married life together at the same time last May. During the seven and a half months to December 31st, it cost us $671.80 to live, although we only received $640.00. On this we both lived and 'set up housekeeping.' We have worked things out very well so far, but what of the future? I have two suits, but one is too shabby to wear at even week-night functions. During the extreme cold weather I have worn a light spring coat, which is all I possess."

Then another missionary away out in West Africa writes:

"Every family is giving one month's average income to our Christian enterprises, divided between the local church budget, the medical service of the mission, our station school, with one full quarter going to missionary work beyond our own immediate vicinity."

And the question arises: Shall our support reveal our devotion to that for which our Lord instituted his church, viz., To give the Good News of his saving power to those who are perishing without it? If we will but practice the principles of personal stewardship and the plain teaching of our Lord as to self-denial in his name, we can face 1933 with the hope of recovery and with a faith that knows no defeat. Both in our personal lives and in the work of the church, we must obey the deepest impulses of our Christian faith during this difficult time. Let us determine, by the help of God, that "the line shall not break where I stand."

These facts and sentiments, and many others of similar character, are contained in a leaflet issued by our American Board, a number of which any SUN reader or pastor can have, without cost, upon request to the Mission Secretary.

MISSIONARY PROGRAM.

THE CHURCH AND INTERNATIONAL LIFE.
(Missionary Society Program.)

Prepared by Miss Mabel E. Swift, in the Missionary Herald for April:

Worship Approach.

Hymn—"The Whole Wide World for Jesus."

Readings—The vision of the ages. The hope of the prophets (Isa. 2:14); The hope of Christ (Jno. 10:15-16; 17:19-21.)

The vision and purpose of today: "The great internationalism is the world mission of Christianity. The tens of thousands of missionaries, as ambassadors, interpreters, and mediators, are doing more than any other one factor to throw out strands of understanding, friendship, and unselfish collaboration between the peoples of Asia, Africa, and Latin America on the one hand, and those of Europe, North America, and Australasia on the other."—John R. Mott, in Present Day Summons.

The final victory. (Rev. 21:23-26.)

Hymn—"In Christ There Is No East or West."

Discussion.

(Based on two quotations from Basil Mathews' "Roads to the City of God.")

1. "To get a world voice, to exercise a world influence, the Christian forces must share a world fellowship. The demand thus made for international cooperation is immediately obvious. . . . No enterprise is actually and manifestly more international in its make-up than that of the world-wide expansion of Christianity." (pp. 102-103.)

How does the church share in world fellowship?

(a) Through our missionaries. (If possible, read a personal letter from a missionary on the field, and consider how this brings about a better understanding.)

(b) Through the church's treatment of students from other lands. (What is the usual welcome given these students into our churches and social life?)

(c) Through World Peace. (Discuss the stand of the church on such subjects as peace, disarmament, war-debts, etc. Are these within the scope of the church?)

2. "Our Lord's thought and action, the teaching of his apostles, and the fact that the church, as the body of Christ, is a community transcending race, show that the different peoples are created by God to bring each its peculiar gift to his city, so that all may enhance its glory by the rich diversities of their varying contributions. The spirit which is eager to 'bear one another's burdens and thus fulfill the law of Christ, should permeate all interracial relationships. Any discrimination against human beings on the ground of color or race, any selfish exploitation and any oppression of man by man, is, therefore, a denial of the teaching of Jesus." (pp. 69-70.)

Discuss the above quotation and its significance in relation to the church and international life. Closing Hymn—"The Church's One Foundation." (The three stanzas define the strength of the church, give her a world-wide challenge and close with the promise of victory.)

SEAWELL MEMORIAL PROGRAM.

At the February meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Durham Main Street Christian Church, a memorial service was held for Mrs. Sarah Linda Seawell. After a prayer of gratitude for her life of Christian service, the Society voted to create a memorial in her honor.

She was a life member of the Missionary Society, and one of our most devoted and active members.

Her life was one of real sacrificial service. She reared a large family, having been left a widow when the children were small, but they now rise up and call her blessed. She also cared for her aged parents in a most noble way. In her neighborhood she was an "angel of mercy." She would divide her time, which seemed so much needed at home, and take suitable nourishment to the sick—both white and black were the recipients of her kindness.

She came to us in her riper years, but took as active part in all her church enterprises as her strength would permit. She had a real passion for missions, and was one of our most loyal and liberal workers. We shall miss her from our midst.

These are the times when we need more such women, and at the request of the leader, the Society rose and resolved to try to attain the high degree of Christian life for which our departed sister strove. Sympathy and prayers are extended the family in this great loss.

Mrs. W. B. Bagwell, one of our most faithful and beloved members, read an appropriate and beautiful poem as a part of our memorial program.

ANNUITY FUND FOR MINISTERS.

By HERBERT D. RUGG.

An increase of $300,389 in the assets of the Annuity Fund for Congregational and Christian Ministers last year is announced in the annual report of the general secretary, the Rev. Dr. Lewis T. Reed.

The assets of the fund now are $5,169,320. In addition to its own assets the fund is benefited by the income of the Pilgrim Memorial Fund, a permanent endowment amounting to $4,980,763 plus a profit reserve of $325,897. The entire resources of the Annuity Fund in the two investment accounts total approximately ten and a half million dollars. The assets of the Pilgrim Memorial Fund showed an increase of $3,454 last year.

The Annuity Fund, organized in 1914, has become the central feature in the ministerial pension system of the united denomination. It is conducted on a voluntary membership basis. Its membership with 102 accessions last year showed a net growth of 68 and reached to 2,714, a new high figure.

The number of annuitants receiving pensions increased during the year by 50 to 728. Payments to annuitants were $224,005.

"The investments upon which rest to a large degree the hopes of the members of the Annuity Fund for the financial security of their advanced years," Dr. Reed states, "have endured the storm of present conditions with exceptional success. They have been watched by the treasurer, William T. Boulton, and by the investment committee with scrupulous care and with the utmost regard for safety. Where the prospect of loss of principal or income has been imminent, securities have been sold. This policy has minimized losses which otherwise might have been very substantial."

The present market value of the investments of the Annuity Fund, distinct from the Pilgrim memorial Fund, including mortgages at their face value show a shrinkage of only 10.58 per cent from the original cost.

"This shrinkage," Dr. Reed says, is regarded as very slight in view of the fact that a large portion of the funds came during the boom years and had to be invested at a time when securities were at their peak."

The investments of the Pilgrim Memorial Fund "purchased in large part between 1920 and 1922, when bonds of the highest grade were at a low price," have a present market value only 3.42 per cent below their cost. The income of the Pilgrim Memorial Fund turned over to the Annuity Fund last year and applied toward the dues of the members was $263,750—$7,000 more than was turned over the previous year.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

EASTERN VIRGINIA YOUTH FELLOWSHIP CONFERENCE.

Next Saturday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock at the Christian Church, Suffolk, Va., young people from the Eastern Virginia Conference will gather for a serious consideration of what young people can do to make the world Christian. A fine program has been arranged, and outstanding leaders will be present to share with the young people themselves in discussions and making of plans.

This is a wonderful opportunity for the young people of the conference to share with each other the best they have learned in Christian service. It is the first conference of its kind to be held in this area, and there seems to be great interest among the young people throughout the conference. It is expected that practically all of the churches will be represented by two delegates. In order that every church may be benefited, and the group not be too large for real work, only two delegates are requested from each church.

Every pastor, superintendent and young people's leader, as well as young people themselves, should be sure that the two delegates are in Suffolk Saturday morning, and that they stay through Sunday. The program for the two-days' session follows:

SATURDAY, MARCH 25, 1933.

"I WAS ELECTED."

Many a youth has said with some degree of enthusiasm, "I was elected." It may be that he or she was elected as president of his class, fraternity, or some other position in youth organizations. He is delighted by his election. Perhaps he would say that it is family pride, and not conceit, which swells his chest.

Many people have been elected to office in the Sunday Schools, the Christian Endeavors and churches who felt that it was an honor to be elected, and who let it stop at that. They never learned that the honor comes from the service which they render after election. To be superintendent of a Sunday School carries with it honor only if the person elected performs the duties which are his by virtue of his office. The Christian Endeavor officer who does nothing about his job retards the progress of his society and brings disgrace upon himself, even if he does not realize it. Any person elected to office should either serve or resign. To do less hinders the organization that gave him the opportunity, and brings disgrace upon the individual who fails to function.

This may sound like preaching, but it certainly has some fundamental facts in it. This writer is convinced after hard experience that the reason our Sunday Schools and churches grow so slowly is that those who are elected do not perform their duties as they should or could.

It may chance that some of you who read this are among those who have been elected, by your church or some other organization to an office which carries with it some degree of honor, but have not done the service which will bring honor to the office and to you. You may have what seems to you a good reason. However, I believe you will agree with me that unless you are willing to put into your office some service you are not being fair either to the people who elected you, to yourself, or to the Kingdom of Christ.

At this writing the people of the United States are delighted with the new President. There is just one reason why they are so delighted, and that is, he is putting into his office the best of his abilities and is doing it with enthusiasm. If young people and church people will follow his excellent example and use the best of their abilities in accomplishing the task to which they have been directed by election, there is no question but what our churches will grow.

It is not enough to say, "I was elected;" we must be able to say, "I have done my best."

Suggestions for Advance Preparation.

1. Appoint someone to lead a discussion on the causes of hatred and ill-will.
2. Ask another person to lead a discussion on the causes of ill-will between races, social classes and nations.
3. Have some rather mature person speak on the effect of hatred on individuals and on groups.
4. Have another brief discussion on how we may overcome ill-will between individuals and groups.

Love and enmity represent two extremes in human relationships. The spirit of each is contrary to the other, and they cannot abide in the same human heart without constant struggle that wrecks the personality of the individual.

We have seen that much of the enmity between young people results from superficial causes and could be overcome. The situation was different in the life of Jesus. It took true greatness for him to love his enemies. No man has even suffered more at the hands of his opponents than the Master, yet he said: "Love your enemies, do good to them that hate you, bless them that curse you, pray for them that despitefully use you."

Love does not "keep a memorandum of the injuries received, but forgets, forgives, and tries to help." E. R.

Unlock the door this evening
 And let the gate swing wide;
 Let all who ask for shelter
 Come, speedily inside.
 What if your house be narrow?
 What if your house be small?
 There is a Guest whose coming
 Will glorify it all.

We want men who love God supremely and souls next. We want men, not only willing to do, but also to suffer, the will of God; men of faith who can afford to despise the world and look forward to the surpassing glory in store.—J. Hudson Taylor.

JESUS MINISTERING TO JEWS AND GENTILES.

LESSON I—APRIL 2, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Other sheep have I which are not of this fold; them also must I bring, and they shall hear my voice; and they shall become one flock, one shepherd."—John 10:16.

LESSON TEXT:—Mark 7:24-37.

And He Could Not Be Hid.

Jesus was trying to get away from the multitudes so that he and his disciples could get a rest and also have an opportunity to talk things over, but it was impossible to be hid. If his spirit is really in a person's life it is bound to manifest itself. Vital religion will express itself.

The Woman Was a Greek.

A foreigner had a daughter who had an unclean spirit, and she besought Jesus that he would cast out the devil out of her daughter. There is that in Jesus which attracts people of all races to him. He is universal in his appeal. And this is especially true when people are in need. They turn to him. There is an instinctive hunger for him. And there is always a response on the part of Jesus when people, no matter of what race or creed, call upon him in sincerity and in truth.

A Test of Faith.

Jesus' words to the Syrophenecian woman seem rather harsh to us, especially in their English form and in the printed page. But the words which he used throw a new light upon them, and we may be sure that the way in which Jesus said them made all the difference in the world. It was rather a test of faith. For a time he seemed indifferent. It was necessary for the woman to be sincere and Jesus brought this out. It is so with us. There are times when God seems to be indifferent to our needs and to our entreaties, but he is nigh to all that call upon him in sincerity and in truth.

The Reward of Faith.

"And when she was come to her house, she found the devil gone out and her daughter laid upon the bed." The cure was effected at a distance. A mother praying for her boy can reach across space. When we bring the needs of our loved ones and others to Jesus he can do his work by the word of his power. This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith.

The Cure of the Deaf and Dumb Man.

Friends brought to Jesus one who was deaf and had an impediment in his speech, and interceded in his behalf. Jesus took him aside from the multitude—he did not want to become known simply as a wonder worker. He put his fingers in his ears—he aroused hope and faith in the man. He spit and touched his tongue—he used material and physical means at hand. He looked up to heaven—he introduced the divine factor. He said, "be opened," and straightway his ears were opened, and the string of his tongue was loosed, and he spoke plain again. Jesus opens the ears of men deaf to the voice of the Spirit of God and enables them again to hear. He looses the tongues of those who have not been speaking of him.

He Doeth All Things Well.

In these words, the people of Decapolis unwittingly characterized the work of Jesus. "He doeth all things well." There is nothing shoddy about his work. We who are his disciples should try to be worthy of him in this respect.

THE COUNTRY CHURCH.

Most country churches are one-room buildings. And many of them will remain so—others will not. Some of those which are not remodded could and should be—it is these that I have in mind as I write.

Our homes need repairs, additions or alterations and they get them. Perhaps not at first, but eventually, in normal times. Sanitation and modern invention in life make us believe that we must. Electricity, aqueduct water, with the latest improvements depending on each, add to our comfort and enjoyment. It is right that we do these things, but why not more for our church, also? It is quite likely we have a furnace, perhaps electricity, if it is available, and then what? Is it not true that after that we think only of repairs as the necessary outlay? Folks, I am sure we have made a mistake in so thinking. A building is not all that is needed, but it may be a greater help.

A country church should be a vital part of the community life. If it is relegated to second place or lower, the community is in a bad way. Therefore, be sure that the church does not get into a disgraceful state of repair. Keep the exterior looking well. Good paint, well-kept steps and porches, and fine looking lawns and shrubbery in season. The inside, too, should be watched. Paper and plaster coming off looks bad and distracts from the service. A good organ or piano, according to convenience and preference, with plenty of hymn books in usable condition. Pews, or without cushions, according to the kind, and somebody whose business it is to keep the interior clean.

A church according to the above plan will encourage worship. However, to encourage real teaching in the Sunday School and to assist its growth, something else is needed. Where the church is and must remain, for a time at least, in a one-room building, movable partitions or hanging curtains will greatly benefit the work done for Christ and his kingdom. Each department at least should be by itself or on opposite corners of the room from one another. But it is very fine where a room or rooms can be made in the gallery or basement for some of the classes. There is much to be said of the possibilities along this line.

Advertising or publicity can be used with profit if done with proper decorum, and not cheapening God's house. An outside board with at least the church name and denomination and the hours of services. An inside bulletin board with notices of all church activities for each person to read, in advance, of the coming events.

This article has been written with a desire to help the country church. Twenty-one years of ministry to country churches have shown me their needs.—Rev. Walter F. Lewis in Wesleyan Methodist.

LEADERSHIP.

A review of Professor William Heard Kilpatrick's new book, "Education and the Social Crisis," has this definition of leadership: "The proffering of any step or movement which does in fact advance the process under way." Think of that! This means that a large proportion of the people can share in one or another kind of leadership. It is a matter of quality. The distinctive mark of leadership is progressiveness.

Under this thought provoking definition we see that it is not the size of the crowd which is following a man that makes him a leader but the direction it is going. There are many who have control of large groups, who cannot be called leaders. They are disorganizers; disrupters and drags.—Exchange.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

"The opening of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."—Psalm 119:130.

"I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord."—Psalm 116:13.

MONDAY.

JESUS' REVELATION OF GOD.

"No man cometh unto the Father, but by me.

"If ye had known me ye should have known my Father also; and from henceforth ye know him and have seen him.

"I am in the Father and the Father in me."—Jno. 14:6-10.

This revelation of God in Jesus is the real center of the Christian religion and our Christian faith. Everything in our faith and trust must be brought to that test. Christ is our visible God. "He that hath seen hath seen the Father." To see Jesus this way eliminates all theory about God, and makes it not only possible, but real to see him and know him, and love him.

Thus as we read and know Christ, know his way of life, his attitudes, his spirit, his ethics, we come to know God, "whom to know is everlasting life."

John Wesley expressed it beautifully in the following: "Let my religion be plain, artless, simple, meekness, temperance, patience, faith, and love be my highest gifts."

He who lives this way grows into a sympathy with the human brotherhood and all human need, like Christ, reveals God.

Prayer—Our Father, give to us the spirit, feelings and scope of Jesus for humanity. Lead us to a dedication of our lives to thy church and Christlike deeds.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

ENDURANCE PRODUCES CHARACTER.

"We glory in tribulations also; knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience experience; and experience hope."—Rom. 5:3-4.

"He that endureth to the end shall be saved." Matt. 10:22.

This Scripture has a large significance as a way of life. To endure trials and troubles as seeing God the invisible is a law in the upbuilding of character as undisputable as the law of gravitation or the law of the harvest; it as large as life itself; it is the law of harvest in the moral and spiritual realm. Character is the accumulation of an every-day investment through the period of life. It cannot be obtained as a mushroom springing up over night; it cannot be produced by a clever trick; it comes from endurance and fortitude. Booker T. Washington once said: "Character is the sum of all we struggle against."

Prayer—Our Father, we pray thee, who art able to make us all that thou wilt, to give us power to insist, at every step of life, upon a discipline and obedience to thy divine laws, and work thou out in our lives the ripe fruit of a full and good soul.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"We know that all things work together for good to them that love God."

"For whom he did foreknow he also did pre-destinate to be conformed to the image of his Son."—Rom. 8:28, 29.

This text is usually thought of as hard to believe. There is too much of life which does not seem good to us to admit this in our weak faith.

Our fault is to think it claims too much. We read into it a superficial optimism which does not face the hard and tragic facts of sorrow and of sin.

If we read this text rightly it seems that God is a partner in this life and we have his aid and interest in everything. The comfort of it is: we look life full in the face, with all its tragedy and evil, we feel God in us and this nerves and energizes us for our greatest endeavors.

Prayer—O Lord, our God, in the unfaith of our times we need this work of thine. Give us a consciousness that we stand within the presence of the most high at all times. Thou didst not fashion this world in sadness, but thou didst give it to us for good. That good must be ours if thou are leading still. Teach us to bend all our efforts to make every part of it to which we are related and with which we have to do, sane, tolerable and good. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

GRATITUDE IN HARD TIMES.

"I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content."—Phil. 4:11.

"Be content with such things as ye have."—Heb. 13:5.

I walked a mile with pleasure,
She scattered all the way,
But I am none the wiser
For all she had to say.

I walked a mile with sorrow,
And ne'er a word said she,
But, oh, the things I learned from her
When sorrow walked with me.

—Anon.

Thank God for poverty
That makes and keeps us free.
And let's us go our unobtrusive way,
Glad of the sun and rain,
Upright, serene, humane,
Contented with the fortune of a day.

—Dodd, Meade and Co.

Prayer—O Lord, our Father, we confess our weakness to want the comforts of life, and to be discontented when we have them not. Give unto us this day thy blessing to see thee and thy way, and to subordinate our earthly desires to the higher ways of Christian living.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

PUTTING AFFECTIONS INTO LOVE.

"Be kindly affectioned, one to another with brotherly love."—Rom. 12:10.

"In other words," said Dr. Leacock, recently, "learn to like people as well as to love them in a formal sense."

Would you know how to interpret this Scripture better? Turn to the 16th chapter and there read Paul's catalogue of heroes and friendships, and there we learn of Paul's outrushing affectionate likings for folks. Folks were a genuine joy to him. This affection took the form of a genuine desire to help others and to serve them at a sacrificial cost.

This reminds us that we may love our fellowmen in an official or superficial way, and still not like them. There is so much in others we think we dislike. It is impossible to help this unless we are actuated by God's spirit and look only for the good. How much good we really do find in others when we look for it—good that we really like! If we do not like folks we are missing half the fun of life and we miss the true Christian attitude and relationship to men.

Prayer—O Lord, our Father, we confess our infirmities in love. Help us to love folks so they may fill our souls for good, and may we all come to like and love one another better.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

SPlicing THE CURRENT.

"How shall Pharaoh hearken unto me?"—Read Exodus 6:28—7:5.

King George's speech was to be broadcast to all North America through fifty-nine radio stations, and the current for this epochal event was to flow through one set of wires energized by one generator. Just before King George began, some one in the Columbia broadcasting rooms tripped over the wires and broke them. Instantly Harold Vivian, the chief control operator, grasped the broken ends, and for twenty minutes literally spliced them with his body, allowing the current to flow through him, till the break was repaired. The success of the tremendous operation is due to his grit.

A Monarch far greater than King George has a message for all the world, and he is trying to get it through. The wires are sadly broken, however, by human folly and sin. Splice the wires, ye Christian preachers, ye noble teachers. Splice the wires, ye anxious parents and relatives and friends!

It may cost something. The current may flow through our own hearts. But what of that, if only it gets through to other men?

Prayer—Thy voice is as potent as ever, O thou living Word! But thou canst speak through the lives of believers only. Let each of us say bravely and promptly: "Here am I, use me."—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

FAKE JEWELS.

"He that walketh uprightly walketh surely, but he that perverteth his ways shall be known."—Read Prov. 10:1-9.

Modern science has found many ways to imitate all kinds of jewels, and the imitations are so perfect as to deceive all but the expert; but a jeweler is never deceived by them; he can tell them almost at a glance.

There are said to be very easy tests—if you know how; as that glass diamonds are warm to the tongue while real diamonds are icy cold, or that artificial pearls feel smooth when rubbed across the teeth, while real pearls feel rough.

This ease of discovery is not confined to fake jewels. Set it down on your heart that any dishonesty is quickly and surely exposed. No one will long be held to be more learned than he really is, more kindy, more generous, more truly religious. Character will out. Paste convicts itself. He that perverteth his ways shall be known.

Prayer—But we thank thee, O God, that thou thyself art the truth, and that all who walk with thee in truth are sure to share thy permanence and power.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

All that Jesus did for his church was but the expansion and unfolding of his love. Traveling to Bethlehem, I see Love incarnate. Tracking his steps as he went about doing good, I see Love laboring. Visiting the house of Bethany, I see Love sympathizing. Standing by the grave of Lazarus, I see Love weeping. At Gethsemane, I see Love sorrowing. Passing on to Calvary, I see Love suffering, bleeding, and dying. The whole scene of his life was but an unfolding of the deep, wonderful, and precious mystery of "Redeeming Love."—McCheyne.

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

PERSONAL PEACE.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, through the power of the Holy Spirit."—Romans 15:13.

Every day I am more convinced of a Christian's joy and peace. The joy and peace that a real Christian has is beyond human understanding. It is something quite inspiring. It is something to be sought after as the one pearl of great price. To find it one should give everything else besides. Why did Jesus say all those beautiful things in the Upper Room in that farewell address? "These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full."

With what things we are too often filled today! The tiny little frets and fears that eat away the full bounty of our joy! Little self-pityings and sighings that only serve to set aside the mighty peace that passes all understanding, that peace that moves steadily onward against all odds. Do you know what I mean? They tell us that standing on the shores of Greenland one may see great white mountains of icebergs moving down toward the Gulf stream unhindered by the mighty winds and whipping waves and spray that beat against them. The reason for that, only a very small portion of the iceberg is above the water—the mass of it lying deep in the bosom of the ocean. Shallow, light barks are whipped to the shore, and are soon forgotten. They have no weight of calm, unruffled power beneath.

Instead of being filled with joy and peace so many lives today are filled with mental agony, fear, despair, and turmoil; strivings that are purely selfish and thoroughly un-Christian, worries that mock and mar their lives and belittle the Lord the claim of trust. All worried about some silly remark made by another, or some fear of what may be tomorrow, never really and truly casting our cares upon him who careth for us.

Dear Lord and Father of mankind,
Forgive our feverish ways;
Re-clothe us in our rightful mind;
In purer lives thy service find,
In deeper reverence, praise.

Drop thy still dews of quietness,
Till all our strivings cease;
Take from our souls the strain and stress,
And let our ordered lives confess
The beauty of thy peace!

In our text Paul is writing to the Christians in Rome. He is writing in this text one of earth's greatest drafts on the spiritual treasures of God, to the effect that they are to be filled with joy, peace and abundant hope on the one condition, "in believing," and even in that they are to have the help and power of the Holy Spirit.

I. "Now the God of hope fill you." Let no other gods fill you. Bow not down to them, nor serve them! Let the God of hope fill you. He will fill you with joy. For mental anguish he will give you joy; for worry about tomorrow, he will give you joy; for the present fear and sorrow and sighing, he will give you joy. Find a man with clean heart, just acts, kind words, constructive service, and listen to the song on his lips. Paul and Silas, without this world's goods, imprisoned by angry officers, bound by chains and beaten with rods, singing! Bunyan, stripped of all, thrown into a dungeon, writing the royal road of Christian into the very shining gates of the City Celestial! Fanny Crosby, blind from six months old, singing: "There are heights of joy that I may not reach till I rest in peace with thee." She is said to have written more than three thousand songs and there is joy in them all.

Not only does Paul's draft on God call for joy, but peace also. The twin graces, like goodness and mercy in David's Psalm, to "follow me all the days of my life"—joy and peace. "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." Thus Jesus gave his disciples both joy and peace. Now Paul is drawing a draft for us for joy and peace, that we may "abound in hope," that all despair may be banished from our lives. It dishonors God for a Christian to be empty of joy, and unfilled with peace. But how are we to have it?

II. "In believing." In believing what? This is not a dissertation in Coue. It is a preaching of the Gospel of Christ. When Paul says "believing" there comes before the eyes of his hearer the Cross of Christ. Paul believed something very definite—and that something was Jesus Christ and him crucified! "For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." Again he says: "For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel; not with wisdom of words, lest the Cross of Christ should be made of none effect. For the preaching of the Cross is to them that perish, foolishness; but unto us which are saved, it is the power of God."

The Romans must have known what Paul meant when he said, "in believing," for in this selfsame letter he has already said: "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shall believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. For the Scripture saith, Whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed."

Paul, in writing to young Timothy concerning his afflictions, adds: "Nevertheless I am not ashamed; for I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day." Paul put his trust in Christ Jesus. He committed his ways unto him, and throughout the letters of Paul is found abundant evidence of that abiding peace and joy which was given as the world does not give. To great extent Christians are seeking to short-cut to joy and peace without the bother of believing in the Lord Jesus Christ.

Peace, perfect peace, in this dark world of sin?
The blood of Jesus whispers peace within.

Peace, perfect peace, by thronging duties pressed?
To do the will of Jesus—this is rest.

Peace, perfect peace, our future all unknown?
Jesus we know, and he is on the throne.

But how often we may come to that place in our religious experience where we may think our belief is about fifty per cent doubt. Like the poor, humble father with the sick son, before Jesus we cry: "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief." And Jesus did just that very thing, and healed the child. Will he likewise help us?

III. "Through the power of the Holy Spirit." If we had to depend on the world for help with this business of believing we should be quite unable to achieve it. If we had ourselves only to look to we should be as Paul admits he was:

"When I would do good, evil was present." If we had to depend on our foes, or even our friends—even a mother cannot believe for her son—we would still fail to have the joy and peace, and still would we fail to abound in hope. But such is not the case. To this promise is added: "Through the power of the Holy Spirit." The father of the sick son was helpless in himself. He was still helpless when he had the disciples trying to help him. And even Jesus showed the disciples how God's power was necessary, for he said: "This kind can come forth by nothing, but by prayer and fasting."

We shall not be able to short-cut to the goal of peace and joy! We shall never reach it until we have it from God, through the power of the Holy Spirit. We must seek the power of the Holy Spirit by communion with God—"prayer and fasting"—says Jesus.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

We had a very pleasant visitor some weeks ago. A good old mother who had been interested in the Orphanage for many years, but was on her first visit to see the institution that she had loved all these years and had delighted in helping. The matron showed her the rooms where the little children live, also the kitchen, dining room, pantries, etc.

After she had looked the buildings over, she said: "This is my first visit here. I have wanted to come for a long time. I have been contributing all these years to help the Christian Orphanage. I do not regret one dollar I have given."

We are always happy to have people visit us and see how their money is spent that they send here to help us care for these little children. And it is a joy to us to know that they are pleased when they come. When you invest your money here, you are investing it in young life—boys and girls without a chance in life. It is a fine investment. CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

John Bunyan tells us that his great guilt immensely helped him read his Bible right. The Bible was written for the salvation of guilty sinners alone; and no man, learned or simple, has ever read the Bible aright, or ever will read it aright, unless he comes to it as a guilty sinner.—Alexander Whyte.

worth, Lincolnshire, England, where his father was rector, June 17, 1703. He had two brothers and sixteen sisters. He received his M. A. degree from Oxford University in 1726 and was elected a fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford. The same year he was appointed Greek lecturer and moderator of classes in this school. He became curate to his father about the same time, and in 1728 was ordained to the priesthood in the English Church. While a tutor at Oxford he began those religious associations from which Methodism ultimately sprang.

In 1735 he and his brother, Charles, went to Georgia—Charles as secretary to General Oglethorpe and he as a missionary to the Indians and Colonists. On their voyage across the Atlantic, John was deeply impressed with the religious views of some Moravians who were on board, and especially at the calmness and self-possession during a violent storm. In a conversation with their preacher he was asked if he had the "witness in himself." "Does the Spirit of God bear witness with your spirit that you are a child of God?" Wesley was disturbed by these inquiries and smitten with inward misgivings. While in Georgia he fell in love with the daughter of the chief magistrate of Savannah, whom he wished to marry, but upon advice of the Moravian bishop and elders, to whom he submitted the matter, he withdrew from her. She soon married another man, and Wesley refused her admission to the communion, whereupon her husband raised an action at law. Wesley, finding Savannah no suitable place for him, and, as he said, "shaking the dust off his feet," returned to England, having resided in America less than two years.

Upon his return to the homeland he sought out the Moravians in London and joined them. He received much spiritual comfort from them; for on May 24, 1738, while one was reading Luther's preface to the book of Romans, "he experienced such a change of religious feeling that, notwithstanding all his previous zeal, he ever afterwards regarded this as the time of his conversion." After this he visited the Moravians at Herrnhut, Germany.

Returning to England again, he became associated with his old college companion, George Whitefield, whose example of open-air preaching he began to follow in 1739. From this time on the history of Wesley is the history of Methodism.

In 1740 he quit the Moravians because he found that he differed from them on important points of doctrine. In the same year also came the great doctrinal breach between him and his long-time friend and fellow-minister, Whitefield, which separated the Methodists into two sections, Calvinistic and Arminian.

No man ever worked harder to promote a cause than did John Wesley. He was a great evangelist. From about 1740 until near the close of his life March 2, 1791, he traveled on horseback averaging about forty miles a day, and preached from two to four times daily. In addition, he did a great amount of writing.

It was not the purpose of Wesley to establish a new religious organization. He saw the cold, formal, lifeless condition of the Church of England, and he hoped to reform it—to inject into it some real, heartfelt religion, some zeal, some religious fervor. He loved the established church. He said a few months before he died: "I declare once more that I live and die a member of the Church of England, and that none who regard my advice will ever separate from it." He died in London.—L. The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance. In size, 3 3/4 x 4 1/2 inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and pronouncing text.

The edition on India paper is ideal, and we know of no better gift at the price than one in the finer bindings.

The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller. It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its opaque quality and unusual tensile strength. One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together.

The size, 2 1/2 x 4 1/2 inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

OBITUARIES

TUCK.

Miss Nora Tuck daughter of the late Dr. John and Flora Apt Tuck, was born May 3, 1883, and died January 8, 1933, at her home in Virgilina, Va. She is survived by one brother, L. O. Tuck, of Louisville, Ky., one sister, Miss Bessie Tuck, of Richmond, Va., two aunts, Mrs. A. Hayes and Mrs. Ida Tuck, of Virgilina, Va., one niece, Mrs. Keister Adams, of Winchester, Va., and several other nieces and nephews. Since the death of her sister, Mrs. Carey Brooks, in 1931, Miss Nora had lived on in the Tuck home, caring for the son of Mrs. Brooks, to whom she was very much devoted.

For years she had been a consistent member of the M. E. Church. At the request of the family, the funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by Revs. J. B. Pettus of the M. E. Church, and E. R. Harris, of the Baptist Church. The service was held at the home, Monday, January 10th, at 11 A. M., and burial was in the family plot in Union Cemetery.

A large number of relatives and friends were present. The floral designs were many and beautiful. Her church, missionary society, and the entire community have sustained a great loss, but there is comfort in thinking of her useful life and heavenly reward, and in the hope of meeting her again.

DAVID B. ATKINSON.

Within a few days Piedmont College has met a heavy loss in the death of Prof. Daniel B. Atkinson. Today the executive committee of the trustees desire to express their sense of that loss and to assure Mrs. Atkinson and her daughters of a deep sympathy with her and their personal sorrow.

Dr. Atkinson had come to Piedmont from distinguished and devoted service in other schools. There he had given crowded years of effort to the education of boys and girls, young men and women. He had given them unsparingly the best that he had; and his best included a keen and just mind, careful scholarship, high ideals of truth, honesty and duty, and a constant aim to awaken young people to the realities of character and social usefulness—of a character which is useless unless it be social and of a social service whose best contribution is high endeavor

What he had given to other schools he gave to Piedmont; and here he rounded out a singularly noble life

TOMLINSON.

Mrs. Ruby Freeman Tomlinson, daughter of the late Felix Henry and Mrs. Rosa Freeman, was born June 6, 1905, and died in Stuart Circle Hospital, February 26, 1933, after much intense suffering.

Early in life she gave her heart to God and united with Burton's Grove Church, and was happy to work in and for it.

On July 10, 1929, she was united in marriage to Charles Tomlinson, Jr., and to this union were born two children. Mrs. Tomlinson had established her home and started her family, to which she was devoted, but God saw fit to remove her from all that was dear to her on earth, to a home not made with hands.

The funeral was from the home of her sister, Mrs. F. E. Branch, and the interment was in Waverly Cemetery, being conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. W. A. Orser.

She is survived by her husband and children, her mother, Mrs. Rosa Freeman, four sisters: Mrs. Thos. Presson, Mrs. F. E. Branch, Mrs. Claude Brittle, and Mrs. Willie Laine, and a host of friends.

God comfort those who mourn. C. E. GERRINGER.

J. FRANK TURNER.

Whereas, our heavenly Father hath seen fit, in his infinite wisdom, to call from time into eternity our friend and brother, Mr. J. Frank Turner, who was a good and faithful member of Liberty Springs Christian Church, therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to the will of him who doeth all things well.

2. That we seek to emulate his worthy example in all walks of life.

3. That we extend our sympathy and love to the family.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to "The Christian Sun," a copy to the family, and a copy be entered upon the church record.

SEELY.

Our community was greatly shocked and saddened February 10th, when it was announced that Mrs. Paulyne Anderson Seely had suddenly slipped from among us.

She was born in Dendron, Va., November 19, 1899, making her age 33 years, 2 months, and 22 days.

On December 26, 1922, she was happily married to Walter Clifton Seely, and to this union were born three children: one daughter and two sons.

Mrs. Seely was educated in Wakefield High School, where she and her husband were classmates, and then she attended State Teachers College, Farmville, Va., after which she taught two years in the public school.

Early in life she united with Wakefield Christian Church, and remained until the end in which she enjoyed working when and where she could.

The funeral services were conducted from the home, Sunday, February 12th, by the writer, her pastor, assisted by Revs. W. A. Orser and F. C. Lester, in the presence of a large gathering of sorrowing relatives and friends, and the body was laid to rest in the Wakefield Cemetery.

She is survived by her parents, Mr.

and Mrs. W. L. Anderson, Richmond, Va., her husband and children, one brother, Mr. C. A. Anderson, Wakefield, one sister, Mrs. W. G. Wood, Richmond.

May God richly bless those who mourn for her.

Fewer Millionaires in Britain and Ireland.—

The announcement that there are fewer millionaires than formerly in the United Kingdom causes little surprise. Indeed, the surprising fact is that there are only thirty-nine less to report in 1932 than in the preceding year. For purposes of calculation all persons having an income of over 50,000 pounds are deemed to be millionaires. During the fiscal year just passed these numbered 523. For the year 1931 there were 562.

No Beer for Virginia.—

Unless there is a decided change of opinion on the part of Virginia Solons there will be no special session of the legislature called to legalize the sale of beer in that State. Governor Pollard has made the statement that he would not call the session unless two-thirds of the members favored such a call. A poll taken by a Richmond paper showed that fifty-nine members were definitely opposed to the calling of the extra session, while only nineteen were recorded in its favor. The poll showed very conclusively that the Governor had accurately gauged the sentiment of the assemblymen when he refused to take action.

Loans of Over $2 Billions.—

Up to March 21st, the records of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation show that that body has loaned during the period of the depression a total of $2,083,750,080. Up to the present time repayments have amounted to $407,368,772. The larger part of the money was loaned to banks, railroads, insurance companies and other financial institutions, $1,225,105,613 going to banks alone, while $359,885,015 went to the railroads. It is possible that before the banks throughout the United States have opened this vast sum will be still further increased. Nearly $700 millions have been authorized for loans which have not been disbursed.

The Stratoplane.—

Professor Piccard, the pioneer explorer of the Stratosphere, the region above our ordinary atmosphere, in an address before the National Geographic Society prophesied a few weeks ago that Americans would soon travel from Washington to Paris in six hours by stratoplane. It would be easy, he said, to make five hundred miles an hour in this upper region and there would be no clouds, storms or interference of any kind to contend with. There would likely come later interplanetary travel by rocket, but this was not yet in the offing. The stratoplane, however, he regarded as an assured fact. It would ordinarily pursue its course fifty thousand feet above the earth and would have no difficulty in keeping in touch with what was going on below by means of radio. When we reflect that ordinary airplane travel would have been regarded thirty years ago as more fantastic than the suggestion of the British scientist, we may well wonder what can possibly happen next.—Christian Evangelist.

Japan Leaves the League of Nations.—

After thirteen years, Tokio quits the League, believing "there remains no room for further cooperation." This action was taken on last Monday by the Japanese privy council, meeting at the imperial palace, and notice of the action was transmitted immediately to Geneva, with the approval of the Emperor. The transcript issued from the palace reads: "His majesty has been pleased to commend his government to secede from the League of Nations," due to the disagreement of the empire's policy in support of the Manchukuo government and the opinions of the League. After condemning the League for the attitude taken, the transcript continues: "Nor can the terms laid down in its recommendations ever be of any possible service in securing enduring peace in these regions. The Japanese government has been led to realize the existence of an irreconcilable divergence of views dividing Japan and the League on policies of peace and especially in regard to the fundamental principles to be followed in the establishment of a durable peace in the Far East." The military element has the upper hand in the "flowery kingdom," and there is small chance of a change of attitude on the part of this element.

Undesirable Citizens.—

A recent issue of The American Legion published a list of Chicago citizens who, though possibly not deserving the title "undesirable," were, to say the least, according to its standard, either socialistic or communistic in their thinking, to say nothing of being unpatriotic because they were opposed to war. The list included such folks as Jane Addams, Mrs. Catherine W. McCullough and E. E. Tittle. Dr. R. W. Gammon, writing in the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty, says: "The present condition that holds in the economic order would seem to warrant a good deal of drastic criticisms which most of the folks in the list are competent to give. The opposition of these folks to war is probably based upon such facts as those revealed by David Lawrence in an article appearing in the United States Daily, of which he is the distinguished editor. He estimates the budget of the United States for this year to be $3,500,000,000. Of this sum $2,200,000,000 is directly due to war. This is made up of $1,260,000,000 in interest and sinking fund on the public debt, and $931,000,000 the cost of service for veterans. This leaves $1,369,000,000 for governmental expenses. The army and navy will require of this for maintenance purposes $584,000,000. $141,000,000 is appropriated for public works, $40,000,000 for the District of Columbia and $67,000,000 for the post office deficit, so only $545,000,000 is appropriated for the strictly civil functions of our Government. The papers today report that some of the veterans are memorializing the Government to cut the budget even at the expense of some of the service that is at present being rendered to the veterans. This is good news. So far as we are concerned we stand with the above-named 'undesirable citizens' in seeking a great reduction of war expense."

Currency Standards.—

What are currency standards? Many have asked this question recently, who never before gave it a thought. The American Bankers Association Journal tells us that there are two general groups: those based on some metal and those which are not. Gold and silver have for ages past been the metals used for a metallic basis. Gold has been in most general use in the modern world, and a country has been said to be on the gold standard "when the internal value of its currency is kept at a parity with gold by the maintenance of a free gold market. . . . Gold must be unlimited legal tender." There are three sub-heads under which a "gold standard" may be maintained. "The gold-coin standard is that form wherein the currency may be freely converted into gold coin at a fixed ratio and without maximum limit." The second is the gold-bullion standard and under it "the currency is convertible into gold bullion and vice-versa, at a fixed ratio and without a maximum limit." The third form is the gold-exchange standard. Under this standard "the currency is convertible into some foreign gold-coin standard or gold-bullion standard currency, and vice-versa, at a fixed ratio and without maximum limit in other word, the currency is indirectly convertible into gold. . . . Thus, so long as the dollar . . . remains on a gold basis, currencies kept convertible into dollars . . . are on the gold-exchange standard." As an example, currencies based on sterling exchange were, prior to September 21, 1931, on a gold-exchange basis, but when Great Britain suspended gold payments, currencies on sterling-exchange standard ceased to be on the gold-exchange basis, and fell under the group known as inconvertible systems. A simple inconvertible system is one which is either temporarily or indefinitely separated from a metal base system. There is no attempt to regulate such money's purchasing power. The other subdivision of this latter group is the "managed currency" system. Under this system, money's purchasing power is controlled by the issuing or retiring of currency as prices raise or lower. While it is perfectly possible to have such a currency system, there has always been a tendency to abuse the issuing power, and for this reason conservative financiers are loathe to abandon metal based currencies.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Shall the Mission Period prove our victory or our defeat? The denominations about us are making a determined effort to go forward and not backward in their missionary program.

Three churches in the miramar section of Miami, Fla., are uniting in Sunday evening services. They are the First Congregational Church, the Evangelical Lutheran Church, and the Boulevard Christian Church. At these services outstanding guest speakers are invited, the speaker on March 19th being the well-known author, Clayton Sedgwick Cooper, speaking on the subject: "Some Fundamental Requirements for Prosperity."

It is announced that the women of the North Carolina Conference are to have as a speaker in some of their Rallies, Miss Marie Crosby, formerly a Canadian secretary of missions, and also a missionary for some time in Africa. The Rallies this year are seeking to put on a practical program that will help solve problems, and it is desired and believed that Miss Crosby will help turn some of these problems into privileges and bring messages of real worth through information and inspiration.

An unusually fine program is being prepared for the first annual conference of the Carolina Conference of Congregational and Christian Churches, to be held at Elon College, May 2nd and 3rd. The chairman of the committee is also president of the Conference, Rev. C. H. Rowland. Dr. J. O. Atkinson, by invitation, assisted very materially in valuable suggestions. Dr. W. C. Wicker, Rev. W. T. Scott, Miss Priscilla Chase, Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Rev. Carl Brady, Dr. J. Edward Kirby, and the president of the Eastern Carolina Conference are the committee members.

Alan T. Jones and his splendid church, now known as Williams Chapel, are exceedingly happy that they are soon to finish the erection of their new building. It is a fine portable building which has stood vacant at Anderson, S. C., for a number of years. Recently, when a full acre of land located on a prominent corner near the fine residence district of Waycross was given to this church, an appeal was made to the Building Society for this building, which originally cost $6,000. The request was granted and the removing of the building has been made and it will not be long before another dedication service in Georgia will be announced.

The united "youth movement" in the churches throughout the United States will center its attention the next two years upon various phases of the question: just what is the Christian "mission" or objective in the world today? This general topic has been agreed upon by the special committee on emphases representing the denominational departments engaged in young people's work and the allied interdenominational organizations including Sunday School and religious education agencies, Christian Endeavor, Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. Harry Thomas Stock, D. D., Boston, Mass., national young people's secretary of Congregational and Christian Churches is the chairman.

Rev. Leslie J. Barnette, pastor of the church at Coral Gables, Fla., announces the following interesting series of topics for the Lenten Sunday morning services: "Variations of an Old Theme,"

"Three Great Verbs of the Gospel," "Because," "Christ Could Not be Hid," "A Little Farther," "The Shouting and the Tumult." On Good Friday, there is a service at noon the topic of which will be "The Seven Last Words of Christ." An important feature of the Sunday evening in this church is a Young People's Forum. The creed of this church is: "In the Search for Truth and in the Spirit of Jesus We are United for the Worship of God and the Service of Man."

The 50th annual meeting of the Florida State Conference will be held at Ormond on April 18th-20th. Among the speakers expected at that meeting will be Dr. W. Knighton Bloom of Washington, D. C.; Dr. Edward M. Noyes of Seabreeze, Fla., and Newton Centre, Mass.; Dr. Wm. S. Beard, formerly secretary of the Laymen's Advisory Committee, and Dr. Charles H. Beale, of St. Petersburg, Fla. One of the important features of the program will be a Men's Forum in which the book "Re-thinking Missions" will be reviewed and discussed. An historical address will be given by Rev. Charles DeW. Brower, of Interlachen, on the topic: "Fifty Years of the Florida Congregational Conference."

Mrs. Marion Ballou Fisk, formerly Assistant Superintendent of Ohio, and Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, have been spending the past week in further touring the churches, visiting especially the ladies' societies and speaking in the interest of missionary promotion. They spoke at the Sunday School in Melbourne on the 19th, and in the evening at the Holly Hill Church. Then they visited the Woman's Society and the churches at Jacksonville, Sanford, and Mount Dora, at which place a union meeting was held, the ladies from the churches at Tavares and cTangerine being present. Then similar union meetings were held at Lake Worth and North Miami. In all, they have visited or spoken before delegations representing twenty-seven of the Florida churches. This week Miss Coghill is teaching in the Interdenominational Training School in Miami.

Rev. J. L. Neese reports a most happy experience in revival services recently concluded, after continuing for two weeks, in the Bessemer Presbyterian Church, Greensboro. There were two services a day, the night service being with capacity congregations. The other ministers of the community—Methodist and Baptist—joined in the services. The pastor, Rev. K. L. Whittington, and Brother Neese doing the preaching, the latter also conducting the song service and altar service. It was a great community awakening and many souls professed faith in Christ for the first time. The meeting reached the climax when the High School adjourned for a service, bringing 250 of its students to the meeting, 72 of whom were happily converted and reclaimed, and dedicated their lives to the service of their Lord. There were many accessions to all three of the churches of the community, some 225 professing salvation through Christ. Brother Neese reports that it was good to be there, as the whole community, with its three pastors worked in perfect harmony, as did the principal of the school.

The Nashville Christian Advocate, organ of the Methodist Episcopal Church (South), gives figures for 1932, showing a considerable decrease for missions beyond that of previous years, and then it declares with confidence and hope that which we trust every pastor in our Christian Church and every Sunday School superintendent is declaring. The following are the words, which we trust will apply to our condition as well as to the condition of Methodism: "In the Self-Denial Offering which will culminate on Easter, this record, of which we are not proud, will be redeemed.

Every charge in every conference must and will do better. The Self-Denial idea is 'catching fire' and gathering momentum. Enthusiasm is running high in every quarter. The clamor for 'more envelopes' is insistent—the demand has far out-run the supply. In spite of (or perhaps because of) material difficulties too universal and too well-known to be mentioned, the church has seemingly made up its mind that missions shall no longer languish. We are determined." Our envelopes are going out to the churches, this week, some orders having already come in, which leads us to hope that missions shall no longer languish, and that together we, too, are determined.

Our Baptist friends are conducting a "Crucible Campaign" in their churches. A service of this campaign was put on in the First Baptist Church of Burlington on a recent Sunday. Announcing which service, the Daily Times-News said: "During the morning worship Sunday, members of the First Baptist Church will present fragments of gold and silver. These gifts will be sent to Philadelphia for refining and the proceeds will be applied on the mission debt of the Southern Baptist Convention. Hundreds of the churches of the Southern Baptist Convention are taking part in this 'Crucible Campaign.' One church in the convention has already reported as having received a bushel measure full of gold and silver fragments. Every member of the First Baptist Church of this city is urged to take a part in this worthy campaign by bringing Sunday morning a fragment of gold or silver, watches, chains, rings, lockets, medallions, brooches, pendants, cuff links, bracelets, spectacle frames, cameos, pins, dental scraps, tie clasps, watch fobs, drinking cups, vanity cases." Our Baptist friends realize, with the rest of us, that only through self-denial can we enter into that spirit of missions, which is the spiritual task of the church, a task which no other institution than the church undertakes.

The resignation of Rev. William T. Scott, at Salisbury, N. C., was accepted by the United Church at a meeting held Saturday night, March 18th. For three years he has served this church faithfully and well. He was liked by all. But about the time he came to Salisbury there was a movement in Winston-Salem for the establishment of a United Church there. The leaders of both denominations felt strongly that Mr. Scott was the man to take hold of his new work. For more than a year he has served Winston-Salem and Salem Chapel and recently Belew's Creek, as well as Salisbury. The work grew. Winston-Salem is about to build a new first unit of a well-planned church plant of a very prominent corner in a fine residential district. It became necessary for Mr. Scott to devote so much time to this new and larger project that he felt it necessary to leave Salisbury. This church will depend on the pastor-at-large for two Sundays a month, and the Rev. Arthur Swartz, of Albemarle, for two Sundays a month, to carry on the services. An Easter and pre-Easter series of services is being planned and the people seem determined to work harder than ever to bring to a large success the ministry of this church in the community. They, in appreciation of the faithfulness of Mr. and Mrs. Scott, prepared and offered them a beautiful tribute on the last Sunday he preached there.

Tuesday, March 21, 1933, will long be remembered by the Congregational and Christian ministers of Georgia. It was the first annual gathering for fellowship and counsel. All but three met in Winecoff Hotel, Atlanta, for a full day's session. The whole work of each church was reviewed by the pastors and general discussions were exceedingly valuable. Plans were made by several pastors for the full summer program, including revivals, student summer service, leadership training conferences, etc. The nineteen present all heartily insisted that the same kind of gathering be held about the same time next year. A program of united effort in promoting our second Piedmont Summer Conference, was entered into with zeal and wisdom. This will be held at Piedmont College, July 24th-31st. A very helpful and inspiring part of the program was the devotional services conducted by Dr. Lewis T. Reed at the beginning of each of the three sessions. Dr. W. Knighton Bloom was happily present and contributed largely to the success of the meeting. Dr. F. P. Ensminger and Miss Marguerite Davison, of Alabama, were welcome visitors, as were two Georgia Teck students at the evening session. Following the full day Tuesday, on Wednesday morning, Dr. Bloom, with his staff, Rev. F. P. Ensminger, Miss Marguerite Davison, Miss Annie Campbell and Rev. M. J. Sweet, planned definitely for the Blue Ridge Conference of Congregational and Christian Churches to be held in Robert Lee Hall, Black Mountain, N. C., June 20th-27th. Student summer workers were announced and assigned to the several states where their work will be. Those appointed for the Carolinas and Georgia are: Ruth Scotford, Mt. Holyoke, Mass.; Charles A. Hoyt, Jacksonville, Fla.; Eben T. Chapman, Williams College; Carl H. Voss, Union Seminary, N. Y.; Yvonne T. Kelsey, Massachusetts State College; Dorothy E. Thompson, Connecticut College; Genevieve Chace, Schauffler, Cleveland, O.; Scott Reed Chatterton, Brown University, Providence, R. I.; Miss Mildred Risterfi, Piedmont College, Nova Weatherbee, Piedmont College; Dorothy Grigsby, Piedmont College; Robert Barksdale, Piedmont College. Other special workers will be announced later.

GENERAL COUNCIL MEETING POSTPONED.

Dr. Charles E. Burton, General Secretary of our General Council, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York City, writes the following of interest to many SUN readers and to delegates elected from our Southern Convention, some of whom anticipated attending the Council meeting:

The Executive Committee of the General Council has voted that it would be unwise to hold a meeting of the General Council in 1933. The reasons are doubtless obvious to all. We think first of the cost to the denominational treasuries when every dollar is desperately needed; the cost to the entertaining city and the cost to the delegates, many of whom would feel under obligation to attend, while many others would be prevented from attending. At the same time the financial conditions would make the promotional presentations of the Mission Boards comparatively futile. Above and beyond these considerations was the feeling that every ounce of strength, personal and financial, should be exerted just now in the local church and on the field. The committee there, fore regards the course not as a defeatist move but as a constructive proposition.

Natrually the Executive Committee raised the question of their competence to call off the meeting. They were compelled, however, to consider that they were charged with just such responsibility by the wording of the by-laws, which say: "The Executive Committee shall be the General Council ad interim." Interpreting this to mean that they should act just as they believed the Council itself would act if in session, the postponement was decided upon. The action was taken, however, only after correspondence with all conference superintendents and may others, and with full consultation with officers of the missionary societies, whose meetings are held conjointly with the Council.

It was the sense of the meeting of the Committee that May, 1934, would be the logical date for the Council meeting, but this idea can be determined in the light of developing conditions. Should the meeting be held then it would be possible for the Council itself to determine whether to meet again in 1935 or in 1937. An alternative would be the amendment of the constitution, which now provides that meetings shall be held in odd numbered yearss o as to meet in 1936, and thereafter in even numbered years.

MID-YEAR CONFERENCE.

The third Mid-year Session of the Virginia Valley Central Congregational-Christian Conference met yesterday (March 24th) at the Mayland Christian Church, at 10 A. M., and was called to order by Rev. R. L. Williamsin, president. The worship service was conducted by Rev. A. W. Andes, who used as his theme: "Burdens of the Ministry and Churches." Bro. Andes read from Ex. 17:8-13, as the Scripture lesson, and declared prayer to be the medium through which many of our burdens are lifted.

This was followed by the roll call of churches and ministers. Many of the churches were represented and all of the ministers were present.

The address of welcome was delivered by Mrs.

Marion Siptzer, and the response by Roy Hosaflock. Mr. Hosaflock used as his theme: "How to Make the Church Go Forward." The main address of the morning was then delivered by Dr. M. L. Weekley, who used as a basis for his theme, Psalm 90:12. The theme was: "Proper Use of Time." The main points in the address were: 1. Begin every day with good-will toward everybody; 2. Use today to correct any wrong or mistake that we have done; 3. Make all personal contacts spiritually significant; 4. How to evaluate passing events; 5. Begin the day with the conviction that nothing will bring disaster to our lives.

Conference then adjourned to the schoolroom, where a fine dinner was spread.

At the afternoon session, Mrs. R. A. Larrick, of Winchester, led a splendid worship period, using as her theme: "Following Jesus." Rev. B. J. Earp then spoke on "Conference Problems," and R. L. Ettel of Mt. Jackson, led an interesting Round Table on the problems in the local church. The rest of the day was spent in committee meetings and miscellaneous business. The time and place of the next session were left in the hands of the Excutive Committee.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

METHODS AND MEN.

"Man is looking for better methods; God is looking for better men. Man is God's method." That quotation is from one who has studied and learned the Bible. The Bible is a record of God's approach to man and is, therefore, a revelation of his method, hence much of the Book is written in the first person, and the rest of it about God in his quest for persons. Everywhere in this Book, God is the aggressor, the central figure, Person and Power. Moses and Samuel, Job and David, Isaiah and the others did not claim in their writing that they had any method whereby mankind could be made perfect, but as they did claim, and sought with all the resources of mind and soul, to show that God was perfect and that his approach to the world was through man. "The heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament showeth his handiwork;" but the voice of God walks in the Garden and calls to Adam and in the wilderness, through John, saying: "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight."

Men are not so. Because of their weakness and poverty, they call their legislatures, assemble in Congress, and Parliament, in Civic Club, and benevolent society and fraternal order, that they may come to measures and methods that will help. Such methods, if wisely reached and adopted, give opportunity for man to assert himself and privilege for personal prowess and progress. But God adopts man as his method and uses man to utter his words, proclaim his power and reveal his grace, mercy and truth.

Let us not deceive ourselves. No program and no method of man's making can save society and redeem the souls of men and women. The so-called men, men aflame with the love of God, women consecrated and dedicated to the worship and service of God, these are yet the hope of the world and the method of God's revelation in the world.

Somebody has written a book on "The Miracle of Missions." If one wishes in our day to discover miracles and realize what God can do, one must study and learn of Missions, for there is no other way to explain the life, love and attitude of the real heroes of religion in the mission field than that God is still calling and men and women are answering: "Here am I, send me." And there is nothing that reveals the spiritual resources or the spiritual bankruptcy of the church as the attitude of the church to Missions and its missionaries. We adopt methods for better social conditions, but God adopts men and sends them out into the fields nearby and afar that they may proclaim the power of God to reach, redeem and save men and women to the uttermost. Truly, man adopts methods, but man is God's method of doing his work in the world.

FORWARD OR BACKWARD?

This Christian Church of ours will decide within the next three months whether it will go forward or backward during the good year 1933. God prospers and builds a church only as it is missionary. He never has prospered a non-missionary church, neither can he do so, in keeping with his character as revealed in his Word. From the time he called Abraham and sent him out: "Not knowing whither he went," until this good hour, God has been increasingly revealing himself as the God of all the nations and whose love reaches to the remotest parts, as well as to the parts nearby. The towers of strength in the world today for proclaiming the "Good News" and for doing the work of human relief, as well as personal salvation, are those churches dedicated to teaching and preaching a world-wide religion, and consecrated to the task of making self-denial in its plans and programs that the gospel may be carried to those who are perishing without it. It is not enough to give material relief to physical bodies. The world will do this, and is increasingly doing it. The church is being weighed in the balances to see if it has power to give that for which our Lord instituted it.

The Jewish nation, as such, came to grief, and helplessness, because it tried to localize and nationalize the religion of Abraham, of Isaac, of Jacob, and the prophets. And so when Christ came to reveal in person the universal dominion of our Lord, and to establish a kingdom without end or limitations, they crucified him, for they would have no other religion than their national religion and their local synagogue.

Paul went out and in one life-time planted churches in the name of Christ, not only in Europe and in Asia, but even to the uttermost parts. Our churches are called upon to act in the light of this vision. It is the vision, glorious. It is the vision of a Christ having his way in the hearts of men and redeeming their lives. It is a vision of a heavenly kingdom on earth. It is a vision of righteousness, ruling out unrighteousness, and light shining into the dark places and lighting up the whole world.

It is the privilege of our pastors and people in this Mission Period to behold and proclaim such a vision, a vision of God who walks among men through his blessed Spirit and calls men to proclaim the "Good News." Surely, at a time when civic clubs, benevolent societies, a friendly state and great government are pouring out millions to give material help to relieve physical needs, the church will not be deaf to the call for spiritual help to relieve burdened and lost souls. During our Mission Period, the church decides whether it will go forward or backward, for it goes forward only as it pushes on to build other churches, establish other Sunday Schools and thus proclaim and teach the "Good News" to others who haven't heard the words of him who said: "I am the Way, the Truth and the Life. No man cometh unto the Father but by me."

J. O. A.

"THE GOOD NEWS."

The Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life for the Congregational and Christian Churches issued in very limited numbers a print of three brief pages that CHRISTIAN SUN readers could read and meditate upon with profit. The title tells the story. It is, indeed, the "Good News." A paragraph or two will bring us to the heart of this presentation and give us food for thought:

"The 'Good News' is the gospel preached and lived by Jesus that God is the loving Father of the souls of men and that the relation of men to God is best expressed in terms of this affection. And this is the 'Good News' that has been preached through the centuries and has brought salvation to millions."

But in order to comprehend something of what this "Good News" has meant to the world, one has to glimpse the world that Jesus knew:

"The world into which Jesus was born was one in which men everywhere were the victims of their own passions, views, prejudices and follies. They were unconscious of God as a God of love. Religion was thought of in terms of law and the religious leaders were occupied in propitiating God by rites and ceremonies. Greed and oppression were everywhere practiced, the poor groaned in their fear and want, and the rich were arrogant and selfish."

Greed and oppression have been practiced in our own day, despite the fact that the "Good News" has been proclaimed through the centuries and the poor yet groan in their fear and want, and many of the rich are arrogant and selfish, but the "Good News" is still being proclaimed and is having its weight and worth in the world. The most unselfish money that man has ever invested was that which he invested in helping to proclaim the "Good News" to the world. God is still saying "How can they believe in him of whom they have not heard, and how shall they hear a preacher, and how shall they preach except they be sent?" This then is the message of "Good News" even in our time and is the message that the church is called upon to deliver to the world.

In sending out and supporting missionaries at home and abroad, we are trying to give the "Good News" to those who haven't heard and heeded it. In this season of Lent, when we are called upon to shut out worldly pursuits and pleasures and think of him who gave all for us, we do well to enjoy the "Good News" ourselves, but we do better if we share the burden of our Lord and make denial of indulgence and pleasure and help send and support those whose lives are dedicated solely to the work of giving the "Good News" to a perishing world.

God intended from the first that his kingdom even on earth, should be inclusive, and that there should be no metes and bounds to the dominion of his Son, and so:

"It was 'Good News' that sinners and publicans could 'join in' and to know that eternal life was a present, here-and-now relationship with God. Jesus told men that if they established this spiritual relationship with God, a loving, personal

CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP AS RELATED TO MISSIONS.

Assistant Secretary, General Council of Congregational-Christian Churches.

This is not a discussion of Christian Stewardship as such, nor of Christian Missions, as such, but, rather, of the relationship of the former to the latter.

Christian Missions.

We do not present an argument for Christian Missions. We take it for granted that missions is the very heart of the church. The world mission of Christianity is the central interest for us as Christians. Missions symbolize the faith of Christians, and really reflect their attitude of life. Missionary work is primary. The gospel of Christ is to be preached and taught in all lands. We must go, or help others to go with the gospel to the uttermost parts.

Dr. J. E. Crawford has well said: "Missions is the voice of Christianity uttering its heart." There is no greater movement than the Christian movement. It is the most inspiring task of the world. It relates us to vast purposes. It offers the greatest moral venture in human experience. It is the greatest brotherhood in existence. It includes all humanity—every rank, creed, color, nationality, and economic condition. The message of Christianity has in it the solution of every problem of man, home, business, society, and international relations. The church's message is not a system of religion; it is religion itself. It is not a civilization; it is the inspiration of the highest civilization. Missions is not a side issue, a special course. Christianity is a missionary religion, which is to encompass the whole earth and transcend all barriers of race, clime, and prejudice. This Christian movement must have corresponding great spiritual, material and leadership resources.

Facts in the Case.

If missions is the principal business of the church:

Why is that so few Christians have any seeming concern about it?

Why is it that scarcely one-third of the professed Christians of our churches participate in them in any financial way, ever so little, even when our splendid mission boards have used every possible appeal for their practical cooperation?

Why is it that so few Christian fathers and mothers, even church officials, are willing to lay the claim of God upon the lives of their sons and daughters for such service?

If it is the principal business of Christians to extend Christ's Kingdom, why is it that so few are ready to furnish money, leadership and influence for the same? What causes this deadening paralysis? Why all the hesitancy and indifference? It is not that they do not know of the fields of the world, the needs of men, women and children, both physically and spiritually, for we are in a day and land of intelligence, and are a nation of readers. Our mission boards, with other Christian agencies, have not failed to give specialized knowledge and information of world fields, opportunities and needs. They have told the story in our pulpits, brought missionaries to churches, presented pictures and furnished us attractive informative literature. They have sent commissions to learn the best ways to implant the Christian movement in particular lands and under varying conditions. Evidently, there is something lacking somewhere. Indeed, there is a tremendous responsibility and a corresponding privilege to be placed somewhere when two-thirds of our church members are not enlisted; when many pastors are not greatly concerned! when any number of officials of our churches are not much interested, and will sometimes take funds raised for missions and use them for other purposes. Surely the need is great enough the world around; surely Christ's commission is not out of date. Means of approach are easier than ever. Churches and Christians are abundantly able to provide men and money for a steady advance of the Kingdom. They not only have a personnel and funds, but need to go, give and send.

Retrenchment.

Boards and benevolence agencies are cutting budgets to the quick. They are calling missionaries home; retaining those on furlough, declining to send out new ones, closing and reducing mission stations, schools and hospitals. Secretaries are reducing their own salaries and eliminating every possible expense. Local churches in the same way are reducing the already small salaries of their ministers, curtailing their budgets, and reducing benevolences. Many of these churches are sincere, and see no other solution. Of course, all Christian work should always be done without waste and as economically as possible. Christians should not waste money, and extravagance should never go with Christian work, for dollars, as well as lives, are sacred. But, is tragic retrenchment the only way out? I think not. Battles are not usually won by retreating. Rather, has not something been omitted from our teaching and practice? There is money enough to do all the work the church has undertaken. Such tragic reductions may be necessary now, but if so, they should never need to happen again. They will happen again, however, unless the remedy is found and quickly applied. It is noticeable that when mission boards and churches unduly reduce budgets, the same tragic fact usually stares them in the face at the end of the year—another deficit. My opinion is that cutting budgets does not solve this part of the missionary problem, but that teaching, preaching, practicing the principles of Christian Stewardship will accomplish it.

The United Stewardship Council has said: "Stewardship, in its full New Testament meaning, involves responsibility to man, and provides a solution for the social, racial, industrial and economic problems which confront the modern world." Christian Stewardship is the outstanding need of the church today. It will solve the problem of missionary support. God's people have not learned Christian Stewardship principles, and stewardship of possessions in particular. Therein lies the key to the solution of the support of the missionary enterprise. If the present work of the Kingdom is to be maintained and successfully financed and extended, the principles of Christian Stewardship must be applied.

Dr. Charles A. Cook is correct when he says: "The great work of missions will never be adequately supported until God's people fully realize their privileges and obligations as Christian stewards, and that missions cannot exist without stewardship." The relationship between stewardship and missions is most intimate and vital.

The Soil.

Many missionary and church societies are ever trying to reap funds for their work, forgetful, seemingly, of the stewardship enrichment necessary for the soil from which they would continuously reap. Haste is necessary and they fail to spend time and expense sufficient to give stewardship cultivation apart from the immediate raising of funds. Many people give out of loyalty to their church or minister, or because of a pride in having their church meet its apportionment, or because others are giving. A farmer realizes that he must constantly invest in, and plan for, enrichment to improve the producing qualities of the soil. What we too often do the farmer calls

"forcing the plant," so that he may gather the fruit quickly and in sufficient amount, knowing full well that it is not a wise nor permanent method. Rather, he carefully cultivates the roots so that the plant will be constantly and richly nourished, then the fruit will be abundant and regular. Christian agencies must learn that great truth, for they cannot reap year in and year out without continuous stewardship cultivation. Stewardship principles and practices must be worked down into the hearts and lives of Christians. Far greater emphasis of Christian Stewardship must be had in our churches if the missionary enterprise is to grow. Such teaching will need to be a continuous process. There is much hardened soil on which missionary seed is sown; there is much shallow ground on which the seed falls and much occupied soil, and Christian Stewardship is the element that prepares these soils to bring forth a thirty, sixty, and an hundred-fold harvest.

Intimately Related to Christian Missions.

Many Christians have never realized that they are stewards. They live and act as though they were owners of what they possess, rather than partners or trustees. Stewardship instruction as to principles of support, the proper sharing of their income, motives of giving, reflex action on character, have never been definitely taught to them. Therefore, personal responsibility for the extension of the Kingdom has not gotten very far into their lives. They do not find much joy in their religion, and do not give much to extend it. Their motives in giving are accordingly quite short of the highest.

It is stewardship that distinguishes between partnership with God and a scramble for possessions for self; it is stewardship that assists church members to more fully realize that missions is not a side issue worthy only of haphazard giving of left-overs. The lack of stewardship teaching, too, is the primary reason for the long inactive roll in our churches, and inactive members do not help the missionary causes. Stewardship will furnish funds for all the needs of the church and her mission agencies.

Robert E. Speer says: "The church should be recognizing and perfecting the principles of trusteeship in the matter of her wealth. There is wealth enough and to spare in the church to enable her to do her entire work so far as its doing depends upon financial support. At present nine-tenths of the gifts of the church come probably from a tenth of its membership. There is hardly a congregation where some one individual member is not spending more upon himself and his family each year than the whole congregation, including himself, is giving together to the benevolences of the church. A step into stewardship on the part of one-quarter of the church would revolutionize the scale and power of all its work."

Lifting Giving to a Stewardship Basis.

Giving can never be what it ought to be until it rests squarely on stewardship principles. The emphasis must be shifted from giving to stewardship. Even the financial problems of missions cannot be solved by the matter of giving. Boards and ministers are nervously overwrought through a ceaseless effort to get funds from church members who are not stewards, and even when they secure such funds, they have left little or no enrichment in their lives. Giving on the stewardship basis will not only increase the amounts given, but will bless the givers as well. Is not that an essential feature of giving? We want them to give themselves as well as their money, and two-thirds of them are not yet even giving money. The promotional agencies of the churches do well when they major on stewardship agencies, for it is the business of stewardship to set the

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Beer or the Bible, which shall it be? The Congress of the United States has voted for beer. The great majority of the secular newspapers have almost daily advocated this action for several months. The small minority of Congressmen who voted against beer are being severely criticised by some of these newspapers, and their political future is being threatened. The advocates of beer are openly antagonistic to any person who refuses to vote for the return of the legalized sale of liquor. The program includes the sale of alcoholic liquors to children. Congress refused to pass an amendment forbidding the sale of beer to minors under 18 years of age.

On its face, this beer movement is discouraging to many people. At the present time beer is having its victory. In its victorious march it is determined to make the victory complete and final. Politicians must enlist under its banner and get on the beer wagon. Members of Congress and State legislatures must vote for the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment and the legalized sale of alcoholic drinks, or they will lose their places and people who will vote wet will be elected to fill their places. Ministers must stay out of this fight. Church people must vote for beer, or the church will be unable to endure under the "new deal." This is the attitude of beer today.

What does all this mean? Why such a beer revolution? Why are people who want beer so deeply interested in law observance? Why have so many women become ardent advocates of the legalized sale of liquor, even to children?

Under the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act the "beer rebellion" has quietly and systematically defied the law and used every possible means to make prohibition ineffective. An immense amount of money has been spent in newspaper publicity in the effort to convince the people that they should have unlimited opportunity to make, sell and buy alcoholic drinks. All the ills of the past ten years have been produced by the Eighteenth Amendment, as set forth in this ceaseless propaganda. The whole question of liquor has been reduced to a matter of financial profit and political expediency. Political leaders, newspaper editors and the general public have banished all the teachings of the Bible from their minds, in discussing the merits of beer and the failure of prohibition. The beer garden, in some minds, is superior to the church, and the example of a beer-tender is to be commended more than the preaching of the minister in the pulpit.

Alcohol is a poison. Its continued use means death. It makes people drunk. The Bible says: "Nor drunkards shall inherit the kingdom of God." Temperate drinking leads to drunkenness. The Bible is the source of all authority for advocating the prohibition of the manufacture and use of alcohol as a beverage.

The Bible is against the liquor traffic. It says more against this evil than against murder. Murder is a crime against God. Drunkenness is in the class of sin. If it is wrong to take life with a gun, why is it not wrong to take life with beer, or whiskey, or wine. Why not repeal the law against murder?

Why drink wine and beer? Why sell it? For pleasure and profit. The traffic in liquor is not based upon any desire to help humanity or produce revenue for the government. The whole thing is selfish. Of course, the manufacturers and sellers of alcoholic drinks are willing to pay a large amount for this privilege. But they are not charitably minded towards society or the government. They think first of profits for themselves and drink for themselves. They must ignore God and the Bible in their arguments for their business and their drink habits.

There is but one position for any person who wishes to stand by the Bible and obey the voice of God. That way is total abstinence. The government cannot afford to go into the liquor business. It has already voted to do so. The States will vote on this question. The Bible should be our guide in this matter. Beer should be dethroned and banished into exile.

I. W. JOHNSON.

VIRGINIA CHURCHES.

Anyone who goes out in a time like this soliciting donations for any cause whatsoever, either possesses daring courage or fails to possess just ordinary common sense. I realize the truthfulness of this statement, but in the face of grim necessity, I dared to enter upon such an adventure. This much, however, should be said: that when such a course was arranged, conditions were not quite so treacherous as they are today.

It is useless to say that our College is in sore need of funds. Everyone realizes this fact. The church and the board of trustees authorized me, as president of the College, to appeal to individuals and churches for financial assistance for the institution. Accordingly, and by invitation of Pastors Johnson and Morgan, I journeyed from North Carolina to Virginia on March 4th, to meet engagements with these two brethren in their churches at the regular hours for worship. It was my privilege to spend Saturday evening in the home of Dr. I. W. Johnson. I enjoyed the evening and appreciate the fact now more than then. Mrs. Johnson's mother, Mrs. Ellenor, was then living—apparently in her usual health and very happy. Since then, to the great loss of Dr. and Mrs. Johnson, and her many friends, she has been called to her reward. May the blessings of heaven ever be upon her sainted memory.

Liberty Springs Church.

On Sunday morning, March 5th, I visited Liberty Springs Church; had the privilege of being with them at Sunday School and of speaking to them about the College at the 11 o'clock service. Dr. Johnson invited me, with the expressed understanding that I was to speak about the College and about College affairs. We had a splendid congregation—most attentive and responsive. At the close of the service, opportunity was given to take memberships in the Dollar-a-Month Club. On the evening before, the President of the United States had ordered the general closing of banks throughout the United States. Naturally, people were disturbed about financial conditions. No one responded to the appeal, but individuals assured me that they were interested and would do what they could for the College. Liberty Springs has always done what they could for the College and I am sure this splendid church will not fail us in this time of need. I was invited to the home of Mr. F. F. Brinkley. Those who have ever dined at Brother Brinkley's know that there is always an abundance to satisfy the normal demands of the physical man. It was a most delightful occasion and I enjoyed the fellowship.

Oakland Christian Church.

In the afternoon, we drove over to Oakland Christian Church at Chuckatuck, Va. Here we found another large and attentive audience, I spoke in the interest of the College. At the close of the service, the opportunity was given to take memberships in the Dollar-a-Month Club. Mrs. W. C. Moore and J. E. Turner joined. In all probability there will be others of this congregation who will join with Mrs. Moore and become members of the Club. This is the boyhood church of Dr. J. U. Newman, who has been professor at Elon College since the College was founded. It is also the home church of Professor L. D. Martin, who is teacher of history at Elon—also, we have students at the College from this church.

I appreciated greatly the opportunity of visiting Oakland Church again, also the cooperation and assistance which they extended.

Rosemont Church.

On adjournment of the service at Oakland Church, I drove to the home of Rev. J. F. Morgan, pastor of the Rosemont Christian Church, Norfolk, Va. I spoke at the regular evening hour for worship. Brother Morgan invited me for the specific purpose of speaking on Elon College. I have had the privilege of visiting Rosemont at different times and have always found an enthusiastic reception. The evening audience was unusually large—the music was good and the atmosphere inspiring. I spoke in the interest of the College and at the close of the service, an opportunity was given to those who would to join in the support of Elon by joining the Dollar-a-Month Club. There were eight who responded and since then Brother Morgan has sent in two others. He was already a member, so this makes a total of eleven memberships for the Rosemont Church, which makes them, according to the plan and the decision of the committee, a Banner Church. Very soon they will receive their certificate of recognition. Those who joined are:

A. S. Morrison, D. A. Dennis, Howard L. Gibson, H. R. Morrison, Mrs. H. L. Bondurant, A. J. Gwynn, Mrs. Ada Gladstone, Mrs. B. F. Gibson, Ladies Bible Class, No. 2; Junior Department, Rosemont Sunday School.

If every church in the Southern Christian Convention would become a Banner Church, which requires 10 memberships from the individuals and church combined, this would mean a worthwhile assistance to the College, and would work a hardship on a very few. I want to express publicly and sincerely my appreciation for the cooperation on the part of Dr. Johnson, Brother Morgan, their churches and congregations. By working together, we shall be able to keep the College going and make it possible for her to render the type of service that she should.

Following the meeting at the Rosemont Church, it was necessary for me to return to the College. However, on the following Saturday, March 11th, I drove back to Virginia to meet an engagement with Dr. Newman.

Holy Neck Church.

It was a beautiful Sabbath day. The weather was mild and the skies clear. I arrived in time for Sunday School and enjoyed teaching a number of classes that came together for the study period. At the church hour, I spoke on the College, endeavoring to reveal its efficiency and accomplishments—also to impress upon the church the absolute necessity of the continuance of the College for the training of efficient leadership. At the close of the service, cards were distributed for the signature of those who would become members of the Dollar-a-Month Club. There were two who joined: Mrs. E. T. Holland and Mrs. J. T. Rawls.

In all probability there will be others to join with these two and as conditions improve throughout the country, additional memberships will be secured. Holy Neck is one of our strongest and most influential churches. It has rendered a great service and means much to the stability and leadership of the denomination. There is no more loyal soul to Elon College than its pastor, Dr. N. G. Newman. Both Dr. and Mrs. Newman are already members of the Club.

Windsor Church.

Sunday afternoon, March 12th, I drove from Holland to Windsor, Va., where I was entertained at dinner by Shirley Holland and family. Mr. Holland is an alumnus of the institution. A table of good things to eat was spread for the evening meal, but really when you visit one home after another in Eastern Virginia, you very soon find that your appreciation of a delightful meal is lessened on account of the lack of capacity. It was a pleasure to be in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Holland again. Rev. E. B. White is pastor of the Windsor Church. The church was filled for the service. I spoke in the interest of the College, emphasizing the importance of the training of the young men and young women of today by the church schools—that those who make up our citizenship might be developed from every standpoint—including particularly the spiritual life of the individual. In response to the appeal for memberships in the Dollar-a-Month Club, the following were enrolled: Mrs. R. A. Rhodes, Mrs. E. R. Laine, Rev. E. B. White. The pastor, Brother White, joined in with his members for the support of the College. It was a delightful service and a very inspirational occasion. Mr. Holland and others were already members of the Dollar-a-Month Club. This makes a total of seven for the church. It looks now that they, too, will have a Banner Church.

I want also to thank the churches of Holy Neck and Windsor, together with their pastors and members, for the most cordial reception and fine cooperation extended to me on these visits. If there are other churches in the Convention who would like to have me come and present the claims of the College, I shall be happy for such an invitation and will be glad to accept, if it is at all possible for me to come on the dates desired.

L. E. SMITH.

WHAT IS MONEY?

I stood one day and held in my hands several lumps of crude gold. To me it was precious, because I knew of its purchasing value. That bullion was taken to the mint and made into standard pieces and passed out among men. Some used it to make a home happy and others used it to wreck a home and bring grief and pain and misery. I wonder—what is money?

I sat in a courtroom and heard a judge say to a young man: "Life imprisonment," because he sought money beyond moral and legal means. I saw, too, a mother's face with a dozen years added to it in an instant, and a father's face buried in shame. I wondered then, and wonder now—what is money?

I knew a poor boy whose heart was aflame to help humanity. He touched the business world and every transaction turned into money. He laid his hands on no ill-gotten gains. He worked and he prospered, and he used his money to feed the orphans and the widows and to help relieve suffering in a hundred forms. I wondered then, and I wonder now—what is money?

I have seen character bought with the price of money and standards of living lowered beyond human expression over the scramble for money. I have known the love of brothers and sisters and the ties of friendship between neighbors rent asunder in an almost death-grapple for the mighty dollar. I have seen the presence of money drive the tears from the eyes of the poor and bring joy and peace and happiness. I wonder—what is money?

I have known men to circle the globe, forsake their homes, and leave their children as orphans for the quest of money. I have seen men take money and build a house, and a woman turn that house into a home by the uniting of love and money. I have seen that home a little paradise and the children rise up and call their parents blessed because money made comfort and hope and happiness. I have turned from such a scene with a knowledge of love, but I have often wondered—what is money?

I have known men to hoard money in secret places and live in near poverty to add more to their holdings. I have seen men in misery for the want of more money and die without the comforts of life that their money should be untouched. I have known them to die clinging to money and hoping that in some mysterious way they could carry it beyond the "sunset and evening star." I have known men to die as money-paupers. I have seen, too, the comforts of declining years enriched with money, and the "last call" met in peace because money made possible ease in death. I wondered then, and I wonder now—what is money?

I have seen the sacrifices of fathers and mothers that their children might have money. I have seen these parents in rags and with broken bodies from toil all for the sake of money. I have seen the children with the sacrificed money take and use it for their own degradation and gain and to break the hearts of sacrificing parents. In it all I cannot understand. Yet, I wonder—what is money?

I have known men with happy families and social and financial standing to cast it all on the junk heap of life's tragedies for the love of money. I have known men to bring shame and disgrace to their offspring and turn a loving companion's face from a curious crowd because he could not separate right living from the use of money. In it all and through it all I have understood sorrow and sympathized with unfortunates, yet I wondered—what is money?

I knew a man, honored and loved and respected by all, the father of a man who enjoyed the highest gift within the suffrage of the people, who died without money. The nation paid him tribute. His passing was the crowning event of life—happy, cheerful, full of hope, no regret, no money to worry him, no earthly accumulation, and yet one of the earth's greatest and best men. Somehow, I am prone to wonder—what is money?

I have seen men and women dressed in clothes that were spotless and clean, and seemingly obeying every law of sanitation, and with money—filthy as it is—hold and caress it as if it be their god and all their glory. With no definition to find and no words to express my amazement, I simply wonder—what is money?

I have heard it said that every man has his price. Whether this be true or not, I cannot say I have seen the good and the great, the honored and the worshipped, tremble and fall in the shadow of the eagle's wing and bring surprises to the multitude. I love men and measures and a few things that money can buy. But in it all, and through it all, I still wonder—what is money?

I have heard it said that is the age of gold and not the golden age, that men in their pursuits have as their goals the money-gain. No charge so great would I bring, and yet as I look out and see; as I read and read; as I try to understand, I cannot help but wonder—WHAT IS MONEY?

The GEM TESTAMENT has been steadily growing in popular favor ever since its first appearance. In size, 3½x4½ inches, it is not much larger than the Vest Pocket. It is also the only Testament of its size with large bold type and pronouncing text. The edition on India paper is ideal, and we know of no better gift at the price than one in the finer bindings.

PRAYER.

Father, God, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life. Oh, that men would love the Lord with all their heart, soul, mind and strength. Oh, that men would serve the Lord with gladness and thanksgiving. Oh, that men would praise the Lord for his wonderful works to the children of men. In the name of our living, reigning, coming Saviour, we humbly pray. Amen. L.

THE ROAD TO RECOVERY.

"We are on the road to recovery." It is good news for all of us—especially so for the unemployed and others upon whom the depression has inflicted serious personal loss and suffering. Congregational and Christian Churches will not only share in this recovery, but also make vital contribution to it in our own country and, through the American Board, in the world at large.

Christian people cannot be satisfied by the promise of returning prosperity alone, nor even by hopes for the prevention of such calamities in the future. They know that the world has deeper disorders even than its economic ills, that men personally and in groups suffer depressions because of their failure of faith and the dimness and distortion of their spiritual vision.

With prosperity restored and economic progress assured men still grope and stumble; class conflicts remain, and nations fall into the madness of war. Today religions, moralities, social cultures, are being shaken from age-old foundations and threaten to disintegrate under the strains of a new age.

Recovery, if it is real, means the moral rehabilitation of men and nations, the restoration of faith, a renewed sense of the dignity and spiritual destiny of man.

The Christian Church has the "open secret" of deliverance for the world in its present distraction. It has the Christian ideal, it has the Christian dynamic, it has the Christ. Economists must plan. Statesmen must create new forms of national and international life; all the intelligent techniques of our common life must be applied to the task. But the power, the confidence, the hope that will enable living men to realize the ends sought by such means come from above and within.

The above gives food for thought and is presented to our readers through our Commission on Missions. And then the Board recounts a fact which we should face:

"Since 1929 the income of the Board from all sources for regular work, has decreased from $1,769,410 to $1,520,522 and contributions from our churches have gone down from $1,143,965 to $911,702. It is easier to decrease than to increase, but increase is the way of things that have life and purpose in them. The contributing of money is the way in which members of churches can ACT, can express in practical doing, their devotion to Christ and their Christian love and concern for the world beyond our own borders. It would be a disaster far more vast and ominous than a world-wide depression if the intelligent Christian people of America should lose their faith in the power of Christ to go to the heart of human need and should surrender the conception of one humanity for an ever-narrowing provincialism."

Our task, then, first of all, is spiritual recovery and rehabilitation. And there is one way to this and only one. That way is that of self-denial on our part for the sake of our Lord whose life and love we are called upon to share with others. Our basic need is spiritual and so our Board tells us the way to recovery in these words:

"The American Board embodies the conviction of the Christian and Congregational Churches that the world is one, that its basic need is spiritual, that Christ is the full answer to that need. Its concern is not alone for an assured or even an increasing income, but also for the reassertion by the people in the churches of the profoundest meaning of the Christian faith—the faith that Christ is humanity's supreme Helper towards health and wholeness. This is the road to recovery." J. O. ATKINSON, Mission Sec'y.

J. O. ATKINSON, Sec'y.

A MISSIONARY APPRAISAL FROM JAPAN.

Dear J. O.:

Your very interesting letter of February 1st, came like a refreshing breeze. Before I say any thing further, I need to tell you that recently while I was riding my "bike" to school, it found a greased spot in the road and proceeded to skid. I was thrown down and my left foot catching between the frame and the crank and my right foot coming down hard on the pedal on the other side, I got an awful wrench in the region of my ankle. I walked to school and taught my Bible class, taught my English class, rode to the bank and did some business and went home. When my wife made an examination she found the foot had swollen to twice its normal size. In consequence I have played the gentleman of leisure for two weeks and have a week more to go on according to the orders of the doctor. But I am getting on famously.

We see from the reports of the papers that come to us from America how the members of the appraisal committee are trying to crawlfish in saying they did not mean this and they did not mean that. But Dear J. O., if professors of philosophy in the big universities and the college presidents can't write English so that the common people can understand it, pray what does an education mean? Readers of the report have properly named the report "humanism," "fault finding report." I should say it is "another gospel," not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. Dr. Hocking is reported as saying that the report will stand or fall because of its theology. Well, in my judgment, it is bound to fall. It is bound to fall for another reason. It is entirely misleading as to the facts of missions. As one of the members of the Christian Literature Society said to me: "The report is entirely untruthful in regard to the Kyobunkan which is the organ of the C. L. S. It has the best staff in Japan. Its output is the best that the best Japanese writers can produce. The report is entirely misleading."

May I interject here the fact that I was introduced to two of the "fact-finders." I told them that I was the oldest active missionary in Japan. (There are other missionaries older, but not working.) What do you suppose they had to say to a man who had spent forty years in Japan? Absolutely nothing. They shook hands, but had nothing to say. The fact-finders seem to have come to Japan with closed minds as to the real condition of missions. They were unable to see the colossal work that missions have accomplished. They were not able to give a correct appraisal of the missionary body. Mr. Olds of our mission is boosted to the skies. What has he done? He has gotten to be on friendly terms with eight Buddhists and three Shintoists with whom he and his wife and one lady have held meetings for three years, once a month. They have agreed not to proselyte. They have shared their experiences together. I judge they have eaten much cake and drunk much tea together. But Mr. Olds tells me that he does not know what to do next. I tell him he is like the man who said he did not know where he was going, but he was on his way. I think Mr. Olds has got into the limelight, but I think that if he has been able to do no more than to get on freindly terms in three years, he has no hope of getting any further. So the report in regard to Mr. Olds is entirely misleading.

As I wrote you, it is misleading in regard to value of the work of our women missionaries. It is misleading in regard to evangelism. It is misleading in regard to the quality of the men whom the Boards have sent out. As you read what the self-appointed committee of thirteen in which six denominations are represented, they criticize the report for its inaccuracies. Men who have not traveled in the country and who have not come in contact with the Japanese in all sorts of places and conditions of men are hardly fit to pass judgment on the stupendous work which has been accomplished.

I am glad that such prominent men as Erdman of Princeton and Robert E. Speer, are fearless in exposing the weaknesses of the report.

After the report has gone into the hands of the different missions, it is interesting to note their reactions. The Dutch Reformed say they are "committed to the purpose of making Jesus Christ known to all men as Redeemer and Master, both for the saving of their souls and the rectifying of their lives, personally and socially. No other basis can be considered."

The Presbyterian Board "adheres to the gospel embodied in the New Testament and in the historic witness of the church and will continue its work on this basis, regarding Jesus Christ as the only Lord and Saviour, and seeking to make him known as the Divine Redeemer of individuals and society."

The Baptists assert that the "paramount aim of the Christian missionary enterprise is to lead men everywhere to accept Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord."

The United Presbyterians "repudiate any adherence to, or any sympathy with, the Report wherein it deflects from the fact that Jesus Christ is the only and eternal Son of God, who made atonement on the cross for the sins of men, who rose from the dead, who is personally alive, who, by the presence of the Holy Ghost, energizes and controls the church in its divine mission to mankind, whose infinite love will not be satisfied until it has been made known to every creature, and who will ultimately render to him the loving and joyous admiration of the world."

When so many great missions repudiate the report, it is not to be wondered at that the members of the committee try to cover their mistakes. But in the report which they have made, they dropped their watermelon and it was too late to gather up the pieces. The report goes to tens of thousands, and the retractions and denials to a few only. As a teacher, when we found we had a text-book which had mistakes in it, we always put it out of the classroom at once. This report is shot through with misleading statements in regard to missions. It is not a safe guide for either the modernist or the fundamentalist. A few great Boards see this and govern their steps accordingly. The committee affirm that they were open-minded. But can a man be open-minded when he is committed to a modernistic philosophy which does not accept the Deity of the Lord and the necessity of propagating his gospel in every possible way? Instead of making our Lord a little Christ, or none, the proper thing to do is to exalt him higher and higher. The motive for propagating the gospel is to know the greatness of Jesus Christ and to understand the matchless love and honor and glory which he gives to all who believe on him. One who understands these things is glad to give to the Lord the entire devotion of body, soul and spirit, and to exalt him by words and deeds as gifts. And when we have done the best we can to glorify him, we deeply feel that we have done not half that is his due. Glory be to his name forever and ever!

I see that in the minds of some people it is a sufficient proof that a man is an ignoramus to call him a fundamentalist. Some people thought to put Jesus on the shelf by calling him a wine-bibber and a glutton and possessed with a devil. Let those who think they have a better religion, prove it by their works.

Now I will stop just to prove to you that I still have terminal facilities. Good-bye and all the blessings be on you.

CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP.

church right in her theory and practice of Christian giving. We must get below the surface. Financing the work of the church, and missions in particular, must be worked out from a stewardship basis. We must get down to bedrock stewardship principles. Back of the giving, back of the amount, is—how may one discharge his obligation as a Christian steward?

Awakens Power.

Christian Stewardship not only furnishes funds and lives necessary for the extension of missions, but it awakens power in both the individual and the church, and that sustaining interest and increasing power are necessary for our growing missionary enterprise. Dr. James G. K. McClure says: "There was no power in Moses while he thought of his slow and stuttering tongue and forgot the entrusted message. But when he thought of his entrusted message, and put his tongue, such as it was, at God's disposition, and tried to deliver the message of Israel's release, Moses then emerged from weakness into power and became a force that Pharaoh and the world could not push aside." All life takes on a new significance as soon as we realize that whatever we have is ours only as a trust.

If the Christian movement is to go steadily forward, if the church's mission in terms of human life is to be realized, if the call of earth's unevangelized millions is to be met, if society is to be Christianized, if wars are to cease, if international relations are to be made beautiful, if world needs are to be met, if the spirit of materialism is to be changed—the ministry and laity of our churches must be aroused to the necessity of the basic message of personal responsibility as revealed through Christian Stewardship. There is no more vital message for our churches today, and for the missionary agencies, than that of the stewardship of life, possessions and leadership, both in pulpit and pew.

Our Ministry.

The ministry must be enlisted. I quote from a letter received recently:

"Last summer I did a little scouting on my own. I visited one of the larger seminaries in the middle west. I thought I would do some reading on stewardship. I found that the library did not carry the classification in its files. At last, I found that the only book of any kind, dealing with the subject, was a little pamphlet for young people. However, I found in the Church Management Department many books on church finance. We have much on system, but we need more. When I came back from the little investigation, I decided to try reselling stewardship to this hard-hit farming community in these hard times. I got several books on the subject, and outlined a series of sermons on stewardship: 'How to Make Money' (Stewardship of Talent); 'How to Spend Money' (Stewardship of Administration); 'How to Save Money' (Stewardship of Thrift); 'How to Give Money' (Stewardship of Giving). The attendance doubled; and everybody was interested. The word got around that the minister had something practical to say. During the month a deficit that would have amounted to 25 per cent of the budget, was raised, and the church fiscal year closed without a deficit, and this a depression year."

Our Laymen.

When once our laity catch the real message of stewardship, they, too, will take a more active personal interest in the world Christian movement. They will more fully realize their active partnership and will seek to put all they can into the business; they will work with the great church agencies; they will study the work and needs of the boards, institutions, and movements with a different interest, they will give to certain of these ready and full access of their time, thought and purse! they will find a new joy not otherwise realized, a new content of spiritual life; a new motive. Our laymen have great possibilities when once enlisted in the stewardship enterprise.

Christians are stewards of the Gospel, but multitudes are not aware of it. It is the message of Christian Stewardship to get beneath the surface of the needs and conditions of humanity and reveal the great vital principles by which men should be actuated in furnishing funds, and offering life to meet missionary needs.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

FLORIDA COACHING CONFERENCE.

Leaders of our churches in Florida will surely be interested in the Leadership Coaching Conference which is to be held in the Community Methodist Episcopal Church at Daytona Beach, on May 1st-5th. This conference has been arranged to aid present and prospective deans and instructors in leadership training schools.

The conference is being sponsored through the cooperation of Christian (Disciples), Congregational, Methodist Episcopal, Methodist Episcopal (South), Presbyterian, U. S., Presbyterian, U. S. A. Protestant Episcopal and United Lutheran Churches. The expense for the conference is $1.00 registration fee and $8.00 for room and board.

Forest L. Knapp, Director of Leadership Training of the International Council of Religious Education, will direct the conference and lead the group of those interested in preparing to teach in the Young People's Division. Miss Mary E. Skinner, Director of the Children's Division, Department of the Local Church, Methodist Episcopal Church (South), will lead the group of those interested in preparing to teach units in the Elementary Division. Nathaniel F. Forsyth, Assistant Secretary in charge of Leadership Training, Board of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, will lead the group of those interested in preparing to teach general and administrative units.

For further information concerning this conference, our Florida people should write to Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, 127 W. Forsyth St., Jacksonville, Fla. My own experience from having attended such a conference at Charlottesville, Va., last summer leads me to believe that those who attend will be greatly benefited.

SUFFOLK YOUTH CONFERENCE.

More than half a hundred young people gathered at Suffolk Christian Church, Suffolk, Va., on last Saturday and Sunday, and there shared the Week-End Conference of the Youth Fellowship. To those who were present, Christianity became a shining way of service.

On Saturday afternoon and evening they met for group discussions on Devotional Life, Service, Leadership Training, Moral Standards, and Publications. Recommendations from these groups will probably be printed on this page in the near future.

At 7 o'clock Sunday morning, fifty people took their places silently in the church and looked across the communion table to a white cross, and after a quiet meditation were led in the communion by Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church. These young people seemed to feel the presence of him who sat at the head of the table one night and talked to his disciples in a heart-to-heart way, and then went out into the darkness of the night and through Gethsemane, and with the new day climbed up to Calvary, carrying his own cross. They determined anew to walk with him who said: "Take up your cross daily and follow me."

The group worshipped with the Young People's Department of the Suffolk Christian Church at the Sunday School hour, and with the church at the morning services. In the afternoon there was a fine open forum led by Miss Lucy Eldredge of Dayton, Ohio, in which many questions were raised by the young people and discussed. Some of these questions will be discussed on this page later.

Miss Lucy Eldredge, of Dayton, O., and Miss Priscilla Chase, of Elon College, N. C., added greatly to the success of the Conference.

Full reports will be made at a later time, but this writer wants to testify that the young people of Eastern Virginia are seeing visions of Christian work, and are setting themselves to the task of building a new social order.

NEWS ITEMS.

Miss Lucy Eldredge is assisting Miss Priscilla Chase in a Leadership Training School at Albemarle, N. C., this week. A fine enrollment is reported and good work is doubtless being done.

Western North Carolina young people will meet at the Ramseur Christian Church on Saturday afternoon and evening of this week for a conference similar to the one held in Suffolk last week. Miss Lucy Eldredge and Miss Priscilla Chase will be the leaders of this conference. Every church should be represented and all those who attend will doubtless be greatly benefited.

The Board of Christian Education is still eager to receive calls for Bibles to be presented to boys and girls on their tenth birthday. From now on it will be necessary to give the child's name, address and date of birth. All calls should be sent to Waverly, Va.

Several leaders have been calling for literature to help with Easter programs. Every church should make much of Eastertide. If we can help call on us.

Benediction—"Into My Heart." (Sung softly.)

Additional Hymns—"I Gave My Life for Thee,"

"More Love to Thee, O Christ," "O Master, Let Me Walk With Thee," "O Jesus, I Have Promised."

This topic is very suitable for a discussion meeting. The following topics may be assigned for brief talks to be followed by discussion:

1. What is the difference between a Christian and a non-Christian in (a) beliefs and (b) conduct?

2. Describe the life of the best Christian you know. Why do you place him in this rank?

3. If a foreign student from one of our mission stations should come to your Christian Endeavor Society, would he consider the members Christian? Why, or why not?

4. What would it mean for a young person today to live the life of sacrifice taught by Jesus in word and deed? Read Matt. 16:24-25.

Easter is one of the great decision seasons of the year. Churches of every denomination in the land are conducting evangelistic campaigns. Jesus commands us to go out in the highways and bring them in and teach them the meaning of true discipleship.

What we believe very vitally affects what we do. What should we believe? First, we should believe in a living God. Second, we should believe in Christ. Third, we should believe in the brotherhood of man which means equal opportunity for all. Fourth, we should believe in the Bible: "A lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." Fifth, we should believe in the church as the organized expression of Christianity.

Deciding for Christ means living an active, consistent Christian life everywhere, all the time. Doing the will of the Father means living a life of service. Not all of us can go to distant mission fields or become great ministers, but we can all perform little homely acts of service. Deciding for Christ means dedicating our lives to the service of God and our fellowman.

Jesus does not call us to a life of ease and selfish living. He said: "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, take up his cross, and follow me. For whosoever would save his life shall lose it; whosoever shall lose his life for my sake, shall find it."

Deciding for Christ means giving our loyalty to those principles and ideals for which he gave his life. Loyalty to Jesus must be placed above social popularity, must be placed above business success, or even national patriotism. Loyalty to Christ demands loyalty to his church. This loyalty finds expression in regular attendance, sharing our time and talent in carrying on the work of the church, and sharing our means in supporting all its enterprises at home and abroad.

The study of this topic will lead us to think that it is not easy to be a Christian. But nothing really worth while is easy. Is it not worth all the sacrifice and effort involved in deciding for Christ to hear him say: "Well done. . ."? There is a deep inner peace and satisfaction that comes from having shared in bringing abundant life to some other person that cannot be matched by any thrill that comes from selfish, superficial living.

Sunday School Lesson

JESUS REQUIRES CONFESSION AND LOYALTY.

LESSON II—APRIL 9, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me."—Mark 8:34.

LESSON TEXT: Mark 8:27-38.

Pointed Questions.

"Whom do men say that I am?" Jesus wanted to know what impressions he was making on people, he wanted to know how far they had understood his mission and his person. He wanted to know to what degrees they thought of him in terms of The-One-Who-Should-Come, God's Messiah. He put the question to the disciples because he knew they were close to folks, and knew what was going on.

"But whom say ye that I am?" Jesus wanted to know more than what folks in general thought of him. He wanted to know what his disciples in particular thought of him. Jesus had a disturbing way of being personal. He insisted that men think in terms of their individual and personal attitudes toward him.

Significant Answers.

In reply to the first question they said, "John the Baptist, Elias, one of the Prophets." The answer is highly significant. It shows that people recognized in Jesus the prophetic passion and power. It shows also how the many-sided personality of Jesus had impressed the people. "One of the prophets"—how varied in temperament and method they were! How many-sided is the character of Jesus! He is the embodiment of all that is best in character.

In reply to the second question Peter said plainly that the disciples thought he was the Christ. "Thou art the Christ," said the spokesman of the disciples. "You are the One," said Peter, "who fulfills the conditions of God's Anointed. You are the One Who Should Come." Here, at last, was God incarnate, the Messiah, the Christ of the living God. And this is the feeling of the vast majority of Christian believers. They see in Jesus Christ something more than a great prophet or a great teacher—they see in God's anointed, the Christ, the Son of God. It is a historical fact that those denominations that do not hold to this fundamental truth have shown neither progress nor growth in influence or in spiritual power. Jesus of Nazareth, the historical Jesus, was the Christ. He is the Christ, the Son of God. Prophecy has been fulfilled in him. We need not look for another.

The Way of the Cross.

"And he began to teach them that the Son of Man must suffer many things, and be rejected of the elders, and of the chief priests, and the scribes, and be killed, and after three days rise again." He would have them understand that the Christ must suffer, that the way to the crown was by way of the cross, that the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto but to minister and to give his life a ransom for many. The Captain of our salvation was made perfect through suffering.

All this sounded so strange to Peter and the disciples. But Jesus would have them understand that the ways of men were not the ways of God. "Thou savorest not the things that be of God but the things that be of man"—human prudence would suggest the principle of expediency, the choosing of the way of comfort and ease. The divine imperative demanded the way of sacrificial service and suffering. One of the weaknesses of much of modern day religion is the unwillingness to pay the price of spiritual power.

The Conditions of Discipleship.

"If any man would come after me," he must do three things. He must deny himself. This does not necessarily mean that he must deny things to himself. Jesus says he must deny himself. It really means he must turn himself from himself. He must turn from self as the center of life to Christ as the center of life. This may mean—it does mean—denying things to one's self, but in essence it means putting Christ at the center of life.

"Let him take up his cross." We talk of bearing our cross or crosses for Christ, but we do not always know what we mean by the phrase, and we do not always mean what we say. In Jesus' day to bear a cross meant that one's life was forfeited. Those who bore crosses no longer had a claim to life. When Jesus says that if one would come after him he must take up his cross, he is saying that it costs something to be his follower. The disciple of Christ must put his life at the disposal of Christ. He must do as Christ would have him do, rather than as he might personally prefer.

"Let him follow me." Let him take me for an example, pattern his life after me, try to walk in all the paths into which I might lead him.

Life's Supreme Value.

"For what shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul? Character, personality, is life's supreme value. All the material values in the world are not to be compared with one soul. The acceptance of this truth would transform life in its individual and social aspects.

And Jesus suggests that the way really to save life is to lose it. He who is continually thinking of himself, saving himself, ministering to self, will really lose himself. But he who gives himself in service, who thinks of others, who gives himself to the gospel's demands will find a larger, richer, fuller life.

association, and communion with him, that if they knew this relationship, they would know there was nothing that would take them out of God's reach. That this relationship purified all human life and glorified all human experiences and made the soul something of such eternal value that it could never be shut up in the grave."

So the "Good News" not only brings joy for this present world, but happiness and bliss beyond the portals of death and the grave.

YOUR MONEY OR YOUR LIFE!

"How much did he leave?" was asked when Midas died; and the reply was, "He left it all." When riches took wings in these testing years of crisis, many a man discovered that when money is gone all is gone. Hence suicide. Spiritual bankruptcy has been revealed by the financial crash. Make an inventory. Find out whether your money or your life is still intact. If your financial assets are frozen, keep your honor, fidelity, and love liquid so that they may be drawn upon at all times. Then, though the fire burns the house, it will not touch the home."

THE VOICE OF THE UNIVERSE.

"There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars—so also is the resurrection of the dead."—Read I. Cor. 15:20-58.

The yearly miracle of Spring

Of budding tree and blooming flower,
Which nature's feathered laureates sing
In my cold ear from hour to hour,

Spreads all its wonders round my feet;
And every wakeful sense is fed
Of thoughts that o'er and o'er repeat,
"The resurrection of the dead!"

If these half vital things have force

To break the spell which winter weaves,
To wake, and clothe the wrinkled corse
In the full life of shining leaves;

Shall I sit down in vague despair,

And marvel of the nobler soul
We laid in earth shall ever dare
To wake to life and backward roll

The sealing stone, and striding out,

Claim its eternity and head
Creation once again, and shout:
"The resurrection of the dead!"

Prayer—(Say the Lord's Prayer.)

TUESDAY.

GOD'S ENTRY INTO HISTORY.

"I am the resurrection and the life."—Jno. 11:25.

"I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."—Jno. 10:10.

The resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ is the culmination of God's entry into the world. Quoting Bishop Winchester in his book, "What is God Like?" he says: "Uncounted multitudes of men and women, through all these centuries have staked their belief that, in Christ, God entered history. . . . Apart from the fact of Christ, the Christian Church would never have been heard of. Apart from the resurrection of Christ it is inexplicable. For if the life of Jesus had come to an end on the first Good Friday, the only memory left to his followers would have been that of a life cut off in its prime . . . silenced and crushed . . . and the triumph of envy, hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness would have been complete."

The only reasonable account for the life of the church since that time is that Christ arose and is living, and "more alive than ever." Through the Holy Spirit he has intercourse with us, reveals to us his will and empowers us to carry on his work and proclaim his kingdom. By that Spirit he welds us into a fellowship, equips us with power, and sends us forth conquering and to conquer. All that have received his inspiration "join in offering their testimony, eloquent and unanswerable, to the fact that Jesus lived and Jesus lives," and God the Father is thus known to the world with increasing glory.

Prayer—Our Father, there is no name to compare with thy name, make thy living presence the core of our souls. May we see through him that love and service is the only thing worth while.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

JESUS IN GETHSEMANE.

"O, my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me; nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt."—Matt. 26:39.

The supper is over; Judas has gone on his solitary errand, and Jesus is in the garden at the foot of the Mount of Olives. He leaves the disciples behind and he and Peter, James and John go further on, and he begins to tell them how sad he is, imploring them to be with him, watch and pray for him. It is then he falls down and prays "O, Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass."

This prayer brought no answer. The cup could not be removed, but the Father would give him strength to drink it. The first ministry of strength was the angels. After their ministry, he could say, "Not my will, but thine be done." He was given dutiful submission.

He could say, "Sit ye here while I go and pray." Prayer alone is our best friend in time of trouble.

Prayer—O, Lord, our God, help us to see Jesus in Gethsemane. Whatever agonies sin has, give us thy grace to avoid. If thy Son bore our sins on the cross, may we accept that and escape eternal damnation.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE MESSAGE OF THE TOMB.

"I am the resurrection and the life."—Jno. 11:25.

In these few words Jesus told the world that there is no death, and that he is life—that which we are now living as well as that to come.

What Jesus is, is potential in us as the apple is in the blossom. What he is we may become. To follow him means we become aware of what we may become. Every phase of his life brings us to an illuminating ideal of living.

Thus, from every move of ignorance to intelligence, from sorrow to joy, from the low to the higher, from impoverishment to comfort, from discord to peace, from dishonor to honor, from wrong to right, the resurrection is the symbol and it marks the path from earth to glory.

The Message. The resurrection is the first ray of divine man, the first conception of divine purpose, the first hope of the dead, the first hope of man being raised from his unaccomplished self, the first certainty of salvation from an unholy career, and of the lift to a noble and saintly manhood.

Prayer—O Lord, our Father, inspire us with these hopes and all hopes thou hast proposed we should know through Christ our Lord.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE MEANING OF EASTER.

"For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ;

"Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself."—Phil. 3:20-21.

"Easter" comes from the Anglo-Saxon "Ostara" meaning "Divinity of Spring." The Greek is "Pascha," meaning "Passing," that is, "passing of winter to spring." The Hebrew word is for this season: "Passover." To the Christian it is Resurrection," which is "Verity." "Verily, the Lord is alive."

The work which the resurrected Lord does in the life that accepts him is typified in the Saviour's deeds in awakening moral life. The changes wrought in the adulterers, the woman at the well, Mary of Magdella, are types of the real true resurrection taking place in all those who believe on him.

Prayer—O Father, thy words of love, mercy and forgiveness touch our hearts and inspire us to that salvation through our resurrected Lord. O give us the Saviour in this saving knowledge. We ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

SHALL WE LIVE AGAIN?

"If a man die shall he live again?"—Job 14:14.

The world has never and can never lose its interest in this question; and we believe that the world will never be satisfied with an answer of anything less than the affirmative. Man has eternity in his heart.

Thousands, yes millions, have given their lives and long years to the study of immortality, God, and spiritual questions, and they are unanimous in their opinion that the soul lives after death.

Jesus was the world's greatest expert on this subject, and he speaks with clearness and precision. He says that "thou shalt live."

Paul was just as clear and precise as Jesus was. He had seen Jesus after death. To him death was to be with Christ.

And this has been the testimony of all saints, and it is reasonable for us to believe. It is inconceivable that God, the intelligence behind the universe, should spend the ages developing manhood, individuality and God-consciousness in man, and then, when the goal is attained, and his purpose achieved, should shatter it in death.

In the Resurrection we turn our eyes away from death and its sorrows, to life and its abiding joys. One day we shall join the heavenly host of angels and saints and live with them amid fairer scenes than the heart of man has even conceived.

Prayer—O Lord, our Lord, and our God, thou art our light and life. Grant unto us a new dedication of our lives and souls, to live and die for thee.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE LORD REIGNETH.

"The Lord reigneth, let all the earth rejoice."—Ps. 97:1.

If the Psalmist could feel this way about it long before Christ came and gave us the hope we have in the Resurrection, what song can you imagine he would have sung had he lived in the apostolic days?

Our hope is that in the Resurrection God triumphs over all impossibilities. The Psalmist said, "Clouds and darkness are round about me." He uses clouds here as a symbol of misfortune, distress and misery, things which stop a singing heart. But these things didn't stop him. He knew God, and his joy in God could not be touched with the superficial and the unreal. His faith seemed to penetrate immediate conditions and gave him an understanding life is not at its sweetest until touched with awe and sorrow. As clouds are not intended to smother but to enrich, so the clouds of life may enrich one's life and give him occasion for rejoicing.

The awe and sorrow of Christ's tomb has furnished the world with the pure flame of his presence forever. Sorrow and despair cannot crush utterly if Christ be there. Darkness and sorrow may come like the clouds do, but they are regulated by the Lord. If he erects fences they are to protect us against perils. He may throw up a hedge, but it may keep us from going over the precipice. "Light is sown for the righteous." So, "the Lord reigneth."

Prayer—O Lord God, our Father, thou dost reign and we want to be partakers of that life. Give us the glad light of our Christ and of thy counsel. In faith and love and thy wisdom, make thy presence real now and ever more.—Amen.

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

THE MEANING OF LENT.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"What doest thou here?"—I. Kings 19:9.

These are the words of God to one of his great prophets: "What doest thou here?" It is a question following a fast of forty days. It is a question with which we ourselves may sound the depths of our souls even as it sounded the depths of the soul of that man of God that day. What does Lent mean? Very briefly, and perhaps crudely: It is a forty days' fast—the forty weekdays preceding Easter, Sundays being left out of the forty because they are already holy days. Why forty? Because church fathers read a meaning out of, or into, the fact that Moses fasted forty days in the Mount before God gave him the Covenant; because Elijah fasted forty days in the Mount before God revealed himself in the still small voice; and because Jesus fasted forty days in the wilderness before his victorious encounter with the devil. Thus forty days of fasting in preparation for the great triumph of Easter. Webster's New International Dictionary will give you a very fine definition of Lent.

I have read three brief Scripture lessons for you from Exodus, twenty-four; I. Kings, nineteen, and Matthew, four. Now let us apply the question of our text to each of these readings: To Moses, "What doest thou here?" Answer: "I am thinking more deeply"; to Elijah, "What doest thou here?" Answer: "I am casting away something"; to Jesus, "What doest thou here?" Answer: "I am taking up something!" What is the meaning of Lent? Thinking more deeply on religious matters; laying down many unuseful and unnecessary things; and taking up a finer and holier course of conduct and living.

I. Moses, thinking more deeply. Without a doubt, Moses had learned to think deeply. He would have inherited that tendency from his devout and serious-minded mother, Jochebed. He would have been so trained in the courts of royalty, and the universities of Egypt. We have an illustration of the penetration of his mind in that he looked on the social wrongs of his day, the enslavement of Jews, his brethren, and chose to ally himself with them rather than be ruler on the royal throne of the Pharaohs. He would be a doorkeeper—and of what door! A door that opened from the very throne of God into the world of human civilizations, letting pass through it the Ten Commandments which have been the foundation codes of human conduct ever since.

How did Moses come by these codes? Fasting and prayer in the Mount. Giving himself over to thinking more deeply than hitherto he had ever thought about the deeper things of life; learning to have no other gods save Jehovah, leaving off all gods and false values; and taking up the business of forming and leading a new, and peculiar people.

Shall we not make Lent mean something worth while to us? Shall we, too, not learn to think more deeply of religious matters? Shall we not set aside a special time for Bible reading and prayer? Shall we not avail ourselves of every incentive to meditation? Shall we not take time to be holy? One of the things we can well afford to do during Lent is attend church more regularly, both on Sunday and whatever of week-day services there are. Let us make it the real springtime of our religious yearnings, until we, like Moses, shall hear God calling us to have no other gods before Him!

II. Elijah, giving up something.—Elijah, like Moses did all three of these Lenten virtues, but just as we laid emphasis on Moses' thinking more deeply, we wish to emphasize Elijah's giving up something. Elijah had many valuable things—a good ear for God's voice, and that is a most valuable thing. He had a rugged courage of his convictions, and that, too, is most valuable, but he had something he did not need, and of which God wished him to be rid. He had an implicit trust in God for the necessities of life and what a blessing that is—so like that portion of Jesus' Sermon on the Mount which refers to the lilies of the field, and the fowls of the air, but even so, Elijah had something to give up. He was doing the thinking more deeply even to the extent of becoming pessimistic; he was doing the thinking more deeply in giving himself to a great fast, and season of prayer. He had not gone to other gods, nor made graven images of them, and yet there was something for even our great Elijah to give up.

Elijah needed to give up his self-pity, his doubt, and his fear! They were ruining his noble career. They were destroying his great usefulness as God's mouthpiece. They were deflecting his course as a prophet to the people in high places. "He requested for himself that he might die; and said, 'It is enough; now, O Lord, take away my life; for I am not better than my fathers. . . . The children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets with the sword; and I even I only am left; and they seek my life to take it away.'" How about that? A lot of useless, self-pitying luggage that should have no place in the soul of a great man of God. What happened? He fasted forty days and nights in Horeb and God revealed himself to him—not in the great wind that rent the mountains, and broke in pieces the rocks before him! not in the great and terrible earthquake which shook the mountains; nor in the flames of fire that swept through the forests, but in the "still small voice" that followed them all. And what did the voice say? Your self-pity is great? Your doubt is justified? And your fear is a proper sizing up of the situation? No! Never! He said: "Go, return . . . anoint Hazael king over Syria; and Jehu king over Israel." Leave off your fear. There is mighty work to do! Kings to be made, and destinies to be fashioned. Unload your self-pityings and discard your doubt, "seven thousand in Israel have not bowed to Baal," and your fear is unfounded, and over-emphasized! "So Elijah departed thence."

Self-pity has been sown like thistle down across our country; fear has possessed all too many souls, and doubt has done much ugly work in places high and low. What is the meaning of Lent? Let us make it mean a new faith, and a laying aside of our old fears. Let us lay aside sins which do so easily beset us; let us hunt our help from the Hills of God, rather than the haunts of sensuous pleasure; let us make some self-denial, and less self-pity; let us give up some of God's material blessings to works of the church and to charity in order that we may have a fuller share of his spiritual blessings. When Naomi returned home empty of her earthly blessings she found herself in line for heavenly blessings. We all know now that money is not everything, and that loving kindness is better than listless laughter. Let each one of us, after prayer and fasting, seek to find out what God would have us give up for his sake.

III. Jesus, taking up something. Jesus, like Moses and Elijah, filled all three of the Lenten requirements—meditation, self-denial, and self-surrender to God's chosen course of action. Jesus was perfect in thinking more deeply. Satan told him, "It is written in the Scriptures," but Jesus, thinking more deeply, said, "It is written again." He went further, and deeper into the things of God. How blessed were we to follow our Lord's example in thinking more deeply in the Scriptures. We should read them carefully, and fully, and not jump at meanings. Jesus thought back through all the laws and prophets of his day and gave them a deeper and fuller meaning.

He was supreme in his giving up. All that was offered him from the wilderness mount he gladly gave up for your sakes and mine. He freely gave himself on the cross for the sinners of

OBITUARIES

EURE.

R. B. Eure, for 49 years a resident of Franklin, Va., died at his home in Suffolk, Va., August 14, 1932. The son of a Baptist minister, he was born in North Carolina 71 years ago. In early life he moved to Virginia, becoming a resident of Nansemond County, where he married Miss Sallie M. Darden of that county. To this union one son and three daughters were born. About a year after his marriage, Bro. Eure joined the Holy Neck Christian Church, of which his wife was a member.

They soon moved to Franklin, where Bro. Eure secured employment with the Camp Manufacturing Co., remaining with this company until he retired a few years ago. Shortly after their removal to Franklin, Brother and Sister Eure transferred their membership to the Christian Church of this town. Both were active in the church, he serving as deacon for thirty years, and his wife as superintendent of the Primary Department of the Sunday School until their removal to Suffolk last year.

His funeral, attended by a large number of friends, was held at his late home in Suffolk, August 16th, with interment in the family plot at Franklin Cemetery. In the absence of his pastor on vacation, Bro. Eure's funeral service was conducted by a former pastor, Rev. F. C. Lester, of Waverly Christian Church, assisted by Rev. Mr. Pleasants of Oxford M. E. Church, South, Suffolk, Va. He is survived by his widow and one daughter, Mrs. W. A. Daughtrey, of Suffolk.

MRS. E. P. JONES,

ELWOOD W. JONES,

EANES.

Our homes and community were made sad indeed when the death angel visited the home of Bro. George W. Eanes, Saturday, January 28, 1933, and took its flight with the spirit of the wife and mother. For five weeks she suffered, first from influenza, which developed into pneumonia.

For more than three weeks she suffered much, and would ask to be prayed for, because she didn't want to leave the children. God called and she answered.

Carrie Lou was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Lassiter, and had been a member of Liberty Christian Church since childhood. She spent 18 years and 18 days of married life as a faithful and devoted wife and mother.

The husband has lost a good wife, the children a loving mother, and her parents a devoted daughter.

We took the body to her church where the funeral service was conducted by the pastor, Rev. S. E. Madren, assisted by Rev. R. A. Whitten and Rev. J. C. Cummings, after which we laid her to rest to await his coming.

"Beneath a beautiful mounds of flowers in God's keeping,
We left her sweetly sleeping."

MRS. R. J. MARTIN.

BELL.

Henry Hart Bell was born March 4, 1855, and died at his home near Elberon, Va., February 21, 1933, age 77 years, 11 months and 20 days.

Early in life he united with the New Lebanon Church, and remained there till the end.

Mr. Bell had been a great sufferer, having spent a great deal of time in the hospital and upon a bed of suffering. He was confined nearly two years from a broken hip, his suffering being intense but borne with patience.

He is survived by his wife and four children: Mr. Henry H. Bell, Jr., of the home, Mrs. W. H. Atwill, Norfolk, Va., Mrs. C. M. Ellis, Wakefield, Va., and Mrs. W. H. Cockes, Elberon, Va.

The funeral services were conducted from the home of the writer, a former pastor, and the remains were placed in Rocky Hock Cemetery.

C. E. GERRINGER.

ROGERS.

Miss Sallie E. Rogers was born March 11, 1845, and died March 14, 1933, aged 88 years and three days. She was a resident of the Long's Chapel community until some six years ago, when she came to Burlington, N. C., and lived with her niece, Mrs. Paul King. She was a member of Union Christian Church and had been since early in life. She is survived by one brother, Mr. Frank Rogers, and by one sister, Mrs. E. W. Wilkins.

In young womanhood she taught school and there were those who went to school to her that wrought large in life. She was quiet, unassuming and faithful, and loved her church, her friends, neighbors and relatives. Funeral services were conducted from the home by the writer and interment was in the Long's Chapel cemetery. Sweet be her sleep till Jesus bids her awake.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

On March 2, 1933, God in his infinite wisdom saw fit to remove one of our faithful and beloved members, Mr. Geo. M. Gray. He was a devoted father, a kind neighbor, and a loyal member of the Franklin Christian Church and Sunday School.

The members of the church and Sunday School tender the following resolutions:

1. That we, as a church and Sunday School, have sustained a great loss.

2. That the influence of this sweet-spirited man will linger with us, making more real the loving Father whom he served so faithfully, and whom he followed so closely.

3. That we extend to his devoted family our heartfelt sympathy and pray God's richest blessings upon them in their bereavement.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the records of church and Sunday School, a copy sent to the family, and a copy to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

FELTON.

On February 27, 1933, Sarem Christian Church and the community sustained the loss of a revered and trusted friend and member, Mr. Walter J. Felton. He was a devoted husband and father and a loyal deacon of his church. Besides his wife, he leaves four sons and two daughters.

In the life of our departed friend, we have a worthy example of gentleness, kindness, loyalty and a desire to be of service to mankind. He was an exemplary member of his church, an excellent citizen, and a very loyal friend.

His passing has left a vacancy in the church, in the home and in the community that will be felt for years.

We have the assurance through faith that he now lives in the full enjoyment of the good deeds done in the body as a reward of the services so faithfully and freely rendered in the name of his Lord.

Ban on Insurance Dividends Lifted.—

The Insurance Superintendent of New York has evidently thought a second time regarding the restrictions recently placed on life insurance companies operating in that State. First prohibiting loans on policies, dividends to policy-holders and dividends to stock-holders, there has now been signed an order permitting the resumption of dividend payments to policy-holders. The department now finds that "earnings were sufficient not only to provide for 1933 dividends but for substantial additions to reserves" as well. More than likely the department knew these facts before it acted, but has been persuaded that the resumption of dividends was necessary, if new insurance business was not to be destroyed.

Dirigible Akron Falls at Sea.—

The wrecking of the Akron on Tuesday of this week calls to mind again the ill-fated Shenandoah, the first of the large navy dirigibles, which broke up of its own weight and fell while cruising among our eastern mountain ranges. The Akron had returned to its navy base at Lakehurst less than two weeks ago from a twelve-day cruise to the Panama Canal Zone. The trip on which she had started only Monday was to include the New England coast. At the time of disaster there were 77 aboard, among them being Admiral William A. Moffett, chief of the air forces. At this writing only four had been rescued, one of whom died subsequently, due to exposure. However, there were still hopes that other members of the crew might be saved.

Hitler and the Jew.—

With every press message from Germany these days, we feel the more justified for despairing of any finer world order so long as Adolf Hitler remains as chancellor. Now it is his persecutions of the Jew which make one hot with anger against this mountebank who sits in the chair of Bismarck. During the years preceding his elevation to power, Herr Hitler promised dire things against the Jew when he and his Nazi followers should rule the Fatherland. At that time a Nazi triumph seemed unlikely, and still more did it seem unlikely that his campaign pledges would be fulfilled provided the unexpected should happen and his demagoguery persuade the public to support him. But his oratory succeeded and it now appears that he meant what he said. There is no space here to detail the campaign of persecution. The appeal to prejudice, to class hatred, the jingoistic nationalism, to vainglorious, youthful hot-headedness—all this is made the basis of a shameful riot of violence. Homes are raided, furnishings destroyed, women and children forced to stand by while their belongings are ransacked and their men beaten like dogs. We wish Germany joy in the process. It will be a long road back, for her people, before a leader gains power who will base his philosophy on peace, and justice, and human brotherhood.—Christian Evangelist.

Michigan Votes for Repeal.—

The returns from the special election of delegates for the constitutional convention to act on the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, indicate that the repealists will have a majority between thirty-five and forty in the convention which is to consist of one hundred delegates. The wet sentiment in this election follows closely that of last November, when by a vote of 1,022,508 to 475,265, the "bone dry" provision was eliminated from the State's constitution. Michigan thus has the doubtful honor of leading in the battle to eliminate the "woeful curse of prohibition." One cannot but wonder as conditions become more and more muddled, at the prophecy made regarding America by the historian Macaulay, who wrote in 1857: "Your republic will be as fearfully plundered and laid waste by barbarians in the 20th century as the Roman Empire was in the fifth, with this difference that the Huns and Vandals who ravaged the Roman Empire came from without, and that your Huns and Vandals will have been engendered within your own country, by your own institutions." Can it be that Macaulay's prophecy is being fulfilled and that with the acquiescence of the people themselves?

Did Your Hay Stack Burn?—

Losses to the amount of approximately $20,000,000 occur annually in the United States because of your hay-stack or someone else's hay-stack bursting into flames spontaneously. This is an amount large enough to build two first-class cruisers, give the closed banks in North Carolina or Virginia a new lease upon life, or pay the debts of a half-dozen of the struggling denominational colleges in these two States and leave a nice sum over to endow one or more of them. Dr. C. A. Brown of the U. S. Bureau of Standards says, that research work leading to the "repeal of this unauthorized tax is very much worth considering." He continues: "Many chemists for many years have observed, experimented, and speculated over the question of how a hay-stack can make itself hot enough to catch fire. A part of the answer was easy enough, once it was demonstrated that the life processes of plants generate heat no less than do those of animals. . . Nevertheless, the major part of the riddle remained unsolved, for the highest temperatures attainable by living bacteria are still many degrees short of the ignition temperature of hay." Dr. Brown has become convinced, however, that the necessary gap between the highest temperature attained by living bacteria and that necessary to cause fire, is closed by decomposition of products given off by action of bacteria upon the hay. First the celluloses and starches are converted into sugar. This proceeds to ferment, but being buried deep in the hay-stack, without access to the air, the fermentation does not proceed to the normal end-point. Instead of a complete breaking down into carbon and water, the fermenting process produces complex gasses, rich in carbon and hydrogen, but sadly lacking in oxygen. If in any manner a large supply of air suddenly reaches these confined gasses, there is a decided reaction, which is more than likely to produce actual flame.

Saving the Gains of Prohibition.—

Up until just a few short months ago all the wet politicians of America from Al Smith down were saying over and over again: "We are utterly opposed to the prohibition farce, but we are also unalterably opposed to ever having the saloon again. Never, never shall that devilish agency of drunkenness, poverty, immorality, crime and political corruption flourish in any state. That much at least of gain from the American temperance movement will be permanent—even when we repeal the Eighteenth Amendment." Now, however, Congress and the wet leaders and even the President seem ready to forget these solemn declarations. "Naked repeal" is the watchword of the triumphant wets, drunk with their own victory. In our opinion, every Southern State should say: "We will positively refuse to vote for repeal of national prohibition until you add a section making it forever impossible to re-establish saloons in any state." We recently heard of one eminent religious leader saying in effect, "If liquor must be sold, I had rather have it sold by a saloon than our government." Such a statement may sound well but will not bear analysis. If whiskey is sold by the government, by agents who receive no profits from increased sales, then temperance advocates can always present proposals to curb or abolish the drink evil and count on having these proposals fairly considered on their merits. But if saloons are re-established operated by individual saloon-keepers who know that the more drunkards they make and the more prostitutes they have alliance with, the more money in their pockets, then indeed we shall see once again in America the most powerful and unprincipled political machine America has ever known—"whiskey rings" in every town and city buying, controlling, or intimidating city officials, county officials, Congressmen, United States Senators, and possibly even Presidents. Let the South and West give the East this ultimatum— "The motive of personal profit must be eliminated from the sale of liquor or we shall continue to refuse any repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment." —Clarence Poe in the Progressive Farmer.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Miss Irene Cotten, Secretary, Dendron, Va., writing March 30th, of the week-end conference of Youth Fellowship, which met with the Christian Church, Suffolk, March 25th and 26th, said: "We had a very successful conference in every way." The young people of the church certainly can put on an enthusiastic and worthwhile conference when they attempt it.

Rev. J. A. Denton, the happy pastor, writes to say "to friends who are interested that Lebanon Christian Church, which was burned November 13, 1932, has been rebuilt and is now complete with new seats. The money is now in hand with which to purchase an organ, song books, and the necessary church furniture, having been raised by the young people of the Sunday School." This is encouraging news, indeed, and we congratulate pastor Denton and his good people.

In the distribution of the large sum given to hospitals and orphanages in the Carolinas by the Duke Endowment Fund last week, we are pleased to note that our Christian Orphanage, Elon College, receives $2,393.52. This will help our Orphanage as similar sums will help the other forty-five orphan homes in the Carolinas. Ninety-eight hospitals in the two States received $696,048.00, and the forty-six orphan homes received a total of $147,349.67. The trustees of the fund announced that these donations brought the total gifts to $6,967,219.73 to hospitals and orphan homes in the Carolinas since the Endowment was established by the late James B. Duke, December 11, 1924.

Our old school-mate and friend, for years a member of Congress, now on the federal bench, Judge E. Yates Webb, in charging a jury before his court the other day, said: "There are 50 to 60 languages and dialects spoken in the world today, and in not one of them can be found a single sentence relating one thing good about whiskey. For more than 1,000 years those who realize its evil effects and how it makes fiends and beasts of men have been fighting it, and it is no time to weaken. I do not want to see the day return when it will be dangerous for our wives and mothers to walk the streets without escorts, or the day when our highways are worse death traps than they are now because whiskey and beer can be purchased at every corner."

The Richmond Christian Advocate, in its appeal for the Easter missionary offering in Methodist Churches, confronts the problem that many in our Christian Churches confront, viz: That of local indebtedness and obligations, which seem impossible to meet; but this is the way the writer in the Advocate would face and deal with these problems: "Our local problems will find their solution in the light that comes from the radiance of an indwelling Christ, a radiance with such a glow that it is the light of the whole world. The church that has this glow will have light upon its local difficulties and will find the way out. But let there be quickened among our people a passion for the salvation of the whole world and there will be such light and zeal among them that the church debts will be provided for. The cross held before the church today will lift the people to heights of love and power. Hold only the banks and bank notes before them and there will be a night of gloom. We are now making this decision."

"THE BANKS ARE ALL ON EARTH."

By S. D. GORDON,
Author of "Quiet Talks on Service."

Here is a man who gets through his life down on the earth and goes out into the other life. . . . Here he comes up to the gateway of the upper world. He is lugging along a farm or two, some town lots and houses, and a lot of beautifully engraved paper—bank stocks and railroad bonds and other bonds.

As he gets up to the gateway, the gateman will say: "What's all that stuff?"

"Stuff," he will say, astonished. "This is the most precious wealth of earth, sir! I have spent my whole life, the cream of my strength, in accumulating this."

"Oh, well," the reply will be, "I have no doubt that is so. . . . But that sort of thing does not pass current up in this land. That has to be exchanged at the bankers' offices for the sort of coinage we use here."

The man looks a little relieved at this last remark. The other talk has sounded strange and given him a queer misgiving in his heart as he listened. But "banker" and "exchange"—that sounds familiar. The ground feels a bit steadier. He picks up new spirit.

"Where are the bankers' offices, please?" he asks eagerly.

"They are all down on the earth," comes the quiet answer. "You must do your exchanging before you get as far up as this. That stuff is all dead loss now. You can't take it back to the bankers now, and it has no value here. Just leave it over on that dump heap there outside the gate and come in yourself."

And the man comes in with a strangely stripped and bare feeling.

What we get and keep for the sake of having, we lose, for we leave it behind. What we give freely, for Jesus' sake, for men's sake, we will find by and by we have kept, for we have sent it on ahead.—In Missionary Review.

OUR EASTER APPAREL.

Easter and spring-time with the awakening of new life, beautiful and bright, the happy song of birds, the joy which seems to vibrate throughout all nature, calls for response from our own hearts. The words of Solomon in his Song of Songs, seem to find such expression in these spring time days: "Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away. For, lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come and the voice of the turtle-dove is heard in our land; the fig tree putteth forth her green figs, and the vines with the tender grape give a good smell. Arise my love, my fair one, and come away."

There is also a restlessness, a longing for something to satisfy the craving of the soul of man. Many seek satisfaction in purchasing new clothing, roaming from shop to shop and spending much money, only to find after they have it in their possession that it does not satisfy, that it is not really what they want after all. The disappointment is so great that they get even more dissatisfied with life than ever and complain that life holds nothing for them. But life is more than raiment, and the soul of man will never be satisfied with any outward apparel, nor any external happiness, for it ever seeks divine companionship and the joy which only the risen Christ can give. He speaks to his people at this Easter-tide in the words of Isaiah, the prophet: "Awake, awake; put on thy strength, O Zion; put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem." There is a beautiful garment for each one and it is called the robe of full salvation, a spotless robe of Christ's own weaving; there was never a garment so costly for it was purchased with the blood of Jesus, the spotless Lamb of Calvary. It is the inner garment of the soul and though the outer garments may be old and worn, it is ever new. "Man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart."

Dean Alford has written: "As the beauty of the flower is unfolded by the divine Creator from within, from the laws and capacities of its own individual life, so must all true adornment of man be unfolded from within by the same almighty Spirit (I. Peter 3:3-4). As nothing from without can defile a man (Matt. 15:11), so neither can anything from without adorn him." And Dr. Watts: "I would dress myself in charity as my best raiment. I would put it on upon my faith and hope, not so as to entirely hide them, but as an upper and more visible vesture." When we consider an old definition for charity as "love in all its arts," it means much. We are commanded to adorn the heart (I. Peter 3:3, 4) and someone has said: "Let the Word be your mirror; your salvation your solitary pearl; gracious speech your cosmetic; and good works your strengthening gymnastics."

Our earthly garments soon become old and worn, out of style and are thrown away, but the garment of our salvation is ever new, for Christ ever lives to make intercession for us, for he is seated at the right hand of God. But some day he is coming again to receive his own, that where he is there we may be also. Only one garment will suffice then, the robe of full salvation through Jesus Christ. May we put it on this Easter-tide and let him ever keep it pure and spotless for he is able, willing and ready to do it for us if we will let him.

When he shall come with trumpet sound,
O, may I then in him be found;
Dressed in his righteousness alone,
Faultless to stand before the throne. W.

THE AMERICAN FAMILY.

The story of the American family and the amazing changes in its life, education and social development from Colonial times to the present will be one of the dramatic exhibits shown in the Hall of Social Science at Chicago's 1933 World Fair—A Century of Progress Exposition—which formally opens its gates on June 1st.

Family life in Colonial times will be depicted by a group of virtually life-size figures. In this scene the women are seen spinning, weaving and making clothes, drying meats and fruit, while the children play at the work of their elders. Through the open door the father is seen breaking the soil with a plow.

A screen then descends on which is a colored map with pictures. Here the Colonial family appears in its tiny house which, in turn, forms part of a small village. Nearby are a church, school and courthouse—the chief activities of this self-sufficient community. Out of the village leads a boggy road over which a horseman and stagecoach struggle. The daily travel limit of such a family is less than 50 miles.

While the screen is down the stage revolves. When the screen ascends the American family of 1933 appears, living in a city apartment. In one room is a radio, in another a refrigerator, while a few cans on the pantry shelf indicate the nature of the food supply.

Once more the screen descends and the 1933 family's apartment appears on the map as part of a huge building, which in turn is part of a modern city with its theatres, parks, schools and factories. The boggy road has given way to an automobile highway. There are railroads and airplanes and the daily limit of the family now extends to distant cities hundreds of miles away.

A GREAT REVIVAL.

Just a word from our little city and our church. Dr. Wm. T. Morgan, of Birmingham, Ala., pastor of the Central Congregational Church, has been with us since the second Sunday in revival meetings. We are having two services a day, at two and seven P. M.

Large congregations are attending both day and night. There was almost a thousand people at church last night. We are having conversions and reclamations at every service. Hundreds of people are being blessed, and many are being led away from sin.

The city is being moved as never before. The meeting will close next Sunday night. Dr. Morgan goes from here to Langdale next week to conduct a meeting for Rev. H. M. Gray. I will report results at the close of the meeting.

Dr. Morgan is a wonderful evangelist, such as our church needs and will appreciate at all times. Any church will be fortunate to secure him for a meeting.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

FOR THE EASTER MISSION OFFERING.

The annual Missionary offering in our Christian Churches is soon to be made. Envelopes have gone to all the churches either direct to the pastors, or to the secretaries of the churches, in our Southern Convention. It has cost some precious dimes and dollars to purchase and pay postage on these envelopes that they might reach church secretaries and pastors. This is not waste, the very closest economy, provided those entrusted with the envelopes will use their diligence to distribute them discreetly, and insist on every member taking an envelope and putting some offering in it. The responsibility of waste or saving is now with the ones into whose hands the envelopes have fallen.

There has never been a time when mission funds were so much needed as now, or will count for so much, if contributed. Our mission cause, the one cause for which the church itself was founded of our Lord, and through which the church extends its borders and builds up the kingdom of heaven on earth, languishes and suffers and, out of its suffering, makes its plea. Let no one think that our Christian Church is the only one making the plea now for the Mission offering. This writer can take clippings from any of our church papers which sound as if they were our very own, going direct to our people. Take this one for instance from the Richmond Christian Advocate last week:

"The opportunity of leading the churches into this spirit of cooperation with Christ is now ours. This period of missionary cultivation is not of man, whether he be bishop, missionary secretary, or any other church officer. It is an opportunity from Christ. Its purpose is to warm our hearts unto the Master's cause. Happy will be those who enjoy it and receive the benediction of his presence."

The Editor of THE SUN, the Mission Secretary, well knows the difficulties of the way, and the hardships under which the people groan. The calls for benevolence are many and insistent. And yet these calls are heeded as they never have been, and today more is being given than ever in all our history in the way of material help for physical relief. The call of the churches in their missionary plea goes beyond this and is a plea that the bread of heaven—spiritual food—be given to hungry hearts and perishing souls. Shall we be deaf to the call of eternal life, while we heed the call to help temporal and transient needs? Again the words come to us which we quote from our Methodist contemporary:

"Many say that we should not enter upon any special efforts for Missions and Kingdom Extension in a year like this. May our prayer be: 'Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.' It is a sad, solemn, reality that he who seeks to kill the missionary enterprise in any day under any conditions is crucifying Christ afresh and will put his church to open shame. The preacher and the board who will join hands with the Master in these dark hours and lead the people up new Calvaries of loving self-sacrifice for the cause for which he died, will soon find their churches in his presence in all his risen glory and power. There our church problems will find their solution, and there will be grace and money sufficient for church debts. A Christian enjoying his presence not only will help discharge these church obligations but will, if need be, die for him. This presence comes through cooperation with him. Therefore, those among us who are charged with the responsibility of local affairs will do well to enjoy to the fullest the privileges of this present period of missionary cultivation and to lead the people to this opportunity. Experience will teach us that this is not only Christian idealism but essential realism."

Yes, many pastors and members of Christian Churches will be saying that we are unable to do anything for Missions since we are unable to solve our own local problems. Such short-sighted pastors and people forget that the solution of local problems depends upon a willingness to cooperate with our Lord and obey him in the dearest command and commission of his heart and soul, when he said: "Go ye and teach all nations." The most real and practical thing to do in solving local problems is to make a whole-hearted, consecrated missionary offering out of love to our Lord and solely for his sake, and then we may expect his blessed presence and his cooperation in our own problems. Remember that he said: "And, lo, I am with you unto the end," only after he had given the command, "Go ye to the uttermost parts." The call for the missionary offering is only a call for loyalty and love to our Lord and His Christ. J. O. A.

THE PASTOR'S OPPORTUNITY.

Rev. E. Stanley Jones spoke twice in Winston-Salem, N. C., Sunday, March 26th. The address in the afternoon was two hours in length and the one, beginning at 7:45, was one hour and a quarter in length. The afternoon address was primarily to the preachers who had been invited, within a radius of one hundred miles, and they had come, and were there, many of them bringing their wives or members of their families, making an audience of between four and five hundred. At the evening service the address was in the largest auditorium of Winston, which has, we are told, a seating capacity of 3,200. All seats were taken and there seemed to have been some 200 or more standing at the entrance and about the aisles. It was such an audience as one seldom sees gathered on any account, and there was perfect order and quiet throughout the address of this marvelous man of God. What was it all about? Briefly this: The power of God to save sinners through Jesus Christ, the world's only hope and Redeemer. Dr. Jones is a missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church in India, but in recent months has toured China on a missionary journey, very much as the Apostle Paul toured Asia Minor and other unchurched areas in his day.

Just four days prior to his appearance in Winston, Dr. Jones landed in New York, came to the church in Baltimore, where he was converted, tarried at that sacred spot to give God praise for his own changed heart and life, and began his speaking tour, which is to carry him to the principal cities of America. Thousands, even tens of thousands, will flock to hear this man deliver his marvelous message of redeeming grace through Jesus Christ, his Lord. Dr. Jones, in his address, undertakes to interpret the cross current of thoughts in China and to tell his audiences something of the conditions, needs and opportunities in China today. In brief, two movements are now competing with each other for the Chinese mind and heart—Communism and Christianity. In all human probability, the next five years will decide which will gain the upper hand in China—Communism, with its teachings of Carl Marx and godless Soviet Russia; or Tolstoy, a Christian mystic, and Christianity. The Chinese problem is our problem, since the world is one, and nations have been brought into proximity and made neighborhoods by modern transportation and communication. Unless America and the Christian world can settle the problems of China and the pagan world, then our civilization is doomed and our Christianity is impotent.

Now the one claim of E. Stanley Jones, the outstanding missionary of our day, is that the ministers of America must answer that question. Unless the preachers in their pulpits now will solve the problems of America and of the world, they will be solved for evil and not for good. Moreover, mission secretaries, mission boards and mission interests all center in the pastor in the pulpit, the minister among his people, and unless he takes up the problem and deals with it, it will go unsolved so far as the power of our Christ is concerned. Dr. Jones claims that the ministers have never had the opportunity that they have today, nor has there ever been put upon the church the responsibility that is upon it now. The church must speak and the ministers must cry aloud in the name of their risen Lord and Redeemer, and in doing this our churches and our country will recover its own soul, save itself from death, and help solve the problems that now distract, perplex and burden a world.

What a glorious thing it would be if all the pastors in our Christian Churches could have heard this living example of a redeemed life with an experience and a message, tell of his and their opportunity, privilege and responsibility.

Unless the pastor will give the message, the missionary message, of salvation and grace through our crucified and risen Lord, our task is hopeless and the greatest opportunity we have ever had for progress and power, in the name of our Lord, will be lost. The salvation of America is in giving confused and chaotic China the Gospel of the Christ that redeems and saves.

SOME PASTORS.

There are pastors who seem to care very little about what becomes of others, so "we take care of ourselves." These, finally, play out of course, but the damage they do while drifting to their own undoing is dreadful and irreparable.

However, there are pastors who care, and these are the salt of the earth and are the great majority. As a class, no people are so conscientious, as worthy and as faithful as our pastors. These some carry on their hearts the burden of their church and, relegating their own personal interests into the background, push forward with the work of their Lord. We are thinking now of the clarion call to every pastor in the churches of the Southern Convention. There may be a few who are saying nothing to their people about a missionary offering, though they well know that it is the one time in the year when the annual offering is called for and their churches have an opportunity of making a real contribution to the glory of God and the building of his kingdom. On the other hand, many of the pastors are burdened and are announcing to their people that this is Mission period, and are praying that their people may be led to the light and that they may be brought into the radiance and the glow of spiritual warmth and enthusiasm for God.

The goal our churches have set for this is an amount equal to one-third of the amount of the pastor's salary. Envelopes have been purchased and sent to pastors or all church secretaries. While some few may, in their indifference, make the purchase and the sending of these envelopes a wanton waste, others will do their utmost to get them distributed. Some pastors, we know, are writing a pastoral letter to every member of their church, enclosing an envelope and soliciting a liberal offering for Missions the day the offering is taken. Before us now, while we write, one faithful pastor has sent us a copy of the letter he has written to every member of his church, and the following is an exact copy:

"My dear Co-Workers in the Church:

"The church means much to us. It has done a lot for us and for those who have gone before us. Through the efforts, consecration, prayers and missionary endeavors of the servants of Christ, we ourselves were brought into the fellowship of the church and company with God. We are indebted to others for our hope and expectation in Christ.

"It is our responsibility to pass such blessings and benefits on to others insofar as we are able. The desire and determination to give to others the gospel that is so precious to us, is the test of our own faith and consecration. This is the time for us to express our interest in the wide fellowship of the Kingdom by our gifts—by giving our money that our church may take her place and do her part in the world.

"Our local church is asked to give one-third as much as we pay our pastor, which amounts to $300.00. Perhaps we should give more, but I hope that every member will give his share of the above amount.

"I am enclosing to you envelopes for yourself and family. Will you please make your offering, place it in the envelope, bring it to the service Easter Sunday morning, and give it for the glory of God and for the coming of His Kingdom?"

"Be sure to be present for the service Easter Sunday. We want to make it a worthwhile service. Speak to your neighbors and friends.

"Yours in Christ,

"Pastor."

O! That all pastors in our Southern Convention would do as this one has done, or, out of prayer and a passion for souls, would strike upon some plan of reaching their people equally as efficient.

BELIEVE IT OR NOT.

The chosen of the Lord have always faced difficulties. The task of righteousness has ever been burdensome. The difficulties in the way to victory have ever seemed insurmountable. Recall a little history:

Joshua, successor to Moses, encountered enemies that were overwhelmingly against his few followers. Then the voice of God came unto him and said: "March around the walls of Jericho one time each day for six successive days, and on the seventh march around those same walls seven times and have the priests blow with a great blast a trumpet of ram's horns, and then the walls of Jericho, that impregnable city, will crumble before you and the city shall be yours."

Now the scholars and scientists are telling us that such a thing was impossible and not in keeping with natural law; that if those walls did fall down, there was a secret blast set off somewhere or an earthquake in the natural order of things that shook down the walls, and thus gave the city captive to the Israelites. Well, all the rest of the world may believe as it will, but Joshua said it was the voice of God, and he acted as if he believed what the voice said. And the Israelites have it in their recorded history, as well as in tradition, that these walls fell down in keeping with the promise made to Joshua. They, at any rate, believed that God Almighty spoke to Joshua and that he meant what he said when he did speak. It is difficult for us poor humans to lift our thinking and our believing to that high level of deeds and conduct, which level is above the ordinary facts of experience. Again and again God's chosen have faced facts, stern and stubborn, which they could not see through, and then God came and lifted them to a level of deeds and daring and achievement, which is high above the ordinary and the human.

God spoke to Jonah and told him to go to Nineveh, a great heathen city, and declare against it. Jonah, at any rate, acted as if he believed it was the voice of God speaking to him, and he fled from it, and in fleeing he was pursued of God, thrown out into the sea, and a great fish sent of God swallowed him, and Jonah was preserved after three days, and was cured of his disobedience, and went and delivered the message of God to a city and a people whose souls were perishing. Many scholars and thinkers discredit the story of Jonah and do not believe that the thing could have been done, or was done. Jonah, however, acted as if he believed it, and left for us a record of the power of the gospel of God, such as is left by few, in that a whole city, at his preaching, repented in sackcloth and ashes. Believe it or not, whether the big fish swallowed Jonah and that for three days he was in the deep; but the people of Nineveh believed it and acted as if they did believe it, and Jesus Christ, our Lord, while here on earth, believed it and preached it, saying, "As Jonah was in the depths of the sea three days and nights so must the Son of Man be in the depths of the earth three days and nights." The man who wrote the Book of Jonah believed it, and a whole nation, a tribe of people believed it, and they acted as if they did believe it, and in so acting snatched victory from defeat and life from death.

These are not ancient stories. They are as modern as the happenings recorded in yesterday's daily. At the sound of the gospel trumpet by faithful ministers, the impregnable walls of sin crumble and the faithful go on conquering and to conquer. Many, who at the first gospel invitation disobey, come to grief only to repent and go forth to conquer great cities and vast multitudes in the name of the Lord.

What can one do against so many? What can a little church do in giving the gospel to China, to India, to Africa? Believe it or not, God is still able to conquer peoples with the trumpet call of the gospel or to feed multitudes with a few loaves and fishes that are given at his command. Shall we in this Mission Period and in our Easter offering act as if we believe these things? May God help us.

J. O. A.

CATHOLIC INTOLERANCE CHALLENGED.

The Catholic Church cannot help being intolerant. It is just taught and trained and everlastingly driven to that end. Take this as an example from a high authority in that church:

"Archbishop Michael J. Curley, of Baltimore, is quoted in the Washington Post as saying: 'If this country is going to survive and be saved from the many influences now gnawing at its vitals, it must be done through the Catholic Church alone. Our religion is the only power left. Nothing else of religious or moral force remains.'"

We presume the Archbishop believes that or he would not have said it, and yet one wonders how he can believe that his church is the only "moral force" that remains in the light of undisputed facts, even at the present. It happens that the Chaplain of Sing Sing Prison in New York is a Roman Catholic priest and has recently made public his findings as to the religious affiliations of the prisoners in that famous prison. His list shows the following: Catholic, 66.3 per cent; Protestant, 28.6 per cent; Jewish, 3.9 per cent; others, 1.2 per cent. The statistics of this one prison, we are told, about tallies with prisons throughout the United States, which, according to the Free Methodist, are as follows for all prisons and prisoners: Catholic, 66.4 per cent; Protestant, 25.6 per cent; Jewish, 6.7 per cent; others, 1.7 per cent.

Quoting further from the Free Methodist: "Out of a total population of more than one hundred millions of people, the Catholic population of twenty millions (less than one-fifth of the population), furnishes more than three-fifths of the criminals in prison, beside the multitudes that escape detection and conviction."

Surely, the Archbishop must have known these and similar facts, and yet issues his statement of intolerance which has been an outstanding feature and trait of the Catholic Church through its history.

Of course, one realizes that the cause for this large percentage of criminals among the Catholics is accounted for on the ground that their religion does not necessarily transform human conduct, but teaches and emphasizes a creed and the observance of forms which may or may not strike into the depths and roots of human character and conduct. If a Catholic remains loyal and true to the practice of his creed and ritual, his own personal conduct is not called into question so far as his church relationship and standing are concerned. On the other hand, Protestant Christianity, in practically all of its branches, teaches and preaches that the individual life must be transformed through accepting Jesus Christ as Saviour and Redeemer. It has ever been the policy of Protestantism to tolerate Catholicism and view it as a church that was doing much good in the world, but Catholicism has ever claimed, as it does yet, that it is the only church and there are no other churches and, as its Archbishop now says, is the only "moral force" in the world. If this claim is true, may God pity us.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

A Christian should be unusual. He should live an unusual life. Jesus lifted life above the ordinary and the commonplace. The disciples listened to his mighty words and marvelled at his unusual teaching. They beheld his works and said: "What manner of man is this, that even the wind and the sea obey him?" He was a mighty man.

A Christian should be a person of mighty words. Jesus spake as never man spake before. His messages stirred up deep conviction and provoked attention and thought. His words were not culled from a dictionary. They were wrought out of a mighty mind. They were dynamic with spiritual power. They were sharper than a sword of Damascus steel. They were like winged arrows. However, they were as soothing as a mother's lullaby. They were filled with eternal truth.

What is the secret of his power of speech? The speaker was divine. The teacher was a man of the unusual kind. He was spiritual. He was the source of his message. He was more powerful than the message. Weak men cannot deliver strong spiritual messages. They may weave words into a beautiful thesis and excel their fellows in elegant speech. But a sermon from the lips of a spiritual weakling may be as "sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal." How great is our need of power today! Ministers need thorough training and preparation for the pulpit message. But a literary sermon will be powerless unless it comes of a spiritual experience. And the true minister must have a spiritual message from God. For God expects the preacher of the Word to have a mighty message of power. "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." (Acts 1:8.) The sermon will have power in proportion to the spiritual power of the preacher.

A Christian should be able, through Christ, to do mighty works. "Greater works than these shall ye do, because I go unto my Father." What wonderful works the Master performed in one day. Asleep on a ship tossed by wind and wave, he arose and rebuked the wind and spoke to the sea: "Peace, be still," and the wind went back to its hiding place, while the sea was calm as a still summer night. A demon possessed man, whom no one could tame, met the Lord in the wilderness. And this meeting was the beginning of a new life for this poor suffering man. For he was soon sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed and in his right mind. Now a poor, suffering woman, who had been afflicted for twelve years, presses through the throng and touches the hem of his garment in living faith. Her sickness was over and she rejoiced in a return to vigorous health. Finally, he went into the home of the ruler of the synagogue, where the little twelve-year-old daughter lay cold in death. He took her by the hand, called her to arise, and she found new life again.

Then a Christian should be a mighty person. Power belongs to God. And power belongs also to man. Certainly to a Christian there is promise of power. But this power is conditioned upon vital fellowship with Jesus Christ. There are so many troubled hearts waiting for the comforting words of one who walks with the Master. Many people are discouraged in their struggle with temptation and suffering. Jesus can help them through a spirit-filled Christian. Millions of devoted Christians, today, can testify to the fulfilled promises of their Lord. In your sorrow He is your comforter. When temptations come, he is there to help. If you are walking with him, you know his voice and will follow him. He has entered our homes and brought peace, contentment and happiness. We should be witnesses for him who died for us. The Master is calling for you.

SUPPORT ELON COLLEGE.

There are a few choice spirits in our brotherhood who have always had a keen interest in Elon College. Rarely, if ever, have they turned a deaf ear to her appeals. Both directly and indirectly, they have been supporting the College throughout the years, and they rejoice today that this has been their privilege, for they realize now as never before that the fruits of the College are in evidence throughout the church. Ministers and laymen are able to take positions of effective leadership because of the training they received at the hands of the College in the days of their youth.

I presume that the College has never seen a day when it was not in need of support, and it never will. It has needed and it needs today, the interest, the prayers, the cooperation, the sacrifice and the materials of those who are willing to share their possessions. At times, we have been able to turn to men of large affairs, outside of our Convention and outside of our denomination, but today, with the drastic reduction in values, and the serious consequences resulting therefrom, it is evident that the College need not expect substantial gifts from those who are not directly interested in, and responsible for her future. Of necessity, we who know the value of the College and are determined for her program in behalf of the youth of our church, must shoulder the responsibility of supporting the institution. I know that of all the days we have seen yet, these are perhaps the most difficult to find money that we can part with without seriously inconveniencing ourselves. But, Christianity has never locked after itself. It has always looked after larger and better things beyond itself. In fact, we know that whosoever shall save his life shall lose it—that whosoever shall lose his life for the sake of the gospel, the same shall find it. Too many of us deny ourselves by withholding for ourselves. We seem not to have learned that to share, even to the point of sacrifice, means gain for ourselves, individually, far greater than we had ever thought or planned. How long will it take us—that is, those of us who are Christians, to learn that whosoever shall give in the spirit of him who gave his all, and for the support of the ever widening possibilities of his eternal kingdom, that we, likewise, shall receive from the bountiful hand of the Father, even as he has given.

The Convention has adopted different plans by which individuals, churches and conferences may give assistance to the College. It has planned that those who wish may give through the church, the Conferences and the convention—that is, that those who gave for conference apportionment, might rest assured that a legitimate share of their givings would eventually find its way into the treasury of the College and for its support. This source of revenue for the College has, through the years, been of great value and material assistance. However, the amount received from the Convention has been constantly diminishing. Accordingly, the Convention authorized the College to appeal to individuals for substantial gifts for the support of the College. We seem to have gotten the idea that when other interests of the church called for contributions, that we may feel free to give, however small, and be assured that the gifts, in whatever amount, would be appreciated, but when the College called for contributions, this meant a large sum, and that if we could not give a worthwhile amount, the gift would not be acceptable. This impression is erroneous. Elon College will receive any amount that anyone has to give, however small or large. We want you to feel perfectly free in making your contributions, but, for the safety of the College and the permanency of the institution, won't you please give something? In order to convince the public, and those who are interested indirectly in the College, that their gifts will be acceptable, we have inaugurated the Dollar-a-Month Club plan, and are offering to you the opportunity of making your contribution monthly. If an individual can give as much as a dollar a month, we are glad. If he can give more than a dollar a month, it will be acceptable. We are asking that individuals in Sunday Schools who have associated themselves together in classes, that together, and as a class, they take memberships in the Club.

The Dollar-a-Month Club was launched just about a year ago now. At present we have 526 members in the Club. We have received a total of $2,447.00 from this source, which helps tremendously. We have a balance due on dues of $847.00. If you are in arrears, if at all possible, won't you please send us your contribution now? I am taking this opportunity of appealing to the friends of the College who have not joined, to churches, Sunday Schools, societies and organized classes who are not members of the Club to please join and help us in our heroic efforts to put the College on the basis it deserves to be. Since our last writing, we have received $628.00, and the following new members. Make sure to get your name on the list before Commencement:

DANIEL B. ATKINSON.

Reference has already been made in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN SUN of the passing on March 1st of a great leader in the Christian Church, Dr. D. B. Atkinson. As this sad news was made known through the columns of this paper, and still more widely through the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty, hearts were made heavy throughout the length and breadth of our United Church. All of us who knew Dr. Atkinson personally are aware that we have lost not only a very gracious friend, but also a noble leader. Here was one whose scholarship, optimism, vision and integrity made an abiding contribution to our hearts and lives.

It is never possible to appraise the influence of a Christian life. It would surely be impossible to estimate the influence of this Christian leader, who through many years redirected and enriched the lives of those who came under his influence. As is already known, he gave himself during the most of his life to the educational work of our colleges. His contribution was made through four of our colleges, namely: Union Christian, at Merom, Ind.; Jireh College in Wyoming; Palmer College in Missouri, and, finally, Piedmont College in Georgia.

Only those who came directly under his instruction can have a full appreciation of his influence as a Christian teacher. The more intimate the knowledge of his work, the greater is the appreciation. It was the privilege of the writer to work with Dr. Atkinson at Jireh College. Only those who were associated with that enterprise can understand the worth of his leadership during years of struggle. It was a leadership marked by amazing patience, courage and faith. It was with equal courage and integrity that he gave himself in his work with all the colleges.

His was a type of leadership that is sorely needed today. The times cry aloud for men such as he! When so many in places of authority throughout our land, even those bearing the name Christian, are found with feet of clay, his abiding integrity brings to us the reassurance for our shaken faith. We who have known him shall continue to grow in strength because of the memories we have of him. These helpful and abiding memories have prompted this small attempt at a statement of my own appreciation of this one who now has gone to join the Church Triumphant.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

In considering the subject, "Youth and World Friendship," the question might arise, Why should youth be connected with the one great problem—World Friendship? Is it not during our youth that we are most active? Is it not during our youth that our minds are grasping the conditions of the world? Yes! The youth of today is taking more interest in the problems of the world. Youth is studying the principles of Jesus and learning the true teachings of Christ toward friendship. Our Saviour was not a friend to one, or two—but a friend to all. If every youth were taught the principles of Jesus, and if we as a whole would practice these teachings, would there not be an understanding between the nations? Could not our problems be settled without misunderstanding? Yes, every one of them.

Youth finds that the world is afflicted with five major problems:

First, Social and Economic Problems. The day must come when the wealth of the hills and plains shall be the people's own, and God's freemen shall not live as tenants or slaves of men on the earth which our Master gave to all. Every child must be born with an equal birthright in riches and knowledge revealed by the labor of the ages. Then the machinery of industry shall throb with a greater volume of music; because the men who operate these great tools shall be their owners and masters.

Second, The Political Problem. The political causes of war must be abolished, and political actions must aid in world friendship. One way in which we may create this friendship is, demanding that those who represent us in our government be followers of Christ, and whose first aim is to make our nation a Christian nation. What can we accomplish when we try to keep the fire of hatred burning in the heart of every youth with war stories? And what shall be our gain when selfish politicians give our country a black name for their own selfish interests? Something must be done, and the youth must do it.

Third, The Racial Problem. Steps should be taken to remedy the control of the weaker people by the more powerful. It must be impressed upon the mind of the youth that all people must stand side by side in equal worth and real freedom. Youth is comprehending more and more that our Master was no respecter of color. He was a friend to all.

Fourth, Educational Problem. The principles upon which education should be based to bring about World Friendship are truth, righteousness and peace. We, as the youth of today, must give ourselves to the great educational program sponsored by the thousands of schools, churches, and other organizations. There should be an opportunity for all to have an equal share in public education.

And fifth, The Religious and Moral Problem. What is religion? Religion to me as a youth is the heart of existence. A man who is not actively

PRAYER.

O Lord, thy word is truth and blessing and uprightness and peace. Do what thou wilt, O God, with whom thou wilt, only let thy word be established. O Mighty God, who hast all power to relieve world distresses, help men and women to see that thou dost permit conditions as they are that out of them there may come a levelling of human affairs in the realization that thou dost work to bring all hearts to an understanding of thy creative and unailing purposes. We ask it for Jesus' sake.—Amen. J.

A BUSHEL OF GOLD FOR GOD AND GOVERNMENT.

The First Baptist Church, Raleigh, N. C., according to the Biblical Recorder, observed Sunday, March 19th, as collection day in what our Baptist friends call the "Crucible Plan." In this plan the Baptists are making an effort to secure mission funds to prevent further retrenchment in their missionary work. The "Crucible Plan" is a call for a congregation to bring in old gold and silver pieces that individuals are willing to part with as an offering for the spread of the gospel. And now see what happened in this one church, March 19th, according to the Recorder: "The collection Sunday, March 19th, amounted to almost a bushel. Many will bring articles on the next two Sundays, and it is believed that the collections will amount to considerably more than a bushel of material.

"In this collection were found 136 rings, many of them wedding rings, and sixty watches. Many medals were given, and in addition dozens of lockets and other trinkets, evidently given in past years as love tokens. An article of peculiar interest found in the crucible was a silver pitcher given by the widow of a former corresponding secretary of the Baptist State Convention. Another was a solid gold police badge given by the wife of a former chief of police of the City of Raleigh. This badge was presented to her husband by the police force when he held that position.

"The collection included, also, silver and gold umbrella handles, chains, medallions, cameos, hat pins, spoons, cups, thimbles, vanity cases, fifty-six spectacles frames, bracelets, cuff links, collar buttons, stick pins, fountain pens, old coins and much dental gold.

"This church took its self-denial cash offering a few Sundays ago and received several hundred dollars. In spite of that fact cash was deposited in the crucible including gold, silver and currency."

Our Baptist friends are making heroic efforts to carry forward their missionary work; work for which they are noted throughout the world, and a work which has made them a great and mighty people on the earth. This gold and silver is to be sent in to the mint and refined and sold to the Government, the Government now being eager to buy gold and silver which may be cast into "the coin of the realm." Thus the Baptists are doing a mighty turn for God and Government, as they claim, and their watchword is the "Crucible Plan." God needs the gift of gold by the people and the Government needs and is anxious to purchase the gold that it may be put into circulation as money, which is now needed in the arteries of trade.

Other people may well profit by the "Crucible Plan," for other missionary treasuries are empty and the call for funds with which to give the bread of life to perishing souls is an insistent call which every obedient church member should do something through self-denial to heed.

REV. ANSEL E. JOHNSON.

The Commission on Missions loses a valuable servant in the death of Rev. Ansel E. Johnson, Assistant Secretary of the Commission, who died suddenly in the office of the Commission on March 17th. Mr. Johnson was born at Newton Centre, Mass., studied at Mount Hermon School, where he was thrown into the company of the great evangelist, Dwight L. Moody. He later studied at Yale. After holding pastorates in California, Everette, Mass., and Buffalo, N. Y., he then came into the service of the denomination and has specialized in the requirements for modern church budgets and the business problems of churches, was the author of "The Guide Book for Every Member Canvasser." He was a man of great usefulness in the Commission office and in the field. He was greatly beloved by all who knew his genial friendly and noble character. It is interesting to know that he was the lineal descendant in the line of the eldest sons of Samuel Johnson, famous English lexicographer of the eighteenth century, and was the first eldest son not to be named Samuel.

MISSIONARY PROGRAM.

THE CHURCH AND INTERNATIONAL LIFE.

(Prepared by Enoch F. Bell, in the American Missionary, for April 1933):

I. Worship Period (10 minutes).

1. Leader—We are to move in thought and with our heavenly Father out beyond ourselves today, beyond our community and state, and even beyond our nation. We are to become citizens of the world, and as such we shall try to relate our church and gospel to world conditions, world needs and world developments into one great family of true children of God.
2. Hymn: "Spirit of God descend upon my heart," or "Lord of All Being, Throned Afar."
3. Scripture—Acts 26:9-20 (using word "nations" instead of "Gentiles" in verses 17 and 20); Rev. 7:9-10; 16-17.
4. Hymn—"We've a Story to Tell to the Nations," or "Joy to the World."

II. Report and Question Period (20 minutes):

- a. What is meant by "International Life?"
 - b. Why does international life need the moral standards and spirit of Jesus Christ?
1. Use the Sino-Japanese situation as an example, asking such questions as, "What is the trouble in the Far East?" "Why does Japan act as she does?" "How does China react," "Is it all conducive to international peace and brotherhood?" "What would happen if both Japan and China were under the full sway of Jesus Christ?"
 2. Let some one quote the following words of Kagawa, the great Christian Japanese: "We Christians have a most wonderful system of love. Why do we not supply it to practical things? When we get a good system of Christian cooperatives working between Japan and China we shall not have capitalistic imperialism and explosions of war values. My prayer is that Western Christians may get an imaginative grasp of this possibility and of the practicable way of putting it into effect through the existing agencies of foreign missions" (Quote also Chang Luliang of China in his message to the Christian of Japan, found in the April number of the Missionary Herald. The same number also contains a significant article entitled "Toward a Better Understanding.")
 - c. Bring out the fact that the missionaries of the Church of Christ are the best forces in the world for international understanding and cooperation in the truest sense; also for the creation and maintaining of a family spirit among nations.

jot down on the blackboard such reasons as the following:

1. Missions show the best of America to other peoples.
2. They disarm criticism and win friends by their life of service.
3. They identify themselves with the people among whom they work and so can interpret that people to us in America.
4. As Christians they naturally show a spirit of understanding, sympathy, expectation, cooperation and friendship in international relationships.
5. They help to create moral unity in the world through the teaching and living of Christian truth and love.

(For apt quotations on missions and world peace see Federal Council Bulletin, November 1930, editorial "The Church's Unique Contribution to World Understanding"; Education for Peace (25 cents), from Foreign Missions Conference, 419 Fourth Ave., New York City; International Problems and the Christian Way of Life (30 cents), and Missions and World Problems (75 cents), both issued by the "Inquiry," 129 East 52nd St., New York.)

d. Dwell at length upon what your own Congregational and Christian missionaries are doing for better international life. Show how they—and you—form an International Improvement Company, Unlimited:

1. Take A Journey of Discovery (1932 Guest Book) as your chief guide in this. Ask such questions as this: "How are the McKnights of Sendai helping Japan become acquainted with the teachings of Jesus?" "Where is Alma Cooke at work and how is she helping a great nation in need?" "What about Gertrude Chandler—where is she and how is she helping her adopted country in constructive days, or Edward Fairbank in the same land of vital issues?" "What about John Merrill of Aleppo College, or Ezra Young on the Turkish playground at Adana, or Jean MacDonald Hollenbeck in Portuguese West Africa—how are they helping give expression to the heart of America and knowledge of the love of God in Christ Jesus?"

2. Have two or three persons give names and locations and types of work of the foreign missionaries in which your own local church is interested; also what your own local church is doing in benevolence giving as compared with what it is spending upon itself.

e. Bring out the necessity of making America Christian in order to help along the work of Christian missions abroad.

1. Missionaries are embarrassed and the work of the Kingdom in other lands greatly retarded by un-Christian attitudes and also of American representatives in foreign lands, but more particularly by the non-Christian doings within America. Ask such questions as these:

a. How do the Japanese feel about America's discriminating against them in the matter of citizenship?

b. Were the Filipinos properly treated in the recent vote of Congress granting them independence?

c. What about the effect on the world of race discrimination and lynchings within America, of greed and graft, banditry, lawlessness, vice and violence, divorce and disease?

d. Does the church in America commend itself to other peoples as thoroughly divine and loving?

2. Emphasize the need of a true revival of full consecration on the part of all Christians in America and the strengthening of all our Congregational and Christian work within our own land.

III. Closing Moments (5 minutes):

1. Leader may re-emphasize in closing that Jesus is as necessary for all peoples as for us; that we have the added responsibility not only to be Christian in our dealings with other peoples and nations but also to share Christian life and truth with them—

That we may be at our best.
That they may be at their best.
And that the world may be the best ever.

2. TO CHURCH SECRETARIES.

(A copy of this letter was sent last week to every Church Secretary in the Convention):

Elon College, N. C.,
March 31, 1933.

Dear Friend:

I have done my best! Now I come appealingly to you. These envelopes, and postage, have cost some precious dimes. But you can help make them worth it all.

First. Please, please, good friend—Don't. It will be waste, indeed, to leave the envelopes at home, or that which is equally as wasteful, to just take them to church and lay them down there. Please, please DON'T!

Second. Please, please, DO! The envelopes have been bought, and postage paid, that each and every member of your church and Sunday School may have one for the annual Easter Missionary Offering. Please do try your level best, by aid and announcements of your pastor, and the help of your Sunday School Superintendent to get the envelopes distributed on the preaching Sunday before the offering is to be taken the next preaching Sunday. If you have to be absent, please, please, get a committee (why not some hustling young people), to put an envelope in the hands of every member with the request that it be brought, or sent in, on the Sunday the offering is announced to be taken?

I ask this, or that you and your good pastor use some plan to get them distributed, not for my sake, but just for the sake of Him who loved us and commissioned us to "go tell" others—even unto the uttermost.

Craving, yea, begging your brotherly cooperation in this effort to make every envelope count in some sort of a contribution to the Kingdom of our Lord,

Sincerely yours,
J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

THE RIGHT VIEW.

I had just finished a picture the other day when I had a visitor. My visitor, after the fashion of those who know nothing of pictures, rushed over to my picture and after one look told me that it was wrong. I asked him to come across the room from the drawing and look again. This he did, and of course, saw a different picture. He then remarked that he would like to have one like it large enough to cover the side of a house.

The picture reminds one of life, and the man is like most people just now. We refuse to look at the picture right. We, like this man, want to stand in the wrong place and then we can see only a conglomeration of paints—or a world that is all wrong.

I hear a lot about what is wrong with the world just now, but I wonder if we are not simply going in the wrong direction. We need to turn to God. In running away from God we are traveling away from the light. This throws our own shadows in the path just before us, and makes the way loom up dark and dreary. While if we turn and go the other way, go back to God, we will be facing the light and our shadows will be behind us.

I recall an old hymn: "Turn, Sinners, Turn." That's what we need.

We remember "Humpty-Dumpty":

"Humpty-Dumpty sat on a wall;
Humpty-Dumpty had a great fall:
All the king's horses and all the king's men Cannot put Humpty-Dumpty together again."

Humpty-Dumpty climbed a high wall to get a good view of the king. The shining armour of the king was to Humpty-Dumpty what the glory and honor of this world is to us. He ran after the richly dressed king until he had a great fall, then he found that this bright, shining king could not put him together again.

We have been running after kings, so to speak, and we, too, have had our fall. So now we are finding that these things we were running away from God to see, can't bring any happiness, or help at all.

Then since we have had our fall, some are trying to go a little deeper, and blame God, or the church, for it all. When the fact is, we have run ahead of God, and made a failure, but we should not blame God. To blame Him now is like a story I have heard.

A man once staggered into a church, after having spent his life drinking and fighting. The life he had led had taken its toll. He had lots of his bones broken, his nose was on one side of his face, his jaw was broken, and he no longer looked like a man. He listened, however, to the people testify, and when the pastor called for someone else to stand up and tell what the Lord had done for them, he stood up and said: "I guess you can see what the Lord has done for me."

However, I am glad that the world still has some folks in it who see things with a broader view, and think of their fellowman.

Yes, I can still find people who live for God and others. Take our Hilly Grissoms here on this mission field, and all the workers here. They are doing a big thing. Then I think of our Dr. Atkinson. There is very little said of him, for him to have done as much as he has. So as I see him now with his shoulders bent and head turned gray doing this work for others, I wonder if there was ever a time when we needed more to just stop and think of what he has done and is still doing? Oh, what a life! It will give us strength if we will look at him, and hear him as he points out the way of God. May God help all people at this time to get the right view and go forward.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND EASTER.

"What are you going to do Easter?" This question is often on the lips of young people. Well, what are you going to do? Have you thought out a plan, or will you just do whatever comes easiest at the time?

I fancy that some who are away from home will go back to the old home for a visit. College people are among this group. Parents usually look to the spring vacation as the time when they will have the youngsters home for a few days. I am told that parents are sometimes disappointed because the children whom they love, and whose bills they pay, seem to be so eager for parties, dates, and visits away from home that the parents feel neglected. Of course, this is not generally true, but you can see how the "old folks" might feel.

The picture in my mind when I think of young people and Easter is of groups scattered all over the world who will arise early and go either to a church or some lovely out-door place where they will worship God at sunrise. They will sing praises to him who came from the tomb on an Easter morning long ago. Many of them will tarry in this garden, like Mary, until the Master calls their name. Then they will return to the company of those who are sad, saying: "The Lord is risen, indeed." It is this group that brings happiness to the world at Easter time.

Yes, there are many who will busy themselves with ball games, and more who will think that a dance is the only appropriate way to spend the time. Of course, I belong to the century in which I was born, and not in this twentieth century of modernism, but really I have never been able to figure how a dance (and such like things) is the way to celebrate the resurrection of Jesus which brought assurance of immortality. If any of you who read this can explain it to me, you will do me a service, for it really disturbs me at times. Posters advertising an "Easter Dance" make me wonder if I live in a Christian land. What can possibly be the connection between the resurrection of our Lord and a dance?

Oh well, I will continue to think of the thousands of young people who hold sunrise worship services, attend and take part in other church services, furnish flowers for churches and take them to sick folk, visit prisons and tell of the risen Christ, and win their friends to allegiance to Christ and lead them into church membership at Easter. This is the group that brings real joy into the world and testify that Christ has risen in their own hearts.

GOSSIP

Last night I heard a fine sermon on "The Viciousness of Gossip." It was pointed and timely. The preacher said that he knew two fine young men who had entered the ministry with high hopes, but who have been hounded out of the ministry by gossip. He said he was willing to stake his life that there was no truth in the statements concerning either of them. But the men are ruined, so far as their chosen profession is concerned, for life.

Gossip is a deadly poison. It injures the one who originates it, the one who spreads it, and the one about whom it is spoken. Why deal in it? There is no possible good in it.

And yet it passes among otherwise very good folk. And so often the thing from which the rumor started was completely harmless. Here is an illustration. A car is parked on the highway in the moonlight. Another car passes and the occupants of the parked car are recognized. An insinuating story starts about the community. I know a car that parked on the west side of a lake in the city of Seattle, Wash., so the people who were in the car could look at a rising moon over snow-covered Mt. Ranier beyond the hill-tops of the city. It was a magnificent scene, and those young people worshipped there, but the gossips passing would not have said so.

In his letter to the Philippians (4:8) Paul gives the finest kind of advice concerning thoughts and conversation. This is the way he states it: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." Then there will be no vicious gossip to break the hearts of people.

We often feel that a discussion of death and immortality has little value for young people. Youth seems to be synonymous with life, vitality, hope and endurance. Yet death is a stern reality to many youths. It enters the home and takes away loved ones. It is worth while for youth to find a satisfactory answer to the age-old question: "If a man die, shall he live again?" an answer that will give purpose and direction to our daily living, and will sustain us in hours of trial.

Some of the following assignments may be used as topics for discussion:

1. Ask one person to secure a statement from a number of persons on the topic: "Why I believe in immortality."

2. Ask another person to secure several statements on "What I believe about immortality."

3. Have some one speak briefly on the following:

How a belief in immortality affects: (a) my attitude toward my fellowmen; (b) my attitude toward myself; (c) my attitude toward death.

4. Ask three persons, one a youth, one in middle age, and one in old age, to speak briefly on the topic: "What a belief in immortality means to me."

John Ovenham, the English poet, has expressed in beautiful poetic language the meaning of Christ's death and resurrection for those who place their trust in him:

No man may see the face of God and live;
His love enfolds us like the air and light;
His wonders are about us everywhere;
But finite cannot grasp the infinite.
And so He veiled His Godhead in the flesh,
That all might see and know Him in His Son,
Might see in Him the fulness of His love
And share with Him the victory He won.

So did the mortal of this son of man,
Whose body shined the immortal love of God,
He lived that His fair life might be to man
A perfect mirror of the love of God,
The full expression of His Fatherhood.
He died that love might live forevermore,
And find in Him its ever-open door,
And me in Him find God still more and more.

He rose to show that Death is not the end
But the beginning of life that will transcend
Man's highest hopes, and will in full amend,
By God's sweet grace, life's woe.
An end? An end? Nay, then, there is no end!
Death vanquished is no more man's foe
But his good friend.

He rose to show that Death is but the Gate
To Life Immortal, where He still doth wait
To welcome man with love impassionate.
And now He lives and loves and pleads as then,
And in His own good time will come again,
To dwell once more among the sons of men.

interested in religion is not playing fair with his fellowmen. Francis Margaret Lindsey says: "Religion means a feeling tone of life, that leads one to believe that life is purposeful and orderly; that life is not a haphazard phenomenon, but the creative and energetic expression of the spirit of love and truth." Religion is faith in God—in other people. It is faith in life's ultimate values—faith that is more than an intellectual concept. Youth realizes that in spite of the difference of opinion between nations, there must be cooperation between the youths of the world, if friendship is to be attained. We, the youth, that are striving for World Friendship, can truthfully say with Prof. John Fiske: "The future is lighted for us with radiant colors of hope; peace and love shall reign supreme—the kingdom of this world shall become the kingdom of Christ, and He shall reign forever and ever, King of Kings and Lord of Lords." JESUS TRANSFIGURED.

LESSON III—APRIL 16, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "And the Word became flesh, and dwelt among us (and we beheld his glory, glory as of the only begotten of the Father) full of grace and truth."—Jno. 7:14.

LESSON TEXT: Mark 9:2-8, 17, 18, 25-29.

The shadow of the Cross had fallen across the path of Jesus. When Peter, speaking for the disciples, had made his great confession, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," Jesus began at once to tell them that the Son of man must go to Jerusalem and suffer many things at the hands of the elders, and be crucified. He knew what fulfilling his mission as the Christ, the Saviour meant, and he wanted the disciples to know. He also knew what it would cost. He, therefore, wanted to be prepared for it.

Into a High Mountain Apart.

"Jesus taketh with him Peter, and James, and John, and bringeth them up into a high mountain apart by themselves." The place to solve our problems, to make our decisions, to prepare ourselves for life's demands is not in the crowd, and on the lower levels of life. The place to do that is "on a high mountain apart." This does not necessarily mean a mountain literally, although there is an advantage in being on such a place of eminence when thinking through things. It does mean that great issues ought to be thought out and decided apart from the crowd and in a spiritual atmosphere. It is good to get advice and to take counsel of others. But the important thing is to be still and to hear the voice of God. Ministers and Sunday School teachers and Christian workers ought to have their "quiet hour," their Mount of Vision.

Jesus taketh with him Peter and James and John. Only three of the twelve. It was not favoritism. Among the disciples of Jesus then (as now), there were those who by temperament and training, by response, were better prepared to receive deeper insights into spiritual truth. But all of us have vast unrealized spiritual possibilities in our lives.

And He Was Transfigured Before Them.

Jesus had had a glory with the Father which he laid aside when as Paul said, "he emptied himself," and took upon himself the form of a man and became a servant. On this incident, Jesus takes upon himself for the moment the glory which he had with the Father. They saw Jesus in his truer, spiritual nature. And the effect was so impressive that they were sore afraid.

It is significant that Luke says Jesus was transfigured, "as he prayed." There is nothing that so transfigures and transforms life as true prayer. He whose inner prayer life glows will reflect a spiritual glow in his face.
