"And there appeared unto them Elijah and Moses." The law and the prophets were represented. Both had borne witness of him and both found their fullest expression in him. The law came by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ.

It Is Good to Be Here.

Peter did not know what to say, but he said it. And yet there is something timeless and personal about it. Who of us is there who, under the spell of some high moment or some rare experience, has not openly or secretly felt that it was so good that he would like to remain there, to live always in the atmosphere of that experience. There are many who never seem to realize that mountain top experiences are not ends in themselves; they are means to ends. They are but preparation for nobler living and larger service.

A Voice Out of a Cloud.

"And there came a cloud overshadowing them; and there came a voice out of the cloud." A cloud is a mysterious thing. Things look somewhat vague and shadowy in a cloud or fog. But out of this cloud there came a voice, certainly out of mystery. It is a parable of religion. There is a great deal of mystery in religion. There are many things we cannot understand. But there is certainly enough even in all the mystery. Let any man, with all his doubts and perplexities, set out to live as if he believed there is a God, let him try to live up to what light he has, let him do what his best moments tell him to do, and he will find certainty enough. "He that willeth to do shall know."

My Beloved Son, Hear Ye Him.

"This is my beloved Son, hear ye him." It is the voice of God himself, speaking his approval of his Son. It is the Father setting his stamp of authority on his Christ. In all things concerning the moral and spiritual problems of life, listen to Jesus Christ. He is the final authority. His teachings and his spirit are the final tests of things. The wise man will hear him in all things.

No Man Only, Save Jesus.

"They saw no one any more, save Jesus only with themselves." The law with its dignity and moral power and prophecy with its passion had been put in eclipse by Jesus. He dominated the situation. In the light of his moral and spiritual perfection, other things faded into insignificance. We should try to come to that place where Jesus Christ is central in our lives.

The Valley of Service.

When they came down from the Mount of Vision there was the challenge of the valley of service. Spiritual blessings are to be shared, they prepare for and give impulse to ministering to others.

Beer for Mother's Day.

No more flowers—no more candy or other nicknacks will now be needed for Mother's Day. The daily press assures us that we will have beer for Mother's Day and all those finer sentiments of the soul can be expressed by sending mother a keg of beer. There will be no need even to waste money on pink ribbons to surround the keg, for mother will be so glad to get this gift of which she has been deprived so long that she will think only of its contents. The old-fashioned mother with her tears, her prayers, her hatchet, and her votes drove out the saloon but that was in old-fashioned days. Our new-fashioned mothers (with the help of a subsidized press and income tax evaders) have given their diamonds and their bridge afternoons to work for the return of the saloon. We apologize for use of that term "saloon" for we understand that Wisconsin legislature has passed a law making the use of the word "saloon" a crime. The Wisconsin Solons declare we must say "tavern" but of course the fact that we are not allowed to use the term "saloon" just makes us want to do it. Back to our original subject. Don't forget to send mother a keg of beer for Mother's Day. The Senate thought of prohibiting children under sixteen years of age from making such purchases but they remembered that even little children love their mothers and should not be deprived of expressing that love in modern up-to-date methods. At any rate the return to beer assures us that we will have "bigger" if not "better" mothers.—F. E. Davison in Christian Evangelist.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

"The opening of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."—Psalm 119:130.

"I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord."—Psalm 116:13.

MONDAY.

IF WE KNEW.

"Behold how good and how pleasant it is to dwell together in unity!"—Ps. 133:1.

"If I knew you and you knew me
If both of us could clearly see,
And with an inner sight divine,
The meaning of your heart and mine,
I'm sure that we should differ less,
And clasp our hands in friendliness;
Our thoughts would pleasantly agree
If I knew you and you knew me."

Prayer—Dear Father, make thou for us this hour of prayer thy altar for our worship. At this altar may we daily remember any differences we have with anyone, and show us how to get rid of all disagreeable differences and be at peace and in love with all men.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

COOPERATION.

"Wherefore putting away lying, speak every man the truth with his neighbor, for we are members one of another."—Eph. 4:25.

"They helped every man his neighbor—The carpenter encouraged the goldsmith, and he that smoothed with the hammer him that smote the anvil."—Isa. 41:6-7.

"Two fool jackasses—now get this dope—
Were tied together with a piece of rope.
One said to the other: 'You come my way,
While I take a nibble of new-mown hay.'

"I won't," said the other, 'you come with me.
For I, too, have some hay, you see.'
So they got nowhere; just pawed up the dirt,
And oh, my gosh, how that rope did hurt.

"Then they faced about, those stubborn mules,
And said, 'We're just like a couple of human fools.

Let's pull together, I'll go your way,
Then you come with me, and we'll both eat hay.'

"Well, they ate their hay, and liked it, too,
And swore to be comrades, good and true.
As the sun went down they were heard to say:
'Ah, this is the end of a perfect day.'

"Now get this lesson—don't let it pass;
Learn this one thing from the poor jackass;
We must pull together—it's the only way,
To conduct our business and make it pay."

—Anon.

Prayer—O Lord God, our Father, happiness is what we want, thou knowest. Give us the true idea of happiness and help us to achieve it at any cost. In Christ's name, we ask it.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

SUCCESS FOR SALE.

"Blessed are the poor in spirit, for their's is the kingdom of heaven."—Matt. 5:3.

"Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."—Matt. 6:33.

Who Will Pay the Price?

You want success! Are you willing to pay the price for it?

How much discouragement can you stand?
How long can you hang on, in the face of obstacles?

Have you the grit to try to do what others have failed to do?

Have you the nerve to attempt things that the average man would never dream of tackling?

Have you the persistence to keep on trying after repeated failures?

Can you cut out luxuries? Can you do without things that other people consider luxuries?

Can you go up against skepticism, ridicule and friendly advice to quit, without flinching?

Can you keep your mind steadily on the one subject which you are pursuing and resist all temptations to divide your attention?

Are you strong at the finish, as well as quick at the start?

Success is sold on the open market. You can buy it—any man can buy it who is willing to pay the price.

Prayer—O Lord, our Father, forbid that we shall seek the low aims of life, but rather teach us thy will in the reach for righteousness. If it is better to have failed in a high aim than to succeed in the low, make that our aim. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

USE YOUR HEAD.

"Think on these things."—Phil 4:8.

Use Your Head.

"A woodpecker pecks
Out a great many specks
Of sawdust when building a hut,
He works like a nigger
To make the hole bigger
And is sore if his cutter won't cut.

"He doesn't bother with plans
Of cheap artisans
But there's one thing can rightly be said,
The whole excavation
Has this explanation:
He builds it by using his head."

Prayer—Our Father, make us as "wise as serpents and as harmless as doves." Forbid that we should be thoughtless, but by thy spirit make us careful in every act, to make it right. Help us to plant our feet in the right place and stand firm.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

OUR MORNING PRAYER.

A Man's Morning Prayer.

"Once more the sun's well-ordered way
Has ushered in another day,
And humbly, Lord, to thee I pray all trustingly.
Give me desire to take my part
In busy life's exchange, and mart,
With warm and sympathetic heart right willingly.

"Give strength for all apportioned work
At one with thee—nor let me shirk
The tasks a wayward spirit irk too easily.
Be mine to make an honest plan,
Justly to treat my fellowman.
Nor with distrust a neighbor scan suspiciously.

"And let me aid all those who need
A cheery smile or friendly deed,
Eliminating class, and creed, whole-heartedly.
So when its course the day has run
To restful night, may I be one Whose conscience whispers: 'Duty done'—approvingly."—Amen.

SATURDAY.

"And they were judged every man according to their works."—Read Matt. 25:14-30.

INVICTUS.

"Out of the night that covers me,
Black as the pit from pole to pole,
I thank whatever gods may be
For my unconquerable soul.

"In the fell clutch of circumstance
I have not winced nor cried aloud.
Under the bludgeonings of chance
My head is bloody, but unbowed.

"Beyond this place of wrath and tears
Looms but the horror of the shade,
And yet the menace of the years
Finds, and shall find me, unafraid.

"It matters not how straight the gate,
How charged with punishment the scroll
I am the master of my fate;
I am the captain of my soul."

Prayer—(Say the Lord's Prayer.)

—William Ernest Henley.

SUNDAY.

THE HAPPY MAN.

"But godliness with contentment is great gain: For we brought nothing into this world, and neither can we carry anything out; but having food and covering we shall be therewith content."—I. Tim. 6:6-8.

"A roof to cover up his head
He has, the same as I;
His roof is steep and made of tile
That cost him wealth to buy.
One-fourth his roof will shed more rain
Than my whole cottage can,
And yet I am just as dry as he—
This envied, wealthy man."

—Blanche Tromble Evans.

Remember the parable of the rich man and Lazarus; who was the happy one?

Prayer—"Be content with such things as ye may have," Lord, thou dost say. Man, with the least of this world's goods, "is but a little lower than the angels," Lord, thou dost teach us. O Lord, make us rich with thy richness, for Jesus' sake, we ask it.—Amen.

The President's Sense of Humor.

President Roosevelt has a sense of humor. He has shown it. When he signed the beer bill in March 23rd, he said to the moving picture photographers who took him in the tragical act: "And I hope you got the smile at the end." What funny thing did the President see? It could not have been the little children of the poor who will have to give up their milk that their parents may buy beer. Nor could it have been a vision of the toiling men whose homes will grow barer and barer and the increased poverty of many thousands who will waste their wages for the disreputable draught as the days pass. Nor was it the increase in crime. Nor the dead slain by drunken drivers. Nor the young men and young women led into base lives by the beer that will be sold. What kind of sight was it that made the President smile? It is a strange sense of humor our President has. He ought to have wept instead of smiled when he signed that beer bill. But it was a smile that will come off. All this will be reversed—maybe the Supreme Court will do it—but if not the people will be sure to do it sooner or later—Editorial in Christian Evangelist.

WHY JESUS ATTRACTS YOUNG PEOPLE.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"The dove of Christ constraineth us."—
II. Cor. 5:14.

The love of Christ attracts people of all ages. But how does it especially attract young people? Young people are attracted to Jesus. They may seem flippant. And, indeed, they may be flippant, but underneath their show of flippancy is a full measure of devotion to the real and true. Thousands of young people in every country are turning to Jesus. Working for him, and thinking his thoughts after him. And why?

I.

Jesus cut out "red tape" and put in red blood. The Jews were seeking to see how many rules they could keep. It is said that at the time of Jesus they had as many as seven hundred rules concerning the keeping of the Sabbath. Rules, rules, rules! Eating, sleeping, going and coming, all done by many rules. Religion was made an endless array of rules. The love of Christ kept him in "hot water" concerning their many rules. He couldn't do good until he had done the rules. According to them he was wrong on the Sabbath, he was wrong in the temple, he was wrong in his directness of attitude and approach toward God. He broke the Sabbath, he upset the temple ritual, he blasphemed concerning God. Wearied with their harrangue, he told them: "The letter killeth, the spirit maketh alive." He could not be content to "fiddle while Rome burned."

Watch a group of young people. Before they get seated someone is designated as leader, and before the meeting is formally opened the work is done! How distracting to us who stand so much on "Roberts' Rules of Order"! They do not seem to be over interested in the number of creeds they can recite, nor the number of Shibboleths they can pronounce. Jesus and his disciples did not do ceremonial washing before they ate; and on one occasion Jesus laughed at his critics for the way in which young David broke the rules of the altar by eating the shewbread and passing it around to his young followers!

Jesus may weary some of us by the way in which when he wanted to begin the preaching of the Kingdom of God, instead of going to the preachers of his day, he went down to the fishing ports, and the political posts and called laymen. Further he may bother some of us by the way in which he laid important responsibilities upon women, and sometimes upon mere children! And so Jesus sought out a few followers, some of them quite young, who made no pretense at theology, and said unto them, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

II.

Young people admire Jesus for his real reverence. He was devoted to his parents—obeyed them as a lad, "and was obedient unto them," is the way it was put. He attended the synagogue each Sabbath, and gave close heed to all its fine teachings. He was distinctly reverent. Entering the temple he was reverent, but there was an open frankness about his understanding of God his Father that made his elders marvel.

Standing before persons he was reverent. Blind Bartemeus was a flesh and blood person to him—more valuable than all the world besides; the poor, sinner woman was a person, and therefore, to be most courteously considered, yea, and pardoned! The two mites of the poor widow attracted him, and he gave her proper appraisal. He was loyal, and devoted; reverent and sincere—and if you have not found that great undercurrent running full in the loves of young people you have not been able to get yourself into their "holy of holies" of heart, and life, and conduct. It is there. One of the finest sights in all the world is a group of young people in prayer! Perhaps a lack of red tape, but no lack of real reverence.

III.

Young people admire Jesus for his size. He did not call himself "Son of Mary," but "Son of man"; he did not look upon himself as "Son of Joseph," but "Son of God." "Son of man," embraced all humanity. "Son of God" embraced all divinity. No such magnitude had ever been seen before! The world itself was not too big for him—neither perpendicularly, nor horizontally. The whole wide world was his field, "To every creature," was his command.

He showed the same generosity to the Samaritan woman, despised representative of a despised race, as he did to the rich, young ruler. His love went across race lines. It was he who told the story of the Good Samaritan. The son of the centurion—of the oppressing Romans—was healed just as quickly as Peter's wife's mother. He was big enough to go beyond political lines. He was never jealous, saying in spirit, "Whosoever does the will of God is a brother of mine."

Of course, some of the prejudices of the older folks live in young lives, but little baby boys do not seem to make much distinction as to color in their friendliness, and play. And growing young people are becoming weary of so much talk about "fair play" between races and nations, and so many open violations of the rights of others. As they admire and follow Jesus Christ they see more and more that real worth counts, and think less and less of old political and racial sham. Young people of all nations and races are more and more respecting the personalities of others.

IV.

Young people admire Jesus for his ability to take punishment. However older ones of us may have pictured him, to youth he is a hero. Tell a thoughtful young person that Jesus was a "sissy," or a coward, or a hypocrite, and you will see how quickly they will resent it. Jesus talked better than any man who had ever lived—but he lived up to his talk! And they cannot forget that. "Turn the other cheek," takes more real manhood than striking back, and Jesus wholly turned the other cheek. To forgive the faults of others takes more courage than to curse them, and to an infinite degree Jesus forgave. A man who cannot help himself may have to take punishment but the youth is conscious of the fact Jesus could help himself, and yet for his foes took his punishment. They know that Jesus preached the doctrine of giving life to save life, and that he did as he preached. They realize that for enemies, mere acquaintances and friends the attitude of Jesus was the courageous attitude always, and they draw closer up to him.

They realize that some compromise, or half-truth, might have saved Jesus from the cross, and yet he did not yield. They realize that an out-and-out refusal to submit to the calumny of that final day's trials would have probably brought legions to his side to fight for him, and yet he went right ahead. They realize that all this would be but human if it were mere determination, but when they see that back of it all was a compelling, compassionate love that has stood the test of the ages, they know it was divine.

So thousands upon thousands of them have kissed homefolks good-bye in the ports of Christendom, and gone out to give back to him the full measure of their own lives! In less spectacular places they are showing a loyalty and a devotion to him that belies much of the criticism of youth. Let us pity those who make such broad criticism of youth, for their criticism is usually an admission that they are missing one of the finest things in life—namely, a sympathetic and understanding fellowship with the young people of his day. From the constraining love of Jesus they learn sincere directness, reverence, magnitude, and love. Let us help to enthrone him in their lives.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

In the year 1912, two little girls and a younger brother lost father and mother within a few weeks of each other and a home was broken up. These three little children came to the Christian Orphanage to live. They entered the institution on May 4, 1912. The older sister less than six, the little boy less than three. During the years these children lived here you and your church contributed of your money to help give these children an opportunity to make good. Let us see if your money was wisely invested.

The older girl reached the age of eighteen, when they are supposed to go out, and accepted a position in a large department store as a saleslady and after giving her best efforts for two years, decided to get married, and is happy in building her home nest.

The second sister finished high school and worked in the dairy department of the Christian Orphanage and looked after the churning and making the butter for four years and graduated at Elon College. She has since married and is the queen in her home.

The little boy grew both in stature and wisdom and reached young manhood a splendid boy and popular with all who knew him. He graduated valedictorian of his class in high school. He was not satisfied to stop with a high school education, but had greater ambitions. He wanted to take a course in electrical engineering. It was made possible without any cost to the Christian Orphanage, to give him four years in our State College, at Raleigh, N. C., by his working through the summer months and firing furnaces and doing many other jobs to help defray his expenses.

He graduated last May, making splendid grades in all his studies. When school closed he, like many other graduates, had no job. He came back home here, as he had no other home, milked cows, worked on the farm, drove the bus for the singing class, made talks for the institution that reared him, for his room and board, waiting to get a job. Last week one of the largest manufacturing concerns in the State of North Carolina offered him a splendid position in his line of work. He accepted and left for his new position with high hopes to make good and be an honor to the institution that reared him.

These children came here helpless. You, through your Orphanage, gave them a chance. All three made good. We are proud of them—are you glad you had a part? Remember the Orphanage in your prayers—we need them. Remember the Orphanage with your gifts—we are sore in need of funds.

Because he had crawled out on thin ice and rescued a playmate who had broken through, little Willie was the center of a group of admiring men and women.

"Tell us, my boy, how you were brave enough to risk your life to save your friend," said one of the ladies.

"I had to," was the breathless answer. "He had my skates on."—The Watchman-Examiner.

Holman Jewel Testament

INDIA PAPER ONLY—Size 2 1/2 x 4 1/2 inches x 3/4 inch

The JEWEL is the latest and most attractive Pocket Testament made. The TYPE is black, bold and larger than that in the famous Vest Pocket edition, and the book itself is smaller. It is printed exclusively on the famous Holman India paper, noted for its apaque quality and unusual tensile strength. One advantage of this India paper is that the leaves do not cling together. The size, 2 1/2 x 4 1/2 inches, is so small that the book practically fits the palm of the hand.

OBITUARIES

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

God, in His infinite wisdom, has called from her earthly habitation to her eternal home, our friend and co-worker, Mrs. Nora Agers Butler, who for many years was a valued member of the Ladies' Benevolent and Social Union of the Suffolk Christian Church.

Her activities in connection with the work of this society were of inestimable value, both as president, and as a member.

Mrs. Butler's gentle disposition, and her willingness to work in the Master's vineyard endeared her to all with whom she labored, and to whom she ministered.

Her presence will be missed, but we know that our loss is her eternal gain.

Therefore, be it resolved:

- 1. That we press forward in the work with the same zeal that characterized the efforts of our departed friend.
2. That we seek to emulate her example of gentleness, benevolence, and kindly spirit.
3. That we submit always to the will of God, knowing that he is all-wise, and that he doeth all things well.
4. That a copy of these resolutions be admitted to the records of the Ladies' Benevolent and Social Union, a copy be mailed to "The Christian Sun," and a copy sent to the family.

VIRGINIA S. PHILLIPS, GRACE C. DUKE, SUSIE HOLLAND.

GAY.

Whereas, Our Heavenly Father, in His infinite wisdom and love, has called to His eternal home, our beloved sister and friend, Mrs. Annie Lee Gay, we, the members of the Franklin Christian Church, offer the following tribute to her memory:

- 1. That we mourn the loss of this good woman, but know that God, in his love and all-wise providence, doeth all things well, and we bow in submission to his will.
2. That we hold in loving remembrance her faithfulness, her leadership and her loyalty to her church and all its organizations, and her willingness at all times to serve the church she loved so well.
3. That we extend to her family our deepest sympathy and love, realizing that the good she has done will live after her, and we point others to her faithful Christian life that she lived and to her untiring work for the Kingdom of God
4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to her family, one to "The Christian Sun," for publication, and one to be spread on the records of the Franklin Christian Church.

E. L. BEALE, MRS. E. P. JONES, MRS. J. I. BEALE, MRS. W. J. M. HOLLAND, MRS. E. L. BEALE.

LEWIS.

Mrs. Ollie Lewis, daughter of Elisha E. and Mary Elizabeth Holland, died at her home, Route 3, Franklin, Va., March 12, 1933, aged forty-six years. The funeral services were conducted at Holy Neek Christian Church, by the writer, assisted by Dr. W. M. Jay and Rev. W. H. Corbitt. The interment was in the family cemetery.

Mrs. Lewis leaves two sons, Henry Edward and Mason W., and two daughters, Rachel and Louise, all of Route 3, Franklin, Va.; one brother, Dewey Holland, of Holland, Va., one half-brother, Causey Holland, of Drum Hill, N. C., and four sisters: Mrs. E. L. Beacham, Mrs. J. P. Hedgepeth, Mrs. Henry Duke, and Mrs. Fenton Hedgepeth, all of Holland.

The deceased had been a member of Holy Neck Church from her childhood, and had lived a life of humble trust in her Saviour and died in peace. May our heavenly Father bless and keep her loved ones.

N. G. NEWMAN.

WHITT.

Mrs. Sallie Whitt, daughter of Henry Jackson and Ann D. Hill, was born in the year 1855, and died March 22, 1933, aged 78 years. Sister Whitt had been a member of Union Christian Church for sixty years.

When young, she married Beverly Whitt, who died seven years ago. She is survived by two sons, Joseph and Claiboru Whitt, and one daughter, Mrs. John Elliott, one sister, Mrs. Mary Whitt, and twenty grand-children.

The deceased was a good Christian woman. The funeral and burial were at Union Cemetery, Virgilina, Va., Thursday afternoon, March 23rd, conducted by the writer.

Mother and grandmother will be missed here, but there is comfort in her testimony just before death that she was prepared to meet her Saviour.

WILSON.

S. W. Wilson, son of Samuel and Martha Wilson, was born in Halifax Co., Va., June 15, 1842, and died at his home near Christie, Va., March 5, 1933. In 1881 he married Mrs. Lucy Atkins Whitlaw, who died a few years ago. He is survived by one step-son, Henry Whitlaw, and five children and forty-three grand-children and six great-grand-children.

Bro. Wilson had farmed all his life, and by his labor and foresight had become independent. The funeral services were held at the grave in Union Cemetery, in the presence of many relatives and friends.

For a number of years, the deceased had been almost helpless. His children and especially his daughter, Martha, made him as comfortable as it was in their power to do.

May all finally share the reward of the faithful. C. E. NEWMAN.

She was for many years a faithful member of Zion Christian Church of Sanford, Route 5. She leaves to mourn their loss two brothers, five sisters, and a host of friends. May the Lord comfort those who mourn.

The funeral was held at the church, March 20th, by the pastor, assisted by Rev. J. E. Franks, a former pastor.

A Cross of Light.—

Atop the Christian Church at Webster, near Havre de Grace, Maryland, when last we were there, was a cross. And when darkness covered the earth a light beamed from this cross making it a guide to the church. Many years ago, another cross was planted on Calvary to light the way to God, and down through the centuries it has shown. Without the cross there would have been no Resurrection, without the Resurrection no Easter—no promise of eternal life. Truly, "the Way of the Cross Leads Home."

George Bernard Shaw Has Arrived.—

Mr. Shaw has at last arrived. The man who thought it beneath him to set his foot on American soil, has come at last, and what a terrible place he has found! Everything is wrong here, if we would believe him. Not just a few, but 95 per cent of our financiers are lunatics, our Constitution is about the worst farce that could have been written, even the Statue of Liberty in New York harbor is but a "monstrous idol," and should bear Dante's legend: "Abandon hope all ye who enter here." We wonder why Mr. Shaw came, but we hope he enjoys himself.

Father of Relativity Goes to Spain.—

Dr. Albert Einstein, who recently renounced his German citizenship because of anti-Semitism in Germany, has accepted a professorship in the faculty of the University of Madrid. At the same time that the above became news, there was a statement issued in this country that Dr. Einstein would come to the United States next fall to occupy the chair of mathematics in the institute of advanced study at Princeton. It was said that the appointment to the faculty at Madrid was an honorary one, and would not interfere with his work in the United States.

Dr. Henry Van Dyke.—

On Monday, April 10th, Dr. Henry Van Dyke, preacher, poet and essayist, died at the age of 80 years. Dr. Van Dyke was for many years connected with Princeton University and was an intimate friend of former President Wilson, by whom he was appointed minister to the Netherlands. He was a writer of many books and short stories. Possibly the best known of his stories being that of "The Fourth Wise Man." All of us know the story—how he intended going with the other three in search of the Christ Child, but was so busy helping others that he delayed too long. And we know that in the end he also found the Christ—gained his reward. Dr. Van Dyke may not go down in history as among the great in either of his callings, but there is an appeal about his way of saying things that impressed those that read.

And Now the Crusaders Want Help (?).—

F. G. Clark, head of the organization appropriating the name Crusaders to their own questionable use, has issued a call to "those leaders who are sincere in their desire to prevent the return of evils which existed before prohibition, as well as eliminate the nation-destroying abuses of prohibition, to join with us in a solution of the liquor problem to the end that society will control the liquor traffic and not be controlled by the liquor interests and liquor-corrupted grafters." The reply of Mrs. Ella Boole, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, may pos-

IF EASTER BE NOT TRUE.

By HENRY H. BARSTOW.

*If Easter be not true,
Then all the lilies low must lie;
The Flanders poppies fade and die;
The spring must lose her fairest bloom
For Christ were still within the tomb—
If Easter be not true.*

*If Easter be not true,
Then faith must mount on broken wings;
Then hope no more immortal spring;
Then hope must lose her mighty urge;
Life prove a phantom, death a dirge—
If Easter be not true.*

*If Easter be not true,
'Twere foolishness the cross to bear;
He died in vain who suffered there;
What matter though we laugh or cry,
Be good or evil, live or die,
If Easter be not true.*

*If Easter be not true,
But it is true, and Christ is risen!
And mortal spirit from its prison
Of sin and death with him may rise!
Worthwhile the struggle, sure the prize,
Since Easter, aye, is true!*

sibly have been interesting reading for Mr. Clark. She said: "You cannot expect me to take seriously your invitation to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to cooperate with you in any respect, for our two organizations are diametrically opposed. We believe that the evils before prohibition and those that have arisen from the violation of the prohibition law are due to the effect of alcohol itself. We did all we could to promote observance of the law and to support the officials in the performance of their duty, and we intend to continue our program of education for total abstinence. The activities of your organization have encouraged drinking and law violation. Never have you urged law observance or encouraged respect for officials. We believe that the only safe course by which to remove the evils from liquor is total abstinence. The use leads to the abuse and increased use is bound to follow legalizing beer and ratification of the proposed amendment, both of which you advocated. The responsibility for the evils arising from your activities must rest upon you and your associates, even if things have gone further than you anticipated." One cannot but ponder if the President remembered his prayer for Divine guidance when he sent his urgent message to Congress, asking the passage of the beer bill. How many will ask the question: "What would Jesus do?" when they vote on the repeal amendment. We wonder!

The "Buy American" Campaign.—

The Christian-Evangelist says: "The Hearst newspapers are not often looked upon with favor and respect by this department. Exponents of yellow journalism, loud, vulgar, they have sometimes performed great public service, but all too frequently the policies of their proprietor have not been for the ultimate good of the country. One of the worst of all of Mr. Hearst's ideas is his present 'Buy American' campaign, which is on a par with his usual conception of the proper way to settle the difficulties of a sick world. A rabid nationalist, the best thought he can press upon the public in such a time as this—when the world needs more cooperation, more friendship, more tolerance—is 'Buy American'." We agree more often, by far, with The Christian-Evangelist than with Mr. Hearst, but a study of the situation impartially would lead one to believe that America deserves some consideration today as well as the rest of the world. America has become the dumping ground for the nations of the earth. With their depreciated currencies, it is impossible to compete with them. France, the only other country of importance with an undepreciated currency, has passed laws protecting her laboring classes. America's slogan seems to be "Buy Abroad" and let our workers meantime remain idle. Congress has twice refused to enact tariff legislation that would prohibit dumping. Meantime England sends us coal while our coal mines are idle; Egypt sends us cotton, while our cotton growers starve; Belgium sends us steel, while our furnaces are cold. Japan sends us rubber goods, delivered tariff duty paid, at a price less than 20 per cent of our cost of production; she sends us electric fixtures and lights, while our factories stand closed, she boasts an industrial boom while we wallow in the depths of the greatest depression our country has ever known. We desire world friendship as greatly as does our esteemed contemporary, but we realize that no true friendship can be based on a false foundation. And after all it is God's law as well as man's that we set our own house in order first.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

A glorious, sacred, sweet and wholesome Easter awaits all who enter into the occasion with praise, thanksgiving and gratitude for the greatest single event of time and history.

We should come into the sanctuary on Easter morning with praise on our lips for Him who gave all for us, and lay upon His altar a self-denial offering for Missions in His name.

Practically all the ministers in the Eastern Virginia Conference attended their Missionary Rallies last week and not only encouraged the work of Missions with their presence, but gave to Missions the benefit of their counsel by taking such part as they were requested to take and emphasizing the need of a work which means so much to the church and the kingdom.

Dr. L. E. Smith, pastor of our Elon College Church, and president of the College, returned last week, during the spring vacation of the College, to his old love of evangelistic service and activity and rejoiced with the pastor, Rev. F. C. Lester, and people of Waverly, Va., in a series of meetings which were largely attended and very helpful to church and to community.

Rev. H. C. Caviness, formerly pastor of our First Church, Portsmouth, now in evangelistic work, is in the midst of a revival of increasing interest in Henderson, N. C. A large warehouse, with accommodations for 3,000 or more, is in use and the city-wide cooperation is a factor in bringing together large audiences for the services. Brother Caviness feels that his one work is that of an evangelist, and into this work he enters with all his consecration and devotion of his mind, heart and strength.

The new unit of the United States Department of Agriculture building in Washington has in the front, near the top, and carved in large letters, quotations from three men—Saint Paul, Abraham Lincoln and George Washington. The inscriptions are: "The husband that laboreth must first be partaker of the fruits." "No other human occupation opens so wide a field for profitable and agreeable combination of labor with cultivated thought as agriculture." "With reference to either individual or national welfare agriculture is of primary importance."

We learn with deep and sincere regret of the state of health of Rev. W. D. Harward, D. D., of Dendron, Va. No man of our number is more anxious than he to be active and up and about his Father's business, and he, with the aid of his friends, finds it exceedingly difficult to restrict his labors within the confines of his very much weakened and depleted physical condition. If it is our Fathers' will, we trust that there shall be return of strength and that this faithful man of God will be yet given strength for the tasks and labors which he so much loves.

THE SUN's editor learns with sorrowful regret that his intimate acquaintance and good friend of other days, Allie G. Hayes, of the Mt. Auburn Church, Warren County, passed away on Wednesday, March 29th. It was the privilege of the writer, then pastor of Mt. Auburn, to receive into church membership Brother Hayes, and our fellowship through many years remained sweet and sacred. He is survived by his wife, a most estimable Christian woman; a daughter, Mrs. R. W. Regal of Emporia, Va.; three sons: Wilbur of Emporia, Frank of Richmond, and Martin of Norlina; also by two brothers: Walter A. of Norlina, and Malvern A. of Wise, N. C., all of whom have our sympathy. Brother Hayes was a man of consecrated energy and boundless activity, and hidden away deep in his heart was a living devotion to his Lord.

Rev. F. Ervin Hyde, pastor, put on a well planned program for his Monticello Church during Holy Week, using a different speaker at each service as follows: April 9th, 7:30 P. M., Miss Ruth Outland, "Palestine As It Is Today"; April 10th, 8 P. M., Rev. J. O. Atkinson, "The Place of Christ in the Modern World"; April 11th, 8 P. M., Rev. Charles Rowland, D. D., "The Place of the Cross in the Modern World";

EASTER!

By RICHARD WATSON GILDER.

When in the starry gloom
They sought the Lord Christ's tomb,
Two angels stood in sight,
All drest in burning white,
Who unto the women said:
"Why seek ye the living among the dead?"

His life, his hope, his heart,
With death they had no part;
For this those words of scorn
First heard that holy morn,
When waiting angels said:
"Why seek ye the living among the dead?"

O, ye this latter day,
Who journey the self-same way—
Through the morning's twilight gloom
Back to the shadowy tomb;
To you, as to them, was it said:
"Why seek ye the living among the dead?"

The Lord is risen indeed,
He is here for your love, for your need—
Not in the grave, nor in the sky,
But here where men live and die;
And true the word that was said:
"Why seek ye the living among the dead?"

Wherever are tears and sighs,
Wherever are children's eyes,
Where man calls in his brother,
And loves as himself another,
Christ lives; The angels said:
"Why seek ye the living among the dead?"

April 12th, 8 P. M., Rev. J. L. Trollinger, "The Place of the Bible in the Modern World"; April 13th, 8 P. M., Candle Light Communion Service"; April 14th, 8 P. M., Rev. Dale O. Sander, "The Place of the Church in the Modern World"; April 16th, 11 P. M., Rev. F. Ervin Hyde, "Hope" (an Easter sermon); April 16th, 7:30 P. M., "Darkness to Dawn" (an Easter pageant), Monticello Young People.

There is no way of getting beyond the pastor who does not care and the church secretary who is indifferent in the matter of our annual missionary effort. All pastors have been supplied with information and the church secretaries with the envelopes for the Easter offering, and the urge and plea have gone out that the efforts and money thus far expended shall not be wasted. The work has been done and expense met in good faith and in keeping with the voice of the church and the vote many times unanimously repeated and emphasized by our Convention and the Conferences.

We cannot see how any pastor or church secretary can assume the weighty responsibility of "breaking the line" at their church door and congregation and refusing to heed the most worthy of all calls in a time when spiritual needs are so great and the heart hunger of souls for the Gospel of our Lord is so pleading and pitiful.

New Port Richey, Fla., under the leadership of the pastor, Rev. Ralph Krout, is holding a series of short vesper services each Thursday evening during Lent. The pastor has arranged with the following pastors to participate, representing several denominations: Rev. Guy R. Nelson from the Trinity Methodist Church of Tarpon Springs; Rev. Walter Metcalf, 1st Congregational Church, Tampa; Rev. Frank J. Brown, New Port Richey; Rev. Louis J. Richards, Church of the Good Shepherd (Universalist), Tarpon Springs; Rev. Louis I. Holway, Methodist Church, New Port Richey; and Mr. A. R. Donaldson, New Port Richey. Other churches which have made similar arrangements for Lent or Holy Week are the churches at North Miami, Rev. O. H. Denney, pastor, using other pastors in Miami; and Coral Gables, Rev. Leslie J. Barnette, pastor, has also arranged a similar program during Lent. These friendly exchanges of Lenten services are valuable in many ways.

Rev. E. B. White, of Windsor, Va., writes: "My conviction is that one of the meanest sins, is the sin of gossip, yet many people indulge in no small way in this vicious enjoyment of the tongue—evil speaking. The only apparent cause of it is a lack of old fashioned religion. 'Thou shalt not go up and down as a tale-bearer among thy people.' This command is a direct condemnation of the business of the scandal-monger. One of the most miserable, God-forsaken and dangerous creatures upon earth is the gossip. No man ever won for himself an esteemed and exalted character, by taking upon himself the office of detective to hunt down what he considers the faults of other men. Gossip is a sin to be constantly and prayerfully guarded against. It is a cowardly practice for which we can offer no worthy apology. Beloved, don't try to make other people's failings a foil to set off your own supposed virtues. Remember, 'To him who ordereth conversation aright,' God will show his salvation. Be, rather than seem, religious, for 'there is glory, honor and peace to every man that worketh good.' (Romans 11:10.)"

Mrs. Neva Lindgren Munday has resigned as office secretary to Dr. W. Knighton Bloom in the Washington office. Mrs. Munday has filled this office for the past seven years and has rendered a most valuable service, not only to Dr. Bloom but to the whole work of the Eastern Division. Her friendly cooperating spirit, her efficiency in service, and her devotion to the work have been recognized and appreciated by all who have had any contact with the Washington office during these years. Mrs. Munday resigns to devote herself to her home life and as she will continue to live near Washington she has kindly offered to render occasional service in times of special need. Prior to going to the Washington office Mrs. Munday, who was then Miss Neva Lindgren, served for two periods in Student Summer Service work, part of the time with the West Tampa Mission, where she was greatly loved, and also served for one year as an assistant to the pastor of the Jacksonville Church, having charge also of the Mission church Philips, at South Jacksonville. Mrs. Munday is succeeded in the Washington office by Miss Winifred Mary Ing, who has been assistant in the Washington office for two years.

NEWS FROM CAROLINAS AND GEORGIA.

Talk about making it hard for people to remain in Sunday School, look at Albemarle, N. C., Arthur G. Swartz, pastor. On January 1st, all who had been enrolled were dropped. An entirely new membership roll was made. If anyone wants to be a member of this real school, they must be on hand. April 1st, all were dropped again. But did they come April 2nd, and how? 203 at Sunday School and so many people in church they could not be seated in the auditorium. Why is it? Just because people must mean it when they say "Sunday School." That helps. And then there is another factor. The pastor, the superintendent and teachers mean business when they prepare for Sunday School. They take pains to select teachers and officers and then they train them. They bring in experts to help. For instance recently for two weeks they brought Miss Priscilla Chase and Miss Lucy Eldredge to town and they conducted a Leadership Teacher Training class. Fifty-five attended these meetings regularly. That's the kind of people that make life live in any church. Congratulations to Albemarle.

Waycross, Ga., Alan T. Jones, pastor, is pounding thumbs as well as nails in the erection of their new building, Williams Chapel. It is costing them more, as is usual, than they expected, to build this structure. But it is going to be a "Beautiful Church," said the pastor, in a recent letter. If any good Congregationalist or Christian man or woman wants to do a really fine thing and so help these people who are sacrificing so much to build, let him, her or them, send several dollars to Rev. Alan Jones, 702 Hicks St., Waycross, Ga. Money back if you are not satisfied. It is exceedingly good to help good people do good. Why not let 100 people send in $1.00 each—this week. I'm going to do it today.

Ramseur is a little town, but ministers like to gather there. A fine group of the Christian ministers of the Western North Carolina Conference met there Monday, April 3rd, for their regular meeting. They had invited the Pastor at Large to meet with them and to talk about the meaning of the merger when it gets under the skin. But before that they had a splendid paper read by Rev. H. V. Cox on "Why I Believe in the Inspiration of the Bible." It was a mighty good paper. Any reasonable man could stand on the platform he laid down, and, as one expressed it, "I could stand on that with all four feet," if I had that many. There was much discussion of this topic to the benefit of all. And then they asked the Pastor at Large to tell them all he knew about the merger. When the meeting ended at a quarter past one (they assembled at ten) everybody was happy and thought they had had a very worth-while meeting. And it was good, too! At their next meeting the chairman or president, Rev. T. E. White, of Sanford, N. C., is going to report on Dr. Fred Fagley's book on Congregationalism, which he is reading. They are bound, these ministers, to know something about the whole family, Congregational as well as Christian. And they expressed themselves as believing that all we need in our North Carolina Churches is to know each other better. It all made the pastor feel he would like to meet other groups of Christian ministers and talk over "our marriage"—so we can get acquainted and know each other's tastes before we build our final dwelling place in a splendid organization which all may love and esteem beyond what we can now even think. WHEN DOGWOODS BLOOM.

(AN EASTER SCENE.)

At Eastertide the dogwood blooms
And crowds and crowds the trees for room,
It is a thrilling sight in Spring
For dogwood is a lovely thing.
To ride the roads and see the sight
Of forests full of pink and white,
Are days with life and beauty rare,
With dogwoods blooming everywhere.
And Easter brings such hope and cheer
In every Springtime of the year,
It lifts the soul from doubt and fear
And sings the song—"The Lord is here!"

"We should rethink missions. We have taken the enterprise too much for granted. While emphasis might have been better than investigation in such an hour as this, it is still a good thing to train our minds upon the enterprise. Rethink the implications and the imperatives of the Great Commission. Rethink the contribution of missions to our advancing civilization. Rethink the obligations we owe to those whom we have sent to the ends of the earth. Think on these things."

METHODS CORNER

By REV. ELISHA A. KING, D. D.
Miami Beach, Fla.

The other day a young man called at my home with a mighty fine proposition. He is proposing to help church secure money for their work by collecting old gold and silver from members and friends. These things are gathered up and sent away to be refined and the money is turned over to the church less a small percentage for the service rendered. The young man's name is Charles M. Cordes and his address is 227 Richfield Road, Upper Darby, Pa. He represents "The Golden Service," and has secured much money for other churches. The plan is based on the fact that many people have old jewelry and other things made of gold and silver that are stored away or are unused and they had just as well give it to the church. It is of no real value as it is. I suggest that you think of this plan and if interested write to the young man. He is now lining up numerous churches in Miami.

We kneel, how weak; we rise, how full of power.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE ONE AND GREATEST EVENT.

Just as our Lord said there was one and the greatest Commandment, so through His Son He has given to the world its one and greatest event, viz.—The Resurrection, which we emphasize and celebrate at Easter. Without the Resurrection, we, of the Christian faith, are, of all people, most hopeless and helpless. This is said because we preach and teach the Christ of love and of hope, and this we would far better never do than to create expectations that can never be satisfied and hopes that can never be realized. In the Resurrection of our Lord all our Christian expectations are fulfilled and our hopes come to a lively and unmistakable fruition.

Nature, the whole world about us, gives the background and the coloring to verify and demonstrate the meaning of our picture. Buds burst forth and blossom; coloring of every tint and hue gladdens the eye and rejoices the heart. Birds sing again and refresh us with their renewed love and life. That which a few weeks ago seemed dead is now revived, and breathes again with newness of life and the vigor of resurrected strength. It is as necessary to believe in re-creation as it is to believe in creation, and to realize that much which seemed dead is only sleeping.

This is the mistake of those who went early to the sepulchre on the first day of the week. This mistake was corrected by two men who stood by in shining garments at the empty tomb and said: "Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here." Death had lost its grip, the grave its control. Creation had been over-shadowed by re-creation, and death was swallowed up in life. Creation is not the most important event in human life. Salvation is. One would far better never be born, or created, than to miss salvation. Furthermore, no individual has anything to do with his own creation. The creative act was for the individual—wholly an impersonal affair, with which he was not concerned and a matter in which he had no voice or will. Salvation is different. Through salvation comes the blessing of creation. As God "created the world in six days and rested the seventh," to celebrate the act of creation, so our Saviour's body rested in the grave on the seventh and came forth a glorified body on the first day of the week. And so we observe, as our sacred day, the first day of the week and not the seventh. As salvation is more important than creation, the first day is more significant than the seventh. This is why the Christian world, for the most part, has shifted from observing the seventh to observing the first day of the week, and in reality we observe Easter every Sunday, every Lord's day. We only by choice, and quite arbitrarily, choose as our Easter, one day of the year, for this most important event. We really choose fifty-two days of the year—our Sundays set aside for worship, and the coming together of God's people that they may glorify their Lord and worship Him through whom salvation came.

Our hearts sing a new song, and we sound a new note of praise on Easter, because we are emphasizing the completion of God's plan of salvation, the finishing up of the redemptive act, the plan from the beginning to be fulfilled in His Son in Whom is the hope of the world, the glory of the human race, and the one source of unfailing joy to the human heart. Easter is the most important of all events of time and of history, because it emphasizes anew a way of escape from defeat to victory, from trial to triumph, from darkness to light, from death to life. Those who knew and worshipped Jehovah before the resurrection of our Lord observed the seventh day to celebrate the finishing and the glory of creation; since the resurrection, a shift has been made to the first day of the week that we may celebrate the one fact that is above creation, viz: Salvation.

The world has passed through the drab, the dreariness, the death of winter, and now rejoices in the color and glory of new and recreated life. Christ is arisen: let all the earth know and be glad in that great, unparalleled event.

TO WHOM SHALL WE LOOK?

We are in mental chaos, moral fog, financial bankruptcy and spiritual poverty. We know not what a day shall bring forth. To whom shall we look? The Christ of God is still with us. Shall we look to Him? He is with us in and through the Church, of which He is the head, a spiritual body, His body. This He created and left behind, that through it His spirit might be active in the world; His message might be proclaimed to the world, and His will be made known to the world. If we stay away from the church now, if we are deaf to the message of the church, if we are indifferent to the call of the church, to whom shall we look?

God has never failed yet. Men and women about us fail. Fortunes and friends, and plans and programs fail and disappoint us, but God has never failed. He is still in His sanctuary, and the spirit of His Christ still lives in His church. If we do not turn to the church now, to what shall we turn? If we do not look to our Saviour and the revelation in His message to us through the church, to whom shall we look?

The hunger of human beings for material bread isn't the only problem of our day. Unemployment of the multitudes isn't the sole need of the hour. The clamour for physical relief isn't the only call or clamour. Hearts are hungry also. Souls are thirsty. Spiritual darkness prevails. Sin-sickness prevails. There is a need of the soul which cannot be cured by giving bread to a hungry body. The spirit of our Lord, the message of Him who came down from God, who is Himself the bread of heaven, this is necessary. "The life is more than meat, and the body is more than raiment." If the world is to be given relief, there must be a turning to God; there must be a sharing with others of the Good News; there must be, through our sacrificial service and giving, a sharing with others, that the true light that came into the world to lighten all the world. That light shines from above.

Through our missionary prayers, consecration, self-denial, devotion, we are seeking to heed the cry, the pitiful cry, for the relief of hearts that are hungry and souls that are perishing for the bread of life. Unless the church, the one spiritual body, does this, it will not be done, since it is the only body on earth that does missionary work and sponsors and supports the gospel of the Son of God, and gives to others that bread which came down from heaven. If we can't turn to the church now, to whom can we turn? J. O. A.

IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

"If a teacher in a Sunday School teaches a class regularly and does not inspire the members of the class with missionary zeal and enthusiasm, something is lacking in his teaching."

The above words were taken from a brief address by Col. J. E. West at Cypress Chapel, in a District Missionary Rally last week. Col. West is himself a teacher and speaks from experience as well as observation. On the face of it, one sees that Col. West's logic is conclusive, and yet not a few act and teach as if they disbelieved it. The Bible is a missionary book, its central theme being that a God who created and loves all men everywhere and of a message from God that can save to the uttermost. The central figure in the Bible is the Christ who lived a gospel of love, a Christ who commanded that His followers share that love and that life with others, and by so doing increase their own love and devotion to Him. Other than the Christ, the two outstanding personalities of the Bible—Moses and Paul—practiced precepts which include a life of service and fellowship designed of God for all mankind. Moses led out and helped to create a nation, chosen of God that they might be light-bearers to the world, teachers and preachers of a message that was sufficient for every need and condition of man. When that nation narrowed that gospel to the confines of their own people, God called Paul and sent him out to the Gentile world, that that world might know of God who is able to save to the uttermost. The world is to be made one in Christ, which means one in fellowship and friendship, and this can only be done by giving the message of our Lord to those who haven't it.

We cannot see how a Sunday School teacher can be so blind, ignorant or indifferent to the main teaching of the Word of God, the life of Christ and, the example of the call of God as to fail to create enthusiasm and interest in that which is the very heart of the Book they teach and the very soul of the Lord of all creation. Yes indeed, the Sunday School teacher who does not inspire his class with missionary zeal is teaching something else in place of the Bible, the God who gave it, and the Christ it reveals.

LEST WE FORGET.

With assets crumbling and liabilities piling up, we can well remind ourselves in the words of Superintendent Harley H. Gill:

"1st. There are just as many hours in which to do our work as we have ever had.

"2nd. There is just as much physical and intellectual ability left among our people as there has ever been.

"3rd. There is just as much idealism and consecration in our ranks as there ever has been. Missionaries have received reduced aid without complaint, though to many the reduction has been a serious blow. Nowhere has there been sounded a note of retreat. On the contrary, our people are saying, 'Now is the time to show what our Christianity means.'

"4th. We still have a great Gospel to proclaim with just as many people needing it and with the same old conviction as to what it will do for men. We have that which is needed by the man who helplessly goes about looking for a job and by the man who has seen his life savings swept away. We have that which is needed for the rebuke of those who have defrauded and oppressed their fellowmen. We have that which will make a new world, if we will but apply it.

"5th. Last of all, let us remember that there is just as much Divine assistance at our call as there has ever been. God is with us and we are here. We may be hard up for money, but we have the resources that count, and it shall yet be true that 'one shall chase a thousand and two put ten thousand to flight.' The kingdoms of this world shall become the Kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ."

These assets are unimpaired and should be the sources of an unflinching faith and undiminished courage.

A VICTORIOUS EASTER.

Shall we have an Easter of defeat or an Easter of victory? That is with the Church. We have made Easter our own. We have taken it into the church. We have proclaimed its spiritual value, its glorious significance, its marvellous message, its token of strength. What shall it do to us?

We shall remember that the dawn and glory of Easter came from the darkness and death of the Cross. Without the cross, there is no crown. Without self-conquest and self-denial, there is no victory.

Our Convention and our Conferences have told us how we may make our Easter a glorious one, the season a victorious one. It is by placing on the altar of God an offering, through self-denial, that His name may be glorified and the kingdom of righteousness may prevail. In the words of the North Carolina Christian Advocate, to its people of the Methodist household, we ask:

"Are we going about this special Easter offering with all seriousness to make it a glorious success? It is the easiest thing possible for this special self-denial effort to be nothing more than a shallow pretense devoid of the elements that secure a spiritual blessing or a financial success. Much of the garden and the cross goes before every victorious Easter dawn."

If we have a "shallow pretense," "a half-hearted" hand-out, a simple gesture without zeal and devotion, we need not expect a spiritual blessing or a financial success. Unless we are willing to pass through the Garden, we need not expect to share the glory of the Easter anthem: "He is not here, He is risen."

LABELS IN RELIGION AND POLITICS.

The mob hankers for labels. People without the ability or the patience to analyze and understand a teacher ask only that he use the familiar words and phrases by which they can know his label. Thus cant flourishes. Let a preacher fill his sermons with references to the "grace of Christ" and "redeemed by the Lamb," and he is labeled "orthodox" by people who would have great difficulty in giving a definition of grace and redemption.

The same tendency is seen in politics and industry. Bunk, if it is the familiar patter of the past, is esteemed safe and sane. But an advocate of change who uses unfamiliar phrases is called a bolshevist and a dangerous radical. The wise man is not fooled by labels. He finds out what is in the bottle. It may be poison. On the other hand, it may be the remedy needed for the present distress.

DEATH—AN EMPTY TOMB.

(AN EASTER THOUGHT.)

I thought of death—
The wind of night that rushes by;
A losing fight and startled cry
On anguished strife.

I thought of death—
An icy stream that floods the heart;
A troubled dream that tears apart
The threads of life.

I thought of death—
I stood, it seemed, outside a cave;
Nearby, I dreamed, a guarded grave;
I prayed to see.

I thought of death—
For at that hour it was not known
An angel's power had moved the stone,
And set death free.

I thought of death—
Then came a voice: "Death is a friend Christ made His choice. Life has no end."
An angel sung.

I thought of death—
An empty tomb that angels keep;
From out the gloom I heard Him speak:
"Life just begun."

MISS DORA BROWN.

BEER—BY ONE WHO KNOWS.

If the newspapers are to be trusted the general public in the Middle West has gone crazy over beer. The publicity given to beer would lead people to think that it is the much sought fountain of youth, or that it approximates the well of water springing up into everlasting life, of which Jesus spoke in his conversation with the Samaritan woman. It is estimated that Chicago will spend approximately $4,000,000 for beer the first day that it is sold. Orders have been given for 750,000 cases and 12,000 barrels of the new brew for that day. Chicago's police commissioner is said to be planning police around the breweries to help the beer trucks start at midnight of April 6th. Airplanes have been chartered to carry beer to more distant places so that it may be on sale at the earliest possible moment. Moderate "wets" are worried over these developments. They believe that if the "wet" regime is made so prominent the result will be the defeat of the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. A woman contributor to the Milwaukee Journal, suggests that inasmuch as both political platforms contained declarations against the return of the saloon, that the new drinking resorts be called "tanks" or "filling stations."

Dr. S. J. Duncan-Clark, an editorial writer on the Chicago Daily News, editor for many years of the Chicago Evening Post, writing in the Christian Endeavor World, discusses beer as follows:

Back in the so-called good old "wet" days, when beer was lawful, I was a police reporter for a while on a morning newspaper in an American city with a population of about three hundred thousand. Beer was plentiful then. I doubt whether there was a point in that city from which you could not find your way to a licensed saloon or a beer garden in less than five minutes. It was my business to gather the news of crime, of vice, of underworld activities. I remember that lawful beer played a large part in making that news. It was inseparably mixed up with the brew of lawlessness, of violence, of indecency and corruption, out of which came the happenings that made sensational items for the newspaper.

Is Beer Intoxicating?

Let nobody tell you that beer is not intoxicating. I have seen men drunk on beer, and nothing but beer, much too often to believe that fable. Moreover, beer with its milder alcoholic content is the appetizer for more ardent liquors. Alcohol is a habit-forming drug. In beer it stimulates the desire for something with a bigger kick.

Congress proposes to call beer non-intoxicating. Our "wet" friends are fond of saying that you cannot change human nature by legislation. They are probably right. Surely you cannot change the nature of alcoholic beer by a like process.

If 3.2 or 3.05 per cent beer does not have kick enough to produce the feeling of the sort that those who want beer want to feel, it will not satisfy them; and, if it does not produce it, then it will create the desire for stronger liquors. Lawful beer will become the screen for bootlegged spirits. It will only make bootlegging easier, and the speakeasy for whiskey and its allied intoxicants more secure from detection.

Beer and Prosperity.

They say this country will drink itself back to prosperity. Look at any country that has lawful beer today, and then tell me is there any evidence that it is prospering through consumption of the amber suds? Great Britain has lawful beer, and dire poverty stalks through its streets. Germany has lawful beer, and unemployment threatens her life. Breweries will not create employment; they will shift employment. They will lower demand for soft drinks and milk, and throw dairymen out of jobs. They will decrease the efficiency of workers just as they did before.

Intoxicants An Evil.

The important thing for us to recognize, it seems to me, is the fact that lay behind the Prohibition movement, and that is still a fact challenging our civilization—intoxicating beverages are an evil, and only an evil; and the traffic in them, whether sanctioned by law or forbidden, is inherently a lawless traffic, the enemy of individual welfare and social security. It is not the return of the saloon that gives me anxiety. It is the return of liquor bearing the sanction of the law.

And we must bear in mind that if beer comes back before the Eighteenth Amendment is repealed—should it be repealed, which is far from being a certainty even in the minds of the "wets"—it can come only on the theory that it is not intoxicating. If that is done, what safeguards can be pledged around the sale of beer, alleged to be a soft drink, that are not placed around the sale of other soft drinks? That is a subtle and dangerous phase of the present situation, which demands earnest consideration and vigorous effort.

Anyway, we are in for a long "wet" spell.—
R. W. G., in Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Nansmond-Isle of Wight-Southampton District Rally of the Woman's Missionary Societies was held at the Cypress Chapel Christian Church, Wednesday, April 5th, beginning at 10:30 A. M. The day was fine, and about two hundred delegates and visitors attended the session. Mrs. B. D. Jones is the capable and popular District Superintendent. Miss Lillie Holland, the efficient Secretary, was unable to be present on account of a recent bereavement. Miss Doris Eure was secretary, pro-tem, and gracefully performed the duties of her office.

A splendid program was prepared, and it was carried out in full. The address by Mrs. B. D. Jones, District Superintendent, was uplifting and inspiring. The theme was: "Pitching Our Tents on Mt. Olivet's Top." She called the attention of the Rally to the religious significance of Olivet, the mountain of several great religious experiences of Jesus Christ. This is a place for high thinking and high living. It calls for high ideals for the physical, the mental and the spiritual expression of life. And it is a place of great prayer and consecration. One cannot hope to live on Olivet for a whole life-time. But one should reach the heights now and then, in meditation, to be enabled to come down into the commonplace experiences, with new spiritual power, victory and achievement.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary, was present, and gave an excellent address on "High Spots in Missions." The high spot in the missionary challenge is the command of Jesus Christ. The first commandment involves loving God with all the heart, mind, soul and strength. Loving one's neighbor is not one's first duty. That is man's second duty and privilege. And it is not our first duty to care for people who are within our reach. Our first duty is to love God supremely. If one enters consciously and intelligently into that experience one discovers immediately that God is no respecter of persons. The whole world—including all races and all lands—is the object of God's love. In the sight of God, America and India have the same spiritual needs. How can any one think that America, or Virginia, shall be first in our love and benevolence? It is not spiritually possible to hold this attitude, if one has a true vision of God's love and plan for the church of Jesus Christ.

Miss Priscilla Chase gave an interesting address, in the afternoon, on the importance of planning our work to include all ages in the church. She stressed the importance of having a plan for our work. The missionary societies naturally spend a great deal of time trying to work out plans for raising the suggested apportionment for missions. This is important, but it is not the only thing of great importance. A carefully wrought out program of missionary education is much needed. There are some missionary societies who have not, in the past, placed sufficient emphasis upon the missionary program, in the regular meetings. It is not easy to have a real missionary program. It requires much reading and study. The Mission Study Books will furnish material for some instruction, but that is not the only method to be used.

One of the most interesting and helpful features of the Rally was the Model Missionary Society which was presented by a group of ladies from Holland, Holy Neck and Franklin, assisted by Dr. E. W. Jones, pastor of the Franklin Christian Church. It was an excellent demonstration of a real society meeting. It was unusual not to have some one say: "I have no report for today." It would be helpful to have this presented in every church in the Conference.

A delicious lunch was served by the ladies of Cypress Chapel, and a vote of thanks was tendered the church for its gracious hospitality. The next Spring Rally will meet with the Holland Christian Church, April 1934.

I. W. JOHNSON.

THE TEMPLE OF GOD.

(I. Cor. 6:19, 20.)

A paragraph, signed "Guthrie," which has come to my attention, seems to be a good beginning for this article. "After referring to man being fearfully and wonderfully made" (the body), "the tentlike habitation in which he journeyed through the wilderness which lay between the two eternities," Dr. Robertson pointed out the fitness of the comparison of the human body to a house or temple; spoke of its flesh built walls being covered with skin, richly tapestried; he described it as colonnaded with bones, fitted with a framework, vaultlike, marble white, that bore up, and overreached the chambers of the hidden life within, and with conduits that sent forth red streams which ebbed and flowed from the heart's cistern, and conduits of the subtle nerves, strung from side to side, from wall to wall, from lowest basement to the loftiest pinnacle, along which telegraphic messages were sent with more than lightning speed. It was, too, a house in motion, and pertaining to it, what dignity, what majesty! How exquisite in form and symmetry! So delicate and tender, like David's harp of many strings, like the aeolian lyre, vibrating to the wind's slightest breath."

Such was the finished work of God's creation; man made in God's own image and after his likeness: pure, clean and holy, made to glorify God and to enjoy him forever in fellowship and communion. A fit temple for the abiding place of the Holy Spirit. But sin came into this perfect habitation separating man from God, defiling the purity and perfection which God had created, pronouncing the death sentence upon the beautiful temple. But God in his infinite wisdom and divine love provided a way to escape the penalty of sin by redeeming man with the precious blood of Christ, the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, who came to seek man, to save him and to give him that holiness of heart which alone can become the abiding place of God. Man was made to be the temple of the living God, and has been given the will to choose whom he will serve. A god ever occupies the throne of the hidden life, the heart, the soul, for there are many gods but only one true God. He ever yearns over fallen man as a mother yearns over her child, however far he may wander from the fold of his love and speaks in various ways, saying: "My son, give me thine heart." Man may choose to be such a temple, sanctified and meet for the Master's use.

This will mean that every faculty is to be used as God leads, every action prompted by the leadings of the Holy Spirit, every thought brought into captivity to the obedience of Christ. It means all this and more—denying self, taking up the cross daily and following in the steps of Jesus. All this has been made possible and has been commanded as a divine injunction if man would be the temple of the living God. Christ has complete control over the world of nature, demons, disease and death and he is able to keep man from falling and to present him faultless before the presence of God with exceeding joy that his creation (man) has been restored to his purity and perfection as at creation. W.

LANETT, ALABAMA.

I promised recently to give the readers of THE SUN a full report of our meeting which closed last Sunday night, in the midst of the largest audience we had during the entire two weeks. There must have been about one thousand people present. Every available space was occupied and many went away unaccommodated for lack of room.

Rev. Wm. T. Morgan did some Gospel preaching. He is orthodox to the core. Men heard him gladly, and everybody was sorry to see the meeting close, but since Brother Morgan had agreed to help Bro. H. M. Gray at Langdale, it was necessary to close.

We had the very finest cooperation from all the other churches and ministers in town, for which we are very grateful. Hundreds of people of all churches were reclaimed and started out anew to serve the Lord. Young people fell right into the work and helped their friends to find the Saviour, and many found him. It was a beautiful sight to see those young people hold on to their friends until they found relief, and then to see them come to Christ was an inspiration.

Hardly a service closed but that some one was converted. As many as eleven gave their hearts to Christ in one day. It was also a beautiful sight to see penitent souls kneel at the Mercy Seat, seeking God, without a song, congregation not standing, but quietly seated, men and women would arise and come to the altar and kneel for prayer. At one time there were thirty at the altar. Attendance and interest increased at each service.

Our young people of the town have organized themselves into an Evangelistic Club and will hold their first meeting in the Park next Sunday at 2:30 P. M., at which time the organization will be completed.

The young married women of our church have organized themselves into a Woman's Missionary Society, which is the second society of this kind in our church.

Our Sunday School increased in attendance to nearly 100. We will organize a Bible Study Class in connection with our prayer meeting each Wednesday evening. We shall also organize a Teacher Training Class just as soon as we can get the literature.

We enrolled 35 new names on our church roll, and others joined other churches. We now number about 375 members. Our goal is 400 by the time Conference meets. Our field is enlarging and we must "strengthen our stakes and lengthen our cords."

Our church has adopted the Budget System of finance, and although times are hard the church has gone over the top each week since we have been working the plan, and still many of our members have not been approached. What can the church do when all work in harmony?

Dr. Morgan has promised to come back again in the summer or fall. The invitation given him by the church was unanimous. Please pray for our work here. G. D. HUNT.

The day is thine! Then why should I
Dread an inadequate supply
Since thou hast taught our lips to pray:
"Give us our daily bread this day."

MINISTERS URGED TO SAFEGUARD MARRIAGES.

Ministers are urged to take their responsibility for the success of marriage more seriously in a "statement and appeal" issued today by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. The statement emphasizes the need of educational preparation of young people for marriage, and the value of personal counselling by the minister. It protests against any commercialization of marriage and appeals for dignity and reverence in the marriage ceremony.

The statement was drafted by the Committee on Marriage and the Home, of which Professor Howard Chandler Robbins is Chairman, and Rev. L. Foster Wood, Secretary, and has been officially approved by the Federal Council's Executive Committee.

The statement, entitled "Safeguarding Marriages," is as follows:

"Most couples are married by clergymen. This is true even of many who approach marriage without definite Christian convictions, and is explained by the fact that for centuries marriage has been a concern of religion. Doubtless also these people go to the minister because they feel that marriage is a relationship of the most sacred character. The part which the minister plays in the event brings him into an influential and responsible relationship with the new family. Therefore, the Committee on Marriage and the Home Office offer the following recommendations to ministers on the safeguarding of their marriages:

"I. Educational Preparation for Marriage.

"Educational preparation for marriage should be given in accordance with its great importance. In this education the home, the school, the church and other character-building agencies, and the young people themselves should participate. The instruction given should deal with the principles of happy and successful marriage such as ideals for the home, wise choice of partners, the wide range of marital adjustments, home management, children and their nurture, and especially with the place of religion in individual and family life.

"II. Pre-Marital Interviews.

"As a part of this preparation for marriage, the Committee believes that pastors have an opportunity to give great help through pre-nuptial interviews. Many ministers have done this regularly for years with the most gratifying results. Some hold conferences with the two together, and others separately. These interviews, while frank should be considerate, and should be guided by circumstances and by the needs of the young persons as they come out in the interview. Through them the minister may assure himself that the marriage is in accordance with the laws of his state and of his church, and that the young people understand the seriousness of the step which they have taken.

"III. The Marriage Ceremony.

"Marriages should not be hastily planned nor solemnized by strangers if this can be avoided. Young people should be married by their own pastor, if possible, or by a clergyman in their community. When they are married by a stranger in a strange place the occasion is robbed of some of the social and spiritual values that ought to be present, and the new home is deprived of the permanent value of the counsel and fellowship of the minister who has married them.

"While weddings may be frequent in the work of a minister, to the young people themselves their own wedding is an event of a lifetime. Therefore, the minister should make it impressive, dignified, and beautiful. He should also encourage simplicity. Above all, he should do all in his power to give it religious significance.

"IV. Commercializing Marriage.

"Commercialization of weddings, whether by ministers or civil officials, and degradation of marriage by stunt weddings, by advertising for them, or by using them for advertising purposes, is shocking and anti-social. All of these practices mean that weddings are conducted without sufficient regard for the sacredness of the ceremony, or the spiritual welfare of the persons involved, and they make improbable either the pre-marital instruction or the later pastoral service which the minister ought to give.

"V. Later Pastoral Service.

"Every marriage opens a door of opportunity to the minister. He has the confidence of the young people, and they feel that he has had a vital part in the founding of their home. This gives him a favorable opportunity to be a spiritual counsellor and guide, and to help them in case difficulties should arise between them.

"Both in the personal ministry of the clergyman and in the program of the church, a more definite and intelligent ministry of religion to home life needs emphasis. Above all, in dealing with these delicate and vitally important matters, the minister must work reverently, himself keeping near to God, and securing the best training within his reach."

EASTER!

A song of sunshine through the rain,
Of spring across the snow;
A balm to heal the hurts of pain,
A peace surpassing woe.
Lift up your heads, ye sorrowing ones,
And be ye glad of heart,
For Calvary and Easter Day—
Earth's blackest day, and whitest day
Were just three days apart.

With shudder of despair and loss
The world's deep heart is wrung,
As lifted high upon the cross,
The Lord of Glory hung—
When rocks were rent and spirit forms
Stole forth in street and mart;
But Calvary and Easter Day:
Earth's blackest day, and whitest day,
Were just three days apart.

PRAYER.

O Lord, thy word is truth and blessing and uprightness and peace. Do what thou wilt, O God, with whom thou wilt, only let thy word be established. O Mighty God, who hast all power to relieve world distresses, help men and women to see that thou dost permit conditions as they are that out of them there may come a levelling of human affairs in the realization that thou dost work to bring all hearts to an understanding of thy creative and unfailing purposes. We ask it for Jesus' sake.—Amen. J.

WOMEN AND MISSIONS.

The men of the church are much mistaken if they think that the women are sufficient for the missionary task. The women do not think so themselves, and realize that their Missionary Societies and work are not an end in themselves, but a means to an end. The great objective is to get the whole church interested in Missions, the woman's organization being the entering wedge to this penetration.

Our Southern Convention realizes this and has adopted a program which signifies as much. This program is three-fold in its approach and application:

1st. That all the church, men and women, young and old, be approached and informed during Mission Period, through sermon, service, public appeal and announcement.

2nd. That all Sunday Schools be approached at least once a month with a program of missionary information and opportunity for missionary contribution.

3rd. The Women's Missionary Societies, whose sole objective is that of keeping alive and active the missionary motive, and through the whole year seek to develop that spiritual life an interest which will be constantly felt in the whole church and among all our people. The women and young people in their Missionary Societies are not trying to exclude, they are trying to include all in their missionary activity and interest, and at all times solicit the cooperation of the whole church and of all who will take a part in this work of giving the whole gospel to the whole world.

Last week our women in Eastern Virginia held their three District Rallies—one with the First Church (Berkley), Norfolk; one with Cypress Chapel; one with Richmond. They were all largely attended, and the missionary zeal and enthusiasm were at the highest and best, because of the spiritual atmosphere created in such meetings. The women talked Missions, discussed their problems, prayed for Missions, enjoyed the fellowship of the three days and welcomed to their numbers all who would come and share with them the delights of such a day.

It is doubtful if any of our annual meetings are more worthwhile or contribute more to the spiritual life of the churches, and to the glory of our Lord, and the growth of His kingdom, than these district missionary meetings. They reach the very ones who want to be reached and help the ones who want to be helped, and inspire the ones who want inspiration, and they certainly give information to those who are seeking information about the great task of a world-wide program.

This week the women in the North Carolina Conference are holding their Rallies and are including all who will come and take a part. They are seeking in this way to leaven the whole lump, of which they themselves are a small, but very vital and saving part. There are some things the women can do, and enjoy doing, that the men can't, either because of incompetence or because they haven't the heart. It was a woman who poured out her love-offering in devotion to her Lord while men called it waste and said that it should go to the poor and the needy—material aid for physical relief. The woman, however, realized the heart hunger and desire of her Lord and fulfilled His desire by glorifying His name, and then He began to talk about a world-wide gospel as a memorial to the devotion of a woman. The women tarried longest at the cross. They had the courage and the grace and the endurance to share that sorrow as the men did not have. The women were first at the open grave and discovered and announced the resurrection of their Lord, because they had a tender and sympathetic love that carried them earliest in the morning to the place where they had laid Him. There are some things that require a singleness of sympathy and devotion, and the women, instead of the men, seemingly, have this in marked measure.

In our Missionary Societies, the women are seeking not to exclude any from the service they are rendering, but to render that service so patiently, persistently and constantly, that others will be persuaded and will come that way themselves, and help them bear the burden and share the joy required to create a friendly world and build the kingdom of God on earth.

A PROGRAM FOR JUNIOR GROUPS.

This is the last of the programs on China and should be made a special meeting, to which mothers and friends are invited.

Help the children to plan their program from the materials which they have been using during the past months. Put on exhibit any curios and pictures available, together with the Friendship Scrapbook which the children have made.

The following is a possible program outline:

Call to Worship—Psalm 67.

Hymn—"In Christ There is no East or West."

Reports by the Children—

1. New Years in China.
2. Going to School in China.
3. Keeping Well in China.

Story—

"New Eyes," adapted from a "Here and There" story, by Gertrude Kellogg. (This story is reprinted in this issue of THE SUN.)

Prayer—"Our dear Heavenly Father, we thank Thee for our friends in China. Help us to help them, so that they may have schools and hospitals and know about Jesus and the love of a heavenly Father. Amen."

The meeting may be concluded with Chinese games and refreshments. Weak tea and almond cakes are easily made. A recipe for the latter may be found in "Off to China." Games may be secured from the same source or from "Chinese Ginger."

May we reiterate that practically all of the materials mentioned in these programs may be secured free, or borrowed by paying postage, from the American Board, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass.

PRISCILLA CHASE.

GREETINGS—SINGING THROUGH.

(By Request.)

In behalf of the Missionary Societies of this First Church, we bid you all a cordial welcome.

In the name of the "Rally" of this Norfolk District we want you to know this is your day. The Convention had you in mind when planning this program.

We are still singing through our twelfth year
 Vanishing doubt and conquering fear;
 We've seen conditions grow bad, maybe worse;
 But we still sing and write our verse;

If we pitched our tents in a sunnier time,
 We've had experience that taught us how to climb,
 Remembering when in stormy weather
 We can smile through, if we pull together.

The quality of our work, the efficiency of our organizations are evidence of faith, prayer and work.

Some Societies have built upon a secure foundation and their vision is onward and upward.

Too many of us have been content to remain at the base of the mountain where we could look around and up—but the view has not been satisfactory.

If we would pitch our tents on higher grounds our vision would become clearer, our outlook broader.

But if we would see with the Master we must climb to the peak of the mountain, and get a vision of the fields beyond. Climbing is not an easy task, but the results more than compensate for all hardships, and who would ask for an easy task in this day?

If you have been discouraged, if we find our work requires more study and time, more faith and prayer and sacrificial giving, or if we have grown careless of the Master's Commission—instead of taking the stand that a thing can't be done because we can't see through, why not make a change? Why not take Jesus seriously, give him a chance. Put God at the center of things. He has never left us without a vision.

We have put our hands to the plow, we can't go back. We can't stop, we must go forward with Christ for greater and better things.

Let me plead with you women, who are leaders in your Missionary Societies, with you who are working with young people, and with you ministers, to realize the responsibilities and opportunities in your own local Missionary Societies. Put more of yourselves into the work. Take Jesus as your example in service—and thus help to answer your own prayers—that this year, of all years, we may be able to meet all requirements.

NEW EYES.

By GERTRUDE KELLOGG, of China.

"Look out there," shouted the carter, "are you all deaf and blind?" Then such a scuttling and scurrying as the children pressed up against the mud wall. A big cart loaded high with sacks of flour rumbled by. The carter with much cracking of his long whip and shouting, guided the three mules that pulled the cart down the narrow street.

The children choked for breath as yellow dust filled the air when the cart had passed. Ragged sleeves covered eyes and noses, and the big sisters tucked the babies' faces under their own coats.

The tallest girl rubbed her swollen, itching eyes with her free arm, for she was holding a little sister with her other. Then together the children crossed the street to a big arched gateway. Other people stood there watching, too. The two doors were of heavy wood and one was opened a tiny bit so they could peek in. Suddenly the black watch dog inside set up such a barking that they all jumped back, but they knew he was securely chained, so they looked again. Soon they saw coming from the door of the inner courtyard a queerly dressed person. Her coat was long, and though it was not padded with cotton she did not shiver or look cold. A little boy reached out and touched the coat. "It's not Chinese cloth," he whispered to his sister.

A Chinese man was walking with the queerly dressed person and bowing politely. The children knew she was called a nurse. "You have wasted much heart to come to see my wife and baby," said the man, "and I will send the leg of mutton over to the mission." The nurse told him that the mutton should be kept to feed the mother and children and that his kindness and generosity were very weighty. Then there was much bowing and the nurse started away.

"Please, come to our house!" "Come to our house and our house," all the children at the gate began to call to her.

"What is your name?" she asked the tallest girl, noticing the torture she was enduring from her eyes.

"Name, Chang," the girl replied, "and we live just beyond the temple." "All right, I'll go to your house," said the nurse, and off they started, the little ones pattering in the dust behind.

They ran to their door and held open the old blue quilted flap to let the nurse in. The tiny room they entered was quite dark except for the light that came in around the doors. There was a big earthen jar in one corner full of yellow millet, a string of garlic hung from a beam and nearby some dried red peppers. In the other corner leaned corn stalks which they used for fuel. A little god of clay was in a niche opposite the outside door and a little pile of white ashes in front of it showed where an incense stick had burned itself out. Another quilted door was lifted up and they stepped one by one over the high door sill. The littlest boy rolled over. The mother standing by the stove with a big brass dipper in one hand and a bowl in the other, turned a patient face to the children telling the tallest girl to quickly dust the bench for the nurse to sit on.

Later, father came in and he talked with the nurse of his acre of ground outside the city wall where he raised the millet, and about his few sheep in the stall outside, not for the family to eat in the winter. Oh, no, they would be sold so that cloth could be bought to make clothes for the children. Here it was November, and Third and Fourth Daughters had no stockings yet.

The mother told of the oldest daughter who was married, and none of the children had ever been to school except the son. He had finished the first reader and liked to study at the school in the temple by the North Gate. Yes, the eyes of all the children hurt. She did not remember when they had become red and swollen nor did she know who had first been troubled. Second Daughter could not sleep well at night now, she guessed hers were the worse. "Won't you let Second Daughter come to the Mission Hospital?" urged the nurse. "We will think about it. If there are no charges perhaps we will think about it, but she is the best child we have to look after the little ones," said the father.

The next day, however, she was not to be seen among the women and children waiting to see the doctor at the dispensary. Nor did she come the second day. So one of the women who teach the women and girls in the hospital how to read went to the home to find out why the child did not come. There were many reasons given by the mother and a promise that the very next morning they would let her go. And they did.

It was a day of surprises, that first one at the hospital. By night Wang Ta Sao seemed just like a nice grandmother and Li Fu Shih, the nurse that took care of her eyes, told her so many interesting things that she really did not mind the treatments. And then there was the singing every morning and evening. There were three other girls just her size in the same room, and they were determined that the newest girl should learn to sing with them. She found that by trying and trying she could make the same sounds. And after three weeks when the doctor said her eyes were so much better that she could begin to learn to read, she could sing three verses of a song about the Heavenly Father. Another three weeks went by and then she knew all the characters on the first page of her primer. And she had a book of colored pictures all her own, showing what children in America were doing.

Then one day the father came and said that Second Daughter must come home and help the mother. "This certainly is my Second Daughter, but her eyes are new," he said.

After New Years Day a new pupil entered the school for girls by the North Gate. It was Second Daughter. And though she was twelve years old she did not mind studying with the younger girls because of the great joy in her heart that she could go to school. One night as she finished reading her lesson by the light of a tallow candle, she told her mother that it seemed as though she were living in a new earth now that she had new eyes.

WE HAVE LEADERS.

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS.

Many men have lain awake at night, pondering the problem of religious leadership in this perplexed period. Not a few are praying fervently for the appearance of a new Luther, a Wesley, a Knox, a Whitfield, a Finney, or a Moody. His advent, they believe, will bring in the great awakening that should follow the present crisis, as it has followed other crises in the past.

Into my own mind the past year's quiet thinking has put a large doubt as to the correctness of this theory. I have ceased to look for the coming of some super-evangelist.

Instead, the conviction has clarified that the divinely-appointed leaders whom the church needs are already with us—the pastors of individual flocks.

All that the times require, religiously, can be accomplished by the ministers now in service, if they can but get a fresh conception of their mission, and rid themselves of the prevalent idea of dependence upon somebody else—some great evangelist or reformer, some denominational or inter-church leader, some popular figure who will take the world by storm.

The world is not going to be stormed into religiousness; but it may be shepherded there.

Once let individual pastors become dominated by the conviction that they are the church's real leaders—endowed with the Spirit; ordained by the church and commissioned by Scripture—and they will slough off the "inferiority complex" which makes them so docile and deferential toward professional "leaders"; who are leading nowhere.

It may sound drastic, and it certainly is not meant unkindly; but one definite remedy for the present inertia in Christian activity would be to declare a moratorium for a few years upon professional "leadership."

Suppose every church and clergyman should decide to ignore the very existence of all the super-salaried secretaries and causes and organizations and "movements"—outside of the normal ongoing of denominational life—and devote themselves wholly to aggressive activity in their own local fields.

Would not the result be a new sense of dignity and responsibility and power for every pastor; who would then know that whatever leadership in religion comes to his community is wholly dependent upon him and his fellow ministers, as led by the Spirit of God?

In a word, the church already has the leaders she needs; except wherein the shepherds have become sheep. Once let them resume the pastoral staff and the church will soon be able to exult, in the words of Deborah's song:

"For that the leaders took the lead in Israel,

For that the people offered themselves willingly, Bless ye Jehovah."

So he comes to us just where we are. We do not need to climb to strained spiritual planes to bring the Lord Christ down. There is nothing with which he cannot blend and into which he cannot bring his loving companionship.—Simpson.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

EASTER AND THE CHURCH.

If there had been no Easter there would be no church. Easter gave life to the church, and the church keeps alive the celebration of Easter.

The word Easter originated outside of the church and had to do with ancient heathen ceremonies of the springtime, but the idea of Easter which we observe has a central place in the Christian religion. We find this idea in the gospel story of the resurrection of Jesus.

It was early in the morning on the first day of the week when a bunch of faithful women took spices and ointments to the tomb of Jesus with the expectation of anointing his dead body. Their love lasted beyond his life, and they would make the final sacrifice for the benefit of a lost friend. But by the rising sun over the eastern hills beyond the Jordan brought a new light and revealed to them the open tomb. Only the clothes of the Master were left, he was absent. Messengers of God, clothed in white, told them that he was risen. As Mary stood near the tomb weeping because of her lost, Jesus appeared and called her by name. She then fell at his feet and acknowledged him as her Lord and Master.

From that day to this Christian men and women have gone with offerings costly and good to a place where they can find their Lord and have reverently and joyously said: "He is risen indeed, for I have heard him call my name."

On the coming Sunday morning, men, women and children will find their way to places of worship at the dawning of the day, and will worship there with their burdens until the Master is come and speaks peace to their hearts. In my little town twenty young people expect to unite with the church and start the new life on the happy Easter morning. Here's hoping that all over the world this same sort of thing will come to pass.

WESTERN N. C. YOUTH FELLOWSHIP.

The days come and go and men continue to work, toil, and to serve. But sometimes there are those who are fortunate enough to leave a few days for vacationing in which to rest and then take up the fight again.

Such has been the privilege of the president of the young people's organization of the Western North Carolina Conference. While enjoying this rest, a chat now and then with Mother, Dad, Sister or Brother, then the beautiful sunshine, the hills and the music of the wind, will be recalled with much happiness and gratitude to God, the success of our young people's first week-end conference held at Ramseur, Saturday, April 1st.

Reflections on the fellowship, the inspiration, and the work that was ours are always pleasant thoughts. But to restive, optimistic, and altruistic youth that isn't enough. We have become forward-looking. We are ready, like Columbus, to "Sail, ho! Sail, ho!"

Although we had approximately one hundred and twenty-five young people present for this meeting, we have not reached our goal. The young people from ten or more churches worked diligently for two hours in the discussion groups on Devotional Life, Service and Publication, Leadership Training and Moral Standards, so that every church in our Conference might have something to work toward. We are not a selfish youth; and you may watch this page for the reports of these groups. We believe that they can be used in part in every local church.

Those of you who missed the conference know nothing of the interest and untiring service of Miss Lucy Eldredge, Miss Priscilla Chase, Miss Jewell Truitt, Miss Lily Marrel, and Miss Barbara Chase; Rev. E. C. Brady, Rev. Arthur Swartz and Rev. S. M. Penn.

We are hoping that many more will come and get some of this fellowship, inspiration and enthusiasm which cannot be gotten from a printed page.

The outstanding events of the conference and those which will be remembered longest, are the echoes from Defiance, the reports, the vesper service, the fellowship dinner, and address, "The Call of Youth," and the closing words which embodied a challenge to go forward in true service for mankind and the Master.

CARL E. KEY, President.

THE CHALLENGE.

Say, would you do as Simon did
If Christ were here today,
And bear His cross right willingly
Along the crowded way?

Had you been there that fearful day
When Jesus stood alone,
Would you have dared to face the mob
And claim Him as your own?

The Christ still stands, it seems alone,
The burden still is there,
The sins of earth, a thorny crown
Our Saviour still must wear.

Our sin brought Him the pain He bore,
It was for us He died.
The cleansing fountain for us ran
From out His bleeding side.

And must He still go toiling on,
While all the world is free,
And bear the load we press on Him
By walking heedlessly?

No! We will walk closely by His side
And help as best we can
To bear the burden of the world
And tell His love to man.

PRAYER.

The camel at the close of day
Kneels down upon the sandy plain
To have his burdens lifted off
And rest again.

My soul, then too, shouldst to thy knees
When twilight draweth to a close,
And let the Master lift the load
And grant repose.

The camel kneels at break of day
To have his guide replace the load,
Then arises up anew to take
The desert road.

So thou shouldst kneel at morning dawn
That God may give thee daily care,
Assured that he no load too great
Will make thee bear.

Benediction—Use the first stanza of "Dear Lord and Father of Mankind," sung softly. Include the "Amen."

Wieman, H. W., "Methods of Private Religious Living."

Prayer presents a great many problems to this generation. What is the value of prayer? How should we pray? Why should we pray? For what should we pray? Does God hear and answer prayer? Satisfactory answers to these questions are not easily found, and because they demand sincere, thoughtful study, many have given up the practice of prayer rather than make the effort to discover and appropriate its values.

It is a tragedy that prayer does not have a larger place in the lives of Christian people. If we were undernourished physically, we would make every effort to secure food to make us strong and able to resist the ravages of disease, and enable us to meet the tests of the modern workaday world. Most of us are undernourished spiritually and are therefore easy victims of fear, discouragement, unbelief, and moral delinquency. Prayer is the spiritual food that would build us up and sustain us on high levels of Christian living. If we would know the true worth of communion with God, we should learn it in two ways: first, from those who have made it a practice in their lives, and second, from testing its value for ourselves.

If in this short session of Christian Endeavor an interest in prayer can be awakened, problems brought out in the open and discussed, and the desire to find adequate answers, if stimulated, the time will be well spent.

I PRAYED.

I prayed;
I prayed long;
I prayed quietly,
Standing aside,
As God would have me do.

I used many words;
I used words that meant much;
I used words that meant everything.
Alone, on my knees,
I wrestled with the vocabulary of prayer.

Then I bent my spirit,
And said honestly, "O God,"
And God heard and answered me.

EASTER LESSON.

LESSON III—APRIL 16, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Because I live, ye shall live also."—John 14:19.

LESSON TEXT: I. Cor. 15:1-8, 20-26.

Much of the First Letter to the Corinthians was written to answer practical problems which concerned the church. The matter of the resurrection was one of these problems. The 15th chapter of I. Corinthians is Paul's answer to this problem. It is a combination both of logical and unanswerable argument, but it is also an appeal to the heart as well as the head.

The Gospel Which I Preach Unto You.

Paul reminds them that what he is going to write is what he has already preached to them, what they have already heard and believed, and the foundation on which their faith is established. Furthermore it is the thing by which they are saved, if they hold steadfastly to it. It is significant to note the general outline of this gospel.

By way of introduction Paul tells them that he delivered unto them first of all that which he had received, not from men, but from God. His gospel had authority and power because it came from God. He had not received his message from men; he had received it from God. Many ministers and Sunday School teachers are speaking second-hand stuff.

(a) Christ Died for our sins according to the Scriptures.

"According to the Scriptures"—there was divine authority for Paul's preaching that Christ died for our sins. He gave himself for us. There was some vital relation between Christ's death on the Cross and our sins. By his death on the Cross he made it possible for God to show his condemnation of sin and yet to forgive the sinner. He made atonement for us, that is, he made at-one-ment for us. Christ's death on the Cross was something more than the death of a brave man who died for his convictions. It was the fulfilment of a divine plan that through the gift of himself, who was the sinless Son of God, we should have redemption from our sins. Christ died for our sins—he died for my sin and your sin. He loved us and gave himself for us. This is "according to the Scriptures."

(b) And that he was buried.

Jesus died. It was no mere swooning on the Cross. Physical life left him. It was a dead man that was put in the tomb, that is, dead in the sense in which we use the word dead. There was no room for any doubt about that fact. The Jewish leaders and the Roman authorities saw to it that Jesus was dead before they allowed him to be taken down from the Cross. He was buried and he was not buried alive.

(c) And that he arose again the third day, according to the Scriptures.

"According to the Scriptures"—it is a matter of historical record that Jesus Christ rose from the dead. It had been foretold, both by inspired men of God long before Jesus' day and it was foretold by Jesus himself. There is mystery about it, but there is no doubt about it. There are no historical events more fully authenticated than the resurrection of Jesus Christ. Christianity itself is irrefutable evidence that Jesus Christ came alive from the grave. It was the deep inner conviction, born out of actual experience, that he whom they saw die on the Cross, was actually alive again and had appeared unto them, that changed the disciples from broken-hearted, discouraged, beaten men into buoyant, courageous, conquering world conquerors. Let no man hesitate to stake his faith on the resurrection of Jesus Christ. In spite of the mystery of it, it is fact, not fancy.

Paul gives a list of many who saw Christ alive, those who knew it was he, and those who knew that he was alive. He lists not only individuals—it would be possible for an individual to suffer an illusion—but he lists larger groups. He reminds the Corinthians that on one occasion over five hundred had seen Christ alive after his passion, and he adds that most of these five hundred were still alive and could give their personal testimony. Furthermore he modestly, but boldly, states that he himself had seen the living Christ. That which the Scriptures had foretold had been fulfilled. Jesus Christ was alive. He had risen from the dead.

What this Gospel Means.

What does it all mean? Well, it means a great deal. It means that Christ was and is the Son of God. It means that we can depend on his word elsewhere, for if he could keep his word here, he can keep it anywhere and everywhere else. It means that we worship and turn to, not a dead hero, but to a living Saviour. It means that in raising Jesus from the dead, God was giving us a pledge that death was not able to hold us. It means that because Christ lives, we too shall live. It means that life after death is not a cold, impersonal thing, but a continuance of conscious, personal existence. It means that the universe is designed to preserve life's highest values. It means that spirit is superior to matter. It means we are to have life, to have it more abundantly, to have it continuously. It also means that we ought to live as if it were true. After Paul has finished his carefully threaded argument for the resurrection, and established the fact, he says: "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." The fact that Christ lives and that because he lives we shall live also has tremendous moral significance for us. We ought to do something about it. It ought to make a difference in the life that now is. It ought to undergird our lives with hope, but it also ought to stimulate them to service.

INDIFFERENCE.

When Jesus came to Golgotha,
They hanged him on a tree.
They drove great nails in hands and feet,
And made a Calvary.

They crowned Him with a crown of thorns,
Red were His wounds and deep;
For those were crude and cruel days,
And human flesh was cheap.

When Jesus came to Birmingham,
They simply passed him by;
They never hurt a hair of him—
They only let him die.

For men had grown more tender,
And they would not give him pain,
They only passed on down the street,
And left him in the rain.

Still Jesus cried: "Forgive them,
For they know not what they do."
And still it rained the winter rain
That drenched him through and through;

The crowds went home and left the streets, without a soul to see;
And Jesus crouched against a wall,
And cried for Calvary.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

"The opening of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."—Psalm 119:130.

"I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord."—Psalm 116:13.

MONDAY.

THE LONGEST WORD.

"A cheerful heart is good medicine."—Prov. 17: 22.

"Smiles" is the longest word in the world—there is a mile between the first and last letters of the word.

He smiled—and his home was a place of happiness.

He smiled—and the children ran to meet and greet him.

He smiled—and his co-workers in the department worked better.

He smiled—and callers spoke well of him.

He smiled—and all who entered his office door were pleased to be greeted as friend and equal.

He smiled—and followed the smile with a brotherly handclasp; and those who were discouraged and downcast went out and took a new grip on life and their work.

He smiled—and while the years rolled on he grew younger because he—smiled.—Anon.

Prayer.—Our Father, we pray for a spirit of cheerfulness, light and love for every soul whom we may meet. Amen.

TUESDAY.

A LITTLE WALK AROUND YOURSELF.

When you're criticizing others and
Are finding here and there
A fault or two to speak of or
A weakness you can tear;
When you're blaming someone's meanness,
Or accusing some of pelf—
It's time that you went out to take
A walk around yourself.

There's lots of human failures in
The average of us all.
And lots of grave shortcomings in
The short ones and the tall;
But when we think of evils men
Should lay upon the shelves,
It's time we all went out to take
A walk around ourselves.

We need so often in this life this Balancing of scales,
This seeing how much in us wins
And how much in us fails;
Before you judge another—just Lay him on the shelf—
It would be a splendid plan to take
A walk around yourself.

Prayer.—(Psa. 26.) "Examine me, O Lord, prove me, try my reins and my heart."

"I will wash my hands in innocency."

"As for me I will walk in mine integrity."
—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

BUSY-NESS.

"Wherefore do you spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness.

Find out what you want to be and do. Take off your coat and make dust in the world. The busier you are, the less harm you are apt to get into, and the sweeter will be your sleep, the brighter will be your holidays, and the better satisfied the whole world will be with you.

Work thou for pleasure, paint or sing or carve
The things thou lovest, though the body starve.
Who works for glory misses oft the goal,
Who works for money coins his very soul.
Work for the soul's sake, then, and it might be,
That these things shall be added unto thee.

Prayer.—O Lord, we bow ourselves before thee this day to turn our ears to thee, to come unto thee to hear thy voice and have thy life in us. We would forsake every evil thing and every wrong way; we would have no unrighteous thoughts. Have mercy upon us and forgive us, and give us life. In Christ's name we ask it. Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE GREATEST SYMPHONY.

"Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."—Phil. 4: 8.

"To live content with small means; to seek elegance rather than luxury, and refinement rather than fashion; to be worthy, not respectable; and wealthy, not rich; to study hard, think quietly, talk gently, act frankly; to listen to stars and birds, to babes and sages, with open ears; to bear all cheerfully, do all bravely, await occasions, hurry never; in a word, to let the spiritual, unbidden and unconscious, grow up through the common—This is to be my symphony."—Channing.

Prayer.—O Lord, our Father, give unto us keenness of mind to learn all thy ways, and endow our spirits with thine to do them this day, and forever. Amen.

FRIDAY.

IF.

"Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these ye did it unto me."—Matt. 25: 40.

"If I could only see the road you came,
With all the jagged rocks and crooked ways,
I might more kindly think of your missteps,
And only praise.

"If I could know the heartaches you have felt,
The longing for the things that never came;
I would not misconstrue your erring then,
Nor even blame you."
—Anon.

Prayer.—

"Just to ask Him what to do
All the day,
And to make you quick and true
To obey.
Just to know the needed grace
He bestoweth,
Every bar of time and place
Overfloweth.
Just to take thy orders straight
From the Master's own command.
Blessed day! when thus we wait Always at our Sovereign's hand."
—Havergal.

SATURDAY.

YOU.

"What he may know to refuse the evil and choose the good."—Isa. 7: 15.

"Choose you this day whom ye will serve."—Josh. 24: 15.

"You are the fellow that has to decide Whether you'll do it or toss it aside.
You are the fellow who makes up your mind
Whether you'll lead or linger behind,
Whether you'll try for the goal that's afar
Or be content to stay where you are.
Take it or leave it. Here's something to do!
Just think it over. It's all up to you!

—Edgar A. Guest.

Prayer.—O Lord, Our God, we dedicate our lives to thee this day. May we say, as for me and my house, we will server the Lord," in all that we do and say. Amen.

SUNDAY.

A PERPETUAL LEASE.

"One thing have I asked . . . to behold the beauty of Jehovah." Read Psa. 27:1-6.

On the shore of the famous town of Marblehead, Mass., is a place where the waves have worn a long channel through the rock, ending in what is known as "the churn." At "the churn" the massed force of the waves is condensed in an explosion of water which often sends spray fifty or sixty feet into the air.

This place has for a long time been a resort of visitors, but recently the trustee of the estate bordering "the churn" has built a fence shutting out the public from what they had come to regard as one of their natural inheritances. Now, however, a deed more than fifty years old has been discovered, keeping open "forever, for the enjoyment of all persons," the hundred feet of waterfront including "the churn."

What the lawyers will do with this matter remains to be seen, but it is certain that the Creator erects no boundry fence shutting out any of His creatures from the beauties and wonders and utilities which He has so prodigally furnished. From the least to the greatest, the universe is open to all men. We can all "buy wine and milk, without money and without price."

Prayer.—Thou, God, art a Lord of bounty. There is no stint of Thy goodness. May we be as princely in receiving as Thou art in giving, and bear ourselves as the sons and daughters of the Most High. Amen.

—Amos R. Wells.

PLAIN TALK.

Gypsy Smith is talking in England: "There are not so many people in the churches, not so many young folks in the galleries, and I know why. You have been failing to give them positive, definite Methodist experience. We are not here to educate, we are here to regenerate. We are not here to give people treatises on this or that subject, we are here to bring people to God. And you can't give them what you haven't got. If the churches of Methodism were aflame with God, the passion of John Wesley, they could shake England this year. But we all have to be on the job. The people want a real, warm Methodist service. I would let such a man know if I was the minister that I was the Lord's servant, and not his hired man."—N. C. Christian Advocate.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

THE YOKE OF CHRIST.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

Jesus is seeking followers. This lowly-hearted peasant teacher speaks so strangely different from other teachers of his day. Professing the utmost lowliness of heart, he dares to ask all others to set for themselves the lesson of learning of him. It seems a paradox. What a mighty claim he makes. For while he says, "I am meek and lowly of heart," he insists that taking his yoke upon one will bring eternal rest. Never man so spake before. Never peasant, nor prince, had asked so seemingly little and offered so infinitely much.

I.—The New Comradship.

What would be the taking of his yoke upon one? For he was a man with no armies or navies, no great burden of wealth to worry about, no institutions with which he was connected to multiply burdens. What had he? "No place to lay his head." No following as a great political leader, no shibboleths, no great sanction from the folks. Not believed by his brothers and sisters, not known beyond a very small radius. How odd: "Take my yoke." Take so little, and gain so much—"rest for your souls"!

No wonder people went from his discourses saying, "Never man so spake." Learn of me. Other teachers equipped well in position and prestige, proud of their class and cult, receiving honor and much homage, never dared ask their pupils to take such a lesson—"Learn of me." Jesus knew it was what every pupil did anyhow, but there was a reason for asking them to learn of him. They would learn true meekness—a new article in that day, and still in demand! They would learn a true lowliness of heart.

This new comradeship would startle those who heard it offered out of their regular ways of thinking. Tie yourself to me with the great insignia of toil, load lifting, burden bearing! What toil was this peasant undertaking? What load would he seek to lift? What burden would he carry? That they would learn. "Take my yoke upon you." Yoke a heavy beam binding neck to neck, shoulder to shoulder, body to body. A beam tying two to a common load. A yoke is not a toy. It means work. It speaks the rugged language of toil. It is not used for festivity. It undertakes a burden too heavy for one to bear.

It is a rather beautiful figure after all. Have you ever witnessed the moving of mammoth logs with a yoke of oxen? It is a menial task. How patiently they follow the command of the driver! What muscles slowly move in perfect unison! What heavy burdens they bear! And how clean the great woods! How fresh the air! How ennobling the labor, and how sweet the rest!

"Make a comradeship with me," says the Christ. Have you ever known the driver to be yoked with the oxen? "He was despised and rejected of men. . . he was despised, and we esteemed him not. . . We did esteem him stricken, smitten of God and afflicted. But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities. . . with his stripes we are healed." "Lowly of heart." "Meek."

He won. They did it. They took up that new comradeship. Their forefathers had fished that lake, ate their fish, lived their lives, round after round, generation after generation, for centuries. A brief hundred years back and the name of a single fisherman was not known. Lost in the silence of oblivion. The names of Andrew, Peter, James and John, will never be forgotten. And they were very weak and human at that. But they had accepted the new comradeship.

II.—The Transformed Affections.

The teachers of Jesus' day had set the hearts of their pupils upon great things. "Lowly," and "meek" were words not often used in their lessons. For a great messiah they look, for a great Israel they yearn, for a great future of power and overlordship over other nations they prayed. Their hearts were fast set on great things. The teachings of the poor peasant confounded the teachings of their temple doctors. His words were humble heartedness, and offered the earth to the meek. So much had the teachings of Jesus' day set high and mighty goals that Jesus himself, when in the wilderness being tempted was tempted after just that fashion. Visions of the nations of the earth passed before, powers and thrones were exalted, but Jesus turned them all down for you and for me. He set his heart on saving the lost, of looking to the lowly, of setting at liberty the bruised.

"Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly of heart." Learn. Paul had learned—learned at Gamaliel's feet, learned the wisdom of the ancients, of the Hebrews, of the Latins, and of the Greeks. This Jesus was too lowly for him. Out with the struggling little sect! Down with the angel-faced boy, Stephen. Down to Damascus. Yes, yes, and down with Paul. Down with a "great light," and a sweet, sure voice. The self-same voice that Stephen had heard, and that the disciples had heard. Learn of me—meek, and lowly of heart—rest—for your soul." For the high-minded Paul a transformed affection, and yoked with Christ Jesus for ever.

James and John were seekers of high seats in the expected new kingdom. "Take my yoke upon you, James. Take my yoke upon you, John. Learn of me." And learning, they found a new affection, and sought a new goal. James, too, counted it an honor to suffer martyrdom for the lowly Jesus; and John lived to praise his Lord through many persecutions. They forgot about the high places and sought to render from their hearts their lowly service. But for John and James, as well as for Paul, the world has reserved a great place. "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth."

Our country can thank God today for the good, humble Christian, who has his heart set on honesty, right, good conduct; has his heart set on honor first, right first, good conduct first—greatness second! "Ye are the salt of the earth," says this lowly Teacher. And how well we know it now. Throughout every county and section and State, throughout our whole land the "meek and lowly of heart" make up the finest fabric of our society. Just as you and I and the average citizen believe in the common virtues exalted by the Peasant Teacher from Nazareth, just so will we be a great people and a great nation.

III.—The Certainty of Success.

The confidence of Jesus is something marvelous. His confidence against every odd. His absolute faith in God. His lightedness of real joy when it would seem complete despair should have possessed him. It was the peace of a "conscience void of offence" either against God or man. There is a song on our lips when our soul is at rest in the perfect will of God. "Ye shall find rest . . . for my yoke is after all very easy, and after all my burden is quite light." It is the only way. The way of forgiveness, love, gentleness, and faith. As I wrote sometime ago to my father-in-law, I quote a verse or two:

The banks may close
And the money may dose,
And the bonds may take a long rest;
But our God up There,
In His throne-like chair,
Is able to stand every test.

We cannot go wrong
If we sing Him a song,
And give Him the praise of our hearts—
If the whole thing should burst
And the worse come to worst,
He will help us to pick up the parts.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

Did you know that the membership of the Christian denomination only contributed last year to the Christian Orphanage to care for more than one hundred children the sum of $9,640.88?

We figure that the membership of the Christian Churches in the Southern Convention has a membership of about 32,000. If you will figure it out you will see that the church membership gave 30c, average, per member, for the year 1932 to help its Orphanage care for more than one hundred children. That is about the price of a movie ticket. It is the price of six cigars at five cents each. It is about the price of two dozen eggs. It is the price of six coca-colas.

We do not criticize you for going to the movies or drinking coca-colas or smoking cigars. That is your business and your privilege. But we do want to ask you to do this—if you go to the movies in the week or drink six coca-colas or smoke six cigars, when the plate is passed in your Sunday School class on Sunday morning for an offering to help the Orphanage, will you be so kind as to give an equal amount to help feed, clothe, and care for the little children in the Christian Orphanage?

If our church people would just make up their minds that they would lay their plans in the beginning of the year that they would see to it that their church and Sunday School would, during the year, through monthly Sunday School offerings, special Thanksgiving offerings and other offerings, make their church average one dollar per member, how easy it would be to run our Orphanage and do a great work in behalf of the little children in our care. How easy it can be done if some one in each church would assume the lead and work the plan.

Of course, not all would give a dollar—some in the church would be able to give ten, twenty, fifty or a hundred dollars. They would be expected to give a larger amount to help over-balance the rest who could not give a dollar or perhaps twenty-five cents. The average of one dollar per member is our idea.

We would be glad to have churches or Sunday Schools elect several of their members to visit the Orphanage and spend a week-end with us and see something of your Orphanage and then on the next Sunday report back to their Sunday School the impressions they got while here. We will be delighted to entertain you free. We will be glad to have you come and will do our best to make your visit pleasant.

Our Greensboro Church had a delegation to visit us Sunday, April 2nd, and we were delighted to have them.

It is your institution. We want you to see it and know all about it. Come and see for yourself and then you can tell your Sunday School what your church has here to help support.

WE MAY ALL HELP.

There is more than one way to be helpful to an individual or an institution; and all for the same purpose. Money, in its phase, is indispensable, but there are other contributions that can be made that are equally as profitable as money. In fact, there have been many gifts in dollars and cents that would have been more fruitful of good results had they been made in other valuations. I think it is fortunate that we have people who can make large donations in money to our worthy institutions, but many of us are not money-makers. As for myself, I have not been as much interested in money-making, no doubt, as I should have been; or that is what my friends, who know me best, say. But the fact that I cannot make much money has not kept me from making my contribution to the cause of Christian righteousness. I believe that God has a place for each of us; and that he uses us where we are most fitted to be used. The hurt is in the fact that there are too many of us, who fail to find our place until it is too late. Some people have never come to the realization that they must first increase their efforts before their capacity will be increased. They fail to find their place and they never see much they can do.

The most satisfactory way I have found to help our colleges, is to help some ambitious, deserving poor girl or boy find the money with which to pay his or her way through college, and send the money by the girl or boy, who remains as a student.

During the last few months I have received letters from more than forty young people, in the hope of finding some way to enter college at the beginning of the next scholastic year, and by the last of the summer I will doubtless hear from forty or fifty more. These deserving young people are from more than a half dozen different states, and are affiliated with several different denominations; and it would be a source of inexpressible joy to me could I find a way to help them all on. They are willing to work and are glad to work, and to work faithfully, for a chance to be educated. All down through the ages, it has been the boys and the girls who were willing to work and who had worthy objectives who have made the men and the women who have lived to bless the world. Now, I am glad that I have the confidence of the many young people who write me each year. I never tire of reading their letters of inquiry, and never fail to do my best for them, but for the last three years the number has increased until the job is too big for me and I need to pass much of this work on to other helpers. I believe in Christian education, but we have been trying to educate too many people who did not have the right objectives, and they have helped to bring us to moral chaos and from a spiritual consciousness that has been much perverted. We need to pass our blessings on to the boys and the girls who will live to bless the world. Too many of us have been placing our greatest emphasis on the wrong thing. Our Christ has been too much repudiated and our Christian discipleship is on the wane. We should get back to our Bibles and to our Christian duty and all will be well.

CREATING AN ATMOSPHERE.

There is no doubt that by the thoughts we think we create an atmosphere around us by which other people are influenced. If we continually think thoughts that are good our life will suggest goodness; if we continually think evil thoughts our life will suggest evil. If we are sad, it is a sad world; if we are happy, it is a happy world. It all depends upon the person himself; for, good or bad, he to a large degree creates his own atmosphere, his heaven or hell he makes himself.

AN INSECT FIGHTER.

One kind of war to which there are no conscientious objectors is the war on insects injurious to human and plant life. Dr. L. O. Howard, a great leader in this warfare, tells in "Fighting the Insects" of many victories won in the fight against insect pests. He tells also of many celebrities he has met and many amusing experiences he has had in the course of his work and his travels.

"Dr. Howard sees drama in his work, and well he may. The story of how he carried a parasite to France to exterminate a root-louse which at-

Well, it wont be the "wets,"

Are you looking for that rest of mind, that peace that passes all understanding? Yoke yourself with Jesus Christ. The cut-shorts, and easy-quicks of other yokes will eventually be too burdensome to bear. The easy yoke, and light burden is after all the yoke of real Christian graces lived hourly and daily with Christ Jesus.

NUMBER 16.

•• THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY ••

Columbia University's War Poll.—

Tabulations of a poll on war among the students of Columbia University, with 920 participating, gave the following: 52 per cent would willingly bear arms in case of invasion, 31 per cent declared they would take up arms "under no circumstances," while only 8 per cent of the students were ready to fight "under any circumstances." 488 students based their objections to service on the fact that "war can never be justified," but only 33 objected on purely religious grounds.

Are Churches Filled by Adversity?—

Evidently they are, if the "Yearbook of American Churches," edited by Dr. Herman C. Weber for the Federal Council, be correct in its conclusions. Boom times were bad times for the churches from the standpoint of increased membership, if not from a standpoint of finances. A chart showing the relation between the "business index" and fluctuations in church membership during the past twenty years, shows that "the fact is so clear as to be inescapable that when business was steadily going up, church membership was steadily going down. At the very point, however, of the crash of the bull market in 1929, church membership immediately showed a sharp rise, and the churches have been showing increases constantly since that time."

Race Track Gambling.—

The same sinister influences which have been present in the fight for the return of legalized liquor, have been quite successful in another field. Five states have been recently added to the list of those having legalized race-track gambling, under the guise of "increasing their sources of revenue." These states are Ohio, New Mexico, Oregon, Washington and New Hampshire. There are now twelve states in which such betting is legal, the other seven being Florida, Kentucky, Illinois, Louisiana, Maryland, Montana and Nevada. In commenting upon this situation, The Christian Science Monitor says: "The state that sells out to the race-track gambling or other immoral interests will find that it has made as bad a bargain as Dr. Faustus. . . . The public treasury, indeed, may gain a few paltry thousands in revenue, but enactment of a race-track gambling law is letting the camel get its head within the door. Those who remember how the beast in the story eventually crowded its master out of his own tent, should heed the warning involved and 'not e'en admit the camel's nose'."

The Black Bill.—

The United States Senate this week refused by a decisive vote to reconsider the Black Bill making compulsory the reduction of working hours to thirty a week. This measure would, if concurred in by the House, and approved by President Roosevelt, bar from interstate commerce all products made in plants that work their rank and file employees more than 30 hours a week. It is the claim of the sponsors of this bill that it will put 6 million men back to work, but statisticians find it difficult to find figures supporting such claims. It is certainly a fact that the bill will work great hardship on the smaller employer of labor, and it can certainly mean no increase in purchasing power which is essential to economic recovery. Another disadvantage of the bill is the still greater advantage that will be given the foreign competitor, who even now has almost a strangle-hold on many of our industries. The employee also is due to suffer from such radical legislation. Already on a scale of pay as low as can possibly be consistent with decent living, he is being asked to submit to further reduction of that income. If, on the other hand, the employer tries to absorb the extra loss caused by the bill, many will inevitably be forced out of business, and the resultant unemployment will probably be greater than any temporary employment that is given.

De Gustibus.—

Early on a recent morning the writer took refuge from the rain in a Roman Catholic Church in the city of Cincinnati. After resting and refreshing his spirit in the dim light of the sanctuary he started on his way once more. In the center of the middle aisle he noticed an alms-box. Moved by a sudden impulse of generosity, coupled with a sense of gratitude for shelter from the elements, he started toward it. Just to find out whether his contribution would go to refurbish a dilapidated saint or to sustain a deserving orphan, he looked at the superscription, which read, "Contributions for Bridge Prizes." His hand stopped on the way to his pocket. Bridge bores him to tears, and he has not the slightest interest in the other fellow's prizes. And yet he could not help thinking that some people whom he knows would probably get more solid satisfaction out of giving money for bridge prizes than for world peace or hungry Chinese or a dozen other noble causes. Rome is wise in her ways. She is surprisingly successful in discovering a variety of objects for the benevolence of the faithful—repairing churches, paying for prayers, financing students for the priesthood, building altars to the saints. She meets the multitude on the level of their interests. We Protestants might well sit at her feet and learn. Giving should be an expression of the personality of the giver. If that be so, he should be permitted a wide range of choice. Let the bridge fiends give the bridge prizes if they must, but let other people match their interests in a similar way. Some people like to write checks, some love to drop the bills on the collection plate, while others delight in mite boxes. Every man should have the privilege of giving in accordance with his taste.—J. R. Scotford in Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty.

Backwash from the Beer Bill.—

"The whole thing is bedeviled by politics." Such is the situation in New York, Ex-Governor Alfred E. Smith finds, evidently to his surprise. One who has looked at both sides of the question, however, finds things just as might be expected. The wets, jubilant when the 3.2 beer bill passed Congress, are now fearful that it will cause the defeat of the repeal amendment. "What a 'break' that 3.2 beer bill has been for the dries," exclaims The Evening Public Ledger. And it adds: "In one State capital after another, the brewers, the legislators, and the politicians have been making plain, ordinary, unadulterated fools of themselves. . . . Meanwhile the dries don't even have to sit up and take notice. The pompous lawmakers and the liquor lobbyists are doing a neat job for them. All the dries need to do, the way things are going, is wait and watch and shove a little more rope toward the eager beer promoters." Governor Lehman, of New York, has had his hands full in an effort to keep the beer football out of partisan politics, and unable to control the State legislature, has gone over their heads in an appeal to the people. Assailing the "liquor lobbyists," he says: "If we in New York permit the old alliance between liquor and politics which plagued this State in the old days, if we permit the return of innumerable saloons to carry on this trade in its old way, I am convinced that there is little hope of early repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment." What he says would lead one to believe that his objection is not to the return of the old order, but the effect of present conditions in his State on the repeal vote elsewhere. Dr. F. Scott McBride, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, thinks that these "frantic appeals for moderation . . . reveal the hopelessness of restraining either avaricious brewers or strong beer enthusiasts once Prohibition bars are down and beer bars are put up." He says that "there is no worse example of cold-blooded manipulation than this present policy," and concludes: "The Anti-Saloon League gratefully welcomes the cooperation given by the present wet spokesmen. Their warnings against the possible evils of party-pressure 'non-intoxicating beer' and their announced wish to make liquor behave only long enough to permit its unrestricted restoration, will help the dries prevent repeal." The dries lost one great opportunity for educational work. Another, it seems now, will be offered them. What will they do about it?

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

The Woman's Association of the Miami Beach Church recently held a Tropical Garden Party at the estate of Harvey S. Firestone. It was a beautiful affair at which twelve hundred people were in attendance.

This is Mission Period. Some churches took the mission offering, as contemplated, on Easter. Others will take the offering at the service nearest Easter. It may be little that some churches can give, but all should take a part.

The Congregational Churches of the Carolinas are reminded that the annual conference, to be held May 2nd-3d, is the time when the per capita money is due. Send it to the treasurer as soon as possible, so he can give your church credit.

There are hungry hearts as well as hungry mouths. There are souls that are perishing as well as bodies that are hungry. Benevolent agencies are helping to give food to the hungry, but the church alone must be relied upon to give spiritual relief—the bread that feeds and saves the perishing soul.

Antioch Church, Virginia Valley Conference, is planning a home-coming and centenary celebration some time in June. This will mark 100 years since the first church was dedicated at this place. The church now standing is the second building. It is hoped that all former pastors now living and all members and friends can find their way back to Antioch for that day.

Our missionary task is that of creating world friendship through giving the Gospel to those who haven't it at home and abroad. The church cannot look for benevolent agencies and organizations to assist with its contributions. It can only look to the church, since it is the only body that undertakes to feed souls that are hungry and hearts that are perishing for the bread of life.

The work of missions can only look to the churches for money with which to build other churches and enlarge its borders and membership. Missions is a spiritual task which benevolent societies do not undertake nor make any contribution to. We can only look to the church for money with which to build other churches and support the Gospel.

Rev. W. T. Scott, of Winston-Salem, N. C., and Rev. J. H. Dollar, of LaGrange, Ga., are among our pastors who are taking advantage of the spring course for pastors offered at Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn. There are possibly others of our pastors availing themselves this year, as many have done in previous years, of the privilege thus opened for two weeks at Vanderbilt.

The second annual meeting of the North Carolina Conference of the Christian and Congregational Churches will be held at Elon College, May 2nd and 3rd. The entertainment is to be on the Harvard plan—the church and people of the community to furnish lodging and breakfast, delegates and visitors to pay thirty-five cents for lunch and forty cents for dinner. A splendid program has been made and a large attendance is anticipated.

One of the most notable sunrise services held in America is the service held at Miami Beach, Fla. The service this year was as beautiful and impressive and as largely attended as ever. The attendance at these services usually runs to about fifty thousand people. This service was originated by Dr. Elisha A. King several years ago, and he was responsible for the local preparations for the service this year. It is now conducted by the Ministerial Alliance of Miami.

Rev. Albert Godley, superintendent, World-Wide Purity Legion, Tenafly, N. J., is weak of body and failing in strength, but is strong of soul and eager in spirit to help every good cause for spiritual improvement and salvation. He writes that THE CHRISTIAN SUN is a blessing to him, as he is shut in much of the time, and that it makes a real contribution to his life and happiness. As superintendent of the World-Wide Purity Legion, he has done good work and still feels anxious for its progress and development in the world.

One readily agrees with the editor of the North Carolina Christian Advocate, and also with the publisher of the New York Times: "The new life following Easter should result in fresh vigor in the church and a new certainty in the pulpit. In this day when America thinks the Ten Commandments can be ignored, renewed emphasis will be put on the laws of God. We have neglected the basic morality to our undoing. Closed banks and business collapse tell the story. In the words of Adolph Ochs, publisher of the New York Times, 'The Ten Commandments cannot be ignored.'"

On the evening of March 26th, the Young People's Missionary Society of Antioch Church, near Harrisonburg, Va., gave a special program. The large and appreciative audience almost filled the church. The offering, which amounted to $22.00, was sent to our home mission point in Carroll County, Va. An interesting address was given by Miss Florence Hostetter, who had spent three years as a missionary in China, but is now engaged as head of Religious Education in the public schools of Rockingham County. The young people gave the pageant, "The Light of the Cross," several recitations, pantomime, and solo.

The Associated Press carried through the daily papers recently a most encouraging announcement about our Winston-Salem, N. C., work as follows: "Rev. William T. Scott, formerly of Salisbury, who came here last year and organized the Winston-Salem parish of the United Congregational-Christian Church, today awarded a contract for erection of a parish house and chapel at a cost of $8,000. The church auditorium will seat 250 and Sunday School rooms will also be provided. Mr. Scott said he would have an assistant after June and that Winston-Salem will be the center of an enlarged church program in this section."

We are indebted to Rev. J. H. Dollar, pastor, for a beautiful copy of The United Voice for April which carries the announcement that the paper is "published monthly by the United Congregational-Christian Church of LaGrange, Ga." Through The Voice it is announced that $5,000 has been recently secured from the Congregational Church Building Society as a loan in liquidating the indebtedness on the United Church, and that the people are rising up in their might through faith to raise $2,000 locally, and from the friends of the church, that their obligations may be paid and the church set free. Bro. Dollar is working, as he declares, with a zeal based on and born of faith. He has faith in his people and faith in God and faith in the cause he represents and is determined, by the grace of God, to save the church and free it of all indebtedness. An heroic effort, indeed, is made in a most noble cause.

Fifth Sunday Fellowship meetings will be held April 30th in Sophia Parish, Bailey's Grove Church, N. C., and in Macedonia Parish with Liberty Church, near Bowman, Ga. At Bailey's Grove the four churches of the parish will celebrate the tenth anniversary of the present pastorate of Rev. Samuel M. Penn. At the morning service, Mr. Penn will preach the sermon and some prominent laymen will assist in the service, the names of whom have not yet been announced. In the afternoon, Miss Priscilla Chase will address the crowd on Youth Movement activities. Rev. Arthur G. Swartz, pastor at Albemarle, will bring his male quartette to furnish special music and he will speak on "Worship and Music in the Church." Mr. Jason Moore, of Providence Chapel, a well-known leader of singing conventions, will assist by leading the audience in a number of hymns. This will be a great day in this North Carolina parish. A picnic lunch will be enjoyed at noon. At Bowman, Ga., the Pastor-at-Large will speak at the morning service, and others in the afternoon, as time will permit. For this fellowship service, one of the churches must drive something like 80 miles to attend—but they are always there just the same.

In addition to the letter from Dr. A. D. Woodworth in this week's SUN, "A Famous Temple," our veteran missionary adds as a personal note which other persons than the editor may appreciate reading: "When E. Stanley Jones wrote about the most famous temple in China, to see which he ascended a mountain, he found the priests gambling and smoking. Perhaps he was too polite to mention drinking, but they all go together, being birds of the same flock. So when our brethren, the Laymen, urge us to unite with the Buddhists, it seems to me that they don't know what they are talking about. Dr. Ebina told me that originally they all came out of Confucianism and brought all the good with them that there was in it, and that Confucianism, so far as Japan is concerned, has ceased. The three religions now before the Japanese people are Shinto, Buddhism and Christianity. Of these, although the smallest in numbers, is the Christian religion. It seems perfectly clear to me that the true position for the Christian to take is to stand in his place and let his light shine. In the times of our Lord there were good people among the Pharisees, but so far as I can see, Jesus did not court their fellowship; there was too much rottenness about them. The same can be said of the Buddhism of Japan."

FIFTH SUNDAY OFFERING.

Fortunate for the College, April has five Sundays. This is a fine time for the schools that have been sending their fifth Sunday offerings to make a special effort to increase their donations, and certainly it is a fine time for those who have not been sending their offerings to take the matter up and join with their sister Sunday Schools in this necessary and commendable undertaking.

I am wondering if the Sunday Schools, organized classes, societies and churches of the Convention would not like to join with individuals in the Dollar-a-Month Club plan for the support of the College. If these individual units in our churches would all join the Club, it would mean more than 1,000 memberships, or at least, $1,000 a month for the College. I believe that they could all do this if they would. It would require an effort, but perhaps no very great sacrifice, but what a wonderful help it would be to our College.

The Sunday School at Elon College is not strong by any means. It is made up almost entirely of college students, college professors and their families, and the children of the Orphanage. College students have very little money to spend. Members of the faculty have received but little or no pay since Christmas. Of course, the Orphanage children can barely find pennies for the support of the school. However, this local Sunday School is now sending in eight subscriptions. This does not include individuals, but these memberships come from classes, departments and the school itself. Won't you please take the matter up with your school and see if it would not like to join with our local Sunday School in this undertaking? I know that a dollar a month is very little for a whole Sunday School, organized class or society to give, however, if all would give this mite, the sum total would be of telling help to the College. Dr. Hunter is superintendent of the College Sunday School, and presented his appeal to classes and departments to give their assistance. Try, Mr. Superintendent, and see if you can't get your school to do as much.

The following schools and organized classes are members. May we have yours added to the list for our next report?

- J. O. Atkinson Missionary Society, Mebane, N. C.
- Freshman Sunday School Class, Elon College.

SUBSCRIPTION PAYMENTS.

Six weeks have passed since we printed a list of those making payments on their subscriptions to THE SUN. The banking holiday seems to have had its effect on subscriptions as well as on other activities, for we only report 50 names this time, in spite of the fact that we are covering a month and a half instead of one month. Please look at your label, and if it shows that you are not paid up to date, let us have the amount due. Or if that is impossible, at least send in what you can spare on your subscription. There are quite a number who are unable to make any payment at all now. By letting us have your subscription, it will help us to carry those who cannot pay anything at present. If it has been negligence on your part, please attend to your subscription. If you just can't pay all, write us and we will try to work out a plan to help you.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE CHURCH OUR SOLE DEPENDENCE.

Pastors and church members will bear in mind that the church is the only body to which missions can appeal, or rely upon for sustenance and support. The mission call of the church can only be carried to the church and is only heeded by the church. It has no other source. If we are to build other churches and grow as a Convention and a denomination, we will have to look only to the churches to do the work. Missions has only one source to which it can go, and that is to the church. If the cause of missions secures $15,000.00 or $20,000.00, or any sum, with which to carry on its work, it will all have to come from the church. There is no other source. Pastors should bear in mind that unless they take the missionary offering in the church, the cause of the church suffers and there is no possibility of enlargement and no way of obeying the command of our Lord. The entire amount of the Mission Fund has to come from the church. It is the only organization that does missionary work.

Friendly corporations, benevolent movements, men of benevolent minds and means will help the church in supporting all of its other enterprises, but not missions. Benevolent societies, a benevolent minded country, community, nation or state will not help the church send and support the Gospel. This is because missions is a purely spiritual task, was instituted of our Lord to be carried on by His church, which is a spiritual body. And so if the church turns a deaf ear to the command of its Lord to give the Gospel to others, there is no other organization to which it can turn.

Moreover, there are scores of agencies seeing to it that the hungry mouth shall be fed, bread shall be supplied, and food and clothing. But the only agency engaged in the business of supplying food for hungry hearts and starving souls is the church through its missionary enterprise. Surely, our ministers and church members will face this fact and be willing, even in self-denial now, to obey our Lord. Unless they do the task, it will not be done.

Souls are waiting in the homeland and in heathen darkness, worshipping idols, going to their doom through darkness and death, and the only hope of their salvation is through missions, the one cause that seeks to carry the light to them and share with them the love and the life that can save them. If the church will not give the light and the love of our Lord to those who are perishing without it, then it will never be given. There is no other source to which a sin-sick world can turn and to whom perishing souls can look and plead.

The church that contents itself with a gift to benevolence puts itself on a level with a benevolent society. And the words apply as they did long ago: "If ye do these things, what do ye more than these?" Christ expects. J. O. A.

BURDEN OR BLESSING?

The missionary offering may be made a burden, whereas our Lord intended it as a blessing. He Himself said: "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for my yoke is easy and my burden is light."

Our burdens are turned into blessings when we take the yoke of our Lord and join with Him in sharing His burden, which, as He Himself declares, is light. Many shrink from making a missionary offering. Many pastors are deaf to the plea of their Lord because they do not want to burden their people. They declare their people are already burdened with local expense, pastor's salary and calls for benevolences and local needs. With all these our Saviour is pleading in order that these seeming burdens, locally, may become easy to carry and made blessings. Our Lord is not seeking to burden His people through His command to give the Gospel to those who are perishing. We are saved by sharing. We grow strong spiritually as we share with others the spirit of our Lord. The church has a secret to reveal to the world, a light and a love to share with the world. And this is done by making a self-denial offering in His name and for His sake. Our missionary offering is a love-offering made to the glory of God, a token of our devotion. He takes the sting out of the burden and puts joy and satisfaction and blessing into it. He is still saying to all who have tasted the bread of life: "Give ye them to eat"—those who are heart hungry for soul food. Right now when millions are being poured out through benevolence to feed hungry mouths, many churches and church members are withholding even a small gift from giving the bread of life to hungry hearts and perishing souls. Our missionary offering, given in the name and as a token of love to our Lord, is a spiritual blessing. Every pastor should give every member in his church a chance to share with others and enjoy this spiritual blessing. J. O. A.

AFTER EASTER.

It was the after Easter message that put life into the early church and power into the people of God. On Easter we celebrate the resurrection, the central fact in the life of our Lord. It was this central fact that gave Peter his theme on the Day of Pentecost and Paul the inspiration for his marvelous and miraculous ministry. The eleven Apostles hastened to choose a successor to Judas Iscariot, who had fallen, that his successor might "be a witness with us of His resurrection." When Paul was being tried for his faith before Felix, he declared: "Touching the resurrection . . . I am called in question by you this day." And it was this same Paul who declared that if they were mistaken as to the resurrection, "we are found false witnesses of God."

We bear witness of the resurrection that we may see and be heirs of the full flower and fruit of this belief.

Our blossoming spring-time does not lapse back to drab winter, but goes on to the growing life of summer, with fruit of field and harvest of crops. So the church should advance with newness and vigor of life because of the resurrection. There is no fact of history more thoroughly authentic than that of the resurrection. The early church acted as if it did believe this, and went forth in that belief with a power that was irresistible, overcoming all difficulties and conquering all foes and subduing all things in the name of the Risen Lord. "Because I live, ye shall live also, and in this promise of our Lord is the power of the church and a prospect of assured victory. We go forward now with the best promise of all time fulfilled and realized. J. O. A.

CHARACTER.

The chief asset in human achievement is character. Without this asset all others fail.

Rev. E. Stanley Jones tells of a movement in China to build a railroad. The right-of-way was secured. Funds were made available. All necessary building material was purchased, and all the requirements, entering into the building of a railroad, were met and an individual was chosen as superintendent to carry the project through. Yet, the whole project failed, miserably, and the railroad was not built; solely because the man chosen as superintendent to build it did not have character. The whole structure crumbled for the lack of character on the part of one man. This may be a notable example because of the magnitude of the project and the tragedy of its failure, but the principle and the fact of it obtain everywhere. No man of money, no sort of material equipment and abundance, no volume of cash and credit can overcome or survive the lack of character. When character fails the structure about it crumbles.

Notable examples are now the amazement of intelligence and the evidence of stupidity. Men in high financial circles, some of the most gigantic in our country, were entrusted with millions. Their financial structure seemed indestructible in their towering magnitude and immense proportions. But these gigantic structures crumbled and the whole financial world suffers the consequence today of the dishonesty and corruption of character.

The only secure and safe foundation in society is character. Jesus busied Himself not with organizing great institutions or manipulating organizations, but with the making and molding of right human character. He contented Himself with taking Peter, a weak, wavering, unstable man and molding him into a veritable "rock" of endurance and of strength. He was deeply concerned in taking John, of fearful tongue and temper—a veritable son of "thunder"—and molding him into a character of lovable obedience and devotion. He could trust to such men the task of reconstructing a world with the methods He had employed. Those methods were always directed to molding and producing the right sort of character. This is what the religion of our Lord does for one; it remolds and makes character secure. J. O. A.

IS MAN FREE.

By REV. HARRY M. PETERSON.

Two direct answers may be given to this question, but an unqualified Yes or a categorical No will not really answer it. It is necessary to make clear what sort of freedom we are talking about and within what limits man may exercise it.

Our freedom is limited. Man cannot always do as he pleases. If some hypothetical man, or superman, had the physical power, the economic resources, and the unhampered leisure to do as he would and go where he wished, he would soon meet a social obstacle—the rights of the other fellow. Some one has said: "Your liberty ends where my nose begins."

We are hedged in on all sides with forces and obligations which limit our liberty. We are bound by the frailty of physical nature, the pressure of economic forces, and the obligations of social relationship. We are constantly coming to grips with forces and conditions not under our control. During the World War the French used to say "C'est le guerre." "It's war." "War causes the devastation and suffering which you see, and there is no help for it." Today everybody is talking about the depression, which bears so heavily upon us. The economic system is out of joint, and everything is tangled up. Our best minds are working overtime to find a way out, but as yet they have scored no great success.

Personal experience reminds us that we cannot do just as we wish. Everyone has at times found his way blocked by adverse circumstances, and has had to change his course, and give up or postpone the thing he intended to do.

The beginning and the end of life give a strong negative to the illusion of unrestricted freedom. It is not by our choice that we come into this world. We are not permitted to select the time and place for our entry. We are not asked who shall be our parents, nor what conditions shall surround our tender years. We must take these things as they come.

The experiences at the end of life are not left to our choice. We must go, but the time and manner of our going are not ours to determine. Some go early, and some go late, some in one way and some in another; some pass out easily, and some with much agony and suffering. We can not say how it will be with us.

The fact that one can in a moment of rashness end his own life is no argument for freedom. Such an act is a confession of defeat. It is a plain case of giving up because one is not free to do as he will.

But human life is not a hopeless bondage. Our course is not absolutely set and nothing left to us but to follow it. We have a large measure of freedom and responsibility. Each must work his own way to success. Initiative, decision, tenacity of purpose are in demand. It is a conviction based upon experience, that we have freedom and need to use it well. Each must play his own part in the game of life. But there are rules to the game, and we must abide by the rules. Within these limitations we choose our course and act upon our own responsibility.

Limitations are a good thing. Both efficiency and freedom depend upon them. Take away the banks of a river and it would make a ruin. What had been a mighty highway for commerce and a blessing to mankind would become a destroyer, carrying death and devastation with it. Its basin would soon become a vast swamp, too wet for cultivation and too shallow for shipping. So with human life unlimited freedom would bring disastrous dissipation of energy.

Unrestricted freedom would lead to bondage. No one would feel free if every man were free to lift up his hand against every other. The criminally minded would work their will, and not for one moment could anyone be sure that his life or property were safe. It would spell the end of achievement as well as of liberty. Within the rails a locomotive is free to move, and can accomplish important things. But if it leaves the rails it becomes hopelessly mired or all broken up. Absence of limitation would destroy human liberty. Man is never so free as when he plays the game of life according to the rules.

The moral agency of man has been the center of much discussion, especially in respect to its relation to certain deterministic types of philosophy and theology. Determinism holds that man's course in life is determined by forces which lie outside the human will. The determinist may be a materialist who believes that all action results from a blind force residing in matter, or a theist who asserts that everything is brought about by divine decree, and that man must do as God has decreed.

The most frankly avowed form of determinism is fatalism. It is a complete denial of freedom. Everything is ruled by fate. Even human action is fated. Nothing is left to human choice. There is no place for freedom, moral or otherwise.

Materialism likewise leaves little place for freedom. Matter is the fundamental thing, out of which all other things are made—man, mind, and the rest. The world of the materialist is a mechanical world in which all things are brought about by a mechanical energy believed to reside in matter. Just how this mechanical energy is able to transmute itself into mind and thought the materialist does not say, but he asserts that man's thought and action result from its activity, rather than from independent personal choice. Some materialists might not accept this conclusion, but there seems to be no place in materialism for moral choice and moral action. Man's course is determined and he is not free to choose right or wrong.

The most thoroughly argued form of determination is the theological doctrine of predestination, which is a theist attempt to solve the old philosophical problem of the one and the many. The problem for the Christian thinker is how to maintain the sovereignty of God and yet secure the autonomy of man.

The orthodox predestinarian exalts God to the highest. He is omnipotent and omniscient. He has known all things from the beginning. He decreed the whole plan of redemption from the foundation of the world. Some men are to be saved and some are to be lost. Atonement is universal for those who are to be saved and grace is irresistible.

The Arminian doctrine generally accepted by Methodism exalts God, but also leaves a place for man. He must decide for himself whether he will accept salvation. Atonement is conditioned upon his acceptance. Grace is abundantly sufficient, but not irresistible. Man may accept or reject it.

Freedom is necessary to moral action. There is no virtue in being good if you have to and cannot be otherwise. But the man who can do evil and voluntarily decides to do good has made a moral decision of tremendous importance. It is a step on the way to moral character and goodness.

The predestinarian is in a dilemma when he undertakes to explain moral freedom. Either he must set limits to the sovereignty of God, or he must constrain man to do right, and thus destroy the moral character of his actions.

Moral character is built up through a succession of unhampered moral choices. Such a character is precious in God's sight. But in order to secure it he had to grant man the power of contrary choice and take the risk of losing some through their refusal to choose the right. This seems the only rational way to explain the fact of incorrigible sin without making God a participant in it, through his decree that some should fall into such sin; or else accusing him of having created a portion of mankind with the deliberate purpose of destroying them, neither of which would accord with our ideas of divine goodness.

It seems infinitely better to regard God as surrendering a portion of his sovereign will to each individual to enable him to choose for himself and be responsible. This done, divine love offers every possible inducement to incline man to choose right and live.

Some predestinarians, while they emphasize divine decrees and divine sovereignty so far as to prejudice human freedom, still insist that man is free because he chooses just what he desires. But God made the desires, which according to this theory determine man's action; so in the last analysis God is responsible and man is not free.

There is also a question as to the part motives play in the making of choices. We have numerous desires and motives—some strong and some not so strong. Some assert that we are always moved by the strongest motive. But this brings us back on deterministic ground. If man is ruled by the strongest motive, then his reaction to motive is mechanical, like the response of a machine to the push button. But we are able to act upon the weaker motive, and refuse the strong. We are not driven by motive. We can select the motive to which we respond. Moral agency is superior to motive, or man would not be free.

Our conclusion is that man is free morally. His freedom is limited elsewhere, but in the moral realm he is altogether free and responsible. He was so created in order that he, by choosing right and refusing wrong, might build up a character fit for fellowship with God.—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

THIS IS URGENT.

Aroused by the dangers of the return of the legalized liquor traffic, the church and moral forces of the country have set up the National Prohibition Emergency Committee to lead the campaign to prevent the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment.

On March 7, 1933, notwithstanding that all banks were closed, nearly a thousand men and women from thirty-two states, representing thirty church bodies and all the important temperance organizations, met at Washington. Important decisions were made to:

1. Unite all of the interests friendly to the Eighteenth Amendment into a unified campaign to prevent its repeal.
2. Create a National Prohibition Emergency Committee under whose unified command all temperance organizations will fight to retain the Eighteenth Amendment.
3. Concentrate the energy of all friends of Prohibition to defend the Amendment and to keep the liquor traffic outlawed.

Outstanding men and women, including many not heretofore prominently identified with the Prohibition movement, have accepted membership upon the Committee. The personnel is being completed and will be announced shortly.

The leading temperance and prohibition organizations of the country have heartily concurred and have begun to work enthusiastically under the new leadership. Among those who have already accepted appointment on this unified committee are the heads of the boards of temperance of the Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, Southern Methodist and Disciples denominations, of the

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Jesus really lived. He died upon the cross. These two facts are too well established to be questioned or disputed. The three days he lay in the tomb were the darkest days in the history of humanity. He came as the hope of the religious world. His failure to become King and regain the prestige of the Jewish people was a keen disappointment to his ardent followers. When his lifeless body was taken down from the cross and laid in a tomb, which was sealed by the authority of the Roman government, it was difficult for his friends to look beyond the tomb. His enemies thought his power was destroyed, and they believed that they had put an end to his kingdom. Although he had promised his disciples that he would rise the third day, they could not believe it. How could he arise when dead? If he could not save himself from the cross, how could he save himself after death?

But the third day came. It always comes to the promises of God. The day of triumph and victory for the kingdom of God may not always come within three days after an apparent defeat. But the day of victory will come. The gates of hell shall not prevail against the church of Jesus Christ. Neither shall the enemies of Jesus always prevail against him. On the third day—the day when God asserts his power—those who came to pay tribute to a dead Lord found an empty tomb, and discarded grave-clothes. This added to their sorrow. But later—one has to wait for some of God's best plans—later, they found their living Lord, with the marks of the crucifixion upon his hands, his feet and in his side. Now it is certain that Jesus rose from the dead. His life, his death, his resurrection—these three—and the greatest of these is the resurrection. Upon this doctrine hangs the hope of every believer in Jesus Christ.

The Christian Church throughout the world has been enriched by the annual Easter season. Jesus has been the center of the church for this period. Perhaps there were millions of people who did not think reverently of him. Many people thought more of new clothes than the great doctrines of the Christ. Think of what Easter has meant to the business of the civilized world. In factory, and office, and store, thousands of people have hurried their steps to meet the requirements of cutsumers and salesmen. Thousands of people engaged in the work of providing sweet-scented flowers for homes, chapels and cathedrals. Singing birds have filled the air with their sweetest notes while great choirs have sung the soul-stirring oratorios of the great music masters. Jesus lives! The Hallelujah Chorus, from the Messiah, cannot express all the joy of the people whose lives are enriched by this great Gospel truth.

There is no occasion, even in our day, for losing our hope of the ultimate triumph of Jesus Christ. The triumph of Jesus is the triumph of his teaching. It is the triumph of the Bible, the Word of God. The enemies of Jesus have already done their worst. Russia may burn her Christian cathedrals but from their ashes will arise other churches of greater power. Governments may persecute and make martyrs of Christian ministers, but when the ministers are silenced the stones will cry out in glorious testimony to the living Christ. Unstable politicians and soap-box orators may predict the downfall of the Christian religion. Rest assured of one thing: there is no power on earth which can overcome the kingdom of God on earth. It is here to stay. And it is here to be victorious. The infidels and skeptics can darken the sun as easily as they can destroy Christianity. Lovers of pleasure are seeking to destroy our Sabbath, but the tide will turn back. The greed for gold may substitute the golden calf for the Ten Commandments, but some day the calf will be melted and fashioned into some adornment for the temple of God. Don't be discouraged because Jesus does not finish the kingdom in a day. He will be patient. But he will be victorious. Be patient and keep your faith in him.

THE ALUMNI.

Elon has some loyal alumni. There are those among our graduates and former students who are tremendously interested in their Alma Mater and who are constantly giving whatever assistance they can. We have had more than 900 to receive their diplomas from Elon College, and a total of 17,000 who have attended the College. If all were loyal and true and would do their best, as some are doing, the influence of the College would be tremendously increased, and they, the graduates and former students, themselves, would be greatly benefited. There may be a feeling on the part of some that they have met their full obligations to the College, and they have, from the standpoint of dollars and cents, but no individual can ever fully repay his College for the benefits received.

Recently, I received a letter from an alumnus of the institution who is a member of the Dollar-a-Month Club. She has already paid for one full year, but without a question of any kind, sent in $6.00 in payment of another half year. There are hundreds and thousands of others who have received benefits from Elon College who could do as well as this one. Wouldn't it be fine if we could have 100 per cent loyalty on the part of everyone who has come in touch with Elon College?

Occasionally, I find former students who are yet disgruntled and apparently out of sorts with the College. I would be very glad, and I invite all who feel that the College has not done its best by them, to come forward with such complaints, and if there is any way possible to adjust matters with them, I assure you and them that it will be done.

I am appealing constantly to the alumni of the institution for their cooperation and support in the forward things that we are doing.

Prospects for another year are promising. We have quite a number of inquiries and some who have already made requests for entrance in September. This year we have 163 new students. Next year, we are hoping for more than 250, and the indications are now that we will have that number, if we do not exceed it. We are getting ready for a larger enrollment.

The Alumni Building, which is a men's dormitory, has been crowded during the year. We are now in the process of remodeling East Dormitory, which is the only original building now standing on the campus. This building will be renovated throughout—new floors, new plastering, modern lighting, baths on all three floors and other conveniences. We are planning to make this a first-class rooming house for boys. We will have room for about 50 in this building. Those who wish better accommodations should begin to make reservations.

Our alumni will be interested in the improvements in East Dormitory. All who attended the College before the fire will remember it as a landmark. Others will be interested to know that its condition is improved.

Money on the Dollar-a-Month Club dues has been coming in rather slowly. This week has been the best week since the banks closed. We have received during the week $49.50, and since we last reported, $106.50, making a total of $2,548.50. If you are behind with your dues, won't you please pay up if possible? We are greatly in need of funds. The following members have paid dues since our last report. This makes a total of 528 memberships. We are yet a long ways from our goal of 5,000. Won't you send in your name to help swell the number?

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY.

The Franklin Christian Church is planning to celebrate the 50th anniversary of its organization Sunday, April 30th, at 11 A. M. The records of the church indicate that it was organized by Rev. M. L. Hurley, assisted by Revs. W. W. Staley and R. A. Ricks, on Sunday, April 29, 1883.

To this anniversary all former pastors of the church have been invited. Dr. C. H. Rowland, of Greensboro Christian Church, Dr. N. G. Newman, of Holy Neck Christian Church, and Rev. F. C. Lester, of Waverly Christian Church, have accepted invitations, and will participate in the service. All members of the Church in other years, who have associated themselves with other churches where they now live, are also being invited. If by any chance anyone has been overlooked, it is the desire of the committee that this item in THE SUN shall be accepted as an invitation. You are surely wanted. It is earnestly desired by the committee that all who can shall avail themselves of this opportunity to fellowship together in celebration of such an important event as this 50th anniversary.

The Franklin Church has grown through these years, and is exerting its full share of influence in the community and in the world, seeking to be obedient to the Great Head of the church, even Jesus Christ our Lord.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

It is doubtful if we have any one church enterprise that has made a greater contribution to the kingdom of righteousness than the Sunday School. A few days ago I heard a very successful business man make the statement that he attributed his success to the influence of the Sunday School, on his life, from an early age. It is doubtful also that any other evangelical method of disseminating the knowledge of the Bible has been more fruitful of good results than the Sunday School. No other single means of inculcating the basic knowledge of a well established Christian discipleship has achieved more, through its expending influence than the Sunday School. It begins by planting seeds of Christian righteousness in the mind of the youth, who is to become the greatest asset of the commonwealth of the future. If a consciousness of Christian duty is given first place in our life, a high standard of Christian living will always follow. Also love and respect for others will usually follow.

I once heard a minister say that the "Golden Rule" was good, but that a real love of duty and a loyalty to duty was better. Simply facing duty, humbly, courageously and constantly, is the highest incentive to any life, and it is the surest way to pleasant reflections in the closing days of life. The Sunday School is big enough to inspire all ages, classes and races toward these goals. To me, an education without a knowledge of the Bible, is incapable of translating human thoughts into an activity that is capable of the highest order of service to humanity. In my high school work, those in our class who were interested in Sunday School were the most punctual, painstaking, and evenly poised, dependable pupils in our class. I daresay they will carry those outstanding virtues through life. I am sure had it not been for the Sunday School and B. Y. P. U., that my high school education would be much less complete than I trust it will be when I am through. Too many of our young people have become too much absorbed in thoughts of their social standing; this seems to be the greatest desire motivating them in the pursuit of an education. Doubtless, our social standing and the solution of material problems have been too much emphasized by some of our public school teachers and leading educators. Our greatest need is to get back to our Bible, our church, our Sunday School, our young people's work, and our better selves; then we will soon find conditions greatly changed.

FIGURING IN DAYS INSTEAD OF DOLLARS.

During the past fifteen years the grand old American dollar has shrunk, expanded, and turned several somersaults. Just now there is some doubt as to whether it rests upon a gold standard or is propped up by some less glittering medium. Considering the idiosyncrasies of the dollar it is no wonder that the Technocrats have suggested that we do our figuring in terms of ergs—whatever that may be. But here comes Percy T. Watson, M. D., of the American Board Hospital at Fenchow, Shansi, China, who has translated part of his finances from dollars into days of labor with interesting results. He writes: "During the last few weeks we have received from the Chinese donations which represent the income from 1,431 days of labor. If these men had been in America and had received $4 a day this would have amounted to $5,724, but no such handsome sum was received by us. During the last year our hospital fees have amounted to the income of 66,000 days of upper standard labor. On the American basis of $4 a day this would have meant $264,000—only it did not!" The way to get the true perspective on Chinese contributions and fees is to translate them back into terms of long hours of sweaty labor. From that angle, the Chinese are a generous people.—The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty.

Generally speaking folks have to pay very dearly for the things they get for nothing.

PRAYER.

O Lord, thy word is truth and blessing and uprightness and peace. Do what thou wilt, O God, with whom thou wilt, only let thy word be established. O Mighty God, who hast all power to relieve world distresses, help men and women to see that thou dost permit conditions as they are that out of them there may come a levelling of human affairs in the realization that thou dost work to bring all hearts to an understanding of thy creative and unailing purposes. We ask it for Jesus' sake.—Amen. J.

THE EASTER OFFERING.

One of our pastors aptly declared recently that it was not a question of whether "the heathen at home and abroad" would be saved, if we Christians did not give them the Gospel, but whether we ourselves would be saved. Can we be saved if we profess a love for our Lord, and faith in Him, and yet disobey the most emphatic command He has given us? If an earthly father, in his wisdom and from experience, gives his child a command, and advice, and his child wilfully disobeys and is deaf to that advice, that child cannot hope to escape the consequences of its disobedience. If ever a father loved a child, David loved Absalom, and he gave Absalom the benefit of his wisdom, advice and experience. Absalom wilfully went contrary to the counsel of love, and the wisdom of his father, and thus came to a wicked and untimely death. The love and compassion of David could not save Absalom when Absalom wilfully disobeyed.

Can the love, even the infinite love of our Lord's Christ, who founded the church, save the church if the church wilfully disobeys the wisest and most emphatic command He ever gave? "All power hath been given unto me, therefore, go ye and teach all nations." Our Lord did not give that command until He realized that the power was in His hands to give it, and He only promised the fellowship of His presence if that command were obeyed.

Just once a year our church is called upon to give its evidence that it is willing to obey this command of our Lord. Just once a year is our church called upon to make a love-offering through self-denial that it may show its willingness to obey the supreme command of our Lord. Unless the offering were taken on Easter Sunday, as in many churches it was not, since they had no Easter services, it should be, and we believe will be taken, in order at least that the members may have the opportunity of showing whether they are willing to obey this emphatic command of our Lord. It is a spiritual command with a spiritual purpose in view—that of strengthening the spiritual life of the church and conferring upon the church a blessing and a benefit. It is, therefore, a blessing to be shared rather than a burden to be borne, if we enter into the same with thanksgiving and gratitude, and obey the command of our Lord that we may share the joy that is ours through Him in this good and glorious season.

A FAMOUS TEMPLE.

The temple which is the great show place and the Vanity Fair of Tokio is the Temple of the Goddess of Mercy. It is safe to say that it is visited by millions every year. I have never been there when the main approach to the temple was not a jam of people. The entrance gate is guarded by two huge demons of gigantic size, having huge mouths filled with huge teeth, and they have huge glaring eyes. Near the entrance is a tank of holy water in which the pilgrims dip their hands to purify themselves.

In front of the temple food for pigeons is on sale and it is considered a mark of benevolence to buy for a few sen a plate of beans or rice to feed the birds. Besides it is a means of storing up merit to balance off against one's bad deeds.

Long steps in front of the temple lead up to the main entrance. A rope dangles down in front. This the worshipper shakes to ring a bell above to notify the goddess that he is ready for business. He throws his money in the box which is about ten feet long, six feet wide and two feet deep, made so big that it may hold all the money thrown in and big so that those throwing money cannot miss it.

When the worshipper prays, what does he pray for? Purity? Holiness? Just now the Japanese papers are full of the horrible story of a man who for a small fee took care of babies. In his confession he states that he went to this temple and prayed to the goddess that he might have success in killing babies until he had four hundred yen with which he hoped to set himself up in business. The police dug up twenty-five bodies where he had buried them. Near this place is the famous brothel quarter, from which according to the word of the Commissioner of the Salvation Army, brothel keepers come to pray that they may have success in their business.

To the left is an image of Buddha enclosed in a lattice structure. The people about this image are chewing paper wads with the idea that if they can throw or flip a wad so as to make it stick to the image, their prayers will be answered. So the image is well plastered over with these balls.

Over to the right is an image of the god of healing, made of wood. If you have some disease of the eyes, rub your own eyes and then rub the eyes of the image. If you have a headache, rub your own head and then rub the head of the image, transferring your troubles to him. This image has been rubbed so much that the whole front of the face has been rubbed away. But having been so much patronized, it is supposed to have more merit. It will be seen that the things which the worshippers want are health and success in their undertakings. Anybody can be a good Buddhist in practice without any reference to his character.

Near the temple is a geisha establishment, the singing women all being 100 per cent prostitutes. Nearby are also the numerous moving picture shows. The region about the temple is said to be honeycombed with vice. Dr. Danjo Ebina, one of our most prominent preachers, says there are good people who are Buddhists, of course, but it is a recent thing since the Buddhist priests have begun to emphasize purity. But there is a great company of very good people in Japan who have no religion at all. That we know to be true in America. As the committee of thirteen say in their criticism of the Laymen's Report, the better class of the Japanese are turning away from Buddhism. Under the circumstances is it the time for us to attempt to cultivate the Buddhists as having a religion which is a way of salvation? I trow not.

A. D. WOODWORTH.

Cho Azabu, Tokio, Japan.

MAN SHALL NOT LIVE BY BREAD ALONE.

This is a day when men are greatly tempted to build the kingdom upon bread. We are told to make religion social, or in other words, place the material wants first. The church is being urged to help carry on an active campaign for old age pensions, insurance for unemployed, reduction of working hours, permit each individual to have a share in the wealth of the state and similar measures.

All of these things may be of great importance. No man is a real Christian who is not interested in the social problems of the day. The church that holds aloof is out of touch with the spirit of Christ.

But Christ refused to put these things first in his program of life. After the multitude had been fed they would make him king by force; but the Master refused all such selfish and doubtful honors.

We should remember that, "Man cannot live by bread alone," and continue to preach and prepare others to preach the unsearchable riches of Jesus Christ.—World Evangelist.

Our Master declared to his disciples, "because I live ye shall live also." They went out with that doctrine of the certainty of the resurrection of those who have fallen asleep in Jesus, and the certainty of a house eternally in the heavens not made with hands; they revived the dead world of paganism, comforted multitudes who were ready to destroy their lives because there was no hope in their hearts, and set up a new order of life which was ever in the light of the immortality which he brought to light. More and more it became apparent in the light of this teaching that death is a mere incident, and we only begin to live truly when we have gone through it and come into the land of the unsetting sun, which the Master came to reveal.—The Christian-Evangelist.

DO WE NEED A NEW NAME.

By EDWARD JEFFRIES REES.

In various sections of the church it is being suggested that a new name be given to missions. Sitting a district missionary institute, the practical presiding elder was heard to say: "We need a new name for missions." His suggestion was rather carefully sanctioned by an influential layman. But the missionary secretary of the conference did not warm up to this suggestion.

The motive behind the suggestion is the fact that the simple old name—some seem to think the name worn out—of missions does not grip, does not stir Christian folk to action as in former days and years. Does the fault lie in the name of the child or in the nature of the parents of the offspring? Jesus Christ was a Missionary on a mighty mission. He was commissioned to go, to help, to heal, to sustain, to comfort, to lift the load of a world in need. What name goes as deep, reaches as far, points as high, lifts as much as missions? A mission is that task which one is destined to accomplish; a chosen end of one's efforts, those efforts being under authority given by God and the church.

I was startled by the frankness and truthfulness of a recently made statement in a great missionary conference, covering three large districts of the church. Said an influential minister: "We sing a missionary hymn, teach a missionary book, pass the hat, and get little." No fault with the hymn, no criticism of the book, but what of the "hat"? Ah! therein lies the difficulty; therein rests the problem. It may be on account of an over-emphasis of the "hat" rather than a sympathetic opening of the heart. When missions reach the heart, they will touch the "hat." "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." Frankly, I always come to the missionary emphasis period of our church with a lump in my heart and a leap in my soul. The lump is there because of the need of the world. The leap is there because of the belief in the simple plan of Christ for world redemption. More and more do I come to the conclusion that this special period of emphasis should be a certain two or three months, but a certain twelve months of every year of every pastorate of Christendom. For missions is the heart and soul of Christ's Gospel. If a new name will grip better, let the church have it. If not, let us magnify the passion and power of Christ's plan as a mission.

Has not the cash loomed too large in missionary periods rather than the concern? Have not the shekels been more prominent than sacrifice? Has not filthy lucre for missions been talked about too much, rather than fragrant love for missions experienced? When concern is evidenced, the cash will be in evidence; when sacrifice is experienced, shekels will be forthcoming; when love is prominent, lucre will appear; when the heart is opened, the "hat" will be filled. "Prove me now, saith the Lord, if I will not open unto you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." Too often missions have been a burden rather than a privilege. Too frequently they have lost their glow, and thus have lost their "go." Too often missionary sermons have smacked more of gold than of God, and special periods of missionary emphasis have been more of a grind than glory, more agony than harmony, more of a stereotyped program rather than an experienced passion. To illustrate: A pastor serving a church which has a building fund debt, says: "I taught the book, sent out a missionary letter, accompanied by envelopes, and got very little in the offering." Then he says: "That's enough, isn't it? That's working the program." Well, the reader may decide. Yet a pastor in the same state, missionary secretary of his conference, says in emphatic notes to a group of ministers: "If you want to pay off your church debt, adopt a missionary and pay his salary regularly, and the local needs will be met." How marvelously, sensibly true this is!

The "hat" and the heart of missions are inseparable. Each is lost without the other. Each thrives on the other. An open heart is indicative of an open pocketbook. Remember the widow's mite. A closed heart is a guarantee of a closed pocketbook. When God is in the heart, gold will go into the "hat." The missionary purse is dependent upon the missionary power. The former is without, the latter, within. The "hat" of missions has been too far removed from the heart of missions.

I firmly maintain that the least consideration of missions is money. Finances are the natural result of devotion. When our hearts glow for missions, the cash will come for missions. The greatest price for missions is devotion, not dollars. Hear the final statement of this story from the lips of the steward who related it to the writer: "The money was the thing the pastor was after, wasn't it?" It was only a part, and a very small part. I fear that only the purse-strings were touched rather than the heart-strings.—In the N. C. Christian Advocate.

HOW SHE KILLED THE LION.

The nurse arrived at the little village of Nyasaland for her monthly visit. But instead of asking her to cure their usual ailments, the people were exceedingly solicitous that she should help them to get rid of a lion which had killed three people. They had no firearms and against the lion they were almost helpless. But nurse was not used to dealing with lions. Even if she had had a gun this medical missionary was not quite sure that she would be wise to tackle a man-eating lion single-handed. But without a gun what was she to do? Putting her wits to work she asked that they kill an ox, and when it had been made ready she dosed the carcass with morphia, and had them place it near the lion's haunt. The lion came and devoured the ox, then went to sleep, and he slept so soundly that he did not know when the natives came and speared him. The nurse thus accounted for the morphia in her returns, "Medicine for one out-patient, 7s, 6d."—La Follia (Toronto).

SELF-DENIAL.

William Carey did a great work which reached to the ends of the earth. A widow unknown to fame in whose home he began his work helped to make possible a work which she could have in no wise done herself.

A woman who never set foot in Africa made possible much of the work done by David Livingstone, by handing him a cash gift as he was going out to his work. With this gift, Livingstone employed the native man who cared for him in many ways, who conserved the strength of his master by attending to details of his work, and who actually saved the life of that greatest of all missionaries to the Dark Continent in an encounter with a lion.

A business man proposed to assume the salary of one of the great missionary leaders of this country, making it possible for this most convincing speaker to go all over the country giving his message. He has stirred the hearts of men everywhere, and secured multiplied thousands for missions, and many missionaries for the field. The business man could not have done the work, but he made it possible for another man to do it.

In the plan of God for our lives and his church, he does not expect all Christians to go to foreign mission fields. Neither does he expect all Christians to devote all their time and energy to special Christian work here. He has planned for everyone to have an important part in giving the Gospel to the unevangelized in mission lands. Some are called to give all their time to this work, others to invest their funds and prayers. Those called to go cannot obey the call unless others who are called to give are obedient.

Our self-denial gifts will supplement our tithes in sending forth missionaries and supporting native preachers and teachers. Thus we can share in the great work done by others whom our money helps to support.

Recently 56 were baptized in one service in Africa. During 1932 nearly 250 received Christian baptism. Who will share in the reward of gathering these trophies for the Saviour? Those who are investing their time and talents, their life and prayers and their money.

Forever the sun is pouring its gold
On a hundred worlds that beg and borrow;
His warmth he squares on summits cold,
His wealth on the homes of want and sorrow;
To withhold his largeness of precious light
Is to bury himself in eternal night.
To give—is to live.

—E. E. McCarty, in Wesleyan Methodist.

HOME AND HEAVEN.

Home and heaven are not so far separated as we sometimes think. Nay, they are not separated at all, for they are both in the same great building. Home is the lower story, and is located here on the ground floor; heaven is above stairs, on the second and third stories, and, as one after another the family is called to come up higher, that which seemed to be such a strange place begins to wear a familiar aspect; and, when at last not one is left below, the home is transferred to heaven, and heaven is home.—From the leaflet of the First Baptist Church, Medford, Mass.

A PROGRAM FOR JUNIOR GROUPS.

This is the last of the programs on China and should be made a special meeting, to which mothers and friends are invited.

Help the children to plan their program from the materials which they have been using during the past months. Put on exhibit any curios and pictures available, together with the Friendship Scrapbook which the children have made.

The following is a possible program outline:

Call to Worship—Psalm 67.

Hymn—"In Christ There is no East or West."

Reports by the Children—

1. New Years in China.
2. Going to School in China.
3. Keeping Well in China.

Story—

"New Eyes," adapted from a "Here and There" story, by Gertrude Kellogg. (This story was reprinted in April 13th issue of THE SUN.)

Prayer—"Our dear Heavenly Father, we thank Thee for our friends in China. Help us to help them, so that they may have schools and hospitals and know about Jesus and the love of a heavenly Father. Amen."

The meeting may be concluded with Chinese games and refreshments. Weak tea and almond cakes are easily made. A recipe for the latter may be found in "Off to China." Games may be secured from the same source or from "Chinese Ginger."

May we reiterate that practically all of the materials mentioned in these programs may be secured free, or borrowed by paying postage, from the American Board, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF EASTERN VIRGINIA YOUTH FELLOWSHIP.

When the Eastern Virginia Youth Fellowship met in a week-end conference at Suffolk, Va., recently, the young people were divided into five groups for work. Each group made a report, with recommendations which may be of value to other young people throughout the Southland. I am giving just the recommendations without the introductions, etc.:

DEVOTIONAL LIFE GROUP.

We recommend that:

1. Worship should grow out of some felt need of a group.
2. There should be a definite theme.
3. We should be very careful that the atmosphere and environment is conducive to worship. Especially pay much attention to the fact of the dress of the leaders. Never let the dress of the leader distract the attention in any way.
4. Be careful about the selection of hymns.
5. What translation of Scripture is most acceptable in a worship service? This group favored the King James Version. Indeed, it is a question to which we could give some worth while thought.
6. What may a leader do to get other members interested in the true value and meaning of worship? Possibly if the group would spend a short time making a study of worship, it would be beneficial.
7. Some suggested helps in planning a worship program:
 - (a) "Hymnal for American Youth."
 - (b) "Training the Devotional Life," Weigle.
 - (c) "Lyric Religion," Augustine Smith.
 - (d) "Christian Worship for American Youth," Laura A. Athern.
 - (e) "Greatness Passing," Nilbahr (Stories).
 - (f) Stories for Special Days in the Church School," Eggleston.
 - (g) "Christian Quest Material."
 - (h) "Thy Will be Done," Lucy M. Eldredge.

SERVICE GROUP.

We recommend that:

1. Each young people's group choose a "project" around which to build their program of study and service.
2. Each young people's group devote a "block of time" to the study of world friendship each year.
3. Each young people's group become familiar with our denominational material on world friendship. For example, Young People's Bulletin, World Service material, Pilgrim Highroad, etc.

PUBLICATIONS GROUP.

We recommend that:

1. THE CHRISTIAN SUN be in every home, because it covers all phases of spiritual family needs and sources of inspiration. It covers the missionary phases; it keeps us in touch with our colleges and young people's work; it tells the needs of our Orphanage; it gives us the family altar and many other items that we can find in no other publication.
2. The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty, is a weekly magazine and it reviews the work, problems, and progress of the Congregational-Christian Church at home and abroad.
3. The Sunday School Herald, for use in the Sunday School and young people's work. It is a weekly paper consisting of adventures in the Christian quest, and news of other young people's groups of our denomination. $1.00 per year, single subscription.

4. The Missionary Herald, because it is published for the sole purpose of reflecting the activities and progress of our outposts in foreign and home fields. The readers of the Missionary Herald become acquainted with many workers of Christ and various fields of work and endeavor.

5. The Pilgrim Highroad, because it is a journal adapted to meet the needs and desires of the young people. From the standpoint of finance Sunday School, and Christian Endeavor information and inspiration, it is most highly recommended.

6. The Christian Herald, because in it the religious life is made to predominate and national and world-wide affairs are given ample space.

7. To those who are interested in Christian Endeavor, they use the Christian Endeavor World, a monthly magazine with material on the weekly topics for the young people, intermediate and the junior societies, material for Sunday School lessons, and items of interest to young people.

8. The Christian Endeavor Guide be used in societies, because it contains outlines for the worship services and information on the topics.

9. That the young people of each church sponsor or provide an exchange through literature table, rack, or library in order that material may be available for all those desiring it.

MORAL STANDARDS GROUP.

We recommend that:

1. Moral standards of church members are not as good as they should be.
2. Moral standards of the youth of today are better than they were years ago.
3. Sunday School training is very important in establishing high standards of morals in the young person's life.

LEADERSHIP TRAINING GROUP.

We recommend that:

1. Each church have at least one training class a year.
2. Each church have some form of Workers' Conference.
3. Each church represented in Youth Fellowship send at least two delegates to Elon Summer School. One way of doing this is to combine representation in order to save transportation.
4. Teachers visit other schools wherever possible.
5. In a school where there is no training course taught, we recommend the correspondence course.
6. Each member of the Youth Fellowship pledge himself to more consecrated living as a means of making Christ real in our lives.

RESOLUTIONS COMMITTEE.

We recommend that:

1. We express our appreciation to the pastor and people of Suffolk Christian Church for their splendid cooperation and hospitality.
2. We express our appreciation for the untiring efforts of the officials of the Youth Fellowship and to Misses Chase, Eldredge and Hurley who have so efficiently planned and assisted in the programs that have been so splendidly presented.

3. Realizing the great benefit that has been derived from this conference, and the inestimable value it will have to our churches of Eastern Virginia, we hold a similar conference annually.

4. A copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes of this organization, and a copy be sent to the local press.

Story telling is the oldest art in the world. Long before there was any written language, or even any picture language, story-tellers were handing down from one generation to another the history and ideals of their race.

The earliest Hebrew literature consisted of songs and ballads, that is, stories in poetic form. The Old Testament prophets and later the Jewish rabbis used the story method, but never with the perfection of form found in the stories of Jesus. He is considered by authorities in this field of literature, "the Master Story-teller."

One of the most unique characteristics of the life of Jesus was his ability to read the minds of his hearers, sense their problems, and teach them in terms of their own experiences. He used the story method very extensively. His stories are usually in the form of parables. The word "parable" occurs some fifty times in the New Testament. One of the most remarkable qualities of Jesus' teaching is the universality of the truth presented. Everyone of his stories met a specific need in the life of some individual and was told in terms of the every-day life experience of that time. But the truths they contained are as meaningful for Christian living in 1933 as they were when first spoken. E. R.

JESUS REBUKES SELF-SEEKING.

LESSON IV—APRIL 23, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor; therefore love is the fulfillment of the law."—Rom. 13:10.

LESSON TEXT: Mark 9:33-42.

The Master had a disconcerting way of finding out things. On more than one occasion he read the minds, both of his disciples, and of his enemies. He had an uncanny way of knowing what they were thinking about, what they were talking about, what they were doing.

We need to be reminded occasionally that Jesus knows what we talk about, what we think, what we plan. Nothing is hid from him. We would be more careful and more prayerful if we accepted this fact in all its implications.

It would help, too, if we took our disputes and our misunderstandings to Jesus. They would not loom half so large and important in his presence as they do when with more or less heat we dispute them among ourselves.

Who Is Greatest?

The world has given many and various answers to this question. The strong, the rich, the socially prominent, the most highly educated, the one who holds in subjection the largest number of his fellowmen, the one who can do most—these and other answers have been given in answer to the question as to who is greatest.

The Child in the Midst.

Jesus put a child in the midst of the disciples. Christianity has sought to keep the child there. Home life, school life, industrial life, social life, church life ought to be ordered in the highest interests of children.

Mistaken Zeal.

"And John answered him saying, 'Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and he followed us not, and we forbade him, because he followeth not us.'" It was a case of mistaken zeal.

him to stop. It was not the orthodox thing to do. John represents that large group of people who think their way is the only way, that their religious group is the only true religious group, who test men by the correctness of their theological beliefs rather than by the fruitage of their lives.

"A Cup of Cold Water in My Name."

Christ identifies himself with needy humanity. The way to serve him is to serve our fellowmen. And we can serve our fellowmen in even the smallest things—a cup of cold water, given in the name and for the sake of Christ.

Causing Others to Stumble.

"Whosoever shall offend—the word means to cause to stumble—one of these little ones—not necessarily children, but those who in simplicity trust in Christ—it were better for that man if he had not been born, or having been born, that he were drowned in the sea.

"If Thy Hand, Foot, Eye, Offend Thee."

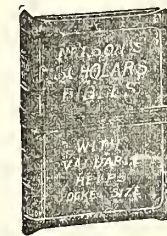

Nothing, no matter how dear, should be allowed to come between us and God. There must be no compromise with anything that causes us to sin, no matter how dear it may be.

The missionary offering is the spiritual thermometer of the church. It is solely a spiritual undertaking, since it is for spiritual relief. Our Lord instituted missions, and it is in obedience to his command that we carry on missions.

MONDAY.

A PRAYER FOR THE WEEK.

Divine Father: We would gratefully acknowledge that through thy power and goodness we exist. Thou art behind all goodness, intelligence and well-being that we enjoy. All are born of thee. Every day comes to us of thee, and in ushering us into a new day of a beautiful world, thou hast provided all that is needed for our welfare. Do thou help us to dedicate our lives to thee, and help thou us to represent thy love and thy will everywhere we go and in all that we do.

Our Father, we voluntarily bind ourselves to the exercise of our own best intelligence and energies to do this. In Christ's name.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

GRATITUDE TO GOD.

"He that eateth, eateth to the Lord, for he giveth God thanks."—Rom. 4:6.

Copying from James Eddy's book, "Thoughts on Religion and Morality":

"Our gratitude to God is proved by our disinterested courtesy, justice, and reasonable kindness to each other. Since God is manifested in others, as in ourselves and in all living creatures, we may come face to face with the great Power that animates all nature. And reason may be likened to a spark of the intelligence of God Himself."

This is active, patient gratitude, and may be expressed every day.

Prayer—Our Father, show us today and every day what is life's gifts and we pray for that radiance in life's attitudes and habits that bespeak humble gratitude to thee and rich service to our fellowmen.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

IMMORTALITY.

"Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life."—Rev. 3:16.

Quoting again from Eddy's book on "Religion and Morality":

"There exists no evidence that a sensible and thoughtful mind can accept as proof that we shall live after death with our present consciousness of existence. Well, what if there does not? This affords us a fine chance of trusting God that our birth being so great a blessing, our death coming from the same kind Power, cannot be a great misfortune! Let us each be cheerful and trustful to the end, for who knows but our Divine Father has arranged an agreeable surprise for us at the end as at the beginning of this earthly life?"

"He who gave us life gave us death! Coming from the same beneficent source, why, if we realize that life is good, should we imagine that death is bad? Trust that Power whom we designate as God! Fear no event that God ordains must happen. Fear not death. The same wise and beneficent Power that gave you birth presides equally at your death. Trust in God!"

Prayer—Our Father, as we pray, the words of Paul reverberate through our souls, "O Death where is thy sting?" Give unto us daily a life that brings peace at our latter end, and that wins the crown at that time which banishes all sting of death. In Christ's name, we ask it.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

TRITE SAYINGS ABOUT GOD.

Read Phil. 4:8.

Continuing thoughts from Eddy's book:

"The laws of nature are the laws of God."

"All scientific truth is knowledge of God and His ways of wisdom and kindness. The truths of science and religion perfectly accord."

"Let us consecrate a temple to God, to truth, to humanity."

"The intelligent and good live near to God."

"No sacrifice or worship can be acceptable to God that does not promote the happiness of mankind."

"Be grateful to and trustful in God."

Prayer—Our Father, give us a true and manly religion, a true and manly conception of our relation to thee and to our fellowman, that covers the whole field of duty to God and humanity.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

SIXTY-FOUR RULERS.

"He shall cause them to rule over many."—Read Dan. 11:36-39.

James W. Gerard has made a list of sixty-four "rulers" of the United States. The list omits President Hoover and Chief Justice Hughes, and every United States Senator. There is not an author in it, or a clergyman, or a college president, or an editor, only so-called "men of affairs."

The list includes, of course, some of the real rulers of the United States, because it includes some men of ideas and ideals as well as action; but mere money-getters, however great their executive ability, are not rulers. If Jesus Christ were now a citizen of the United States, or the Apostle Paul, they would not be in that list of rulers, though they established civilization as we know it.

It is a worthy ambition to be a ruler. A Christian who is not a ruler, as far as his ability goes, is not much of a Christian. "Let your light shine," said the Master, but not that men may praise you; rather that they may glorify your heavenly Father, who first fired and who maintains that light.

Prayer—To thee we come, O God, and ask for influence over other lives—thy influence working through us. Enable us to uplift the world, to do our part toward the coming of thy kingdom in its fulness.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

A TEN-BILLION-DOLLAR COUNTRY.

"Thou sayest, I am rich . . . and knowest not that thou art . . . poor."—Read Rev. 3:14,22.

The Fifty-second Congress (1891-1893) was the first to appropriate a billion dollars, and at the time Speaker Reed answered the objectors by saying, "This is a billion-dollar country." It is likely that the present Congress will find it necessary to appropriate ten billion dollars, and that few in the nation will find fault with those vast expenditures.

We exult in the fact that ours is the richest country in the world, and in counting up our enormous wealth we shut our eyes to our poverty. We are rich if we love God and our fellowmen. We are rich if our minds are full of noble thoughts and our hands occupied with kindly deeds. For money is not riches. We shall, as a nation, attain true riches only as we attain it as individuals. Let us look less to our bank accounts and more to the accounts of our souls with God.

Prayer—May our treasure, our Saviour, be laid up in heaven with thee. May we be rich in the things that death can not take from us, in blessed memories, in high ideals, in firm faith, in boundless love. We ask it for thy sake and in thy spirit.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

THE HAPPY MAN.

"He that keepeth the law, happy is he."—Prov. 28:18.

He owns a deal more land than I
Where streams run fresh and cool,
And yet to envy him I'd be
The dirtiest kind of fool.
Try as he may he cannot bribe
The evening stars to shine
The least bit brighter o'er his land
Than they shine over mine.

"He can't absorb more sunshine, nor Breathe more of God's fresh air;
His eyes may see more varied scenes
Yet some I've seen are fair;
He may eat costly kinds of food
That are shipped from o'er the sea
And yet the pleasure that it gives Is like mine gives to me."—Anon.

Prayer—Our Father, forbid that we shall get on the wrong track for happiness, and miss it. Thou art wisdom and understanding. Put thou thy law within our hearts and make us happy.—Amen.

THIS IS URGENT.

Anti-Saloon League, the W. C. T. U., the Allied Forces, and all the other nationally important temperance groups. Never before have the dry forces achieved such a united front.

During 1933, the voters of America are to be aroused by a series of mass meetings in every state, county, city and village in the nation. Before they vote on this issue, the voters will be reminded of the devastating and corrupting power of the commercial liquor business, and will be urged to keep this business an outlaw.

This is to be a campaign of mass awakening which, it is hoped, the people themselves will finance as the program extends. Meanwhile, a fund is required immediately for organizing the work of the National Committee, and for calling into being unified State Prohibition Emergency Committees. Every county and precinct should be organized.

These funds will be administered by a finance committee of the Prohibition Emergency Executive Committee. The members include Bishop H. Lester Smith, of Cincinnati; Colonel John E. Edgerton, chairman of the Board of the National Association of Manufacturers; Hon. John A. McSparron, secretary of the Department of Agriculture of Pennsylvania; and Louis J. Taber, master of The National Grange.

Expenses will be kept to a minimum. They will be carefully budgeted and accounted for. All speakers will be voluntary or will be provided from the staff of the constituent organizations.

Money for necessary expenses is urgently needed. Make checks payable to D. Leight Colvin, acting treasurer, 723 8th Street N. W., Washington, D. C.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

WRESTLING WITH TEMPTATION.

By REV. J. HOWARD SMITH.

(Scripture, Matt. 4:1-11.)

If one of us were given the opportunity to become the President of the United States, what kind of President would we set out to be? Or if John D. Rockefeller were to move aside and allow us to step into his position, how, then, would we interpret life's meanings?

Jesus Christ actually faced this very problem. We find Him about to enter into the role of a Messiah—one of the greatest, most sacred positions in all Judaism. To the Israelites the Messiahship was more important than the presidential office of this great nation of ours would be to us. I dare say the Messiah was held even more sacred than the Pope is held by the Roman Catholic Church. The coming of the Messiah was to be the crowning point of the people's long looked for expectation. And here was Jesus of Nazareth about to fill this all-important office. He, like us, would have to interpret His new work and decide what kind of Deliverer He was going to be.

Previously He had lived just the simple life of a typical citizen of Nazareth. He had not been outstanding in His community. His name had scarcely been known to anyone. Here was a plain, earnest, unheard-of Nazarene on the verge of filling the highest position in the land. The time had come when He was to interpret life anew. What would you do? What was He to do? Was He to seek counsel of the leading men of His day? Was He to talk the matter over with friends? Hardly. Instead of seeing friends, He went to the wooded place beyond the limits of the city alone where He might, through the feeling of God's presence, slowly and deliberately decide what His work was to be. This was to mark the spot, amid God's nature, where Jesus formulated His ideals—where He decided what methods He would allow to dominate His life's work.

I.

Spiritual for Material.

After having been in the wilderness forty days, Jesus hungered. "And the devil said unto Him, If thou art the Son of God, command these stones to become bread." How true it is that evil tempts us at our weakest points! What was the meaning of this? He was hungry—no one was there; surely He would try turning the stones into bread just once to see if He could! Must He use His spiritual power for the satisfaction of the physical? No! Suddenly the still small voice of God spoke: "Ye cannot serve both God and Mammon." "It is not my will that you use spiritual power in such a way." His almost instinctive decision was supported by the words which flashed into His mind: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." To use spiritual power for material ends would have been detrimental to His cause: it would not be doing the work He was sent to do. Are there any of us who are willing to sacrifice spiritual values for material gains?

It was at the end of the first temptation that Jesus decided what kind of Messiah He was going to set out to be, and, with determination and strength, we hear the words echo: "I came to minister, and not to be ministered unto." This spiritual power was to be used to help create spiritual values for others, and not for physical and material ends. Usefulness was to be His motto, and He was to interpret life in terms of giving, rather than in getting.

How many of us believe life consists in getting only? On every hand we see outstanding examples of people whose life philosophy is to get. Their lives are wholly wrapped up in caring for self. The newspapers are presenting to us daily cases of men who have been trusted in public office. This depression is bringing out some of the worst scandals America has ever known. These men who have been trusted to public office have been so concerned in their own selves that the welfare of the state and nation has been overlooked. God forbid that this great commonwealth should disintegrate because of scandals that are revealed to us day by day. Jesus decided that He had come to give life, not to get all He could out of it.

II.

False Faith—Sensationalism.

The evil spirit, having failed, "set him on the pinnacle of the Temple, and saith unto him, if thou art the Son of God, cast thyself down." Just why should Jesus ever think of doing that? There were a host of Jews who believed that God would send the Deliverer in a supernatural way. If, in some ways, Jesus had been able to appear to them in some sensational way, they might have acclaimed Him as the Messiah. If Jesus had come in this way, that whole group of Jews would have announced Him as King immediately. With so large a following, His purpose might have been accomplished much sooner.

And, too, the feast was going on. Multitudes from every district were there. There had gathered for the feast men and women and boys and girls from every province. Those people could go back to their own little provinces, and announce the great news that the "One sent from God" had come. His name might have been on every tongue.

Why should anyone let this chance go by? In the first place, Jesus believed that God never intended that the Deliverer should come in such a way. Here was a temptation to be popular, sensational—a human fly, if you please. But we must take Jesus for what He is, and not by miraculous signs. There was no room for cheap sensationalism in Christ's methods, and there should be none in our methods.

The "short cut" idea is involved in the second temptation. If Christ had wanted to set himself up as the King of the Jews, there would have been no better way. He might have even come to terms later with the Pharisees, or He might have been luke-warm in many of His remarks. But Christ refused in His ministry to resort to "short cuts" in order to gain certain goals.

Often we are anxious to take "short cuts" in life. In a great deal of our economic life we try quick methods. We are a generation of people who want results, and want them quick. Patience is seldom regarded, but patience in any matter is never harmful. There are those who try "short cuts" in order to become wealthy. About ten years ago there was filmed a picture entitled "The Ten Commandments." It was a story of a young man who became a contractor. In his desire to become wealthy—he broke every single one of the Ten Commandments. In order to make an unfair profit he used cheaper materials in a building than the specifications called for. He got by with it. But one day there came a time when the building failed to stand as it should, and this young contractor saw this building crumble to the earth, taking with it the lives of innocent men and women. Thus he became a murderer. This man employed "short cuts" and finally his life ended in a most miserable fashion.

There are people who are willing to invest their life's savings in Wall Street, and many times they lose. The loss of one's dollars often leads to suicide. If Christ had adopted any such methods, the cross might have been eliminated. But without a cross there would have been no Christ.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The good women always come to our rescue when we are in need. For sixteen years it has been our custom and joy to make Easter dresses and send to the Christian Orphanage, so every girl in the institution can have a new dress to wear to Sunday School and church on that occasion. Also little suits for the little boys. This year has been no exception to this long custom and beautiful dresses have come to us from the Ladies' Aid Societies, Woman's Missionary Societies and individuals from North Carolina, Virginia, Georgia, Alabama, Indiana, Illinois and many other places. God bless the good women.

Compromise—Force in Place of Love?

Last of all, "the devil taketh him unto an exceeding high mountain, and showed him all the kingdoms of the world—and said unto him, all these will I give thee if thou wilt fall down and worship me." The Jews expected the Messiah to establish an earthly kingdom. Jesus might have gathered unto himself an army, and led a revolt against the Roman Government. These tax-burdened Jews would have backed Jesus from the beginning to the end. Jesus might have used His power in forcing Rome to fall down and worship God. With might perhaps He could have conquered the known world, and showed to them the true God.

Of all the temptations, this one for power must have had the strongest appeal. Jesus here had the chance to use material power in order to gain spiritual ends. This temptation is just the reverse of the first temptation. Evil about faces and offers material power for spiritual ends. This all looked very beautiful, but there were certain disadvantages to it.

The devil had asked the Son of God to use the forces of evil so that He might accomplish God's purposes in sending Him. If Christ had done this, it would have meant that He was willing to compromise with the forces of evil. At no time did Jesus compromise for the advantage of evil.

A second disadvantage was that Jesus could not be a true representative of Jehovah and use force in the place of love. "God is love." The demand that people fall down and worship God was contrary to the principles of love. This kingdom which Christ was to build was not by force. It was to be built on love and to be eternal. Hundreds of years later when Napoleon is said to have uttered the words to this effect: "Caesar, Charlmagne, and I have built kingdoms on force, and they have crumbled. Jesus of Nazareth has built a kingdom on love and it will last forever."

We believe that we have something of value in our civilization which other nations should have. How can we ever give them the benefit of our achievements if we use force as the instrument? The only way we can help others is through love. If Jesus had accepted the worldly power, He would have sacrificed the privilege of giving life and giving it more abundantly.

The will of God certainly could never have been done had Jesus used any other means than love. And so it is with our life. We can only do the will of God if the motive of our service is love.

Conclusion.

Probably none of us will ever find ourselves on the verge of entering the highest position in the land. We shall never face the question as Jesus had to. But each of us must decide what we are going to set out to be and do in our own little world. There are times when each of us must face critical periods which may involve suffering, honesty, love. We, too, will be tempted, just as Jesus was, to use spiritual means to gain material ends, to use "short cuts" in our methods, and to accept power in the place of love.

God grant that we may always have faith sufficient to resist all such temptations.

The new unit of the United States Department of Agriculture building in Washington, has in the front, near the top, and carved in large letters, quotations from three men: St. Paul, Abraham Lincoln, and George Washington. The inscriptions are: "The husband that laboreth must first be partaker of the fruits." "No other human occupation opens so wide a field for profitable and agreeable combination of labor with cultivated thought as agriculture." "With reference to either individual or national welfare agriculture is of primary importance."—Timothy Thomas.

OBITUARIES

STEWART.

Rosemont Christian Church has suffered a great loss in the death of Luther Harrison Stewart, who went to his heavenly home early on the morning of March 22, 1933. He was one of our most faithful members, and his work was not only with the adult department of the church, but he was a favorite among the young people of the church as well.

He was a member of the official board, the finance committee, the Men's Missionary, the Men's Bible Class, the Christian Endeavor Society, the Young People's Missionary Society, and in all these he took a most active part. He will be greatly missed in all of them.

The funeral services were conducted from Rosemont Church on the afternoon of March 24, 1933, in the presence of a very large company of his friends and relatives, by his pastor, assisted by the Revs. O. D. Poythress and P. Holder Brown, and interment was in the Berea Cemetery.

The sympathy of the entire church and community goes out to the bereaved family, Mrs. Emily Stewart and her two little girls, and to all his many other relatives. May the Lord graciously bless and comfort them in the days that are to come.

J. F. MORGAN.

WILLIAMS.

Geo. W. Williams, of Bennett, N. C., died March 7, 1933, being 81 years, 9 months and 27 days of age. He is survived by five children: J. S., of Liberty, N. C., W. M., of High Point, N. C., Mrs. Nepsie Hardin, Flossie and Georgia Williams, all of Bennett, N. C.

He is survived also by his second wife and four step-children.

He was a member of the Mt. Zion M. E. Church, and a good man.

He was buried at Pleasant Grove, where several of the family belonged to the church, and where he often attended.

KOUNTZ.

George W. Kountz was born September, 1861, and died March 8, 1933, at the age of 71 years and 6 months. It was my pleasure during our revival at Palmyra last fall, to receive Bro. Kountz into the church there. He was a quiet, harmless man, well liked by all.

He is survived by his wife. Funeral services were held at Palmyra, March 10, 1933.

How Many Postage Stamps Do You Use.—

It is estimated that Uncle Sam prints enough postage stamps each year to cover, if placed edge to edge, a twenty-two hundred acre farm, or if placed end to end they would reach ten times or more around the earth at its equator. And to make the adhesive which sticks these small particles of paper to our letters or packages, enough tapioca starch is used to give each person in Virginia, North and South Carolina a heaping helping of this delicious dessert.

The Blind and the Bible.—

The Braille Bible is now available in three languages—English or American, German and Japanese. The English and American are different in that the English uses 189 contractions while the American uses only 44. There is now an effort on foot to use only the English Braille in these two countries, due to the fact that the increased number of contractions not only makes the book less bulky and less costly, but also makes possible more rapid reading by those with skilled finger-tips. Parts of the Bible are also published in Braille in Portuguese. In Siam a method of "embossing" has been developed, resulting in the publication of the Gospel of Mark, but Siamese is such an extended language that this one Gospel appears in six volumes.

Library Conference Held at Chapel Hill, N. C.—

On April 7th and 8th, there was held at the University of North Carolina a special Library Conference, called by the American Library Association and the Southeastern Library Association. The invitation was issued by President Graham of the University, and 83 official representatives of religious, educational, cultural and social welfare agencies, responded. Nine Southern States were represented, and among those present were college and university presidents, deans, professors from various interested departments, heads of State educational departments, church boards, and other agencies. The place of the library in the Southern scene, the meaning of library service and the State and local agencies concerned with giving this service, were discussed. Means of bringing about the establishment of these agencies were also considered. Resolutions were adopted looking toward the better utilization of facilities now in hand and the increasing of these facilities until an adequate and well rounded library program should be the result.

Silver As Money.—

Now that the United States has gone off the gold standard, there is some talk of the re-monetization of silver, possibly in the ratio of 16 to 1. It may be interesting to note that silver has for many centuries been one of the chief bases of currency, and that the gold standard as such is of comparatively modern origin. When Abraham wished to purchase a grave for his wife, 4,000 years ago, there was recorded one of the first payments in silver of which we have definite knowledge. The earliest use of silver was more than likely in ingot form, but the Lydians used coins containing "an alloy of gold and silver," more than 700 years before the beginning of the Christian era. Silver coins were minted in Britain as early as 150 B. C., and laws were passed against the mutilation of coins as early as in the reign of Henry I. It is probable that copper was the dominant money metal of ancient times, but two centuries before Caesar's time the Romans flooded the world with this metal, till it "took a donkey load to buy food for a feast day." A scarcer metal became necessary as the basis for exchange and the leaders of finance turned to silver. Thus began silver's career in the modern money market of the world.

Endeavorers to Meet in Milwaukee.—

Milwaukee Wisconsin, said to be one of America's most beautiful and progressive cities, is to be host to the Thirty-fourth International Convention of Christian Endeavorers this year. The time for which the meeting is scheduled is July 8th to 12th. Among convention features will be a series of educational conferences, dealing not only with Christian attitudes toward social issues; but with practical methods of doing Christian work. Other items will include devotional meetings, sightseeing and recreational trips, fellowship banquets, a parade, meetings of various State groups, and a daily radio conference. Leaders in religion, education and statecraft, will speak at the principal meetings, including Mrs. Francis E. Clark; Dr. Daniel A. Poling, president of the World's Christian Endeavor Union; Col. Raymond Robbins; Dr. A. W. Beaven, president of the Federal Council of Churches; Dr. James Kelly of Scotland, general secretary of the World's Sunday School Association; Dr. Harry Thomas Stock, student secretary from the Congregational-Christian group, and many others. The delegation is unlimited, any number may attend from a church. Incidentally, Milwaukee is only a short distance from Chicago, where the "Century of Progress" International Exposition will then be in progress, and many attending the Endeavor Convention may take this opportunity to visit the Exposition as well.

Embargo on Gold Starts Speculation.—

It took only 20 minutes for the dollar to drop 11 per cent in terms of European gold currency, following President Roosevelt's embargo on gold shipments. The English pound sterling rose to $3.85, the highest since November 1, 1931. The French franc rose 47 points, and the Dutch guilder advanced until it was 4.8 cents above par. Measured in terms of purchasing power, the rise of European currencies, caused the dollar to fall to 88.54 per cent of its former value. These facts caused an immediate boosting of both prices and trading on the New York Stock Exchange. Trading in futures of rubber, cotton, copper, coffee and wheat also reached new proportions. So frantic had been the day in the Chicago wheat pit that the Exchange immediately took under consideration increasing the size of the trading pit. In New Orleans, cotton jumped as much as $2.50 a bale. In commenting upon the action taken by the President, Business Week tells us: "Wisely, President Roosevelt has served notice on the world that the dollar will be allowed to exchange for other currencies at whatever level the flow of trade and investment may determine. With one decisive gesture, he throws out of the window all the elaborate hocus-pocus of 'defending the dollar.' He defies an ancient superstition and takes his stand with the advocates of managed money. . . . The whole complexion of the world changes startlingly when the dollar becomes competitive with sterling."

Yoking Denominations.—

Circuit-riding is an ancient trade, and there is nothing new about having one minister serve a number of churches, but it is significant that an increasing number of ministers are working in two or more denominations at the same time. Such is the situation with J. E. Sears. The most conspicuous characteristic of his three churches is that they are all in Wyoming. At the east end of what he calls his "trap line" is the Methodist Church at Manville. He writes: "My Methodist superintendent is as kindly and helpful as our own beneficent Walker. I am more than pleased with the hook-up, because I hope to prove that give and take are a possible way out where weak fields of different denominations adjoin each other. I am not looking for organic union, but for spiritual harmony and easy cooperation in pastoral care." His second point is Keeline, where the remnants of a Christian Church have injected new life into a moribund Congregational group. Mr. Sears describes it as "the precious jewel in this toad's brew." His third responsibility is our church at Glendo, of which he writes: "The people have never been cared for by a resident pastor (until his arrival), and are largely without precedents. The village folk are slow to accept responsibility, and one would feel hopeless of a real foothold if it were not for those who come from several miles out in the country." He said: "I must record the passing of Henry the Third, which served home missions faithfully for seven years. Peace to his rattles! I now have a Chevy—not the latest model, but one much later than its driver, who is trying to get up-to-date. This acquisition I am calling 'Tommy,' for, in comparison with Henry, it purrs."—Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Rev. J. W. Patton, Elon College, has recently suffered a relapse, and has for some days been confined to his bed and unable to meet his appointments. He is much improved at this time.

Rev. G. D. Hunt, Lanett, Ala., is making the first Sunday in May missionary day in the Lanett Christian Church. "Interest in missions is increasing and the church here is doing good work now along all lines; also good prayer-meetings, good attendance at services, and we are planning for a teacher training class to begin soon." Nothing can create power and life in any church like missionary preaching, a missionary program and a missionary objective.

Dr. J. Edward Kirby, pastor, advises that the worship period of the United Church, Raleigh, may be heard every Sunday from 11 A. M. to 12:15 P. M., through the courtesy of radio station WPTF. These services over the radio will continue until July 1st. In connection with the worship period, Dr. Kirby will announce special religious items, the date and meeting of the State Conference at Elon College, May 2nd and 3rd, being among the items to be broadcast next Sunday.

Many Christian Churches received additions on Easter Sunday by letter and on confession of faith. It was a glorious Easter in those churches that witnessed new recruits to membership and an out-pouring of self-denial in the Easter offering for missions that the Gospel might be given to others. Why not the pastors thus rejoicing send THE CHRISTIAN SUN a card telling of the number received, of the offerings made for missions, and of the program of glory of the day? Such reports encourage others and make the best of good reading for the church paper.

Let the faint-hearted and the weary take hope in the fact that though the way is difficult and one solely through self-denial, yet the spiritual work, the spiritual task of building churches and supporting the Gospel, goes on. The North Carolina Christian Advocate relates this significant event: "A Methodist bishop was met at the docks in New York by newspaper reporters who asked him to give the outstanding impression of his trip around the world. 'The outstanding fact,' declared the bishop, is, 'I belted the globe but I did not see one new heathen temple, but I saw Christian churches, schools and hospitals rising everywhere.'"

The International Christian Endeavor Convention is to meet in its 34th annual session at Milwaukee, Wis., July 8-13, 1933. One reason for choosing Milwaukee as the meeting place of the convention this year is that it makes it convenient for those attending the convention to attend also the International Exposition which is to be opened at the time in Chicago. Among the speakers at the principal mass meetings are: Mrs. Francis E. Clark, widow of the beloved founder of C. E.; Dr. Daniel A. Poling, president of the World's Christian Endeavor Union; Col. Raymond Robins; Gov. John G. Winant, of New Hampshire; Dr. A. W. Beaven, president of the Federal Council of Churches. The meeting is likely to attract many thousands of Christian Endeavor workers throughout the world.

It was the privilege of THE SUN's editor to be the preacher at the 11 o'clock service with our Burlington Church on Easter Sunday. Despite the heavy rains and inclement weather, a goodly congregation gathered, and it was a joy, as it always is, to worship with this congregation. Dr. G. O. Lankford, the beloved pastor, while slowly improving, is yet prevented by illness from preaching and is compelled to forego all public and pastoral service.

Next Christmas, when we again read one of the best Christmas stories in our literature—"Story of the Other Wise Man"—our hearts will be touched with a pang of sorrow and regret that the pen that wrote that story is now still, and the voice that originally sang it will be heard no more on earth. Its beloved author, Dr. Henry Van Dyke, a man like Zaccheus, very small of stature, but most noble in his desire, while in the flesh, to see and tell the world of the best that passed in his day, passed away at the age of eighty years from his work and his home at Princeton University. He wrote many books of marvelous merit and might, and was a preacher of sublime eloquence and power. As professor of English at Princeton University, as well as author of many patriotic, devotional and nature poems, he wielded a wide influence and will be greatly missed. Here are four lines of his that carry tremendous meaning:

"Who seeks for heaven alone to save his soul
May keep the path, but will not reach the goal;
While he who walks in love may wander far,
But God will bring him where the blessed are."

The Chattanooga, Tenn., News, of Saturday, April 15th, carries a two column Easter meditation entitled: "The World Comes Alive," by Rev. Alfred W. Hurst, formerly pastor of Elon College Church, now pastor of Pilgrim Congregational Church. Among the strikingly potential and sublime thoughts presented in the meditation are the following sentences: "Nature is God's oldest book, his first word to mankind spoken. In that book, whose author publishes a new edition each and every spring, is God's own word that life is eternal and that death is swallowed up in victory. Our spirits crave eternity's ampler day in which to realize their hidden powers and there are bases in reality upon which our faith gains substantial footing. Our belief in immortality is not ethereal. It is no artificial flower out of the paper of our wishes and tied onto the bush of life to give us momentary compensation for earth's irretrievable and cruel losses. Our faith is rooted deeply in Mother Earth. It draws its sustenance from the soil. Its flower unfolds from within. Our confidence that 'the gift of God is eternal life' has cosmic support."

No, the following is not a comment from a modern writer on conditions in the United States. It is from a declaration of the Hon. Sidney Smith, writing of the law and conditions in England in 1830—133 years ago: "The new beer bill has begun its operation. Everybody is drunk. Those that are not singing are sprawling. The sovereign people are in a beastly state." Let us hope that human nature has changed in 133 years and that our new beer bill will not prove as disastrous as that of England. We are coming to prosperity through beer, though England and Canada and Germany and the others who have had the beer bill all the while do not seem to be claiming any help, but very much hurt from that source. Of course, the people of America will not heed these ancient voices now, but they are still sounding out of the depths of suffering of stricken Germany, whose mighty men gave utterance to them nearly a century ago: "We can prove with mathematical certainty that as much flour as can lie on the point of a table knife is more nutritious than eight quarts of the best Bavarian beer."—Baron Liebig, the great German chemist. "The prevalent use of beer is deplorable. Beer drinking makes men stupid, lazy and incapable. It is the cause of all the radical politics that men talk over it."—Chancellor Bismarck. "Beer is a far more dangerous enemy to Germany than all the armies of France."—Von Moltke. Possibly if these authorities and statesmen had been heeded, Germany would not be in her present plight and the great World War might have been prevented.

NEWS FROM GEORGIA AND CAROLINAS.

LaGrange rejoices that the Congregational Church Building Society has handed their treasurer a check in the amount of $5,000 received and announced March 26th. The new organ of the church The United Voice, carries words of warm praise for the work of the pastor, Rev. J. H. Dollar, and he in turn speaks heartily in thanksgiving to those who aided him right there in LaGrange to meet the conditions required by the Building Society before such loans could be made. And while this Society has nothing to say in the pages of The United Voice, yet it rejoices in the consciousness of having helped a worthy project in its time of need. It has aided many such. In fact, that is its great mission. There are thousands of churches living today which are thanking God for the C. C. B. S. That LaGrange United Church is added to the list is cause for donors to the Society to be grateful for the privilege of sharing with others in the ministry of brotherliness.

Mr. Dollar calls attention to the fact that the hardest bridge to cross for the church is the lifting of the last $2,000.00 members of the church owe to the Daniel Lumber Co. He speaks in most emphatic terms of this greater duty and announces that "Plans for the drive will be made in the May issue of The United Voice." Congratulations are offered for past achievement and high hopes for future success are confidently indulged. May all the church be blest in their faithful endeavors to establish the spirit of Jesus throughout their beautiful city through the ministry of "United Church."

Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., pastor of Elon College Community Church, has just issued a hearty invitation to all Christian and Congregational pastors and churches to be present at the meeting of the conferences as guests of his church, May 2nd and 3rd. The entertainment will be: breakfast and lodging free, a small charge to defray expenses for lunch and supper or dinner at night. This is a fine spirit of welcome and all pastors should avail themselves of the opportunity to have their churches represented. It is bound to be a meeting of far-reaching results and no pastor can afford not to be there. Be sure to send names to Dr. L. E. Smith, Elon College.

One change in the program is that of Rev. James P. McNaughton, until recently of Turkey, who will take the place of Dr. Fred Field Goodsell, who is held in Boston by an important meeting of the Prudential Committee of the American Board. But Dr. McNaughton is a wonderfully fine substitute, and all will be delighted and informed by his presence and messages.

Rev. Elmer Willis Serl, that eloquent preacher from Southern Pines, who has thrilled thousands with his sermons and lectures for twenty years, will preach his sermon Tuesday night. Dr. Minton, associate secretary of Foreign Missions, a "Little Giant" in wisdom and faith and inspiration, is to speak twice. Dr. C. H. Rowland, the genial pastor, true friend and a man full of love for both God and man, is president of the larger conference and will preside over the session or sessions which will consider plans for perfecting the organization of the Southern Convention of Congregational-Christian Churches.

Mrs. Rowland will preside over the hour the women have charge. Everybody knows what that means. And let no one miss the last session Wednesday night, when the most beloved men among us, Dr. J. O. Atkinson and D. W. Knighton Bloom, veterans of the cross which never for a moment has faltered in their hands during the decades of their ministry to the Carolina churches, will share in the service. Perhaps never again can the churches of the Carolinas meet in such a service as this one will surely be. Both human and divine factors are working together in the shaping of our destiny. Stanley Harrell, president of the Southern Christian Convention, will speak last.

No minister and no church, if they know, can possibly fail to be present from the beginning. Let all gird themselves for the greatest uplift in our experience, on May 2nd and 3rd, at Old Elon, which we love so well.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

SUNDAY.

The world is yet to learn that God's laws are good laws, good intellectually, socially, economically, as well as religiously.

Mr. Philip Curtiss, writing in The Atlantic for May, says that when politicians, bankers and economists finally throw up their hands in acknowledgment of defeat and ask him to take charge of affairs, one of the first things in his administration will be "that of reviving the old-fashioned Sunday." This, he declares, he will do, "not primarily as a moral or religious move, but because, with the passage of time, he has come increasingly to believe that the old-fashioned Sunday is the best device ever evolved for restoring poise and judgment to a fidgety world." Sooner or later, Mr. Curtiss continues, the world may be brought to realize that the old-fashioned Sunday was not a survival of Calvinism, nor was it a tribal rite of ancient Hebrews, but was a social check-valve developed by centuries of human experience, and that a nervous, high-strung society which abolished it by calling it puritanical and a hindrance to man's freedom, will one day, if it has not already done so, deplore its loss and seek to recover it. "The old-fashioned Sunday," argues Mr. Curtiss, "was one of nature's regulators, checking the tempo of life and readjusting it every seven days. It did for a very large part of the civilized world exactly what every physician and modern psychologist would be eager to do if he could. It forced whole communities of men, women and children to come, once a week, to a complete halt and, for twenty-four hours, alter entirely their physical, mental and social habits."

Mr. Curtiss further contends that he is in no sense making "a confessional," and his point of view is not primarily religious, but he thinks that in all commonsense and good, sound judgment, real enjoyment and sane conduct, the old-fashioned Sunday is in every sense to be preferred to the present-day week-end observance and conduct. He declares that "out of the untidy welter of Sunday papers and cigarette smoke that constitutes the usual present-day Sabbath, out of the chatter of golf scores and the smell of locker rooms, the hurried, tardy engagements, the rushed, undigested meals, and the long, nervous driving on crowded highways, that make up a modern week-end," he finds himself "with greater and greater longing, looking back to the peace and dignity of the old-fashioned Sunday," a peace and dignity, a change and an experience which young and old, servant and master, children and parents actually enjoyed far more than the present generation enjoys our mutilated and devastated Sunday.

Back in those days the word "week-end" was unknown, and nothing indicates better than the use of this term, the annihilation of the old-time Sabbath, since a week-end, now substituted for Sunday, really means two and one-half days of Saturday. Mr. Curtiss contrasts the Sabbath of the 1890's and the way children and grown-ups spent those days, to their delight and edification, with the present week-ends with their excitement, their nervous strain and their social, intellectual and moral distractions. All the days are too much alike now, and the world suffers in consequence; whereas, the old-fashioned Sunday gave every day a distinction, and by degrees led up to the grand climax of Sunday, a sort of glory and perfection of all the days which brought a change to the body, mind and soul.

While Mr. Curtiss is not primarily writing from a religious point of view, nor is he in any sense trying to "preach," the clarity and logic of his position are such as to convince one that that which is safe, sound, and sacred, religiously, is also safe and sound economically, socially and intellectually. After all, religion is the foundation upon which society can build with security and, building on that foundation, man comes to his highest achievement as well as his great enjoyment and delight, physically, mentally and spiritually. We agree with Mr. Curtiss that one of our greatest needs today is to recover Sunday.

MOVING ALONG.

We need not get excited. No occasion for alarm. Every time is epoch-making, and every day has its problem. Dr. E. Stanley Jones told us at Winston-Salem a few evenings ago, that as Adam and Eve went out of the Garden of Eden, Adam remarked to Eve: "We are in an age of transition." So an era and an age of transition is no new thing. The world has been on the move and society has been searching adjustments under new conditions ever since the day of Adam and Eve.

However, there are foundations, sure and steadfast, on which we may move with security and a city that hath foundations toward which we may steadily go. We do not have to sing, "I am a Pilgrim;" we live it.

We are witnessing new upheavals, the tearing down of standards and the destruction of guideposts and milestones, for we, like Adam, are living in an age of transition. And the voice of God still walks in the Garden, in the cool of the evening, calling to man to know where he is when the day is nearly done. In these last days, as well as in the first, God hath spoken to us, and is speaking, for He is in every age and has a constant and new revelation to give to man, that man may not walk aimlessly and that the age in its transition may not go astray or lose its soul in the darkness and doubt of the way. We know that the Garden of Eden story is true, because every incident and event of it are portrayed and reflected in our modern life and daily experience.

THE NAME NOT ON RECORD.

This sentence caught and riveted our attention: "When men and women work on without praise or recognition of men, then they are close to the heart of the eternal God." By that standard, there are many who are close to the heart of God. They are the very salt of the earth. Their names, though not written on the front page, or any other page, of the newspaper, are written "on high," and their reward is not only assured above, but received and enjoyed here below. Virtue carries its own reward, and unselfish devotion carries its own crown.

The story is told of a celebrated minister who was traveling in Germany in the cold of winter and was overtaken by a severe snow-storm and lay down to die. A passing wagoner discovered and rescued him and took him to the next village to warmth and safety. As the wagoner departed, the minister said: "Tell me your name, that I may at least have you in grateful remembrance before God." The reply was, "I see that you are a minister of the Gospel. Please tell me the name of the Good Samaritan." The minister replied, "I cannot do that for it is not put on record." His modest rescuer replied: "Until you can tell me his name, please permit me to withhold mine." That humble man of God was not working for any reward that man could give. He was not anxious that his name be carried far and near, but that it be written securely, kept by Him whose eye seeth and whose mind knoweth all things. Far better is it to have one's name written on high than printed on the front page.

WE HAD TO PAY!

There is a mighty hue and cry for the relief of tax burdens. No wonder! Our tax burdens are heavy and exceedingly grievous to be borne. Many have not the wherewith to meet these taxes, and they are losing their homes and their possessions. The world staggers beneath a burden of taxation, such as it never had to carry before.

There is a reason. The world witnessed, a little while ago, a war that was wider in its scope, and involved more nations, than history had ever witnessed before. For carrying on that war, millions were poured out in lavish abundance, and with a prodigality difficult now to understand. So, let us bear in mind that pay-day had to come, and it has arrived. Seventy-five cents out of every dollar of taxes paid to government go for war debt, or in preparation for future wars. Wars drain present and future resources.

And we are now drawing upon future resources. Our government is pouring out millions on non-productive industries, making warfare on unemployment and relief work. Such warfare may seem necessary and benevolent, but pay-day has to come. A government, like an individual, can only pay out of what it gets and its source of getting is taxation. We welcome the benevolent hand that extends help; but to depend upon that hand for continuous sustenance is deadly in its effects on character and personality, besides entailing a strain on the beneficiary, however resourceful he may be. The present doling out of millions must be paid back, and self-reliance and personal initiative must some day take the place of the feeling of dependence and reliance upon others. This is essential to the development of personal character as well as to the safety and security of government.

ARE OUR MEN ABDICATING?

(The question and the comment herewith submitted are not ours, but those of a front page writer in the Methodist Protestant Herald, and refers, of course, directly to the men of the Methodist Protestant Churches. While SUN readers may think the case presented a little extreme as applied to our own situation, yet in the various missionary rallies recently held, with twelve to fifteen hundred of our good women present, the question was often asked: "How can we interest the men in missions, the one great task of the church?" That these women and other SUN readers may see that our problem is the problem of sister churches, the article from the Herald is printed in full and verbatim.—EDITOR.)

"To one who sits on the sideline and looks on at the game being played by our church, it is apparent that about all the men of the church are doing is wearing themselves into frazzles jumping up and down and shouting to the women to 'get into the game and win it.' This is no joke. It is a fact that is painful and humiliating. At every meeting the writer has attended for a year or more, communications were read from our men who inhabit high and lofty places pleading with the women to 'get behind the program of the church!'

"My soul! Where, may I ask, have our women been all these years, if not behind, and in, and for, and under the program of the denomination? In my opinion, which is very humbly given, the women of the church, with few exceptions, are the only ones who have really been 'behind' the whole program of the church. Their organization is the only one we have that is doing things. It furnishes about ninety per cent of all the money contributed to the general interests of the church, and fully ninety per cent of interest in the work of the Kingdom of God on earth.

"What are the men doing? Oh, they are busy scrambling to get behind the 'skirts of the women.' They are doing more than this. They are moaning and groaning and howling 'Hard times! We can't see how the church can carry on, money is so scarce!' Our men have abdicated. That is what they have done, and until they are converted, soul and body and pocket-book, the church will continue to go on at a poor dying rate.

"The poor women, God bless every one of them, and may their kind never grow less, have to resort to oyster stews, Brunswick stews, bazaars, and what-not in order to get money with which to keep the church candle burning. Men, God never intended His church to be run with money obtained from soup kitchens, and we ought to be ashamed of ourselves for allowing it to be done. Isn't it high time that we humble ourselves and pray the prayer of J. G. Holland:

"God give us men! A time like this demands Strong minds, great hearts, true faith, and ready hands." X.

A quarrel is developing between the Danish Church and the army over the ringing of church bells as a signal for the mobilization of the army. All the Lutheran Bishops have endorsed a statement, issued by 113 members of the clergy, banning the use of the bells for this purpose. Some high army officers are now threatening a military boycott of the State Church.—Exchange.

POWER OF FAITH.

By ELMER S. DAVIDSON.

The Master said, "Verily I say unto you; if ye have faith, ye shall say unto this mountain, remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you." How great then is the power of faith! It is faith that makes the man. He who has lost his power of faith, his faculty of belief, is dead.

All men possess faith; perhaps not religious faith, but natural faith, that which arises within us spontaneously. It does not depend for its origin on our volition. It does not depend on our mere arbitrary choice, whether we shall believe in our personal identity or not; whether we shall believe in the existence of an outward, a natural world, or not. In these cases, and others like them, it is conceded that we cannot help believing. The state of mind, therefore, which we designate as faith or belief, using the term in the natural and not the religious sense, exists in us by our very nature.

We obtain a knowledge of belief by introspection. We will know what it is, but we are not able to define it. A definition of belief or faith, to be easily understood, cannot be given independent of inward experience. But we all have an inward experience of belief. We may therefore define faith as belief in action. The man in business has to enter into arrangements and contracts implying discharge of duties and the fulfillment of promises on the part of others. The business man knows what it is to believe. The farmer purchases seeds, he believes they will grow. He plants them, thus his belief goes into action. The farmer exercises faith.

A man is according to his faith. The measure of his strength will be found in the measure of his faith. Some assert that strength, or energy of character, cannot well be explained without reference to the will. The common idea of an energetic man is, that he is a person of strong will. It is also true that the most energetic men are those possessing the strongest faith, and that in God. To will to do a thing requires a belief in the possibility of doing it. It is not possible for us to put forth a volition, a determination, to do a thing, at the same time believing the same impossible. A strong faith makes a strong will. A weak faith likewise, a weak will. Even among men who have not experienced the grace and the power of religion, the strong man, as compared with other men, who possesses naturally the same traits of mind, is the man of strong faith. But the man with only natural faith has not and never can have the strength of the one possessing both natural and religious faith. Columbus believed the world was round, and that he could reach India by sailing west. He put his belief into action by setting out and accomplishing his belief. Fulton conceived the idea of propelling a boat by steam. It was termed "Fulton's Folly," yet he believed in it and was able to demonstrate it. Faith is the basis or source of all our achievements in all the arts and sciences, and in civilization. The Parthenon and Pyramids of Egypt would not have been built without faith. Hannibal could not have passed the Alps; Cortes could not have conquered Mexico without faith. The man who sits in his easy chair, believing in nothing and laughing at everything, could have done none of these things. No oceans are crossed by him; no new civilization is promoted at the expense of his toil and blood, in mighty triumph.

It would be difficult to point out an enterprise which has been brought to a favorable issue without some degree of confidence; without faith in the rectitude of principles, faith in personal resources, faith in the practicability of the object.

Faith enables one to lay his plans, to surmount opposition, to triumph over difficulties.

Natural faith then is faith arising spontaneously. Religious faith is the same state of mind. It differs from natural faith in that it is directed to religious objects. It is called into exercise on appropriate religious occasions; and is sustained by religious influences.

The life of the child may be regarded as a life of faith, not religious faith, but natural faith. It is interesting to note what entire confidence children place in their parents, for food, raiment and shelter; a confidence, which, in excluding doubt, banishes anxiety. Hence it is that they live in such simplicity and quietness of spirit; and are "careful for nothing." When the faith of the child is transferred from the earthly parent to God it becomes religious faith. He gives food and raiment, joy and sorrow, health and life to divine keeping. Whoever has truly resigned or abandoned himself to God in the exercise of faith will remain calm, peaceful and thankful. Faith identifies everything with God's superintendence, and makes everything except sin an expression of his will.

What kept Job from cursing God and falling under his affliction and caused him to say, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him." His faith in God. Wherefore did Noah build the ark when there was dry land? Noah believed in God and showed it by his action. He and his household were saved because he had faith in God. Why did Abraham so willingly offer up his son, the son of promise, through whom the world was to be blessed? He doubted not that God would keep his promise. He had great faith in God. Is anything too hard for the Lord? With God all things are possible. Nothing is impossible with faith in God.

When nations have faith, such as the Gospel of God teaches, then wars will cease. "Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord." The nation that has so much faith in God as to proclaim itself governed by the principles of justice, of forbearance, forgiveness, and good will, the nation that shall cease to place its chief confidence in battlement and armies, will find itself stronger in the panoply of peace than other nations are in the munitions of war. It will be surrounded by a wall, not made of iron or brass, but stronger than either, which swords cannot pierce and balls cannot batter down; the mighty rampart of a world's admiration and affection. More than that, it will be surrounded by the invisible, protecting arm, which always follows in the line of God's promises. "Therefore, if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink," "Bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you; that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven." Almighty God, may our great nation exercise this faith!

The man who has no faith is powerless. He is smitten by the irreversible law of nature, as well as by the frown of God. Faith in God diffuses energy throughout the whole man. "It is a singular fact," says Upham, "that faith in God is not only the foundation of all religion, but is also the foundation of all knowledge."

The great men of the past made their achievements and reached their heights by faith in God. We have reached our present high state of civilization and development through the same faith. If we are to reach greater heights, it will be by faith in God. Shall we march on and take new ground? Shall we reach greater heights of civilization? Shall we become more potent for good? Through the power of faith in God we can, we must, and we will.—Wesleyan Methodist.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The May issue of The Homiletic Review has an interesting article written by Margaret I. Hessel on "The Clergyman's Coat." It is worth reading. This article reminded me of an experience I had in the Suffolk Christian Church. The first year I lived in Suffolk, Dr. Staley was called to his home at Franklinton, N. C., and requested me to conduct the Wednesday night prayer meeting. I conducted the meeting to the best of my ability. After the meeting I went to Dr. Staley's study.

"Uncle Boston" was the colored sexton at that time. He was an old man with white hair, and he wore his spectacles quite low on his nose. He usually looked over his spectacles when talking to you. He came into the study and "fixed" the coal stove for the night. Standing over near the stove, he said: "Well, Mr. Johnson, you made a good talk tonight." I said, "I thank you, Uncle Boston. You know a good talk when you hear one, don't you?" "Yes, sir. You know I've been here a long time. I was here when Mr. (Dr.) Wellons was here. He made good talks. Dr. Staley always makes good talks."

"Uncle Boston" looked me over very carefully, and was silent for a few moments, when he picked up some bits of coal. "Mr. Johnson, that was a good talk. You is a young man. You will be popular with the people. Now, if you don't mind," he continued, "I will make a suggestion. I'se old, but I loves the young preachers. You know Mr. Wellons wore a long coat; Mr. Laine wore a long coat; Dr. Staley wears a long coat. Now, if you will get a long coat you will look like a preacher, and it will help your preaching."

After several months, I bought the coat—a Prince Albert. I do not have any proof that the coat helped my preaching. But I have not forgotten the philosophy of the old sexton. He was wiser than he knew. He knew that the coat did not make the preacher; but he thought a preacher should have the personality of a minister of the Gospel. The Prince Albert coat hangs in the closet today. The times have changed. For one or two decades there has been a demand on the part of the public that the minister shall be a man like other men. He wears a business suit, red necktie, tan shoes and light hat. Why should he not dress as he pleases? However, why should he not dress as a clergyman?

The only use I have for the Prince Albert coat is this: I am frequently called upon by the young people to lend it to someone who wishes to dress like a minister for some entertainment. That coat will be in style again, some day. The revolt against clerical dress has almost run its course. This revolt has been far-reaching in its effect. It has compelled many ministers to lay aside much of the ministerial personality. And it has done more than that; it has affected the laymen and the lay-women of the church to an alarming extent. Real Christianity changes people. They are in the world, but they are not of the world. There has been a revolt against religious mindedness. A great many church people are unwilling to be different from their associates who are worldly minded. That is one reason why so many people spend so much time and money at the card table and other methods of worldly amusement. It is painful to be different from the world. A young person who does not play cards and dance is so different from the majority—the prevailing world leaders—it is disturbing if they are socially ambitious. There is one appeal needed today, in behalf of the pulpit and the pew! the preacher should be willing to be recognized as a minister, and the people in the pews should live a life different from the world.

The pendulum is swinging back in the matter of dress. Many people want the choir to wear vestments. They will later want the minister to dress differently in the pulpit. The preacher may be asked to wear robe or gown. I am not wishing that choir vestments and ministerial gowns will be generally used. But I think the minister should be recognized. And the church members should be different from the world in their manner of life.

ALUMNI BY CLASSES.

About one year ago, several efforts were made to get a number of the Alumni to the College for meetings. The purpose of these meetings was to create a class consciousness insofar as was possible on the part of the Alumni and to get them to function as classes in the interest of the College. At that time we were interested in the Dollar-a-Month Club plan. Committees were appointed from a number of the classes and were assigned the task of getting every member to join the Dollar-a-Month Club. After all these months, I have had two complete reports—the first to come in was from Dr. G. O. Lankford, representing the class of 1907. There were thirteen in this class, seven of whom joined the Club—just a little more than 50 per cent. The next class to report was the class of 1899, Dr. N. F. Brannock reporting. There are twelve members of this class, two of whom have passed away and nine of the remaining ten have joined. This is certainly a splendid record. I wish that the tenth one would join in with the other nine so as to make the class 100 per cent.

There are a number of committees working with their respective classes, however, these are the only two classes that have turned in complete reports. There are forty-three classes, with a total membership of 900. If all would put forth efforts and would succeed in proportion to the two that have completed their task, we would have, from the graduates alone, a membership of more than 600. Think what this would mean!

I trust that representatives of other classes may redouble their efforts so as to complete their work, certainly by Commencement. Our membership now runs to nearly 530. We certainly should reach 1,000 before Commencement. And, that reminds me—let every Alumnus of the institution be reminded of Commencement. The days are June 4th-7th, inclusive. We have a splendid program and a most unusual line of speakers. The Commencement program in detail will be announced through THE CHRISTIAN SUN within a week or two. The Alumni will be interested in Tuesday's exercises. This will be Alumni Day. Governor J. C. B. Eringhaus will be the speaker. We are planning for a barbecue dinner to be served on the campus as last year. This was a most enjoyable occasion in connection with the recent Commencement, and we are anticipating an even more enjoyable time at the approaching Commencement.

Money from the Dollar-a-Month Club has been coming in very slowly this week—one of the lightest weeks that we have had. I hope this means that there will be a number who will pay up next week. The total receipts since the last report amount to $18.00. I trust that every member of the Club who reads this report and who is in arrears, will send his dues immediately. The income from the Club has been so steady, and of such a benefit, let's don't let the interest lag, but keep it going with enthusiasm. We are always glad to have new members. Who will be the next to join?

L. E. SMITH.

THE NATION'S LARGEST UNIVERSITY.

No writer can pen a word picture that would give full justice to the Library of Congress. No painter's brush can bring to the vision its full significance. No photographic lens can carry from the building its beautiful descriptions inside and out. Those who have had the rare privilege of visiting the Library bear witness to this statement.

The Library of Congress was established in 1800, destroyed in 1814 when the British burned the Capitol; afterward replenished by the purchase by Congress of the library of ex-President Jefferson, consisting of 6,760 volumes, at a cost of $23,950. In 1851, 35,000 volumes were destroyed by fire; in 1852 it was partly replenished by an appropriation of $75,000. Additional appropriations and purchases, together with exchange of the Smithsonian Institution in 1866, brought back the Library beyond its former standing.

The present building was completed in 1897, at a cost of $6,000,000, being opened to the public in November of that year. It occupies three and three-quarter acres, upon a site ten acres in extent, at a distance of 1,270 feet east of the Capitol, and is the largest and most magnificent library building in the world. The entire floor space is in excess of fourteen acres. Its employees number 802, and in addition to this personnel, it requires the services of 87 employees from the Government Printing Office, who are housed in the same building, and whose entire time is taken up in printing, binding and similar work directly connected with the library.

Aside from the millions of volumes of books and periodicals at the disposal of the public without charge, it houses the original copy of the Declaration of Independence, some of the finest paintings in the world, millions of prints and photographs. More than one million people annually visit this shrine of learning and information.

One of the most practical divisions of the Library, and one used daily by thousands, is the Periodical Room, in which is arranged by subject every leading magazine and similar periodical in the United States. In this division six to ten of the leading daily papers of each State in the Union are daily exhibited, where thousands come to read the latest news from their native States.

In all, the Library of Congress is the greatest university of all universities, where there is gathered together unlimited information on every subject known to man, and where the people of the District of Columbia, of every State, and of all parts of the world come to read and do research work.

No visit to the National Capital is complete without a trip through the Library of Congress. Such a trip may be deprived of some of its worthwhileness if the visitor fails to take at least a casual inventory of what his or her State has contributed to the world's most universal university.

THE SEMI-CENTENNIAL MEETING OF THE FLORIDA CONFERENCE.

The fiftieth annual meeting of the Florida Congregational Conference was held at Ormond, Fla., last week and was in every respect a most successful and inspiring meeting. In spite of present conditions the attendance was equal to those of former years, the number of registrations being one hundred and ten and these do not include a large delegation from Rollins College, that came for one session, or those from the home community. The conference was beautifully entertained by the people of the Ormond Church. The delegates stayed in the local hotel, but the meals, except breakfast, were served in the commodious parish house by the ladies of the church. There were two dinners served in banquet style, with after-dinner speakers. The church was very beautifully decorated, largely with dozens of white and yellow calla lilies, and the badges of attendance were ivy leaves dipped in gilt as tokens of the Golden Anniversary. This was done in the church also with clusters of various leaves dipped in gilt. The Rev. George D. Owen, D. D., pastor of the church welcomed the visitors and was untiring in his efforts for the comfort and the happiness of the conference. His words of welcome were responded to by Rev. Walter Metcalf, moderator.

The program, which revolved around the theme, "Rethinking—The Present Necessity," was carried out in all detail and the speaking was of a very high order. There was a most interesting discussion in the Men's Forum of the book, "Rethinking Missions," and one of the notable events was the address by Dr. David B. Spencer who has been in the active ministry fifty years, speaking upon the theme, "Rethinking Preaching in the Light of Fifty Years' Experience." Another outstanding event was the historical paper by Rev. C. DeW. Brower, of Interlachen, on "Fifty Years of the Florida Conference." Mr. Brower has been in the Florida ministry longer than any other minister, except Rev. Fred R. Marsh, of Travers. It was voted to have this paper printed in the minutes.

Another interesting feature was the Anniversary Dinner at which Dr. William S. Beard, of Rollins College was the principal speaker. There was music by the college quartette, motion pictures of the college and there was a delegation of 25 from the college headed by President Hamilton Holt, and three of the college deans. This college was projected at the first annual meeting of the Florida Conference and was founded two years later by the Conference. Another important session was the meeting of the Women's Federation of the State, at which Mrs. Marion Fallou Fisk was the principal speaker, and there was given a dramatization composed by Mrs. Fisk.

Among those present at the Conference was Rev. Ben Stock, who was present at the first session fifty years ago, and had only missed five sessions in the years since. There was also present former superintendents, Rev. George B. Waldron and Dr. Lewis H. Keller. There was also present Miss Grace Bingham and Miss Lillian Bingham, daughter and grand-daughter of Charles M. Bingham, who was the first moderator of the Conference. It was voted that the next session should be held with the Winter Park Church, which will be celebrating its fiftieth anniversary next year.

The officers elected for the coming year were: Moderator, Mr. Chas. A. Hoyt, Jacksonville, who also continues as conference treasurer; conference preacher, Dr. George D. Owen, of Ormond, with Rev. Lawrence A. Gedcke, alternate; auditor, Ralph Anderson, of Jacksonville; delegate from the conference to Southeastern Advisory Board, Rev. C. Arthur Lincoln; Florida member of the Regional Committee, Dr. E. A. King. The following were elected as members of the Board of Directors: Rev. George D. Owen, Rev. Frank Atkinson, Rev. C. A. Lincoln, Rev. Walter Metcalf, Mrs. C. A. Vincent and Mrs. Robert Williams. Rev. C. A. Lincoln was elected president of the Board of Directors. Mrs. Robert Williams was re-elected president of the Woman's Federation, as also was Mrs. H. C. James as secretary, and Mrs. H. J. Feeney as treasurer.

The Conference passed several important resolutions, among them being one directed against the beer bill in the State legislature and against the repeal of the State prohibition law, and also one directed to the State legislature and others in public office to cease the bickering and futilities of selfish and petty politics and devote themselves exclusively, whole-heartedly, and in the spirit of good government to the solution of the country's problems, and to the well-being of the people as a whole.

In the closing devotional talk by the Conference chaplain, Dr. Charles H. Beale, he stated that in all the long years of experience of attending State Conferences in several parts of the country he did not recall attending one where the whole spirit of the Conference was on such a high plane as this one, which was a word greatly appreciated, coming from Dr. Beale, who, himself, had contributed so much to the Conference as chaplain.

FROM THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT.

It is hoped that some minister will read this notice and decide to send in a sermon this week to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Your sermon will be appreciated by the entire SUN family. Many have spoken, or written most generously to the writer about his efforts. They will like yours, too. Shape up a sermon, and send it in.

You may not think it suitable. That will not be strange. The writer feels like his are not suitable either. And oftentimes he wishes yours had been in the office waiting to be printed before his was published. Send a sermon to THE SUN today, and receive the thanks of us all. And in the meantime, make any suggestion you may wish to the writer for the improvement of THE CHRISTIAN SUN PULPIT.

PRAYER.

Blest harbor of souls, the Church of our Lord! Her portals beckon, her shelter is secure. Some day, O righteous Author and Preserver, the Church shall possess the earth; if we cared enough, that day might be now. Great God, our Father, make people know that the Church's sustenance, its expansion, its triumph, is in human hands and that if truly we desire to build the Church, thou wilt build our bodies into fitting and able instruments for the holy service. In Jesus' name.—Amen. S.

WHY BE DEPRESSED?

Miss Marie Crosby, missionary on furlough from Africa, recently speaking at our Missionary Rallies in North Carolina, stated that there was no depression in Africa. The reason was that it obtains there all the time from the standpoint of luxuries and abundance, and that the only depression her part of Africa felt and counted was when starvation came through failure of crops. Now comes the question right out of our South, by way of a correspondent in the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty: "Why Be Depressed?" And, in answering his own question, says:

"Those portions of the country which have always had little find it easiest to get along with less! This is particularly true of the South and some portions of the West. H. B. Mowbray, pastor at Demorest, Ga., writes: 'We have never had much cash in the hill country of the South, but there has always been an abundance of hog and hominy—and there still is. So why be depressed?' Almost as cheerful is the report of the home missionary in Alabama: 'Our people have no money, but if they had, they would be very glad to pay what they had.' But one rural parish in the South has found a new way of meeting the missionary apportionment. They give all the eggs their hens lay on Sunday to missions! And they report that their feathered friends are doing better on the Sabbath than on week days. But possibly the women do not make the rounds very carefully on Saturday afternoon."

It is no new thing for many housewives to give to missions the price of eggs their hens lay on Sunday. We have often heard good women testify to their satisfaction and joy of doing this very thing, and we wonder why more of them do not adopt this practice and share this satisfaction.

J. O. A.

THE NORTH CAROLINA MISSIONARY RALLIES.

The women are interested in missions and the work of the kingdom, because they are willing to give their time to study and to learn. In the past three weeks a total of 1,200 to 1,500 of our choicest souls have met in groups, that would easily average 100 each, to give themselves to a one-day study of missions and to devotional service and pursuit. In all these meetings, six in North Carolina, four in Virginia, there were programs that pleased and speakers and teachers that taught and inspired. The North Carolina Rallies were favored with the visit of a missionary on furlough, Miss Marie Crosby, who has been five years a missionary in West Africa, and who is to return in July. Her messages were exceedingly instructive and helped her hearers to understand more clearly actual conditions in Africa that missions face and, better than that, the power of our Lord to redeem and to save the most needy and the most destitute. The women will have much to tell their societies about the work of missions in Africa and about the missionaries who are giving their lives so unselfishly there to winning the African from crass heathenism to genuine Christianity.

Too much cannot be said of the faithful superintendents of the various districts who wrought so unselfishly to make the Rallies a success: Miss Margaret Alston at Fuller's Chapel; Mrs. C. H. Stephenson at Chapel Hill; Mrs. J. W. Patton at Long's Chapel; Mrs. R. E. Caviness at Ramseur; Mrs. R. L. Ross at Turner's Chapel; Miss Jessie Sharpe at Howard's Chapel; Mrs. L. E. Carlton at Ingram. Without the unselfish devotion of these great and good women in their several districts, these meetings, with their spiritual power and significance, could not have been held. Each seemed to vie with the other in making her district the most active in the good work of missions and in making her Rally the most potent and helpful.

These 1,500 women, who gathered for a day of study of that command nearest and dearest the heart of our Lord, and that passion that possessed His soul, will carry into their local societies and into their churches a spiritual contribution that the whole church will feel and rejoice in during the days to come. J. O. A.

EASTER AND THE MISSIONARY OFFERING.

Easter Sunday was quite generally a very rainy day. On that account, many hundreds were not at church for the Easter services, and offering, who otherwise would have been. Those who could not, or did not, attend the services that day should not be deprived of the opportunity of making their contribution to missions. Faithful and diligent pastors and church officials will see to it that the offering is finished on another and nearby service, when those not participating on Easter shall have an opportunity. This is nothing but fair and just, both to the cause of missions and to the membership of the church. All should be given a chance.

Just once a year the men of the church, and the entire church, have an opportunity of contributing to missions, and that period is now. Of course, the contribution now made will be that of self-denial, but it is through self-denial that we follow our Lord. He chose that way for Himself and for all who would follow Him. It is not only the best way and the happiest, but it is the only way by which we can follow Him, and through which we build up His kingdom on earth. Wise men, as worldly wisdom goes, would never undertake to finance the biggest and the chief business of mankind solely through self-denial. And yet, our Lord, the wisest of the wise, both in ways of righteousness and for the good of mankind, chose the way of self-denial to carry on His cause and to build the kingdom of heaven on earth.

On this account, it is wise for every pastor, particularly at this time, to give every member of the churches the pressing invitation to make a self-denial offering for the one spiritual task the Lord appointed His church to do. Only the church will do the work and, in doing this work of the Spirit, the church receives added power and a strength not its own to go forward in its manifold undertakings.

Since our Convention and the Conferences have agreed that once a year all the churches shall make a free-will offering to missions, we cannot see how any church, or any pastor, can sidestep the issue or fail to avail themselves of the blessings and benefits promised of our Lord for this undertaking on the part of the church to share with others the blessings of the Gospel which He has so bountifully bestowed upon us.

Let every pastor and every church see to it that the offering is taken and that every member of every church, shall, at least, have the privilege of taking a part therein.

STEWARDSHIP'S PLACE IN THE KINGDOM PROCESS.

Three related personalities—God, the Christian and fellowman—build the eternal kingdom. Like all growth the kingdom of our Christ has its beginning in God. God's ministry of grace, the soul's rebirth, is the first or foundation element in kingdom structure. The spread of the kingdom until it shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea, is a forever rotating process of the three essential elements embodied in God, in the fruit-bearing Christian, and in the fruit itself.

It takes not only a fundamentally sound, but a properly developed, completed product—a product in which every essential element has been duly cultivated—to improve and increase with each recurring yield. When, through missionary activity, the object of unto Jerusalem, Judea, Samaria has been effected, incorporation of the fellowman element has brought the whole kingdom process to a restarting point and made of each Christian recruit a possible factor in soul corraling. But in no life does this factor become a positive force for producing more Christian fruit if the connecting link between the new birth and what would be the fruit-bearing stage has been disregarded and unforged. Without the stewardship of means which, let it not be forgotten, embraces both the Christian and his money—that which supplies the second essential element in the process of world redemption—individual Christian experience never could ripen and reproduce.

For several years, this writer has labored to make the churches of her conference responsive to a full-rounded Christian program—a program inclusive of evangelism, stewardship, missions. Incumbent pastors, we believe, are a unit in subscribing to such aim and desiring to see it accomplished. Would that all church officers, spiritual and administrative, were as mentally committed—and more! We urge that it is the solemn duty of a local church officary to carry on as a whole in the interest of every branch of the church's affiliated work, and that the way for any appreciable following of a church's members to become stewardship minded is for the leading personnel to give no less than its best in prayer and service to make stewardship education effectual. The grace of stewardship must be a reality in Christian life if the church is to go forward. If the effort to effect world salvation is to be successful the works of evangelism (God), stewardship (the Christian), missions (fellowman), cannot be detached from each other, nor one of the three neglected. SALLIE LINCOLN.

THANKS FROM DR. WHITE.

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

Last week we received notice from the American Board that a gift of $11.00 had come from the Woman's Missionary Society of the Southern Christian Convention, for our hospital here. We want to acknowledge this gift and thank them through THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Every year we have a great many charity cases, many of which can be saved through preventive serums. This is especially true in tetanus cases. Often the government hospitals do not have these serums and thus we are able to save many patients. So most of the gifts we receive are used for this serum. To illustrate, we had a ten-year-old child come to the hospital in convulsions from tetanus. She went home entirely well. The serum alone cost us $70.00. We receive only $10.00 for this treatment, the rest had to be charged as charity. If this child had come when she first stepped on a nail, 50c worth of serum would have prevented all this sickness and cost.

Again we wish to thank the ladies for this gift. We will have our annual reports ready to send you soon. Mrs. White and the babies are well.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTIONS.

Within a short time the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions will be in session. Officers of some of the conventions are already planning their programs, and getting ready for their meetings. These conventions have meant much in the development of the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies. They have real possibilities for helpful service.

Those who attend should be able to gather information and inspiration which will aid them in doing a better service in their local churches. This means that every program should be so built that competent people will give instructions concerning the various phases of Sunday and Christian Endeavor work. This takes time and preparation, but the delegates who attend have a perfect right to find this aid.

The International Council of Religious Education this year is emphasizing increase. Only about one-third of the American population is enrolled in Sunday Schools. Our conventions should lay some definite plans for increasing our Sunday School enrollment. It is important, also that reports from all Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Societies be made to the conventions so the conventions can report to the Board of Christian Education, which Board seeks to tabulate the figures relative to our Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work. Be sure that your school and Endeavor Society are reported at the conventions.

BOARD OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

The Board of Christian Education covers more phases of work than any other institution of our Southern Convention, and yet there is probably less said about it than about any other institution in the Convention. We undertake to aid Sunday Schools in any way they may need help with counsel and advice, to aid in the conduct of Daily Vacation Bible Schools, to sponsor Leadership Training through local training schools and summer training schools at our colleges, to promote special day programs such as Mother's Day, Children's Day, Easter, Christmas and Rally Day, to aid Sunday School and Christian Endeavor conventions in building their programs, to collect and tabulate information concerning our Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies, to promote all phases of the young people's work, to keep alive an active interest in Christian education.

Our Board is financed by money sent to Sunday School conventions, by a very small percentage of conference apportionments, and by special contributions. The total amount received for the past few years has been about $1,000.00 annually. This sum is by far too small to enable us to do effective work, but we seek to do the best possible with the funds available.

Seemingly the banks have been against us. A year ago we had $300.00 locked up in a bank failure, and we now have our funds in the North Carolina Bank and Trust Company which is operating on a 5 per cent basis. At present we have no funds available with which to do any kind of work. We are looking forward to the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor conventions with the hope that all churches will pay their dues, and that the conventions will feel inclined to support our Board. In the meantime the work continues, at least in part.

CHURCH WORK UNDER DIFFICULTIES.

For many years of our recent experience the churches have had a comparatively easy time in raising funds with which to work. We now work under difficulties.

Because of the difficulties, some are losing hope and are ready to quit, while others are more determined than ever to continue. The church with its ministry of helpfulness, is needed more today than in many years. Now is the time for expansion. The time to do more work than ever.

History shows that the church has flourished most when difficulties were greatest, and recent records indicate that with the prosperity of our country from 1925-29, church attendance decreased, but with the slump of business the attendance has been gradually increasing. Perhaps we will learn that seeming difficulties are in reality great opportunities.

SUMMER SCHOOLS.

Interest in our summer schools seems to be more widespread than usual. Young people everywhere seem to be interested in training for Christian service, and in trying to discover for themselves what Christianity really means. For this reason the regular summer schools will be held at Blue Ridge, N. C., June 20th-27th; at Elon College, N. C., July 24th-30th; and at Wadley, Ala., July 27th-August 3rd. I do not know the dates for Immokolee and the school in Georgia.)

Costs are being lowered so as to make it possible for more people to attend. Registration and board at Elon will be only $7.50 for the entire week. The other schools are making their cost just as low as possible, and all are building fine programs which will be very beneficial to those who attend.

The Youth Fellowship of Eastern Virginia is doing a fine piece of work, in undertaking to get at least two young people from each church to attend Elon. They are arranging transportation through getting groups to go together in automobiles. Those interested in this project should write to Miss Irene Cotten, at Dendron, Va.

Young people can make no better investment than to invest in their own personal development by attending one of our summer schools.

Additional Hymns—"More Holiness Give Me," "Stand Up, Stand Up, for Jesus," "O Master, Let Me Talk with Thee," "Purer, Yet Purer."

Some of the following suggestions may prove profitable in preparing for the evening's discussion:

1. Assign the topic: "What Is Ambition? What Is Its Value?"

2. Ask some person who is willing to spend considerable time in preparation to prepare a talk on "Ambitions of Young People in 1933," and afterwards allow the group to discuss which ambitions are right and which are wrong.

3. Ask someone to speak on "People With Right Ambitions." Illustrate this with stories of people in our modern world who represent good ambitions.

4. Ask another person to speak on "People With Wrong Ambitions," using for example the people of today.

5. The daily readings for this topic may be assigned as references. Ask the speakers to give modern illustrations that parallel these cases from the Bible.

Did you ever ask a group of children what they expected to do when they were grown? If not, you have an interesting experience in store for you. More interesting than their actual statement of what they want to do is the discovery of why they want to do that particular thing. It will soon be evident that imitation is one

JESUS SETS NEW STANDARDS OF LIVING.

LESSON V.—APRIL 30, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise."—Luke 6:31.

LESSON TEXT: Mark 10:13-27.

During the days of the early church the disciples or followers of Jesus were called "of the way" or of "this way." The phrase is significant. It suggests that the disciples of Jesus were known not so much by what they believed, but by the way they lived. The characteristic thing about the disciples was their new standard of living. This was especially true after Pentecost. Their very way of life, so winsome, so helpful, so courageous, so victorious, so spiritually alive, impressed outsiders, and made them want to find the secret of their joy, and their peace, and their power. One thing was certain—these followers of this man Jesus were not living by the accepted standards of the Roman world. It was quite evident that they were not living by the ordinary standards of their day and community. It was just as evident that they were not living by mere external law. The standard by which they lived was nothing less than the spirit of Jesus Christ. And the source of the power by which they lived in the spirit of Jesus was a living fellowship with the living Christ. His Spirit had purified their hearts and given them power to witness for Him.

It needs to be said again and again that there is a difference between mere religion and Christianity. It is not at all difficult to be religious. It is extremely difficult to be Christ-like. But for Christians there is but one standard of living—Christ's standard. Being a Christian means embodying Christ's character in our lives and expressing Christ's spirit in our conduct.

Jesus and Children.

"And they brought young children to Him." They thought that the very touch of Jesus would have value. The disciples thought that the children would bother Jesus, but their attitude displeased Jesus. He said: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God." We do well when we bring our children to Jesus. To help them to know Jesus, to give them a knowledge of Him in their tender and formative years, to lead them to know Him and to love Him while they are young, to save their lives as well as their souls—this is the message of Jesus. This does not mean that undue pressure should be brought to bear upon children. But it does mean that every effort should be made to "bring children to Jesus."

"Of Such is the Kingdom of God."

"Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein." It is only as we have the child-like—Jesus did not say childish—spirit that we shall enter into the kingdom of heaven—Jesus did not say "enter heaven." The spirit of humility, of sincerity, of simple trust, of teachableness, of ready willingness to forgive—these and other qualities that might be listed are essential to entrance into that spiritual kingdom where God's will is done. The proud, the self-seeking, the sophisticated may be in the church; they are not in the kingdom.

What Lack I Yet?

This young ruler had, it seemed, everything that heart could desire—wealth, position, power, influence, education, culture, morality, even a form of religion. But alas he was not satisfied.

He felt, and he confessed that there was something lacking in his life. There was an unsatisfied heart-hunger. There was a feeling that he had not found the secret of more abundant life. Jesus as usual put his finger unerringly on the sore place. He saw that this young man was wedded to his riches. He saw that although he had kept all the commandments dealing with a man's relation to his fellowman, he had allowed his wealth to come between him and God. He had not found life because he was not giving himself. He was trying to find life by doing something. He could find life in only one way—by giving whole-hearted allegiance to Jesus, by devoting his life to Jesus in the service of humanity. And when Jesus showed him this, alas, he could not rise to the high privilege or opportunity. "He went away sorrowful, for he had great possessions." There is no telling what this young man might have done or become, if as he stood at the cross-roads, he had taken the right road.

This incident is not a command for every man who has property to sell it all and to give the proceeds to charity. Jesus' command to "sell and give" was designed to meet the need of this particular young man. But there is a universal and an abiding principle here. Whatever comes between us and God, whatever keeps us from following Jesus must resolutely be put away. We are to have no other gods before God. We are to do more than give to Jesus, or to give for Jesus; we are give up to Jesus.

"They that Have Riches."

Jesus did not say that a rich man could not go to heaven. He said that it was difficult for those who have riches to enter into the kingdom of heaven. Riches have a tendency to make a man feel self-sufficient. Money has a way of coming between a man and God. We often pity the poor man. We had better have compassion on the rich man.

The present period of depression has revealed something of the folly of trusting in riches. Men who have been trusting in their riches have found they offered very uncertain and unstable grounds of assurance. Treasuries in heaven are the only secure and gilt-edge securities, which not only are beyond the vicissitudes of life, but which pay large and certain dividends.

strong factor with small children. The desire to imitate is in direct proportion to the admiration the child has for a certain person.

As we grow into young manhood and womanhood the underlying factors in ambition change. There may be a period of years when our ambitions regarding a life work are rather hazy. If we would examine ourselves, however, we would find certain general attitudes and desires developing. Our final choice of a vocation will be only one of the avenues of expression of that inner desire. Because of the gradual growth of ambition we often fail to analyze it to discover whether or not it is good or bad, or if there are undesirable elements entering into it.

What are some of the questions we should ask ourselves in evaluating ambition and determining whether it is good or bad? First, will anyone be made to suffer or put to disadvantage if I cultivate this ambition? Second, can I make a real contribution to the welfare of humanity through this ambition? Third, will this ambition afford an opportunity for the use of my best talent? Fourth, will the realization of this ambition call forth the highest development of my mental and spiritual powers? Fifth, is it in harmony with the ideas and teachings of Jesus set forth in the Sermon on the Mount, the two great commandments, and the Golden Rule? E. R.

MONDAY.

LIFE'S DEFENSE AND HEAVEN'S COURT.

"Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth."

"Who is he that condemneth? It is Christ . . . who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us."—Rom. 8:23, 24.

Gregory the Great is quoted as saying: "If you had a case to be tried on the morrow before some great magistrate you would surely spend the whole of the day planning for it; you would seek a patron and would beg him earnestly to become your defender."

There is a judgment seat of God before whom we stand, and before whom we shall stand at the last day when each is giving and will give an account of himself to God, when "God will bring every work into judgment, with every hidden thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil" (Eccl. 12:14); "when he will make manifest the counsels of the heart, and each man shall draw his praise from God" (I. Cor. 4:5); "when the angels of the Lord shall come forth and sever the wicked from the righteous" (Matt. 13:49).

We will need an advocate then to plead our cause before God. In that day we shall know that the Lord is righteous in all His ways (Ps. 145:17), and our greatest advocate will be Jesus (Rom. 8:34; Col. 3:1), and our greatest defense will be how we have lived—pure and honest and for Christ. Now is the time for us to seek that defense, establish that character and take it to Jesus. "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God" (Col. 3:1). Then it will be:

"Just as I am, without one plea
But that thy blood was shed for me,
And that thou bidst me come to thee
O Lamb of God, I come, I come."

Amen.

TUESDAY.

PAUL'S DEFENSE.

"We do not corrupt the Word of God; but as of sincerity, but as of God, in the sight of God, speak we in Christ."—II. Cor. 2:17.

This reminds us of his last words committing himself to the great judge: "I am now ready to be offered up. The time of my departure is at hand. I have fought the good fight. I have kept the faith."

Are we preparing to say as much? Are our works by the call and the will of God? Is our experience in the Gospel of Christ? Paul substituted nothing for the truth of God, and he never trimmed this truth to suit the prejudices of these around him it mattered not what it cost him. He was always declaring the real thing and the whole thing. Are we?

Prayer—O Lord God, our Father, we pray for the real experience and presence of Jesus and the Gospel in our souls and for the power to carry it on in all the walks of our lives. O Lord, help us.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

GLORIOUS SUFFERING.

"The sufferings of Christ abound in us, so our consolation also aboundeth by Christ."—II. Cor. 1:5.

In other words the Apostle is saying: "I have comfort in suffering for Christ's sake."

In sufferings, failures and misfortunes, life stands revealed laying bare the quality of mind and soul. It is the test of life, out of it comes character and courage, and courage is the foundation of all character. A prominent divine said recently: "I would rather go down to defeat with Jesus than to live with Judas. I would rather fail with Paul than win with Pilate. I would rather be scorned because I stand by the Book of Books than to hear applause because I live by the burnt-up ashes of a Bertrand Russell." "Man doth not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

Prayer—O Lord, thou knowest that our lives are full of defeats, misfortunes and failures. Be thou our stay, O Lord, and may we find our feet always standing firm on thee.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

STANDING PAT.

"I think to be bold against some."—II. Cor. 10:2.

These vigorous words of Paul's express his determination to wage a warfare of the Gospel against his critics and who were blocking the onward movement of the Gospel. He was not afraid of getting his clothes soiled, nor was he afraid of getting into "hot water." He had often been. He lived and moved and had his being in hot water.

We need more of the Pauline type of Christians projected into the world to defend the faith of Christ in a sin-cursed world. The church needs this Spirit in tearing down the strongholds of Satan.

To begin with us, our home, and our church is our task.

Prayer—Dear Heavenly Father, empower and sanctify our lives for thee. Make us, by thy Spirit, tackle the job of changing the master iniquities of our age to power for thy kingdom. In Christ's name, we ask it.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE MASQUERADE.

"False apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ."—II. Cor. 11:13.

Again we call on Dr. Moffatt to help us. He says that the word "transform" in this text means "parade," or "pretending," "making believe." The contents of the verse certainly justify that interpretation. If true, we have one of the most outstanding passages on hypocrisy.

Titus refers to such as professing to know God, but their abominable works deny Him. (1:16.) Jesus referred to such as honoring with their lips but having hearts far from Him. (Matt. 15:7, 8.) Job said that confidence in such is a spider's web, they go in the way of all the goddess that forget God. (Job 8:13, 14.) The reward for such is "outer darkness where there is wailing and gnashing of teeth."

Prayer—Our Father, save us from hypocrisy to the true and the genuine life in Jesus Christ. For His sake, we ask it.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

THROW OFF THE LOAD.

"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."—Read Matt. 11:25-30.

Two men who had been digging quahaugs near Providence, R. I., stepped into a hole in the bottom of the bay as they were making their way to shore. One of them threw his bag off and escaped to dry land. The load of the other was tied to his shoulders and he could not throw it off, but was drowned.

All of us have burdens to bear, heavy burdens that press on body, mind and soul. If we are not careful, they will bear us under. It is a great art to carry one's load lightly, so that it can readily be thrown off. True religion teaches that art. Christ is the great burden-bearer. No load is too big, no weight too oppressive for Him to lift. How foolish it is for any toiler to toil alone!

Prayer—We need thy aid, great helper of men! We can not do without thee, for we are too weak, too unwise, too inexperienced. With thee we shall get safely to shore.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

SEEN AND NOT SEEN.

"Seeing ye shall see, and in no wise perceive."—Read Matt. 13:10-17.

Pluto, the newly discovered planet outside the orbit of Neptune, was photographed, it is now known, as early as 1919. Thus for eleven years the new planet lay unsuspected upon a photographers' plate.

It is a good illustration of the undiscovered truths of our lives. We have had many possibilities, of friendship, of achievement, of growth, but have allowed them to remain only possibilities. They have been dots on a photographic plate, and we have not discerned their meaning.

How sadly we need to see what we see, know what we know! Hundreds of Plutos swim unseen in our sky—and we have seen them with unseeing eyes!

Prayer—Open our eyes and our minds, O thou Revealer of all beauty and truth and power. Expand our lives to the uttermost of their possessions. May we take advantage of all our advantages. In thy name, Lord Jesus.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

VOICES FROM THE PAST.

It seems that the statesmen of the past, statesmen whose names the ages are magnifying, are speaking in firm and thunderous tones to our own country and times:

"Gentlemen, you need not give yourselves any trouble about the revenue. The question of revenue must never stand in the way of needed reforms. Besides, with a sober population, not wasting their earnings, I shall know where to obtain the revenue."—Hon. William E. Gladstone in reply to a Committee of Brewers.

"Luxury, my lords, is to be taxed, but vice prohibited. Let the difficulty in the law be what it will. Would you lay a tax upon a breach on the Ten Commandments? Government should not, for revenue, mortgage the morals and health of the people."—Lord Chesterfield.

"If a loss of revenue should accrue to the United States from a diminished consumption of ardent spirits, she will be a gainer of a thousand-fold in the health, wealth and happiness of the people."—Justice Grier, U. S. Supreme Court, in a decision before National Prohibition came.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

THIS BUSINESS OF JOINING THE CHURCH.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?"—Heb. 2:3.

We cannot escape if we neglect the avenues of escape. When there is an open door why try to walk through the wall? Neglect has blinded many eyes to the doors of hope, and peace, and happiness. Neglect has lost many friends, closed the doors to many opportunities, and shut the sunlight out of full many a soul. Neglect has undermined health, blighted growth, impoverished talents, and placed weaklings and cowards where giants should have been. Neglect! How shall we escape if we neglect?

There are those who elect, and those who neglect. Of neglecting Christians there are three kinds. The first class is made up of that large group who have under some fine influence been brought to a decision to follow Jesus, to unite with His church, and to live a Christian life; but like the Christians at Ephesus, they have lost their first love for the church. They are good and honest people, and did not intend to drift away, but have simply neglected to arise early Sunday morning, put on their best clothes and their best graces and go to the house of God and engage in public worship, praise and prayer. They have found that one can read the Sunday morning paper with their bedroom slippers on, and without a collar and tie. In their own homes they do not have to bother to bow or speak kindly to their neighbors whether they feel good or not, and they are not irritated by looking for a bit of money to help share the upkeep and ongoing of the place of public prayer.

Should you ask them: Is it right to dress oneself in in one's best and go out with the family all together to church and Sunday School, they would think you silly for asking so simple a question. Obviously it is right. Should you ask them: Is there not time aplenty to keep up with the news without neglecting church, they would perhaps be irritated with your question, for anyone should know that the daily headlines are but froth as compared to the eternal verities of God, man, praise, and prayer! Or if you should ask one: Does it not sort of rub the cobwebs out of one's soul to meet and greet neighbors and friends in a brotherly way at church on Sunday morning? he would feel sure you were laughing at him, for he would know you knew it was obvious. It is not that he is bad. Not that he intends to fail in life's finest thing. He is simply a neglecting Christian. Instead of electing to grow in spiritual things just as he wishes to grow and develop in other ways, he is neglecting his church, and incidentally, his God and his soul's welfare. "How . . . if we neglect, How?" It cannot be done, if we neglect. We allow ourselves to drift in the downward direction surely.

Then there is that class of neglecting Christians which is made up of those who were in all probability good workers, and happy worshippers in other days in other places, but now they have moved into a new city, or a new community and they neglect to affiliate themselves with a church. Having moved their home does not mean at all that they should neglect to find a school, or grocer, or doctor; not does it mean that they should neglect their life insurance, or their families, or even their friends, but for strange and inexpliable reasons they may neglect their cultivation of regular, and responsible habits of soul culture. They knew and loved God as they saw Him in the folks about their old homes, but although they have a high conception of God, they must test Him out as He will appear in the people of their new surroundings. They are good people and just like many of us would be under the same circumstances. They do not suspect at all at first that they are doing a dangerous thing. They do not realize that neglect of the spiritual self is just as dangerous as neglect of the mental or physical self. They know that God is just as great in one city as another, or in one community as in another. It is not that. It is neglect. And soon they find themselves cold, and indifferent, and wondering many, may things—ready to find fault, and ready to make rash judgments simply because something has been neglected. My beautiful rose died. I forgot to water it. God is gone on, and I am left behind. I forgot to follow. "How . . . if we neglect?" It isn't done! If we neglect we shall not escape.

Paul saw that there was a chance for even so fine a fellow as young Timothy to neglect. Timothy was certainly a good church member. And if he went to another community he carried his hunger for God's house and people with him, but, even so, Paul cautioned him: "Neglect not." Paul wanted to keep Timothy out of that third class of neglecting Christians, namely, those who, although they are regular in their church attendance and moved their religion along with them when they go, but fail to launch out and develop their talents of leadership, but taking the full measure of their share in the work of the Kingdom of God. "Neglect not the gift that is within thee." What latent unused powers lie within us? Powers that would make ourselves most happy if we but learned to develop, use, and consecrate them to God—singers, teachers, the speakers of the honest friendly welcome, or the witness of a real faith, the leadership of a group of boys, or the fellowship of a group of men. Suppose a whole church roll could arise and walk right out for God and brother man in a community—attending, aiding, helping, speaking, working, loving, serving, giving and growing—well! a church would simply be changed that is sure. "Behold, all things would be new," indeed! In every church there are those who do fine things. Thank God there are. But those that aren't, are not bad folks, they are neglecting folks. They do not mean to fall short. They neglect, and put off what they know to be best. They suffer, and the church suffers; and Jesus Christ is still on trial!

This business of joining the church may be summed up in two great little words, the first of which is the Lord's own word: "Come!" Every door of the church from Canada to Cape Horn cries pleadingly, "Come!" Every truly Christian parent, seeking to walk aright before the precious children an infinite mercy has given them, cries, "Come"; the hunger and need of a weary, sin-sick world to such as have ears to hear, cries, "Come"; the Bibles that pour from our presses in a steady stream, cry, "Come"; and more still the same Saviour that, standing on the shore of Galilee, called Peter, and Andrew, and James, and John, still calls, "Come"; the Redeemer of Magdalene, the forgiver of Peter, the Bearer of the Cross, the Teacher of Thomas, is still calling to the good, and bad, young and old, "Come."

"Behold, I stand at the door and knock!" Hear that voice! Do not neglect it! Do not drive it away! Open up the door, and bid Him come in.

"Come," implies being in hearing distance of God. Can you feel Him near? "Come," implies a faith that answers with action; a trust that yields all and yearns to lay all on the altar of God. "Come," implies following—not for a day, when the music is sweet, and the words of the worker are winsome, but forever; for better, for worse; through heavy days as well as high days. "Come," implies taking hold of God, and becoming a son so that forever after there is kinship that is not to be broken, nor neglected. "Come," implies leaving something behind. You will know better what is to be left behind when

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

It has been said that a chain is no stronger than its weakest link. It certainly is very necessary that each link do its part if the chain is to pull to its full capacity and strength. Every link is to be depended upon. When each one will do his or her part work moves easily and smoothly.

Last Saturday we had a large pile of wood to saw into stove wood. The boys took their places, one boy run the saw and cut the wood, one threw it away from the saw, other little boys brought the wood from the pile and handed it to a boy so he could lay it on the saw table and each one did his duty and stuck to the job, and in two hours and a half they had cut a big pile of wood.

But suppose half of them had loafed on the job! What would have happened? It took each one to do his part, and each one had his place. If one had fallen out the whole crew would have been hindered, and the work could not have been accomplished.

It is the same way with the Christian Orphanage. It is dependent on every church in the entire Southern Convention if it is to carry on and do its work it is called upon to do. Each church is a link in the chain of churches. Will your church be a strong link and take its place in the chain and send a monthly offering to the Christian Orphanage to help support it or will it be a weak link in the chain and not send an offering and hinder the Orphanage from doing its full duty in lending a helping hand to the little helpless child who is crying to you for help. Be a strong link and get in the chain and help those who are not able to help themselves.

Who is a fool? Well almost all of us are fool sometims—when we fail to do what Jesus says, lay up treasures on earth, and when we go in our own way. One may be well versed in the way of the Lord and have a real education as far as knowledge is concerned; but if he is not obedient to the word, he is a fool, and of the worst type. Be wise and use your sense well for good.—H. M. Phillips.

THE SUN'S PULPIT.

you have listened to the Holy Spirit, when you have waited upon God in prayer, when you have been with God in secret, when you have subjected yourself day after day, and year after year to the fellowship of the Infinite, you will be learning more and more what to leave behind. For one it is wealth, for another family, for another houses, for another lands, for Paul everything save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified.

I am for you joining this church! I am for it! But I beseech you, hear His voice before you hear mine, or hear His voice, if God wills, in mine! Answer His call to "Come unto Me all ye that are weary, and heavy laden, and I will give you rest." I wish every one of you good people who worship with us so frequently, could come completely in with us; I wish we were more worthy of your fellowship; I wish you would know, however, that Christ of our hearts and yours is worthy of your fellowship, and that He bids you come, follow Him! Come, agreeing to be faithful to Him, and the folks with whom you join; come, agreeing to make it mean a new day in your life, and a new impact for good in this community; come with the knowledge that you will share, as a Christian shares, in the work of this church in the Kingdom of God, and you will not have to wonder if you have done the right thing, for "Lo, the Lord Himself will be with you, even unto the end of the ages."

The other little word, so large in meaning, that helps to sum up this business of joining the church, is another word of the Lord Himself: "Go!" Go, tarry in prayer! go to all the world; go teach every creature. Can you do all three? Yes, all three! In just such a way as God shall specifically call you to go, you can go, and do all three! It is His will, and it is His way. Can you go pray? Yes, daily, be ever in the spirit of fellowship, or companionship with God—as one said: "Pray without ceasing." Power follows prayer. Power of real personality. Power that puts the proper perspective on things so that first things are put first; and second things second. Yes, you can go pray. And how the world needs that you should!

To all the world you can go in your intercession for it, in your understanding of its needs, and your sharing with it through the various agencies of God's grace. And you can best go teach every creature by joining up in a real way with that one institution which covers the whole world for the sake of Christ, and covers it in something of the same compassion that filled His heart when on earth. Take your place in His church, and go or send in the self-same manner as He comes and gives unto you.

Railroads Establish New Safety Record.—

Although the railroads carried a total of 380,000,000 passengers during 1932, there was only one passenger killed in a train accident in the United States. Four passengers were killed in 1931 and seven in 1930. The number injured was 410.

Southern Steel Firm Puts 400 on Jobs.—

The Republic Steel Corporation, of Birmingham, Ala., has just announced that it will recall approximately 400 of its former employees in the next few days. Between forty and fifty are to resume work at the company's furnaces, while about 350 will be employed at the ore mines, which have been idle for nearly a year.

Britain's Drink Bill.—

George Wilson, the political secretary of the United Kingdom Alliance, has just issued his annual analysis of the nation's drink bill. The total consumption of absolute alcohol last year was approximately 36,500,000 gallons, as compared with 84,500,000 gallons in 1913, a decline of about 57 per cent. The total expenditure was 232,500,000 pounds, or an average of 5 pounds, 2 shillings per head of population. The total amount spent during the previous year on strong drink was 259,800,000 pounds. Part of that decline is assuredly traceable to the prevalence of unemployment; but undoubtedly part, too, is due to the increasingly sober habits of our people. As Mr. Baldwin said recently, "Money which used to be spent on beer, is now largely spent on other things."—The Christian Advocate, Birmingham, Eng.

As Sweet as Sugar.—

"What kind of sugar?" may well be asked, for there are now several kinds being used on our tables, and they vary greatly in sweetness. Now comes another. We learn that raw sugar is being produced on a large scale in Sweden, and that the source of this supply is wood. A newly discovered method is said to make possible the extraction of 60 pounds of sugar from 100 pounds of wood. This sugar, however, is not to be used for human consumption, but for the feeding of cattle, the making of yeast, and for alcoholic distillation. This wood sugar is a timely source of alcohol for the Swiss, as their laws make it compulsory that all imported gasoline used in motor cars be mixed with one-third its volume of alcohol. There will hardly be a shortage of alcohol, due to this fact, as reports are that over a million tons of wood sugar can be produced annually in that country alone.

Fifth District Federal Reserve Report.—

In spite of seasonal gains in some lines of trade, general conditions show small, if any, improvement during the past month. One of the effects of the bank holiday seems to have been a general slowing up of collections, from which the district has not yet recovered. The report also "indicates a very large amount of currency is still being hoarded," there being an increase in circulation (withdrawals from banks) of Federal Reserve notes amounting to $114,028,000 in the few weeks prior to the closing of the banks, while there has been a decrease during the month following their re-opening of only $37,267,000. On the other hand, "member banks, finding no unusual demand for currency when they reopened, have reduced their cash in vaults, lowered their reserve balances at the Reserve bank, increased their investments in securities, and reduced their borrowings. During the period reported, there were only 84 bankruptcies, compared with 184 for March, 1932, the number being "the lowest for any month since August, 1931, and the lowest for any March since 1920. Employment figures failed to show any improvement of conditions, but seasonal improvement was said to be expected during the following weeks.

Carbon Used to Purify Water Supply.—

For years carbon has been used as a filtrant for the clarifying and purifying of drinking water. Now a new form of carbon, known as activated carbon, has been brought into commercial use for the purification of water in many American cities. We are told that one pound of this carbon will remove undesirable tastes and odors from 100,000 gallons of city water. One cubic inch of this carbon is said to possess the almost unbelievable total of 20,000 square yards of external and internal surface, while an ounce of the substance contains more than 2,000 million particles. It is due to this minute division of the carbon, that it has the remarkable property of absorbing odors and tastes caused by microscopic vegetable growths found in all water reservoirs. Col. J. Wrench, an authority on the purification of water, tells us that the rapid increase of the use of chlorine in the sterilization of drinking water, has made the water of the United States the safest in the world, but he adds: The chlorination of drinking water has unfortunately the disadvantage of bringing out strongly in a most unpalatable taste any trace of oily secretions of plants, known as algae, which abound in all bodies of water. The chlorine combines with the plant oils and this combination gives a very bad taste to water. Although the water is safe to drink, it is very unpalatable. This problem has confronted water-works engineers for many years. In some cities the odor of the water has been so bad at times that the residents have refused to drink it, associating the evil odor with possible contamination. This new activated carbon, which enables water officials to overcome this problem, is made from vegetable fibers, and is a form of carbon with extraordinary absorbent physical properties. One pound will sweeten 100,000 gallons of water and can be sold for five cents."

Roosevelt Inflation Bill Passes Senate.—

After three weeks of debate, during which time many amendments were discussed and defeated or incorporated into the original bill, the administration inflation bill passed the Senate by a sweeping majority of 64 to 21. The inflation legislation was added to the farm bill in the Senate, and gives the president a choice of methods for undertaking controlled expansion of credit and currency. Immediately after the passing of the inflation act, the entire "farm legislation" was passed by a vote of 64 to 20. Only three Democrats voted against the inflation provisions, these being Glass, of Virginia; Bailey, of North Carolina; and Bulkley, of Ohio. These were joined by Clark, of Missouri, in the final vote against the entire bill. Mr. Glass, possibly the greatest authority on finance in the United States, failed to carry the weight or wield the influence which he usually does in monetary matters. He failed to see that undue tampering with our monetary system would assist in financial recovery, but believed that the effect would be just the opposite. Sound banking and sound currency are with him shibboleths, and one must admire the courage of him and those who, with him, broke from their party's vote, in an effort to preserve them. The bill as passed, contemplates an expansion of credit up to $3,000,000,000 through open market purchases of government obligations by federal reserve banks. If this fails to lift prices, the President is empowered to (1) Direct the issuance of $3,000,000,000 in treasury notes or new currency to purchase outstanding government obligations and provide for appropriations to redeem 4 per cent of the notes annually for twenty-five years. (2) Lower the gold content of the dollar by not more than 50 per cent, either by proclamation or by an international agreement looking to a stabilization of world currencies and exchanges. (3) Accept up to $200,000,000 in silver at not more than 50 cents an ounce as payments on war debts due this country in the next six months; to issue silver certificates against the silver and coin the metal to meet any demands for redemption of the certificates. (4) Remonetize silver at a ratio with gold fixed by the President and provide for free coinage of both gold and silver at such ratio. One cannot but hope that Mr. Roosevelt and the majority in Congress is right, and that Mr. Glass is for once wrong. It seems, however, that the program as outlined has more of ballyhoo than of real statesmanship in it. America does not need more currency, but she does need a liberalization of credit, and a return of confidence on the part of business, that such liberalized credit may be used.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, Durham, reports a series of meetings at his church recently which quickened the spiritual activities of the church and resulted in several accessions to the membership.

Following Easter, Dr. C. H. Rowland, pastor, First Christian Church, Greensboro, held a series of meetings in which the church was greatly revived, and at the close of the meeting thirteen names were added to the church roll.

Rev. J. W. Fix, of Urbana, Ill., who attended the anniversary services at the Franklin, Va., Christian Church, Sunday, April 30th, is to preach, both morning and evening, at his home church, Burlington, N. C., Sunday May 7th.

Have all in the churches been given a chance to make some contribution to Missions during our annual (Easter) Mission Offering Period? Many can't give, but some will, and even at great self-denial, if given the opportunity and invitation.

Dr. J. Edward Kirbye, Raleigh, N. C., reports that the church building at Six Forks, in Wake County, has recently been recovered and painted and put in good shape for worship and service. A Sunday School, with a good enrollment, has been organized, and church services were recently held with prospect that there will be regular preaching services from now on.

The world was never in such a generous mood, and never before gave so much for material help to relieve human need and suffering. How about the church in its attitude to spiritual need and soul-relief. As it is the function and business of government and benevolence to care for the physical needs of citizens, so it is the function and business of the church to care for the spiritual needs of mankind.

Dr. Rowland attended, Sunday, April 30th, the fiftieth anniversary of the beginning of our church in Franklin, Va., and preached at the 11 o'clock service. Other former pastors present and participating were: Rev. J. W. Fix, of Urbana, Ill.; Rev. N. G. Newman, D. D., of Holland, Va.; Rev. F. C. Lester, Waverly, Va. We congratulate our Franklin church on being so robust, vigorous and active at the end of the first half century of its growth.

Chaplain H. E. Rountree, Lieut.-Commander (Ch. C.) United States Navy, who edits the "Family Altar" page of THE SUN, and who has been detailed at the Navy Yard, Charleston, S. C., for the past two and one-half years, has recently received orders transferring him from that duty, to the U. S. S. Whitney, based at San Diego, California. The Whitney is the mother ship to the destroyers of the Scouting Fleet, and always bases at the center of activities of the Fleet. It is understood that the Fleet may be in the Pacific until the spring of 1934. Chaplain Rountree expects to be detached from the Charleston Navy Yard about the 1st of June. He will take Mrs. Rountree with him, travelling by automobile across the continent.

The Berea Christian Church was awarded the banner for the second time, and the Ocean View Christian Church was selected for the July meeting of the Congregational-Christian Sunday School Conference, in quarterly session, Tuesday, April 8th, at the Rosemont Christian Church, Norfolk County. Preceding the conference, devotional and business meeting, the delegates were the guests of the women of Rosemont Church at supper, and Miss Ethel Hurley, of the Christian Temple, led the supper devotional. The regular devotional service and business meeting was held in the auditorium, and was featured by two addresses, both on the Sunday School, by Prof. S. A. McDonald, principal of Ruffner Junior High School, and the Rev. Rock C. Witten, First Christian Church, Portsmouth. In addition to the congregational singing, T. H. Barritt, of Ocean View, sang a solo, played on the musical saw and led in the singing of several other selections, including a duet. In the business session the manner of awarding the next banner was referred to a committee composed of the Sunday School superintendents, to report in July. The Teachers Training Institute was announced for October 15th, with a strong faculty.

GREETINGS—AND A GOAL.

By MRS. L. E. CARLTON.

[Read before the Missionary Rally, at Ingram, Va.]

As leader of this district, I bring greetings in behalf of this church, the Missionary Society, and myself, I welcome you.

We are not here to play, to dream, to drift—we have hard work to do and loads to lift! Our Master has called us to work for him. We are his ambassadors, and he has not placed us here without tools with which to work. He has given us our hands, our energy, our voices, our intellects and our possessions. Not only has he given us tools, but he has given us a command: "Go ye into all the world." Again, he says: "If any man will serve me, let him follow me; if any man serve me, him will my father honor."

Shall our answer be: "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do?" If so, he will reply: "Well done!"

We have just passed this Easter season, and is it not a great inspiration to us in this work, that it was a woman who found the sepulchre empty and ran to tell of the risen Redeemer?

Our task is to work for the King, the humble Galilean, and tell of his wonderful love, and saving grace.

When we are called home, we do not want to go alone; we want to carry with us the evidence of a stay in this land—the black man of Africa, the oppressed and crushed youth of India, the starving Chinese, the veiled woman of the Far East, and those we meet in the homes, and on the streets during our every-day lives. Let us dream dreams and see visions; but let us also work for the fulfillment of them.

Often we feel discouraged over our work, but let us remember that God is with us, and that with him we may press on to greater things.

Great tasks will be made easier, and greater things will be accomplished in his name if we only work and trust.

Some of you here today have served the Master long and faithfully. Your prayers, your time, your money and even your very best selves have gone to tell others of the Saviour. When your term of office is over, and you return to the King, you will carry a wonderful report; yea, with dreams, with visions we should work that we may carry a clear and full report.

I often think of us as soldiers on a march. Our captain is Christ. His banner is love, his purpose is great, his command is "Go," his promise is life.

Donald Hankey tells us of a captain who would march with his men hard and fast all day, and at night he would care for their blistered feet and tired bodies; but one day their beloved captain left them to join other ambassadors whose terms of office were over. The author ends by saying: "But he lives, somehow he lives." Of a greater Captain we can say: "But he lives, somehow he lives." The path of the Cross is often hard. The Master's way was hard, but it led from death to life; from shame to glory; from defeat to victory; from darkness to light.

Never was such courage, such faith, such devotion, needed as now. Humanity needs something solid and secure to cling to. Shall we give them the risen Christ, or allow them to continue to grope for light?

Follow the command of our beloved Captain and "Go." Go in person, in prayer, in possessions, and in service. When the Master calls us home, let us carry this report: "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do." His words, "Well done," will be worth all the services, all the work, all the sacrifice, for he has said "Where I am, there will my servant be," and as his ambassadors we shall find rest and triumph and eternal victory in him.

CLEANING UP CHINA.

By PRISCILLA HOLTON.

It was hot in the kitchen. Gea Sing scrubbed the dishes even more vigorously. As for the shelves! When she had finished with them, they looked positively pale.

"There—" she grunted, "and there and there and there." A sob caught her throat. Of course she was glad summer had come, bringing older sister Hea Sing home from school. She wanted to learn things from Hea Sing. She herself was ignorant—going on twelve and only a few weeks of learning from the day school out in the country. Only one person in the family could be sent to the mission school, cheap as it was. Hea Sing was the eldest. Naturally she should go. Besides she was bright. She could study all the day without being weary. And she said things—everything—in such a wise way. Gea Sing was quick with her hands. Yes, but not with her mind. Better for her to stay home and do the work there. But just the same—it hurt—what Hea Sing had said. The sentence rang through Gea Sing's mind—"The trouble with our Chinese people is—they aren't clean!" Not clean! Not—didn't she—Gea Sing—scrub the dishes—every single time she washed them. Always with hot water, too. Not clean. It was awful.

"I must do something," she thought desperately. "If my China isn't clean, if we have fever in the summer because of germs and flies and mosquitoes and—there—that one's killed, anyway. But I can't kill every bug in this whole village—and Hea Sing said—I must do something."

A cover from a tea bowl rattled into her hands. She set it back with a bang. "Get on there, you old thing," she fumed. "You might do what you can to help keep out the germs and things. If we had covers for the rice bowls, that would help some."

All morning her playmates complained, "Gea Sing, why do you frown so soberly? You don't laugh at anything funny. What is the matter with you?"

"I know," Sung Ding laughed, "Her sister's home from school. She's been saying things."

"She has not," Gea Sing spoke quickly.

"She has so."

Gea Sing blazed at him. "You stop saying things about my sister. Just because you aren't in her school. You're ignorant, that's the trouble. That's the trouble with China. We're all ignorant. We ought to clean ourselves up. Our dishes aren't covered and germs get in—"

"What?" The children gathered around her, horrified. "Tell us, Gea Sing—tell us. What's in the dishes?"

Between sobs she explained that the fever in the summer and the plague in the winter was because of germs—and she finished, "If we only had covers for our rice bowls the way we do for our tea cups—it might help some."

"Why not?" Sung Ding suggested manfully. "We can all make things, can't we?"

"Not dishes," wailed Gea Sing. "What could we use?"

They all stared blankly at that. Gea Sing's gaze wandered toward a pile of bamboo drying in the sun. "Unless," she gulped doubtfully, "unless we used bamboo."

The old shoemaker scolded and scolded. "All foolishness," he muttered, "I never had a cover to keep flies away from my rice bowl and no bug ever killed me. Not yet." But when Gea Sing, her eyes still shining with tears, came over to his side, he laid aside his stitching to show her how to wet the bamboo properly, in order to weave it.

Such hard work at first. The results were awkward and top-heavy. "So much space between the cover and the bowl. Room enough for a dozen flies," Sung Ding said. "What's the use? It's more fun to play."

Gea Sing sat obstinately still. "I am going to make a cover that fits," she announced, "if it takes me the whole summer."

It did take her a week. A long hard one. Out of patience, she pressed the bamboo more tightly and wound the strands close to the rice bowl. "There," she grunted, "stick, will you?" But she had little faith that it would. She didn't even wait for it to dry, before she walked slowly over to the tree.

Sung Ding grinned at her. "Where's the cover?" he teased.

She kicked a pebble toward him. "I'm not making any more after this one," she announced casually.

"But this one may stick," Sui Ding cried hopefully. "Don't you care, Gea Sing. If we all were as patient as you, we might get somewhere cleaning up China. I'm going to look at your cover."

They all chased off after her—Gea Sing following reluctantly. It was Sung Ding who waved the cover aloft first. "Look—look, everybody. Gea Sing! It fits! I knew it would. Come on. We'll all make some. We can clean up China. Let's begin."

Every morning under the banyan tree a group of children followed Gea Sing's instructions about covers for rice bowls. Such a careful teacher she was. And she worked so painstakingly herself that before the summer was ended every home in the village boasted rice bowl covers.

She wished Hea Sing would notice. But of course Hea Sing was too busy. She was getting ready for the prize exhibit. It was the time when the judges came out from the city to examine the work of daily vacation schools and give a prize to the teacher who had done the best work in helping the village. If Hea Sing won, she would have a whole year of free scholarship at the mission school. No wonder she was busy.

One of the judges came home with her for dinner on the fatal day. Gea Sing had polished the bowls and the table until everything shone spotlessly. Not a fly within sight or reach? She felt embarrassed using the covers so she used her best looking one—with a design around the edge. Not even for a judge would she risk having flies on the rice.

"What is this?" questioned the judge. "An original idea, I should say, and highly practical." Big words, again. How intelligently Hea Sing answered. "My little sister amused herself making them this summer. They keep off the flies though they are awkward looking."

"Not awkward at all," the man replied. "I should like some myself."

"Why, I'll make you one," Gea Sing cried, adding shyly—"or else the other children will. Theirs are neater than mine."

"So everyone in the village has covers! Who ever started that I wonder?"

It was dusk before she saw the man again. Hea Sing brought him back after the contest was ended. The little sister's heart beat rapidly. Had Hea Sing won the remarkable prize? Such a prize! A whole year to learn how to clean up China.

How queer Hea Sing looked. Surprised and disappointed—and—the man was carrying the medal in his hand! Gea Sing started to scuttle out quickly.

"Gea Sing," the judge called after her. "Will you come here a minute?"

She approached him slowly. "Who taught you how to make the covers?"

She swallowed and swallowed—and it was hard to explain. "Why—" she said finally, "why it was because we couldn't all go to school to learn so we worked it out together because we wanted to help with the germs and flies and fever and things. We couldn't use our minds so well as we could our fingers, and we had to do something so—" she turned to go again.

"But who made the pattern fit?" the man persisted.

To save her life, she couldn't tell him about the struggle of that long hard week. Instead she hung her head. He was finishing for her.

"See, Gea Sing, I am pinning this on your coat. Come closer a bit—there. The red ribbon goes right over your heart—so, because it was your heart that taught your hands to help clean up our China."

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

GATHERING UP THE FRAGMENTS.

What a great opportunity we have, and what pressing need, to gather up the fragments of gold and silver and thus give dead metal a new life!

The churches can do it. Missionary Societies will do it. All of us Christians can now have a chance.

Many could not make a cash offering for Missions. Now, how about giving those old watches which have long ceased to run; those rings with the settings gone; those spectacle frames, chains, bracelets, pins and lockets that no one wears; those pieces of dental gold? All these and other things that changing fashion and the passing of the years have relegated to boxes and bureau drawers; idle and forgotten they have lain there, of no use to the holder, or anyone else. These may now be gathered up and dedicated to the greatest and best of all causes.

With such thought in mind, a committee of our Convention calls upon all of us to do the one thing we can do, viz: Give of trinkets and keepsakes, that are doing us no good, for the spiritual relief of hungry hearts and perishing souls.

This is not to take the place of the Annual Easter Offering, or the Cash Offering, of our churches, but is to supplement the same. Here, indeed, is an opportunity for all to have a part in relieving our missionary embarrassment.

Hundreds of Baptist, Methodist, Congregational, Presbyterian and other churches, have already entered the campaign, and their people are giving thousands of hoarded or saved gold and trinkets of silver and platinum, to be coined and turned into cash for the promotion of the kingdom.

We have entered a contract with The Crucible

Service of Philadelphia, who will aid in the campaign and will melt and refine the plate and sell the same to the Government at a minimum charge.

All pastors and missionary societies in the Christian Churches of the Southern Convention, are asked to put on a Crucible Service Campaign in their churches and give the people an opportunity to bring the fragments and offer them to this good service. We commend to our readers an article by Arch C. Cree, D. D., printed elsewhere this week from The Biblical Recorder. That which applies to our Baptist friends, as presented by Dr. Cree, certainly applies to our Christian forces. Our campaign for collecting this gold and silver through the churches is May 21st-June 11th, inclusive, and it is hoped every church, missionary society and Sunday School will heartily cooperate.

THE SEVEN CANDLESTICKS.

It is not often that the writer of the Book of Revelation explains the mysteries about which he writes. In the case of the candlesticks he does. The seven candlesticks, he says, are the seven churches. The better translation, possibly, is lamp stands, since the figure symbolizes borrowed light. The light, which the candlesticks, or lamp stands, reflects, is not their own. They reflect the light from him who is seen walking in the midst of the seven churches. Thus the light that the churches reflect is a borrowed light, coming from the Son of righteousness, who walks among, and in, the midst of them. This is the true light. When the church ceases to reflect the light from the life of the Son of Man, it is in darkness, as is the world about it. Say what we will of the church, it is the only hope and source of light in the world, since through it our Lord has seen fit to shed his light to the world.

However eloquent and powerful a minister may preach; however beautiful and thrilling the music may be; however large and intelligent the congregation may become, there is no light to shine into the dark places of the heart, and the world, save it comes from the Son of God. This is about which the church needs most to concern itself. If it is reflecting the light, not of the minister, the choir, or the congregation, but of the Son of God, it is a true church, and it is serving its divine purpose. In a world of darkness and doubt, there is only one hope and one promise of light, and that hope and promise is the church. Its one business is to reflect the light that shines forth from the Son of God who giveth light. Woe be unto that church that obscures this light, or seeks to shine in any other light than that light which comes from the Son of Man. That it might reflect the true light and shine forth in the world, revealing the lifting love and the saving power of the Son of God, the church was instituted, and for this cause alone it exists, and has a right to carry on. The need of the church today is to let its light shine out into the dark places.

TRIUMPH THROUGH TRIBULATION.

An editorial writer, in a Sunday's Greensboro Daily News, declares emphatically, and proves conclusively, that "there are compensations of calamity." The words are from Emerson, who many years ago wrote that "the compensations of calamity are made apparent to the understanding, after long intervals of time." The Greensboro editorial writer vows that the unthinking and the indifferent will not see it that way, but one day it will be made apparent to the understanding that this calamity of trial and hardship, through which the State, the nation and the people are passing, will reveal the truth that "tribulation worketh patience and patience experience, and experience hope." We are going to come out of this financial calamity, this moral chaos, this spiritual bankruptcy through trial and tribulation—but we are coming. A scriptural text is the basis of this thesis and the unfailing source of this hope: "These are they which came out of great tribulation." They are the folks that conquer and are given the white robes of victory and of eternity to wear. They have come through tribulation to triumph.

North Carolina, the nation, and the world were never in so generous a mood as they are today. World-wide distress is teaching world brotherhood.

Wealth, prosperity, riches do not include, they exclude; they do not unite, they dis-unite. "The exclusive set," is a proper title for the rich and worldly prosperous, because riches exclude and set apart rather than include and unite. Divorced and sundered homes are usually among the rich and worldly wealthy.

We are going to come out of our present depression and calamity, "whether the world gets on or off the gold standard. The standard that will bring us out isn't money—it is character, and character is made by tribulation."

True, there are those who are embittered, disappointed, humiliated by financial distress and reverses, but woe be unto them if they nurse their bitterness and cultivate their spirit of rebellion or of hate. They do not conquer, for they refuse to become corrected by the teachings of adversity.

We agree with the editorial writer of the Daily News that this is no time for croaking, but a time for courage; no place for giving up, but a challenge to stout and determined endeavor, courageous effort—a challenge to character, since it is character that is to save us from bitterness and woe, and bring us out of our tribulation to triumph.

THE GREATEST OPPORTUNITY.

"But it does hurt to see our missionary activities getting behind, and our colleges closing one by one, with those remaining being saved as by fire, and our publishing interests suffering unto death, and our whole church program being halted in these days of the greatest opportunity for fulfilling its mission that has appeared in 2,000 years."

The above paragraph sounds quite familiar and home-like, but it is not from a correspondent to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, or one of the officials of the Christian Church. The quotation is from the Methodist Protestant-Recorder of Baltimore, and is from the pen of the president of Western Maryland College (M. P.) Not only in our Christian Churches, but in other communions, "our missionary activities are getting behind. Our colleges," if going at all, "are being saved as by fire, and our publishing interests are suffering unto death." All of this occurs at a time when the spirit of benevolence was never so active and millions are being spent for food, raiment and shelter for the needy. Government is in a financial tangle and embarrassment. Economists, financiers and statesmen are on edge and know not in which direction to turn for relief, but since relief is necessary, they are not decreasing, but largely increasing activities, donations, contributions for the relief of human suffering in response to human need. Surely, it may be said again, as the Lord Christ said of the unjust steward, who had for once done wisely: "For the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." (Luke 16:8.) Governments are using every available resource to give physical relief.

Can as much be said of the church, whose business is spiritual relief? Are we in the church and of the church employing our ingenuity and skill, under the leadership of our Lord and in thorough consecration to him, to relieve the heart hunger of the world and to supply the demands for spiritual relief? The church has the same relationship to the spiritual need of the world that the Government has to physical and material help and relief. And not until the church has exercised its wisdom, intelligence and resources to the limit for spiritual relief, can it be said to have acted with the same consideration and wisdom as the Government has acted and is acting. This is, indeed, the greatest challenge to the church, and the greatest opportunity of the church, in 2,000 years. And the church must recover its spiritual bankruptcy before the world recovers its financial bankruptcy. J. O. A.

NO TOMB, NO CORPSE.

Dr. E. Stanley Jones says that in one of his meetings a Mohammedan arose and challenged the historical basis of Christianity. "We know that our prophet lived," he declared, "because we have the tomb in which his body lies and make regular pilgrimages to it. Islam is therefore based on a more substantial historical foundation than is Christianity." Quick as a flash, Dr. Jones replied, "It is true that we have no tomb because we have no corpse."

In these fifty days immediately following Easter, we may, with profit, recall how very much alive our Lord was after His tomb became empty and those who sought Him among the dead found Him among the living. It was during this time that He inspired His followers with new zeal and a strange courage, showed His power over things physical and material, opened their eyes that they might understand the Scriptures, and their hearts that they might realize the divine presence; and it was during this time that He gave the Great Commission: "Go, preach to all nations." The weakness of Islam and all non-Christian religions is that they have a tomb and a corpse; the strength and glory of our religion is that the tomb is only a passage-way to triumph, and a corpse the seal and symbol of a crown. J. O. A.

A CULT OR A FELLOWSHIP?

By REV. JOHN R. SCOTTFORD.

One of the great blessings which the merger of the Congregational and Christian bodies has brought about is the quickening of each stream of life by the other. It so happened last fall that Warren H. Denison was preaching the gospel of Stewardship to the "Congregational" Churches of Minnesota at almost the same time that Fred Fagley was conducting seminars among the "Christian" Churches of the South. Each came with a new point of view, and each was most welcome. The ultimate success of this union of two groups of churches is not to be measured by mathematics but by the degree in which each enriches the life of the other.

But the most significant feature of the Congregational-Christian merger is not what it has already achieved, but what it points toward. The logic of the situation divorces both groups from conceiving of themselves as particular cults. Possibly that is the only virtue in the present cumbersome name. Every time it is used each church is reminded that it is part of a body which includes some who are different from itself, and that is a fact which will bear considerable emphasis. We do not stand for a particular school of thought, a certain style of preaching, or a distinct mode of worship. Rather do we represent a fellowship broad enough to include all sorts of people.

The variety in our churches is particularly marked in the South. On a recent trip the writer heard one pastor demonstrate (by logic) the Calvinistic doctrine of Predestination on one evening, while on the next noon he met with another group who were wondering how they could make the former members of a defunct Unitarian Church feel at home in their fellowship. And from this point of view that is as it should be. The more different varieties of people in our churches, the longer will they live, and the richer will be their common life.

Looking ahead, our future depends upon the inclusiveness of our fellowship. The day of sectarianism is done. The endeavor to propagate a particular type of local church is doomed to failure. On the other hand, there is an insistent demand that the number of our denominations be reduced. "Fewer and better" is the watchword of the times in regard to both babies and church organizations. The increasing burden of economic pressure is making difficult the path of the smaller denominations. The strength of our larger bodies does not lie in their peculiar views, but in the service which they are able to render to their local congregations. It is fellowship in common tasks which binds our church organizations together.

Already our fellowship has proved sufficiently broad to include three groups of churches with exceedingly different traditions—Congregational, Christian and Evangelical Protestant. In addition every year witnesses the arrival of separate congregations which are attracted to our fold in one way or another. As others have already said, a snowball has started to roll. How far it will travel or how large it will become no man knows. But this is certain—from time to time there will be other religious groups seeking to escape from the stigma of sectarianism and at the same time to enter into the richness of life which is possible in a larger body. The immediate path ahead in church union does not lie in the direction of "one big church," but rather in the coalescing of a variety of smaller groups into units which can function in an effective way.

Whether our churches are to form the nucleus for a larger body depends upon whether we conceive of ourselves as a cult or a fellowship. If every one who would go with us must conform to certain standards, if all of our churches are to be of one general pattern, then the way ahead is both lonely and futile. But if we choose to be an inclusive fellowship in which men of goodwill of all sorts and kinds can feel happy, into which others may come without turning their backs on their past or denying the views which once they held, then "no man knoweth what shall be."—Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty.

THE "AVERAGE GIRL" ANSWERS.

Nashville, Tenn.,
December 14, 1932.

MRS. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
Dear Mrs. Roosevelt:

An article in our morning paper saying that a statement of yours brought forth a "shocked protest" from a group of women leaders in Topeka, brings forth an equally shocked protest from me. You were quoted as saying that the average girl of today faces the problem of "learning very young how much she can drink of such things as whiskey and gin, and sticking to the proper quantity."

If you have been correctly quoted you surely do not know the "average girl of today." I would not undertake to inform you were I not "an average girl of today."

I am 18 years of age, and was graduated from a standard high school a little more than a year ago, and I am now attending the Nashville Business College. I cannot remember one instance when I have seen a girl of my own age under the influence of liquor, and I can remember seeing but three boys of my own age intoxicated, or even "drinking." I am a member of no dry organization. I am no prig. I am merely an "average girl," who is indignant at hearing girls accused of something of which they are not guilty.

Drinking and such things went out of style with the "post war" group of young people. Drinking and many other things of which we are accused are frightfully old-fashioned. The young people of today are interested in athletics and many other things that require a strong body, a clear brain, steady nerve and quick thinking, and all of these things drink destroys.

The girls and boys of today enjoy sports and games that challenge the mind. Girls of today are going into the business field because they like it. You cannot be successful in the business field if you are in the habit of drinking. No stenographer can take dictation or do typing who has a "hang-over" headache, nor can she perform many other duties well. Our pride makes us want to do things well.

It is true that in some groups in thickly populated sections, in some large cities, in some communities, such conditions as you spoke of do exist—but you said "average."

Some wet agitators have said they want legal liquor for the sake of the young people—that they are drinking any and everything now—that at least it would be pure if it were legal, government-inspected liquor. Let me tell you—we don't need liquor for the sake of the young people. We don't even like the taste of it. We don't like the effects it produces. If the older people want it, let them say so; but they should at least have the courage to say THEY want it, and not try to hide behind a false statement that it is for our sakes. If we, the young people, were allowed to vote on the question, the proposition to legalize alcoholic beverages would be defeated by an overwhelming majority. If the people of voting age can withstand the wet wave just long enough for us, the "average" boys and girls, to get our vote, you may be sure that alcoholic beverages will never again be legalized. We can't afford to hazard our future for drink. We do not want it.

You don't know the "average girl," Mrs. Roosevelt. To get the average you must take all of us the country over, and doing that you will find that we may not be saying much, but we have our opinions—and they are NOT in favor of legalizing alcoholic beverages, and they are not in favor of the illegal stuff used now. No, the "average girl" does not have to learn how much she can drink, and she doesn't keep within that quantity because there is no need. We do not drink the stuff at all.

Sincerely yours,
OSTA M. UNDERWOOD.

The above printed open letter to Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt was written by Osta M. Underwood, an 18-year-old student in Nashville Business College, Nashville, Tenn. In a note to the American Issue, Miss Underwood says:

"I cannot hope for my letter as wide publicity as Mrs. Roosevelt's statement received. I beg that you will help voice the protest of the "average girl" of the United States by giving this space in your paper."—From the Baltimore Southern Methodist.

Last year the United States Government deduced $4,863,300 from the tax levied on the sale of playing cards. The amount was a considerable increase over the previous year.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

During the past two weeks four of the Suffolk Churches have been in the midst of protracted meetings. The First Baptist, the West End Baptist, the Oxford M. E. Church, South, and the Christian Church have sponsored these meetings. The preacher at the Suffolk Christian Church was Rev. O. D. Poythress, of South Norfolk.

The meetings closed Friday night. About forty-five new members are expected to unite with the Christian Church during the next week. There were many re-consecrations during the services. The attendance was large, and the church was packed on the closing night. It was a great meeting. A deep spiritual interest prevailed from the first service, and was increased as the meetings continued.

Rev. O. D. Poythress is an interesting and effective pastor-evangelist. He has had much experience in this kind of Christian work, and his sermons and personal appeals were much enjoyed by the large congregations. He is a real gospel preacher of the Word. His simple and abiding faith in Jesus Christ and the Bible is soul-inspiring and uplifting. It is refreshing to hear a preacher with real convictions about the Christian life. His experience has been enriched by many personal contacts with people in spiritual distress. He speaks out of some of these experiences in a very effective way. Wherever he goes with his message congregations are impressed by the sincerity and the earnestness of this man of God.

The Christian Church at South Norfolk is a monument to his faith, his untiring energy and his deep consecration. He has done a marvelous work there for the Christian Church and the kingdom of God. It is unfortunate that the church at South Norfolk is greatly handicapped by the debt incurred when the great church building was erected a few years ago. But as conditions improve, it is believed that the debt will be paid, and the work of the church will be greatly advanced when that is done.

A great revival of religion is the need of the church today. Something is wrong on the inside of church members when they will attend a Sunday ball game and not go to church Sunday night. Sabbath observance will never be in accordance with the spirit of the Ten Commandments until the church is moved with a spiritual revival of intense Christianity. When the heart of the church is motivated by a supreme love for God many of the legal questions will settle themselves. A person who loves God supremely will respect the law of God and the law of the land. And a church member who is healthy and active will be compelled by his love for Jesus Christ to respect the Sabbath day and keep it holy.

When a community experiences a real revival of religion, church attendance is always increased. Contributions for church expenses and benevolences also express the renewed sense of personal responsibility in the matter of stewardship. The churches of Suffolk have been enriched by these revival meetings, and many people have found a new joy in the fellowship of the people of God.

It is time for all Christians to pray for a revival. "Lord, send us a revival, and begin in me," is a good model for a modern prayer. The church needs money, but it needs a revival more than it needs money. What is true of the church is true also of many individuals in the church. Will you pray that God may send upon the churches of America a great spiritual revival? Evangelistic preaching and evangelistic praying will do much to bring this desired blessing upon the nation. The pulpits of America can be a mighty power in this direction. What is the response?

I. W. JOHNSON.

A CHURCH CHALLENGE

I have always liked a challenge. Whenever I am confronted with a task that demands my best, if that task be worthy and worthwhile, as a rule, it gets my best; my best thought, my best efforts and my best support. When Elon College was first organized, it was a new adventure on the part of the Church. Naturally, it attracted attention, called for and received the interest of the Church far and near. Everybody felt that at last the Christian Church had launched a program that would mean advancement and growth. These expectations were worthy and right. Today the College is not a new proposition for our people—we have had it for more than forty years.

At this particular time, however, it constitutes a challenge to the Church. Today, I was walking through the buildings with one of the most loyal members of the Christian Church and one who is immensely interested in Elon College. As we were completing the rounds, she remarked that it would be too bad for the Church to lose Elon College. Another said it would simply be a tragedy, and it would. I find myself wondering how we could lose the College and what would be the result if we did. And further, I am wondering what per cent of our people have already lost the College. When they cease to think of the College or to support it in a very definite way, it is gone from them. There isn't any question but that Elon College today constitutes a very definite challenge to our people, to the entire membership of the Congregational and Christian Churches. It is a challenge to our loyalty. The great spirits of our Church in former years, almost without exception, gave of their time, service and money that the College might be. They established and supported the College—not for themselves and families, alone, but for us and for all who were to come after them.

Had they thought for a moment that we would not take up the task and carry on when they were compelled to lay it down, they would never have built. They had faith in themselves and faith in us who were to come after them, consequently they built and supported Elon.

I don't know what your intentions are but as for me, I shall endeavor to keep faith with the dead—not for the benefit of the dead—but for the encouragement and help of the living. The College is also a challenge to our generosity. It was never intended to be self-supporting—no college is. Every college today receives its support from endowments, contributions, tuition, etc. Where the endowment is not large, which is the case with Elon College, and where the income from tuition is necessarily limited, it means that the college must draw heavily upon the generosity of its constituency for its support.

Today Elon College is calling to every member of the Church, every Alumnus and every friend for their support. It needs that you shall speak well of it—that you shall influence others to cast their lot with it, but it also means that you should give of your means. We are in great need—if you knew the extent of our needs, there isn't any doubt but that you would be willing to divide a bit with the College—that those who carry on for its success, might be encouraged in their efforts and sacrifices.

Just now letters are going out from the office to a large number of the friends and supporters of Elon College, asking for a very limited contribution—just enough to manifest your interest and to convince us that you really care. As you receive your letter, won't you read it through carefully, and then prayerfully follow the instructions contained therein, that the College, our Church Institution, may continue its program of instruction and service to the young men and women of our Church and through them to the Church and to the world at large. If you do not receive your letter, will you please forward to the College a minimum contribution of $3.00? This is a small amount, but if the 5,000 requested to contribute will respond, it will mean success for the College.

The College is also a challenge to our sacrificial spirit. Christianity is ours—Christianity together with its lessons and benefits is ours because of sacrifice. God gave—gave a sacrificial gift that the Kingdom might be planted in the hearts of men. Christ gave—gave His own life that we might have life—even the most abundant life. There could never have been any salvation without sacrifice, but there can be no real Christianity separate and apart from sacrifice. God has proven His love for the world and for us by sacrifice—we demonstrate our affections for Him on the same principle. If we all would sacrifice for our Church and for the Institutions of the Church, there would be no question about its growth and development, and our College would be safe.

Elon College constitutes a challenge to the Church—to its loyalty, its generosity and its sacrificial spirit. It is my hope and prayer that we may accept the challenge and demonstrate in a convincing way our ability to meet this challenge in every particular.

Only a few more weeks and Commencement will be here. May we hear from the membership of the Church and the friends of the College before our 1932-1933 session closes.

I thank you!

HUNTING GOLD FOR GOD AND GOVERNMENT.

By ARCH C. CREE.

If our Baptist people will respond seriously to the appeal for old gold, silver and platinum they will accomplish a great thing for our God and for our government. The human impulse is to treat such a matter very lightly. When the plan was first presented to me and I was asked my opinion of the effort to gather up old watch cases, watch chains, scarf pins, fobs, cuff links, brooches, pins, spectacle rims, gold plate and other fragments with the precious metals in them my first impulse was to say that I thought it a rather cheap way in which to finance any part of the work of the kingdom of the King of Kings. Some of the expressions that came to my mind were: "Chicken Feed," "Peanut Business," "Rummage Sale," etc., but:

My Opinion Changed.

As I became better informed, I changed my opinion and I gradually realized that this "Old Gold," or "Crucible" plan is a really fine opportunity to do a big thing for our God and a big thing for our government. In fact it has become a truly BIG BUSINESS. Great corporations all over the country are engaged in the same hunt for old gold. The government needs and is calling for gold. And God himself in other days called upon his people to lay upon his altar their treasures of gold and silver and other precious materials for the support of his work.

So I became ashamed of my own conceited, supercilious attitude to the plan and placed a heavy question mark against the "high-hatting" of those brethren who deemed the effort inconformable to and incompatible with their sense of dignity. If it were a "small business," we might remind ourselves that we are taught to use the "foolish," the "weak," the "base," the "despised," things against their opposites and we are taught not to despise "the day of small things." But it is a BIG BUSINESS. My one fear of failure in the effort is that our people, especially our leaders, will not take the matter seriously. But, as I have campaigned North Carolina with Secretary Huggins in the promotion of the plan, I have seen group after group enter the conferences with skepticism and wind up with a vision of unlimited possibilities of the plan and an enthusiastic determination to do their utmost to make it a success.

Big Business is Interested.

Great corporations, like the Crucible Service Company of Philadelphia and the Gold and Platinum Company of San Francisco, count this business big enough to pay the salaries and traveling expenses of a staff of men and women to scour the country and solicit from house to house in their search for old gold and other precious metals. Twice within the past year our city has been canvassed by such people offering to buy old gold.

If these great business concerns value so highly the opportunity and worth of such an effort, surely our Baptist people should also value the plan and cooperate in the fullest to make it a success in these crucial days when the needs are so great and the cash is so scarce. May this not be a providential opportunity for some of our people who are lacking in money to lay on God's altar some treasures that money cannot buy but which they will cheerfully give to the cause of Jesus Christ? I know a number of such cases.

Our Government Needs Gold.

An outstanding banker, not a Baptist, said the other day, "You Baptists are to be congratulated on the fact that you have pioneered in anticipating the greatest need of our government today and that you have inaugurated such a splendid plan for the conversion of gold, silver and platinum, which can go farther toward strengthening the financial position and credit of the United States than any other single plan yet proposed."

All of the gold gathered by our Baptist people, when refined, will be sold to the treasury of the United States. Our government is not only calling in all gold coin and bullion but is anxious to purchase every possible ounce of gold from every other source so as to swell and strengthen its reserve.

David A. Lunden-Moore, of New York City, in March 12th issue of the New York Times, makes this direct appeal: "Let us at once bring our gold jewelry to the treasury and convert it into coin. Old rings, antiquated mountings, bracelets, chains, pins, etc., are of no practical value to the average person. Yes, there is sentiment, but why not convert sentiment to patriotism?"

The United Press Association, under date of February 27th, sent out a three-hundred-word wire to the papers of the nation emphasizing the need and value of a nation-wide effort to gather up the old gold. It said in part, "The world's greatest gold mine is not under the ground but is in the drawers and trunks in the homes of the American people. Experts figure that there is probably a billion dollars in gold lying idle in the homes of America. The real gold hunters of today are of the type called business men.

Shovels, picks and pans are not needed. Pay sand is in the homes, your home, any home. The business of reclaiming such gold amounts to a hundred million dollars a year throughout the country." Why this prominence to the effort to gather old gold? Why this emphasis on its value at this time? Our government needs the gold to meet the present emergency.

Let Us Take It Seriously.

In many churches our Baptist leadership is pressing this matter enthusiastically with a fine prospect of substantial success. In other churches the leaders are doing practically nothing to foster the movement. Surely, some leaders are "asleep at the switch" and utterly blind to the double value at this time of the "Old Gold" or "Crucible Plan." Let us raise a hue and cry for the "Giving of Gold to Our God and Our Government." It is not too late. There is yet time to promote the plan in a great way and achieve success. If you are interested, and the plan is not being promoted in your church, write to Mrs. Edna Harris or Mr. M. A. Huggins, the Biblical Recorder Building, Raleigh, for literature and instructions. Let the pastor present it to his congregation for two consecutive Sundays. Let the president of the W. M. S. enlist the women of the church to search their homes, for they know where these trinkets are. Get a piece of black velvet or other dark cloth, pin or stitch on this cloth a full assortment of things the people might give. Display this before the congregation (it is the best half of any speech on the subject) as you announce and stress the plan. Get the idea over thoroughly to the people. Then announce a Sunday, or perhaps better two Sundays, on which the gifts of the people will be received. You will probably be astonished at the result. Over a hundred rings, thirty watch cases and a bushel of other trinkets were gathered in on a single Sunday at the First Church, Knoxville, Tenn. LET US TAKE THE MATTER SERIOUSLY AND DO OUR BEST FOR GOD AND GOVERNMENT.—Biblical Recorder.

PRAYER.

Blest harbor of souls, the Church of our Lord! Her portals beckon, her shelter is secure. Some day, O righteous Author and Preserver, the Church shall possess the earth; if we cared enough, that day might be now. Great God, our Father, make people know that the Church's sustenance, its expansion, its triumph, is in human hands and that if truly we desire to build the Church, thou wilt build our bodies into fitting and able instruments for the holy service. In Jesus' name.—Amen. S.

THEY HAVE NO SUNDAY.

(Miss Marie Crosby, missionary on furlough from West Africa, speaking recently in Woman's Missionary meetings in North Carolina, was asked if they had any Sunday in West Africa, or any day of rest or worship period that corresponded to our Sabbath. Her reply was that there was no day to correspond to our Sabbath, either for rest or worship among the natives. In further reply to this question, Miss Crosby sends the following as to Nature Worship and Taboo, by W. C. Willoughby, which reveals that they have no Sabbath there.):

Most Bantu tribes observe a lunar "sabbath," though some keep one day of the lunar month and some another. Many tribes hallow the day following the evening on which the new moon is first seen; but some keep the fifth day after its appearance, some the eighth; some the ninth. This perplexing variation of lunar "sabbath" is particularly noticeable in the Mashona group of tribes, and may be due to the composite nature of that group.

It would be interesting to discover the origin and significance of these sacred days, but that is a difficult region to explore. The Becwana say that the crops would not ripen if any work were done in the lands on a taboo day—a belief that is shared by most Bantu. To understand such a notion it is necessary to remember that the ripening of crops is regarded as a boon from the spirit world, and that the dynastic spirits are tutelary deities of the gardens and fountains. Some Mashona say that they observe their particular day of the lunar month because that is the day on which all great chiefs die; which may possibly explain why the ninth day of the new moon is called Mgari's "sabbath." Other Mashona attribute their new moon "sabbaths" to a command received by their ancestors from some evil spirits, whom they fear to offend. Fear of offending spirits, good or bad, is the usual Bantu motive for respecting sacred days; but the fact that the Mashona call these spirits "evil spirits" suggests that their date of the lunar "sabbath" is older than their occupation of the country, and that their conquering forefathers feared to desecrate a day that had already become sacred to the spirits of some dispossessed dynasty.

All these "sabbaths" are "unlucky days"; but that may mean nothing more than the belief that the spirits will show their displeasure by spoiling any enterprise that violates these sacred days, and that the safe course, therefore, is to do nothing of any importance.

THE CIRCLE OF PRAYER.

The monthly program of the Woman's Missionary Society had been carried out by a little handful of women who had gathered at the appointed place of meeting. Letters had been read from missionaries from various parts of the world, telling of their work already accomplished and of the desire to do more. Some had told of the wonderful change that had taken place in the hearts and lives of men and women when they had heard the gospel of the Son of God, and of his power to redeem and save.

The program seemed to link our lives with those whom we had read about, both missionaries and native Christians, and as we joined hands for the closing prayer it seemed as though our little circle touched other circles making a complete contact. As each one prayed, we felt the Spirit's power, for each prayed from her heart, and the petitions as they were voiced, presented a different request so that all parts of the great mission field were embraced.

We were only a small part of the great circle of praying women who encircle the globe and reach to all nations. It takes all the prayers of all the circles to make a complete prayer, and our little group was a part of the great circle of prayer and our prayers help to make up the complete prayer that Christ's kingdom may be extended throughout the whole earth.

There are many small societies and discouragement will sometimes creep in because so few are interested, yet we need to press on even though results may seem so small. Using Edward Everett Hale's words, as our watch-word: "I am only one, but I am one; I cannot do everything, but still I can do something; and because I cannot do everything I will not refuse to do the something that I can do."

God does not require us to do great things, but he does expect us to be faithful to the trust he has given us. Faithfulness in prayer and in missionary endeavor, and in so doing strengthening the ones who are pressing the battle on the missionary frontier. Some day the battle will be over and the spoils of the war will be shown and those who have tarried by the stuff will share with those who have been at the battle front. W.

A PROGRAM FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Our Congregational Christian work among the American Indians centers at Elbowoods, N. D., Santee, Neb., and Kinder, La.

These next programs will center around these three points.

Take the time and one cent necessary to write a post card to Miss Helen Frances Smith, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York City, asking her to send you all the free pamphlet material on the American Indian, especially "Santee Normal Training School," Heroic Achievements and, Prophetic Programs, "A Lost Tribe," "First Americans," "Indians Who Have Made Good," "The Fort Berthold Mission and Its Work," "Why They Did Not Vanish." If you want to spend more time and do some serious studying use "Indian Americans" (60c), by Winifred Hulbert, together with one of The Leader's Manuals—one by Frederick L. Fay, for young people (50c), and one—"Friendship Fires," by Winifred Hulbert (35c), for junior high school young people.

WORSHIP SERVICE.

Call to Worship—"I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from the Lord which made heaven and earth."

Hymn—"For the Beauty of the Earth."

Scripture—II. Timothy 2:3-15; Eph. 6:10-17.

Prayer—"Lord of the Mountain," (used by the young men of the Navajo tribe.)

"Lord of the mountain,
Hear a young man's prayer.
Hear a prayer for cleanness.
Keeper of the strong rain
Drumming on the mountain;
Lord of the small rain
That restores the earth in newness,
Keeper of the clean rain,
Hear a prayer for the wholeness.
Keeper of the paths of men,
Hear a prayer for straightness,
Hear a prayer for courage.
Lord of the thin Peak,
Keeper of the headlands,
Keeper of the strong rocks,
Hear a prayer for staunchness,
O Lord and spirit of the mountain."

Leader—Our program today is based on Santee Normal Training School, where boys and girls of several Indian tribes who were traditional enemies, learn to live in friendship.

..... will tell us about Stephen Riggs, the founder of Santee.

In 1837 Stephen Riggs and his bride made their slow and perilous journey to Hazelwood, Minn., to join Samuel and Gideon Pond, who three years before had established a Mission among the Dakota Indians.

The first Christian Church was organized at Lacquiparte in 1835.

During the War Between the States, the Indians were incited to rebellion and drunk with whiskey sold them by a white man, four of the young men killed several families. Like a spark in tinder the rebellion burst into flame in 1862, and the Riggs family and their friends were forced to flee. Food was scarce, shoes wore out and they never knew when a bullet from ambush might lay them low.

After the uprising four hundred Indians were imprisoned and their women and children sent to Fort Snelling. Dr. Riggs and Dr. Williamson made the most of the opportunity and went among the hundreds of Indian prisoners with the gospel message. Many were baptized.

In 1866, the prisoners were released and located at Santee Agency, where the Pilgrim Church was organized and where in 1872 the school program of the Mission was started and together with the religious program fostered by Stephen Riggs and his sons, Thomas and Alfred.

During these years Dr. Riggs and Dr. Williamson, with the help of a French and Indian trader, worked on a translation of the scriptures into the Dakota language.

Leader: will tell us about the school in general and what it is trying to do. (See leaflet, "Santee Normal Training School," for material.)

Maybe you are wishing for a few statistics about us. We have a boarding department of nearly a hundred boys and girls from the fifth grade through the twelfth. All of them have some understanding of English before they come to us, but for some the English comprehension is low and that makes teaching harder.

Most of our pupils belong to the Sioux tribe, but we have Mandanes, Crees, Rees, Santees, Assiniboines and Grosventres also. Once in a while a bit of old tribal feeling crops out, but mostly we live a very peaceful, contented life.

In the twelve buildings on our campus we have twenty-two adult workers. The campus is about two miles from the Missouri River not far from where it forms the bend that makes it become a part of the boundary between South Dakota and Nebraska. Our nearest town is Springfield, S. D. (I can see its lights at night from the window of my room), but because there is no bridge or ferry here we have to go twenty miles to get there. The easiest town for us to reach is Niobrara, Neb., which is fifteen miles south and west, and is on the railroad.

Leader: will tell us about the girls' activities at Santee:

During the school year a girl student is loaned as assistant in the doctor's office for two hours a day, six days in the week. This service is styled "detail" and changes each month. Thus nine different girls who have indicated some special interest in nursing have an opportunity to learn something of the care of the sick. And it has happened that on three occasions patients in the community who have been sick in bed have been willing to accept nursing care from these inexperienced girls under my supervision. Mothers with young babies have been most cooperative in bringing their infants to class in the medical office for demonstration and practice nursing. Thus each month the class in infant hygiene has had a live subject to work with and has learned from actual experience how to weigh, to dress and undress, to determine temperature, to bathe and to otherwise care for a young baby. We have tried to instill into the minds of these prospective young mothers some of the essential rights of every child—a bed of its own to sleep in, regular habits of eating, undisturbed sleep, a daily bath. In the classroom we have for demonstration purposes an inexpensive bed for a young baby. It is made out of a carton, is light to handle and can be set on a table or a couple of chairs in almost any simple home. The home economics department is cooperating with us in making for demonstration purposes a baby's layette.

Leader: will tell us about the boys' activities at Santee:

Our printing department is now printing five papers: The Iapi Aaye, an Indian newspaper, edited by Dr. Riggs; The Word Carrier, an English paper, edited by Dr. Riggs; The Santee Arrow, an English paper, edited by the high school class in news writing. Then we print two commercial papers: The Rosebud, for the government Indian School at Mission, S. D.; and Anapo for the Episcopal people at Mission, S. D.

We print for the school: school checks, receipts, deposit slips, letterheads, bill heads, posters, tickets, programs, the school catalogue, and numerous small jobs that come in.

During the summer we printed 3,000 folders for the American Missionary Association, and were more than pleased when we got a repeat order during the past month.

I have two classes in printing—one from 8 to 12 A. M., and one from 1 to 4 P. M. There are about twelve students in each course. Two of the boys are working on the linotype in the morning and are making good progress. Others have been doing very well as composers and with their work on the presses.

The material for this program was taken from leaflets and letters supplied by the Project Secretary of the Home Boards.

PRISCILLA CHASE.

A PROGRAM FOR JUNIORS.

The theme of this program is probably not one that will be suggested by the children as a "find-out" topic, though its close connection with health and the work of the hospitals is very apparent. Since sanitation and public health are becoming increasingly an important part of the work of the hospitals it seems wise to include it in this series of programs.

Begin by talking with the children about health. Why are we careful to keep our food clean? Why do we wash our hands before eating? Have individual towels? Screen the windows? (To prevent the spread of germs, to keep out the flies which carry disease germs.) Bring out and emphasize the fact that cleanliness does as much as anything to prevent sickness.

Shina is just beginning to realize the necessity for keeping clean in order to prevent "summer sickness" (probably typhoid).

The story today is of a girl who did her part in helping to make China clean. Tell, "Cleaning Up China," adapted from a "Here and There" story, by Priscilla Holton, printed elsewhere in this issue.

Plan to make the next meeting a Mother's Meeting, as it is the last in the series of programs on China. Before the next meeting have the children plan what they are to do. Detailed suggestions will be given next month. Be sure and write for an address to which the Friendship Scrapbook may be sent.

PRISCILLA CHASE.

NEWS ITEM.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of Bethlehem Church, Nansemond Co., Va., held its regular monthly meeting, March 15th, at the church, with 29 members and several visitors present. The meeting was called to order by the President, Mrs. J. M. Byrd. Devotionals were led by Mrs. C. W. King, Spiritual Life Superintendent, and the lesson from Hebrews was taught by the pastor, Rev. R. E. Brittle.

At the close of the first quarter of the year, they divided the society into three circles, ten members in each circle. These circles are now known as the Staley, Brittle, and Barrett Circles, with Mrs. J. C. Taylor, Mrs. C. W. King, and Mrs. J. E. Harris, as leaders. It was the object of these circles to see that their part of the conference apportionment was provided for. The result was announced at the March meeting, which was the close of the second quarter. $99.50 was paid into the treasury, compared with $9.58 the first quarter. Eight new members have been added to the roll and a new circle has been formed with Mr. Brittle as leader.

Each circle meets monthly in the homes, and uses the Study Book, "Lady Fourth Daughter," as the program.

This society seems to be getting at the root of things and are really accomplishing much. They are a live group of women and are working with a great deal of enthusiasm. Let us hear from you again, Bethlehem. MRS. W. M. JAY.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

RECOMMENDATIONS FROM THE WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA YOUTH FELLOWSHIP.

When the young people of Western North Carolina Conference met in their first annual week-end conference at Ramseur Christian Church recently, they divided themselves into groups for discussion of specific types of work. Each group made recommendations to the conference as follows:

Devotional Life.

I. We recommend that the young people of our local churches use these methods to arouse an interest in worship:

- (a) Seek a clearer understanding of the meaning of worship.
- (b) Learn to plan and conduct an interesting worship service.
- (c) Strive for variety in worship services first of all.
- (d) Each young person should keep a scrap-book of material for worship services.
- (e) Seek a clearer understanding of the meaning of hymns.
- (f) Create the proper atmosphere for worship by using:

1. Soft music.
2. A verse of a hymn by the choir or soloist.
3. Some picture around which the worship service has been built.
4. Build the service around one theme.
5. The proper attitude on the part of the leader.

(g) By taking advantage of the opportunities to conduct devotional services in the young people's societies, Sunday Schools, weekly prayer meetings and the church services.

(h) By conducting the devotional at Christmas time, Easter and at Easter sunrise services, Children's Day, Mother's Day, and Vesper Services.

II. Program arrangement:

(a) In arranging worship programs the music, talks, stories, scripture and prayer should be arranged properly. The message that the program is to present and the materials available should determine the arrangement of the elements.

(b) Instrumental music, vocal solos and group hymn singing may be used as a prelude, during silent meditation, and in connection with individual prayer.

(c) Individual, group and unison prayers may be used. Memorized prayers (as the Lord's Prayer and others taken from the Bible), prayer hymns, sentence prayers may also be used.

(d) Every effort possible should be made to teach our young people to pray by:

1. Praying within their own group.
2. Praying within their own family.
3. Praying when alone, realizing the value of quiet hour observance.

(e) Everyone who is expected to offer prayer should be notified in time to make proper preparation.

(f) Since hymns play an important part in a worship service, more thought should be given to their selection. The hymns should be in keeping with the theme in both music and words. Try to realize the meaning and feel the words, and have the pianist play the hymns to time. When old hymns grow monotonous, learn new ones. It will add much to the meaning of the hymns if the story as to how they came to be written is told before singing them.

(g) Individual, responsive and unison scripture reading may be used.

(h) Dramatization of hymns, scripture, stories, talks and poetry may also be used in program building. (The field of material is inexhaustible. The important thing is to know what to leave out and what to use. Be sure that every item contributes something.)

Service and Publications.

We recommend that:

1. Every young people's society enroll as a World Service School and receive the World Service Material for their programs.

2. The young people spend a block of time in studying some book like "The Young Revolutionist" and "Indian Americans."

3. A copy of the Pilgrim Highroad and the Young People's Bulletin be used in every society.

4. Every young people's group will render service to themselves if they will secure subscriptions to our church papers: THE CHRISTIAN SUN, The Missionary Herald and the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty.

Moral Standards.

Moral values abide, but the standards change from one generation to another, and it is difficult to define moral standards because of the difference in training, capacity, opportunity and families, but we all seek the good, as we define good.

1. All standards can be tested by their capacity to enlighten the mind, protect the health and develop the soul.

2. Morals call for clean and wholesome entertainments and recreation, which elevates the mind, body and soul. Moral life is influenced by literature, so therefore, we should be careful of our type of literature.

3. We believe there should be a single standard of morals rather than a dual standard.

4. We believe that the recognition of creative values rather than competition and possession will be the means of giving us a standard of morals worthy of striving for.

Leadership Training.

1. How may I become a leader in my own church?

- (a) Better cooperation.
- (b) Put Christ first.
- (c) Study needs of your own group.
- (d) Be less critical.

2. How can our meetings be made more interesting?

- (a) Get good literature, such as, Christian Endeavor World or The Pilgrim Highroad.
- (b) Let the subject come out of your own group.
- (c) Prepare the topic ahead of time.
- (d) Have a varied program.

Development of the Topic—The following outline is suggested:

Additional Hymns—"My Master Was a Worker," "Somebody Did a Good Deed," "Blest Be the Tie that Binds."

This topic can be developed to the best advantage through discussion. As a background for the discussion the following short talks are suggested:

1. Ask an elderly person, probably a grandmother or grandfather of a member of the group, to speak on the topic: "Home Life When I Was Young."

2. Ask another person, about the average age of the parents of members of the group, to speak on the same topic. The following aspects of home life should be noted in these talks: Home surroundings, home interests, entertainment in the home, the attitude of children and parents toward each other, including problems of freedom and obedience, relationship of parents to each other, how and by whom the finances of the family were regulated, and the place of religion.

3. Ask some very capable young person, or preferably a mature person with a young person's viewpoint, to speak on the topic: "How the Changes in Our Social Order Have Affected the Home Life." Follow these talks with an open discussion led by some person who understands the causes back of problems of modern home life and can lead the group to helpful, constructive conclusions.

Some of the most universal problems of youth today are associated with the home. We are living in a rapidly changing world. Social, economic, and religious standards are changing so rapidly that maladjustments are bound to exist wherever two generations are attempting to live together in the close relationships of home life. If the discussion for the evening is to be of any

JESUS FACES THE CROSS.

LESSON VI—MAY 7, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "And it came to pass, when the days were well-nigh come that he should be received up, he steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem."—Luke 10:32-45.

LESSON TEXT: Mark 10:32-45.

The golden text tells us that "He steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem." He knew what awaited him there. In fact he told his disciples as they were going along that he would be delivered unto the chief priests and the scribes, who would condemn him to death and deliver him to the Gentiles who would mock him, and scourge him, and spit upon him, and kill him. And yet as they went along, "He went before them." He was in the lead here as always. No matter how rough or rugged the road of duty, he would walk in it. He was committed to do his Father's will. He was willing to pay the cost of doing what he knew he ought to do. There was no self-pity in that man as he went along that road. There was no spirit of martyrdom. There was no spirit of rebellion or of dumb resignation. For the joy that was set before him, he endured the cross and despised the shame.

We need more of the Master's quiet spirit of heroism and devotion to the will of God, regardless of the cost. Just how much is the average Christian in America today willing to suffer for his convictions, and how much is he willing to pay for his faith? How many of us are walking uncomplainingly in the path of duty, regardless of ridicule, persecution, personal loss, sacrifice? We Christians need a baptism of the Holy Spirit so that by our quiet courage the world may take knowledge of us as it did of his first disciples, that we have been with Jesus.

It is interesting to note how the predictions of Jesus were fulfilled. The scribes and the chief priests did condemn him to death and deliver him to the Gentiles (the Romans), and they did mock him, and scourge him, and spit upon him, and kill him. And he did rise again the third day.

"And Jesus went before them." He is our leader. But he does not send us. He goes before us and with us. We can never quite catch up with him, but he is always close enough to us to walk with us.

How human the disciples were. Here was James talking to them about his suffering and his death, and even as he talked two of his most intimate disciples were thinking about places of pre-eminence. They wanted spiritual privileges without being willing to pay the price of those privileges. They are typical of the large number of Jesus' disciples who want the blessings of religion and of life without being willing to pay the price involved. God does not pour out his blessings, that is his spiritual blessings, indiscriminately. If a man has spiritual power, it is because he has paid the price thereof. If a man has godly character it is because he has won it. If a man has a choice place in the spiritual realm it is because he has earned it. There are too many of us who ask God to give us whatsoever we ask him without being willing to pay the price of earning it. If we are to have the crown we must endure the cross. If we are to reign with Christ we must suffer with him. In one sense, a man is as good as he wills to be. Again, if we do not have spiritual blessings it is because we do not will to have them. God will give his Holy Spirit to those who sincerely ask for him.

"Whosoever will be great among you"—ah, how we would like to be great according to the standards of the world. For the world usually calls those great who have wealth or position or power or prestige—those who rule. But Jesus says that God's standard of greatness is the willingness to serve, to be the minister to others, to be last. He that is greatest or chiefest is he that is servant of all.

And this said, Jesus applies it even to himself—God's anointed, the Lord of Life. The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many. There is something absolutely unique in the world in the scene recorded in John's gospel, where Jesus, knowing that he had come from God and goeth to God, girded himself with a towel and got down and washed his disciples' feet. Can you imagine Caesar or Alexander or Napoleon or Mussolini doing that? And yet there was no cringing spirit in Jesus as he did it. There was something royal and regal about it. We have much to learn from Jesus as touching this matter of service, not only as individuals but as a race. Do you know of anybody who thinks that because he knows more or has more than someone else, he is superior to the master of others? Jesus would insist that the more one has or knows the more of a servant he should be. And do you know of anyone who thinks that the white race is destined for supremacy and mastery? Jesus would say that the only claim that the white race has to mastery would rest on its willingness to serve the other races.

We talk about Bolsheviks and radicals today. We need only to study Jesus' words and to study his acts to see that he was the world's real radical.

value, each person participating, regardless of age, must face the problems frankly and sincerely, laying aside prejudices and preconceived opinions.

Home life ought to be happy. The benediction of Christ on every home to which he is welcomed as an abiding guest is: "Peace be to this house." While perfection of happiness is unattainable in this world, rich, deep, heartfeeling happiness certainly may be, and ought to be, attained.

Yet it requires wise building and delicate care to make a home truly and perfectly happy and free from problems. Home happiness is the incense that rises from the altar of mutual self-sacrifice.

It may be said, in a word, that Christ himself is the one great, blessed secret of all home happiness. Christ at the marriage altar; when the baby is born; Christ when the baby dies; Christ in the days of plenty; Christ in the pinching times; Christ in all the household life; Christ in the sad hour when farewells must be spoken, when one goes on before, and the other stays, bearing the burden of an unshared life. Christ is the secret of happy home life. E. R.

A copy of the Psalms was left in the home of a man in Burma many years ago. It was a translation into his own language. He began to read, but before he had finished he resolved to cast away his idols. Then for twenty years he worshipped the eternal God revealed to him in the Psalms. He used the fifty-first Psalm as his daily prayer. Then came along a missionary who gave him a New Testament. His joy on reading was wonderful. He said: "Twenty years I have been walking by starlight and now I see the sun."

What more simple, what more profound, what more able to make a man wise unto salvation than the New Testament translated in the native languages of the nations!

"I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord."—Psalm 116:13.

MONDAY.

MOTHER'S WEEK.

"She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness.

"Her children rise up and call her blessed."
Prov. 31: 27, 28.

My mother is my heart's ideal
Of all that's dear and good.
Her life is radiant with love
And gracious womanhood.
She's sympathetic, gentle and kind;
She understands a lad;
And O, she's just the truest friend
A fellow ever had!

My mother never turns me down
Or fails me when in need;
To sacrifice herself and serve
Her loved ones, is her creed.
She practices her faith in God
With joy and eagerness:
Her ministry's a miracle
Of sweet unselfishness.

My mother is my pal of pals;
She's all the world to me!
I owe her everything I am
And all I hope to be.
I want to live a life like hers,
And O, I want to prove Myself deserving of her faith
And worthy of her love!

—John H. Stiles, Jr.

Prayer—Our Father, we owe more to our mothers than we have been able to realize. "Thou couldst not be everywhere so thou didst make mothers." We pray for all mothers. We wish they all could be thy representatives in the bringing up of the generations. Hasten the time, O Lord, when this shall be.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

PARENTAL RESPONSIBILITY.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."—Prov. 22:6.

"The ways of the Lord are right, and the just shall walk in them."—Hosea 14:9.

There are little eyes upon you,
And they're watching night and day;
There are little ears that quickly
Take in every word you say;
There are little hands all eager
To do everything you do,
And a little boy that's dreaming
Of the day he'll be like you.

You're the little fellows' idol,
You're the wisest of the wise:
In his little mind about you
No suspicions ever rise;
He believes in you devoutly,
Holds that all you say and do,
He will say and do in your way,
When he's grown up just like you.

Oh, it sometimes makes me shudder,
When I hear my boy repeat
Some careless phrase I've uttered
In the language of the street;
And it sets my heart to grieving
When some little fault I see,
And I know beyond all doubting,
That he picked it up from me.

There's a wide-eyed little fellow,
Who believes you're always right,
And his ears are always open,
And he watches day and night;
You are setting an example,
Every day in all you do,
For the little boy who's waiting
To grow up to be like you.—Anon.

Prayer—Our Father, we pray not only for ourselves, but for all parents that they may realize thy Word, which teaches that good character is better than riches and honor. May the oncoming generation have purity of heart, nobleness of thought, grace of speech, and place their trust and their work in the Lord.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

MOTHER AND FUTURE MANHOOD.

"Thou compasseth my path."—Ps. 139:3.

"And that which ye have spoken in the ear in closets, shall be proclaimed on the housetops."—Luke 12:3.

The picture of a young mother all alone with her laughing babe is the best illustration of the meaning of this text. See it in her lap. The mother is fair, but the babe is fairer. She counts its fingers, pulls its toes, kisses its dimples, pats its pudgy sweet body, sounds the depths of its life with her eye and matches it with the skies and the hope of the great oncoming future. She helps it to stand. She coaxes it to walk. She teaches it to talk. She infects it with laughter. She bathes it with love. She tells it her secrets. She gives it its first thoughts and its first lessons of life. There is no other picture, no other vision, no other reality one half so fair.

From this mother this child gathers its strength, its beauty, its thoughts, its traits, its disposition, its every tendency, its faults and its charms. This is the Psalmist's picture of the tender care of God for men.—Thoughts from N. M. Waters.

Prayer—O Lord, may the spirit of true motherhood of all people be given us in thy name and may thy ways be our way. If we have strayed from thee, bring us back, and lead us in the way everlasting. In Christ's name, we ask it.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

A CHRISTIAN MOTHER.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."—Prov. 22:6.

We are told of a boy who because of his own wickedness, recklessness, and folly, was brought to a most abject and deplorable condition of barbarity. Later in life he was brought under the influence of a most influential clergyman, a man of devout piety and zeal for God, and under this influence he became a most influential clergyman of the Church of England.

This boy was John Newton. To whom did he owe his rescue and his goodness? We are told that he owed it to his mother. She had died when he was six years of age. But she was a godly woman and during these brief six years she had stored his mind with divine truth, and her earnest prayers for him had been registered with God. He never got rid of this training in all his profligacy. Whatever he did, mother's words thrust themselves upon his notice. And when at length his heart was softened, and his spirit bowed to the Lord, mother's words in the nursery, long years before, came sounding in his ears, as words of power, life, purity and salvation.

Prayer—Say the Lord's Prayer.

FRIDAY.

EVERY FAMILY ON EARTH.

(Eph. 3:14, 15.)

THE HAND THAT ROCKS THE CRADLE.

Blessings on the hand of woman!
Angels guard its strength and grace
In the palace, cottage, hovel—
Oh, no matter where the place!
Would that never storms assail it;
Rainbows ever gently curled—
For the hand that rocks the cradle
Is the hand that rules the world.

Infancy's the tender fountain:
Bowers may with beauty flow;
Mothers first to guide the streamlet,
From their souls unresting grow,

Grow on for good or evil—
Sunshine streamed or darkness hurled;
For the hand that rocks the cradle
Is the hand that rules the world.

Woman! How divine your mission,
Here upon your natal sod!
Keep, oh keep, the young heart open
Always to the breath of God!
All true trophies of the ages
Are from mother love imperaled;
For the hand that rocks the cradle
Is the hand that rules the world.

Blessing on the hand of woman!
Fathers, sons, and daughters cry;
And the sacred song is mingled
With the worship of the sky;
Mingles where no tempests darken,
Rainbows evermore are hurled—
For the hand that rocks the cradle
Is the hand that rules the world.

—William Ross Wallace.

Prayer—Our Father, we believe that the family is thy sanctuary. Give us a sense of thy presence in our home to secure innocence and holiness. May this sense come to every home. For Jesus' sake.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE GREATEST NEED.

"That he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his spirit in the inner man;

"That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith—to know the love of Christ—that ye may be filled with all the fulness of God."—Eph. 3:16-20.

Wescott's "Incarnation and Common Life," tells us that the incarnation of common life is "good mothers." The greatest need of every land is "good mothers." If they fail, the world fails in the same ratio to bring forth the manhood of the world which God is seeking to bring forth.

The aspect of world mothers, however, is most hopeful, for even those whom we place lowest are capable of every sacrifice to shield their children from bodily suffering.

If these mothers can feel that there are sicknesses of the soul which require the ministries of wise and tender affection, spiritual perils which need to be guarded against by their own watchful forethought, desire of the heart which craves the fulness of not merely human love, but divine protection, guidance, and holy purpose; the world will be brought nearer to consummation of our daily prayers for "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done, on earth as it is in heaven."

Prayer—O Lord, our God, who art able to do all things, we bring to thee the honor of our mothers this day, and we pray for that glory to come unto us and to all mothers.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

"THY WILL."

"Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."
Matt. 6:10.

Father, where'er my feet may stray,
Or whether in cloud or sun,
Still teach me trustingly to pray
"Thy will be done."

And if the darkness fill the night,
Whenever day its course has run;
Or whether gloom be mine, or light,
"Thy will be done."

I fain would by thy hand be led,
Till at the last, life's conflict won,
My trembling lips have dying said:
"Thy will be done."

And guided to the unseen land,
When earth is past and heaven begun;
In thine I fain would lay my hand:
"Thy will be done."

Father, I know that in thy care,
Are all my ways, till sets the sun:
Or teach me patiently to bear!
"Thy will be done."

—E. Norman Gunison.

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

LOVE, THE END OF THE CHARGE.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"Now the end of the charge is love out of a pure heart, and a good conscience and faith unfeigned."—I. Timothy 1:15.

Paul ought to have known. He had carried love into the laboratory of life and given it some real tests. He examined it as found in Moses. Lev. 19:18, "Thou shalt avenge not, nor bear any grudge . . . but thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Lev. 19:34, "The stranger that dwelleth with you shall be unto you as one born among you, and thou shalt love him as thyself." That would take a pure heart—"no grudge, no vengeance."

"And it came to pass that God did test Abraham, and said unto him . . . take now thy son, thine only son Isaac . . . and offer him as a burnt offering." That would take faith unfeigned. Paul had seen it bear such tests.

John 15:13, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." And Paul had seen it stand such tests as that, for that would be the answer of a good conscience.

I.—Love Out of a Pure Heart.

The pure heart? God in the heart. A heart centered upon God. A heart conscious of God's place in it. A heart with nothing in it opposing God. Seek ye first God! "Thou shalt love the Lord, thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind: this is the first and great commandment." And the second is like it, and any, and sundry following it, are like it. "Thou shalt love the Lord, thy God with all thy heart." Now Paul is writing to his young successor and giving the benefit of some of his laboratory work, and is saying: The end (summary) of my charge to you is love. And mark you, Timothy, it must be love out of a pure heart! There may be no impurities in the heart.

Fear is one of the heart's worst alloys. How it blights the best of graces! Fear withers love. Fear drives out hope. Fear poisons faith. "Fear always springs from ignorance," says Emerson. "Fear is the parent of cruelty," says Froude. Montaigne says, "The thing in all the world I am most afraid of is fear." God said to Abram, "Fear not, I am thy shield"; to Joseph, "Fear not to go down into Egypt"; to Moses, "Fear not"; to Joshua and the judges, "Fear not"; and to the prophets and to Paul, "Fear not." "There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear: because fear hath torment; he that feareth not is made perfect in love."

Paul is cautioning Timothy to have that primary and perfect love in God which gives a pure heart, in order that he may put his trust completely in God and fear no harm; not to fret nor worry, nor stagger nor stumble, but to learn in whatever state he finds himself, to have a perfect confidence in Christ Jesus.

The heart surrendered to God—"My son give me thine heart"—in perfect love and devotion to Him, is ready for duty toward man.

We come to the second test.

II.—Love out of a Good Conscience."

Paul proved love's purity by its attitude not only toward God, but also in its attitude toward people. He took it into the laboratory of living folks. He took his formula from Moses, made full in Jesus: Deut. 6:5, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might." Lev. 19:18, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Also see Matt. 22:37-39. Paul would test love, then, not only for its divine priority in God, but also for its duty toward the neighbor and the stranger, yea, even the enemy! A truly love-centered heart toward God would do its duty toward man.

A heart of purity toward God? Yea, and of clean hands toward man! "Let your love be without dissimulation. Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good. Be kindly affectioned to one another (as well as to God) with brotherly love; in honour preferring one another; not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord." Or as the beloved disciple has put it: "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we from Him, That he who loveth God love his brother also." I. John 4:20-21.

It is the selfsame test required by Jesus: "For I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me." Hungry, thirsty, lonely, forgotten, naked, sick, and imprisoned—such are the cries of untold millions today, and without a real understanding of the goodness and love of God, because—shall I say it—all too often we have talked about our love for God, and forgotten the second requirement, namely, love for others.

"God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." God has done, and is doing His part. We must do ours. We are to be "his witnesses," "for how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent?" Romans 10:14, 15. We have the direct command of Christ to go out everywhere preaching his word. Only love out of a pure heart and a good conscience is capable of undertaking such a tremendous task.

This sharing Jesus with others is not a work of logic, but of love; not a performance of piety, but of love; not a giving of substance only, but the giving of self in love. Without love the whole thing is a farce. Witness Paul's hymn of love, I. Cor. 13, "And have not love, I am nothing."

Even a heart fully surrendered in perfect love may have its disappointments. Paul, "determined to know nothing among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified," had his times of testing. And so he adds a third clause to his summing up of love. His laboratory tests required it.

II.—"Love out of a Faith Unfeigned."

Paul emphasizes greatly faith. "The just shall live by faith," is one of his ever-recurring themes. Romans 1:17. Whatsoever is not of faith is sin," says Paul in Romans 14:23, and again he says, "For we walk by faith, not sight." II. Cor. 5:7. To Timothy, in the same letter in which our text is found, Paul says, "Holding faith, and a good conscience, which some having put away concerning faith, have made shipwreck." I. Timothy 1:19.

Yes, without faith there will be shipwreck! Jesus had faith in God; and he had faith in men! He staked his whole program on their carrying out his commands! If they would carry out his plans, God, through His Holy Spirit, would do the remainder. Paul had seen it work. He could now, in old age, and facing the gibbet, give to Timothy, his beloved convert, his charge: "Now the sum of the charge is love out of a pure heart and a good conscience and a faith unfeigned." Timothy, the test is love. Timothy, I mean a pure-hearted love, a good-conscience love, a faith-unfeigned love. Have that, and nothing can hinder nor harm you.

Let us take Timothy's lesson for ourselves. Give God first place in our hearts. Love our neighbors devotedly and sincerely, with a fine, Christian interpretation of the word "neighbor." And then, when doubt or despair would disarm us; or fret and worry would foil us; let us have

Dear Friends:

The beautiful sunshine and the warm pleasant days make one want to get on the outside of our office and enjoy nature. The little flowering bushes have been exceedingly beautiful in this section this season. Then, too, the trees coming out in their beautiful coats of green make one cheerful although he may have money tied up in a closed bank. When we see nature so beautifully displayed as it is this spring season, we realize that God is good and has made the world a beautiful place in which to live and serve him.

If nothing happens, the Christian Orphanage will have plenty of strawberries this season to give the children lots of strawberry shortcake—a food that they all like very much.

We will soon have new garden peas and cabbage out of our own garden. Farm work at the Orphanage will be on the boom next week. Corn planting will be in full blast and then the beans to plant keep the boys moving early and late, and give them plenty of exercise without playing golf to get it.

The Orphanage was very highly honored last week by a visit from three beloved friends, who are interested in orphan children. Mr. Moen and Rev. W. H. Smith, of New York, representing Mr. Edwin Gould's Foundation for children and our much beloved friend, J. M. Darden, of Suffolk, Va.

They gave the entire Orphanage plant a very close inspection from top to bottom, in all the buildings and had many nice things to say as to the conditions they found.

It is always a joy to have people visit us and see what we have here—and what we are trying to do for orphan children. It is giving them a chance in life and then if they fail to make good it will be their own fault and not the fault of the church. We are happy to say that most of the children who have been reared here until they reached the age of eighteen have made good.

When you send a contribution to the Christian Orphanage you will help give some little helpless child a chance in life.

a faith unfeigned both in God and His redeemed ones of every race and land.

Let us not despair of the church, but let us do our duty. Let us not be pessimistic, rather let us be pure; and expect God to bring things to pass as a result of our prayers, our love, and our faith unfeigned. "Without faith, it is impossible to please God." Without faith in our God, our folk, our families, our sons, our daughters, our church, our country, it is impossible to please God. Without faith it is impossible to join with Him in making a better world. Without faith it is impossible to join with Him in the world's redemption. But with faith unfeigned and love unalloyed, all is possible.

A very large crowd attended the services, and many pretty flowers covered his grave.

T. J. GREEN.

BROWN.

Madison Brown was born February 25, 1850, and died April 10, 1933, aged 83 years, 1 month and 15 days. Surviving is the wife, who was Elmina Welch, to whom he was married August 28, 1877, and four sons, W. A., C. F., and J. M. Brown, all of Bennett, N. C., and H. T. Brown of Greensboro, N. C.; one brother, one sister, 24 grandchildren, and 7 great-grandchildren.

He had been a member of Pleasant Grove Christian Church for 65 years.

He had been afflicted for several years and was totally blind before his death. He was very cheerful and patient in his afflictions, bearing them with Christian fortitude. A large crowd attended the burial, which was conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. D. R. Moffitt, and his body was laid to rest in Pleasant Grove cemetery.

T. J. GREEN.

SUTTON.

Mrs. Mary Ida Payne Sutton was born June 4, 1895, and died March 4, 1933, age 39 years and 9 months.

She was the mother of 11 children, 10 of whom, with her husband, survive. She is also survived by her mother, five brothers and three sisters, besides many other relatives and a host of friends.

In early life she professed faith in Christ and joined Apple's Chapel Church and was a faithful and loyal member until death.

She was a good wife and mother, a kind neighbor and much beloved by those who knew her best.

Burial services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. C. A. Brown, who was a schoolmaster. An unusually large crowd attended the burial and many pretty flowers were placed upon her grave. May the heavenly Father heal the broken hearts.

T. J. GREEN.

STOUT.

Ada R., daughter of Joshua and Mary Ellenor Moffitt, was born October 27, 1870, died February 27, 1933, aged 62 years and four months.

She is also survived by her husband, Bro. J. E. Stout.

The funeral services were conducted from her church by her pastor, assisted by Rev. T. E. White, of Sanford, and Rev. Apple, of Elon College.

She lived a remarkable Christian life, and may God help us to think of her not in a dark, cold, lifeless grave, but think of her as being absent from the body and present with the Lord.

J. C. CUMMINGS.

Mrs. Naucy Jane (Hicks) Ward, widow of the late Thomas J. Ward, departed this life, March 28, 1933, aged 89 years, and 1 month. She is survived by three sons, R. M. and T. O. Ward, of Greensboro, N. C., and A. C. Ward, of Burlington, N. C., three daughters, Mrs.

She had a very large family connection, there being 50 grandchildren, 59 great-grandchildren, besides a host of other relatives.

Many hearts were saddened by her passing, but their loss is her gain as she was a fine character.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, our heavenly Father in His infinite wisdom and love has called to His eternal home our beloved co-worker and fellow-member Deacon A. H. Savage, we, the members of Liberty Spring Christian Church, offer the following tribute to his memory:

1. That God, in His all-wise providence, doeth all things well, so while we mourn the loss of one who was ever faithful, and meant so much to our church and Sunday School, we bow in humble submission to His divine will.

2. That we hold in loving remembrance his faithful attendance, and trust that his separation from us will only draw us nearer the throne.

3. That we extend our deepest sympathy and love to the bereaved family in their loss, and commend them to Him who can sustain and comfort.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to "The Christian Sun," and a copy be put on the church record.

ROWLAND.

Early on the morning of April 19th, at the age of 47 years, Bro. J. Carl Rowland fell asleep. His spirit gone to be with Him who gave it, his body to be awakened on the morning of the resurrection at the coming of our Lord. "Absent from the body present with the Lord."

Bro. Carl was a faithful member of Wake Chapel Christian Church. He was a splendid type of citizen, honest and upright; a man of high moral integrity, esteemed highly as neighbor and citizen, and greatly loved by those who knew him best. While a student at Elon, he endeared himself to many, who, should they read these lines, will feel saddened at his going.

He leaves a wife and one son, J. Carl Jr., to whom he was devoted, loyal and loving. They shall miss him here, but without a doubt as to his place up yonder.

Services were conducted by Dr. M. C.

White of the Raleigh First Presbyterian Church, H. K. Davenport, pastor Presbyterian Churches, and the writer. The interment was in Wake Chapel Cemetery. May our Lord comfort and bless the loved ones who are left to miss him.

Information Please!—

So large and expensive have become the telephone books of Greater New York, that the New York Telephone Co. has decided to issue "address books" instead of the regular directory, and to invite subscribers to ask "Information" for less used numbers. No longer will the inhabitants of Manhattan who inquire for a number, be informed that the number is "in the book." Local directories will be issued in the various suburbs or boroughs, but a complete directory will only be issued upon special request. As said above a convenient "address book" will be furnished in which to place frequently called numbers beyond the local suburb.

A Hall of Religion.—

One of the most interesting and outstanding buildings of the Chicago World's Fair, which will open on June 1st, will be the Hall of Religion which is being erected on the Lagoon adjacent to Lake Michigan. In this structure will be the exhibits and the headquarters of Protestant denominationalism. The growth of the Protestant Church during the past century will be depicted by exhibits brought from the various corners of the earth. There will be religious conferences held from time to time, having to do with the many phases of religion, including the present attitude of youth toward religion, changing forms of worship, methods of charity, social service in the church, etc.

A Flower that Talks.—

The American Lotus, the largest variety of water lily growing on the North American continent, has been called the talking flower, because of the audible sounds made by the buds when opening early in the morning. The leaves of this plant are nearly two feet in diameter, and rise above the shallow water in which they grow rapidly. When the buds are nearly ready to open the stalks in some way seem to become charged with electrical energy, and at the break of day the buds begin to pop open, "talking" loud enough to be heard for quite a distance. In ancient times, and even at present, in some Oriental countries, the lotus had a religious significance and was used in religious ceremonies. The American Indians used it for various purposes: the roots being dug from the thick mud and eaten, the acorn-shaped seed were used as nuts, and the leaves and stalks providing fuel.

"Sandwich Roads."—

There has been developed in Germany a type of road that is interesting highway engineers of this country at the present time. It has only been recently introduced here, but promises to duplicate its success in Germany in this country. It consists of "a sandwich of sand and bituminized cement" placed between lower and upper courses of crushed stone. The binder, sandwiched between these two courses, is squeezed into them by heavy rolling, and the result is said to be an impervious, non-skid surface of mosaic stone. The cement used in this type of building is standard Portland cement which has been coated during the course of manufacture with bitumen. In this way the time required for hardening is greatly lengthened, and the concrete mortar remains pliable and workable for a long time. When it is finally compacted and thoroughly hardened, the result is said to be almost the ultimate in road building.

A New Five-Year Plan Starts This Month.—

A new five-year plan starts in Russia on the 15th of this month. Among other things this plan requires the "liquidation" of religion within that period of years. The decree has been signed by the heads of the Communist Party and ratified by the Commission of the Republic. The religions prescribed include Christianity, Judaism and the followers of Islam. The work of liquidation is to be undertaken systematically, and in the first year provision is made for the closing of all religious schools and seminaries and the prohibition of the giving of courses in religion in other schools. Later on in the campaign churches that are now open will be closed and religious and ecclesiastical associations banned. Finally, "all of those connected with or in the service of any religious cult are to be denied a government ration card," which we are told is equivalent to being deprived of all means of subsistence. Thus it seems that the days of martyrdom are soon to return. Faced with a similar situation, would the churches of America survive?

The High Cost of Distribution.—

One factor which may have contributed much to financial stress during the past few years may have been the great increase in the spread between the prices paid by consumers and that received by the producer. "At a recent hearing before the Senate Finance Committee," we are told by the Progressive Farmer, "George N. Peek presented some remarkable figures on the high cost of distributing food products." Using wheat as an illustration, the figures presented ran somewhat as follows: In 1914, wheat sold for 93 cents a bushel, flour for $4.36 per barrel, and bread for 6.1 cents a pound. In 1932, wheat brought only 42 cents, the price of flour per barrel had dropped 96 cents, while bread sold up .6 of a cent per pound. Thus with an approximate drop of 55 per cent in the price which the farmer received for his wheat in December, 1932, the miller received only 22 per cent less for his flour, while the baker "actually received 9.8 per cent more for bread made from 42-cent flour than he received in 1914 for bread made from 93-cent flour." This ever increasing spread in prices hits both consumer and producer, and there should be concerted effort to reduce it.

Has a Lost Art Been Recovered?—

Among the ancients there were those skilled in metal working said to be capable of tempering copper. The Aztecs, also, used copper for many of the purposes for which we have used steel. One of the greatest disadvantages of our steel products is their ability to strike fire from other substances. Wrenches, hammers, chisels, etc., strike sparks that are highly dangerous when used where explosions may occur. In the past many costly methods have been devised to attempt to eliminate such trouble. Now the art of retempering copper has been regained, and much of the former hazard may be eliminated. Business Week tells us: "The problem is now solved by making the tool itself of beryllium copper. This new alloy can be worked into shape, either hot or cold, and has hardness and durability enough for cold chisels. It will not spark." Naturally a large market is to be expected for this new alloy in the petroleum and chemical industries, as well as in sugar and starch grinding factories, grain elevators, coal mines, and other places where the danger of explosion is imminent.

A Trend in Religion.—

Regarding modern trends in religion, the Wesleyan Methodist has the following to say: "One definition of the word 'cult' is 'great or excessive devotion to some person, idea or thing.' In this connection Christianity is not a cult, but there has arisen within the last century an amazing cultist movement more or less related to Christianity, such as Mormonism, Christian Science, Spiritualism, unity, Theosophy and Russellism. A writer in the Gospel Banner claims that seventeen millions of people throughout the world have gone into these various cults within the last thirty-five years, and it is also claimed that 90 per cent of these have gone out of orthodox churches." Our contemporary gives many reasons for this state of affairs, and among them are the innate desire of humanity to drive a sharp bargain with God and to obtain religion on terms that do not involve sacrificing of the love for sin, unfaithful and compromising Protestant leadership, zealous proselyting by these new religious movements, and possibly the yearning of the soul of man to obtain "a realized experience in religion." Probably compromising on the part of leaders has not only driven individuals into these various cults mentioned above, but has, more than any other one cause, kept individuals out of the church. All the preaching of all of the ministers of the church today cannot overcome the effects of living examples of un-Christian conduct among so-called leaders of the church.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

The pastor, Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, reports a very interesting and successful revival which he conducted at Berea (Alamance), the week before Easter. The work goes good, the church was much revived and the spiritual life deepened. A visitation campaign is on the way, and there is expectation of increase in membership.

Dr. George W. Kernodle, formerly of Alamance County, who went twenty-five years ago to Washington, D. C., died at his home in Washington, May 2nd. The body was brought to Shallow Ford Church, Alamance County, May 4th, where his wife, formerly Miss Kate Cobb, was buried some years ago.

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, pastor, has been engaged the past week in evangelistic meetings at our Carolina Church, and reports a fine spirit in the meeting and deep interest with good attendance. Rev. J. F. Apple is assisting the pastor in the services, and the prospects for the outcome of the meeting are quite hopeful.

The editor of this paper, J. O. Atkinson, Sr., somehow prints the following with a degree of gladness and a pardonable pride that cannot quite be explained: "Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Atkinson, Jr., Greensboro, N. C., announce the arrival of J. O. A, III, April 26, 1933." Now then, that is that, and whether congratulations are received or not, we are going on our happy way all the same, especially since mother and son are just doing fine and seem to be almost as happy as the writer of these lines.

Rev. D. M. Spence, No. 2821 Vanderbilt Place, Nashville, Tenn., advises that he is ready and willing to serve in any of our churches or pastorates needing his services. Bro. Spence says: "Since completing my work at Vanderbilt, I am in position to give full-time service to any church or group of churches where my services may be desired, and I am anxious to secure pastoral work." Any pastorate desiring will do well to communicate with Bro. Spence at address given above.

The Youth Fellowship meeting at First Christian Church, Greensboro, Saturday P. M., May 6th, was quite a success and very well attended, according to the reports in the Greensboro Daily News. Eleven churches were represented and the exercises began at 1:30 P. M., with Miss Berta Rowland presiding, and closed with a supper and banquet from 6 to 7 P. M. There were group discussions and certain findings of the meeting which engaged the attention and constituted a vital part of the meeting. A fuller report of the conference will be given next week.

In their report for April about the work in Carroll County, Va., Rev. and Mrs. R. T. Grisom say: "We are glad to report that our work is growing as spring returns. We find that through our Christian Endeavor Societies young people are learning to do things. Last Sunday we carried our best singers to sing for a church about eight miles from here. They seemed to enjoy that very much. Our young people seem much enthused over our Summer Schools. Do not forget to ask our Lord to guide us in our work here this summer. We feel the responsibility too great to undertake without his help."

Our Henderson Church has extended a call to Rev. S. E. Madren, who will serve the church as pastor, preaching for them the first time, second and fifth Sunday mornings and every Sunday evening. Bro. Madren is now pastor of rural churches located near Henderson, which will make it quite convenient for him to serve our Henderson work. Bro. Madren writes: "I ask an interest in your prayers that I may be directed of God to work and do his will that his kingdom may be extended here. Rev. H. C. Caviness Caviness is conducting a revival in Henderson (a large warehouse being used for the preaching services). The meeting is now closing its fourth week and is to continue another week, but I do not know how much longer. We hope that much lasting good will be the result from this meeting. I am enjoying my work, and it seems to be going fine."

Dr. William Moseley Brown, who has contributed the article, "Blundering Through," printed elsewhere in this issue of THE SUN, is not unknown to many of our readers. Several weeks ago your managing editor was present at a Masonic meeting at which Dr. Brown was the principal speaker, and his subject was the same as the title used in the present article. So impressed were we by the address that after the meeting had adjourned, we asked him if we might have a copy of it so that we could reproduce at least a part of it for our readers. Dr. Brown not only acceded to our request, but took the time from his duties as Deputy Grand Master of Virginia, to rewrite the address and apply its lessons to the Church. The result speaks for itself. We hope that we will be able to give our readers another article from his pen at some future date.

Prof. A. Lucius Lincoln, Lawrenceville, N. J., writes under date of May 4th: "Mother has suffered two attacks (from a slight brain lesion). Each attack lasted only a few minutes, and while she is, of course, confined to her bed, and will be for some time, pending no untoward development, she should be restored to health after a period of complete rest." Many SUN readers will be deeply interested, since this good mother referred to has a wide acquaintance, known as Mrs. J. J. Lincoln, widow of the late, lamented Prof. Lincoln, who taught many years in Elon College, Mrs. Lincoln herself being a frequent and valuable contributor to the columns of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, especially on the subject of "Stewardship," and now for many months furnishing the "Prayer" signed "L" on page 8 of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. We shall be hoping and praying for her complete recovery.

We were greatly surprised at, and read with deep regret, the resignation of Dr. Jason Noble Pierce as pastor of Christian Temple, Norfolk. Dr. Pierce, as SUN readers know, came to the Christian Temple as successor some months ago to Dr. L. E. Smith, president of Elon College. The resignation takes place the first of June, when Dr. Pierce begins his pastorate with the First Congregational Church of San Francisco. The text of Dr. Pierce's resignation, as carried in the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot, is as follows: "To the officers and members of Christian Temple, dear friends:—As announced some days ago by the Associated Press, I have received a call to the pastorate of the First Congregational Church, San Francisco. It has been my privilege to preach in that church several times on different occasions, so that I know something of the field. It is a centrally located, down-town church, the leading Protestant Church in the city, with a widely scattered parish and with numbers of people from the hotels and apartments surrounding. Its pulpit demands are exacting and its parish work arduous. Life there would not be as easy-going and as comfortable as life here. Moreover we like Norfolk, like the religious life and leaders of this city; we thoroughly like the Christian Temple and the warm-hearted people who make up this church and who have treated us cordially and affectionately ever since we came. Endeavoring as soldiers of Christ to hold personal and lesser considerations in secondary place, we face two central and determining questions: first, where can I as a minister, with my individual gifts, training and experience, make this decade of my life count most for the Kingdom of God? and second, which of these two churches can more easily find a minister suitably qualified for the work it is prepared to do? I have reached a clear conclusion on each of these two questions. In accordance therewith I am accepting the unanimous call to the pastorate of the First Congregational Church of San Francisco, and tender this resignation from the pastorate of the Christian Temple. It is not easy to make this announcement to the loyal members of Christian Temple, for I have found here some of the finest and most consecrated church officers and members I have ever known. I appreciate their loyal cooperation and am exceedingly loath to leave them. And it grieves me to leave the fine fellowship of the Eastern Virginia Conference. Every pastor has been a friend whom to know is to love. This intimate experience has deepened my satisfaction in the union of our Christian and Congregational bodies. Our merger is natural, ideal and progressively successful. Believing that when decisions to resign have been formulated they should be effective at no distant date, I ask that you accept this resignation to take effect one month hence. This also will make it more possible for the pulpit committee to act before summer. With high esteem and every good wish, I remain, sincerely yours, Jason Noble Pierce."

A PLEA!

I am not in favor of "drives" to raise money. Perhaps the plan is all right but the title itself has been worn out. People, generous people, more or less resent such an idea in a time like this. However, some kind of effort must be put forth to secure gifts from the friends and supporters of Elon College.

I am not organizing a "drive" for the purpose of carrying the appeal to individuals, demanding of them contributions but I am sending out an appeal and presenting to all a most earnest plea for help. We are in the process of mailing out 5,000 such appeals to as many individuals among the natural constituency of Elon College. Here is the letter which I am sending out:

My Dear Friend:

This is an appeal. It is an appeal to you for a definite purpose. The Christian Church founded Elon College and has supported it. The Congregational Church has joined in with us. The church, the united church, loves the College. It is its own institution.

We are in financial straits, but with your help we can pull out. Since September I have been working, planning, saving and scheming in every way possible to make ends meet. We have not wasted a dollar. We need $20,000 with which to balance our budget.

No, we do not want you to give the whole $20,000, only $3.00. The faculty and Elon Community will give $5,000 of the $20,000. I am asking 5,000 individuals to give us $3.00 each. If you will send your $3.00 I believe that the rest will send theirs. Please do not fail us. You will not seriously miss the $3.00, but the $3.00 will greatly encourage us. Remember that you are one of the 5,000, that is, you are one link in a chain of 5,000 links. If you fail the chain is broken.

If you want to do your part to make the chain complete the enclosed envelope is for your reply and it needs no stamp. Please let us have your reply by May 15th. If you will mail your letter by May 12th, it will reach us in time. We are depending on you. Your letter is numbered. We want the number back even if you cannot send the donation. If you cannot send the $3.00, send what you can. If you can send more, we shall be glad.

Please return your letter.

Yours truly,

L. E. SMITH, President.

LES:RS.

P. S. If you owe the College, have an unpaid pledge, are a member of the Dollar-a-Month Club or wish to join the Club, your contribution will be credited accordingly. L. E. S.

This letter has been mailed to the names and addresses that I have been able to secure. I know a good many members of the Christian Church in the South, and practically all of our ministers. I wrote the ministers in North Carolina and Virginia, asking them to please send me a list of those whom they knew who might be able to respond to the letter and send a small donation. A majority of the ministers responded. Some have not yet—I am sure they will soon. If the reader of this article has not received such an appeal, I hope you will consider this as personal to you and count it a privilege to respond. $3.00 is a very small donation. In fact, I have been criticised for asking for this small amount. Of course, you can send more if you will, but if every one who receives the letter and who reads this article would send in $3.00 we would be able to balance our budget without difficulty, which would give us a tremendous appeal for next year's program.

It does seem that Elon College ought to have 5,000 friends who would lend her $3.00 each at this particular time. To this writing, we have mailed out about 3,000 letters. The remaining 2,000 will be going the first of the week. So far, we have received 24 replies, 20 of which have sent offerings totalling $102.00; four of which have simply returned the envelope. Postage on the return envelope is four cents which we are glad to pay at this end of the line. We do not have to pay unless the envelope is returned, but we want to hear from everybody. The envelopes are numbered and we would love to have them back. If you have received a letter won't you please respond?

"GATHERING UP THE FRAGMENTS."

(Realizing the necessity of putting on a follow-up campaign for their Annual Missionary Offering at or about Easter, the Southern Baptists put on the Crucible Service Campaign in hundreds of their churches. Our Southern Convention, along with thousands of other churches throughout the country, is putting on this campaign now as a follow-up campaign in order that we may, in a measure, recover something of the loss sustained through decreased cash offerings from churches. To this end it will, we think, be quite interesting to read how one church did the work. The following account by C. B. Taylor in the Biblical Recorder, and will indicate some of the glorious results to be achieved wherever the offering is to be properly conducted in a church.—J. O. A.):

More than a bushel of old rings, watches, bracelets and other pieces of gold and silver, amounting to several hundred dollars, was poured into the crucible box at the First Baptist Church, Winston-Salem, Sunday morning, March 26th. The service was one of the most beautiful and impressive this church has ever held.

The contents of the box were taken to the Wachovia Bank for safe keeping during the past week. Those who were unable to attend the service Sunday morning will be given an opportunity during the week and next Sunday to make their donations. The contents, along with those from other Southern Baptist Churches, will be forwarded to Philadelphia to be melted into gold and silver bullion and this will go toward paying off the debts of Southern Baptists.

Many, with tears in their eyes, brought their offerings into the church Sunday and gave them gladly and willingly as a sacrificial offering to the Lord. At the conclusion of the most impressive sermon by the pastor, Dr. J. R. Jester, the crucible box was placed on a table in front of the pulpit and those sitting in the center section were asked to come forward first and then the two side sections were asked to come. Men, women and children streamed down the aisles bringing in their gifts. One woman placed upon the table a large silver service, consisting of a platter and pitcher. It was too large to go in the box. Other gifts like this were placed on the table.

At Brown Memorial and Tabernacle Baptist Churches a quantity of old gold and sterling silver articles were also given, which also will go toward retirement of the Baptist debt.

Pins, watches, bracelets, rings, chains and all sorts of gold jewelry, representing the fads and styles of decades past, were surrendered to the cause. In the sterling silver list were spoons of various sizes and styles, while several sterling and gold umbrella handles were contributed.

In his sermon Dr. Jester spoke of the voluntary giving of the people at the foot of Mount Sinai, where they brought to the Lord their bracelets, earrings, rings, and other jewels of gold, silver and brass. It occurred just after Moses had come from the mountain, where he had been in communion with God, and issued the call. The minister said it had been estimated that the value of these articles was between $1,000,000 and $1,200,000.

The giving was immediate, there being no delay, and it came from hearts of gratitude for what God had done for them, Dr. Jester added. Out of this service came valuable teachings. There was the true motive of acceptable service, for a voluntary offering is all that God will accept; the Lord's offering must be of such that the people have, there shall be a limitless variety; the Lord's offering must be complete.

The crucible offering at this church Sunday gave the denomination the opportunity to make a real self-denial offering to God; to part with treasures hallowed by memories and sentiments for the sake of Christ's cause. And they "gathered up the fragments that nothing be lost" in order that the churches of the South might be free.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

CAROLINA CONFERENCE OF CONGREGATIONAL-CHRISTIAN CHURCHES.

This conference convened at Elon College at 2 P. M., Tuesday, May 2nd, and adjourned after a two days' session late in the evening of Wednesday, May 3rd. Dr. C. H. Rowland was the presiding officer for the conference of the united body, and Rev. W. T. Scott was moderator for the Congregational group (when meeting as a separate group, to maintain legal status and requirements). It was a very gratifying conference, with many illuminating reports and addresses. The primary objective was that of working out in further detail the merger of the Congregational and Christian churches of the conference as voted by the Southern Christian Convention in Burlington last May. Prof. Dwight Steere, of the Music Department, Elon College, sponsored the devotional services at each meeting and furnished very appropriate and helpful music which gave flavor and fervor to the sessions.

Dr. W. P. Minton, our former Foreign Mission Secretary, but now Associate Secretary of the Commission on Missions, brought, from time to time during the conference, most helpful information and messages relating to the work of the merger. Dr. Minton has worked in so many states and localities on the details of the merger until he has become an expert from experience and study in questions of doubt and difficulty which arise from time to time in the minds of those who are working for the interest of the united body. He was invaluable and most helpful throughout the conference, and if any of our church fellowship or friends are in doubt about any matter arising in their minds about the merger, our advice would be: "Ask Dr. W. P. Minton."

It was deeply regretted that Dr. Fred Field Goodsell could not be present to give his address on "Re-Thinking Missions," but Rev. Dr. McNaughton, returned missionary from Turkey, where he has been a missionary for more than forty years from our American Board, took Dr. Goodsell's place on the program and certainly gave a very illuminating analysis of the strength and weakness of the Appraisal Committee's Report. Dr. McNaughton argues that if a Committee of Laymen, either in America or on the mission fields, were appointed to visit churches in America and appraise under the title of "Re-Thinking Christianity," such a committee would most likely find the same criticism and complaint against the churches in Christendom that "Re-Thinking Missions" lodges against the church on the foreign field. The report in book form has come to be "the best seller" on the book-stands, and this is an indication that the people, at any rate, are interested in the great theme of Foreign Missions, as they have possibly never been before, and while the book may give some an excuse for doing less for Foreign Missions than they have done, it will accord an opportunity and an incentive for many to do more than they have done.

Rex. G. N. Edwards, pastor, Circular Church, Charleston, S. C., gave the report to the conference of the Missionary Committee, which report is given for publication in THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

One of the outstanding features of the conference was the conference sermon by Rev. Elmer Willis Serl, of Southern Pines. This was a real message of spiritual uplift to the congregation and found fitting climax in the communion service which followed immediately, being administered by Rev. G. N. Edwards, of Charleston, and Rev. T. Fred Wright, of Sanford.

Wednesday morning the reports on institutions were heard. On Orphanage, by Supt. C. D. Johnston; Elon College, by President Smith; Southern Missionary Foundation, by President Campbell, Nashville, Tenn.; THE CHRISTIAN SUN, by John T. Kernodle, Richmond, Va.; Missions, by Secretaries J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, and Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, Washington, D. C.

The report of the Committee on Constitution and By-Laws for the conference was presented by the chairman of the committee, Rev. Milo J. Sweet, pastor-at-large, Salisbury, N. C. This report referred to the Constitution to the Executive Committee and the Committee of Ten of the Southern Convention, who are to work upon its detail and who will present the same, through their committees, at the proper time.

The women had an hour to report on their work and used it to great advantage, being addressed by Mrs. Milner, of Guilford College, with Mrs. C. H. Rowland, presiding.

The final evening session was made large and helpful by addresses on: "Our Growing Fellowship," by Milo J. Sweet; "The New Emphasis in the General Council," by Dr. W. P. Minton, and "In the Southern Convention," by Rev. S. C. Harrell.

Thus concluded the second of these conferences held of the two bodies, and if the recommendations adopted are carried out, it will be the last of the two bodies meeting separately, and in the future they will meet as a completely merged body.

While the conference was not largely attended, there was an abundance of work done, and certainly many questions were faced in the spirit of brotherhood and fellowship and, seemingly, much good was accomplished.

BEER.

The following two brief paragraphs from the North Carolina Christian Advocate should arrest attention and have serious consideration:

"Beer is not a food like milk which is good for the baby and for grown-ups. Beer is not a delightful health-giving drink like orange-juice. The interest in beer centers in the alcohol it contains. Take the alcohol out of it and it would be nothing more than common slop to be poured into the hog trough or to be emptied in the gutter. It is an alcoholic drink. If it were not, no man would allow it to touch his lips.

"And alcohol is a habit forming drug with disastrous consequences in its trail. It is not as speedy in its work as a narcotic, but is just as sure. Why then should any man be encouraged to sell a thing that has locked within it a veritable Pandora box of evils?"

With the number of licenses obtained for selling beer, as indicated in the press reports, one judges that very many have been encouraged to sell "that which has within it a Pandora box of evils." Possibly, the walls that seemed to have been thrown around the legal sale of beer by prohibition have been torn down. This then leaves the approach and the appeal directly to the individual, to whom now the approach and the appeal must be carried. Very many of our young people have not heretofore seen beer offered for sale legally. They are not acquainted with its taste or its effects. No doubt millions will be induced to buy, and cultivate the taste, under the deception that it is non-alcoholic and that it is harmless. Therefore, let no one be deceived. Let our young people and the uninitiated know that the sole interest of beer centers in the alcohol that it contains. Remove the alcohol and no young person, or old person, would give two cents a barrel for it.

In this writer's opinion the finest contribution that prohibition has ever made to American manhood and womanhood, was not in the laws that it was instrumental in enacting, but in the educational work carried on for years in the homes, in the schools and in the churches, most of this being done before prohibition amendments were adopted. The fatal and most deplorable thing in the whole situation was that this educational work did not continue with the same vigor and enthusiasm after prohibition was adopted, as obtained before it was adopted. You cannot legislate morality, sobriety, righteousness into a community or a people! you can only through legislation safeguard what has been achieved, and make possible further achievement in the minds, hearts and conduct of individuals.

Fathers and mothers, pulpit and pew, assemblies and individuals now have the challenge flung at them, and the opportunity afforded them of again taking up the campaign with vigor, zeal and wisdom, of educating our youth in the home, in the school and in society, as to the deadly effects of alcohol, and the evil consequences that await those who cultivate the habit of taking into their systems this the most subtle and deadly monster that the human race has ever had to deal with. Let all who care for the sobriety of our youth, of our manhood and our womanhood, lose no opportunity of teaching the deadly effects of alcohol in any and every form, its subtle and deceiving power to get control of the human system, and the danger that lurks within it of conquering the will and thus destroying body, mind and soul.

The only safe way for any individual to deal with beer, or any alcoholic beverage, is to let it alone entirely.

"BLUNDERING THROUGH."

By WILLIAM MOSELEY BROWN.

Some time ago two of my friends and I were discussing the present world situation. They were educated men and both were officials in a large urban university. Naturally they were serious-minded about the outlook for the future. In fact, all three of us were somewhat apprehensive as to the ultimate status of the civilization, of which we have been so accustomed to boast and in which all of us are inescapably enmeshed, whether we will or no. As all intelligent people are doing, we were trying in our limited fashion to find a way out of the present impasse. "Will civilization become a Frankenstein," we were asking, "and destroy its very creators? Or does it possess some inherent and self-directive force, which will insure its ultimate arrival at the goal of material and spiritual perfection? Or is it perhaps not necessary for us, in our thinking on this subject, to posit a divine and supreme Intelligence, Jehovah God, who guides the destinies of the individual and of the race?"

Frankly, we did not know how to answer these and other questions, which were raised, to our complete satisfaction. Since all three of us were more or less like-minded, we agreed readily to the basic fact of the "Supreme Intelligence, which pervades all nature." But we did not feel we could see far enough ahead into the future. Try as we might, we found it impossible to get even a glimpse of what lay around the turn in the road just ahead of us.

Suddenly one of my friends had a new idea. "Is it not true," he asked, "that, after all, the human race has been more or less blundering through in all its past history? Is there anyone, who can say, that any man has been gifted with such intelligence and foresight as to enable him to see down the corridors of time a century ahead and plan his actions and those of the men of his time in such fashion as to insure the coming to pass of the events which have entered into the making of subsequent history?"

This was indeed a new angle on the subject. "Blundering through!" It was a telling expression which he had used. It struck me between the eyes and set me thinking like few things which have happened to me for a great while. I had heard of blunderbusses, those almost grotesque weapons, with which men were wont to hunt and fight in the days gone by. I had even spoken of some people of my acquaintance as blunderbusses when they seemed to be acting aimlessly and with nothing more than a hit-or-miss philosophy of life. But to say that the race as a whole had been guilty of an enormous amount of short-sightedness, of aimlessness, of inefficiency—this was a rather startling indictment.

I thought a moment about the implications of my friend's question. My mind ran back rapidly over the history of past centuries as I recalled it from my study in high school and college. I was compelled, almost against my will, to admit, that our forefathers could hardly have conceived of the advances which mankind has made in the last generation, let alone the generations which preceded it. "Yes," said I to myself, "my friend is right. It would have required a superhuman intelligence on the part of anyone to foresee the developments of this scientific age, in which we are living, and to plan accordingly, not only for himself but for his fellow human beings. Hence, since there is no such thing as a group mind in itself, and since society cannot do any actual thinking for itself as a separate and distinct entity, and since all of us as individuals are subject to so many errors and mistakes, we must have made what progress we have by blundering through. Perhaps," I added to myself, "this is what Plato had in mind when he used his classical example of men living in a cave with their backs always toward the entrance, and seeing only the shadows of things without ever having contact with the realities themselves."

It was discouraging to me to have to make this admission. What, pray, were our minds made for except to think—to bring order out of chaos, to direct the controllable and enable us to face the inevitable without flinching? Could these intellects of ours, then, do no better than blunder through? Surely there must be an affirmative answer to that question somewhere. The difficulty was in finding it.

I thought further—but much more rapidly than the time which I have taken to relate this incident. And I realized that, here and there, in every period of human history, prophets had arisen—men who not only were the mouthpieces of God (for that is what the word "prophet" means) but were likewise men of vision and understanding. The latter is an indispensable prerequisite of the former. God may and does use lowly and ignorant men for the accomplishment of his purposes—but he first gives them the wisdom, the understanding, and the vision to inspire them to speak and do for Him. It was these men, who, under the ministrations of the spirit from on high, reached out across the centuries and not only foresaw and foretold what would come to pass, but bent their every energy to influence and direct their fellows accordingly. If prophets and reformers, if the apostles of a new day have been "despised and rejected of men," that does not at all, mind you, affect their right to the prophetic succession.

If they have been persecuted and tormented, and have even paid with their lives for standing upon their convictions, this fact does not detract one jot or tittle from the validity of their message. And so, while it may be true, that most human beings are guilty of blundering most of the time, and that all of us blunder some of the time, it is also true that it is the prophets who have been the "salt of the earth," the "light of the world," the "leaven which leavens the whole lump" of mankind.

Some times the number of prophets—the real leaders of their day—has been smaller than at others. Sometimes it has grown so small for the time being as to be discouraging and disheartening to those who are left to do the job. Elijah, at one point in his career, decided to give up for lack of company. He came near to being a quitter. He not only was willing to surrender his task, but he asked the Lord to take away his life also. What a rebuke it must have been to him, when the Lord asked him: "What doest thou here, Elijah?" as if to imply that he had better get out of the cave, in which he had taken refuge, and return to his job. To his surprise Elijah learned that day, that there were seven thousand other prophets in Israel, who had not bowed the knee to Baal, and that the greatest experience of his whole career lay still ahead of him.

Not all of us can be prophets, perhaps, but this fact should not deter us from aspiring to be. Not all of us can be in the forefront of the world's leaders, but this fact should not stand in the way of our leading those behind us "in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake." No more can any of us be God, but all of us can at least aspire to be God-like. And John Oxenham is doubtless right when he writes:

To every man there openeth a way, and ways and a Way,
And the high soul climbs the high way,
And the low soul gropes the low,
While all between, on the misty flats,
The rest drift, to and fro.
But to every man there openeth a high way and a low,
And every man decideth which way his soul shall go.

This idea of blundering through, of drifting to and fro, is what I wish us to consider here. Is it not true that we have been guilty of gross neglect in the performance of our obligations to our church, the divine institution, of which we form a part? Is it not true, that we have been tempted many times to furnish alibis for our negligence, none of which will "hold water," as the saying goes? Is it not true, that we are too often satisfied with something less than the best of which we are capable? Speaking of life from a qualitative standpoint, I would say that our difficulty lies in speaking in comparative terms rather than those of the superlative degree. "Better" is all right, but it can never be as good as "best." "High" is fine, but it can never be as soul-stirring as "highest." "Big" is excellent, but you dare not be satisfied with less than the "biggest" nature you are capable of attaining. "Improvement" is a wonderful thing at which to aim, but we are derelict in our duty to God, our neighbors, and ourselves, if we do not strive constantly to achieve "perfection."

I sometimes think, that the history of the church shows about as much blundering through as that of any other human institution. This should not be so, of course, but I fear that it is all too true. One immediately says: "But the church people are human, and you cannot expect them to be perfect." Ah, but you must remember, my friend, that this is but a paltry excuse, which we try to use for covering a multitude of sins. We lose sight of the fact that it is charity—love—which covers the multitude of sins. Excuses do not avail; pretexts and indulgence in rationalization only make the matter worse. As a professed Christian your goal is and must be PERFECTION—in human life, human institutions, individual personality, and everything else. All of us can do something toward the realization of this objective. One man finds it possible to do one thing; another renders his service along a different line; and so on. One man can sometimes do more than another in the performance of a given task, but there is always plenty for everyone who is willing. It may be that this is our chief fault in the church; we are not willing to do what is required of us. It is an axiomatic fact, that, in order to act intelligently, one must will before one can do. The robot and the automaton are all right until a problem needs to be solved. Beyond that and in the higher reaches of human experience they are utterly worthless. In truth, their main usefulness lies in the fact, that they relieve intelligence of some of its burdens and cares, thus setting it free to direct itself to the heights without the weights and impedimenta which hold so many of us down in the very depths of despair.

Browning puts it beautifully when he describes our common task in these words:

The common problem, yours, mine, everyone's
Is—not to fancy what were fair in life
Provided it could be—but finding first
What may be. Then find how to make it fair
Up to our means; a very different thing!
No abstract intellectual plan of life,
Quite irrespective of life's plainest laws,
But one a man, who is a man and nothing more,
May lead within a world, which (by your leave) *
Is Rome or London, not Fool's Paradise!

All of which leads me to say, that the institution of the church would be of vastly greater importance today in the world if many of our predecessors had not been too obsessed with the frailties of human nature to accomplish the task which the poet sets forth in these lines.

Why is it, we might well ask here, that so many of us begin our careers as church members with such zeal and enthusiasm and with such determination to press on to the ultimate goal, and then

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Franklin Christian Church celebrated the 50th anniversary of its organization, Sunday, April 30, 1933. The church was organized April 29, 1883, by Rev. M. L. Hurley, assisted by Revs. W. W. Staley and R. A. Ricks. The organization grew out of a suggestion made by Mr. R. C. Norfleet, who moved to Franklin just a few weeks before this date. His brother, I. W. Norfleet, had been living in Franklin for several years. The first Sunday after Claude Norfleet began to work in Franklin he said to his brother: "Walter, where are we going to Sunday School?" Walter said: "I am going to the Baptist Church." Well, Walter, I think you have been living in Franklin long enough to have a Sunday School of your own church. I think it is time to see what we can do about it." He replied: "Claude, I think you are right." A few members of the Christian Church were called to meet in a home the following week, and in due time the church was organized in the Masonic Hall, with the following charter members: I. W. Norfleet, R. C. Norfleet, J. T. Harcum, J. W. Magee, W. G. Butler, D. P. Rawls, Mrs. Bettie Lee Gardner, Mrs. Emma F. Gay, Mrs. V. Atkinson, Mrs. Virginia Harcum, Mrs. S. M. Magee, and Miss Carrie F. Cobb. J. W. Magee and R. C. Norfleet were elected deacons.

The church has had twelve pastors during its history: Rev. M. L. Hurley, nearly two years; Rev. R. A. Ricks, five years (November 7, 1884-November 11, 1889); Rev. J. P. Barrett, one year (1890-1892); Rev. J. T. Kitchen, 1 year (1892-189-1892); Rev. J. T. Kitchen, one year (1892-1893); Rev. J. W. Rawles, three years (1893-1896); Rev. W. S. Long, one year (1896-1897); Rev. N. G. Newman, more than two years (1897-1900); Rev. C. H. Rowland, twenty-four years (1900-1924); Rev. F. C. Lester, three years (1924-1927); Rev. J. W. Fix, four years (1927-1931); Rev. Elwood W. Jones, two years (1931-1933). It will be seen from this record that Dr. C. H. Rowland served as pastor nearly one-half of the period of fifty years.

The church now has a membership of 265, is out of debt and is self-supporting. It has a substantial brick building and a splendid parsonage, all valued at $40,000. The church did not grow very rapidly in numbers until it had a full-time pastor. This was a venture of great faith and sacrifice, but the results in church development have justified that wise decision.

During the services of the twelve regular pastors, in these fifty years, there have been seventeen deacons, thirteen secretaries, eleven treasurers, and eleven organists.

The following program was followed in the great anniversary service, at 11 A. M.: Organ prelude, doxology, invocation and Lord's Prayer, anthem, "Praise Ye the Father, responsive reading, No. 12, Gloria Patri, Hymn No. 118, "O Come, All Ye Faithful," prayer by Rev. J. W. Fix, Hymn No. 373, "Lead On, O King Eternal," offertory anthem, "How Lovely Are Thy Dwellings," sermon, Dr. C. H. Rowland, anthem, "Come Unto Him, All Ye that Labor," greetings by Dr. N. G. Newman, tenor solo, "The Holy City," Jeel Cook Holland, greetings, Rev. F. C. Lester, Hymn No. 176, "Love Divine All Love Excelling," benediction, choral benediction, "Blessed Is He that Cometh."

A great service of worship and thanksgiving crowned these fifty years of loyalty, devotion, sacrifice and achievement. Many hearts rejoiced in the memories of these spiritual victories and delightful seasons of fellowship. Such a history is rich in fruitage and precious in memory. The people who share with others in the church of Jesus Christ have a little foretaste of what heaven is on earth. It is sweet to have a sacrificial part in the growth of a spiritual church. Every local church should carefully record its history, and give proper emphasis to its significance and importance.

I. W. JOHNSON.

EVIDENCES OF INTEREST.

Three letters came in the morning mail that were of great interest to the College and to me personally, and I think they would be of interest to a large number of our people. I am quoting from two of the letters and presenting the third as a whole. The first was a letter from W. L. Cooper, Norfolk, Va., who writes:

I read in this week's SUN your appeal in behalf of the College and while I have not received a letter, I am enclosing herewith my little bit ($3.00). I only wish that I could make it more, but conditions are such as to forbid. I have a greater interest in Elon now than I have ever had since you became its president, and where my only boy is a student. Bill would never have entered Elon had it not been that you were its president.

The second letter was from Mrs. Annie Staley Calhoun, who wrote:

Dear Dr. Smith:

I am sending you a check to give to the Business Manager, or whoever is handling this special fund, trying to get 5,000 people to give $3.00 each to Elon. The reason I am sending $9.00 is because I know of two others who would like to give $3.00 but are unable to do so at this time. I do hope and pray that the full amount will be raised. How I wish I could give a large sum. Long live Elon and her leaders!

These two letters voice a real interest in Elon College and are evidence of a spirit of sacrifice for her present and future. I appreciate these letters and these donations as they came voluntarily. I trust that others reading THE CHRISTIAN SUN will be as interested and responsive as these two friends of the College and to the church.

The third letter is from Dr. J. Brainerd Thrall, an aged Congregational minister, who organized and has ministered to the Congregational Church at Asheville, N. C., for a number of years. It reflects something of the spirit, the type of student and the earnestness of those who are responsible for the school.

I merely write to let you know that I am back home and am remembering with pleasure and appreciation my sojourn at Elon and all that I saw, heard and experienced there. I was particularly impressed with the spirit that hangs over and pervades the place. "Atmosphere" is a word that is hard to define in its intellectual and spiritual sense, but that is, I think, because it carries with it its own connotations. It is something we seem to breathe and to feel instinctively.

Elon certainly has its own distinctive atmosphere, and it is a good atmosphere to breathe and feel. I shall not forget the simple naturalness and refined courtesy which I met on my very first and last contacts with the campus. The first was that of a girl student, who went out of her way to give me directions. The last was that of a boy student, who, when I asked if a taxi could be had, insisted on going to my place of entertainment and bringing my grip to the bus, where he waited to see me safely placed on it. Feeling that I had taken his time from his work, and also remembering my own college self-help days, I made the mistake of pressing upon him a bit of loose change I happened to have with me, but, though he is partly earning his way he would not take it. I am sorry I did not get his initials, but I did learn that his name is Ramsey and that he comes from Norfolk.

Such a student body is the best advertisement a college can put out, and in spite of these days of financial difficulty, you are to be envied as the head of such a college.

With my sincere appreciation and the very best of good wishes, I am,

Very truly yours,

J. BRAINERD THRALL.

I appreciate this letter, and I am sure that the public will also.

L. E. SMITH.

I WAS THINKING.

I was thinking about beer, the number of people to whom its manufacture and sale would give employment. The logic seems to be conclusive. The breweries have opened, giving employment to thousands of people. Certain bottle manufacturers have increased their output and possibly added to the number on their payrolls. The crate and barrel makers are entertaining and filling new orders, thus giving more employment. Certain printing and lithographing plants are being benefited by the manufacture of labels, while the Bureau of Printing and Engraving has added to its work in the printing of revenue stamps. Private printing plants and sign painters are also deriving some benefit. Railroads, express lines, and trucking companies are benefiting by increased tonnage, and therefore increased revenue. Those dispensing the beverage have taken on additional employees, and all along the line there has been an increased amount of work, an added flow of money, and in the final rotation of things the national government will benefit through taxes paid. This tax money will be disbursed from a national treasury to employees in offices, field service, to men on government construction, and the many other governmental activities.

I WAS ALSO THINKING—of the soft drink manufacturers who have been employing thousands of men and women and whose industry will now be greatly affected, and how the amount of their product and its consumption would be curtailed. The sugar refineries, supplying large quantities of sweets to the soft drink manufacturers will find their sales on the downward trend and the various transportation lines formerly handling large quantities of syrups, sugar and other ingredients to these soft drink manufacturers will be quick to observe a falling off in tonnage and revenue from that source. Other places dispensing with lime and orange drinks will find their business lessened. The number of their employees will have to be reduced. The orange growers who have been selling oranges to the chain drink-serving places will find their sales reduced, and again the transportation lines will suffer from the loss of this revenue. Coffee importers and wholesalers, as well as retailers, will likely find a downward trend in their sales. Milk, which has been more extensively used during the past fifteen years than during any other period in the world's history, may have to take second place with many appetites, and so dairies will find a decreased amount of sales, farmers less market for their raw milk—and all along these and kindred lines there will be a curtailment in production, consumption and the general turnover of money. Some of the health-giving drinks will be ignored in favor of beer, a drink not conducive to health, and in the final summary of this very logical routine Uncle Sam, with all his medical and health agencies, will be called upon to spend the revenue derived from beer in the treating and combating of a physical and social condition.

Well, I was thinking!

get turned aside from the broad highway before we have gone very much further? Why do our motives, which in the beginning were most artistic in character, become soon contaminated with selfishness and personal ambition? I know that the same thing is true of most other lines of human endeavor, but it should not be so. We must be sure that we avoid here the use of the comparative rather than the superlative degree, as I have already suggested. "Comparisons are (sometimes) odious," depending upon the norm which one uses for this purpose. One would hardly, for example, compare a diamond with a toad, or a maiden's innocence with a rhinoceros. Such comparisons are simply never thought of ordinarily. I am suggesting, however, that the only valid type of comparison for us, as Christians, is that which identifies itself with the superlative in its very nature. Our norm, our standard must be perfection—nothing less. The perfection of virtue, if you please; the perfection of human personality; the perfection of our bodies, temples of the Holy Spirit as they are; and the perfection of all institutions, which are worth while and which we believe to owe their origin to the divine plan which comprehends all and in all. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect!" Not, mark you, "Try to be perfect," or "Intend to be perfect"—but "Be!"

We do not have to go far back to seek an example of the sort of perfection, which I have in mind. Contrast the typical human attitudes represented in the following two stanzas, each with a theme which is simplicity itself. First this one:

The primrose on the river's brim
A simple primrose was to him,
And it was nothing more.

Now this one:

Flower in the crannied wall,
I pluck you out of the crannies,
Hold you here root and all, in my hand;
Little flower, if I could but understand
What you are, root and all, and all in all,
I should know what God and man is.

Where could one find a finer example of superciliousness and reverence set over against each other?

I am foolish enough (though I do not know that this is the proper term to use) to believe that the institution of the church of the living God not only teaches perfection, but that it is capable of being perfected itself. Most of us will admit, that it had a divine origin, even beyond the sense in which all other things have a divine origin. I believe the church has a mission in the world, just as do the home, the school, and the community. A study of our present world situation convinces me, therefore, in a very profound way, of two things:

First, that the church today, as well as in the past, has a divinely appointed mission to mankind and the world.

Second, that the church, alas, has not fulfilled this mission because of the shortcomings of its own devotees.

Let us examine these two statements for a moment.

No church member will question the fact of the church's great mission. The New Testament especially leaves us no doubt on this point. As the "bride of Christ," the "body of Christ," and the gathering together of Christ's followers, the divine mission of the church is readily apparent.

Nor will one need to go far with an unprejudiced mind before one is compelled by the sheer weight of the evidence to admit the relative failure of the church in the last nineteen hundred years to fulfill this mission. A quarter of a century ago the cry was: "The evangelization of the world in this generation." This was the watchword of the World Missionary Conference at Edinburgh in 1910. It was the rallying cry of the five thousand young people who attended the quadrennial convention of the Student Volunteer Movement at Kansas City in 1913—the greatest of all the conventions of student volunteers, which have been held before or since. But almost another generation has passed since those days—one which has been compelled to live through the nightmare of a World War and to witness the breakdown of the economic and social structure of humanity on a more gigantic and inclusive scale than ever before in history.

Strangely and sadly enough, this same church has acted, as it were, almost the counterpart of Saul of Tarsus, who watched the garments of those who stoned Stephen. It not only prayed for the triumph of the armies of the country in which a particular branch happened to be located, but it aided and abetted in innumerable ways the carrying on of the conflict itself. And many of those who are responsible for our economic breakdown have been and are the very "pillars" of the church and its strongest supporters, at least from a material point of view.

Nor will the church ever begin to realize its mission until it rises above the plane of these things and boldly, vigorously, and uncompromisingly challenges men to carry out the program of the New Testament. Of this we may be absolutely sure. As church members, we cannot do things in personal, economic, political, and social life, which put the Master to shame, and then pharisaically "salve our consciences," sitting on the "amen seat" at the Sunday and midweek services, and joining lustily in the singing:

I love thy kingdom, Lord,
The house of thine abode,
The Church our blest Redeemer saved
With his own precious blood.

It does not occur to us (seemingly) that there can be any such thing as a "Gentile Pharisee." Yet how many of us are in this class today!

Once more let us ask: "What is the way out of this haphazard policy of blundering through? What will stop the mouths of the church's critics and put them to shame? What will win more adherents to Christianity than all the sermons ever preached? There is only one answer, namely, the incarnating of the principle of the "Sermon on the Mount" in the person of every church member. Nothing less than this will do. There is nothing else "just as good."

PRAYER.

Blest harbor of souls, the Church of our Lord! Her portals beckon, her shelter is secure. Some day, O righteous Author and Preserver, the Church shall possess the earth; if we cared enough, that day might be now. Great God, our Father, make people know that the Church's sustenance, its expansion, its triumph, is in human hands and that if truly we desire to build the Church, thou wilt build our bodies into fitting and able instruments for the holy service. In Jesus' name.—Amen. S.

DIGGING FOR GOLD.

This is not an invitation, or an urge, to go to Alaska to find gold dust or gold nuggets, but to dig for gold in your own home. Our cash offering for Missions could not be as large in places as it was a year ago because many declare they did not have the cash. However, with all of its curtailment, our mission work suffers, and here is an opportunity to help recover.

A long time ago, Paul wrote: "The fashions of this world pass away." So the fashions in gold and silverware, and medals and trinkets have passed away. Why not recover this gold, dig it up out of the home and carry it to the church and make of it an offering on the altar of the Lord for God and Government?

This may entail a sacrificial offering because of sentiment and devotion to long treasured trinkets, but we accomplish little and give nothing of value in this world without self-denial. Think of the old watches, rings, jewelry worn in other days! Possibly, old school-day or college pins, medals, prizes won or purchased and laid away these many years still idle and almost forgotten and useless! In our Crucible Service Campaign we have a chance to give all these fragments a life that will endure forever in the work of the Master. The plan of our Crucible Service Campaign is to reclaim the gold and silver for the needs that press so heavily upon the church in these days to give spiritual relief to hungry hearts and perishing souls. Let us gather up the fragments; let us dig out the gold in the mines of the homes where the gold and the silver are, and resolve that these old things shall no longer sleep in a Christian world. Some of the things to be looked for and carried to the church on the day appointed for the service, are such as these, whether new or old, whole or broken:

Watches, chains, rings, locketts, brooches, medallions, pendants, cuff links, bracelets, spectacle frames, cameos, pins, old and abraded coins, dental scraps, such as crows, bridges and plates, sterling pieces and old jewelry of every description.

I have written to all of the pastors and the presidents of the Women's Missionary Societies, to aid them, about putting on a campaign for these fragments to be carried to the church on an appointed Sunday—May 12th-June 11th. Surely, every church can initiate and carry out such a program without hurt to any and help to all. These fragments gathered and sent to the Mission Secretary, Elon College, N. C., by the church, when so gathered, will be melted and refined and sold to the Government as nuggets, and the church sending will have full credit given for what the Government pays for the gold and silver thus gathered up and purchased.

Mission Secretary.

REPORT OF MISSIONARY COMMITTEE.

The Apostles were the first Missionary Committee. Jesus appointed them to make disciples of all nations. Through them he expected to build his church. His conception of the church was very simple. It consisted of the disciples who owned him as Master.

Missions have become difficult because we have separated them from the church. They become hard when church members no longer consider it their prime business to make disciples. Indeed, the first step in missions is that church members should become disciples whose deepest concern is to evangelize others. Their message is Christ. Having a few genuine disciples the mind of Jesus leaped to his goal—making disciples of all nations.

It is for his disciples to tread the long path to that goal. The first business of the church is to make new personalities out of the human material available, beginning with ourselves. It is not so important whether we are satisfied with ourselves, but whether Christ is satisfied with us.

Paul had the mind of Christ. He yearned for his Roman friends that they might be transformed by the renewing of their minds. If we could all begin here; if even a few of us had the passion for discipleship, there would be some chance that the church of God would move like "the mighty army" we sing about. Now it scarcely moves at all, and only by scattered detachments.

The spring of missionary endeavor must be at home. If we cannot make disciples out of those we have seen, how can we expect to make much impression on those we have not seen? It would seem that our first field would be the neighbors of the church, the children in our homes, those friendly folks that we do business with daily. The Apostle dared to begin with the enemies of Christ, the people who had done him to death, and the mere observers of the tragic events of Easter week. We begin with the children and hope to get most of our members from the Sunday School. Members—the word has come to have a double sound as a measure of the strength of the church. We take in members. Disciples have to be made by the Lord himself. We can but bring them to him to be moulded. We accept members almost too willingly, and ask no questions. Jesus gave broad invitations, but he also said "straight is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

Those first disciples were known to be disciples of Jesus by their boldness. They had no hesitation to carry the gospel plainly to both Jews and Samaritans, and it was not long before they found themselves carrying it to the Greeks and Romans.

What I have in mind is this: The present retreat of the long thin line of missions around the world is not due to the financial depression, but to the church home that has lost sight of its Master, and fails the heroes and heroines of the faith who bear witness alone in the far places of the earth. They represent their Lord, but not the church that cares for none of these things. I contend that the church is losing its missionary spirit not because it lacks information or leadership, but because it has lost its nerve. It dare not make disciples of anybody. It is no longer worthy to make disciples of all nations.

The people we used to call heathen have discovered it. They looked upon the nations called Christian at war, and they saw them stoop to every kind of slaughter and stay not even for the wounded, nor the women and children. They have looked upon Christian nations at peace and have seen them dominated by fear, hatred and suspicion, divided into nationalistic camps, animated by greed and preparing to fight again. Shocked by the un-Christian character of our civilization, they have thought they had better make the best of their own gods, or try no gods at all.

That is because we Christians have failed after the centuries to make true disciples for Christ out of Americans and Englishmen; the nations in darkness fail to see the light in us. "If the light within thee be darkness, how great is that darkness." If the blind lead the blind they have a common destination. After all, the man who says of missions, you had better begin at home, is right. Missions have to begin at home. They have to begin in the heart of the lover of Christ. But if we believe him to have all authority in heaven and on earth, where on earth is the man who does not need him? If he commands us to make disciples of all nations, what right have we to confine him to any one nation? But we cannot bear witness to what we have not.

I wish I could make a better report, but I cannot see how we can report progress when we make none. I can't even say we are holding our own; that is a report for misers, not missionaries. What we have slips through our fingers if we hold it for ourselves. May God give us grace not to look on our own things, but the things of others, the needs of others, the salvation of others.

REV. GEORGE N. EDWARDS, Chairman.

A MISSIONARY SURVEY.

By J. O. ATKINSON, Mission Secretary.

(Presented to the Conference of the Carolinas at Elon College, May 3rd, and printed by request.—J. T. K.)

It might not be out of place or uninteresting for us to refresh our memories, or to be informed as to our missionary work, as we know it here in the South. If this may be pardoned, then consider first, the Home Mission phase. Prior to 1905, the seven conferences composing the Southern Convention, were each doing their own work in Home Missions, confining the same to their boundary lines. This prevailing idea was found to be defective and inadequate for two reasons:

First, Little or no work in church extension was undertaken, or could be, outside of what was strictly conference lines.

Second. No one conference was strong enough to undertake large and costly projects. The various conferences felt this, and the matter was brought to the attention of the convention at more sessions than one. Finally, at the session of the convention—Berea Church, Nansemond County, Va., April 29, 1904—it was voted "that the convention make an annual call for Home Missions amounting to $2,250.00. That the funds under this call shall be collected and disbursed by a board of five which shall be known as the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention.

Out of this our first Mission Board was formed for the purpose, not of interfering with any work that any conference was doing, but when a conference was ambitious enough to undertake a large and costly project, to get behind the same and to throw the moral support and financial aid of the whole convention to the immediate help of such an undertaking, or to build at points which were outside of any conference boundaries. A small apportionment was laid upon the churches through the conference of what was termed "Convention Missions." The first year (1905) this apportionment amounted to $812.76; second year (1906), $849.00; third year (1907), $891.54. Then the feeling grew that there should be a Mission Secretary, giving his full time to this work. At each session of the convention a Mission Secretary was elected, but the prospect and promise were such that the person elected would invariably decline, of course, after "prayerful consideration." In 1916, at the convention in Burlington, it was decided to appoint a committee, whose business it should be to see to it that a secretary was secured, and in case the person elected declined, another might be chosen. It so happened that the secretary thus elected accepted, but the church which he was serving voted a request to the committee that their pastor be not taken from them for one year, promising to relinquish him September 1, 1917. The Mission Board, which had been formed, met in the summer of 1917, and decided that the first move would be to secure a fund on pledges covering a period of five years of $125,000, thus giving an income of $25,000 a year in addition to what might be realized from the conference apportionment. This program was completed in 1918, incidentally on the day that the Armistice was signed with Germany, and the income thus increased gradually, grew until it reached in one year $50,000. It is to be regretted that we are not having an income of that dimension at present. Let it be said, however, that in all our efforts, though I am now speaking of Home Missions, the Board went upon the basis of contributing dollar for dollar to Home and Foreign Missions, dividing equally except designated funds. Many of our people had not caught the vision for Foreign Missions and designated their funds to Home Missions, and thus threw the plan off balance. The plan, nevertheless, was to give one-half to Home and one-half to Foreign Missions.

Carrying out the original idea of beginning a fund for Missions, the wisdom of the convention will be visualized if specific instances are named. As an example: The Eastern Virginia Conference has cherished the work at Christian Temple, then called Park Place, Norfolk, but the original Mission Board, before there was any Mission Secretary, and then when a larger work was to be undertaken than the conference could sponsor, the Convention Mission Board pledged $40,000—$8,000 a year for five years—which it paid. The Eastern Virginia Conference, as such, could not put in such a sum, the total of its ability being something like $1,000 per year, but this it gave, and the two working together developed the project, thus stimulating the local membership to the consummation of a great task. Or a specific instance, more to the point of going to what may be termed, outside of the conference boundary, the Mission Board made a survey in Richmond, sent a man there, paid his salary as pastor until a local organization was gathered, and then put $30,000 into the building project. This church was quite removed from the activities of other churches, even in the Eastern Virginia Conference, which it joined and, as far as I now recall, was not aided by conference funds. Two other cases of this kind may be cited. In the Valley of Virginia, the conference was unable to project any costly work, and certainly would not have done so out of the immediate confines of its activities. So our Convention Mission Board sent a man to Winchester and stayed behind him until our Winchester Church was built and paid for. Another instance of this type was at Columbus, Ga. The Georgia and Alabama Conference was not in position to undertake any pretentious work, and the majority of its churches were in other territory, and so our Mission Board made appropriations and stayed with the church until the church was built and out of debt.

All this is recited (and the recitation could be carried on to considerable length with similar examples), that we may have a survey of things as they have come to be in our Mission work here in the South. It was a matter of planting the seed, and has been a matter of slow growth, but a growth that has resulted in some of our larger churches, which, as stated, the conferences themselves could not have developed. Our survey of conditions as they obtain today would lead us into rather unpleasant fields, because we are not permitted now to take the initiative and go rapidly with the planting of larger churches, for the reason that we have not paid our pledges that tie our hands. Such, for instance: $25,000 at South Norfolk, Va., and like sums covering a period of years at other points, and the necessary effort to hold church properties at places where there was indebtedness which had to be met, or lose the property. Despite this fact, and despite the fact that income has decreased from natural causes, some of that decrease can be attributed to the fact that it is more difficult to get money to pay debts than it is to get money to start new points and open up new work. Our survey would not be complete without mentioning the work in Carroll County, Va.—purely a home missionary enterprise—which thus far has resulted in two churches with their Sunday Schools and their day schools, at one place of eight months the past year. This work of our Board is exactly in line with the work that our Congregational constituency has in the mountains of Tennessee, with headquarters at Pleasant Hill.

One of the first activities in the promotional line of Secretary of Missions was that of trying to interest and organize our good women in Mission work. There were no Women's Missionary Societies and no work for Missions—only Ladies' Aid Societies—when our Convention Mission work began. At present there are over 100 Women's Missionary Societies, whose annual contributions amount to between $10,000 and $12,000.

One feels that the larger contribution, however, and that which looms more boldly in the field of survey, is the spiritual activity and the benevolent attitude which have been developed in churches through the years of our missionary propaganda. That which gives us unwavering faith and unflinching courage is the assurance of certainty and victory in our efforts. Our Lord gave just one program for his church. We cannot believe that we can improve on that program, nor that he shall fail, or be defeated, in his wisdom and power to carry that program to completion. Before the ascension, but after the resurrection, he gave the commission: "Go ye and teach all nations." That was his program, and not ours. It is ours, as his followers, to see to it, as far as we can, that that program is carried out. And we have the assurance from the spirit world that that program is adequate, is sufficient, and will be carried out. That beloved disciple who had leaned on Jesus' bosom and heard with his own ears the program of his Lord, living and writing many years afterwards, said: "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's Day and heard behind me a great voice, and I turned to see the voice and saw seven golden candlesticks in the midst of which was the Son of Man, who had in his right-hand seven stars, and these seven stars are the messengers of the seven churches." Here then is our one safe anchorage, and source of an unflinching faith and an invincible courage. This program is going to win out, because he not only sends the messengers to the churches, but he holds them in his hand. Seven, as we understand it, is a complete number, an adequate and sufficient number, so there shall be an adequate and a sufficient number of churches. There is an adequate and a sufficient Christ who walks among his churches and reflects his light through the churches and in his hands are an adequate and sufficient number of messengers to proclaim the gospel in those churches, and to herald the Glad Tidings through those churches. A sufficient number to reach all nations and tongues and tribes and peoples shall come and go. I may fall down in my task, you may fall down in yours. In any year our contributions may not do what they should, but ours is an unflinching Christ and his word shall prevail. So he gave the program before departing; and then revealed after his departing that there should be adequate machinery, movement, power to carry out that program. Because of our indifference, because of our faithlessness, because of our lack of courage, he may be a long time in having his program completed, but he has set his hand to the plow and he will never turn back; he has fixed his face on Jerusalem and the threat of the cross has no terror for him. He knows by experience that the tragedy of the trial of the cross leads to the triumph and victory of the resurrection. We may fail, but our Lord will conquer.

Ours is a spiritual task, a task which only a spiritual body undertakes. The church, a spiritual body, of which our Lord is the head, is the one organization in Christendom that undertakes to do missionary work. To the church we must look for all missionary support, all missionary supplies, all missionary giving. Our survey of Missions is the survey of the spiritual activities of the church. Somehow or other the way often seems dark; but thank God, we may yet sing: "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," and shall realize that he will yet be crowned "Lord of Lords and King of Kings." It may not be in our day, but it will come. It will come, because our Lord instituted it and because it is his program, and not ours, and because he laid down his life to show us the way, glory, and conquest in his name.

MOTHER'S DAY.

Next Sunday is Mother's Day. It is so by authority of the United States Congress which adopted a resolution on May 10th, making the second Sunday in May a national holiday. "Dedicated to the memory of the best mother in the world, your mother." It is so because Miss Anna Jarvis, of Philadelphia, Pa., lost her mother on May 9, 1906, and a year later not only observed the anniversary of her mother's death, but caught the idea that a day should be set aside annually in honor of all mothers. Miss Jarvis spent much time and energy in promoting that idea. With the result that several states adopted the idea, and the Congress designated the second Sunday in May as Mother's Day.

Many of the world's wisest people have said beautiful things concerning their mothers. Successful men do not hesitate to give credit to their mothers for the success which has come to them. It is, therefore, fitting that churches, Sunday Schools, Christian Endeavor Societies and all church groups join in the observance of Mother's Day on next Sunday.

No honor is too great to give to true mothers. God has given to them the highest possible honor. It is their privilege to give life and mold character. Great people come from very humble homes where there are good mothers, but great people seldom come from any home where there is not a good mother.

It is to be hoped that the observance of Mother's Day will not only give others the chance to express their appreciation of motherhood, but will also impress the mothers with the great opportunity which is theirs. They can direct the thinking and make the nation which is to be. As are the mothers today, so will be the world tomorrow.

From the vast field of literature on this subject, I have gleaned for your help the following items:

MY IDEAL.

God took a ray from the shining sun
A moonbeam, a starbeam, too;
Wove them together, the three into one,
And made the sweet smile of you.

God took the song of the nightingale
At dusk when the day is through;
The low throbbing notes of a violin,
And fashioned the voice of you.

God sought for virtues great and small,
All the bright heavens through
Then chose the fairest of them all
And made the pure soul of you.

—Thelkla Hollingsworth.

MOTHER O'MINE.

I know whose love would follow me still
Mother o'mine, O mother o'mine!
If I were hanged on the highest hill,
Mother o'mine, O mother o'mine!

If I were drowned in the deepest sea,
Mother o'mine, O mother o'mine!
I know whose tears would come down to me:
Mother o'mine, O mother o'mine!

If I were damned of body and soul,
Mother o'mine, O mother o'mine!
I know whose prayers would make me whole:
Mother o'mine, O mother o'mine!

—Rudyard Kipling.

THE MOTHER'S HYMN.

Lord who ordainest for mankind
Benignant toils and tender cares,
We thank thee for the ties that bind
The mother to the child she bears.

We thank thee for the hopes that rise
Within her heart, as, day by day,
The dawning soul, from those young eyes,
Looks with a clear steadier ray.

And grateful for the blessing given
With that dear infant on her knee,
She trains the eye to look for heaven,
The voice to lisp a prayer to thee.

Such thanks the blessed Mary gave
When from her lap the Holy Child,
Sent from on high to seek and save
The lost of earth, looked up and smiled.

All-Gracious! Grant to those who bear
A mother's charge, the strength and light
To guide the feet that own their care
In ways of Love and Truth and Right.
—William Cullen Bryant.

LOVE OF OUR MOTHERS.

(Tune: "St. Catherine.")

Love of our mothers, living yet,
In cradle song and bedtime prayer,
In nursery rhyme and fireside lore,
Thy presence still pervades the air;
Love of our mothers, priceless gift,
Our grateful hearts thy praise uplift.

Love of our mothers, tender love,
The fount of childhood's trust and grace,
O may thy consecration prove
The wellspring of a nobler race:
Love of our mothers, priceless gift,
Our grateful hearts thy praise uplift.

Love of our mothers, guiding love,
For youthful longing, youthful doubt,
How blurred our vision, blind our way
Thy providential care without:
Love of our mothers, priceless gift,
Our grateful hearts thy praise uplift.

Love of our mothers, Christian love,
O living truth beyond our creeds,
Still serve the home and save the church,
And breathe thy spirit through our deeds:
Love of our mothers, priceless gift,
Our grateful hearts, thy praise uplift.
—Arthur Bardwell Patten.

TRIBUTES TO MOTHER.

God could not be everywhere, and so He made mothers.—Jewish Proverb.

Men are what their mothers make them.—Emerson.

Let France have good mothers, and she will have good sons.—Napoleon.

All that I am or hope to be, I owe to my angel mother.—Lincoln.

In after life you may have friends, fond, dear friends, but never will you have again the inexpressible love and gentleness lavished upon you, which none but a mother can bestow.—Maccaulay.

The strings of camels come in single file
Bearing their burdens o'er the desert sand;
Swiftly the boats go plying on the Nile,
The needs of men are met on every hand;
But still I wait
For a messenger of God that cometh late.

I see the cloud of dust rise on the plain
The measured tread of troops falls on my ear,
The soldier comes the empire to maintain
Bringing the pomp of war, the reign of fear;
But still I wait
For the messenger of God that cometh late.

They set me looming o'er the desert drear,
Where broodeth darkness as the darkest night;
From many a mosque there comes the call of prayer,

I hear no voice that calls on Christ for light,
But still I wait
For the messenger of God that cometh late.

Benediction—"Father, may we answer in the spirit of the prophet of old, 'Here am I, Lord, send me.'"—Amen.

The annual reports of the American Board for the past two years should be in the hands of the program committee for this program. Compare the reports for the two years. Are we advancing or retreating in our missionary work? How many new missionaries were sent out each year? What mission fields and stations have been closed during the past two years? What was the total number of missionaries on the field each year? What do you predict for the future of missions if these conditions continue? If you can secure a report several years old to compare with these, it will make the study much more valuable.

Ask the president of the Woman's Missionary Society to help you plan this program. She will be able to supply you with some helpful literature.

Ask the church treasurer to provide you with the following information:

1. Amount contributed by your local church to missions during the year ending October 1931 (or several years earlier), if you can secure the figures. During the year 1932.

2. What was the average amount per member each year?

3. Has the decrease (if there has been one) been greater in missionary giving than in contributions to the local church? If so, how much? What do you think of that policy?

What parts of the world are still without Christ? If we were merely concerned with giving a verbal answer we could do that in two words: All parts. There is not a land in the world today that is truly dominated by the ideals of Jesus. America is a so-called Christian nation, yet no one with any genuine concept of the Kingdom of God could claim that we have attained that ideal.

We know that if we should attempt to preach the gospel to "every living creature" in this generation our work would be so superficial that we would not make Christians, and our converts would soon revert to their former beliefs and customs. Jesus lived in intimate contact with his twelve disciples for three years, yet one of them betrayed him and no one of the others fully understood his mission in the world. Making the world Christian is a slow process, challenging the supreme effort of all true followers of Jesus for many generations.

Probably at no time since the days of the early

JESUS ASSERTS HIS KINGSHIP.

LESSON VII—MAY 14, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Behold thy king cometh unto thee; he is just, and having salvation."—Zach. 9:9.

LESSON TEXT: Mark 11:1-10; 16-18.

It is interesting to note that so far as the gospel records are concerned, Jesus first announced his Messiahship or Kingship to the Samaritan woman at the well at Sychar. He next made it known to his disciples at Caesarea Philippi. Now he proposes to assert his kingship to the Jewish nation as a nation at Jerusalem. He is going to the political and the religious capital of his nation. It is symbolic of what the Master would do today. He would assert his Kingship over the political and religious life of the nations today. If he were acknowledged as King in the affairs of nations, and if he was recognized as King in the affairs of the church, the world's major problems would be solved.

A Colt.

When Jesus was ready publicly to proclaim his Messiahship he laid his hands on a piece of property. He would teach us that material things have a relation to, and a place in, the spiritual order of things. The fact that he chose the foal of an ass is significant. The horse was an emblem of war; the ass was a beast of burden, an emblem of peace. The kingdom of Jesus Christ is not to come by armed force, not by military power, but by the quieter but more effective and more abiding way of peace.

The Lord Hath Need of Him.

What, the King needed anything! It seems posterous on the face of it. But these words spoken of a specific thing at a definite time are universal and timeless in their application. God does need things. In fact, he must have certain things if his kingdom is to come. He needs human heads and human hands and human hearts, he needs human feet, he needs material things. Unless his children put at his disposal themselves and their material things, his kingdom cannot come. Those of you who read these notes have something that God can use and which he needs. If we only saw this truth, like the owner of the colt, we would straightway send him back hither.

Even As Jesus Had Said.

They went as Jesus had said, they found it as Jesus had said, they said even as Jesus had said unto them. When we do even as Jesus says unto us, we will find that it is even as he has said unto us. He is not slack concerning his promises. He delights in being put to the test. He is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think. When we do as Jesus Says, he will do as we say. When by faith we yield ourselves to him, we will find that he will not let us down. The man who obeys Jesus will not be sent off on fools' errands, nor will he be led up blind alleys. As the old hymn says:

"If our love were but more simple,
We would take him at his word,
And our lives would be all sunshine,
In the sweetness of our Lord."

And They Brought Him to Jesus.

It was only a young colt, unbroken, an humble beast of burden, but Jesus used it in a glorious way in presenting himself as King. We may not have much material goods, or many talents, but if we bring such as we have and are to Jesus he will use it in such a way that his name shall be glorified and his kingdom will come.

Behold Your King.

The King is Jesus Christ, the one who loved us and gave himself for us. The one who knowing that he was the King washed the disciples' feet. So far as the writer of these notes is concerned this King can have my life and my allegiance. Such a King demands and deserves our all.

"Hosanna"—"Crucify Him."

The same crowd that hailed Jesus as King on Sunday, clamored for his death on Friday. Popular enthusiasm and mob action is not to be trusted. Jesus must depend, not upon those shallow sentimentalists who hail him lightly as King with their lips, but upon those who quietly crown him as King in their hearts and obey his sovereignty in their lives.

And He Entered the Temple.

He went straight to the center of the religious life of the nation. No nation will rise any higher than its religious ideals. There can be no permanent improvement in conditions in general in America or in the world until there is a cleansing of the religious life of the churches. If Jesus were to come to our nation today he would first of all cleanse the centers of religious life, as the necessary first step toward transforming the fabric of our national life.

A House of Prayer for All Nations.

The church is a house of prayer, a place where men not only make their petitions known unto God, but a place where he makes his will known unto them. It is not only a place where men present themselves to God, but where God presents himself to men. A real church is a house of God, the gateway to heaven.

And it is for all nations. The church meets a universal human need. It speaks in a universal language. The church is the mediator of that without which man cannot live. Let every minister see to it that his church services meet the spiritual needs of his people. Let the people see to it that they are still so that they can know what God is.

YOUTH FELLOWSHIP.

church has the future of Christianity been as uncertain as it is at the present time. Shall we continue to allow stations to be closed? Shall we withdraw our support from struggling centers? Shall we allow Communism to drive Christ out of China as it has out of Russia? Or shall we rise to new vision and purpose and, by intelligent support of new missionary policies and sacrificial giving, make possible an advance of Christianity in all lands? It is an individual question!

The purpose of the study of this question is to get some grasp of the present situation. Christian missions are facing a severe crisis at one of the most critical times in the world's history, when Christianity and even civilization are being weighed in the balance, almost every missionary organization is being forced to retrench because of lack of funds. What of the future?

E. R.

Precious, indeed, those thirty minutes by which the teacher tries to get at the separate hearts of a thousand men to convince them of all their weaknesses, to shame them for all their sins, to warn them of their dangers, to try, by this way and that, to stir the hard fastenings of the doors where the Master himself has stood and knocked, yet none opened, and to call at the opening of those dark streets, where wisdom herself hath stretched forth her hand, and no man regarded. Thirty minutes to raise the dead in.—John Ruskin.

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

"I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord."—Psalm 116:13.

"The opening of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."—Psalm 119:130.

MONDAY. PASS IT ON.

"Whatsoever good thing each one doeth, the same shall he receive again from the Lord, whether he be bond or free."—Eph. 6:8.

If you hear a person complimented, why don't you find an opportunity to tell him about it?

This world needs more pleasant reports and fewer biting criticisms.

If you want to be popular, remember the nice things which one person says of another and tell them.

It is such a little thing to repeat a compliment. No matter how big and important the man or woman, a genuine compliment gives pleasure.

You like to hear pleasant things about yourself.

You feel that what you do is "not much," and that you are given little credit.

And at the same time you seldom give or repeat compliments.

Life has hard roads aplenty, pain and discouragements not a few.

If you can make sad experiences less painful by saying a kind word, why not do it?

Desist from repeating the evil things you hear.
—Anon.

Prayer—Our Father, may our lives be luminous, reflecting thy light unto all with whom we come in contact, that they may see Jesus and all may be saved.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

WHEN NOT IN VAIN.

"Whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward."—Matt. 10:42.

If you've made this world more cheery
And you've made some heart less sad
As you've gone about your work from day to day;
If you've lifted someone's burden
And you've made some soul more glad
That you've met as you've gone upon your way;

If you've worn a smile of comfort,
If you've said a word of cheer,
If you've tried to soothe some other person's pain,
If you've from the face of sorrow
Tried to wipe away the tears,
You're a good sort, and you haven't lived in vain.
—Anon.

Prayer—O Lord bless us. We praise thy name for all thy wondrous works unto us and unto the children of men. Make us thy servants this day.
Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

KINDNESS.

"Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving each other, even as God also in Christ forgave you."—Eph. 4:32.

One never knows
How far a word of kindness goes;
One never sees
How far a smile of friendship flies.
Down, through the years,
The deed forgotten reappears.

One kindly word
The souls of many here has stirred,
Man goes his way
And tells with every passing day,
Until life's end:
"Once unto me he played the friend."

We cannot say
What lips are praising us today.
We cannot tell
Whose prayers ask God to guard us well.
But kindness lives
Beyond the memory of him who gives.
—Anon.

Prayer—O Lord, our God, we would be like Jesus and represent thee to our fellowman as well as we can. Grant unto us thy spirit, for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

FRIENDSHIP.

"Oil and perfume rejoice the heart; as doth the sweetness of a man's friends that cometh of hearty counsel."—Prov. 27:9.

If nobody smiled and nobody cheered,
And nobody helped us along;
If each, every minute, looked after himself,
And the good things all went to the strong;
If nobody cared just a little for you,
And nobody thought about me,
And we stood all alone in the battle of life—
What a dreary old world it would be.

Life is sweet just because of the friends we have made.

And the things which in common we share;
We want to live on, not because of ourselves,
But because of the people who care.
It's giving and doing for somebody else—
On that all life's splendor depends,
And the joy of the world, when it's all added up,
Is found in the making of friends.—Anon.

Prayer—O Father, make us faithful spirits in thy vineyard, withhold us in any wrong action. We would make our lives good. O thou who doest this for man, do thou to us. In Christ's name, We ask it.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE WRONG ADDRESS.

"And Nathan said to David, Thou art the man."—Read II. Sam. 12:1-9.

A house caught fire and the blaze was noticed by the engineer of a passing railroad train, who called attention to it by blasts on his whistle. A girl heard him and telephoned at once to the fire headquarters; but she was misunderstood, and the fire engine went to the wrong street. When they reached the house where the fire was, it was nearly destroyed.

How often this incident, in its essentials, is duplicated in life! We feel miserable, and charge our wretchedness to something in our lives that is not causing it at all, while the true cause is allowed to continue its damage. So it goes all through life. "Thou art the man," sternly said the prophet Nathan to David, greatly sinning. That was direct, right to the point. Let us deal with equal directness when we are considering ourselves and others. Terrible fires are raging, and it is of the utmost importance that the engines should go where the fires are.

Prayer—Clarify our vision, our Father. Help us to recognize evil, and attack it in its home. Keep us, we pray thee, on the right track. Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE BEST FOR THE WEAKEST.

"He anointed me to preach good tidings to the poor."—Read Luke 4:16-22.

Since the war the German city of Stettin has been faced with a severe housing problem, which it has been solving in a unique and humane fashion. Families must register and wait sometimes two or three years but some apartments are provided for immediate occupancy in cases of special need; and the weaker and poorer families are assigned to the very best of the new suites. The aim is to lift those families in the social scale, and so elevate the entire country.

This is part of the good tidings which Christ came to preach to the poor. It is an eminently Christian idea. "The best for the weakest"—that is a motto worth engraving on churches.

It is what parents do for their children. And it is what our Father in heaven does to all his feeblest and poorest children, bestowing on them the best of his love and the most solicitous of his care. Can we not frame our civilization so that it shall be like him?

Prayer—May we give ourselves, our Saviour, to those that need us most. Thou, the great Deliverer, didst leave the ninety-and-nine in safety, and seek among the mountains for the one that was lost. Not the righteous, but sinners, thou callest to repentance. And we would do thy work with thee. Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

THE HAPPY MAN.

"Blessed is every one that feareth the Lord, that walketh in his ways. For they shall eat the labor of thy hands; happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee."—Psalm 128:1-2.

He cannot coax the ocean brine
To give a better bath
To him because he boasts more wealth
Than any poor man hath;
He may enjoy long nights of sleep
Without a troubled mind,
I hope he does—I, too, am blest
With that refreshing kind.

And so you cannot judge a man
By dollars or by cents;
The happiest you will often find
In cottages and tents.
A man who knows, when evening comes
He has challenged wrong with right,
And conquered—he's the happy man
Who sleeps in peace at night.

—Anon.

Prayer—O Lord, guard thou our souls, our hearts, our minds and all that we are and help us to walk in Christ this day.—Amen.

HE LIVES AGAIN!

My heart is sad; my soul is tried
Because of him who bled and died,
How on the Cross he suffered pain
That such as I might live again.

Oh, Calvary, the saddest word
By which my soul was ever stirred.
The Lamb of God, the Sinless One,
Was crucified. The deed was done.

A tragedy so grim and stark!
No wonder that the world grew dark.
For he was gone, and nevermore
Would they behold him as of yore.

But when I think of Easter Day,
My cares and sorrows roll away;
When Easter comes, I'm all aglow
With fervent joy, for this I know:
That he arose from out the tomb
And with his coming banished gloom.

He is not dead; he lives again!
Ring out, ring out, this glad refrain!
He lives, he lives, he dwells on high,
And we shall see him bye and bye!

THE VINE AND THE BRANCHES.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"I am the vine; ye are the branches."—
John 15:5.

What a beautiful figure of speech. Anyone can understand it. As I read it I see the muscadine vines out from Elon College. Forest edge and brook sides were gracefully tangled with these vines. A bower of beauty in the summertime, and of bounty in the autumn. Or I see the scuppernong vines of Eastern Virginia, and think of grapes as well as vine and branches.

Have you ever plowed the fields in the early spring near a forest entwined with grapevines? Then you know the fragrance of their blossoms. Blossoms, like grapes, are neither vine nor branches. Roughly speaking they are both, vine and branches; for without the vine and branches neither blossom nor grapes are possible.

It would be enough for one time of meditation to study the element of faith bound up by Jesus Christ in that saying: "I am the vine; ye are the branches." The branches stand forever between the vine and the fragrance of the blossoms; likewise the branches forever stand between the vine and the fruit.

Jesus is saying: "It is the way of divine providence. We are dependent on one another. I trust you. I am going to give my life for the world, and you are to pass it on to the individuals thereof. I am trusting it into your hands, and making no other provision. I am the vine; ye are the branches." That was faith—that is faith.

I. "I am the vine." Sometimes we forget how human Jesus is. He delighted to call himself the Son of Man. In my backyard is a grapevine beautifully trellised and well trimmed. My German friend taught me how to prune it. Now when I look at that vine roughly I can tell very well the vine from the branches. But when I looked at it much more closely, microscopically, I could not tell vine from branches. "I am the vine; ye are the branches." We have forgotten how human Jesus was. We have forgotten that he had battles to fight; that he had hopes to develop, and desires to curb. We have forgotten that he was tempted in all points like as we are. We have not remembered his going to God for pruning away of the unfruitful branches. "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away; and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it that it may bring forth more fruit."

Jesus was not only human, but he was a servant. Listen to this: "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God; but made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men. And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." Let me say right here that I am fully aware of the fact that Christ was the Son of God as no other one is; that he was divine as no other one is; that he has power to forgive sin as no other one has; that God could say of him: "My Beloved Son," as he could of no other. I am trying to emphasize the humanity of Jesus as well as his divinity. For there is a great need that we bring him near. "He made himself of no reputation, and took upon himself the form of a servant." There was need of it.

Continuing then: I study the grapevine in my backyard in the light of our text. I find that the vine is a servant. Course, ugly, rugged. There it is almost only a prop. It holds up the beautiful, slender, graceful branches. It makes strength for the pretty foliage. It holds other things up where they may bear fruit! A servant! It goes down into the dirt; it suffers the burdens, and bears the loads. "The form of a servant."

Jesus was walking out into the night when the words were uttered. He was in company with the tested and true disciples. He had just instituted the Supper. He had set the example of servanthip. He had told them to be servants. "As the Father hath sent me, so send I you." As they walked under the overhanging grapevines, about the door of the house, perhaps, he said: "I am the vine; ye are the branches." He is saying: The beauty is in the branches; the perfume and fragrance is from the blossoms of the branches; the fruit is on the branches. "And when we see him (the vine) there is no beauty that we should desire him." I am your servant, he is saying, as I wish you to be servants for my sake for the whole wide world!

II. "Ye are the branches." "I am the vine; ye are the branches . . . without me ye can do nothing." Now we see the divinity shine! Now we see that having seen him we have seen the Father! "Without me ye can do nothing." Also we see beginning to shine forth the divinity that is within man. Again we look at the grapevine microscopically, and we see how like Jesus a true follower of Jesus may be. Again we see the interdependence of each other. "The branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me."

My good teacher, Dr. J. U. Newman, used to tell us that we should not drive a parable too far, and he is right; but I do wish to suggest one further thing I learn from my study of the grapevine. The branch that bears the blossoms and grapes this summer, may become a vine holding up other branches next summer! It may have the honor of losing its prestige as a branch, and becoming more closely affiliated with the true vine as the years come and go. As we lose ourselves in Christ we find ourselves. As we lose our lives we find them, that is, if we lose them in the service of the source of all life—God.

Further: "If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them in the fire, and they are burned (to keep them from contaminating the living branches, perhaps)." It is deadly to call ourselves Christians, and do nothing about it. It is fatal to claim to follow Jesus, and yet not abide in him. Henry Anstadt put it this way:

If a man would be a soldier, he'd expect, of course, to fight; And he couldn't be an author if he didn't try to write. So it isn't common logic, doesn't have a real, true ring. That a man to be a Christian doesn't have to do a thing.

"Ye are the branches." What use is a branch without its business of bearing foliage, and fragrance, and fruit? How shall it bear these without its abiding in the vine? Why, the very life of the vine must pour in full measure through the branches. The sap of one is the sap of the other. How shall we thus abide. By communion with him. Reading the Bible earnestly, studiously, devotedly. By prayer and meditation. By listening for his voice, and hearing it. By obeying the divine impulse to serve. By seeking his will, not our own. By faith in him, as he has faith in us. "Without faith it is impossible to please God."

It is furthermore apparent both from the words of Jesus, and from the study of the grapevine, that pruning is necessary. Discipline has been too often deliberately discarded—not just overlooked, but discarded. Authority is not popular. It grows less so, in some circles. It grows more so in other circles. That divine impulsion was not overlooked by Jesus. The divine "must," it is sometimes called. "I must needs go through Samaria," and he obeyed that "must." So I say, that respect for authority is growing in some circles. The urgent command of Christ still lives

Dear Friends:

Our strawberries are getting ripe rapidly and if nothing happens the children will have strawberry shortcake for the next few weeks—a food that all are fond of. Our farmer and boys made good time last week planting corn. This week will be devoted to planting beans for hay. The rains have pushed our garden vegetables right along and we now have green peas from our own garden. Cabbage looking fine and soon will have white head cabbage. After our vegetables begin to mature we generally keep in till frost. We planted a large crop of Irish potatoes and the season so far has been fine on them and they are looking fine.

We do our best to make as much foodstuff as possible to help feed the children. It teaches the boys how to do all kinds of farm work and gives them employment and they don't have to play golf to get exercise.

The girls do the housework, sewing and cooking, and all kinds of domestic work. They can make biscuits fit for a king. Making a biscuit that is good and wholesome is a real art. Some of our girls are real artists in this line. I heard an educated colored man make a speech in a town where I was living on one occasion. A good many of the white people went out to hear him, as he was an educator of quite a reputation in one of our Southern states. I well remember during his talk he turned to a crowd of colored girls in the audience, and said: "If I were you colored girls, I would not be satisfied until I had cooked my way into the hearts of every white family in this town. Knowing how to cook good things to eat, and especially a good biscuit, is a real art.

We have an application from one mother appealing to us to take four little children, another has three, another six, another one—all in needy circumstances and we could do lots of good by taking at least a part of them, if we had funds to support them. Our income is so small that our hair is turning gray, as young as we are, trying to figure out how we can take a one-dollar bill and make it pay for two dollars on our grocery bill. We are still figuring and our hair is still turning gray.

My plea to the church people of today, therefore, is this: Study the Sermon on the Mount! Breathe it in! Live it! Absorb it! Let it act as a mighty challenge not only to your faith but to your works! Measure yourself by its standard! Stand your personality alongside that of the Master himself! Let your shortcomings act but as a spur to greater achievement under the inspiration of the Divine Spirit! Let all your seeking be for the Kingdom of God! Make the Golden Rule hold sway in your life instead of the rule of gold! We have lately gone off the gold standard financially speaking. We may come back to the standard in time to come. It is of little real consequence to us whether we do or don't. But it is of eternal concern whether you and I are the embodiment of those principles which the Great Teacher came to inculcate—and not only to inculcate but to make them the most indispensable part of man's living.

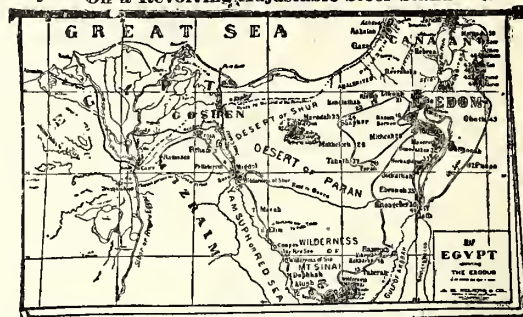

My brother! My sister! The time is here and now for blundering to cease! The surety and the certainty of truth are the rock which must be substituted for the shifting sands of human pomp and circumstance. Thus—and thus alone—will the church—yours and mine—fulfill its God-appointed mission and achieve its destiny.

Let us begin singing with a new significance and a new kind of personal application the old hymn:

The Church's one Foundation
Is Jesus Christ, her Lord:
She is His new creation
By water and by Word:

From heaven He came and sought her
To be His holy Bride;
With His own blood He bought her,
And for her life He died.

THE SUN'S PULPIT.

in hearts like Paul's, and millions of Christians throughout the world. You and I must not be fretful of the chastening of the Lord. The pruning is essential. "And whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth." "That it may bring forth more fruit."

When one feels anger, hate, jealousy, vanity, self-will, flowing through his life he needs not only to be willing to be disciplined, but to actually pray for the purging which comes from God. "And my Father is the husbandman," says Jesus. Ask him to lift from our lives the unfruitful and deadly elements and give us the spirit of Jesus, the true vine, in their stead.

Finally, vine nor branches are not fruit. Neither can say to the other, the fruit is of me. And this one point further: what is the fruit worth unless it be broken, bruised? How can it serve any good purpose as fruit, or seed unless it be broken? Has there ever been a great class of boys, or girls, in a Sunday School without someone giving some very real attention to it? Has there ever been a great church without many giving some really agonizing attention to it? Has there ever been a great mission without the actual giving of great men and great women? Has there ever been a great redemption without a great shedding of blood? (Thank God, Jesus gave the great shedding of blood for the great redemption). Do our missions languish? Are our colleges suffering? Do our missionary families suffer? Are our churches feeling helpless? And are our other enterprises in want? May we, as Christians, give ourselves to Christ in a fuller measure, forgetting ourselves, and abiding in him; and thus being willing to be broken for him? "This is my body, which is broken for you." Jesus, the first-fruits! How he was broken! He was broken for a needy world. He has faith in us. We shall not fail him.

Am I a soldier of the cross—
A follower of the Lamb.
And shall I fear to own his cause,
Or blush to speak his name?

Must I be carried to the skies
On flowery beds of ease,
While others fought to win the prize,
And sailed through bloody seas?

No, I must fight if I would reign,
Increase my courage, Lord!
I'll bear the toil, endure the pain,
Supported by thy Word.

Are You a "Highbrow?"—

Well, that's nothing to be proud of if Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, anthropologist of the Smithsonian Institution, is right. After thirty years spent in measuring the brows of Europeans, Americans, Indians, Negroes, Eskimos and what not, he has concluded that there is no difference intellectually between the "highbrow" and the "lowbrow." And if there were, white Americans would stand "not at or even near the head, but at the foot."

California Governor Vetoes Race-Track Bill.—

The Governor of California, in vetoing the bill legalizing race-track gambling, has given the public generally something to think about. He returned the bill to the State legislature with the following message: "You have sent to me for my signature a bill from the legislature to legalize race-track gambling in California. I veto it gladly and for the following reasons: Twice the people of California at the polls have voted against race-track gambling. It is not up to the legislature and the governor to overthrow the will of the electorate. Tax money from the race-tracks cannot balance the broken lives, the ruined homes, the welter of sorrow that race-track betting leaves in its wake. If you are determined to support California with gambling money, why not establish State lotteries and public-owned casinos and get their immense profits? This State should refrain from sanctioning vice and going into partnership with gamblers."

New York Modifies Alimony Law.—

Up until about two weeks ago, New York State had one of the most iniquitous alimony laws possible to imagine, but it is all changed now. At that time there were in New York City prisons alone 130 delinquent alimony payers, and whether the husband was able to pay or not made not the least difference. The civil law, as a punitive measure, required a judge to jail a husband who was in default on his payments to his divorced wife. Once behind the bars, his debt continued to mount, burying him under it. Many a vengeful ex-wife has kept her husband in jail rather than accept an alimony cut, and at times an obstinate husband has remained in jail rather than pay ex-wife a penny. But now, as we said above, it is all changed. Judges are now given wide discretion, and if a husband cannot pay because of being jobless or lacking income, the court may let him go free. No longer can irate wives demand the permanent jailing of their men. The weaker sex is coming into its rights.

Beer and Schools in Georgia.—

In Georgia, as in Virginia, there has been an attempt on the part of beer advocates to have the governor call a special session of the legislature to legalize beer. It has even been suggested that the revenue received from this source might well be used in keeping the now hard pressed schools from closing. An Associated Press dispatch quotes Governor Talmage as saying that if "the schools must depend on debauchery to stay open, they ought to close." He adds further: "The more I study about this thing the more I become convinced that when you go to legislate on any phase of the prohibition question, you've got to take in the whole subject. . . . The legal sale of beer is not going to cure the prohibition problem in America. I want the church people, the people who agitated the bone-dry law, to take a hand." We wonder, ourselves, what the "church people" will do about the situation that is now facing us. They hold the question in the hollow of their hands, and the decision is theirs to make.

A Seventeen-Hour Day.—

Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins advocates a six-hour day and a 30-hour week for others, but not for herself nor her chauffeur, if the story being told in Washington is true. Anyway her morning to midnight hours have cost her the services of her official chauffeur. When Louis St. George, young and happily married, notified her he was quitting, Secretary Perkins asked: "What is the matter, are you in poor health?" "No, indeed," replied St. George, "but I soon will be if I keep on working 17 hours a day." And he added later that his employer's failure to practice what she preaches, was disrupting his home life. Speaking editorially, a metropolitan newspaper commented in the ingenuity of Secretary Perkins in providing in her bill that executives and managerial officials shall not be limited in the number of hours they work. It was possible, this paper thought, that she believed that in trying to meet increased expenses and overcome other difficulties, the executives will require twenty-four hours a day and a seven-day week.

For Better Banks.—

Much changed, but hardly weakened, the Glass banking bill has at last been completed. After weeks of negotiation, an agreement on its various features has been brought about between Senator Glass and Secretary Woodin, and it also bears Mr. Roosevelt's blessing. The principal difference was over the insurance feature. Woodin opposed the whole idea, but was assured by Senator Glass that if he didn't write it into the bill, Congress would. This insurance feature, if the bill is passed as drawn, will take effect July 1, 1934, giving time for the close examination of the thousands of banks which would join the insurance plan. There is to be a $2-billion corporation set up by the Treasury, the Federal Reserve system and participating banks, and deposits below $10,000 will be fully protected; from $10,000 to $50,000 will be 75 per cent covered, while those above $50,000 will be guaranteed up to 50 per cent. Private banks are to be compelled to get out of deposit banking or out of securities, one or the other. A third provision is that members of the Federal Reserve system may not pay interest on checking accounts, and that the interest rate on time deposits will be determined by the Reserve Board. This last item sounds like giving non-member banks an advantage, as they could use interest on deposits as a bait to draw customers, but there are many customers who would prefer the element of safety which the member banks will provide. Furthermore, it seems to be the grim intent of the Administration that there will be none but members banks within a short time after the bill becomes effective.

Nervousness, Mental Diseases, and Crime.—

"The hospitals for nervous and mental diseases throughout the United States are crowded. Ninety-two per cent of their beds are occupied, while general hospitals show only 65 per cent occupancy. At the present moment there are approximately 450,000 patients in our mental hospitals, and it is predicted that by 1934, there will be half a million." The above is a statement by Dr. David C. Wilson of the University of Virginia Department of Medicine, in an article dealing on mental hygiene. He says that at no time has it been more necessary to understand the mental disease situation than at the present when poverty and distress are increasing the demands upon the already over-crowded facilities for its treatment. Dr. Wilson tells us that there is a direct relation between this increase in mental disease and crime. "Reform schools, prisons and penitentiaries are still schools for producing criminals, and their graduates are often more hardened and better prepared for crime than if they had not been incarcerated in these institutions," he continues, and also "congestion and lack of playground facilities, and lack of fresh air are the breeders of crime." At least 50 per cent of crime is traceable directly to feeble-mindedness, mental disease, or physical defects, and these should be institutionalized, and when once apprehended, should never be allowed at large without supervision. The other 50 per cent of the penal population "illustrate reactions to environment, circumstances which can be controlled and should, if recognized, be treated in time; but which, if allowed to continue, become fixed so that there is very little hope for cure." Dr. Wilson believes that the theory of punishment to fit the crime is futile, and that the plan for the convicted should rest on the "extent of his antisocial trend." There is great need for an education of the people of the country at large as to the value of the prevention of mental diseases, and when this is done, "the amount of delinquency will be greatly decreased, and our constantly increasing numbers of mentally sick will begin to disappear."

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Virginia Valley Conference, meets Thursday and Friday, June 15th and 16th, at Whistler's Chapel Church, as per announcement of the president, Roy A. Larrick, Winchester, Va. This convention is usually largely attended, and puts on a splendid program bearing on the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work of the Conference.

Dr. G. O. Lankford, who has been absent from his work in Burlington, N. C., since the first part of March, is spending some time at Beaufort, N. C., where he hopes to regain his strength. Dr. Lankford has been doing a great work for his church and denomination ever since before he graduated at Elon College twenty-odd years ago, and even a temporary absence from this work leaves a place that is hard to fill. Our best wishes go to him for a speedy recovery.

Rev. G. D. Hunt writes that Mrs. J. W. Lane, of Lafayette, Ala., fell peacefully asleep in the early morning of May 8th. A very large number of SUN readers will remember Bro. J. W. Lane, the bereaved husband, who has so often attended sessions of our Southern Convention, and many in the Conference in Georgia and Alabama will remember with highest esteem the presence and personality of his good wife. Our sympathies are extended to Brother Lane.

Mother's Day, May 14th, was observed fittingly, not only by wearing the rose—white or red—for the day, but by sermon, song and service in the churches. Since the beginning of the observance some twenty years ago, this beautiful token of love to mother has multiplied in interest and observance. Mother's love typifies the best that the human heart and hand have to offer in devotion, in duty and in privilege. It is love's memorial to mother, the sweetest and best of our purely human words and speech.

Rev. Elisha A. King, D. D., Miami Beach, Fla., sends us a beautifully printed booklet of forty-eight pages, entitled, "The Vision Splendid." The volume is made up of Lenten sermons, six in number, and besides being very attractive in form, is quite illuminating spiritually and devotionally. Dr. King has rendered a real service, not only to the Community Church, of which he is the popular pastor, but to the public in giving this volume to print. We presume that any SUN readers wishing a copy may have same at very small cost by addressing the author.

Rev. H. C. Caviness was a pleasant caller at the editor's office, Saturday, the 13th, and reports his deep interest in the evangelistic work which now engages his full-time and strength. He has had a meeting of some weeks at Henderson, N. C., which meeting is to conclude on May 21st. The work has been very arduous, but quite gratifying, and the results have been most hopeful. Bro. Caviness goes to Fayetteville early in June for possibly a month, and then for other meetings, for which he is engaged, until the fall. Bro. Caviness is a real evangelist whose whole soul and life is dedicated to evangelistic service.

Sunday, June 4th, the annual memorial services are to be held at Graham Providence-Memorial Church, Graham, N. C. While there are other features of the program to attract, the outstanding speaker of the day is Dr. Malcolm McDermott, of the Department of Law, Duke University. The memorial service usually attracts hundreds of people, and this year it is likely to attract even more than in previous years, since, through the help of the government and under the direction of Col. J. H. Hardin, the large cemetery has been put in beautiful shape and condition.

One faithful pastor, in transmitting the special offering for missions from his church, says: "While our offering is not what it should be, it represents real self-denial with many, though some who could have helped, did not, and I guess that is always the case. For three Sundays I tried to impress upon our people the necessity for making a missionary contribution, and I am trusting that this offering is just a beginning, and I really believe it is." The pastor feels, at any rate, he has done his duty and discharged his obligation when he has given his people an opportunity.

Rev. and Mrs. R. T. Grissom announce that the commencement exercises at our Elk Spur school, Carroll County, May 5th-7th, were very successful, happy and well attended. In addition to the commencement address by Mr. Fred Day, of Winston-Salem, on May 7th, an operetta was given Friday evening, May 5th, and a play, "The Path Across the Hill," the first by characters from the grades, the second by characters from the high school. A Daily Vacation Bible School is to be held at both Elk Spur and Rocky Ford at a suitable date this summer. Evangelistic meetings are to begin at Rocky Ford June 12th. Rev. J. Ray Dickens, of Elon College, is to assist in these meetings.

No doubt the resignation of Rev. H. S. Hardcastle from the pastorate of our Suffolk Church will come as a distinct surprise to our SUN readers. Though we have not been officially informed, we understand that "Hardy" will go to Christian Temple, succeeding Dr. Jason Noble Pierce there. We appreciate the fact that the Suffolk Church will feel that they have suffered an almost irreparable loss, and we know the heartaches that his leaving this field of endeavor must cause him, yet we know that his choice is made because of his wish to serve his denomination and his Master where he best can serve. Christian Temple is to be congratulated that he has seen it possible to answer their call. A great church has called a worthy leader.

One of the absolute proofs of the worth and value of missionary work in China is revealed in China's recent volume "Who's Who." It is found that in listing the names of those who have reached prominence and leadership in modern China, one in six of the names in the book are connected with Protestant Churches or the Y. M. C. A. in China. This proof, to the value of missions, becomes positive, when it is recalled that while only one in a thousand of China's population are Christians, one in every six of its leaders are connected with Christian organizations. They have come up from the schools and churches of Christian teaching and preaching and have pushed through the line into leadership because of Christian character training.

The coming commencement at Elon College promises to be a most interesting and attractive one. The exercises begin Friday, June 2nd, at 8 P. M., with junior representatives, and concludes with the graduating exercises beginning June 7th, at 10:30 A. M. The baccalaureate sermon, June 4th, at 11:30 A. M., is to be delivered by Dr. H. K. Eversull, Cincinnati, Ohio. Dr. Eversull preached at the college on a Sunday during the past year and greatly edified the large audience that heard him. On Tuesday, June 6th, at 10:30 A. M., the Governor of North Carolina, Hon. John C. B. Ehringhaus, will speak, following which, at 1 P. M., will be a barbecue and reunion on the campus. The Alumni Association meets in the afternoon and at 8 P. M., the alumni address is to be delivered by Prof. A. C. Hall, State Women's College, Greensboro. At the commencement day exercises, Wednesday, the 7th, Dr. Malcolm McDermott, of Duke University, is to deliver the literary address following the graduation exercises. No doubt the usually large audiences will be present to make notable the occasion and the event.

Rev. E. B. White, of Windsor, Va., writes: "Beloved brethren, isn't it a fact that many people ruin their characters by neglecting to keep their tongues? It seems to me that the most despicable reputation any one can have, man or woman, is that of being known as a person who delights in peddling gossip. Such people are the most dangerous menace to society, they shoot with the poisoned arrows fired from their envenomed tongues, covering you with moral wounds, while perhaps you know not who inflicted them. Envy is a very fruitful cause of this sin. Love is the undying principle of all good, and the stairway which leads to God. A man who has love in his heart does not wrong his neighbor, but forgives him. Supreme love to God involves appropriate love to man. Without love to God and man, heaven, by most natural laws, is simply and eternally impossible. It takes love to elevate the soul. No man's life can be great and beautiful unless he has love in his own heart. Goodness is the true source of lasting happiness. We should live by the Lord's law of love and service. The preaching of truly good lives is what the world needs most. The religion of brotherly kindness, sympathy, unselfishness, purity, honesty, love and humility is the hope of the world in which we live."

The Woman's Board of the Southern Convention met in annual session, Suffolk Christian Church, Wednesday, May 10th. The following were present and took part in the proceedings of the busy day: Mrs. J. A. Williams, Franklin, Va., president; Mrs. W. V. Leathers, Suffolk, Va., acting secretary in place of Mrs. L. W. Stagg, who, on account of illness, could not be present; Mrs. H. S. Hardcastle, Suffolk, Va., treasurer; Mrs. W. M. Jay, Holland, Va.; Mrs. E. L. Beale, Franklin, Va.; Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, N. C.; Mrs. M. J. W. White, Norfolk, Va.; Miss Priscilla Chase, Elon College, N. C.; Mrs. R. T. Bradford, Route 2, Suffolk, Va.; Mrs. I. W. Johnson, Suffolk, Va.; Visitors: Dr. W. P. Minton, Dayton, O.; Dr. W. M. Jay, Holland, Va.; J. O. Atkinson, mission secretary. Plans were discussed and adopted for the work in the various conferences and through the societies the coming year. The board voted that in future, instead of sending its Foreign Mission contribution "designated to Japan," that the amount be given to the general work of Foreign Missions, since our larger fellowship is much more inclusive than the work under the former Christian Board. Mrs. H. C. Caviness, as superintendent of literature, resigned and Miss Jewel Truitt, Glen Raven, N. C., was elected to this position.

A WORD OF APPRECIATION.

These are certainly strenuous days at the College. I am glad that so many of our friends are thinking about us, interested in us and anxious to see the program go.

I stated last week that we had begun to mail out a batch of appeals to the Alumni and the friends of the College which would number 5,000. This is certainly a job. I am used to getting out letters between four and five hundred at a time, but it is another question when you start to prepare, sign and mail 5,000. However, I think that it is worth the effort and expense.

In the letter mailed, I suggested that if all who received the letters would put their replies in the mail by May 12th, that they would reach us in time. Of course, a large number have not responded yet, but quite a number have. A few have simply returned their envelopes, stating that they were interested but were unable to make contributions, but by far the larger number have brought contributions, ranging from twenty-five cents to $25.00. The majority, however, have simply sent the $3.00 asked for.

I am writing to thank those who have responded, those who have given and those who have wanted to give, and to urge upon those who have not responded, please to let us hear from them.

The College is certainly in great need. We are not discouraged—we are most hopeful, but we are earnest in our appeals to the friends of the College to come to our assistance.

We are not asking for large amounts—you will agree—but we are asking for many, many small contributions. If the ones to whom the letters have been mailed, will respond, we will be entirely all right when Commencement arrives. Your contribution will help more now than at any other time you could possibly make it. If you will give, and give freely to the College now, it will mean encouragement all along the line. It will mean increased interest, increased confidence, increased contribution and a greatly increased student body. If you knew how much a small contribution would help—if it were at all possible—I know that you would send it in.

A few voluntary contributions continue to come in. They read of the appeal of the College in the columns of the church paper, and respond. Today I recieved the following letter:

Dear Dr. Smith:

I was reading yesterday in THE SUN where you are appealing to 5,000 members of our church, or lovers of Elon College, to send you $3.00 apiece to balance your budget for Elon. Last year at Burlington I joined the Dollar-a-Month Club, and I sent my dollar for each month up to January 1, 1933. Since then money has been so slack I have not been able to respond, but now, loving Elon as I do, I feel that I must try and "come across." So, I am enclosing $6.00 as a member of the Club. That will pay me up to July 1st, next.

I do hope that you will be able to meet the demands now facing you regarding our great College.

Very kindly,

M. W. HOLLOWELL.

Letters of this kind always encourage and donations of this size always help.

The following have responded to the appeal sent out and with payments on the Dollar-a-Month Club since our last report. Now, this is a good list—we ought to have a larger number for next week. Be sure to send your contributions in that you may be included in our next report:

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE WINSTON-SALEM JOURNAL SPEAKS A WORD OR TWO.

The attitude of the recent legislature in North Carolina to the public schools of the State evidently stirred the mind and heart of the editor of our Winston-Salem daily to write an editorial which gives food for thought to those who are willing to think, and would seem to call for sober reflection on the part of the people of this and other States. We haven't the space to quote in full the editorial in question, but give the following which will, at least, reveal the mind and attitude of the Journal's editor:

It is not an accident that the same legislature that has repealed prohibition and given aid and comfort to race-track gambling is about to destroy—or at least cripple disastrously—the public school system of North Carolina.

This commonwealth never made much progress in public education, or any other sort of social progress, until the people wrested control of the State government from the liquor traffic. That was in 1908. Most of our advances in education and social welfare have been made since that date.

Nobody who is familiar with the history of this State should be surprised, therefore, that the moment the forces favoring the liquor traffic regain control of the legislature the schools again find themselves in grave danger.

Public schools and the legalized liquor traffic never have been on friendly terms. Fundamentally they move in opposite directions. One would protect and save children. The other would expose to danger and destroy children.

It is not at all strange, therefore, that a North Carolina legislature which seems to have booze uppermost in its mind is giving schools a secondary position in its thinking.

This is not only true of North Carolina. The record reveals that no nation on earth has ever made such advances in the education of the youth as the Republic of the United States has made since the abolishment of the legalized liquor traffic by the ratification of the Eighteenth Amendment.

Certainly no state in this Republic has made more progress in public education than North Carolina has made since her people arose in their wrath and might and drove the liquor traffic from her borders 25 years ago.

From that day to this it has been a steady, forward march for schools in this commonwealth. And every step was taken by popular vote. There is hardly a community in North Carolina that has not at some time in the last two decades voted for taxes or bonds to improve schools.

Now the legislature that gives us beer and insists that people shall have a speedy new chance to vote on repeal of prohibition for the liquor traffic—this same legislature proposes to undo all the elections for schools that have been held in every city and county in the commonwealth.

It proposes that never hereafter shall any city, county or district spend a dollar for the improvement of their schools without a new election on that issue—a new vote of the people. No matter if money by the millions has been spent for roads, for courthouses, for prisons and reformatories without a vote of the people. If schools are the issue, the people must vote before one cent is expended.

This proposition means that the whole battle for schools, which we thought had been fought and won long ago in North Carolina—the battle for the very life of our schools—must be fought all over again. And fought at a time when leading politicians are rallying all their forces for the liquor traffic—for distilleries and liquor stores, dispensaries, saloons, or whatever they call the places in which the booze will be sold.

Possibly some in other States than North Carolina may read the above with profit, if not with pleasure. The country is on edge and making every sort of effort to change things, with the hope of bettering conditions, but it is difficult, indeed, to understand how we may improve conditions permanently by bringing in that which hurts, at the expense of that which helps the childhood and the youth of the land.

BRACELETS, EARRINGS, RINGS AND TABLETS.

Many of our churches are planning and preparing to put on the Crucible Campaign to receive trinkets containing gold, platinum and silver. These services can and should be made deeply devotional and spiritual. Possibly the experience of others will indicate. Mildred Allen Adams, writing in the Biblical Recorder (Baptist) of last week, tells something of the service in her own church:

On the second Sunday morning in April, the Warrenton Church put on its Crucible Campaign with a special consecration service. The campaign committee had asked the pastor, Rev. R. E. Brickhouse, to build the service around the thought of personal consecration of life and possessions; the families of the church had been visited and an envelope given each in which to bring their offerings of silver and gold, with the understanding that all the envelopes not brought in on Sunday morning would be called for later. A crucible was placed in the church and the offering taken as the choir sang the hymn of consecration:

Take my silver and my gold, not a mite would I withhold,

Take my moments and my days; let them flow in ceaseless praise.

Our pastor, Mr. Brickhouse, gave a most impressive sermon from which we received valuable teachings. He based his talk on Bible examples of giving, our obligations and our motives of giving. He spoke particularly of the wonderful response of the children of Israel to God's call through Moses when "they came both men and women, as many as were willing-hearted, and brought bracelets, and earrings, and rings, and tablets, all jewels of gold," and "we have therefore brought an obligation for the Lord, what every man hath gotten, of jewels of gold, chains, and bracelets, rings, earrings, and tablets, to make an atonement for our souls before the Lord."

In speaking of our obligations he told of God's ownership and our responsibility as trustees or stewards, for God says, "the silver is mine and the gold is mine," and if he calls for it, we should give willingly and freely. The spirit and the amount of our giving is determined by love; our love for God, for his work, for our brethren, and for the lost.

The crucible idea was so novel to our rather conservative thinking members that the appeal did not reach them at first, but the idea grew and we feel that we have had a splendid response from the number of offerings made. The amount may not be so great, but the number of individual gifts was indeed gratifying, and we feel that our church has felt the uplift of a new consecration in the service of the Master.—Biblical Recorder.

The above testimony is only one of hundreds of similar type that we could quote from other church papers whose congregations have already held the service. We are sure that our pastors and missionary societies will reap the benefits of this spiritual activity and enjoy this privilege and prospect of consecration and devotion. J. O. A.

POWER.

Our world has been transformed by power. The application of power to industry has developed resources and profits more rapidly than we have been able to digest or distribute them. A machine age has transformed conditions under which we labor and live. By machinery we produce more and go further in a day than we could twenty years ago in a week. The transformation has been enormous and complete.

However, it is not mechanical and steam power—it is moral and spiritual power that will determine the future of our civilization. Moral control and spiritual development have not grown as rapidly and developed as universally as power applied to material and physical relief.

"All power," declared our Lord, "has been given unto me," and it is this power, of which he is the source and the center, that is ultimately to control the world and to save civilization from wreck and ruin, if it is saved. One is astounded in reading the history of the past, at the number of civilizations that have lived out their day, spent their energy, and have perished from the earth and remain only a faint record, or memorial, in history. Our civilization must and will go the way of all the earth, except as it is directed and saved by moral and spiritual power. The most important thing and the greatest need of the world today is that of generating and developing moral and spiritual power.

THE SPIRIT OF PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANITY.

By DEAN A. L. CHAPMAN.

There is growing up in America a generation of religious illiterates. A pragmatic and positivistic philosophy has shattered ideals, wrecked standards, discarded principles, and precipitated a period of chaos and confusion in the field of ethics and religion. Wave after wave of indifference and irreligion is beating upon the citadel of our Christian faith. Paul Hutchinson in the April number of the Forum says: "Western religion is entering on an ordeal more severe than any it has known for at least four hundred years."

Who is equal to such times as these? Paul says: "Our sufficiency is of God who has made us ministers of a new covenant, not of the letter, but of the spirit: for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." The church today manifestly needs the spirit that giveth life. Therefore, a new study of the primitive Christianity should be of vital interest to all Christians, especially the Disciples of Christ, in this day of testing and reconstruction of faith and order.

The important thing about a man is his spirit. It is not his physical strength, his intellectual power, his position or his possessions, but his spirit that determines his character and worth. The same is true of an institution or a religion. Take away the spirit of the early church and there would be little left. Of far greater importance than the doctrines and ordinances to which they firmly held was the spirit that dominated them and sent them out as victors in the face of appalling difficulties. It was that invisible, intangible quality of mind and heart that we call spirit, that inspired and equipped them for their great achievements. A new day and changed conditions, of course, demand new methods and new adaptations of the gospel message, but who can doubt that the great need of the church today is the same spirit of faith, courage, love, and sacrifice that made the early church triumphant and glorious? The Disciples of Christ historically and also by virtue of the "plea" we make are committed to this spirit as well as to the doctrine and ordinances of the New Testament.

As one reads the records of the first Christians one is impressed by the fervor of their spirit, the intensity of their purpose and the glow of their enthusiasm in the great adventure. They were not a sombre and melancholy group; there was about them a note of joy and gladness of heart, as they entered upon a humanly impossible enterprise. There was a spontaneity about their procedure that stood out in marked contrast with the analytic and calculating spirit that stifles much of the enthusiasm of the modern church. Principal L. P. Jacks has written about the lost radiance of the Christian religion. How may it be restored? There was a radiance about the early Christians who took Jesus seriously as a personal Saviour and King. Theirs was an intelligent and yet mystical and emotional faith that led them to dare and to do, to suffer and to sacrifice to the uttermost. They were witnesses of what they had experienced of the love and goodness of God and the power of Christ to save. The word translated witnesses is the Greek word martyres, from which we get our word "martyrs." Thus the early disciples had the spirit of martyrdom and were willing to seal their testimony with their life's blood. In relation to each other it was the spirit of love and sharing that dominated their lives.

As yet Christianity was not commercialized. The preachers went about without a stipulated salary, working with their hands, when necessary, to supply their needs, trusting in God who had "ordained that they who preach the gospel should live of the gospel." They were not hirelings, who would flee when danger threatened the flock; they had the spirit of "the good Shepherd who gave his life for the sheep." They were "poor, yet making many rich, having nothing, yet possessing all things." As one has well said: "The early church was noted for its poverty and its power, while the modern church is noted for its wealth and its weakness."

The ministry was not yet professionalized. Jesus was not an ordained minister and the apostles and first evangelists were not "clergymen." They had been trained, however, in the school of Jesus and equipped with the spirit, so that "with great power they bore witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus, and great grace was upon them all." And the people who heard them "took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus and had learned of him." They created a stir wherever they went, and it was said of them that "they turned the world upside down."

The church was not yet institutionalized. It had sufficient organization for all purposes to be served. It was primarily a fellowship of the faithful, a body of believers, a society of the saved, a "beloved community" in Christ, rather than an ecclesiastical order in which some "should lord it over the flock of God." It was an intimate fellowship with just enough organization to serve its purposes and to facilitate its activities.

The church was not yet secularized. Its members did not conform to the standards set by the business world or to the demands of the political authorities. When forbidden to preach any more in the name of Jesus, they answered: "We ought to obey God rather than man," and continued to proclaim the message of life to the people. They took their stand for the principles of the gospel and bravely accepted the consequences of their faith and teaching. They did not belong to the class of "yes men" who are so numerous in both the church and state of the modern world.

Their spiritual vision was not hindered by the abuse or the exclusive use of the scientific method in the quest for truth. Along with open minds they had open hearts and spirits free to discern spiritual things. Through faith in Christ every capacity and faculty of their beings was enlisted in the knowledge and service of God. They assumed the great verities of religion and entered into such intimate fellowship with God that when they prayed "the place was shaken wherein they were gathered."

One never ceases to wonder at the giant strides of progress made in the spread of the gospel and the founding of the churches in those early days. Empty-handed the apostles and the first disciples evangelized the world in their generation. During the first three centuries they gained the victory over the mystery-religions of the pagan world, the Greek philosophy of their times (capturing the best of it for Christ and the church) and became the recognized religion of the Roman Empire. The secret of these achievements is not to be found in their material equipment, their organization, their financial backing, or their scientific methods or training, but in their spirit, their faith and courage, their appreciation and enjoyment of the new-found faith and hope in Christ.

In each new period of crisis and testing the church does well to go back to the New Testament for ideals and inspiration. While engaged in the task of "Re-Thinking Missions," what is more timely and important than to restudy and rethink the spirit, methods and achievements of Christian missions in the first century? It is said of these pioneers in Christian missions that they "out-thought, outlived, and outdied the pagan world." To meet the challenge of the coming days and to be equal to the tasks of the local church, Christian education and missions, nothing less will suffice than the spirit of the Master himself, the ancient spirit of love and sacrifice. "It is not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit," saith the Lord.—Christian Evangelist.

THE VOICE OF BEER.

Until the coalition of the rulers of high finance and the interests of greed and appetite reached the place where that coalition felt sure of its power to force repeal, the arguments for the return of beer were cleverly phrased. Just as soon as Congress legalized beer, however, the picture changed.

When experts in criminology now sound a warning that the effect of the return of beer will be to create a worse condition in gangland than that which now prevails and that racketeering will doubtless spread to various legitimate enterprises, the beer barons and their henchmen, confident that the backbone of prohibition has been broken, answer defiantly: "We want beer!"

When it is pointed out that the repealers have for years insistently and loudly declared that "the saloon with its evils not come back," this definite reminder is met by the loud and blatant shout: "We want beer!"

When safeguards are suggested for the protection of minors the "logical" answer comes: "We want beer!"

When attention is directed to the fact that the old beer saloon was perhaps the worst institution in our social life and that more than 90 per cent of the old liquor traffic which the prohibition amendment outlawed was nothing more nor less than the traffic in beer, there is advanced the withering counter argument: "We want beer!"

When those exceedingly ardent supporters of beer are reminded that one of the stock arguments in favor of the legalization of beer was to protect the American home from being transformed into a saloon and that the new law, on the contrary, encourages rather than discourages the use of the home for beer purposes, the suggestion is brushed aside by the chorus of wet voices shouting: "We want beer!"

When the question is raised as to the fact that the Eighteenth Amendment, which is still a part of the Constitution of the United States, specifically prohibits the manufacture, transportation and sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes and that the present national beer legislation by Congress permits beer of an alcoholic content as great as that which characterized much of the beer of pre-prohibition days, these unpleasant facts are disposed of by a bill of particulars, which recites the legal and constitutional aspects of the case by saying: "We want beer!"

When evidence is produced to show that the effect of beer has always been to slow down mental processes and the reflexes of the muscles and nerves and that such effect, even in slight degree, in this modern age of high speed and high power presents a serious public menace, that important scientific truth is disposed of by the modern wet scientist, who profoundly declares: "We want beer! We want beer! We want beer!—Ernest H. Cherrington, in the American Issue."

This friendly question is passed on to our readers by request of one who asks it, and would certainly seem to be sound, conservative and safe: "If we defeat the repeal at the coming election, we can change our decision in another election any time within seven years. If we pass the repeal now the decision cannot be changed. Would it not be wise, before repeal, to watch the effects of legalized beer on individuals, the home, taxation, law-breaking, traffic problems and politics?"

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Today is Mother's Day. Every church in Suffolk honored mother in song and in sermon. Thousands of other churches in city and country places held services of praise and honor to her work and memory. Happy were they who could wear a colored flower in honor of a living mother. Many wore the white rose for the first time in memory of mother. It makes a difference when one puts on the white rose-bud for the first time. There is a tear in the eye and a sob in the heart as one thinks of mother as dead. But she is not dead. She is asleep and alive. More alive than when she was in our home and in our midst. But it is a different life. It is a better life for a sainted mother. How wonderful to be free from pain and sickness and sorrow and death! When mother enters into that sweet rest and that larger life, she will be prepared to teach her children more wonderful lessons about Jesus and heaven than she could possibly teach on earth. Imagine mother meeting you at the heavenly portals, some day, some glad sweet day, to become your teacher—to tell you what she knows about the city of God.

For those who wear the white rose, mother is a precious memory. One wonders which is more precious—the presence or the memory of mother. It was wonderful to be able to sit down with mother when she was old and you were strong in the strength of manhood or womanhood. It was a joy to sit alone with her and tell her your joys and sorrows, your heart-aches and your day-dreams. After she went home, one still finds a great joy in sitting alone to remember her face, and her handclasp, and her loving counsel. This is one of the great blessings of Mother's Day meditations.

A good mother carries the burdens of her sons and daughters on her heart. If she is thoughtful and wise she knows there are many dangers threatening the lives of her household. Every war must look to mothers for sons to die on the field of battle. Every warship, every machine gun, every ton of shot and shell, every instrument of torture and death is threatening the lives of mothers' sons. For this reason mothers should decry and denounce war. When a nation prepares for war, it is preparing to kill some mother's son—maybe millions of strong sons, who should not be called upon to surrender their lives and their destinies.

Apparently our country is rapidly moving towards the possibility of national and state legislation which will make it easier for the youth of today to become the drunkards of tomorrow. It is a sad prospect for the mothers as well as the sons and daughters of America. When the "new deal" perfects its plans and purposes to legalize the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors in America, there will be another legalized institution of debauchery and death which must feed itself and thrive upon the sons and daughters of devoted mothers. On Mother's Day the people who make our laws and control our government might well pledge themselves to prevent the legal return of the drink evil in America. For the sake of American mothers this danger should be forever destroyed.

Mother sees her sons and daughters grow to maturity, and is deeply concerned about their physical, intellectual and moral safety. Will they return home at night pure and strong? Can she know that they are safe? Will they be brought home mangled in some great accident? Will they return with broken hearts and wrecked souls? Who knows what will happen to them? All day long these thoughts pass through the minds of the good mothers of our land. For their sakes sons and daughters should seek to honor mother by walking uprightly and living a clean life. Think of mother and honor her highest ideals of life.

ELON COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

The Forty-Fourth Annual Commencement of Elon College will be held this year, Friday evening, June 2nd, to Wednesday, June 7th, inclusive. Our Commencement is coming a bit later this year than usual, however, a very unusual program has been arranged. We begin Friday, at 8 P. M., with the representatives of the Junior class delivering their orations. This exercise has heretofore been held on Saturday morning. The change is made in order that opportunity for a larger attendance of this part of the program may be given.

On Saturday evening at 8 o'clock, the Department of Physical Education and Dramatics will present a three-act play, "Tangled Tales." Our Dramatic Department made a most favorable impression in the State contest held at Chapel Hill this spring. Our players presented a one-act play, "On Vengeance Heights," and were most favorably received and favorably commented upon by those in charge.

Sunday will be Baccalaureate Day; Dr. H. K. Eversull, pastor of Walnut Hills Congregational Church, Cincinnati, Ohio, will deliver the sermon to the graduating class. Dr. Eversull is a member of the Board of Trustees and a most enthusiastic supporter of Elon College. He visited the College in February and preached for us most acceptably at the College Church service. It will be a pleasure to welcome Dr. Eversull back for the Baccalaureate sermon. At 4 o'clock, there will be a joint organ recital at Whitley Memorial Auditorium by Miss Elizabeth Barney and Mr. Fletcher Moore.

According to a custom established some years ago, the President, Dr. L. E. Smith, will deliver the Baccalaureate Address Sunday at 8 P. M.

Monday, will be Class Day exercises, Art Exhibit and the rendition of "Hiawatha's Wedding Feast," by the Elon Festival Chorus. This will be a most attractive program and we are looking forward to a large attendance.

Tuesday, will be Alumni Day. This was the main feature of our program last year. We are urging all members of fraternities, sororities and members of the Alumni Association to make a special effort to return to the College for this day. It will constitute one of the most interesting features of the entire Commencement program. The address will be given by Hon. John C. B. Ehringhaus, Governor of North Carolina. A free barbecue will be served to the public on the campus; the business meeting of the Association will be held at 3:30 o'clock, and there will be a program of entertainment in the campus at 5 o'clock. The banquet will be held at 6:30 o'clock, and the Alumni Address at 8 P. M. The address will be delivered by Professor A. C. Hall, of the English Department of North Carolina Woman's College at Greensboro.

Wednesday will be Commencement Day, with the usual graduating exercises. The Literary Address will be delivered by Dr. Malcolm McDermott, of the School of Law, Duke University, Durham, N. C. The program, concisely and in detail, will be as follows:

FRIDAY, JUNE 2.

8:00 P. M.—Junior Representatives.

A WEAPONLESS ARMY MOVES FORWARD.

By TIMOTHY THOMAS.

Tramp! tramp! tramp! A mighty army moved forward. In the days of the Revolution, farmers hurried from their cabins with their crude weapons of war ready to deal death that they and their country might be free.

Tramp! tramp! tramp! An army in the blue, an army in the gray, moved out from hamlet and hillside. In the days of our civil struggle, a call went forth to every home to defend a cause which each side declared was right.

Tramp! tramp! tramp! The khaki moved forward under the shadow of Old Glory. In the stirring days of 1916, millions came from mountains and lowlands, the rolling slopes and the teeming cities, that democracy might still remain the supreme principle of all the world.

Tramp! tramp! tramp! Another army moves forward, the like of which the nation has never seen. There are no crude weapons of the Revolutionary days, no musket and rifle of the civil struggle, no shell and shrapnell or gas used in the world's bloodiest conflict. There is no blue, no gray, no khaki uniform to be seen. A silent army moves forward, each "soldier" dressed in a "uniform" of his own choice or opportunity. Some are tattered in rags, not because of their choosing but because of a circumstance over which they have had no control.

This army moves forward from broken homes, charity shelters and the highway trails, all blended into one common mass of humanity. It goes forth in the spirit of calm and the spirit of conquer. It goes forth to fight the greatest battle ever known to humanity—a battle against physical privation, against death itself.

When armies of other days moved forward there was shouting and cheering and crying. Loved ones were loathe to be separated from those near and dear to them. The "soldiers" of the new army move forward without fear that they shall not return, but with a joy and gladness that at least a partial opportunity has come to them that they may, temporarily at least, bridge the chasm that has been widening and deepening between them and the port of hope.

An army of volunteers this is, no conscription save by an economic depression that has become a human oppression. No death-dealing weapons they carry, but implements of production, to strengthen, beautify and glorify their country's natural resources. They are not marching behind the Stars and Stripes, but they are being protected by the strength of its folds, and being given an opportunity through the spirit it represents.

In their homes, broken in many instances, torn asunder in many others, dependents will have the satisfaction of knowing that the "soldiers" they have sent along with this army will be given food and shelter and a modest amount to help bring physical comfort to those left behind.

This great army—and it is great in many ways—moves forward against an invisible enemy, yet one whose destruction and devastation may be seen in every household and on every highway. That this army will make good no one doubts. Every "soldier" will be benefited by contact with his fellow countrymen; and through an orderly life he will guard his mental strength, protect his health and add to it by an outdoor living—a prize that should be sought by every man who places a premium on health. When the battle is over and he returns home he may not be met by the applauding multitude, but in the hearts of admiring millions he will be crowned a hero.

LANETT, ALABAMA.

Dear Bro. Editor:

I am glad to say that our church is doing splendidly just now. We are having good attendance. Have a good Sunday School—192 present last Sunday. We should have 200 next Sunday. We have a large Christian Endeavor. This Society was represented in the State Convention held in Birmingham recently.

This body of young people can do a great work for the church and the kingdom if thoroughly consecrated to the work. We are beginning a teacher training class, from which we hope to derive great benefit. We see daily a need for competent, consecrated leaders in our work. We do not need to go elsewhere for teachers, but we need to train them at home, from among our own number.

We have in our church two Woman's Missionary Societies. Both are active in the work of the church. Our senior society, in addition to its regular line of work, is clothing a girl at the Orphanage.

The only way for a society to live is to undertake some definite duty. This is true of churches and classes and organizations in the church. Our Matron's Society or junior society is already an active group. They are showing signs of spiritual activity. They will be heard from in the near future.

We have a fine prayer meeting, and Bible study. These two services are combined and we are doing a good work. We have been for these last weeks trying to get our people ready for a self-denial missionary offering, which will be gathered the first Sunday in May. We are rejoicing at the opportunity. It is surely a heavenly privilege to deny one's self for Jesus. As the church grows in the missionary spirit, it grows in every other line. The church that gives missionary money, gives all other kinds. They pay the pastor and support every demand of the church, even growing richer in love and good works.

But the non-missionary church is generally "non" in everything. One thing I have tried to do, in all my ministry, and that has been and is now, to get my people to give to missions. I have had great joy in pursuing that course. I have never served a church which gave to the support of the missionary interests of the church, that did not support all other interests.

May the blessings of heaven be upon our missionaries and their fields of labor.

Financially, our church is working under the budget plan. Since the adoption of which we have gone over the top each week, and we have reduced our church debt $200.00. We are praising our God for this victory, and still many of our members have not been approached, and many are unable to pay. God help us to give every regenerated life a chance to serve the Lord. We are a poor, hard worked and hard-working people, but thank God we are making some headway in spiritual attainment. We give God the glory.

DRY FORCES MEET IN RICHMOND.

During the past week the prohibition forces of Virginia have been taking steps to carry the fight against the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment into every section of the State. A committee composed of Dr. Fred R. Chenault, chairman; T. Dick Sutton, secretary; Dr. Chas. W. Daniel, of the First Baptist Church, Richmond; Mrs. Howard M. Hoge, State president of the W. C. T. U.; Mrs. A. G. Quarles, local president; Dr. R. L. Alter, president of Ingleside Seminary, Burkeville, Va.; A. J. Richardson, president of the State Anti-Saloon League; Dr. F. W. Burnham, Seventh Street Christian (Disciples) Church, Richmond, and Rev. J. D. McAlister, of Norfolk, Va. This committee called a State-wide meeting to be held in Broad Street Methodist Church, Richmond, Va., and numbers responded, coming from all parts of the State.

The inspiring address by Bishop Ainsworth on the first night was followed by business sessions the next day.

The convention adopted a platform, calling upon all of the prohibition force of Virginia to unite in opposing an attempt to break down the laws of enforcement. It also elected a committee

MISSIONS

PRAYER.

Blest harbor of souls, the Church of our Lord! Her portals beckon, her shelter is secure. Some day, O righteous Author and Preserver, the Church shall possess the earth; if we cared enough, that day might be now. Great God, our Father, make people know that the Church's sustenance, its expansion, its triumph, is in human hands and that if truly we desire to build the Church, thou wilt build our bodies into fitting and able instruments for the holy service. In Jesus' name.—Amen. S.

THOSE ABSURD MISSIONARIES.

The story retold from the July, 1927, Scribner's in last month's Missionary Herald, touches a tender spot in our hearts in behalf of many missionaries. It was really an incident, based on actual fact, about the Rev. and Mrs. Cyrus Scott, our veteran missionaries in Japan. Mr. Scott died last February after 46 years of service.

"Oh, mother, aren't they funny?"

Little and old, both over 60, she with an old-fashioned hat of black and white satin bows and a green cape, he with an ancient blue serge suit and a thin overcoat, carrying a large wicker suitcase in his hand. "Mother, aren't they funny?"

During the voyage a few came to understand them. They read good books, were pleasant and helpful, but seemed wholly unimpressed with the amusements and the social life and dash around them.

After the delays of quarantine, passports, and customs in Yokohama harbor, a trim, fast launch darted out from the breakwater, the brown little white-clothed sailors at their stations. A young official, with gold braid in his shoulders and cap, danced up the companionway, saluted our officer politely and spoke in loud and excellent English:

"Are the Rev. and Mrs. Cyrus Scott of Kyushu here?"

Out came an important looking envelope from his belt, handed over by the officer bowing respectfully low from the waist, and he spoke with bared head, not as an official but rather as a child addressing revered parents:

"Sensei, His Excellency the Governor, learning of your probable return by this steamer, has sent me to bid you a hearty welcome, and to place his launch at your service. His only regret is that urgent business prevents his coming to care for you himself."

It was revealing of Mrs. Scott, that in this splendid moment, she imagined not scenes, however dramatic, but persons.

"Oh, Cyrus," she exclaimed, raising clasped hands, "it's Saburo San! He's governor now!"

Also bowing from the waist, her husband thanked the young official in quiet, but I have no doubt adequate, Japanese.

As for the rest of us, you could have bowled us all over with a word. . . . What mattered clothes? How fruitless snobbery! Many a woman there would gladly have plunged into the sea, if afterward she could have said she had been rescued by the Imperial launch. . . . And here were poor, old, unappreciative Mr. and Mrs. Scott invited guests, on their way to the governor's palace.

While the old couple were below superintending the removal of their luggage, we were too dazed to think. A deathly silence seemed to have descended upon us. . . .

"Oh, that?" said the man born in Japan. "That's nothing. I'm surprised they didn't turn out the troops! Half the people on the pier are waiting for them. And they will turn out the schools to welcome them when they cross the boundary of their own province! They are the Scotts, man, the Scotts, of Kyushu.

VANDERBILT RURAL CHURCH SCHOOL.

The Rural Church School of Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn., was held April 17th through the 28th, and the session, being the seventh of these schools held at Vanderbilt, was a decided success. There were 228 leaders in attendance from twenty states and sixteen denominations. Our Congregational-Christian leaders were third in numbers present.

This rural church school, which is preeminent among schools designed for strengthening the leadership of rural and village churches, is arranged in accordance with the newest conceptions of university extension and adult education work. Distinguished educators and religious leaders were among those conducting the classes.

Topics for study included: "Minister-Farmer Cooperation," "Leadership in the Local Church," "The Christian Message and Modern Evangelism," "The Rural Church and its Community," "Practical Programs for the Rural Church," "High Lights in Church History," "Worship," "The Light of Christ According to Mark," "Re-thinking Missions," "The Bible as a Rural Book," "The Larger Parish," "Rural Health," "Making Preaching Interesting," "Organized Recreation," "What is Christian Education?" and many other interesting and helpful classes.

A special feature of the school were the Cole Lectures, which were delivered by Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin, president of Union Theological Seminary, New York, on the general theme of "What Men are Asking: Some Current Questions in Religion." The lectures were divided into six parts as follows: "Where can we start in our religious thinking today?" "Of what use is religion?" "Can we know God?" "Is Jesus authoritative?" "What do we mean by spirituality?" "What do we mean by God?"

An enthusiastic Elon group met on several occasions with the following in attendance: Dr. and Mrs. W. A. Harper, Wm. R. Turner, Rev. and Mrs. Roy D. Coulter, G. H. Veazey, Rev. and Mrs. Clyde Foushee, E. T. Cotten, M. T. Sorrell, Carl Dollar, Miss Louise Savage, J. H. Dollar, J. R. Phipps, D. M. Spence, F. D. Ballard, G. S. Hunt, Joe French, Wm. T. Scott, and others.

The Southern Seminary Foundation, formerly the Atlanta Seminary, affiliated with the University, provides a strong center for graduate work for our Congregational-Christian ministerial students. More and more of our young men are availing themselves of this opportunity.

The rural church school this year was judged the best ever held at Vanderbilt, and those in attendance secured new inspiration for their work in the local parishes.

THE RALEIGH MEETINGS.

The Southeastern Regional Committee met at the United Church, Raleigh, on May 4th, followed by the Congregational Advisory Board of the Southeast on May 5th, the latter meeting was the thirteenth annual meeting of the Advisory Board. The meetings were attended by representatives from the region of the Southeast. In the absence of the chairmen of both committees, Dr. C. Rexford Raymond, the vice-chairman, Dr. J. Edward Kirbye, presided. In the Regional Committee meeting there was general discussion of missionary methods and problems, with special discussion on the book "Re-thinking Missions," discussion being led by Dr. J. P. McNaughton, retired missionary to Turkey, and Dr. W. P. Minton, associate secretary of the Commission on Missions. Drs. Atkinson and Bloom were leaders in the general discussion. At the Congregational Advisory Board meeting, there was general discussion of church problems in the area, with reports from educational institutions and State conferences, but the principal discussion was upon the relation of the Advisory Board to the Southern Convention of Congregational-Christian Churches. It was voted to continue the Advisory Board until the next meeting of the Southeastern Convention of Congregational-Christian Churches next year, when it is expected the merger will be sufficiently completed for the Advisory Board to cease to function. Important findings were presented and approved and we trust will later be published.

The delegates were delightfully entertained by members of the United Church at Raleigh and the ladies of the church served a luncheon on Friday which proved a friendly and happy closing of the sessions.

CHURCH VACATION SCHOOLS.

Questions regarding vacation schools are already coming to the fore. "What shall we teach?" "How shall we plan our program?" are the most pressing queries.

The following excerpts from a recent number of World Friendship suggests one possibility which the writer heartily recommends as altogether practical:

When are we going to have a vacation school? and what are we going to teach? are the queries of children in Carolina Church Schools during the spring and early summer, since they know from experience that for two weeks during the summer they will meet new friends and go adventuring in strange places.

The idea of world friendship as possible curriculum material for the Carolina Vacation Church Schools had its inception in the summer of 1928 when it was used as part of the teaching material in a primary class. During that summer and those following it has grown until last summer it had become the curriculum of the primary and junior (and sometimes intermediate) groups of eighteen out of twenty of the schools held. We are convinced that for the school with average equipment and leadership world friendship courses offer tremendous possibilities for group and individual development.

Schools have been held in rural, small town, and mill town communities, in churches with average and with no equipment, with fairly adequate and with no local leadership. The leadership has consisted of extension workers, student workers, local leaders ranging from a director of religious education to junior high school girls. Some of the most effective leaders have been from the latter group.

One thing that was painfully true except in a limited number of groups was the constricted horizon of the majority. There was a tremendous lack of information and the presence of much misinformation regarding other races and nationalities. We do not say that these groups are unique in that respect; in fact, we believe them to be quite average. The Church Vacation School has been employed as a medium through which lives might be enriched and horizons pushed back, if ever so little.

The primary and junior textbooks of the Missionary Extension Movement are used, together with its visual education materials. During the year as one visits churches one finds picture maps on the walls. They are pointed out with pride. The real test of growth in world-mindedness will come with the years. Five years show increasing ability to think through problems, to work cooperatively in the group, and to share with their friends. The desire to direct their sharing to specific individuals became almost amusing when one primary boy insisted that the scrapbook which the group was making should go to Bhaskar, the Indian boy in their stories. He might share it with his friends, Shankar, Chandrika, and the rest, but the book was expressly for him and no other! Bhaskar had become his friend and his needs very real, so real that he must help to satisfy them.

Not only have the children had their world enriched, but the teachers have gained in knowledge and in sympathy. One teacher has applied for appointment in India under the American Board.

Good materials are essential to a good Vacation School. Why not try: "The Young Revolutionist," 75c, and "Youth and Revolution in China," 25c (Leaders' Manual), for intermediates, grades 7, 8, 9; "New Joy" 75c, for juniors, grades 4, 5, 6; "Off to China," 75c, for primaries, grades 1, 2, 3.

For supplementary materials, one set each of the China Teaching Pictures, 50c, and China Picture Sheet, 25c, and a China Picture Map, 50c, for the older children will help a lot.

Write the American Board, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass., for the free leaflet material on China.

Or if you prefer a Home Mission theme: "Indian Americans," 60c, and "Friendship Fires," 35c (Leaders' Manual), for intermediates, grades 7, 8, 9; "Many Moons Ago and Now," 75c, for juniors, grades 4, 5, 6; "Children of the Great Spirit," 75c, for primaries, grades 1, 2, 3.

Supplementary materials on the American Indian are available. Free leaflet material may be secured from the American Missionary Association, 287 4th Avenue, New York City.

The Friendship Press texts give sufficient story, instruction, game and handwork material for a ten-day school.

For pre-school children, the writer uses "Vacation School Manual," by Danielson and Moore, "Beginners' in God's World," by Elizabeth Shields. All of these books may be secured from Pilgrim Press, 14 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass.

Supplementary World Friendship material may be secured in the form of "Nursery Series." In connection with a study of China, use "Ah Fu" and "Wee Wong."

The writer also uses the Vacation School as an opportunity for teaching children scripture and hymns.

For Primaries: Psalms 23, 100, 1 (arranged in order in which I teach them); songs, "Friends," "God's Children Live in Many Lands," "Whisper Song."

For Juniors and Intermediates: Psalms 23, 100, 1, 24, 121 (arranged in order in which I teach them); songs, "O Beautiful for Spacious Skies," "In Christ There Is No East or West," "O Master Workman of the Race," "O Jesus Prince of Life and Truth," "I Would be True."

The question of grouping and time schedule depends largely on equipment and teaching force. Four distinct groups are best for the average situation:

Kindergarten—Pre-school.

Primary—Grades 1, 2, 3 of the past year.

Junior—Grades 4, 5, 6 of the past year.

Intermediate—Grades 7, 8, 9 of the past year.

The Kindergarten group should be entirely by itself though in session at the same time as some of the others. Where there are only a few intermediates, especially if they are young, they may be combined with the juniors. Some of the older intermediates can help with the kindergarten and primary groups.

When the writer has schools made up of these four groups she uses the following schedule:

9:00-9:15—Attendance check-up, worship.

9:25-9:55—Primary, music and memory work; junior, story and instruction.

9:55-10:15—Games for all.

10:20-10:50—Junior music and memory work; primary, story and instruction.

10:50-11:30—Handwork for all.

The kindergarten teacher works out her own program independently from day to day. The intermediates meet in the afternoon or at night following much the same order.

PRISCILLA CHASE.

BOOZE AND BOOKS.

While our northern neighbor, Canada, has been setting this and other countries an unfortunate example in the restoration of the booze business to public and government patronage, and while that process has been accompanied by increasing expenditures for booze on the part of the people, it is interesting to contemplate some of the things that Canadians have been doing without, either partially or wholly. In an editorial under the title, "Canadians Book Hungry," the Toronto Globe recently stated that a Commission of Inquiry investigating library condition and needs in Canada had discovered that eight million of the ten million five hundred thousand people in the great Dominion are without library service of any kind. While in the large cities library service has developed upon something like an adequate scale, in sparsely settled parts of the country, the Globe states that people are literally "starving for reading matter."

Even in the large cities the situation may not be quite so satisfactory as this comment suggests. A recent visitor to our office who has been for many years on the board of the public library of one of the larger Canadian cities—a city that has hitherto maintained a large and excellent library—deplored the fact that expenditures for books had been so seriously curtailed in recent years as almost to cripple certain services that the library had formerly rendered.

We have not at hand statistics that would show how this country in the entire extent of its population compares with Canada in the matter of libraries and reading matter. Probably we should find that conditions on this side of the line are not as favorable as we might anticipate, though the extension of the privileges of loan libraries has done much in recent years to bring good books within the reach of book-hungry readers, even in remote districts. Now and again one gets glimpses of some troubling facts in the situation. We were told, for instance, the other day that a library in what might have been assumed to be one of the most cultured districts of Massachusetts had withdrawn all expenditures for new books except works of fiction. Comment seems needless upon the appallingly low condition of culture that would exalt fiction in this way above all other reading matter, or make the use and service of libraries a response only to the lowest and least intelligent demands of a reading public.

Now that our country is following Canada's example and is being so gloriously dedicated to booze, the contrast of expenditures for a needless and harmful drug with the expenditures for the cultural interests associated with books and reading may be stressed without regard to the border line. Surely any nation stands condemned before the bar of idealism that exalts booze above books!

The Globe rightly says:

"One aspect of library work mentioned by the Commission should be remembered by all statesmen. That is, that the library must play an increasing part in the making of citizens in a democracy. 'It is a discovery not yet widely known,' says the report, 'that education is not a happy and final condition or state reached at some definite period of life, but a process going on as long as one is alive. The amount and value of this education depend upon one's interests, desires, and resources. The main stream of resources is books—the recorded experiences of those who have accomplished things in the world, who have discovered laws and processes by which men may become more happy and more efficient.'—The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty.

Faith composes the mind, cures that light, fickle hastiness which is naturally in us. And is it not good reason that we wait for Him? Is He not wise enough to choose the fittest times for His own purposes? Well may we wait till He be gracious to us, for He waits to be gracious to us.—Robert Leighton.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

LEADERSHIP TRAINING CONFERENCE.

The second annual Leadership Training Conference for the Congregational-Christian Churches in Georgia, will be held at Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., July 24th-31st.

"Great oaks from little acorns grow." The first annual Leadership Training Conference was held last August at Owen Heights, Zebulon. It was small in numbers, but rich in Christian fellowship as may be evidenced by the following testimonies, the first given by a young student and the second by one of the teachers:

"To a person enjoying a Young People's Conference for the first time it is rather hard to give one's impression. The outstanding impression made on me, a student, was the close fellowship and companionship of the students and faculty. I was impressed also with the help the faculty gave the students for their work in the home church and the way the students grasped all that was offered. To me it was a most successful conference and one that will be placed among the most pleasant memories of all fortunate enough to have been present."

"If all the boys and girls at home had known what I know now, nothing would have kept them away." This remark was made by a delegate to Georgia's first conference for young people. While I have seen any number of such gatherings, I have never attended one having a group nearer one hundred per cent in character, ability and spiritual qualities. Let all the young people—and the older ones, too—know what has been the result of this first conference, and nothing can prevent the success of future gatherings."

Purpose of the Conference.

The purpose of the conference is to train the young people of the church to serve God in their own communities. It is to be a time of inspiration, fellowship and study.

Place and Cost.

Piedmont College is located in the northeastern section of the State in the foothills of the Blue Ridge Mountains. It is a healthful place of beauty and inspiration.

The college authorities are offering us the unusually low rate of $5.00 for the entire week for board and room beginning with supper Monday July 24th, and closing with breakfast Monday, July 31st. A registration fee of 25c will be required of each delegate to pay for special trips and other miscellaneous expenses.

A special offer is being made in regard to transportation. The driver of any car bringing three or more delegates to the conference will have half of his or her gas and oil bill paid by the conference.

It is urged that each church send at least two delegates, though any number may come. It is suggested that the church may have box suppers, worthwhile plays or penny socials to raise money to make this investment in its young people. Womens' organizations, Christian Endeavor Societies and Sunday Schools should all help to raise the money to send their representatives. Each pastor may help his church by finding some car which might bring a group from his parish.

Whom to Send.

Send key young people. Send those who have in them the making of leaders in your church. Send those who really mean to represent the church, and bring something of value back to you.

What to Bring.

You will need—Bedding (sheets, pillow, pillow cases, blanket), towels, soap, Bible, pencil, notebook, good walking shoes.

It would be nice to have—Any musical instrument from Jews harp and harmonica to violin; tennis racket balls, tennis shoes, baseball equipment, camera, flashlight.

Our Leaders Will Be

Rev. Alan T. Jones, Waycross, Ga.; Rev. Lawrence Stanley, Meansville, Ga.; Rev. Arnold Slater, Cochran, Ga.; Rev. M. J. Sweet, Salisbury, N. C.; Miss Martha Race, Jacksonville, Fla.; Mr. Charles Hoyt, S. S. S. worker from Georgia; Rev. H. B. Mobray, Demorest, Ga.; and Miss Annie Campbell, Roberta, Ga.

The Schedule.

The morning will be devoted to study classes such as Bible, Young People's Problems, Church School Work, World Friendship and Dramatics. The afternoon will be given over to rest and recreation. Recreation will include handcrafts, hiking, tennis, baseball, mountain climbing. The evening programs will be varied with Vesper Services, Council Ring, dramatic productions, singing, and on the final night, a communion service.

The above information will soon be ready in printed form to send out to the churches with registration blanks included. Please send in your registration fee with the blank filled out on or before July 1st, if possible, so that we may let the College know how many to plan for. If you do not get the registration blank in your hands, please send to Miss Annie Campbell, Roberta, Ga., to obtain one.

The college will be in session at the time of the conference with its summer school schedule, so we will get to understand a little of the meaning of the spirit of Piedmont, our College of the State.

WAYCROSS PARISH.

Rev. Alan T. Jones is planning to take the young people of his parish to St. Simon's Island for a week in July for study, recreation and Christian fellowship. The young people will take their own food with them and cook it.

Two thousand years have passed since Jesus lived among men to show them the way of life, and we have not yet fully comprehended the true standard of greatness. It seems to us, however, that there is a growing appreciation in recent years of the person who loses his life in service. Jesus was peculiarly sensitive to the physical welfare of his fellowmen. One is impressed as he reads the record of Jesus life and notes how much of his time and energy was devoted to relieving suffering.

The depression we are now passing through is sure to take a heavy toll of health during the next few years. Health and welfare departments are all under-manned because of lack of funds. There is much that volunteers can do if they follow the leadership of the trained social worker. Summer will soon be here and there will be great need for helpers in summer camps for underprivileged children, day nurseries, playgrounds and various other agencies for the development and preservation of child health.

But remember, that the boys and girls, men and women who live in rural communities are just as deserving as those who live in cities, but often their lives are limited and their development thwarted by lack of advantages. Just now the situation is particularly acute because of the large number of people returning to the country who have not established satisfactory home and community life. The rural churches have a great opportunity, but many of them are destitute of leadership. What finer way to show the missionary spirit of Jesus than to share our talents as individuals and as a society to help these people and the rural churches?

The following talks are suggested to outline the study of this topic:

I. "How Youth May Be True to the Missionary Spirit of Jesus." Study this from the standpoint of the individual youth, using such points:

1. Through the proper use of money.
2. Through the proper use of time.
3. Through my human relationships in home, school or business, community and nation.

II. How the Church May Be True to the Missionary Spirit of Jesus."

1. Through supporting the missionary program of the Christian Church.
2. Through community service.
3. Through missionary education for the entire church.
4. Through the spirit of Jesus within the church.

III. "How Can America be True to the Missionary Spirit of Jesus?"

The treatment of this topic should be based on the world situation at the time this topic is presented.

JESUS ANSWERS HIS ADVERSARIES.

LESSON VIII—MAY 21, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Never man so spake."—John 7:46.

LESSON TEXT: Mark 12:28-40.

The First Commandment of All.

The Rabbis counted 613 precepts of the law, 248 of which were commands, and 365 of which were prohibitions, and they divided them into "weighty" and "light" precepts or laws. But the sorting of them caused much debate. The Scribe who came to Jesus, either honestly, or trying to trap Jesus, wanted to know which of all the commandments he would put first.

The genius of Jesus is shown in his answer. The scribe had to recite twice a day the text which was Jesus' answer. The first commandment, the fundamental principle that should govern life is "love of God." "Hear, O Israel; the Lord our God is one Lord—there is but one God, one true God—and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, with all thy mind, with all thy strength." A man should not only love God first; he should love with every phase of his being, thought, feeling, and will. The supreme object of a man's devotion should be God. All the powers of emotion, intellect, and will should be yielded to him.

And the Second Like Unto It.

Loving God comes first. But loving God involves and demands loving one's neighbor. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Indeed John says that if a man says he loves God and hates his brother, he is a liar, for if a man does not love his brother whom he has seen, how can he love God whom he has not seen. Men must love God supremely. But that supreme love to God will find expression in love to man. The duty to love God as our Father is the foundation of the duty to love men as brethren. A man who really loves God will love his neighbor. And a man who does not love his neighbor cannot really love God.

It is to be noted that Jesus says "as thyself." A man is not to hate himself. Indeed a man is to love himself. But he is to love himself last. God, one's neighbor, one's self—this is the divine order. The trouble with us is that we love ourselves first. Christ demands that we turn from self to him, making him the center of life.

These two commandments come first. As Jesus said in another place, "on them hang all the law and the prophets. The basis of the true religion is to be found in love to God and in love to one's fellowman.

Not Far from the Kingdom—But Not In It.

"And the Scribe said unto him, well Master thou hast said the truth: for there is one God; and there is none other but he: and to love him with all the heart, and with all the understanding, and with all the soul, and with all the strength, and to love his neighbor as himself, is more than all whole burnt offerings and sacrifices." The Scribe saw that moral duties were more important than ceremonial observances, that the way a man lived was more important than what particular creed he held, that religion was something to be lived rather than something to be believed intellectually. And Jesus said that he was not far from the kingdom of God. He had an intellectual apprehension of the fundamental principle of the spiritual realm, the reign of God in human life.

But he was not in the kingdom. He saw the truth but he did not submit to it. A man does not get into the kingdom of God by seeing the truth; he gets into the kingdom of God by submitting to it, by receiving it into his heart and living it out in his life. Intellectual belief will not save any man. A man may believe all the facts about life and teachings of Jesus and yet not be in the kingdom. He comes into the kingdom, when in the spirit of a little child, he receives Christ into his heart. There are multitudes today who give intellectual assent to the doctrines of Christianity, who do not give moral obedience to them. We need not only to know the truth in our heads, we need to receive it into our hearts. And there is no particular advantage in a man being near the kingdom if he is not going on into the kingdom. If I am going to miss a train I would rather miss it by an hour than by a minute. If a man misses a train, he misses it. If a man is outside the kingdom, he is outside. No matter how much he may believe about the grace of Jesus Christ, it is not going to do him any good until he experiences that grace within his heart. "Just outside the door" is the place where many people remain, because they do not yield themselves to the truth that they know.

The Price of Counterfeiting.

Jesus denounces the men of his day, and the men of our day, who counterfeit their religion, who want the credit for being religious without being willing to pay the price of being religious, who seek prestige and preeminence, who try to cover up their irreligious life by the practice of public religious observances. "These shall receive greater damnation." It is bad enough not to make any profession of religion, but it is much worse to make a profession of religion when there is no real religion in the life. Jesus had unbounded sympathy and compassion for those who were sincere, no matter how bad they were. He scathingly denounced those who appeared to be religious, but who were not sincere. The man who is a hypocrite pays a heavy price for his hypocrisy.

A WORD OF APPRECIATION.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

"I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord."—Psalm 116:13.

"The opening of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."—Psalm 119:130.

MONDAY.

REWARD FOR ONE'S BEST.

"To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honors and immortal life, eternal life.

"Glory, honor, peace, to every man that worketh good."—Rom. 2:7-10.

"For a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things he possesseth."—Luke 12:15.

As long as you have tried and done your best, although you may seem to have gotten nowhere, you have built up something inside of you—character which some time you will collect on—not money, but something you value more than any material values that you could wish for—something that will give you happiness and eternal pleasure.

Prayer—O Lord, our Father, who art no respecter of persons, bestow thou upon our lives faithfulness and loyalty to thee even in the smallest things. Baptize us with thy goodness. May thy will be done in us in the doing of thy law at any cost to ourselves. In Christ's name, we ask it.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

LET ME BE.

"And he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water."—Psalm 1:3.

Oh, like a tree,
Let me grow up to thee!
And like a tree
Send down my roots to thee.

Let my leaves stir,
In each sigh of the air,
My branches be
Lively and glad in thee.

Each leaf a prayer,
And green fire everywhere,
And all from thee
The sap within the tree.

And let thy rain
Fall—or as joy or pain,
So that I be
Yet not unforgot of thee.

Then shall I sing
The new song of thy spring,
Every leaf of me.

Prayer—O Lord, our Father, cause thou us to be so rooted and grounded in thee that we may bring forth in all our words and deeds the fruit of the Holy Spirit, and whatsoever we may do, may it prosper. In Christ's name, we ask it.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

TODAY IS MINE.

"Bake that which you will bake today."—Ex. 16:23.

"Exhort daily while it is called today."—Heb. 3:13.

"I must work the work of him that sent me while it is day, for night cometh when no man can work."—Jno. 9:4.

The past is gone, the future still to come,
Today is here.

From early sun till midnight's bell, clear rung,
This day is mine.

The past is dead, its efforts, plans, results
Are written down.

The future calls. The siren lures me on!
Today is mine.

In this today, this day now all my own,
I start anew.

No law of chance, no mem'ry binds me down.
The day is mine.

If all the shattered buildings of my dreams
Lit at my feet;

The ruins give me footing—farther reach:
Today is mine.

If the high tide of full reward proclaims
My sure success,

The world forgets. New laurels must be won.
Today is mine.

The past is gone. The future still to be God watches o'er,

Oh, may I not forget that through his grace
Today is mine!

Prayer—Our Father, now is the only time we have we know. Teach us the all importance of spending it and using today as we should in thy spirit.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

LIFE.

"A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you. . . .

"By this shall all men know that ye are my disciple."—Jno. 13:34, 35.

Life's a get-acquainted spell;
A chance to know your brothers well.
It's a round of days and years
Filled with laughter gay and tears
And of struggling towards a goal,
As a trial for the soul.
Here we come to learn of men;
Here we come to see them when They are at their best and worst.
Angels must be human first.

Life's a get-acquainted trip
And the world a mighty ship
Plunging on through storm and shine
To some destination fine.
Here we live and strive and grow
So that we may come to know
One another and be friends,
And at last, when living ends,
He has noblest served God's plan
Who has served his fellowman.

Get acquainted with your kind!
Open both your heart and mind.
Stretch to them a helpful hand,
Know them well and understand
What it is they seek afar
And you'll find how fine they are.
Do not live your life alone.
Know your neighbor and be known,
And remember, night and day
Angels grow in mortal clay.

—Edgar Guest.

Prayer—Our Father in heaven, we would do thy will, and we would follow thee the best we can. Help us not to fail. This we ask for Jesus sake.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

JESUS CHRIST.

"God hath made the same Jesus, whom ye have crucified both Lord and Christ."—Acts 2:36.

Jesus was first known as "Jesus, the Messiah." We are told that the name "Christ," was added after he had shown himself to be the divinely consecrated Saviour which the Old Testament predicted.

We are further told that the name Jesus means Joshua which was a common Jewish name and is a common name among the Filipinos today. Joshua is a continuation of Jehovah and Shua which means that "Jehovah is salvation." Thus our Lord is called "Jesus." It is a tender sweet and human name, and gives us an intimacy that is immediate and personal. It means that the secret of the Lord has come very near to us in the likeness of man.

The name "Christ," which was added to Jesus after he had shown himself divine, means "anointed of God." This expressed a divine nature which is equal with the father. Thus, Christ is king. So we have in Jesus a prophet and priest, and in Christ we have a king who is the author of a complete, perfect and all-sufficient salvation; the inexhaustible fountain of all the treasures of nature, grace and glory.

Prayer—Our Father, we pray that this moment's communion with thee each day may be indeed a realization of Christ in our lives and be worth more to us than all other experiences. In Christ's name, we ask it.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

PROFIT IN PREYING.

"In the pride of the wicked the poor is hotly pursued, let them be taken in the devices that they have conceived."—Read Psalm 10:1-12.

A certain society woman, prominent and wealthy, is suing the United States to recover a quarter of a million dollars paid in income taxes for three years, alleging losses through the closing of hotel bars which she owned before the passage of the Prohibition law. She will not get her money back, it is safe to say, because the Supreme Court has decided that national Prohibition is not confiscation of a legitimate industry, but abolition of a business hurtful to the people.

No one has a right to do wrong, yet evil-doers are constantly acting as if any interference with their wickedness were an offense against "personal liberty." That much-vaunted term is constantly used as a cloak for personal integrity.

No one has a right to make profit from preying on others. The dope-seller and the bootlegger and the high society bar-owner, stand on the same level of social infamy, while the defenders of such creatures stand with them.

Prayer—We are our brothers' keepers, our brotherhood. May we never make gains if they must be made at our brothers' expense. May we always be poor if our wealth must come through the impoverishing of others. In the name of him through whose poverty we are made rich.—Amen.

—AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

WHAT GETS THROUGH.

"His heart is established, he shall not be afraid."—Read Psalm 112:1-10.

Shrewd contrivers can now tell accurately how much cold any kind of cloth will let through to the human body. The cloth is wrapped around an object which is heated to the body temperature and is then exposed to a refrigerating device. A fan is used to represent the wind. When the salesman tells you that a certain overcoat will keep you warm in zero weather, he will not be guessing.

What is our religion worth to us? We ought to know. We should be able to keep out the icy blasts of worldliness and doubt, and keep in the warmth of love and the glow of faith. Do we do it? If not, our religion is of poor quality or of the wrong type.

Prayer—Establish our hearts, O Christ. Confirm our trust in thee. Make us sure of our surety. For we are dealing with a matter which is our very life.—Amen.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

SAFEGUARDING OUR HOMES.

By REV. ELISHA A. KING, D. D.,
Pastor Miami Beach Community Church,
Miami Beach, Florida.

When St. Paul wrote his letter to the Christians at Rome, he sent a special greeting to Priscilla and Aquila and the church in their house. The story of St. Paul's relation to his family reveals the salutary effects of Christianity on the domestic life of the age. In his greetings he places the woman's name first, and that in itself is suggestive of what Christianity has done for women. It has given woman her rightful place by the side of man. Equal and coordinate and in some cases she has become the dominating personality. Home life has been made most beautiful through the relation of Christ to the family.

The reference to "the church in their house" reflects the custom of the times among Christians. There were no church buildings so the followers of Christ met in each other's homes or in some house where the accommodations were ample. Philemon at Ephesus (an important and well-to-do citizen) opened his home for such a church.

The Bible makes much of home life and its influences on the young and Jesus made much of the sacredness of the home in its relation to children. It was Jesus who drew for illustration on his wealth of observation of the daily life of the humble home to which during thirty years he had given long allegiance. In his estimation a little child was a real treasure because of its purity of heart and poverty of spirit which meant so much in the salvation of the grown man in later years. In Christian thought the child holds a unique and supreme place.

There is no institution that man has given so much thought to as his home. As far back as our knowledge goes men everywhere have either burrowed under the ground or built above it, and have sought to provide some kind of a place in which to dwell, and which they call home, rude and imperfect as it often is. It is no wonder that our favorite song of home arouses a popular response in the human heart:

Mid pleasures and palaces, though we may roam,
Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home.

"Home is the place of peace," says Ruskin, "the shelter, not only from all injury, but from all terror, doubt, and division. But so far as it is a sacred place, a vestal temple, a temple of the hearth watched over by household gods, before whose faces none may come but those whom they can receive and love, so far as it is this, shade as of the rock in a weary land, and light as of the Pharaohs in the stormy sea, so far it vindicates the name, and fulfills the praise of home. Wherever a true wife comes, this home is always around her. The stars only may be over her head; the glow worm in the night-cold grass may be the only fire at her feet, but home is yet wherever she is; and for a noble woman it stretches far around her, better than ceiled with cedar, or painted with vermilion, shedding its quiet light far, for those who else were homeless."

One cannot think of home without thinking of society in which the home develops. Society is, of course, an association of human beings. By nature man is gregarious. He may eat alone when food is scarce, but when his appetite is satisfied he comes from his hiding place to sit by the fire and he wants his own kin with him.

Nature has created separate species and has instilled in each a liking for its kind. Not only was this true of primitive man but he also found out very early that two were twice as strong as one. It was a great discovery; men needed one another. They could not live alone and make progress. In the very beginning of the Bible it is declared that it was found that it was not good for man to be alone, so God created a companion, a help-meet, a wife and the family was established.

No book says more or better things about home and children than the Bible. The ideal Hebrew family was a devoted and beautiful relationship and, of course, the Christian family was constructed on that model. When St. Paul deals with family matters, the duties of husbands, wives and children, he reveals a great wisdom. When he urges children to obey their parents he cautions parents to be kind to their children, and when he sets forth the duties of a wife to her husband he admonishes the husband to regard his wife's welfare with exceptional love and care. This is something quite new in family discipline when one compares it with the despotic power of a pagan father and the place of woman in his household.

The family circle constitutes the first social unit the child knows. It consists of father, mother, brothers and sisters and perhaps grandfather and grandmother. The departure of the child from home to play or attend school is his introduction into an ever-widening community life. This family is the setting for the drama of life. For the first six years the home is the child's world. Even during the period of his schooling five-sixths of his time is under the guidance and control of the home. Then comes the awakening of manhood and womanhood with attempts at independence, an interlude of from five to ten years. The strain and struggle for separate existence is a strain upon parental affection and solicitous care, but this is what the home is for, to produce, develop and train new life for future generations, and because children and youth can be shaped and fitted for noble service for humanity the responsibility of the home for this great contribution to life is very great.

On the inside of the home is the sanctuary of life, the sheltered place of peace, the scene of life's most personal, sacred, and exclusive obligations. On the outside of the home lies the larger life of mankind, wherein a man must take his place and do his work. Life is spent crossing the threshold of the home.

The thought of home to those who have grown up in a Christian environment where religion was made the natural, wholesome daily atmosphere is a most stimulating reflection. To have been born in such a home is an inheritance which not all the world's wealth could buy. The influence of such a home is beyond measurement. No less a great man and a pagan, too, than Marcus Aurelius devotes the first chapter of his "Meditations" to expressing humble gratitude to all who helped him when a boy. He says the example of his grandfather gave him a god disposition, not prone to anger. From his father he learned to be modest and manly. His mother taught him to have regard for religion, to be generous and open-handed. But how much greater is the gratitude of those who remember the joys and vicissitudes of their Christian homes and what wonderful men and women their homes have produced! Robert Burns has given us a picture of humble Scotch life in "The Cotter's Saturday Night," and reminds us that:

From scenes like these old Scotia's grandeur springs,
That makes her loved at home, revered abroad.
Princes and lords are but the breath of kings,
"An honest man" the noblest work of God."

II.

But something has happened to the home as a social institution. We still believe that a sound organization of family life is fundamental to a nation's well-being. The social unit, the family, is the requisite underpinning of the state. Without it there is no propelling motive to insure the welfare of successive generations. Unless the art of human relationship be acquired within the (Continued on page 14.)

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

I want to ask that you read our financial report each week and then ask yourself if you think anyone can care for nearly one hundred children on what the church sends to us!

For instance, our income this week was $121.25. Hardly that much last week—just a little more than a dollar per child per week.

Then, too, this is planting time. 100 bags of fertilizer to pay for, 40 acres to plant in beans to make hay for our cattle, 20 acres to plant in corn to fill the silo, besides sweet potatoes and all garden vegetables.

This takes money. The children do all they can to help support themselves, but it takes money to farm as well as it takes money to feed, clothe and care for children. You see that it will take our income this week to meet fertilizer bills alone.

Then insurance on our buildings is due, too. Spring Sunday slippers for the girls (just one pair of Sunday slippers per year), oxfords for the boys (one pair each year), and many other items too numerous to mention. So my hair is still growing gray. Bills to meet, income a little more than $100.00 per week, and widows appealing to us to take their children because the wolf is howling at their door.

What is the church going to do about it? If each Sunday School in the Southern Convention would come to our rescue and make a monthly offering, we could get along more easily. We want to appeal to the Sunday Schools not now making offerings to join our band. We cannot run the Orphanage successfully unless you help us.

home it is seldom acquired anywhere else. And it has been proven over and over again that the family as a social institution has the power to rebound and re-establish itself which fact gives us courage to undertake reforms to save it.

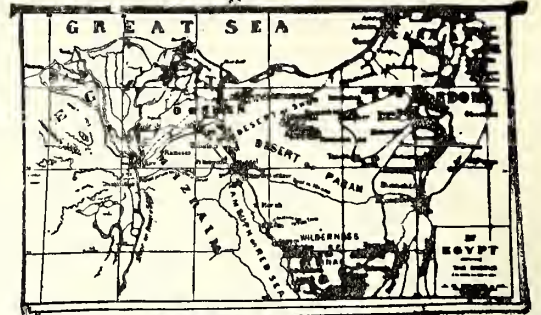

But the old idyllic form of family life was broken up by the industrial revolution that began to take women and children out of their homes, shifting their labor from hearth and farm to factory and mill. The modern revolt of women from their inferior positions before the law has upset well established customs and manners throughout the whole world. The increase of migration of people from the country to the city has produced great changes in the social life of the home. Students of social life remind us that broken homes are responsible for much of our crime problem. Homes are broken by death, desertion, separation and divorce as well as by industry and changed living conditions. Twenty-five per cent of all the children in the United States live in broken homes. From 40 to 70 per cent of all delinquents come from broken homes. In great cities where housing conditions are bad, children and youth are deprived of home influence very early in life.

The warden of Sing Sing prison reminds us that 97 per cent of the prisoners in Sing Sing were never associated with Boys' Clubs or any of the other juvenile associations where boys learn how to spend their leisure in wholesome recreation. Ninety-nine per cent were never actively interested in church organizations. Persons between the ages of fifteen to thirty constitute fifty per cent of the population of the United States, yet they contribute 73 per cent of our criminals.

THE SUN'S PULPIT.

The problem is with the young, and that type of youth that never had the humanizing influence of a Christian home or a character building institution. As startling as these figures are, and as bad as the conditions seem to be, let me quote a sentence from John Locke, the educator and philosopher who lived in the 17th century. He said: "I wish that those who complain of the great decay of Christian piety and virtue everywhere, would consider how to retrieve them in the next generation." And it is this next generation that I am concerned about this morning.

We talk much about Russia and its revolt against the customary order of human society. Most of those things that have been considered sacred have been repudiated. The revolt is against the church and the God of orthodoxy, against capitalism, and government as they know it. The usual institutions of society are in jeopardy, marriage and home are not considered the cornerstone of the social structure. Humanity is indeed uprooted, as Maurice Hindus tells us. God and religion and the church are being abolished and a new generation of Godless youth have been let loose all over Russia. The Soviet and its Communistic doctrines are planning to engulf the whole world. We think it will not affect us, but there are subtle and insidious forces already at work among our youth that may yet prove their undoing.

Here in America we have the home, the church and the school. This is the ideal order as they were once held in the popular mind. It is a question now what the order is. It may be for many the home and the school, for some it is simply the school, and for millions the church is included. And yet, only 1½ cents on the average of every American dollar is spent for the maintenance of schools, and only ¾ of a cent for the church! Neglect of religious training in the home and neglect of the church on the part of many parents have much to do with the indifference of the young people of our age.

We cannot avoid the conclusion, however, that upon the Christian home rests a great religious responsibility. The American family has ample opportunity and equipment for this task. Being freed from home industry and long hours of labor there is a considerable amount of leisure for the development of personality. In the light of our Christian laws and customs the husband and wife are equal and can make distinctive contributions to the home for the guidance and training of children in religion and morals. More and more we are believing in the equal value of each human being in the sight of God, and the Christian home is still a place to build up within the world, citizens for the kingdom of heaven.

No institution of the state or of the community, neither the school nor the church, can relieve the family of that primary privilege and responsibility. The church depends upon the family for the initial step, for the family alone can maintain the sacred altar on the hearth. In the loving intimacy of the family circle, religion is cultivated. We must safeguard our homes with wholesome religious instruction and Christian living. Whether they be in cottage or palace, apartment or hotel, it makes little difference for from these homes come those who will make the future when we are gone. Whether it be a perfected Christian civilization or an atheistic materialism will be determined in our homes.

There is no better time than now, during this after-Easter season, to think upon these things. There is no better time to talk religion in the home, or anywhere, than now, for all the world keeps this season in some form or other. Let us cherish our religion now while we are free to enjoy it, let us cultivate it in our children before they abandon it, let us prevent a tidal wave of atheism by living and teaching theism. May there be within the heart of every youth that leaves a Christian home a consciousness of God, the Father, that Jesus made so real.

Oh, ask not a home in the mansions of pride
Where marble shines out in the pillars and walls,
Though the roof be of gold, it is brilliantly cold;
And joy may not be found in its torch-lighted halls.

But seek for a bosom all honest and true,
Where love once awakened will never depart;
Turn, turn to that breast like the dove to its nest, of 17, who are in turn to elect a permanent operating committee of nine and a State committee of 100. After plans are worked out another meeting of committees is to be called on Monday, May 22nd.
And you'll find there's no home like a home in the heart.—Eliza Cook.

Dr. Chenault made the statement that he was more than pleased with the number and personnel of the meeting and that there was every reason for the dry forces of the State of Virginia to feel encouraged at the results so far obtained.

"Why do you look so mournful?" his uncle asked Dick, after tea at the party.

"'Cos I am," said Dick. "I'm more'n full!"

SAVEDGE—EDWARDS.

On Saturday, April 15, 1933, Mr. John Thomas Sledge and Miss Luray Virginia Edwards surprised their many friends when they motored to Wakefield and were united in marriage by the writer, using the ring ceremony of the Christian Church.

The young people received their education in Surry High School, Surry, Va., and are very active in the work in New Lebanon Church, where both are members.

After the ceremony they returned to the home of the bridegroom's parents, where they will make their home.

The best wishes of all attend them in their married life.

TOMLINSON.

When one is known so well and loved so much as Mrs. Ruby Freeman Tomlinson, departs this life for a better world, we should be grateful to Almighty God for our association with her. Her friends were impressed with her knowledge and deep love for God's work, her loyalty to home and friends.

Whereas, we know that God, in removing her from us, was too wise to be mistaken, and too good to be unkind, therefore, be it resolved:

First: That we, the members of Burton's Grove Christian Church, of which she was a member, bow in humble submission to his will. She was kindhearted and lovable, always ready and willing to help lighten another's burden.

Second: That we extend to her be-

Sunday School Figures from India.—

Rev. Edward A. Annett, General Secretary of the India Sunday School Union, has recently conducted a statistical survey of the Sunday Schools of that great mission field. His final summary shows that there are in India 18,322 Sunday Schools, 30,428 teachers and an enrollment of about 710,000 scholars.

Just Little Things.—

History tells us that following the battle of Dresden, Napoleon came across and ate a green peach and suffered therefrom an attack of indigestion. In his distress, he neglected to order the pursuit of the enemy, and this fatal omission cost Napoleon the battle of Leipzig—and made his ultimate defeat inevitable. However this may be, small neglects have been in many cases the causes of great disasters. Seemingly unimportant matters often lead up to grave results.

Robin Has Private Car for Nest.—

Recently the Associated Press carried a story of interest to bird lovers. It is somewhat as follows: A marathon robin, who had to keep on the wing to hold the pace with her brood was finally given a rest at the expense of the railroad when the train reached Benton Harbor, Mich. The conductor, Roy Blodgett, saw the bird flying under the caboose of his freight train, and upon investigation found a nest in the under structure containing two blue eggs. He reported the matter and the next incoming freight from Grand Rapids brought an extra caboose, with an order from division headquarters: "Use extra caboose until robin is done with car."

Tangier Island.—

Set in the midst of Chesapeake Bay, just inside the Virginia line, is a small, wind-swept hillock of sand known as Tangier Island. Here for nearly three centuries, the inhabitants have made their living by either fishing or crabbing. The people are more largely composed of Anglo-Saxon stock, probably, than any community of its size in the entire United States. "The two streets of the village," we are told, "are less than six feet wide. There are no automobiles, horses or cattle of any kind. . . and the children play in the narrow streets with perfect safety. Nearly every home on the island can be reached by canals, yet an accidental drowning is unknown." The children are found on the wharves almost as soon as they can walk, and a six-year-old can handle his craft with a skill which comes of an inherited instinct of many generations.

House Committee Approves Higher Taxes.—

By a vote of 13 to 9 the House Ways and Means Committee approved on last Monday a program increasing income and gasoline taxes and making dividends subject to income rates. The reason for this action is to finance Mr. Roosevelt's $3,300,000,000 public works - employment bond issue, and under its provisions normal income tax rates are raised from 4 to 6 per cent on net incomes of $4,000 and less, and from 8 per cent to 10 per cent on all incomes above that amount. This raise is estimated to give an income of $46,000,000. Taxes on dividends from corporations, it is thought, will amount to an additional income of $86,000,000, while three-fourths of a cent extra tax on gasoline will amount to $93,000,000. There seems to be much less talk of balancing the national budget now than was heard some months ago. It may be a wise thing to put over three billion dollars in public improvements at this time, but there will be a time when repayment will be necessary. There is such a thing as making haste slowly, and there are those who would deem such action wise at this time.

Baptists of North and South Clasp Hands.—

After 88 years the Northern and Southern Baptist Churches, on Tuesday, May 23rd, held a united meeting in the huge Washington Auditorium. Claspng the hand of Dr. M. E. Dodd, president of the Southern Baptist Convention, Dr. C. Oscar Johnson, head of the Northern Convention said they reached across an "imaginary Mason-Dixon line," to join these two bodies. On Monday preceding the union meeting, routine business was transacted by the Southern group. At the evening session, Dr. A. J. Barton, of Wilmington, N. C., asserting that the White House had been "turned into a billboard for beer," called upon the convention to adopt a resolution of regret for the prohibition position taken by the President. The resolution presented by Dr. Barton, as chairman of the social service committee, was: "That we deeply regret and earnestly deplore the fact that the President has used the influence and power of his office for the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution, and pending efforts for repeal, for the legalization and manufacture and sale of beer; and especially that he has allowed the White House to be used to advertise the beer business, much to the discredit of his administration and much to the pain and sorrow of a large element, we believe a majority, of American citizens."

Glass Banking Bill.—

After some changes and "much improved," we are told, the Glass Banking Bill is now before the Senate for consideration. If enacted, this bill gives promise of erecting a stronger banking system upon the ruins of the old one. Its fate, however, is in doubt, as the Administration seems to be less concerned about the banking situation by far than with the liquor situation, and the President has not indicated that he will ask for the passage of banking legislation during the present Congress. There is a strong group in Congress which wants its early passage, but there are others who do not want to take the initiative and are looking to the White House for its approval before voting on such an important question. There is also some opposition among the bankers to the restrictions thrown around them, including among others provision for the separation of commercial and investment banking. The Administration, itself, still seems to oppose any insurance feature, and this is included in the bill. Two arguments have been advanced against the insurance of banking funds. The first is that no conceivable insurance fund could begin to cope with such a crumbling in values as the country has just passed through. "That is true," says Marc A. Rose, in Business Week for May 24th. "Any banking system is inescapably part of the country in which it exists. If the dollar valuation of the whole country is marked down by half, no banking system can escape unscathed. But this is not all there is to be said. Suppose another depression some day—how greatly an insurance fund that made good losses on a large proportion of bank deposits would cushion the impact!" Much of the very crumbling of prices was even caused by the banks themselves selling assets and calling loans, in order to themselves be ready for alarmed depositors. "There is no telling," he says, "how much better prices might have been sustained had they been protected from this pressure. It is perfectly reasonable to believe that, if depositors were reassured by the existence of a guaranty fund, there would be no bank runs." The other reason advanced against the insurance feature is that it would cause sloppy banking. This seems improbable. Mutual deposit insurance would cause an appreciable strengthening of the system of examination and supervision. Furthermore, the insurance fund would not become available until the entire capital and surplus of the bank itself had been exhausted. It is hard to see why insurance would make a banker more careless, if fear of the loss of his own investment in his bank would not restrain him. There are many Senators who say that banking legislation should have been the first, not the last, legislation of the present session. The present situation is far from healthy. Any program for recovery that does not take into consideration a sound banking system that will have the confidence of the people, is unsound. We venture the statement that we would rather trust to a sound banking system than to have to take a chance on having the country "drink its way to prosperity."

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, beloved and honored pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church, has been called to and accepted the pastorate of Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., his work in Norfolk to begin September 1st. Christian Temple is fortunate, indeed, in securing the services of this competent and consecrated man to become the successor to Dr. Jason Noble Pierce.

Rev. J. L. Neese is very happy in reporting a Men's Missionary Society recently organized in Palm Street Church, Greensboro. This is unique and we trust its kind may multiply, increase and replenish the earth. There are twenty-five charter members. The officers elected were: J. V. Moore, president; R. G. Johnston, vice-president; Doyle Murchison, Jr., secretary-treasurer; A. J. Harris, program committee; Charlie Jones, superintendent of literature.

The Sunday School at Avon Park, Fla., Dr. Arthur P. Vaughan, pastor, has sponsored six concert programs during the season which have been of the highest type of music and have been greatly appreciated by the whole community. The last one was a concert given by Genevieve Ainichihoyo Creer, a Christian Indian girl, who was a student at Rollins College. She gave Zuni Tribal songs, Indian legends and dramatizations and interpretations of Indian stories and the dance.

One hundred Women's Societies in the churches of our Southern Convention are cooperating with pastors in sponsoring and conducting the diligent search in the homes represented in the churches for trinkets of gold and silver for the Crucible Campaign. The Woman's Board of the Southern Convention approved the campaign, and their Societies are helping in the search, not for their Societies, but through their churches to help the Mission cause which so much needs and deserves this timely assistance.

The church at Lake Helen, Fla., Dr. Arthur G. Lyon, pastor, after having received thirty-one new members in the Easter season, received five more on Mother's Day. This makes the membership of the church more than one hundred for the first time in the history of this beautiful village church. The Young People's Club gave a Mother's Day pageant which had been arranged by the pastor, twenty-five young people taking part in it. Dr. and Mrs. Lyon will spend the summer at Cantoocook, New Hampshire.

On Sunday, May 21st, the congregation and minister of Monticello Christian Church, worshipped with the congregation of the Friendship Methodist Church. The idea of the service was to create a better community spirit and a better understanding among the members of the two churches. Rev. J. L. Trollinger, pastor of Friendship, presided and Rev. F. Ervin Hyde, pastor of Monticello, preached a sermon on "The Glory of Going On," giving to the churches a challenge to work together for a better church and community. Both churches were well represented in the congregation.

Mrs. Pearl S. Buck, author of "The Good Earth," and noted as a missionary to China under the Presbyterian Board, has resigned as missionary under that board. Possibly, this is wise, since Mrs. Buck, with her rare literary gifts, seems to have been better fitted for cultural and purely literary work and expression than for the strictly devotional task of revealing to the Chinese the life and character of the Carpenter of Nazareth. Mrs. Buck has done a wonderful piece of literary work, and it is not often that one achieves permanent fame and place in more than one line of objective pursuit.

Rev. Watson L. Lewis has resigned the pastorate of the church at New Smyrna, Fla., after having served this church for six years. Prior to this pastorate he was for a number of years pastor of the church at Daytona Beach. Mr. Lewis has been outstanding as a preacher and as a leader, and has been influential in the State Conference, as also has Mrs. Lewis been active in the women's work of the state. Mr. Lewis has always been popular with men, and is well known for his wit and humor, as well as for his ability as a preacher of the gospel. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis will move to their home at Daytona Beach.

One of our devoted pastors gave the challenge for members of his church to practice self-denial for four weeks preceding Easter by doing without one meal a day and giving the price thereof, 20c, to Missions. He was unable to find a member who would join him in this, but he stuck to his proposition and finally several members joined him in doing without a meal a day for fourteen days prior to Easter and giving the price of 15c per day to Missions. The offering was not what the pastor desired, but such service does not go unrewarded. Self-denial for our Lord ever and always has its sure reward. The offering was liberal and gladly made.

Rev. Robert Lee House, pastor of our Newport News Church, still believes in the revival meeting and, in a brief personal message, tells why: "We have just passed through a series of revival services. Mr. Poythress was with us and did us much good. We received twenty-two new members. That brings our total number received this conference year to forty-eight. This indicates to me that there are some who may be won to Christ and to the church from Sunday to Sunday by persistent effort. They really prefer to unite with the church during a regular service. However, it appears that there are still those who require special effort to be won. Therefore, I still believe in the revival meeting."

A very large audience that more than filled the spacious auditorium of Bethlehem Church, Altamahaw, N. C., greeted the pastor, Rev. J. W. Patton, Sunday morning, May 21st, as he conducted the service for missionary and memorial day. Scores came from nearby towns and cities, and great was the day for Christian service and worship. After the sermon at 11 A. M., by the Secretary of Missions, a bountiful luncheon was served in the church-yard and delightful fellowship was enjoyed with friends and acquaintances for more than an hour. In the afternoon the great audience was wonderfully entertained and thrilled by a program of music by the Elon College Singers, directed by Professor Dwight Steere, head of the Music Department.

The Florida Young People's Summer Conference will meet this year in two sections instead of at Camp Immokalee as in past years. The first conference will be held at DeLeon Springs, June 3rd-10th, and the second one will be held at the Las Clas Inn, Fort Lauderdale, June 10th-17th. In each case the program will be similar to those arranged for the conference at Camp Immokalee, and it is expected that many of the features which have made Immokalee so popular will be continued and that especially there will be kept alive the "Immokalee Spirit." Miss Pattie Lee Coghill and Mr. Charles A. Hoyt, chairman of the Conference Department of Young People's work, who has also been elected as moderator of the conference, have been quite largely responsible for the working out of the plans. Miss Coghill, returning from an extensive tour around the state in the interest of the conferences, reports that there is every indication that the attendance at each conference will tax the capacity of the hotels.

Dr. Clarence A. Vincent has resigned as pastor of the church at Winter Park, Fla., to take effect next spring. Dr. Vincent will have completed seventeen years as pastor of this church and during his pastorate a beautiful colonial church has been erected without debt and the church has become a large and important one. Dr. Vincent had held important pastorates before coming to Florida, in Galesburg, Ill., Boston, and Washington, D. C. During his years in Florida he has been an outstanding leader in the Florida Conference and has been a man of large influence in his own city and county and in the state generally. Mrs. Vincent has shared with him in a beautiful service, not only in the church, but also in the Congregational Woman's Federation in Florida. They have been deeply interested in missions and the church has been a generous supporter, not only of the Mission Boards but of other denominational and non-sectarian causes. The friends of Dr. and Mrs. Vincent will be pleased to know that they expect to continue to live in the state.

Sunday, May 14th, was a great and good day for Mt. Auburn Church. This is one of our substantial rural churches without a pastor (since Rev. R. A. Whitten, who served it in connection with Henderson, resigned for Portsmouth First Church last winter). May 14th, a great congregation gathered for the regular missionary and memorial service in the morning, conducted by the Secretary of Missions, a former pastor. The service in the afternoon was conducted by one of Mt. Auburn's own sons, Rev. Robert M. Kimball. Bro. Kimball is of the household of faith, a ministerial student in Elon College. He delighted, as well as edified, his home folks and his own church with a splendid sermon. He came unto his own and his own received him gladly and heard him approvingly. He is one of our promising young ministers, licensed during the session of Conference, Eastern North Carolina, last November. It was, indeed, a gala day for dear good Mt. Auburn. The Mission offering was liberal and gratifying, the people gave great attention to the messages of the day, flowers were abundant for the beautifully kept and recently dressed cemetery, and at the cemetery some four or five very appropriate talks were made, this service being in charge of the Sunday School superintendent, J. A. Kimball, father of the young minister, who preached in the afternoon.

Many of our churches are putting on the Crucible Campaign to dig for gold and silver in the homes. The Biblical Recorder, telling of a collection that was gathered in one church, says: "There were 150 rings, many of them wedding rings, about which clustered tender sentiments; 50 watches were in the collection, large, heavy, gold watches and small, delicate ones fitted for dainty hands, watches whose hands have been idle for many years and those that ticked along to the last. One watch which was given as an heirloom with a history which began 150 years ago, a watch which told the time for father, grandfather, and great-great-grandfather. There were gold and silver coins of many countries: Spanish, Mexican, French, Canadian. About 200 chains, both of gold and silver lay tangled together, their once glistening links now slightly dulled from non-use. There was half of a platinum chain, a reminder of days when there was no depression—at least for its owner. There were gold crosses in the collection, and a napkin ring, a set of teeth held together with a gold band, a curling iron, and almost a hundred pairs of glasses with silver and gold frames.” Continuing, the Recorder says: “An authority estimates that there is a billion dollars worth of old gold, silver and platinum in the homes of the American people.” Almost everyone who is willing to look will be surprised at the old gold and silver trinkets that can be found in the home, serving no one any purpose of value and merit. Let us reclaim these and turn them into gold and silver dollars “for God and Government.”

ELON COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

We are anxious that the members of the church, alumni of the college, and all who may read THE CHRISTIAN SUN, keep Elon Commencement in mind.

Perhaps you read the article in last week’s paper, but it may be that you do not remember the dates.

The Commencement program begins Friday evening, June 2nd, with Junior Orations. Saturday evening we are to have a program put on by the Dramatic Department under the direction of Miss Virginia Fitzhugh. This will be a very good program and you should not miss it if you can possibly attend.

Sunday will be Baccalaureate Day, with Dr. H. K. Eversull, of Cincinnati, Ohio, delivering the sermon.

Monday evening will be musical night, when the Music Department will render “Hiawatha’s Wedding Feast.”

Tuesday will be Alumni Day, with Hon. J. C. B. Ehringhaus, Governor of North Carolina, as the principal speaker, and a free barbecue dinner will be served on the campus.

Wednesday will be Graduation Day, with Dr. Malcolm McDermott as the speaker.

This is a program that will be both inspirational and helpful. We are hoping for a large attendance and a manifestation of great interest. May we be honored with your presence?

L. E. SMITH, Pres.

SIX REASONS.

(A card was recently found among his papers, written by our late, lamented and beloved Dr. W. W. Staley, on which he gave six reasons for supporting Elon College. The contents of this card are so timely now that we print in full as carried on the card.—J. O. A.):

1. Elon College is the child of the Southern Christian Convention, and parents should support their children.

2. Elon College is the soul of the church that founded it, and the soul is the head and heart united in building character and service. Support is essential to its life and growth.

3. Our Church College trains the ministers of the church, and it should be liberally supported to produce the best grade of ministers.

4. A denomination without a college would have no efficient means of Christian education, without which the church would have no means of training local church leaders.

5. Lay members of the church receive inspiration and direction in their work through the character building and nurture of their own college. The best farmer builds up his farm by putting into the farm what it needs. The real harvest of the College is the fruit of its loyal supporters.

6. The College is the fountain from which flows the life-giving stream of intelligent work and growth. Elon College is the fountain of the Southern Christian Convention. Dry up the fountain and no life-giving stream flows from it.

PREACHES ON HIS 100th BIRTHDAY.

August Field Beard, clergyman and educator, whose 100th birthday came on May 11, 1933, preached upon the first Sunday of a new century in his life, May 14, 1933, in the First Congregational Church, Norwalk, Conn.

Dr. Beard observed his 100th birthday on Thursday quietly at his home, 79 East Avenue, Norwalk. A birthday cake from the church, another birthday cake brought by his niece and other cakes made his 100th birthday seem a dangerous event in the minds of his daughters, the Misses Patten and Elizabeth Beard, with whom he lives.

A deluge of letters, telegrams and flowers from thousands brought greetings on Thursday. Many felicitations were presented through a committee of Dr. Beard’s friends of which Paul D. Cravath, lawyer and president of the Metropolitan Opera Association, New York, was chairman.

The sermon on Sunday, May 14th, was preached in an edifice of colonial design which stands upon the same site as the church in which he was christened in 1833.

Dr. Beard is the oldest living Congregational and Christian minister and the oldest living graduate of Yale University; Williston Academy, Easthampton, Mass., and of Union Theological Seminary, New York City.

The Congregational and Christian Churches were represented at the service on May 14th by the Rev. Dr. George Luther Cady and the Rev. Fred Leslie Brownlee, executive secretaries of the American Missionary Association of the united churches. Dr. Beard is honorary secretary of the Association and formerly as its senior executive secretary he had a leading part during many years in the advancement of educational opportunities for Negroes. Ten colleges for Negroes in the South today owe their development in considerable degree to his unwavering support at a time when cultural education for Negroes was in its infancy and had few friends. One of these colleges is Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn., whose founder and president was the Rev. Dr. Erastus M. Cravath, father of Paul D. Cravath.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE KINGDOM APPOINTED.

One truth our Lord taught his disciples that they either would not or could not learn. They longed for an earthly, while he taught them again and again of a heavenly, kingdom. So bent on being big in the earthly kingdom were they, that no sort of teaching could or did reveal to them that he was building, not a temporal, but an eternal, not a physical, but a spiritual, kingdom.

After Jesus plainly told his disciples that he was going up to Jerusalem there to be bound, crucified, killed, James and John, two of his most intimate companions, disputed over who should occupy the highest place in the kingdom that they still believed he would establish. And then, after rebuking them and plainly revealing that his was a spiritual kingdom, they failed to comprehend. Nor was this all. He went to his death on the cross and came back a resurrected and glorified body, and still they failed to grasp the kind of kingdom that he would establish. So, one of the very first questions they asked him, when gathered together after the resurrection, was: "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom of Israel?" They were still looking for an earthly kingdom. Nor was this all. He had told them as plain as language could that his kingdom was not of this world, and that "He would appoint to them a kingdom." Again and again had he told them of the kind and character of that kingdom. His disciples did not, maybe they could not, grasp the teachings of their Lord in this one particular.

And even his disciples to this day, in a large measure, either cannot, or will not grasp the fact that his kingdom is not of this world, but is a heavenly, spiritual kingdom, a kingdom of humble, redeemed, righteous souls. We admit there is an "other worldliness" about this that many of us may not relish, but it is there all the same. Those who in the early church, and in the late church, have turned the world upside down, and right side up, have been those who have in their minds and hearts this feeling and spirit of "other worldliness." Peter and Paul, Huss and Luther, Calvin, Wesley, O'Kelly and Moody all lost out in terms of earthly kingdoms and rulership, and their lives mean little or nothing viewed in the light of worldly powers, pursuits and possessions. They, like Abraham of old, "went out, not knowing whither he went." By faith they, like he, "sojourned, looking for a city which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God. They were pilgrims here but had their eyes fixed on an inheritance promised them, not of this world's goods, but of that world to come, of which they firmly believed that they themselves were a part.

They fought a good fight. It was the fight of faith, that, through conflict, trial and hardship, they might establish in the hearts and souls of men and women on earth the kingdom of heaven—a spiritual kingdom.

There are earthly tasks and there are heavenly. The heavenly task is spiritual and has to do with the establishment of righteousness, and that rulership of righteousness, in the lives of men and women here on earth. Those who dwell in this spiritual kingdom may or may not wield great power in the world, may or may not have much of this world's goods, but theirs is the fruit of the Spirit; "Love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness temperance: against such there is no law."

The kingdom our Lord is establishing in the world is not an earthly, perishable kingdom. It is a heavenly, spiritual, imperishable kingdom.

A FEDERAL JUDGE SPEAKS A WORD.

It is quite generally conceded that there is no abler jurist on the District Federal bench than Judge E. Yates Webb, of the United States District Court in North Carolina. Judge Webb served in the National Congress many years, and if he had so chosen would likely be there today, but the National Government needed him as jurist, and on the bench he has distinguished himself as a man of poise, great ability and wise judgment. In charging a Federal Grand Jury at Asheville recently, the Winston-Salem Journal quotes a portion of Judge Webb's instructions:

"It would be better to turn loose a thousand rattlesnakes in North Carolina than to bring back the legal sale of liquor.

"A group of millionaires who see a way to escape income taxes have formed an association to bring back liquor and let the little man pay the revenue of the government. They are aided by the manufacturers of beer and whiskey. The only real argument that can possibly be advanced for the legalized sale of liquor is that of revenue.

"If we are willing to sell our souls and our bodies—and that is what the presence of legalized alcohol does—I can tell you a way to raise revenue that beats whiskey all hollow.

"We can raise revenue enough with the sale of narcotics to pay all our taxes and probably all our public debt in a short time, but when we got through we would have a community of shadows, pitiful addicts to the drug habit.

"Liquor has never obeyed the law and it never will. Alcohol is a natural outlaw and will always be an outlaw. Legalizing the sale of liquor does not stop bootlegging. It did not do it before. It does not do it in Canada and will not do it in North Carolina if it is brought back again.

"Men and women have been fighting alcohol through the ages because alcohol is the deadliest poison known to chemistry. It is used to kill the living and preserve the dead. It destroys mind, body and morals.

"The alcohol taken from twenty bottles of beer if administered to a child or a man not accustomed to taking liquor would produce death.

"Any beverage containing more than 3.2 per cent of alcohol violates the law and as long as it is the law I intend to enforce it.

"William E. Gladstone, the great British statesman, said that liquor has caused more deaths and suffering than all the wars and pestilences that have been visited upon mankind.

"Abraham Lincoln said that liquor was not a thing to be controlled but that it was a cancer that should be eradicated.

"There are those who contend that prohibition does not prohibit. The law has been on the statute books only thirteen years. We have had laws against stealing and fighting and murder for 2,000 years, and the courts are filled with people charged with larceny, assault and killing.

"Here is what prohibition has done in thirteen years. It has decreased insanity in this country 66 per cent; it has reduced crime due to liquor 54 per cent; it has reduced the average death rate 20 per cent; and drunkenness has decreased 70 per cent.

"The injury caused by alcohol is not confined to the person offending. It is visited upon innocent women and helpless children.

We have an idea that North Carolina will indeed rue the day that she goes back on the mature counsel of this her distinguished and patriotic son.

PUTTING JESUS TO SLEEP.

"We have put Jesus to sleep in the stern of the boat, like the disciples. The time has come to ask him to take the helm and guide us across the storm-tossed waters." It was a Chinese Christian speaking, Pastor Kuan, in the church at Yangkow. Possibly, this Chinese Christian was speaking to and for Americans as well as Chinese. We are sailing on tempestuous and turbulent seas, and no one has yet said: "Peace be still." Can economic conditions improve until moral and spiritual conditions improve? If the foundation of the social order is moral, then there can be little improvement in the building until the foundation is made right. And we seem to disregard the moral in our mad scramble to straighten out the economic condition.

In all the argument for the legal sale of beer in the State and nation, what one heard was "revenue." "Get the revenue from tax on beer and thus balance our budget."

In the North Carolina legislature, gambling in several counties was legalized. The plea, of course, was for "revenue"—"revenue at any cost."

Recently there has been increase in certain stocks and bonds, as well as commodities, without any sort of foundation in reality for such. It all came out of speculation, betting, gambling.

We haven't learned our lesson yet. We will have to learn it, but we are still madly obsessed with the greed for gain at any hazard. One again recalls the words among the last written by Woodrow Wilson: "The only hope of saving our civilization materially is through moral and spiritual redemption.

J. O. A.

"Kuo" on the tail of Manchukuo means "country" or "kingdom," so the name dissolves into Manchu Kingdom.

REPEAL AND REVENUE.

We do not hesitate to say that if the liquor crowd are ever going to win, now is their opportunity. Many of our people are shell-shocked, and the continued financial depression produces a feeling of desperation and anxiety for any sort of change. Whiskey and beer, which have had an age-long identification with rags and poverty and wretchedness, now constitute a slogan for prosperity and progress. The real causes of our business debacle growing out of the World War, accentuated by graft and speculation and extravagance, are ignored, and the prohibition law is made a convenient scapegoat. Take, for example, the outrageous nepotism where Senators and Congressmen carried unemployed relatives on the pay roll. All of this, on account of the obtuseness of the public conscience, met only a very temporary indignation.

Dr. George Adam Smith, in his exposition of Isaiah, has a chapter on "Rekindling the Civic Conscience," which is most pertinent to our present situation. Is there sufficient moral force in our nation to arrest the downward movement? The growing mania is to sacrifice all moral considerations for revenue. Gambling laws are being repealed. In twenty of the states gambling bills have been under consideration at the current sessions of the legislatures. In a number of them the bills have been enacted into law. In Washington gambling has been illegal since 1909. Now pari-mutuel betting on horse races is allowed. Similar measures became law in Indiana and New Mexico. In addition to these states, this form of betting is now legal in Maryland, Kentucky, Illinois, Nevada, Montana, and Florida. This year bets at Florida's Hialeah Park totaled $8,000,000. It is gratifying to note that pari-mutuel bills have been defeated in Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, Indiana, Missouri, Texas and West Virginia.

The editor of the United Presbyterian makes the following comment:

"If there had been no desperate need for revenue, the bills to legalize race-track gambling would have failed in a number of the states where they now have been enacted into law. The theory that one has a right to steal to save himself from starving is apparently held by some states as well as a large number of individuals. The other reason is moral. That we are in a moral as well as an economic depression seems fairly evident. The fact that a third of our states have either let down or are considering lowering the bars against gambling indicates a searing and deadening of the public conscience. The states in question are no greater sinners than the other states. The enthusiasm and ease with which beer legislation was enacted, the rapid steps that are being taken for the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, the bitter fight in Pennsylvania for the modification of the Sabbath laws, are all outcroppings of the same moral decline which finds expression in the legal revival of betting. As Christians we have a heavy responsibility both for this decline and for the re-establishment of a sound and active social conscience."

Many of the politicians are willing for the public to spend millions in gambling to secure a few thousand dollars in revenue.

The ignoble experiment of beer is already in full sway. In order to secure Federal revenue of $150,000,000, an already impoverished people are to spend $1,200,000,000. Our people are to spend eight times as much as the desired revenue!

The repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment will be a source of still further revenue. The politicians say that in order to get more revenue we must legalize liquor, the intoxicating effects of which is not a matter of controversy. When the government received $75,000,000 in 1914, the nation spent $458,000,000 for liquor. The philosophy of the present rage of statesmanship is that the government can become prosperous by pauperizing the people. This is nothing short of lunacy in law-making. It is the idiocy of injuring the individual to promote the progress of the group.

A recent magazine writer makes this observation:

"Our generation is exactly like an invalid suffering from a malignant growth and guzzling patent medicines to cure the ills enumerated on the labels when a major operation is needed. . . . The society which builds its civilization in defiance of the principles of truth and honor and progress learns soon or late that it has made a serious mistake, to the cruel sorrow of its millions."

It should be the sincere hope and prayer of every patriotic citizen that the destructive forces at work in our nation shall be arrested as we glance into the dark pit from which we have been digged.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

"WHEN MORNING GILDS THE SKY."

Eleven o'clock in the morning is the most prosaic, and therefore the most stupid hour in the day at which to worship God. The vigor and freshness of the opening day is somewhat dulled, while the pangs of hunger are beginning to make themselves felt. Our young people are rapidly discovering that the natural moments for religious inspiration are sunrise and sunset. The young people's summer conferences have long capitalized the evening twilight, but here is a group which has had the energy to avail themselves of the even more inspiring moments of early dawn. On March 25th-26th, the Youth Fellowship of the Eastern Virginia (Christian) Conference met in the Suffolk Church under the leadership of Misses Lucy Eldredge and Priscilla Chase. In addition to the usual features of a week-end conference were two worship services of an original sort. At nine o'clock on Saturday night the young people went to an upper room at the call of "O Come, All Ye Faithful," for a quiet time by candlelight, with the picture of Jesus at Gethsemane before them. Then followed music, prayer, scripture, story, and the hymn, "Living for Jesus," after which the young people went to the homes of the community for the night.

The high point of the conference came on Sunday morning at seven o'clock, when the group assembled silently in the church for the Communion service conducted by the pastor, Rev. H. S. Hardcastle. As one of the young people describes the occasion: "All were indeed lifted up out of themselves as they looked across the Communion table to the white cross behind it and were reminded of the great sacrifice of Christ for them. During the moments of meditation and the Communion service the young people could not do otherwise than consecrate their lives anew to the Master.—John R. Scotford, in the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty."

AN ORPHAN.

Who will adopt this orphan? It wants a home and you will have nearly a whole year to prepare for its coming. This spring, much to our regret, we were unable to have the Georgia Christian Life Conference, because we could not find a church among those asked who felt that they could entertain it this last April. There is another fifth Sunday next April. Please write to our president NOW and tell him that you would like to entertain this State-wide conference next April. Write to Prof. T. V. Huey, Ridley Ave., La Grange, Ga. Let's not let the depression affect our religion.

PERMANENT HISTORICAL RECORDS.

We Christians have been prodigal of our records and indifferent of our history. Rev. James O'Kelly, founder and father of our Christian denomination, so thoroughly effaced himself by giving himself to the work, that he left only sparse records of his life, his labors and his achievements. It is a source of gratitude to know that a committee on Memorial Library has been created who is to seek to accumulate historical records in a fireproof compartment of the Elon College Library. Many of these records have already been collected and are in the general library at Elon. If any SUN readers have duplicates of the following volumes and can send them to the library at Elon College, it will be very much appreciated. All these volumes, or documents, are in the general library and are so catalogued, but they are desired for the memorial or historical department of the library as well, namely:

"The Cane Ridge Meeting-house," by James R. Rogers; "Special Services for Ministers," by Martyn Summerbell; "Campbellism is Rebellion," by J. J. Summerbell; "A Centennial History of the Miami, Ohio, Christian Conference, 1819-1919," by B. F. Vaughan, D. D.; "The Centennial of Religious Journalism," by Rev. J. Pressley Barrett, D. D.; "The Christians and the Great Commission," by Josiah J. Bishop; "The Christian Denomination and Christian Doctrine," by Simon D. Bennett; "A History of the Christian Denomination in America," by Morrill; "The Principles and Governments of the Christian Church"; "The Christian Church—Principles and Government," by J. P. Barrett; "The Cardinal Principles of the Christian Church Defined"; "The Christians, South," by Rev. W. B. Wellons.

Duplicates of the following, as to our Congregational constituency, will be welcomed:

"A Hundred Eminent Congregationalists, 1530-1924," by Albert Peel; "The Principle of the Congregational Churches," by A. D. Martin; "The Congregational Church—A Sermon," by H. K. Eversull; "Seventieth Anniversary History and Year Book—Pilgrim Congregational Church, 1859-1929, Cleveland, Ohio"; "Congregationalism," by Henry M. Dexter; "The Congregational Churches," by Frederick L. Fagley; "Congregationalism," by Rev. W. B. Selbie; "The Congregational Way," by George M. Boynton.

"The Evolution of an Old New England Church," by Harry Kelso Eversull; "The National Council Digest," by Charles Emerson Burton, secretary; "Church Polity," by Rev. Alfred Fleming; "The Congregationalists," by L. W. Bacon; "The Pilgrim Faith," by Izora Straus Davis. Thanks for any such records.

Chairman of Committee.

DANGER GIVES HOPE FOR THE FUTURE.

The perilous condition in which our civilized world finds itself may finally prove the spur needed to drive us on to a more stable order of things. That the culture and civilization of Europe (miscalled Christian) are situated on a volcano no one can doubt, yet there are no indications that the critically dangerous state of the world will finally awaken in the nations a sense of reality.

The presence in this country of Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, Mr. Edouard Herriott, Mr. Richard B. Bennett of Canada, and representatives of various other nations, means more, we trust, than an opportunity for us to exhibit our hospitality, and more than one more futile gesture at changing the world. We may pin our faith once more in an international conference, and hope that the status quo is finally desperate enough to impel some changes.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

On Wednesday, May 17th, appropriate memorial services were held at the Antioch Christian Church. Rev. R. E. Brittle delivered the memorial address. This church has an interesting history. At one time it had a membership of more than five hundred. The cemetery is old and well kept. Hundreds of people attend these memorial services and renew the acquaintance of friends in the community.

Mt. Carmel Christian Church held its annual memorial service on Thursday, May 18th. Prof. O. W. Johnson, who taught in Elon College for eight years, delivered a well prepared memorial address appropriate to the occasion. Mt. Carmel Church had its beginning in a small Sunday School which was organized by members of Antioch Church. It has made a great contribution to the community since its organization. One of the best Sunday School teachers, who has now gone to his reward, learned to read in the Sunday School of this church. He never had any school training except what he received in this Sunday School. Two ministers of the gospel were members of his Sunday School class.

Memorial services were conducted at Oakland Christian Church on Sunday, May 21st, at 11 A. M. Special music was rendered by the choir. The memorial address was delivered by Judge James L. McLemore, of Suffolk. A large congregation was present. This church now has more than three hundred members, and a large number have transferred their membership to several of the city churches. Many former members attend the annual memorial service.

Liberty Spring Christian Church observed the annual memorial service on Sunday afternoon, at 3:30 o'clock. Special music was rendered. Rev. O. D. Poythress, of South Norfolk, preached the memorial sermon. A large congregation assembled to pay tribute to the memory of friends and relatives. This church has recently lost four of the faithful men by death. These recent bereavements were keenly felt by those who attended the service. The cemetery was beautiful for the occasion.

These church memorial services have no relation to the National Memorial Day. The spirit of the service is not patriotic but religious. The purpose is to express the appreciation and affection of the church for the departed, who have been identified with the church. A well kept church cemetery makes a strong appeal to the living. The church should not forget the dead. The past has a valuable contribution to make to the present. Its greatest contribution is made through human life and character. It is the high privilege of the church to learn and teach the great fundamental lessons of human history. Churches as well as nations cannot be great unless they are willing to make and record their history and biography. One of the greatest fundamental purposes of the Jews was the preservation of their history. Every child was required to learn and recite the principal facts in the history of their religion. Thousands of members of our Protestant Churches are ignorant of the doctrines and history of their church. If a memorial service can be instrumental in creating and maintaining an interest in those who have lived and labored in the church, it is worth while and timely. This spirit should be cultivated in every church. The heart is made better; human life is enriched; the church is strengthened by the ties of fellowship.

Remember the dead. Remember the past. Remember the church. "Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth." I. W. JOHNSON.

FAITH IN ELON COLLEGE.

Several weeks ago I received a card from Mr. and Mrs. George D. Colclough, of Lumber Bridge, N. C., announcing the birth of a fine daughter. Mr. and Mrs. Colclough are both graduates of the College. Mr. Colclough has done considerable work and assisted the College at different times.

I wrote this young Miss Colclough a letter, welcoming her into this fine world of ours, and assuring her that Elon College would maintain an open door, looking forward to her entrance for preparation for life. In reply to this letter, her father writes me regarding his plans for the education of his daughter. He writes in part as follows:

Dear Dr. Smith:

We received your kind letter to Mary Sue, and shall keep it for her until she is able to read and understand it. Some time soon I am going to send in Mary Sue's application and room fee for 1950. Then I want you to set her up a ledger sheet and each year I hope to pay a part of her college expenses, so that when she enters college her expenses will be paid.

I want to do this because it will assure me that she will go to Elon, also it is a safe investment and will give Elon the use of the funds at a time when she is in need of it. If I can't save some each year toward her education now, I hardly see how I can hope to send her to college when she finishes high school. It would be great for Elon if several hundred of her alumni would start paying their children's expenses at Elon rather than putting it into insurance and banks and find that nearly always something happens to it before the child is ready for college.

Now, this is a brand new idea to be used by parents in providing funds for the education of their children.

When my children were small, life insurance agents visited me and insisted that I take out insurance policies that would mature when the children were eighteen, thus providing for college expenses. Different individuals, interested in Building and Loans, suggested that I buy Building and Loan stock that would mature at the opportune time, but this is the first suggestion that I have yet had to begin making deposits with a college that funds might be accumulated against the expense of college days, and I admit that it is a capital idea. But, somebody says, "suppose the college fails." There is such a possibility, but not probable. On the other hand, banks and banking institutions have closed in large numbers—some insurance companies have failed and perhaps some Building and Loan Societies. On the whole, educational institutions have been just about as successful in financial matters as have the banks of the country.

I trust that a number of the alumni may chance to read this article. I would like to have their reactions as regards Mr. Colclough's plan. At any rate, Mr. Colclough's letter evidences complete and absolute faith in Elon College, and he is preparing to prove his faith by his works. We shall be glad to receive his deposits and hold the same against the day of his daughter's entrance. This is a good plan and one that will give the College assistance when it needs it. What do you think?

L. E. SMITH.

FROM FLORIDA.

The Easter season was marked in several churches by the reception of a goodly number of new members into the church. A few of the Florida churches have reported to the state office as follows: Lake Helen received thirty-one new members, six whole families being received into membership, twenty-one were received on confession of faith and of these fifteen were young people from the Young People's Society of the church. Tampa received twenty new members, Miami Beach, eighteen, Avon Park sixteen, of which number ten were on confession of faith.

Rev. Ralph Krout has resigned as pastor of the church at New Port Richey, Fla., after a pastorate of nearly four years. He has been a diligent pastor and has been helpful not only in his own church, but in the State conferences, at the various Camp Immokalee conferences, and was registrar of the South Association. The church immediately called Rev. J. Frank Brown, who has been living during the past winter at New Port Richey. Mr. Brown is called for one year. Prior to going to New Port Richey, he spent a year at the Penney Foundation at Penney Farms, and prior to that held several pastorates in Illinois.

Rev. E. Henry Byrons, of Pomona, Fla., died May 8th, at the St. Vincent Hospital, Jacksonville, Fla. where he had been ill for about six months. Mr. Byrons was ordained in Connecticut in 1886 and served several churches in that State. Later he came to Florida and was pastor at several places, notably at New Smyrna and Pomona. After the close of his pastorate at Pomona he retired and has been living there until the time of his death. He leaves a widow and two daughters.

Rev. Charles L. Fisk and Miss Pattie Lee Coghill have been visiting a number of the churches, meeting with the young people, or groups of young people, from the neighboring churches, speaking in the interest of the coming Summer Young People's Conferences, which will be held early in June at DeLeon Springs and at Fort Lauderdale Beach. They have visited among other places, West Palm Beach, Lake Worth, Miami, St. Petersburg, Tampa, Sanford, Daytona Beach and Ormond. For several years Dr. Fisk was a leader in the Ohio Young People's Conference and was largely responsible for the movement in Florida resulting in conferences which have been held at Camp Immokalee. He is well known to the young people of the State.

THE BEGINNING OF WISDOM.

In the papers just after March 4th, it was printed that our President had made wise choices in selecting his cabinet. We are all hoping, of course, that this will prove true, and yet we are wondering if they are all "wet" like our President? From a "wet" President, a "wet" cabinet and a "wet" Congress, do we expect righteous rule to come? My prayer is that righteousness may come, for we feel like saying, as the ancient prophet Amos said: "Let judgment run down as waters, and righteousness as a mighty stream."

Somehow or other, I feel that before our Government gets righteousness running down as a stream, our rulers will have to get right with God. Have these men wisdom? Can they and will they give us right rulership? Let us hope and pray that they will, but the Good Book says: "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom."

Solomon said: "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." "Woe unto them that rise early in the morning to drink strong drink and are wise in their own conceit." It seems it will take another prophet like Daniel and Amos to solve our problems and to point the way in which we must go if we are to recover our souls.

TOMORROW MORNING.

By TIMOTHY THOMAS.

Tomorrow morning let us see with a new vision and look out upon the world as still a land of hope and opportunity—a land of good will and brotherly love.

Tomorrow morning let us begin the day with all sails set toward the land of opportunity, toward the rising sun, and toward the port of safety—toward the goal of unselfish success.

Tomorrow morning let us shake off the shackles of fear and despair and go forth unafraid and undismayed—go forth to give and to take.

Tomorrow morning let us sing a song of hope and cheer and gladness, a song of triumph—not one of gloom and despair.

Tomorrow morning let us look upon all mankind as a world brotherhood having a common cause to pursue, a common aim to achieve, and a common task to perform—a common happiness to make.

Tomorrow morning let us rise above littleness and bitterness, and above life's petty worries—above the small things to higher and more lofty ideals.

Tomorrow morning let us go forth with an unbeatable courage, a new zeal, and with a firmer faith in America—a renewed interest in the land of our birth.

Tomorrow morning let us realize that America was founded and built by the slow and painful process; the path trodden by our forefathers, and that our achievements can be no less than theirs if we have wisdom and faith and courage.

Tomorrow morning let us set our eyes on a guiding star, the star that led the Wise Men to find a blessing for all mankind, an anchor for the weary and care-worn—and let us follow that star with the faith of our fathers.

Tomorrow morning let us realize that America is safe, though in need, the greatest of all lands, though with faults, a land of freedom, though with her restraints—a land over which the Stars and Stripes will forever float.

Tomorrow morning let us faithfully understand that America's future is what we shall help to make it, that her children yet unborn must inherit our share in a land that has never shed her blood for selfish gain—but always for liberty's price and freedom's sake.

Tomorrow morning let us have a part in the lifting of our country out of the throes of economic chaos, from the scenes of want, misery, and starvation—a condition from which she will emerge more glorious and with more wisdom and strength.

Tomorrow morning—and every morning—let us cease to complain, refuse to stop the upward climb because of human error, knowing that:

"Truth crushed to earth shall rise again,
The eternal years of God are hers;
But error wounded writhes in pain,
And dies among her worshippers."

THE INVINCIBLES.

"Kept by the power of God through faith."

True, diligent, faithful, obedient pastors bravely preach against sin. They can declare as did the Apostle Paul: "I have not shrunk from declaring God's whole truth." (See Acts 20:27.)

In this needed, pointed folder, we give some of the prominent Bible texts; some are quoted from the King James' version, some are quoted from the Modern Speech version, so highly approved by many learned people who wish the Bible in the common speech of today.

These texts pastors in general know. All true Christians should know them but there are many who have joined the church organization who have stopped there and who have not grown in grace and in the knowledge of God. Such should prayerfully consider whether they are really saved. May these common texts refresh their minds truly.

Jesus still says: "The kingdom of God is at hand, repent and believe the Good News." (Mark 1:15.)

"If any will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow me." (Luke 9:23.)

"If thou believest with all thy heart." (Acts 8:37.)

"Whosoever shall have been ashamed of me and my teachings, of him shall the Son of Man be ashamed, when he comes to his own and the Father's glory and that of the holy angels." (Luke 9:26.)

To many Jesus still says: "You will not come to me that you might have life." (John 5:41.) "He that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." (John 6:37.)

One asked Jesus: "Are there few that be saved?" He answered: "Strain every nerve to get through the narrow gate, for multitudes, I tell you, will seek to enter but shall not be able." (Luke 13:24.) "Strive very diligently; love not the world nor the things of the world! When any man loves the world there is no love for the Father in him. The world and all that it gratifies, is passing away, but he who does God's will remains forever." (I. John 2:16.)

"How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" (Heb. 2:3.)

"With the heart man believeth unto righteousness and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." (Rom. 10:10.)

"Love God with all the heart."

"Blessed are they who hunger and thirst after righteousness for they shall be filled." Matt. 5:6.)

To those who confess him but do not serve, Jesus said: "These shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." (Matt. 2:46.)

"Blessed are they who delight in God's law and meditate on it day and night." (See Ps. 1.)

"Set your affections on things above and not on things of earth." Let your life be "hid with Christ in God." (See Cor. 3:2, 3.)

"Great peace have they who love God's law." (Ps. 119:165.)

"Pray without ceasing; in everything give thanks for this is the will of Christ concerning you." (I. Thess. 6:17, 18.)

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary

PRAYER.

Blest harbor of souls, the Church of our Lord! Her portals beckon, her shelter is secure. Some day, O righteous Author and Preserver, the Church shall possess the earth; if we cared enough, that day might be now. Great God, our Father, make people know that the Church's sustenance, its expansion, its triumph, is in human hands and that if truly we desire to build the Church, thou wilt build our bodies into fitting and able instruments for the holy service. In Jesus' name.—Amen. S.

RE-THINKING MISSIONS.

One is inclined to think that many are making too much of "Re-Thinking Missions." They are taking the book too seriously. They take it as an attack on Missions as conducted in the foreign field; at best a condemnation of methods being used. Well, what of it?

Suppose a committee of laymen here in America were appointed to "appraise" the method and program of our churches, Sunday Schools, and religious work as carried on in the churches. We have an idea such a committee, if honest with itself, would be even more severe in criticism of methods at home than this Appraisal Committee has been in its condemnation of methods abroad. The work of the Lord is ever a shining mark. There are always critics. There are always folks who want to change things. There are always those who want an excuse. There are always those who are finding fault. There are always people who say "hands off," because things are not going just as they wish them.

Suppose the Apostle Paul, or David Livingstone, or John Wesley, or William Carey, or Adoniram Judson, or Robert Morrison had waited for a committee of laymen to shape their methods, fix their program, direct their attitudes and activities, where would this world of ours be today? Moreover, suppose a committee of laymen was appointed to choose the ministry, and to say beforehand who should preach and who should not preach, and even after preachers had begun, to say which ones should continue and which ones should not, where, O, where, would the ministry be today?

The work of the all-wise and good God is not done through committees, programs, parliaments, and congresses. It is done through men and women whose souls have been touched with the finger of God and whose hearts and lives are aflame with a passion for the service of God and man.

Do not take "Re-Thinking Missions" too seriously. There is good in the book, as there is good in faithful comment and honest criticism. But to take the condemnation for the whole procedure, or to use the book as an excuse for not doing one's duty in the matter of Missions, is, indeed, a short-sighted policy and a poor procedure.

The missionary work is going on today through self-denial, service and sacrifice, for it is a God-appointed work, the Son of Man himself having given the program as the only program that he did give his church after his resurrection—"Go ye to all nations and preach."

It is easy enough to criticize the methods, but let us bear in mind that the motive and the Man of Galilee back of the methods are above criticism or reproach, and we carry on our Mission work in obedience to the command of our Lord, and out of devotion to his name and to his kingdom.

J. O. ATKINSON, Mission Sec'y.

THE ATHEISTIC MOVEMENT.

In a conversation with representatives of eight different foreign countries, Jaroslawski, the leader of the Russian Society of the Godless, according to a publication of the conversation which is reported in Evangelisch Deutschland, declares that there are at present over 5,000,000 members of the Society of the Godless, which are organized in more than 60,000 units or local circles. It is stated that in 1926 the society was comprised of only 87,000 members; in 1929 it had increased its membership to 465,000; in 1930 the growth was up to 3,000,000. In concluding the conversation in which the foreign representatives asked a number of questions concerning the cultural polity of the godless movement, Jaroslawski expressed his belief that the time is not far distant in which this year will be regarded as the fifteenth year of a new era and the reckoning of time will be computed from the beginning of the October revolution, "the day of the great dawning of a new humanity," in 1917.

The above from the Missionary Review of the World should stir our souls to a new fervor in proclaiming the Gospel of the Son of God. There are indeed hungry hearts and perishing souls.

OFFERINGS OF GOLD AND SILVER.

On two very different occasions in the book of Exodus, the children of Israel brought gifts of jewels as acts of worship.

The first of these instances is given in the thirty-second chapter. Moses, the great leader, had been away from the fugitive Israelites for about six weeks. He was receiving from God instructions to take an offering of gold and silver from the children of Israel. But the Israelites felt forsaken and began to make plans for themselves. They said to Aaron: "Up, make us gods which shall go before us; for as for this Moses, the man that brought us out of the land of Egypt, we know not what has become of him."

And Aaron said unto them, "Break off the golden earrings, which are in the ears of your wives, of your sons, and of your daughters, and bring them unto me."

With this offering so readily made by the dissatisfied wanderers, the golden calf was made, an altar built before it, and a day of feasting appointed. Beginning early with sacrifices, the feasting turned into mad heathen revelry. In the midst of the shouting and dancing, Moses returned from Mt. Sinai.

The story is familiar—the broken tables of the law; the golden calf destroyed, ground into powder and strewn upon the water which the children of Israel were made to drink. Then followed the call: "Who is on the Lord's side?" the response from the sons of Levi and the slaying of three thousand, and later a plague. This is the history of those who gave their treasures in worship of that which is unworthy.

God had planned some better use for their valued possessions. "And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, speak unto the children of Israel, that they bring me an offering: of every man that giveth it willingly with his heart ye shall take my offering—gold and silver and brass—onyx stones, and stones to be set in the ephod, and in the breastplate. And let them make me a sanctuary; that I may dwell among them." (Ex. 25.)

Moses—after the incident of the golden calf—delivered this message from the Lord. It is comforting to realize how much more extensive was their response to this call for the tabernacle than to the earlier call from Aaron.

"And they came, both men and women, as many as were willing hearted, and brought bracelets, and earrings and rings and tablets, all jewels of gold; and every man that offered an offering of gold unto the Lord—every one that did offer an offering of silver and brass brought the Lord's offering. And they brought yet unto him free offerings every morning—and Moses gave commandment, and they caused it to be proclaimed throughout the camp, saying, Let neither man nor woman make any more work for the offering of the sanctuary. So the people were restrained from bringing. For the stuff they had was sufficient for all the work to make it, and too much."

Southern Baptists are planning to make an offering like the Israelites of old of their "bracelets and earrings and rings and jewels." The debt must be reduced. Money is scarce. In thousands of Baptist homes there are pieces of gold and silver that have long lain useless. Many of these are broken and of value only for the metal of which they are made. Other pieces have added value because of association. The owners would not sell them. Now there is an opportunity to take these precious things and offer them as the Jews made offering for the tabernacle. Stored in earthly chests, rust may corrupt them. Falling into other hands they may be wrongly used as were the earrings of which the golden calf was fashioned. Given in this offering they will be as treasures laid up in heaven, safe from rust and thieves. "Make friends of the mammon of unrighteousness," said our Saviour. "Make friends of your treasures," we may interpret it. Put them where you want your heart to be, for where your treasure is there will your heart be also. "Prove the sincerity of your love." (II. Cor. 8:8.)—Elizabeth Briggs Pittman, in Biblical Recorder.

WILL THE CHAIN HOLD?

Some weeks ago, here in the office, with great care and the utmost sincerity, we forged a chain of 5,000 links. We threw this chain out into almost as many homes in the different states of the Union. We were hoping that the chain would come back to us unbroken and without a missing link. Thus far, 176 links have been returned to the College, bringing contributions with them. About 50 links have been returned without contributions, making a total of 226 replies out of the 5,000.

I am wondering today where the other links are. We are so anxious to get all the links back that the chain may be reunited. Of course, we hope that they will bring contributions with them, but if the receiver cannot contribute, please let us hear that we may know.

Only a few days more now before our reports will have to be made for Commencement; may we have many, many replies before the books close.

The ones returning their envelopes with contributions have done finely—they have averaged just four cents less than $5.00 each. This is a splendid showing. Wouldn't it be wonderful if all receiving the letters would reply and send just what they can.

I have received many letters which are very encouraging, three of which I am including in full. The first one is from Mrs. S. B. Gay, of Lynchburg, Va., which reads:

My Dear Dr. Smith:

Your letter just received and I hasten to send $3.00. Just as other loyal Elonites, I wish it could be much more. May they all respond—may success crown your efforts.

The second letter is from Sallie B. Wilson, of Lynchburg, Va., which reads as follows:

Dear Sir:

You will find here enclosed $3.00 which is to help balance your budget. Wish I was in a position to give more, but my work has been bad. Am glad that I can keep from breaking my link of the chain and hope the other people will feel that way and the blessed Lord will reward us all if it is only a small sum.

The third letter is from Mrs. Wm. A. Mitchell, of Altamahaw, N. C. Mrs. Mitchell does not send any money, but she is greatly interested in the College and does send her prayers, and these will count tremendously. She writes as follows:

Dear Sir:

My heart and prayers go out for Elon. I don't feel like anybody is more interested in Elon than I am. But I have been an invalid in bed for over six years, and I am not financially able to pay the $3.00 or join the Club. If I had the money I surely would help.

I know that there are scores and hundreds of others who feel toward Elon as these letters express. Take time to write us—your expressions of interest will greatly encourage us.

We have had very good responses during this week. Last week, we reported receipts totalling $435.91—the reports this week are just slightly in advance of last week, and are as follows:

Do you know how to pronounce that much discussed province of China—Jehol? According to Mr. Martin it sounds like "Ruah Huh" and it means "Hot River." Japan doubtless wished to secure Jehol to act as a buffer between the newly forged nation Manchukuo, and China proper.

CONSECRATION AND SUBMISSION.

We had been calling in a home where one of God's saints lay almost helpless as the result of an automobile accident. She lay upon her bed greeting each one with a smile and so appreciative of every thing that was being done for her. Her every word showed the spirit of perfect submission to the will of God, whatsoever his will might be, without questioning, without murmuring; with only great thanksgiving for his great love for her. Later, as we were on our homeward way, one of our number said: "I wish I could be as good as she is." Instantly the answer came, "The Lord does not want you to be as good as she is, but he wants you to be as good as he would have you to be."

All real goodness is of God and each individual has his own personality and his own place to fill in God's great plan. You are the only one who can fill your place, and do the work that God would have you to do in the world.

So many think that they are too weak, that they cannot do anything worth while. In commenting upon Philippians 2:13, one of the Wesleys wrote: "God worketh in you, therefore, you can work; otherwise it would be impossible. God worketh in you, therefore, you must work; otherwise he will cease working." Others have written along the same line. "Our weaknesses and inabilities break not the bond of our duties," "However feeble our hands, that mighty Hand is laid upon us to direct our movements and to strengthen our weakness." (Isa. 40:29.) "That is the spirit of the soldier of Christ, who is always ready for orders—service or no service. His doing, or his not doing, is left to him who alone has the right to decide on this point." "Whether his way leads through sunshine or through shadow, through prosperity or poverty, health or affliction, can you say, "Thy will be done. Only use me to thy glory?"

God's plan may mean for you to suffer persecution or affliction that you may show to the world the power of God to keep the soul in adverse circumstances. Are you willing to suffer that the Christ life may be more plainly seen in you? Do you mean it when you sing, "Take my life and let it be, consecrated, Lord, to thee?"

There are two things that Christians must do to get and to keep the deep settled peace in their hearts: (1) Consecration to God; (2) Perfect submission to the will of God. So many are trying to live the Christian life without these two requirements, and realize that they are not what they should be, and for this reason they are dissatisfied and unhappy. When we meet these requirements all the trying ceases and the trusting begins. It means a constant surrender, a readiness to go or stay, to toil and fight, to be hopeful when everything is dark, just to fill the place we have been given to fill and to do the will of God.

So shall we find that we can "shine as lights in the world; holding forth the word of life." Some one has said that a calm, restful course is one of the most powerful testimonies a Christian can give to the reality of divine grace; for the world is not peaceful, and cannot be at rest.

Consecration means obedience to the Spirit's every call; Meaneth dying; meaneth living—death of self, and life in God;
Meaneth work or patient waiting, or submission 'neath the rod;
Meaneth such a full surrender, we shall never dare to ask
Why God gives our faith such testings, or assigns so hard a task.
We are here to be perfected; only Christ our need can see;
Rarest gems bear hardest grinding—God's own workmanship are we.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

MORAL STANDARDS.

We have kept the promotion of moral standards and Christianity separate long enough. Yes, I mean just that: We have kept them separate! If a person speaks against intoxication and bootlegging, he is a temperance advocate; against corrupt politics or lawlessness and crime, he is a preacher-politician; against self-indulgence and extravagance or poison journalism, he is a crank; against war, he is a pacifist. When a man is fired with an ardour for peace and good will toward all men, and abhors the cruelty, hate, and futility of war, he is not preaching pacifism, he is preaching Christianity. It is time for our young people, as well as our adults, to realize that Christianity means more than singing hymns.

I appeal to the Youth Fellowship groups of our church to stress moral standards more in their meetings; to focus the attention of their members upon the discussion of concrete problems of conduct; to help to formulate their own codes, and to foster in them loyalty to these codes. By codes, I do not mean simply a group of laws; I mean an inner urge which brings an individual under the control of his highest ideals. It is the duty of the leaders of young people to help them form right habits of conduct; to awaken within them ardent devotion to moral ideals; to develop the attitude of moral thankfulness; and to build up a fund of moral intelligence.

Let us agree as to the goal we are trying to reach. Hitherto we have been plodding, for the most part, in the dark, following a few familiar and trusted voices, but not seeing clearly whither we were going. It is well to know at the outset what it is we are trying to do. The work of our Fellowship with young people surely is not primarily to entertain them. Any consideration of our objective must take into account the problems of young people in a changing world, and to shift from an individualistic to a social conception of character growth.

The Committee on Moral Standards of the Youth Fellowship of the Eastern Virginia Conference recently submitted the report that the "moral standards of church members are not as good as they should be." This is not the first committee that has made such an obscure report. But I wonder if it would not be better to submit a report of challenge to higher morals. What are the leaders in our young people's groups doing toward promoting moral standards?

Included in our objectives must be the determination to point young people to the only source for the power they will need in living worthy lives in today's world.

WESTERN N. C. YOUTH FELLOWSHIP.

The Western North Carolina Youth Fellowship will hold its annual meeting at Shiloh Christian Church, on July 2, 1933. The morning session opens at 10 o'clock with worship services, followed by the president's message, and a business session. There will be special music, and emphasis on the Elon Summer School will be made. There will be an address on "Making Christ Real in Our Own Lives Today."

At 12 o'clock, there will be a basket dinner followed by recreation.

The afternoon session will begin at 2 o'clock with a devotional service, and the rendering of reports and the awarding of banners will follow. There will be an address on "Making Christ Real in the Lives of Others," followed by special music, and the installation of officers.

President Carl Key says to bring a basket dinner. He also calls attention to the fact that every member organization should send in $1.00 for dues. Prospects seem to be bright for a great meeting of Congregational and Christian young people in Western North Carolina.

YOUTH FELLOWSHIP CONFERENCE.

The first group meeting of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference Youth Fellowship, held with the First Christian Church, at Greensboro, N. C., was most gratifying to those in charge. They came at the call of the President, Miss Birdie Rowland, and there were 49 who registered, representing sixteen churches.

The conference began at 1:50 P. M., on Saturday, May 6th, when Miss Priscilla Chase met with the Counsellors for a bit of instruction.

Rev. F. E. Hyde, of Elon College, led in the opening worship and following this, Dr. Rowland spoke words of welcome and inspiration. Mr. H. H. Truitt, of Glen Raven, gave a report of the Defiance, Ohio, Young People's Conference, held during the Christmas holidays.

There were discussion groups, a period of recreation, led by Aubrey Todd, addresses by Miss Priscilla Chase and Rev. W. T. Scott, a banquet supper, served by some of the women of the church, an impressive worship service, led by Miss Chase, a report on the findings of the discussion groups, and a closing service, in which Miss Chase told the group that the success of the conference depended on how much they took back home and put across there. All of those who attended seemed much in earnest. Every minute of the time they were together was packed full of interest and activity.

WORLD WIDE SUNDAY SCHOOL NEWS.

The Right Hon. George W. Forbes, Prime Minister of New Zealand, has recently issued a special and timely message to the Sunday School teachers of the Dominion. It is of such high significance that it is worth broadcasting far and near.

"I feel that in these distressing and difficult times through which we are passing it is more than ever necessary that the youth of our land should be trained in the paths of truth and honesty of purpose and that the spirit of service to one's fellow men should be inculcated in the impressionable age of childhood.

"To those lay teachers who so willingly and often at great sacrifice to themselves devote their time and energies to the furtherance of this great work of seeking to lay the spiritual foundation on which our boys and girls may build an upright character, I offer my sincere thanks and good wishes for the splendid work which they have undertaken."

D. V. B. S. Stories from Egypt.

Sheikh Metry S. Dewairy, Egyptian Secretary for the World's Sunday School Association, sends the following striking incidents:

"A few days ago one of the little girls returned from school and heard a woman with whom her own mother had been quarreling constantly, calling her little girl. The first little one said, 'I will go and call her, auntie,' which she did. When she reached home her mother beat her and said, 'Don't you know that that woman and I fight all the time? Why do you disgrace me by doing her a favor?'

"The little girl answered, 'Well, why do you send me to a Christian school? The Christians teach us to do good to our enemies, and I might as well stop school if you are not going to let me do as they teach us there.' The mother relented. The child stayed in school. The effect on the neighborhood was very pronounced."

4. God working through youth for peace.
5. God working through youth for social justice. (Fair wages, good working conditions, unemployment situations, etc.)

7. God working through youth in little acts of service.

We are all representing something. Sometimes it is good, sometimes it is bad. We may be intentional representatives, deliberately trying to win people to our cause, or our influence may be incidental or accidental. If some prominent business concern or some popular movement calls us to be its representative, we count it a great honor and strive to be worthy of our calling.

God has called each one of us to be his representative. In every age there have been men and women who have lived and spoken for him. He has his prophets in the 20th century. Through these prophets he is calling us to be co-workers with him in building his kingdom on earth.

JESUS AND HIS FRIENDS.

LESSON IX—MAY 28, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "He that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved."—Mark 13:13.
LESSON TEXT: Mark 13:33-14:9.

Jesus Is Coming.

A great deal has been written about the Second Coming of Jesus, and there is a great deal of difference in opinion as to when and how he will come. The language which Jesus used lends itself to various interpretations. The central fact in Jesus' teachings about his Second Coming, however, is the importance of being ready for it. He frankly confesses that he does not know when "that day" will be (Mark 13:32), but he urges his hearers to be ready, for says he, "ye know not when the master of the house cometh." (vs. 35.)

For Ye Know Not.

It is well that we do not know some things. It is the uncertainty of life, the fact that we do not know what the future holds for us, that really gives meaning and incentive to life. Think what it would mean if we knew when we were going to die—how it would hang like a pall over us, how it would paralyze plans for the future, how it would rob life of its zest and spirit of adventure!

To Every Man His Work.

Jesus said that the matter of his coming was like unto a man who was going abroad and who intrusted to his servants certain tasks or duties, and to every man his work. There is a place in God's plan for every one of us. Each of us has some work to do, some responsibility to perform, some share in the task of bringing in the kingdom of God. We are not responsible for doing the other fellow's work. We are not expected to do more than we can do. But we are expected to do our work, and to do it just as well as we can. If we do not do our work it will not be done. Jesus said we are to be busy at our particular and personal tasks. If we do that it will not make any difference to us when he comes.

Watch!

"And what I say unto you I say unto all, 'Watch'." Be vigilant, keep awake, be on your guard, be alive to the issues of life, be alert to the dangers of life, keep sensitive to the temptations of life, and be prepared for all the emergencies of life. The man who is not vigilant about his Christian life will soon have no Christian life to be vigilant about. There are multitudes of people today who are not at all awake either to their privileges or their responsibilities.

How They Might Take Him by Craft.

The Scribes and Pharisees did not dare to do openly what they wanted to do. They feared the uproar of the people. They knew that the people had too fair a sense of justice and too much common sense to allow the thing to be done on the basis on which they wanted it done. They, therefore, prepared to take Jesus "on the sly."

As one reads these words he is reminded of the shrewd but despicable strategy of the wets. There is no justice in the way in which the wets are trying to repeal the Eighteenth Amendment. The wets are afraid to have a fair test made of the whole matter. They have camouflaged the issue, and they have so artfully misrepresented the situation that they have fooled the great masses of the American people. They have taken advantage of the depression to "put it over." They knew that there wasn't a chance in getting back liquor on an honest and out-and-out vote. The political conventions were packed, Congress violated all rules of decency and fairness, and the proposed conventions are simply in keeping with their determination to "stack the cards" against the whole prohibition cause. Did you ever hear any exponent of repeal dare suggest that individuals or a nation would be better off with liquor, that liquor exalts a man, or develops his character? We hear of beer for revenue, and of liquor for a balanced budget, but nothing is said about what the beer or liquor will do to human life and character. The whole thing is being done by craft, or at least it was done by craft until they thought they had everybody fooled. Thinking people, however, think that the last word on this question has not been spoken yet. The ideals of Jesus are hard to keep down. The religious leaders nailed him to the cross and put him in the tomb, but he did not stay there!

Uncalculating Love.

That woman who broke that alabaster box of precious ointment on the head of Jesus was doing what so many of us need to do—lavish our love upon him without stint or calculation or measure. There are so many professing Christians who will lavish money on week-end parties, or on clubs, or on clothes, or on personal indulgences, never calculating the cost, and yet they will count every dollar they give to the church and the kingdom. Because that woman loved much, she gave much. Can it be true that the reason we do not do more for Jesus is because we do not love him much?

What She Could.

"She hath done what she could." The Master could not have said less. He could not have said more. We are to do what we can.

A Memorial of Her.

Not on bronze plate or marble shaft, but in lowly deeds of loving service in human lives is the greatest memorial. This unknown woman has been memorialized throughout the world and will continue to be so memorialized wherever the gospel is preached.

PRAY—GIVE—GO.

Three things the Master hath to do,
And we who serve him here below,
And long to see his kingdom come—
May pray, or give, or go.

He needs them all—the open hand,
The willing feet, the asking heart—
To work together and we weave
The threefold cord that shall not part.

Nor shall the giver count his gift
As greater than the worker's deed;
Nor he in turn his service boast
Above the prayers that voice the need.

Not all can go; not all can give
To earn the others for the fray;
But young or old, or rich or poor,
Or strong or weak—we all can pray.

Pray that the full hands open wide
To speed the message on its way;
That those who hear the call may go,
And—pray that other hearts may pray.

—Annie Johnson Flint.

We live in a wicked and unfaithful generation, now as in the olden time. Be unashamed of Jesus in the presence of friends and foes. Thus we can honor him. Thus we can serve mankind. Thus we can uplift the world.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

"I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord."—Psalm 116:13.

"The opening of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."—Psalm 119:130.

MONDAY.

SATURATED.

"By one spirit are we all baptized into one body . . . and have been all made to drink into one spirit."—I. Cor. 12:13.

Paul is discussing the many and various gifts of different people. Yet, however diverse, he says, all are coordinated to one supreme end of one glory in Christ. He illustrates it by reminding us of the various uses of the members of the body, yet all coordinated to make a perfect body in perfect action, to achieving ends.

Our various spiritual gifts cannot be coordinated to Christ-like ends without a thorough saturation of the Holy Spirit—a saturation that transforms the personality to Christ-likeness and an infusion of the whole mind and heart with the attitude and outlook and purpose of Christ, which is inward and complete. This is what is meant by "Baptize," and the clause of the text, "all made to drink into one spirit."

Faith in Christ is not something added to life, like an extra room built to a house. It is something which penetrates all of life, as the sea is saturated with salt.

Prayer—Our Father, we confess to thee that if we would be light we must be full of light; if we would be thy salt, we must have the saving power within us; if we would be examples, we must be embued with thy spirit; if we would be witnesses, we must have the truth in us. O Lord, give us a baptism of these heavenly truths and blessings. In his name.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

CHURCH OR ORGANIZATION.

"And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues."—I. Cor. 12:28.

The first six things mentioned in the text are taken to represent the church—that invisible power of God that is soul-life. The seventh, "Governments," is taken to refer to the organization of the church. The latter, "diversity of tongues," is said to refer to those whose hearts are set on converting their gifts to the highest spiritual ends, and having a way of still greater surpassing excellence in the use of speech and languages, such as is referred to in II. Cor. 12:4, when certain believers enjoyed heavenly experiences in a heavenly speech which transcends all earthly languages.

Is it not significant that Paul should lay so much emphasis on the spiritual body of the church rather than in the organization? Is he not telling us that the spiritual mysteries are the work of Christian maturity? Well, our question is what? Just this: Are we giving the proper attention to our church life in learning and reflecting the scriptures, in showing the power of God to heal, comfort and help others in their daily life, both in problems and in successes, and in subordinating the church organization to these ends; or are we emphasizing organization to the loss of spiritual experiences?

Of course, it is not denied that church organization and finances are placed among spiritual gifts, and they are to be rightly administered, but never to the sacrifice of the more important.

Prayer—Our Father, we confess to thee that we are a part of thy church in the world; we acknowledge that everything has its value to the whole; we pray thee to endow us with keen discretion in values and teach us how to make the most important first in our emphasis, and thus may we do thy will, now and forever.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

FIRST THINGS.

"Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness."—Matt. 6:33.

Other scriptures naming the first things: "Ye must be born again," "Pray without ceasing," "I am the way, the truth and the life," "The gospel must first be published" (Matt. 13:10), "I must abide in thy house," "God is the spirit, ye must worship in spirit."

Organization is like machinery—wheels sometimes interlock, it squeaks; machines become masters of us instead of our servants; and a church organization may demand the greater part of our energies obscuring spiritual purposes. It has been said that organization can never produce spiritual experience any more than an automobile can produce a fruit orchard. The source of church life is not in the boiler in the basement, but in the souls in the prayer room—in the lives that have the life of the Master.

Prayer—O Lord, our Lord, we want to be thine wholly, and we want the consciousness of thy spirit within us. Help us to make every thought and aspiration a prayer to that end. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE BIG PARADE.

"(Love) Doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil."—I. Cor. 13:5.

Moffatt's version of this verse says, "Love makes no parade." When love attracts to itself by unusual demonstrations, or by calling attention to self as if to say "See what I did," or is so easily provoked that it is jealous over every phase of life, or is ready to criticize others unfoundedly at the slightest provocation, it is not love; it is self looking for all praise and attention. It is egotism personified. Such people find satisfaction in such personal credits; they love the big parade and plenty of show, but with such ones the parade is the chief thing and the distinctly Christian virtue is lost amidst fuss and feathers. When the parade is over, all is over.

True love makes no parade.

Prayer—Our Father, thou knowest our human weaknesses. Teach us this day what to be proud of and to place our pride in the things that last eternally for good. In his name.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

BELIEVING THE BEST.

"Rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth."

" . . . believeth all things."—I. Cor. 13:6, 7.

Again we call on Dr. Moffatt's translation to help us. "Believeth all things" has been mistakenly understood as praise of credulity—or readiness to believe anything. A person who believes anything is regarded as one easily imposed upon, and therefore weak.

That unfortunate trait is not what the apostle refers to as real love. Taking the two verses together, the first (6th) is the premise by which we are to understand the second (7th)—"Rejoicing not in iniquity; but rejoicing in the truth." Therefore the seventh verse is interpreted to mean "Love is always eager to believe in the best." It is the set of the mind and heart to believe the best possible, "as soon as it is possible and as long as it is possible."

Prayer—Our Father, we would embrace in our lives that likeness of our Lord which endows us with the most creative force of life. Thou dost tell us that it is love. O God, may we love as much like him as possible. In Christ's name, we ask it.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

NO CREDIT TO US.

"Why fasten ye your eyes on us, as though by our own power or godliness we had made him to walk?"—Read Acts 3:1-16.

At least eight centuries before Christ the Maya Indians of Central America were able to make accurate predictions of eclipses of the sun and moon. They tried to stop these eclipses by their magic, believing that they meant evil to men, and once in a while, when the eclipse did not occur, they asserted that they had succeeded in preventing it.

Thus man is ever seeking to step out of his own sphere and handle affairs that belong to God alone. No quality conduces more to human happiness and effectiveness than humility. Let us recognize our limitations. The blessed and strong life is content to rest upon God's providence and accept his eclipses and his sunlight as they are sent.

Prayer—Thou knowest best, our Father. Thy will shall be ours, and so thy world shall be ours, and all thy well-ordered eternity.—Amen.

AGE BEATING YOUTH.

"Moses was a hundred and twenty years old when he died; his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated."—Read Deut. 34:1-8.

The other day the race from the shore to the Boston lighthouse was won by a veteran of fifty-eight years, Sam Richards, who has won this race eleven times before, and has been in major distance swims in all parts of the country, Canada, and the English Channel. He was in the icy water for six hours and seven minutes, beating by fifty minutes the only other swimmer who reached the goal, a fine youth of only seventeen years. For forty years Sam Richards has been a champion swimmer.

Such an old age is no accident, but is worked for. Richards swims every day for the joy of the exercise. Cramps do not affright him, and he is always cheery and strong.

We can not all win races, but we can all be stronger than we are, more fit in body, wiser in mind, and above all more valiant in soul. If we did not begin long ago, when we should, it is not too late to begin today. We have all eternity before us.

Prayer—Help us to a noble old age, O thou Ancient of Days! Give us of thy health and gladness. We would be strong in thy strength, and thou wilt ever aid us.—Amen.

BUILDING THE CHURCH OF THE LIVING GOD.

By CALVIN J. FELTON, Pastor,
Second Christian Church, Irvington, N. J.
(Matt. 16:18.)

"Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God." The Church of Christ is built upon this confession as its foundation stone. It is the Church of the living God because it is built upon a conviction of God and His son, Jesus Christ.

The Church is a divine institution. Except for the influence of God in the heart and life of man it would not have been built. It was not built for the sake of bringing into existence another institution but it is the spontaneous expression of man's feeling of a definite and vital relationship to God.

Only as a divine institution can the Church live and grow. It could not exist very long, if it depended upon human resources alone. If you will read the history of the Church, you will find that when it has been inclined to turn away from God and undertake to exist upon human powers, that God has not allowed it to go on very long in this way. He has very soon called a prophet to lead it back to God and that which is divine. Luther, Wesley, Whitfield, Moody and others have answered the call of God very effectively for this task.

In fact, there is no reason for the existence of the Church except the spiritual one. There is no social nor economic reason to justify its continuance.

The Church has no message to give except the message which comes from the heart of God. It should speak as nearly as possible the whole mind and heart of God. Men and women should attend Church to hear the truth, not to be entertained, but to hear the truth whether it is pleasant to hear or not. The doctor sometimes gives medicine which isn't pleasant to take, but the patient is willing to take it because of its value. Truth should be taken in the same way.

The Church stands for a definite and vital need in man's life, a need which can be met by no other means. Some people say, "I can be just as good a Christian without going to Church." It may be possible, but there are not many who do it. The fact is that a man's spiritual life and experience must have its social aspect just as his mental and physical life must have them. The Church offers this social opportunity for man's spiritual development. A man cannot live to himself spiritually any more than he can live to himself mentally and physically.

They who come into the Church as members are expected to yield themselves to the influence and leadership of God. This doesn't mean, of course, that everyone in the church is perfect. It is unfair for those outside the Church to judge its value by the lack of perfection in some of its members. But sincere church members are striving to reach the goal of perfection held up by Jesus.

It is the Church of the Living God. We worship and serve, not a tradition nor a god of stone, but one who lives, one who works now and always for the strength and development of the Church.

Jesus said, "I will build." The Church of the Living God is built by his Son. He has not built it directly but through human instrumentality. He builds through the inspiration and driving power which he gives to man. There are many people living and serving, not because they want to do so but because they feel they must. That word must have played a big part in the development of the Church from Jesus on.

God spoke to man through a life. Jesus continues to speak to man through life. He builds through the lives of his followers.

He is still building his Church. The task is by no means complete. For the Church is not a structure which was completed years ago and left as a grand old landmark. It must adapt itself and its message to the age in which it is. This doesn't mean that it must leave out or compromise truth. But it does mean that it must apply the truth to present needs and problems. We are expected to allow Christ to build the Church of today for today.

It is being built, and as the years go by it ought to become a bigger and stronger institution, each age adding to its size and strength.

There is, and always has been, a need for those who are interested in the cause of righteousness to get wholeheartedly into the Church and make it possible for it to meet the needs of the time. There are some today who tell the preachers they ought to stick to the gospel. Of what value is the gospel unless it can be applied to the conditions and problems in the midst of which one lives? Vested interests have always fought the progress of the gospel. Paul had an experience of that at Ephesus. Jesus, himself, met it in the religious leaders of his day. The Rome authorities were an example. The battle against slavery and the more modern one against liquor are striking examples.

The Church is not a structure of wood and stone, but it is of the soul, character, life. It is as good and strong as the life of its members make it.

It is a triumphant, living institution. The lukewarm Church cannot be the Church of the Living God.

We are engaged here, not in keeping a small organization alive, but in building the Church of the Living God. Shall we let Christ build through us?

The Church will not fail any more than God will fail. It may change but it will go on serving and saving until the kingdom has come and the kingdom of righteousness shall be supreme. Let us arise and go on that Christ may build through us the Church of the Living God.

THE PLIGHTED WORD OF NATIONS.

The Pact of Paris bound the nations of the world, first, to renounce war as an instrument of their national policy, and second, in the settlement of disputes among themselves, never to resort to other than peaceful means. In three years at least a half dozen countries—Japan and China, Peru and Colombia, Bolivia and Paraguay—have violated this treaty. They have excused themselves by the Machiavellian process of carrying on war without a declaration of war.

If any treaty or promise can keep the nations in line, the Pact of Paris is assuredly one. It is clear, concrete, and unequivocal. The first clause may be evaded by the ingenious pretence mentioned above, but the second clause is evasion proof. When two states engage in armed conflict they cannot escape violating a promise pledged by them "never to have recourse to other than pacific means."

What, then, shall be our conclusion concerning the attitudes of the nations toward the sanctity of treaties? Simply this: that in states where nationalism and militarism are rampant, there is no such sanctity. Where a nation seeks selfish advantages, where its own ends are considered by the leaders and people as of more significance than more abstract conceptions, a treaty which interferes with these ends is a mere scrap of paper. That is the plain lesson to be drawn from the present world situation.

It is well that the peace leaders have confidence in the righteousness of their cause. If it were not so they could scarcely escape cynical despair over the foolishness of civilization.—The Christian-Evangelist.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The school has closed and the children are happy to be free again. The larger number of our children made good grades during the entire session. One of our girls in the graduating class made an average of 93 during her entire high school work.

Thelma Long, Bettie Morgan, Mildred Hines, George Sloan, Arlene Morgan, Kathleen Miller, Gladys Horne and Nannie Roberts got special mention because they made "A's" of nearly every subject during the entire term.

We have several who have reached the age limit and finding jobs for them is a perplexing undertaking now. We have succeeded in getting good jobs for four of our girls and one boy so far, and as times get better we hope to get all who have reached the age limit a job.

I was talking to the superintendent of another orphanage several years ago. He had two fine girls who had reached the age limit and some friends had made funds available to send them to Elon College. He came to Elon to enter them in school. When he started back home the girls followed him to the station to bid him good-bye. He turned to me and said: "Brother Johnston, I cry when they come and I cry when they leave," and tears trickled down his cheeks.

You may not think, dear reader, that the children in our orphanage would wend their way into your heart, and that you would learn to love them as your own, but they do.

It is always sad to me to take children from their mother, because she just cannot support them and is compelled to send them to the orphanage; but after they come and live in the orphanage and are kind, obedient, gentle and good all the years of their stay, and reach the age limit, and have to go out, it is touching and brings a silent tear to our eyes, and a pang of grief to our hearts.

I heard a colonel in the World War say he was walking along the line one morning just before going into a great battle that was to rage in a short time. Some of the soldiers were reading their Testaments and praying, some were talking to mother as if she were present to hear every word they said, others with tears trickling down their cheeks. He, too, turned away as his eyes filled with tears, but when the command was given to charge every soldier obeyed and went to battle with the enemy.

This is home to these children. Many of them have no other. They, too, shed a silent tear as they go to fight the battles of life alone. We, too, shed a silent tear, because we have learned to love them as our own and as they take their departure we know they are entering the battle of life to win or lose.

Another story:
 "Two little Moslem girls went to D. V. B. S. for the first time this summer and were very much touched at the difference between Christians and Moslems. They were telling their mother and other women about it. They said, 'We would like to be Christians, too. They teach us about God who loves us. They teach us nice stories about being kind to people and how to pray to God and they sing beautiful songs, and we have to wash our hands and faces, but we Moslems do not do anything but sit in the dirt all day long and just fight and curse.'"

Patient and kind and loving, too;
A wonderful helper whose presence is missed.

For her name has been transferred to that heavenly list."

C. E. GERRINGER.

NELMS.

On March 23, 1933, the death angel visited our community and took from our midst little Margaret Jane, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Nelms.

Little Margaret came to brighten the home of Mr. and Mrs. Nelms on July 7, 1932. She was sick for just a few days and her death was wholly unexpected. She was but 8 months and 16 days old when the death angel called for her.

Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock, the funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. S. W. Marshall.

Much sympathy is felt for the bereaved ones by their many friends. May God's richest blessing abide with them in their moment of sadness.

married Loftin B. Scott and to them were born ten children. One died in infancy, two when children. Seven children survive.

There is one sister, Mrs. S. C. Barnett, and one brother, Cam Barnett. There are also eleven grandchildren and five step-grandchildren.

Initialed Terrapin Found After 30 Years.—

From Winchester, Va., comes the following story: William Wysong, passing through a growth of timber on his farm several days ago, found a land terrapin, and upon picking it up found his own initials carved on its back together with the date, 1901. In reporting the incident, Mr. Wysong stated that he remembered distinctly cutting his initials. Also he stated that the terrapin was little larger than when he first found him a third of a century ago, and was found within a few feet of the same place.

Should Army Chaplains Go?—

Dr. Peter Ainslie, well known clergyman of the Disciples Church, thinks so. Dr. Ainslie says: "Fifty-six nations have signed the Kellogg-Briand pact denouncing war. The churches should not lag behind. The best way to express their agreement with the pact is to refuse to authorize their clergy to serve as chaplains at all times, not only in war, but in peace." Not all of the clergy agree with Dr. Ainslie, however. There are those who believe that the church should have its chaplains there "to nurse sick souls" back to health.

Gandhi Breaks His Fast.—

After three weeks fasting, Mahatma Gandhi concluded his voluntary abstinence from food on last Monday by drinking a glass of orange juice. This fast was started as a protest against discrimination against the "untouchables." At its close, Gandhi exclaimed, "In God's name I began this fast, and in God's name I end it. My faith is not less but more on this occasion." He added, "I do not know what God expects from me now, but whatever it may be I know He will give me strength for it." Gandhi, with his passive resistance, has probably given more concern to the British Empire than several Sepoy rebellions could possibly have done.

Some Facts About the Chicago Exposition.—

The Associate Press gives the following facts in regard to the Century of Progress Exposition which started at Chicago last Saturday: "It represents an investment of $37,500,000 on the part of the fair corporation and concessionaires. It is a show case covering 424 acres and has 82 miles of free exhibits, valued at $6,000,000. There are 120 buildings on the exposition grounds. The visitor can get about the fair city on land, water or in the air—by bus, wheel chair, motorboat or gondola, and over the lagoon via the rocket cars of the 'sky-ride.' Fair officials estimate it will require three weeks for the visitor to thoroughly see all its displays. All the states and 17 foreign nations are officially represented. Concessions number more than 200. Construction was financed with no taxation, no drain on any public funds. It was four years in the making.

Will Alcohol and Gasoline Mix?—

The answer is yes, if the mixing is properly done. However, to be safely used the mixture must be placed in the gasoline tank, not imbibed by the driver. Pure alcohol is impracticable for use as fuel in the present type of automobile engines, but mixtures of gas and alcohol containing as high as 25 per cent of the latter substance may be used without major adjustments in the carbureter. Indeed, alcohol is said to have a cleaning effect, and motors run on the combination fuel are said to be freer of carbon and to run cooler. The volatility of the mixture is higher than that of gasoline alone, and consequently the "pick-up" is better. While alcohol cannot be classed at present as a substitute for gasoline, and indeed there seems small reason for a substitute in the United States, it can be used as an "extender." The cost depends, naturally, upon the cost of raw alcohol; the mixing process being inexpensive.

A Mid-Ocean Airplane Port.—

That they may have a stepping stone on their route to South America, a German company has converted the old North German Llyod liner Westfalen into a floating aerodrome. The ship has been rebuilt in such a manner as to be practically unrecognizable, and is to be set to drift around in the ocean about half-way between Germany and South America. Smoke signals are to be used by day and lights of 120,000,000 candle power by night, to attract the attention of commercial flying boats of the Lufthansa. "The plan is," the London Daily Express tells us, "that the flying-boat will land in the evening, and, after spending the night on the 'island,' will refuel and set off at dawn, and, to save time, the Westfalen will travel as quickly as it can all night—it can only travel at ten knots—in the direction the flying-boat is going." In addition to acting as a floating airport, the reconstructed liner is to be used as a laboratory, being well equipped with meteorological instruments with which to check the currents and winds of the ocean.

The Fabric You're Wearing.—

Often one has wondered whence the peculiar names by which various cloths or fabrics are called. The Richmond News Leader recently gave the following in its editorial columns: "Now that the ladies are definitely committed to their summer clothes, they may be interested in the histories behind the fabrics they are wearing. Most of them are named for the towns of their origin. Muslin and mousseline are both named for Mosul, a town in Mesopotamia. Damask we owe to Damascus, and calico to Calcutta. Cambric comes from the Flemish city of Kameryk. Three others celebrate three towns in France: lawn, from Laon, near Reims; gingham, from Guingamp, Brittany; and tulle from the town of the same name. Chiffon is the French word for "rag." Satin, silk and serge all derive their names from 'Seres,' the Latin name of the Oriental people (probably the Chinese), from whom silk was first obtained. Voile is the same word as 'veil.' Dimity is from the Greek di-mitos, meaning 'two-threaded.' Crepe is the Latin crispa, or 'curled,' as linen is the Latin linum, 'flax.' Cotton is an Anglicization of the Arabian qutun. And perhaps most curious of all is seersucker; originally, it was the Persian phrase shir o shakkur, which literally means 'milk and sugar'."

Postage Stamps and Natural History.—

A contemporary tells us that there is a surprising amount of Zoology to be found in the postage stamps of the various countries of the world today. The United States has depicted the horse, the mule and the buffalo. The lion appears on the stamps of Great Britain, Persia, Paraguay and New Zealand. Other less familiar animals as well as those known to every school child who has visited the zoo, are found on various stamp issues. Newfoundland uses the caribou, ptarmigan, codfish, seals and dogs, while Labuan and North Borneo include the Malay stag and tapir, the crocodile, Argus pheasant, elephant, peacock, rhinoceros, cassawary, wild bull and parrots. The quezal forms the central figure on the so-called "parrot" stamps of Guatemala, while French Guiana uses the ant-eater. One is not surprised to find the llama in evidence on the Peruvian stamps, and the eagle on those of Mexico. The Australian kangaroo stamps are well known to all. The emu and lyre birds are seen on certain stamps of New South Wales. Three countries in particular have a whole series of stamps devoted to zoological subjects. On those of Liberia are a plantain eater, great egret, palm civet, fishing vulture, bommi fish, hippopotamus, chimpanzee, Agama lizard, lyre-horned antelope and snakes. This does not exhaust the list, for the Peace stamps of Japan in 1919 include the dove. Western Australia has the swan; Tasmania the platypus; Cape of Good Hope the ram, and the Orange River Colony the springbok and gnu. Elephants and tigers appear most frequently. Tigers form the principal subjects for the low values of the Federated Malay States and elephants on the higher, while elephants are also prominent on many stamps of the Belgian Congo, Sirmoor and Liberia. Camels or dromedaries are depicted on the stamps of French Smali, Obock, Nyassa, Iraq, and the Sudan, while the giraffe forms the subject matter of a number of interesting labels of Abyssinia, Tanganyika and Portuguese Nyassa. Abyssinia also has stamps showing the rhinoceros, ostrich and stag. A peculiar thing is that we have no record of the eagle yet being used by America.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

"We hope you may be successful in securing many new subscriptions for THE SUN, as the paper well deserves to be in every Christian Church member's home."—W. E. Harward.

From Rev. R. Lee House, Newport News, Va., comes the following note of forward progress: "Brother Poythress has been with us for ten days in a revival. We received twenty-two members during these services. This brings our total for the conference year to forty-eight."

Pastor G. C. Crutchfield issued an attractive card to members and friends of Berea Christian Church (N. C. and Va. Conference), bearing this invitation: "We will observe our annual home-coming and memorial day, Sunday, June 4, 1933. Please come and renew old acquaintances."

SUN readers will be gratified to know that Mrs. Sallie Lincoln, Lawrenceville, N. J., a frequent contributor to THE SUN and well known in our church circles, is recovering from her recent, quite critical illness and is able to be up at her desk and use her pen some. Our sincere wish is that she may soon be fully recovered.

Thorsby Institute, Thorsby, Ala., held its commencement exercises last week, the State Supervisor of Secondary Education in Alabama making the commencement address. Many of the alumni were present and a community dinner was served, according to a communication from Mr. S. E. Norton, Thorsby.

Lanett, Ala., Christian Sunday School and C. E. Society are endeavoring to establish a library to be used by the church and Young People's Societies. All who may read these lines are requested to send a good book, if they have one not being used. We will appreciate it so much, and will keep their names on the record of our library. We have received to date 17 books.

Mrs. S. S. McCauley, Chapel Hill, N. C., in sending her two dollars for the renewal to THE SUN, says: "I do not want to miss a single copy. I started taking the paper 55 years ago. So far as my memory serves me, I have not missed an edition during this number of years. The paper serves as a messenger for the entire denomination. I think that it is one of the best papers that has ever come to my home."

The editor of THE SUN expresses appreciation for the following: "Mr. and Mrs. Wilkes Estes Lowe announce the marriage of their daughter, Dorothy, to Mr. Eugene McKinley Whitman on Wednesday, May 24, 1933, Winston-Salem, N. C. At home after June 10th, Louisville, N. C." Miss Dorothy is a graduate of Elon College, and since her graduation has been a successful school teacher. We extend our congratulations and best wishes.

Rev. Wm. T. Scott, writing of our Winston-Salem Church, says: "Our work is moving along satisfactorily. Our building is beginning to look like a finished product now. We are hoping to be able to move into it within a month. There is a great future for our work here." Bro. Scott has been holding services in a church quite remote from the locality in which our new church is being built, and he will be happy and fortunate, indeed, to get into the new building.

Let no one be deceived by big head lines and the promise of prosperity around the corner. Recovery from the loss of millions of lives and billions of treasures, followed by a decade of folly, comes not with a wave of the hand and daily messages from the White House. A long, hard struggle is ahead. The moral and spiritual recovery is far more costly than the material. Let every leader in the churches keep a clear head and sound judgment in meeting the issues.—N. C. Christian Advocate.

Elon College Community Church put on the Crucible Campaign Service, bringing in their trinkets of silver and gold at the Sunday morning service, May 28th. At this writing we do not know the result, but Elon Church always does its part in every good task and undertaking. On first thought few, if any, homes have gold or silver trinkets anywhere about, but on second thought and investigation many can be found and carried to the church and given to the service of missions, thus bringing from death to life many fragments and much hidden treasure.

Rev. S. A. Bennett, professor in Southern Union College and pastor of our Roanoke, Ala., church the past year, was a pleasant visitor with friends and home-folks at Elon College the past week. Mrs. Bennett accompanied him, and they attended the graduation exercises of their daughter from our Elon High School. They have had a very happy year in the far South and have enjoyed making many friends there. From Elon they went to Indiana on a business trip and to visit relatives. Prof. Bennett feels that Southern Union has a career of usefulness and great service, if its friends of the Congregational-Christian Churches will rally to its support, as it highly deserves they should do. A very loyal faculty carried forward the work the past year.

Rev. Sion Lynam, a graduate of Elon College and formerly pastor of some nearby churches, and a frequent contributor to the columns of THE SUN, is evidently giving good account of himself and ministry, as the following from the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty, of May 25th, indicates: "We have a communication this week advising us of a new community church venture at Medusa, N. Y., in which the community church is organized to serve the local community without regard to denominational affiliations, but is to be affiliated nationally with our Congregational-Christian fellowship. The congregations joining are the Christian and Methodist bodies of Medusa, and the larger parish will include the Freehold Christian Church. Rev. Sion Lynam (now pastor at Freehold) has been called and has accepted the pastorate of the new community venture. Our correspondent in reporting the progress of this merging of the work of the three churches under the leadership of one pastor says: 'I never saw more enthusiasm or greater willingness on both sides to make adjustments.' This is as it should be, and we know that the community has chosen its leader wisely. Rev. Sion Lynam was formerly news-editor of The Herald of Gospel Liberty before its merger with The Congregationalist."

This news, which merits congratulations, hereby extended, comes from Florence, S. C.: "A delightful family gathering was held Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Long, the occasion being a dinner in celebration of the 89th birthday of Dr. D. A. Long. While Dr. Long did not arrive at the ripe and honorable age he has achieved until yesterday, members of his family did him honor on Sunday as well as on his actual natal day. Here for the celebration, in addition to Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Long, were two daughters, Mrs. G. A. Kernodle of Burlington, N. C., and Mrs. C. H. Belvin of Raleigh, N. C. Mr. Kernodle was also present. Nephews and nieces were Dan Long of Raleigh, Miss Lula Kernodle of Burlington and Miss Pullen Belvin of Florence. For all his years, Dr. Long is as keenly interested in city, state, national and world affairs as ever. He is not only a retired minister of the Christian Church, but a noted educator, having been president for 16 years of Antioch College, Ohio. It will be recalled that it was the president of this college, one of the best known educational institutions in the country, that President Roosevelt drafted as director for the development of Muscle Shoals, Arthur E. Morgan. Large numbers of friends of the venerable Dr. Long were yesterday congratulating him upon his 89th birthday."

Rev. P. Houlder Brown, who for some months has served efficiently as pastor, First Christian Church, Norfolk, has presented his resignation and is leaving July 2nd to take up evangelistic work to which he feels called and from which he turned aside temporarily to accept the work at Berkley. Bro. Brown tendered his resignation in January, but the church insisted on his remaining, which he did, on condition that he be permitted to leave on thirty days' notice. The plant of the church has been considerably improved since Bro. Brown took the work, and he has greatly enjoyed the work at Berkley. This encouraging word gives promise of good days to come: "Today this church is united as never before in spite of trying financial conditions." In commenting on the resignation of Bro. Brown, a local paper says: "Rev. P. Houlder Brown resigned from the pastorate of the First Christian Church, Berkley, at the 11 A. M. service yesterday. The resignation will take effect July 2nd. Mr. Brown stated that he would engage in evangelistic work after taking a few weeks' rest. That, he said, was his intention when he came south from Chicago two years ago and took up the supply work at the First Christian Church, following the resignation of Rev. J. E. McCauley, a former pastor of the church, who went to Richmond. Mr. Brown served in the Chicago field for 10 years and before that was a minister in the European field. During all this time he has received wide experience which fits him for the work that he proposes to do later, and is now general secretary of the Gospel Missionary Movement which is headed by Rev. H. C. Caviness, of Portsmouth."

MINISTERIAL MEETING.

The Eastern Virginia Association of Christian and Congregational Ministers held its regular monthly meeting May 22nd, at the Portsmouth Y. M. C. A. We certainly missed Dr. Pierce. A committee was named to send a letter of commendation to his new field of activity. Rev. F. C. Lester, president of the Association, read a splendid paper in our study of the Prophets. Then that august body began to demonstrate its ability as a critic. Rev. R. A. Whitten, recently initiated into our fraternity, submitted a sermon outline, making it easy to imagine oneself back in school attending a homiletics class. Dr. N. G. Newman led the group in a discussion of pastoral problems. This discussion proved to be so helpful that he was asked to continue this discussion at a later date.

It is indeed a privilege to attend this Association. Such fellowship provides a great stimulus for Christian living.

It has been six weeks since we published a list of those who have sent in payments on their SUN accounts. The banking holiday seems to have slowed up collections somewhat and the number of returns, which before had been gradually increasing, have again dropped off. Would it be asking too much of you who have not sent in your renewal, if we asked you to look at your label and see whether or not you are in arrears. If you are and can pay up, it will help us to care for those who cannot pay at the present time. It will also help us to wait on the Southern Convention, whose funds are also low. When you get a year or more in arrears, it takes quite a nice little sum to bring you up to date, but if you keep paid up, a dollar or at most two dollars, is all that is required. If other matters are pressing, we are willing to take our turn, but if you can, it will make both you and us happy for you to send us part or all of what is due.

Yours for a better SUN,

J. T. KERNODLE,
Managing Editor.

CARES: I LOST THEM YESTERDAY.

The little cares that fretted me,
I lost them yesterday
Among the fields above the sea,
Among the winds at play;
Among the lowing of the herds,
The rustling of the trees,
Among the singing of the birds,
The humming of the bees.

The foolish fears of what may happen,
I cast them all away
Among the clover-scented grass,
Among the new-mown hay;
Among the hushing of the corn,
Where drowsy poppies nod,
Where ill thoughts die and good are born,
Out in the fields with God.

THE STRANGLEHOLD OF THE BREWERS.

The April 14th issue of The Civic Bulletin, of Albany, N. Y., is devoted to reprinting the most startling facts in Ernest Gordon's great book, "When the Brewers Had the Stranglehold."

In 1916 the U. S. Government seized a carload of secret documents, letters, reports, etc., of the U. S. Brewers Association, and many of these amazing letters of the brewers to one another—their trickery, bribery, corruption and bulldozing methods—were all laid bare when the Government printed these letters in a public document, which letters Mr. Gordon gives in his book, many of which are reprinted in this issue of The Civic Bulletin.

This Bulletin shows how the brewers raised their corruption funds and how they spent them; how they bought the press and labor leaders, corrupted politics and sought to break down the U. S. Constitution.

A copy of this 16-page Civic Bulletin, containing over 20,000 words, giving so many startling facts concerning the brewers, taken from official sources, can be had for only ten cents, by addressing its editor, Rev. O. R. Miller, Albany, New York.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

RETRENCH AND RETREAT.

It seems that our Congregational-Christian Churches are doing both—drawing in our line and falling back all the time. It is, indeed, a distressing situation. The church is not measuring up. Our Lord gave the church one task: "Go preach my gospel." Our churches now, instead of saying, "go, preach," are saying "some, stop and not preach."

While governments—civic, state and national, are pouring out millions through benevolence for physical relief, the church is withholding and is giving decreasingly for the support of the gospel at home and abroad. Every church that is without a pastor seems to be content to get along some way without making arrangements to have one. Many, many churches are behind with their pastor's salaries, and as to supporting the gospel in home and foreign work, let these figures from the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty tell something of the facts as they obtain today in our own communion:

"During the first four months of 1933 the giving of the churches to our national mission boards declined 46 per cent as compared with the same period in 1932.

"Explanations are easy. Much missionary money is tied up in closed banks. Grippled by the paralysis of fear, many individuals are carrying larger cash reserves than under normal conditions. Absorption in our own financial difficulties has distracted our attention from the needs of others.

"But no problem can be solved by analyzing how we got that way.

"Our mission boards have sought to meet the situation by reducing their expenditures. Office and administration salaries have been cut to and beyond 20 per cent. In some instances even these reduced salaries are in arrears. The boards are approaching the limit of their borrowing ability.

"American Missionary Association has slashed its budget by $347,000, or 42 per cent, with the result that 143 people will be 'released' from employment. Home missionary churches have been closed; the service which the Education Society renders the churches is almost at a standstill.

"The American Board reduced its budget for the year ending August 31st, by $283,000. Word has gone to the missions that additional savings of $161,000 must be made in the year beginning September 1, 1933. In three years the missionary force has been reduced by 67 people, with additional withdrawals in prospect.

"Reductions may be necessary in the present emergency, but the Kingdom of God cannot be brought in by the slashing of budgets. A further continuance of the present practice will mean the wrecking of institutions and services which have been built up through sacrificial giving."

Our mission work signifies our devotion to our Lord in whose name and for whose sake it is carried on. There is no argument or logic that will convince one in a time like this, to take money needed for physical relief close at hand, and give for spiritual relief, other than the argument and logic of love. His disciples were indignant and called it waste when the woman poured the contents of her alabaster box upon the head of her Lord; but the Master rebuked the disciples and applauded and praised the woman, for it was out of her deed of devotion that he immediately began to speak of a world-wide gospel. It is out of devotion to our Lord that we make our gifts to missions. The challenge comes to the church more than ever that it prove its faith in its Lord and its devotion to him, by making its donations to him to feed the heart hungry and give life to perishing souls. MERRILY WE MOVE ALONG.

We are moving. We are headed for something somewhere, and are on our way there. Postmaster-General Farley has announced through the press that the weight of the national government will be given wholeheartedly and vigorously to the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. Coupled with this announcement is the claim that as soon as repeal takes place, income tax rates will be lowered, and that taxes along other lines will be decreased, because of the increase of taxes to come from the legal sale of liquor. Mr. Farley gives hope, as is expressed in the press, that he, with the aid of the administration, will succeed in securing enough States lined up for repeal to finish the work by the end of 1933. And so we move merrily along; the satisfaction in many quarters being that with the return of the legal sale of liquor, either in the saloon (or a flower of some other name equally as fragrant), revenue to the government will so increase that the men who pay the heavy income tax now may be relieved of some of their "burdens." The other side is not presented. That is, the side of the poor man, who, with his appetite and inclination to drink, spends his week's wages in liquor, and thus impoverishes his family, he, poor fellow, is to pay the tax that the rich may be relieved of paying. Evidently, we move merrily along. The states so far voting have lined up by large majorities for repeal. Under the leadership of Chairman Raskob of the Association for Repeal, and now, by the assistance of the government, under the leadership of Postmaster-General Farley, the repeal campaign is to be pressed with all vigor. We are on our way.

Meanwhile, there are other movements. The Southern Baptist Convention, in session at Washington last week, adopted resolutions calling upon Baptists and their friends not to purchase gas or other commodities from establishments that sell beer. The Convention took a strong stand and made emphatic pronouncement for retention of the Eighteenth Amendment and against repeal.

Many Methodist bodies, meeting in recent months, have made equally strong pronouncements, calling upon their people not to trade with those who sell beer and to take a firm stand against repeal. Other religious bodies, meeting within the last sixty days, have made pronouncements of similar type. Also the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is making a nation-wide campaign in behalf of mothers, children and the homes, pleading that strenuous effort be made to retain the Eighteenth Amendment and to stay the idea that has set in for the return of liquor and the saloon. Thus lines are being tightened and the campaign for repeal and against repeal becomes more interesting and absorbing as "we move merrily along" somewhere!

We are living in a great and wonderful time. We are making daring adventure, experiments in government, in social activities and attitudes, in political and religious slogans and sentiments. We are on our way. We move merrily along. May the God of wisdom lead us, guide us and save us. J. O. A.

PEANUTS.

Greensboro and Raleigh, N. C., got their thrills two weeks ago, and are still talking about it. A Negro chemist, of Tuskegee Institute, Alabama, did it. Dr. C. H. Rowland, of First Church, Greensboro, says that this chemist, Prof. George W. Carver, is the most talented and remarkable scientist and lecturer to whom he has ever listened. They are still talking in Greensboro of his remarkable lecture before the A. & T. College there. And Prof. George W. Carver has a history. Born in slavery, his father died when George was just a babe, and soon thereafter his mother and himself were kidnapped. Their master, Moses Carver, a substantial farmer of Missouri, upon missing the slaves, sent for the robbers and overtook them. However, little George was ill and the robbers were ready to throw him into a ditch, but the earnest entreaty of the mother saved him. Then they gave the robbers a race horse for him and returned him to his master, the mother disappearing.

This boy, born in slavery, worked his way through school and then through college and university, and in 1896, at the solicitation of Booker T. Washington, went to Tuskegee Institute, Alabama, as the head, and also as the department of chemistry. In this department, he has won fame coming to few chemists in this or any other day. His work has been with the ordinary things about him. For example, he has worked with clay, discovering 102 shades and tints thereof, and from clay has made face powder, cold cream, cosmetics and other such articles. He has discovered 118 uses of sweet potatoes and made 85 different products from pecans. At the invitation of State College, Raleigh, N. C., Prof. Carver lectured, and therein the College and Raleigh got their thrill.

Carver is a very devout man, humble and simple in a trustful faith, and declares that in the science of chemistry he is studying the secrets of God. The Biblical Recorder of Raleigh, in reporting something of the lecture, said:

"In his address at State College he devoted himself largely to his hobby, which is peanuts. He declared that he asked the Creator two questions concerning peanuts—first, "What are peanuts?' the answer to which came to him, 'Man is endowed with an intellect which he is to use in searching out the secrets of nature. Study the peanut and it will reveal itself to you.' The second question was, 'Why was the peanut made?' Again the answer came, 'Make tests of the peanut. Find the uses to which it may be put and the service the peanut may render and you will know why the peanut was made.'

"He has formulas for 285 different scientific discoveries concerning peanuts. He exhibited a number of his products. Among the things he has made from peanuts are sweet milk, butter milk, cheese, cooking oil, salad oil, peanut brittle, wafers, butter substitutes, candy kisses, flour substitutes, breakfast foods, soap, toothpaste, cold cream, nineteen dyes, cow feed, chocolate bars, axle grease, quinine, linoleum rubber and many other products. He exhibited sixty-three varieties of paper made from peanut products."

Prof. Carver has received many honors and awards one being that of $5,000 and a gold medal designed by the National Fine Arts Committee, for his discoveries in the service of American agriculture. He has been offered large sums to go into other laboratories, but he prefers to remain in the heart of the South and with an institution of his own in which he is making a contribution to agriculture, peanuts in particular, which have meant and will mean millions to the growers of peanuts.

This, indeed, is "glorifying the commonplace." Nature has her secrets, and there are stores of wealth around about us. Talent and consecration to duty can unlock these doors, and the South is honored in this son "up from slavery," who, through his remarkable gifts, has won a permanent place in achievements for mankind. Those who heard him in Greensboro and in Raleigh declare he is one of the most remarkable lecturers they have heard, and that while displaying wonderful talent and ability, developed to a high state by study, still declares that what he has been able to accomplish has been by the goodness and gifts of God.

WHERE ARE THE FOUR THOUSAND, FIVE HUNDRED AND NINETY-NINE?

In the office we made up a potential list of supporters of Elon College, numbering 5,000. With every possible care and earnest effort, we prepared and addressed an appeal to this large number whom we would have to be friends of the College, who, out of their earnings or savings might spare the College a modest contribution. To date we have received 401 replies. Two hundred and ninety-five have replied, sending donations ranging from twenty-five cents to $100.00. Many of those who did not send money told us the time to write a line, assuring us of their interest and desire to help, but explained that they were utterly unable to help at this time. A number have likewise written that they would send a donation later. We appreciate all replies. Those who have given have done so cheerfully and gladly. We appreciate their gifts, however small or large—they will mean much to the institution.

Just a few more days now before Commencement and naturally we are wondering what is to become of the more than 4,000 from whom we have not heard. In this final and last appeal before Commencement, we are earnestly beseeching all who read, if they possibly can, to please remember us that we may be able to make at least a small payment to faculty members. I hope that the public will be patient and cooperative. I do not mean to be overly persistent, but I must be earnestly persistent in my appeals for the College that means so much to the entire program and life of the church.

A number who write in and send contributions, also send words of confidence and encouragement. I wish that we had the space to publish all of the letters that come in, but this would be impossible. I am quoting, however, from a number. The first one is from Dr. and Mrs. William Moseley Brown. Dr. Brown was formerly president of Atlantic University. Many of THE SUN readers will remember him. He enclosed check for $3.00 and wrote as follows:

"Dear Dr. Smith:

"I send you herewith a check for $3.00 for Mrs. Brown and myself in the Elon campaign which you are now carrying on. I wish the amount could be a thousand times as large, but existing conditions make this impossible for us at the moment. I hope that you are receiving a great response from the Alumni and friends of Elon in your heroic efforts to keep the College going.

"It is now Commencement season almost, and we join in congratulating you upon the successes of the season just drawing to a close, and in wishing for you, your family and the College many years of service in this important work in the future.

"Cordially yours,

"WILLIAM MOSELEY BROWN."

The second letter which I quote in full is from a life-long friend of the College. It reads as follows:

"Dear Dr. Smith:

"As yet I have received no letter from the College, so I am enclosing check for $3.00 for Elon College. I am one of the first links in the Elon chain. My heart goes out in interest of our dear Old Elon and a prayer to my heavenly Father each day. God bless you in your earnest efforts and may he give you strength to accomplish what you have so earnestly begun. With all good wishes, I am,

"Very truly,

"MISS HONTAS RAWLES."

The third letter is received from the father of a boy who is now a Freshman at Elon. He writes as follows:

"Dear Dr. Smith:

"You will find enclosed check for $3.00. I am glad to give you that much and wish I could give you more, but hope some time to make it more. I am proud of Elon and proud of her President. I am proud to know that I have a son going to Elon. Ernest says you are all so nice to him—that if he can he certainly wants to go back to Elon. He speaks well of his roommate, Bill Cooper. Remember me in your prayers, I am "Your brother in the Christian Church,

"W. J. ASKEW."

Then I have another letter from one who evidently has a great interest in the College, but whose lack of funds makes it impossible for her to give great financial support. She writes as follows:

"Dear Dr. Smith:

"Enclosed you will find $1.00 for Elon College. Fifty cents of this is given by my mother, Mrs. S. B. Sanford, and fifty cents by myself. I am sorry that I can't make a large contribution but we had a short crop last year and money is scarce. No one loves Elon more than I do and no one rejoices more at her success, or laments her failures or calamities more than I. I feel interested in all her undertakings and if I had money equal to my interest and love, Elon College would not go begging. Although I have a very small amount in this fund, I am anxiously waiting to see the results. With best wishes for success, I am,

"Very respectfully,

"MRS. J. P. SANFORD."

It is my hope and prayer that the members of the church and the friends of the College, wherever they may be, who are able to make some sized contribution, may, as they read this letter, respond with what they can give without further solicitation on the part of the College, or longer hesitation about making their gifts.

Our list of donors and the amounts of the donations are not quite so large as they have been for the past two weeks. We are hoping that the last week may be more successful than any. Following we give a list of those who have responded since our last report:

NOTICE OF CHANGE IN CONSTITUTION.

It is proposed to amend the Constitution of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Eastern Virginia Conference of the Congregational-Christian Churches to read as follows:

"Time.—The Convention shall meet Tuesday after the third Sunday in July of each year and continue in session one (1) day, provided that in case of emergency the Executive Board shall have power to change the date of meeting, place of meeting and duration of meeting."

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The minister is human. He has material needs. Nature has given him an appetite for food, a body to be clothed, a mind to be trained, and a capacity to enjoy all the ordinary comforts and luxuries of life. Like all other men he faces a possibility of sickness, physical disability and retirement from active service. These considerations must call for some anxiety and concern.

The messenger of good tidings has been consecrated to a spiritual service, but it has pleased God to confine the spiritual on earth in a material body. With this inevitable link between the material and the spiritual, the minister faces certain problems in his relation to money, its acquisition and use.

The love of money is a root of much evil in a minister's career. It should never become the primary object in a minister's work. The pursuit of wealth should be dismissed from the field of a minister's ambition before he accepts ordination at the hands of the church. The preaching of the gospel should never be regarded as a mercenary calling. True there is a place for the use of money. But that place is secondary. It would be senseless to undertake to separate the spirit from the body in dealing with man on earth. The body is the temple of the Holy Ghost. No man can preach the gospel without some contact with the material. Money is a means and not an end.

Usually the public does not regard the minister as a business man. In spite of this attitude the best so-called business will often call upon the minister to solve many problems in church administration. It is evident that many business men are not intelligently able to think through every financial problem. The making of money is not the only problem in financial administration. The wise conservation of resources and the proper use of money involve very careful consideration and call for well balanced judgment. If the minister is well informed, and has a capacity for using real knowledge of such questions it will help him in many directions in his work. When business men discover that the pastor knows the fundamental laws and methods of good business, they will listen to his counsel. His leadership will be strengthened in financial discussions of the church. Many business men, in their perplexity, will seek his counsel, and he can help them to see the light in their personal business affairs.

Every minister should seek to manage his own personal financial affairs in a commendable and successful way. How can a man be able to counsel others, unless he is master of his own affairs? It is taken for granted that a church should pay the salary of the pastor promptly every month. When this is done the pastor should seek to stay out of debt for current expenses. In an age marked by great extravagance he should be an example in personal living. This advice is easy to give and hard to follow. It offers no easy road, for it means that the minister will often appear to cross the current thought and practice of his time.

A minister should save money. He is entitled to this privilege. It is a duty he owes to himself and his family. On a small salary the amount he may be able to save may seem insignificant. But if this habit is formed while he is young, later years will bring him the satisfaction of knowing that money grows, if properly used, and old age will offer him the privilege of being, in part, independent of superannuation or the poor house. He should seek to save, not for the sake of being rich, but for the sake of right financial living, as an example for others.

The minister should give liberally. And they do give liberally. Every minister who wishes to grow must give himself and a part of his money. God never intended that ministers should be paupers. They are not objects of charity in the sight of God. They are worthy of their hire. They should have some material rewards. But they are men of a kingdom and not hermits.

THE COLLEGE INVITES YOU.

There is one time when the College is particularly anxious for all of her former students, friends and supporters to visit her, and that time is Commencement. We are interested in having our friends call at any time, but when Commencement is here, naturally we want our friends and supporters to be present. We are particularly anxious for you to come this Commencement. We have put forth every effort to make the College attractive and to have a representative and effective program for all occasions. Every department of the College's activity will receive special consideration.

Beginning Friday evening with Junior orations, we touch practically all the interests of the College with the Commencement program, closing on Wednesday of the following week with graduation exercises. We are to be honored with influential speakers, including the Governor of North Carolina. The program this year will differ from previous programs in that all public exercises will present a musical feature. The Elon Singers will assist in the entire program. They will sing on Alumni Day and also on the day of graduation. Monday evening will be given over entirely to the Singers. They will present Coleridge Taylor's "Hiawatha's Wedding Feast." The Singers will be assisted by Mr. Beard, of Charlotte, N. C. Mr. Beard is perhaps the best tenor soloist in the state. Monday evening's program will be a rare treat for music lovers. The public generally is invited, and too, at this Commencement we will try to take particular care to see that our visitors are made to feel at home and that their needs are met.

A number of the ladies of the church at large have been invited to be present and serve as co-hostesses. Mrs. L. E. Smith will have charge of this part of the program, assisted by Miss Walker, dean of women.

We are anticipating a most successful Commencement, and it will be if you will take the time to attend. Your presence will greatly encourage us and we are anticipating a visit from you.

DR. W. W. STALEY.

Our whole church, both south and north, experiences a deep and peculiar bereavement in the passing of Dr. W. W. Staley. His genial spirit, wise counsel, and active interest in all that pertains to the life of men and of the church, together with his many years of devoted labor for good causes, have endeared him beyond computation to our entire brotherhood. His genial social qualities, and his fatherly attitude have deepened our personal love for him through the years.

Dr. Staley was a preacher made great by the depth of his consecration, the sincerity of his purpose, the courage of his utterances, the uniqueness of his thought, and the pertinency and appropriateness of its presentation. He was everybody's preacher—simple enough to be understood by the humblest listener yet with a depth of thought that charmed the profound scholar. His humanness seemed to make him a part of all classes. He was everybody's pastor, no matter how or where he met them. He loved folks to the point of personal sacrifice for any whom he might serve.

No one in his generation has been so nearly ubiquitous in the gatherings and counsels of the church as Dr. Staley. His love for people and his ardor for the Kingdom of God knew no geography. His devotion to the missionary and educational interests of his own Southland, his many years of faithful service to the Christian Publishing Association and the General Convention, his interest in and loyalty to the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America are evidences of the Christian cosmopolitanism which filled his soul. His services every where were always of the highest quality, and the influence which followed him was always an uplift.

The General Convention of the Christian Church through its Executive Committee desires to record that, though sorrowful at the departure of Dr. Staley, it is profoundly grateful for the character of his life and service and for the many years of it which he was permitted to invest in the world. Though his physical presence will be greatly missed, his influence will abide in our gatherings and institutions. His wise and witty sayings will continue to be repeated for generations.

We experience a common sorrow with his relatives, the church at Suffolk, and the Southern Convention in his loss.

BOUNDARY LINES OF THE THREE N. C. CONFERENCES.

In a recent conference of ministers and laymen the question arose as to the boundary line between the Western North Carolina Conference, the Eastern North Carolina Conference, and the North Carolina and Virginia Conference. There was much doubt and still more ignorance as to these boundary lines.

The editor of THE SUN finds the following in the Christian Annual of 1895, in the records of the Southern Convention meeting at Norfolk, Va., May 4-7, 1894:

"1. That the dividing line be drawn so as to make three conferences, with the following boundary lines:

"2. That the names of said conferences shall be, 'The Deep River Christian Conference,' 'The N. C. & Va. Christian Conference,' and 'The Raleigh Christian Conference.'

"3. That the dividing line of the Deep River Christian Conference begin at Fayetteville and follow Cape Fear and Yadkin Valley Railroad to Sanford, thence with the Seaboard Air Line Railroad to Haw River, thence with said river up to the Granite Cotton Mills, thence with the North Carolina Railroad to Lexington.

"4. That the dividing line of Raleigh Christian Conference run with the Deep River Christian Conference line from Fayetteville to the Granite Cotton Mills, thence with the N. C. Railroad to Durham, thence north with the Oxford and Clarksville Railroad to Keysville, Va.

"5. That the dividing line of the N. C. & Va. Christian Conference run parallel with the railroad from Lexington to Durham, thence with the railroad to Keysville, Va.

"6. That the ministers living within the bounds of said conferences, be members thereof.

"7. That your body memorialize the General Convention to conform and ratify this Union and this division of said conferences.

"P. T. KLAPP,
"W. G. CLEMENTS,
"R. T. KERNODLE,

"We, the committee from the Deep River Christian Conference, heartily endorse the paper offered by the committee from the N. C. & Va. Christian Conference.

"W. W. HAYWORTH,
"H. A. ALBRIGHT,
"J. W. PATTON."

The above was presented as a petition from the Conferences, and "on motion, after being discussed by Revs. J. L. Foster, P. H. Fleming, W. S. Long, J. W. Holt, J. W. Wellons, J. P. Barrett, W. T. Herndon, W. W. Hayworth, J. A. Mills, Esq., and Prof. E. L. Moffitt, the petition was granted. On motion, the Conference called 'Raleigh Conference' in paragraph 1, was given permission to change or choose its name."

The "Raleigh Conference" referred to was changed at the first session to the Eastern North Carolina Conference, and the Deep River Conference was later changed by vote of that body to the Western North Carolina Conference, and, as far as the records go, these boundaries still hold. J. O. A.

A PLEA FOR PURITY.

To true ministers of Christ and to other devoted Christian workers, a truly important and greatly needed good work is offered.

The World Wide Purity Legion, Tenaflly, N. J., was organized eleven years ago to disseminate widely inexpensive, helpful, well prepared purity teaching, graded to the different ages of both sexes in the homes. It has won the approval of thinking parents, eminent ministers, like Dr. S. Parks Cadman, J. O. Atkinson, Frank G. Coffin, G. R. Lockwood and others; also, of good teachers. Helpful purity booklets have been sent free to missionaries in different countries for distribution. The booklets are Biblical and scientific. If any sentence in a booklet is questioned, the author alone is to be held responsible.

Our purpose is to send forth only helpful teaching. The work is not for money profit, our officers give free service. All gifts are put into this greatly needed work. The publishing is done at very low cost.

The founder of this especial movement has been much interested in purity work for more than 50 years. He preached his first sermon on purity when pastor of his second church, 47 years ago.

Many pastors have been somewhat neglectful of this part of very necessary Bible teaching. The Apostle Paul could write, "I have not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God."

Too few ministers have preached the blessed Bible principles of purity. There is an unwarranted timidity that should be overcome. If rightly done, thinking people will highly commend.

The neglect of faithful teaching has resulted in shameful conditions and in the loss of many souls. God still says, "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge." Hence the very great need of right teaching publicly and by graded printed matter in the homes. This is a work of love for humanity in Jesus' name, therefore, the vast need of gifts to help publish widely the very helpful purity booklets in larger editions that the work may advance rapidly.

We have an honor roll book upon which we write the names of those who send gifts to help. In these times of stress a dollar or more will be credited. Though it may require a little self-denial you will be glad in the years to come to find your name on the honor roll. We already have on the list a number of gifts ranging from $1.00 to $25.00.

Pastors may have for small gifts they may gather from many members, purity booklets at half price to put into the homes. We have yet on hand booklets from 3c to 12c each. Before the close times one had given from time to time $400.00.

For 56 years as an ordained minister of the gospel, Albert Godley, by the help of Christ, has been faithful. He is superintendent of the World Wide Purity Legion. Though poor, Mr. Godley by self-denial, has given what he could without profit of a dollar to himself. He is favorably known to many ministers and others in different denominations.

He was Purity Evangelist of the New Jersey Christian Conference before the merger of the two bodies. He was a faithful pastor in different states for many years. These things are said merely to avoid any doubts that might arise where he is not known. He wishes to be thought of as a servant of Christ. That is sufficient.

Send gifts to the World Wide Purity Legion, Tenaflly, N. J.

SPECIAL OFFER ON TITHING LITERATURE.

The unusual partnership proposition described in pamphlet No. 38, "Winning Financial Freedom," is proving so popular and effective that we are again offering to furnish any minister, without charge, postage paid, a sufficient quantity of the pamphlets to supply one copy to each member of his official church boards.

If you so request in your order, we will add an "Offer No. 3" package which contains samples of the 40 pamphlets we publish—about 520 pages—for 60 cents.

Address the Layman Company, 730 Rush St., Chicago, Ill. When you write, please mention THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and also give your denomination.

CONVENTION NOTICE.

The Sixty-Fourth Annual Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Eastern Virginia Conference of the Congregational-Christian Churches will meet Tuesday, July 18, 1933, at the Holland Christian Church.

PRAYER.

Blest harbor of souls, the Church of our Lord! Her portals beckon, her shelter is secure. Some day, O righteous Author and Preserver, the Church shall possess the earth; if we cared enough, that day might be now. Great God, our Father, make people know that the Church's sustenance, its expansion, its triumph, is in human hands and that if truly we desire to build the Church, thou wilt build our bodies into fitting and able instruments for the holy service. In Jesus' name.—Amen. S.

OUR MESSAGE.

While many are disturbed over the Report of the Laymen's Committee and "Re-Thinking Missions," we should bear in mind that there have been other reports and findings, and these are of worth and merit also. Far more weighty and to the point than all the findings of the Laymen's Committee is the pronouncement of the World-Wide Missionary Conference which was held at Jerusalem two years ago. Get this announcement from that Conference:

"Our message is Jesus Christ—He is the revelation of what God is and of what man through Him may become. We cannot live without Christ and we cannot bear to think of men living without Him. Christ is our motive and Christ is our end. We must give nothing less, and we can give nothing more."

After all, this is the heart of the matter. What we are seeking to do through missions is to deliver to the world our message, which is Jesus the Christ. We are not seeking to give our methods and our measures. We are just seeking through missions to give our Christ to hearts that are hungry and souls that are perishing without Him.

STANLEY JONES IN CHINA.

In Foochow, where five years ago a rabid mob was burning mission buildings and expelling missionaries, great crowds listened eagerly to Dr. Stanley Jones. Canton was once the seat of the anti-Christian agitation. Doctor Jones had to repeat his addresses in order to reach the people who wanted to hear. In this hot-bed of radicalism, 1,000 signed cards, and came the next night for the special inquirers' meeting. Nowhere did students heckle the speaker; but they did want to know what he thought. For themselves it was either Communism or Christianity. At a Nanking Round Table Conference a leading Chinese said to Doctor Jones:

"I am not a Christian, but I would say that Christianity is now on trial in China. It's hour has come. If it can do anything to save the country now is the time for it to exert itself. If it can do anything to save the situation, we will all follow."

Three thousand cards were signed in Doctor Jones' meetings, and 12,000 copies of his books in Chinese were sold at cost.—Christian Advocate.

MISSIONARY PROGRAM.

WOMEN'S SOCIETIES.

By Oscar W. Low, in The American Missionary.

Meditation—The present trend in religion whether Protestant, Jewish or Catholic is to deepen the spiritual life of the people through the avenue of worship. When we sing the great hymns of the church, we are all conscious of some of the finest poems that the race has produced.

Protestantism is indebted to the Episcopal Church for leadership in liturgical forms of worship. Under men like Bishop George W. Doane, the Episcopal Church expanded both at home and abroad. At Burlington, N. J., Bishop Doane founded Saint Mary's Hall, a school for girls. The school was always near his heart. On a special occasion, and at the request of the girls, he wrote a hymn which at once quickened the missionary zeal of the Christian world. Let us join together in singing the Bishop's hymn:

Hymn—"Fling Out the Banner." (Waltham.)

Meditation—The international aspect of this hymn is the same as expressed by the Psalmist in the 100th Psalm. Here God is pictured to be the shepherd of all the earth. Let us repeat in unison this universal poem of the ages:

100th Psalm (in unison).

Meditation—In Isaiah 21:11 we read: "Watchman, what of the night? The morning cometh and also the night." This scripture was the setting of a well-known hymn, "Watchman, Tell Us of the Night." From that time to the present hour this question has been asked, and its latest answer is the report of the Laymen's Foreign Mission Inquiry. Viewed from all angles, the report should stimulate missionary interest among all people. In this philosophy of mutual sharing we learn that those whom we seek to help will also help us. Religion at its best is cooperative.

(The leader may enlarge upon this report if desired. Further information can be secured from recent issues of the Missionary Herald. See also "Re-Thinking Foreign Missions with the American Board," 15c.)

Solo—"Watchman, Tell Us of the Night" (Mason). (Sir John Bowring, an eminent English literary man.)

Prayer—Let us pray for the churches throughout the world, for their truth, unity and stability; that in all charity may flourish and truth may live. For our own church, that which is lacking in it may be supplied, and what is unsound may be corrected; for the sake of Jesus Christ, our Lord and Saviour.—Amen. (Bishop Andrews, 1555.)

Prayer Response—Refrain of "O, Zion Haste, Thy Mission High Fulfilling."

Illustration—In the July, 1932, issue of The Forum, there is an excellent article under the caption, "I'm Going Back to Church." One of the reasons the author gives for his return to the church is expressed in the following illustration: "A classmate of mine is a medical missionary to Africa. During his last furlough I asked him why he worked so hard to substitute his religion for a picturesque worship which seemed to me to be adequately adapted to the present state of the cultural advancement of the natives. An ardent student of anthropology, he looked rather amused at my question. 'When you have seen half of the people of a village given poison to prove whether or not they are witches, you won't mind disturbing their religion,' he said. In the second place, if the fate of the poor natives is to be any better than the American Indians, we must give them a proper training."

Hymn—"In Christ there is No East or West" (St. Peter), Reinagle.

(In John Oxenham's poem, "In Christ there is No East or West," we find all of the elements of the Christian's command to go into all the world and teach all nations.)

Closing Meditation—From all faiths comes our heritage of Christian fellowship. In this heritage there is no more significant bond than the prayer taught by the Lord to his disciples, and used ever since by his disciples the world over. In it we find all of the elements of worship and unity for which the churches are prayerfully striving. As we seek to build the common faith of all men, both at home and abroad, let us build on this universal prayer, which recognizes the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

The Lord's Prayer in unison.

I shall put down all thought that I am better than others, and shall remove prejudice against my neighbors from my heart.—Oxenham.

THORSBY, ALABAMA.

By SERENO E. NORTON.

Located at the geographical center of the State, and of Chilton County, on a plateau of rolling land about 800 feet above sea level, where water runs in all directions, is Thorsby Institute. It is also on the main line of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, midway between Birmingham and Montgomery, and on the Dixie Highway which traverses the State from Decatur to Mobile.

During the last decade of the 19th century, several square miles of cut-over pine land was bought from the owners at prices ranging from 50c to $2.50 per acre, by a corporation styled the Concordia Land and Improvement Company.

Here in a wilderness of young trees and stumps of old ones, a town was plotted on both sides of the railroad, and the dirt road connecting Birmingham and Montgomery and about 50 miles from each. Without waiting for a charter from the State, the promoters proceeded to clear the land, lay out streets and small farms, averaging about ten acres each. They had high ideals for the settlement they were making and having the "courage of their convictions" built for themselves commodious houses and outbuildings, and made them attractive with paint. The writer was told that at that time "there was not a top buggy or a painted house in Chilton County." They also built a pretentious hotel, and several stores.

These pioneers, and many who followed them, were hardy Norsemen from Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, and other Northern States. Many of them were of Scandinavian ancestry, either descendants of or kinfolks more recently from the "Fatherland," of those who so successfully peopled the great northwest. Quite a large proportion of them were of the Lutheran faith, and very strenuous in their denominational preference, but all ardent believers in the value of education.

Having spent four or five years in "putting up a good front," the town was incorporated in 1891, and named "Thorsby," which is the name of the Scandinavian god of war, in celebration of the fight they had for existence.

In the meantime, people had put up two very pretty church buildings, one of them occupied exclusively by Swedish-Lutherans and the other jointly by Norwegian and Danish Lutherans in separate organizations. They had also joined forces with an ambitious educator living in a nearby town, and built a large 11-room building to house what he called Thorsby Normal and Collegiate Institute, but which was in fact a primary school. The community furnished enough money, labor and material to get the building so far along that the promoter was able to borrow on mortgage enough to finish it. Then the young man made the mistake of having a law passed by the State legislature which would compel all children in the district to attend his school, as no funds would be available from the State to support any other school at Thorsby. This so incensed the people that they proceeded at once to erect a public school building large enough to accommodate the growing needs of the district, and also to put up the money to keep it going.

Having lost the interest and support of Thorsby citizens he was unable to raise money to meet his obligations and on mortgage sale the mortgagee foreclosed on the building.

During the passing years the L. & N. Railroad had been making strenuous efforts to colonize various places along their lines in Alabama, and were running Homeseekers Excursion trains weekly from many northern cities. The Concordia Land and Improvement Company, through advertising and agents, succeeded in attracting a good deal of attention and by the winter of 1903 had accumulated at Thorsby a population of nearly 800 and the hills about were adorned with attractive homes of substantial people. After 30 years of strenuous business life in Chicago, the writer was by circumstances beyond his control left footloose, and decided to seek a home where nature at least was kind. Having been visited at his home in Evanston, Ill., by an agent of the Concordia Land and Improvement Company, and having examined his pictures of Thorsby, he decided to have a look at it as it was. He found what suited him so well that he arranged to sell his Evanston holdings and buy one of the most attractive homes on a ten-acre tract in Thorsby, covered with fruit trees.

The population of Thorsby, at the time we arrived, was about as cosmopolitan as could be found in almost any large town in the north; by no means could all be counted as Swedes, although in the mind of the native Alabamian, they were either Swedes, or at best, all were foreigners who were in so many things different that they were not considered as desirable neighbors. One thing that helped the colony succeed was the fact that so many among them had been trained to do their own thinking, and when what they undertook to do did not succeed, they were able to take up something else for which they saw a need. As an illustration of this fact, one day we were introduced to a reporter from the Birmingham News, who said, "What's your business? I was sent here to write up Thorsby in about 2,000 words. Nearly every man I meet is engaged in a different business. I have more than filled the space allotted and am not half done yet."

Born of the necessity of working for the common good of all there has grown at Thorsby a spirit of cooperation that has disarmed sectarianism in religious affairs, and established a unity of purpose in educational matters that has disarmed suspicion and created a community spirit that impels coordination even in business affairs, so that for more than a quarter of a century Thorsby Fruit and Truck Growers' Association, one of the strongest farm organizations in the State, has maintained a continuous existence, for the benefit of upwards of 250 members, chiefly in growing strawberries, yielding in good years more than $100,000.

In addition to Lutherans and Baptists, a strong contingent of our people have for 27 years maintained the United Protestant Church of Thorsby, under Congregational auspices, which recognizes all Christians of whatever name or creed, therefore cannot criticize those of other denominations. This church when organized had 28 members from 9 denominations. They bought one of the Lutheran churches, most of whose members joined the new organization. Congregationalism has always stood for education, and has been the mother of many of the oldest and strongest institutions of higher learning scattered all over the United States, which never seek to proselyte students from families of other faiths. Because of the formation of this church at Thorsby, Thorsby Institute was established in 1906, and bought the afore-mentioned large school building, which was destroyed by fire in 1923 and quickly replaced by a modern high school building. It has become a credit to the whole community with widespread beneficial influence and the confidence of all who know anything about it. Its first principle was to meet a need for a first-class high school, where none existed, in an area covering at least one-third of the whole State, which at that time had no provision for high schools supported in whole or in part by State funds. Its governing policy has always been unsectarian. Its Board of Trustees and Faculty have always been men and women of high Christian character and broad ideas and ideals of Christian education, with whom, as the students came in contact, they were inspired to develop the best within them in body, mind, and spirit.

In 1910 the first student in a full classical course was graduated. Since that time 200 of the flower of the young people in Alabama and adjoining states have followed, and have been in great demand as teachers in public schools and other institutions of higher learning, after taking the requisite courses to fit them for such positions. Others are making good in business or domestic life.

It is a notable fact that Thorsby Institute has for years stood at the head of secondary schools published annually by the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, based on performance of graduates of high schools during their first year in Normal School or College.

The dean of a prominent college in Georgia wrote as follows: "Thorsby Institute students have been coming to us for many years, and invariably they are of a high standard in scholarship and leaders in all good college activities." A county official from our county seat recently said to the writer: "I wish you would tell me how you manage to get such high class teachers for Thorsby Institute." The answer was, "We either make them or get them where they are made."

It does not require a great stretch of the imagination to think that any community that has so many substantial attractions will draw to itself people who are interested in one way or another and add to the forces that make life worth living.

Deep wells and electric pumps provide an abundance of the purest and best of water, and a means which has been employed to furnish city accommodations in private homes, institutions and business places, adding much to the comfort of our homes and efficiency in business.

Another important feature of life in Thorsby is the social equality of its citizens and a spirit of cooperation in church and school as well as in business life. The Baptist, Lutheran and Congregational Churches each have a Sunday School, a Young People's Society, and a Ladies' Aid Society. There is also a Ladies' Guild of Thorsby which works for Thorsby Institute, a Parent-Teachers' Association for the public school, and the Order of Eastern Star for a fraternal society. Each month one of these organizations holds a social which is freely patronized by all denominations which bring together each week in social intercourse from 30 to 50 ladies of Thorsby, each contributing her mite to the work of the society holding the social.

The Congregational and Baptist Churches have union prayer meetings once a month, and mingle freely in worship when there is no regular service in one of them. Other denominations do not hesitate to join in worship with churches not of their faith. The young people are glad of an opportunity to hold union meetings.

Of course there have been leaders in all these movements, but when one realizes that without generous cooperation with Thorsby spirit on the part of the community nothing could have been accomplished, we are of the opinion that it will be more fair to all who have helped to mention no names, knowing that no one could do more than his best, and all who have had a part in the work have done it without thought of personal honor, but for the good of all, and have the "joy of accomplishment."

"Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." (Ps. 133:1.)

The world is at a crisis when Christians must either strike or fall. If we do not spread the gospel, we shall wither and die. Only by giving can we expand.—Anon.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

CONGRATULATION.

Hundreds, and perhaps thousands, of young people in Christian and Congregational Churches of the southeast are graduating from high school about now. They have finished the prescribed course in both grammar school and high school, and their conduct has been such as to justify their teachers in granting them diplomas. Congratulations are in order, and I am delighted to extend such to those whom I know, and to the larger group who know me only by name.

It is a real accomplishment to finish high school. A generation ago this would have been considered a fine education. Only a few select ones were able to go that far with their intellectual training. Today nearly everyone has the opportunity to graduate from high school, and large numbers make good their opportunities. This is especially true of church young people whose ideas are high.

The high school training gives one the rudiments of learning. Those who apply themselves before graduation day, come from their commencement with the fundamental facts concerning literature, history, mathematics, botany, zoology, chemistry, astronomy, and many other subjects. It is true that these fields are not covered in detail, but the broad outlines are sketched in the mental picture, which is held before the high school pupil. From now on these youngsters should be able to learn in any field which they select.

Congratulations and good wishes to all of you who have attained this greatly-to-be-desired goal of graduation from high school.

A TREASURE CHEST FOR YOUR HEART.

When my friends from high schools and colleges send me invitations to attend their graduations, I want to give them something. But I have to say with Peter, "Silver and gold have I none." Only of such as I have can I give. That's why I offer this little Treasure Chest of Ideas for Your Heart.

Out of all the experiences of high school and college you have gathered a few things which you will treasure throughout the years. Most of the facts on which you have passed examination you will forget. But certain things will stay with you through the years and will mean more when they are old. Among these souvenirs may I hope that you will place the gift which I now offer?

The first thing which I want you to put into this treasure chest is faith—you will need it. You will need faith in yourself. You have weaknesses which will be hard to overcome. You may often fail. But you must trust yourself. You need to believe that you can do things that seem to be impossible. There is a certain cock-sureness which is the characteristic of a fool. This you do not need, but you must trust yourself. And you must trust people. Many of them will disappoint you. But you must live with them, and in order to be happy you must trust them. And they are worthy of your confidence. There is something so divinely good in people that they are worthy of trust.

And you must trust in God, the infinite, loving, and eternal God who gives life and all the opportunities that are ours. Faith in God is the one essential to happy living. Everything may seem to go wrong, but when you know that God is near there comes a sublime joy that will not pass away. When you trust in him, all the powers of goodness are on your side.

The second article to place in the treasure chest is hope. Oh, how you will need it! This is not a very promising world into which you are going. There will be times when it will not seem possible for you to realize your dreams. But keep your hope. Things do happen that seem impossible.

The third treasure is love. There is much of hatred, envy, malice, suspicion, and unlovely things in this world. Love is what it needs. St. Paul said many fine things about love, and all that he said is true. Study it as recorded in I. Cor. 13, from which the text comes. Fortunate are those of you who find someone who will understand the craving of your heart for love and will give true love in return through life. But if this is not your portion, there is still much chance for love to develop your own heart experience. You can plant love in many unlovely places, and in doing so develop into the likeness of God.

Now please take these three items which are to be stored in the treasure chest and wrap each separately in pure white tissue paper and bind them with ribbon.

Faith should be tied with a blood-red ribbon. Men of faith have not traveled in a Rolls-Royce over roads made smooth for them. Theirs has been the mountain path spotted with their own blood. Read of them in Hebrews 11.

Green is the color for hope. So long as a thing is green it grows, but when the green is gone death sets in. Your hope must grow through the years.

Only blue will do for love. It must be true. There are little packets of letters in old trunks—letters tied with blue. And in those homes is love which has ever been true.

The articles are ready to place in the treasure chest. Lay them each in its place and close the lid. Now let's overlay the chest with golden memories and bedeck it with forget-me-nots and place it in the secret chamber of the heart where only the All-Seeing Eye of God will behold it.

There is no key. You can raise the lid and use the contents when you will.

The following items are suggested for the leader in making advance preparation:

1. Appoint some one to study and report on the educational qualifications of the most prominent leaders of your community.

2. Interview a few educated leaders and ascertain their opinion regarding the uses they have made of their education in living, and in making a living.

3. Make a study of the members of your group and report their purposes in trying to get an education. Such a report should be of an impersonal character so there may be no chance for any one to be offended.

4. Consult with educators such as teachers, principals, superintendents, professors, deans, and college presidents and discover what they think is the value of education.

5. Discuss with members of your high school and college graduation classes their plans for the future. Give special attention to a discovery of the value they feel their education will have for them.

6. Consult with religious leaders and ascertain if they feel that one is obligated as a Christian to secure the best education possible.

Many statesmen and technologists are in agreement about the procedure in working out your present difficulty. They tell us we have the tools and resources to cure our ills. What we lack is an intelligent citizenship which will be able to support statesmanlike programs at the polls. If the rising generation is to be able to serve better than the one now in power, it must be more particular about its education. The leadership of the future must be equipped to meet the social problems and also have a burning desire to use this equipment in the interest of society.

The church is rapidly becoming an institution that is concerned with the total needs of the community. Trained workers of all types are needed. You can use your education by turning it to the educational work of the church.

All can use their education to keep aware of every issue and problem that faces society. Education should give us poise in a crisis and guarantee us intelligent deliberation and action.

You must live each day at your best—
The work of the world is done by few;
God asks that part be done by you.
Say oft of the years as they pass from sight:
This is life with its golden store;
I shall have it once, but it comes no more!
Have a purpose, and do with your utmost might:
You will finish your work on the other side,
When you wake in his likeness, satisfied.

GOING TO COLLEGE IN HARD TIMES.

Many are finishing high school and who feel the urge for college training are today confronted with the problem of hard times. They can not see the way clear to enter college with the hope of graduating. Older people discourage them with the idea that money is too scarce to invest in college education.

Do not be afraid of their talk. There was no money on the little hills of Carolina where I lived, when the time came for me to go to college. The time had come for me, and I had to go then or not at all. I went. And after college I went to the University for three years. It was still hard times, and money was scarce.

The door of opportunity swings wide for you high school graduates today. Colleges have made provisions for you, and are eager to give you the best of training. If you have the will, the chances are that you can make the grade, but unless you are willing to work there is no reason for you being educated. If you are willing to work you can make your way through.

Sunday School Lesson

JESUS FACES BETRAYAL AND DENIAL.

LESSON X—JUNE 4, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "He was despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief."—Isa. 53:3.

LESSON TEXT: Mark 14:17-31.

Those who have had their high hopes dashed, and who have seen their pleasure on what should have been happy occasions spoiled, should read this story. If ever a man had a right to expect an occasion to be free from the unpleasant, it was Jesus as he looked forward to the Passover Supper with his disciples. To be sure there was an undercurrent of sorrow and sadness about it, for he knew that it was the last time that he would eat that historic and significant feast with his disciples on earth. But as Luke tells us, he had looked forward with great anticipation and longing to this occasion, and he entered upon it in high hopes. From the human standpoint, it was a dismal failure, for the twelve became involved in a heated discussion as to who should be considered the greatest, and one of the twelve actually left the room to betray him. As one reads the story, however, one gets the impression that there was no bitterness, no complaint, no self-pity on the part of the Master. He had those inner resources that made him above the annoyances and disappointments of any occasion, however apparently dismal. We need more of the Master's spirit of composure when things go wrong, more of his ability to take life as it comes without whining or whimpering. It is because we have not his spirit in full measure that we so easily get out of sorts.

Is It I?

The disciples had their limitations but to their eternal credit be it said that when the Master said, "One of you shall betray me," each of them thought in terms of himself and asked if it could be possible that he might be the one to do this unspeakable thing. John did not say, "I'll bet it is Simon Peter," and Andrew did not say, "I'll bet it is Matthew." In that solemn moment each of the disciples was brought face to face with his own possibilities of evil. "Judge not, that ye be not judged." When we sit in judgment on what others have done, let us be sure that we would not have done the same thing under the circumstances.

It Is One of the Twelve.

The idea of such a thing! One of the twelve, the inner circle of the Master's friends, those who had enjoyed the privilege of being associated with him, and of sharing his inspiration, and of receiving the blessings which he had bestowed upon them—one of these was to betray him! Impossible! But it was possible. Then as now, those at whose hands the Master suffers most are his own disciples. Christ has little to fear from his enemies. Those who do him the most harm are his friends and disciples.

He Took Bread.

When the great ones of the earth wanted to establish a memorial they built great pyramids, or massive monuments, or beautiful buildings. When Jesus wanted to establish a memorial "He took bread" and blessed it, and brake it and gave to his disciples. And he took the cup, and gave it to them. He would invest the symbols of ordinary life with a new meaning and with a new power. How little they understood what he was doing! But today, after nineteen centuries, men of all colors, of all creeds, of all classes, partake of the bread and of the cup "in remembrance of Him," and hearts are brave again and lives are strong. The Master's memorial is written in flesh and blood, in the hearts and lives of those who name his name and manifest his spirit. And he is glorified best when in the humble, every day tasks and experiences of life, we reproduce his character and express his spirit.

Until I Drink it New With You in the Kingdom of God.

The Master knew that the centuries, and not the hours had the final say. He knew that after what the disciples thought was his tragedy, there would come his triumph. And even as he told them that the bread and the wine symbolized his body and his blood, he looked forward to the day when his kingdom should come. He knew, although he could not have made them understand, that he would triumph.

And Then They Sang an Hymn.

We do not know what they sang—we wish we did know. But then as now, men found in music and song that which put the heart into them, and sent them forth to dare and to die. Governments have not been slow to see the power of music, for bands are a part of military organizations. Nor has the church overlooked this great aid to the spiritual life. Good music, appropriate music, has tremendous spiritual appeal and power.

Then, of course, there is the lesson here of the right spirit in which to go to the place of sacrifice. The Master started his journey to the Cross with a song on his lips and in his heart.

After that I Am Risen.

He told them things before they came to pass that they might know that he was what he claimed to be. And he made good on every promise. He did meet them in Galilee. He keeps his engagements. We can trust him to the limit, and he will never let us down.

Likewise Also Said They All.

Peter vehemently asserted that he would not deny Jesus. He was too confident, too self-sufficient. He felt too sure of himself. And his self-confidence was the source of his downfall, even as it is the cause of our downfall. We must not forget, however, that the other disciples also said that they would not deny their Master. But later in the night "they all forsook him and fled." Let every man that thinketh that he standeth, take heed lest he fall.

FACING THE RISING SUN.

Rows of soldiers, khaki clad,
 Pass with measured tread
 Side by side, and grimly smile
 As shells burst overhead.

Suits fitting with never a wrinkle,
 Light flashing from each gleaming gun,
 They march toward battle together,
 Facing the rising sun.

Rows of crosses mark the place
 Where sleep those honored dead;
 Side by side are marble slabs,
 And doves sing overhead.

Stones telling a story of victory,
 Light flashing from each gleaming one,
 They shine in the dew of the morning
 Facing the rising sun.

Rows of soldiers, khaki clad,
 Rest in their earthly bed;
 Side by side, waiting for
 An angel's call overhead.

Then a heavenly bugle will wake them,
 A kind voice will say, "well done;"
 And they will stand at "attention."
 Facing the rising sun.

"I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord."—Psalm 116:13.

"The opening of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."—Psalm 119:130.

MONDAY.

PRAYING.

"He went out into a mountain to pray; and he continued all night in prayer."—Luke 6:12.

We have read from the writings of Brash the following:

"Lately I have asked specially in prayer, with a large faith in God's goodness, for one or two things, but the prayer has brought no sign of an answer. This has not in the least affected my confidence in God, but it has led me to ask myself whether that sort of prayer is right, or whether the best way is just to tell out to God your difficulty or trouble, and then rest in the confidence that in his own way and his own time the best will come to pass. Whatever happens, time will roll on, bringing me—and, I trust, my loved ones—safe home, and that should be enough."

Oft when of God we ask
For fuller, happier life,
He sets us some new task
Involving care and strife.
Is this the boon for which we sought?
Has prayer new trouble on us brought?
This is indeed the boon,
Though strange to us it seems;
We pierce the rock, and soon
The blessing on us streams;
For when we are the most athirst,
Then the clear waters on us burst.

Anon.

Prayer—Dear Father, whether in the act of contrition or in still meditation, may our souls touch thine, and thy will be done in us.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

REASSURING FAITH.

"He must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet."—I. Cor. 15:25.

Let us think of the fruits that have followed from a faith in Christ, of the difference between real Christians, between Christian nations and non-Christian nations, of the better social conditions where Christ has been preached; let us remember that all that is best in our own country is due to the preaching of Christian missionaries who preached to our half-savage ancestors; and we begin to see that as the springtime sun warms and fructifies the earth, so Christ has warmed the hearts of men to higher divine forces, to truer life, and to more happiness.

Today Christian hope is the hope of Christ; his glory is carried to our common duties, and his spirit bears our crosses. Many generations have passed, and many will pass yet, yea, it may take thousands of years to ripen God's purposes in mankind, still

"Jesus shall reign where'er the sun
Doth his successive journeys run.

Prayer—Our Father, we dedicate our lives this day to make Christ first in our thoughts, in our words and in our deeds, that all may be to the glory of that which is good, and God. Help us Lord, for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

FORGIVENESS.

"And he said unto the woman, thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace."—Luke 7:50.

There was something good still in this woman and out of that goodness she saw a good God, and believed in her restoration which would sweep away every sense of her wrongs. As she looked at Jesus her heart dissolved in penitence, and she was born again.

Do you blame this woman for intruding at the dinner table later and anointing the Saviour's feet when the tears of her thankfulness were so copious that they served to wash those feet? It is a moving picture when she goes farther than she had intended and kisses those feet as if to beg pardon for weeping and for bestowing her best upon him. And Jesus does not withdraw from such a kiss.

Softer than silent penitential tears,
Sweeter than nard upon his sacred feet,
Fell his dear pity on her shame and fears,
Calming the heart that once so wildly beat,
Oh, tender Saviour, how thy heart was moved
Because so very, very much she loved.

Anon.

Prayer—Father, forbid that we thy children should be too far removed from the sin-sick soul on earth. If there are those to whom we may take thy love and salvation, send us. We offer ourselves to thee.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

BLAZINGS AND BROODINGS.

"Not easily provoked. Thinketh no evil."—I. Cor. 13:5.

This text recognizes two of the most destructive perversions of man: The blazings of anger, and the sullen nursings of injuries and slights of others. Love doesn't do that.

The blazing of anger is uncontrolled power let loose.

Broodings over wrongs, real or imaginary, are described as being like a fire that runs underground until the foundation is consumed and ultimate collapse takes place.

Love does not work either way. Love saves us from either. It will help us to blaze in noble indignation like Jesus cleansing the temple. By such exercise one is furnished with the finest and noblest capacities. It will direct our broodings into meditations on noble themes and holy questions which directs the powers of life to the most valuable accomplishments.

Prayer—Dear Lord, grant unto us thy children the holy spirit, endow our minds, direct our spirits, control our impulses and emotions to thine own ends. We dedicate our impulses and emotions to thee this day. In his name.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE TRIUMPHANT LIFE.

"Thanks be unto God, which always causeth us to triumph in Christ."—II. Cor. 2:14.

Paul is a queer one to say these words. There were but few triumphs in his life. His was a life of persecution, shipwreck, adrift at sea, robbed and beaten, labor and hardship, starvation, cold and ill-clad, and nine years (in all) in jail.

But what did he achieve? First, Christ was in him, an energy that flowed from the inexhaustible spring of God. His persecutions were accounted as fellowship in suffering with his Master, his cell in jail an opportunity to save the jailor, and also for writing the inspired Word of God.

The same is for us, and no misfortune or condition can be so severe as to deprive us of the same sort of triumph in Christ. "He shall see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied." There are triumphant defeats, therefore no defeats. "Man does not live by bread alone."

Prayer—Our Father, we come to thee asking that thou wilt give unto us new discoveries in thee all along the way.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

WHEN CATS LOVE RATS.

"Ephraim shall not vex Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim."—Read Isaiah 11:11-16.

A Chinese psychologist has brought up fifty-nine kittens especially to watch their relations with rats. He has found that if the kittens are raised with rats, they will play with them but never kill them. If they are raised where there are no rats, less than half of them will kill rats without being taught. But if they are raised with rat-killing mothers, nearly all of them begin to kill rats before they are four years old.

There is certainly a moral in this for human beings. If we want to put an end to war, accustom the nations of the earth to one another. If we want to live at peace with our fellows, we must draw close to them and enter into their lives. And the earlier we begin to do this, the better.

The world is full of inherited antagonisms which are no more natural antipathies than the enmity of cats and rats. All hostility is based upon misunderstandings, separations, withdrawals and schisms. If you hate any one, that is the very person with whom you should become better acquainted, for you cannot afford to hate any one.

Prayer—O, our Saviour, who when we were yet enemies to thee didst die for us, teach us thy way of love. Make us friends with all men because we are friends of thee and have caught thy blessed spirit of peace. —Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

"STOP HIM."

"Who have whet their tongue like a sword, and have aimed their arrows, even bitter words."—Read Psalm 64:1-10.

In a suburb of Chicago, a shocking murder was committed, after which the streets were patrolled at night by special watchmen. One evening two of these watchmen saw an automobile drawing away from the sidewalk just as a woman ran across the lawn shouting "Stop him! Stop him!" They did stop the driver of the car, shooting him dead, only to learn later that the woman was his wife and he was leaving because they had quarreled at a party in his home.

There is need of guarding against murderers, but there is far greater need of keeping a watch against the arrows of bitter and hasty speech. These are the beginnings of murder. Our Lord said that they are the equivalent of murder. Patrol the streets of your soul.

Prayer—Without thee we can not do it. O, thou who hast given us the wonderful faculty of speech. Teach us to master thy divine gift. In the name of him who spake as never man spake.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

We cannot spread the gospel if we do not live it. One said to two Japanese boys, "Well, now that you are in America you will attend the Jesus-religion meetings!" "Oh," they said, "there is no Jesus religion in this country."—Anon.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

WHAT I EXPECT OF MY CHURCH.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"And in none other is there salvation."— Acts 4:12.

I expect at least two things of that "none other" institution of which Christ Jesus is the head. I expect it to show me my real self, and I expect it to show me my real Saviour. I need a church that will do that, and do it faithfully. It will be of very little help to me if it constantly fills me with doubt, or fails to make things clear to me. Whatever I trust with all my future, both here and hereafter, must be rigidly fair with me. To hold my respect it must do nothing less. My church claims all for itself. It must offer infinite things. It dares not trifle with my soul. I expect it to make good its claims.

When I say my church I mean the church which Jesus established through his followers and which he upholds with his spirit. I do not narrow myself to some special creed, or name, or sect. I am a student of the Scriptures and I speak of the church indicated there. The church of which I speak is as broad as the saving grace of God, and eternal as his love. By faith I am a member in that church and of that church. I have anchored my soul and my hope in it, and for it and to it I give my all. May God help me more and more to give myself to it.

I. I expect it to show me my real self. I do not expect it to excuse me of my sins without meeting the conditions of pardon. It must not tell me I am all right when I am wrong. It must not allow me to lose my soul by compromising with evil against which it flatfootedly stands. I do not want it to pamper me, nor pet me. I do not want it to make me feel I deserve a little better than others. When I violate the laws of God and life I wish it to cry out to me to stop, hold, think, hesitate. I wish it to assure me and reassure me that my sins will be found out. My friends will pat me on the back for a while and tell me I am good. My church can pat me on the back if it wishes, but it must tell me the truth about myself. I want it to make me to know mine end, how frail I of myself am. Somebody that wants to seem odd, or wise, or different, will perhaps tell me that I am all right. Some church which has lost its soul and sold its pulpit to vanity may tell me that I have nothing to fear or dread. But the newspapers keep telling me the facts about myself and my kind. They run red with blood, strife, robbery, sin. They are a sort of mirror of the day before. When I read of murder, bank robbery, injustice, and evil I need not go ask my church to tell me that it was fiction and that the newspapers print anything but the truth. I do not expect my church to try to make me believe a lie, and live a life of hypocrisy.

I turn to history. It says I am sinful and that my folks have been sinners and transgressors. History tells about princes and kings and the well bred and the high born, but it does not say they were perfect. In fact, I cannot find that it pictures them much more perfect than their subjects. Too, I read in history of free governments, and find tyranny, turmoil, bribery, cheating, fraud, evil there. History is a record, a mirror of yester-years. I do not want my church to tell me that I am not a part of a sinning, stumbling, dying, starving world. History and the newspapers have taught me better.

I turn to experience and observation. I am called as a minister of God into broken homes, blighted lives, bleeding hearts. I feel and know that life is a struggle and beset with sin and sinning and sinners all along the line. I do not want my church to hand me a soft sop on God's Sabbath Day, and tell me that my folks and I are all right. I do not thank it for its fabrication. I know how easy it is to say a hot word, to think an evil thought, to do an ugly thing. I do not want my church to try to please me today, and unwittingly lose me forever. I love my church and I wish it to hold my respect, for I commit all that's dear to me to it. I will not thank it to double-cross me with any falsehoods. It may be that standing at its bar I shall say: "Why call ye me good, there is none good but God;" and that kneeling at its altar I shall cry out, "Lord, have mercy upon me a sinner." At least I know that if standing before the judgment bar of God I should then hear his condemnation, I should never thank a compromising church, nor a palliating pulpit. I wish my church to show me very plainly now and before it is too late in life that my self-righteousness is filthy rags. May my church ever cry out to me: "We have all sinned and come short of his glory." May it ever keep before me the motto: "Be sure your sins will find you out." May it tell me in the most timely manner and plainest language that "the wages of sin is death." Oh, may my church not trifle with me in sacred things.

II. And on the other hand I want my church to show me how valuable my life is in the sight of God and good men. I want it to tell me the truth about its length—eternal. I want it to tell me the truth about its possibilities—infinite. I want it to tell me the truth about its goal—"sons of God," and like Jesus. When I am tempted to sin for greed or gain I want my church to keep the words of the Lord Jesus ever before me: "For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" When I am tempted to be discouraged, or little, or low, I want my church to hold a standard before me as high as heaven itself: "What is man that thou art mindful of him, or the son of man that thou visitest him? Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels (God), and hast crowned him with glory and honor." I wish the church to show me constantly the immeasurable distance between the insects and my beloved, sainted mother; or between the snail on my lawn and the president of the United States. I expect my church to point out to my conscience that it is a far cry between the president of the United States, or my mother; and some human viper preying upon innocent, lovely folks. Lovely essays on culture are pretty and useful in their places; sweet words of oil and wine have their places; but I wish my church to cry out to my hungry, eternal soul and tell me who I am, and where I am. I like to listen to Amos 'n Andy over the radio, or play a game with friends on a holiday; but I wish my church to stand guard over my eternal redemption and not trifle with me, nor with my precious children.

III. I wish my church to show me a real Saviour. Having been unafraid to teach me that I have an eternal soul, with infinite possibilities in this life and in the life to come, and that I am sin-imprisoned and heart-hungry, I wish my church to show me salvation. It may lose time and simply trifle with me if it tells me to become aesthetic and love beautiful paintings, pretty sculpture, and entrancing music, unless it shows me how futile all these are without God. The prodigal son saw the art, heard the great music of his day, say the beautiful paintings and ate in gardens surrounded by beautiful statuary, but his heart was hungry for home and his father's God. As a young man, I have read the works of the great philosophers, studied the teachings of scientists, and learned to unravel the binominal theorem, and to understand the Pythagorean principles in mathematics, but one half hour with a praying saint of God has opened windows without which the other things would have been but vanity of vanities! For three years in college I special- (Continued on page 14.)

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

The last ten days have been busy days on the Orphanage farm. The farmer and his farm boys have been working early and late. The next two weeks will be equally as busy. We had 38 acres in clover, and the weather has been fine for curing hay. We all put in a good day last Saturday, making hay while the sun was shining bright and hot, too.

Now, harvest is here, with 40 acres of oats and 18 acres of wheat to harvest, corn to work, more planting to do and many other things to do, so you see this is not a place where idleness abounds, but activities go on each day and every day.

The girls have their work to do as well as the boys. While they are here we try to teach them how to work and educate their hands as well as their heads and hearts. We had four girls to graduate in high school this year. We succeeded in getting three of them nice jobs in a manufacturing plant and they were capable of taking the jobs and going right along with their work as if they had been experienced in the work before. They are well pleased with their jobs and are happy.

We succeeded in getting them a home with a most excellent lady who lives near their work, and who will be a real mother to them. On Saturday, June 3rd, they will draw their first pay checks. We would like to be present and see the smiles that will play on their faces as they realize that they earned it with their own hands—and it is theirs.

The writer remembers the first 50 cents he earned and how happy he was to get it. He also remembers it was a June day and the sun was shining hot, but we stuck to the job and earned 50 cents for the day's work. We will refrain from telling you, however, how many years ago that was, because we still lack to be in our youth.

Don't forget the Orphanage in its work for the fatherless.

ized in geology, and it became a wonderful study to me; but without the blessed old meeting house where a mother's prayer led me to repentance, my course would have been but a meaningless knowledge of rocks and the theories of earth formation. I do not wish my church to despise knowledge, but I wish it to know and fear God, and to know and present the Saviour of life, and the Pardoner of sins! I expect it to lead me to a rock that is higher than I.

I expect it to preach a religion which strikes at the human heart, knowing that out of it are the issues of life, and to preach a Saviour of men who can change a heart of midnight to one of beautiful, sun-bright morning. If it talks to me about a Jesus who was a sort of silly sentimentalist, then I am lost; if it tells me about one who thought he was God, but was only deluded, being only a good man for his day and a marvelous teacher, I am inclined to think he was a fool, and an impostor. If my church will show me a Christ sent of God from God to reveal God in his own person and life, having power over my own life to forgive it, re-make it, inspire it, save it, I am ready to enter that church with all I have and ever expect to be.

Good will is a habit created and developed like every other habit—by practice.

OBITUARIES

BROWN.

G. C. Brown was born October 30, 1858, and died April 12, 1933. He was a faithful member of Antioch Christian Church for many years. His death was a shock to his children and friends, but not to himself. He was watching and waiting for the time, and since the death of his wife, he seemed anxious for the time to come.

"Aunt Mary," as his wife was familiarly known, preceded him to the spirit world some two years ago. They were the parents of three children, two girls and one boy, all living. They leave 17 grandchildren, two great-grandchildren, and many relatives and friends to mourn their going. But God is able to comfort and help in this time of sorrow.

"They came up through great tribulation," but they washed their robes in the blood of the Lamb. They are now at home, awaiting loved ones to come.

Funeral at Antioch, conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. J. D. Dollar.

God bless the bereaved.

G. D. HUNT.

HUEY.

Mrs. Sallie Cooper Huey, of Wedowee, Ala., departed this life Monday, February 6, 1933. Our heavenly Father saw best to take this wife and mother from us. She was 69 years old. She gave herself to God in early life, and was a faithful Christian until death. She was a charter member of Noou Day Christian Church. She was an exceptionally good, kind and patient wife, mother and neighbor.

Her health had been poor for several years, but she never complained. She bore her trouble with great patience.

She was the mother of 14 children, 6 of whom died in infancy. Eight, with their aged father, are left to mourn their great loss.

Although we can't help but grieve for her, we feel that our loss is her gain. Therefore, be it resolved:

That we bow in humble submission to the will of our heavenly Father, who we know makes no mistakes. We, as a church, resolve that we will emulate her noble Christian life.

MRS. ARTHUR SIKES,
MRS. SAM CARPENTER, Committee

WEBB.

In the evening of life, the shadows lengthening toward the east, our childhood playmate and life-long friend, Mary Jane Parks Webb, laid down the toils and cares of earth and gently passed to that rest that remaineth to the people of God.

She was the fourth of the five daughters of G. W. and Deborah Parks, and first saw the light of day in Randolph County, N. C., March 9, 1854. While she was a small child, the family removed to Rockingham County, some distance south of Wentworth. In different parts of this community she since resided.

In early girlhood she accepted Christ as her Saviour, and united with Parks' Stand Class of the Mt. Bethel Christian Church. After Howard Chapel was built in this vicinity, she with the class became one of the first members. To the Christian faith she has ever faithfully adhered, regularly attending services at the Chapel in so far as her power lay, especially during her last years, until her passing, Tuesday, March 12, 1933.

Early in 1886 she was married to William Webb, a young farmer of her community. To him she was a dutiful wife, helpmeet and homemaker, until their sons and one daughter, after losing one daughter in childhood, had grown up and made homes of their own. A few years ago, her husband was claimed by the grim reaper. Since that time she has made her home with her youngest son, William.

She left three sons, George David, John Alvis, William, and one daughter, Mrs. Deborah Flyun, with a number of grandchildren to mourn her going.

A few hours before her passing, a friend, on leaving her bedside, asked her, "Now, if the call comes, are you ready?" "Yes, yes," she replied, "ready to go," and her last words, as she raised her hands and clasped them were, "Glory to God!" She spoke no more, but rapidly sank into that long slumber that knows no awakening; joyfully exchanging an earthly cross for a "Crown of righteousness pure and spotless that fadeth not away." She will be sorely missed by friends in the community, yet the vacant seat in her beloved Howard Chapel is to all most appealing. She rests beside her husband and little girl in the churchyard there to await the summons of her Lord to glorious resurrection.

When we think on a passing like this, we are constrained to pray, "Lord let me die the death of the righteous, and let my end be like theirs."

near Buffalo Springs, on Sunday afternoon, April 9th, conducted by the writer. The sympathy of the entire community is with the aged mother, husband and children. An immense crowd was present, and many flowers covered her grace. Many prepared by the Saviour. A heart was sad and weeping.

A New Era in Agriculture.—

The Progressive Farmer tells us that "maybe it isn't the most important law in 6,000 years. But for the average farmer at least it changes some of the ways" they have been doing things. Instead of "independence," the new Farm Relief Law proposes "interdependence," and our contemporary believes "it will pay."

Revised Hymn Book Omits Unsingable Songs.—

The Presbyterian Church in the United States will sing from a new hymn book next year, according to the Associated Press, but this fact need not disturb church-goers who like the old favorites. In presenting the new hymnal which was formally accepted at the denomination's general assembly meeting at Columbus, O., on May 27th, leaders pointed out that "all the 'singable' old songs had been retained." There are for example, "Rock of Ages," Nearer My God to Thee," and "Jesus, Saviour, Pilot Me," all old favorites. But many of those hymns which congregations never seemed quite able to get together on—described as "unsingable" songs—have been omitted. When the old official church hymnal was introduced in 1911 it contained 758 hymns. The new volume contains 513.

Elon College Holds Commencement.—

The Commencement at Elon College was a week later than usual this year. Beginning on Friday, June 2nd, with the Junior Class program, the order of events was as follows: Saturday evening, a presentation by the Playmakers of Elon, entitled "Tangled Tales," and tangled it was, indeed. The students taking part showed rare ability. On Sunday morning, the Baccalaureate Sermon was delivered by Rev. Harry K. Eversull, of Cincinnati, Ohio. In the late afternoon, a most enjoyable students' recital was given by Miss Elizabeth Barney and Mr. Fletcher Moore. The Baccalaureate Address was given that evening by Dr. Smith. Monday was taken up with the Class Day Exercises, exhibits, and a musical program under the direction of Prof. Dwight Steere. Tuesday was Alumni Day, and the speaker of the morning was Hon. John C. B. Ehringhaus, Governor of North Carolina, who arose from a sick bed that he might come to Elon for the address. The Alumni Banquet was well attended, and following it, Prof. Alonzo C. Hall, of the Class of '10, delivered the Alumni Address. On Wednesday, the Regular Commencement exercises were held, the Bachelor of Arts degree being conferred on a class of forty-five members. The honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon Revs. Harry K. Eversull, of Cincinnati, Ohio, Stanley C. Harrell, of Durham, N. C., and John L. Lobingier, of Boston, Mass. A detailed account of the Commencement proceedings will appear later.

Why Vote Against Repeal?—

In asking "Why vote against repeal?" Ellwood McLotz, of Mendinhal, Pa., enumerates the following very logical reasons for so voting: "Because the Eighteenth Amendment closed every saloon in our country, which we have acknowledged as a great achievement. And it is the only power that can and will keep them closed.. Because the Eighteenth Amendment is the only solution of the liquor problem, as it prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage or drinking purposes, and thereby eliminating drunkenness. Yet, under its provisions, alcohol may be used for all honest and legitimate purposes. Because the 18th Amendment was written into our Constitution to save our young people and all others from becoming drunkards. And it will accomplish its purposes through our cooperation and support, for no law can do that which it is designed to do without our support. Because if we take the Eighteenth Amendment out of the Constitution we will open up the flood gates of intoxication, sin and crime that follow in the wake of strong drink." In conclusion, Mr. McLotz exhorts: "We will vote against repeal because we believe that intoxicating liquors should not be used to raise money. If so, its use and sale will be encouraged, thereby lowering our standard of living. Turn not back, but go forward to greater and nobler things."

A New Evangelicalism in Germany.—

Reports in the daily press coming out of Germany indicate that very marked changes are taking place in the Church as well as in the State. A new and much better Protestantism may arise out of the old, as the result of the action of the German Evangelical Committee, the highest executive committee of Protestant churches. The aim is to convert the twenty-nine Protestant state churches into one body. The two chief ideas involved appear to be the preservation of the societies against too much state control and to "take the wind out of the National Socialist German Christian movement by instituting a reform aimed at relating the Church more intimately with daily life, but without making it subservient to political leadership." Nothing is more important to pure and effective church life than keeping it free from the exploitation of political power. That secularizes the Church and makes it a hindrance instead of a help. Nothing but a spiritual church will do in the work of saving the people in the gospel sense. If the idea of the evangelistic inheres in the purposes of this move in Germany, and if that is carried out it will soon make a new land out of the German State. What the whole world needs today more than anything else is to be completely evangelized with the gospel of Jesus Christ. State Churches cannot accomplish this because they are not free; neither can sectarian Churches because they do not preach a complete gospel with the Spirit of Christ. But a real evangelical Church is able and it is, therefore, the hope of the world. The more evangelism of the right kind the better. That is indeed the only hope of making the world what all men wish for. A few good gospel meetings are better than a thousand political campaigns.—Christian Evangelist.

'37 or '33?—

In times like these through which we have been passing recently, the morale of even the greatest is at times brought low. We quote a most eminent lawyer: "We find ourselves in the midst of a serious financial and industrial crisis. It just seems incceivable that conditions can ever right themselves enough to have prosperous times in the country again. Trade and industry throughout the land are disorganized. Banks by the hundreds have failed. Securities have fallen to one-half or even one-quarter of their former value. The problem of unemployment has become general and in all large cities special committees have been organized to provide food and clothing for the poor and unemployed. In addition to this effort, some cities have caused relief work to be instituted by public bodies. Widespread want and distress have lead to labor strikes. The lessening demand for wheat exported to Europe has caused American wheat to sell in the West for less than 50 cents a bushel. Extensive competition, lowering prices and unwise speculation have brought about a crisis abounding in rumor and reports, most of which have no foundation and do great damage. The renewing of confidence and the allaying of violent fear in the minds of the people which will allow for active buying rather than money hoarding, must precede business recovery." The eminent lawyer is Daniel Webster. The time in which he is speaking is not 1933 but 1837, and in spite of Mr. Webster's forebodings the country did recover. Today the wheels of progress are again beginning to turn, we hear of factories being run 24 hours a day, and confidence is beginning to revive. The Hon. J. C. B. Ehringhaus, Governor of North Carolina, in addressing an audience at Elon College this week, reminded them that three things were essential to carry us back to times of prosperity. They were: work, ideas, and ideals—work, not for self aggrandizement, but that the world may be a better place for all mankind, ideas that when carried out will make for better living, and ideals that will lift mankind to a higher and more noble plane—these three are necessary to the individual, the State and the nation.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Dr. M. J. W. White changes his work and address in the Philippine Islands, going from Cagayan, Misamis, P. I., to Davao, Davao, P. I., where Dr. White becomes supervisor of the hospital releasing therefrom the physician in charge to come home on furlough.

Mrs. Milo J. Sweet, of Salisbury, N. C., who attended the national meeting of the Federation of Women's Clubs, recently convening in Richmond, was a visitor for a short time in the home of Dr. and Mrs. P. J. Kernodle. We are sorry that Mrs. Sweet was unable to stay longer.

Rev. J. H. Warren has resigned as pastor of our Ocean View, Va., Church, the resignation having taken effect June 1st. Bro. Warren has wrought well and faithfully at Ocean View, and feels the work is in good shape for his successor. He is open to any pastorate, preferably in Virginia or North Carolina that may need his services.

While increasing sums are being given through benevolence to aid the physically needy, decreasing sums are being given through the churches for the relief of the spiritually needy. The missionary deficit increases to an alarming extent, and missionaries at home and abroad are having to stop their work, as shown by Herbert D. Rugg, in his figures given elsewhere in THE SUN this week.

Rev. J. H. Dollar, the happy and very busy pastor of United Church, LaGrange, Ga., changes his address from 1501 Elm St., to 803 Dallas St., LaGrange, Ga. That is good news, indeed, and inspiring to all of us that comes by way of a letter elsewhere in this week's SUN, from Rev. M. J. Sweet, about United Church, LaGrange, Ga. We rejoice with Bro. Dollar and his active, busy people.

This week Elon College closed, with largely attended commencement exercises, its 43rd annual session. An epoch, indeed, not only in the lives of the graduates and the 300 young people who were in training here the past year, but in our church life as well. These young men and women going with their diplomas and training from Elon today, many of them, will be leaders in the various activities of the church in the future.

We most heartily agree with this paragraph from the pen of Bro. Hermon Eldredge, the associate editor of the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty: "Our colleges and schools are in the midst of a difficult situation these days and need the fullest cooperation of our churches in student and financial support. A special effort is being made to secure a fine attendance at the commencement events in order to more fully acquaint our people with the college plant and equipment and the invaluable contribution being made to our youth and to our churches."

Hines Chapel, Guilford County, N. C., had an appropriate and very largely attended memorial services, Sunday, June 4th. Rev. R. H. Melvin, Friends Church, Greensboro, preached a memorial sermon at the 11 A. M., service. A special quartette and singers from our Palm St. Church gave a fine musical program. At 2:30 P. M. the Mission Secretary, J. O. Atkinson, preached a memorial and missionary sermon, and an offering for missions was taken. Pastor J. L. Neese is happy in his work at Hines, and there is every indication of growth and activity at Hines Chapel.

Some of our churches are putting on the Crucible Campaign—"digging for gold in their own homes," gold that is lying useless and has been of no value other than as mementos or keep-sakes for years. This from a pastor, Dr. Carl E. Grammar, may give some one a courageous idea: "We can best honor the memory of our loved ones by making their mementos supply the means of helping others. That I may not restrict myself to preaching, I am going to donate my mother's gold watch to the Crucible. It has long ceased to run. Let it now begin its travels and go about doing good through the money it may bring in."

Our congratulations and heartiest good wishes, and we are speaking for hundreds of others who feel the same way, go to our great and good friends, Dr. and Mrs. Martyn P. Summerbell, Lakemont, N. Y., who on May 28th, observed with appropriate ceremony and celebration, their 61st wedding anniversary. This glad and unusual event was given to the air through a beautiful "Cheerio" program of the National Broadcasting Company, between 9:15 and 9:45 on the morning of May 8th. Here is hoping that our dear, good friends will have other anniversaries to celebrate, and thus give real cheer to their legion of friends throughout the land.

We learn with regret of the passing of Mrs. Sarah J. Franks, aged 72 years, from her home on Route 1, Elon College, N. C., on Thursday evening, June 1st. She is survived by two sons, J. D. and W. S. Franks, of Greensboro, N. C.; two daughters, Mrs. C. N. Summers, of Greensboro, and Mrs. L. D. Ross, Route 1, Elon College; a brother, W. P. Ireland, and two sisters, Miss Lydia Ireland and Mrs. D. W. Kernodle. Deceased was the widow of the late Austin Franks of Wake County, N. C., who died 37 years ago; Austin Franks being the oldest son of Rev. William Franks, a minister of long ago in the Christian Church, who, through faith and zeal, planted Christian Churches in Harnett and Wake Counties in the early days.

A personal letter from Rev. Alfred W. Hurst, former pastor of Elon Community Church, now pastor of Pilgrim Congregational Church, Chattanooga, Tenn., contains a paragraph of church information and of interest to SUN readers: "I am pleased with our new home and location and am deeply interested in Pilgrim Church. It is not a large church, but a very choice group of people constitute its membership. They are friendly, intelligent, forward-looking and devoted. On Easter we had 152 in attendance and received 12 new members into the church. The attendance rarely falls below 100, and on Mother's Day we had 186. This gives you some idea of the numerical strength of the church. I am acquainted with the entire resident membership now, having called on them all in their homes, so now I feel we are ready to begin work."

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Valley of Virginia Conference meets Thursday and Friday, June 15th and 16th, at Whistler's Chapel, near Mt. Jackson, Va. Bro. Roy A. Larrick, president of the Convention, writing of the forthcoming session, says: "On the program will be Rev. F. C. Lester, Rev. Minor C. Miller, General Secretary, Virginia Council of Religious Education, and one who we are always glad to have with us, Dr. J. O.

Atkinson. The address on Thursday night will be given by Rev. Minor C. Miller. Rev. B. J. Earp, pastor of Whistler's Chapel, gives us the following instructions for reaching Whistler's Chapel Church: Leave Valley Pike, Route 11, near Mt. Jackson, where signs point to Shenandoah Caverns; keep straight by Caverns to first fork of road; take right, go one-fourth mile to another turn; then take left to the church. The church is one mile from the Caverns."

The Greensboro Daily News, of June 2nd, carried an account of the death of Robert Samuel Neville, of Chapel Hill, death taking place at Duke Hospital, Durham. Bro. Neville was in his 54th year. He is survived by his wife, one daughter, Mrs. Sol. Mason, of California; three sons, Duncan, Noble, and Merrill, all of Chapel Hill, and four brothers, E. W. Neville, D. T. Neville, A. J. Neville, of Chapel Hill, and Prof. E. L. Neville, of Monroe, La., and two sisters, Miss Mary Neville of Chapel Hill, and Mrs. H. E. Ollerhead, of Washington, D. C. The funeral services were conducted from Damascus Church, near Chapel Hill, of which the deceased had been a member for many years, the services being conducted by Revs. B. J. Howard and C. R. Dierlamm, of Chapel Hill. THE SUN's editor has pleasant recollections of a long acquaintance with Robert Neville, and only pleasant and happy memories come to us now of one who was always cheerful and delightful to be with.

THE CAROLINAS AND GEORGIA.

United Church, LaGrange, Ga., is busy with the campaign to lift the last $2,000 on the old debt. Citizens both in and out of the church, in a recent interview, were happy and expectant. "That debt just must be paid," said a member. "And we are working every day now, and that will make a difference." A prominent man, entirely outside, said, "We of LaGrange are very grateful to the Building Society for giving us the $5,000 so promptly. It showed faith in us and a readiness to aid which makes us feel very happy. And we shall raise that debt." This was said with a positive shake of the head which indicated determination which seldom fails. And the pastor "knows" it will be raised and hopes it will be by July 1st.

But another feature of this church is the great revival which will start June 4th. The pastor, Rev. J. H. Dollar, will direct the music and Rev. O. D. Poythress, pastor of South Norfolk, will do the preaching. It is also expected that a Vacation Church School will be carried on during the revival by Miss Mary Lou McDonald, special S. S. S. worker from Pearson, Ga., and Charles Hoyt, of Jacksonville, Fla., our S. S. S. worker from Georgia Teck., Atlanta, who is about to begin his junior year. This is a strong combination for the large work Mr. Dollar has planned for United Church.

While Arthur Swartz, of Albemarle, N. C., was down in Mississippi getting married, and taking a brief honeymoon trip afterward, Rev. M. J. Sweet preached for his people three times. He has preached there before. This time he found a people very happy that they were to have another helper in the church in the person of the bride. They planned receptions and showers and even held prayer meeting on the very night the pastor was being married, at which they remembered in reverent spirit the great event in their pastor's life. The church has a fine program and is growing.

Fredonia Church, Barnesville, Ga., Rev. Lawrence Stanley, pastor, gave the pastor-at-large a royal welcome when he preached for them May 21st. The beautiful church auditorium was crowded almost to capacity. The work throughout this most interesting parish, including Bethany Church at The Rock; Meansville Church and Jones Chapel at Woodbury, is very prosperous. Some one said: "Since better times have come, we are all whistling now and we are going to do better by our minister this year."

The Pastor-at-Large had the very great privilege of preaching at Elon College, May 14th. There were from 300 to 400 people present, and a more reverent and receptive body of students and citizens would be hard to find. The music which furnished a prominent part of the worship service preceding the sermon was soul inspiring and conducted the minds and hearts of the people direct to the throne of God. Prof. Steere directs by the use of the spirit and selects with the heart as well as the brain. It was a very happy minister who preached on this great day dedicated to Mothers in such a worshipful service.

Miss Annie Campbell, our exceedingly efficient and hard-working Extension Worker, is now located at Roberta. She visits four churches every week, and three of them on each Sunday. Such work is highly appreciated and tells. The pastor, Mr. Crawford Moncrief, Sr., our licensed minister in this parish, is a very busy man. He edits and publishes the Knoxville Post, the county newspaper, and preaches on Sundays to these churches. He is ably assisted by his wife and tall young son, a graduate of the Roberta High School. Mr. Moncrief is doing a very creditable piece of work among these people who honor and respect him to a very high degree.

Rev. Arnold Slater, Cochran and Doerun, Ga., is happy that it has been made possible for him to have his good wife with him. Not many people know how hard it is for some of our finest young men to get on in some of our weak churches on the very small income which is theirs. Arnold has struggled for months alone, but finally Pauline, his wife, has come to share the work with him. They are finding the work particularly difficult at Doerun. However, from 150 to over 200 people come out to hear him preach there whenever he is present. We have more than one faithful man of God serving our smaller churches in Georgia.

Rev. Alan Jones and wife returned the first of the month from their delightful vacation spent with the parents and friends of Mrs. Jones, in New Jersey. These friends presented a nice little sum of money, which is to be used in the first Friendship Parish Young People's Leadership Conferences to be held July 2nd-7th, at St. Simonds' Island, Brunswick, Ga. This will be one of the most progressive movements ever made by these churches in South Georgia. Besides the pastor and his wife, other helpers will be Miss Annie Campbell, Miss Dorothy Grigsby, Piedmont College S. S. S. worker, and her sister, Joy, honor graduate from Boyden High School, Salisbury, N. C., class of 1933; Mr. Eben Chapman, S. S. S. worker from Williams College, M. J. Sweet and others

After several years of service in Atlanta, Rev. W. T. McElveen, D. D., has resigned. He asked to be relieved June 30, 1933. At a well attended business meeting held Wednesday evening, May 24th, the resignation was accepted. Resolutions of respect and appreciation were adopted. It was voted not to consider a successor for the present, and that no requests for consideration should be answered. M. J. SWEET.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

ONE THING LACKING.

The one thing lacking may mean, and often does mean, the undoing of the whole. The rich young man who came to Christ had kept all the commandments and had built quite a comely character. It was all, to outward appearances, very praiseworthy and quite striking, but there was one thing lacking. That lack sent sorrow to that young man's heart, and brought chaos and oblivion to all his future conduct, so far as the record shows.

This writer heard a very suggestive, logical and eloquent sermon recently. The diction was admirable, the facts appealing, the presentation pleasing, the text appropriate. The sermon just lacked one thing. It left Christ out. The subject was all right—"The By-Products of Adversity." "Some of the by-products of adversity are very disagreeable, often disastrous," said the preacher. He then related many incidents in which individuals, under adversity, fell down in character and conduct. Things went too hard for them, and they gave way under the strain. The by-products in such cases were liabilities and ruin.

Then incidents were related, quite a few, which showed beneficial and helpful results of adversity. Financial adversity and ruin did not always destroy character, but gave an opportunity for real and beautiful character to develop. Under the strain and pressure of adversity, some of the most courageous deeds were done, some of the noblest characters were formed. A family was cited. A few months ago that family was in luxury and had abundance of this world's goods. The depression had swept their fortune away. Affliction had laid the mother low; obligations and doctors' bills piled up. The father, the daughters and the son did not despair under the strain, but met their misfortune with courage and determination, and now that house was more orderly, that family sweeter in spirit, happier in the daily drudge and activity than they had ever been. Adversity had done its worst, but character had survived, and the family, though earning its bread by the sweat of its brow, was enriched in spirit and attitude, and this more than made up for all loss of property.

All of which was quite striking; all of which might have been told to a class in sociology, or history, or psychology. The sermon, however, closed without going beyond the province of the classroom lecture, in that it failed to tell the source of support in a time of adversity. It failed to point to the suffering Christ, who himself, went through adversity, persecution, crucifixion, and through whom one might come out more than conqueror. Christ was not held up in this sermon as the one unfailing source of life and light, courage and strength.

"Ye shall be witnesses of me." The preacher is a witness-bearer. The best testimony he ever gives is the testimony of our Lord. Recently, one of the papers tells us, an English clergyman was advertised to broadcast over a considerable hook-up. Before the time to broadcast came, a leading layman asked the clergyman what he was going to speak about. The preacher replied that at the moment he had not quite decided. "Well," said the layman, "speak about our Lord. One so seldom hears sermons about him. Speak about our Lord." J. O. A.

PEACE FOR TEN YEARS.

There seems to be promise and prospect of peace in Europe for ten years. Great Britain, France, Germany, and Italy, the four great powers, have entered into a peace pact with each other to cover a period of ten years. Mussolini, the man of the hour in Europe, is the moving spirit in this truce which the four governments are called upon to approve.

If for ten years, then why not for twenty, and if for twenty, why not for one hundred? There is every argument for peace in a time of peace, but when people get mad, there isn't much argument. The fact, however, that four nations, so easily accessible and so often at war, can sit down together and agree that there shall be no war with each other for a certain period, gives some hope that the time approaches when war shall be no more. Toward such a time the nations and the world move, according to a very wise and reliable prophet. J. O. A.

LADY ASTOR SAYS A WORD.

Lady Astor, "the Virginia Girl," who has become a leading figure in the British Parliament, recently told that August body something to think about. While we of the United States are seeking to balance our budget by taxing beer, Great Britain, struggling with even worse economical conditions, seeks to balance its budget by cutting down the tax on beer. So when the recommendation of balancing the budget was presented in Parliament, that fourteen million pounds sterling (about seventy-seven million dollars) be cut from the beer tax, Lady Astor stood up and said: "What the government has done is to suspend the sinking fund in order to create a drinking fund." There is a volume in that sentence that we might read with profit. Then Lady Astor added: "If the government really had fourteen million pounds sterling to remit to the brewers and the drinkers of beer, which it was doing, it would be far better to put that amount into milk for the children who lacked and needed the milk, far, far worse than the drinkers needed the beer." So, at any rate, Parliament was told a thing or two.

However, it will do no good. Our people in legislatures and congresses are not now subject to reason, to argument, to logic, nor to facts. They are not wanting these any more when it comes to the matter of beer; of liquor and the saloon. We are in the grip of hysteria. Anything for taxes, anything for revenue, anything for a change. The liquor advocates, ex-saloon keepers and brewers, have fought their battle and have won their victory. They are leading now. Our country no longer gives heed to those in legislative or executive council who plead for sobriety, morality, security. We are heedless of the fact that liquor has always defied the law, and that the advocates of liquor and the saloon have never been controlled by law. The appeal for safety of character and conduct has no weight with the brewer, the distiller and the dispenser of liquor. J. O. A.

CHICAGO AND ITS TEACHERS.

Whatever Chicago does with its impulse to publicity, gives the rest of the world something to wonder at. It has 14,000 school teachers and it owed over thirty million dollars in back salaries to these teachers. One day the teachers did not teach, but put on a demonstration, marched into the financial district and had an argument with leading bankers and business men. The teachers were desperate. Chicago discovered that something must be done. So her citizens, who could do so, bought school warrants in the sum of twelve million dollars, all of which went to pay on the back salaries of teachers. Happiness reigned, joy abounded, and the teachers went and paid their debts.

And so with only a small balance of eighteen million in salaries due her school teachers, Chicago flings open its great exhibition, "A Century of Progress," and nearly a half million people crowded through its gates and thronged its grounds the first day. It will be a great fair, it is a great fair. Whatever Chicago does is on a great scale, whether in delaying teachers' salaries, producing Al Capone and gangsters, or giving a show to the rest of the world. "Whatever thy hands find to do, do it with thy might," seems to be Chicago's slogan. J. O. A.

I STAND FOR HUMANITY.

By HON. LOUIS LUDLOW, OF INDIANA,
In the House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

I cannot go along with the majority of the House and the majority of the body at the other end of the Capitol in support of this pending resolution for the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment.

Goaded and harassed by appalling economic conditions, our people have drifted far from the moorings of safety on the liquor question. Among all of our ills piled mountain high, the pending resolution is, I fear, the culminating tragedy born out of the distress of the times.

The Old Saloon Again.

The saddest part of it all is that when the storm subsides and economic peace again settles over the land, and when, with the cessation of the turmoil we might reasonably expect brighter days, contentment, and happiness ahead, we shall awaken to find that we have provided no constructive program of liquor control to take the place of prohibition, but have fastened upon ourselves the old saloon and all the old evils of the liquor traffic, and that after a hundred years of noble effort, to solve the liquor problem, we are back just where we started. If prohibition is to be repealed, we should at least submit something constructive to take its place, and in the resolution of resubmission should protect the major gains it has brought about, chief among which is the elimination of the saloon.

First-Hand Evidence.

As a newspaper writer of forty years' experience in various large cities in close contact with life's activities, I can give first-hand evidence in regard to the damage that was done to society by the saloon. As a young police reporter, zealous in the pursuit of news, I spent a great deal of time in saloons and in gambling places and brothels, dark and sinister establishments of which the saloon was a feeder, while I garnered human-interest stories about the saloon's tragic toll.

What I Saw.

I can see today, as if it were but yesterday, the saloon of the olden time, with the gambling gentry in checkered vests and reverberating haberdashery, who lingered and plied their calling thereabout, and set their traps to catch their human toll, and the scarlet women with big hats and gorgeous plumes who flitted in and out and seemed always to be in the offing. I can see unsophisticated girls fresh from their mothers' apron strings caught in the net of the wine rooms and started on the downward path to perdition. It would be a hard-hearted person indeed who could see them drawn into the vortex without being touched with infinite compassion. As I look backward in the moving panorama I can see a great many men bearing the image of their Maker made into wrecks in the saloons and then delivered as human derelicts at the gates of hell.

A Social Canker.

No one need tell me that the saloon was not a social canker. It is not guesswork as far as I am concerned. I know it by the indubitable evidence of my own eyes and ears. I know by having seen men of good intentions converted by it into beasts who went home and beat their children. I know by the girls it started on the primrose path to ruin. I know by the scores and hundreds of fine, intellectual newspaper associates of mine whom it sent to premature graves. I know by the murders, suicides, divorces, wrecked homes I can trace to it. I know by the gamblers who swarmed around it as moths attracted to a flame, and whose intake from their victims was a part of the devil's grist. I have always been against the saloon, and I am against it now.

For Humanity.

I cannot think that any roseate embellishment of the saloon will make it righteous or that it would ever be right for me to sanction it or support its reappearance in the life of America, and I love my fellow beings too much ever to want to put this infliction upon them. There never has been any change in my attitude toward the saloon, and there never will be. I want it always to remain an outlaw. As between the saloon on one hand and humanity on the other hand, I take my stand for humanity.

When I first ran for Congress in 1928, I so expressed myself, and in each one of my two campaigns since then I have made my position plain and unequivocal. When the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment interrogated me in the recent campaign, I stated in writing my position to be:

"In no event and under no circumstances by any vote or influence of mine will I ever be a party to the return of the saloon and the old-time liquor evils in America."

The repeal resolution before us today opens the way for the return of the saloon and the old liquor evils under the protection of our Government. I am against it. In the name of the millions of inarticulate men, women and children in the homes and in the ordinary walks of life who are seriously thinking about what all of this means, though their voices cannot be heard in this historic chamber, I oppose this resolution, which is wide open and without a single ban or check against the saloon. I am going to play square with them and with the boys and girls of tomorrow and with the boys and girls of all the tomorrows that are to come, by voting against the return of what I believe to be a wicked institution.

GREAT INTERCESSORS.

By H. H. SMITH.

There is something about intercessory prayer that lifts it above every other form of prayer. Its utter unselfishness appeals to all. Abraham's intercession for Lot and his family is one of the most impressive incidents in the life of that great patriarch. "Wilt thou consume the righteous with the wicked? Shall not the judge of all the earth do right? Wilt Thou not spare the city for fifty righteous men? For forty, for thirty, for twenty? Oh, let not the Lord be angry, and I will speak yet but this once: Peradventure ten shall be found there?" And the Lord answered: "I will not destroy it for ten's sake."

From the godly character of Abraham we may be assured that Lot had been warned of his peril when he "pitched his tent toward Sodom." A less generous soul might have assumed an "I-told-you-so" attitude, but no father could have offered a more tender plea for his own children than Abraham offered for Lot.

Abraham believed that the "Lord of all the earth would do right," but that did not excuse him from the duty of interceding for his kinsman. Do we not often fail as intercessors because of an easy-going attitude to the whole subject of prayer? Too often our course is something like this: The Lord is all-wise, all-powerful, all-merciful; why not leave the matter with Him? Such an attitude would make an end of all prayer.

When the children of Israel turned to the worship of the golden calf Moses was greatly distressed. "Ye have sinned a great sin, and now I will go up unto the Lord; peradventure I shall make an atonement for your sin. And Moses returned unto the Lord and said: 'Oh, this people have sinned a great sin, and have made them gods of gold. Yet now, if thou wilt forgive their sins,—and, if not, blot me, I pray Thee, out of the book which Thou hast written'."

The apostle Paul suffered deep agony of soul when his own countrymen refused to accept Christ as the Son of God, the world's Redeemer. "Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is that they might be saved. . . . I say the truth in Christ, I lie not, my conscience also bearing me witness in the Holy Ghost that I have great heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart. For I could wish that myself was accused from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh."

David Brainerd's evangelistic passion made him a mighty intercessor in behalf of the American Indians. "His love for souls amounted to a passion which nothing could cool or conquer," says his biographer. "No miser ever clung to his treasure as he grasped this idea and made it an ever-present and supreme object with him. No matter where he went, or what were his surroundings, the ruling bent of his soul was manifest. In health or in sickness, in his wigwam among the Indians, on his numerous and solitary journeys, . . . his supreme desire was to convert souls. He prayed so fervently for the conversion of the Indians that sometimes his clothing was saturated with perspiration." A paragraph from his diary reads: "Spent two hours in secret duties, and was enabled to agonize for immortal souls; though it was early in the morning and the sun scarcely shone, yet my body was quite wet with sweat."

All great evangelists have been great intercessors for the lost. Hear William Booth, as he faced the submerged of London's slums: "I stand pledged before Heaven and Earth and Hell to go through with what is right and best for my fellows and my God, and by God's grace I will be faithful to my vows."

Recall what he saw in the slums of the great metropolis, and the opposing forces of evil, and applaud him for his fighting spirit: "While women weep, as they do now, I'll fight; while little children hunger, as they do now, I'll fight; while men go to prison, in and out, as they do now, I'll fight."

His biographer says: "He groaned over the degradation of men, he agonized over the debasement of women, he wept over the sufferings of children. . . . Sights of wickedness which other people would see and regret, seemed to stab him to the heart. Other people saw the drinking; he saw the poverty, the misery, the disease, and the godlessness behind it. The sins of London didn't shock him, they seemed to tear at his heart with claws that drew blood."

And when old age came upon him he did not desist from his labors, but visited three or four countries of Europe one year, when he had passed his four score years. At last he became blind from cataract, and turning to his son said: "Bramwell, I have done what I could for God and for the people with my eyes. Now I shall do what I can for the people without my eyes." And so he did. During the extreme feebleness of his last days, his daughter left him alone for a few minutes and came back to find him restlessly moving about the room. "Now, father," she said, "you promised me you would sit still until I came back." "Oh, I know," he said, "but how can I? I'm thinking of the suffering women and children, and how can I sit still?"

Is intercessory prayer becoming a lost art with the Church? It is more than a privilege, it is a duty. Samuel said: "God forbid that I should sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray for you." And Paul considered intercession of prime importance: "I exhort therefore, first of all, that supplications, prayers intercessions, . . . be made for all men."

SUFFOLK LETTER.

"Mother, may I pull off my shoes and go barefoot today?" This question was anxiously asked by a five-year-old boy. The day was warm and the birds were singing their sweetest songs of the glorious spring days. The mother recalled her childhood days. She remembered the thrill of the first opportunity of being barefoot, after the arrival of warm weather. The other boys were already barefoot. So she said, "yes, dear, you may take off your shoes today." Immediately the child sat down on the ground and removed his shoes and stockings. How he did run! No shoes to hinder him. The earth was cool. He enjoyed one of the great privileges of childhood in the Sunny South.

Now going barefoot is not all glorious and pleasant. At first the feet are very tender. The stones and thorns and rough places make a very sensitive impression under tender feet. But it is worth it all to be barefoot for a while. Stone bruises and sharp thorns will cause a little trouble. The night will come. The boy will be tired. Mother will say, "Son, wash your feet before you go to bed." Oh, that was a trying experience for this writer. No boy ever cared much about washing his ears and his feet, until he found that girls are more attractive than boys. But the barefoot boy must wash his feet. And he is so sleepy he cannot see when they are clean enough to put in mother's clean bed. In spite of all the inconveniences of washing feet before bed time, it is glorious to go barefoot, when a boy. It makes one almost wish for the power to be young again just to go barefoot.

A barefoot boy has many privileges which he cannot have while wearing shoes. This is a special privilege of a country boy. There is no inducement for a city boy to go barefoot. But it is different in the country. After a heavy rain the creeks and swamps are swollen. The swift running water is an invitation for the country boy to roll up his trousers above his knees and wade in the water. Of course, it matters little that he fails to roll them up high enough to keep them dry. It is more interesting and thrilling if he finds the water deeper than he expected, and comes forth with wet clothes. He is disappointed if he fails to get wet.

This barefoot boy will stand on his heel, and make a circle by turning down his big toe and turning on his heel. Mud offers many suggestions for the growing boy. How he delights to put his bare feet in the soft mud and eagerly watch the movements of his toes. This barefoot will serve as a form for making "frog houses" in the moist piles of sand. The best cure for corns is to go barefoot.

Some reader may ask why give this topic a place in a religious paper? Because a barefoot boy has an important place in the church. Many a boy who has no money to buy shoes for his feet may feel embarrassed in the presence of boys who can buy shoes. The church should take an interest in the boys (and girls) when they are barefooted. They have a certain freedom and frankness which might well be a theme for older people to consider very seriously. They learn that when their feet are exposed and unprotected they sometimes suffer. They learn that freedom has its dangers as well as its pleasures. Of course, these lessons are very simple and elementary. When the summer days are passed, and the cool nights return, the barefoot children will welcome the protection of warm shoes and stockings. Soon summer will be a memory. Cold winter with its frost and snow will test the new shoes. These precious feet are protected by a father's toil and a mother's care. The same good Father who gave the warm sunshine, the freedom of barefooted youth, sends the winter and protection from the storm.

My hat is off to barefooted youth. Go barefoot while you may. It is a great experience, which may well be coveted by kings and queens. It will be a precious memory in the evening of life.

I. W. JOHNSON.

LIVING AND BUILDING.

After all, young people, your building in the things of life, which you undertake, is going to be quite proportional to your living. If, in your living, you go blundering along with no definite plans in mind as to what should come first in your program of life, and what should follow in the order of importance, your chances for building will be very limited. Putting it in plain language, if you just drift along with the aimless current of youth that is headed toward no particular goal, your building in life will be just as futile as has been your living; for no person ever rises higher than he plans, nor builds any better than he lives.

I have known much valuable time lost and many hard earned dollars squandered in a vain attempt to get happiness, when such coveted happiness might have been had at a much less outlay of time and money, had it been wisely sought.

Many young people pay dearly for the little success they achieve and the satisfaction they enjoy, all because they are prompted by feeble purposes and work to half made plans. One of my teachers used to say, "Build to well made plans and for the noblest of purposes," and it is just as good admonition for young people of this age as it was for those of thirty-five years ago.

How pathetic it is that so much of our matrimony is a flat failure; and all because one or both of the contracting parties entered the sacred arena of conjugal life having made no plans, and being led on by unsound purposes.

A successful Georgia farmer told me a few years ago that he would have been a flat failure had he kept on as he started. "I thought," said he, "that I should buy every acre of real estate that I could ever hope to pay for, but I had no idea as to the little use I could make of it." This is characteristic of many young people in the different walks of life. They have ambition, but it goes to the wilds and comes to a fruitless maturity. The ancient Chinese, we are told, laid down a law of government which to my mind embodies some sound philosophy. "Good government," they said, "begins in the home and continues through the community and on to the nation." This is as much a natural result in the life of individuals as it is in homes and nations. What one leaves of value in the world must come through well disciplined living.

HOPEWELL.

Rev. T. N. Lowe, pastor of the Hopewell Christian Church, still believes in the revival meeting. On May 7th, he began a meeting at the Hopewell Christian Church, and continued for two weeks. Rev. Lowe delivered the message each evening, and Mr. James Jefferson, of Petersburg, led the singing.

The church was packed at every service, and at the close of each night the altar was filled with converts. There were fifty-six converts in all, and over 100 reclamations. We have already had twenty-six additions to the church with many others expecting to join later. This brings the total received since conference up to forty-three.

The church is united and every department is well organized, and doing good work under the leadership of our faithful pastor. Keep your eyes on Hopewell Christian Church, and see it grow.

CORRESPONDENT.

DR. DANIEL BENONI ATKINSON.

The Executive Committee of the General Convention of the Christian Church has no words adequately to express its irreparable loss in the passing of Dr. D. B. Atkinson. Impotently it registers a sorrow too deep for words. This sense of loss is both for the profound sentiments of love and personal esteem, in which he was universally held in our fellowship, and for the wise counsel upon which we had come to rely in every emergency of the church.

We recognize with gratitude his years of most efficient service for the kingdom, many of them spent in thankless and sacrificial labor, no incident of which ever evoked self-pity. Always he recognized that his life belonged to God and to humanity. It was cheerfully spent in an enthusiasm for its purpose too wholeheartedly ever to take account of unappreciation by others or the drain upon his own vitality. The most of his arduous labors of the past twenty-five years were rendered under health limitations which would have caused many to surrender to complete invalidism. Unthoughtedly, because of his ability, we placed burdens upon him too great for his strength, and he murmured not. Our sorrow is increased by the pungent fact.

His whole life was invested in the church in some form of service. Even the summons to reward found him in the thick of it. There seem to us to be so many things for which we still need him.

He was a great preacher—clear, lucid, forceful, with fine insight and deep mental grasp. He indulged no tricks of oratory. With a commendable presence and economy of words he went straight to the never-absent purpose of his address. As a pastor he was comprehending and sympathetic, an advisor in whom parishioners reposed all confidence and were never disappointed. As a church official, his counsel was sought and almost uniformly followed in every emergency. In times of stress his judgments were openly solicited. His acute, analytical mind, his wide information, and his unselfish motives made him our most trusted counsellor.

Perhaps his influence in the youth life of the church is surpassed by that of no other. Hundreds are profoundly grateful for his stabilizing wisdom in those periods when it meant their safety. His life and work will live through the character and service of thousands of young people whom he has taught.

In behalf of the General Convention, the members of this Executive Committee recognize with profound gratitude the great contribution which Dr. Atkinson has made to the welfare of the world, and reconsecrate themselves to the ideals for which he wrought.

With the members of the bereaved family we join in sorrow over his going, and extend to them and his friends everywhere our deepest sympathy.

CONFERENCE OF JEWS AND CHRISTIANS.

Dr. Robert A. Ashworth, a prominent Baptist clergyman, has been appointed Educational Secretary on the staff of the National Conference of Jews and Christians. The National Conference of Jews and Christians is an organization of Protestant, Catholic and Jewish leaders interested in bringing about mutual understanding and cooperation among the three great religious groups in the United States. Mr. Newton D. Baker, of Cleveland, is Protestant Co-Chairman, Prof. Carlton J. H. Hayes, of Columbia University, is Catholic Co-Chairman, and Mr. Roger W. Straus, of New York City, is Jewish Co-Chairman, while Mr. Frederick J. Fuller, President of the New York Title and Mortgage Company, and a Catholic, is Treasurer. Dr. Ashworth will be associated with Rev. Everett R. Clinchy, who is the Executive Director of the Conference.

Dr. Ashworth holds a prominent place in the field of religious journalism, having been editor of The Baptist, which recently merged with The Christian Century, and he is now a contributing editor of the latter interdenominational weekly. Prior to his editorial work, Dr. Ashworth held two of the great Christian pulpits, the First Baptist Church in Milwaukee, Wis., and the Church of the Redeemer in Yonkers, N. Y. He is also known as a national leader in movements in interdenominational cooperation, having been for fifteen years an official representative of the Northern Baptist Convention of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. At present he is a member of the executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches, the official governing body of the Council. Dr. Ashworth has been associated with world movements for inter-religious cooperation, having been an official member of the Stockholm 1925 Universal Christian Conference on Life and Work, and the Lausanne 1927 World Conference on Faith and Order.

In making public the election of Dr. Ashworth at the offices of the National Conference, 289 Fourth Avenue, New York City, Mr. Clinchy said: "A year ago, at the National Seminar in Washington, Mr. Michael Williams, editor of the Catholic weekly, The Commonweal (New York), and Mr. Alfred M. Cohen, editor of the B'Nai B'rith Magazine (Cincinnati), joined in asking the National Conference to establish a religious news service bureau, serving Catholic, Jewish and Protestant religious papers, with current events and trends in Catholic, Jewish and Protestant circles, alike. Part of Dr. Ashworth's work will be to conduct this news service. Dr. Ashworth will also assist in the development of an inter-faith radio program sponsored by the National Conference of Jews and Christians. The National Conference now has permanent round tables in cities throughout the nation.

The National Conference of Jews and Christians is the organization which recently released two public pronouncements, one signed by 1,200 Christian ministers which protested against Nazi anti-Semitism in Germany; the second was a statement "voicing the basic spiritual, moral and social issues underlying the economic problems which face the United States today," and 150 leading Roman Catholics, Jews, and Protestants signed that manifesto.

OUR GROWING MISSIONARY DEFICIT.

A growing deficit now over $300,000, in large part accumulated since the first of January, confronts the national or "homeland" boards of the Congregational-Christian Churches with an emergency, the treasurer, William T. Boulton, reports in a letter to pastors and church treasurers throughout the country.

"The American Missionary Association of our national boards," he says, "has reduced its budget in two years by $347,000 or forty-two per cent; this drastic reduction has compelled the dismissal of 143 teachers and field workers. Numerous home missionary churches have been closed. Field work of the religious education board has been greatly curtailed; vacancies on the staff by death or retirement are unfilled. Pensions of the board of ministerial relief have been cut twenty-two and one-half per cent; the average regular grant of 1933 to an aged minister will drop from $298 to not more than $225 and for a widow from $231 to less than $200. Wars and depressions have slowed up church work in the past but never since the founding of our country has so large a proportion of the missionary, educational and benevolent activities of the churches in any period been discontinued."

Contributions for the national boards the first quarter of this year, it is stated, dropped forty-six per cent below the corresponding months in 1932, and the giving that year was the lowest since 1919. All the gains in increased regular support from the time of the New World Movement of 1920 have been wiped out. The New World movement led to a doubling of contributions and a great enlargement of missionary, building, educational and pension activities. From total expenditures of nearly $3,000,000 in 1928, the year of largest income, the national boards are reducing their expenses approximately half and proceeding toward a radical and rapid retrenchment back to the pre-war basis.

THE CELESTIAL SURGEON.

If I have faltered more or less
In my reat task of happiness;
If I have moved among my race
And shown no glorious morning face;
If beams from happy human eyes
Have moved me not; if morning skies,
Books, and my food, and summer rain
Knocked on my sullen heart in vain—
Lord, the most pointed pleasure take
And stab my spirit broad awake;
Or, Lord, if too obdurate I,
Choose thou, before that spirit die,
A piercing pain, a killing sin,
And to my dead heart run them in.

PRAYER.

Blest harbor of souls, the Church of our Lord! Her portals beckon, her shelter is secure. Some day, O righteous Author and Preserver, the Church shall possess the earth; if we cared enough, that day might be now. Great God, our Father, make people know that the Church's sustenance, its expansion, its triumph, is in human hands and that if truly we desire to build the Church, thou wilt build our bodies into fitting and able instruments for the holy service. In Jesus' name.—Amen. S.

WHAT ABOUT THE LAYMAN'S REPORT?

By STEPHEN J. COREY.

Some friends have been asking about "Re-Thinking Missions" and its endorsement. It has not been endorsed. It does not call for endorsement. It is one of a number of surveys of foreign missions which have been made in recent years, including the research and report of the Jerusalem Conference, which was broader in its scope than the Laymen's Inquiry. None of these reports called for endorsement, but are simply studies and recommendations to be used at the discretion of the various missionary boards.

The recent Inquiry was made by a group of Laymen from seven different denominations, but is not in any way binding upon them. Our own people were not represented on the Directors of the Inquiry, nor the Commission of fifteen which finally went to the fields of China, Japan and India and then wrote the report. The book is a challenging volume whether one agrees with all its findings or not, and should be carefully read. When a group of outstanding men and women who are deeply interested in missions, go to the time and expense of making such an inquiry, their work cannot be lightly dismissed.

For myself, I would set down the following points as some of those to be considered:

Points of Strength in the Inquiry.

1. Its statement that the enterprise is the greatest enterprise of the church and must go on.
2. That Foreign Missions must face the vast changes going on in the world and be more alert to take advantage of them.
3. The acceptance without question of the validity of the three great phases of Foreign Missions, Evangelism, Education, healing and help for the suffering.
4. That the foreign missionary has a most difficult task and that he must be highly qualified, carefully trained and a person of rare personality in order to adequately succeed.
5. That the best of the foreign mission work calls for the highest and most testing generosity on the part of the church at home for its support.
6. That if the church at home should relinquish its world program, it is doomed to senile inefficiency and defeat.
7. That a divided church cannot effectively deal with the tremendous task of missions and that a sectarian approach is weak and ineffective.
8. That a missionary should carry on his work recognizing the best in non-Christian religions and not simply the worst.
9. That the weaknesses of the missionary enterprise are the same as the weaknesses of the church at home and that our religion cannot rise much higher than its base in America.

Weakness of the Inquiry.

1. The early chapters of the book deal largely with the philosophy and aim of missions on which there is a difference of opinion. In my judgment it would have been better to have expressed the aim briefly, in well understood and evangelical New Testament terms and then to have set forth a historical statement concerning missions, giving a sense of accomplishment, before proceeding to the criticisms and recommendations.

2. While the commissioners state that they give Christ his central place, it is not evident in as direct and challenging a way as it should be. The Jerusalem Conference at the very beginning declared: "Our message is Jesus Christ," thus making him and his gospel unquestionably supreme in the missionary task.

3. They tend to overstate the good in other faiths. They probably came in contact with only the best representatives of those faiths on their brief journey. My remembrance of the temples, priests and worship in the villages of India especially, are a nightmare. The feeling of the missionaries is that the oriental faiths are spiritually bankrupt.

4. They underrate the missionary and judge both him and much of his work too much by the "efficiency" standards of the West.

5. They do not sufficiently recognize former surveys, nor the vast changes in missionary work, which have grown out of them, such as better trained missionaries, better understanding of native culture, greater co-operation, the specific trends following the Jerusalem Conference, etc. Our own missionary candidates have had the careful additional training they advocate for fifteen years.

6. They minimize preaching. They are right in saying it is hollow without a living demonstration. But it is still by the foolishness of preaching that men are saved. The world must have the Christian faith—its largest impact is in preaching. Preaching is the chief factor in Christian education. Repentance comes largely through preaching.

7. The report lacks in a strong spiritual challenge to the church at home. The best of methods, the best trained missionaries, the finest co-operation, the pressing of leadership upon the natives, better schools, hospitals, and all, will not bring success in themselves. It is a spiritual enterprise—it stands or falls on the type of Christianity there and here. Christianity is the way of the cross and only with the acceptance of that principle here will the cause find the souls of the millions there.

8. The suggestion for one united board of administration for missions in America is a radical departure, and missionary workers quite generally doubt if the way business men apply the trade and mechanical efficiency of centralization, would work in the intimate task of missions. This, notwithstanding the fact that much has been done in the way of administrative co-operation, especially on the fields.

The Laymen's Inquiry brings both challenge and question. I have set down a few points only on both sides of the question. Read the book for yourselves. It may be secured in a cheap paper-bound edition. Read it in connection with The Preacher and His Missionary Message, or any other interpretation of the Jerusalem Conference. We have already put much of the best of the Laymen's Inquiry into effect. We will take the good and apply it. That with which we cannot agree we will forget.—In Christian Evangelist.

Many churches have not yet sent in their annual Easter offerings. Surely, no church can afford in this year of spiritual need and distress, to leave off the missionary offering. The church stands alone in giving the Gospel, the bread of life, to hungry hearts and perishing souls.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY PROGRAM.

THE CHURCH AND ITS WIDER FELLOWSHIP.

By MARY D. ULINE.

(From the Missionary Herald.)

Devotions.

Hymn—"The Church's One Foundation."

Scripture—Eph. 2:19-22; John 4:11, 12.

Prayer—

Thought for the Day—"The outstanding fact of modern life is that we are members one of another."—President Garfield of Williams College.

The Program.

Leader's Approach (10-15 minutes)—The beginning of a wider fellowship is in one's own community so it would be well to invite other groups to this meeting. By way of introduction refer to local church activities:

1. Joint committees appointed by churches and other organizations for welfare work.
2. Union meetings in the summer.
3. Church groups following the same course of mission study, e.g., during 1932-1933—China and the American Indian.
4. Annual meeting on Day of Prayer for Missions. Refer to 1933 meeting in your community, where it was held, and its success. Relate your meeting to other meetings held all over the world, where thousands of Christian women observe this day. Mention the fact that this bond of fellowship is growing from year to year and that in 1933 a Chinese woman wrote the service and an American Indian the call to prayer. Both were used by women from thirty-one countries.

With an atmosphere of fellowship thus created, call attention to the opportunity presented through this program to become acquainted with organizations coordinating the interest of all churches. An hour is too short a time to present more than a bare outline, but this introduction will create a desire for more information regarding them as well as for information regarding Christian groups overseas. Have a world map as well as two charts or posters, one listing interdenominational organizations relating to the church and the wider fellowship (including state and national women's groups); the other, Christian fellowships in other lands (see list below). A picture or curio from each land would add to the interest of the meeting. (For special information, write to the Project Secretary, American Board, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass.)

The leader then logically refers to the Federal Council of Churches in America, and has someone answer the following questions (5 minutes):

1. How many denominations make up this Council?

2. What does it try to accomplish? (e.g., in its radio services, its interest in relief measures, and its pronouncements on national and international issues. Secure information from Federal Council of Churches, 105 E. 22nd St., New York City.)

The leader then presents the next speaker who introduces the group to two great missionary organizations which are closely related to Christians throughout the world (10 minutes).

(a) Foreign Missions Conference of North America, representing 95 boards and societies of the United States and Canada.

1. What are the functions of this conference?
2. What were some of its accomplishments in 1932-1933?

(b) International Missionary Council, made up of 23 national missionary organizations or Christian Councils:

1. What are its functions?
2. Why should I know about the Jerusalem Meeting in 1928, and the Herrnhut Meeting in 1932, under the auspices of this Council?

The leader then refers to the following groups and introduces the speaker who has chosen one or two as types of Christian fellowship throughout the world (15 minutes):

(a) The Church of Christ in China. Tell about the Five-Year Plan, and give short sketch of outstanding Chinese, e.g., Dr. Cheng, Secretary of National Christian Council in China; the Soong family; a Chinese Christian in country districts. Read excerpts from letters from missionaries referring to pastors and Bible women in country districts.

(b) The Kumiai Churches in Japan. Tell of the Kingdom of God Movement, and the relation of Kumiai (Congregational) Churches to it. Refer to Kagawa San, the great social leader, or Ebisawa San, Secretary of National Christian Council, or Jo-San of the Kobe Welfare Work, or Wakuyama San of Glory Kindergarten. Refer to conference on conditions in China and Japan, between Chinese and Japanese Christians and missionaries, held last August, and use excerpts from recent letters from missionaries.

(c) The United Church of North India.

(d) The United Church of South India.

(e) The United Evangelical Church of the Philippine Islands.

(f) The Church of Natal, South Africa.

Read statements of what these fellowships are, and give illustrations of work of pastors and Bible women from letters of missionaries.

(g) The Church in West Central Africa. Describe the West Central Africa Jubilee Celebration in 1930, and tell of its spiritual results in the church in the past two years. Give illustrations from letters and articles by Henry McDowell and other missionaries.

(h) Interdenominational Groups in Mexico. Refer to the interdenominational activities and international forms in Mexico City and Guadalajara. Note the work of Mr. and Mrs. Leach and Mr. and Mrs. Neff.

(For information on above topics write to the Project Secretary, American Board, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass.)

Closing Hymn—"Blest Be the Tie that Binds."

YOUNG PEOPLE'S PROGRAM.

(This may also be used for Junior groups. The leader should meet with them in advance of the meeting, assign parts and make sure that each child understands his part.)

Worship Service.

Hymn—"O Beautiful for Spacious Skies."
Poem—"Indian Summer":

"No more the battle or the chase
The phantom tribes pursue,
But each in its accustomed place
The Autumn hails anew.

"And still from solemn councils set
On every hill and plain,
The smoke of many a calumet
Ascends to heaven again."

—John Banister Tabb.

(Quoted in "An American Anthology," edited by Edmund C. Stedman.)

Scripture—I. Cor. 13.

Prayer—"O God, our Father, forgive us for our blindness and stupidity in our treatment of our Indian brethren, for our lack of understanding and our cruelty. Teach us justice, give us understanding and forbearance, inspire us with love and appreciation that we may live together as children of one Father and citizens of a country to which we shall both give allegiance."
—Amen.

Fort Berthold.

If you have not already sent to Miss Helen Frances Smith, 287 4th Ave., New York City, for free leaflets on the American Indian, you will want to do so in preparation for this meeting. "The Fort Berthold Indian Mission and Its Work," 1876-1932, and "Why They Did Not Vanish," "Heroic Achievements," and "Prophetic Programs," will be particularly helpful.

Leader—The Fort Berthold Agency at Elbowoods is one of the points served by our Congregational-Christian Churches. In 1876 the American Board sent Rev. C. L. Hall and his bride to establish a mission at Elbowoods. will tell us about it.

In 1876, Rev. C. L. Hall and his bride came from New York City to begin Christian work among the Arickarees, Gros Ventres and Mandans. They found the Indians living in semi-savagery. Their contacts with white men had been degrading, but they were friendly and law-abiding. A school was started with four teachers, with a day session for the boys and girls and another in the evening for men and women.

With the coming of peace, living conditions changed. The Indians scattered on farms allotted to them, and there began the difficult transition period from the life of the nomadic hunter to that of the settled farmer. Little was done except by the mission to help the Indians make the transition.

On the reservation there are five attractive churches and at Elbowoods a school. There is a week-day Bible class for children and an evening class for adults, and a sewing group for the women. To see the fruit of his labors "Father" Hall lives today with his daughter and her husband, the new head of Santee School.

Leader—For years a school was conducted at Elbowoods for Indian children, but this year the children attend the public school and live at the mission. will tell us something about the Community Center.

Our hours are full to overflowing. Our children attend public school this year and live with us. We like the arrangement, but, of course, we must crowd more into our out-of-school hours. When we conducted our own school our attendance average was so much higher than the public school that we were able to give them all that the public school does plus extra Bible and industrial work during school time. Now this extra must be taught out of school hours, but so far it has worked out very well.

One of my privileges is to lead a Junior Christian Endeavor. We took a group of children to a distant convention at Garrison, not long ago. They brought home the banner for the largest delegation coming the greatest distance. I felt justly proud of our "Family." They sang at a number of the meetings and were complimented on all sides, not only for their singing, but for their conduct.

We have often heard of children "raising the roof." Our family pushed out the wall! Our dining room had to be made larger to accommodate our increasing family. I do not know what we will do if our group continues to grow. I wish you could be here and see how hard it is to say "no" to a parent who comes not only once, but nearly a dozen times and fairly begs with tears in his eyes for a place for his child. There were nearly 200 applicants this year and at the most all that we can squeeze in are 47 children. I know I should not be impatient, but we do need a new building so badly and we have waited so long, and loving the children as we do, it is hard to say "No."

The results of the training received at Elbowoods and Santee are evident in the intelligent way that their graduates go about setting up homes for themselves. Fire Thunder took his education seriously. (Tell story, "Fire Thunder's Baby Ford," by Winifred Hulbert.)

The material for this program was provided by the Project Department of the Home Boards.

PRISCILLA CHASE.

With shouts, fires and the banging of tin pans the natives of Chikore, East Africa, as well as the missionaries, have tried to fight off the hordes of locusts which invade their territory. The same methods used in Old Testament times are employed. This year, reports Rev. John S. Marsh, the pests have consumed many flourishing gardens which means there will be famine because there has also been drought. The locust pest is liable to last another year, Mr. Marsh believes, and will complicate work in the schools.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP
 "Youth at Work in the Church."
 REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

YOUTH AND THE SUMMER.

Hundreds of young people are now planning how they will spend their summer. It is well that they plan rather than simply drift from day to day.

Some of them will seek employment with the hope of receiving sufficient funds with which to study through the coming winter. Others will be content to go back home and stay with the family through the vacation period. Still others are accepting church jobs which give them an opportunity to work, but give them little or nothing in the way of financial reward.

The vacation period gives to high school and college young people great opportunity for rebuilding physical and spiritual personalities. Through the school term the emphasis has been on mental development. Now the call comes to outdoor living, and the recreation of the physical being.

Training camps, summer schools, Christian Endeavor conventions, leadership in vacation schools and local church work offer opportunities for spiritual development. Thousands of young people will make good on this opportunity, and will be the richer through life because they have thought it well to spend their vacation time and money in developing the religious side of life, which can best be done by sharing with others.

VIRGINIA C. E. CONVENTION.

The 39th annual state convention of Christian Endeavor will meet in the First Presbyterian Church of Roanoke, on June 23rd-26th. The program is very inviting. Interesting speakers of national repute will be there, as well as many of the State leaders.

Roanoke is doing everything possible to give these State Christian Endeavorers a hearty welcome, and a helpful good time while in that mountain city. One evening session is to be held at Natural Bridge, where a pageant, "The Beginning," will be presented. Christian Endeavorers in Virginia will find it very profitable to attend this convention.

LEADERSHIP COACHING CONFERENCE.

Announcement has been made of the second Round Table of Religious Education to be held at the University of Virginia, as a part of the Institute of Public Affairs on July 9th-15th. The first conference which was held last year proved to be very successful, and the University is inviting church leaders from this area to attend again this year.

Dr. Forest L. Knapp, director of Leadership Training of the International Council of Religious Education, will be the leader of the school, and several other outstanding people in the field of religious education will share in this conference.

The conference is intended to train those who will teach leadership training courses in local churches, or in Standard Leadership Training Schools. Opportunity will be given to fill out course plans under the direction of specialists in the department in which one is interested.

Further information concerning this conference may be had by writing to the editor of this page, or to Rev. Minor C. Miller, State Planters Bank Building, Bridgewater, Va. This writer is eager that a number of our people will avail themselves of this opportunity to prepare to teach in leadership training schools. The State of Virginia is helping us by making possible this training school and teachers.

A PRAYER.

Make me to brave to lie or be unkind,
 Make me too understanding, too, to mind
 The little hurts companions give, and friends,
 The careless hurts that no one quite intends.
 Help me to know
 The inmost hearts of those for whom I care,
 Their secret wishes, all the loads they bear,
 That I may add my courage to their own.
 May I make lonely folks feel less alone:
 And happier ones a little happier, yet,
 May I forget
 What ought to be forgotten; and recall
 Unfailing all
 That ought to be recalled, each kindly thing,
 Forgetting what might sting.
 To all upon my way,
 Day after day,
 Let me be joy, be hope! Let my life sing.

—Mary Carolyn Davies.

DON'T FORGET THIS.

Within a few weeks the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention will be in session. These meetings mean a great deal by way of education, and inspiration to those who attend.

Every church should be represented. It matters not how well the program has been planned, or how much help is given in the convention, only those churches receive direct benefit which are represented at the convention. In these days of strain, churches need all the help they can get. Be sure that your church is represented at the convention.

Every church should report. Unless all the churches do report the convention cannot tell what is being done. The Board of Christian Education is eager to have correct information concerning all our Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies, but its only hope is to get the information which is sent to the conventions. Please see that your report reaches the convention secretary as early as possible.

All churches should pay their dues. The conventions have specified a small sum as dues from the churches. Some of this money is used to carry on the work of the convention, and the remainder of it has been given to the Board of Christian Education, which board is dependent upon the conventions for practically all of its money. If the board is to continue to carry on its work with young people, in leadership training, the distribution of Bibles, summer schools, etc., it will be necessary for the conventions to furnish the money with which it is to work. The conventions cannot do this unless the Sunday Schools send in their dues.

Will you kindly see that your Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society does its part by the conventions as outlined above. This is a real service which any young person, Sunday School teacher, superintendent or pastor can render.

Stay not until you are told of opportunities to do good; inquire after them.—Anon.

—Amen.

It is advisable to have typed copies of the following time analysis chart made and distributed to each person. You may have each one fill out these ahead of time, and also have a copy of the chart on the blackboard. During the discussion fill it out according to what the majority of the group consider a wise division of time:

How Much Time Do You Spend in the Following Ways?

- Sleep.....
- Personal hygiene.....
(Including bath, shaving, care of complexion, nails, etc.)
- Meals.....
- Recitation (if in school),; or Vocation (if employed)
- Self-improvement
- (Including study, reading, painting, practicing on musical instruments.)
- Listening to radio.....
(Indicate what kind of entertainment.)
- Exercise
- Social life
- Private devotions
- How many hours in twenty-four remain unaccounted for Such questions as the following may be used as a part of the discussion:

1. To what extent is the way a person uses his spare time an index to his character?
2. What can I do to improve my free time?
3. If I am not employed or in school, why is there special value in making out a time schedule?
4. To what extent is there danger that one may become shiftless in his use of time because of present conditions?

The world has been turned topsy-turvy in the last four years. Our time schedules have been in the general shake-up. In normal times a day might be broadly divided into three parts: sleep, work or school, recreation and social life. For the majority of young people the usual proportion of time for these three has been thrown out of balance. Never has the problem of how to improve our time been as pressing as it is at the present. The way in which we use this time is truly an index to our character for the responsibility for using it wisely rests entirely upon the individual.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

JESUS ON THE CROSS.

LESSON XI—JUNE 11, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "God commended his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us."—Rom. 5:8.

LESSON TEXT: Mark 15:22-39.

"When I survey the wondrous cross, On which the Prince of Glory died, My richest gain I count but loss And pour contempt on all my pride.

"Were the whole realm of nature mine, That were a present far too small, Love so amazing, so divine Demands my life, my soul, my all."

That is the way Isaac Watts felt when he thought of the Cross of Christ. And that, or in some similar way, is the way an honest and humble man feels as he thinks of Jesus on the Cross. There is something sobering, something awe-inspiring, something divine about it. Men may be ever so boastful and self-satisfied when they think of formal religion, but they feel humble and incomplete when they come into the presence of the Cross of Christ.

The Place Golgotha.

It was called the "place of the skull," probably because it was skull-shaped. It was the place where executions were held, a grim, ghastly place, reserved for putting away criminals in the crude and cruel way of crucifixion. But ever since that day the Son of God went to his death on a cross, Golgotha or Calvary has been one of the world's most sacred places. Christ had a way of sanctifying and making sacred the things he touched and the places he used, and this was as true in his death as in his life.

Wine Mingled With Myrrh.

"And they gave him to drink wine mingled with myrrh, but he received it not." It was a drug, something to deaden pain and to dull the senses, but the Master would have none of it. He went to his death clear-eyed, and clear-headed. He did not draw back from paying the full price. And how much we are indebted to him for his heroism, for had he been drugged we might never have had his words from the Cross, words which are infinitely precious to his followers because of their content.

They Parted His Garments.

When they had crucified him, even while he was hanging in suffering and agony on the Cross, the soldiers were gambling for his garments. And they watched him, apparently taking delight in his suffering.

Two Thieves, One on His Right and One on His Left.

"He was numbered with the transgressors." His executioners heaped all the shame and disgrace on him that they possibly could. They not only crucified him—a form of punishment never meted out to Romans—but they crucified him with thieves or robbers. But there was nothing but pity and love in his heart for those who did him to death. He opened not his mouth, but to pray for them.

"He Cannot Save Himself."

He could have saved himself. He could have come down from the Cross. We take all the meaning and all the moral significance out of the death of Jesus if we think that he was the victim of an inflexible determinism that had no place for his own free choice. He said, "I have power to lay down my life and I have power to take it again." He could have saved himself.

But he could not have saved us if he had saved himself. The reason Christ can save us to the uttermost is because he gave himself to the uttermost. All unconsciously these mocking chief priests were declaring an eternal principle of life. He who saves himself cannot save others. The price which we have to pay for saving others is giving ourselves.

Darkness.

The darkness was not due to an eclipse of the sun. But one can hardly believe that it was mere coincidence. The death of the Son of God might well have been accompanied by natural phenomenon which symbolized the spiritual darkness that had made possible this terrible tragedy.

"Why Hast Thou Forsaken Me?"

It is the only instance in which Jesus seems to feel that God was not intimately near him. It reveals something of what it means to realize that one is without God in the world. And yet in his utter loneliness Jesus calls God, "My God." Here is faith in spite of, and in face of, facts.

"Into Thy Hands I Commend My Spirit."

This is the way in which Luke pictures Jesus as yielding up the spirit. What a significant statement. As he faced the great and unknown adventure, he went out in faith, simply and sincerely committing his spirit into the Father's hands. What a new light this gives on the thing we call death. Death is going on to be with the Father. We are safe in his hands.

The Veil of the Temple Was Rent.

Through Jesus Christ every man and all men have direct access to the Father. There is no veil between the holy place and the holy of holies. Jesus Christ is immediately accessible and available to all those who come to him in penitence and faith.

This Man Was the Son of God.

The centurion had been watching what had been going on. When the end came there was but one thing to be said—this man was the Son of God.

SUNDAY SCHOOL AND C. E. CONVENTION.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, will meet in annual session this year on July 18th, at the Holland Christian Church. A splendid program is being prepared, and will soon be printed in THE SUN. It is hoped that the attendance this year will be large, and that every Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society in the Convention will be represented. The Holland folks are looking for you, and are anxious to welcome all who will come.

The officers and departmental superintendents are urged to get their reports ready, and the schools and C. E. Societies are urged to get their dues and bring the same to the Convention.

Any question relative to the program may be addressed to our Executive Secretary, Rev. R. E. Brittle, Route 1, Suffolk, Va.

Questions relative to the various reports, finance etc., may be addressed to our Recording Secretary, W. H. Baker, 1028 24th St., Newport News, Va.

Let us meet each other at Holland, Tuesday, July 18th, and enjoy our "Greatest Convention Yet."

J. F. MORGAN, President.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

"I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord."—Psalm 116:13.

"The opening of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."—Psalm 119:130.

MONDAY.

THE LIGHT OF GOD'S WORD.

"Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, a light unto my pathway."—Psalm 119:105.

This psalm seems to be the expression of a person who had felt all the unspeakable bitterness of insult, persecution, shame, discouragement, troubles, and exile. But he seems to be one for whom experience did a good work, by throwing him back on God, his ways, and his will.

Today this experience becomes an echo of all Christian people for the whole Bible. A lamp and a light is exactly what they find it to be to them. That guidance in a dark and confused world makes provision for our whole lives; it is the secret of life's true sunshine; it is the light for the course of our thinking and our conduct. With God's word at hand, we should never be in doubt about any practical question with which we have to deal. It will guide us on the true road to everlasting happiness in another life.

Prayer—Our Father, we confess our neglect of thy Word. Turn us to it today and make it our lamp and our light in all things.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE SHINING LIGHT.

"Shining more and more unto the perfect day."—Prov. 4:18.

The function of light is to reveal everything along the way that we may carefully observe everything upon which its rays are falling—the path we tread, the objects we pass, the companions of our journey, the view it gives us of ourselves.

The light which we get from the Bible does the same thing for us mentally, morally and spiritually. It is light transferred from its pages to the inner sanctuary of life in which conscience sits as a guide, and it illuminates the humblest path with the radiance of the just.

The clearest evidence of this shining light is derived from personal experience, when obedience to his word creates an inner sense of reality, consciousness, and power of God. This is a kind of daily consecration which lies within the reach of all. Only let the Holy Scriptures have its assigned place in the regulation of conduct and life, and its light and power will certainly come. This was the reason for Christ saying, "If any man willeth to do his will, he shall know the teaching, whether it be of God, or whether I speak for myself." (Jno. 6:17.)

Prayer—Our Father, help us to give up everything that hinders from coming to thy heart— forbid that we shall care too much for prayers, for hoping, or in any seeking after comforts and feelings which deter us from thee. But enable us just to come to thee with faith in thy word. We promise to do thy holy will so far as we can, to serve thee as well as we can, and, whatever the reward, to do our best for the Master. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

STEPPING IN THE LIGHT.

"Neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy."—Acts 20:24.

There is a way to read the Bible and still be in darkness, and there is a way to read it and experience the light. He who would saunter along easy-handed through its pages will not see the light. God hides himself from that kind of seeker.

We find in the Bible what we seek. If we search it prayerfully we find depths of meaning, heights of glory, abysses of wonder, which one cannot give expression to. It is an inner condition, a revelation of which one is conscious in his Spirit, and which can be imparted only in the same manner. How many a soul who loves God, knows God, has experienced the new birth, cannot express it? Language can but suggest its realities, only those who search the Scripture in this way find it a light that makes one subdue himself and pursue a course which he will finish with joy.

He who does find this light experiences it as a purifier to the soul, a strength to the will in times of temptation, an elevation to thought amid strife, a quickener of spirit in faith and prayer and a continuous inspiration to those who otherwise would be stupefied by the murky damps of life.

Prayer—Dear Father, of heaven, our days' toil will be a failure unless we have a pattern for our labors. We pray for the pattern of life that is divine. We pray that thy will be done in us as it is done by the angels of heaven. We would walk with the King all day. We pray for power to walk in that reality and for power to interpret the Bible in the light of Jesus.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

A BAFFLING PERSONALITY.

"Verily I say unto you, if ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you."—Matt. 17:26.

Read also: Mark 11:23 and Luke 17:6.

A single instance in the life of Jesus exemplifies this spirit. The Disciples and Jesus were visiting the temple and looking it over and no doubt admiring it in a worshipful spirit. The disciples marveled at its size and massiveness. Jesus said, "yes, there shall not be left one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down."

We are prone to be baffled at the size of things and think that they compel us to certain thought and actions. Under such influence one may even submit to evil. That things may be big and compelling is enough for us. It's the city with the biggest population; the State with the overwhelming vote; the store with the biggest sales; the actor with the biggest salary; the hero with the biggest punch; the biggest building; the biggest bank; the preacher with the biggest crowd; and "what have you?" These are things in which popular interest and acclaim run.

The trouble is that we are charmed by the influence of bigness and we think that bigness can do things which it cannot do. None of these things are life nor do they express the meanings of life. Bigness is only quantity and perhaps it may be the most selfish quantities of life. It may be the enemy of personality, and certainly so when it results in the substitution of quantity for quality, and when it results in the substitution of success by any means for straight thinking, straight living and Christian character.

What is your estimate of Christian character? Is it in the amount of work one may do, or in the good that emanates from that one's life? What is your estimate of a successful church? Is it the size of the building, or is it in the reality of a personal touch with God? Is it in the size of the crowd, or is it in the overflow of pure hearts?

More people were in a parade on Coney Island once than engaged in the Crusades of Europe in the Middle Ages—a larger number than has ever gone out as missionaries of Christian faith. What did it mean? Peanuts and popcorn—that's all.

Quality, purpose—a great end in view—and we should march to that end, even though there be but few of us. The five thousand who are fed by Jesus, meant nothing compared to the twelve who were to go out as apostles and change the face of humanity for Jesus.

Prayer—O Lord, Jesus, thou art fairer than ten thousand and altogether lovely. We humble ourselves before thee this day, imploring thee to make and keep us truly thine.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

OUT OF THE QUANDARY.

"Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law."—Psalm 119:18.

This Scripture, prayer of the Psalmist, is the best prayer one may make when he opens the Book. David must have realized in this that it was entirely possible, as Jesus expresses it, to "have eyes and see not."

If one were to hold out a lantern to you and ask you to tell him if there is a light in it, you might convince him that there is, but surely your chiefest concern would be, "is he blind?"

If any one should ask you if the Bible is true, and is it really the light of God which shines there, your pity is excited, that he has to ask some one. Why shouldn't he read and have the inner conviction himself? You may also remember that the Scripture saith, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." Does anyone find himself in that predicament? Then pray in the words of our text.

Prayer—Our Father, as we pray to thee this day, we turn our thoughts to thy word. Help us to ponder thy sayings. Give us holy, loving and grateful thoughts toward Christ, and kind thoughts toward our fellows, devout and contrite thoughts toward God. "The commandments of the Lord are pure, enlightening the eyes," and open thou our eyes.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE UNIVERSAL INVITATION.

"Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest."—Matt. 11:28.

It is a sweet thought that the Bible is for every one. Other books are for the poor, or for the rich, the great and the obscure; but the Bible regards men solely in their relation to God, as heirs to the common mysteries of life and death, of incorruption and immortality. It neither wearies the aged nor repels the child. In it one and all may find a steady flowing light to their souls. No other book says, "Come unto me and find rest."

The fact that all can read the Word and find rest, peace, wisdom and light, is evidence of its being the Word of God. All people are in substantial agreement on its teachings. We never heard of one critic who has denied the power of RELIGION IN THE HOME OF CHILDHOOD.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"And they brought unto him also infants, that he would touch them."—Luke 18:15.

Goethe tells the story of how Marie Antoinette passed through Strausburg on her way to Paris. Before her arrival in Strausburg a regulation was made prohibiting "deformed persons, cripples, or disgusting invalids" from showing themselves along her route. Goethe says he contrasted this with the advent of Christ, "who seemed to wander through the world for the special sake of the sick, and the lame."

It was on just such an occasion, when the sick and the blind, and the poor and crippled were being brought to Jesus that he might touch them, that something new occurred.

I. They brought unto him little children also. It was that little word "also" that gave me pause when I re-read this text. They had been bringing the sick to Jesus. And how he healed them! How he loved them, and had compassion on them! The blind had found their way to him. The lepers had been healed by his command. Sinners had been dragged in mockery before him, and yet in tender compassion he had forgiven them. "And at even when the sun did set, they brought unto him all that were diseased, and them that were possessed with devils. And all the city was gathered together at the door. And he healed many that were sick of divers diseases, and cast out many devils" (Mark 1:32-34). On many other occasions they brought unto Jesus their sick, or infirm. Indeed, as Goethe says, it seemed that Jesus wandered about the world for the special sake of the sick, and the lame.

But now how refreshing! They are bringing their children unto him also! It was just another case of Jesus being different—divinely different. They were saying: "Our children: Let us bring them to him, that he may touch them, and bless them.

Such events as this, wherein the children were brought to Jesus, has caught the imagination of many of the great artists, and their canvasses have been used to tell the story. How the world has been improved with this urge to have the children come into contact with Jesus. It was the beginning of a great movement, when adult planning for vital religion began to concern itself with childhood.

II. The children are hindered in their approach to Jesus. It will be easy for us to criticize the friends of Jesus who sought to keep the children from coming to him, but let us remember that those friends were living under that philosophy of life which did not give very large place to children. It would be interesting to know the death-rate of babies in Palestine in the time of Jesus. Their little lives did not mean so much as we are accustomed to thinking they mean. The very fact of Jesus gives a new meaning to childhood.

And so the children were hindered in their approach to Jesus. The disciple rebuked those who brought them. But how much greater the sins of our day that hinder children in their approach to Jesus! There are many children being brought to him today, and you are in the group of those who delight to bring them. But even so we are all aware of the great numbers that are not brought. What are some of the obstacles in their way?

Selfishness. Selfishness is the first great sin. Young fathers and mothers wish to gratify their own pleasure and consequently they sleep on Sunday morning when the church bells are pleading for their children. Or they wish for themselves an outing, and forgetting the real needs of the child, hie away to the country, or to grandmother's or turn their child over to someone to keep for them. And the child misses all the sacred beauty of the holy Sabbath day.

Carelessness stands in the way of many a child's approach to the heavenly Father. Carelessness of parents toward the church, and the Sunday School, carelessness toward worship in the home, grace at the table, childhood prayers, religious instruction, and worship in giving, are all easily neglected by many young parents. They have had their mothers' and fathers' religion on which to lean; they have been intensely interested in each other and their friends! their mothers' and fathers' homes still seem their own homes; not fully have they realized that they are establishing new homes, and new families, and that a first duty now calls them to the training and development of their own children even as their parents have trained and developed them; and without fully realizing it, they are neglecting some of the very most vital things of babyhood and childhood.

And shall I add still another obstacle to our warning? And one of the greatest of them all? Friends! Neighbor So-and-So is coming to see us Sunday, so we cannot take little Bobby to Sunday School; or our friends kept us up so late Saturday night we cannot be at church in time for Sunday School; or mother has asked us to come down there Sunday, and we feel like we must go. Yes, and older mothers are oftentimes wondering why you parents do not take a vital interest in the church in the city where you now live, even as you were carried to church when you were small! Young parents cannot be interrupted from the choir, the class, the congregation constantly, and yet keep an increasing interest in the church both for themselves and their children.

Is it necessary to add that your minister makes these observations out of a heart full of love for you; a definite interest in your welfare, and the welfare of your family, as he must account before God and conscience; and that he and the church stand for the home, and the family? He believes in filial devotion—it is basic in religion; but God has given you your baby as an eternal trust; it is clay in your hands, and please God, may those hands be gentle and strong! For the whole character, culture, and career of your child is too great a concern to be trifled with.

Lord of life and King of Glory,
Who didst deign a child to be;
Cradled in a mother's bosom,
Throned upon a mother's knee,
For the children thou hast given
We must answer unto thee.
Grant us, then, pure hearts and patient
That in all we do or say,
Little souls our deeds may copy,
And be never led astray;
Little feet our steps may follow
In a safe and narrow way.

III. That He Should Touch Them. That divine touch, how glorious, how great for babyhood and childhood! Those young mothers and fathers had seen the effects of the gentle touch of Jesus upon the sick and the lame. It had healed and blessed. Broken bodies became strong, broken lives became whole. Help? Was there ever a young mother, or young father with their very own baby in their arms that did not have a yearning eternal and from within for help? For some source of infinite wisdom; for some power of infinite guidance young parents have ever lifted up their hearts.

Has it never occurred to you that those young parents in bringing their little ones to Jesus, brought also themselves into very close contact with him?

There is no greater wish I could make for you, young parents, than that you might have a close and abiding companionship with the living Spirit of our Lord, Jesus Christ. You will have problems beyond the wisdom of the experts, either in church, or school, or social science; some day you

Dear Friends:

Harvest time is always interesting. The golden grain fully matured and ready for the reaper. It has stood the storms of winter, the cold and the heat, the sunshine and the rain, the sleet and the snow, but it pulled through to the harvest, clean and golden in all its purity and beauty. How beautiful to behold.

We, too, grow from childhood to manhood, and on through the journey of life. We fight the battles of life as they confront us, like the golden grain fights the elements, as they battle from time to time.

But the question is, when we reach the harvest and are ready for the sickle of time, will we be as beautiful in maturity as the golden grain? The most beautiful thing in the world is not gold or silver, or beautiful clothes. It is a beautiful life—as pure and sweet at the harvest as it was in the beginning.

This writer had the joy of visiting "Uncle" Wellons just a few days before he passed away, and he held my hand in his and pulled me down close to his face, as he could not talk above a whisper. We will never forget the feeling that came over us. We felt like we were talking to one on the other side of the river, and could but hear him faintly, as he whispered back to us. We felt as if we were on sacred ground.

The thought came to us, "Ready for the harvest." So beautiful and golden at the finish of life's race. Not rich in this world's goods, but rich in good deeds done, rich in God's love, rich in the spirit of righteousness, rich in a beautiful life lived.

How will it be with us, dear friends, when we reach the harvest?

its pages to quicken faith, to renew hope. To start the impulse of prayer, to turn the life into affections, and furnish man unto every good work.

Prayer—O Lord, our God, make thy light to shine along our pathway and light us home to thee.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

"His roots are wrapped about the stone-heap."
—Read Job 8:11-22.

Occasionally a tree sends forth a root which, instead of radiating from the tree, encircles the trunk. As the root grows larger it cuts into the bark, preventing the circulation of sap, killing the trunk above it, and affording a nesting area for destructive insects and fungi. If the root is not cut away in time, it strangles the entire tree. Thus it is with many a life. Its interests, instead of reaching out into the world of helpful action, merely circle about the soul in selfishness. "What I shall eat, what I shall drink, wherewithal shall I be clothed"—such things as these, fill a self-centered life.

The process is suicidal. What we need is the inflow of sap from all the world. Every man, if he would live, must love God and his neighbor. He must have radiating roots.

Prayer—God of love, teach us to give ourselves wholly to other men and to thy world. Then will men and the world give themselves wholly to us, even as thou dost give thyself to us.—Amen.

are likely to stand helpless before your favorite doctor, and he helpless by the bedside of your baby—then you will need Jesus. And as the weeks pass, and the health of your child is again assured, you will come to realize that every day brings problems of soul development which will need above all things else that divine touch.

Jesus was pleased with the young parents of Palestine who flocked to him with their precious children. He will be none the less pleased with you for seeking him with yours. With his help the obstacles in their way in his days were removed, and with his help you will be able to secure for your children an inward grace, and strength, and power which the world cannot give, nor take away.

THE PRAYING HEART.

Dr. Len G. Broughton says: "The man who is living the life of victory is living the prayer life, because the Spirit is constantly forming in him prayers that are after the will of God, and while he may not be constantly dropping down on his knees, he is in that relation with the Holy Spirit where the prayer is formed in his desire, and as he goes about his business there is the prayer desire that goes out to God. That is the man who gets things from heaven; that is the man the devil hates, but, thank God, he cannot overcome a soul that has been thus given over to God." Selected.

WEBSTER.

On March 12, 1933, God in his infinite wisdom saw fit to call one of our most faithful members, Mrs. Maggie Phillips Webster, from her home here to her home above. Therefore, be it resolved:

First: That we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things wisely and well.

Second: That we will cherish in our memory her unflinching generosity, her deep and abiding interest in her church and societies, and may we be inspired to higher aims and ideals.

Third: That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family and loved ones in their great sorrow, and assure them that earth has no sorrow which heaven cannot heal.

Fourth: That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to The Christian Sun for publication and a copy placed on the records of our society.

God in his infinite wisdom and love, has called from her earthly habitation to a heavenly home, our beloved friend and co-worker, Mrs. J. J. Busick. She was a devoted member of the Earnest Workers Sunday School Class, also president and a loyal member of the Ladies' Aid Society of Hines' Chapel Christian Church.

Her activities in connection with the work of this Society were of inestimable value, and her willingness to work in the Master's vineyard endeared her to all with whom she labored, and to whom she ministered.

There is a vacancy that cannot be filled, but we know that our loss is her eternal gain; therefore, be it resolved:

1. That while we mourn the loss of this good woman, we know that God doeth all things well, and we bow in humble submission to his divine will.

2. That we hold in loving remembrance her faithfulness, her loyalty to the church she loved and her willingness at all times to do something for the cause of Christ.

3. That we extend to her family our deepest sympathy and love, realizing the husband has lost a faithful wife, the children a loving mother, the Ladies' Aid Society an earnest worker, and the church a sincere member.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the local paper, a copy to "The Christian Sun," and one be spread on the records of the Ladies' Aid Society.

LANE.

Mrs. J. W. Lane, the subject of this sketch, was born February 14, 1876, and died May 8, 1933. Sister Lane leaves to mourn her loss, a devoted husband, two children, 1 grandchild, 4 brothers, 3 sisters, and a host of other relatives and friends. She was a fine Christian woman—a noble, sweet-spirited soul.

Always ready to show kindness and mercy to those who were really in need. She was true to her home, to her church and to her God. Her home was the preacher's home. It was indeed a pleasure to visit her.

The husband and children, the doctors, nurses and friends did all that was possible to keep her, but the Father called and she went triumphantly away. It was sad to the weeping ones, but joyful to her. Our loss is her eternal gain.

She was laid to rest in the cemetery at Longdale, Ala., beside the tomb of a darling babe that preceded her several years ago.

The funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. J. D. Dollar and Rev. A. H. Sheppard. Peace to her ashes and may God comfort the bereaved until the resurrection morn.

"Sister, thou wast mild and lovely,
Gentle as the summer breeze;
Pleasant as the air of evening,
As it floats among the trees.
Dearest sister, thou hast left us,
Here thy loss we deeply feel,
But 'tis God who has bereft us—
He can all our sorrows heal."

Auto Cause of Crime!—

Calvin Goddard, head of the scientific crime detection laboratory of Northwestern University, believes that the motor car should bear the blame for much crime that is usually laid to the pistol. He says: "It is the rapid means of escape afforded by the auto that makes possible much of modern crime. A law forbidding any person convicted of a crime of violence from riding in an auto, under heavy penalty, would solve the problem overnight." All one would have to do then would be to catch the rider! Mr. Goddard, how would you suggest doing that?

Co-Education in America Holds Centenary Celebration.—

At Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio, there is being celebrated this week the centenary of co-education in America. When colleges in this country admitted men only, Oberlin opened its hand-hewn doors to the co-ed. Oberlin is one of the few private, non-sectarian schools in the country today. Perhaps a tenth of the children of America go to private schools, but out of this two and a quarter million, there are only about 60,000 who are not in schools with church or denominational connection, and in a vast majority of cases with a Roman Catholic school.

Where St. Paul Stood.—

The Cathedral of St. John the Divine, in New York City, was recently the recipient of a piece of stone from the Aeropagus, said to be cut from the rock on which St. Paul stood when preaching his sermon on Mars Hill to the Athenians. The gift is from Archbishop Chrysostomos of Athens, and the official presentation of the stone will take place this afternoon at a public service in the cathedral. A statement from the authorities of the cathedral issued recently, says: "The gift is of great significance, both historically and religiously. It is presented as a symbol of the close fellowship between the historic Catholic Churches of the East and the churches of the Anglican communion throughout the world."

What Would You Give for It?—

In the art exhibit at the Chicago World's Fair is a portrait from the Louvre in Paris, lent by the French government. It is Whistler's famous portrait of his mother. This portrait was painted in 1871, sixty-two years ago, and was exhibited in Chicago in 1880. It was offered for sale at $1,200, but no one bought it. Three years later it was exhibited in Paris, and was bought by the French government for 4,000 francs, then equivalent to about $800. The cost to Chicago's art committee for transportation, insurance, etc., to exhibit the picture is about $5,000, or more than eight times the original purchase price of the picture. Today it is valued at a half-million dollars. What would you give for it?

How Words Change.—

When Shakespeare tells one of a man's demerits it is praise that he is giving, but today a demerit is the bane of every school boy and school girl. Another good example of words that change their meaning is "engine." Today an engine is a machine, something apart from man. Originally it signified "natural talent, ingenuity, or skill," the word being derived from the Latin words in, in, and gigno, to produce. Thus, Chaucer tells us that "A man hath sapiences three, memory, engine and intellect also." The meaning has gradually changed until "engine" has ceased entirely to concern man, the producer, and has become the machine, the product of man's brain.

More Current from Less Coal.—

A bulletin from the Department of the Interior tells us: "The increase in efficiency in the use of coal, oil, and gas, in the generation of electricity, which has been accomplished consistently each year since 1919, was continued in 1932. The average amount of oil and coal-equivalent of oil and gas consumed in generating 1 kilowatt-hour of electricity at public utility plants was 1.50 pounds. In 1919 the consumption of coal per kilowatt-hour was 3.20 pounds. The steady continuation of this increase in efficiency, especially during these three years of unfavorable load conditions, speaks well for the operators of power plants." When it is considered that over 83 billion kilowatt-hours of electricity were produced in the United States in 1932, the savings due to this increased efficiency are seen to assume vast proportions.

King George Plays Host to Nations.—

On Monday of this week, London was draped with the flags of sixty-six nations. On noon of that day the World Economic Conference convened in the great hall of the new Geological Museum in South Kensington, with Prime Minister MacDonald presiding. The speech making and the flag flying act has been passed through, and possibly by this time the delegates have settled down to business. At any rate, it is time they had, for, as President Roosevelt has said: "If normal life is to be resumed, the World Economic Conference must be made a success. It must not only meet soon, but come to its conclusions quickly." Sir Walter Slater, British economist, has said: "The London conference may determine the main direction of the world economic policy for some generations to come." This blunt statement isn't far from truth, and the folks back home are waiting eagerly the results.

China Gains Morale.—

The New York Times thinks that the undeclared war between Japan and China may not be entirely without its benefits to the Chinese people. It says: "China has surprised the world and very likely herself by refusing to follow up the Japanese truce with a civil war of her own. Only a few weeks ago, when Tokyo's armies were sweeping over North China, people said that there would be no peace with Japan because no party in China could make such a peace and stand up against the wrath of the Chinese people. But the Nanking Government signed a truce which seems to have found general acceptance in the country. The hammer blows of the Japanese invader may thus have begun the welding of Chinese unity. Japan's case before the world is based chiefly on the contention that China is not a nation but a riot. That charge may well have pierced through the crust of factional and personal selfishness to the core of Chinese pride.

Maritime Eyes Look to Pacific.—

From the Pasadena, Calif., Star-News, we glean the following, apropos of increased shipping activity in the Pacific: "Norway, among other nations ranking high in world commerce, is commissioning ships to augment its operations in the Pacific. One Norwegian company, Westfal-Larsen, within the last three years has built eight liners for this special trade; these out of a thirty-ship fleet. All told, the line operates fifteen units on Pacific routes. When Great Britain, France, Germany and Italy are following similar policies for the building up of their Pacific connections, with faster and larger vessels, and with increased refrigeration space for the handling of perishable products from California, Oregon, and Washington, there is reason to accept this composite judgment of the world's greatest shipping interests as sound, and as prophetic of a vast expansion of trade during the immediate future."

"Peace Ballot" Postage Stamps.—

The Government of the Netherlands recently issued what might be termed a "peace ballot" stamp. This stamp, bearing a dove of peace inside a six-pointed star, may be bought and used instead of the regular governmental stamp, and the extent of its use will thus become a measure of the Dutch people's desire for international harmony. The suggestion for this stamp came from an American, J. W. Hamilton, of St. Paul, Minn. Mr. Hamilton, in explaining his theory of the peace stamp, says: "Authorities agree that it will be distinctly worth while for the people of any nation to have the opportunity to do something personally in behalf of peace," and he believes the peace stamp to be the best possible means by which "people can constantly and in the eyes of the world voice their horror of war. Other countries said to be interested in the new stamps are Australia, Canada, China, Cuba, Germany, Italy, Lithuania, Mexico, Newfoundland and the United States.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Without the Bible man would be in the midst of a sandy desert, surrounded on all sides by a dark and impenetrable horizon.—Daniel Webster.

One of the three distinguished and worthy men to receive the Doctor of Divinity degree at the recent Elon Commencement, was Rev. John Leslie Lobingier, Boston, Mass. Dr. Lobingier was a welcome visitor at our recent Commencement and made many friends and acquaintances who were glad to see him honored.

New York State, as was expected, voted overwhelmingly for repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, being the sixth State to take such action. The vote was state-wide, the 150 delegates being elected at large. Tammany, Alfred Smith, Dr. Butler, Mrs. Sabin and President Roosevelt are all happy.—Methodist Protestant Recorder.

His correspondents and friends will now address him as "Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, Durham, N. C.," the trustees of Elon College having honored the institution in granting to this one of her worthy and cultured sons the degree of Doctor of Divinity, which Dr. Harrell will wear with credit to himself and honor to the institution that gave the degree.

Our congratulations are heartily extended to our former neighbor and good friend, Dr. N. G. Newman, Jr.: "Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Pliny Chamberlain request the honor of your presence at the marriage of their daughter Nancy to Dr. Nathaniel Gross Newman, Jr., on Friday afternoon, June 13th, at 4:30 o'clock, 1228 Windsor Ave., Windsor, Conn."

This in a letter just to hand from one deeply interested in missions: "Our Missionary Society is planning to collect what we can and send to you in the near future for the Crucible Service. Some have planned to send some heirlooms, believing they will do more good in sending the gospel to the unreached than they will hidden away and passe don to another generation."

Rev. B. H. Watkins, pastor United Church, Lynchburg, is much encouraged with the activity and progress of our Lynchburg Church. The pastor has especially emphasized the mid-week prayer meeting, reporting that there was an average attendance in March of 35; April, 45; May, 78. The goal for the Sunday School is 100. Ninety-five were present last Sunday. Brother Watkins is enjoying the work at Lynchburg.

We are happy, indeed, to receive the first missionary offering, amount $4.00, from our United Church, Winston-Salem. This is a good beginning and in the right direction. Rev. Wm. T. Scott, pastor, reports that the building is rapidly going up and now nearing completion, and he lives in the hope of having an opening service in the new building by the second Sunday in July. Brother Scott is much gratified with the work and its progress.

The North Carolina Christian Advocate gives this warning to its readers, also to statesmen and nigh-statesmen: "The folks who are falling over themselves to get on the liquor wagon in North Carolina would do well to have a care. There is a day of reckoning coming. Many are far gone from the men and women who put the grog shop out of business, but not all. The day of retribution is sure to follow when conscience is stirred and moral conviction asserts itself."

The Eastern North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention will meet with the Wake Chapel Sunday School, Fuquay Springs, N. C., at 10 A. M., July 11th, and is scheduled to adjourn by noon of July 12th. Rev. R. A. Whitten, president, is anxious that delegates be elected from all schools and conventions constituting the body, and that the per capita contribution of the schools be sent to Mr. C. H. Stephenson, treasurer, Raleigh, N. C., or brought to the convention. A splendid program is promised and confidence is expressed that the convention will measure up to the high standard of other days.

Rev. Harry K. Eversull, pastor of Walnut Hills Congregational Church, Cincinnati, Ohio, had already won the hearts and esteem of an Elon College audience by a visit and the delivery of a great sermon during the past term. So when he came back to commencement to preach the baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class, he was welcomed with the cordiality and the glad, glad greetings of an expectation that was more than met in the message that he brought. Already having won his M. A. and B. D. degrees, Elon College Trustees did a worthy and meritorious deed in conferring the Doctor of Divinity degree. The baccalaureate sermon is promised and is to be published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and through its reading, Dr. Eversull will be introduced to a wider audience who will know him with real profit.

Mrs. F. E. Bullock, formerly of Suffolk and whom so many SUN readers recall with pleasure, writes from Trotwood, Ohio, where she is pastor of the Christian Church, and gives this bit of interesting information: "It was a joy to see Chaplain and Mrs. H. E. Rountree once more, they being on their way to the Pacific Coast where Chaplain Rountree has been transferred. They made us a flying visit, and the night before the Eldredges, Dayton, Ohio, invited all the Southerners, real and adopted, to meet at their (Eldredge's) home. Those present were the Truitts, Howsares, Bullocks, Denisons, Cottens (from Eaton), Lighbournes (from Troy), Rev. and Mrs. E. B. Flory (formerly of Berkley, Va.). Also in the gathering were Rev. and Mrs. A. W. Sparks, Dr. and Mrs. W. P. Minton, Rev. and Mrs. J. C. DeRemer. It was, indeed, a delightful gathering."

THE SUN's editor remembers with kindest feelings the loyalty and devotion to his church, in Durham many years ago, of Bro. L. W. K. Faucette. The following from the Suffolk, Va., correspondent of the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot, of June 10th, tells of the passing of a good and faithful man: "The body of L. W. K. Faucette, of Durham, N. C., who died at the home of his niece, Mrs. J. M. Roberts, of Windsor, where this afternoon funeral services were held in the First Christian Church, by Dr. Stanley C. Harrell. The Burial was in Durham cemetery. Surviving Mr. Faucette are the following nieces and nephews: Misses Ella and Effie Beale, Mrs. J. E. West and E. C. Beale, of Suffolk; Mrs. L. G. Farrar, of Roanoke; Miss Lela Moring, Mrs. H. W. Boone, Miss Mary Faucette and Mrs. D. S. Chapman, of Durham; B. J. Faucette, of New York, and A. M. Moring, of Durham."

Rev. R. L. Williamson has resigned as pastor of our Winchester, Va., Church. Under date of June 5th, Brother Williamson writes: "I am leaving Winchester at the close of the Conference year" (the Conference year closes in August). "I offered my resignation at the board meeting last Wednesday night. The church here is well organized, with a fine leadership, in many respects. I have no plans for the immediate future. I entered the ministry the last year of my college course, becoming pastor of Union Grove Church" (Western North Carolina Conference) "in 1904. Since that time I am grateful that I have not been in the class of the unemployed for one day. I feel that if the Lord wishes me to continue in the active ministry, He will direct me to a field." Brother Williamson is one of our most faithful and beloved pastors, and is well known as a competent and successful preacher. He should not be allowed for a day to be among the unemployed.

Since at many church colleges and schools there seems to be a demand on the part of some students to be allowed to dance, etc., the following from the Biblical Recorder, in reporting the commencement and the action of the trustees at Wake Forest last week, may be of interest: "Another action of the trustees will be most heartily approved by the Baptists of the State, and that is, the declaration that dancing will not be tolerated at Wake Forest or be permitted to be sponsored under the name of the college. We take this to mean that if young men feel that they are obliged to dance they had better go to some other institution, but if after all they come to Wake Forest they must not use the college name to give respectability to their sport. Wake Forest has another purpose, and that is to train men for Christian service in harmony with the ideals of our Baptist people; to these ideals dancing is abhorrent. As one of our ablest and most distinguished men has said: 'Possibly with dancing and similar social diversions allowed and fostered, Wake Forest could still be a great college, but one thing is certain, it would no longer be a Baptist college.'"

COMING CONFERENCES.

Succeeding the Blue Ridge, North Carolina, Missionary Education Conference, the first Blue Ridge Leadership Training Conference will be held June 20th-28th. The Conference will be under the direction of the Southeast Convention of Congregational-Christian Churches and the Southern Seminary Foundation (affiliated with Vanderbilt University School of Religion.)

Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, of Washington, D. C., will be chairman and chaplain of the Conference, and Dr. Wm. A. Harper of Vanderbilt University School of Religion will be dean of the faculty. All courses will be based on International Council of Religious Education credit. Among the faculty members will be Dr. Howell D. Davies, of Chicago; Prof. Wm. A. Harper; Dr. Malcolm Dana, of Yale Divinity School; President Wm. J. Campbell, of the Southern Seminary Foundation, Vanderbilt University and Dr. Ernest M. Halliday, of New York City.

The Conference will function on a five-fold basis:

1. The General Conference courses of study.
2. The ministers' and other workers' groups.
3. The Student Summer Service Seminars.
4. The Rural Life Executive group.
5. The Seminar on Children's Work.

Plans are under consideration for a six weeks' course in 1934, under the direction of the Southern Seminary Foundation, which will include the regular summer conference and receive university recognition. For further information of the 1934 conference, address Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, 933 Woodward Building, Washington, D. C.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

ELON COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT DAY BY DAY.

SUN readers everywhere are deeply interested, or should be, in Elon College, which interest finds its climax in the annual commencement exercises when half a hundred, more or less, of our fine, young men and women are commissioned to go out into life to begin their activities, with four years of strenuous college training behind them, and with the privileges and prospects of a busy and successful life before them.

Mr. C. M. Cannon, business manager and correspondent of the College, furnished daily for the press an account of the commencement exercises, from which we give SUN readers a comprehensive idea of what took place at the 43rd Commencement:

June 4th—Baccalaureate exercises of the 43rd Commencement of Elon College began Sunday morning with the sermon to the graduating class by Dr. Harry K. Eversull, pastor of the Walnut Hills Congregational Church, Cincinnati, Ohio. In the evening, President L. E. Smith delivered the baccalaureate address. Both were heard by large audiences.

In his sermon to the graduating class, Dr. Eversull stressed the need of a spiritual interpretation of the historical record of man and of the phenomena of the physical universe. "To live a successful life," the speaker told the Seniors, "men must be able to see an intelligible purpose in the universe. If education does not lead to that end, it is failure," he declared.

President Smith spoke on "Facing the Future," in his final message to the class. "Although this is a day of questionings and doubts, and although the future may not seem inviting to the college graduates," he said, "you must go out with a decision and a determination to find your place and fill it with commendation. The future holds the opportunity to rebuild a world whose structures have been partially impaired or totally wrecked."

In the afternoon, Miss Elizabeth Barney and Mr. Fletcher Moore appeared in a joint piano and organ recital. The performances of both the young artists showed skill and talent.

On Saturday night the three-act comedy, "Tangled Tales," was presented before a large audience which highly appreciated the rollicking humor of this farce. Mr. Martin Ritt, of New York City, was the outstanding character. Other students taking part in the production were: Patricia Holden, Virginia Jay, James Rising, Naomi Steed, Jape Rawls, William Cooper, Elmina Rhodes, Marjorie Jamouneau, Iris Albright, Ethel Booker, and Walter Latham. The play was given under the direction of Miss Virginia Fitzhugh, of the Expression Department of the College.

June 5th—Commencement exercises continued with the class day program in the morning, exhibits of the Art and Home Economics Departments in the afternoon, and a presentation of "Hiawatha's Wedding Feast" by the Music Department in the evening.

The class day exercises of the morning were presided over by Mr. Wilkes Lowe, Jr., president of the Class of '33. Mr. Lowe also spoke the welcome address to the audience. Miss Mary Sue Rawls gave the class history; Miss Elizabeth Barney the, class poem; Mr. Carl R. Key, the class prophecy; Mr. E. L. Moffitt, Jr., the last will and testament; and Mr. Sam Ramsey distributed the gifts. The class then marched from the auditorium to the "Senior Oak," where the senior mantle was delivered to Mr. Robert Kimball, rising senior president. The exercises were concluded by the singing of the College song, "Here's to Dear Old Elon."

In the evening, the Elon Festival Chorus, directed by Prof. Dwight Steere, rendered "Hiawatha's Wedding Feast," by Coleridge-Taylor, words by Longfellow, a cantata for chorus and tenor solo. Mr. J. Oliver Beard sang the tenor part. Miss Helen Barney was at the piano and Mr. Fletcher Moore at the organ. A large audience greeted and was delighted by this excellent rendition.

The art exhibit was held in the Alamance Building in the Art Studio. The pupils, under Miss Lila Newman, exhibited paintings and drawings that they had done during the year, as well as china and other art work. The Domestic Science Department served tea and cakes during the exhibit.

June 6th—Governor J. C. B. Ehringhaus, just up from his sick bed, delivered an address at the Elon College Commencement this morning at 11:30. This address was in connection with the Alumni Day services and regular finals program.

Governor Ehringhaus stated that his visit to the college was attended by some physical discomfort which had caused him to be a few minutes late for his appointment, but he was very happy that he was able to make the trip and speak to the good people of the community on this occasion. However, physical pain did not dim the eloquence of the Governor's oration.

Speaking of the worth-while things in life, His Excellency gave three fundamental laws: The Law of Work, the Law of Ideas, and the Law of Ideals, as the great influences in the molding of individual character. Dr. Leon Edgar Smith, president of Elon College, introduced the speaker as 'a great governor of a great state,' and assured the governor that the people of this community had been anxiously awaiting this visit.

Governor Ehringhaus paid tribute to the traditions and service Elon College had rendered the State of North Carolina, and glorious tribute to the people of this community and the entire State in their patience and cooperation with him and his associates in their efforts to serve the State in these trying times. He stated that this was a great moment in the lives of the members of the graduating class; a great moment for the citizenship of the State in receiving the young people who are finishing their college course and entering into the life and responsibilities of their respective communities.

He stated that the laws of the universe and the laws governing the physical sciences, the orderly rules of everything with which we come in contact, were but the work of God. He urged the young people to master the fundamental laws that develop character, and when they had done this, they would have gone a long way on the road they are to travel in life—and to success.

In discussing his fundamental laws for development of character which he gave as work, ideas and ideals, he said there was no place for laziness or indolence among our citizenry. "The law of motion is the law of life. Inaction forecasts death. From the past comes the notion that work is a degradation and a badge of inferiority, but that we have come to learn that work is a fundamental blessing. The new philosophy glorifies work and the working man."

In discussing the law of ideas Governor Ehringhaus stated that there was a fundamental desire for learning on the part of everyone, and that learned men and women were constantly searching for new ideas. "Thought is God inspired and enables man to reach out into the infinite." He urged the students to "think of ideas as great things, heaven born, leading to great influence in the life of the individual and the welfare of the community. From the most humble ideas, oftentimes come the greatest blessings."

"In the law of ideals," he declared, "all of us are following some ideal, which ideal is the greatest motivating force in our lives. The following of an ideal develops honesty, patriotism, purity and integrity. Those men in history and in our own time who have achieved greatness are those who are following and reaching after an ideal." In concluding his address the Governor declared that these three laws developing individuality were the basic values the colleges were teaching so effectively. "The measure of a man or woman is the value of his or her service to his fellowman. The man lives the best and happiest who works the best, thinks the best and follows the highest ideals."

On this program, the Elon Singers rendered two outstanding musical numbers, "O, Hush Thee, My Babe," by Sullivan, and "Italian Street Song," by Herbert. Also Mr. Fletcher Moore and Miss Virginia Dare Black gave solo numbers in piano and voice.

Following the address of the Governor, a barbecue luncheon was served on the college campus. The remainder of the day was given over to the Alumni Association for its business meeting in the afternoon and banquet and the alumni address by Prof. Alonzo C. Hall, of the Class of 1910, of the English Department of N. C. C. W., at Greensboro.

June 7th—Elon College 43rd Commencement came to a close today with the awarding of degrees and the delivery of the literary address by Dr. Malcolm McDermott, of the Duke University Law School, before a large and enthusiastic audience.

The Bachelor of Arts degree was conferred on 45 candidates. The honorary degree of Bachelor of Divinity was conferred upon three distinguished ministers of the Congregational-Christian Church: the Reverend Harry K. Eversull, of Cincinnati, Ohio; the Reverend Stanley C. Harrell, of Durham, N. C.; and the Reverend John L. Lobingier, of Boston, Mass.

Miss Elizabeth Barney, of Elon College, was announced as valedictorian and Mr. Carl R. Key, of Hemp, N. C., as salutatorian.

"Man's destiny is determined neither by his heredity nor by his environment," declared Dr. McDermott in his address to the class, "but by his own will power. Man's character, life, and actions must be determined within himself, not by any external influence."

The speaker said that the subject of his address was the biggest thing he knew about, the thing of most concern to the American nation. "This," he declared, "is not the matter of the stock market, or of going on or off the gold standard; but the matter of developing the youth of the land into clean, upright, God-fearing men and women."

Dr. McDermott stressed his doctrine of the individual man's responsibility for working out his own destiny. "No man can be made moral by law," he declared. "Furthermore, no college or university faculty can educate a man. He must educate himself."

The academic procession entered to the music of the March "Pontificale," played by Fletcher Moore, of Burlington, N. C. The chorus of 50 voices sang "Psalm 150," immediately preceding the literary address.

Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, on behalf of the college, presented the members of the graduating class with Bibles as gifts from the college.

Alumni officers elected Tuesday afternoon at the business session were: M. L. Patrick, of High Point, N. C., president; W. G. Stoner, of Greensboro, N. C., vice-president; Mrs. C. M. Cannon, of Elon College, N. C., secretary-treasurer; Mrs. Glenn Holder, of Greensboro, N. C., alumni orator for 1934; and Mrs. Lloyd Bray, of Pittsburgh, Pa., alternate orator.

Prof. Alonzo C. Hall, of the Woman's College of the University of North Carolina, Greensboro, N. C., delivered the Alumni Address Tuesday evening at 6 o'clock. His subject was the Americanization of American Literature." He traced the history of American literature, showing that national characteristics developed early. He said that the literature evolved and expanded as the nation grew. In 1886, America and American literature were definitely developing under their own resources. Edgar Allen Poe was the first American writer to catch the American spirit. Walt Whitman has followed Poe in Americanizing our literature.

FARM RELIEF.

The farmers need relief. They deserve it. There will be little sure and safe relief to other enterprises until they get it. They are the foundation of our economic system. Other industries do not prosper until and unless the farmer prospers. This is the history of our country through the years that are gone.

Moreover, many, many farmers have worked hard through the long hours of the long days, of the long months, the past four long years, only to see mortgages placed upon their homes and land, debts which they could not avoid, increase, and taxes, which they could not pay, pile up against them. Their honest toil kept them out of the bread line, but it could not keep them out of the debt line. They were caught between the upper and the nether mill-stones by conditions for which they were not responsible, and against which they could not defend themselves. No wonder, therefore, that our government seeks desperately in this desperate time to bring farm relief. The Farm Relief Bill, which is the widest in scope and power of any act ever passed by our national congress, became law on May 12th, when the President affixed his signature to it. No law involving so much and reaching in so many directions, and conferring such power upon one man, was ever before enacted in this country. Not only does it relate to, and embrace, the matter of farm products, prices and mortgages, but it is buttressed by granting powers to control the national currency, the content of gold in a dollar, the coinage of silver, and at what ratio.

Under the bill, the President has the right to reduce the content of the gold dollar to an amount not exceeding fifty per cent and to fix the weight of the silver dollar, and the President may order unlimited coinage of gold and silver. The President may have the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase $3,000,000,000 in government obligations against which currency may be issued. Another $3,000,000,000 may be issued in new currency, this to be retired at the rate of four per cent per annum. And then along with this preparation and the wherewith to bring relief to the farmers, the President and the Secretary of Agriculture may direct a $2,000,000,000 Federal Bank bond issue, with a guaranteed interest rate of four per cent for loans to farmers with which to re-finance farm mortgages. The President, by the aid of the Secretary of Agriculture, may fix a "processing" tax on wheat, cotton, rice, hogs, tobacco, sugar cane, sugar beets, and dairy products.

Immediately that the bill was enacted and the President had affixed his signature, all owners of farm mortgages were asked officially to abstain from foreclosure proceedings until this bill had an opportunity to function.

If any of us doubt that we have entered upon a new day, and an experiment that is different, then let that one contemplate the above facts. Whether the Farm Relief Bill will bring the relief needed and desired, is to be seen. That which the honest tiller of the soil seeks and desires most of all is an open market for his products where he may receive a fair return for his investment and for his labor. Having been embarrassed, in many instances impoverished, by deeds of corporations and governments, over which he had no control, it is, indeed high time that some relief was given to restore him to his own, that he may have a fair chance in the field of industry to make an honest living, to lie down under a roof free from debt by his faithful toil, and to have a fig-tree of his own planting under which he may worship God, according to the dictates of his own conscience, and to live that life which has always been the source of strength and stability of home, society, state and church. J. O. A.

JUNE GRADUATES.

The colleges and universities gained the front page and told their story the past weeks. It was a wonderful panorama, a glorious drama in our American life. It is said that more than 100,000 graduates went home from our colleges and universities this June, with their college diplomas tucked away in their trunks after four years of packing their minds with learning and knowledge. It is not certain what they will all do about it. Commencement speakers warned the graduates of the pitfalls and the privileges; of the obstacles and the opportunities; of the trials and the triumphs, that confronted them as they faced the future. Not a few were advised that there are in our country already more teachers than schools, more applicants than positions, more lawyers than clients, more doctors than patients, and more preachers than churches.

On the other hand, they were warned that ours is a time that try men's souls, and that there was a challenge to faith, to energy and to virtue.

Society, the state, the church, every profession, still need strong, willing and well-prepared men and women, able, alert, energetic, faithful, law-abiding, God-fearing. What a contribution, indeed, these 100,000 graduates can make to our common weal and the cause of righteousness in the world if only they will follow the high standards and the noble ideals set for them and held up to them during the past four years.

However, a diploma is no longer a guarantee of a job, or even of a strong man or woman to fill a job. And any of the 100,000 who shall rely upon their diploma to carry them through will be leaning, indeed, on a weak stick and a crutch that may fail them at any moment of their journey. J. O. A.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Commencement season is over for this year. Thousands of young people have been interested in these happy occasions. For many young people this is the end of school and college days. There is a tinge of sadness mingled with the gladness of a school commencement. Four years of intimate association with teachers and classmates have cemented strong ties of friendship. The final event of graduation day may be a separation for life. But it is glorious and inspiring to reach the coveted goal of graduation. This writer would rejoice in the privilege of extending personal congratulations to all SUN readers whose hearts have rejoiced during the commencement season of 1933. A happy vacation, and a happy and successful life for you.

In the background of every commencement are the parents of the happy young people. The people who extend congratulations to the graduates should also have a word of praise for those who have made it possible for the young people to receive commencement honors. It is impossible to know what sacrifices are made by parents who seek to make it possible for their sons and daughters to have the opportunity of an education. Somehow it should be possible for school principals and college presidents to confer some token of recognition upon the fathers and mothers who send their sons and daughters to school and support the institutions by their means and cooperation. They deserve a diploma for their sacrifice and achievement. The name of father and mother should be inscribed on every diploma, if they have helped to provide an educational opportunity.

Commencement day is a day of self-examination. Teachers and professors have done much to direct the thought of those under their guidance and instruction. They have prepared and submitted examinations which have been successfully passed. On graduation day a new life begins for the students who pass out into the world of larger activity and freedom. This new life will derive much of its inspiration from the habits and tendencies of school days. Now each will be compelled to think independently of the teacher and the classroom. How many times one wishes for the counsel and advice of the teacher when one faces the problems of real life! All the problems have not been recorded in the school text-books. These life problems will come often, and they do not always herald their approach in advance of their appearance.

It is a day of decision. Heretofore, teachers have made decisions for the pupil, or have assisted in reaching decisions. Today, the pupil faces a new task of making personal decisions. The great questions of conduct and character call for personal consideration and decision. What shall I do? What should I do? These are great questions. They cannot be closed by a commencement day. They will meet one at every turn of the road and every step of the way. Life is not one round of pleasure and entertainment. Life is real and life is earnest. The world moves on and goes forward not by play but by work. Life is to be invested in some great task. It should be motivated by some high and holy purpose. The end of that purpose should have some relation to noble character. "To be, or not to be, that is the question." What is one worth to humanity and to God? Human values are not prefixed by dollar marks, stock quotations, or deeds of trust.

This is a day of dedication. Life is not worth living unless it reaches out and up for God. The pursuit of wealth and pleasure is not worth the price of the race. What value have profits when the soul is lost? This is a day of lost souls. The soul of man may be lost in the presence of the beautiful and the sublime. Where may I find God? Where may I worship and adore him? Where may I dedicate my service to him? When should I dedicate my life to this supreme thing for which I was born? Today, yes, today is the accepted time and opportunity.

ELON COMMENCEMENT.

The 43rd annual Commencement of Elon College is now history. It was certainly pleasing to behold and profitable to hear. And, if written, correctly, I think that it will be helpful to read. The program of the entire Commencement was printed in THE CHRISTIAN SUN and was executed as printed. Not one single item was changed and practically every service began on time—all exercises were well attended.

"Tangled Tales," presented by the Dramatic Department on Saturday evening was a most attractive feature of the entire program. It was a comedy well presented. Every character performed his part well and effectively.

The baccalaureate services on Sunday were well attended and enthusiastically received. Dr. Ever-sull, speaking at the morning service, spoke on the "Spiritual Interpretation of History," illustrating how the Kingdom of God was preserved on earth and went down through the spirits and lives of great men, reaching its climax in the lives of Christ and the Apostle Paul. At the evening service, the President spoke on "Facing the Future," bringing to the attention of the graduating class what they would, of necessity, face in the coming days if they were to attain success; that they have had privileges extending over four years to fit themselves for any emergency that might arise, and that if they were to achieve, it would be necessary for them to be able to rely upon themselves, on their fellowmen, and upon God—that without God, it would be impossible for them to attain success permanently.

Class Day exercises on Monday were very fitting and enjoyable. Monday afternoon, the Art Department and the Home Economics Department gave a most attractive exhibit in their rooms on the third floor of the Alamance Building. The Art display was most beautiful and attractive. The Home Economics Department served refreshments in connection with their very fine display.

Monday evening at 8 o'clock, the Music Department of the College presented "Hiawatha's Wedding Feast," by Coleridge-Taylor. Our local singers were assisted by Mr. Beard, tenor, from Charlotte, N. C. The program was of a very high order and most impressive. Interest in the Music Department of Elon College has tremendously increased during the past year. The suggestion is being made that the College open a studio in Burlington and thereby extend the advantages of our most splendid department to our home town. This plan is under consideration.

Tuesday was Alumni Day. This is a new feature on the Commencement program for Elon College. Hon. John C. B. Ehringhaus, Governor of North Carolina, was our principal speaker. He delivered a most unusual address to a large and enthusiastic audience. He spoke about the constituent elements entering into success, emphasizing that if the individual is to succeed, he must work—he must have ideas and that he must have ideals, stating that no one had yet been able to succeed in life without all of these three requirements. His address had a distinctive religious appeal.

The barbecue luncheon was served immediately after the address. Those in charge had prepared luncheon for 2,000 people. The pigs were killed Monday morning and were barbecued Monday afternoon. Immediately after the morning exercises Tuesday, the luncheon was served. Everything was in readiness, but unfortunately, it would seem that just before the last groups were served, a storm descended upon us, drenching the campus, tables, etc. The great crowd took shelter in the library and in the dining room. Those in charge reported that between 1,500 and 1,600 plates were served before the rains broke up the crowds. This was a great day for us.

The program called for a Tea to be served on the campus at 4:30. The storm forced the crowds inside for this delightful occasion. The tea was served in the Christian Education Building in the Y. W. C. A. rooms. President and Mrs. Smith received. A large number attended the Tea.

The Alumni Banquet was served in the College dining room at 6:30. Mrs. Dr. J. B. Newman was in charge. We had perhaps the largest number for the banquet in years. It was a most enjoyable occasion. Prof. R. S. Rainey, of Charlotte, President of the Association, served as toastmaster. Following the banquet, the Alumni assembled in Whitley Memorial Building for the annual address. Prof. A. C. Hall, Professor of English at the University of North Carolina, Women's Branch, Greensboro, N. C., delivered the address. He spoke on "Making American Literature American." It was a most scholastic presentation. Prof. Hall has been asked to place a copy of his address in the library for reference.

Wednesday was graduation Day. To this day we had all been looking forward with much interest. The procession was formed in Alamance Hall and moved quietly to Whitley Memorial Auditorium for the closing exercise on the program. The graduating class this year numbered forty-five. Dr. Malcolm McDermott, of Duke University, delivered the address. He is a very unusual speaker and brought to the graduating class a most pointed and helpful address. It was a most helpful and enjoyable occasion. Elon College Singers remained on the campus in a body and rendered valuable service in connection with practically every exercise. Their services were greatly appreciated and added much to the interest and effectiveness of the entire program. Many of our visitors expressed themselves as being delighted with Commencement as a whole. We will begin to work immediately on our program for 1934, hoping to make a decided improvement.

Now, may I urge upon trustees, patrons, alumni and friends, and everybody, to join hands with us in trying to increase our student body for another year. Our prospects are good, but we will not accomplish what we should unless we work together persistently and constantly. There must be three or four hundred young men and women who are ambitious for college training who could easily be turned to Elon if all her friends would work enthusiastically and constantly in her behalf. A word spoken to a young man or young woman will not cost you very much, but may mean much to the ones spoken to and much to the College that is yours. I appreciate greatly the help and assistance of every one and covet sincerely your continued cooperation.

AN HISTORICAL EVENT.

The Graham Providence-Memorial Christian Church holds its annual memorial service on the first Sunday in June. Quite an interesting program was observed this year. In announcing the program, the Burlington Daily Times gives the following interesting historical data:

The annual Memorial Day services held at Providence Church constitute one of the greatest church rallies in the state, when thousands from throughout the country gather to pay homage to the historical church where the foundations of the present large educational institutions in the Southern Christian Church were laid. The hour strikes each year when each member is challenged from out of the past to a duty toward Providence as the precious heritage from her benedictions to the community and state demand.

Four buildings preceded the present one. Under the influence of Rev. James O'Kelly and associates, Providence was permanently established as a schoolhouse and meeting place about 1763. Benjamin Rainey, born October 8, 1758, was associated with James O'Kelly in the pioneer efforts to establish the church. He was one of the young men of outstanding ability attracted almost in babyhood by the work of O'Kelly, and early in life began to teach and preach at Providence. Benjamin Rainey died May 5, 1811, living only 53 years, and his noteworthy accomplishments and tremendous work in the fields of teaching and preaching has placed him as one of the leading figures in the history of the church.

Among the older ministers who taught at Providence are: Rev. Benjamin Rainey, Rev. Joseph Thomas, Rev. Edwin W. Beale, Rev. John R. Holt, Rev. W. B. Wellons, D. D., Rev. James W. Wellons, D. D., Rev. Albert Anderson, Rev. Alfred Isley, Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., Rev. M. L. Hurley, D. D., Rev. W. T. Walker, and Rev. J. U. Newman, D. D.

The first courts held in Alamance County were held in the old Providence Church. In recent years, under the influence of Col. Junius H. Harden, who is president of the Memorial Association, the church was moved approximately 80 feet from the north to the present location. This change was made in order to enlarge the cemetery. Since its removal the church has been renovated and the grounds improved remarkably.

Providence Church is one of the units in the first organized American Christian Churches. Other American Protestant Churches had their parentage in Europe.

In its efforts to gain liberty and individualism in the exercise of moral and religious conscience for more than a century and a half its accomplishments have been marvelous in consideration of the fact that it was born in the latter part of the eighteenth century and its childhood was in the first quarter of the nineteenth century.

It has been aptly said of this particular period of time in history by L. W. Bacon in "American Church History":

"The closing years of the eighteenth century show the lowest low-mark of the lowest ebb-tide of spiritual life in the history of the American church. The demoralization of army life, the fury of political factions, the catch-penny materialists, mortality of Franklin, the philosophic deism of men like Jefferson, and the popular rildry of Tom Paine, who wrought together with untoward influence to bring about a condition of things which to the eye of little faith seemed almost desperate."

Disregarding this period without vantage, handicapped by this low tide of spiritual and moral drift, it took the courage of crusaders in O'Kelly, Rainey, Thomas, Beale, the Wellons, and their compatriots to build the foundation for the present structure of the Christian Church.

Providence is left as a heritage from their endeavor, their sacrifice and their devotion. The leadership of these men attracted the outstanding manhood of this section of North Carolina, and today the church stands as a memorial to early pioneers who sought to firmly establish the Protestant faith upon American soil.

NEEDED—A NEW TYPE OF HONESTY.

By TIMOTHY THOMAS.

Among the things we need to help us lift ourselves out of the smouldering ruins of our fortunes and affairs is a new type of common honesty—an honesty of a new ideal, an honesty in helpful cooperation.

When the World War was declared we were ready and willing to sacrifice our all; and because of that spirit we won the world's greatest conflict.

We need that type of honesty that will make us realize that the mythical "Uncle Sam" is none other than ourselves; that every dollar contributed toward the support of the government, local or national, is our dollar; that every dollar we spend while in the custody of any government is our dollar, and that the use and spending of this money is a trust, a sacred trust, a family fund, and that we are stewards of it.

We need a type of honesty that will prevent us from seeking funds to promote some project to advance our selfish plans or to enhance our personal fortunes.

We need a type of honesty that will make cowards of us all when we permit the payment of sums of money from a public treasury to persons whose incomes are sufficient to bring them all the needed comforts of life, while millions eke out an existence of misery and slow death.

We need a type of honesty that will rid us of a "swarm of locusts" from the National Capitol that pester our law-makers in the endeavor to rob the national treasury to further their personal interest, or the interests of their hidden clients, while children cry for bread, and while death stalks the land because of privation and dire need.

We need a type of honesty, without the practice of which will socially ostracize a family where several members live out of a public treasury, while their neighbors are in want, and while they commit suicide as a means to end life's unbearable burdens.

We need a type of honesty that will cause individuals to reduce their large salaries so as to aid in lifting a burden from the shoulders of the oppressed taxpayers; an honesty that will strike home with a burning zeal so that all men shall be free and happy.

We need a type of honesty that will free us from the spirit of get and imbue us with the spirit of give; not a giving of money, but a division of work, knowing that the happiness and contentment of a nation is the happiness and contentment of the individual.

We need a type of honesty, not merely to keep us from stealing goods and money of our neighbor, but to keep us from taking that which is his rightful inheritance—an opportunity to work and earn for self and family so that he and his shall not be slaves to misery and wards of charity.

CHARLES L. FISK, D. D.

The many friends in the southeast, as elsewhere, will be shocked and grieved to hear of the sudden death of Rev. Charles L. Fisk, D. D., who passed away at West Palm Beach on May 24th. Dr. Fisk was for a number of years Field Secretary of the Congregational Education Society, serving in Ohio and the southeast in the field of religious education and young people's work. More recently Dr. Fisk had not visited the southeast so much, but formerly he was much in this region rendering a great service to our Sunday Schools and young people's programs and generally making himself useful and beloved. His outstanding achievements were the building up of the Ohio Young People's Conference and the development of the Young People's Camp at Camp Imokalee in Florida. It was his wisdom and experience, his enthusiasm and leadership which started the Summer Conference work in the southeast. He was always devoted to the young people and they were fond of him.

Dr. Fisk retired over a year ago from active service with the Education Society due to the condition of his health. He has spent the winter at Stuart, Fla., and felt himself to be fully recovered, and recently, in company with Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, visited many of the churches in Florida and spoke before groups of young people over the state in the interest of the summer conferences and was very happy in this service. He was taken suddenly ill and died at the Good Samaritan Hospital in West Palm Beach. The funeral was held at Stuart and was conducted by Rev. Edwin C. Gillette and Rev. Frank Atkinson.

He is survived by his wife, Marion Ballou Fisk, well known in the field of woman's missionary work, and by two children, Mrs. Walter C. Giersbach and Rev. Chester P. Fisk, both of Chicago.

NOTES FROM FLORIDA.

Rev. Malcolm Dana, D. D., gave a course of lectures at the Short Course in Town and Country Leadership, given by the General Extension Division of the University of Florida. Dr. Dana was the principal speaker in the course. Dr. Edwin C. Gillette gave one of the opening addresses on the subject of "The Church Ministering to the Whole of Life." Dr. Dana also attended and spoke at the two Young People's Conferences in Florida.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill reports that the two Young People's Conferences held in Florida this year have been most successful. The first Conference, known as Immokalee North, was held at DeLeon Springs and the second, Immokalee South, at the Las Olas Inn at Fort Lauderdale Beach. Both of them were well attended and were most satisfactory in the work accomplished. These two Conferences this year take the place of the usual single Conference at Camp Immokalee. Rev. Lawrence A. Gedcke, of St. Petersburg, was Dean of the first Conference, and Rev. Orville D. Ullom, of Melbourne, was Dean of the second. Rev. and Mrs. Alan T. Jones, of Waycross, Ga., were members of the faculty of the first Conference.

Dr. Lewis H. Keller, formerly president of Atlanta Theological Seminary, who has spent the last two seasons with our church at Holly Hill, Fla., has completed his second season of effective service and he and Mrs. Keller have left for Madison, Wis. After a few weeks there they will return to Tryon, N. C., where he will act as summer pastor of the church in the absence of Dr. John Brittan Clark.

Rev. and Mrs. Robert G. Harbutt, who have spent some years in Florida at the Penney Foundation and later at St. Petersburg, and who have become well known to our Florida constituency, have left Florida to join the colony of Congregational ministers at Canandaigua, N. Y. Their leaving is a source of regret, as they have entered heartily into the life of the Florida churches.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary

PRAYER.

Blest harbor of souls, the Church of our Lord! Her portals beckon, her shelter is secure. Some day, O righteous Author and Preserver, the Church shall possess the earth; if we cared enough, that day might be now. Great God, our Father, make people know that the Church's sustenance, its expansion, its triumph, is in human hands and that if truly we desire to build the Church, thou wilt build our bodies into fitting and able instruments for the holy service. In Jesus' name.—Amen. S.

How sorely, indeed, is needed this year an offering from each and every church. There are hungry hearts and perishing souls and these only get relief through our missionary offerings and the spiritual activity of the church.

WORK IN CARROLL COUNTY, VA.

Fancy Gap, Va., June 7, 1933.

Dear Friends:

We have had several requests for detailed events about our work here in the mountains. We want you to know that we are busy at the great task that lies before us.

First, I will give you our plans for the summer, as this is the time we are really able to do our most extensive work. Our revival begins Sunday, June 11th, at Rocky Ford. We plan to conduct a two-weeks' meeting there. During the revival we plan to teach a Bible School at Rocky Ford. We have about seventy-five that have promised to attend this Bible School, and, of course, after beginning, we hope to have more.

Following our revival and Bible School at Rocky Ford, we have the same plan for Elk Spur—Bible School and revival. As soon as our Bible Schools and revivals are over, we plan to teach Day School for six weeks at Rocky Ford, as there was no school there last winter. Besides this, there are our regular services which consist of two Sunday Schools each Sunday, preaching service twice each month at both churches, Christian Endeavor meetings at both churches each week, and about fifty home visits each month.

No! I am not giving you this outline of our work to ask you for sympathy. We are happy in our work. We ask your prayers, we need them so very much. The task is too big for human hands; only our Master can give us wisdom to instruct these souls in the best way.

Our services last Sunday were encouraging, there being more than a hundred present at both services. We had memorial service at Elk Spur. The flowers were beautiful, as this is the season of the year when the mountains are covered with flowers. A group of girls met Saturday and made wreaths for the graves. The entire service was fine.

We extend to one and all of you a standing invitation to come and visit our work, and we feel that you will then more fully love and appreciate your Home Mission work in Carroll County, Va.

Your laborers for the Master,

REV. AND MRS. R. T. GRISSOM.

NOTES FROM THE FOREIGN FIELD.

And In His Spare Time.

After riding 50 miles or more early one Sunday morning, Rev. Henry A. Neipp of Bailundo, West Africa, glanced over the program for the Outstation Conference to which over 2,000 Christians from miles around had come. He found that outside of the regular exercises he was expected to dedicate a new chapel, present 60 converts to the church, consecrate 55 babies, reconsecrate three village marriages, perform two new marriages, baptize 65 applicants for membership in the church, preach a sermon and administer the Lord's Supper to 500 Christians. One is not surprised to have Mr. Neipp add "The service lasted four hours without a stop."

Rare, Indeed.

When the Soviets gained control of Kianning, China, they elected as head of one regular department Miss T. Y. Huang, a former teacher in the mission school. She it is who reviews the cases of farmers dragged before her tribunal and accused of accumulating grain or money. Somehow the farmers don't seem worried about appearing before her, says Rev. George W. Shepherd. Perhaps the reason is because she orders first a good square meal for them. Then she asks them if they are guilty. Assured by the farmer that never would he commit such a crime, she promptly sends him home. The Red soldiers grumble a bit in careless English what they say might be translated something like this: "We go to the trouble of catching 'em red-handed and she doesn't even order a beating, just feeds the bounders, and sends 'em home with a smile. A rare kind of chairman, that!"

The Paradox of Peace.

With fire-crackers popping and a candy vendor strolling about with his tray of sweets, the Christmas program in the church at Ingtai, China, presented to foreigners many unusual features. But on the whole, things went along much as they would in Bangor, Maine, or Oakland, California, reports Miss Florence A. Floyd. The service was reverent and beautiful with a processional in which were carried lighted red candles. One incident brought sadness to the hearts of many, however. A platoon of soldiers marched in with bayonets set. Before them waved a great red and white silken flag. The school boys arose quickly to give them their seats. And all through the program of peace and goodwill the bayonets gleamed above the heads of the worshippers.

Wills Ashes to China.

Stipulating that his ashes be buried in China by the side of his wife, Dr. Arthur H. Smith, who died August 31, 1932, in Claremont, California, made sure that when his earthly work was over he would return to the land he had loved and served for so many years. A beautiful memorial service was held in Tungheisen recently, we are told, with the President of Tsinghua University among those who gathered to honor Dr. Smith. It was Dr. Smith who suggested to President Roosevelt the return of the Boxer Indemnity money for educational work. Shortly before his death, Dr. Smith received a note from a friend "to while away the dull moments." Characteristically Dr. Smith commented: "I am grateful to her for her thought of me, but tell her I have no dull moments."

Make It a Hundred!

The Yankee habit of slogans has hit India and at Tirumangalam the campaign to raise 15,000 rupees for the Church Building Fund has adopted as its war cry: "Everybody give one hundred." It may be coppers, annas, onions, or eggs. Rev. Raymond A. Dudley helped a farmer start raising Rhode Island Reds, so he is giving 100 hens. The Eighth Standard boys are digging one hundred post holes at an anna each, or a total of $1.50, approximately.

The Eyes Had It.

Bumping over a desert road, 'steen miles from anywhere, in the black darkness of an African night, Rev. William C. Bell, of Lobito, Angola, Africa, decided to stop his small truck and take a look at the cargo. As he did this, six pairs of eyes gleamed at him. They belonged to six lions. Mr. Bell was alone. He had no weapons. His car was an open Ford pick-up. He decided to let his freight take its chances of staying on rather than parley with lions. For a long distance, says the report, as the car continued across the desert six pairs of eyes kept beside it, their owners often running directly in front of the headlights. Moral—the desert is no place to park.

LOST—LOST—LOST!

Lost! Something more than 4,000 letters we sent out to the friends of Elon College, soliciting a minimum contribution to assist us in our difficult but delightful efforts here, have not yet been heard from. We are getting uneasy. There were 5,000 letters mailed—less than 1,000 have come back. Naturally, we are wondering where the other 4,000 or more are. They were not returned by the postal authorities—in all probability they reached their destinations. Each letter carried with it an envelope which if returned to the College with or without a contribution would cost the one returning it no postage.

These enclosed envelopes are wanting to get back to Elon. Perhaps you received yours, looked at it and said: "That is a reasonable request, certainly I can afford to give $3.00 for the support of my College, and I will." Then, perhaps, you laid it aside and just haven't got to it. Won't you turn through your letters until you come to this appeal from Elon College, and then carry out your intentions?

Commencement is over, but our expenses are not, and our debts are unpaid. If you can and will send us a contribution, I assure you that it will be used as you may direct and that it will mean much to a good cause. A number have responded—won't you join with them, thus making your contribution?

At our last report, we had received in response to this appeal, a total of $1,149.66. Since then we have received contributions as follows:

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

CAN POOR PEOPLE GO TO COLLEGE?

Recently this page carried a statement to the effect that young people can attend college if they are willing to work. Today's mail brings an inquiry as to how it can be done, and your editor is called upon to make good on the statement that it is possible for people without money to go to college.

It would be easy to say that the individual should work out his own plan, but the writer is aware that sometimes this is very difficult. There are those who seem to think that only the rich should attend college and be well educated, but there are many others who know that outstanding leaders of the world in all ages have come from the humble homes, and have made their way despite their poverty.

Most denominational colleges try to aid poor people in securing an education. Our own colleges do just that, and I should advise high school graduates who are eager for an education to write to our own colleges, preferably the one nearest at hand, asking for information and aid.

Many state colleges are very generous in the way of tuition or scholarship funds to aid those who in turn will serve the state. In addition to this there are Boards and Foundations as well as individuals which lend money to worthy students. All of these aids are in favor of the poor person who is eager for an education.

Close to home is probably the best place to look for aid. For instance, the Rotary Club in our town has loaned money to several students in the community, and this is doubtless true in many other communities. There are also individuals who have money to lend, and who are glad to aid worthy students in getting an education. If one has no other backing, it is possible to borrow money with an insurance policy as guarantee of payment.

There is no royal road to learning. One usually has to blaze his own trail, and especially so if he is poor. It takes hard labor, and a great deal of thought, continuous honesty, and perseverance. But it is certainly possible for poor people to go to college even in our own day. I saw a young man from the Mid-West walk into Yale Divinity School when I was there, who had no money and no change of clothing. He simply had the big idea that he needed to go through the University in order to do his life's work. He succeeded in his aim. What others have done you can do.

S. S. AND C. E. CONVENTIONS—WHEN THEY MEET.

Last week attention was called to the coming sessions of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions, and emphasis was placed on the importance of sending reports and delegates and dues to these conventions. Too much can not be said about this matter, for it is very important that all Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies cooperate with their churches through these conventions. I am listing below the time and place of meetings.

Good programs are in the making, and those churches which send delegates will certainly profit by so doing:

Valley Virginia Central—June, 15th-16th, at Whistler's Chapel, near Shenandoah Caverns.

North Carolina and Virginia—June 22nd-23rd, at Union, Virginia, Va.

Western North Carolina—July 4th, at Big Oak Church.

Eastern North Carolina—July 11th-12th, at Wake Chapel, Fuquay Springs, N. C.

Eastern Virginia—July 18th, at Holland, Va.

THE TEST OF MANHOOD.

Young people soon learn that this world is not an easy place in which to live. They find all kinds of difficulties to face. These hardships tend to develop character as they are overcome. It is the attitude one takes toward these obstacles that displays the kind of person one is.

Rudyard Kipling, in his poem entitled "If," says many fine things, but the following should be remembered by those who have occasion to experience such tests:

"If you can make one heap of all your winnings,
And risk it on one turn of pitch and toss,
And lose, and start again at your beginnings
And never breathe a word about your loss;
If you can force your heart and nerve and sinew
To serve your turn long after they are gone,
And so hold on when there is nothing in you Except the will which says to them 'Hold on!'"

* * * *

"If you can fill the unforgetting minute
With sixty seconds' worth of distance run,
Yours is the earth, and everything that's in it,
And, which is more, you'll be a man, my son."

Additional Hymns—"God Send Us Men," "A Little Bit of Love," "God Save America," and "These Things Shall Be."

It is exceedingly important that this topic be brought up to date. Therefore, it is necessary that you choose articles from recent magazines such as: The Nation, The World Tomorrow, The Christian Century, Current History, The Literary Digest. Choose articles that apply to this subject and assign them for review and discussion. The daily papers are also a splendid source of material. What is happening June 25, 1933, that constitutes a social danger and what is being or could be done to remove it?

It is impractical to think of the dangers in such general terms that we lose sight of the conditions in our local communities that contribute to them. Therefore, it is recommended that you make the following study of your own community:

1. Consult welfare workers regarding the unemployment situation. How many people in your town or city are unemployed? How many of these are being helped by welfare organizations or private charity? What effect does this have on the ambition and self-respect of the individual? Is there any relation between crime and unemployment in your community? What is being done or could be done to remove unemployment?

2. Consult a criminal court and a juvenile court judge on the crime situation in your locality. What are the major crimes? What is the average age of the criminals? What conditions tend to cause crime? To what extent has graft entered into business and politics?

3. Consult a physician on health conditions in your community. What percentage of the people have adequate medical care, including care of eyes and teeth? What is the relation of poverty to health? Is any provision made for caring for the health of the poor other than charity practiced by a few physicians?

The topic we are considering is one that is commanding the attention of all the great minds and souls of the world. It has been interesting to note the difference in statements made by statesmen and financial magnates at the beginning of the depression and at the present time. They are recognizing now that we are at the end of an era in the world's history. The social dangers are so great that they threaten the destruction of civilization. Forces of reconstruction must be mobilized, and put into immediate action, if disaster is to be averted.

Leaders of the adult generation may draw up the blue prints, but upon the shoulders of modern youth rests the responsibility for building a new world structure. Because we were not a part of the old order that brought on the present chaos, it may be that we shall even have a clearer vision for drawing the blue prints. E. R.

JESUS RISES FROM THE DEAD.

LESSON XII—JUNE 18, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "He is risen."—Mark 16:6.

LESSON TEXT:—Mark 16:1-11.

Jesus was crucified on Friday. The Jewish Sabbath ended at sun-down on Saturday. Immediately thereafter, Mary Magdalene, Mary the mother of James, and Salome prepared spices that they might annoint the dead body of their Lord. It was so late when they finished their preparation that they could do nothing about it that night, so they had to wait until the next morning, which would correspond to our Sunday.

Last at the Cross—First at the Tomb.

These women were among the last at the Cross. They were the first at the tomb. Very early in the morning, even before the day had begun to dawn, they were on their way to the sepulchre. It was the way of love. They lacked faith in a way, for they should have known from what Jesus had told them that they would not find him in that tomb. They lacked the more specific knowledge which the disciples had. But they did not lack love. They loved their Lord with a love characteristic of womanhood and motherhood, and that love prompted them to do what they could. The trouble with most of us is that we lack love. If we really loved him more we would do more for him.

A striking evidence of uncalculating love is the fact that it was not until they were well on the way to the tomb that it occurred to them that they would not be able to roll the stone away from the door of the tomb. It is all right to be foresighted and far-sighted, but he who obeys the impulse of love will often scorn difficulties that others yield to.

The Stone Was Rolled Away.

When they came to the point where they really had to consider the great obstacle in their way, they found that the obstacle had already been taken away. How true of life! An old lady once said that the things that had worried her most were things that had never happened. How big and forbidding things look when we look at the difficulties of an undertaking, or at the possibilities of life, but how often they entirely disappear, or assume a true proportion as we set ourselves to walk resolutely in the way of duty, especially if we are prompted by love!

Be Not Affrighted.

The message of the gospel is "Be not afraid." There is nothing that so undergirds life with courage as the gospel message of faith in Jesus Christ. One of the central factors in the message of Jesus was the emphasis on faith, or trust, which was the antidote of fear. Alas for us that in spite of the gospel of Christ, so many of us are in bondage and fear.

"He is Risen! He is Not Here!"

Christianity rises or falls on these words. If Jesus Christ did not rise from the dead, if he did not come forth alive from that tomb, Christianity is a colossal fraud, Christ was an imposter, and God is untrustworthy. Furthermore the universe is a mockery. Think of a universe that created a personality like Christ, that did not make any provision for conserving such a personality. Think of a God who allowed his children to be snuffed out like that. Think of one who claims to be our Lord and Master, unable to keep his word at the place where everything was at stake. Think of a religion that was founded on a lie. No wonder Paul said: "If Christ be not risen . . . there is no resurrection, preaching is vain, faith is vain, all those who died professing faith in Christ have perished, we are of all men most miserable."

But Christ is risen. There is no better authenticated fact in history than that Jesus Christ rose from the dead, that he came out of that tomb alive. There is some mystery about how he did it, and as what form he had after he did it, but there is no question as to whether he did it. The glory of Christianity is an empty tomb. He is risen. And because he lives, we shall live also.

"But Go . . . Tell."

"He is not here." That is the glorious message of Easter. But the women were not to stand there in amazement and fear. They were to go tell the disciples and Peter. They were to tell others. It is significant that at Easter, as at Christmas, the heavenly messengers commanded those to whom the good news was made known to tell it to others. It is our responsibility as it is our privilege to tell others that Jesus Christ is alive.

"And Peter."

Tell the disciples, and Peter. "Be sure to tell Simon Peter. He denied his Lord three times and he is now grieving and broken hearted over his dismal failure. Be sure to tell him that I live." What a sweet message that was to Simon Peter. It is the gospel of a second chance, of a hundredth chance. The heavenly messenger wanted Peter to know that there was still a place for him in the divine mercy and the divine plan.

"As He Said Unto You."

"He goeth before you into Galilee: there shall ye see him, as he said unto you." They had forgotten all about Christ's predictions that he would rise again from the dead, and that he would keep his engagement with them in Galilee. But when they obeyed this command they found that it was as he said unto them. When we do as Christ tells us, we will always find that it is always as he says unto us.

"And They Believed Not."

The word "they" refers to Christ's disciples. Christ had to establish the certainty of his resurrection, not only to his enemies but to his own inner circle of disciples. This has tremendous meaning as concerning the irrefutable evidence of the resurrection.

"The opening of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."—Psalm 119:130.

MONDAY.

A BEAUTIFUL CHARACTER.

"My heart is fixed, O God."—Psa. 5:7.

"Let us have grace whereby we may offer service well-pleasing to God."—Her. 12:28.

St. Paul. He purposely avoided trying to please by means of human artifice or tricks of oratory or speech, for he did not wish the glory to be his, but God's. He was unwilling that any one should ascribe his success to his own exertions. He was always concerned and anxious lest he should fail in his task, and at last he rejected himself. He undertook to do his duty as revealed to him by God, though it incurred more trouble and suffering. He was wholly unselfish, for in spite of the pressure of the apostolic church, he refused remuneration, working with his own hands to earn his living; all this because he loved the love of the Master. It is said that his zeal amidst his manifold occupations, the vigor and fullness of his thoughts, the ardor of his heroic faith are so great that sometimes his writings are vague and we are not able to follow him. Peter (II. Peter 3:16) regrets this. His burning message always is: the reconciliation of mankind through the blood of Jesus Christ. Full salvation at the day of judgment and the blessedness of the new life compared with the old.

Prayer—Our Father, grace is only from thee, and we need it. Grant all we need, we pray thee. May we study not only to be approved of thee, but to love thee with all our hearts, soul and mind. In Christ's name.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE FOLLY OF IDLE TALK.

"I say unto you, that for every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment."—Matt. 12:35-37.

Our words, whether we like it or not, are missionaries for good or ill. They open up vistas of ugliness or beauty, help or hurt, within the heart. What power is locked up in the words we speak! Jesus says in another place, "By thy words thou shalt be approved, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." How do we stand a test like that?

One aspect of the importance of our words may be seen in the way that words reveal character. Our speech springs up from inner fountains. It has had its source in deep wells of spiritual deposit. It is the overflowing of the stuff of the heart. "Out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh."

If we have got into the way of gossiping about others, we ought to pray God for Christ's sake to pardon us. Let us remember what Paul says, "Love rejoiceth not in iniquity." Christian men and women, we need the grace of God in this matter!

Prayer—O Lord of Love, who hath endured all things for our sakes, fill us with deeper and purer and more thankful love to thee. We ask every blessing, for ourselves and those dear to us, with the forgiveness of every sin, for his name's sake.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE HEART AND THE MOUTH.

"But the things which proceed out of the mouth come forth out of the heart."—Matt. 15:16-20.

Christianity is an inward religion, whereas the religion of the Pharisees was largely outward. The Pharisee considered it very important to wash his hands before meat, but he neglected the heart. Jesus taught that the heart controlled everything, even the mouth. Man talks with his heart before he speaks with his tongue. The tongue is only an instrument of the soul; far away in the depths of feeling and thought sits a silent and unseen spectator—the inner man.

"Thou must be true thyself, if thou the truth wouldst teach;

Thy soul must overflow, if thou another soul wouldst reach—

It takes the overflow of heart to give the lips full speech."

Ruskin once followed a river up the mountain-side, hoping to find its source, but he found none. There was no gushing spring. He remained all night, and early in the morning he noticed that the dew was very heavy and as it distilled, it caused a tiny trickle of water. This was the source of the stream, and as it flowed down it gathered more water to itself. Wider and wider it became, until at its mouth it emptied with gush and flow and noise into the great sea.

Prayer—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

THURSDAY.

THE PRAYER THAT CHANGES A LIFE.

"We are ambassadors therefore on behalf of Christ."—II. Cor. 5:17-20.

There is a family burying plot on a Southern plantation that has been in use by one family since pioneer days. One monument attracts the eye, for it is more costly than any of the others. This is the story of that memorial. "She was not my mother; my mother died when I was a mite of a boy. She was my stepmother. This little woman, whose memory I shall ever revere, had five children of her own, but she always called me 'her boy' and taught me to call her 'mother.' Many believed that I was indeed her son. I was the one black sheep in the family. Once my father threatened to disown me; but she intervened. One day I went to the attic to sleep off the effects of alcohol, where my father would not find me. Lo! I found her there kneeling and heard her praying—for me. Her supplication melted my heart. We prayed together. That was the beginning of my Christian life. Her favorite verse was, 'We are ambassadors, therefore, on behalf of Christ.' She was indeed God's ambassador to me."

FRIDAY.

CHRISTIAN LOVE.

"The greatest of these is love."—1 Cor. 13:9-13.

It is said that Henry Ward Beecher once said in an address to a class of young doctors: "Young doctors, you are called upon to visit a desperately sick patient. It is a case of life or death. As you approach that bedside and gaze into those feverish anxious eyes, I beg of you to remember the words of Jesus, who said: 'Do unto others as you would that they should do unto you.'"

Christian love has been defined as putting yourself in the others' place and doing for him what you would like for him to do for you under similar circumstances. But it is more than that. Christ died for us, and when he was teaching this love, he said, "Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friend. We can never know that love until we have stood at the foot of his cross, taken up a cross of sacrifice ourselves, and gone forth to serve.

Prayer—Our Father, lift us up into the clear air of thy purposes and give us a passion for Jesus in the human heart. Help us to live so that many may believe and turn from sin and be saved.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

SHUN UNHOLY ASSOCIATIONS.

"Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly."—Psa. 1:1-6.

The counsel of the ungodly has never yet done anything good or great for anybody. It would discourage every good movement; its constant note is one of pessimism. It is never progressive, but always reactionary. It never built a church building, never founded a hospital, never sent a gospel missionary across the sea.

The counsel of the ungodly is a shallow philosophy of this world only; eternity does not enter into its calculations. It is a philosophy of expediency; it does not risk anything upon the enterprise of a high adventure. There is nothing sacrificial about it, nothing noble; great character is never to be built by following its precepts. Blessed is the man who will have nothing to do with it!

Prayer—Our heavenly Father, make duty clear to us, and give us the heart to do it. Lead us in pleasant paths, if it be thy gracious will; or if thou givest us some daily round of irksome labor to be done in the shadow, may we do it bravely for thy sake and sing of our toil. In Jesus' name.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE PEACE OF A GODLY MIND.

"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is staid on thee."—Isa. 26:3.

When in health and doing well, it is astonishing how coolly we take God's mercies. How little infirmities make us realize our blessings! A week of blindness gives us the value of eyes. Rheumatism gives us lessons on acheless bones. A chronic bad stomach teaches us the value of health. The rich ought to live in poverty and squallor a while to learn some lessons of human life and the use of their wealth.

Well, how about religion? Close the church doors six months and we will realize our spiritual need. A churchless community will soon teach us the need of heavenly inspiration, soul food, life's only certain guide. Lose God and you lose life's only sure anchor.

"Afflictions, though they seem severe,
Are oft in mercy sent.

They stopped the prodigal's career
And caused him to repent."

All of us see that. Then, why not live as we believe it? Be prayerful, give him thanks, render practical service, support the church, participate in stewardship. Every Sunday is a mobilization day for the soldiers of Christ. The church is the camp. "Present"—are you?

Prayer—Father, fix our hearts and minds on thee. Flood our souls with thy praise. Give us delights in worship and service.—Amen.

Go to, now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered, and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasures together for the last days.—James 5:1-3.

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

A MAN OF SORROWS.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"A man of sorrows and acquainted with grief."—Isa. 53:3.

As soon as Christ began his earthly ministry he met men and women engulfed in the sorrows of life. Frequently in the Gospels we read of his compassion on individuals and also on the multitudes. I call your attention to an incident in the beginning of his Galilean ministry. One Sabbath day he went into the synagogue. He found there a group of men, and among them there was a man with a withered hand. In this group of men, Jesus noticed him because of his shyness and timidity—a shyness and timidity which came to him because of his affliction. Perhaps this group of crafty Pharisees had urged him to come, not because they wanted him, but merely because they wanted to ensnare Jesus, whom they knew would be there. In their wicked hearts they had already guessed that Jesus would have pity on the unfortunate sufferer. Being intent on teaching the glorious principles of his kingdom and also on replacing sorrow with rejoicing, he called the man forth as an object lesson, and to make the withered hand strong like the other.

But the jealous, hard-hearted hypocrites are obstinately determined to believe not, to see not, and to understand not. Notice that the Scripture does not say that Jesus was grieved because the man had a withered hand; that word was reserved for a vastly more terrible thing. "He looked around about on them with anger, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts." Here then is the first recorded statement of Jesus' grief, the people." Think of it! What goodness and cause of hardness of heart. Grieved because men's souls were shrivelled up in their bigoted blindness until they would not feel the power and personal persuasion of the Son of God. Thus has it ever been; many of the wisest have failed to know the unbounded love of Jesus. This made him sad. This finally broke his heart. John 1:11: "He came unto his own, and his own received him not." "A man of sorrows and acquainted with grief."

What streams of mercy and blessing followed in his wake! A triune greatness accompanied him wherever he went—his personal presence, for to touch even the hem of his garment was to be healed; his matchless teaching and preaching, for he spake as never man spake; and his actual healing of "every sickness and every disease among people." Think of it! What goodness and bounty and blessing from such hands! But he realized his departure would soon come. The personal, physical demonstration of his infinite love must cease. "And when he saw the multitudes"—saw how they crowded the cities, seashores, gateways, roads, and mountain-sides—there was great pity and sorrow and compassion within. He saw—and his eyes could see the suffering hidden beneath the outer surface. He saw the poverty of soul, the hunger of heart, yea, even the secret sins which weighed men down. "They fainted." They were tired, giving up, losing in life's battle. Without a shepherd, without a person to fill their spiritual voids, so that they should not want. Seeing that condition caused Jesus to have compassion on them, which is the Latin way of saying he suffered with them.

Jesus did not begin the custom of weeping, and he has not yet caused it to cease, but some day in his new heaven and new earth he will wipe away all tears and there shall be no more sorrow nor crying. Weeping is not in itself a sign of weakness. Resurrecting power followed the tears of the Son of God. Paul says, "When I am weak then am I strong." Hezekiah wept once and Jehovah saw his tears, and said: "I have heard thy prayer; I have seen thy tears." (II. Kings 20:5.) Jesus said once, "She hath washed my feet with tears." How he commended her you know full well. Tear marks are recorded on the pages of Paul's letters. "I wrote unto you with many tears." Oh! Jesus, thou hast given us our triumphs; thou hast shared with us our tears!

I come now to the scene described in Luke 19:41. "And when he was come near he beheld the city and wept over it." Jesus is arriving at the city of Jerusalem to make his formal, triumphant entry. This entry has been prophesied, and the Jews for many centuries have looked forward to it. He was the great Son of David entering the City of the King. Holy memories have hallowed this city from the days of Abraham. Melchisedec was once its king. Saul had made it powerful. David had made it mighty. Solomon had made it glorious. And David from this same vantage point, beholding the old city, had wept over it. But Jesus sees with his prophetic eye its early destruction, and he loves it so—it is his own, and he came to his own and his own received him not. In spite of all its misery, murder, wickedness and sin, he would still gather her children together even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, but they would not. Yea, and no doubt there are wandering, wayward hearts here tonight who are rejecting Jesus just as they did. And Jesus loves you so—and you belong to him and he should be yours.

All about him as he journeyed toward the city there were hosannas and shoutings. Jesus was silent. Eloquent in his speech he was, if possible, more eloquent in his silence, but "the eloquence of his tears was beyond description." One man has described his tears as "the most beautiful pearls in his crown of glory." In the midst of his earthly triumph his face is full of tears. In all the glory of it he knew that primarily Jerusalem had rejected him and in her blindness would shortly force him out of her gates with his own cross, and when well "without the camp," would crucify him. "Surely, he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed."

He wailed aloud. I quote Dean Farrar: "And well might he wail aloud! Was not the city of Jerusalem the most religious city in the world? Was it not wholly devoted to religion, or at any rate, to religionism? Could not the Temple Service number its white-robed array of forty thousand priests, and its endless army of attendant Levites? Did not the blast of silver trumpets announce daily its morning and evening sacrifices? Did not the High Priest enter its Holy of Holies every year with the golden censer and blood of atonement in his hands? Were not some two million pilgrims, from every region of the world, with Gentile proselytes among them, streaming on that very day to its Paschal Feast? Ah, yes! There was sumptuous ritual enough, but no righteousness; abundant externalism, but no religion pure and undefiled; and to his eyes the city was but as a glistening sepulchre, a hollow show." Such a condition in persons, also, must cause them to come to naught.

Let us review the closing sorrows of our Saviour's earthly life. Out of that upper room leading the eleven, we see him coming away from the celebration of the Last Supper. The hearts of all are sad and silence reigns. Out through the city they go eastward, crossing the Valley of Kidron. It is an old, old road. David in his flight from his son, Absalom, had gone the same way. "And David went up by the ascent of Mount Olivet, and wept as he went up, and had his head covered and he went up barefoot; and all the people that was with him covered every man his head, and

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

1536 East Broad Street Richmond, Virginia

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends:

It's a fine thing to give some one a chance who deserves a chance. A young boy was in court on one occasion accused of a crime. When the court was ready for the trial the judge said to the young man: "Are you ready for trial?" "Yes," said the young man. The judge said to him: "Have you an attorney to represent you; if not the court will be glad to appoint one to represent you, as you are charged with a serious offense." The young boy said: "I don't want a lawyer; I am guilty." The judge said: "Then it becomes my duty to sentence you for the crime you have committed. Have you anything to say before I pass the sentence?" The boy stood up and said: "Mr. Judge, I have not had a chance." The judge was so moved that he sentenced the boy to work for himself. He and his good wife took him into their own home and showed him all the love and affection that they could bestow upon him. They gave him a chance. He made good.

We had four fine young girls to graduate this spring. We have secured good positions for all of them and they are happy in their work. We also secured a most excellent home with a real mother to look after them. A very happy arrangement for them.

We also had two bright young boys to graduate and both want to go to college. These boys are bright young boys, ambitious to get a college education. They, too, are pleading for a chance to do this. They would be willing to do any honorable work by which they could work their way. They were reared here and, of course, have no money, and are without a chance unless some provision can be made for them.

When you contribute your money to support this institution, you are giving some little helpless fellow a chance. The Orphanage cannot run unless the church will support it.

they went up, weeping as they went up." (II. Sam. 15:30.) Tonight the Son of David, pursued by his own people—Judas and the Jews—follows in his train! The gloom deepens and the need for human sympathy grows. He asks eight of his disciples to tarry, but Peter and James and John he takes with him. How Jesus suffered that night! His soul was breaking! The sins of all the world for the time being were heaped upon him! Oh! what a contrast—Peter and James and John—and Jesus. They could not fathom him! They could not understand—"No one knows the Son but the Father." He must be alone. He has the three to tarry, bidding them pray. And he went out under the olive leaves that hovered thickly over him, making the midnight darkness of Palestine darker still. And he fell upon his knees and agonized as mortals have never done! "Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? Behold and see if there be any sorrow like unto my sorrow." Oh, great world today, marching by unconcerned, ye know not what ye do! While you pass he is saying, with blood upon his brow: "Not my will, but thine be done."—the Father's will. His will was that, although Jesus was his only begotten Son, he should die that we might be redeemed. Out of this sorrow came victory—an inner peace that passed all understanding—Pilate was nothing compared with this; the cross had lost its stigma; death had lost its sting. Here in the Garden of Gethsemane the battle was fought and won.

The awful tragedy of the cross was a world spectacle. It was for you and for me. Jesus went the rest of the way for us. He suffered the final pangs—a sin-bearing Saviour of the world—and cried out, "It is finished." Yea, and our redemption was sealed by his resurrection, and is being applied today to all who will believe in the Holy Spirit. Oh, Saviour, I will believe, "I do believe, help my unbelief." How many now looking over Jesus' great redemption, procured at such a cost, will say the same tonight? How we thank thee, O Saviour, that thou art "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief."

RE-ELECTED.

Dr. P. H. Fleming, Burlington, N. C., was last week elected superintendent of Public Welfare for Alamance County. This will make Dr. Fleming's eighth term in that office, he having served continuously since 1919, when the county agency was established. The County Board of Public Charities highly recommended the re-election of Dr. Fleming, his election being made unanimous at a joint meeting of the County Board of Education and the County Board of Commissioners. In addition to his welfare work in the county, Dr. Fleming is the beloved pastor of the Union Church, Union Ridge, N. C., and Long's Chapel, near Haw River, two of our strong and influential rural churches. We congratulate Dr. Fleming upon this mark of esteem and honor in service.

OBITUARIES

LISKEY.

Mrs. T. Ashby Liskey was born October 4, 1861, and died May 6, 1933, at the age of 71 years, 7 months and 2 days. It was my privilege to visit her several times during her last illness, and hear her confession of faith in Christ, and receive her into the church, and administer the ordinance of baptism. Surviving are her husband, 3 sons, and 5 daughters. Funeral services were held May 7, 1933, from the home of a daughter in Harrisonburg, where she died, and interment was at New Hope Church near the family home. Assisting in the services were Rev. W. B. Fuller and Rev. M. L. Weekley.
A. W. ANDES.

HESTER.

On May 28, 1933, Benjamin T. Hester fell asleep in death, aged 60 years, 6 months and 15 days. He is survived by his wife, two daughters and three sons. He was a devout member of Long's Chapel Christian Church. On November 3, 1917, he was elected to the office of deacon and served faithfully until death. He was a very quiet, unassuming, faithful man. He was devoted to his family, loyal to his friends, a good neighbor and citizen. He will be missed in home, in the church and the community.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer at Long's Chapel and interment was in the church cemetery. May the dear Master comfort those who mourn.
P. H. FLEMING.

ASHLEY.

Whereas, it hath pleased our heavenly Father to call our fellow-member brother, John A. Ashley, from labor to reward, and,

Whereas, he was a faithful member of the Baraca Class of the Liberty Spring Christian Sunday School, and,

Whereas, we wish to record our sincere appreciation of his membership and fellowship with us, therefore be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to the Divine Will, remembering that He doeth all things well, and that "all things work together for good to them who love the Lord."

2. That we record our thanks for his sincere Christian life, and for his support of the work of the church.

3. That we extend to his bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy, and pray that the grace of our Lord and Saviour may be sufficient for this sad experience.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be entered upon the records of the Class, a copy sent to his family, and a copy sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

GLAUS.

The mind of man cannot conceive the thought of God, nor the human heart feel His love in its fullness. Man's wisdom cannot challenge the loving wisdom of God in removing his children from this world of sin to that city of God, from the house of this tabernacle to that house not made with hands, from where we have no continuing city to that eternal city whose maker and builder is God, from the place where tears flow and sorrows come, to the place where sorrows come not and God shall wipe all tears from their eyes.

Nor do we understand now and here why our sister and society member, whom we loved, because of the sweetness of her spirit, should be removed from us, but we shall understand hereafter. We sorrow not because we would be contrary to the Master's will, but because we loved her and she loved us.

Forasmuch then as it was the will of the God of wisdom to call to her reward, Mrs. Mary E. Glaus, and in her going we keenly feel our loss, be it, therefore, resolved:

1. That we, the members of the Ladies' Aid Society of the Bethlehem Christian Church, yield our desires to the One who is too good to be unkind and too wise to make mistakes.

2. That we voice our feeling of gratitude and praise to God that He has permitted us to live and labor with such a sweet spirit.

3. That we dedicate our lives anew to His cause which was so dear to her heart.

4. That we purpose in our hearts to so live and serve that our circle will be reunited in that land where no farewells will be spoken.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be put on the records of the Ladies' Aid Society of Bethlehem Christian Church, Circle No. 1, a copy be sent to the family of our deceased member, and a copy sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

England Honors Memory of Pocahontas.—

There has recently been unveiled in Heacham, England, a monument to the American Indian Princess, Pocahontas. Pocahontas, who married John Rolfe, was in England, and died at Gravesend, in 1617, as she was embarking to return to Virginia. The monument was erected by present representatives of the Rolfe family in England and by Americans in Virginia and other states.

Nine Church Groups Study Missions.—

For the first time in their history the inter-church foreign missionary conference this year met at East Northfield, Mass., which is noted for its summer gatherings of church workers. Girls and women were present from the following evangelical denominations: Baptist, Congregational-Christian, Dutch Reformed, Friends, Lutheran, Methodist, Protestant Episcopal, and Presbyterian. The Universalists were also represented.

A Vegetable Cow.—

In China most of the "milk" consumed is made from soy-beans. While it is slightly lower in fat and carbohydrates, it is said to be quite similar in composition and appearance to cow's milk. This "milk" is made by soaking the beans in water for several hours. The beans are then ground and strained through cheese cloth. Three parts of water are added to each part of ground beans, the mixture is boiled and again strained, and the resulting filtrate is "milk." Some sugar is usually added. We are told that this milk will also sour, and may then be used as we use sour or butter milk.

Libraries and the Depression.—

During the year 1932 public libraries in eighty-two American cities spent the much reduced sum of $2,405,349 for books. Their appropriations for the present year have been further cut to $1,572,622, a decline of approximately one-third. At the same time that there has been a steady curtailing of the amount of money available for library purposes, it is significant that the demand for books at these libraries has shown an increase of approximately 40 per cent. The library has too often been looked upon by politicians as a luxury and as such has had to bear a major slash when budgets are being pared. Indeed, however, it plays a place in importance in our educational system second only to that of schools themselves, and citizens should see that not too much curtailment is made of the library budget.

Boulder Dam to Get Refrigerating System.—

The Associated Press tells us that there is to be a huge refrigerator plant actually embedded in Boulder Dam. As fast as the concrete is poured, two-inch iron pipes are being embedded in this concrete, and through this pipe cold water is constantly circulated. Concrete rises about forty degrees in temperature after setting, and the Department of the Interior tells us that it would "require centuries to get rid of the excess heat without artificial aid, and the process would result in dangerous open joints or cracks." When the dam is completed there will be 150 miles of pipe in the job, and it is estimated that by pumping sixty-four degree water through this pipe system it will be possible to reduce the temperature of the concrete thirty-two degrees in two weeks' time.

Honey in Tubes.—

Apiarists are now putting honey up in collapsible tubes varying in size from one ounce to those holding half a pound. One will now be able to squeeze honey on one's bread just as paste is squeezed on the toothbrush, and the usual stickiness and waste which results when honey is served from a jar or can may be avoided. Speaking of honey, the United States Department of Agriculture tells us that it is one of the best of the high-energy producing foods. It is composed almost entirely of simple sugars, and most other sugars require action by the gastric and intestinal secretions to break them down into sugars such as those naturally occurring in honey. Thus honey can be utilized by the body without placing a burden upon the digestive tract and is therefore an excellent food for invalids, the aged, babies and young children, or athletes in training.

The Business Outlook.—

"The upward trend continues," says Business Week, and it adds: "There is a little uncertainty here and there while industries try to appraise what the set-up under the Industrial Recovery Bill may do to prices and wages, . . . but the hesitation hasn't affected the trend." Congress has passed bills covering the plans, and "now comes the Administration's real task—to make the plan work." Pressure from "back home" pushed the new banking bill through over a passive resistance from the White House, bigger pay rolls are boosting retail and insurance sales, electric power consumption is being boosted as the factories speed up, and locomotives are pulling longer trains than for many days past. Construction is also increasing, and the farmer is coming in for increases in prices. The London Conference is dragging, but that was to be expected, so taking it all-in-all there is much to be hopeful about.

Gutenberg at Chicago.—

While not there in person, many of the works of the father of modern printing are on exhibit at the Chicago Fair. Also there is an exact replica of the original Gutenberg press. Among his printing is included the Gutenberg Bible, valued at $15,000. To quote from a bulletin issued by the Exposition itself: "Typecasting devices in every detail the same as Gutenberg used himself are in the exhibit. Type-casters in the original Gutenberg plant, existing records show, could turn out from 40 to 50 letters an hour. Modern type-casting machines of the rotary type can turn out 60,000. How printing has been speeded up is indicated by another comparison in the exhibit. Gutenberg's hand press, operated by two men, could turn out from 3,600 to 3,800 printed pages in a 15-hour day, which was a common working period at that time. Modern rotary presses can make 60,000 impressions an hour. Examination of Gutenberg's type-casting equipment and the type it makes shows that Gutenberg established the measurement for type generally spoken of in the printing trade today as "type high." His type can be used in any modern press with practically no adjustment whatever. Gutenberg also used the "nick" in the side of the type, used to this day to help the printing in "sticking" the type right side up without stopping to look at it. Another surprising fact about the master printer of the fifteenth century is that the type case he used has been handed down from Gutenberg practically without change."

Mr. Farley and the Eighteenth Amendment.—

The unusual and inexcusable activity of Postmaster-General Farley in bringing pressure for repeal through the Democratic organization, has caused F. Scott McBride, general superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, to raise the question as to what debt he owes to the liquor interests which he expects to pay with his program of coercion. "From whom," asks Mr. McBride, "has Mr. Farley received his orders to take such extreme measures? . . . The assumption that he is acting as spokesman for the administration is incredible, because the president of the United States has no constitutional duties in connection with the amendments to the Constitution. . . . Is Mr. Farley acting as head of the Democratic party? This is not reasonable since he knows well enough that the Democratic party is divided on prohibition and that millions of Southern and Western Democrats are its most ardent supporters. Can it be that Mr. Farley is acting in behalf of Tammany Hall in an effort to bring the entire United States under the domination of New York Democracy with the financial and political aid of the liquor interests? Mr. Farley's threat to punish the voters by imposing additional income taxes if they fail to repeal, and his plea to party workers, who know that the dispensation of patronage is in his hands, is probably unprecedented in all the history of political alliances with liquor." Irene Dupont's statement that he would save $10,000,000 in corporation tax on one of his corporations alone, if the sale of liquor was resumed, should cause one to ponder deeply whether he is willing to vote to transfer that tax to the backs of the poor who would pay the bulk of the drink bill?

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Maltbie Babcock once said: "When we pull up a weed, we leave a clean place for a flower." Are you pulling up weeds this summer?

Our readers will learn with regret that Mr. Chas. D. Johnston has been compelled to go to the hospital. We hope for him a speedy return to health.

Rev. J. E. McCauley has been unwell for several days, but was able to preach at both services Sunday, and he also conducted services at the State penitentiary during the afternoon just for good measure.

Men should never trifle with the idea of the punishment of sin. It is everlasting punishment. It is eternal penalty. It is an expression of the horror of God as his infinite holiness looks upon the abomination of sin.—Joseph Parker.

Rev. J. L. Foster attended and gave two addresses at the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, Valley of Virginia, last week, taking the place on the program and in the service of the Mission Secretary who had engaged to go, but was prevented.

The Managing Editor does not like to do it, but what else is there to do? It seems that he must always be "riding" his friends, the preachers. This time it is because they are not sending in news of their fields. Brother preacher, we need "notes" and "personals." The laity want to know what is going on in your field.

Figures recently compiled by the National Safety Council reveal the fact that women have better driving records than men. As reported, one male driver out of twenty-one is sooner or later involved in a crash, while only one out of every eighty-six women drivers pays the toll. For a long time men have acknowledged women as better drivers in church work, now they seem to have taken the lead out on the road.

Iowa has been added to the list of states voting for repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. This is the fourteenth state to vote on repeal and the fourteenth state to vote in its favor. Is repeal being carried with the church member's vote, or is he just staying away from the polls and letting the other fellow have his way. One seems as bad to us as the other. There is more to be said in favor of the honest wet—the man who is wet because he thinks to benefit by repeal—than there is for the so-called dry who is too indifferent to cast his vote.

After a lingering illness in the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. A. Williams, Mrs. Mollie Copeland Lee passed away on the night of June 12th, being in her 80th year. Mrs. Lee, relict of the late, lamented Albert T. Lee, mother of Mr. J. P. Lee, Suffolk, and Mrs. J. A. Williams, Franklin, was a rich and rare soul in all that pertains to gracious hospitality, courteous and comely womanhood and Christian living. The funeral services were conducted from the home at 4 o'clock, Wednesday, June 14th, being in charge of her pastor, Rev. J. Ellwood Jones, assisted by Dr. L. E. Smith, Elon College; Dr. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro; J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, and Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, Suffolk. A large concourse of friends and relatives was present, and the floral offerings were abundant and beautiful, indeed. A good and faithful soul has gone to her reward.

A prediction that President Roosevelt will be remembered "as the man who broke down the levees and let in a flood of inebriated iniquity" was made in the report of the Board of Temperance of the Philadelphia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The report read: "This conference session finds the prohibition forces with their backs to the wall. Stamped by the plea that the sale of beer would bring in hundreds of millions in revenue, Congress has legalized beer and the country is being deluged with this intoxicating beverage. While doubtless many of the measures he has adopted to lead us out of the depression meet with public approval, President Roosevelt has set up beer and whiskey as the twin gods of the American people. Our faith and courage have not been equal to the strain imposed by the economic pressure. Congress has abdicated its functions of government and is automatically following the behest of its politicians. The states which have already voted on the question have largely gone by default. The liquor forces have been so well organized and money has been spent so lavishly that our foes have found it easy to capture some of the trenches once securely held." A gloomy picture, indeed, but one which may be changed to a brighter one at any time, when the scales shall fall from our blinded eyes.—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

In a simple little country chapel on the coast of Maine the only symbol is a ship's anchor, painted on the wall back of the pulpit at the focus of attention. It is a fisherman's village. Most of the worshippers in that little church have either experienced storms at sea in which life itself hung in the balance for terrible hours, or the anxious vigil of the fisherman's family while the howling gale warned them of the deadly peril of loved ones on the sea. By unerring instinct they chose that symbol of an anchor to rest their eyes and steady their faith in hours of worship. No other symbol—the cross, crown, shield, star, open Bible, or what you will, could possibly be so challenging or meaningful in a fisherman's church as that great sturdy anchor, though as pure art it is crudely done. Thoughtless visitors may laugh at it; but the home folks are never weary of it. With every passing winter its precious meaning grows on them, enriching their experience in religion. They could not put in words all that it symbolizes, but in general it sums up all the invisible resources of their most holy faith, the glorious gospel of the Blessed God. It means the rescuing hand of the Christ who saved Peter from drowning. It means the infinite love of a Father God, who never forgets those who go down to the sea in ships. It means anchorage for prayer. It means peace in the storm, relief from heart-breaking worry. It means something a bit different after every test of faith.—George W. Fiske.

BOLSHEVISM DEFINED.

"This word" (Bolshevist) says a writer in the Friend of Missions, "comes from the Russian Bolshevik, meaning the greater, while Menshevik means the lesser. These were terms applied to two parties in a socialistic gathering in the East end of London, years ago, who were divided in opinion as to whether socialistic theories should be put into practice by drastic, radical and revolutionary means. Many of the members were atheistic Jews. The larger party were in favor of revolutionary methods and were called Bolsheviki; the minority, who favored evolutionary means, were styled Mensheviki."

AN ENCOURAGING LETTER.

As the mails come these days we are anxiously waiting to see what the postman will bring. There are about 4,000 letters some where that are due to come back. We sent these letters out on a mission, and as soon as this mission is accomplished, I am sure they will return. They keep coming in every day, slowly but surely. If you have not mailed yours, put in the next mail and let it come along. Usually these letters bring a most encouraging and helpful message. A check enclosed always encourages, but it frequently happens that accompanying the check, there is a personal message of assurance and high hopes for the success of the College.

The other day we received a letter of unusual merit. This letter was from an Alumnus of Elon who is now the pastor of a small but fine group of people in the largest city of North Carolina. Bill Scott of Winston-Salem, writes as follows:

Dear Dr. Smith:

I am enclosing two checks for $3.00 each for the Emergency Fund. One check is from the United Church of Winston-Salem, and this youngest church of our Convention rejoices that it can join in the support of our beloved Elon and her loyal President. We wish this gift might be much more and God willing, you and Elon shall ever have this church's share of support. We hope that our growth in influence and power here will make possible a larger support for all our denominational enterprises.

The other check enclosed is from Mrs. Scott and me, and we shall have to ask that this be credited on our Dollar-a-Month pledge.

We want you to know that you have our pledge of continued support. You have done a great work at Elon, and we believe that under your leadership Elon shall have a brighter day. I am sure I have not attended a Commencement at Elon which was so fine as this year's. I regret that I could not stay throughout but duties here made that impossible. It seems to me that the plan of activities of the College is raised. Greater achievements are bound to come.

We expect to have the formal opening of our new building here on July 9th, and I want you to be present for a part on the program. I will write you again relative to this.

With kindest personal greetings, I remain

Fraternally yours,

"BILL."

WM. T. SCOTT.

This is a good letter and encourages us greatly. If this new church can join the Dollar-a-Month Club and send her contribution to the College regularly, I feel certain that practically every church in the Convention could do the same.

As you read this, you will perhaps say, "Of course, our church could send a dollar a month," and maybe you feel that you will, but just keep postponing it. Why not take the matter up with the officials immediately and arrange to have your church join the Dollar-a-Month Club? It won't mean much to your entire membership to give a dollar a month, but if every church in the Convention would give that amount, the total contributions would be sufficient to take care of one professor's salary.

It is necessary for us to provide a teacher for the Department of Christian Education. Wouldn't it be a fine thing if the churches of the Convention would obligate themselves to pay the salary of this new professor? One dollar each would meet the bill and would guarantee that his salary would be paid monthly on time.

I am writing the pastor of this new church at Winston-Salem, asking him if they will not undertake to enroll their sister churches in the Convention in the Dollar-a-Month Club. This is a big undertaking for a young church, but I believe she will do it. And, my dear reader, when she writes you, please respond immediately. This will encourage her and help everybody. I am waiting to see what the results will be.

RELIGIONS ON PARADE.

For the first time in 1,100 years, the head of an orthodox Hindu sect is leaving India. He is coming to Chicago this summer to address the World Fellowship of Faiths. His Holiness Jagadguru Shri Shankaracharya is bringing twenty Hindu priests in their picturesque robes, to assist in his daily obligatory religious ceremonies.

Bishop Francis J. McConnell, National Chairman of the World Fellowship of Faiths, at the new headquarters of the Fellowship in the Hotel Morrison, Chicago, issued, recently, the first public report of the speakers who have accepted invitations to address the Chicago sessions which will continue, during the Century of Progress, the great traditions of the World Parliament of Religions which was held at the time of Chicago's first World's Fair in 1893.

His Highness Maharaja Gaekuar of Baroda, Sadhu Vaswami (liberal Hindu), Raja Jai Prithvi Bahadur Singh (Humanist), K. Natarajan (Bramo Samaj), Sir Zakir Husain (Moslem), Dr. Pardamen Singh Grewal (Sikh), Charmat Rai Jain (Jainism), Bramachari Devapriya Walisinhia (Buddhist), are also among the one hundred and two eminent speakers who have accepted the invitation to address the World Fellowship of Faiths.

Senator Arthur Capper, Governor Gifford Pinchot, Professor John Dewey, Bishop James E. Freeman, Edward Howard Griggs, John Haynes Holmes, Rabbi Stephen E. Wise, Mrs. Percy V. Pennypacker, Justice Florence Allen, Ambassador Sao-ke Sze, Bishop Frederick B. Fisher, Roscoe Pound and Rufus Jones are among the many distinguished men and women who are coming from various parts of America.

In occasional great meetings throughout the five months from June to November, and in daily sessions during the three culminating convention weeks from August 27th to September 17th, representatives of many creeds and countries will seek to solve such problems as: "Poverty Amidst Plenty," "Unemployment," "Racial and Religious Persecution," "Youth and the Future," "Men and Machines," "Fear," "Disarmament," "War."

Bishop McConnell said: Those of us who recall with gratitude the Parliament of Religions in 1893, anticipate with real eagerness the World Fellowship of Faiths. It will differ from the Parliament of Religions in two vital ways which correspond to the progress of world thought during the past forty years. The first difference is that, instead of a competitive parade of rival religions, all faiths will be challenged to manifest or apply their religion by helping to solve the urgent problems which impede man's progress. The second difference is that the word "Faiths" is understood to include, not only all religions, but all types of spiritual consciousness or conviction which are determining the actual lives of significant groups of people. Educational, philanthropic, social, economic, national, and political "Faiths" will be thus included. The effort is to help mankind to develop a new spiritual dynamic, competent to master and reform the world.—Bulletin Century of Progress.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

MEASURING AND MEETING OBLIGATIONS.

It is a mark of courage not to measure only, but to meet obligations. And the courageous heart does not wait until tomorrow, but begins today to reveal his strength. The persons and the institutions who will pay their obligations when prosperity comes are the ones who in adversity are doing something about these obligations, if not in a large, then in a small way. One hope and a bright prospect on the horizon of our church obligations is the effort to do something in a small way now when big things are impossible.

An example, was the effort of our Mission Board two years ago in soliciting and creating a "Dollar-a-Month Club." This brought many dollars to Missions and helped. Some months later the idea was taken up more vigorously and hopefully in relieving heavy obligations and expenses at our Elon. President Smith is pushing the "Dollar-a-Month Club," and while the income has not been great, it is growing, and reveals the spirit of self-denial and the practice of sacrificial giving on the part of those who have joined in the task.

(The Mission Board, sensing the situation and appreciating conditions, adopted the dime coin-card collection, knowing that ten dimes make a dollar, and through this agency many dollars have been garnered for Missions, and are being collected to help bear the burden and meet the obligations of pledges to Mission points and projects.)

But this aside. The Biblical Recorder (Baptist) of last week carried the statement that the accumulated indebtedness of the Southern Baptist Convention, through its South-wide agencies, is $5,654,937.57. Of this amount, its Foreign Mission Board is in debt in the sum of $1,235,142.58; its Home Mission Board staggers under an indebtedness of $1,783,222.95; its two theological seminaries have an indebtedness of $1,194,625.90; its Bible Institute is in debt to the extent of $291,507.69; its Education Board, $415,963.12, etc., till its grand total of indebtedness, as stated above, totals more than five and one-half millions. Instead of giving up or retreating before such obligations, its recent Convention decided to face and begin to discharge these obligations, not by finding rich men who have, but poor people who will and can. In brief, that great body adopted the plan already in practice at Elon College—that of the "Dollar-a-Month Club," calling upon and now trying to find 100,000 of its number who will agree to pay a dollar a month so that this enormous debt may be wiped out. This, points out the Recorder, can be done within five years, if the 100,000 can be found among Southern Baptists who will pay a dollar a month to their "100,000 Club."

All of which carries a lesson in practical economy that the country at large and individuals may learn, viz., our heavy obligations can be met by saving and continually paying in the little. The man who thinks he will pay off his big obligations some day in the future when big money comes in and pays little regard to the way he handles his nickels and his dimes now, simply fools himself even worse than a fanatic who seeks the bag of gold at the rainbow's end. Dimes make up the dollars, and only those will have dollars to pay on their obligations in prosperity who in adversity learn how to save, to use and to properly apply the nickels and the dimes, when only nickels and dimes are to be had.

The church has taught governments and all of us individuals a lesson, since statistics show that while banks and business enterprises have failed by the thousands, churches have closed up and failed only in singles, when at all. J. O. A.

INCREASE IN CHURCH MEMBERSHIP.

Dr. George L. Kieffer, giving through the Christian Herald church statistics for 1932, shows that there has been a great turning to the church in this time of economic depression. In 1932 the religious bodies showed a total gain in membership of 929,252, of persons of the age of 13 years old and upward. This is one of the largest annual gains ever recorded and brings the total church membership to 50,037,209. Of the largest denominations making gains, the Baptists led with nearly one-third of the total—343,353. Next came the "Eastern Catholics," next the Methodists and next Lutherans. Dr. Kieffer points out another fact of great encouragement to the effect that from 1900 to 1933 church membership in the nation increased from 27,383,000 to 50,037,209, a gain of 82.8 per cent. The gain in population of the nation for that period was 65.8 per cent, thus showing a considerable increase in the church membership over that of population.

There is yet a fact of further encouragement. In 1932 church contributions for all purposes were $19.02 per capita compared with $22.62 in 1931. "Since the depression began," says Dr. Kieffer, "one out of ever six banks has failed, one out of every 45 hospitals has closed, one out of every 22 business and industrial concerns has become bankrupt, but only one out of every 2,344 churches has closed its doors." Of course, this is partly accounted for on the grounds that churches are willing to go along on meager financial support over a long period of time, but, as a rule, churches are better financed than most business institutions.

The above figures are in keeping with history. In time of prosperity people become engrossed with things material and obsessed with physical ease and comfort. In time of depression and hardship, there is a turning to the Lord. Surely, the churches have now a most unusual opportunity of winning recruits and of attracting people from waywardness to righteousness and peace and truth. J. O. A.

PASTORS AND THE POSTOFFICE.

Postmaster-General Farley has rescinded the rule preventing newspapers to go through the mails when publishing stories of lottery winners. While the advertising of lotteries is prohibited, Mr. Farley thinks it a great story that the newspaper should be allowed to publish the name of one who, by putting in a shilling, wins millions.

Postmaster-General explains: "If it is going to impair our morals to know what goes on in the world, that is a problem for our pastors, not the Postoffice Department."

Strange reasoning, indeed, for one so high in authority giving the name, and thus lending the glare of publicity, of the individual who wins a million dollars on the investment of a dime. This is an evil that one in authority, viz., the Postmaster-General, himself, could easily prevent instead of turning that evil over to hundreds of pastors after the evil is done. Instead of the winner of the prize being held up to scorn and contempt, thousands will regard him with admiration due only a hero, and other thousands will be tempted to follow his lead and example. J. O. A.

ONLY FIVE IN A BED.

Society changes, so do laws and individuals. We are said to have more laws now than we used to have, but at any rate many of them are different. It is pointed out that the great State of New York, in her early history, besides levying a tariff on cabbages and chickens coming in from New Jersey and Connecticut, had a law which limited the occupants in one bed to five persons. Henry Collins Brown, New York historian, tells of a tavern keeper who tried to conform to the laws of the day and so had posted in his tavern for all and sundry patrons to read:

"Four pence a night for bed.

"Six pence with supper.

"No more than five to sleep in one bed.

"No boots to be worn in bed.

"Organ grinders to sleep in wash house.

"No dogs allowed upstairs.

"No beer allowed in the kitchen.

"No razor grinders or tinkers taken in."

New York has advanced—or has it gone backward?—since those days, and instead of excluding beer from the kitchen, it includes it now anywhere, any time, any place.

Is civilization going forward or backward?

J. O. A.

The goal of evangelism is the production of Christ-like character and life in individuals and in society; through moral and spiritual conversion; by faith in and fellowship with God through Jesus Christ, his Son, our Lord and Saviour; through sharing of a brotherhood life transcending all distinctions in the new divine society, the Kingdom of God on earth; and through becoming witnesses, in word and life by the power of the Holy Spirit, of this new life to others.—E. Stanley Jones.

Our happy hopes, so happy and so good,
Are not mere idle motions of the blood:
And when they seem most baseless, most are not,
A seed there must have been upon the spot Where the flowers grow, without it ne'er they could.—Clough.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

BACCALAUREATE SERMON.

By REV. HARRY K. EVERSULL, D. D.

[This sermon was delivered before the graduating class of Elon College, on Sunday, June 3, 1933, and, upon request of the managing editor was given to THE CHRISTIAN SUN for publication.—J. T. K.]

TEXT: Romans 8:1-17.

The thesis that I wish to present to the members of this graduating class this morning is that they can never hope to "see life steadily and see it whole" apart from the Gospel of Christ. They can never hope to achieve a full, well-balanced life, a life lived in fullest sense, a life of leadership and power apart from the Gospel which Jesus proclaimed.

The old apologists of the early Christian centuries labored diligently and fervently in their attempts to work out a satisfactory metaphysics. Justin Martyr and Irenaeus, for example, were vitally interested in defending their religious philosophy from the attacks of the pagan thinkers. They lived in an age when numerous philosophies were contending for recognition, some of which were intensely materialistic, and others of which were openly agnostic. To defeat these philosophies, and to place their own religious convictions in a more favorable light before the pagan world, to plant firmly and securely the Christian Gospel in the hearts of men—that was their supreme purpose. Tertulian, scholar and leader that he was, sought to develop a doctrine of God that would be so formidable and so convincing that the Agnostics would be utterly unable to reply. Clement of Alexandria and Origen set about to satisfy speculative minds by working out a satisfactory theory of the nature of Jesus and his relationship with the Father. Sabellius was deeply concerned with the Trinity: How could the idea of God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Spirit, be maintained without one becoming a polytheist and believing in three Gods? And so throughout the early Christian centuries the apologists, the theologians, and the metaphysicians sought to develop an invulnerable theology in which the principal doctrines were concerned with God, Christ and the Trinity.

But modern apologists, modern preachers, modern thinkers are not so much concerned with these things. They are interested in them, to be sure, but having in mind the more sobering problems of human relations they direct their attention primarily to the doctrine of salvation, and by salvation they mean "seeing life steadily and seeing life whole." The message of the church today, therefore, is this thesis which I present to you this morning: you cannot hope to achieve a constructive, contented, fruitful, well-balanced life apart from the Gospel which Christ proclaimed.

Economic comfort, political freedom, international peace pledges, education, culture, important as these are, will not save the day for humanity. Man needs something more permanent, something more reliable and enduring; the human soul needs God, as he was revealed and brought into social relationships by Jesus Christ. It is when men believe in God with all their souls and give themselves to him in utmost truth and confidence, surrendered their wills, their emotions, and their intellectual powers to him that they believe there is an intelligent purpose running through the entire creative process—and even in their own lives they see rationality. It makes no difference what theory of creation you may accept for yourself, the broadly progressive character of life is obvious. And to see in the continuous process a rational purpose is to have a spiritual interpretation of history and a spiritual apprehension of those values which make life worthwhile. It's the Gospel of Christ—his ethics, his Sermon on the Mount, his social message—yes, it's Christ upon Calvary, it's Christ standing beside the empty tomb and walking with his own to Emmaus while their hearts burned within them, it's Christ who suffered humiliation and death in order to enter into his glory who opens our eyes to the real meaning of all human experience.

In order to see "life steadily and see it whole" it is necessary, in the first place, that we have a spiritual interpretation of history. Do you recall that beautiful account in the Gospel story of the Transfiguration? Peter and James and John had entered into an understanding of the life and the mission of Jesus, and because of their spiritual insight they were chosen from all the others to go with him to the Mount. It is very probable that he had been transfigured before them on previous occasions, but his disciples had not acquired that spiritual insight which would enable them to perceive a transfiguration. But when three of them were adequately prepared, he took them away where he could be alone with them. Nothing of particular value could have been accomplished by taking the others along. They would have seen nothing unusual; they would have experienced nothing out of the ordinary. But Peter and James and John were fully prepared. And there appeared before them Moses and Elijah talking with Jesus. What did it mean? What was its significance? Those three disciples beheld their Master in the perspective of history. Moses had founded their nation; he had led the Jews out of captivity, organized them into a body politic, and had given them their laws. Elijah was the early prophet of a monotheistic God whose character is ethical. Those three disciples realized that their Master was not a leader isolated from the other leaders of their race; he was not apart from the others in the age-long quest for God. In him the process was consummated. In him the prophets, who through the centuries had been bearing witness to the righteousness of God, found their glorious spokesman. What a tremendous vision it was! To behold Jesus in such intimate and cordial fellowship with the historical leaders of their race must have been an inspiration. They could never forget it. The light of the transfiguration faded away so that they saw Jesus only, but the inspiration and the insight which their experience provided remained with them throughout their lives. To have a spiritual interpretation of history, to see the continuity of progress in spiritual, ethical, and social development, to see purpose in life—that is the significance of the Transfiguration.

Thomas Hardy, the last of the Victorians, in his drama which he called "The Dynasts," dealing with that startling period known as the era of Napoleon, expresses his disgust with the faithless, dishonest, conniving character of the nations of Europe. Europe was literally bathed in rivers of blood, not because the people were economically subdued, not because the people were illiterate, but because there was a total absence of idealism and fraternalism. "What was it all about?" comes the question. "No plan and no purpose; it is like the rest of human history, a tale told by a fool, full of sound and fury, signifying absolutely nothing. Round and round in endless cycles of sorrow following sorrow, and sin that grows from sin, human history runs its course to nothingness at last. And all things will be in the end as though nothing had ever been." Sometimes it seems as if Thomas Hardy were right, as if there is no intelligent purpose in creation, as if the race is no better today than when the law of the jungle prevailed, as if Bertrand Russell's "unyielding despair" is final. It all depends upon one's philosophy of life. And without the Gospel of Christ there is no alternative but for us to surrender ourselves to a godless materialism. To have a spiritual interpretation of history is to have the Christian point of view; it is to have the Christian insight into life's meaning.

If we are to see "life steadily and see it whole" we must also have a spiritual interpretation of the phenomena with which science deals. We recognize that education is both a splendid and a necessary thing; but it alone can never bring men into harmony with each other and with the ultimate purposes of the cosmos. Throughout the centuries the Christian Church has taken the lead in advancing not only educational research but educational opportunities. The early church established schools for boys and girls, rich and poor, freeman and serf, and in spite of the opposition of the ruling classes in the Roman Empire these schools became genuine educational centers. Then developed the monastic idea, from which came the educational orders such as the Benedictines, the Franciscans, the Dominicans, and later on the Jesuits. The Schoolmen of the Middle Ages and the Reformers of the Reformation worked tirelessly to develop and to make universal the privileges of organized mental discipline. The Pilgrims, coming to America, brought with them the conviction that education was imperative for the welfare and prosperity of the state. That inscription over the Johnston Gates at Harvard University shows how solicitous they were for sound intellectual leadership. "After God had carried us safe to New England, and we had builded our houses, provided necessities for our livelihood, reared convenient places for God's worship, and settled the civil government: one of the next things we longed for and looked after was to advance learning and perpetuate it to posterity; dreading to leave an illiterate ministry to the churches, when our present ministers shall lie in the dust."

But with all of this, important as it is, a knowledge of the arts and sciences, an understanding of philosophy and history cannot bring men into harmony with the ultimate purposes of God. The age of Pericles with its magnificent array of scholarship and genius was the most immoral and corrupt that the little peninsula of Attica ever knew. Lecky, in his "History of European Morals," declares: "It was the distinguishing characteristic of Christianity that its moral influence was not indirect, casual, remote or spasmodic. Unlike all pagan religions it made moral teaching a main function of its clergy, moral discipline the necessary condition of the due performance of its rites. By the pulpit, by its ceremonies, by all the agencies of power that it possessed, it labored systematically and preserverly for the regeneration of mankind. Under its influence doctrines concerning the nature of God, the immortality of the soul and the duties of man, which the noblest intellects of antiquity could barely grasp, have become the truisms of the village school, the proverbs of the cottage and the alley."

It should certainly be obvious to us all that if every man and woman on the earth were a graduate of college the problems of life, the problems of human relationships, would not be solved. Let us remember that Aaron Burr had a far keen-

SUFFOLK LETTER.

"The love of money is the root of all evil." (I. Tim. 6:10.) In these days of financial stress it is appalling to discover that so many people have been charged with financial dishonesty. It is heart breaking to read the stories of the misuse of funds in almost every station in life. Small institutions as well as large financial institutions have been robbed of immense sums of money. Banks, business houses, manufacturing plants and other corporations have been the victims of covetousness and greed. Clerks and other officials who have been trusted with the handling of funds, have been in many instances found guilty of systematic stealing and making false entries on their books.

These discoveries have been a severe test upon the public confidence in the banks of the country. Banks cannot prosper without the support and confidence of the people. When a bank official betrays his trust it has a tendency to weaken the confidence of the public in all such institutions. It is not surprising that people withdraw their money after such investigations and revelations have been made public.

One wonders what all this means? Why cannot people be trusted with public funds? Why will a person steal that which belongs to another? The answer is found in the text quoted from the Bible. The love of money is the explanation. Surely the love of money is a powerful incentive. Not only is this an explanation of the fraudulent use of funds belonging to others, but it is also a key to the radical change in public sentiment on the much discussed prohibition question. State legislatures and the national congress are hard pressed to find sources of funds to balance budgets of the states and national government. Keen leaders of the liquor interests of this country have studiously and persistently sought to emphasize the enormous income which might be realized from taxing beer and other alcoholic liquors. They have shown very convincingly that large sums of money may be readily and easily collected from these sources. The movement to repeal the Eighteenth Amendment is motivated by the love of money. The people are convinced, apparently, that if this amendment is repealed the brewers and the liquor dealers will make money in the traffic, and they will pay large sums to the government for this privilege. The primary interest at this time is in money and not in morals. The interest manifested by the liquor advocates does not relate in any way to the promotion of temperance or the observance of law. Back of the whole question is the love of money. If the manufacture and sale of alcohol as a beverage could be carried on without profit, there would be no effort to repeal the Eighteenth Amendment. Many people who want the Eighteenth Amendment repealed are more concerned about getting money than liquor.

Sabbath desecration is in the same class of evils. People are not very anxious to work seven days in every week. Working people are asking for shorter hours. But trains and delivery wagons, and factories, and contractors, and road builders, and farmers and people in every walk of life are working on the Sabbath. Ball games, and places of amusement, and golf clubs and fishing parties and scores of other types of recreation are liberally patronized in every community. The love of money and pleasure is the explanation. Why not face the facts as they are in every department of human life? People want to make money for the power and pleasure it may offer them. Money has great power. It has helped many people. It has ruined many lives. It has broken many hearts. It is dangerous to love money. The love of money should not obscure our desire to be honest and to do right before God and our fellowman. I. W. JOHNSON.

HOW CAN I HELP THE COLLEGE?

The other day I happened to meet with an old friend of Elon's. He was enthusiastic for the College and extravagant with his good wishes, assuring me that he was ready and willing to do anything that he could, but was careful to explain that he could not give money.

Elon College needs money, needs it badly, but money is not all that it needs and there are scores and hundreds of people who, if they do not have money to give, can make most valuable contributions along other lines. We need some one to herald the good name of the College far and near. To speak well of an individual means to add to that individual's wealth and power. To speak well of Elon College means to increase its influence and widen its scope of service. If you have faith in the institution and express that faith, you will sow the germ of faith in the hearts and minds of others. We are taught in the Scriptures, however, that faith without works is dead. Aside from speaking a good word for the College, the average individual can do a bit of work. At this season of the year, we need much work in behalf of the institution.

The records for the year just closed show that we had a total enrollment of two hundred and eighty-six students. This perhaps was the smallest the College has had in years. However, considering the odds that were against us, we feel we got along pretty well. In this number there were forty more new students than there were old students, or those who had previously been students at Elon. This seems to us to be prophetic of better days. We will need students at Elon another year. We are putting forth every possible effort to this end. It is impossible for the limited force that we will be able to put in the field to reach all prospective students. I am, therefore, appealing to parents, pastors, Alumni and friends of the College wherever you may be, to join efforts, together with us, in endeavoring to turn many young men and young women in search of college training to Elon for another year. This will not take much of your time, but really you can succeed with your friends better than we can. Make up your mind to do a little work for the College. It will pay you now and in years to come. If, as you interview young men and young women about coming to Elon, questions arise, will you please let us have these questions? Should it seem to you to be necessary for a representative of the College to visit these friends of yours, let us have your request. There must be a number of young people in your community who are going away to college, and would just as soon come to Elon as go elsewhere, and if you will talk to them, explaining to them the advantages to be had at our school, you will render them and us a great service. Don't be afraid to recommend Elon College. Ours is just as good a school as anybody's. We are doing just as good work, and in most instances, at much less cost per student.

Applications are coming in fairly well. Prospects for another year are indeed good. With everybody working together, we ought easily to have a student body of four hundred for 1933-1934. We will if you will do your part. I am counting on you—please do not fail us.

Should a representative of the College come to your community, won't you please be courteous to him and assist him in any way you can? Any courtesy shown a representative of the College is a courtesy shown the College. Invite this representative into your home and cooperate with him in any way you can to make his visit to your community pleasant and profitable. Elon is our school. Together we will support it, and together we will see that it goes forward without failure.

THE CHRISTIAN'S WALK.

When God through Jesus Christ saves a soul from sin, that soul dies unto sin and becomes alive unto God, a new creature. Because of this wonderful salvation bought with the precious blood of Jesus, the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, without which there is no remission for sin, those who are saved should walk in newness of life. Paul, in his epistle to the Ephesians, has much to say about how a Christian should walk, first bringing to mind how they had formerly walked in trespasses and sins (chapter 2:1,). Then he points out to them the marvelous grace of God which had saved them through faith in Jesus Christ. Not saved because of the good deeds that had been done, but now to walk in good works (chapter 2:10), because of the new creation in Christ Jesus.

In Paul's epistle to the Romans, he speaks of those who are called to be saints; now he tells the Ephesians to walk worthy of the vocation (chapter 4:1), wherewith they are called, and gives special instructions. He warns them not to walk in vanity (chapter 4:17), showing the terrible state of those who continue in that way, also what sins to avoid. Then he uses the endearing words, "dear children," and urges them to walk in love (chapter 5:1, 2), following this with the admonition to walk as children of light (chapter 5:8), demonstrating the fruits of the spirit.

Finally he bids them to walk circumspectly (chapter 5:15); another rendering reads, "viewed from all sides," in the wisdom of God which is so much needed in dealing with our fellowmen. In conclusion Paul tells the Ephesians of the special armour that God has for them which will make them to stand against the wiles of the devil.

Paul was in fetters in a Roman prison, but he had been taught of God and had learned how to walk and to stand and now as an ambassador in bonds he was making known the mystery of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. May each of us, as true soldiers of the cross, put on the whole armour of God so that we may be fully equipped to walk or to stand as God wills.

VALLEY LETTER.

After the worst of the winter seemed to be past I ventured forth in revival meetings again, holding those in my field which I did not have time to hold during the fall. Our meeting at Concord brought good congregations. Six professed faith in Christ and united with the church. At Dry Run there were good congregations and one profession. At Newport, good congregations, and seven conversions and additions to the church.

Our Conference will meet on Wednesday and Thursday before the second Sunday in August (August 9th-10th), and will be held at Bethel, about three miles west of Elkton, Va. Those desiring further information in regard to the Conference may communicate with the undersigned.

A WRONG EMPHASIS.

By TIMOTHY THOMAS.

Graduates of high schools and colleges of this season, if press reports are correct, are lamenting the fact that no positions await them, and in many instances parents regret the expense they have borne to make possible the graduation of their boys and girls.

For years many educators have preached a near-sighted doctrine of the purpose of education. Education's primary purpose is to give mental development to the individual. In my earlier days a young man from our community went to college, received his degree, and returned to the farm. He was considered a failure, and was often referred to as such when some son approached his parents on the subject of a college education. That this college man was a better farmer no one gave him credit for; that he was a leader in his church, no one seemed to realize that it was his training which had made this possible; that he knew flowers and birds, soil and sun, man and moon, in the more appreciative way, did not deter his critics. To the community he was supposed to have become a lawyer, physician, preacher or politician.

This wrong emphasis on education came to us from the early days in England when and where only the nobility and the knighted had the privilege of a higher education, and when it was supposed that only these classes needed an education.

Personally, I have seen life in the raw and the rough before and after a college training, but I have never seen a time or been in a place or position that I could not use and appreciate my college experience. Were I doomed to live out the remainder of my days on a desert island I would need and appreciate my education the more. Were I to become a ditch digger, my knowledge of geology and soil would make the work fascinating; were I to take to the open highways as a professional tramp, my greater knowledge of a thousand things would make that nomadic life a grand and glorious experience—and were I to be stricken with a malady, physically and financially incapacitating me so as to be confined to a pauper's cottage, I would mentally live out my days delving into history, literature and science, and have for my daily associates and companions kings and emperors, presidents and statesmen—great characters of all ages. The days would be short, and the night would hold no terror.

The purpose of an education is not to provide a life, but to make life more worth living. Depressions last only for a season, while an education will last a lifetime—and I hold my own theological views about its worth and value beyond this life.

Let no young graduate despond. The challenge of the day is for unusual leadership, and out of the ranks of our schools and colleges shall we find that leadership.

A TOBOGGAN SLIDE IN BOTH PUBLIC AND PRIVATE MORALITY.

By MISS GEORGIA ROBERTSON.

A toboggan slide in morals is on in full force both in public and private life. Everything standing in the way of money-getting to balance the budget is being swept aside. Human weaknesses and vices are to be pandered to to produce revenue for the government!

Beer has been legalized, though it is unconstitutional, and is sold in Washington—the capital of the nation—in hotels, restaurants, drug and grocery stores all over the city, and even in the capitol building itself. One congresswoman advocated making beer drinking fashionable for young women and girls as well as boys.

Pressure is being brought in questionable ways to force the voters to sign on the dotted line for repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment without even trying to provide means to prevent the return of the saloon with all its old time horrors!

Our government receives revenue from cigarettes which are destroying our boys, girls and future mothers at a frightful rate, blighting our unborn babies, and costing our government millions of dollars in forest fires, and in decreased efficiency of its employees, as well as in time wasted by their smoking during business hours. Did it ever occur to you that some of these losses come out of your pocket in unseen ways?

Gambling, whose foundation stone is getting something for nothing, or next to nothing, which always fascinates people and leads them on to ruin, is already being encouraged by some state governments! The laws against it are being broken down! Even little children of the poor use their pennies to bet in the "number games!" What will the end be? In the present day atmosphere of lowered moral standards commercialized prostitution will surely worm its way in for its share of profits.

The public has become indifferent to the most horrible filth on the stage, screen, and in literature. Even the radio is used to demoralize our youth by cigarette and beer advertising, and stories of crime, forcing itself into the sacred precincts of the home. The moral standards of our people have been so lowered and undermined that we submit with little protest to all these evils.

Man having invented modern wonders—the telephone, radio, movie, mechanical refrigeration, and a host of other inventions, even the airplane—he felt all sufficient unto himself, that he could cast God and his commands to the discard, forgetting that all these inventions were made possible only after years of study to discover God's laws governing the universe and then working in harmony with them to produce these inventions.

Man has defied God's command to keep his Sabbath day holy and has turned it into a day of pleasure and commercialism, forsaking the worship of God.

How can we pray, "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven," and then vote for repeal which will restore the "hell of iniquity on earth?" We have gone mad with the thirst for pleasure and wealth. Shall we have to drink still deeper from the wells of suffering before we "turn about face," acknowledge our sins and seek forgiveness, casting off all the slime and filth in which we have been and still are wallowing?

You know legalizing beer and other intoxicants and making them easily available will increase drinking, drunkenness, poverty, misery, sickness and suffering of multitudes of our people and destroy their immortal souls as well. Do you want a part in bringing this about? Then do nothing to help save the Eighteenth Amendment! Or, sign on the dotted line for repeal and thus help cause all this sin and misery!

To aid in the fight against these evils, "Buy Dry." Patronize only stores that do not sell beer, also tell them you appreciate the dry stand they have taken. Let the wet places know you no longer patronize them.

WOMEN PREACHERS MEET.

For fifteen years a group of the women preachers of the country have been meeting in annual assemblies. Not many are aware of the fact that there is such an organization of women or that these women occupy as prominent places in the work of the church as they do.

Authors and editors, missionaries, field secretaries, Y. W. C. A. and W. C. T. U. workers, as well as pastors of local churches, these women are leaders in their respective lines, and the meeting which will immediately follow the national W. C. T. U. Convention and precede the World's Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor in Milwaukee, Wis., should, and undoubtedly will, be an exceedingly helpful meeting to all who attend.

The hostess will be the Rev. Ada L. Forster, pastor of the Park Avenue Christian Church, of Milwaukee, who will be assisted by Rev. Mable Mannington Dexter, assistant pastor of the Congregational Church at Union Grove, Wis. Numbered among the speakers will be: Rev. Lucy T. Ayres, Congregational Home Mission Board; Dr. Mary Harris Armor, Georgia Field Secretary for the W. C. T. U. work, and Rev. Elizabeth Wilson, who collaborated with Canon Raven in his American edition of "Women in the Ministry."

"Thinking Missions" and "Re-Thinking Missions" will receive consideration and addresses on these subjects will be made by women missionaries fresh from the field. One of the points most deeply stressed in these meetings is the need for and practice of intercession, and several periods are set aside for this great work of the church.

It is hoped many women of the Congregational-Christian Church will be present.

PRAYER.

Blest harbor of souls, the Church of our Lord! Her portals beckon, her shelter is secure. Some day, O righteous Author and Preserver, the Church shall possess the earth; if we cared enough, that day might be now. Great God, our Father, make people know that the Church's sustenance, its expansion, its triumph, is in human hands and that if truly we desire to build the Church, thou wilt build our bodies into fitting and able instruments for the holy service. In Jesus' name.—Amen. S.

ONE-HUNDRETH ANNIVERSARY.

The Antioch Christian Church, near Harrisonburg, Va., is planning to celebrate its 100th anniversary on July 2nd, with morning and afternoon services. In a biography of Rev. Isaac N. Walter was recorded the fact that he preached the dedicatory sermon of Antioch Church, on June 30, 1833.

The committee in planning for this celebration has tried to invite all former pastors and members and friends of the church. If by chance anyone has been overlooked, it is hoped that this item in THE SUN shall be accepted as an invitation. We desire a real home-coming of all.

Rev. R. H. Peel, a former pastor, of Gasport, N. Y., has accepted an invitation to be one of the speakers for the day. His subject will be "Experience and Expectation." Mr. Peel's friends will be delighted to hear him again. It has been a number of years since he preached at this church, won our organist, and sailed away on his voyage of life.

Special music and other items of interest are being planned for the day.

MRS. B. F. FRANK.

MISSIONARY RALLY.

The Rockingham District Missionary Rally of the Virginia Valley Central Conference, was held June 14th at Antioch Church, near Harrisonburg. The meeting was presided over by Mrs. B. J. Earp, superintendent of the District. The Missionary Societies at Antioch, Bethlehem, Linville, Mayland and New Hope were represented.

The morning devotional service was conducted by Rev. M. L. Weekley, pastor of the hostess church. He chose as a basis for his remarks a selection from the second chapter of Habakuk.

The Young People's Society of Antioch gave a demonstration of a missionary society.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary, was to have given the principal address of the day, but a telegram from him stated that he could not be present because of a funeral to which he was called. Rev. A. W. Andes filled the vacancy with a sermon from the text: "Go ye and teach all nations," as found in the 28th chapter of Matt. An offering was taken for missions which amounted to $5.39.

The superintendent appointed nominating, resolutions and press committees. After the hymn, "Onward, Christian Soldiers," the benediction was pronounced by Rev. B. J. Earp. Lunch was served on the church lawn.

The afternoon session was called to order and devotionals were conducted by the Rev. Mr. Earp. The Linville Society gave a pageant, entitled, "The Challenge of the Cross."

In the forum on problems conducted by Dr. Weekley, a number of important problems of missions today were discussed.

The Committee on Nominations made the following report, which was adopted: Mrs. Ora Scott, Linville, President; Mrs. Ernest Spitzer, New Hope, Assistant Superintendent; Miss Margaret Earp, Harrisonburg, Secretary; Miss Anna Lou Showalter, Antioch, Assistant Secretary.

The Committee on Resolutions earnestly urged all Christian people to uphold the Eighteenth Amendment, and thanked all who had helped to make the Rally a success.

Miss Verdie Showalter, Treasurer of the Woman's Board, reported that the churches of the Conference had raised $314.50 so far this year.

"Blest Be the Tie that Binds" was sung as the closing hymn, and Rev. A. W. Andes led the closing prayer.

PROGRAM.

The following program outline is suggested for use in Cradle Roll Rally, June, 1933):

1. Song, "God Bless the Babies." (Tune, "America.")

God bless these babies dear,
 All who are gathered here,
 Our Cradle Roll.
 Jesus, in thy dear arms,
 Keep safe from all that harms,
 To guard from all alarms,
 Our Cradle Roll.
 May they be brought by time,
 To childhood, youth and prime,
 Our Cradle Roll.
 Conquest o'er wrong achieve,
 Thy grace and truth receive,
 And never, never leave,
 The Sabbath School.

2. Prayer—

Heavenly Father, bless these babies,
 Guide their tender little feet;

May we older children help them
 To be gentle, kind and sweet.

Amen.

3. Words of Greeting, by the Superintendent.
4. Cradle Roll Baby—(Tableau recitation for little girl, a very young baby and mother. The mother sits with baby in her lap, as little girl recites.):

Dear little Cradle Roll baby,
 We know you've a little white bed,
 With covers so warm and so dainty,
 And a pillow to rest your wee head.
 Once Jesus himself was a baby,
 Our Jesus, the Saviour of all,
 His cradle was only a manger,
 His shelter a bare cattle stall.

It's wonderful, isn't it baby?
 It's wonderful, yet it is true!
 To think that he came from his heaven,
 A dear, tiny baby, like you!
 He slept in that poor, lowly manger,
 His mother dear, bending above,
 Yes, he came down to earth, little baby,
 And the reason he came was just love.

5. Song, "Jesus Loves the Little Children." (Tune, "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp.")

Jesus calls the children dear, Come to me and never fear,
 For I love the little children of the world
 I will take you by the hand, lead you to the better land,
 For I love the little children of the world.

Chorus.

Jesus loves the little children, all the children of the world;
 Red and yellow, black and white, they are precious in his sight;
 Jesus loves the little children of the world.

Jesus is the Shepherd true, and he'll always stand by you,
 For he loves the little children of the world.
 He's a Saviour great and strong, and he'll shield you from the wrong,
 For he loves the little children of the world.

I am coming, Lord, to thee, and thy soldier
 I will be,
 For he loves the little children of the world.
 And his cross I'll always bear, and for him
 I'll do and dare,
 For he loves the little children of the world.

6. Exercise, "Wee Little Folks." (Have as many as desired in this exercise; all may recite the concert verses.) All in concert, slowly:

We are (1) wee little folks who come to say
 A (2) wee little word this Cradle Roll Day.

- 1st. I want to speak a word of cheer; the blessed Lord, today, is here.
- 2nd. And I a happy song would sing, for him who is the children's king.
- 3rd. My little heart is full of love, for him who dwells in heaven above.
- 4th. And I would trust my blessed Lord, and try to learn his holy word.
- 5th. My service to him I would give, and then in heaven with him live.
- 6th. Each day, I know, he's very near, and I will never, never fear.

All in concert, slowly:

We are (1) wee little folks (2) as you can see, but just as happy (3) as we can be; We want to be (4) big folks some day, and then a (5) great big speech we'll say.

(Gestures: (1) Hold right hand out, as if measuring height, palm downward; (2) put both hands in front, palms toward each other, very close, as if measuring something very small; (3) Clap hands and smile; (4) reach up as high as possible with right hand; (5) hands extended in front, palms toward each other, far apart.)

7. "Jesus Loves Me."

8. A Parent's Prayer (by one of the mothers):

God bless our little ones tonight; our little ones—and thine;
Protect their slumber by thy might; grant them thy peace divine.
Help us no duty to forget, we owe to them or thee,
And leave us nothing to regret, in years that are to be.

God bless our little ones tonight; our little ones—and thine;
Help us to rear them true, and right, and clean, and strong, and fine.
Lead them in ways more beautiful than we have ever seen,
And make them each more dutiful than we have ever been.—Amen.

9. Recitation, "The Reason":

Some put silver on the plate; why not make it gold?
God's sweet message then could be, unto others told.

10. Offering. (Carry up Mission Boxes.)

11. "Good-bye."

(With bowed heads, let children say or sing.)

Our Mission Day is over
And we are going home:
Good-bye, Good-bye;
Be always kind and true,
Good-bye, Good-bye;
We will be kind and true,

BLUE RIDGE CONFERENCE.

A fine delegation has already been lined up for the entire period of the Conference and all is ready for a great educational and inspirational gathering.

A hearty invitation is given to the churches within easy reach of Blue Ridge, who cannot share in the entire Conference, to come for the weekend and especially for Sunday, June 25th. The Church School will meet at 9:45 under the direction of Rev. William Tate Scott. The morning service of worship will be held at 11 o'clock and the sermon will be preached by Rev. Ernest M. Halliday, D. D., of New York City.

In the evening at 7 o'clock, the Vespers will take the form of the usual Commissioning and Consecration Service led by Rev. W. Knighton Bloom, D. D. The Student Summer Service group will be commissioned and the message to them given by Rev. Alan T. Jones.

The Commissions of the Congregational Church Extension Boards will also be presented to three Home Missionary pastors: Arthur Swartz, of the Southern Seminary Foundation, Vanderbilt University School of Religion; Arnold Slater, of the Southern Seminary Foundation, Vanderbilt School of Religion; and John R. Chapman, of Union Theological Seminary, New York City.

The Candlelight Service will close the services of the day.
W. KNIGHTON BLOOM.

In company guard your tongue; in solitude, your heart. Our words need watching; but also do our thoughts and imagination which grow most active when we are alone.—Spurgeon.

THE SOUTH'S MINORITY GROUP.

The world today is concerned about the rights of minorities. Our thought turns to Gandhi fasting for the rights of India's sixty millions of outcasts; or to Germany's Jews, subjected to persecution and death; or to the numerous groups of minorities in Central Europe, each oppressed by its rulers and each struggling for freedom.

The United States has its minorities, the largest group of which is the American Negroes. These are now widely scattered, but between ten and twelve millions of them are in the South. The problem of giving justice—economic, political, cultural, and human—to the Negro is pre-eminently a Southern problem. The South knows that its treatment of the Negro is the subject of bitter censure and constant comment by the whole world. It knows that, in the opinion of many Southerners, Negroes are as truly a caste as are the untouchables of India; that politically the Negroes are as oppressed as are the minorities of Europe.

But the Negroes of the South are not without friends among us. Every community has its group, principally church leaders, who stand for justice and fair treatment of Negroes. Caught in the toils of "the law" (their name for officers), Negroes or their relatives quickly seek the aid of their white friends to rescue the victim from jail or from unjust punishment. In the Southern States there are ten thousand white women, most of them of high social standing, banded together to end the terrible crime of lynching. In hundreds of Southern colleges classes are studying the problem of race relations, seeking the best way to adjust interracial conflicts. The white church leaders have always taken interest in the religious organizations of their colored brethren. The press of the South is generous in its treatment of all movements among Negroes looking to their betterment.

But when all this is said, there remains much that we of the South ought to do to help our Negro minority. The Negro is passing from the old to the new type. The old we may have understood; the new we do not understand. Many of our white people are not in complete sympathy with the aspirations of the Negroes. Few appreciate the feelings and sensibilities of an educated Negro or ask themselves how they would wish to be treated in a similar position.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."
REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

TO OFFICERS, KEYWORKERS, MINISTERS AND FRIENDS!

Only a few days remain until our Second Annual Meeting of the Young People of Western North Carolina, which is to be held at Shiloh Christian Church, July 2nd, beginning at 10 A. M. The church is located about 8 miles south-east of Ramseur, N. C., and about 1 mile north-west of Moffitt's Mill.

Here we must count our successes and failures, and try to extend our Fellowship to remote and untrodden places and paths. Most of all, we must profit by our mistakes thus far, and begin the new year's work with renewed strength, courage, and knowledge. In order to do this, check our work for the past year, and make plans for a new program of work, there are a few things that claim your attention and mine:

First: "Let's Go to Elon Summer School." This is the best way to train our young people for leadership and service. Youth Fellowship Goal: At least one young person from each church attending the Elon Summer School. The Calendar also suggests that the young people of the church do something to raise money for part, or all, of the expenses of this person. The cost is only $7.50. Why not select your person to come now, leave off a movie, or a soft drink, and start a fund to take care of the cost; or ask your young people's organization to send a representative? The time is July 24th-30th.

Second: Be sure and check up on your "Calendar," write out the goals you have attained for each month during the year, and bring the report with your "Adventure Chart." You might win the Banner for Goals!

Third: Things We Should Bring—Bring a "Basket Dinner," or a lunch for yourself. Bring your report of the Week-End Conference which contains a program. It is important that you bring this program for we will be unable to mimeograph others. Every organization must have some money to take care of running expenses, and I am sure we are getting far more from this work than we are putting into it. Let's bring our $1.00 membership fee along with our goals and chart. This amount is so small your treasury will never miss it. When you stop and count the number of weeks in a year it is less than 2c a week. Let's give that much to see our church grow and see our young people develop into leaders for service.

We have always had a good time at our meetings, and I am sure this will be the best yet, if we make it so. Let's come and bring a friend. There will be two addresses and special music that you should not miss. Watch THE CHRISTIAN SUN for a complete program.

Last year a banner was awarded for attendance, going to Brown's Chapel Christian Endeavor Society. This Christian Endeavor Society is out to win it again. They repeat the challenge of last year. Load up your cars and come. Give them a race for the banner. Remember, if they win it three times, it is theirs for keeps. Then there is a banner for Goals. Some organization is going to win this one. Bring your "Adventure Chart" and a checked "Calendar." You may be the one to win this banner, and I am sure you would be proud of it.

We will be expecting to see each other at the meeting in a few days now. I am going to enjoy it, and I am sure you will. Let's try to "Make Christ real in our own life and the lives of others."

—Author Unknown.

Some of the following suggestions may prove helpful in preparing this topic:

1. A committee to investigate community life. This committee should make a study of all phases of life in the local community to discover what is un-Christian. These areas are suggested for investigation: Local politics, crime, treatment of prisoners, race relations, poverty, unemployment, child labor, provisions for recreation, number of children or young people not in any church school or young people's organization.

2. Appoint a committee to investigate our national life. Consider the following: Our relationship to the League and World Court, tariff, prohibition, business and industry (from the standpoint of the distribution of wealth, etc.)

3. Appoint a committee on recommendations.

4. Have the American flag and the Christian flag in place at the beginning of the service.

The founders of our government were men of deep religious convictions. It is interesting to note the extent to which religion dominated every phase of life in our early history. Our nation was built upon the principles of liberty and justice for all.

The increasing wealth and power that has come to us together with the growing complexity of modern life has brought us to a time when it is necessary to reexamine our national life. The tragedy of recent years has started us into the realization that something, probably many things are wrong. What are they? Are we in truth a Christian nation? If not, what phases of life are un-Christian? And most important of all, what can we, the youth of this generation, do to make it more Christian? E. R.

A REMINDER.

My Dear Fellow Workers:

Just to remind you that our annual session of the Eastern North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention will meet with Wake Chapel Sunday School, Fuquay Springs, N. C., July 11th, at 10 A. M. We expect to complete the work of the Convention by noon, July 12th.

Will you please attend and see that delegates are elected to represent your school and that a contribution from your school to support the work of the Convention is sent to Mr. C. H. Stephenson, treasurer, Raleigh, N. C., or handed to him at the Convention.

We greatly desire that every Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society be represented by having one or more delegates present and by sending the amount of money requested to the Convention for the support of the work. Please see that your school is one that will prove its loyalty.

We are going to have a splendid program, and I am confident that you will enjoy the Convention and your visit to Wake Chapel.

Will depend on you to come, and see that your school or society is properly represented.

R. A. WHITTEN, President.

S. S. AND C. E. CONVENTIONS—WHEN THEY MEET.

Last week attention was called to the coming sessions of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions, and emphasis was placed on the importance of sending reports and delegates and dues to these conventions. Too much can not be said about this matter, for it is very important that all Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies cooperate with their churches through these conventions. I am listing below the time and place of meetings.

Good programs are in the making, and those churches which send delegates will certainly profit by so doing:

North Carolina and Virginia—June 22nd-23rd, at Union, Virginia, Va.

Western North Carolina—July 4th, Big Oak Christian Church, Eagle Springs, N. C.

MUSSOLINI AS PEACEMAKER.

With the signing of Premier Mussolini's four-power peace pact in Europe early this month, the hitherto saber rattling premier enters on a new role of peacemaker in Europe. This pact binds Italy, Germany, France and England in an agreement to preserve peace among themselves for the next ten years. Thus there is added to the solemn declarations of nations another peace pact—Geneva, Locarno, Lausanne, Briand-Kellogg, and the Four-Power pact. If saying "Peace, Peace!" will keep us out of war, let us hear it often, but it is strange how one remembers the words of the sacred Scriptures: "And when they shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh . . ." (I. Thes. 5:3).

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

REVIEW: JESUS OUR LORD AND SAVIOUR.

LESSON VIII—JUNE 25, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT:—"All authority has been given unto me in heaven and on earth. Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."—Matt. 28: 18-20.

If one will sit down with an open mind and a responsive heart and read the Gospel according to Mark, he will come inevitably to one conclusion—a conclusion to which the centurion gave expression when he saw Jesus die on the cross: "Surely, this man was the Son of God." The central figure in this crisp and concise Gospel is more than a Teacher or Reformer, or even the Founder of just another religion: He is the Son of God and the Saviour of the world. We have none other to whom we can go. He alone has the words of eternal life.

In this review lesson no effort will be made to cover the lessons of the past quarter, except in barest outline. And this outline is not original with the writer of these notes, but comes from that handy little lesson help, The Gist of the Lesson, by Torrey.

LESSON I.—Jesus Ministering to Jews and Gentiles. Central teaching: The universality of the Gospel.

LESSON II.—Jesus Requires Confession and Loyalty. Central teaching: Half-hearted discipleship is of no avail. Jesus demands our all.

LESSON III.—Jesus Transfigured. Central teaching: The Jesus of history was also the eternal Christ, the Word of God.

LESSON IV.—Jesus Rebukes Self-Seeking. Central teaching: Unselfishness is a primary quality of the Christian character.

LESSON V.—Jesus Sets New Standards of Living. Central teaching: Disciples of Jesus are to live by love and not by law.

LESSON VI.—Jesus Faces the Cross. Central teaching: The sacrifice of Christ on Calvary is an inevitable factor in human life.

LESSON VII.—Jesus Asserts His Kingship. Central teaching: Jesus Christ is King by virtue of his inherent character and authority.

LESSON VIII.—Jesus Answers His Adversaries. Central teaching: Christ is superior to the teachers of all time.

LESSON IX.—Jesus and His Friends. Central teaching: Christ had a warm, tender, human side to his nature.

LESSON X.—Jesus Faces Betrayal and Denial. Central teaching: From His own—those whom He had called—came betrayal and denial.

LESSON XI.—Jesus on the Cross. Central teaching: The Son of God suffers to ransom the race.

LESSON XII.—Jesus Rises from the Dead. Central teaching: Jesus Christ is alive forevermore and because He lives we too shall live.

CONFESSING CHRIST.

The confession of Christ is fundamental. Men are lost without a right idea of his character and mission. See how Jesus, when they were alone in the mountainous region of Caesarea Philippi, drew out of his disciples the popular opinion of himself as leading to the great confession which Peter made of him as the Son of the living God. It is the same confession we must make today if we expect him to own and crown us in the day of Final Account.

But how can we confess him?

Confess him as Teacher.

The disciples were not ashamed to be called his disciples. Nor should we be ashamed today to be numbered among his followers. He is our Great Teacher. Let us learn of him every day.

Confess him as Saviour.

There is no other name whereby we can be saved. He saves us from the dominion and consequences of sin. Let us rejoice in his salvation and let all the world know it.

Confess him as Lord.

If we learn of him and are saved by him, we shall acknowledge him as Lord of our lives in every part and every day. We shall ever look to him to counsel, to correct and to command.

Confess him to himself.

How his heart must have leaped with joy and triumph when Peter said to him: "Thou art the Christ!" Let us in yearning prayer confess him to himself. He and he alone is the Christ of God. Nor can we approach the throne of grace without being conscious of his deity.

Confess him to Christians.

Fellow disciples need and welcome our testimony to the Messiah. How often it may prove balm to their souls! The word of Peter confirmed the faith of his associates.

Confess him with self-denial.

No heart can have two thrones. Christ is entitled to sway the scepter. Hence self must be renounced, subordinated, and made to serve instead of reign.

Confess him with obedience.

Lip service is not enough. Verbal confession by itself is inadequate and ineffective. Obedience is required. Faith without works is as dead as a body without spirit.

Confess him with sacrifice.

It crosses the grain to take up the cross and bear it sacrificially. But Christ did it for us. Not only ought we to do it for him, but we must do it for him if we follow him into the larger life. Are we ready for the task that has a thorn?

Confess him with hope.

He is coming again. Then the holy angels will be with him and he shall shine with the Father's effulgence. Of the unashamed here he will be unashamed then.—The Challenge.

WHAT IS REPENTANCE?

"Repentance implies that a measure of divine wisdom is communicated to the sinner, and that he thereby becomes wiser unto salvation. That his mind, purpose, opinions, and inclinations are changed; and that in consequence there is a total change in his conduct. It need scarcely be remarked that in this state, a man feels deep anguish of soul, because he has sinned against God, unfitting himself for heaven, and exposing his soul to hell. Hence, a true penitent has that sorrow whereby he forsakes sin, not only because it has been ruinous to his own soul, but because it has been offensive to God."—Adam Clarke.

Leave the doubtful, devious, despicable ways of compromise and questionable conduct to those who claim not royal birth! Let the sons and the daughters of the Lord God almighty walk worthy of their high calling, keep their garments pure and their ways cleansed; that so the world may take knowledge of them, and own their parentage, and glorify their Father which is in heaven.—Hubert Brooks.

MY SUFFERING FOR OTHERS.

"That I may know him . . . and the fellowship of his sufferings."—Read Philippians 3:10-14.

Whatever we may say of the Apostle Paul, he is most human, and nothing human is foreign to his feeling. Here we find him expressing the sincere longing of his heart. He is telling a little bit of his spiritual experience. Paul's epistles embody his most intimate biography.

In the days of the great war, when only a certain number were to be drafted for special service, they would cast lots. Crosses equal to the number of men required were placed in a hat and those drawing a cross were detailed for service. An American boy wrote to his father, and said in his letter: "If ever I prayed in my life, I prayed today that I might draw a cross."

Even as Christ suffered for us all, so we may suffer for one another. There is no easy road to real achievement. Paul's road was marked with suffering all along the way. Can we say today:

"Jesus, I my cross have taken,
All to leave, and follow thee;
Destitute, despised, forsaken,
Thou, from hence, my all shalt be."

It is only as we enter into the fellowship of his suffering that we can participate in the fulness of his joy. The consuming love of Christ will not only create the longing; it will supply the power to endure the cross. REV. LEWIS KEAST.

Prayer—May our hearts be so united with the great loving heart of Christ that we can go forward in the Christian life, having faith that we will be strengthened for every trial and equipped for every emergency.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE CROWNING OF FAITH.

"Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."—Read Rev. 2:8-11.

The bearing of the cross has been associated in Christian thought with the winning and the wearing of the crown. Christ emphasized the cross, and made the bearing of the same a condition of true discipleship. "And he said unto them all, if any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me."

Facing the fact of future blindness, George Matheson, with Christian fortitude and resignation, accepted the condition which confronted him with lines which make a mighty appeal to the soul:

"O Cross, that liftest up my head,
I dare not ask to fly from thee."

The cross and the crown are intertwined in Christian symbolism. The former leads to the latter.

Once, on a journey on a difficult errand, Madame Guyon and her little daughter found themselves by the brink of a river and among some rushes. Plucking several of these, the little girl made green crosses and hung them on her mother. Finding some flowers, she also made a wreath. Placing this on Madame Guyon's head, she said: "Mother, after the cross you will be crowned."

Yes, "after the cross you will be crowned."

What consolation and encouragement may be found in these words! REV. WM. J. HART.

Prayer—Let our hearts be fortified with faith, which will enable us to meet and overcome all the trials and difficulties of life. In Jesus' name, we pray.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

STEPPING OUT ON THE PROMISES.

"I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day."—Read II. Tim. 1:12-14.

We do not want to be in doubt about anything of supreme importance. Many are virtually agnostics in regard to God, "in whom we live and move and have our being." We should not be content until we, too, can say, "I know."

We do not need to be able to explain God and his mysteries. One proof of God is that we can not understand him unto perfection. But we should know him enough to have complete confidence in him. A child may have perfect confidence in his father, though he may know little of his wisdom and skill. So we may know God and trust him absolutely.

It is not by reasoning that we know God best. "Taste and see that God is good." When we step out on his promises, taking him at his word, then we begin to know him, and the efficiency of his grace. Dr. David James Burrell has made the confession that he ceased to try to explain everything, and was determined to preach Christ as he is made known in the Gospels. We must live the truth revealed in Jesus Christ. Then we know, more and more certainly, that we can trust God with our soul and all our interests.

The mother of Helen Keller cried over the crib of her deaf and blind daughter, because she could not tell her how much she loved her. So God is trying to reveal himself in his love to his children. As the skilled nurse came in between Helen and her mother, and showed the child her mother's love, Jesus comes in between us and God and reveals the Father's love, so that we can say from the heart: "I know whom I have believed."

REV. A. K. LEWIS.

Prayer—May we and our children, and those whom we can influence, learn to trust God absolutely as our guide throughout life, and our mighty helper in time of need.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

"THE SORROW NO ONE MAY SHARE."

"Come unto me . . . and I will give you rest."—Read Matt. 11:28-30.

It is the glory of the Christian religion to provide for human need that lies beyond the reach of human help. The experience of death in the home, bewildering and terrible, is a gateway by means of which Christ can enter in. In time of bereavement, when other helpers fail, his help is best displayed. With his promise of brighter, better things in the world beyond—with his calm assurance of the Father's power both to restore and to continue life—with these he comes to those heavy laden with grief, and he enters into their sorrow and lifts them up as no power of mortal man can possibly do. With these as his gifts of comfort, he causes them to say: "In him my soul has found both hope and rest."

Surely it is this experience that the poet has in mind when he writes and says:

"The sorrow that nobody mentions,
The sorrow no one may share,
Is the sorrow the dear Lord giveth
His sweetest, tenderest care."

"He places his hand on the heart-break
The quivering lips refrain,
And the eyes smile forth in defiance—
His love enfolding the pain."

"He knows where the hurt is deepest,
The tears of night and day,
And whispering softly, 'trust in me,' Brushes the tear-drops away."

REV. GERHARD E. LENSKI.

Prayer—In the time of deep bereavement and suffering, when the home has been deprived of one of its beloved members, may we find in Christ a gracious assurance of divine goodness and a sustaining grace to bear our sorrows. In his name, we ask it.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

"THIS SAME JESUS."

"This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."—Read Acts 1:10-14.

The Second Advent is clearly revealed as a part of the divine purpose. The prophets all alluded to it, though often they were perplexed by its being intermingled with the First Advent. The whole of the eleventh chapter of Isaiah is a wonderful description of his coming and reign. As our Lord was about to leave the earth, he gave extended descriptions of this great event, and positively affirmed it thus: "And they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory."

The purpose of this Second Coming is minutely described in the Scriptures. Christ comes with omnipotent power, and attended by thousands of angels, to raise the holy dead and to translate the living saints. "In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible." (I. Cor. 15:52.) It will usher in the new era of universal righteousness and peace.

Our Lord gives his servants this warning: "Watch—be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." The faithful, the church and all Christians are warned against false prophets and misleaders, and told that they themselves should be ever ready for this sublime consummation.

REV. JUNIUS B. REMENSNYDER.

Prayer—Let our lives be so ordered in faith and service, that we will always be ready, knowing that the divine wisdom is over all.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE HEAVENLY HARMONIES.

"It came even to pass, as the trumpeters and singers were as one, to make the sound to be heard in praising and thanking the Lord."—Read II. Chron. 5:11-14.

One of the tasks of our daily Christian life is to get in tune with the spiritual. Attunement and harmony have always been a part of religion. One of the characteristics of the ancient Temple was its wonderful music, which was made possible by the trumpeters and singers working in harmony. Then the trumpeter and the human voice made one sound, then God could be praised, the great congregation was inspired and thrilled and David and Asaph went home to write new Psalms.

Out of the spiritual harmonies of the church, great movements have come in civilization, music, art, education, evangelism and government. When Christ was born, heaven added its harmonies to earth—the angels sang. Christianity is harmony and goodwill; peace—not strife. The world needs er intellect than Thomas Jefferson; but in Burr we see the weakness and the limitations of intellectual capacity without the guiding power of idealism and humanitarian solicitude. It becomes perfectly clear to us what Macaulay meant when he said: "As if history were not made up of the bad actions of extraordinary men, as if all the most noted destroyers and deceivers of our species, all the founders of arbitrary governments and false religions, had not been extraordinary men, as if nine-tenths of the calamities which have befallen the human race had any other origin than the union of high intelligence with low desires." The destructiveness in human history, the selfishness, the tyranny and the sordidness have not been associated with poor minds. Napoleon and all the others who have been potent factors in destructive movements were men of unusual intellectual powers. To have a knowledge of facts, to know history and literature, to be able to comprehend the millions upon millions of solar systems similar to our own, to delve into the sea and learn of the various forms of primitive life found therein—while all very fine and very worth-while—such knowledge does not restore the human soul, nor does it bring about a more equitable distribution of wealth and happiness to human society. All phenomena must be interpreted, and it's the interpretation we give that determines to what use we shall put our knowledge, and whether we shall see "life steadily and see it whole." When Frederick W. H. Meyers was asked what question he would ask the Sphinx, he replied: "If I had one question to ask the Sphinx, it would be 'Is the universe friendly?'" It's a matter of interpretation. How shall we interpret the phenomena of the universe?

There are two angles to all human experiences: first, there is the actual event or circumstance which has occurred; then there is the interpretation that we place upon that event or circumstance. One is external; the other is internal. As soon as an event enters into our experience it assumes the dress which our thought provides; it is clothed in our appreciation and understanding; it is colored by our point of view; it is transformed by our reaction. To a great extent the problem of human happiness lies not so much in the outward event as in the inward reaction. Is the universe friendly? Or is it hostile? Or is it indifferent? We must decide. The land of the heart's desire is not to be found on the map in our geography; rather it is to be found within us. It is found in our own consciousness; and it comes through our philosophy of life.

As we observe the course of history, we see the agonies of men and women and children who have struggled for freedom, we see the rise and fall of empires and the collapse of race after race, as people have failed to adjust themselves to their ever-changing environment. The cynic cries: "Life is meaningless; we are born to suffer and to die." The late Henry Adams, in a book published some years ago, entitled, "The Degradation of the Democratic Dogma," reminds us that this world was once uninhabitable; and from the numerous data of science he points out that it will be uninhabitable again. The last man, so he insists will freeze to death at the equator; for the sun is slowly losing its heat, and when it can no longer send its warmth and energy into the world, this planet will be as cold as the moon. No form of life will be possible. Or else it will become as hot as colliding stars in the heavens as it rushes insensate through space, freed from the gripping force of gravity which now holds it to its orbit. Life will be absolutely impossible. Nothing of our highly wrought civilization will remain, not even the ruins; death, final death will overtake us all. Henry Adams could see nothing but the degradation of the cosmos, the dissipation of energy, and the futility of human achievement. But beholding the same general trend toward universal destruction stands Paul the Apostle, who boldly asserts: "This corruptible must put on incorruption; this mortal must put on immortality. And when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall come to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O, death, where is thy sting? O, grave, where is thy victory?" Scientists of today, like Sir James Jeans and Sir Arthur Eddington, Robert Millikan and Lord Haldane, have been insisting for some time that ultimate reality is spiritual. Shall we have a lesser interpretation?

There is no contrast between Henry Adams and Paul the Apostle as to their understanding of the general trend towards destruction. But they represent antithetical positions when it comes to their interpretations. Years ago William James reminded us that either there is a God of objective reality or there is not. Science cannot prove that there is or that there is not. We, therefore, must choose which view we shall accept for ourselves, and when we have made our choice, our lives shall conform.

Tremendous demands are being made upon us today. The cry for justice, the wail for peace, the demand for a new evaluation of morals—all of these form a challenge which educated men and women cannot evade or avoid. The burning questions of social morality strike deep into one's conscience. How can we be satisfied and contented to eat our fill of wholesome food while millions of men, women and children are literally starving? How can we be satisfied to dwell in the comforts and cultivated refinement and culture when hordes of families, through no fault of their own for which they are personally responsible, are driven to live in filth and squalor? How can we be satisfied to participate in our wholesome recreations when men and women are giving their very lives in unremunerative enterprises, and when children are being maimed in mind, body and soul by premature labor in mills, factories and sweat-shops? The Gospel of Christ is challenging us to lose ourselves in the cause of human relations; but we cannot lose ourselves until our free souls are one fire with the conviction that is God's world, and that in God's sight each individual soul is of infinite worth. We are all sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be. Without faith in God, and without this spiritual interpretation of history and of phenomena, we cannot lose ourselves in the service of another. Right here is where the modern religious humanist falls down. He speaks out against social inequalities, and industrial injustice, and economic slavery, and political corruption; but he has eliminated God, and his Godless philosophy undermines the very thing that he is trying to accomplish. A high ethic, an unflinching devotion to human good that involves personal sacrifice, must be rooted in something that transcends the human.

If we are to see "life steadily and see it whole," it is necessary that we maintain and cherish this spiritual point of view. And to supply our need stands the Christ of Galilee. The life, the message, the character, the death and immortality of Jesus mean something that is indispensable to a man if he is to live a full, well-balanced life, a life lived in the fullest sense, a life of leadership and power. They mean something more than the creeds have ever expressed; they mean victory to the human spirit in its quest for a true interpretation of experience. When we grasp the full significance of the Gospel which our Christ proclaimed, we look to him who proclaimed it as Master, Lord and Saviour; and we are constrained to sing

"The Son of God goes forth to war, Shall we follow in his train?"

Fullness is the secret of power. The electric current can so fill a little wire that it will become a force to turn the great wheels of the factory, and the overflowing sluice of the village stream has power enough to run a score of factories all along the river banks, but it is simply because it is overflowing. Only full hearts accomplish effectual work for God. Only the overflow of our blessing blesses others.—A. B. Simpson.

Christian Orphanage

Dear Friends of the Orphanage:

It is with deep regret that we learn through his daughter, Rebecca, that Brother Johnston has had to go to the hospital for treatment. It is because of this fact that he has sent you no message from his pen this week. Brother Johnston was sick before the Elon College Commencement, but on the day we called to see him at his home, he had, despite the protest of his good wife, gone over to the Orphanage for the first time in several days. No sacrifice, even that of health, seems too great for him where his Orphanage and yours is concerned. May we ask that you make him glad by giving it your best support while he is incapacitated.

GOLD OR GOD?

"Money buys everything." The speaker was one of the village wise men. The place was the village barber shop. The occasion was the departure of the village man of affairs, who had just been shaved. The implications were unmistakable.

The barber, who was old and stooped and devout, shook out his frayed apron, adjusted his iron-rimmed spectacles, smiled, nodded, and said: "Yes, money buys everything. Money buys everything but three things—health, happiness and heaven."

I was the small boy in the barber shop that day, and I have not forgotten. After all money, money of itself alone, buys little. It has no intrinsic worth. It is only when men keep it in its place that it remains as an asset and not as a liability.

But the words of the village wise man are abroad in the land today: "Money buys everything."

Massachusetts—"There she stands"—Massachusetts has legalized race-track gambling because race-track gambling promises one million and a half dollars in taxes. Massachusetts has been perfectly frank about this matter. She has not dodged the real issue; indeed, she scarcely debated it. Powerful speeches were delivered in opposition to the bill, speeches that told with moral passion the utter truth about selling public morals for revenue. Brave men dared to go against the tide of popular opinion, risked their political lives, to state that the proposed action would be a legal blow at the morals of the commonwealth and that for the gambler's gold the state must pay at last the gambler's price. But Massachusetts decided to sell for one million and a half dollars!

New Hampshire is geographically a small state. Perhaps only one race track could be made to pay; but New Hampshire, with no mean history, heard the gamblers' offer, "We will pay you four hundred thousand dollars," and New Hampshire took the bid.

The national House of Representatives listened to the amazing claims of a Congressman who "proved" that beer has practically the same nutritive qualities as milk—listened and smiled. But when equally fantastic arguments were presented in the interests of a balanced budget, the Senate and House concurred to make beer non-intoxicating by statute. Now it may be purchased by all ages, on all days, in all public places, and at all hours—provided the government gets its price.

But we are just at the beginning of our moral debacle—unless the depression lifts. The ruthless dishonesty of certain captains of finance who scuttled their ships is being matched in eagerness for quick returns, at least by those public officials whose motives are better but whose policies and principles are equally unsound.

We can not drink this nation into prosperity.

We cannot gamble a state into economic solvency.

To balance a budget and overturn a moral order is social bankruptcy.

Whatever our receipt or present difficulties, the course we have charted in these particular legislative actions leads only to disaster. The end of the road is the grave of democratic institutions.

Harry Lauder, speaking to a great American audience one night more than a decade ago, told the story of John—John, his only son, who was killed in action on the Western Front the day before Christmas, 1917. The little Scotch comedian bared his soul to comfort an anxious people. Suddenly he stopped, hesitated, and then said scarcely above a whisper, "For me it was death, or drink, or God—and I took God."

"Gold or God?" is America's alternative now. We have been taking gold—or its promise. There is gold with God if we will walk in his way: gold enough to feed and clothe the people; gold enough to balance the budgets; gold enough to send the nation back to work. There is gold with God. But "Gold or God" is more than an alternative; it is an ultimatum. There is no compromise.

"For what shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

And what shall a nation give in exchange for its soul?—Daniel A. Poling, in the Christian Herald.

it; but it will come only as we attune our lives to Christ, to his beatitudes and his new commandment of love. Then shall the voices of creeds make one sound, the races join in songs of world-wide peace, and all creation be redeemed.

The world—and its vast temple of life—is waiting for this universal harmony which comes from the sons of God, and the leadership of Jesus. Let us bring our lives into tune with Christ's purposes and principles, and help make that music which is to gladden this war-stained world.

REV. A. E. GREGORY.

Prayer—May we, as faithful followers of Christ, help by our songs as well as by our prayers and our daily conversation, to exalt the goodness of God before the world.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

"Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men. And straightway they forsook their nets, and followed him."—Read Mark 1:16-20.

The Christian life consists of these things: a purpose which is human; a power "not ourselves which makes for righteousness;" a process, a becoming; and a product. In other words, the Christian life is a following, a making, a becoming, a learning, a fruit-bearing. It is the lure of a great adventure to which Jesus calls everybody now. We find it in all the professions and the arts, and it is duplicated in the realm of the spirit. There is no adventure which equals the search for truth and the risking of one's life in obedience to it.

Christ's call, "Follow Me!" is a challenge. In the whole field of religion there is no higher, purer authority than Jesus Christ. Why follow those who walk only on the lower levels?

Jesus calls us to an adventure in friendship. It is a costly, challenging, and transforming experience—to have a friend! You can not be a friend, or have a friend, unless you are willing to pay the price. Jesus said: "Ye are my friends IF . . ." That is an inevitable "if." You find it in some sort in every earthly friendship—the "if" of sincerity, unselfishness, loyalty. It is not strange to find an inevitable "if" on the threshold of the Divine Friendship. "If ye do all the things which I command you," says Jesus.

And Jesus calls us to an adventure in service. You can not write the history of the world in the last 1900 years and omit the contribution to service made through the influence of Jesus Christ. Any religion which does not impel one to service is not worth while, and it is not Christian. Some people are continually looking for an easy religion. Like the old lady in the story, who was told to take her medicine "in a recumbent posture," and went about inquiring for such a vessel, there are people who would like to take their religion lying down! There is a tonic in the call: "Follow me! I am among you as one who serveth."

Naval Appropriation Assured.—

Acting under the Recovery Act passed by the recent Congress, there has been set aside for the Navy $238,000,000. With this amount the Navy expects to build four cruisers, twenty destroyers, two airplane carriers, four submarines, two river gunboats. Construction will start on the vessels to be built in government yards just as soon as the necessary materials can be assembled. Those to be built by private concerns will start as soon as possible after bids are in. In addition to the ships scheduled to be built there is to be spent 9,000,000 for 290 new airplanes.

Ford Museum Opened.—

On the 22nd of this month, Henry Ford's museum of science and industry, at Dearborn, Mich., opened its doors to the public for the first time. Millions of dollars and a dozen years of effort have been expended in its erection. All kinds of inventions are shown, beginning with the crude first model and followed down to the most improved design of today. The dynamo, the automobile, the airplane, and even the vacuum cleaner, we are told, tells its story, while other carefully collected exhibits "cover developments in transportation, science, agriculture and the household arts."

Your Brain and Mine.—

Last week the American Association for the Advance of Science was held in Chicago. Addressing this august body, Prof. C. Judson Herrick of the University of Chicago has told them that man's brain is so complicated that the figures of the astronomer pall with insignificance when compared with figures concerning the brain. He says that there are from ten to fourteen billion nerve cells in the human brain, each of which is an electric battery. Furthermore, that each of these batteries is connected by individual "telephone lines" with every other cell, and that these connecting lines are numbered not in billions, that is one of the numerals followed by nine zeros, but by the figure one followed by fifteen million zeros—fifteen million billion—our brain is in a whirl, and we are sure that some of the telephone lines are failing to make connection right now!

The Closed Banks.—

While the ballyhoo of inflation is going on there still remain closed more than 5,000 of the banks which were closed either by state or national proclamation. Not only is this so, but the Administration seems indifferent as to whether or not they ever open. While it is impossible to get figures from the government in regard to the amounts of deposits in these closed banks, it has been estimated that $5 billions is tied up in the 1,100 member banks and 3,900 non-member banks, which is more purchasing power by 50 per cent than will be released by the much heralded $3.3 billions public employment program. Several workable plans have been suggested, but the Treasury, the Federal Reserve Board and the Comptroller seem equally unconcerned as to any plans for speeding up the release of these billions of dollars of frozen deposits. Meanwhile, though inflation may enable these banks to ultimately pay a higher percentage of dollars, these dollars are rapidly becoming less valuable.

The War Debts.—

Of the thirteen sovereign states owing the United States $144,000,000 on June 15th, only one showed a character sufficient to pay her debt in full. In 1919, Finland, self-styled "Land of 40,000 Lakes," was engaged in a desperate fight to hurl the Bolshevik back from her shores. It was at this time that exhausted, but victorious, Finland borrowed $8,281,900 from us that she might purchase grain and other foodstuffs. Three years later she was the first to fund her debt—and she has paid when due. When every other European nation failed to meet their obligations this month, Finland paid in full—$148,592. She, along with the other nations paying a so-called "token" on their debts, took advantage of the President's offer to accept silver at the rate of 50 cents an ounce. Other countries paid from around 15 per cent to as little as 3 per cent, while several, led by France, defaulted their payments entirely. Uncle Sam collected only $11,334,540, or less than 13 per cent of the amount due him.

Rackham Fortune Left to Charity.—

Horace H. Rackham, of whom it is related that he borrowed $5,000 against the advice of friends, in order to aid Henry Ford with his development of the Ford automobile, died recently, at the age of 73. When his will was probated, it was found that he had created a trust fund for various charitable uses which will make nearly $30,000,000 available over a period of twenty-five years. Approximately half of this amount will be immediately available, and is to be expended for "such benevolent, charitable, educational, scientific, religious and public purposes as in the judgment of the trustees will promote health, welfare, happiness, education, training and development of men, women and children . . . regardless of race, color, religion or station." Rackham was 45 years old when he invested his $5,000 in the Ford Motor Company, and he sold out his interest sixteen years later for $12,500,000. Among special bequests was one of $50,000 to Imperial Council, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, for the crippled children's hospital maintenance fund, and two bequests to North Carolina concerns: the Quaker Children's Home at McConnell, and the Christian Science Church at Southern Pines. These bequests were for $10,000 each. The largest of his special bequests was for $100,000 made to the regents of Michigan University to be used as a loan fund.

Mr. Hearst, Right and Wrong.—

When preparing for a radio broadcast on the news of the past week, Arthur Brisbane asked William Randolph Hearst, whose papers supply news to 5,000,000 families, what he considered the most important news of the week. Hearst replied by telegraph from his Simeon, California, ranch: "The most important news of the week is that nothing has happened or will happen, or can happen at the World's Economic Conference which would be of any benefit to America. Instead of our President going abroad, our delegates would better come home." Then he adds: "The next most important news is that Chas. E. Mitchell has been pronounced by a jury not guilty of income tax evasion. Juries will not convict people for evading the income tax law, or for evading the prohibition law," and he concluded: "Both laws are unjust, unwise, un-American and consequently unpopular. They should be repealed." Mr. Hearst does not say what tax he would substitute for the present income tax law. Certainly, if he objects to taxing the rich man's income, he will strenuously oppose a tax on the poor man's beer and liquor. We wonder?

Tubaman.—

The writer of this page remembers well when he unpacked his first trombone and became second trombonist, at the age of either fourteen or fifteen in the "Elon College Concert Band." Some years later he was promoted (or demoted) to the place of "tubaman" in a local band or orchestra. Consequently the following excerpt from Time interests him peculiarly. Possibly there are others who will also be interested: "The tuba, grandfather grunt of all brass instruments, weighs about 40 pounds. It has over six yards of tubing. It has to ride in baggage cars. Its master has to have the heart and lungs of an athlete. Yet he is considered a very ordinary fellow compared with the long-haired violinist who sits up front in the orchestra. As if tubamen did not have a hard enough time already, big William Bell of the Cincinnati Symphony, recently invented a still more demanding tuba." Mr. Bell's invention is not for weak tubamen, we are told, for it does the work of two tubas—a double bass and a baritone. It has two mouthpieces, two sets of tubing, which are together sixteen yards in length, and weighs 50 pounds. It goes deeper than any other tuba ever has gone before, having a range of four octaves instead of the usual range of two and a half. There is another tuba player in Cincinnati, Houston by name, who has invented a pump which is worked with his foot and shoots a stream of air through a hose into his mouth where it is, in turn, shot into the instrument.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

President and Mrs. L. E. Smith, who have been in the eastern part of Virginia for a few days, were visitors in the home of the managing editor for a short while Tuesday of this week. We are sorry that their stay was necessarily so short.

During July and August, Dr. J. Edward Kirby, pastor of our Raleigh Church, will be located at Pilgrim, Mich. During his absence, Mr. Carl Key, of Hemp, N. C., who graduated from Elon this past spring, will serve at Raleigh. Upon Dr. Kirby's return next September, we understand that Mr. Key expects to enter Vanderbilt School of Religion at Nashville, Tenn.

Rev. W. C. Martin, Biscoe, who has taken a deep and active interest in the work of organizing and building Flint Hill Christian Church, a few miles from Biscoe, is exceedingly happy in announcing that the church was dedicated, with appropriate service and ceremony, Sunday, June 25th. There were all-day services. Rev. T. E. White, of Sanford, was the preacher in charge.

This good word of our erstwhile neighbor and friend, Rev. Murdock W. Butler, comes by way of Hermon Eldredge, in his Christian points of view: "Historic Gulph Mills Christian Church (near Valley Forge) will celebrate its 100th anniversary on Sunday, July 23rd, with an all-day program. Pastor Murdock W. Butler has done a fine work and looks forward to the coming centennial as a climax to much which the church has accomplished in service to that community and the world."

Chaplain and Mrs. H. E. Rountree arrived at San Diego, Cal., the 16th. Chaplain Rountree reported aboard the U. S. S. Whitney the 17th, relieving Chaplain J. M. Hester, who left San Diego immediately for Charleston, S. C., where he takes up the Chaplain's duties at the Navy Yard there. En route, Chaplain and Mrs. Rountree visited the Publishing House at Dayton, Ohio, the Chicago Exposition, Omaha, Neb., Denver, Colorado Springs and Santa Fe.

Supt. C. D. Johnston, of the Christian Orphanage, has been quite ill the past week, suffering from an ailment that only hospital and surgical treatment could relieve. SUN readers everywhere will be glad to learn that at this writing he is very much improved and quite hopeful of regaining good health and strength at an early date. Bro. Johnston carries a weight of responsibility, heavy on shoulders that are well and strong, and our feeling of anxiety for him in affliction is only equaled by our gratitude at his restoration.

Dr. Elisha A. King, Miami Beach, Fla., sends this happy note under date of June 21st: "I am leaving June 26th for New York, and on July 1st I sail on the S. S. President Johnson, with a party for a cruise of the Mediterranean, visiting Egypt, Palestine, Damascus, Rome, etc. We are to visit 63 different cities. I am looking forward to the experience with great anticipation. I am seeking rest, information and inspiration. Will send items to THE SUN." We are wishing our brother and co-editor a great trip and a safe return.

The Monday morning papers carried the sad news of the death of Deacon John W. West, of Waverly, Va. Mr. West had also been treasurer of the Waverly Church for many years, and was one of the staunchest of its supporters. He is survived by his wife and one son, J. W., Jr., of New York, also by three brothers, Col. J. E. West, of Suffolk, Mr. Robert West, of Waverly, and Mr. Caleb West, of Newport News, and numerous other relatives and friends. His funeral was conducted Monday afternoon by his pastor, Rev. F. C. Lester. THE SUN offers its deepest sympathy to those who are bereaved.

Our great and good friend, Rev. B. F. Vaughan, D. D., Centerville, Ohio, whose pen in other days enriched the columns of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, promises shortly to favor us with other articles, having now duly and appropriately celebrated his 81st anniversary. Dr. Vaughan, deeply interested in Christian Church history and all that pertains to the history of the Christians in the past, sends six volumes on subjects related to the Christians and their writings, donating these to our Elon College Memorial Library and expressing with the donation the hope that this Memorial Library "will meet with such favor as to build up a useful and valuable library, both for general reading and especially for our church history."

The sudden death of Dr. W. T. McElveen, pastor of the Central Congregational Church, Atlanta, which occurred Monday, June 19th, was a great shock to his many friends in the Southeast and in fact to the Congregational-Christian people of the country. Dr. McElveen has served the Atlanta Church for several years and has been a leader not only in his church, but in the church life of Atlanta. His death removes from among us one who has been conspicuous in the devotional life through many years. Dr. McElveen held pastorates in Brooklyn and New York City, in Boston, Evanston, Ill., Seattle, Wash., St. Paul and Chicago, before coming to Atlanta. An able preacher, a knowing platform speaker, large hearted and friendly brother, he has always been beloved by all who knew him. He is survived by his widow.

By way of a Norfolk Virginian-Pilot comes this item of concern and interest for SUN readers: "The Rev. Robert Lee House, pastor of the First Congregational-Christian Church at Newport News, was elected president of the Congregational-Christian Ministers of Eastern Virginia at their annual picnic outing at Lafayette Park. About thirty ministers and members of their families attended the outing. The other officers of the organization who were elected, were: Rev. E. W. Jones, D. D., pastor of the Franklin Christian Church, vice-president; Rev. R. A. Whitten, pastor of the First Christian Church, Portsmouth, secretary; and Rev. W. M. Jay, D. D., pastor of the Holland Christian Church, treasurer. Rev. F. C. Lester, pastor of the Waverly Christian Church, was the retiring president. The ministers enjoyed the recreational facilities of the park and engaged in a number of athletic contests and games."

On July 18th, Alabama is to vote on repeal. A committee of the Alabama Conference of Congregational-Christian Churches, Revs. G. D. Hunt, F. P. Ensminger, D. D., and Mr. R. A. McKay, have issued an appeal, a printed leaflet, to the Congregational-Christian pastors, church secretaries and Sunday School superintendents of the Alabama Conference in these telling and forceful lines: "Repeal of prohibition means free-flowing whiskey, which means: addled brains, poverty, disease, automobile accidents, unsafe streets, assaults on women, riots, murders and ninety-nine other evils. Prohibition yet means:

most boys are not drunkards, money is spent on family needs, our roads are safe, the devil is chained. Repeal is a state referendum, and not a party matter. Money made out of misery is a curse. Protect the boys of Christian homes in Alabama. Jesus said, 'But whosoever shall offend one of these little ones that believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea.' (Matt. 18:5.) Vote on July 18th against repeal for Alabama by electing prohibition candidates only. Christian men! Christian women! Organize your neighbors and Christian friends! Men and women, go in groups to the polls to vote for dry candidates! These men will then save prohibition by their votes in the Alabama Convention."

Our Suffolk Church calls to its service and back to the South one of our very distinguished sons, Rev. John G. Truitt, whose childhood and early Christian training and experience were in Mt. Bethel Church, Rockingham County, N. C. The Norfolk Virginian-Pilot, of Thursday, June 22nd, says: "The pulpit committee appointed by the Suffolk Christian Church, appeared before the church conference and recommended that the church call its pastor, the Rev. John G. Truitt, of Walnut Hills Christian Church, Dayton, Ohio. The report of the committee was unanimously accepted and the congregation voted to extend the call to the Rev. Truitt. Members of the committee are: Col. J. E. West, chairman; Mrs. W. H. Jones, Mrs. Emily Crocker, Mrs. C. A. Shoop, Col. E. E. Holland, Dr. J. E. Rawles and J. D. MacClenny, who acted as secretary. The call was extended to Mr. Truitt tonight. Mr. Truitt is a native of North Carolina, a graduate of Elon College, and of the Divinity School of Princeton University and is regarded as one of the strong men of the Christian denomination. He is married, his wife having been Miss Jones, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. D. Jones, of Holland. He served the Christian Church at Berkeley before going to Dayton. The church conference tonight passed strong resolutions of regret at the leaving of the Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, and commended his splendid work as pastor of this church for the past ten years."

A GREAT PLAN TAKEN LIGHTLY.

A little more than a year ago, when the Dollar-a-Month Club plan was initiated by the Alumni of Elon College and announced to the public, a few received the announcement joyously. They saw in it a possibility of securing funds for the support of the College; and without any undue strain upon anyone. They gladly accepted the opportunity, promptly enrolled in the Club, sent in their contributions, and have been paying regularly ever since. I say, a few took this attitude, and only a few, in comparison to the large numbers who should and could. I only wish that their names were legion. These few, however, have greatly assisted us and have been a means of constant encouragement. Others received the announcement of the Dollar-a-Month Club simply as another fantastic idea—a vain effort to rescue a struggling institution (do not allow yourself to be deceived into thinking that a dollar a month will save Elon College), and they quickly tucked their dollar away, or spent it for other things—certainly they did not send it to Elon College. They were unwilling, as they persuaded themselves, to put their money into a "rat hole." This type of individual, of course, has been of no real service to the College since he arrived at that decision. Others read the announcement of the Dollar-a-Month Club plan and said: "Well, I hope it will succeed—I would like to see 5,000 members enrolled—it would be a fine thing, but I don't think it will ever be done—I'll wait and see." And, they are still waiting. But, after all is said and done, this plan seems to me to be the most sane and sensible plan that could have been adopted for a time like this. In other days, in case of emergency, we could go to people of large means and secure a large donation, sufficient in size to tide things over, but those days have passed. The individual with large means today cannot be located, and if located, he is in no frame of mind to give generously. The fact of the business is, it is difficult to get him to join in with the small givers and make his contribution along with them.

If the College situation is ever relieved, from a financial standpoint, it will in all probability be through a large number of small gifts by individuals; individuals here and there, who, out of their earnings, and on account of their devotion to Christian education for our church, will make a small contribution regularly to the College.

The Dollar-a-Month Club plan does not contemplate the overtaxing of anybody, but does solicit, earnestly, a minimum contribution from every wage earner. By this plan, our educational interest can be continued with increasing self-respect and personal honor. Every member of the Congregational and Christian Church wants to see Elon College pay her honest debts and meet her assumed obligations.

My dear reader, won't you, as you read this article, make up your mind to do your part in this determined undertaking and make it possible for your College to achieve?

The Southern Baptist Convention, with its total indebtedness, reported at something like $5,000,000 has adopted the Dollar-a-Month Club plan and is calling for a sufficient number of its members to set aside a dollar a month for this purpose to pay this indebtedness in five years. They have taken this simple plan and dedicated their efforts and energies to make it a success, and I am venturing to prophesy in the beginning of this effort, on the part of the great Baptist Church, that they will find enough loyal souls in their membership who, out of their earnings, whether small or large, will come forward with a sufficient amount to accomplish what they started out to do. This is a sane, sensible and workable plan.

May I take this opportunity to appeal to the membership of the Congregational and Christian Churches, not to abandon the plan that has within it the germ of success—the possibility of complete achievement? And further, may I appeal to every loyal soul to determine to lay aside for this great cause, at least a dollar a month?

To date, we have more than 600 members. We certainly should have 5,000.

If you are a member of the Dollar-a-Month Club already and are in arrears with your dues, won't you send them in without waiting for us to spend postage to notify you? If you are not a member of the Dollar-a-Month Club, won't you sit down now before you forget it, take a pencil, sign the blank attached to this article, cut it out and mail to us with a dollar bill attached, requesting that your name be entered as a member of this loyal company?

I am encouraged when I think of the future of Elon College. I believe in the constituency of the Congregational and Christian Churches. I believe that we have 5,000 souls among us who will manifest their interest in our educational program by making this small monthly contribution. Please let me hear from you.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

LIFTED UP FROM THE EARTH.

There are things earthly and things heavenly; things that are secular and things sacred. This distinction is clearly drawn in the Bible, and we confuse our thinking when we combine them.

Our Lord Christ was in the world, but he was not of the world, and the world knew him not. The world does not know him yet. They that would know him, must know him in spirit, because he is spirit and he is truth. The world fails to discern him, because he is spirit.

We have his own words, saying: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto myself." He was to be lifted up from the earth; lifted, exalted, held above the earth. He has not yet drawn all men unto him, because the world is still trying to drag him down to its level, and those who are in the spirit are not separating him from the earth, nor lifting him above the earth. This is the mark and measure of missions—to lift Christ from the earth, exalt him above and get him among and in view of the people that they may see the Son of God as the prophet saw "the Lord high and lifted up." The missionary message is that of exalting not the earthly, but the heavenly; not man, but the Son of Man; not the way and the wisdom of man, but the way and the wisdom of God. This makes the mission task singularly divine and sacred, for it is the one task that exalts God above man and the Son of God above the sons of men. It is his name, and not the name of any man, that is a sufficient name, and his love, and not the love of man, that is to lift this world if it is ever lifted to high and holy living.

The church, a spiritual body, is the only body that gives itself solely to the task of lifting the Lord up above the earth and making him known to those who know him not at home and abroad. In benevolent activities, we seek to lift individuals and give them a chance, and afford them an opportunity in life, and this is well, but in missions and through missions, the church, a spiritual body, is lifting its Lord up from the earth and giving him a chance to verify his promise of drawing all men unto him. In missions the church is trying to focus the eye, the mind and the heart of the world upon the uplifted Christ, in whom alone there is safety and salvation for the soul. He will draw, but we must lift him up so that he can draw, as he promised he would.

COMPULSORY CHURCH ATTENDANCE.

When Charles I. was King of England, he ordered the Governor of the Virginia colony to grant a Virginia Assembly to enter into partnership with him in governing their growing and rather self-willed colony. They did so, and at the convening of their Assembly a year later, in session at Jamestown, enacted "that we should go three severall marches upon the Indians at three severall times of the year," and also "that there be an especial care taken by all commanders and others that the people doe repaire to their churches on the Saboth Day, and to see that the penalty of one pound of tobacco for every time of absence and fifty pounds for every month's absence be levied, and the delinquents to pay the same." When it is recalled that tobacco at that time was real money in Virginia, a pound being fifty cents in the coin of the realm (two or three times that value at present money rating), it was no small penalty imposed for staying away from church on the Sabbath.

Much water has flowed under the bridge since that far-off day, but this act, like every line of our early colonial history, shows how thoroughly and completely the founders of this nation built the idea of religion into the whole structure of government. Nations, like individuals, grow away from the Lord when they grow strong and mighty, but they remember him and lean upon him mightily in the days of their weakness, distress and need.

"A SEMINARY OF MINISTERS."

William and Mary College at Williamsburg, like Harvard and Yale, and other early colleges and universities, was founded as "a Seminary of Ministers." Sent over to the early colony of Virginia was a commissioner of the established church, a Scotch ecclesiastic, Dr. James Blair. Soon after taking his place with the struggling colony at Jamestown, he indulged the dream of a college in Virginia. Virginia planters supported him, and Blair raised a promised subscription. With this as a nucleus, he returned to England and interested the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of Worcester in his colonial enterprise.

Though Blair met with opposition, the King and Queen inclined a favorable ear, and Blair at last obtained his charter. The history of the event continues: "There was to be built in Virginia and to be sustained by taxation a great school." The charter setting forth that it was to be a "seminary of ministers of the gospel where youths may be piously educated in good letters and manners; a certain place of universal study, or perpetual college of divinity, philosophy, languages and other good arts and sciences." Rev. Mr. Blair was the first president of William and Mary College, for which the assembly, for the benefit of the college, was "taxed raw and tanned hides, dressed buckskin, skins of doe and elk, muskrat and racoon."

Among the worthies and notables educated at this institution, founded by Rev. Mr. Blair "as a seminary of ministers of the gospel," three American presidents were educated, viz., Jefferson, Monroe and Tyler, as well as the greatest of all our jurists, Chief Justice Marshall, and four signers of the Declaration of Independence. The church has always preceded the state and blazed the way and set the example for the state in education, and has afforded within the walls of its institutions that liberty and freedom in the pursuit of knowledge, under the guidance of consecrated men and women, which produces the most noble and exalted character.

WHEN CROPS WERE TOO LARGE (?).

The experiment our government is now making in the matter of curtailing crops and acreage is no new one. It has been practiced from old (in all its folly and shortsightedness). The practice in fact was an old one when Virginia, the first of our colonies, was in its infancy. Take this line from her ancient history (1624): "King Charles dies and James, the II. rules in England. Culpeper and Effingham play the Governor (of the Virginia colony) for what they can get for themselves out of Virginia. And the price of tobacco goes down, down. The crops are too large; the old, poor remedies of letting much acreage go unplanted, or of destroying and burning where the pleasure of production is exceeded, and all petitions to the King are resorted, but they procure little relief. Virginia cannot be called prosperous."

So, more than one hundred years before the War of the Revolution the excuse for low prices of crops in good old Virginia was that they were too large, and the remedy of letting acreage go unplanted was in that early date called an old, poor remedy. Maybe we will begin to learn in a few thousand years from now that it is an old and poor remedy to destroy growing crops while a world is in need.

OLD JOHN BARLEYCORN.

By DR. HOWELL D. DAVIES.

He is of ancient pedigree, an old-timer, and a bad actor. A generation ago his performance became so unendurable that it brought on prohibition. In New Testament times he was likewise of poor reputation. Paul warned against drunkenness and John's vision of the holy city was that of a place with no drunkards. In the days of Jeremiah, he stirred up people of serious life purpose so that they organized the first known total abstinence society—the Rechabites. Aristotle knew his tricks and asked, "Why is it that, although the wine is hot, the drinkers are unable to endure cold and are readily attacked by pleurisy and other diseases? Why has wine the effect of both stupefying and of driving to frenzy those who drink it?" In Solomon's time, too, he was warned against it. The hapless slavery of his victim is recorded in the drinker's hopeless remark, "I will seek it yet again." Amos and Hosea put him down as a bad citizen who helped turn religious festivals into convivial carnivals. And his bad name goes back even to the days of Noah, who was drunk under the rainbow of promise of a new world—a poor beginning for a new era. Surely when the world was wet, Noah was no dry himself. In short, all through the centuries, John Barleycorn has been known as a deceiver who makes fair promises but whose devotees find that in the end "It stingeth like an adder," a destroyer of health, wealth, peace and every other good, a thief that robs childhood, womanhood, the home, and the community, an adulterer that stirs passion and weakens its control, a murderer.

In 1920, our country banished him into exile, but now he returns like Napoleon from Elba, but later to meet his Waterloo, we believe. How interesting and strange is John Barleycorn's new respectability. Formerly he was licensed and tolerated; now he is legalized! Formerly he was an outlaw and suspicious character; now a citizen forsooth! Formerly he was found chiefly in saloons; now in nearly all eating places! Formerly drunk secretly with apology; now openly, a protest against narrowness! Formerly he was cursed by Lincoln; now he is blessed by Roosevelt! Formerly he was an object of church wrath; now he is given a tolerant hearing! Formerly a general liability; now a highly praised asset! Formerly he was warned against as an enemy of all; now he is hailed as a friend in depression need! Formerly he was the embezzler of wages; now he is the benevolent giver of work and health! Formerly he was a snake in the grass of the community; now he is the brazen serpent of Moses, on which the public is asked to gaze for salvation! Formerly he was a dangerous poison; now something harmless—or better! Formerly warned against; now he is given the consent of silence! Formerly a low-brow criminal; he is now a high-brow pillar of society! Formerly a predatory wolf; he is now a white innocent little lamb! On the run in 1920; he stages a triumphal return in 1933! Formerly condemned by the National Educational Association; he is now given the degree of Doctor of Humanities by Nicholas Murray Butler! And now Richard is himself again—and more!

What shall we say about him? First, he seems to be deceiving the very elect. June 20th, even Iowa voted for repeal. A denominational conference declared it would deal tolerantly with members who drink. The pastor of a large and influential middle west church was chagrined to find how few signed the total abstinence cards which he circulated among the members. Even the President's wife takes him for granted and says the girls will now need to learn how to drink. It seems to be a common remark that young people are to be taught how to drink beer. How John Barleycorn does flatter this generation! He as much as tells them that they have better self-control than past generations, and can safely do what it was dangerous for the fathers to do. Secondly, we would say that he is playing his trump card again, i.e., that is the harmlessness of moderate drinking. He says that 3.2 beer is not intoxicating. He would even change the dictionary. The public can well beware of certain dictionaries. John Barleycorn's is full of propaganda, just as Samuel Johnson's was full of prejudice when he defined oats as food eaten by horses and Scotchmen. John Barleycorn favors the definition in the old-time North Carolina Law Journal:

"Not drunk is he who from the floor
Can rise again and drink one more;
But drunk is he who prostrate lies
And cannot either drink or rise."

But science and common observation are a better dictionary. Any alcohol taken into the system causes a state of intoxication (though not publicly apparent), for it is a narcotic drug which is a progressive depressant upon all tissues. It loosens control and dulls the sensibilities, particularly of eye and hand. It makes drunk the nerves so that their reaction time is slowed up

2/5 of a second, in which time a car going at 45 miles per hour travels 18 feet.

"Five gallons of gas, one quart of gin,
And all they found was a mess of tin."

One drink shows by laboratory test the knee-jerk slowed up 10 per cent and weakened 40 per cent.

Low per cent beer has been the trouble starter always and was the reason for all total abstinence movements. It was because of the danger of moderate drinking that a previous generation was brought up on pledge signing, taking warning from the thought in the lines:

"As they say in Japan:
First the man takes a drink
Then the drink takes a drink
Then the drink takes the man."

I well remember how an older boy in the Sunday School class to which I belonged started with moderate drinking. I saw him quaff a large schooner of beer at the county fair and boy-like wondered if it really was as dangerous as our teacher had said. Years went by. I was ordained pastor. One morning came a long distance telephone message from 's sister, "Can you come up and conduct 's funeral today?" I went up to officiate at the funeral of my Sunday School mate of years before and was told the sad facts. He had committed suicide because of despair of getting rid of the drink habit. It seems that some years before he had heroically left his office to spend some months on a relative's farm to get away from temptation. Feeling secure he returned to his business. Yielding again, he once more went out to the farm for a cure. Again he ventured back to the office. Again he fell. This time he went to the Far West. He cut himself off from all former associations. All went well until a carnival came by and he yielded once more. This was too discouraging and so he shot himself. It was the very danger of moderate drinking that made people warn girls not to marry a moderate drinker, who was always a potential drunkard. Let it be remembered that it was beer, the supposedly harmless drink, that made the old-time saloon. 90 per cent of all liquor sold by the 177,000 saloons in the old days was beer. And of the $900,000,000 invested in the liquor traffic, $800,000,000 was employed in manufacturing beer. Moderation has been John Barleycorn's trump card in Canada. The Moderation League there which pretended to be concerned about the people's welfare, the sobriety of the young and the sanctity of the home was really a wet organization financed by the liquor traffic to increase sales and profits. One Canadian liquor corporation admitted in court that liquor manufacturers had given $425,000 to the Moderation League for propaganda and had entered this sum upon its books as "sales promotion." One witness stated to the court, "We figured that investing nearly a half million dollars in the cause of the repeal of prohibition and the establishment of the government sale would so greatly increase our business that we were quite justified in so large an expenditure. Time has proved us right." Out of $425,000 received in dues and donations in one year by the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, 75 per cent was furnished by three millionaires.

Contrary to popular propaganda, beer does not reduce the consumption of whiskey. France, the wine country, drank more spirits per capita in one year than the United States, which should supposedly follow France's moderate drinking. Germany, the beer country, did the same. And Canada, with its boasted "control," consumed more and more spirits, the increase being from 1,850,000 gallons in 1923 to 4,377,000 in 1929. The permits for purchases in Ontario increased from 219,000 to 420,000 in two years, which meant that liquor was going into 200,000 more homes.

No, the essential character of John Barleycorn remains the same. He is a notorious destroyer still, and will do even as he has done before. He is a liar. David Starr Jordan said, "The sole purpose of its use is to force the nervous system to lie, thus vitiating its power of recording and acting upon the truth. Men drink to feel warm when they are really cold, to feel good when conditions are not good, to feel emancipated from those reserves and restraints which are the essence of character building." What lies have been told about prohibition. It was said to be a failure, but the failure is only relative. And it was relatively a greater success than a failure. The New York World Almanac reported arrests from drunkenness in New York as averaging 47,584 in 1901-1903, but only 12,110 in 1927-29. (The Department of Justice reported the production of alcohol to be only 35 per cent of the amount before prohibition.) It was said to cause the speakeasy, but this flourished in great numbers long before prohibition, there being 4,000 in Philadelphia, and 2,300 in Allegheny County, Pa. It was said to cause crime, but the gangsters' business was only 20 per cent from liquor, and repeal won't mean their retirement from their general occupation. The National Probation Association, in listing the five major causes of crime, does not include prohibition among them. It was said that prohibition debauched youth, but the National Educational Association at its Detroit meeting in February, 1931, voted approval of the Eighteenth Amendment, unanimously, except for three dissenting votes. Jane Addams of Hull House, Chicago, speaking of the change that prohibition meant to that neighborhood, said: "There is such a difference now that it seems another world." The Salvation Army in New York used to care for 1,200 to 1,300 drunks nightly, but under prohibition only about 7 a night. It was said that legalized beer would produce $2,000,000,000 of revenue, but the highest liquor tax, in 1919, yielded only $483,000,000. To get $2,000,000,000 of beer revenue means that every American family must drink 12½ gallons daily. What a daily dozen! All in the interests of temperance, so-called, and prosperity.

John Barleycorn has always been a lawless creature. Even the Chicago Tribune, his loyal champion, in a recent editorial entitled "The Brewer's Big Horses," warns the insolent brewers who were guilty of contempt when cross-examined by a legislative committee not to repeat their old high-handed and law-defying ways, that angered the country into enacting prohibition.

"The devil sick, the devil a monk would be,
The devil well, devil a monk is he."

John Barleycorn still has the same disreputable pals—greed and appetite—and is depending on their old-time faithful cooperation. He is not a good citizen. He is no friend of the farmer or anyone else, and he has no place in a Christian social order. The Negro spiritual says, "You can't go to heaven with a bottle of beer." The Kingdom of God cannot come with a bottle of beer. Facts about John Barleycorn have not changed. He is the same old six-pence as he turns up again. Let us have nothing to do with him personally, and let us sign the total abstinence pledge again to strengthen our own conviction and to confirm our brethren.

Perfect love would involve perfect courtesy, that is to say, a nice sense of propriety in our intercourse with others, and a delicacy of feeling toward them. So far as one is defective in this perfect courtesy, he wants one of the finer feelings of love.—Goulburn.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

On Saturday before the third Sunday in June, 1898, I began my work as a pastor. On that day I went to Oakland Church for the first time to hold the quarterly conference at 11 A. M. I drove my father's horse. I did not know the exact location of the church. On the way I asked a man who was leaning on his hoe, "How far is it to Oakland?" "About a mile," he replied. "Are you the new preacher?" said he. "Yes," I replied, and drove on. I stopped at the church, unhitched, tied and fed my horse. It was about 10:30 A. M. A little rain was falling. I got up in the buggy, raised my umbrella, and waited for the people to come.

In a few moments an old colored man came by, and looking rather curiously at me, asked: "Cap'n, is there any meetin' here today?" "Yes, uncle, quarterly conference at 11 A. M. He passed on. Two deacons of the church drove up and inquired: "Is this Brother Johnson?" "Yes," I said, while they began to laugh. "Well, Bro. Johnson, you have made a mistake. This is Zion colored church. Oakland is about one mile from this place." They helped me get off and we soon reached Oakland, where the conference was duly held, and I was called to serve the church for the remainder of the conference year. On the next day I preached my first sermon at Isle of Wight Court House Church, where I served as pastor for five years.

It will be seen from this statement that I have been in the pastorate thirty-five years, and during that time I have been pastor of the following churches: Isle of Wight Court House, five years and five months; Windsor, three years; Holland, eight years and five months; Hobson, eight years; Mt. Zion, eight years; Damascus (supply), one year; Bethlehem (supply), one year; Berea (in the 27th year); Liberty Spring (in the 30th year), and Oakland, thirty-five years last Sunday.

During this period I have had contacts with a number of ministers. Two ministers have influenced my life and ministry more than all others combined: Rev. H. H. Butler and Dr. W. W. Staley. Both of these have passed to their reward. When Rev. H. H. Butler was in his prime he had few equals, in our church, in his ability to reach people for Christ and the church. I was with him in many meetings. I studied him. He won people by his friendly spirit. He loved people. He had a warm heart. He knew human nature. He knew his Lord and Master. Until his health and strength failed, he drew great congregations wherever he preached. He was deeply spiritual. He was a great evangelist and pastor. He helped me. I owe much to him.

My fellowship with Dr. Staley was longer, more varied and intimate. Despite the fact that many people did not regard Dr. Staley as a great preacher, I am compelled to think that he was one of the greatest preachers our church has ever produced. He was concise, clear and refreshing in his style. His sermons were fresh and original. He was a great reader in his active ministry, but his sermons were not bookish. There are probably three thousand sermon outlines in his study today, written by his own hand, with pen, pencil, or typewriter. And it would be difficult to find anything in these sermons which would suggest that he copied them from other authors. His sincerity, his broad sympathy, his common sense, his integrity of character, his Gospel preaching made a great impression upon me. I thank God today that he called me into a country pastorate where I had the privilege of association with Dr. Staley and Rev. H. H. Butler.

I am a country preacher and pastor. I love my work and my people. These churches are a challenge to me to do my best with a vision of God, the Holy Father, to guide and direct me. I do not know why I have been so fortunate for these thirty-five years. I have served good people who have been kind and generous to me. I have been paid better than I have deserved. I wish I could be great enough to deserve the privileges I enjoy. I hope SUN readers will pardon this personal letter. I. W. JOHNSON.

A COMPANY OF SEERS.

Have you ever, in quiet communion with God, sought to appropriate the value of a considerable company of seers?

In almost every church there is heard at some time or other the quotation from Jesus, that "where two or three are gathered in my name, there am I in the midst of them." Those using the quotation usually imagine themselves met with others in the name of Jesus without ever pausing to inquire what is implied in these words of the Master.

To really meet in the name of Jesus, is to have his authorization for such a meeting, and a very clearly defined purpose in convening it. The two or three thus met must all be seers. They must have a vision of such clarity as to know the mind of Jesus with reference to this particular interest which calls them together. No generalization will do here. They are gathered to transact business for which Jesus must be called to bear the ultimate responsibility.

If President Roosevelt were to commission me to represent him in the New York Legislature in order to secure a measure of cooperation in one or more of his important plans, I am sure I should experience a sense of responsibility not often experienced when people glibly tell themselves they are met in the name of Jesus. My commission involves more than a mere personal obligation. It must be remembered that the President is responsible for a great nation—millions of people. When I attempt to do business in his name, though it may only concern a single phase of his general program, I am to that extent assuming responsibility in like manner for millions of people.

Some forty-odd years ago, a group of people were deeply moved as we believe by the Holy Spirit to organize a college to which the constituency of our Southern churches might look for their higher educational opportunities. They christened it by giving it a very beautiful name—Elon. It has rendered a splendid and worthwhile service in its chosen field during these years.

Dr. Smith, who has been charged with the grave responsibility of becoming the president of this institution in the most trying time of its lengthening history, knows nothing of my determination to offer this communication to the brotherhood whom I love; yet I am venturing to suggest that a heaven-born vision on the part of any considerable number of our church members in the beloved South—for I do love with a peculiar affection our people of that region—cannot fail to result in a shower of contributions such as will refresh and invigorate those who have labored so incessantly for the success of the work committed to them.

More than a year ago the Dollar-a-Month plan was launched. A few hundred people have embraced it and sought to contribute to its success. There should have been thousands. When I say there should have been thousands, I mean just that. I mean it, even though I am far from blind to the fact that we have been and still are passing through an unprecedented depression.

Without presuming to count on a single member of a Congregational Church, we have over 32,000 whose names appear on the rolls of our own Christian Churches. Yes, the Congregational Churches are ours, too, now, but they have obligations assumed before the union which they are struggling to meet as well as have the group which was distinctively ours. If I could have my way, therefore, no one would be allowed to solicit a single subscription from our Congregational group. But here is what will inevitably happen if, and when, our own group subscribe their full five thousand memberships to the Dollar-a-Month Club: Members of our Congregational group will subscribe because you can't persuade them not to do so. Such is the compelling power of good wholesome example. When these spontaneous contributions begin to come in in increasing numbers it will then be our high privilege to undertake severe deprivations, if need be, to just as enthusiastically undertake on a wide front to help lift in some similar enterprise which the other group has long cherished.

A dollar for a whole month is not much, even for those who do not know how to meet their ordinary obligations without considerable planning and maneuvering. I know, I have been trying it! Here in Brooklyn, there are many meetings which it seems important for a minister to attend. Usually the meetings involve a luncheon or a dinner. The expense is from a dollar up. We usually manage it somehow. These meetings, however, are no more important than is the support of a college of such strategic value as is Elon. I am sure then when one sees what is involved one just cannot represent Jesus and turn down a proposition which means $60,000 a year to our beloved Elon. It just cannot be that one in every six of our nominal membership are so impoverished that they cannot give one dollar a month for at least a year or two. The only kind of poverty which I can imagine as being so widely prevalent, is an impoverished vision.

Let us read again of the Macedonian Christians as described in II. Cor. 8:2. Their very poverty abounded unto their liberality. They possessed a Spirit-quickened vision to see what the self-denial of others meant because of their own experiences, and gave with an unparalleled generosity. To belong to a company of seers whose vision is keen enough and clear enough to behold the Elon that shall be, is to be inspired to covet earnestly a share in bringing to pass the lifting of the institution out of its difficulties. Five thousand Dollar-a-Month members ought to be secured before September.

CHATTANOOGA COMRADES CAMP OUT.

On the 9th of June it poured, and on the morning of the 10th the clouds hung heavy, sometimes letting out a threatening drizzle. Hopeful campers watched the clouds but were not dismayed. They packed up their bedding, their cooking utensils, and their food and started for Bakewell, two miles above Soddy, Tenn. Their hopes were well founded, for there was no more rain and all the variegated vehicles crossed the rocky creek without mishap. Before noon they started arriving, three boys from Crossville, sixty miles away, then seventeen on a truck from Sherwood, a hundred miles distant. Camp leaders and speakers and two fraternal delegates from the last Alabama Christin Life Conference, were there to welcome the arrivals. The first camp meal was in process within a short time and the first campers proved that they could make fires and use them for an excellent purpose. The rest of the delegations came in by truck and by car, from Soddy, Daisy, East Lake and Pilgrim Church, Chattanooga. Just when we had given up hope of seeing Pleasant Hill, the car arrived with delegates from the school who had been gathered from miles around, since it was vacation time and all students were at their homes. This made our fellowship complete with the exception of Grandview. Clouds must have obscured that view and frightened the viewers away.

Everyone who wanted to swim tried out the natural swimming hole, then returned cooled and refreshed, ready for the program of the afternoon. First, we had a brief business session and representatives were selected from each delegation to act as a camp committee to make and carry out regulations. At the afternoon session, we enjoyed hours with modern books and poetry, led by Miss Dorothy French and Miss Jean Pettit. We enjoyed particularly some original poems read by their creator, Orma Priddy, a Soddy High School girl. Since the theme of our conference was, "God in Nature and God in Man," it was altogether fitting that we should be thus introduced to the works of those people who had found God and had in their writings tried to interpret him to others.

Next on the program was a hike to the top of the overhanging bluff above the camp. It looked well nigh impossible to scale such a bluff and we thought it was before we reached the top. Manfully we struggled and gained the summit, then prepared supper as a reward for our valor, also to appease our ravenous hunger and to lighten our burdens on the way down. From this mountain top we could look down into the canyon that held our camp, then over the hills and into the valleys in two directions—a lovely vantage point.

Our Vesper service was held about the campfire at the camp site. Pleasant Hill conducted the service and Rev. E. E. White brought an inspiring message, "God in Man." He struck the keynote of the conference and many of his thoughts were carried over into the discussion conducted by Rev. A. L. DeJarnette later in the evening. Soddy conducted the camp-fire fun time and each delegation responded with stunts and general foolishness which added greatly to our fellowship and acquaintance.

The final service of the evening was a very impressive candle lighting service led by the East Lake delegation. The theme, "God in Nature," was carried out in this service, for the seven candles in the center represented the seven days of creation. After the service, the circle of candle light melted away and little spots of light marked the places where the campers were making their beds for the night. The candles of the boys clustered about the tent in the clearing and those of the girls were in and about the Boy Scout log cabin among the trees.

Nights are short for campers, especially the first night, and by 4:30 everyone was up. The rocky creek was the scene of the morning ablutions and many comparisons of number and size of bites of various kinds were made. Bacon and eggs and coffee was the popular breakfast and every little camp fire brought forth the same fragrant odor. Each delegation brought its own food and did its own cooking, so all shared in the responsibilities of the camp. Our early morning service was held at a little spring half way up the mountain. The efforts of the night before had dampened the spirits of the group, so the top of the mountain was too far away to attempt. Crossville delegates led a very impressive morning service, "The Roll-Call of the Trees," and helped us to a deeper appreciation of the beauty of the forest about us.

At the usual Sunday School hour we met about the council ring for a real business session and for reports of the church groups. At this session plans were laid for a week of camping with a real summer school program next year. Everyone wanted such a program and voted to support it. Tennessee isn't going to be beaten by North Carolina, Alabama and Florida.

Daisy led the worship service at 11 o'clock, and Dr. Ensminger preached to the group which was scattered about in the grove, sitting on rocks and against trees, God's Cathedral walls. A wild and cultivated grapevine illustrated the nature sermon.

After dinner, our last camp meal, we held the final business session, heard committee reports and made plans for the next meeting. The award for the finest spirit was given to the new group among us, Sherwood. The fall meeting is to be entertained at Crossville.

As we sat on the ground after our final business session, there came toward us through the green lane, the women of the Bible. Hagar and Ishmael, driven away by Sarai; Ruth, Orpah and Naomi; Miriam and her maids; the Egyptian Princess who found the infant Moses; Rachel and Leah; and other familiar characters appeared before us as Mrs. Keyes read of their lives. Pilgrim Church had charge of this service and they brought us a charming pageant in our out-of-doors auditorium.

Our closing service was conducted by Rev. A. L. Hurst, of Pilgrim Church. This consecration and communion service was most impressive. Four young people had been selected by their groups to act as deacons, and they distributed the bread and wine to their companions in memory of our great Leader, who loved the out-of-doors and lived in it, close to his Father. We were all brought closer to Christ and to his Father as we sat there together in the midst of the beauty of nature.

Thus our first camp was brought to a close and over eighty-five young people packed up to return home after their week-end of inspiration and fellowship. Just as it rained before the camp, it rained after the camp, and we had something more to be thankful for.

AMERICA'S ANNIVERSARY.

The anniversary of the birth of America as a nation is here. The day of days for the American people; and well might it be, for the United States of America has become one of the greatest of nations on the face of the globe. It was founded on that great document, the Declaration of Independence, signed by courageous men who knew not what such a radical stand might mean to them, yet bold in their convictions for the sake of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

George Washington, the one who led the young nation in its beginning and who was affectionately called "The Father of His Country," said: "If the citizens of the United States should not be free and happy, the fault will be entirely their own."

Our national hymn was written with such love and devotion and it stirs our hearts as we sing, "My Country, 'Tis of Thee, Sweet Land of Liberty." Yet, as we think of the present day ideas of liberty without law which so many seem to desire, we know that they have departed from the thought of the hymn writer, for we believe he meant liberty in conformity to God's law, the only true liberty. Such was the Pilgrim's pride; the opportunity to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience, willing to face the perils of a new country that they might be established in the things of God.

The present generation has wandered far from the rules laid down by their Pilgrim fathers and they ask not for the old paths, the paths that led to rest and peace. For this reason the music of patriotism does not swell the breeze, nor ring from all the trees; freedom's sweet song has been stilled because of the discordant strains of personal liberty.

Love of country has been replaced by love of power and love of money, the willingness to serve has been placed in the background and those who have served are not honored as they once were. Happiness has given way to care and those who have power and money are the most miserable. "Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown" is as true today as ever. It matters not whether it be a kingly crown or a crown that the world gives to those who possess power and money.

Well may we pray, "Our fathers' God, to thee, Author of liberty, protect us by thy might, great God, our King." Many feel that they are no longer accounted as citizens of our great country because unable to meet the requirements necessary to give them a share in the actions of the government. They know not what a day may bring forth. But many of these can truly say, "My citizenship is in heaven," for here we have no continuing city, but we seek one to come. We confess that we are strangers and pilgrims on the earth, that we seek a country, a better country, whose builder and maker is God. Wherefore, God is not ashamed to be called their God; for he has prepared for them a city and they shall go no more out. W.

PRAYER.

Blest harbor of souls, the Church of our Lord! Her portals beckon, her shelter is secure. Some day, O righteous Author and Preserver, the Church shall possess the earth; if we cared enough, that day might be now. Great God, our Father, make people know that the Church's sustenance, its expansion, its triumph, is in human hands and that if truly we desire to build the Church, thou wilt build our bodies into fitting and able instruments for the holy service. In Jesus' name.—Amen. S.

OUR NEWEST MISSIONARY.

While many missionaries have been and are being called home for want of support, provision was recently made for sending out a medical missionary, and the following very interesting item from the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty, June 22nd, tells of him and his sending out:

"Leonard Fiske Wilbur, M. D., is a quiet and unassuming young man, who looks even younger than he really is. His father is Judge Curtis D. Wilbur, of San Francisco, who served as Secretary of the Navy under President Coolidge, while he has an uncle, President Ray Lyman Wilbur, of Stanford University, recently Secretary of the Interior. Naturally, young Leonard Fiske Wilbur is a graduate of Stanford in both liberal arts and medicine. At present he is serving as an interne in Philadelphia, but early in the summer he expects to sail for China to become an assistant to Dr. Percy T. Watson in the Harwood Memorial Hospital at Fenchow, North China. At a luncheon given Dr. Leonard Wilbur by the secretaries in our New York offices, he said:

"It is not only medicine that people need; they need also to know Christ. Only gradually did I come to realize what Christ means to the world because I was born in a Christian home. I do not know any better Christian than my own dad. I am not going to China to preach, but to practice medicine; but I hope through my medicine to help bring people to a knowledge of Christ, whom they need more than anything else."

THE SEEDLINGS.

In every land the missionaries report the child as often the first link for parents with the church or Christianity in any form. At Inanda, South Africa, one may see a little girl wrapped in a blanket carrying her baby sister fully dressed, while by her side another sister herself "dressed" carries a naked baby sister. Amazingly quick they learn to slip from the front bench and kneel with covered eyes when Teacher says, "We will close with the Lord's Prayer." In Rahuri, India, when teacher did not come one morning because of a special meeting, Miss E. Loleta Wood reports with pride that the children went quietly through their exercises, one conducting prayers, one reading the Bible, and all joining in the hymns. And in Japa where little Aiko San refused to say her kindergarten prayer in a jazz restaurant because "it has to be quieter," another small kindergarten boy prayed, following summer vacation: "O Lord, if there is anything at kindergarten that I don't understand, please explain it to me."

FOR REVENUE ONLY.

Graduates of Mt. Silinda Training School are in great demand as teachers throughout Rhodesia. On one day a request came for 12 instructors. They are well trained and have advanced study in handwork which increases their value. Chief Makuyana sends all his boys to the school, says Mrs. Mabel Larkins Hack, but when urged to let the girls come he commented calmly and firmly: "We need to sell the girls to pay taxes to the government."

THE OPPORTUNITY OF THE SMALL COLLEGE.

In this article the comparisons are between the small college of from two hundred to four hundred pupils and the large universities with from twelve hundred to several thousand students. The comparisons are based on actual observations and founded on the history of the types of institutions described.

First, the faculty of the two kinds of institutions must be considered. In the large institutions the heads of departments are usually chosen because of their ability and their achievements in research work. The minds of these workers are centered on their research problems and not on their teaching. They are performing laboratory experiments, testing out hypotheses, writing books, and, as a result, they have little time for teaching. However, these large institutions have numbers of good teachers in their associate professors, or in their assistant professors, and these do some very fine teaching. The freshman classes in these institutions usually have the most difficult time both in adjusting themselves to the new situation in which they find themselves and in accomplishing their first year's work. Generally freshman classes are taught by fellowship students whose main interest is in the graduate work they are doing, and they are teaching as a side line by means of which they are making their expenses while working for their higher degrees. Meanwhile, the institution is getting a part of its teaching work done at a comparatively small cost. In general, the faculties of these large colleges are well equipped and prepared for their work, each is a specialist in his line, and, were they teachers instead of research workers and writers of books, their work would be a great success. It is the freshmen who are taught by fellowship students who suffer most in our great universities. Those who have their attention divided, those who are doing research work and writing books, and are devoting their time to matters outside of class-room activities can not and will not give the best of their lives to the students under them.

On the other hand, the faculty members of the small colleges are chosen not for their ability in research and in authorship; they are chosen for no other reason but for their teaching ability. They are not always Ph.D. men, for the men of the highest scholarship and research powers are usually called to the larger institutions of learning. Small college faculties are called from the ranks of the real teachers who are available for these positions, and, since they are not engaged in outside activities, they have the time and the opportunity to devote themselves entirely to teaching, to the direction of students, and to guidance, provided, they have the proper amount of energy and devote themselves whole-heartedly to their work. These men are employed for no other purpose than to teach, to instruct, and to inspire. They have plenty of time to make the necessary preparation for their work and to prepare themselves for the most effective teaching. They have time for conferences with the members of their classes and they can devote themselves fully and entirely to building character, to developing immature boys and girls into men and women of resourcefulness and power. This is preeminently the job of the faculty members of the smaller colleges.

If these professors realize the boundless opportunities before them, they become models which students may safely follow; they lead and direct into right paths, and they leave an impress for good on the minds of the student body which time does not efface. In case these professors lose sight of their high calling, how serious the matter becomes! By keeping in touch with the great dynamo of eternal power, these teachers become character builders and life moulders, they develop statesmen and enable students to catch the broadest visions of life and duty. No person can estimate the influence of a Braxton Craven or of a Mark Hopkins.

Then the student body of the small institution differs greatly from the student body of the great university. The difference is noted in their spirit, in their morale, as well as in the homes from which they come. Prestige usually draws the wealthy to the great university. The renown of the large institution has its influence in bringing students to its campus. Then, in case of a state institution, free scholarships, free tuition, and the opportunity of lessening the cost leads many students who come from homes of moderate means to the state institutions. In general, the majority of the students coming to the large institutions are fine young people and make good in their college courses. Notwithstanding the fact that the teaching is of a mediocre kind, they do fine work and leave behind them a fine record.

In the smaller colleges are found students who do not, as a general thing, have so much wealth. If the small institution is a denominational college, then the majority of students are usually from the denomination that supports the college. The larger institutions are beginning to reject the students whose high school record does not place them among the "upper ten," and these students, if they ever get to college, must seek the smaller institution. Often these students have really better minds than those who were more spectacular in their high school work, and if the small college faculty members are alive to their obligations and their opportunities, they can develop this type of student into the best and strongest citizen. Often these students have the finest spirit, the best character, and the purest purposes and ideals.

Because of the small number in the small colleges, each student knows each faculty member and the faculty members are acquainted with each student. Each student has access to every member of the faculty for advice, encouragement, help, and inspiration. The faculty and student body are but a large family and they all have a community of interests. But, in the great university, the students are strangers to the greater number of the faculty, and the students are also often strangers to each other. There is the law school, the school of education, the school of engineering, the liberal arts college, and so many other schools that the interests of the students are greatly divided. In such an institution there can be no community of interests such as may be found in the small denominational college.

In the small college the "personal touch" between department head and pupil can be made of inestimable value if the professors will but make use of this means of helpfulness. Students are influenced by the lives of teachers who show an interest in them. This is by no means as fully true in the large universities where the professor often has several hundred in his class and just lectures. Occasionally even there certain students have access to certain faculty members, but this is few and far between. The professors there meet their classes and when the class period is over, the professor retires to his work room and the students do not see him any more until they meet him in class the next day.

While there are very great advantages that students derive from attending the smaller colleges, there are also dangers which these colleges face. The larger colleges and universities demand scholarship in the students. These institutions exist for the purpose of developing scholars; this is their aim and ideal. The student who does poor work may be tolerated there for a while, but when it becomes generally known that he does not try to be scholarly, he is mercilessly weeded out and eliminated. The small colleges must also demand scholarship in their students. The scholarship morale must be kept up and the students must be taught to put scholarship first. If many outside interests are allowed to come and interfere, scholarship suffers. This, the small college must guard well against.

Then, if the small college is to be worth more to her pupils than the great university can be to the pupils who attend it, the faculty must do more than to hear classes and give haphazard lectures. They must have for their ideal the giving to the student body of the best in their power, they must inspire students to become scholars, to be strong and manly in character, to be resourceful, and good. The administration and the faculty must be united in this one aim and purpose, they must be loyal to the students and to each other if they are to succeed in this great quest. Thus may a small college rise to meet its great opportunity.

Unless a small college does more for its student body than the large institution, then the small institution cannot justify its existence. Consolidation is the program of today and consolidation makes for better high schools according to the data in the hands of our school authorities. And the large college is but a consolidation of smaller colleges into one. It can have greater libraries and offer greater opportunities than the small college can offer. It offers religious instruction in one way or another. And for the small college to have just cause and reason for its continued existence, administration, faculty, supporters, and all concerned must, in ways indicated above, do more for the student body and give more thorough preparation for their work in life than the large institution professes to do. The small college has its place and it has its opportunity, but it must use its opportunity if it is not to be crowded out by the larger institutions of the country.

Through the week we go down into the valleys of care and shadow. Our Sabbaths should be hills of light and joy in God's presence; and so, as time rolls by, we shall go on from mountain-top to mountain-top, till at last we catch the glory of the gate, and enter in to go no more out forever.—Beecher.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."
REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, Waverly, Va.

VIRGINIA VALLEY S. S. AND C. E. CONVENTION.

The annual meeting of the S. S. and C. E. Convention of the Virginia Valley Central Conference was held at Whistler's Chapel Thursday and Friday, June 15th-16th. Rev. B. J. Earp and his good people entertained in characteristic Virginia Valley hospitable way. The church faces a six hundred apple orchard, and is one mile from the beautiful Shenandoah Caverns, through which the convention was permitted to go as guests of the owners.

President Roy A. Larrick presided with dignity and kept the program moving on schedule and interestingly. Secretary R. O. Rothgeb kept all the minutes up to the minute and had them ready on adjournment to turn over to the Board of Christian Education for publication. Treasurer Walton E. Brill reported $57.00 received from the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies.

Reports were made by eighteen churches and sixteen churches were represented by delegates. All pastors except one were present. Superintendents were rather scarce. Four Christian Endeavor presidents were present. The total enrollment was 74.

The opening session was devoted to missions with a report by Convention Mission Secretary, Miss Verdie Showalter, and an address by Rev. J. L. Foster, who substituted for Dr. J. O. Atkinson.

Thursday afternoon, Norman Morris reported on the Home Department. Vernon Whitacre gave the annual address on "Love, a Word of Worth." The writer spoke on "The Church for Today."

The evening session was profitable because of a fine address by Rev. Minor C. Miller, ex-secretary of the Virginia Council of Religious Education, who spoke on "Aims and Objectives of Religious Education."

Special features of Friday morning were the model opening of Sunday School led by Roy A. Hosaflook, and the model teaching of a lesson for adult classes, and the model primary demonstration, and an address by Rev. J. L. Foster on the "Basis of World Friendship." Reports were made on Cradle Roll by Mrs. J. Warner Stearn, and on Organized Classes by Alfred Dofflemyre.

A model Christian Endeavor meeting was the main feature of the Friday afternoon session, which was led by Orville Hoover.

Certificates for having attained 75 per cent of the required standards were awarded to the following schools: Winchester, Timber Ridge, Antioch, Linville, Leaksville, Bethlehem, Mt. Olivet (G), New Hope, and Wood's Chapel.

The convention voted to accept the invitation from Palmyra to meet there next year.

After paying all bills, the convention had $40.00 to give to the Board of Christian Education.

Officers for the coming year were elected as follows: President, Roy A. Larrick; vice-president, Roy A. Hosaflook; secretary, R. O. Rothgeb; treasurer, Walton E. Brill.

Department secretaries: Missions, Vernon Whitaker; Home Department, K. B. Hook; Teacher Training, Charlotte Hillyard; Cradle Roll, Thelma Morris; Organized Classes, Alfred Dofflemyre; Christian Endeavor, Orville Hoover.

Good will is a habit created and developed like every other habit, by practice.—Anon.

YOUTH FELLOWSHIP MEETINGS.

The Western North Carolina Youth Fellowship has prepared a fine program for their meeting at Shiloh Christian Church on July 2nd. Among those who are to share in this program are: Misses Jewell Truitt and Priscilla Chase, Carl Key, Herman Truitt, and Rev. Arthur Swartz. Special music will be furnished by the Hanks' Chapel quartette, the Albemarle quartette, and others. Young people in the conference should certainly make it a point to spend the first Sunday in July at this Youth Fellowship meeting.

The Eastern Virginia Youth Fellowship will meet on July 18th, at Glen Lake, near Holland, Va., with the Holland young people furnishing refreshments. "Making Christ Real in the Life of Today," is the theme for the meeting, and discussions will center on how this can be done in various phases of life such as the home, government and church. Announcements are being sent to all the churches in the conference, and it is expected that the attendance will be the largest in the history of this fellowship. All young people in this conference should plan to attend, and share in the program on July 11th.

The North Carolina and Virginia Fellowship met in an annual session on the evening of June 22nd, in connection with the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor at Virgilina, Va. Miss Birdie Rowland, of Greensboro, N. C., presided in her usual charming and effective manner. The principle address was made by Dr. L. E. Smith, of Elon College, N. C., and was a real challenge for youth to make the world better. Officers for the coming year were elected as follows:

President, Rev. J. E. Neese, Bessemer Ave., Greensboro, N. C.; vice-president, Miss Clarice Gunn, Reidsville, N. C.; secretary and treasurer, Miss Mabel Smith, McAdoo Ave., Greensboro, N. C.

It is expected that with this leadership the young people of this conference will go forward in Christian service.

The annual meeting of the Valley Virginia Central Conference Youth Fellowship will be held in August as a part of the annual conference. Prof. K. B. Hook is president of this group, and promises the Sunday School Convention that there will be a fine program for the young people when they meet in August.

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOLS.

Reports are coming in to this office telling of very fine Vacation Bible Schools which are being held in our churches. These schools make a real contribution to the life of boys and girls, and every church should seriously conduct such a school annually.

Dendron, Va., has recently closed a union school which enrolled nearly one hundred pupils. This was their first school, and seems to have been a complete success. The children were delighted, and the teachers were happy over the results.

A union school is in the process at Waverly, Va., with all four churches sharing in the expense and in furnishing the teachers. The enrollment the first week was one hundred and eight, and others will be enrolled this week. This is the third annual school for Waverly, and the children look forward to it as a high time in their experience.

In these schools, and there are many of them scattered throughout our church, boys and girls learn hymns of the church, find scripture passages and study the Christian way of life. There are stories, games and handwork suited to the various ages of the children.

The girls make pictures, sew, paint, etc., while the boys are delighted with carpentry. They often make usable articles to give to the churches, and thereby not only busy themselves with delightful work, but find joy in making a real contribution to the church.

Monday—Conscience—Our Moral Standard. I. Cor. 8:1-13.

Tuesday—Guilty Knowledge. Gen. 42:21.

Wednesday—What One Counts Wrong. James 4:13-17.

Thursday—Conscience is Enlightened by the Christ Ideal. Phil. 2:1-16.

Friday—Conscience is Trained by Use. Heb. 5:14.

Saturday—He Knew He Had Done Wrong. Matt. 27:3-8.

PROGRAM.

Instrumental Prelude—"Dear Lord and Father of Mankind."

Opening Hymn—"Dear Lord and Father of Mankind."

Prayer—The Lord's Prayer in unison.

Scripture—Romans 2:11-16.

Hymn—"Open My Eyes, That I May See."

Introductory Talk—

Development of the Topic—

Hymn—"Jesus Calls Us O'er the Tumult."

Story—I. Kings 19:1-4, 8-15 (assign some one this scripture to put into popular story. The still small voice mentioned in this scripture may be used as the voice of conscience).

Benediction—"Into My Heart" (sung softly).

Additional Hymns—"I Would be True," "Have Thine Own Way, Lord," "O, Love that Will Not Let Me Go," "Saviour, Like a Shepherd Lead Us."

This can be made a most interesting meeting. Nothing makes a discussion more interesting than a presentation of important experiences of folks. Inner experiences which may be given without revealing the person involved should serve to acquaint the group with the natures and working of conscience. Assign as many as are willing to accept the responsibility, the task of interviewing friends outside the society for the purpose of discovering what conscience is and how it is developed. Try to obtain from each person interviewed an important experience in which conscience played a major part. After the account of the experience has been secured try to discover the person's point of view as to how his conscience was developed so as to function the way it did in this experience. In some cases the nature of the experience might be such that the person interviewed would not want his name revealed. No confidences should be betrayed.

Many can be found who regard individual conscience as a reliable guide in making any important decision. Others discount conscience and hold that it is entirely unreliable. Between these two extremes may be found all shades of opinion on the nature and function of conscience.

It is recognized at the outset that conscience plays a major role in determining our conduct. This being true it is important that we secure as clear a view of its nature as possible. If we discover in our study that it can be developed we should attempt to point out the most practical ways by which we can develop a conscience that will support a more Christian type of conduct.

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

JOSHUA.

LESSON I.—JULY 2, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Be strong and of good courage; for Jehovah thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest."—Joshua 2:9.

LESSON TEXT: Joshua 1:1-9; 23-1, 2, 14.

We are beginning a series of lessons on the early leaders of Israel. The lessons will be short biographical sketches of men and women, or accounts of incidents in their careers. As such they may be very valuable, for we can emulate the virtues of the good, and avoid the vices of the bad.

Moses My Servant is Dead.

God buries the worker, but carries on the work. The death of a great leader is not the occasion for giving up the task, but a call to greater consecration and a challenge to a new leader. Furthermore, God uses different types of people to carry on and out his work. Moses was a great organizer, a student, a law-giver, a quiet, modest man. Joshua was a warrior, a man of action, an aggressive man. Joshua did a work that Moses could not have done.

Now, Therefore, Go Over this Jordan.

Do not allow idle sentiment for the dead keep you from doing your duty to the living. It is no lack of respect for the dead to take up the incompleting tasks. Jesus said: "Let the dead bury the dead." Let the work of the world and especially the work of the Kingdom go on. This is, after all, the most fitting way to honor our dead.

Every Place that the Soul of Your Foot Shall Tread.

God gave the children of Israel the land, but they could have only so much of it as they put the sole of their foot upon. They were to possess by earning. The good land of education, of character, of spiritual resources have been given to us by God, but only insofar as we take them, as we appropriate them.

As I Was With Moses, So Will I Be With You.

There had been abundant evidence that God had been with his servant, Moses. It must have been reassuring to Joshua to have the assurance that in like manner God would be with him also. "I will be with thee, I will not fail thee nor forsake thee"—it was an exceeding great and precious promise to Joshua. It is the same to us. As God was with Moses and with Joshua, he will be with us, if we give ourselves to do his will as did Moses and Joshua. There is not a promise to them that is not still good on the same terms.

Be Strong and of a Good Courage.

Courage comes from the root word "cor" which means "heart." The gist of the message to Joshua is, "do not lose heart, do not be fearful as you face the dangers and difficulties which confront you." God cannot do much, if anything with a discouraged or "disheartened" man. He who would live happily and serve acceptably must keep up his courage.

This Book of the Law.

The secret of his courage was to be the Word of God, "the Book of the law." In meditation upon it and obedience to it, Joshua was to find that which would "put or keep heart within him." They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength. We break down, not from over-work, but from under-being. He who would face life bravely must feed upon the Word of God which is the Word of Life.

Then Thou Shalt Have Good Success.

The ultimate test of success is character. He who "observes to do according to all that is written therein," he who tries consistently and constantly to govern his life by the truths and principles of the Word of God will have good success. He will be a success according to God's standards of success.

The Lord Thy God Is With Thee.

As we set ourselves to walk in his paths or to do his tasks, we may be sure that "he is with us." He has not left us alone. To those who yield themselves to him, life becomes a great companionship and a great partnership.

And Not One Thing Hath Failed Thereof.

God is not slack concerning his promises. He can be counted upon. We may let him down, but he never lets us down. Joshua's words at the end of his life are more than the pious but ungrounded babbling of an old and forgetful man. They were a stirring testimony of God's faithfulness and his ability to keep his word. And to all those who order their lives by his precepts and in his spirit, there comes abundant evidence that he is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, and to supply all our needs from his riches of glory in Jesus Christ. If we do as God says he will do as we say. If we do what he tells us to do, we can expect him to do what we ask him to do.

FLORIDA CONFERENCES.

The Congregational Young People's Conferences for Florida have closed after most successful sessions. The second conference was held at the Las Clas Inn at Fort Lauderdale Beach. The previous conference had been for the northern area, and was held at DeLeon Springs. About one hundred young people were in attendance at those conferences.

At the northern conference, Rev. Lawrence A. Gedcke of St. Petersburg, served as Dean. For the southern conference, Rev. Orville D. Ullom, of Melbourne, was Dean. Rev. E. C. Gillette, superintendent of Congregational Churches in Florida, and Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, director of Religious Education and Young People's work, also participated in the conferences.

Mr. Chas. A. Hoyt, of Jacksonville, was the business manager. Miss Martha Race, of Jacksonville, taught dramatics and Leroy Hoyt was the bugler.

This was the eighth session of these young people's conferences and they have been a great factor in the young people's work of the Congregational Churches of the state.

Honors bestowed are as follows:

HIDDEN IN HIS PAVILION.

"In the secret of his pavilion he shall hide me in his pavilion."—Psa. 27:5.

David was much sinned against from his youth up. Because of his charm and accomplishments as a musician, and for his popularity with the people. Saul, his king, hated him and set out to have him done away with. First he called under the pretense of being the musician for him in his moody hours, and when he played Saul threw a javelin at him. David escaped. Then Saul assayed to compliment him and gave him a military commission and made him captain over a thousand men, but he was bullet-proof and he escaped. Then Saul offered him the hand of his daughter, with intentions of taking advantage of the nuptials and making away with him, but this failed. Saul then waged war with a neighboring country and offered him the second daughter if he would win the battle. He hoped that the young officer would be slain, but he won the war and the lady also. Again Saul feigned to be crazy and sent for David to soothe his evil spirit, and when he appeared he tried the javelin again, but missed. As a last effort, Saul himself waged war with David, and when sleeping David approached him and took his weapons away from him. David knew the Lord, trusted him and lived for him. Somehow he knew that he was kept by curtains of the impalpable pavilion of the Lord.

A chief machinist told me that once as they were repairing machinery aboard ship he was standing under a great piece of machinery hoisted above. Something said, "get away." He obeyed the voice quickly, and the machinery suspended above fell where he had been standing. It was the pavilion of the Lord.

Many incidents in life are similar, reminding us of God's protection to those who are truly his.

Prayer—Our Father, give us a conviction of what thou art to us in every-day life. Give us thy thought. Make us thy high tower. Hide us from dangers and draw us closer to thee.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

STRONG YOUNG MEN.

"Let no one think slightly of you because you are a young man."—I. Tim. 4:12.

John says: "I write unto you young men because ye have overcome evil, and because ye are strong and the Word of God abideth in you."

Young men are attractive. We all covet the time when we shall be young men and we likewise rue the age when we feel that we are no longer young and have to be referred to as an old man. Physical health, exuberant vitality, buoyant hopefulness, fresh enthusiasm, untarnished ambitions and undaunted courage, makes youth attractive, and there is no sin about these God-given qualities. They are the very essence of God's glory. It is the kind of life necessary for the conquest of the Lord. Christian life calls for strength, for men of moral convictions, for men of decision who make no compromises and surrender no principle, but throw all their manhood in the conflict against evil. "Quit you like men, be strong."

And young men can be all God wants them to be if they live at the source of strength. A nation's strength is her young manhood trained for service. A locomotive's power is its steam-blast that sucks in the air from the heavens. The power of Christian forces is her young manhood infused with the Word of God and breathing in his Spirit from heavenly sources.

"Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? By taking hold thereto according to thy Word." David said, "My strength is in the fact that thy Word have I hidden in my heart, that I might not sin."

Prayer—Our Father, who art in heaven, we pray for a daily portion of thy strength and thy spirit. We pray for vision to abide in him. We pray for the patience to wait on thee. Renew our strength day by day, that we may never weary of thy way or jointly the way, but may find always the riches and charm of Christian manhood and womanhood.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

A TALK TO YOUNG MEN.

"My son, give me thine heart, and let thine eyes delight in my ways."—Prov. 23:26.

When Zaccheus climbed the sycamore tree to see Jesus he contributed more to the Christian world than he ever dreamed of.

First, he started right. He was a young man and he loved the world, but he loved goodness greatly, and there was something about this man Jesus that charmed him. Thus, he was prepared to stand all the criticism and shut his eyes and ears to all but the Christ. The young man who can forget himself and what others may say and just hanker after God and the things of God. So it was on the limb of the tree he believed he would see Jesus, "and Jesus came to that place." Jesus always comes to the place where one is waiting for him.

The people said, "Holy horrors! That man is the worst in the city." They saw Zaccheus as a publican and sinner, but Jesus saw his kingdom. They saw a man they hated, but Jesus saw a son. What does he see in you?

In John Newton the world saw a drunkard, but Jesus saw a theologian and poet. The world saw a swearing tinker, but Jesus saw John Bunyan. The world saw a young man just peddling shoes, but Jesus saw D. L. Moody. The world saw a rum-seller, but Jesus saw John Whitfield. What does God see in you? Your friends see the worst perhaps, but God sees the best. It made Zaccheus a man to take Jesus with him. Take Jesus with you.

Prayer—Our Father of love and mercy, do thou see in us what we may be for eternity? Give us the will to take thee with us in our homes and on our way.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE SILENCE OF HIS PRESENCE.

"Be still and know that I am God."—Psalm 46:10.

"Empty wagons make more noise than the loaded ones," my professor used to tell me. A match makes more noise than the breaking of day or the bursting sun. All great movements of the universe are silent.

The Bible teaches us that it is in the quiet when the mind and spirit learns its best lessons and becomes aware of God. It is in silence that the Son of God comes forth with the radiance of glory.

We are carried away from our good judgment by noises. We limit our horizons and cloud our vision by worldly attachments. The Word so often enjoins us to be quiet and think. We need the ministry of quiet, of blessed sitting down when conscience can speak to the inner self. This is a supreme reason for a quiet Sabbath.

Prayer—Our Father, make us willing to follow our Master and live alone with thee and pray much. We ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

HOW TO ATTAIN REAL SELF-KNOWLEDGE.

"Search me, O God, and know my heart."—Psa. 139:23-24.

This utterance of the Psalmist seems to us one of the most precious in the Scriptures. The human personality is the most delicate and complex of organisms, swayed by manifold influences. Especially in the moral sphere is it subject to temptation. We must watch and pray, and strengthen ourselves by divine grace.

It is self-love that fetters our search and deceives us. If we could but rid ourselves of this conceit, and be reduced to true humility, and cry in self-abasement, "God be merciful to me a sinner," we would make the first real advance in the new and higher spiritual life.

If we lay our whole heart and our secret thoughts open to our Maker and Judge, he will prove our best Friend, reproving us with tender and loving kindness. So we will become truly acquainted with our moral delinquencies, cast out our evil ways, be pure in word and deed, and rise to lives of spiritual holiness and beauty, walking in the way everlasting.

Prayer—By one of the parents, asking that we may be strengthened in faith and divinely led to do God's will, knowing that if we fully trust him we shall be guided aright. Ask in Jesus name.

SATURDAY.

IN THE SHEPHERD'S CARE.

"Having no hope, and without God in the world."—Eph. 2:12-16.

What tragedy in this snatch of a sentence—"no hope!" There comes to mind the remembrance of two funeral services. In the one, the cortege went with measured tread through leaf-shaded aisle, to a massive granite mausoleum in a magnificent cemetery. The father stood dumb with grief through the committal service. He had lived without religious conviction. Not long afterward he himself was placed to rest beside his loved ones.

There comes the memory of the other occasion. A girl was laid to rest. The interment was on a shoulder that projected from a mountain-side. Only a home-made headstone marks the site. These folks were mountaineers, and their hilly farm produced little more than bare necessities. But how the mother and father loved this girl!

The minister expected a trying time. Instead, when he reached the cabin home, the mother took him aside and narrated a rich experience. The night before, she and her husband, so deep was their anguish, tossed for hours and could not sleep. Then, together, they knelt in prayer. Some impulse came—an impulse that could not be repressed—that led the mother to light the lamp and turn to the Bible. She read from Luke how Jesus had met a sorrowing mother and raised her child to life. "He gave him back to his mother. The mountain woman's eyes were luminous. "It is God's word to us," she said. "The good Father will keep our daughter safe. She cannot come to us; we shall go to her. The Good Shepherd will give her back some day, even as Jesus gave the boy back to his mother. Then we shall be together forever."

Prayer—Lord's Prayer, all joining.

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

THE KINGDOM REALM.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"The kingdom of God is within you."—
Luke 17:21.

There is something very precious in the earth. Jesus was willing to do more than give his life on the cross for it; he was willing to bear the sins of the world for it. I speak of the Kingdom of God. To know where Jesus intended to lodge, into what vault he intended to place so precious a treasure, is a fact most interesting, and sets forth afresh the marvelous grace of God in Christ Jesus. Isn't it wonderful beyond our minds to understand, unless we understand something of his great love, that Jesus would lodge the Kingdom of God in the hearts of men. It speaks of his redemptive power, of his willingness to share and be shared, and of his great faith in humanity. Whenever we hear someone belittling humanity let us ask them to consider Jesus. Jesus, who having the rarest of all treasures placed it in the heart-vault of the human race; and having the most expansive kingdom of all, said: "The Kingdom of God is within you." The safest place in all the world is within the hearts of men and women, and boys and girls. If for any reason whatever you have come to the place where you think differently, you are mistaken, and are only playing against the irrepressible tide of love.

These words of Jesus were in all probability made to Pharisees, but they convey no less faith in men; they may have been made to foes, but they set forth nevertheless an eternal truth; and let us not forget that Jesus entrusted the preaching of the Gospel to the Gentile world to a redeemed Pharisee—Paul. In the first place, then: The place of the Kingdom of God is within you. Emperors stake off their empires on the maps of the earth; Jesus placed his in the hearts of men. He did not say a great deal about this particular aspect of it to those who were his followers. He simply planted love with love and nurtured its growth. To the curiosity seekers hard by he said: "The Kingdom of God cometh not with observation: neither shall they say, Lo here! or, Lo there! for, behold, the Kingdom of God is within you." To others he said, simply: "Come, follow me." The Lord said to Ananias concerning Paul: "Go thy way for he is a chosen vessel unto me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel: for I will show him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake." And thus the borders of that kingdom grew—bearing that name by one willing to "suffer the loss of all things for his sake," meant then, as it still does now, the extending of that kingdom to the ends of the earth.

The place of the kingdom—why, there is a throne in every heart, and a prince in every person who loves Jesus. Every citizen is to be a son of God, heir, and joint-heir with Jesus Christ. The borders of that kingdom will not be extended by the sword, but by love—love for its Lord, and love for one another. Even a Samaritan (the Good Samaritan) can understand its precepts and will, if needs be, give his life for its principles. A sinner of Sychar can enthrone its Saviour, and win new citizens; and the broken and needy the wide world over may join in the prayer: "Thy kingdom come." And so the place of the Kingdom of God is not America, but in the hearts of the folks of America; not Japan, but in the hearts of the folks of Japan; not China, but in the hearts of the folks of China! not Europe, but in the hearts of Europeans; and not in Africa, but in the redeemed hearts of Africans. We must test our citizenship in the Kingdom of God by our adherence to the principles of the Kingdom of God. And that brings me to my second point.

The Principles of the Kingdom of God are Within You. They are within you as Christ is within you. They are the new principles that motivate a new life in Christ Jesus. Three of these principles are outstanding and obvious to all. First, "God so loved . . . God gave." It is one principle doubly expressed. If you cannot love, after the manner of God's love; and if you cannot express that love in freely giving, then you cannot be "a soldier of the cross, and a follower of the Lamb." Love is first, for God is love. Giving without love is futile, as a tree without roots is lifeless. "Though I give all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not love, it profiteth me nothing." Why? "Because love suffereth long, and is kind, etc." "Love never faileth." If then we are to be joint-heirs, we must be joint-sufferers; yea, if we are to ever accept the "power to become sons of God," we must be like our Father in heaven!

Yes, "God so loved . . . God gave;" and the second principle: God loved, and God forgave! This principle is exemplified beautifully in Jesus' own matchless story of the prodigal son. And it is set forth more beautifully still in his dealings with sinner-folk everywhere. It is brought to its supreme climax in his death on the cross! There it was that Jesus said: "Father, I forgive them, you forgive them, for they know not what they do!" "Love covers a multitude of sins," indeed. Can you love and give? Can you love and forgive? "The Kingdom of God is within you." Count me not irreverent with Scripture when I say in the light of this meditation: The Kingdom of God is up to you. There is no Kingdom of God except such as is within men. Oh! God, how thou hast entrusted us! How marvelous is thy grace, and how great is thy redemption! Help us to pray truly, "Forgive us our debts; for we also forgive everyone that is indebted to us." "If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses."

And the third principle is expressed: "God so loved . . . God gave . . . His only begotten Son," loving, giving, sacrificing. When the kingdom has more and more come; and when we are more and more like God—when his image more clearly shows in us (both individuals and nations) we shall be more loving, more forgiving, and more giving than can truly be said to be sacrificial, then we shall know more of the meaning of Christ when he said: "The Kingdom of God is within you." It is Christlike for him to trust us with the kingdom. It is divine for us to be true to that trust. All about us, individually and nationally, they are asking for the Kingdom of God, for a reign of real brotherhood, for a new day and a new deal. Let us look into our hearts and be sure that the Kingdom of God is there! "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness." Let us not expect a kingdom without—at least not a kingdom of love—until there is the kingdom within. Having the Kingdom of God within us let us go forth witnesses of his until by our faith and our works the Kingdom of God shall be truly among men.

THE ATOM AGAIN SUBDIVIDED.

Once was when man discovered the atom, and nothing could be smaller. Today the atom is quite a sizeable particle, and now scientists find their greatest delight in sub-dividing it. For some time we have been familiar with protons, and neutrons, and electrons—there are myriads of them floating around in the tiny atom, but scientists are now on the track of at least two new particles inside the atom, and these particles are being given serious consideration at the meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science which is in session at Chicago this week. We do not yet know what these new particles will be named, but we will try to wait patiently until a new name can be found.

Dear Orphanage Friends:

We hope that Mr. Johnston will be sufficiently restored to health by the coming week to at least write you a short note. We understand that his operation, while of a major character, was quite successful, and that he is improving as rapidly as could be expected. Meantime we ask of you a hearty support of the work which is so dear to him. Few things could do more to help his recovery than a real response to the appeals which he has been making.

A SINGING RELIGION.

"And when they had sung a hymn, they went out into the Mount of Olives."—Mark 14:26.

With this statement, Mark concludes his account of the Last Supper. His words convey the impression that music ministers to men, girds them for crises and crosses. They suggest also that Christianity is a singing religion.

Music helps men to live. It helps folks overcome temptations. We can more effectively stand up for Jesus on Monday, if we sing "Stand Up for Jesus" on Sunday. We are better fitted to rescue the perishing during the week if we sing "Rescue the Perishing" on the Lord's Day. Music helps men to live!

And music also helps men to die. When the Titanic was rammed by an iceberg several years ago, most of the crew and many of the passengers were left to the mercy of a sinking ship and an angry sea. The ship's band became the center of those left behind, and the shipwrecked party gathered around in silence and serenity. As the folks in the lifeboats made their way to land and safety, the strains of a great hymn reached their ears—"Nearer, My God, to Thee."

Yes, the Christian religion is a singing religion. It helps men to live and to die.

Prayer—By one of the parents, asking that we may come to know how effective music is in urging earnest souls to action; also that our lives may be brightened, as far as possible, by consecrated music.

THE HEART OF A JEW.

The Virginian Lutheran relates a pleasant item of news about William Wender, a Jewish resident of Woodstock, Va., where he conducted a mercantile business for twenty years. At his death recently the entire town expressed its appreciation of his sterling character. "Imagine the surprise of the churches in the town when it was learned that he had left one hundred dollars to each of the churches without thought of creed or color."

This was the heart of a Jew who had been shown friendliness in the community where he lived, and had gained the affection of those who knew him to such an extent that they made a demonstration in his honor when he was called over into the Great Beyond.

It was just a straw, but it shows what might be accomplished with kindness in dealings and honor among neighbors. Of course, Mr. Wender never became a Christian—or he may have done so—but his gifts show his love, and where love is surely God is not far away. At any rate the Christian principles are to be practiced toward and with all men. Prejudice must be done away with and that is the first step toward the Kingdom of God being fully established among the people—Christian Evangelist.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR.

HOW MUCH PROFIT CAN WE MAKE?

If you had stock in an industrial plant operating at a loss would you advise searching out and eliminating every waste and putting it on a paying basis through efficient management? Would you urge substitution of cheaper, but poisonous, chemicals for the sake of larger profits, though causing sickness and death among employees? Aside from such inhumanity, cruelty, and injustice, after sickness and death claims were paid, would there be increased profits?

A somewhat similar situation faces every voter in our country. We are all stockholders, in a vital sense, in our government. It is operating at a heavy loss which must be met by our citizens through some form of increased taxation either direct or indirect unless wasteful, unjustified sums voted by congress in the past are cut out and the nation's business is put on a thoroughly efficient basis with no wasteful favors, in any way to politicians or any one else. Some would have us stoop to pandering to the weaknesses and vices of our people as a source of increased revenue!

We are asked to sign on the dotted line for repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment to produce revenue to help balance the budget! Why overlook what would follow—increased expenses for the care of those who would be impoverished through drink (they also would no longer have property on which to pay the government taxes), the drinker's wife and little children becoming a charge upon the community, increase in medical and hospital care for those injured by drink, and sickness in families of working people where the money had gone for drink instead of needed food, clothing and shelter, thus undermining health; for care of the alcoholic insane that official records show greatly increase through use of intoxicants; the lowered efficiency of all workers both in government and private employ where they become addicted even to the use of beer, also the cost of increased accidents to persons and property.

To furnish every dollar of liquor revenue paid into government, state and local treasuries in the old days from four to five dollars were taken from the people, decreasing their purchasing power and robbing productive industry while enormously increasing the wealth of a few brewers and distillers and strengthening their "strangle-hold" on politicians and the so-called "free press."

No one would attempt to save money on running expenses of his car by cutting down on the lubricating oil and thus destroying his car. Yet it is proposed to help pay the running expenses of our government by injuring and destroying our people through the sale of itoxicants, even depriving the nation's infants and children of their milk and other needed food to build strong bones, teeth and nerves thus injuring them for life if the daily wage is spent for beer and other intoxicants. Can you think of anything more wasteful, foolish, cruel, heartless and inhuman? Look, in imagination, at those sickly undernourished children with their crooked legs, decaying teeth, emaciated bodies, listen to their pitiful cries for food and then sign on the dotted line for repeal knowing that God sees you trying to save yourself a few cents or dollars at such a price in human suffering, sickness, poverty and death!

GEORGIA ROBERTSON.

WEST TAMPA.

The members of Pilgrim Latin Congregational Church of West Tampa, Fla., are enthusiastic in their summer work. Open air gospel meetings are being held in a district of Tampa, where formerly there was a flourishing work among the Latin people. It is estimated that more than seventy-five listened to the gospel message in two meetings the past week. Two branch Sunday Schools are conducted by church workers in other districts Sunday afternoons, though with very small attendance. But the opportunities for growth are large. The Daily Vacation Bible School during the past week has had an enrollment of over fifty and a good number more are expected the coming week. Several prayer band meetings are being held regularly. The attendance at the Friday night church prayer meeting this week was at least fifty.

The social activities of the different clubs are being appreciated and enjoyed by young and old. Friends are requested to pray for a still greater advance.

This church is always the first to meet its missionary apportionment each year, making contributions frequently, and going beyond the goal at the end of the year.

NOTICE.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Western North Carolina Congregational-Christian Conference will meet July 4th, at Big Oak Christian Church. Each Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society is urged to send a full report, their dues and delegates to the convention. We hope that the attendance will be better than that of any former convention, and that this will be the "most successful convention" we have ever had. Our program begins at 10:30 A. M., and let us be on time.

OBITUARIES

DOFFLEMYRE.

Mrs. Naomi Dofflemyre, wife of Bro. M. A. Dofflemyre, was born February 23, 1878, and died May 2, 1933, aged 55 years, 2 months, and 4 days.

Sister Dofflemyre was a member of the East Point United Brethren Church, but was faithful and loyal to Bethel Christian Church, of which her husband and eight surviving children are members. She was a woman of many fine Christian qualities, among which might be mentioned especially her kind and gentle disposition, and her interest in the moral and spiritual welfare of others, and especially of her children. Her home has always been a favorite stopping place for the pastors of Bethel Church.

Truly a good woman has gone, who leaves behind her a splendid example for others. Funeral services were conducted at Bethel, May 5, 1933, in which the writer was assisted by Rev. B. J. Earp, of the Christian Church, and Rev. Smith of the U. B. Church. A. W. ANDES.

A BEAUTIFUL LIFE.

On June 10, 1933, at 5 o'clock, P. M., we laid the body of Miss Bettie Slaughter to rest at Bethel Baptist Church, Welch, Ala. Rev. Lee, the pastor of the church, was in charge, assisted by Rev. Landers, Rev. Steely and the writer.

She was the daughter of the late Thomas Slaughter and wife. She leaves to mourn her departure an aged mother, two brothers and two sisters, several nephews and nieces, and a host of other relatives and friends.

Miss Bettie had been confined to her room and bed continually for the past eight years. She was the most patient, cheerful sufferer, and no one could leave her without feeling they had been on holy ground. She did more to honor her Saviour in her affliction than she did in her health. G. D. HUNT.

Mosaics.—

One, when looking at a beautiful mosaic, hardly realizes the vast number of shades of color therein contained. We are told that the modern mosaicists of Venice have as many as 40,000 varying shades to use in the creation of mosaics.

Price of Bread Goes Up.—

Bakers say that they cannot longer sell bread at the old prices. However, the increase is to be made as small as possible under the existing circumstances. Flour in 10,000-barrell lots has advanced during the past six months from $4.00 a barrel to $6.75 a barrel, and on July 10th, the new wheat processing tax of approximately $1.38 a barrel will carry the cost of flour to double the former price. This increase in the price of flour looks good, if the farmer is getting it, but if it is all going to the speculator, it doesn't help at all. Indeed, instead of helping to increase the general purchasing power of the public, it will have the opposite effect.

Auto Thefts.—

During three months last year there were more cars stolen in Chicago than there were new cars licensed. For the entire year there were 34,246 automobile thefts reported in Cook County. And last week, the Illinois legislature talked of repealing the law against automobile thefts because it could not be enforced. Chicago enjoys (?) the distinction of being the worst auto-thieving city in the United States and naturally has the highest automobile theft insurance. For example it costs 75c per $100 to insure a Chrysler in San Francisco, 95c in Washington, $1.70 in Boston, $3.05 in Manhattan, and $9.18 in Chicago. $91.80 to insure a $1,000 car. Most of these cars are later stripped of tires, wheels, lights, batteries, etc., and then are deserted. Only a few of the cars are smuggled out of Cook County and re-sold.

The Origin of "Dixie."—

From an Almanac we pick up the following interesting bit of information: "Money gave the South its pet name of 'Dixie.' The principal bills issued by a bank in New Orleans before the war between the States were in $10 denominations. They were engraved in English on one side and in French on the other. On the French side, the word 'Dix' (meaning ten), was very prominent and the Americans throughout the Mississippi Valley soon corrupted the pronunciation into 'Dixies,' and Louisiana became known as 'the land of the Dixies,' or 'Dixie Land.'" It was Dan Emmett who, in 1859, composed the first "Dixie Land" for a minstrel show then performing in New York City. It was later rewritten by General Albert Pike, who gave it the thrill which makes it immortal and stamps the name "Dixie" upon the entire South.

Graves of Tennessee Heroes to be Moved.—

To furnish power for Muscle Shoals, 300 miles away down in Alabama, there is to be constructed in the shadow of the Tennessee hills, on Cove Creek, a vast reservoir. And before this is done, graves of heroes who have slept there since America became a nation must be moved. The reservoir, when completed, will cover a space now occupied by 92 cemeteries, and engineers tell us that no less than 4,260 graves must be moved, among them those of pioneers who came over with Daniel Boone, and neighbors of Andrew Jackson, Davy Crockett and Sam Houston. The lake will also cover one whole village, and more than 65,000 acres will be submerged. Nothing will be left except a vast expanse of water, and it is a striking fact that this lake will be at the foot of Lone Mountain.

Stabilizing the Dollar.—

The question of the stabilization of the dollar seems to be the most important one in the minds of those who are meeting at the London conference. Indeed, it seems that the very fate of the conference hangs in the balances and may be tilted one way or the other by this question. It is certainly worrying other nations more than it is the American people. Arthur Brisbane dismisses the whole question thus: "This government issues good money. It will buy anything for sale in the United States. If foreign governments and individuals don't like that money, they need not take it. This country 'stabilizes the dollar' by putting the name of the United States on it, thus making it the best money in the world. If financiers here and abroad are interested in stabilization, based on comparisons between the dollar and foreign monies, let them attend to that stabilization themselves."

Measuring Roughness.—

Roughness of metal parts is the cause of wear, and for this reason automobile manufacturers spend thousands of dollars in the course of a year in polishing surfaces that rub on each other. In some cases surfaces are polished so well that irregularities are reduced to less than fifteen one-millionths of an inch, while on other surfaces not so carefully polished may be found hills and dales that measure as much as 150 millionths of an inch. In measuring the roughness or smoothness of metals, cross sections are usually cut, these are copper plated, and then microphotographs of the pieces are made. From these microphotographs it is easy to see the relative roughness of the various pieces of metal. By experimentation, it has been found that under a number of conditions material can be ground smoother than it can be lapped, and it is expected that thousands of dollars may be saved in the future by discarding the once supposed more accurate lapping methods, that have been proved to have little merit.

Is Forty-five Miles an Hour Fast?—

Most any motorist will say "No." But it is. William Ullman, of Washington, D. C., is quoted in the Literary Digest as saying: "Assume a car weighing 3,000 pounds and having an engine horse-power of 75. It did not require a maximum outlay of the engine's power to bring the car to the speed in question. Fifty horse-power could do it fairly easily. But that fifty horse-power will not stop the car within a reasonably safe distance. . . . To bring the car to a stop within a distance of 90 feet requires 150 horse-power. It is obvious that brakes have to be vastly more powerful than the engine of a motor car." We are told also that in this stopping process a pressure of 16,800 pounds must be exerted upon the brake bands, and that this energy, of course, takes the form of heat. Indeed, it forms so much heat that there would be enough to raise two pints of water from the normal temperature of 70 degrees to the boiling point, or 212 degrees, in less than three seconds. 150 horse-power, 16,800 pounds of pressure, and a vast amount of heat to stop your car—forty-five miles an hour is fast.

The Real Issue in Repeal.—

In an article, or rather excerpts from a sermon, by Dr. A. D. Stauffacher, of Claremont Church, Claremont, Calif., recently reprinted in the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty, is found one of the most concise statements of this issue yet coming to our notice. Dr. Stauffacher says: "The real issue in the ratification or non-ratification of the Twenty-first Amendment is this: Shall we repeal the Eighteenth Amendment with nothing to take its place except unknown, uncertain and indiscriminate state regulation, or shall we refuse to ratify any change in the present Eighteenth Amendment until we are given an opportunity to vote upon some constructive and clearly defined substitute? Shall we surrender the idea of a united, uniform method of handling the liquor traffic for forty-eight uncertain and very probably conflicting plans of dealing with this vital subject? Shall we not rather hold fast that which we have until the interests seeking change shall offer us something more definite than undefined state regulation? What we are asked to do is to re-legalize the liquor traffic, remove the hand of united and uniform control, with no knowledge as to what is to be substituted except uncertain and undefined state regulation." Men and women, too, are losing their heads and rushing forward into a morass from which it will be more than difficult to extricate themselves. It is time for sane, honest, Christian thinking. It is high time to ask the question: "What would Jesus do?"

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

We wonder who said: "It's not your position that makes you popular, it's your disposition."

Troubles are like mad bulls—the faster you run from them the harder they chase you.—Milton Lee.

Peace is the heritage of all and not of a few. The promise is: "Peace, peace, to him that is far off and to him that is near, saith the Lord; and I will heal him."—Bishop Brent.

Dr. and Mrs. W. A. Harper are serving as host and hostess at the Congregational headquarters at Chautauqua, N. Y., during the months of July and August. Previous to this Dr. Harper served as Dean of the Leadership Training School at Blue Ridge, N. C., until the 28th of June.

Especial attention is directed to the fact that the Eastern North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention meets in annual session at Wake Chapel Church, Fuquay Springs, N. C., Tuesday and Wednesday, July 11th and 12th. The tentative program is printed in THE SUN this week.

Rev. J. E. McCauley, pastor of the Richmond Church, is in North Carolina, where he is assisting Dr. P. H. Fleming, of Burlington, in a series of revival meetings. Rev. M. F. Allen, who is now connected with the headquarters office of the Volunteers of America, is supplying for Mr. McCauley during his absence.

Rev. W. B. Fuller, Harrisonburg, Va., who has not been without some church work since his graduation from Elon College, writes June 28th: "I am anxious to get full-time work for another year. I know God has a work for me in his kingdom, and I am anxious to find it. I do not have full-time work and am anxious to have all my time engaged. Will be glad to correspond with any church or churches desiring a pastor."

It is learned that Rev. F. C. Lester, well-known in CHRISTIAN SUN circles as the esteemed and beloved pastor of our Waverly Christian Church, has resigned the Waverly pastorate and is in position to consider a call from any field desiring his services. Bro. Lester is one of our most consecrated, competent and capable ministers, and the pastorate will be fortunate that secures his services.

Rev. G. D. Hunt writes: "Tomorrow, Sunday, July 2nd, I am called to Pleasant Grove Church to bury Bro. Isom D. Harris. You remember him of many years, and his good wife, who preceded him in death a few years since. Bro. Harris was one of my best friends and one of the first friends I had in Chambers County. I received him into the church and baptized him about 42 years ago. God rest his soul in peace." Bro. Harris was a good man, and a pillar in the church and community.

Rev. and Mrs. R. T. Grissom, Fancy Gap, Va., are very happy and busy these days in Bible School and revival work in Carroll County, Va.

Under date of June 27th, they write: "We have been busy in Bible School and revival meetings the past two weeks. We closed our revival at Rocky Ford last Friday night. God wonderfully blessed us in the meeting there. Many re-dedicated their lives to God. Twenty made confession of their sins and faith in Christ and six came for church membership. Sixty-six were enrolled in the Bible School. The entire two weeks were profitable to all. Many more would have attended but for whooping cough prevailing in our community. We began our revival at Elk Spur on Sunday night and our Bible School began Monday morning."

BLUE RIDGE.

The conference which in the past has been held under the auspices of the Missionary Education Movement was this year strictly a Congregational-Christian conference. It was called the Blue Ridge Leadership Training Conference. The registration of regular delegates was 107, a larger number than at the Interdenominational Conference of last year. In addition there were several visitors registered and also about twenty-five children were registered in the Daily Vacation Bible School at Black Mountain, which was conducted by Miss Priscilla Chase and members of her class, as a demonstration project.

The chairman of the Conference Executive Committee was Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, and Dr. W. A. Harper was Dean of the conference and also taught one of the important courses. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill was registrar and teacher of the Young People's Materials and Methods course.

Other teachers were Dr. Ernest M. Halliday, of New York; Miss Martha Race, of Jacksonville, President Wm. J. Campbell, of Nashville; Dr. Malcolm Dana, of New Haven, Conn.; and Dr. Howell D. Davies, of Chicago. Dr. Bloom conducted the daily chapel service and Dr. E. C. Gillette conducted the daily vespers. The communion service on the final evening was conducted by Rev. Alfred W. Hurst.

One of the important services was the commissioning service for the student summer workers, who were going out for the summer work in the churches of the Southeast. About twenty-five were commissioned for full time or part time service during the summer. Three young ministers received their commissions from the Congregational Extension Boards at the hands of Dr. Ernest M. Halliday, as they were going into full time pastoral duties.

It was voted to hold a similar conference next year and Dr. Bloom was elected conference chairman, with Dr. Edwin C. Gillette as executive vice-chairman. Prof. W. A. Harper was re-elected dean of the faculty; Miss Coghill being also re-elected registrar, and Miss Annie R. Campbell, recording secretary.

E. C. G.

LANETT, ALABAMA.

I desire to say a few words to each of our Sunday Schools in Georgia and Alabama, concerning our Leadership Training School at Wadley, Ala., which will convene July 24th, and close July 30th. Now can't every school send at least one of their young people? Can't those nearby send more? Board is only $4.00, and it may be paid in food. The registration fee is only $1.00.

Now that is the substantial expense of the meeting. What can we do, where can we go and get such large dividends on our investment?

I do hope we may have a large attendance and a good school. Begin now to plan for it, and send one or more of your energetic young people. That is the sincere desire of your friend,

G. D. HUNT.

OPENING SERVICES AT WINSTON-SALEM.

The formal opening of the parish house and chapel of the United Congregational-Christian Church of Winston-Salem, N. C., will be held on Sunday, July 9th. The principal speakers will be Dr. Leon Edgar Smith, president of Elon College, and Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary. Rev. William T. Scott, who is the pastor of the church at Winston-Salem, deserves great credit for the work which has culminated in the services to be held on Sunday. Friends are cordially invited to attend.

OUR STARTLING RESPONSIBILITY.

Jesus is quoted as saying that "No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the Kingdom of God."

The campaign to secure 5,000 memberships in the Dollar-a-Month Club in behalf of Elon College has been launched. No man inspired by Kingdom ideals may now look back. We must go forward.

An Integral Part of a Vast Whole.

We now belong to a definite group—have become a part of its organic life—numbering more than a million souls. Together we possess potential power well-nigh irresistible. To make that potential power actual constitutes a glorious challenge.

In order to realize more vividly what overwhelming possibilities are suggested in such a great company of God-inspired people let us place them in columns of eight, with the units six feet apart, marching at the rate of three miles an hour. It would require forty-nine hours and thirty-six minutes to pass a given point.

If we, who are interested in Elon College, press this campaign to a successful issue, and do it now when difficulties seem multiplied as never before, we stand to inspire this great fellowship of more than a million to undertake the Herculean tasks which they are so splendidly qualified to give themselves to, and successfully carry out.

MASSANNETTA SPRINGS.

The Massanetta Springs Conferences formally opened this week with the Camp for Intermediate Boys and Girls. There is an enrollment of 434. It is one of the largest Intermediate Camps held in the South, and probably in the whole country. Massanetta Springs has the distinction of holding the first Intermediate Camp in the South. They have now multiplied by the score until there are probably five or six thousand enrolled in these camps.

The Training School for Auxiliary Workers, under the direction of the Synodical President, Mrs. Alexander Maitland, of Richmond, opens at Massanetta Springs on July 25th.

While Massanetta Springs are owned and operated under the auspices of the Presbyterian Church, the gatherings there, especially the Bible conferences during the latter part of the summer are attended by representatives of the various evangelical denominations. The opportunity presented by our Presbyterian brethren should be, and is, appreciated by both ministers and laymen of our own denomination.

An occasion that should be kept in mind is the Music Festival under the leadership of Dr. John Finley Williamson, on August 4th, when 10,000 people are expected to be present.

Mr. Wm. E. Hudson is the genial and efficient conference manager, and those of our church who wish to attend at any time during the present summer, should communicate with him, addressing him at Massanetta Station, Harrisonburg, Va.

THE BLUE RIDGE CONFERENCE.

Twenty-eight college and theological students who will be employed the next eight weeks in church work were among the 125 who completed their course June 28th at the first Blue Ridge summer leadership training conference of the Congregational-Christian Churches. High school students and others in attendance at the conference returned to their home churches to be volunteer workers.

The conference which opened Tuesday, June 20th, was under the joint direction of the Southeast Convention of the united churches and of the Southern Theological Seminary Foundation of Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn.

Dr. Ernest M. Halliday, of New York, general secretary of the national Congregational-Christian Extension Boards, under whose departments of missions the students will be employed, attended the conference and taught the New Testament class.

The students were commissioned for their work at a sunset service on the broad porch of the Robert E. Lee Hall, by Rev. W. Knighton Bloom, of Washington, D. C., chairman of the conference and secretary of the eastern department of missions of the extension boards.

The students will be assigned for periods of varying length to different churches to organize summer recreational and club activities among boys and girls and young people and to assist in Sunday School and church services. They have been assigned to remote mountain districts, to mining towns, to mill towns, to industrial regions and to seacoast cities to work in churches which ordinarily do not have special direction for young people's activities.—Special to Greensboro Daily News.

A NEW RECORD.

A new record, but hardly an enviable one, is established in collections on SUN subscriptions. We have only received payment on account from twenty members of THE SUN's family—and we should have heard from two hundred. We certainly thank the twenty, but we can not but wonder if some of the remaining 180 might not have done as well if they had only thought. If you mailed in your subscription after the 25th, it may not have reached us before the first of July. If your subscription was received after the first, it will be shown on next month's list, and the change on your label will appear the second week in August.

JOHN WALTER WEST.

Funeral services for John Walter West, 68, prominent Waverly citizen and business man, who died at his home Sunday morning at 6:00 o'clock, were held Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock.

The services were conducted in the Waverly Christian Church, of which Mr. West was a deacon and treasurer for more than forty years. Rev. F. C. Lester, pastor, officiated, assisted by Rev. J. L. Foster, a former pastor, and Rev. A. B. Harrell, pastor of the Baptist Church.

Mr. West was born near Waverly, in Sussex County, August 16, 1864, and was the son of Henry Thomas West and Mrs. Susan T. West. He was educated in the Suffolk Collegiate Institute, at the time one of the leading preparatory schools of the East, and at the University of North Carolina.

He served as assistant cashier and director of the Bank of Waverly since it was organized in 1900. He was elected vice-president of that institution in 1928, and served in this capacity until several weeks ago. He was connected with the P. Fleetwood Company for twenty-five years, having begun his work in that company when he moved to Waverly in 1884. After leaving P. Fleetwood Company he operated the Waverly Peanut Company for twelve years. At the time of his death, and for many years before, he was general manager and principal owner of the Waverly Furniture Company, Inc.

In addition to being a deacon and treasurer of the Christian Church, he was also a teacher in the Sunday School for years. Mr. West served for many years as president of the National Peanut Shellers and Cleaners Association. He was several times a member and president of the Waverly town council.

Mr. West had been in failing health for a year and was taken ill about three months ago. Interment was made in the local cemetery.

He is survived by his wife, Annie May Capell West, one son, John W., Jr., of New York; three brothers, R. T., of Waverly; former Lieutenant-Governor Junius E., of Suffolk; and Caleb D. West, of Newport News; two grandchildren and several nieces and nephews. He was also the brother of the late Judge Jesse Felix West, of the Supreme Court of Appeals, who died in 1929—Waverly Dispatch.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

ON THE GO.

"Somewhere, right at this moment, in hobo jungles down by the tracks, hitch-hiking along one hundred highways, scuttling through the railway yards, atop freight cars or dead-heading it on the blind baggage, are between 200,000 and 300,000 American boys. For one reason or another, they have taken to the road. Sooner or later some of them are likely to turn up in your town." So writes Stanley High. So confirms the daily press. Also observation. A large per cent of American boys—and girls—are on the move, "for one reason or another."

This writer lives by the railway tracks in which a dozen freight trains pass daily. After counting and estimating on not a few days, there seems to be on an average of about fifty "atop these freight cars." They are going, it seems to matter very little. One freight going East this hour will carry its fifty; another going West shortly after will carry its fifty. There seems to be no East, no West, no North, no South, held in preference by these travelers, without money and without price. They are on the go. On the highway, the story is the same. Almost at every corner or bend in the road appears the hitch-hiker, the thumbing tourist.

Whatever else this may mean, one rather stubborn fact abides at the center. Hundreds of thousands of our youths, not finding conditions and things to their liking, in their own homes and surroundings, have left and are seeking new surroundings. Here is the real problem of our day: Either there is a lack of courage to face and conquer conditions as they are, or conditions as they are in the home and community are lacking in power to stimulate, to encourage and challenge youth to stick it out and conquer. The need of the hour is courage, faith in oneself to face hardships, difficulties, dangers, and conquer them. Somewhere about the home, in the community, in the village, or in the city, there has been a loss of that faith that begets and stimulates courage to conquer. The sad loss of our time is not loss of confidence in banks, business enterprise, and ventures, but a loss of faith in self, in society and in God. Somewhere along the way to stop this tide of human youth flowing hither and yon, somebody must cry aloud from the housetops, until we have heard and obeyed that age-old revelation (true now and ever will be): "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." (I. John 5:4.)

This army of between 200,000 and 300,000 American boys, hitch-hiking along one hundred highways or atop freight cars, will halt in their march and fight the battle that wins today or tomorrow, or some other tomorrow, only when and as there shall be begotten in them, or they shall find somewhere, that faith that enables them to face the day with courage, and fight it out where they are, in that victory that overcometh, even our faith." J. O. A.

"THE OLD RUGGED CROSS."

There it stands. There is no getting around it. It has burned its way, or sung its way, into the heart of mankind, and he will not let it go. Take the song itself. In all the popular radio programs on the air during the past five years, this song was not only included, but held first place. Somehow the world will not let "The Cross" go, or rather "The Cross" will not let the world go. There it stands, once a symbol of a curse, a disgrace, a shame, humiliation. Today, it stands, the symbol of the source of unflinching strength, power, conquest.

Christ made the Cross the central figure and fact of his own life; he forced the men of his day to nail him to it, to crucify him on it. And the world since bears witness to the fact that sin can carry one to the Cross, but can go no further. "Thus far shalt thou go and no further," says the message of "The Cross," and the world knows that it is a true message. Our hope is just there.

"In the Cross of Christ we glory," because we know that the Cross, the old rugged Cross, has never failed even against the most terrific onslaught of sin, of shame, and humiliation. Disappointments, trials, afflictions, despair may carry and nail us to the Cross, but they can carry us no further, for the Cross conquers and beyond it is the resurrection, the resurgence, of a new hope, a new faith, a new courage that cannot be conquered.

There is a thrilling book entitled "Fifteen Decisive Battles." Well, that book has one fatal failure—it left out the mightiest battle, the most decisive battle, of all time—the battle of Gethsemane when the Cross stooped and conquered all the hosts of sin. J. O. A.

ATTESTED FACTS.

Dr. William T. Ellis, world traveler, journalist, lecturer, gatherer of news from the four corners, calls attention, in a recent extensive syndicated publication, to what he regards as one of the most stupendous facts of our day. He says "This fact has not yet penetrated into the public consciousness, viz., That recent excavations in the Jordan valley have proved completely the story of the fall of Jericho before the army of Joshua."

Dr. Ellis says that "there are still current books which contend that Joshua was a legendary figure, a mere type-man, devised by early Jewish writers, and that the conquest of Jericho is only a fairy tale meant for pious use.

Dr. Ellis does not stop there, but adds that "in the name of 'scholarship,' over-educated ignoramus have been busily explaining away the historical character of the early books of the Bible. Had they even a modicum of the newspaper man's appreciation of facts, they would understand that the archaeologists's spade has sensationally and completely vindicated the accuracy of the Old Testament records."

"Recently Dr. John Garstang, who had already established his fame as the world's foremost authority upon the Hittites, has been excavating the site of old Jericho. The record of his finds reads like a fairy tale. He discovered the old city, destroyed as the Bible said, with its walls tumbled down. And, by means of the dated scarabs and pottery which he uncovered, he has proved that the city fell just at the time the Bible said it fell. He has demonstrated that Joshua was as real as Alexander the Great."

And yet, after these facts are substantiated by data that cannot be reasonably denied, there will still be "over-educated ignoramus" declaring that Joshua, like Jonah and Isaiah and Daniel, were all myths, mere type-men.

Right today, so a recent writer, just returned from Russia, declares that in the Soviet schools, in the high places and the low, of teaching and of learning, Russian atheists are declaring that Jesus was a myth and the story of him a legend. All this in spite of the fact that the best attested character that ever came to earth in the past is that of Jesus, and the central fact, which authentic history has established beyond all reasonable doubt, was that Jesus died on the cross and the third day arose again. These are attested facts of history, and yet because about these facts there are great moral and spiritual truths, the immoral and the unspiritual are found to do battle against them. J. O. A.

"WHAT IS A COLLEGE FOR, ANYHOW?"

The Christian Herald for July asks that very pertinent question. Dr. Robert Maynard Hutchins, the youthful president of the University of Chicago, is the son of Dr. Hutchins, the venerated and beloved president of Berea College, Kentucky, that institution founded and sponsored by the church. The New York Times quotes the young president of the University of Chicago:

"Higher learning in America now calls for a large amount of nursing. Universities have developed the idea in parents or parents have forced it upon the universities, that the institution is in some way responsible for the moral, social, physical and intellectual welfare of the student. This is very nice for the parents; it is bad for the universities, for it deflects them from their main task, which is the advancement of knowledge. Parents whose children have neither character nor interest should keep them at home or send them to another kind of institution. Whatever may be the responsibilities of a college, a university is not a custodial establishment, or a church, or a body-building institute. If it were free to stop behaving as though it were, it would be a better university."

The elder Hutchins at Berea thinks quite differently. He believes that the college is a responsible institution, responsible for the kind of character that the college produces, for the moral atmosphere in which the student lives while at college, for the social conditions that obtain in college life and for the physical and intellectual welfare and direction of the student.

Knowledge is not sufficient. Greece, as a nation, was never so corrupt and so near her own undoing as when here universities were at the height of achievement in culture and learning. Rome was never so immoral and unsafe as when her scholarship was at its highest. No, knowledge is not enough. An inspired writer taught us that "knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth. And if any man think that he knoweth anything, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know. But if any man love God, the same is known of him." (I. Cor. 8:1-3.) J. O. A.

MEETING GOD IN THE MORNING.

[Excerpt from an address delivered at the "Morning Watch" over radio station WBT by the Rev. Edgar H. Nease.]

Why is it most people who pray or who pretend to pray do so at night and not in the morning? I said "most people" because all those whom I know, with but very few exceptions, say their prayers at night, and seemingly have no sense of the need for God in the morning. It seems to me that the little prayer which many of us were taught as children and which many still teach their children gives expression to the underlying reason for praying at night and forgetting it in the early morning. Listen to that prayer again:

Now I lay me down to sleep;
I pray thee, Lord, my soul to keep.
If I should die before I wake,
I pray thee, Lord, my soul to take.

The day is done. All of us have come short of the glory of God, and too few of us seek forgiveness from our sins. But the very fact that those who do pray, pray at night instead of in the morning, indicates that there is a sense of need which is not realized in the morning. Why is this so? Should it continue to be so with you and me?

At night the darkness enshrouds us and we, whether we are willing to admit it or not, are more or less afraid. The darkness makes us feel "If I should die before I wake"; and we turn to God and pray: "I pray thee, Lord, my soul to take." Not one who prays at night should quit. We should all pray then not for fear, but that our sins and failures of the day be forgiven. If you and I would like through the day to be conscious of the presence and sustaining power of our heavenly Father, we should be able to come to the evening prayer in a different and more Christ-like spirit than we usually show. Certainly we should ask forgiveness, but we should have more reason and time for thanksgiving and for letting God speak to us.

Now the only way to make this possible is to meet God early in the morning and live with him through the day. You have no time? You have time for anything that you consider worth while. If you come to feel your need for praying in the morning, you can find and take the time; and you will do so gladly.

If you meet Him in the morning, you can face and meet the day so that at nightfall you shall have—no matter what you have had to face of temptation or sorrow—the consciousness of peace, joy, satisfaction that abides forever, for you have lived in the presence and power of your heavenly Father.

I met God in the morning,
When my day was at its best,
And his presence came like sunrise,
Like a glory in my breast.

All day long the presence lingered,
All day long he stayed with me.
And we sailed in perfect calmness
O'er a very troubled sea.

Other ships were blown and battered,
Other ships were sore distressed,
But the winds that seemed to drive them
Brought to us a peace and rest.

Then I thought of other mornings,
With a keen remorse of mind,
When I too had loosed the mooring,
With the presence left behind.

So I think I know the secret,
Learned from many a troubled way;
You must seek God in the morning
If you want him through the day.

"THE WETS NOW RESPONSIBLE."

By REV. ROY C. HELFENSTEIN,
Minister of People's Church.

Many of the temperance people of the nation are sadly discouraged because of the results of the repeal elections being held. But they should not be downhearted.

Is truth to be forever on the scaffold,
Wrong forever on the throne?
No, that scaffold sways the future,
And behind the dim unknown
Standeth God within the shadow,
Keeping watch above "His own."

The cause of temperance, though suffering temporary defeat today, must ultimately win, for it is God's will that humanity shall not be forever cursed by the demon alcohol. The Bible declares and all the history of mankind verifies the statement, that, "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." Again the Bible declares, "Woe unto him who putteth the bottle to his neighbor's lips"—wee to the person who is responsible for getting another to drink intoxicating liquors.

Intoxicating liquor has been the ruin of countless thousands of the brainiest and most promising men of the past. No man is safe in fooling with the stuff. And those who are responsible for bringing back the legalized liquor business will have much to answer for at the judgment bar of God, as well as to their fellowmen—for every such person will be in fact partly responsible for making drunkards.

The temporary victory of the wets does not indicate the strength of the wet sentiment of the state or nation, but rather it indicates the weakness of the dry sentiment in failing to give itself expression, thousands of ardent dries wrongly deciding not to vote on the question since the wets seem so determined to bring back the legalized liquor business. And these dries have simply concluded that the best way to prove that the wets are wrong is to let them have their way, and soon the wet regime will bring about its own destruction.

Within five years there will be an entirely different sentiment in our nation regarding the liquor business. A few thousand cases chronic indigestion and ulcerated stomachs caused from beer drinking, such as are so common in Germany among the beer drinkers, a few hundred tragedies from drunken auto drivers made drunk by beer, and continual fighting among the wets for preference, will disgust the more thoughtful wets themselves until they will join the temperance forces in the greatest crusade against the liquor business America has ever witnessed. And let no one be so foolish as to believe that 3.2 beer will not intoxicate. Drink with any alcoholic content will intoxicate, if enough is drunk. And if five drinks makes a person drunk, one drink makes him one-fifth drunk. No honest person who remembers the pre-prohibition days will contend that beer will not intoxicate. No honest person who has seen the beer drinkers in Europe will contend that beer does not intoxicate. Time will prove the falsity of such contentions. And time will show the lies propagated by the wets against prohibition. Moreover time will bring the American people to the place where they will denounce the brewers and their whole gang as enemies of our American idealism, and as such that their nefarious business cannot be longer tolerated. The brewers and distillers and the stockholders in the liquor making business are responsible for the wet propaganda that has created the wet sentiment throughout the nation.

When America has her next house-cleaning on the liquor business those really responsible will be made known.

Within five years time the entire attitude of the people will swing back to a stronger prohibition sentiment than we have ever known. The liquor "dictators" will themselves be disgusted with the whole business. It will be interesting to watch them struggle with their own problem.

The dries should not be downhearted. They have tried to save the country from what the wets have determined to bring back—the social curse of the legalized liquor business. Prohibition was the worry of the dries. The present situation is the worry of the wets. It is their party now. Let's see what kind of a time they have of it, fighting among themselves.

Every loyal dry can thank God that he is not responsible for what happens from the legalized sale of liquor.

If the reports are true as it is declared present indications already verify that the bootleggers and those who have ignored the law by engaging in some form of the illicit sale of liquor are to be given preference for permits as distributors and dispensers, dealers, agents, etc., it will not be difficult to predict what a mess the liquor commissioners will be in, for men who ignored the nation's laws in time of prohibition, will laugh at any laws the wets may make for their own protection. Just watch and see.

But all honor to the people in business who say they will not take out a beer license under any consideration, as they would not stoop to be dispensers of liquor. And the temperance people should give their patronage whenever possible to those who refuse to sell the stuff.

In the old days, no saloon keeper or bar-tender was privileged to mingle in decent society, and the leading fraternities barred such from membership. The dispensers of liquor are looked down upon by the better class of people even in the countries of Europe where the liquor business has a strangle hold upon society. And no man regardless of his name or his wealth can make the liquor business respectable in any state of the nation.

The saddest part of the whole matter is the fact that hundreds of young men will ruin their entire future lives by engaging in some line of the liquor business because of the false promises of easy money. The sentiment of the people is bound to change, and for a young man to be branded as having once been engaged in the liquor business, will be a fearful handicap to any young man five years hence.

One of Dover's most influential citizens has expressed the sentiment of hundreds of thousands of Americans when he said: "I would rather see my son or my brothers in their graves, than to see them engaged in selling beer."

It is bad enough to drink the stuff, but it is a ten thousand times' greater offense against God and man to sell it, or in any way engage in the damnable business.

Many who lost their money in the financial crash, and many who have never known the experience of having much money will be tempted by the luring promises of "getting rich quick" through the liquor business. But thousands will have the greatest disappointment and deepest regret of their lives because of yielding to such a temptation.

Money wilfully secured in any way from the liquor business will some time be a blighting curse to the possessor or his family. Liquor money has always had the curse of God upon it.

The prohibition laws may be repealed, but never can the effect of alcohol upon the human body, upon the home, and upon society be repealed; never can the intoxicating and demoralizing consequences of liquor drinking be repealed. Never can the curse of alcoholic liquor be repealed. Happy will be those who refuse to have anything to do with the stuff, whether it be labeled by the name of beer, wine or whiskey.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

A vacant house. What a waste and what a tragedy! Several thousand dollars had been spent in building the house. It was on a valuable lot. Prominent people had lived in it. Its walls had echoed with mirth and weeping, joy and sorrow. But the children went away and established homes of their own. The parents have died. The house was vacant. The roof was rapidly decaying. The doors sagged. The windows were dirty. The walls were dingy. The house needed painting. People passed by and looked on it with disgust. Others said: "It should be torn down."

But someone had a vision of something better than destruction. A contractor was consulted and plans were made for improving this piece of property. Carpenters and painters and other workmen were directed to carry out the plans of rehabilitation. What a change has been wrought! The unsightly has been made beautiful. The dilapidated has given place to form and comeliness. Today it is a beautiful home. Now it will be an inviting place for passersby, and it will become a sweet home for a happy family. This change has been wrought by human minds and human hands at work.

There is but a step between decadence and progress. A little work and a little paint wisely directed and used will make a great change in a building. And a little soap and water wisely used on the human body will make it possible for skillful hands to work wonders and a few yards of goods and a little paint and powder artistically applied. The sale of paint for the home has improved the home life of humanity. And the sale of cosmetics has certainly made it possible for the human face to be more attractive. It would be cruel to discourage the use of anything which will improve the appearance of mankind (and womankind). As long as "man looketh on the outward appearance" he will approve the charming and the beautiful. God is interested in beauty. Sin has made wrecks of the handiwork of God. Sin has marred the human face. God would make man as beautiful as the blooming flowers. He would make the human face radiant with light and glory.

The church is undertaking to do for the world what carpenters and painters have done for many homes. By the foolishness of preaching the Gospel it is trying to salvage the wrecked and lost souls of mankind. Jesus came to seek and to save that which was lost. He offers the lost a home. He gives them a new life. He removes the scars from the human face and points it with the radiance of his glory. He fills the empty life with vision and power. He challenges the human will to undertake great things for the Kingdom. He makes life worth living. He calls man to worthwhile endeavor. He improves the homes in which people love and live.

An empty life cannot be beautiful. Life should be filled with the compelling purpose of spiritual motives. There is something disappointing about a life unless God is in it. A Godless or Christless life is like a vacant, unkempt home. Jesus stands at the door, knocking for admittance, waiting to come in and make life beautiful, useful and happy. Think of the waste of unbelief. Think of the dissipation of living without salvation. God has provided every resource for improving human life, and these resources are within our reach.

Life should be good and true. Real goodness is not negative but positive in its expression. It must be busy. Every day brings new tasks for one who seeks truth and goodness. These tasks are spiritual and divine. "I must work the works of him that sent me," was the attitude of Jesus. How glorious is that work which cleanses and renews one's inner life. How sweet to have fellowship with Jesus, after you have worked for him. Spiritual work will make life beautiful. "I am come that they might have life."

DOES IT PAY TO GO TO COLLEGE?

This is a question that is coming to the forefront in the minds of parents and children. Wherever you go with the appeal of the College, those who are to go and those who are to pay the cost of going are constantly confronting you with the question: "Will it pay?" As a rule, they mean, will it pay in dollars and cents.

A few days ago, I was talking with a young man who is a high school graduate—has a good personality and more than an even chance to win in life. He has a fairly good job, is making a good living and some to spare. He has never been to college. In response to my appeal, he said: "I am making so much now—if I should resign my position and go to your school and graduate four years from now, could you guarantee that I could get as good a position as I now have? Or, could you guarantee that I would make as much money as I am now making?" Certainly, I could make no such guarantee, but I could assure him that he would be much better prepared for life after four years of college experience than he now is. There is a great deal more to life than making money. There is a certain degree of satisfaction in having taken advantage of cultural opportunities, designed to improve the better side of one's nature and fit him for higher and better things. From every standpoint, I would say that it does pay to go to college. I know that there are a number of successful men and women who have never gone to college. I also know that there are a number of men and women who have gone to college who are utter failures, but there are certain advantages, certain experiences and certain opportunities that come only to college-bred men and women—experiences that are really worth-while. From a financial standpoint, I think as a rule, the college-bred individual is capable of accumulating more money than those who are not, and this is putting the advantage of a college education on a low basis.

About a year ago, a man who is a farmer in the State of North Carolina, came into my office and said: "Well, I want to enter my boy in school. I have another boy who graduated from this college and is now teaching. Last year he saved, above his expenses, $1,000 in cash, and that's more than I expect ever to clear on my farm again. I expect to send this boy through college if I have to mortgage everything I have, because I think it pays." He entered his boy in school and paid his bills.

A quarter of a century ago, it was unusual for a young man or young woman from a rural section to go to college. Today, it is the usual thing for young men and young women from country districts to go to college. Business men today deal largely with men and women who are without college training. The young man and young woman today, who does not go to college will find himself or herself, twenty-five years from today, dealing largely with men and women with college experience. Rather than an exception, it is a rule of young people today to take advantage of higher education, more so than at any day previous to our own. Is it necessary and profitable for young people to take the time and go to the expense of preparing themselves as best they can for the positions that they are to fill? It is not so expensive to go to college today. You can go to the average small college as cheaply as you could secure room and board in a good boarding house in the average city three or four years ago. Our expenses at Elon College are not extravagant. They are as follows:

Tuition	$100.00
Matriculation	50.00
Room Rent	$50.00 to 75.00
Student Budget	10.00
Board (College Dining Room), per mo.	10.00
Board (Club Dining Room), per mo...	14.00

This applies to all dormitories on the campus with the exception of East Dormitory. East Dormitory is the only original building on the campus. It has been closed for two years. We are now completely overhauling it. It is for the accommodation of our young man students. It will be completely modernized and will be a first-class rooming house with all modern facilities. It will be a little more expensive than in the other dormitories, but it will be worth a great deal more.

Room rent in East Dormitory will be $40.00 per semester, which is $15.00 higher than North Dormitory. Those desiring accommodations in this dormitory should send in their application and request at the earliest possible date. We can only accommodate so many in our new quarters. If you know of young people who would be interested in coming to Elon College, won't you please send us their names and communicate with them yourselves? I am sure you will be willing to cooperate in securing your friends as students for Elon College.

NEVER ALONE.

It was sin that led Jesus the Christ into the Garden of Gethsemane, and it was the burden of the sins of the world that caused him the terrible anguish. He was alone, the disciples upon whom he looked as his closest companions, were asleep. The awful night well nigh broke his heart before he had completed the work which he came to earth to accomplish. But God sent an angel to minister unto him that he might be sustained and made stronger for the final ordeal.

So, because Jesus our Saviour went through the Garden bearing his load of sorrow and care, willing to bear it in perfect submission to the will of God regardless of the cost to himself, we never have to go alone, for he who was tempted in all points like as we are, is touched with our grief and he will hold our right hand, saying unto us: "Fear not. I will help thee; fear thou not, for I am with thee; be not dismayed, for I am thy God; I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." O, blessed promises!

It is sin that causes the waters of trouble to roll; it is sin that causes the fires of affliction to burn so fiercely; then is the time when we can only pray the prayer of Gethsemane, for words will not come. But we are not alone with our sorrow and grief, for he who was the companion of the three Hebrew children in the fiery furnace is also our companion, and though the darkness hides him, he is ever in the shadow keeping watch above his own, and his voice speaks to us, and his presence clings to us.

Out of the darkness the words come: "Fear not, for I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by my name; thou art mine. When thou passeth through the waters, I will be with thee, and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee; when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle under thee." Whatsoever the trial may be; and howsoever the body may weaken under the strain, yet his grace is sufficient (more than enough) for his strength is made perfect in weakness.

As a child clings to the one who is holding it when it feels that it is falling, so in our weakness we too cling to the One on whom we depend, and his angels ever bear us up—up—until we are indeed dwelling in the secret place, abiding under the shadow of the Almighty, covered with his feathers, trusting under his wings. Yes, standing upon the promises of God.

Some one has said that God has never promised his children immunity from sorrow, but he has promised to help them bear it. He has not promised a calm voyage, but he has promised a safe arrival.

"A peace there is in sacrifice secluded:
A life subdued, from will and passion free.
'Tis not the peace that over Eden brooded,
But that which triumphed in Gethsemane.
"And he who is himself the gift and giver—
The future glory and the present smile;
With the bright promise of the glad 'forever,'
Will light the shadows of the 'little while'."

A TYPICAL PRISON FARM.

By CHARLES H. GOOTEE, Evangelist.

[The following opens up a vast vista of work being done and yet to be done in our Southern prisons. There is great need in our churches for lives consecrated in prayer to carry these poor, needy ones constantly to the Throne of Grace and to pray our Lord to thrust forth laborers into the great harvest field—HOWARD A. KELLY, M. D., John Hopkins Hospital.]

The farm contains 8,000 acres of land, almost all under cultivation, growing oats, berries, potatoes, grain, sugar cane; they have a large refinery and make their own sugar. There are ten separate prisons on these acres, housing about 200 prisoners on the average—one woman's prison, with about 100 women. The prisoners are white, black, Mexican, Hindoos, Indians, and other nationalities, under gun guard and bloodhounds. The whites and blacks are separate. They say one prison has 200 white convicts, another has 200 black or colored convicts; they are never mixed. Each separate prison has its captain and guards. Some of the guards with guns are prisoners—trusties—and are given the position with the promise of promotion, and each is paid $2 per month, with the penalty attached that if they allow a prisoner to escape, their gun will be taken from them as well as their position of trust, and they will be put back in the ranks of confined prisoners. The chaplain is a fine Christian minister, who really knows what it is to enjoy salvation. He told me that very few prisoners escape. The chaplain insisted I should speak in each camp and yesterday I spoke a gospel message in seven of the prison chapels, with an average of 200 men at each service and about 100 women. The souls of most of them were hungry and responsive to the messages of the personal Saviour, the man Christ Jesus. There were, I think, some 700 or 800 who stood for prayer. Of course, there is no way to find out what is accomplished in these services, except in "follow up" meetings, which was your wise suggestion.

The prisoners are classified: Young men; second timers; desperadoes, etc. It is really one of the greatest institutions I have yet visited. The farm is located almost in a forest on the banks of the Mississippi River. All the officers are genial, affable and kind, and I ate a good old Louisiana chicken dinner, followed by ice cream and French coffee, in one of the officer's dwellings, on Sunday. I have never before been in such a congregation of prisons.

The prisoners were asked by the chaplain: "What shall we bring you: a musical entertainment, a movie, popular addresses?" And they replied: "Give us the blessed old Gospel," and the Lord helped me by his spirit to talk to them from I. Tim. 1:15—"Christ came into the world to save sinners; II. Cor.—"If any man be in Christ, he is a new man;" John 3:7—"Ye must be born again;" Matt. 1:21—"Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall free his people from their sins;" and Gen. 7:1—"And the Lord said unto Noah, Come thou and thy house into the ark." In the woman's prison from Acts 16:14—the conversion of the saleslady at Paul's open air meeting near the riverside, "And a certain woman named Lydia, a seller of the purple, of the city of Thyatira . . . whose heart the Lord opened." At the close of the message, a long bench was placed out in the chapel, and all who desired Christ were invited to kneel. At least fifty or more knelt—some weeping—some white—some colored. Among them, a beautiful auburn-haired young woman—a diamond thief—and another woman in for life for holding a light while some one slew her husband. I wish you could have attended that meeting. The chaplain, a very careful speaker, arose and said he felt the presence of the Holy Ghost and exhorted those present to a careful Christian conduct among other prisoners.

This partly describes what the Lord allowed us to do for him from 6 A. M. to 6 P. M. We left in the chaplain's car to drive back sixty-four miles to Baton Rouge, amid forest roads, hills and swamps which the chaplain told me were infested with highway robbers, and got back to the hotel about 6 P. M.

Twenty-two miles from Baton Rouge is a leper camp with 500 population, which I want to visit next time. A visitor is not allowed to touch door knobs (which are opened for him), nor to shake hands with any one, or touch a piece of furniture; a preventive against the disease, which Christ healed.

I go to Montgomery, after meetings in the prison here, to open several services day and night for 1,500 prisoners in the Alabama penitentiary. Will thank you for your prayers. The Lord gives me renewed strength, but I have been awful tired lately—so much crime, crime, crime!

PRAYER.

Blest harbor of souls, the Church of our Lord! Her portals beckon, her shelter is secure. Some day, O righteous Author and Preserver, the Church shall possess the earth; if we cared enough, that day might be now. Great God, our Father, make people know that the Church's sustenance, its expansion, its triumph, is in human hands and that if truly we desire to build the Church, thou wilt build our bodies into fitting and able instruments for the holy service. In Jesus' name.—Amen. S.

THE CHILD—MOVIES—MISSIONS.

We may know what our children are taught at home and in Sunday School, and even what they learn in day school, but what are they absorbing in the movies, in the literature they read, in the contacts they make on the street, in other homes, and during the summer? Are they learning respect for parents, regard for the rights of others, reverence for God, the importance of self-control and the nobility of truth and life and purity, unselfish interest in other boys and girls, or are they coming to covet free license, self-indulgence and money, without regard for law, justice or true love?

Children can be taught and inspired to admire high ideals and loving service, or they can be left to drift on the rocks—to their own destruction and that of others. A recent study has been made by the Motion Picture Research Council as to the influence of popular movies on children. These studies are being published by the Macmillan Company with a summary by Henry James Forman.

Many do not seem to realize the tremendous importance of early training or the influence of the imagination on health of body, mind, morals and religion. It is estimated that in the average weekly attendance of 77,000,000 at motion picture theaters in the United States, at least 13,000,000 are under the age of twenty-one and 12,000,000 are under the age of fourteen. Dr. Edgar Dale of Ohio State University says that children of all ages attend the movies for two hours on an average of once a week, about twice the time they spend in church or Sunday School, if they go at all. Many attend movies two or three times a week, or more, if they can beg, borrow or steal the money. This is a menace to health as well as to morals and interferes with other more beneficial recreations and with reading. What would have been the result if modern movies had been a dominant influence in the lives of Livingstone, Moffatt, Judson, Duff, Hudson, Talyor, Grenfell or Isabella Thoburn?

British parents of education and character apparently give more careful oversight to their children's recreation than most American parents. The British Weekly publishes a list of children's answers to the question: "What are the loveliest things you know, persons not included?" The girls mention such things as the following: Cool wind on a hot day, the crunch of dry leaves underfoot, looking down from a hill, the smell of rain, an organ playing, the moon in the clouds. Boys' lists include: The feel of running, a swallow flying, a mounted policeman's horse, the feel of a dive, a thrush singing.

Evidently it is possible to develop in children an appreciation of beauty, power, heroic service and a sense of reverence for God. They have imaginations, shall they be used for good or for evil? Boys who have been detected in crime and degenerate habits have acknowledged that their impulse to steal, to kill, to impurity, and to vandalism have been stimulated by the movies. In classifying some 1,500 pictures Dr. Dale reports that their chief emphasis is largely on crime, sex, murder mysteries, and detective stuff. Over 70 per cent of these movies centered on crime, illicit love and drink. Boys report that in the movies they have learned how to "make love," how to "get the drop" on a rival, and how to stage a hold up. Is it any wonder that property rights are disregarded, that true love and fidelity are discredited and temperance is held up to ridicule? Shall our children learn to imitate the criminal and the debauched or to admire missionary heroes and heroines?

What changes would Christ make in amusements? Christian parents cannot reform the non-Christian stage, motion pictures or the dance; they cannot drive out crime or enforce chastity or honesty or total abstinence from strong drink; but they can surround their children with high ideals; by precept and example they can teach obedience to the laws of God and man; they can uphold the noble characters and can endeavor to fill the lives of their children with the most wholesome education and recreation. The safe and sane course—one that has proved its effectiveness—is to lead children to Christ while they are young, to help them make contacts with worthwhile people—personally or in books—and to enlist their interest in worth-while pleasures and service—in partnership with their parents. An excellent opportunity is offered in missionary hero stories—Missionary Review.

THE CHALLENGING WORLD.

FACTS PRESENTED BY MISSIONARIES IN MANY LANDS.

"We have never had such opportunity to present Christ as Lord and Saviour as we have now. The Scriptures sell readily anywhere, any time, and high caste and low caste listen to the Gospel." —PRESIDENT A. A. PARKER, Leonard Theological College, Jubbulpore, India.

* * * *

"I wish I could make America see the challenge in the Philippines! One converted Mohammedan in the Southern Islands said he could have one hundred Mohammedan children in every village in a Christian school if he had the teachers. We must not fail in this great opportunity." —MRS. H. E. LYONS, Manila.

* * * *

"We have a splendid opportunity for work among the neglected Batak people. The entire country of the Simahunguns, about 120,000 souls, is still deep in the darkness of heathenism. Until the Dutch Government took control of this district, cannibalism was practiced openly, so that human flesh could be bought in the markets. The chiefs are opposing Christianity because the old heathenism formed the foundation of their power . . . A woman in the village of one of the biggest chiefs said, 'We are tired of the ways of spirit worship.' Through the influence of missionaries, the people are beginning to be critical of their own customs. The time is here when this entire territory could be taken for Christ." —REV. A. H. PRUSSNER, Sumatra.

* * * *

"The evangelistic campaign was tremendously enthusiastic, and of those who came to the Street Chapel, at least 3,500, or one-fourth of the total attendance, stayed for a further discussion of Christianity. Over one thousand registered as interested enough to ask for follow-up calls from the workers. Already thirty have joined on probation as a result of these meetings." —Report from Chu-Shihkou, China.

* * * *

"The results (of the evangelistic campaign) are very encouraging, both as to the evangelistic enthusiasm of our workers and members, and as to the willingness of the non-Christian Chinese to listen attentively to the Christian message. . . The Chinese are beginning to realize that the fundamental weakness of China is not so much a matter of organization, but rather a lack of moral qualities on the part of the people as a whole, and that such moral forces can be supplied only through Christianity." —DR. WALTER W. DAVIS, Peiping.

OUT FOR LIFE.

By ALICE E. GWINN.

I had been in Japan about a week. Some of my compatriots were doing their duty by me in showing me the sights. It was a dull October day; the leaves were off the trees and the water in the park pool was stagnant and dark. I was weary and beginning to relax after the excitement of leave-taking in America and a very stormy voyage. This sight-seeing brought me no thrill. On the contrary I felt depressed, and I was tired of the curious gaze which everywhere seemed to be fixed upon the "foreigner." Then, after a lapse in the conversation, one of my companions turned to me and said, "And you are out for life?" "Out for life"—how like a sentence it sounded! "Out for life"—was I indeed, amidst all this?

* * * *

One Sunday after three or four weeks in Japan, I went to a Japanese church service. I was, as I recall, the only foreigner in the audience of some two hundred people. It was Communion Sunday. Hymns were sung to well-known tunes, the Bible was read, and the deacons gathered around the table. Scarcely one word had I understood, and yet it all seemed very familiar. I had been used to scenes such as this since childhood, but I suddenly realized that I had never really pictured people of Japan, China, India, and Africa sitting down to the Lord's Table. It had never quite come home to me that these others were partaking of the bread and the wine which symbolized that they were one in blood and one in body with Christ—children of God; Him whom I called "Father" they too called "Father."

I was in the rear of the room, but the deacons were drawing nearer now. Could I partake of the communion this day? If I partook, it must be a pledge—a pledge of brotherhood. There must be no room left for "a holier than thou" feeling; no boastful pride of the Westerner. I must become one at heart with them; else what place was there for me—a missionary? The deacons came to me—and I drank.

* * * *

After five and a half years, furlough time came. I went home and was called upon to speak among the churches. Often there was a questioning spirit: "Why are you a missionary?" "Have we a right to inflict our religion upon others?" "Isn't our presence resented?"

I was glad for some of the changing attitudes back of those questions; glad of the widely increasing feeling that the people of the East are to be respected, their desires considered; that neither their material nor spiritual resources are to be exploited; and that there should be limits to our Americanizing spirit. Many have come to feel thus—that giving in pity and disdain is not true brotherhood, and that there is little room for the arrogant teacher—and so they question all. But brothers must share as well as hold one another in mutual respect. Those to whom much has been given bear a correspondingly great responsibility. One still must give. There is a greater reason for giving of life and money! for here is true worth, that which arouses our respect, but worth which cannot come to full fruition without opportunity.

We are not resented when we come to share that which to us is life itself. And if it is life to you, need more be said as to why we must share?

* * * *

"Out for life"—it is seven years since those words first rang in my ears. Does it sound like a sentence now? No, rather it is an open door. In the words of Tagore:

"Thou hast made me known to friends whom I knew not. Thou hast given me seats in homes not my own. Thou hast brought the distant near and made a brother of the stranger.

"I am uneasy at heart when I have to leave my accustomed shelter; I forget that there abides the old in the new, and that there also thou abidest.

"Through birth and death, in this world or in others, wherever thou leadest me, it is thou, the same, the one companion of my endless life who ever linketh my heart with bonds of joy to the unfamiliar.

"When one knows thee, then alien there is none, then no door is shut."

"Out for life?" Yes, I hope so.

* * * *

It was three years ago that I wrote this, and now I am returning home to be with my parents. With all that is being said today about missions, and with the idea that many in America have that foreigners are not welcome in Japan, you may think that I welcome this "commutation of my sentence." But I want you to know that it is no spirit of disillusionment or lack of faith that is taking me home; nor am I resigning from the Mission, but am to be classified as "temporarily engaged in other work." There are strong ties of affection that bind me to Japan, and my years of study of Japanese mean an investment which will bring me back when circumstances permit.—Missionary Herald.

FROM KAGAWA.

Dr. Robert Steward Spencer, missionary to Japan, has sent a copy of Toyohiko Kagawa's written comments upon "Rethinking Missions." The article is quite long, but the following condensations are given:

"Rethinking Missions" tries to interpret to us a Christ without the cross, as Christianity. From its fifth page to its last I failed to find the word "cross" in this book. It is this lack of the cross which constitutes its weakness. This lack of the cross is the greatest reason why I am disappointed in the Report.

This Report has forgotten that the starting point of foreign missions is a commission from God. No evangelism is possible merely from the standpoint of comparative religions or of the evolutionary theory of civilization.

The Report lacks militant spirit. This book seems to have forgotten that the religion of Jesus was the religion that drove the money-changers from the temple—and the sellers of sheep and bullocks. If Jesus had followed the methods taught in this book, he would not have been crucified, probably.

The Report seems to forget the necessity of the pioneering of unoccupied territories. Livingstone gave his life for Africa; Hudson Taylor suffered in China, and Judson fell in Burma. Compared to the hardship of their days, we of the present lack the spirit of adventure. Even in Japan but few places are even touched by evangelism; and no one has yet reached the fishing villages and most of the laboring class.

One of the things that astonishes me in this Report is that the foreign missionaries are urged to connect with the European and American business men in the Orient. There may, of course, be exceptional cases, but in general, Western commercial men have hitherto been a great hindrance to the Christian movement. In general, the main reason why Christianity makes little progress in the Orient is because the business men and the governments of the countries from which the missionaries come are acting in direct opposition to the teachings of Christ.

I am dissatisfied with the place this Report gives to the church. The idea of "Christian fellowship" is good, but why not call that "the church"? The weakness of the Christian movement today is because the liberalists are not unified among themselves. It is true that there are many hidden followers of Christ at present, like Nicodemus and Joseph of Arimathea in his time, who do not come to church. In Elijah's day there were seven thousand such; but we must demand as a standard such strength of conviction as to enable all to confess Christ clearly before God and men, even in the face of persecution and the cross.

This Report lacks the flaming enthusiasm to Christianize the whole world. The trend is toward retrenchment, rather except in the rural districts. But if money is lacking now, there are many ways to work without it.

This Report has no vision of the Christianizing of the economics of Oriental countries. Both in China and Japan there is no way to save the villagers and the laboring classes except through co-operatives. And we believe that the movement of Christian love has the possibility of realization only through these co-operatives. If the Christians of the world will engage in world-wide co-operative movements, and plan international trade through co-operatives, and also educational co-operatives and mutual aid co-operatives, war and even the communistic movement will cease to exist.

Though I have spoken thus frankly, I am not forgetting the gratitude due to these commissions which have prepared this Report. Aside from its first eighty pages, there are many things for us to learn from this book. It agrees with its emphasis on co-operation, on community consciousness, and on the necessity of establishing rural churches. But I deplore the impression left, after reading the book, that it lacks a supernatural basis. Can those who think of continuing a movement started in the Book of Acts attempt to do so without the help of the Holy Spirit.—Western Christian Advocate.

CALEB.

LESSON II.—JULY 9, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Blessed is the man that maketh Jehovah his trust."—Psalm 40:4.

LESSON TEXT: Joshua 14:6-14.

Caleb, the Kenezite.

Caleb was not an Israelite by birth. He was the son of Jephunneh the Kenezite. There are evidences that his name meant "dog." But he had faith in the God of Israel, he had courage, he had an indomitable spirit, and he got the promise. There are men and women of other races who have qualities of mind and heart, who have capacities and talents, that we might well envy. There are evidences of faith among those whom we call "heathens" which is more vital than many so-called Christians have.

Taking God at His Word.

It had been forty-five years since Moses, the man of God, had promised that Caleb should have the land which he had spied out. Forty-five years is a long time to wait for anything, especially when a man is forty years old when the promise is given. But this man had faith in the promises of God. He did not know when the promise would be fulfilled; he did know that it would be fulfilled. This is faith—taking God at his word, believing what he says, acting as if it were true, doing our part confident that sooner or later God can be counted upon to do his part.

As It Was in My Heart.

The ten spies brought back a report that magnified the difficulties. Caleb and Joshua brought back a report that recognized the difficulties, but which magnified the possibilities and their resources. In sincerity of heart he stuck by his convictions. He was not stampeded by the majority. We wholly followed the Lord. He was not afraid to stand up for what he thought was right. One feels that it might be well if more members of the church had the spirit of Caleb as concerning the challenging situations confronting the church today. One wishes that more people were standing by their convictions—their deep, inner convictions—as concerning the liquor traffic. Too many people are surrendering their convictions, and compromising their conscience in this matter.

Four Score and Five Years Old.

He was old in years, but he was young in spirit. At the age when most men are of necessity in retirement from active work, Caleb was just getting ready to undertake a difficult task. He had grown old gracefully and gallantly. Because he had wholly followed the Lord his God he believed the best was yet to come. And because he had put his trust in Jehovah, he was not to be put to shame.

Give Me this Mountain.

It is the lure of the difficult. Here was a man asking for the hardest place. And the amazing thing about it all was that the man was eighty-five years old. To subdue the wild and war-like people who lived in that mountainous section, to clear the land and to make it livable, was a man-sized job. But Caleb was that kind of a man. He was a man of faith and men of faith ask for hard places.

There are so many today who are seeking for easy places. So many young people would like to have good, easy, big-paying jobs to begin with. So many parents try to shield their children from every discomfort and every difficulty. Caleb speaks a silent rebuke to all such. Those of us who believe in God ought to covet for ourselves the difficult things and the difficult places. Look out for the fellow who picks the easy place. The world has been blessed by those who have not been afraid of the difficult.

The Anakim, Cities Great and Fenced.

Caleb was no ostrich. He did not refuse to look at the difficulties. He knew the Anakim were there, big, strong, husky warriors. He knew the cities were great and fenced. He saw the difficulties, but he refused to yield to them. He had an eye to see the unseen.

If So Be the Lord Will Be With Me.

Caleb was concerned about only one thing. He simply wanted to be sure he was doing the thing the Lord wanted him to do. If the Lord would be with him, he could drive out the Anakim and he could take the fenced cities. He was able, not in his own strength, but in the strength of the Lord.

Because He Wholly Followed the Lord.

He got Hebron for an inheritance because he had in season and out of season followed the Lord. Godliness is profitable unto all things, having the promise of life that now is and of that which is to come. Caleb knew the truth which the Psalmist expressed: "Commit thy way unto the Lord, trust also in him, and he shall bring it to pass. If we seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, all these other things shall be added unto us."

Additional Hymns—"Galilee, Bright Galilee," "Just As I Am, Thine Own to Be," "O Jesus, I Have Promised," "Blest Be the Tie that Binds."

Assign the following subjects for brief talks. The program committee will doubtless think of others to add to these:

- 1. "Why I Want Friends." The person who speaks on this may secure statements from a number of other young people to supplement his or her own. Combined with this may be the topic, "Why I Need Friends."
2. "What My Friends Mean to Me."
3. Ask an older person to speak on the same topic, "What My Friends Mean to Me."
4. Ask an elderly person who has been blessed with many friends to speak on the subject, "Some Great Friendships in My Life."
5. Ask some one who has a keen imagination to describe the life of one person who has never cultivated friends, but who has depended upon money and the things which money can buy for satisfaction, and another who is friendly in spirit toward everyone and has an inner circle of special friends.

This program is the first of a series of three on the general theme of friendship. The three are "Our Need of Friends," "Problems of Friendship," and "Friendship With Those of Other Races." Probably at no time in life are we as eager for association, one with another, as in our youth. Our standards and ideals of life are being formed and these are built to a large extent out of our associations.

Not only do we need friends in time of trouble, but also in time of happiness. Any good fortune brings greater joy when we share it with a friend. Friends play an important part in most of our good times. Our happiest hours are spent in association with those whose interests, likes and dislikes are similar to our own. Most of us do not need to be convinced that we need friends, but we do need to cultivate a greater appreciation of their true value, so that we may be worthy of them, and capable of the finest quality of friendship for them.

"The opening of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."—Psalm 119:130.

MONDAY.

HE WHO CAN'T BE JEALOUS.

"Be not overcome with evil, but overcome evil with good."—Rom. 12:21.

It is said of Charles Gounod, the great musician, that he was instinctively jealous of others who rose to eminence to shine with him, but he diligently fought this weakness by saying, "Only mediocre souls hate more easily than others do. The good are never injured. The little only are injured." He killed his weakness by drowning it in love for the good in others.

Prayer—Dear Father, we pray thee for thy love as it is in Jesus Christ, our Saviour, that our passions may be for good and that we may bare no petty jealousies to mar thy spirit in us. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

DELIBERATE GOODNESS.

"Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report—if there be any virtue and if there be any praise, think on these things."—Phil. 4:8.

"Whatsoever a man soweth that also shall he reap."—Gal. 6:7.

The good and the beautiful certainly ennoble life and inspires to the higher standards. Goethe the musician, said: "An intelligent being should never go to bed without having read a beautiful picture or listened to beautiful music, so as not to allow to sleep within him for a single instant the sensation of perfect beauty."

The sublime spectacles of our experience impress us nobly and translate themselves spontaneously in everything we are about to do. It is a good motto to avail ourselves of every opportunity, as far as possible, to escape the wrong and the ugly and the prosaic; the sway of the artificial; to go, at hazards, to famous sights, visit great folks, and spend much time with the beautiful and the good, that we may become like him.

Prayer—Our Father, bless us this day with a longing desire for the good, and with a life service that is good and beautiful for thee.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

NEVER FRIENDLESS.

Every one deserted me, but the Lord supported me and gave me strength.—II. Tim. 4:16-18.

Paul often found himself alone from human friendships, but each so sharp a contrast gave him a new opportunity to understand more clearly that God was with him and never deserted him. He was one who could, out of his own experience, say, "God will never leave thee or forsake thee."

We are reminded of the young man who stood alone with the prophets on the mountain and was so disturbed that the enemy was great in numbers, and there were only two of them. But the prophet assured him that "they that be for us are greater than they that be against us."

Though alone, Paul realized that the Lord stood with him. Do we realize the full meaning of this? God does just the very thing that man fails to do—whatever the cause, if it be of the Lord, "we shall come off more than conquerors." Friends may forsake us; co-workers may cease! lions may be there! giants may be there! hosts of enemies may be against us—but the blessed assurance of a Christian is: God is also there, and He is more than them all.

Prayer—O Lord, deliver us from every evil way and evil work. We pray that we may do the best that lies in us to bring others into the kingdom for thy everlasting care and blessing. In Christ's name.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

AN ADOLESCENT CHILD AND HIS SACRIFICE.

"And he went down with them, and come to Nazareth, and was subject unto them."—Luke 2:46-52.

The finding of Jesus among the doctors of divinity in the temple indicated that a mighty change was taking place in his physical nature. It was a boy they brought with them to the temple, and a boy they had lost; but it was a young life standing on the threshold of manhood, they found when they returned.

The incident reminds us that in the period called change or adolescence, a young life is capable of great spiritual feeling and thought. There is a desire to serve God, to remain near the church, and attend to the more important business of the soul and life. The attitude of Christ is beautiful. It is really sacrificial, for he obeys his parents and goes back with them, sacrificing his own wishes to become obedient unto them. This is the first recorded act of self-sacrifice in his life. A child is capable of sacrifice. In spite of the much-discussed theory of natural behavior in the child, there may be angelic behavior. A newsboy will give the skin of his body and die in pain to restore a girl to health.

The list for a children's excursion had been made. No more could go. One little girl had cried because she could not leave her housework. Next morning, the train was ready to start, and Mamie came dashing along, saying: "I can go. A neighbor will do my work today." The women in charge knew not what to do—they had one hundred and sixty now. One of the ladies made a little speech: "Yesterday, Mamie could not go; now she is here. She has never had a day in the country. What girl will stay at home and give Mamie her place?" There was a great silence, and then—nine girls stepped forward. That was the spirit of sacrifice.

Prayer—That our little ones may learn the beautiful lesson of obedience to parents from the example of the Saviour.

FRIDAY.

LIFE'S GOLD AND SILVER PICTURES.

"A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver."—Prov. 25:8-14.

A governor of one of our states tells this incident of his own life: "When I was a young man, I thought my father was compelling me to milk too many cows; so I ran away from home and turned up in St. Louis. I fell in with two young men there, and went down to the levee one evening with one of them. I myself did not drink, and while my companion was not drunk, he had enough to be funny. He made a slighting remark about one of the girls of the Salvation Army, who was singing there. She came over and put her arm on his shoulder, and said, 'Young man, you ought not to drink. Your mother would be very sad indeed if she knew you were here tonight in this condition.'

"I went uptown the next day and hunted up a firm from which my father had often bought machinery, told my story, and asked them to advance the money to take me home, and I am here today because of the words spoken by that woman. But I often wonder where I might have been had it been another kind of woman that spoke to us that night."

Probably the woman went home disheartened believing she had toiled all night and caught nothing for the Master. How little did she dream that she had spoken the word that saved a Governor for a state.

Prayer—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

SATURDAY.

THE HABIT OF LIVING WITH GOD.

"If a man love me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come in unto him and make our abode with him."—Jno. 14:23.

Read Psa. 63:1-8.

As Christians, we should get the habit of living with God. If this is vague to us and we do not know how, turn to the story of the life of Jesus. He gave us the example. He was always talking with his Father and he consulted him in every thing which he was about to do. It was his habit to feel constantly for the Father's presence. This is so simple that such a habit is entirely possible to us all.

The radio reveals to us the presence of persons, powers and things of beauty in the air all around us, even the things of other countries are thus made present with us; and we are cultivating this radio to its highest development that we may more and more be conscious of mere presence of life in the air. Without this instrument we would never sense these things. How much are we habituating ourselves to the instruments that reveal the divine presence? We have the instrument of faith, the Word, Jesus the Lord, the Holy Spirit, and by tuning in our souls in harmony with him we discover the continued presence of the living Father. Apart from these we are deaf and dead to his presence.

Prayer—Dear Father, thou art our God, early and always we desire to see thee. Help us. Let us walk with thee. Vouchsafe unto us thy abiding presence. Overshadow us by thy love. Inspire us to do kindly acts and to follow in the steps of him who ever went about doing good.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE CROWNING JOY.

"My Father's house is peace."—Gen. 28:20-22.

The end of life's way is to rest in the Father's house in peace. To this end we have the Sabbath for our good, and to this end we have the church, and to this end we are called to live his life.

But this house is for only those who crave and claim it, which means that if we wish to obtain it we must live in filial nearness to him day by day, and continually aspire to those things that make for peace.

There are cares and trials that drag us down and would keep us from it, and, when struggling with these we need the same Lord to help us who helped Jacob. He who knows thy weakness and thy failure will grant thy unflinching presence, unfading vision and unsparing help.

With him for our guide, what stronger arm do we need to lean upon? In him is compassed all my need and fulfilled all my hopes. However, troublesome and difficult the way, he traveled a rougher one before me, and with him beside me, it will be the same as though he led me into his peace.

Prayer—O Lord, thy banner o'er us is love. With thy presence we are not lonely. The end of the way is blessed. Be with us, and lead us to thy house in peace. In Christ's name, we ask it.—Amen.

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Preacher

THE BREAD OF LIFE.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"Labor not for that meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of Man shall give unto you."—John 6:27.

With what tender compassion these words were uttered. To a multitude which had been seeking him Jesus was speaking. He would speak gently, and with all the concern of his soul to them. For those who put him to death he made excuses, and for them he prayed a prayer. Surely now a misunderstanding multitude—a multitude which had been wanting to make him king, to have a nation filled with meat and drink miraculously given, and might and power from above—would be the object of his tender compassion. Every word he was speaking to them would be later traced in his own blood. Every word would be treasured by them in the coming years, and treasured also by the coming generations—even as you and I treasure them now.

"Labor not for that meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of Man shall give unto you." He had delivered his discourses, fed the teeming multitudes, slipped out of their designing hands, and made his way across to the other side of the sea; and "when the multitude therefore saw that Jesus was not there, neither his disciples, they themselves got into the boats, and came to Capernaum, seeking Jesus." Seeking Jesus! What a goal! They might have had mundane motives, or been misled in their movements, but their business was beautiful and their object glorious beyond their ability at the time to comprehend. Jesus would understand that. And as to a beloved, shepherdless multitude, he spoke: "Labor not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life." "Ye seek me, not because you saw miracles (spiritual things), but because ye did eat of the loaves (material things), and were filled," says Jesus. As glorious as was his feeding of the five thousand, he is reminding them, there is something far more glorious than that. Love, not loaves, was to be the eternal bedrock of their beings. Peter, who was standing in this multitude and heard this message, would hear it re-echoing into his own life and experience later. Love not loaves, and faith not fishes, would find a new meaning in his life in the years to come.

It is a message for our day. Let us see what some of its implications are. "Labor not for meat that perisheth." It is easy enough for us in this day to understand that. What with the breaking down of our banks, our businesses, our material values, our economic systems, our world commerce and trade we understand right well what is implied by "the meat that perisheth." In other words we, like the multitudes that thronged Jesus have had a wrong standard of values. Worldly wealth, wrongly acquired, may fill our fancy and our stomachs, but it impoverishes our souls.

The word "labor" used in this text is a word meaning, to labor, to work, to trade, to transact business. Transact not your business for the meat that perishes. What a wrong figure, for how useless and worse than useless is decaying meat! We may try to overlook the things of faith, and friendship and love and confidence if we will, but sooner or later we shall be asked to give an account, and we shall find our hands empty—or what is worse, tremendously soiled!

There are men standing at the bar of common public opinion today, who when they look back upon their boundless opportunities to serve and bless, and who see how they have missed the mark in hugging their millions, who would give it all now to have a new record—clean, right, honest, and above all suspicion, for the meat they have amassed is mortifying and their hands are foul with the decaying confidences of a betrayed public. And that which is perhaps far worse is the fact that many have been jealous of their positions, and longed for the same opportunity to gather the perishing meat of materialism. Indeed, have not we all been caught more or less in the meshes of rank, and putrifying materialism? "Man shall not live by bread alone (material), but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God (spiritual).

A poor sinful woman at the well of Sychar one day learned that there are two kinds of bread. She learned that the disciples of Jesus had gone into Sychar to seek one kind of bread, and she further learned that the man who waited at the well had, "bread to eat that ye know not of." The material bread becomes a spiritual power when we recognize its rightful source and its proper design. There is nothing wrong, per se, with material bread, but when it becomes the only bread sought, and when spiritual eyes become so blinded that they can see none other, then it is, indeed, a perishing product, and death itself walks in its wake! Go with me to Chicago. Find two great personalities. Insull, driving his bargains to gain wealth for self; Jane Addams laboring for gain to others! There are the two ends of the pole. The one seeking to make men, municipal governments, and national governments, as well, serve himself! The other seeking to harness righteousness, opportunity, and faith in such a way as to make them work for countless under-privileged across the world—and especially in and about Chicago. The world confers its most coveted Nobel peace prize upon the one and makes the name of the other something new with which to hiss its disapproval. "For a morsel of meat Esau sold his birthright." "Is not life more than meat, and the body more than raiment?" Yes, and a thousand times, yes! "For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink; but righteousness and peace, and joy in the Spirit."

Jesus knew well the material and spiritual forces. With the spiritual force he commanded the material. He recognized how the two worked. And they are still active in our world today. A few weeks ago our whole civilization was writing and thinking about the fact that Gandhi was going on a three weeks' fast. There was comment from every quarter. Results of that fast—or the consequences to the little man undergoing it—were considered matters of first importance in international circles. Does that not illustrate how spiritually minded our world can be after all—and that after all the spiritual is the basic and biggest fact of life? And did not the world wake up to a great surprise, and rub its eyes afresh, when it was announced at the end of the three weeks' fast, which it was thought would surely end the life of Gandhi, that he was none the worse physically for the fast? And the verdict of the physicians was that there "seems to be some spiritual strength" that went beyond their scientific researches!

You and I, cross-section of the common people, are prone under the pinch of this strange new day, to think that if we had a bit more of the world's bounty all would be well. Let us not be too sure! It was in a day when our country was filled with grain that millions went hungry; and a day when the granaries of the earth were bursting with bounty that other millions starved literally to death! In a day when money was more nearly in the hands of everybody than any day before, it lost its power, so that now for several years it has been an illusive quantity at best. Not full dinner-pails, but common goodness, sheer righteousness, is required to make peace and happiness. Not a two-car garage, but a two-fisted honesty is the need of the hour, in home, in business, and in government.

Dear Friends:

It is a great joy after spending seventeen days in the hospital on a hospital bed to be able to return home and lie down on your own bed in your own home. For seventeen days we have fought a trouble that came on us unexpectedly and caused us untold suffering, but we are happy to say we are on the road to recovery and while we are going to be confined to our room for a week or ten days, we hope to soon be back in the office carrying on the work that we love so well. This explains why no letter has appeared in the corner from our pen for the past several issues. Very regrettable to us, but we were just too ill to even think of dictating a letter.

Being sick and confined to the hospital and undergoing an operation we sometimes think is not the worst luck that could come to us. We work sometimes from one year's end to the other and we really don't know whether anyone cares for us or not, or even thinks of us. But when we are compelled to be confined to a sick room in the hospital, our friends who are interested in us, show their love and interest by coming a long way, sometimes, to just shake hands and wish us a speedy recovery. Many of them friends that we really did not realize really cared or were interested in us. Many friends who could not come would fill our hands each morning with many beautiful letters, expressing their sympathy and wishing us a speedy recovery. The many beautiful flowers that filled our room each day from friends who were interested in us, and the many prayers that went up from churches and different church organizations in our behalf, make one feel that life is really worth living and that our friends do really care.

So, while I am too weak to dictate this letter, and it is also against my physician's orders, I just felt I wanted to express my gratefulness for the great interest my friends had and the kindness they showed me during my illness. No one appreciates friends more than the writer.

Yours in the work,

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

THE SMALLEST BIBLE.

The world's smallest Bible, a book with pages about one-third the size of an ordinary postage stamp, which when closed, is less than one-quarter of an inch thick, is attracting attention at the Chicago World's Fair. It is on exhibit in the south wing of the Hall of Religion.

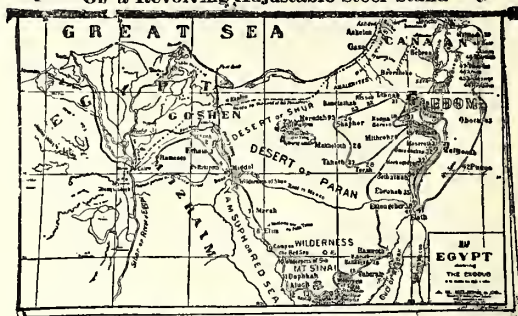

The volume, insofar as its kind, is not only the smallest Bible, but the smallest book containing a like number of words. It was printed from plates made under microscope in Glasgow, in 1895.

Four years were required to make the plates. Shortly after the plates were made, three books were printed. Since that time one of the volumes and the plates were destroyed by fire, a second copy was lost. The one at the Fair is the only one remaining in the world.

The book is about three-quarters of an inch long and a half-inch wide.

Faith is truly a light in the soul, but it is a light which only shines upon duties, and not upon results or events. It tells us what is now to be done, but it does not tell us what is to follow, and accordingly it guides us but a single step at a time. —Thomas Upham.

"THROUGH THE AGES."

Modern social work is not new—at least the basic philosophy behind it is not. This is revealed in "Through the Ages," just published by the Family Welfare Association of America which contains quotations from forty books and writers running from modern times to the forty-fifth century B. C., on the just, kind and human way of helping people who are in trouble.

The Egyptian Book of the Dead, written forty-five centuries before Christ, counselled the good men to give "bread to the hungry, water to the thirsty, clothing to the naked." Confucius and Buddha, living in the sixth century before Christ, advanced ideals of justice in the treatment of the poor.

Cicero, known chiefly for the difficulties he has caused Latin students, is not usually thought of as a philosopher on social welfare. However, in the first century B. C., he voiced one of the basic approaches of modern social work:

"We are above all things to consider the spirit, the zeal, and the meaning with which a favor is conferred. For many confer numerous favors with a sort of recklessness, without any judgment or principle. . . . In conferring or requiting kindness, the chief rule of our duty ought to be, if all other circumstances are equal, to confer most upon the man who stands in greatest need of assistance."

The Jewish savant, Maimonides, living in the twelfth century, set forth the eight degrees in the duty of charity. The lowest degree was to give, but with reluctance and regret. The highest degree approximated what is now known as modern "case work," wherein each person is treated according to his individual characteristics and needs, and he is helped to become self-reliant and self-supporting. Maimonides wrote:

"The most meritorious of all, is to anticipate charity, by preventing poverty; namely, to assist the reduced fellowman, either by a considerable gift, or a sum of money, or by teaching him a trade, or by putting him in the way of business, so that he may earn an honest livelihood, and not be forced to the dreadful alternative of holding out his hand for charity."

The modern practice of welfare agencies in keeping records of the various individuals helped was foreshadowed in Ecclesiasticus: "Where many hands are, deliver all things in number and weight; and put all in writing that thou givest out, or receivest in."

Chaucer, William Langland (the author of "Piers Plowman"), Ralph Waldo Emerson, Charles Dickens, Charles Kingsley and Norman Douglas are among the authors who have written on the duty of helping one's fellowmen in trouble and quotations from whose works are included in "Through the Ages."

THE SUN'S PULPIT.

If we lose sight of the spiritual values of life, and business—the sweat-shop; for instance—a thing which it took fifty years to eradicate, may return overnight. The Sabbath, which has been a spiritual heritage of untold beauty and power throughout the life of our country, may be wiped out in a single year. And with it may go family and home—and hope!

But that is a picture too sad to contemplate, and if you and I and the Christian people across the world will wake up to our opportunities a new day is ours. Again the multitudes seek Jesus! Again we are being schooled in the real values of spiritual things. Our land has become a laboratory for love, and confidence, where we may put them to the test, and find them good.

If, like Jesus, we will say our speech and mean it every word, a new day will be born.

Our text began with something we were asked not to labor for, and it ends with something which we are told the Son of Man will give! Think of those contrasts. Here is something for which we labor, and slave—we want it so badly that we barter our very souls for it, and when we have it we find that "all that glitters is not gold," that it is a "meat that perishes." On the other hand, we listen to the divine voice within, and "go about doing good," forgetting ourselves in honest service, seeking not our own, but another's good—"seeking the Kingdom of God, and its righteousness first"—and lo! we have a gift of everlasting life in our hands! Like "the other wise man," of Henry Van Dyke's beautiful story, we may not get to the manger, being so hindered with helping others, but, thank God, we shall arrive in time to share our love and sympathy at the cross.

"Labor" . . . "gift." "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life." And that self-same multitude asked Jesus what they should do to have everlasting life, and he answered: "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent!" "Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life; he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst." Coming and believing are one. Action and faith go hand in hand, for "works without faith is dead." This believing on Jesus is a personal commitment of oneself to him in an act of real faith and religious devotion—a true partaking of the spiritual bread, the bread of life!

OBITUARIES

PASCHAL.

Mrs. Eliza Wilkins Paschal departed this life Sunday, May 21st, being 69 years, 2 months and 7 days of age.

She was the daughter of the late Henry and Mary Wilkins, and the wife of Deacon W. A. Paschal, of Bethlehem Christian Church, Alamance County, N. C.

There were eight children, three of whom preceded her to the grave.

She joined Union Christian Church when quite a girl, where she was a devoted, loyal member until about nineteen years ago, when she transferred her membership to Bethlehem, where she held it until the end.

She was a quiet, good, unassuming Christian, true to every vow, a devoted wife, loving mother, and friend to all.

During her latter days, she was, because of declining health, not permitted to attend church nor visit those whom she loved. But she did not murmur nor complain, but had a strong hope, a living faith, and an enduring patience. She loved God, awaited his coming, and fell asleep quietly and peacefully.

The last rites were conducted by the writer, assisted by Dr. W. C. Wicker, Revs. J. F. Apple, G. C. Crutchfield, H. E. Lance, S. E. Madren and G. C. Phillips.

The large church house was packed. We laid the body in the grave at Bethlehem, there to await the resurrection. The mound was covered with beautiful flowers. May the gracious Father bless and keep the bereaved.

China Orders 36 Planes.—

There has been received from the Chinese government an order for thirty-six airplanes of the pursuit type by the Curtis Aeroplane and Motor Company of Buffalo, N. Y. These planes are to be powered by nine-cylinder engines capable of developing 700-horsepower. The planes are said to be of the same type as being used by Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh in his flight to Greenland, and will be capable of a speed of 200 miles an hour.

The Dollar Drops.—

Once again the American dollar has dropped, when compared with the pound sterling. On the money market the first of this week the pound was quoted at above $4.80, within easy striking distance of the old parity of the British pound, $4.86. In line with the dropping of the dollar, prices of commodities continue to rise. Cotton soared more than $2.00 a bale to the highest level in over two years; rye advanced 8 cents a bushel; and wheat, after hesitating and then turning downward, came back with an advance to above $1.10 a bushel.

It's Dangerous to Stay at Home.—

According to statistics of the National Safety Council, "home accidents" caused 28,000 deaths in 1932. The chief causes of these accidents were falls, burns, scalds and explosions. Approximately 34 per cent of home fatalities occurred in the kitchen. The total of all fatal accidents reported for 1932 was 88,000, thus one-third of the total number of deaths from accidental causes were attributable to the home. However, the number of accidental deaths in 1932 showed a decided decline over former years, for there were 97,415 in 1931, and 1930 held the record for all time with 99,300. The automobile was accountable for 29,500 deaths in 1932, against 33,675 in 1931 and 32,929 in 1930. Of course, due consideration has to be given to the fact that home accidents are based upon a population of around 120,000,000, while accidents of other kinds have a much smaller base for their ratio.

The Truth Hurts.—

The large majorities for repeal in the States that have acted on the 21st Amendment, are laid to the fact that the drys have stayed at home. "Actual figures," says F. Scott McBride, general superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, "show that the repealists have received an average of less than one-fourth of the votes, even in the wettest States." This does not change the significant fact that these States have voted to repeal prohibition, nor does it alter the fact that other States will do the same thing if a majority of the best element of the population stays at home and trusts to Providence to defeat repeal. It isn't done that way. The country is deciding at this moment whether it will or will not have a wide open orgy of liquor selling such as the palmiest days of the saloon never knew. And—the truth hurts—the Church of Jesus Christ is the determining factor in this question.

A $10,000 Orchid.—

In the year 1908, a shipment of 1,000 dormant, unpotted orchid plants of a common variety known as Cattleya Gigas was sent to a florist in New Jersey. Half of these or more were sold in small quantities to other nurserymen. The rest were put in the importer's greenhouse. In 1910, one of these plants produced a pure white blossom—something never found in a Cattleya Gigas before or since. The most valuable orchid in the world, it was sold to a European firm for $10,000. Because it was what horticulturists call a "sport" there is only one way in which this Cattleya Gigas Alba can be propagated. Its seeds are useless, for if sown they would revert to the colors of its comparatively common parents. So, each year, an expert with a sharp knife, cuts off two or three of the pseudo-bulbs from around its base, making new plants of them. Only once a year does an orchid bloom, so not for years yet can ordinary citizens boast the wearing of the Alba.

The Great Lakes and the Gulf Meet.—

On June 22nd, a flotilla of barges from New Orleans, bearing spices, coffee and sugar, entered the Chicago harbor. This was the first commercial cargo to traverse the new inland waterway from the Gulf of Mexico to Lake Michigan. It marked the completion of the new artery of commerce projected by Mr. Hoover during his term as President. Secretary Dern, of the Department of Commerce, tells us that the territory served by this waterway and the other proposed units of the Mississippi Valley system "produces 70 per cent of the country's agricultural products, 50 per cent of its manufactured products, and 60 per cent of its exportable surplus, and within its giant embrace reposes 98 per cent of its iron-ore deposits, 82 per cent of its coal, and 70 per cent of its petroleum stores." The project thus completed was built at a cost of $102,000,000. The following facts are given by the Associated Press: "The waterway proper extends ninety-six miles, from Lake Michigan at Chicago to the Illinois River at Utica, Illinois. Five powerful locks, capable of lifting and lowering 30,000 tons of freight a day and separated by miles of virtual lakes, make possible the operation of the channel. The locks make up for the difference of 129 feet elevation at the ends of the waterway."

Religion Steps Across the Line.—

For the first time since the forming of the Canadian Dominion, there is a religious tie between that country and the United States. The United Church of Canada has become affiliated with the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, which was organized with the purpose in view of manifesting "the essential oneness of the Christian Churches of America in Jesus Christ as their divine Lord and Saviour, and to promote the spirit of fellowship, service and co-operation among them." While less complete than the relationship of many of the churches of the United States, this affiliation provides for active participation in most of the Council's activities. The United Church of Canada is the largest denomination in Canada, numbering, in 1931, 671,443. It was formed in 1925 by the union of the Canadian Methodist Church, the Presbyterian Church in Canada, and the Congregational Churches of Canada. It is interesting to note in this connection that the Christian Churches in Canada did not unite with this body, but remained an integral part of the body operating in the United States, and later thereby became a part of the present united body of Congregational-Christians.

An Emperor Interviewed.—

Some months ago, Roy Wilson Howard, chairman of the Scripps-Howard newspapers, editor of the New York World-Telegram, and one-time head of the United Press, left for the Orient. Since then he has interviewed many of the leaders among both Chinese and Japanese. It was last week, however, that Mr. Howard attained the impossible. He rolled up to the imperial palace in Tokyo, and there had an audience with His Imperial Majesty Hirohito, 124th Son of Heaven, Emperor of Japan. An hour later a 988-word cablegram was splashed across the first page of the 25 Scripps-Howard newspapers of America. For the first time in history a Japanese Emperor had granted an audience to an American newspaper man. Mr. Howard thus described it: "Our meeting occurred in the Phoenix Hall, formal audience chamber, which is a relatively small, but gorgeously lacquered room, hung with tapestries but devoid of furniture except for the Emperor's chair, set between two ancient cloisonne vases of huge proportions. The Emperor wore the simple khaki uniform of a generalissimo, a service cap tucked under his left arm and his left hand resting on the hilt of his sword. At my introduction he extended his right hand in Western fashion for a firm handshake." Court etiquette, we are told, forbids the queting of the Son of Heaven, but it was stated that the Emperor thinks friendship between Japan and the United States important to world peace.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Rev. B. J. Howard, pastor, writing from Chapel Hill, N. C., July 6th, says: "Sunday, July 16th, is Home-Coming Day, Damascus Church, Orange County, N. C. An interesting program for the entire day is being arranged. A good occasion is anticipated."

Rev. M. L. Weekley, pastor, under date of Harrisonburg, Va., July 3rd, writes: "We celebrated the centenary of Antioch Church yesterday. It was a great day, and Antioch begins its second century united, with a new consecration and with high hopes for the future and the closing of a good year." Rev. R. H. Peel, a former pastor, now of Gasport, N. Y., was the principal speaker for the occasion.

The North Carolina Christian Advocate points out a way now through which the preacher, long in small type on the 10th and 16th pages, can now get into big type on the front page. Hear the Advocate: "Homicides and suicides have become so distressingly prevalent that the papers do not feature them any more. The most successful way to get on the front page is for a preacher to declare for repeal."

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield has been called to the pastorate of the Graham Providence-Memorial Church, and began his work there the fourth Sunday in June. Bro. Crutchfield is pastor of Berea (Alamance), and has been engaged in a revival meeting there, with deep interest and large congregations, the past week. With Haw River and Carolina churches, Bro. Crutchfield has a full-time and busy pastorate of churches well and conveniently grouped.

This is passed on from Justice Timberlain for what it may be worth to whom it may concern: "The mayors, governors, and run-of-mine politicians who have had their photographs published showing them with their noses eclipsed by the beer-mug's foam, may one day wish they could call in all those revealing pictures. This country may have gone beery for a time, but it has no irresistible passion for electing guzzlers to office just because they can guzzle."

Rev. and Mrs. R. T. Grissom, Fancy Gap, Carroll County, Va., write under date of July 3rd: "Our Daily Vacation Bible School closed at Rocky Ford with an enrollment of 66. We feel that the school was beneficial to all. We have had a very good school also at Elk Spur, which will close Saturday, the 8th. Our people here seem interested in school work. During the month of June we had eight conversions, four of whom were received into church membership. We have had a good revival at Elk Spur the past week. The work is very encouraging as well as delightful and inviting."

The Raleigh News and Observer reports 26 arrests for drinking in Raleigh last week end. The week before it reported 23 arrests for the same offense. Hearst's wet Washington Times reported 525 in custody—211 of these for drunkenness—adding: "This sets an all-time record for the number of arraignments." Strange reports these! We were assured that with the coming of beer there would be big money and the bootlegger would be put out of business. Instead we are threatened with a tide of drunkenness in Raleigh and in Washington.—N. C. Christian Advocate.

Mr. Frank Kent, noted columnist in the Baltimore Sun, thinks that President Roosevelt knows how to handle the press and get the service he wants from the quill drivers. Recently he told about it: "The press is petted, placated and promoted in an unprecedented way. Everything is made as easy as possible for it. The Presidential conferences are jolly, informal affairs with Mr. Roosevelt calling the reporters by their first names." Then follows the statement that the reporters may use the White House swimming pool and tennis courts, their wives were given a dance at the Executive Mansion and their children can play in the sand box. Mr. Kent is a great admirer of our President and rejoices that reporters have at last come into their own at Washington.

We heartily congratulate Rev. R. Lee House, happy pastor of our Newport News Church, and we felicitate the church also, on the following from the Newport News daily press, July 6th, 1933: "The Rev. R. Lee House was re-elected pastor of the First Congregational-Christian Church at the annual business meeting of the congregation, held last night. Mr. House is beginning his third year as pastor of the local church. At the same time it was announced that he expects to leave today for New York to spend six weeks at the Union Theological Seminary for additional study. Election of officers of the various church activities and the transaction of routine business, marked the meeting. In the election of officers the report of the nominating committee, of which Mrs. T. G. Hyatt, was chairman, was adopted as submitted."

Rev. J. H. Dollar, pastor, United Congregational-Christian Church, LaGrange, Ga., under date of July 3rd: "We closed our series of evangelistic meetings June 18th. Rev. O. D. Poythress, South Norfolk, Va., was with us for the two weeks and did us much good. The meeting was quiet and not largely attended, because in recent weeks there has been such an up-turn in business that our people are working day and night. Thirteen members were received into the church. With the renewed strength from the meeting and with improved conditions, I feel that the work will move on more smoothly in the future." Bro. Dollar, since going to LaGrange, has wrought zealously, heroically, to save the church and clear it of indebtedness, and now rejoices in the prospect of success, hoping within a few weeks, certainly by November 1st, to be ready to pay off the last dollar of indebtedness and dedicate the church. Surely, abundant fruits have resulted from the labors of Bro. Dollar in these less than two years of his pastorate at LaGrange.

Sunday, July 9th, was a memorable and a glad day at the United Church (Congregational-Christian), corner West Academy Street and Lockland Avenue, Winston-Salem, N. C. It was the first service in our new building there, and a delightful day it was. There was Sunday School at 9:45 A. M., worship service and sermon at 11 A. M., evening worship and sermon at 8 P. M. It was the formal opening of the parish house and chapel. At the morning service, 150 or more glad worshippers gathered for the formal opening. Rev. W. T. Scott and the good wife, who had labored so faithfully and hopefully for this day, and their co-workers, were wreathed in smiles of good cheer and welcome to all who came. Dr. L. E. Smith, of Elon College, was present and taught the Bible class in the church school, took part in the morning worship and preached the 8 P. M. sermon on "The New Testament Church." Other visitors who took part were: Rev. J. L. Foster, of Elon College, Miss Priscilla Chase, of Albemarle, representing and speaking for the Church Extension Board (Congregational), and Mr. Fisher, secretary of the Y. M. C. A., and of the Ministerial Association of Winston-Salem, speaking words of greeting and welcome for the ministers and churches of the city, and J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary, who brought a message in the worship service at 11 A. M. Good delegations from Salem Chapel and Belew Creek were present, and helped to make the occasion joyous. We hope to give to SUN readers a cut and description of the building in next week's issue. Heartiest congratulations and felicitations to Rev. and Mrs. W. T. Scott, the laborers and the leaders in this great, good task.

Mr. Walter Phalti Lawrence, Canton, N. C., and Miss Ruth Alexander, of New York City, were happily married in the home of Dr. and Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, N. C., Saturday, July 8th. Of the event, the Daily News, Greensboro, gives the following account: "In an impressive ceremony yesterday afternoon at the home of Dr. and Mrs. C. H. Rowland, 315 North Edgeworth Street, Miss Ruth Alexander, of New York, formerly of Elon College, was united in marriage with Walter Phalti Lawrence, of Canton and Elon College. The bridegroom is a nephew of Dr. and Mrs. Rowland. The vows were taken at 1:30 o'clock in the presence of a limited group of relatives and intimate friends, about twenty in number. Dr. Rowland, pastor of the First Christian Church, officiated. The bride is the youngest daughter of Dr. and Mrs. W. S. Alexander, of Brooklyn, N. Y. Her father, formerly pastor of the Elon College Christian Church, is now pastor of Hyde Park Christian Church at Brooklyn. The bride was graduated from Elon College in 1930, receiving a bachelor of arts degree, and since that time has been working in New York City for the New York Life Insurance Company. She was a member of the Beta Omnicron sorority and of the Pshkaleon Literary Society at Elon. Mr. Lawrence, who like the bride is a native of Elon College, is the only son of Mrs. Annie Graham Lawrence, of Elon College, and the late Dr. Walter Phalti Lawrence, who was head of the English department at Elon College. He is a graduate of Elon and of the State College of the University of North Carolina. At Elon, he was a member of Kappa Psi Nu fraternity. He is now connected with the research department of the Champion Fibre Company at Canton.

AN EPISODE OF JULY FOURTH!

On July 4, 1833, a Temperance Society (believed now to be the first Temperance Society ever organized in the South), was organized in our Pleasant Hill Christian Church, near Liberty, N. C. On July 4, 1933, this society celebrated its 100th anniversary. The program was worthy of the occasion and attracted wide attention and deep interest. Rev. W. A. Plyler, D. D., the versatile editor of the North Carolina Christian Advocate, was present, and wrote of the great event in his paper for July 6th, the following very interesting account:

"Last Tuesday, July 4th, an unusual celebration was held at Pleasant Hill Christian Church, six miles east of Liberty and on the road from Burlington to Siler City. It was the centenary of the Pleasant Hill Temperance Society, which like Oliver Wendell Holmes' wonderful one-hoss shay had run a hundred years to a day, but unlike Oliver's shay it is still going strong. Last Tuesday, it added 307 new members to its rolls, members who pledged hostility to ardent spirits. This seems to be a prophecy that another hundred years of prosperity lies ahead for this growing giant.

"This society which was organized in 1833—the year 'the stars fell'—has for the last fifty years met every July 4th, at Pleasant Hill Church and every December 25th, at Cane Creek Friends' Church, four miles east of Pleasant Hill Church. Cane Creek Church is the mother of all Friends' Churches west thereof and the oldest between that point and the Pacific Ocean, according to the words of high authority in Quaker history.

"The program of the day was most interesting from 10:30 in the morning to 4 o'clock in the afternoon. A male quartette provided music. Among the other features 26 children rendered an acrostic that was doubly interesting—interesting in itself and interesting because it was rendered sixty years ago and two of the children taking part at that time were United States Senator J. M. Dixon, of Montana, and Prof. Zeno H. Dixon, a cousin of the senator, who was present last Tuesday and read a most interesting and informing history of this society.

"The two addresses of the day were delivered by Judge Johnson J. Hayes and A. W. Plyler, of Greensboro. A. W. Plyler spoke during the morning session and Judge Hayes in the afternoon. Judge Hayes made a great address, his subject being: 'Why I Am Against Liquor, and Why I Shall Vote to Retain the Eighteenth Amendment.' We wish all the people of North Carolina might hear this address.

"The great crowds packed the big church both morning and afternoon, enjoyed a picnic dinner at noon and had a good time all the day long.

"Rev. D. V. Pike, the president of the society, directed the business in an admirable way, was re-elected president, and Miss Pearl Carter was re-elected secretary. This society makes history and preserves it by placing all its records in the archives of history at Raleigh, and these records have been repeatedly of service to University students in original research."

Rev. T. J. Green, Ramseur, N. C., is pastor of Pleasant Hill and this church still remains one of our most loyal, active and wide-awake churches.

WESLEY'S PRAYER.

Dr. Adam Clarke, in his autobiography, records that when Wesley was returning to England by ship, considerable delay was caused by contrary winds. Wesley was reading, when he became aware of some confusion on board, and asking what was the matter, was informed the wind was contrary. "Then," was his reply, "let us go to prayer." After Dr. Adam Clarke had prayed, Wesley broke out into fervent supplication. "Almighty and everlasting God," he prayed, "Thou hast sway everywhere, and all things serve the purpose of thy will. Thou holdest the winds in thy fists, and sittest upon the water-floods, and reignest as King forever. Command these winds and waves that they obey thee, and take us speedily and safely to the haven where we would go." Wesley arose from his knees, made no remark, but took up his book and continued reading. Dr. Clarke went on deck and found the vessel under sail, standing on her right course. Nor did she chage till she was safe at anchor. Wesley made no remark on the sudden and favorable change of the wind. So fully did he expect to be heard that he took it for granted that he was heard.—

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF OUR CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONVENTION.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Western North Carolina Conference met in annual session at Big Oak Church, Moore County, N. C., July 4th. The general theme of the convention was "Making Christ Real in Our Lives Today." President George T. Gunter, Ramseur, N. C., called the convention to order promptly at 10:30, and the commodious church auditorium was filled with delegates and visitors who remained throughout the day for the very interesting program. Sixteen Sunday Schools out of thirty-four in the convention were represented by delegations, and others were represented by letters and reports.

Miss Lillie Horne, Elon College, N. C., secretary-treasurer of the body, had, with great care, prepared a table with statistics showing amounts paid in by the various Sunday Schools of the convention, the number of teachers and officers, and helpful statistics and data. This table should be printed and preserved.

There was a general regret that Supt. C. D. Johnston of the Orphanage, owing to recent illness, was unable to be present, but Rev. J. L. Foster made an able and timely substitute, and, with the singers from the Orphanage, gave the convention some working idea of the relationship of this institution to our Sunday Schools.

J. O. Atkinson, mission secretary, was permitted to bring to the attention of the convention the relationship of missions to the Sunday School and, in a measure, what the Sunday Schools of the convention were doing for missions, calling attention especially to the fact that it was no small part of the task of every Sunday School to help lift up the Christ, exalt and honor his name before a world in need of him, in places nearby and in places remote.

Dr. L. E. Smith, of Elon College, in a great address, revealed to the convention something of the relationship of this institution to our churches and Sunday Schools, showing that after all Elon was our College.

Our Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies, as they meet from time to time, have a personal and practical interest in these enterprises, since they in turn make their contributions and appeals to the schools and societies.

Rev. E. C. Brady, Hemp, N. C., reported for the Department of Teacher Training, pointing out in his report the need for teacher training, and emphasizing the Summer School of Leadership Training at Elon College as a place where teachers in Sunday School and leaders in Christian Endeavor may get help in their work.

There were other written reports from departments making valuable suggestions as to how departments might be helped and guided in their great task of bettering their Sunday Schools.

Rev. Arthur Swartz, Albemarle, N. C., made a most timely and impressive address on the theme of the convention: "Making Christ Real in Our Lives Today." The speaker emphasized the fact that we would not make Christ real by depending upon creeds and dogmas nor going back to the past beliefs and achievements, but by going direct to the life of Christ and appropriating that life to our own needs, problems and experiences.

The people of Big Oak Church and community spread a bountiful repast at the lunch hour, and the great gathering enjoyed the fellowship around the festive board, and under the wide spreading oaks for a season.

Brother George T. Gunter, who had served the convention so efficiently for several years past, declined re-election and the nominating committee brought in the name of Rev. Albert Swartz, Albemarle, N. C., and the body unanimously voted to adopt the committee's report and make him president to succeed Brother Gunter. A standing vote of thanks was expressed to Brother Gunter for his efficient service and to Miss Horne for her very industrious labors, not only in keeping the records, but in compiling valuable statistics for the convention.

After a day of delightful service and sessions, the body adjourned to meet Tuesday after the first Sunday in July, 1934, with the church at Antioch, Randolph. It was indeed a good day, the only regret being that so few pastors of the convention were present and more Sunday Schools represented.

TODAY'S YOUTH AND TOMORROW'S WORLD.

That title makes a large order which the distinguished journalist and author, Stanley High, accepts, but he delivers. It is just a volume of 186 pages from the Friendship Press, New York, but what a volume! Look at some of the chapter topics: "Everybody's Business," "Speed," "The Kick-Back," "Skins," "Blood and Bugles," "When Do We Eat?" "America First," "Why the Church?" "What Can We Do About It?" In this thrilling and revealing volume, Stanley High really brings one face to face with the mind, make-up and methods of today's youth, and lets one feel that one is really coming to grips with the youth of today and getting a new hold upon him and a more thorough understanding of him. Having lived and lolled around with many, many youths of today, having come to understand and to love them, and they him, he undertakes to point out something of the world of tomorrow that will result from the lives, characters, conduct of the youths of the present, for it is the youth of the present who will be the world of tomorrow. He is writing of all sorts and conditions of youth—white, black, yellow, brown, and all the rest. He quotes the youth in high and luxurious places, and then he quotes them in the low and needy. For instance this:

"My father's workin' and my mother wants ten cents' worth o' sugar, and there's the money." A grubby little hand slapped the coin smartly on the counter. Having sought shelter from a sudden rain in the corner grocery store across from the gray bulk of a cotton mill, I watched the transaction. The small customer trotted out with his purchase and the grocer turned to me. "That's the first cash money I've seen from that family for six months," he said. "I've got $125 in their store book. Don't know when I'll get it. Fact is, I don't know how they and a lot like them get by. Eleven of 'em and nobody working since last fall."

And so Mr. High thinks "it doesn't take much imagination to get the point of view of these foreign-born immigrants who live across our back fence."

Here, indeed, is a great and marvelous opportunity for a church to step in with its message of hope, faith, universal brotherhood and Fatherhood, and help this youth get ready for his world of tomorrow. He thinks that we can do a great deal in these days in helping youth shape his world of tomorrow, but we can only do it by understanding the youth and bringing to the youth a message that he can grasp, setting before him examples he can emulate, stirring within him the ideals of high and honest living. This concluding paragraph is flung as a clarion call and a challenge:

"There are many movements of youth today. A new one is called for: a youth movement that accepts Jesus' program as its platform and which takes Jesus' spirit as its driving power. Enough of today's young people will read this book to start such a crusade and make it a success in tomorrow's world."

How we could wish all our ministers, our Sunday School superintendents, our teachers of Bible classes, all teachers in church schools, could and would read Stanley High's altogether vigorous and refreshing volume. It is more than worth the price in cloth of $1.00, paper, 60c, for which the Friendship Press, 150 5th Avenue, New York, will deliver the book, and happy is he or she who secures and reads it.

PITY THE POOR PREACHER.

Do this on many accounts, but especially because he cannot go home immediately after Sunday School. No doubt he would, since a large per cent of his congregation enjoy (?) this privilege and possibly he would like to share this liberty. (?)

At any rate, that's the way a youngster in a certain parsonage felt about it:

"Three little children in a parsonage home were attentive listeners to their mother as she told them what she hoped they might be when they grew up. One was to be an organist, another a singer, and the youngest, about three years old, was to be a preacher. This prophecy struck dismay into his heart. 'I don't want to be a preacher,' he fairly howled. 'I want to go home right after Sunday School!'"

That youngster was without doubt a member of a city Sunday School in which there were organized classes, who on adjournment considered their morning worship ended and immediately turned to other occupations—automobile rides, an outing in the country, the golf links, a visit to friends many miles away. This writer spoke to an organized class of over one hundred men at a Bible school some Sundays ago. At the conclusion, the president of the class urged all to remain after Sunday School, as services would begin in the main auditorium in about ten minutes. Our estimate was that about one-fourth of the class remained and three-fourths called it a day, so far as church services were concerned. The juniors and intermediates seemed to be leaving in even larger proportions. The preacher, under such circumstances, does feel forsaken and lonesome, and this youngster in the parsonage sized up the situation and revolted from being caught in the situation as his father was, who could not leave as soon as Sunday School was out.

TALL AND SMILING.

The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty last week carried the following about our friend and brother, Dr. Fred P. Ensminger, so well and favorably known to many CHRISTIAN SUN readers:

"Such is Fred P. Ensminger, who is charged with the supervision of our churches in Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, and the 'panhandle' of Florida. The smile reveals the unquenchable optimism of the man, while the long legs are exceedingly useful in climbing in and out of upper berths. Mr. Ensminger was undoubtedly born for a traveling life. He originated in Florida and graduated from Rollins College, where he returned to teach mathematics after studying theology at both Andover and Harvard. But after four years he turned his attention to something more exciting—the Congregational Latin-American Institute in West Tampa, Fla., which he directed from 1905 until 1913. At this time this missionary venture among the Cuban cigar-makers was housed in a variety of buildings scattered over a block of land. It consisted of an English-speaking church, a Spanish-speaking church, a day school with about 100 pupils, and boarding homes for both boys and girls. For eight years, Fred Ensminger put all that he had of energy, money and heart into this venture, until his health was threatened and he took refuge in Colorado, where he was in the pastorate for seven years. In 1920 he returned to the Southland, serving first as a general worker in the Carolinas and then by a succession of shifts acquiring his present territory. He is particularly enthusiastic concerning our rural churches in Alabama. He loves men, and they put their confidence in him. As for generosity, in his case it has almost developed from a virtue into a fault. His heart is almost as big as the vast territory which he serves. His Christian faith shines from his ever-smiling countenance."

A PERTINENT QUESTION ABOUT SODOM.

Our distinguished neighbor, the North Carolina Christian Advocate, rises to inquire if "Washington, D. C., is to become a modern Sodom." The Advocate views with alarm and testifies as follows:

"The Washington Times of June 19th, carried the following news story:

"Station houses and the police court of the District of Columbia were jammed today when a new all-time record for arrests was rolled up over the week-end.

"More than 500 Washington citizens—525 to be exact—found themselves in custody. Of this number, 211 were charged with drunkenness. The records show that for the 24 hours ending at 8 o'clock this morning, 84 persons were locked up for imbibing too much, while for the previous period 127 who had drunk not wisely but too well landed in durance vile.

"When police court opened today 257 persons were arraigned on various charges, the majority being intoxicated.

"This sets an all-time record for the number of arraignments . . ."

"In the same week, the Washington Post carried the headlines: 'Sergeant-at-Arms of House Accused of Being Disorderly and Drunk,' followed by this statement: 'Sergeant-at-Arms of the House Kenneth Romney was arrested last night on two charges, drunkenness and disorderly conduct, as the result of an alleged disorder in the Pennsylvania Hotel.'

"The Herald and the Post are reputable newspapers that give the news. This is a deplorable state of affairs and should cause the citizens of this country to take alarm at the way we are headed."

So much for the Advocate. Well, why not? Hasn't the National Government, with seat at Washington, acknowledged its inability to control the liquor traffic, and now, like Pontius Pilate, proposes to pass over this responsibility to lesser lights and more helpless authorities, the States, and wash its hands in the innocency of the great transgression? Washington is asking the States "to repeal," and that it may have no further responsibility in the matter, impotently suggests to the States, when they have repealed, to do what seemeth good to them in all matters of control. So why shouldn't Washington find more than 500 of its citizens—525, to be exact—in custody for drunkenness in one day? Why shouldn't it be setting an all-time record for itself in this particular? It has told the country that if it wishes to get back to prosperity, make drunkenness easy and abundant, and then collect revenue from the poor unfortunates.

And so, when the States shall, at the behest of the National Government, undertake to do that which it says it cannot do, why should there not be multitudes of Sodoms in these various States, Washington having set the pace and given the advice and urged the procedure that leads in that direction?

So far we are asked to repeal, and we are repealing with a vengeance. Possibly, we shall continue to repeal. We are just in for "repeal." Some years ago a speaker for the then prevalent Populist Party in North Carolina, had regaled his audience for an hour with abuse of the things that were—the whole status quo. A listener interrupted to inquire, "Since you have told us for an hour about things you do not want, tell us in a moment or two, please sir, just what you do want." . . . Not anticipating such an interruption, the speaker replied: "I do not know what we want, but I do know that we want it mighty quick." Vox Populi at this present time does not seem to know just what it wants, but it wants it very much and right now."

BRING BACK THE MOURNERS' BENCH.

Where is repentance in Methodism? For the last twenty-five years or more that historic piece of furniture, the mourners' bench, has been empty. It is time to restore it to its former place of prestige and power and once more to sound the "altar call." But this fact must be observed, that the time demands a much more commodious bench than ever the fathers needed, and a more forcible summons to repentance than any camp-meeting preacher ever voiced.

We need also to allow some strong Old Testament breezes to blow through our sermons. A little of the realism of Amos and Hosea would do no harm in this flabby age of sickly sentimentalism in religion. Men must be brought face to face with God. Masculine evangelism is the need of the present hour. Preachers must again "cry aloud and spare not." Let the axe be laid at the root of the tree. Thorough! Thorough!

And what shall we cry? Many ancient sins are still with us in both old and new forms. They are as deadly as ever, notwithstanding modern sophistication. But the years have uncovered a vast group of iniquities that the fathers overlooked. It is time, therefore, to preach the whole gospel of repentance. The true prophet of God knows no preferred iniquities, no exemptions among sinners. It will no longer do to fiddle only upon the three strings of dancing, card-playing, and theater-going in calling men to the altar. Nor ought we to depend solely upon stories of the degradation of the drunkard in order to enforce conviction of sin—though from the present outlook we shall soon have a new crop of inebriates. Secret sins, open sins, sins of the individual, sins of society, sins in social life, sins in industrial life, sins in political life, national sins, international sins—let no iniquity be left out.

Why not begin now, for the first time in the long history of the church, to sound a comprehensive altar call, to cease playing favorites anywhere? This is the requirement of Jesus. He would not be content with our poor half-gospel.

Bring the church herself to her knees. Here is the place to begin. Call church members to the altar. On what count? Non-attendance at the prayer meeting? Indulging in questionable pleasures? Gossip? Yes, but O ambassador of God, as you value your high commission, do not stop with these. Search out the very depths of our sins. Do we profess brotherhood and act like pagans? What do we put first, our church organization or the Kingdom of God? What are we so zealous about, the glorification of Christ or the satisfaction of personal ambition? Are we comfortable or suffering? Christians? Yes, ask these questions. Let the Spirit of God speed these arrows home.

Pick out five smooth stones and go after the Goliath of our social sins. No place here for cowards. This giant has been strutting back and forth through the earth having his own way for centuries. It is time for the show-down.

The mourners' bench is widened to accommodate the leaders of our wicked economic order. Make room for the defender of race prejudice. Open a place for the malefactor of great wealth and the stock gambler. Here comes the hard-hearted industrialist. Ask him about starving women and children. Let him in. Furnish a seat for the unjust judge and let Amos talk to him for a while. Preach, man, preach! Tell them the truth for once. Their own souls and the Holy Spirit are both on your side and you are sent to save them.

Sound the altar call into the ears of the sword-rattler and the wily diplomat. Open the Word of God. Fling its truth at them until they cringe under the weight of their colossal iniquities. Tell them of the love of the heavenly Father against which they are sinning. Tell them of their fellow-men until pity is stirred in their hard hearts. Picture a world free of war, a world in which all men shall live together in peace and mutual respect. Call upon these international sinners to return to the family of God even if it takes seemingly endless hours of struggle with the powers of darkness.

Bring back the mourners' bench. Call all men everywhere to repentance. Let there be no temporizing with sin, no commissions, no exemptions. Preach the whole gospel to a dying world. Make haste. The time is short.—Editorial in Zion's Herald, Boston.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

On the Fourth of July, while visiting my father at the old home in Isle of Wight County, two trees furnished a suggestion for this letter. One of these trees is a beautiful white oak which stands at the front gate near the road. When I was a small boy my father bent the body of this oak and sawed out the top to make it more beautiful. It was not more than two inches in diameter at that time. It grew rapidly and when I was old enough to begin using a hatchet, I cut a niche in it and stripped a piece of bark about three inches wide and twelve inches long.

Several years have passed since that incident. Nature has been at work every year. The tree is two feet or more in diameter. But the scar is there today. Nature will not remove the wound inflicted in its youth. The best nature can do is to perpetuate life, under such conditions, and heal the sore made by thoughtless youth. But the scar will be on that tree when it decays and returns to the dust from which it came.

The lesson of this tree is self-evident. Life is pliable and plastic in the time of youth. But it is exposed to the dangers of reckless and thoughtless conduct. Self-expression without thoughtful guidance can do much damage to others. The hatchet in the hands of a thoughtless boy inflicted a wound which nature cannot remove, without leaving a scar. When youth is wounded life will always carry the scar. The wounds may be inflicted innocently. But innocence cannot repeal the laws of the moral and spiritual world. Wounded youth. Scarred manhood and womanhood. That is the tragic story of life. How careful youth should be with the body. It is the temple of the Holy Ghost. It is sacred. Jesus lived in a body when on earth. The body may be wounded in youth by drink, dissipation and other sinful indulgences. The scars will remain in old age. The mind may be wounded by foul and sinful thinking. Frivolous and unrestrained imagination may fetter the future development of the intellect. Later you will find the scars. The soul can be marred by sin in youth. One sinful act may wreck the whole life. Look for the scars in the after years. God may forgive and forget in his mercy. But the scars will be there.

I passed from the oak to the orchard. When I was in my teens I planted a pear tree in the orchard, not very far from the oak. The pear tree is large and beautiful. It was loaded with pears on the Fourth of July. I gathered pears and ate some of them. It brought fruit for the work of youth. It was rewarding the work done by youth, with spade and shovel. Youth is the time for work as well as play. When the energy of youth is wisely guided and used, it has the opportunity of planting seeds which will, in turn, develop and ripen into an abundant harvest. Trees may be planted in youth, and you may gather fruit as a reward for your labor.

Youth has the choice between making scars or planting for fruit and a good harvest. Keep the body free from disease and vice in youth, and old age may be rich in good health and bodily comfort. Train the mind to think on goodness, truth and beauty and the flowers will wave in glorious profusion and fill the air with rich perfume for you; and the heavens will sparkle with radiant diamonds when the shadows fall; and the nightingale sings its song of praise. Love God and righteousness in youth. Lift the moral and spiritual standards above sordid pleasure and physical satisfaction. Then life will have less scars and more fruit; less sorrow and more joy; less pain and more pleasure.

SHOULD THE SUNDAY SCHOOLS HELP?

Elon College was founded by the Christian Church and has been supported through the years largely by the church and friends of the church. Some years ago, an effort was made on the part of the College to interest the Sunday Schools of the Convention directly in the College by inducing them to make regular contributions for the support of the College. The Board of Trustees assigned two tuition scholarships of $100.00 each to each Conference constituting the Convention. These scholarships were to be awarded on the basis of contributions made by the Sunday Schools to the College. One scholarship was to be awarded to the Sunday School giving the largest total amount and the other was to be awarded to the Sunday School giving the largest per capita amount. This allowed the smaller schools to have an even chance with the larger schools. It was the hope of the College that by assigning these scholarships that the Sunday Schools would, accordingly and in proportion, increase their offerings to the College. It would seem that this venture on the part of the College has not been very satisfactory. The churches have not responded as we had hoped. In no instance, has the church receiving the scholarship, contributed the amount given by the College in scholarships, and in only two Conferences did the total amount given equal the amount of the scholarship assigned to the Conference.

I was interested recently in attending a Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention. The reports revealed the fact contributions had been made regularly by a number of churches to Missions and to the Orphanage, and in only four instances had contributions been made to the College.

The College had been offering to the Sunday Schools of this Convention $200.00 in scholarships. When the program was over, there was a bit of money left, and the Convention cheerfully voted to divide the funds on hand between the Mission Board and the Orphanage, notwithstanding the fact that the College had given two young people of the Sunday Schools of that Conference a tuition scholarship of $100.00 each. One church in this Conference won both scholarships, whose total contribution to the College fell short of the price of one.

This seems to me to be a fine opportunity for the Sunday Schools to manifest their interest in our College, also interest their young people in the educational institution of their own church.

The College is willing to cooperate and do everything in its power to assist the Sunday Schools and the young people of our denomination in realizing their ambition for a thorough training for life.

Now, we are coming to another fifth Sunday, and soon it will be here. I am appealing to every Sunday School in the church to help us at this time. Money is very scarce. We need funds with which to pay actual expenses of the office and traveling expenses of canvassers who are in the field securing students for another year. Now is the time you can render a service that will really count. Won't you respond to this appeal?

ROSEMONT DAY.

Sunday, July 2nd, was observed in the Rosemont Christian Church, as "Rosemont Day." The weather was warm, and many of our people were away, and others were sick, so the attendance was not what we expected, but we had a splendid time anyway.

Mr. J. M. Darden, Suffolk, Va., was the speaker at the 11 o'clock service, using as his subject: "Why We Should Be Proud of Rosemont." It was a splendid message, and the audience heard him with profit and pleasure. Rosemont is always glad to have Mr. Darden visit her.

At the evening hour, Rev. M. S. Eagle, Rector of St. Brides Episcopal Church, Norfolk, was the preacher, and he gave a fine message on "Love of God," which was enjoyed by all present.

The pastor had offered a small award for the best paper on the subject: "Why I Am Proud of My Church," to be read in connection with the observance of the day. Papers were written by Mrs. O. S. Mills, Mrs. H. E. Roane, Miss Elizabeth Mills, and one of our fine boys, Jimmie Laubach. All these were very good indeed.

The following by Mrs. O. S. Mills was read at the morning service on "Rosemont Day":

WHY I AM PROUD OF MY CHURCH.

I am proud of my church for so many reasons I scarcely know which one to mention first.

I am especially proud of our new building, which is so beautiful in its simplicity and convenient in every way; built with windows on all sides to let in the light and sunshine, instead of keeping it out, as is the case with some churches.

Of course, it is all sacred, but the auditorium is especially so to me, for when I enter it there comes over me a spirit of reverence and worship. I love our Sunday morning and night preaching services, because everything seems so peaceful and quiet in the auditorium, and one has a better opportunity to think and worship.

I am glad my church is situated "by the side of the road, where the race of men goes by," to impress all with the fact there is a God and men still take time to worship him.

Being a member of the Women's Bible Class, I am very grateful for our wonderful classroom where we meet each Sabbath morning to learn more of God's Word, and sometimes to discuss vital everyday problems.

I love my church because of its high standards and ideals. We may not live up to all of them, but are better for the trying. I should hate to belong to a church whose standards were about on a par with the world.

Another commendable thing about our church is that we aren't so stingy and selfish we're afraid to give anything outside, but contribute to missions, orphanage and benevolence.

We usually meet our denominational obligations also. When so many churches aren't paying their current expenses, we should be especially grateful that so far we've been able to meet ours; and the good part about it, there is so little said about money. The aim of our church is to give the Bible way, tithing and "as the Lord has prospered us," and we do not have to resort to entertainments and such like.

One of the sweetest things in our church is the good fellowship spirit. Strangers are often impressed with our real sociability and not just official hand-shaking.

I love the spirit of harmony which pervades our church. We may not always see alike, but are usually big enough to overlook any difference of opinion.

The choir has sometimes been called "the pastor's battleground," but I'm happy to say we haven't given ours much trouble so far.

I'm glad we are taught in the Bible to "forsake not the assembling of yourselves together." One may be able to worship God at home, but Sunday wouldn't mean much to me if I couldn't gather with my family and friends in the house of God to worship.

Last, but not least, I love this church because of its pleasant associations. My father and mother worshipped there, my husband and I, and now our children have grown up in it and have learned to love it also. MRS. O. S. MILLS.

The Sunday School and Young People's Societies also had good programs in observance of the day, and all who attended went away with a new appreciation of their church.

PORTSMOUTH.

First Church, Portsmouth, Va., is very happy at this time, when most churches are laboring under heavy burdens, to report that much has been done to preserve the spiritual welfare of the church thus far in the fiscal year, and has also improved the church property by extensive repairs and remodeling, at a total expenditure of well over one thousand dollars.

On May 21st, a revival meeting was begun, which lasted through June 4th. Rev. J. F. Morgan, pastor of the Rosemont Church, Norfolk, was in charge of the singing, and the church was fortunate enough to secure the services of Samuel Leonard Davis, well-known blind pianist, for the duration of the series. The preaching was done by the pastor, Rev. R. A. Whitten.

Although many satanic forces appeared to exert themselves to the greatest degree possible, it is felt that the power of God laid a strong hand on the congregations, and several converts and additions to the church resulted.

On June 5th, the church was turned literally into a workshop, with a large number of carpenters, painters, and electricians working at top speed. After four weeks the main auditorium of the church, the Sunday School auditorium, and some of the classrooms have received three coats of paint. The old lighting fixtures have all been torn out and a new, modern, lighting system installed; the choir loft has been remodeled; the organ has been redecorated; panel doors have been placed at the entrance to the baptistry; old linoleum in the vestibules has been replaced by a permanent rubber tile, through the courtesy of a member, and the woodwork on the outside of the church has been covered with new paint.

The greater part of the painting was engineered by and is being paid for by the Ladies' Aid Society of the church, while the other improvements were authorized by the church membership and the Sunday School. The complete job was made possible by a member of the church, who has been kind enough to advance the money for the aggregate bill.

On the evening of July 3rd, the pastor's birthday anniversary proved to be a very happy and fortunate one, both for him and his family. Members of the church met in the Sunday School auditorium and presented him with an old-fashioned "pounding," consisting of nearly every variety of edibles. At the same time, the church kitchen was favored with a miscellaneous shower of kitchen necessities, and new glassware, crockery, and enamelware to the value of approximately $40.00. This added to the depleted stock of the kitchen, makes it possible for the ladies of the church to have an abundance of kitchen and dining room ware with which to prepare and serve meals at the various church functions.

Sunday, July 9th, was observed as "Home-Coming Day," at the church, with Rev. P. Houlder Brown, recently resigned pastor of the Berkeley Church, speaking at the morning service, and

Dr. Charles Eldred Shelton, pastor of the First Congregational Church, Portsmouth, delivering the message at the evening hour. E. Baily Barco, of Norfolk, was at the organ, his special organ solos, augmented by special vocal music, completing an enjoyable musical program.

TUNE IN.

Again and again in my morning devotions, I see marvelous possibilities which I am sure are capable of realization if we yield ourselves to divine leadership.

This morning I caught a vision of a large company of our own Christian group sitting in their homes listening to the radio over Station WBAW. You never heard of that station, did you? Well, it was so named because it is used by the Whole Brotherhood at Work.

You who read Dr. Smith's stimulating article in THE CHRISTIAN SUN of June 29th, regarding the Dollar-a-Month Club, I am sure, would be greatly inspired to hear his rich voice coming over the air this morning with the announcement that the first thousand memberships have been fully subscribed. Less than four hundred right now will make that experience possible in the very near future.

Listen! "This is Station WBAW, President Smith speaking: We have just enrolled the one thousandth member of our Dollar-a-Month Club. I am hoping to be able to announce one week from now that fifteen hundred have signed. I want to thank all who have cheered our hearts up to now, and pray the company may grow rapidly. Good-bye until next Thursday." (I sincerely hope President Smith will take no offense at using his name, and quoting him as saying things which he has not yet said.) P. S. S.

All the gold we leave behind us,

When we turn to dust again
(Though our avarice may blind us),

We have gathered quite in vain;

Since we neither can direct it,

By the winds of fortune tossed,

Nor in other worlds expect it;

What we hoarded we have lost.

MISSIONS

PRAYER.

Blest harbor of souls, the Church of our Lord! Her portals beckon, her shelter is secure. Some day, O righteous Author and Preserver, the Church shall possess the earth; if we cared enough, that day might be now. Great God, our Father, make people know that the Church's sustenance, its expansion, its triumph, is in human hands and that if truly we desire to build the Church, thou wilt build our bodies into fitting and able instruments for the holy service. In Jesus' name.—Amen. S.

GIFTS OF GOLD.

Quite a few of our churches have brought together their gifts of gold and silver trinkets and have sent them in, or are sending them in, to be smelted and refined and sold to the Government in nuggets, the money to go for missions. All of our churches in the Southern Convention, who have not had experience with this campaign, have the opportunity of collecting and sending in any trinkets lying around and doing no one any good, which trinkets the Government can now use and for which it will pay cash, and certainly no better purpose could claim these trinkets than missions.

We have already noted that the Southern Baptist Convention put on such a campaign throughout its churches, realizing many thousands of dollars for missions.

Our Methodist friends are putting on the campaign in many churches. The Nashville Christian Advocate last week speaks of the matter in the following manner:

"The Wise Men of the East brought their gifts to the Babe of Bethlehem, and by so doing immortalized themselves as well as supplied the Holy Family with the means to escape the power of cruel Herod. Southern Methodists, imitating the first bearers of gifts, are bringing into the treasury of their Board of Missions many gifts of gold, silver, jewels, wedding rings, and family keepsakes to be converted into money and used to carry on missionary endeavor. Of priceless worth to the owners are many of these gifts; of inestimable value to the cause of missions they will prove. If you have a contribution, make it now."

J. O. ATKINSON, Mission Sec'y.

THE JAMMING PROCESS.

It is the unselfish service to all men that the church has tried to offer. Contrary to this spirit a lot of people do not believe in foreign missions. They say that we have no business trying to jam our religion down the throats of unwilling nations. Well, as one who has seen missionaries at work all over the world, I have yet to see the jamming process in operation. It is a strange fact that those who insist that we keep our religion at home enthusiastically argue for the sending of nearly everything else abroad. I remember once in East Africa watching a line of natives returning to their bush villages after several years in the gold mines of Johannesburg. At least a dozen of them had, swung over their backs, a well known American-made sewing machine. No one raised any objection, I suppose, to the conversion of these natives to sewing machines—even though the machines were bound to rust almost immediately in disuse. But try to convert them to our religious ideals, and what a storm is raised! We are to convert the world to our automobiles, our clothes, our chewing gum, and our cigarettes. That, we are told, is good business. But when we send out missionaries to convert them to Christianity, we are informed that that is intolerable.

I do not agree. The fact of the matter is that the biggest race that is on at the present moment is a race between various sets of ideals. Most of the world—Africa, India, China, even Europe—is trying to make up its mind what gods to serve. It may turn out that its god will be materialism. If it is, so much the worse for the world. It may turn out that its god will be communism. If it is, we shall all be the losers. Or it may turn out that the world will come to serve the God that Christ revealed. I do not know how such a choice could be improved upon. Do you?—Stanley High in "Today's Youth and Tomorrow's World."

ATTRACTIVE MISSIONARY APPROACH.

Whether we like "Re-Thinking Missions" or not, we must all of us be prepared to present missions in new and vital ways. Recently we commented on this subject and a flood of comment has reached us saying we were correct, but how could a new approach be made?

We were at a Summer Conference, and the annual missionary night came in the natural course of events. We went expecting to be bored, but remained to be thrilled. The whole approach was simple, but it was interesting.

Three little skits or playlets were staged. The first dealt with a mountain missionary in which delightful humor was used to bring home the problems of the mountain missionary. Not a soul made a "sob plea," though between the lines the hard work of the mountain field was plainly felt by all. This was followed by a Japanese scene in which a rather stupid American girl asked questions of a young Japanese Christian, and the answers were delightful and informing. Africa was presented by having some of the poems written by the Rev. Elwood Haines, when he was a missionary in that vast country, read to the audience.

The whole thing gave many of us a cue. Why could not a carefully prepared program like that be given in every parish? There was nothing trying nor tiring. It was brim full of interest from start to finish, and in a very simple way gave the "new approach."—Editorial in the Southern Churchman (Episcopal).

UP AND DOWN IN KENTUCKY.

[This will interest many of our young people with whom "our Pattie" worked so acceptably before going to the Extension Board.—J. O. A.]

During most of the year Miss Pattie Lee Coghill is employed by the Church Extension Boards to stimulate young people and religious education activities among our churches in Florida, which are wholly of "Congregational" ancestry. It happens that Miss Coghill herself comes of good "Christian" training. For the past two years she has capitalized her antecedents by spending a portion of her summer in pioneer work among a group of rural "Christian" churches scattered among the hills of Kentucky and West Virginia. The following paragraphs were taken from a detailed record which she has kept. These particular incidents took place in the summer of 1931, when she was accompanied by Betty Bonney of Hartford Seminary, who was then in Summer Student Service:

"The Gregoryville Church is the best organized and has the best building in the Kentucky State Conference. I went to spend the week there when the pastor, W. E. Robinson, invited me, and I was accepted wholeheartedly because he told the people that he had been with me for several days and could recommend me as a Christian. He could not have said anything which one would appreciate more than that, or feel more as if one must measure up to their standard of a Christian.

"I conducted meetings for young people every night from Monday through Friday. They came from miles around and from the hollows and up the creeks. One night I counted more than 90 present. Handling them was a real problem, for they had never been in a young people's meeting before, and there were so many it was impossible to conduct a discussion successfully. We had the meetings inside, and then on three evenings played games in the churchyard, which were thoroughly enjoyed.

"I taught them to sing one verse of "Day is Dying in the West," and had a real glow when I later returned to Gregoryville and one of the young men said to me, 'You remember that song you taught us about day is dying in the West? Well, while we were coming home from a ball game the other afternoon, when we got to the top of a mountain I said, Let's sing that song Miss Coghill taught us. I had never noticed a sunset before, and that was a pretty one, and the mountain was pretty, too. That song just seemed to belong there.'

"We had a vacation school every afternoon. I ate dinner and supper in a different place each day. Sometimes I had to walk several miles from the church when vacation school was over, and then walk back to the church after supper. The Gregoryville Church is on a lovely new highway to Louisville and they had electric lights in the church, so that it can no longer be said that they live secluded lives.

"I was delighted to have Betty Bonney, of Wakefield, Mass., come back with me from Blue Ridge for the remainder of my time in Kentucky. When we arrived in Ashland we found that we were completely stranded as we were due in Beechburg, seventy-five miles away, for a meeting the next day, and had no way to get there. When we discovered that we could not rent a car we decided to try to buy one. After much shopping, we secured a Ford sedan for $35. I did not have that much money, but Mr. Rainey endorsed a note for me. As I had always wanted to own a car it was with much pride that we drove away with that Ford. But before we had gone a block and a half we had our first blow-out.

"Mindful of our tires, we drove slowly the next day—and missed our meeting. In the afternoon we came to an old-fashioned resort and decided to spend the night there. Our most embarrassing moment was when we started to close the car for the night and pulled up the windows, only to find printed on them in a vicious shade of orange, '$35.' We had much fun naming the car, but finally decided upon 'Mascaro,' as Betty hails from Massachusetts and I from North Carolina.

"Betty and I coaxed Mascaro six miles up the mountainside on the evening before and spent the night at a fishing camp in order to get an early start in the morning to see J. M. Liles, pastor of a group of churches of which Blankenship is the chief. During the six-mile drive up the mountain we frequently paused to put water in our radiator, using Betty's rubber overshoe for a dipper. When we thought that we had reached our destination we discovered that Mr. Liles lived on the other side of the creek. There were two ways of getting across—a swinging bridge high in the air and a little rowboat. We chose the latter. I got in while Betty 'shoved off'—only she failed to hop in, starting me off alone. Then came the worst moment of the summer. The creek was as rough and as deep as a river. I could not touch bottom with the oars, and neither could I row across against the current, and so I put back to shore with an expression on my face which frightened Betty.

"Finally getting across the stream, we found Mr. Liles to be one of the most interesting men whom we met all summer. He and his family were very cordial to us and mapped out for us a three days' trip up and over the mountainside. One of his sons rowed us back across the creek.

"We crossed another swinging bridge to reach the Blankenship Church, but were very pleased with what we found—a nice little building set in the midst of grass and trees.

"We went two miles further up the mountain to Laurel's Point, which Mr. Liles said would be a fine place to hold meetings. There is a schoolhouse on top of the hill and a lodge building nearby where Mr. Liles preaches occasionally. As it was noontime we went in and visited the teacher. She said she had an enrollment of 83 pupils, and that all of them lived within three miles of the school. What an opportunity! Because of the buildings, the abundance of children, and the lack of a Sunday School, this would be one of the finest places to hold a church vacation school. It seemed too bad to have to wait a year before starting work.

"Raccoon School is another place where Mr. Liles preaches from time to time. They had not had any services in the neighborhood for fifteen years when Mr. Liles first went to them a few months ago. When he started a Sunday School, an eleven-year-old boy walked five miles to join, and has kept it up since. This is another good place for a vacation school.

"This was a great day's journey. We rode many miles during the day up creek beds and sometimes forded swift streams. We climbed another long, hard mountain after leaving Raccoon, had trouble with our car, and walked another mile for help. Coming down 'the other side of the mountain' was the most dangerous ride of the summer. It was steep, rocky, and had not been much traveled for a long time. But a Model T will go anywhere, and we managed to creep down. We had more car trouble and rode into Olive Hill just at nightfall—tired, dirty, and hungry. As we had not had any lunch we each had a fifty-cent supper, which left us with just nineteen cents between us. But we boldly registered at the little hotel, and then slipped away to Gregoryville in the morning to get a check cashed."

Concerning her plans for the coming summer, Miss Coghill writes: "I shall be in Kentucky for only a month this summer, and by myself, as there is no money with which to send a helper. I intend to work in fewer places, but to stay longer, holding vacation schools and young people's meetings. We should like to hold some sort of a young people's summer conference, but this may not be possible."—The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty.

THE GIRL AND THE BUTTERFLY.

Nina saw her when she first went into the department store. She was looking at a cheap coat, and Nina noticed, as she stood there, how very pretty she was and what a deep dimple she had in her chin. She smiled across at Nina in a friendly fashion.

"It's great fun buying a new coat, isn't it?" she began brightly.

Nina smiled. "Perhaps; but new clothes never count much with me, perhaps because I have so many."

The girl with the deep dimple in her chin looked at her.

"How fortunate you must be. I—I have only a few." She paused. "Do you like this coat?" she asked, wistfully.

Nina glanced in its direction.

"It isn't quite heavy enough for a winter coat, is it?" she asked evasively. To her, accustomed as she was to luxury, the coat looked cheap.

The girl smiled.

"I am sure it will be delightfully warm, after the one I have been wearing."

She looked at Nina a trifle gravely.

"I won't be able to buy anything else in the United States for a long while," she went on. "I am sailing next week for China. I am going there as a missionary."

Nina opened wide her clear, gray eyes.

"A missionary? You, with your dimple and your smiles? I thought missionaries were old people. I wouldn't think a life such as that would suit you at all. What good times can you have?"

The girl's sweet face grew suddenly sober.

"I am not thinking so much about good times as I am about Jesus," she replied slowly. "It is his work; and who will tell the story if nobody goes?"

Nina stared at her.

"But you are going out of the world," she cried. "Perhaps," replied the girl, "and yet it is out of the world when there are unsaved souls who wait—wait for the Bread of Life."

She was silent for a moment.

"Are you interested in missions?" she asked suddenly.

Nina shook her head.

"Not any further than giving an occasional dollar to them," she replied.

The girl looked at her, and Nina saw in her beautiful eyes shining tears.

"Ah, but you will be—you must be," she cried. "It is His work and when we do it, He walks beside us." She paused.

"The communion is most sweet," she added, softly.

Nina was silent. Then she looked up.

"Would you mind if I bought you a warmer coat?" she asked gently. "The one you have selected is cheap and will not wear. I don't know much about China, but I have heard its winters are severe."

She looked at the girl with the dimple in her chin.

"Please let me," she pleaded. "You make me feel so ashamed, going out alone to do such a work as that. I'm only a butterfly; but even butterflies have their uses, and perhaps when you wear the coat you will think of and pray for me.

The girl did not reply for a moment.

"If you put it that way," she answered unsteadily.

The little missionary to China was on the boat. Soon would come the signal to sail. The wind blew cold and the skies were gray, but she was wearing a coat fit for a young princess. How could one feel cold in that?

"It's so nice to be going to China in a warm coat," she whispered softly.—Kind Words.

TOLL-GATES.

In the poem by Joyce Kilmer which appeared this page last week is this interesting statement:

They say life is a highway, and its milestones are the years,
And now and then there is a toll-gate, where you pay your way with tears.

Those of you who read this page doubtless do not remember the early highways of our country which were built by private money, and paid for through toll charged to those who traveled the highways. These old roads have long since become free to the public, and the new ones are built by public taxation.

But each of you knows, or will know, of a highway with toll-gates, "where you pay your way with tears." There are things which cannot be bought with money, and often the only price is a suffering heart.

When Jesus stood, with Mary and Martha, beside the tomb of his friend, Lazarus, he wept. All of us meet this kind of toll-gate. Friends pass away in spite of our love and effort to keep them. Faith and hope cheer us a bit, but the price of this passing is a flow of tears.

Disappointment in business or professional life leads to another toll-gate which is paid in the same coin. After building up a good business or establishing a professional reputation it sometimes happens that the business fades away, or the reputation comes to naught. The guard stands by the gate demanding the price of tears before one can pass.

Two young people, buoyant with life and hopeful of a blissful future, pledge their allegiance to each other, "until death do us part." They dream of a home "where love abides, and friendship is a guest." They are happy in the hope. Then comes a day of disillusionment, and the beautiful castle crumbles to dust about them. Perhaps the death which separates them is not the death of the body, but the death of a soul. This toll-gate cannot be passed without a heavy charge of tears.

At an altar of prayer a youth pledges allegiance to Christ, and, like a young knight, goes forth to conquer his own passions, build for himself a character, and help the world in which he lives. He feels that no task is too great for his strength, and no mountain too high to climb. He starts his journey with a happy and expectant heart, not knowing that just around the corner a toll-gate awaits him. When some impurity, or fear, or doubt assails him, and character will not be what he wants it, he probably thinks that the toll is too high, but he cannot pass the gate until he has paid in tears.

One day Jesus stood on the hillside overlooking the Holy City, and as he thought of the kind of people who inhabited this sacred place, his eyes filled with tears. When praying in Gethsemane while his disciples slept, his sweat became drops of blood, for his heart was broken within him. He paid the price of tears, and passed through the toll-gate on down the road that "leads at last to a Golden Town where Golden Houses Are."

Some friends and I drove to the top of the Catskill Mountains with the hope of getting a view of the Hudson Valley, but just before we had arrived at the place of the view, a toll-gate halted us. The price was high when we paid it there in the woods, but when we stood on the ledge overlooking the Hudson Valley, the view seemed to be worth more than the cost.

The highest highway in the world leads to the top of Pike's Peak. Two summers ago, I started to take this drive, but had to pay $2.00 for each member of the party, before we were allowed to pass the toll-gate. The mountain was steep, and the road was crooked, but when we had arrived at the top and saw the long stretch of highways across the prairies below, we forgot the price in the joy of the beauty.

I fancy that this is true of all of the journeys of life where we pay the toll of tears because of a broken heart that seeks to do the right.

A NEW DAY.

In a recent movie, one of the characters was talking about the dawning of a day in Vienna. He said that the people of Vienna never say, "It is another day," but always say, "It is a new day." The golden dawn in the ancient city seems to stir a new spirit within those who watch its beauty, and somehow they believe that every day brings new opportunities.

This is the way we should feel. Yesterday is gone and we cannot change it. Today is ours—a gift fresh from the hands of God. We can do with it as we will.

AHEAD!

A merry road this road we tread,
Whatever somber men may say;
There's always something still ahead,
There always is another day.
Tonight I'll put my hurts away,
I'll sweep the cobwebs from my mind;
Go blithely forward, as I may,
And look ahead, and not behind.

I do not know what I shall find,
But this at least I always know:
The past shall never make me blind
To gifts the future may bestow.
If now behind me shadows show,
Before me there must be a sun;
Tomorrow is the road to go,
And not a road already run.

Tomorrow is the only one,
The only highway left to tread;
The past is past, what's done is done,
Whatever somber men have said.
The shadows are forever fled
From those who take the brighter way,
There's always something still ahead,
There always is another day.

WILL YOU GO—JULY 24th-30th?

Newspapers as well as church papers all over our country are telling of the gatherings of young people by the hundreds and thousands in conferences, conventions and schools of leadership training. It is almost impossible to believe that 150 years ago Sunday Schools were but two years old, and that it is within our own generation that the youth of the church began to organize for their own self development in Christian service.

Today it is expected that young people train themselves to serve the church. The church in various ways makes possible the training, and the young people who have a will to learn, usually find it possible to get the training.

Our summer training schools at Elon College, and Wadley, Ala., will both be in session July 24th-30th. Young people and church leaders in Alabama will gather in the college on Sunday afternoon, and be ready for work early Monday morning. Those in the Carolinas and Virginia will meet at Elon College, N. C., Monday afternoon for their registration and assignment of lessons, and the work will begin in dead earnest on Tuesday morning.

Registrations for Wadley should be sent to Mrs. Vernon C. Carter, Wadley, Ala., and those for Elon College should be sent to Miss Irene Cotten, Dendron, Va. The registration fee is $1.00 in each case, and the remainder of the cost for Wadley is $4.00, and for Elon, $6.50.

No church should be satisfied unless it is represented at one of these schools, and no young person should be content to miss the opportunity of new visions in these summer schools.

Make this a discussion meeting. If the group recognizes the sacredness of friendship and the important place friends occupy in our lives, they will be willing to discuss the problems of friendship frankly and seriously. The discussion may come close home at some points and unless a spirit of humility and mutual helpfulness is maintained, hard feelings might result. This must be avoided. Problems are to be brought into the open for the one purpose of arriving at a better understanding of the source of these problems and if possible, a way to solve them.

The following main lines of discussion are suggested:

I. Should we be friends with everybody? What is the difference between friendliness and friendship? What will help us to decide whether we should become a friend of a boy or girl who engages in questionable practices, such as drinking, gambling, dishonesty in school or in his job, trashy reading and its corollary, degrading conversation? What should be our attitude toward persons who try to force their company on us? What causes a person to do this? To what extent are we obligated to help such persons to improve their personalities so that their friendship will be desirable?

II. What is the basis for the highest type of friendship? Discuss the following points: equal-

DEBORAH.

LESSON III—JULY 16, 1933.

GOLDEN TEXT: "God is our refuge and strength, A very present help in trouble."—Psa. 46:1.

LESSON TEXT: Judges 4:4-10, 13-15; 5:1-3.

Israel had forsaken God and Israel had to pay the penalty. National sin brings punishment as certainly as does personal sin. The wages of sin is death for the nation as well as for the individual. The writer of Judges says that God "sold them (the Israelites) into the hand of Jabin the king of Canaan." This strong-handed king made life hard for the Isarelites. There are a number of factors which entered into what has been called the depression, but the fundamental factor was sin—national sin. Our nation, and the other nations of the world, have disobeyed God's law or his will for them, and the nations have been punished, not by an arbitrary and spiteful God, but by the inevitable working out of the consequences of their folly and sin and selfishness.

When the "children of Israel cried unto the Lord"—when they gave evidence of penitence—God raised up a deliverer to redeem them out of the hand of their enemies and oppressors. One of the significant things about the depression is that it seems to have failed to produce in the American mind any spirit of humility or penitence. Men in all walks of life seem to think that all that is needed to bring back prosperity is "economic planning, higher wages, controlled production, shorter working hours, etc." America and the other nations need something more fundamental than these things. They need the spirit of penitence, the acceptance anew of divine ideals and principles as applied to every phase of national and international life.

It happened in the province of God that the leader of Israel in this emergency of its national life was a woman named Deborah. She was a remarkable woman, one of that long list of able and consecrated women who have served their nation well. Several characteristics stand out as one reads about Deborah in the all-too-brief biographical sketch which appears in today's lesson.

A Woman of Ability.

Deborah was a "judge," a leader, undoubtedly chosen for her ability. She was a kind of "supreme court," one to whom the Israelites came with all their problems and differences, and one at whose hands they received both wisdom and justice. There is every evidence that the people had absolute confidence in her integrity, as well as in her ability. "A good name is more to be desired than great riches." Let every woman seek to develop her native ability, but let her seek even more zealously to make for herself a good name.

A Woman of Spiritual Insight.

Deborah had not only a keen mind; she had a responsive heart. The Spirit of God found in her one to whom he could impart his truth and his plans. She knew that the time was ripe for deliverance for her beloved people. The Lord had spoken—she had heard his voice in her heart. She had kept her life so open and sensitive to him that when he spoke she heard and understood. Women by nature are more sensitive and intuitive than men. Let every woman keep her heart with all diligence, let her keep her life responsive to those spiritual impulses and alert to those spiritual impressions that come from God.

A Woman of Simple Tastes.

Deborah lived simply and thought nobly. She dwelt under a palm tree. It might have been from necessity; it probably was from choice. Happy is that woman who has learned to live simply, who knows that the abundance of a woman's life does not consist in the abundance of the things which she possesses, who knows that there is an inner adornment of mind and spirit that is far more attractive and enduring than the outer adornment of dress and figure. Alas for the men who have had women of extravagant tastes, whose lives are a nightmare because of the incessant and unreasonable demands which their wives and children make upon them. Women today need to re-evaluate life's values, and to be leaders and example in a simpler—and happier—way of life.

A Woman of Courage.

Barak said that he would not go to fight Sisera, the leader of the powerful enemy force, unless Deborah went with him. It was not the custom for a woman to go to battle then as it is not the custom now. It was, moreover, not safe. But Deborah had the courage born of faith in a living God. She said, "I will surely go with thee." Women are just as brave as men, even if it is a different kind of bravery. Indeed, women are braver than men in many ways. There is many a mother or wife who manifests a spirit of heroism in the humdrum routine of life that would put many a so-called brave man to shame. Modern women need courage in the realm of the moral and spiritual today. It takes a courageous woman or girl today to stand by her moral convictions when she is out with a crowd.

A Woman of Humility.

Deborah recognized that her gifts and her accomplishments were not her own. She knew that such as she had was the gift of God and such as she had accomplished had been due to his grace. She took no credit to herself and she allowed Barak to take none for himself in the great victory. She was glad that she could be an instrument in the hands of God. One suspects that there are many women today who want to be "it" or they will not play.

A Woman of Consecration.

The secret of Deborah's life was her consecration. She gave all that she was and could be to her God. She used her talents in his work. She knew that a woman could be a great blessing or a great curse and she chose to be a blessing. All her influence counted for righteousness. Is it not too bad that there are so many women, for instance, who have been devoting so much of their time and their money and their influence to breaking down the Eighteenth Amendment? One feels that a woman like Mrs. Sabin could be using her ability and influence to much better advantage than by seeking to repeal the Eighteenth Amendment. Women, be careful how you use your power. You can be a Jezebel or you can be a Deborah.

REPEAL—WHAT THEN?

As additional states vote favoring the repeal of Eighteenth Amendment, the wets are increasingly jubilant and the dries naturally less hopeful of holding enough states to defeat the repeal measure. The defeat of national prohibition will leave the dries without a program, and the leadership of the movement to reform the drink evil may pass to the groups who have sponsored the fight for repeal. That these, many of them at least, are actuated by motives other than the social and moral protection of the masses will not seriously be questioned. Our country is now in the midst of an era in which moral and social values are freely sacrificed for material gains. FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

"The opening of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple."—Psalm 119:130.

MONDAY.

SELF CONTROL.

"Be not hasty in thy spirit to be angry; for anger resteth in the bosom of fools."—Ecc. 6:9.

"Hold thy peace and I will teach thee wisdom."—Job 33:33.

"In your patience ye shall win your souls."—Luke 21:19.

Tennyson said that happiness in this life consists not in the presence of but in the mastery of passions. Be sure to read the above scriptures and see how nearly correct he was.

Prayer—Our Father, give us thy conquering strength through Jesus Christ, that we may be masters of ourselves always. Give us guidance in justice, satisfaction in waiting, the joy of peace, sweet harmonies of soul. Make us helpers and keep us from doing foolishly ever. In his name we ask it.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

FRIENDSHIP.

"A friend loveth at all times."—Prov. 17:17.

"Faithful are the wounds of a friend."—Prov. 27:6.

Some friendships come to short and poor conclusions because they are built on the fragile texture of fun and fancy instead of the tough fibre of the human heart; because they are sought and nourished with the adulterated passion of quick and ready benefit and not sacredly. The laws of friendship are austere and eternal and a part of our natures and morals. It is like fruit. It takes many summers and winters to ripen it.

It is something that brings aid and comfort through all the relations and passages of life and death. It is serene in storm and grace in the calm. In the rough ways, the hard fares, poverty and persecution, it keeps us company; in drudgery it adds rhythm and reason. We dignify it in faithfulness, embellish it with courage and fortify it with wisdom and unity.

Prayer—Our Father, give us friendship, real like the Master's. Make it the solidest thing in our lives. May we lose ourselves in the welfare of others and be like Christ. In his name we ask it.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

CHEERFULNESS.

"A cheerful heart is a good medicine, but a broken spirit drieth up the bones."—Prov. 17:22.
