The present writer believes that the motion picture, while often a curse is potentially a godsend to the child and that he should see more rather than fewer; but that they should be adapted to his needs by skilled educators and psychologists. Dr. Charters, in the same vein, concludes that "the problem of the movies and the children is so important and critical that parents, producers, and public must willingly and intelligently cooperate to reach some happy solution"; that a way must be found "of making the motion picture a beautiful, fascinating, and kindly servant of childhood."

OTHERS.

Lord, help me live from day to day,

In such a self-forgetful way,
That even when I kneel to pray,
My prayer shall be for—Others.

Help me in all the work I do
To ever be sincere and true,
And know that all I'd do for you
Must needs be done for—Others.

Let "self" be crucified and slain
And buried deep: and all in vain
May efforts be to rise again,
Unless to live for—Others.

And when my work on earth is done,
And my new work in heaven's begun,
May I forget the crown I've won
While thinking still of—Others.

Others, Lord, yes—Others,
Let this my motto be;
Help me to live for—Others,
That I may live like Thee.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

AT SOUTHERN PINES.

The Church of "Wide Fellowship" of our Congregational-Christian constituency, Southern Pines, N. C., is certainly well built and equipped, if not well named. It is a great plant, adequate, spacious, glorious in architectural design and lovely in its setting among the pines. The defect, if any, in the name is that the fellowship seems to be deep and cordial as well as wide and far-reaching. One can worship in that building in the absence of preacher, choir or congregation. The church was on October 11th and 12th entertaining the Annual Conference of the Congregational Churches of the Carolinas, now a constituent part of our Southern Convention. Our warm-hearted and cordial friend, Rev. C. Rexford Raymond, pastor, was acting as host to the Conference, with the aid of his co-workers, and Dr. J. Edward Kirbye was presiding over the sessions. The attendance was not large but was attentive and absorbed. The program was powerful and persistent. Dr. John Brittan Clark, pastor of our Tryon Church, opened each session with a period of worship that was restful to the mind and restoring to the soul. Dr. Enoch F. Bell, editor, Missionary Herald, Boston, Mass., was there laying upon the mind and meditation of the Conference the message, the meaning, the might of modern Missions, how promoted and how administered through the churches. For Dr. Bell, there is no note is Missions that must be struck as often and as incessantly as that of the power of Christ to reach, redeem and save both the individual and the social order in the spiritual as well as in the geographical areas of life and the world. All our methods of promotion and administration, and preaching and practice must keep in the forefront the fact that the gospel of Jesus Christ is the one power adequate to reach and to save mankind. Dr. John R. Scotford, associate editor of the Herald, of New York, was there telling the Conference in terms and tones that cannot be forgotten, of the tides and currents of idealism that had swept out from the Boards and the churches in the past over the un-reached areas in our homeland. First, these waves of idealism rolled out over geographical frontiers as the West was settled and hitherto un-reached territory was taken in. Then of how the idealism of high standards for interracial relationships and understanding went out in wave after wave of fervor and enthusiasm for the education and elevation of the Negro race after the war between the States. Then of the idealism that still visions spiritual areas to be reached and of how all the economic, industrial and racial areas of our thinking and attitude must be spiritualized. Both Dr. Bell and Dr. Scotford made invaluable contributions to the Conference. Rev. James H. Lightbourne of our Burlington Church gave a timely and fitting sermon and conducted a very solemn and reverential communion service at the evening hour of Thursday, the 11th. A day of courageous pronouncements and a forward-looking program was thus fittingly climaxed and closed.

The second day of the Conference brought us face to face with the spirit and trend of the General Council at Oberlin as interpreted by Rev. George N. Edwards of Charleston, S. C., and Dr. Edwin C. Gillette of Florida, followed by illuminating interpretations of our deepening fellowship within the bounds of our Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches. Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, D. D., president of the Convention and assistant moderator of the General Council, interpreted quite accurately the spirit and action of our Convention at Suffolk. Dr. Fred P. Ensminger of Birmingham, Ala., gave a timely historic significance to the features of our "Old New Fellowship." J. O. Atkinson, mission secretary, told of how we shall merge completely here in the South, by unitedly shouldering the responsibility and the burdens of our several interests, enterprises and institutions. In the afternoon of the same day, Mrs. W. R. Sellars, president of the Woman's Missionary Convention, told the Conference of the growth and development of Missions among the women and urged the women of the Conference to come along and be eyes for them as unitedly we seek the wilderness way to the better day of promise and power.

Nor was youth forgotten in the Conference deliberations and pronouncements. Supt. C. D. Johnston, of our Orphanage, told of the care of the unfortunate youth. President L. E. Smith of Elon College told of the necessity of educating our youth religiously, and pastor John R. Chapman of our Asheville Church fittingly closed the program on youth by discussing inspiringly the religion of youth, or better still the youth of religion.

The climax of the great Conference was reached in the installation of the new pastor of the church, Rev. C. Rexford Raymond, D. D., After the Church Council had been held and recommended the installation of the pastor, the following order for the service, beginning at 7:30 P. M., was followed and concluded a glorious Conference of courageous program and pronouncements:

IT WORKS.

That is a fine testimony that comes from the experience of a convert to Christianity in a certain town of China. The Standard Oil Company wanted a representative in that town and went to a white man from the States, a missionary, whom he knew, for a recommendation for one of his townsmen to handle the Standard's business in that town. The missionary recommended a recent convert and the business man called upon him immediately and offered him the job. The newly converted man was overjoyed at the prospect of such a job, but to his sorrow discovered, before the contract was signed, that the place of business which he was to supervise must be kept open seven days a week. On that account the job was declined and another than the one recommended was appointed. The one appointed did not prove satisfactory, nor did his successor. The Standard Oil's Representative, in some doubt and desperation, again offered the job to the first man the missionary had recommended, with the understanding that the business would be closed on Sunday, as an experiment for a year. The newly converted man took the job for a year on those conditions. Several years have passed since then and this man is still on the job, having many times, and annually, increased the profits to the business, as he himself has been prompted and is an outstanding business man and leading citizen, as well as a devout Christian, who still holds to the faith that God knew best for us when He said that man should rest one day in seven. It would be well if those of us who have been converted to Christianity many years had the courage and conviction of this Chinaman who was converted to Christianity and who put his faith and his God to the test with happy results, materially and spiritually.

One would not think that the restaurant business, engaged in feeding people three times a day, seven days a week, could be made to pay if it closed up one day in seven. Well, it so happens that the writer of this editorial is acquainted with a very prosperous chain of restaurants whose management and owners entered into an agreement before opening their first restaurant that on the Sabbath day their feeding houses, whether small or great, two or twenty, should be closed up and their cooks and waitresses and all the rest should have one day in seven in which to rest, to worship God and to pursue privileges in things divine. That is a prosperous chain of restaurants, making profits and growing in favor and popularity. Yet, verily, our God and good Father knows what was best for us when He said, "Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy." But man will not remember and will not keep it hold—to his own hurt and undoing.

WHEN AND WHERE THE CHRISTIAN SUN BEGAN.

The Men's Bible Class of our Burlington S. S., Mr. V. C. Holt, president, decided some months ago to sponsor the placing of a suitable marker and memorial on the spot where THE CHRISTIAN SUN began. Rev. Daniel W. Kerr was the founder, first editor and publisher. He lived on a farm about six miles north of Mebane and some twelve or fifteen miles north of Hillsboro. The editorial office was at the home of the editor and the printery owned by a man by the name of Heartt, was at Hillsboro, N. C. The first issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN was in January, 1844. Rev. Mr. Kerr was a school teacher of considerable prestige, and not far from the office in which he edited the SUN he owned and operated Junto Academy, which, besides a school building, had several dormitories for boarders. In the school, besides mathematics and literature, four or five languages were taught by Mr. Kerr and those who assisted him. He was also a preacher of prominence and power. In all three lines of activity—publisher, preacher, educator—he was a sizable man and made a real contribution to his day and to succeeding generations. No marker thus far has designated the place where THE CHRISTIAN SUN, one of the chief enterprises of our church, had its origin, began. The Bible Class of our Burlington School is certainly to be commended for its most worthy effort.

On Sunday afternoon, October 14, 1934, this Bible Class, with invited guests and interested persons to the number of 100 or more, met at the house in which Mr. Kerr lived and on the spot on which the first editorial office was built. The program was of a historic character and deeply interesting. Mr. V. C. Holt called the meeting to order and presided. Dr. L. E. Smith led in prayer. J. O. Atkinson, the present editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, exhibited a facsimile copy of the first issue of the paper and related briefly the history of the paper from its founding to the present. Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, D. D., pastor of the church, whose class sponsors the movement for the marker, called attention to other markers and memorials that had been established to our historical leaders and founders and that the only one of our great pioneers not thus memorialized was Daniel W. Kerr. Dr. G. O. Lankford, who was pastor of the church at the time the Bible Class began the project, was present and assured the audience of his deep interest and desire that the project be consummated. Dr. W. C. Wicker gave historic sketches showing how Mr. Kerr, as teacher, had begun with an Academy at Wake Forest in Wake County, near the place where Wake Forest College now exists, and of how the teachers went out from Junto Academy, settling at Graham and thus pioneering for Elon College, and of one of Mr. Kerr's pupils and teachers who settled in Randolph County later teaching at the beginning of Trinity College. Mr. Carl Goerch, editor of The State, Raleigh, N. C., gave a most interesting and impressive talk relating to historic incidents and developments in North Carolina and commending the present movement to make the marker permanent, showing the place of this great historic incident. Subscriptions were taken for the movement amounting to $75.00. It is estimated that it will require $250.00 to establish a suitable and permanent memorial. Any one wishing to make a contribution to the same may address Mr. C. V. Holt, Burlington, N. C. It was an afternoon of historical reminiscences and inspiration. It is a movement in the right direction.

WHAT IS CHRISTIANITY?

If you, reader, were asked to write down a definition of Christianity what would be your answer? Doubtless many answers would be in terms of doctrine. It would be quite a difficult task for anyone to write in a few sentences a satisfactory description of our religion.

Some time ago, two sisters met after many years of separation. One of the sisters was concerned much about religion; the other was irritable and selfish. Now it so happened that this latter sister visited in the home of the former for several weeks. When she was about to say good bye the older sister said, "Well, I want to tell you something, sister. I do not understand your kind of religion but whatever it is, it makes you much easier to live with."

After all, isn't that a pretty good test of any religion? Some years ago I came across the following statement of Christianity. It is not doctrinal, not theological, but it does express how a Christian should think and act, I submit it because it is something easy to comprehend and decidedly practical:

- In the home—it is kindness.
- In business—it is honesty.
- In society—it is courtesy.
- In work—it is fairness.
- Toward the unfortunate—it is pity.
- Toward the weak—it is help.
- Toward wickedness—it is resistance.
- Toward the strong—it is trust.
- Toward the penitent—it is forgiveness.
- Toward the fortunate—it is congratulation.
- Toward God—it is reverence and love.

THE LITTLE GOSPEL.

Probably every Christian can tell you what "John three:sixteen" means. It may be a question as to how many can quote it correctly. Many Sunday school pupils know it, and ministers and Sunday school teachers do, and it is a most comprehensive statement of the gospel—the good news of God's love.

Some years ago Dr. W. W. White had occasion to look up several chapters of the Bible and ran on to a remarkable series of texts almost by accident. He made a list of them. All but one, the first, are 3:16s, the first being 3:15. It is sufficiently interesting to Bible readers and students to read these passages, one after the other at one sitting. I am pleased to share these with the readers of the CHRISTIAN SUN. Here they are:

Gen. 3:15; Exod. 3:16; Num. 3:16; Josh. 3:16; 2 Kings 3:16; Prov. 3:16; Jer. 3:16; Dan. 3:16; Joel 3:16; Zeph. 3:16; Mal. 3:16; Matt. 3:16; Luke 3:16; John 3:16; Acts 3:16; I Cor. 3:16; Gal. 3:16; Eph. 3:16; Phil. 3:16; Phil. 3:16; Col. 3:16; 2 Thess. 3:16; I Tim. 3:16; 2 Tim. 3:16; Rev. 3:16.

EARTH'S HEAVEN.

"The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork. In them He hath set a tabernacle for the sun, . . . His going forth is from the ends of the heavens and his circuit unto the ends of it."—Psalms 10:1-6.

The writer is sitting on the deck of his ship which is anchored in the little bay of Gonaives, Haiti. It is only a few minutes of sunset and the ship's band is standing by to play the Star Spangled Banner, as the United States flag is hauled down as a token of good night to the disappearing god of the day. The entire bowl of the sky is a panorama of grandeur and charm. The sun is setting in a solid glow the reflex of which paints its most gorgeous colors in the clouds of the horizon. The entire rim of the horizon, as far as eye can see, is one glorious panorama of rugged mountains ornamented with a thousand clouds of gold, and purple, and dark blue; thunder-heads, billow clouds, stream clouds and dream clouds of a thousand different formations. Midst them all, are great and small rifts everywhere through which distant flaming vistas flashed from the golden sun in the western sea shining from the distant deeps of the sky. What a world we live in! How close it brings us to the Great Eternal!

We had been down below all day trying to prepare a sermon. It had been laborious. The notes were rugged and cold and the brain was weary and worn, but as we emerged from our den to the deck, there was our sermon in picture hung out in the skies. The soul is immediately uplifted from the earth, the mind leaps to a freshness that is a joy, and the heart pulsates with an inspiration seldom known. Would God that everybody could always be as happy as we now feel.

This experience reminds us of a little child returning home from its first visit to a Sunday school weeping as if his heart would break. He had passed five summers, was in the day school and now was beginning the Sunday school, and they put him with the babies in the sand-box. He begged to go up to the next class where his school mates were. But it was not allowed, and he said, "Mother, how in the world can I learn about God and the other people in a sand-box? Boo! Hoo!"

To learn about God, get in a godly atmosphere. If you would know God, live with Him. If you are in an environment that keeps you from it, you are in a sand-box. Get out of it if possible.

Prayer—Dear Lord, let the words of my mouth and the meditations of my heart be acceptable unto Thee. I lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from Thee who made the heavens and the earth. We know that we are on the earth, Lord, but there is a lot of it that is heaven, and if humanity can see it that way, so it shall be. Make it so to us. —Amen.

H. E. ROUNTREE.

LIFE'S MELODY.

Seek to make life, henceforth, a consecrated thing; that so, when the sunset is nearing, with its murky vapors and lowering skies, the very clouds of sorrow may be fringed with golden light. Thus will the song in the house of your pilgrimage be always the truest harmony. It will be composed of no jarring, discordant notes; but with all its varied tones will form one sustained life-long melody; dropped for a moment in death, only to be resumed with the angels, and blended with the everlasting cadences of your Father's house.—J. R. MacDuff.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Perhaps the most largely attended funeral in the history of the church was conducted at Oakland Church, on Saturday, October 13th. The large congregation assembled at 2:30 P. M. to pay tribute to the life and labor of Captain Stephen Lewis Saunders of Everett's, Nansemond Co., Virginia. The deceased was the son of the late Stephen and Bettie Lewis Saunders, and was born in Henrico County, near Ashland, Virginia, December 1, 1863. At the age of seventeen he desired to visit some relatives living in Nansemond County. Being without funds, he sold a musket for $2.00 and spent $1.00 of this amount to pay his fare to Norfolk. He spent fifty cents to pay his way to Suffolk. With fifty cents left in his pocket he went to Chuckatuck District in search of his relatives. He found them and secured a job for himself. He took up his work as a helper on a sail boat. Later he went in business for himself, and for several years was owner and Captain of a freight boat running from Everett's Bridge to Norfolk and return.

He was twice married. His first wife was Miss Mary Catherine Gayle, who died November 14, 1924. Six children survive this union: Dudley Lewis Saunders of Nansemond County; Miss Beatrice Saunders of Suffolk; Dannie F. Saunders of Newport News; Mrs. Marion Gordon of Suffolk; Mrs. Bertie Taylor of Suffolk; and William Saunders, a student in V. P. I., Blacksburg, Va. He is also survived by eleven grandchildren, three brothers and three sisters: James Saunders of Missouri; Archie Saunders of Ocean Park, Va; Mrs. Lizzie Sears of Newport News; Mrs. Mollie Melton of Richmond; and Mrs. Cora Jones of Warwick County, Virginia. April 17, 1926 he married Mrs. Sallie F. Martin who survives him.

He was a member of Chuckatuck Lodge No. 77 A. F. and A. M. In the lodge he was greatly respected and honored by his brothers. For more than forty years he was an honored member of Oakland Christian Church. For several years he held the office of Superintendent of the Sunday school and was elected to the office of Deacon which he filled with credit to himself and the church.

The death of Captain Saunders was a shock to his family and friends. He appeared to be in good health, and was bright and cheerful Thursday morning, October 11th, when he arose at 5 o'clock. His wife asked him to bring in some onions to be cooked for breakfast. Failing to return to the kitchen in a reasonable time, she went out in the garden to look for him and found him dead about 5:45 A. M. The doctor was called in and decided that death was due to apoplexy.

The funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by Drs. N. G. Newman and John G. Truitt. The choir sang "Sometime We'll Understand" and "Abide With Me." He was laid to rest in the church cemetery beneath a profusion of flowers sent as a tribute to his life and memory.

The deceased was a man of strong convictions. For many years he had been opposed to the manufacture, sale and use of intoxicating liquors. He was an ardent supporter of the prohibition movement, and was active in his efforts to defeat the return of the legalized liquor traffic. He was successful in business until he retired several years ago. Since his retirement he devoted himself to the care of his farm. He had helped people in many ways. His brothers in the Lodge and the members of the Church will miss his counsel, fellowship and support. The workers die but the work must continue. Friends depart but friendship abides. Every occasion such as this is a challenge to others to be faithful in life and be loyal until the Lord shall call the workers home.

A CHURCH HAS A BIRTHDAY.

Some years ago, there was a feeling on the part of many that there should be a Christian Church in the city of Winston-Salem, North Carolina. The Mission Board of the Southern Convention, under the direction of Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Secretary, made a survey of the city in an effort to locate members and friends of the Christian Church located there. Later, the Congregational Church joined with the Mission Board of the Southern Convention, through Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, now deceased. And, finally, meetings were held with all who were in sympathy with the movement to establish a church in Winston. Later, Rev. William T. Scott, then pastor of the Salisbury church, was called as pastor, and the permanent church organization was formed.

For a while, they met in the Methodist church, a building abandoned by the congregation for a new and handsome structure which they had erected. It was evident that, with the proper leadership and assistance, they could have a substantial church organization in Winston-Salem. All who were interested felt that there should be a permanent location. A lot was selected and purchased. A very neatly appearing and substantial building was erected. The church has grown under the leadership of its pastor, the Rev. Wm. T. Scott.

October 9th, at 6:00 P. M., the second anniversary of the organization of the church was observed. The ladies of the church served a delicious birthday dinner. A very delightful program was planned for the occasion, which included songs, testimonials, and addresses. Hon. Harry W. Riddle, of Winston, who is a teacher in the Sunday school, spoke on the topic: "Our Church Goes Forward." Mr. Riddle is a very capable man and gave a helpful and inspiring address. Prof. Chas. H. Higgins, a member of the faculty of Salem College, who is also a teacher in the Sunday school, spoke on the topic, "This Church as a Spiritual Asset." He brought a helpful message on a most vital theme. This young church is most fortunate in being able to attract and secure the services of these capable leaders. Through this new organization, these two well-trained and experienced men are making a most valuable contribution to the religious life of their city and to the Christian order as a whole.

The writer was invited to deliver an address on this occasion. The occasion naturally made me a bit reminiscent. There were many things about the church and the people that reminded me of the beginning of my work with the church in Norfolk. Mr. Scott was my assistant at the Temple for one year. Mr. and Mrs. M. R. Ivey, two of the most active members of the Winston church, were members of the Temple. Shortly after uniting with the Temple, however, they moved to Winston-Salem. I was most happy to see them again and to find them making their usual contributions to the church through this new organization at Winston-Salem.

The church has a Sunday school that numbers about a hundred and a church membership of fifty. It is well located, and its future is most promising. This church is not only interested in itself, but is interested in the larger work of the Kingdom. It was the first church to join the Dollar-a-Month Club as a church. In different ways they have manifested their interest in the college. "Bill" is doing a good work there. With the cooperation of the Mission Boards of the United Church and others outside of Winston, I am confident that he and his parishoners will go steadily forward in the great work that they are doing.

It was a pleasure to be with them on this occasion, and I wish for them constant and substantial growth from year to year.

FOLLOWING IN JESUS' APPOINTED WAY.

Self-denial, separation from the world, cross-bearing, are Jesus' terms of discipleship. "He that taketh not his cross and followeth after me, is not worthy of me." If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me. Christ went to the cross and suffered death for you and me. He took upon Himself your sins and mine. The agony in Gethsemane's garden, the scourging, the mocking, pierced, wounded, bleeding, forsaken, hanging upon the cruel cross, the sins of the world hanging upon Him who was dying for you, for me. Oh, my Jesus, all this for me, for me! Taking all my guilt upon Thyself, yet I refuse to take the cross which Thou wouldst lay upon me, that I may follow after Thee!

We want to follow, but we want our own way. We want to follow in the popular way, the way which will not cause us to give up anything to follow Him who gave up all the glory He had with the Father, who gave His life a ransom for you and for me, do we not? It looks sometimes as though our sincerity was not very deep. Would a close examination of our hearts show a sincere desire to follow Jesus at any cost? The disciples had more thought of personal glory than sacrifice. Jesus, however, taught the way of the cross is the way to the throne. It would be a grand, happy day for the cause of Christ if men and women could be free from the desire to rule and be filled, instead, with the ambition to serve.

Nothing but the power of the Holy Spirit could change the ambitions of the disciples and cure their jealousies. There is no other power today than the Spirit's power, which can free men from envy and dissensions, and give them courage to stand true to God and His word, seeking to please Him rather than men. Work undertaken in any way except in the Spirit of God will in the end fail. Those who serve in His fear will feel the weight of the cross heavy upon them. The ambitious will heap reproaches, envy, persecutions, false accusations, everything which grieved and still grieves the heart of Jesus, upon them. Therefore, if we do not feel the weight of the cross, it is evident we are not following Jesus very closely.

Notice how often the phrase, "Cannot be my disciple," is repeated. His would-be follower must think less of his own kindred, the ties of kindred must be broken, there must be separation from family, home, friends, all we hold dear, if the Lord so wills, or "he cannot be my disciple." He must count his life as nothing or "he cannot be my disciple." He must forsake all that he hath, or "he cannot be my disciple." If Jesus had said it once, it ought to be enough, for when Jesus said anything, He meant just that. But again and again He repeats the statement, "He cannot be my disciple," unless the terms are complied with. Disobedience is just as fatal today as when Jesus laid down the terms of discipleship.

ship. The terms have never been changed by the Master, nor has anyone else the right to change them.

"Whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple." The cross and discipleship are inseparable. No cross, no discipleship. To reject the Cross is to be rejected by the Saviour who died upon the Cross. "If any man will come after me," any man may if he will pay the price, but no man may who is not willing to meet all the requirements of the Master. Self-denial is required. Self-pleasing, self-righteousness, and self-satisfaction are all contrary to God and holiness. Self must be dethroned. The "old man" must be crucified. The will of God must become the supreme law of the mind.

The heaviest cross Jesus ever carried was the cross composed of the envy and reproaches, the false accusations and persecutions of those who hated Him without a cause. That same cross awaits those who follow closest to Him. Those things are unpleasant; we do not like them, we would rather escape them, but we remember His "ye cannot be my disciple," and we remember the promised way of escape if the trial becomes so severe we cannot longer bear it, so we follow on, "looking unto Jesus."

The cross is a symbol of pain, and it sounds gloomy to talk of daily cross-bearing in order to be counted by Jesus as one of His disciples. It is true the true follower of Christ suffers with Him. He is often grieved by that which in others seems to cause no concern. But within is a joy, a peace, a deep, rich, and full joy, which those who are seeking an easier road to travel than that marked out by Jesus, do not experience. Accepting all He sends, following where He leads, means a life of victory. Others may not see it that way. They will probably see only seeming defeat. They know nothing of the victory which the all-sufficient supply of His grace is constantly giving.

Will we take the cross He offers us, and follow Him all the way, even though it leads through the garden?

"Take up thy cross," the Saviour said,
If thou wouldst my disciple be;
Deny thyself, the world forsake,
And humbly follow me.
Take up thy cross, and follow Christ,
Nor think to lay it down;
For only he who bears the cross
May hope to wear the glorious crown."

AFTER TWENTY YEARS.

Last Sunday, it was the delightful privilege of the writer to go back to the little Church on the Corner, Monticello, and try to give the Twenty-fifth Anniversary sermon to that congregation, and the purpose of this note is to give impressions.

Much water has gone under the bridge since we took up the pastorate of that little church in the fall of 1913, and remained there until the fall of '15. To say things have changed does not quite express it. Everything has changed since then, and many of the faces always seen at the services there have gone on to other fields and to their rewards. People have changed—this preacher has changed, and that work has changed—the whole denomination has changed, but we must not forget that: "When we are through changing, we are through."

Mrs. Knight and I made the trip there through one of the most beautiful sections of the state—traveling as we did via Rocky Mount, Nashville, Louisburg, Henderson, Oxford, Roxboro, Yanceyville and Reidsville—thru the hills and winding roads so beautiful, reaching the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. O. Rudd at Brown Summit about noon Saturday, where we were most comfortably cared for during our stay.

That home has changed. I first knew it as a home with several fine children, but now, five young men and women have gone out into life to make a name for themselves and sweetest of all, all of them are interested in and working with the Church, taking a leading part in the work of the Church, and that means that the leadership of the work has fallen into worthy hands, for they, with the other young people of the Church led the way in the day's service.

It was a pleasure to meet and mingle with the old friends and particularly with the Rev. Mr. Hyde who is doing a wonderful work in that community. It's great to see the kind of work they are doing there and it is fine for Monticello to keep a young man like that and help him get his work of preparation done at Duke University.

But, before this grows too long, let me say that there has been a wonderful amount of progress made in that community during these twenty years since we first knew it and the work is really just beginning. It is unusual to find that only one charter member has left that church since its beginning. Several have been moved by death, but only one has left the community otherwise. Long live the little Church by the side of the road and may God add a full Century of blessings to it and through it bless every soul the community possesses.

THE CHALLENGE OF ALL LANDS.

The Garden of Eden is said to have been located in the Euphrates valley. In that region the ancient empires of Assyria and Babylon held sway. But from that time onward the center of the world's interest has moved steadily westward to Egypt, to Greece, to Rome. For centuries the Mediterranean was the center of world activity. Then it shifted northward and westward through Europe to England. Later it spanned the Atlantic and for a century and a half has been located in our own America. As our country has grown, the center of population, of industry, and even of political interest, has been constantly moving westward across the continent. More recently, the center of interest seems to have leaped across the Pacific to Japan, Manchuria, China, India. Having spanned the globe, it is back almost to its original starting point. The Church of Christ must recognize this fact and make supreme effort to carry the Gospel message and extend its influence to these strategic points of world interest.

A few years ago Tokyo, Shanghai, Singaport, Bombay, were practically unknown places to most of us. At best they were but vaguely known as existing somewhere out in the Orient. If we had a taste for things geographic it may be that we remembered their relative positions on the map. Today, however, we can no longer live apart in comparative isolation. We cannot pick up a newspaper without seeing frequent mention of these very places. International radio broadcasts bring them to our homes and firesides. Airplanes, fast steamship lines make these formerly remote places easily accessible. Greatly reduced fares make it possible to visit these places without undue expense.

From Japan to New York via Suez, a distance of about 17,000 nautical miles, it was our privilege to touch at fifteen ports en route. Naturally our observations were hasty and superficial, but certain definite impressions remained.

We were surprised to find these cities exceedingly cosmopolitan. They are not particularly distinctive or representative of the countries in which they are located. Many nationalities are in evidence; various languages are spoken.

It is wonderfully inspiring to find a Christian church in the places. Sometimes it is of Gothic architecture, with its spire pointing heavenward, and upon its tip that sacred symbol of salvation, the Cross.

Modern business has made every possible effort to occupy these world markets. Railways and motor highways lead out into the interior. The remote places are brought nearer. Hundreds of automobiles (almost entirely of American make) can be seen on every side. Movies are shown in nearly every town of any size. (They are often of American production and much to our discredit, we must sorrowfully admit.) It is not an uncommon sight to see a radio antenna swinging over the thatched roof of a tropical hut. Tobacco companies make their boast that they have placed cigarettes in millions of mouths in the Orient. We have been told that there are some sections of the mountain highlands inaccessible by motor roads. Upon the backs of coolies automobiles are carried, part by part, over the mountains for great distances to some of these plateau districts. There they are reassembled and used locally. Such are the extremes to which big business will go.

These things furnish food for serious thought to those of us who are interested in the extension of the Kingdom of Christ. Big business takes its products to the ends of the earth and sells them. Cannot the Church of Christ take the gospel unto all peoples and give it to them? The Gospel is free, yet it brings with it the greatest blessing that can come to mankind! Is it possible that the Church is lagging behind business corporations in zeal? God forbid!

It is imperative that we proclaim the Gospel unto all men because our Lord Jesus Christ has commanded us to do so. It is imperative that we proclaim it because only so can the world be saved. Only so can peace and good-will be established throughout the world. International conferences, diplomatic negotiations, national reconstruction programs will fail unless they are founded upon and permeated with the spirit of Christ. It is the responsibility of the Church to proclaim this Gospel. Will the Church fail in this charge?—By Rev. Paul F. Warner in M. P.-Recorder.

THE LIEUTENANT FOOLED HIM.

Sitting on a roll of abaca hemp in the store of a Chinese merchant at Idong, Phillipine Islands, Rev. Walter C. Tong saw the barrio lieutenant of this little Bogobo village approach with an interpreter. "He wants to pare down the fees for the pupils in the new mission school," thought Mr. Tong, from past experience. But the Lieutenant, an ignorant Bogobo with big holes in his ear lobes for ornaments, asked Mr. Tong to start a Sunday School! This village had repeatedly, and unsuccessfully petitioned the Government for a school. Then they asked the Mission and were told it could be done only if they were willing to pay monthly fees for the education of their children. They agreed, secured a building, built benches and opened with a celebration. Later Mr. Tong learned that this same Lieutenant had urged his people to make every sacrifice that the children might have a chance at education.

RELIGIOUS OBSTRUCTIONISTS.

India's religions are at the bottom of all her troubles, declared Dr. E. Stanley Jones on his recent visit to America. Comes word from India that the thousands of violations of the Sarda Act, whereby the marriage of boys under 16 and girls under 14 is prohibited, are creating a public demand, fed by the press, to put teeth into the bill through an amendment. The most powerful force toward making the Sarda Act a farce is the Sanatanists, an orthodox Hindu group. They have been performing marriages outside British India, in Native states or in French and Portuguese India. Border line towns have been doing a land office business. It is this same group also, that has been making life miserable for Mr. Gandhi in his Harijan out-castes campaign. They greet him with black flags, lie before his auto, throw eggs of uncertain age in his assemblies and, some whisper, attempted to bomb his train.

STRANGE BUT TRUE.

Not for ten years, so far as Dr. Roderick Scott, Dean of Fukien Christian University, Foochow, can remember has a Chinese speaker, talking in Chinese, actually praised the missionaries in public. Just recently, however, the Provincial Chief Justice startled everyone by a most able address, (politicians mostly mouth platitudes, says Dean Scott) and the statement that if the Chinese student would serve his country he must imitate the sacrificial spirit of the missionaries! This does not mean that many Chinese would not say "amen" to this sentiment in the past but, asserts Dean Scott, they would "watch their step" before doing so publicly.

THE GOLD POUND.

A faithful member of the Protestant church in Marash, Turkey, left that city, his home for nearly 70 years, to go to Aleppo, Syria. When he went he gave a gold pound to Mrs. J. K. Lyman stating that it was a "gift of gratitude" to the American Board for all they had done for him and his family. This thank offering, which would amount to about $5.00, was given in spite of the fact that Mr. Vahanian had been earning for six or seven months only 10 Turkish liras per month, approximately $7.50 or $8.00, on which his family of four had lived. And the chances of his securing a job in Aleppo are nil.

It was a Jew who brought the Gospel to Rome; a Roman who took it to France; a Frenchman who took it to Scandinavia; a Scandinavian who took it to Scotland; a Scotsman who evangelized Ireland, and an Irishman in turn made missionary conquest of Scotland. No people have ever received the Gospel except at the hands of an alien.—Southern Christian Advocate.

INSTALLATION ADDRESS.

THE CHURCH OF WIDE FELLOWSHIP,
Southern Pines, N. C., October 12, 1934.

By C. REXFORD RAYMOND, D. D.

Mr. Moderator and Members of the Council:

When an installation council is called by a church, the candidate for installation is expected to give the members of the council such a detailed account of his religious experience and belief as may enable the council to determine whether or not he may be properly installed as the pastor of the church. In accordance with this custom, I relate my

Religious Experience.

My religious experience is older than my recollection, for I was reared in a Christian home. I do not remember learning to pray or beginning my going to church. As the oldest in a family of five, I can remember that my mother took the younger children to church while they were babes in arms. My father was a deacon in the church and never found that his duties as a doctor of medicine prevented him from regularly attending worship. Some of the phrases which he habitually used in family worship still linger in my memory as a liturgy of gracious beauty. When I finally after much struggle decided to become a minister, my mother told me that before I was born she had prayed that her child might become a minister of the gospel. She had been too wise to let me know that fact until after my own decision. My uniting with the church in the little village of Angola, N. Y., in my early teens was not the result of any emotional change, though it did register a triumph over the natural timidity of a village boy in a community where most of his boy friends were not church members. Fortunately, there was only one church in the village, a true community church. Like the Church of Wide Fellowship, it was affiliated with the Congregational churches of the state and nation. As my own forbears had been connected with such churches since their arrival in Massachusetts in 1630, I have always easily found myself at home in this type of union churches.

Yielding to what I considered my duty, I went to Oberlin to fit myself for the Christian ministry. My college and seminary training was at Oberlin with the exception of one year at Andover Seminary and a summer quarter in Columbia University. I was ordained at Oberlin in the Second Congregational Church, in the language of the call for a Council, "with a view to Christian work in Berea College."

This initial service at Berea College, in Kentucky, was followed after a lapse of years in pastorates in Ohio and New York by a return to Berea to be Dean of Religious Education and Vice President. In all, I served about ten years in that splendid unsectarian college in the edge of the Kentucky mountains where I deepened my early convictions that the best Christian work can be done where sectarian differences are ignored. My more recent service as pastor in Chattanooga, Tenn., for six years and my association with our theological seminary foundation at Vanderbilt University makes my total service in the South slightly exceed seventeen years. As a transplanted Northerner, with ancestral roots in colonial New England, and with my service in unsectarian Christian fields, I seem to have been providentially fitted for ministry in the Church of Wide Fellowship in this beautiful cosmopolitan community of Southern Pines.

Statement of Christian Belief.

If I were asked to state my creed in a single sentence, it would be this: "I believe in Jesus Christ and accept Him as my Lord and Saviour." In the terms of this faith, I will try to define my opinions about God, Man, and the Social Order.

I. My Christian Belief in God.

My ideas about God are chiefly based upon the fact of Christ. The supreme value of the Bible is the light which it sheds upon the life of Jesus. The Old Testament gives glimpses of a progressive religious experience in the life of Israel as a preparation for God's supreme revelation in the Person of Jesus. The abiding value of the New Testament which makes it easily the most precious literature in the world is that it acquaints us with the Jesus of history. The varying ideas of God expressed in the Bible are always to be tested by the filial consciousness of Jesus who is Himself properly called the Word of God.

The life of Jesus convinces me that God is a personal loving Spirit whose relation to man is best described by the word Father. Because I come to this belief in a loving God through his revelation in the life of Jesus, I express this fact by calling Jesus the Son of God. The holy purpose of God became incarnate in Jesus. When I repeat the expression, "The Word of God became flesh," I mean that he perfectly fulfilled and eternally reveals the will of his Father. He is the first-born among many brethren and saves us, his brethren, by leading us to share in his experience of God.

I also apply the Jewish title, Messiah, or its equivalent the Greek title, Christ, to Jesus, meaning by this his Lordship among men. That is, I believe that the purpose of the life of Jesus is identical with the purpose of the life of God, so far as that life can be shared by men. In our growing discovery of God, Jesus is our teacher. In his character we see the character of God. He is thus forever the Word of God, revealing the purpose which is the very substance of God. When I say that I believe in the Deity of Jesus, I am saying that God is like Jesus. To know Jesus is to know God. He is the Way, the Truth, and the Life. We come to the Father when we abide in Christ.

I find God in Christ not merely through his teachings and life in Palestine but also in the effects of his continuing life in the Church, which Paul calls His Body. I do not think of Him as living in his earthly body on a remote throne in heaven. He is our living risen Lord. As his disciples have worshipped him for nineteen centuries, there has come from his Spirit an outpouring of the divine life which has been the power of the Church. He is today, for every man who believeth, the power of God unto salvation.

Because of this belief in Christ's abiding presence, the apocalyptic speculations about his second coming do not interest me. There is evidence in the New Testament that the Jewish apocalyptic writings colored the thought of a part of the early Church. During his earthly ministry his disciples seem to have hoped for a messianic deliverance from their Roman rulers in accordance with their apocalyptic hopes and dreams. They were mistaken before his death, and we have no reason to suppose that their mistaken ideas about the manner and the time of the coming of the Kingdom of God were all corrected immediately after the event of his death. The Church has often indulged in these apocalyptic dreams, especially in times of war and distress. Instead of preaching about a spectacular second coming in some far-off or near-by time, I prefer teaching about his presence described in the farewell conversation reported in the Fourth Gospel. I believe the comforting assurance that he is now here, working through his Body, the Church, bringing the kingdom of good will nearer day by day. As a Christian believer in God, I hope for an eternal fellowship with the Spirit of Christ, in a never-ending discovery of God, in which His Son, our Elder Brother, will ever be the way to Him whom to know is eternal life. I thus disagree entirely with the Humanists who assert that they do not believe in an objective reality called God; but I entirely agree with those who emphasize the truth that it is in Man's inner experience that we are to get our assurance about the goodness and truth which undergird the universe.

This vital, personal faith has enabled the liberal scholars of the modern church to keep their Christian religion in an age of scientific and philosophical transition. The scholars of today have come into a new world of thought in a movement as radical and startling as that of the Renaissance. In our search for spiritual certainty in a universe described in terms of unimaginable immensity, materialism has become incredible with our analysis of visible matter into invisible molecules, of molecules into atoms, and of atoms into electrical charges called electrons and protons. When matter may be defined as energy in motion, materialism is dead. And when the psychologist tells us that "Nobody is anybody until he joins himself to somebody," it becomes impossible for the most modern saint to unite with the ancient Saint Augustine in declaring that "Thou God hast made us for Thyself, and our hearts are restless until they find rest in Thee." Thus the modern saint declares that religious certainty rests not on the authority of the Church, the Bible or the scientist, but on the experience of communion with God into which Christ brings his disciples.

Believing thus in God as a personal Spirit of Love, we see how the belief in evolution is not atheistic but is a distinct aid to faith. It describes the past in terms of processes now at work and gives a scientific reason for our hope for progress. It also sheds some light upon the problem of evil.

The Problem of Evil.

This problem arises for religion when we face human sorrow and think of God's imminence. If God is everywhere, why is evil everywhere? Belief in God's imminence often obscures the fact of his transcendence. But as any person is always greater than his present acts and cannot be wholly revealed in any or all of his deeds, so God always transcends His creation. But as a person always is where he acts, so God is eternally in an immediate relation to his universe. That is, God is both imminent and transcendent, and neither fact should be forgotten when we face the facts of evil and suffering. Christ reveals God as a loving Father not only in spite of sin and sorrow but in the light of Calvary. God's loving purpose is expressed in a world of free spirits. Man as the goal of creation has as his chief glory the attainment of character. To attain real character he must be free. This real freedom involves the possibility of wrong choices. The re-

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

TWO LITTLE BOOKS THAT INSPIRE.

Last week two little books came to my desk that demanded attention and were an inspiration when I read them. They were printed years ago, but they were new to me.

"The Charm of the Impossible" by Margaret Slattery is the kind of thing many of us need to read when we get discouraged. She begins the book with the poem below which tells of the "voice as bad as conscience" which constantly urges one to go beyond the hills in search of something lost, and waiting to be found. She tells as only Margaret Slattery can of numbers of people who have gone beyond the line where most people stop, set their stakes, and stay. As one reads these thrilling lines the Voice seems to call from beyond the usual and regular and dare one to undertake the seemingly impossible. The Church of Jesus always gives such a challenge.

The other book, by R. W. Conwell, is entitled "He Goeth Before You." This is a charmingly told tradition of how Jesus, after the resurrection, went before the disciples from Jerusalem to Galilee. Along the way he found people in need, gave his blessing of peace and courage, then put something in the path of the disciples that would make them find the needy, and passed on to await his friends by the sea of Galilee.

The day following the disciples went the way Jesus had gone. When they dined with Him at breakfast by the sea of beautiful Galilee that bright spring morning they were glad to know that He had prepared the way for them and that they had done the things He expected them to do.

If you would like to read either or both of these books, or any other in my library of something like a thousand volumes, you may do so by making known your desire with the promise of returning them when read.

ISN'T THIS FUNNY?

The Board of Christian Education is the only board or institution of the Southern Convention that puts back into the churches directly all of the money it received. It is the only one that without solicitation supports all the institutions of the Convention and seeks to aid them in their financial campaigns.

It has the smallest budget of all of our church enterprises, and, in my humble judgment, gives more for every dollar invested. Young People's work and leadership training are left to this board for guidance and promotion.

But it seems to be difficult to get contributions for this Board. The Convention limits us to one special offering annually from our Sunday schools though the college has four and the orphanage and missions have twelve each. Many of our schools feel that they cannot afford the one offering annually because they give the other twenty-eight even though they may receive all of this one offering back in the form of service to the school. Isn't that funny?

But you have noticed that all editors of our church paper carefully refrain from mentioning the Board of Christian Education even at the time of the annual offering? Isn't it funny? And do you ever hear speakers representing the enterprises of the church ever say anything about the Board? Think about it sometime. It makes an interesting study. I think it is funny. By that I mean strange, peculiar.

But I can't understand everything anyway. When I get to the insane asylum, I shall have plenty of time to discover "what makes people do like they do do." So now I shall take life as it comes, sing, be happy, and keep on being grateful for all kind favors for myself and the Board of Christian Education which I represent as its unworthy chairman.

MANY THANKS.

Some of our Sunday schools have heard the call of the Board of Christian Education and have made an offering to aid in the work. Union (Southampton), Franklin, Virginia, Liberty, (Vance), and High Point, North Carolina, Sunday schools sent the money to me. Others have sent, or will send shortly, an offering to the treasurer of the Board, Mr. C. H. Stephenson, 121 Fayetteville, Street, Raleigh, North Carolina.

We are deeply grateful for all contributions. Our gratitude will be expressed not only in words, but will be put back into our churches in the form of service. Those who give to this work are really helping themselves, for all of the money goes into our conventions, young people's work, and churches in the form of helpful service.

YOUTH PRAYED.

By DORA BYRONS.

"Oh God," I cried, "I cannot see
The pathway leading up to Thee.
The doubts of youth have hid the way
As blackest night obscures the day.
God send a spark of faith so true
That it will light the path to you."

"Oh God," I cried, "I cannot hear
Thy voice that is to some so clear.
The jeers of men have rocked my soul
As ships in dangerous oceans roll.
God, speak to me from sea or land
And give me faith to understand."

"Oh God," I cried, "I cannot feel
Thy presence and Thy care are real.
The years of life I glimpse ahead
As hearts that beat when love is dead.
God, give me just one sign, that I May know, through faith, that Thou art nigh."

And then, it seemed, from out the night
Of doubt there shown a path of light,
Where stood the Youth of Galilee.
I felt His presence near to me.
I heard Him speaking low and sweet,
And bowed in Worship at His feet.

"I am the Way, the Truth," the voice
Said, "Trust. Make Me thy choice.
I am the living Christ, the sign
That God has given for all time."
With faith I closed my eyes in prayer
I knew youth found its answer there.

GOD HEARS PRAYER.

If radio's slim fingers can pluck a melody
From night—and toss it over a continent or sea;
If the petaled white notes of a violin
Are blown across the mountains or the city's din;
If songs, like crimson roses, are culled from thin, blue air—
Why should mortals wonder if God hears prayer?
—Ethel Romig Fuller.

Prelude: "Fling Out the Banner, Let it Float."

Poem: "Hearing the Call."

"Hearing the call, they go
To unknown lands far off across the seas
And leave behind them homes and friends and ease,
To hold aloft the torch, that men may know
The light of love that brightens every woe.

"Hearing the call, they go
Where stretch the weary miles of desert sands,
Where gleam the minarets of Moslem lands
Where rolls the turbid Ganges on its way
And muezzins call at dawn for men to pray.

"Hearing the call, they go
Though long the road, though hard and rough the way:
And we secure at home our part to pray
That God may keep them in His tender care;
To pray to give, this surely is our share."

Hymn: "Christ For the World We Sing."

Leader—"The missionaries of the world are the leaders who have changed the history of the world. Carey in India, Morrison in China, Jackson in Alaska, Livingstone in Africa, and just to name the missionaries of the Cross in every land is to recite the roll call of the heroes of faith who have wrought righteousness and braved the dangers of sea and land and the jungle and wild men and triumphed gloriously in their splendid leadership.

Japan stood in hermit seclusion for centuries and now, because of missionary leadership, in fifty years has become a great and mighty nation.

China has changed more in the last fifty years than it changed before in a thousand years and just because the work of missionaries has begun to shape that mighty nation of four million souls.

India has her face to the light and is not the nation which Carey found before it knew that missionary leader and his Christ. On the heels of the missionary have come education and liberty for womanhood and childhood and a new vision and a new life to millions because these missionary leaders of the Cross have gone to serve and not to be served.

THE CHRISTIAN AT PRAYER.

LESSON III—OCTOBER 21, 1934.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Continuing steadfastly in prayer."—Romans 12:12.

LESSON TEXT: Matthew 6:5-15; Ephesians 3:14:21.

TIME: A. D. 28, at the time of the Sermon on the mount; Paul wrote to the Ephesians, A. D. 61 or 62.

PLACE: The Sermon on the Mount was delivered from the Horns of Hattin, a Hill, west of the Sea of Galilee; Paul wrote from prison in Rome.

Glenn Clark says: "The value of Walter Camp's 'daily dozen' is that after the fifteen minutes' exercise in the morning, you find you are breathing a little deeper all day. We should expect the same result from our fifteen minutes of prayer every morning. We should be living in the Kingdom of God a little more vitally all day."

Prayer is of universal acceptance and practice. It comes perfectly natural to man to pray to Something that is higher than himself. Prayer has prostrated man since the beginning of time before this Something that is outside of himself, that towers above him. Now Jesus knew this inward urge in man, but he also knew that there was a certain amount of selfishness and presumption and pride, that tended to make hypocrites of us all. So he tells us not to pray "as the hypocrites, in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men," but to "enter into thine inner chamber, and pray to thy Father who is in secret." S. D. Gordon says: "You can pray anywhere, on the street, in the store, travelling, measuring dry goods, hands in dishwater—where not? But you are not likely to unless you have been off in some quiet place shut in with God."

Jesus does not mean to tell us that we should not carry our prayer life through the day and into the public places where we go. He only tells us that if we pray as the Pharisees of his day prayed, only to be observed of men, then we, like them, have received our reward. It is when we pray in earnestness, with a true desire for God's aid, and in secret anguish it may be, our "Father who seeth in secret, shall recompense thee."

There is another thing about prayer. Many people make prayers which, if granted, would not only prove disappointments to them but would be harmful to them and to others. Then there are those who "think that they shall be heard for their much speaking." It is the quality of the prayer, not the quantity, that is essential. "O, God, be merciful to me, a sinner," truly prayed, will avail more than many a lengthy prayer. Then Jesus condemns vain repetitions. Note the worshippers of Baal at Mt. Carmel; the worshippers of Diana in Ephesus; the Moslems, who hourly call on Allah, using the same words time and again; or the Buddhists, who write their prayers on a "prayer wheel" and repeat the prayer by turning the wheel. Jesus gives us a model prayer, and says: "After this manner, therefore, pray ye." "The Lord's Prayer is a model for us who are the children of God. It is not long or labored but sincere and sufficient. . . It asks that his will be done perfectly in this world as it is done in heaven, and for the things necessary to our strength of body and soul to serve him in spirit and truth." Would one ask more?

COOKIE AND PEANUT.

By MARY ELIZABETH BOUCK.

"Cookie" and "Peanut" are two lively little chipmunks that live in Mr. Storekeeper's woodshed. When Teddy went to Heceta Beach, Oregon, to spend his vacation, Mr. Storekeeper told him about them. Of course Teddy was very much interested, and the next morning, right after breakfast, he took some crackers and nuts and rushed out to feed them.

He called and called, "Here, Cookie; here Peanut," but not a sign of them did he see. He was so disappointed that he was just ready to leave and go to the sand dunes to play when Mr. Storekeeper came out to get some wood.

"They haven't come, because they don't know you, son," he explained kindly. "They're probably hiding around here somewhere so they can watch you. They'll be out by-and-by."

With that, Mr. Storekeeper took a piece of Teddy's cracker in his hand and began to make a queer little sort of chirping sound. In just a minute the cutest little chipmunk appeared as if by magic on the top of the woodpile. Teddy started to shout "Whoopee!" Then he clapped his hand over his mouth quickly lest he frighten the little creature. It scampered along the top of the woodpile, took the cracker from Mr. Storekeeper's hand, sat up and ate it. Just then another little chipmunk flashed over the top of the woodpile, snatched a nut from the bag that was resting on a stump, and scampered away to store it for the winter.

"Now they're coming, son," said Mr. Storekeeper. "Just be careful not to frighten them," and he went back to the store.

Teddy was delighted. He spread out some nuts in a row which led right up to him. Then he kept very still, and sure enough, Cookie and Peanut followed the trail of the nuts taking them one by one till they ate right out of Teddy's hand. He even coaxed them up on his knee while his mother took a picture.

And such antics as they performed! How they scolded each other, and chased each other around the yard, and up and down over the woodpile while Teddy laughed with delight! When all the nuts and crackers were gone the little chipmunks vanished. Teddy got up from the ground with a sigh. "Mother," he said earnestly, "I'm going to feed Cookie and Peanut every day while we're here at the beach."

And he did.

—Our Dumb Animals.

Probably no better exemplifications of the prayer life is given in the Bible than in the life of the Apostle Paul. Even when a prisoner in Rome, Paul considered himself a "prisoner of Jesus Christ," not of the Roman government. And being a prisoner of Jesus brought peace and happiness in a time of danger and distress. In his letter to the Ephesians he tells them that he is praying earnestly for them that they may come to know his love and be "filled unto all the fullness of God." Paul's prayers were always for the other person first and for himself last, yet Paul received the reward that comes to everyone who prays as Jesus would have them pray. Dr. Snowden says: "Paul rises on the wings of his soul to heavenly heights. His prayer is a rose window in the Cathedral of Christianity and is all-glorious with Celestial light and grace and beauty." Is there any wonder that Christ commands that the Christian pray?

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

MONDAY.

RELIGION IN YOUTH.

"Remember now thy creator in the days of thy youth."—Eccl. 12:1.

We have seen a garden of roses in September, some bushes of which were bearing roses beautifully and profusely, long after their season. Others around them were bare. We were told that those bearing roses so beautifully now are those that were clipped low in the early spring. The cutting had hindered their sprouts and their growth, and now they were taking advantage of themselves in the late season, blossoming with greater fullness and beauty than they could possibly have done had they not been clipped.

Youth needs to be curbed in its younger years,—curbed from the vicious excrescences to which that age is subject. Youth needs a godly jealousy instilled into their hearts, lest corrupt nature which, without restraining grace, will have a vent later and break forth in reduced years with "nothing but leaves."

Prayer—Our dear Heavenly Father: grant to us parents and guardians a vision of youth and its relation to eternity, and give unto us the will and the power to train them for glory like a gardener trains the roses for their greatest usefulness. In the name of Christ we ask it.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

CHRIST AND THE LITTLE CHILDREN.

"Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not for of such is the kingdom of God."—Mark 10:13-16.

"Perhaps no other fact in the life of Jesus has appealed to the imagination of mankind more than his own human birth and childhood, and His irrepressible love for folks. This fact has sanctified motherhood and the family life. It has given importance to childhood, so that kindness to children and a willingness to conform to the ideal character of childhood are marks of a real Christian."—Anon.

Prayer—Our Father, whatever about us are marks of a real Christian, we will follow the marks. Help Thou our weakness that we may not fail.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

WHAT A PROMISE!

"Obey my voice and I will be your God and ye shall be my people."—Jer. 7:23.

This Scripture represents salvation. It is a condition followed by a certainty.

Do you know God? If so, your soul is saying "Amen," to this text, for you know. If not, do you want to know Him? If so, all you have to do is to make it a rule of your life to obey His voice.

Of course, in order to obey His voice, we must know His voice; we must also understand His language. What are these? The answer is found in His human voice, and it is heard in the story of His life in Galilee; it is heard in the voice of His resurrection; it is heard in the voice of conscience, that something in thy soul that is a light which guides, which sits upon the throne in all thy acts judging between right and wrong; it is heard in the voices that we hear in our own ears, enabling in us earthly sounds to distinguish between modes of action. In all these we hear the voice of God. It is the voice of hope and victory. It is the voice of claim between right and wrong. It has been called "The perceptible guidance of the Holy Spirit." To obey these voices is to obey God's voice, and it means that we shall find God everywhere present and active in life, nature, and human affairs. Let us all praise God.

Prayer—Our Father, we confess our faults and shortcomings. We are so far from Thee and so far from being what we ought to be. Dear God, draw nigh unto us. Make Thyself real to us. Make our ears and eyes sensitive to Thee and Thy voice. Make us Thine forever.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

HEARING GOD'S VOICE.

"After the fire, a still, small voice."—I Kings 19:12.

"I hear it often in the dark,
I hear it in the light,—
Where is the voice that comes to me
With such a quiet might?
It seems but echo to my thought,
And yet beyond the stars!
It seems a heart-beat in a hush,
And yet the planet jars.

"O may it be that far within
My inmost soul there lies
A spirit-sky that opens with Those voices of surprise.
Thy heaven is mine—my very soul!
Thy words are sweet and strong;
They fill my inward silences
With music and with song."

"They send me challenges to right,
And land rebuke my ill;
They ring my bells of victory;
They breathe my "peace be still!"
They ever seem to say, 'My child,
Why seek me so all day?
Now journey inward to thyself,
And listen by the way.'"

Caroline Stephens.

Prayer—O Lord, give us an immediate presence of Thine which points the way and completes our lives. Lead us gently step by step to the right or to the left as right may be, and when we have crossed the other side of the gulf which separates the seen from the unseen, may we understand that all that matters is faithfulness to his voice. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT AND DIRECTION.

"In all thy ways acknowledge him and he shall direct thy path."—Prov. 3:6.

This Scripture is another simple secret in salvation. First of all Jesus Himself is our example of acknowledging the Lord. Whenever He was about to do something, He looked to the Father, first thanking Him for His watchcare and guidance, second acknowledging His love and power, and then asking for what He wanted. In it all He cast His all upon the Father, and the Father was a perpetual reality to Him.

To be sure, the Father's way for His son was sometimes a bitter way,—it was a way of the cross, and that was no pleasure vacation to Him; it was often the way of bitterness, but that bitterness brought love and saving grace. It has ever been thus, even in the experience of humanity.

It is a very simple thing to acknowledge God, and Jesus the Saviour, in all His ways; and that is laid down as the simple condition of having His guidance throughout our lives. But it is not so easy a thing to do. We are afraid of what others will think. We do not wish to be disagreeable to our company. The fact is that God is more acceptable to the company than we are apt to feel. But still and all, to be acknowledging God in every event and every affair of life is hard. But it can be done, and it is easier than we think. It takes vision of God, an understanding of His purpose for us, a consciousness of His presence, a feeling of certainty of the fulfillment of His promises, and an unreserved consecration to the cause.

Prayer—Dear God, give us courage to love Thee and serve Thee, and acknowledge Thee in our ways.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

DIVINE DIFFICULTIES.

"There is nothing too hard for thee."—Jeremiah 32:16-25.

The Chaldeans were laying terrible siege to Jerusalem, and yet the Lord bade Jeremiah buy an ancestral field far beyond the gates of the beleaguered city. It seemed impossible that the prophet should ever see the field. He seemed to be throwing his money away. Nevertheless he bought the field at the word of the Lord, for, as he said in his prayer to God, "There is nothing too hard for Thee." Jehovah could drive the Chaldeans away, and Jehovah did.

But there are some things which God cannot do. God, for instance, could not have compelled Jeremiah to obey him and buy that field. The act was an act of faith, and faith cannot be forced. God cannot break his own laws, be false to His own nature. Such things are too hard for God, and we are glad that they are. But nothing that is for man's good is too hard for Him that created man.

Prayer—So we listen for Thy commands. So we believe Thy promises. So we trust Thine omnipotence, O our God. So we give our lives into Thy keeping.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

WE WANT TO BE TEMPTED!

"It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God."—Mark 10:17-31.

Do we really believe Christ in this matter of the perils of riches? Do we not all in our hearts wish to be wealthy? Do any of us shrink from the idea of great possessions? Do we not rather long for them?

Christ taught us to pray, "Lead us not into temptation," and all the wise and holy men who have followed Him agree that riches constitute one of the most severe temptations of the soul. Nevertheless the heart prayer of most men, even of Christians, is, "Lead us into this temptation; and the more of it, the better." A kind fortune may refuse wealth to us, but bitter discontent fills our souls.

No wonder Christ cannot trust us with great possessions, when He sees how they would possess us, how deeply the very thought of them possesses us!

Prayer—Lord, help us to fix our affections on things above, not on the things of earth; on the enduring things and not on the trivialities of time.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

THE SUN'S PULPIT.

sults of such wrong choices have brought evil. The evil is not therefore the direct purpose of God but is because of his loving purpose to develop character in free spirits. He has not made his children unmoral, unable to sin, for such creatures would also be unable to make right choices. Right and wrong, good and evil, have no moral meaning for machines. Our morality and our immorality are alike possible because we are made in God's image, free to choose good or evil. Paul, in the face of all the horrors of his own age, sums up the answer of Christian faith to the problem of evil when he says: "We know that to them who love God all things work together for good."

II. My Christian Belief About Man.

My belief about man is defined by my belief in Christ as "the first-born among many brethren." The sinner is a lost son in a far country. In the world as we see it, we see man at the head of the scale of creatures, the goal of creation, with the power to perceive obligation and conscious of failure and sin. This perception of obligation and consciousness of failure imply the freedom of the will. We ought because we can. We can because we ought.

The attitude of God to man is revealed by Jesus. God's purpose is as yet defeated, but He is still the loving Father, though the son may be lost in a far country. He ever seeks to reclaim his lost sons. When they return to the Father's house he gladly receives them. The supreme means of this recovery and reconciliation is the atoning life of Christ.

The way in which this atoning work of Christ becomes effective has been much debated. The New Testament has no definite philosophical theory of the Atonement. That "God was in Christ reconciling men unto himself," is a fact of experience, whatever the explanation. It is attested by every Christian and abundantly witnessed to by the New Testament. The fact is important rather than its explanation. Men have been thus reconciled to God whose theories about salvation have widely differed. None of the historic theories of the Atonement seem to me to be adequate to explain the fact that coming face to face with Christ can work the miracle of grace. Christ's death did not, as it seems to me, satisfy the claims of the devil, nor render a satisfaction for the sake of God's honor, or pay a debt due to the holiness and law of God, or serve as a penal example that the government of God should not be discredited, though all of these explanations have been accepted in the past ages of church history. Nor is it enough to say that the moral character of Christ as an example of obedience moves men to be good. This is of course true; but more than this is true. Christ's death, in the light of His life, helps us to realize the meaning of sin and the love of God so that we repent and turn to God. Only such a turning away from sin to God which Christ thus effects can fulfill the purpose of God. When we share in Christ's experience on the Cross, we most completely share in his experience of God. My best understanding of the atoning work of Christ is given in the words of Paul: "We all, with unveiled face, beholding as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are transformed into the same image (from character to character) from glory to glory."—II Cor. 3:18.

III. My Christian Beliefs About the Social Order.

Not only do I affirm the Lordship of Jesus as the one who brings his disciples into right relations with God as individuals, but I believe that he takes away the sin of the world by his influence on the social order. He taught his disciples to pray that the Kingdom of God might come on earth. The Fatherhood of God means the Brotherhood of Man. Throughout the centuries this faith has found expression in missions to the ends of the earth. With a modified emphasis, due to our growing knowledge of what brotherhood means, this missionary program must go forward. Though as a Congregationalist I believe that each Church is properly independent in its own community, I also believe that each Church is a part of the Universal Christian Church, and I therefore affirm the obligations of fellowship in the great world-wide enterprises of the Kingdom. I do not understand how any believer in Christ can refuse to share in his program for all the people of the earth.

But the modern sense of the meaning of the Brotherhood of Man makes us face new problems in the midst of our own community, our own state, our own nation; problems that are present in every civilized land under the sun. Our new social consciousness and our new means of communication make the old Roman saying that "we count nothing alien that is human" true in a sense that Terence never dreamed. The radio and the airship have scrapped all our old ideas about isolation. Chinese walls between nations are impossible. The problems of our common humanity are all our problems. War, disease, poverty, race hatred,—such are the enemies of our common humanity which are to be overcome by the Gospel of Christ. Sin is today something more than individual impiety. The sociology of Christian brotherhood is as much a part of the Gospel as the psychology of conversion. We must dedicate ourselves in a crusade for a Christ-like control of society.

The clamor against social control in the name of liberty is futile. Complete individual liberty under the laissez-faire theory of government is as dead as the dodo. The freedom of the individual possible for Robinson Crusoe before the man Friday invaded the solitude of his lonely island is nowhere possible today. Every man for himself and unrestrained free competition would mean immediate chaos. Just as motoring in a congested city area is possible only when controlled and planned with traffic lights and officers to direct drivers, so business and industry in modern life will be safe for individuals and for society only when planned and controlled. The famous question of Cain, "Am I my brother's keeper?" is not possible for a Christian. The only questions for us to ask about social control are as to the nature of our planned society.

It is the business of the followers of Jesus to insist that our social planning shall safeguard the freedom of the whole family. Are our brothers free? In this connection we recall the famous remark that my freedom to use my fist ends at another man's nose. Our world today is so complex that one man's unwise act may injure thousands. Our liberties depend upon and are limited by our social necessities. To safeguard the freedom of all of us means limiting the liberty of each of us. Any religion which ignores the meaning of the prayer that the Kingdom of God may come on earth and tries to solace the disinherited by the hopes of comfort in a future heaven deserves the scornful title, "the opiate of the people." But make no mistake in this matter of social planning. To remake or re-think the world in the spirit of Jesus means the facing of ingrained prejudices.

There are at least four areas of social strain and peril which give deep concern today. International discord with the peril of war threatens the foundations of civilization. Interracial antagonisms breed hatreds and contempt which foment all manner of conflicts. Industrial revolution in methods of production, with a resultant antagonism between capital and labor, and its perils of injustice, plunges the nation into intermittent civil war. Agriculture which is at the basis of all our living has so far failed to insure

Christian Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

Thanksgiving will soon be here. I am wondering if you are planning to raise a large Thanksgiving offering this year in your church? If you will come and visit the Orphanage and see these bright little children just wishing for an opportunity to make good in life you will go back to your church and be a booster for the Orphanage and you will do your best to raise the largest offering ever raised in your church.

Who should be interested in making this offering large this year?

Every father should be interested because these little boys here are some father's child.

Every mother should be interested because every little girl here is some mother's child. If you should be taken from your little boys and girls and it became necessary to send them to the Orphanage don't you think if it were possible for you to know it in the other world, it would make you a little happier if you knew that somebody made it possible for your child to have a home training, and a chance in life.

Then every boy and girl in our entire denomination should be interested because these are boys and girls who have been unfortunate.

Now if we can get all the fathers and mothers, all the boys and girls, to take a part in this undertaking we will raise the ten thousand dollars.

Be a booster for the Orphanage for October, November and December and boost and work till I tell you we have reached the goal.

If any of the good women, old or young, have good second-hand dresses or coats you don't need, send them to us. We do need them. We will appreciate them.

A young lady sent us a beautiful coat a few days ago. She wanted a new coat and sent this one to us. Just as nice as new and one of our girls was happy to get it. It saved us buying a new one.

BEYOND THE RANGES.

"There's no sense in going further—it's the end of cultivation,
So they said, and I believed it—broke my land and sowed my crops—
Built my barns and strung my fences in the little border station
Tucked away below the foothills where the trails run out and stop.

"Till a Voice as bad as Conscience rang interminable changes,
On one everlasting Whisper, day and night, repeated—so:
'Something hidden. Go and find it. Go and look behind the Ranges.
Something lost behind the Ranges. Lost and waiting for you. Go!"

THE SUN'S PULPIT.

the producers of food of a living that all that the best minds have been able to suggest is that the farmers be paid for destroying their crops and their cattle. Thus, in the midst of unexampled plenty, our failure to make a fair distribution of the products of our farms and factories has plunged us all into one of the worst depressions in history. For all our common sin in these four fields of the nation's life, let us confess our faults and seek a better way.

It is not the business of the preacher or the church to write the laws which shall correct these abuses in these four fields of life; but, whenever, and wherever the attitude and institutions of society are unbrotherly, it is the duty of a disciple of Christ to proclaim the message of Jesus and to work for the coming of the Kingdom of God, the realm of good will. Those who prove by social iniquity and those who are blinded by racial and international prejudices will call us Reds and Bolshhevists and declare that the Church should stick to the "simple gospel" and leave matters of public policy alone. Such objectors do not know the meaning of the Gospel, which is simply the good news that God is our Father and that all men are brothers. He who says that the Sermon on the Mount is not practical is a heretic. As slavery and piracy were banished by the growing power of Christianity, so must war, industrial strife, and the whole brood of vampires which prey upon the vitals of the race be destroyed by the intelligent and brave application of the teachings of Jesus. These evils are not an abiding part of the plan of God for his children. We are to believe in Christ as the Lamb of God who is taking away the sin of the world. To neglect or obscure the social teachings of Jesus in this crisis would be fatal to the church.

The great commission of our Lord to go into all the world and preach the good news of God's love, teaching men everywhere to do all that Christ had commanded rings also with a promise. He said: "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the consummation of the age." Therefore I believe that Christ is now with his Church, leading in the social development of this bewildering age. We have many revelations of his presence, many apocalypses—one Parousia. As we teach His precepts of brotherhood, we are not alone. His Spirit is with us and the Kingdom cometh in the power of His Presence. It is the radiant power of this truth that is at the bottom of all that is good in the Oxford movement. As we share our vision of His Presence and commit our lives to the leadership of His Spirit we shall be able not only to be changed in our own inner lives,—we shall be able to change this corrupt social order into the Christian way of life.

But the Brotherhood of the children of God is not limited to this earth. We are to pray that God's will may be done on earth as it is in heaven. The risen life of Christ brings us into such an assurance of the reality of our communion with God that we are no longer under bondage to the fear of death. Nothing can separate us from this eternal fellowship. We share in the glorified triumphant life of our risen Lord who brings life and immortality to light in the Gospel, the glad good news of the love of our Father, God.

This then is my message. God is our Father and we are all brothers. The possibility of friendship with God is the good news which I am commissioned to preach. All men can enter this redemptive comradeship with Jesus in bringing in the realm of good will. The redemptive, renewing power of the friendship of Jesus is the greatest fact in the universe. To bring men face to face with Jesus Christ that they may know him and the power of his risen glorified life is the deepest personal joy that a man can know and the largest social service that he can render. To this faith in God, Man, and the Coming Kingdom of good will I come through Jesus Christ, who at the close of his earthly ministry described his relations with his disciples by the name of friendship, saying, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. Ye are my friends."

INGERSOLL AND ALCOHOL.

I believe that every man who makes whiskey is demoralized. I believe to a certain degree it demoralizes those who make it, those who sell it, and those who drink it. I believe from the time it issues from the coiled and poisonous worm of the distillery until it empties into the hell of crime, dishonor and death that it demoralizes everybody that it touches. I do not believe anybody can contemplate the subject without becoming prejudiced against this liquor crime. All we have to do is to think of the wrecks upon either bank of the stream of death—of the suicides, of the insanity, of the poverty, of the ignorance, of the distress, of the children tugging at the faded dresses of weeping and despairing wives, asking for bread; of the men of genius it has wrecked; the millions struggling with imaginary serpents produced by this devilish thing. And when you think of the jails, of the almshouses, of the asylums, of the prisons, of the scaffolds upon either bank, I do not wonder that every thoughtful man is prejudiced against the damned stuff called alcohol.—Robert Ingersoll.

OBITUARIES

ALDRIDGE.

Mr. Edward Lee Aldridge was born July 29, 1864 and departed this life September 17, 1934 at the age of 70 years, 1 month and 19 days. He was a native of Caswell County, N. C.

Twice he was married; first to Miss Alice Smith who lived only a short while. His second marriage was to Miss Mamie Anderson. To this latter union were born five children; William Thatch, Edward Glenn, Roger Anderson, Quinten Anderson and Miss Annie Elizabeth Aldridge. Besides his devoted wife and children who survive, there are three brothers and one sister and two grandchildren. A number of relatives and a host of friends mourn his death.

Bro. Aldridge was an industrious farmer, a clever citizen and an excellent neighbor, being highly esteemed by all who knew him. He professed faith in Christ in 1887 and joined Concord Christian Church where he was a useful member until death.

In 1914 he was chosen Treasurer by his church which position he held continuously and faithfully to the end. In October, 1922 he was elected to the office of a deacon and ordained by his pastor. He was faithful to attend all church meetings. Also he was a loyal member of Jr. O. U. A. M., which organization conducted a service at the grave.

The floral offering was very generous and a large crowd was in attendance. Funeral service was in charge of the pastor.

He will be greatly missed. May the Lord promote his ideals and influence. The Lord comfort the loved ones is our sincere prayer.

L. L. WYRICK.

ELIXSON.

Cornelius Spencer Ellixson, son of Joseph and Adelia Ellixson, was born in Granville County, N. C., December 2, 1862 and died at his home near Virgilina, Va., September 27, 1934. Age seventy-one years, nine months and twenty-five days.

On March 2, 1902, he married Miss Nellie Kidd of Virgilina, Va., who survives him together with eight children, five sons and three daughters; one brother, Walter H. Ellixson, of Kentucky.

Bro. Ellixson professed religion and joined Union Christian Church during the Easter meeting in 1922. He was a mechanic and of inventive genius. When the mining business was booming in this section he was connected with the same. For several years he had been an invalid and a great sufferer till some two years ago he began to rally and was able to put by his crutches and do light work on his farm. It was during his years of affliction that he grew more spiritually minded and at times his cup of joy overflowed and he would shout his praise for what God had done in relieving his suffering and blessing his soul. The funeral was at Union Christian Church, conducted by the writer and Rev. E. R. Harris of the Baptist Church and his body was laid to rest in the town cemetery. He was a devoted husband and father and a kind neighbor, especially in sickness.

Religious Census At Penn. University.—

What is believed to be the first religious census ever taken of the University of Pennsylvania's entire student body, undergraduate and graduate, is now being conducted in connection with the fall enrollment, according to the Rev. W. Brooke Stabler, University Chaplain and Boardman Lecturer on Christian Ethics. The census is designed to facilitate the program of religious activities on the campus. The information obtained will be made available to the university chaplain and to those who are conducting religious work among the Roman Catholic, Jewish and Protestant students.—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

Around the World in Eighty Days.—

What schoolboy or schoolgirl of years gone by has not read and been thrilled by Jules Verne's "Around the World in Eighty Days"? Even by the stretch of imagination it seemed almost an impossibility, but it was done in fiction. Yet on Tuesday of this week, headlines in the daily press announced that aviators had won a prize of $50,000.00 by going half-around the world in "two days, 22 hours, and 25 minutes." Two Englishmen, C. W. A. Scott and Campbell Black, by name, landed in Melbourne, Australia at 3:34 P. M. Australian time, after flying from London, a distance of 11,300 miles, in less than three days. Again the adage proves true that truth is stranger than fiction. What if Jules Verne could be among the 30,000 waiters that greeted these men upon their arrival.

Organized Labor Seeks Farm Workers.—

Plans of the American Federation of Labor to bring agricultural regions within the scope of strikes and conflict which have disturbed industrial centers in recent years were revealed in the report of the Executive Council to the Federation's convention in San Francisco last week. "The entire agricultural labor population has so far been left without protection in regard to wages, hours, organizations, or in dealing with employers," the report said. "Some extension of the National Recovery Act to the field of agricultural labor should be made, either through a broadening of the act now in existence, or a supplementary act pertaining to agricultural labor." The Federation made its first move toward farm labor in the Wagner Labor Board bill last session of Congress, but again agricultural communities were eliminated as they had been in the past. This new maneuver would seek specific legislation opening these fields to dues-paying members of the Federation.—Ex.

Bishop Blames "Lustful Generation".—

In the "Bishop's Pastoral," read in closing the fifty-first triennial session of the General Episcopal Convention, Rt. Rev. Bishop James E. Freeman of Washington, D. C., appealed to youth to check the "evil and lustful ways" of a "wicked and adulterous generation" which has "sapped the strength, impaired the confidence, exhausted the reserves and reduced to a low plane of importance this nation . . ." Calling for a militant discipleship to "take a firm stand against the evils that threaten the very security of church and state," the pastoral continued: "Ethical and moral standards have suffered grave impairment in this postwar age and it is our conviction that this departure from ways and practices that are clean and wholesome is a primary contributing cause of the long-continued depression. We have had the conceit that America, with its vast estate and its incomparable ingenuity, could survive misfortune and disaster. . . . We have poured out of our treasure in prodigal measure. . . . We have invoked the cooperative influence of commerce and industry, we have appealed to the patience and loyalty of our people, but we still linger in the shadow of a disillusioned and distracted world."

The American Legion and the Bonus.—

The American Legion is meeting this week at Miami, Florida, and when the Legion meets, the Bonus question arises. When this issue of THE SUN goes to press, there will have been no definite action taken, but indications are that there will be a strong effort made to have the Legion ask for its immediate payment. On the other hand, there are those who are prominent in the Legion, who think that it would be a serious mistake for them to make any demands for immediate settlement of the certificates which mature in 1945. Among these are Senator Frederick Steiwer of Oregon and Past National Commander Louis Johnson of West Virginia. Senator Steiwer, addressing the convention on Monday said: "The legion can, with the utmost propriety, stand for a program of justice to its disabled comrades, but . . . I am doubtful of the ethics of able-bodied men making a demand for immediate cash payment of claims not yet due." But he added that payment could be made without "neglect of those in distress and with definite benefit to the people of the entire nation." President Roosevelt, in an address at Roanoke, Va., last week, implied that the payment of the bonus at this time would seriously hamper relief work.

AAA and Cotton Control.—

The AAA has practically announced that there will be a continuation of the cotton control program during the coming year. The control program of this year, together with the further curtailment caused by drought, will bring the total of the domestic crop down to less than 10,000,000 bales. Under normal conditions a crop of this size would be the cause for higher prices, but there are two very important factors that are holding the price down. The first is that the government has virtually pegged the price by setting the federal loan figure at 12 cents. The other and more formidable factor is the fact that for the first time since the War between the States, the foreign-grown cotton crop has exceeded the American crop. This year it is estimated that the total cotton crop produced outside of the United States will exceed 13,000,000. This means that the world is establishing its independence of the South for its supply of cotton. It seems that regardless of the reduction of the American crop, there will be sufficient cotton raised. The question will ultimately be who will raise the cotton? It will mean that the American farmer must ultimately be satisfied with a tariff-protected local market, or that he must raise more cotton, more cheaply than the rest of the world can do it. The logical remedy will be, not increase in price, not curtailment of crop, but more efficient means of production.

Marked Payrolls.—

Sometime ago the Burgess Battery Co., of Freeport, Ill., decided by means of a "marked payroll" to emphasize to everyone its important position in its home town. Next it was the Standard Oil Company of Ohio which decided to try the experiment. On certain pay days during the latter part of the summer, no checks or greenbacks went to local employees, but weighty bags of silver dollars. It was not an attempt to popularize silver, but it was explained as a "Flow of Money Test." Nine Ohio towns were selected for this test, ranging in size from Marion's 31,000 to Toledo's 290,000. The results of the test are given in the current issue of Business Week, and prove interesting: "Figures from eight of the nine communities show that, on an average, nearly 23% of the test payroll went for food. Rent was next highest with 15.1%, followed by 14.7% for insurance, savings, building and loan, and finance company payments. Department stores came in for a 10.1% slice, utilities and fuel 7.4%, and automobile supplies and accessories 7%. Furniture got a 3.5% portion, doctors and dairies 2.5% each, drug stores 1.5% and theatres 1%. There were wide variations, however. In Mansfield only 18% of the purse went for food, while the Portsmouth (with a difference in population of only 9,000) proportion was 27%. Rent ranged from 9.5% in Marion to 20.5% in Portsmouth; department store expenditures varied from 8% to 16%. Contrary to expectations, expenses in the larger cities were not greater than in the smaller ones." In explaining the use of silver dollars for the test, it was said that they "were used because they were easily traced, being about as common in Ohio as ostrich farms."

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Rev. Hermon Eldredge, Dayton, Ohio, is this week conducting a series of meetings at Elon College, N. C. Mr. Eldredge knows and appeals to young people especially in a very fetching manner.

We are glad to report that Dr. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, who has been away in a sanatorium some weeks, is very much improved and hopes to return to his church work and home next week.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill has been participating in programs observing Religious Education Week, speaking especially at St. Petersburg and Melbourne and also has prepared radio addresses on the subject.

Sunday, October 28th is to be observed as Home Coming Day at Apples Chapel, Guilford County, N. C. With all-day services, this historic church will on that day celebrate the 100th Anniversary of its founding.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN with deep regret notes the passing of Rev. Joseph F. McCulloch, D. D., who was for many years editor of the Methodist Protestant Herald. Dr. McCulloch died on the first of this month, at the age of fifty-nine, having been born June 24, 1865.

We welcome back to North Carolina and his native heath, Rev. B. J. Earp and family from the Valley of Virginia, where he has served several churches acceptably the past several years. He comes to Greensboro as pastor of Palm St. and Hines Chapel churches.

The Eastern Virginia Conference meeting next week at Bethlehem Church, near Suffolk, is to be favored with visits from two able and distinguished guests, both of whom are to speak to the Conference; Rev. E. C. Fry, missionary on furlough from Japan and Dr. W. R. Kedzie, Educational Secretary from Chicago.

"The Ministering Master, Studies in the Gospel of Mark," is the book the women are using this year in the devotional part of their Missionary Society programs. The price is 25c the copy, and may be ordered of the Mission Secretary, Elon College, N. C., or direct from the publishers, "Committee on Women's Work," Henry Grady Building, Atlanta, Ga.

Elon College has recently been highly favored with visits from Dr. W. R. Kedzie, Chicago, Sec. of Educational Institutions, and Rev. J. J. Banninga, D. D., missionary on furlough from India, both of whom spoke at College chapel services, and Dr. E. C. Gillette, of Jacksonville, Fla., and Dr. Enoch F. Bell, Editor Missionary Herald, Boston, Mass.

Dr. Clarence A. Vincent, formerly pastor of the church at Winter Park, Florida, is serving as pastor during the winter season at the Community Church at Miami Shores. This church was organized a few years ago by Rev. A. J. Patterson. Mr. Patterson will continue to live in Miami Shores and will attend to his personal business interests in Miami.

Rev. Wm. T. Scott, of our Winston-Salem, N. C., church, writes personally of an interesting event: "On Tuesday night, October 9th, we observed our second birthday, the church having been organized in 1932, October 9th, in a 'Birthday Dinner' at the church. Seventy-five plates were served and Dr. L. E. Smith was the speaker for the occasion. We feel that this event was a real boost to our church, and we used for the first time kitchen and dining room equipment which the women of our Woman's Association have purchased and provided. There seems to be a definite advance of our cause here and personally, I am the most hopeful of a great future work that I have been."

The SUN's Editor has received and gone over with deep interest a program of the Mid-West Regional Meeting of Congregational and Christian Churches in the First Congregational Church, Grinnell College, Grinnell, Iowa, October 23rd-25th. This Mid-West Regional meeting is under the auspices of the Commission on Missions of the General Council and is of a nature of the regional meeting of the Southeast to be held in United Church, Raleigh, N. C., April 30th-May 2, 1935. Here is hoping that our program committee—Rev. F. C. Lester, Chairman—will be able to build a program as attractive and as inviting as the one our Mid-Western constituency are putting on in Iowa this week. The topics covered are of vital interest and the speakers chosen to present the topics are men and women of peculiar fitness and qualification for the task assigned to them.

Our good friend and brother, John C. Dean, of Whistler's Chapel, Quicksburg, Va., writes a note on his own behalf and that of his church and community, that their pastor, Rev. B. J. Earp, is leaving them to accept another field: "Bro. Earp has served our church for some over six years, and we feel very sad that he is leaving us. In his years of service he missed only one appointment and that on account of illness. It was never too cold or the weather too severe or disagreeable for him to find his place in the pulpit. He has done a great work here, and especially has he worked well with and for our young people. Many tear-dimmed eyes of our congregation showed how deeply we regretted to see him leave as he bade us farewell last Sunday night preparatory to his moving to Greensboro, N. C., Monday the 15th. Our hope is that he will do as good work in his field in North Carolina as he did here, for we realize that our loss is Greensboro's gain."

WHO GOES THERE?

*We are the ghosts of a valliant war,
Who goes there in the night,
Across the storm-swept plain?
A million murdered men.*

*Who goes there at the dawn,
Across the sun-swept plain?
We are the hosts of those who swear
It shall not be again.*

FLOWERS' WORK AT LUCAMA, NORTH CAROLINA.

Brethren and sisters of the Freewill Baptist Church who attended the Annual Conference of the Third District of the Freewill Baptist of North Carolina recently gave a fine report of the work that Rev. A. R. Flowers has done at Newsome's Chapel, Lucama, N. C., during the spring and summer. These good Freewill Baptists have been regular attendants at the services held by Brother Flowers and they say it is remarkable how he gets hold on the children and those in the teen ages who attend his services. It has been my privilege to work much with Brother Flowers even from the early years of his ministry and Sunday school work until I retired from active pastoral service.

Brother Flowers is one of the most sincere men in my knowledge in his work for the uplift of humanity; and he has an unusual way of inspiring youth to greater visions.

THESE FORTY YEARS.

(D. L. MOODY STILL SPEAKETH.)

By REV. NORMAN H. CAMP.

Forty years of sowing the precious seed! Forty years of blessing and trusting! Forty years of proving the faithfulness of God! Forty years of fruitful ministry!

Such is the record of The Bible Institute Colportage Association of Chicago, founded by D. L. Moody, which celebrates its fortieth anniversary on November 15th.

It was forty years ago, during his great evangelistic campaigns that Mr. Moody discovered the need of wholesome Christian literature, thoroughly evangelical, yet inexpensive, which could be safely placed in the hands of young converts and those inquiring the way of life. Such literature was notably lacking in the average bookstore of his day, and is even more so today.

After much prayer for guidance, and counsel with Christian workers, Mr. Moody was led to establish The Bible Institute Colportage Association in November of 1894, for the purpose of publishing and disseminating dependable, evangelical books and booklets, Scripture portions, and gospel tracts.

The work was begun in a small way in a basement on La Salle Street, a little north of Chicago Avenue, near to the Bible training school which Mr. Moody had previously founded. A few books of sermons by Spurgeon, Moody, Whittle, and others were published at first, and these became the foundation of that well-known series, the Moody Colportage Library, with over one hundred fifty titles; and of these 10,308,613 copies have been distributed in every state of the Union and in many foreign countries, according to the latest report of the Association. Over 3,000,000 copies of this number, with twenty-five titles, were written in whole or in part by Mr. Moody himself, so that his ministry still continues, and "he being dead yet speaketh."

As the work has grown and the demand for such literature has increased, other cloth bound books, together with the Evangel Booklet series, New Testaments, Gospels, Scripture Portions (including the Pocket Treasury), and gospel tracts have been published from time to time, so that today there are nearly four hundred titles of books and booklets, and over two hundred and fifty titles of tracts issued by the Association; and of these, during the forty years, a grand total of 52,692,350 copies have been distributed. "What will the harvest be?"

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

NORTH CAROLINA WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

The Conference met in First Christian Church, Greensboro, 10 A. M., October 18th. Approximately 250 delegates, the best attendance on record, were present from Missionary Societies in Christian and Congregational Churches throughout the State, some two or three Societies in Halifax County, Va., being represented also. It was a glorious October day and the Conference was in full accord with all that the good day had to offer. Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, was president, Mrs. W. P. Lawrence was secretary and Mrs. W. R. Sellars was treasurer for the Conference. One of the very salient and vital features of the program was the reports from the District Superintendents, seven in number, telling of the work done the past year in the various Societies of their Districts. These District meetings are held in the spring of each year and prepare the way for the Societies as they head toward the annual State meetings in the fall. So the women have seven (District) Conferences in the Spring, in which all local Societies are represented, and the one State Conference in the fall in which all the Districts are represented and take counsel together for the year's work. The theme of the Conference was "Growing Towards God" and Mrs. C. M. Cannon who conducted the impressive worship period had as her topic "Gaining the Heights." We gain the heights as we go upwards and grow towards God.

In reporting for the Department of Spiritual Life, Mrs. W. H. Carroll of the Burlington Society gave an interesting paper on the Book of Mark, which book is to be used by the women in connection with the devotional period of their programs.

Mrs. W. R. Sellars, treasurer, reported that the financial goal for the past year was $4,000.00, and the amount thus far coming into her hands for the year was $3,548.69. The women have the faith to try again and so set as their goal for this year $4,000.00. Here is hoping and believing they will reach it and go over the top also.

During the next year, Mrs. Stanley C. Harrel of Durham, will serve as president, succeeding Mrs. C. H. Rowland, of Greensboro, who has served for the past six years. Mrs. W. P. Lawrence, of Elon College, was named vice president. Mrs. C. H. Stephenson of Raleigh, treasurer, and Mrs. M. R. Ivie of Winston-Salem, secretary.

It was decided that the 23rd annual session of the conference would be held at the Southern Pine Congregational Church next October.

The principal feature of the meeting was the address during the morning of Dr. J. J. Banning, missionary to India, who is now on furlough. Dr. Banning stressed particularly the need for leaders and workers, and dwelt at length upon the conditions in India. He also described the influence exerted upon the people of India by Mahatma Gandhi and pointed out the weak as well as strong points of this influence.

Dr. W. R. Kedzie, education secretary of the General Council was another feature of the program, speaking briefly, but pointedly and practically, at the morning, also at the afternoon session. Dr. Kedzie is not only acquainted with the problems of our educational institutions, but the missionary problems and programs of churches, which problems he discusses with great clarity and efficiency.

Another very interesting feature of the program was the discussion of the study book, "Orientals in American Life, by Albert W. Palmer," the discussion being led by Mrs. L. E. Smith who announced that the prospect was bright for having Dr. Palmer come to us at a date to be fixed for this winter, to teach his book at an all-day session of a called Conference. The Conference voted to arrange for such a meeting, possibly in January, 1935.

The women of the church served a bountiful luncheon for 25 cents the plate in the spacious dining room of the Masonic Temple. It was an hour of feasting and good fellowship. It was indeed a great and good day and Conference.

SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHERS RECOGNIZED

Winston-Salem, N. C., Sunday schools of various denominations made a real event of National Recognition Day for Sunday School Teachers, Sunday, October 7th, under the auspices of the Ministerial Association, the services being held in the afternoon at the Reynolds Memorial Auditorium. Our own pastor, Rev. W. T. Smith had an active part in arranging and directing the program in which practically every church in the city was represented. It was found that 100 teachers had served for twenty years and as long as fifty-seven years, quite a few being in the fortieth year bracket. Dr. Charles E. Smith, pastor, Memorial Presbyterian Church, who presided, declared, truly, that "the teachers were the backbone of the church." The principal address of the occasion was by Dr. H. Shelton Smith of the School of Religion, Duke University, who was introduced to the great audience by Dr. Raymond Smith, director of Religious Education at Centenary Methodist Church. Dr. Shelton Smith used as his theme for the occasion, "Toward a Christian Commonwealth," and, according to the report in the Winston-Salem Daily, which car-most of the heritage of the world's religions pay saying "Our Father." The pagan religions of the world do not have as god or gods those whom, in their worship, they think of or pray to as "Father." Most of the gods that people bow down to are anything else than a father, cruel, cunning, stealthy, threatening, far-off, unapproachable. Jesus' conception of God is wholly different. For Him, God is Father, kind, compassionate, forgiving, tender, inviting, loving. Not only so, but He is "our Father," yours and mine; Father of the widow and the fatherless, the strong and the weak, the saved and the sinning, the Christian and the pagan, our Father. The implication is dynamic and tremendous.

Something happens in a person's life, something in the world's life, when one can truly say and pray, "Our Father." When General Booth went into the dens and dives of sin, shame and squalor of London, and made that sin his sin, that shame his shame, though in himself he was guiltless, and there with those erring and fallen ones prayed, "Our Father," something began to happen in London and in the world. When David Livingstone went into Africa, the "open sore" of the world, making the disease and death of that continent his disease and death, and began there to pray, "Our Father," something began to happen in Africa and in the world. "Thy kingdom come." Yea, verily, God's kingdom does begin to come into this world when one who has attained identifies himself with one who has not attained and begins to pray "Our Father." When the strong identify themselves, in heart, in sympathy, in love, with the weak, and say "Our Father," the virtue goes out from the strong, and the weak are lifted and made whole.

When Christians everywhere realize that the paganism and idolatry of the world is their paganism and idolatry and can say when they pray, "Our Father," the kingdom of heaven will be very near indeed to the kingdom of this earth.

GOOD ADVICE.

How easy it is to blame the driver of an automobile for the accidents that are taking place every day. Every six minutes someone is killed by some accident. Ten are killed every hour, two hundred and forty every day. So far as accidental deaths due to automobile hazards are concerned, they increased from 29,196 in 1932 to 29,900 in 1933. Since June, 1933, such deaths have increased. Not all accidents are due to automobiles but vast numbers are. Think of it, more than seven thousand people are killed every year in railroad accidents. I have heard it stated that not less than twenty-four thousand people are killed every year by accidents that occur in their homes. These facts and figures are staggering, sure enough. It is not pleasant to contemplate such facts, but we might as well face them as they are.

Many of these accidents might have been prevented, and so long as that is so we ought to do something to try to prevent them. All over the country groups of socially minded people are trying to help prevent accidents. We might give drivers of automobiles some suggestions, but this article is written primarily for the pedestrian. If we could make up our minds not to hurry it would prevent many accidents. Drivers should observe all signal lights and stop signs, of course, but those who walk along the sidewalks and cross the streets should cooperate with drivers in being careful.

One should stop, look and listen before crossing a street, or a railway track. Yesterday in our city, a man walked deliberately into a moving train and was killed. Later it was found that he was deaf. It is dangerous for such a man to cross streets or tracks alone. Where there are no sidewalks and walking on the street is necessary, walk on the left facing traffic. It pays to wait a moment before venturing out among moving cars. Be cautious, be thoughtful, and one may save a life.

Recently we have been trying to teach the children in our Sunday schools lessons of this kind.

Children seem to get the worst of these accidents. In a recent statement made by an insurance company, from 5 years of age through 14 years of age, accidents kill more boys than do all the communicable diseases combined, including influenza, pneumonia and tuberculosis. This is two and one half times greater than deaths of girls from similar accidents. Let us instruct the children to be careful.

BARRETT'S CHURCH AND OUR HISTORY.

A part of the address delivered at Barrett's Church Sunday September 30, 1934 at the Home Coming of the church, by W. E. MacClenny, Church Historian, Suffolk, Va. After tracing the history of the origin of the Christian Church in the South, telling of the invitation of the brethren in a section known as below (which he believes was Eastern Virginia), to the early Christians in session at the Manakin Town, Va., in 1793, and of sending of the two ministers to instruct those who were interested in the new organization, and of their marvelous success, an account of the Conference in Surry County, Va., was given when the principles of the Christian Church were adopted, and of the meetings that were held from time to time by the new organization, and then an outline of the early Christian History in Eastern Virginia up to 1818, the speaker then took up the history of the local church and the leaders that it has furnished the church as follows:

We come now to what this local church, Old Barrett's, has done for the denomination. The history of the local church was published in detail in The Wakefield Enterprise, June 21, 1917, over the signature of Miss Iola Hedgepeth, now Mrs. Meredith of Fancy Gap, Virginia. This gives more of the facts about the local history than I could hope to give. From it we learn that the first house was erected on the farm of Rev. Burwell Barrett, that he and his wife gave the deed in 1823 for the lot on which the church had been built many years before. The church was well established before 1808, and was visited by Rev. Joseph Thomas on his preaching tours in Eastern Virginia. It may have been the very first Christian Church that was built in this section. Rev. Burwell Barrett was the pastor on Sunday, and like many others of the primitive churches it was used in the week as a school-house and the pastor was the teacher. The early members were the pastor and his family, Polly Harnes and her mother, the Travises, Wellonses, Cokers, Stephensons and others. The preaching Sunday was the 4th Sunday in each month, and has been so most of the time of the church's existence. As was the custom the larger girls kept the church and school-house in order and took great pride in doing it. The larger boys kept the fires in the winter time. In 1888 the present building was erected. The records of the church for the most of its life have not been found.

The history of the local church, and its customs were similar to those of other churches in this section. A great many of the people walked to the church, and in the summer time carried their shoes and stockings in their hands until they were near the church and then put them on, and when they had arrived at the same place returning they were taken off and carried back home in their hands. There were two sections in the old church, one for the masters and the other for their slaves. This latter custom continued until after 1865, when the colored people met under a willow tree in the church yard and organized them a separate organization. At first many of the vehicles were ox carts according to Mrs. Meredith, and then came a few stick gigs, later a few buggies and finally the automobiles came as we have them today.

The Eastern Virginia Christian Conference has met at Old Barrett's five times; 1820, 1830, 1838, 1878 and 1917. 1933 membership 75. This church is the mother of Mars Hill which was of short duration, and of Oak Level that later fell into the hands of the Methodist Episcopal Church and then became extinct. Burton's Grove, another daughter, is still in good condition, with a membership in 1933 of 51.

While this church has a peculiar location it has done more to furnish leadership for the Christian Church in this section of Virginia than any other church. It might be truthfully said that our greatest leaders have been the products of this church. Rev. Burwell Barrett, the organizer and builder, was one of the first ministers in this section to cast his lot with the Christians, and to go to work to build up the cause in this community and section. He was not only a minister, but he was a public spirited man. A man whom his friends and neighbors could trust to attend to any business for them. In my research work along other than church lines the name of Burwell Barrett has been often found holding the confidence of his fellow men. He often went to Petersburg and Richmond on state business for his neighbors to sign for Land Bounty Warrants given to the soldiers of the Revolution. In your marriage register in your County Clerk's Office, he appears as the marrying parson of this section. He preached to the local churches on Sundays and taught school in the week, and his influence continued to grow. In his conference work he was a leader, present at the organization of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference in 1818, and at the first session of 1819. In 1822 he was President of the Conference and again in 1826, 1827, 1830 and 1834, the year before his death. So closely associated was the name "Barrett" and the Christian Church in Virginia in the early days that in some places the Christians were called "The Barrett Society." See deed for Spring Hill Church lot.

Not only did he become a leader of other men, but he looked well after his own household, and lived to see his son, Rev. Mills Barrett become the leader of his church. It is said of Rev. Burwell Barrett that he was a plain, practical preacher and lived the gospel he professed. He possessed great influence, which was never exerted except for the general good. Energetic, talented, determined, and zealous, he was conscientious in the discharge of his duty, whether with few or with many. For many years before his death, he was looked upon as authority in matters pertaining to the church and his denomination. As a leader, Rev. Burwell Barrett was followed by his son, Rev. Mills Barrett, born December 15, 1788. Converted in 1809 under the preaching of Rev. Joseph Thomas at his father's house. Began to preach as the companion of Rev. Joseph Thomas the white pilgrim. He traveled in 1810 and preached through Warren, Greenville, Orange and Caswell counties, North Carolina. He crossed over the Dan river into Halifax County, Va., and then returned through Caswell, Rockingham and Guilford and Orange Counties. He became a powerful revivalist. He was a regular attendant on the general meetings of the church, was present in 1810, when the division took place. He was at and preached to the general meeting of 1811. When the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference was organized in 1819, he was the first president at Cypress Chapel; he served again at Republican Chapel in 1819 and served again in

SUFFOLK LETTER.

As the Conference season in the Southern Convention requires the preparation of annual reports by ministers and churches, one easily thinks of the place of a minister in modern life. The work of a minister is more complex and more difficult than in former years. Of course the people in the country districts have better roads, and the automobile has taken the place of the saddle horse and the buggy ride. Methods of travel are much easier than they were thirty or forty years ago.

But the advance of public education has changed the ideas and ideals of the people in the country and city. The daily newspaper has made its contribution to general information, and the extension of postal facilities has increased the contacts of distant people and communities. This has affected the country minister more than the city pastor. The country preacher can no longer depend upon the Lord and the inspiration of the moment for a sermon. He must be trained. And he must read and study. In many sections the country churches require a minister to be well trained and qualified to equal the city pastor in his pulpit work.

After serving for more than thirty years as a member of the Committee on Education, it is interesting to recall and meditate upon the experiences of these years. Many types of people seek admission into the ranks of the ministry. One day a young man came into a meeting of this Committee when Dr. Staley was Chairman. He was given an opportunity to state his experience and call to the ministry. During this recital he was moved with emotion. Tears ran down his cheeks as he told of his great desire to go out and preach the Gospel. Dr. Staley listened attentively to this testimony. Then in a quiet way Dr. Staley asked him: "What do you want us to do?" The candidate replied: "I want to be licensed to preach." "What are your educational qualifications, and how much have you been to school?" "Are you a High School graduate?" "No." "Are you prepared to go to College?" "No." "Do you plan to enter College," the Dr. continued, "if we admit you into the Biblical Class?" "No, I want to preach."

Then Dr. Staley, in his own inimitable way, proceeded to give this brother a friendly talk about his plans and work. He said among other things: "When God calls a man to preach, he usually calls a man with a good heart, a good character and a good mind. If a man is not willing to be consecrated and fully prepare himself for his work, it is useless to begin. You will probably make a good layman; but you will be a poor preacher. At first you may cry over your experience, and enjoy it. If you fail to prepare yourself, and then fail as a minister, someone will cry over you. It is better to be a good layman than a poor preacher." The man did not come back.

The church needs ministers. There is a great work to be done by real prophets of God. There are probably an adequate number of men to supply the pulpits in this country. But it is not a matter of having someone to conduct a service and preach a second-rate sermon. The people need the Gospel. The more intelligent and educated they become the greater their spiritual needs. And they need more than a sermon; they are hungry for a spiritual personality and a consecrated fellowship. How can a man of God be satisfied with lecturing on political and economic questions before a congregation of people who are hungry for the Word of God and the Spirit of God?

It is a great privilege to be a minister of the Gospel. And it is a greater privilege to have access to human hearts, and extend sympathy and spiritual fellowship in an hour of great distress. No financial compensation can be compared to this high and holy privilege. The man who would consider some other profession or occupation on the basis of increased financial remuneration is not worthy of being a minister. A minister should be so loyal to his call to preach that no other field of service is inviting to him, unless he is unable to secure work. I. W. JOHNSON.

THE CITIZEN OF TOMORROW

The citizen of tomorrow will live in a different world to that of the citizen of yesterday. If he is to cope with the conditions of the world of tomorrow, he, of necessity, must have the qualifications that differ from those of the citizen of yesterday. Heredity plays its part in the making of men and women, but environment also makes its contribution. The citizen of tomorrow will be rather definitely the product of the schools of today. Training has much to do with the influence and power of the individual in his relations in life. If a man is to lead a professional career successfully, he must be adequately trained for that particular profession. One who spends his days of preparation in the field of mathematics could hardly be expected to be efficient in the field of medicine.

More and more, the schools and colleges are specializing in their training. It is the duty of the school to discover, if possible, the dominating talents of an individual and guide him into the field of activity most suited to his abilities. The average college today offers thorough courses in Education, Philosophy, Science, Mathematics, Languages, etc. The college curriculum for this day is far broader and infinitely more elastic than in previous days. This much should be said to the credit of those who have been the guiding spirits in determining present-day curricula for schools and colleges. Whatever profession a young man or a young woman wishes to be prepared for today, there will be offered somewhere in some college a course designed to fit him for his particular responsibility.

More and more, I think, the world will be looking to the products of a college campus to do its work and solve its problems. Dishonesty in business, crookedness in politics, discrimination in society, and narrowness in religion will not be corrected by statute laws, political pronouncements, or public utterances, but will be corrected by education. For instance, sectional feelings resulting from previous conflicts are not likely to disappear by the favor of the author, but will be corrected by bringing together on a college campus young people from these different sections of the country, where they study together, play together, work together, and socialize. Under such conditions, they understand each other and find that they are not essentially different. The light begins to dawn and prejudices to disappear; and they find that, after all, they are members of a great race and citizens of a great country. If racial injustices are to be corrected, they will be corrected by education and not by the making or annulling of laws. If religious inconsistencies are to disappear from our daily practices, they will be banished, not by theological pronouncement or doctrinal conformity, but by intimate fellowship in the preparation for the challenging tasks of the church and of society. The college campus plainly becomes the training ground for the broad and efficient citizen of tomorrow's world.

At Elon College, we have set up a program and issued a challenge to the adventurous youth of this day to come and put themselves on this program to be trained and fitted for the demands of an enlarging civilization. Prejudices of yesterday, as well as narrow inefficiencies, must give away to the broader and more aggressive conceptions of citizenship and of life.

To Elon they have come in larger numbers than in recent years. From the registrar comes the report that, to date 351 have matriculated at Elon College. Only three years in the history of the institution has the enrollment exceeded this number as of even date. And, a very fine group of young people they are. They represent practically every section of our country, coming from thirteen different states in the union. They have a variety of religious backgrounds—Jew, Catholic, and practically every brand of protestantism in this country. They mingle together, they work together, they play together, they worship together; and out of this atmosphere, there is bound to come a better understanding and a better citizen.

The citizen of tomorrow, if successful, must have a better understanding of God and of His will. The atmosphere of Elon College is calculated to eliminate radical and criminal acts from society. The spiritual force and religious atmosphere here are calculated to remake living and to give to the individual an ambition for goodness and benevolences, and to make his life tell in the things that are worthwhile. Elon College's curriculum is built for this purpose. The instruction of classroom and the spirit of the chapel are calculated to point the way to the highest and best in life.

The citizen of tomorrow must, to be the type of citizen that he should, not only know himself and his fellowman but must know his God as well. The college that does not give to its students a clear revelation of the truth of God as it is in Christ has failed in its most telling contribution to the young man and young woman of its campus. L. E. SMITH.

"AS LITTLE CHILDREN."

The evangelist who had been engaged to preach during the revival services had arrived and was presenting the Gospel of Jesus Christ in simple, straightforward messages, but with no special flourish of words or gestures. Very few seemed to know that he was known in many lands through his writings in a religious paper which had a large circulation, and was eagerly read by Bible students. Comparatively few attended the services and the remark was made that he was a preacher for children and not for grown people. When the remark came to our ears we thought of the words of Jesus: "Except ye be converted and become as little children ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as a little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven."

Jesus preached in a simple manner using everyday illustrations and the common people heard Him gladly. We are glad that there are ministers of the Gospel who follow the Lord Jesus in their method of preaching, for we want the story of the Gospel told as simply to us as a little child. The big words and flowery phrases do not have the same effect that earnest words spoken simply have upon the heart. And we are glad that there are those who take the title to themselves that John the beloved, and loving, uses in his first epistle as he writes to the children of God. It seems almost like a pet name as we read in his epistle: "Little children, let no man deceive you." He must have heard the words from the lips of Jesus more times than he has recorded in his Gospel, and their echo remained in his heart to be used by him in his epistle. How much we need to be like little children and pattern after their innocent ways; following close to our blessed Lord; listening closely for His every word, afraid we may miss something; pressing ever closer to His wounded side and caressing the wounds that were made for our salvation.

John teaches us so clearly the relationship of God as our heavenly Father and we as His little children whose sins have been washed away thru faith in the precious blood of Jesus. He first tells us of the fellowship which we may have with God as our Father and with Jesus Christ as our Elder Brother and then he goes on to tell us of the power of the Blood which can keep us from sinning in this present evil world. Jesus prayed for this in His great high-priestly prayer which John records in his Gospel. John also tells us how we, as God's children, should treat our fellow men whether they be brethren in the Lord or enemies. Love is the dominating theme of the Gospel of John and also of his epistles and he gives it as the basic truth of all Christian character and conduct. How much we need to have this divine love exemplified in our hearts and lives that we may show forth more and more the praises of Jesus who hath called us out of darkness into His marvelous light. As little children we accept the whole Word of God and our faith takes it all in even though we may not understand the supernatural things which show the divinity of Jesus Christ and the triune Godhead. "And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know Him that is true, and we are in Him that is true, even in His Son Jesus Christ."

We love the endearing title which the apostle John has given us and we want to continue to be little children of our Lord ever learning more and more; He chooses our teachers for us among those whom He has called to preach His Gospel, and we need to keep on learning until the time comes when He will call us to the throne room to receive our degrees—the crown of righteousness which He shall give to all them that love His appearing, the crown of glory that fadeth not away.

CONFERENCE OF THE CAROLINAS.

A special meeting of the Conference of the Congregational Churches of the Carolinas was held at the Church of Wide Fellowship, Southern Pines, N. C., October 11th-12th. This meeting was significant as being the last meeting of the Conference as an independent state organization, as the Conference now becomes a member of the Southern Convention, coordinate with the other conferences of that body. The program especially featured this transfer of relationship and among members of the Southern Convention present and participating in the program were Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, President of the Southern Convention, Mr. C. D. Johnston of the Orphanage, President L. E. Smith of Elon College and Mrs. W. R. Sellars. Dr. James H. Lightbourne of Burlington preached the sermon. Dr. John Britton Clark was the Conference Chaplain.

Dr. Enoch Bell, Editor of the Missionary Herald at Home and Abroad, spoke on "Modern Missions and Evangelism," and Dr. John R. Scotford spoke on "The Great Callings of our Homeland." Mrs. D. E. Brown of the Commission on Missions spoke concerning the work of the women. Among others participating in the program were Rev. George N. Edwards of Charleston and Dr. Edwin C. Gillette, both of whom spoke on the General Council. Dr. Fred P. Ensminger, formerly Superintendent in the Carolinas, was welcomed back among old friends and spoke on features of "Old New Fellowship." Rev. John Ray Chapman of Asheville, N. C., spoke on "The Religion of Youth."

The Church of Wide Fellowship and its pastor, Dr. C. Rexford Raymond entertained the Conference most hospitably. Dr. J. Edward Kirbye, as Moderator, presided in a happy manner.

MT. PLEASANT.

The revival meeting began here October 7th and closed October 11th. Good attendance was noted each service and a splendid cooperative spirit was in evidence throughout the meeting.

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, Burlington, N. C., was with us from the beginning and did the preaching to great acceptance. His messages were highly instructive and delivered with spiritual fervor for lost souls. Brother Crutchfield greatly endeared himself to this congregation by his candid and sincere method of presenting the Gospel message and his strong appeal for a deeper and richer soul-experience.

He is one of our active and wide-awake pastors. May the Lord bless his labors in the field. We appreciate his good work in our congregation.

Many said it was the best meeting held at this place in years. There were many conversions, twenty-five or more professions of faith in Christ, and eleven additions to the church. All praise and thanksgiving to the Lord of Heaven through our Lord Jesus for all benefits obtained and all blessings enjoyed.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary

MEN AND MISSIONS SUNDAY.

November 18, 1934, has been designated by the Laymen's Missionary Movement and various Cooperating Communions as "Men and Missions Sunday." The program calls for Men's Missionary Dinners on November 15th, and it is estimated that more than 1,000 church groups and communities will observe this event and sit down together at a dinner, during which the great subject of Missions will be discussed. Both the program of the Thursday dinners on the 15th and Men and Missions Sunday on the 18th are designed to be educational and inspirational. At the morning church service, November 18th, every pastor is asked to preach a sermon suitable to the purpose of the observance, and where the order of service will permit it is urged that some layman make a four-minute address at the morning service, also at the Sunday school assembly and in the Men's Bible Class. Suitable programs have been issued entitled "The Hope of the Nations," which programs may be obtained by addressing the Laymen's Missionary Movement, 19 South LaSalle St., Chicago, or 419 Fourth Avenue, New York. No offering is anticipated unless pastor and church so desires and arranges.

It is a well known fact that the women in their Missionary Society and study groups are surpassing the men in their knowledge of world problems and prospects, for the field is the world in missionary thought and activity. Of this, if on no other account, the churches should observe Men and Missions Sunday in an attempt to bring the men of the church face to face with their problems as citizens of the world and those interested in the doings and destinies of the nations. If war is to ever cease and if there is to be an approach to world brotherhood and to a world ethic and a knowledge of national and international needs and achievements, the approach must be made and the problems solved in the light of the life and teachings of our Lord. More than one statesman is declaring now with General Chiang-Kai-Chek or China, who says "the crisis in every nation is Christ or Lenin—Christianity or atheistic communism." We are driving inevitably to a day that seems not far off when it is to be "either a Christian order of society based upon the infinite worth to God of every individual, and a brotherhood of man realized because the incarnate God, Jesus Christ, is Son of Man and brother to all; or class warfare based upon a mechanistic conception of life, a deterministic theory of history, an utter degradation of man and a complete denial of God." On this account, Men and Missions Sunday should be observed in every church, great or small, throughout Christendom.

MRS. W. R. SELLARS,
Burlington, N. C. Treas.

AN ALL ROUND MISSIONARY.

By Miss D. P. CUSHING, News Editor.

"Hot in summer and cold in winter," the little conservative town of Tottori, Japan, has been the home of Rev. and Mrs. Henry J. Bennet since 1901 and so effective has been their work that at the suggestion of withdrawal of missionaries from the interior that a loud lament went up from the people. Although their work has been centered in the church and home, it has also taken Mr. Bennet as a pastor and supervisor on regular trips throughout the field. Someone has said that he is indeed "all things to all men." He has studied Hymnology and worship as well as Buddhism and everything else that forms the social and religious background of the Japanese in his province.

On her part, Mrs. Bennet has worked among the women and children with chief responsibility for the kindergarten. Always the home of the Bennets has been open to the people.

Mr. Bennet, it might be said, was born without race prejudice because his father was a professor in Fiske University and the lad studied with Negro friends until old enough to go to Phillip Andover Academy. He was graduated from Harvard in 1898 and from Andover Theological Seminary in 1901. While still a seminary student he enlisted for foreign service and sailed in October, 1901. After three years on the field he met his wife, then Miss Alma Jones, and married her in 1905. She was serving under the Presbyterian Board and was a graduate of the Friends' Preparatory School and the Baptist Training School of Philadelphia. With such an interdenominational and interracial background it is not surprising that the Bennets have gone deep into things and laid firm foundations.

Mr. Bennet has been working at Tottori as a teacher in the commercial school as well as the Mission Night School and Mrs. Bennet developed a special interest in the fate of the girls in the factory because of the inhumane treatment given them when sick. The Bennets have lived close to the people and bring back a colorful story of their life and work in Tottori.

HOPEWELL MISSIONARY MEETING.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Congregational-Christian Church, of Hopewell, Va., held its regular monthly meeting in the church Thursday night, with nearly the entire membership present to welcome home the president, Mrs. J. H. Harrison, who has been ill for several months. The Secretary, Mrs. W. H. Coleman read a report from the Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference, which was held October 5th, in Liberty Spring Christian Church.

The music was in charge of Mrs. Barber, who also contributed a timely recitation in dialect, and gave interesting reminiscences of work among the foreign residents of our land, and other lands.

Rev. T. N. Lowe, the pastor reported on the work of the American Mission Board of this denomination, stating that the foreign work is 123 years old, and maintains 622 American missionaries, and 6,520 native workers.

It supports 83 hospitals and dispensaries and there is a foreign parish of sixty million under eleven flags.

One member gave an account of successful activities in Carroll County of our own state, and other mountain missions.

Another speaker brought a message from the recent Missionary Exhibit held in Commodore Hotel, New York, where to the surprise of even its promoters, this marvellous exhibit drew crowds to the extent of fifty thousand daily. Of this great event, Dr. Stanley High, noted editor and journalist, was quoted as saying ". . . and this crowd, remember, was out to see neither a king of jazz, nor a queen of Hollywood, . . . but to look at an exhibit of Christian Missions."

The Southern Christian District which includes the Hopewell Church has sent to other fields the following persons from our immediate sections: Mr. and Mrs. T. E. White, and Rev. and Mrs. D. P. Barrett, to Porto Rico, and Dr. and Mrs. J. W. White to the Philippines. The Hopewell

REGIONAL MEETING.

The annual meeting of the Southeastern Regional Committee of the Commissions on Missions was held at Central Church, Atlanta, Ga., October 9th. This committee consists of officials and representatives of the Congregational Church Extension Boards and the American Missionary Association, and delegates from the state conferences in that region. It is interracial. Dr. C. Arthur Lincoln was elected Chairman, and Rev. George J. Thomas was elected Secretary. The program consisted of reports of summer conferences, missionary apportionment giving, the Council of Social Action and its relations to problems in the southeast, progress of the merger in the southeast, and discussions of plans and methods of missionary promotion. Dr. Enoch Bell represented the American Board and spoke concerning the foreign work and also concerning the merger of missionary periodicals. Rev. John R. Scotford and Mrs. D. E. Brown represented the Commission on Missions. The meeting closed with an address by Dr. Lincoln on "The Minister's Care of His Own Soul." The meeting was well attended and was regarded as very satisfactory. Society helps in the support of these.

At Thursday's meeting plans were announced for a public mission rally to be held one Sunday in November.

MRS. GERTRUDE ROSS.

BARRETT'S CHURCH.

1824 at the Old Brick Church in Isle of Wight County. (He was president in St. Luke's 1831-1832.) But his main work for the conference was to act as Secretary, which he faithfully did for a great many years until 1853, writing the records of the conference from the beginning in a plain legible hand that can be easily read today. He published a hymn book, in early life and it was reprinted in 1828. It had 222 hymns and a form of marriage ceremony. So far as known, this was the first form of marriage ceremony in the Christian Church. For many years before his death he was regarded as the best authority on the Christian Church in Virginia. He was a member and leader in the organization of the Southern Christian Association in 1847 at Good Hope, Greenville County, N. C. He was a delegate to the same body in 1852. He was active in the organization of the Southern Christian Convention in 1856, and was a delegate to the 1858 session. He died at his home on route 52 just opposite Kinser's Cabins and lies buried in the cemetery there.

Rev. Mills Barrett recorded the following about himself:

"I, by request, preached my grandfather's and grandmother's funeral sermons. I was baptized with my father and father-in-law; was married by my father and then married my father to his second wife; baptized my wife and wife's mother, and my oldest son and daughter. The explanation of this is that at that time these people had been baptized by pouring, but they were then immersed, as Rev. Burwell Barrett had been preaching many years before.

Rev. Mills Barrett was followed by his two sons, Stephen S., and Mills B. Barrett.

Rec. Stephen S. Barrett was licensed in 1843, and ordained in 1846. He did most of his work in the vicinity of Norfolk, and was instrumental in organizing Berkley in 1847. He planned the first Home Missionary Society ever connected with the Southern Christian Convention.

Rev. Mills B. Barrett began to preach at 19, and was ordained at Antioch, October 31, 1950. He worked in Georgia and Alabama for some time and helped to plant the Christian Church there. He was a delegate to the Southern Christian Convention in 1856, and also the 1858 session. He was a chaplain in the C. S. Army in the latter part of the war. Organized Mt. Carmel in 1870-71 and served it as pastor as long as he lived. He was president of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference in 1879, 1880, 1881, 1882, 1884, 1885 and 1888.

Rev. Mills B. Barrett never wrote out but one sermon; that was on Heavenly Recognition, saying that he wished to be sure what he said on that subject. Dr. W. W. Staley copied that and it was published in the CHRISTIAN SUN some years ago. The old preachers had better memories than the present generation.

Thus out of 66 sessions actually held Rev. Burwell Barrett and his son and grandson had been in the chair 16 times. What a record for one family and church.

But there was another man who came from this church who has left his mark in the religious world of America, Rev. Dr. William B. Wellons. He was a boy when Rev. Burwell Barrett was an old man, was with Rev. Mills Barrett in middle life, and was a contemporary of his sons, Revs. M. B. and S. S. Barrett. Entering the Christian ministry as a young man, he rapidly developed as a preacher and revivalist and soon became the best known man in the Christian Church South. As a preacher he was a magnet, as a man he was broad minded, and the greatest organizer we have had. He learned his lessons from those who came before him, and then developed his talents. He acted as secretary of his conference in 1844, and became assistant secretary under Rev. Mills Barrett in 1845, 1846, 1847 and 1848 and secretary in 1854, 1855, 1856, 1857, 1858, 1859, 1860 and 1861, perhaps 1865, 1866, 1867, 1868, and 1870; 1871, 1872, 1873 and 1874, and was president in 1875. He was a regular contributor to the CHRISTIAN SUN, from its first years, published it from 1855 to 1862 and from 1867 to the year before his death, 1877.

He attended the American Christian Convention in 1850 at Marion, N. Y., and united the Southern Convention with it, but withdrew in 1854 on account of the slavery question. He organized the Southern Christian Convention in 1856 and was elected its first president, and so remained as long as he lived. Was a great church organizer and builder, organizing Berkley, Bethlehem, Oakland, Berea and Suffolk in his section. Was editor of the Army and Navy Messenger during the war and was later a Chaplain in Gen. Lee's army. Reorganized the Christian Church after the war and got the General Southern Christian Convention going, and brought out The Principles and Government of The Christian Church. Was the organizer of the Suffolk Collegiate Institute in 1872, and brought out his hymn book in 1870. It was largely due to his brain that the Farmers Bank of Nansemond was organized in 1869 and became nationally known. He also took an active part in the reorganization of the government of Suffolk after the war, and by his aid Suffolk had its first Town Hall and Market House.

There is still another minister from this church that should be mentioned, Rev. James Willis Wellons, brother of Dr. William B. Wellons. He was born January 1, 1826, died June 10, 1927, aged 101 years, 5 months and 10 days. He joined the N. C. and Va. Christian Conference at O'Kelly's Chapel, Chatham Co., N. C., in October, 1854, and never missed a session of that body as long as he was able to travel. He was active in the conferences and helped to organize the Southern Christian Convention, 1856, and helped to reorganize it in 1866. He was a trustee of Elon College from its beginning until the day of his death. Published with Rev. R. H. Holland the Life and Labors of Dr. W. B. Wellons, Family Prayers, and the Wellons Family. He followed Dr. W. B. Wellons as pastor of the Suffolk Christian Church in 1862, when Dr. Wellons had to leave his home and family in Suffolk, as it was occupied by the Federals. He remained at that post until it became unsafe for him to remain in the enemy lines and then went in the Confederate lines for safety. While thus serving in Suffolk, by a message sent by a lady, Miss Sallie Brinkley, to Gen. James E. Longstreet he foiled an attack on that General's forces, and caused a Federal defeat near Franklin, Va. He was the only man your speaker ever saw who saw Nat Turner hanged at Courtland in 1831. Owing to his long life he was perhaps known as well as any minister in the Southern Convention at the time of his death.

Then there was Rev. R. E. Barrett, whom many of the older members remember as coming from this church, and we are told that Rev. William J. Laine was once a member of this historic church.

"The heights by great men reached and kept,
Were not attained by sudden flight,
But they, while companions slept,
Were toiling upward in the night."

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

DO WE WANT PEACE?

Much is being said these days about war and peace. Some say that the world is talking peace and preparing for war. Will Rogers in his radio talk last Sunday night said that Russia and Japan have already signed up for a war, but they are not ready for it yet. The recent slaughter of European rulers gave the world quite a fright. The present situation in Germany makes many of us shudder as we think of what our fellow Christians must suffer. There is considerable unrest in our own country; so much in fact that it seems wise for those who believe in stable government to be very careful to say nothing that may inflame the already burning passion of hatred and unrest.

There are some, of course, who would like for the world to get into another war. It would mean money to them. Recent investigations in Washington show how munitions manufacturers try in every possible way to promote conflicts that lead to war.

But most of us are naturally peaceable in our dispositions. We have no desire to take the property of others nor to offer our bodies to be blown into bits in order that munitions makers may get rich and hot headed politicians can wreak vengeance on nations with whom they haven't gump-tion enough to deal peaceably. We believe that the sixty-one nations that have signed the Peace Pact should live up to the statements agreed to.

THE PEACE PACT.

"ARTICLE I. The High Contracting Parties solemnly declare in the names of their respective peoples that they condemn the recourse to war for the solution of international controversies, and renounce it as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another.

"ARTICLE II. The High Contracting Parties agree that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts, of whatsoever nature or of whatsoever origin they may be, which may arise among them, shall never be sought except by pacific means."

The above pact was signed in Paris, August 27, 1928, and was ratified by the United States Senate at Washington, July 24, 1929. All the leading nations have signed this agreement. If we really meant what this says we could discontinue most of our army and navy. Instead of building battle-ships, we could pay school teachers and feed the hungry.

WHAT OUR CHURCH SAYS ABOUT WAR.

The General Council of Congregational and Christian Churches meeting at Oberlin, Ohio, last June, passed some resolutions that all young people should consider. The Council for Social Action, which is referred to in the resolutions, is starting the plebiscite (vote) on the questions suggested, and is eager to get suggestions as to what should be included among the questions to be sent to the people. (For information on this, see the current issue of Advance.) The resolutions are as follows:

VOTED: 1. That the Council for Social Action take a plebiscite of our denomination to determine the mind of our people along the general lines of the following four positions, or others:

a. I will support any war declared by my government.

b. I will support war only if convinced that the government has done everything possible to prevent it.

c. Reserving the right of national defense by such means as seem to me most effective and in accordance with my conscience, I further pledge not to cross the boundary of my country to invade any other person's homeland to kill and destroy.

d. I am determined not to support any kind of war, international or civil.

We also ask that the Council invite other denominations and the churches of other lands. . . to consider taking similar plebiscites to reveal and record the mind of the Church regarding war.

2. That the cleavage between the way of Jesus and the system of war is clear. We, of this Council are convinced that we must now make this declaration: "The Church is through with war!" We of this Council call upon the people of our churches to renounce war and all its works and ways and to refuse to support, sanction or bless it. The mind of our church (in so far as this vote reveals it), has moved to this solemn conviction.

3. That in the face of the system of compulsory military training maintained in our High Schools, land-grant schools, colleges and universities, we affirm our conviction in the right of all students to be conscientious objectors on religious or ethical grounds. We pledge to our Congregational and Christian young people our support in their endeavor to live by the dictates of the religious and ethical conscience.

PREPARE FOR ARMISTICE DAY.

November 11th commemorates the anniversary of the day on which the World War ceased. That was a great day in the history of the world. We had fought to end war. The world had almost wrecked itself in its conflict. Peace brought the joy of new hope. The anniversary of that day comes on Sunday this year, and therefore gives the Church the greater chance to make it a day to promote peace.

For materials that will help in making a program for the occasion, be sure to get the November issue of The Pilgrim Highroad, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass. This young people's magazine is packed full of helpful things. Young people, and those whose minds are young cannot afford to be without this most excellent magazine. The cost per year for single subscriptions is $1.25, but in clubs of five or more it is only one dollar. There is a wealth of material for Armistice Day to be found in every community. Be sure to search it out and see that the people of your church learn something of peace on that great peace day.

THE SUFFOLK INSTITUTE.

The Youth Fellowship Institute held at Suffolk, Virginia, last Sunday placed before the minds of those present a fine picture of what the young people of Eastern Virginia are undertaking. All the speakers were well prepared. Superintendents of the various departments are on the job and are eager to aid the local churches in their tasks. The attendance was small, but the interest was great. It takes no prophet to say that a new day is dawning in this great conference.

Wish I could say this to Sunday school superintendents who did not attend (even though they could have done so) and who do not read books or take training courses to aid them in their work. Perhaps some one will show some of them this little sentence. And I say it in all kindness, and wish that it were not true. But it is true. If you want to keep your job as superintendent of your Sunday school, you will have to get busy in your preparation to lead, for the young people are studying the way to larger things and they will soon be the leaders. They want your leadership, and if you do not lead, they will have to take your place. Whenever you miss being with them in these great meetings you are letting them get just that far ahead of you. They are dreaming of more efficient churches, and some day, let us hope and devoutly pray, their dreams will come true.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT.

1. Americans are too money-minded. We judge success too much by wealth. We act as though man is intended to "live by bread alone." What evidences of this do you find around you?

2. American wealth is too unevenly distributed. A few have far too much for their own good and for the good of the nation. They did not earn all this wealth; they reaped the results of others' labor. Democracy demands a fairer distribution of wealth. How can this gradually and justly be brought to pass?

3. America is not united. We are sectional in

THE CHRISTIAN'S STANDARD OF LIFE.

LESSON IV—OCTOBER 28, 1934.
(Temperance Sunday.)

GOLDEN TEXT: "And be not drunken with wine, wherein is excess (riot) but be filled with the Spirit."—Eph. 5:18.

LESSON TEXT: Eph. 4:17-5:21.

The Christian Walk.

"This I say therefore, and testify in the Lord, that ye henceforth walk not as other Gentiles walk." The Christian is to be distinguished from other men, not so much by what he believes, but by the way he lives. The Christian life is primarily a way of life. The disciples were first referred to as those "Of The Way." And the emphasis in the Christian life is not simply upon the things which a Christian does not do, as on the things he does. A Christian is aggressively good. In short, the Christian is to walk as Christ walked. He is to seek to reproduce the character of Christ and to express the spirit of Christ. The heart of the matter is not in belonging to the church, but in being like Christ. The Christian is to bring everything to this test: What would Christ have me to do? The Christian does not take his standards of conduct from the world or from others; he takes his standard of conduct from Christ.

Alienated From God.

An alien—a man in a strange country, a man apart from his native land and often from his loved ones—that is the picture of the figure which Paul uses to describe the man out of Christ. We are destined to be sons of God. Sin makes a man an orphan. And Paul states that we are aliens from the life of God through ignorance in us, because of the blindness of our hearts. There are, of course, intellectual problems. But as a rule our problems are moral. Back of many a man's unwillingness to follow Christ on the grounds of intellectual difficulties, is his unwillingness to yield his life to Christ because of wrong living, because of moral and spiritual turpitude.

The Former Manner of Life.

The man who has been truly converted ought to give evidence of it in his manner of life. If any man be in Christ Jesus, he is a new creature or creation. There is not a single particular relating to our contacts with our fellowmen, our walk, our conversation, which should not bear the impress of our having become followers of Christ. This does not mean, of course, that a man who becomes a Christian immediately becomes perfect. But there ought to be such a change that folks who knew the man before and after would notice the difference.

Put Off the Old Man—Put On the New Man.

Paul uses a striking figure. It is the picture of a man taking off a torn and ragged and dirty coat and of putting on a new and clean and well-fitting coat or suit. A Christian puts on "the new man," which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness. And as a result of this experience life will be different.

Putting Away Lying—For We Are Members Of One Another.

Society depends upon confidence, mutual confidence. It is so constituted that truth is essential for its continuance. Man must be trusted. A lie has no place in Christ's social order. We are members one of another. A lie is a false signal. Insincerity is the unforgivable sin.

Angry—Sin Not.

"Be ye angry and sin not; let not the sun go down on your wrath." There is righteous indignation. Jesus himself manifested that. There were times when He was angry. But He did not sin. A man can be angry and sin not. And if perchance one should lose control of himself in unrighteous anger, he is not to allow it to become a settled habit. Let not the sun go down on your wrath—repent and make amends whenever temper gets out of control or anger runs wild.

Making the Devil Homeless.

"Neither give place to the devil"—do not let him settle down and make his home in your heart. Give him no place in your life. As far as you are concerned keep him out in the cold, give him no lodging, show him no hospitality. Resist the devil and he will flee from you. But give him a place in your heart, even a little place, and he will eventually take the whole house.

Be Not Drunk With Wine.

One would have thought that these words could be taken out of the Bible after the Eighteenth Amendment was repealed and we had "legal" liquor, according to the promises of the "wets" who painted lurid pictures of the evils of drinking under prohibition, and who promised such bright prospects under license. But alas, something has gone wrong somewhere. One begins to read of the increase in arrests for drunkenness, and for drunken drivers. One reads of the large amount of revenue which the states are deriving from liquor stores; one sees more drunken men in one week under state control (?) than he saw in a month or even a year under prohibition, and one begins to wonder if after all, Paul's admonition is not still binding. Alas, a great deal of the drinking is being done by members of the Church. "The Holy Scripture abounds in the most solemn warning against the sin of drunkenness, and if it be not renounced the end is death. A Christian believer should have nought whatever to do with that which ministers to it or brings it about. Every true follower of Christ should stand four-square against its use and do everything in his or her power to banish it from the home, the community, and the nation. There should be no compromise with sin in the heart of the believer, and no form of wrong-doing is so patently opposed to righteous living as the use of strong drink." Torrey—The Gist of the Lesson.

Victorious Living.

"But be filled with the Spirit"—that is the secret of victorious living. If the spirit of Christ dwells in our hearts through faith, we shall be more than conquerors.

THE YOUTH FELLOWSHIP.

our thinking: north versus south, east versus west, city versus country. No part of the nation can be permanently happy or successful unless the whole nation prospers. Give some evidences of this sectional spirit.

4. America is over-proud of herself. We think we are "all right" and are inclined to think European nations "all wrong." In a person, we would call this trait a case of "swelled head." This attitude does not make for world friendship or peace. Are we after all, guilty of many of the sins of which we accuse other nations?

5. There is a growing sense of social obligation. Many people are less selfish than they were five years ago. Many are beginning to learn the necessity of sacrificing for others. What signs of this have you observed?

6. America is beginning to see that our future must be much different from the past if we are to be worthy of what we have received from the past. We must find a cure for poverty, crimes, organized selfishness. This is evidenced in the intention of Christian young people who are dedicated to "Building a New World"—a Christian World.

MONDAY.

RUINOUS PLEASURES.

"Thou shalt have no other Gods before me."— Ex. 20:3.

Pleasures do not have to be sinful or even questionable to ruin our lives. It is possible that pleasures may be wholesome and legitimate and still be ruinous. How? The answer is, when we make them our God,—the thing we live by,—then they are in direct disobedience to natural laws, and also to the law of God which says, "Thou shalt have no other God before me."

Pleasure, like everything else, is God's gift, but when we sacrifice everything else for the sake of amusement, we prostitute that gift, and the devil takes charge. It unfits us for our real work, prevents us from getting acquainted with the best thoughts of men, and handicaps us for life's race. When amusements can be had as a relief from routine and as a rest from toil it becomes spiritual and the true heritage of Christianity.

Prayer—Dear Father, we believe Thee. We trust in Thee. We love Thee. Help Thou our faith, our trust and our love, that we may have a capacity to use Thy word for good every day. In the name of Christ we ask it.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

TRUE REST.

"Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place and rest awhile."—Mark 6:31.

Leisure and rest are real only to those who have been working; and it is given to them that they may work again. All pleasures and amusements are right enough, and all of them belong to us all so far as we may avail ourselves of them. But for them to be real to us we must have an understanding of true values and a poise of mind that gives true balance in those values. Thus, our best pleasures do not come to us by the seeking of them. They come when we are seeking something else; when we are rejoicing in hard work, when we are resting after hard exertion; when we have achieved the object of our ambition; then, they come to us like flowers thrown into our laps by an unseen hand, at a moment when we are not thinking of it.

"Sweet is the pleasure
Itself cannot spoil!
Is not true leisure
One with true toil?"

That thou wouldst taste it
Still do thy best;
Use it, not waste it—
Else 'tis no rest.

" 'Tis loving and serving
The highest and best:
'Tis onward unswerving!
And that is true rest."

WEDNESDAY.

CHASING THE WIND.

"The ungodly are not so, but are like the chaff which the wind driveth away."—Ps. 1:4.

It is possible to have a thing and not have the joy of it. It is possible to enter upon a thrill and then find that it leaves one with bitterness.

It often happens that one runs after something he thinks he wants and when he has gotten it find that he does not want it.

Why is all this? The answer is—Because of the wrong objective and because of the way taken to get it. One who seemed to know said once:

"Pleasures are like poppies spread,
You seize the flower and the bloom is shed."

"O, righteous doom that they who make Pleasure their only end,
Ordering the whole life for its sake,
Miss that whereto they tend.

Trench.

Prayer—Our Dear Father, endow us with Thy spirit and Thy wisdom, that we may see Thy way and know how to spend our lives. Grant us this blessing this day, we pray, in Jesus' name.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

DUMB AND NUMB.

"Christ in you, the hope of glory."—Col. 1:27.

Too much amusement and pleasure keeps Christ out of our lives. It dulls spiritual sensations, makes the Christian world non-existent, God a fairy and Christianity a fairy tale. That is an awful life.

The writer once celebrated a marriage. The contracting parties thought they loved. The circumstances made it necessary for the bride to travel a long distance to meet the groom in a foreign country, the groom paying expenses. This would seem a good evidence of love.

The wedding was on. There were a thousand glittering externals; dresses, flowers, friends, pomp, and congratulations. Yes, the ceremony was said in solemn tone and the benediction was pronounced in the name of The Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost.

But these good people had left something out of their wedding. They had left Christ out. He was left outside and forgotten. In twenty-four hours their vows had been broken and within three weeks they were separated and their lives ruined. That is an awful life.

"Take the name of Jesus with you,
Child of sorrow and of woe;
It will joy and comfort give you,
Take it then wherever you go."

Prayer—O Lord Jesus, if Thou art the life and the secret of all true joy, we come to Thee this day for that indwelling. O come Lord Jesus and so bless us.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

JESUS SINGING.

"When they had sung a hymn."—Mark 14:26.

Jesus singing is an unusual thought. He who said, "Let us pray," said also, "Let us sing." Ever since then music has had a new meaning and a richer charm. If music was lovely to Him in the hour of His betrayal, it must be lovely to Him in these days when the world is full of good music and when His children join in songful and soulful praise.

It is not believed, either, that hymns and deums are all that He loves. The symphonies of a thousand strings coming over the air at dinner time are heavenly and draw us closer to the Creator of all things. It is a pity that such ecstasies are often followed by the jiggling jazz and the unwholesome sentiments of sensual song. Even these often follow a sacred program. Thank God that we can believe that such are not to be used in Heaven.

There will be singing in heaven, we are told, and everybody is going to be in the choir. I have heard of some elderly people in our day taking vocal culture along with their soul culture, believing that they want to be at their best in the eternal choir. It is not too much to believe that one of heaven's most thrilling charms will be singing with Jesus, and we can also believe that the symphonies of heaven are going to be sweeter than any we have ever heard yet.

"All hail the power of Jesus' name,
Let angels prostrate fall
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown Him Lord of all."

Prayer—Thou knowest our souls almost shout aloud when we contemplate the music of heaven, and that Christ will be in the midst. O God, help us to set Him in the midst of our hearts and lives today and forever. In His name we ask it.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE BASIS OF HONOR.

"All nations shall serve Him. For he will deliver the needy."—Ps. 72:1-14.

All nations shall serve the righteous ruler, for he will serve all nations. He will deliver the needy, and all men are needy. He will bend to the cry of the lowly, and the lowly will set Him up on high.

It is astonishing that ambitious men do not perceive the sure path to the realizing of their ambition that lies in helpfulness. They are blind to it because theirs is a selfish ambition, and selfish ambitions do not succeed. Selfish ambitions do not even see the road to success.

The men and women who have done the most to help the needy are those whom the world honors long after it forgets to praise its Caesars and Napoleons and Alexanders. They are those like John Howard and Florence Nightingale and Clara Barton and Wilberforce and Livingstone; they are those like Jesus Christ.

Prayer—Thou who didst come not to be ministered unto but to minister, we would stand by Thy side, and by the side of Thy needy ones.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

NOT OUR JUDGE.

"God sent not the son into the world to judge the world."—John 3:7-15.

The Son of God is to be our judge some day, inevitably; but He was not sent to judge us, He was sent to save us. We are not to look toward Him today with fear for our sins and their penalties, but with confidence and love for our salvation.

There is only one moment when a judge is entirely happy, and that is when he is freeing a prisoner. Must it not be so with the eternal Judge? Can He have anything but sorrow when He is compelled to condemn His creatures? Must it not be His exceeding great joy to pronounce the forgiveness of their sins?

And so if we wish to please the Son of God the most, there is one sure way to do it: so to live that He can release us from all penalty and receive us to Himself forever.

Prayer—Our Judge, we know Thee as our Saviour. Thus only we do not fear Thee as our Judge.

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D., Pastor.

THE PARDONING SAVIOUR.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"I will; be thou clean."—Mark 1:41.

The disciples had fallen back. They could not allow a leper to come near them. It was unthinkable, and they were not a conceited group either; it just was not done in those days. The leper went his way crying, "Unclean, Unclean." And the people gave him room. But Jesus had not fallen back. When did he ever? It was not like Jesus to fall back from pain and anguish and suffering. The leper was coming toward him. Yea, he is hurrying up to him, begging and falling down at his feet. The disciples must have been horror stricken.

It was a pitiable sight. The poor man lying, half-kneeling, and looking up beseechingly into the face of Jesus. Poor man, he is just where we would want him, if any spark of compassion is in us for him. Jesus is still looking at him, and now he says to Jesus, "If thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." May the angels in heaven stoop to hear what Jesus replied! May all the world wait for his answer. It is a very great test. Jesus has healed folks of fever, and has cast out devils, but here is an incurable disease. What will his answer be? Will he say something to lead out a larger faith? Will he develop some sort of approach? Will he appeal first to the established order of things? What will he do? What will he say? "If thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." "I will; be thou clean."

It does not take in the universe in the same way, but it is just as majestic as the word: "Let there be light; and there was light." One complete command, and the leper is no longer a leper, but a clean and whole man. Leprosy is an incurable disease; and it is used in the Bible as a symbol of sin. Jesus, standing over this man, said "I will." Jesus looking on the sins of the wide, wide world said, "I will." If he cures leprosy will he cure sin, or forgive sin? Did I say this command of Jesus does not take in the universe like the command in Genesis? Well, it does almost, doesn't it? For what heart has not felt the need for forgiveness? How universal the need of a forgiving Saviour is! Yes, looking at the sins of the world, and yet looking at the old rugged cross, Jesus said in spite of its anguish, and its implications, "I will." And that "I will" was for you and me, and the whole world.

I admire that leper. He must have been a mighty man. Perhaps he was brilliant of mind. Leprosy does not attack only the feeble-minded. He might have been one of those who knew what the Messiah should be like, and where he was to be born, and what he would undertake to do. Perhaps he knew the songs of Israel, the prophecies of Amos, and the promises to Abraham. He might have had a wife and children, from whom he was now cast out. Perhaps he had not abandoned himself as yet to the utter hopelessness of his case. His mother might have been still living, and her prayers might have been ascending heaven high,—a mother's prayers are one of life's best insurance policies even today,—and perhaps his wife and children were praying for him. At least as I contemplate this picture I find a man I admire.

I like him because "he came to Jesus." Perhaps you and I have not always done that, but we know full well there is nothing on earth finer. We have done it today. That is the heart-hunger that has brought us here. And we approve of this man's coming to Jesus. We admit that he showed good judgment. Oh! if but the weary world would turn to Jesus! If that poor mother who is worrying her life away about her son would just leave it all at Jesus' feet, or that poor wife who is worrying about her husband would just lay her care at Jesus' feet, or that poor person who is conscious day and night of his, or her sin if they would only carry it to Jesus! What care is yours? What burden do you try to bear all alone with only yourself, have you no friends to whom you can confess it, nor Christ to whom you can take it? Follow this man's example and come to Jesus.

He did not stop at coming to Jesus; he worshipped him. And he was among the very first to do that. Kneeling alone is not always a sign of worship,—not by any means, especially with an Oriental; but I have more than his kneeling to cause me to say he worshipped him,—his words, "If thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." It was beyond human hands to heal of leprosy. It required the intervention of God himself to do that! Here then is a great confession of faith. A very complete one. It is as though he were saying "Thou hast the power of God, or thou art God, and canst therefore cure the incurable leprosy, if it is according to thy will."

There was no "if" in the reply of Jesus. Only from the lips of the leper came the "if." Jesus said immediately "I will; be thou clean." But I like the "if" as it is here found on the lips of the leper. For it shows an humble spirit on the part of this suppliant. How different some of our prayers are! We have the "ifs" but at another place and in another way: If thou dost not hear my prayer thou dost not love me. Such is not the kind of prayer that brings: "I will; be thou blessed." This leper was saying: "Thou hast the power, and the goodness, and the grace; and it may not be thy will to cleanse, for it may be better that I suffer; but if thou wilt thou canst. I do not doubt for one minute that Thou art the Christ!"

Matthew tells us that Jesus was just coming down from his sermon on the mount when this leper came to him. Perhaps he had heard the sermon, and perhaps he had seen Jesus at other times and places; and the sermon was the final thing that made him believe fully that Jesus was the Christ. Having heard the beauty and glory of his preaching, and having seen the light that lifted from his face, he was ready to fall at his feet, and accept his will for his poor life whatever that will might be! May the world see Jesus in our lives, and hear his words from our lips, and likewise come to him. It should humble us to realize that we are his living witnesses. Can the world see the Christ it needs in us?

There are two men in this picture. The other man is Jesus. The leper showed faith; the Lord showed love,—pity, "compassion,"—he suffered for, and with the leper. He bore our sins on the tree. What pictures the gospel writers paint of Jesus face to face with others! This leper, the sinner of Sychar, Mary Magdalene, Mary of Bethany, the centurion, and Simon Peter, and others. In every case something great happened when they came face to face with Jesus. May we learn to come face to face with him in our daily and private devotions, in our worship in this sanctuary, and wherever we may choose to pray; for he says, "Whosoever cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out."

He did the unheard of for this man. He healed.

A Story for the Children

A LITTLE SEED.

Once upon a time there was a tall milkweed that stood in a fence corner at the edge of a large wood. As the summer advanced, the milkweed was covered with long green pods; and by and by these pods burst open, and dozens upon dozens of tiny seeds with soft, downy tips, came peeping out. "My children, my lovely little seed children," murmured the milkweed as she swayed and fro in the summer breeze, "you must fly away now and leave me, one by one. But the good God meant that every one of you should sink down into the cool, damp earth and grow up to be a big, splendid milkweed just as I am."

"And so we will; and so we will!" cried all the downy seeds together; "we will not forget what you have told us. Good-bye, dear mother, good-bye." Just then a gay little breeze came dashing by and caught them up in his arms and away they flew, here and there and everywhere.

One little seed, smaller than the others, with downy wings that glistened in the sun, shrank into the green pod and refused to go with the rest "I like the sunshine and the pure, sweet air and the bright blue sky," she cried; "don't cast me on the ground, Mr. Wind, but take me sailing away and away, and ever and ever so far!"

Now the wind was a jolly, rollicking fellow, so crying, "All right, here we go!" he caught her up and carried her off in a hurry. On and on she flew with breathless haste, through the woods and over the brook to a wheat field that stood fair and shining in the sun. At last she caught on a prickly ear and hung there breathless.

"And who are you?" she cried at last, when she was rested enough to speak.

"I am a stalk in a wheat field," answered the wheat politely.

"And how came you here!" said the seed gazing admirably down at the long yellow stalk.

"Oh, I was a tiny grain once," said the wheat. "But the farmer planted me in the cool damp earth, and I grew up to be a splendid stalk."

"I don't want to be planted," said the little seed saucily. "I had much rather fly about in the sunshine. Take me up again, Mr. Wind," and away she flew.

When she stopped again, after a long, glorious flight, she caught on the rough bark of a broad, graceful tree, covered with green leaves and luscious fruit.

"And who are you," she asked again.

"I am an apple tree," said the big tree, kindly.

"An apple tree, and how came you here, pray?" asked the seed.

"Oh, I was just a tiny apple seed once," said the tree, "but I sank into the cool damp earth just here, and now I have ever so many delicious apples every year of my life."

"That's all very well," said the little seed, "but I like better to fly in the sunshine," and away she went, rolling and tumbling and laughing in the summer breeze.

She flew back into the large, dark forest this time, and when she stopped again she found herself in the arms of a great forest tree, larger and more splendid than any she had ever seen.

"And who are you?" she asked of the big, rough tree.

"I am an oak," was the answer in big, kindly tones.

"Where did you come from?" asked the seed.

"Oh, I was nothing but an acorn once," said the tree, "but I sank into the cool, damp earth just here, and now I am a great fine tree, with ever so many birds nesting in my branches."

Just then the seed locked down into a hollow in the great, gnarled branches and saw a little brown something, ugly shriveled and old.

"And who are you?" she said with a little shrug of contempt.

"Oh, I am an acorn," came the answer in a shrill, cracked voice, "a last year's acorn that didn't want to be planted. Just see how safely I am hiding."

The tiny seed looked at the poor, wizened acorn and at the big, splendid oak, and hung very quietly in her place for a long, long time. At last she called out, very gently: "Take me down to the cool, damp earth, Mr. Wind, for I want to be a milkweed like my mother!"

"All right," said the good-natured wind and away she flew.—The King's Builders.

ed him of the leprosy, and made a new man, whole and fine again. There is no need for us to go limping along life's road,—we may go upright and rejoicing instead. There is not a care, or a sin which Jesus cannot bear for us this day, if we but have the faith and humility to turn to him. If we confess our sins he is just and righteous to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. He is a pardoning Saviour. For that privilege he died on the cross, and we dare not trample his love under our feet.

The love, the touch, the word were used in healing the leper in this picture today. He had compassion on him; he touched him; and he gave the word. The sinner cannot be won today without love, nor by the church or its members standing aloof, nor without the Word of God. Given these three qualities in our lives and Jesus has a chance again to heal, to bless, and to forgive. If the world can see his love in us; if the world can feel his touch in us; if the world can hear his word in our lives it will come unto him and be healed.

He charged this cleansed man to "Go . . . show,"—do not merely talk, but go show that you have met the pardoning Saviour!

2. Do you stand with John J. Crittenden who said in Congress in 1846: "I hope to find my country in the right; however, I will stand by her, right or wrong?"

3. On the other hand, would you agree with Carl Shurz who said in the United States Senate in 1872: "Our country, right or wrong! When right to be kept right; when wrong, to be put right." What does that imply for a Christian young person in 1934? What must be kept right? What must be put right?

A symbol of yourself. A pictured suggestion of that big thing Which makes this nation.

My stars and stripes are your dreams and your labors.

We are all making the flag.

Christian Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

The thanksgiving offering this year will mean a great deal to the Orphanage. Our goal is twenty thousand dollars for the year and in this week's report you will notice that we have climbed up to $10,580.55. So you see we will have to raise between now and January the first $9,419.45 and this will have to be raised principally through the Special Thanksgiving Offering period. Have you thought about the amount your church ought to raise to help reach the goal? This is the eighteenth birthday year of your Superintendent as Superintendent of your institution. Eighteen years ago on the first day of December he took charge of your institution and for the eighteen years has devoted to it an unselfish service. Self has not been considered. The welfare of the boys and girls and moulding of their character has been the burden of our heart.

The work has had many joys mingled at times with disappointments. Deep sorrow, too, has entered in for its share in the years of labor and love.

From time to time during these years we have set goals and each and every time you have taken a great deal of interest in pushing us up to the goal and beyond. We have always set them in reason and we feel our goal of twenty thousand this year is in the reach of our people and if we can reach it we will be able to break even this year.

Let everybody get busy and let's make this the eighteenth Thanksgiving offering the best yet.

Eucharistic Conference.—

More than two hundred thousand visitors from all over the world, representing thirty or more nations, were said to have been in attendance at the Catholic International Eucharistic Congress which convened in Buenos Aires the middle of October. Local Catholics brought the number which attended the pontifical high mass which was celebrated in the huge open-air cathedral to the astounding total of nearly half-a-million.

Men and Missions Sunday.—

The fourth annual observance of Men and Missions Sunday will take place Sunday, November 18th. There has been an increasing interest in this event from year to year. Responsibility for the community-wide promotion of this observance was accepted last year by Christian leaders in 837 cities and towns. It is expected that this year the number will be substantially larger. In 1932, 640 leading ministers and business and professional men directed the campaign in as many towns and cities. An attractive manual entitled The Hope of the Nations has been prepared by the Laymen's Missionary Movement, giving suggestions and material which will be of great help to any who may wish to assist in this nation-wide program.—Missionary Review.

1 in 48,000.—

Bert H. Davis says in a recent Religion on the March release: "The research department of the Church Federation, Sacramento, Cal., has been studying the new Who's Who, published a few weeks ago. One conclusion is that being born the son of a clergyman is the first step toward fame and leadership. For a minister's son has one chance in 20 of being listed in Who's Who, say the California research folks, while a physician's son has one chance in 105, a farmer's son one in 608. The unskilled laborer's son has but one chance in 48,000 of crowding into this volume, the skilled laborer's son one in 1,600." Such a statement may seem gratifying to ministers and churches, but what a commentary it is upon the lack of educational opportunity on the part of the great masses of the unskilled laboring class! One in 48,000! Does that represent the latent powers of youth among the mass of our people? Or is it the story of ability doomed to frustration through lack of opportunity? It would be absurd not to recognize that minister's sons have, on the whole, had more access to higher education than the sons of workingmen, skilled or unskilled. It is to the credit of ministers and their sons that they do seem to outrank, in Who's Who standards of fame and success at least, the fathers and sons represented in other professions where wealth and opportunity might be assumed to give the advantage on the latter side.—Advance.

The Methodists and Merger.—

Commenting on the tendency toward merging of the various Protestant churches, the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin says of the Methodist bodies: "Reunion of the two great Methodist denominations in the country with the smaller body of Methodist Protestants also entering the merger, has been brought nearer by the unanimous sentiment expressed for it by the leaders of the denominations who joined in the Methodist sesqui-centennial celebration at Baltimore. Reunion sentiment was voiced in the addresses of the Bishops, North and South, and other leaders and in the unanimous adoption of a resolution favoring union of 'our triple Methodism.' Reunion sentiment marks the fading out, with the passage of time, of the original causes of difference. It has been fostered by the realization of the waste of money and effort in the duplication of boards, institutions and churches. But the overpowering impulse driving the churches together is the sensing of the greater influence that the church would have in forming public opinion and influencing national sentiment." There are marked differences in the three Methodist bodies mentioned here, and their union into one organic body would be quite a gain for the general union of Protestant churches.

The Demand of Today.—

Education on the subject of alcoholism may be said to be the science of teaching and the art of learning, not what to think, but how to think, when it comes to this perplexing social problem—how to approach the problems, how to weigh evidence, how to uncover facts, how to detect error, how to recognize truth, how to deal with the factors involved in the merits of the case, how to reach conclusions, and how to act in the light of those conclusions. What the American temperance movement needs today as never before is a scientific, truth-seeking, educational approach to the whole problem of alcoholism. That means a thorough-going investigation of condition, trends, and basic facts. It means a recanvass and a reappraisal of old arguments and old theories. It means a frank recognition and a thorough study of those phases of the alcohol problem which have to do particularly with the modern character of our rapidly changing civilization with its high power, high speed, and high pressure existence, and a placing of the emphasis where it belongs today. It means the projection of a real campaign of enlightenment, free from mere platitudes and homilies, constructive in character, that shall go about the task of laying deep and wide the foundations, erecting the scaffolding, and building the walls of an alcohol-free civilization. If the temperance forces of today and tomorrow are to make any adequate contribution toward the ultimate solution of the problem of alcoholism, those forces must find a way to approach the consideration of that problem without the almost invariable rise of temperature. They must make their appeal to reason, common sense, social-mindedness, and the sound judgment of the people. They must generate more light and less heat. Permanent temperance progress from now on will not in any marked degree be advanced by mere appeals to prejudice and the stirring up of passion. The demand of the new day is for processes more dispassionately constructive than those which have characterized any former period in temperance reform history.—Ernest H. Cherrington.

State Bonded Debts.—

Much has been said lately of the ever-increasing national bonded indebtedness. Evidently, however, less has been thought concerning the bonded indebtedness of the various States. This increased by leaps and bounds in most of the States in the decade ending with 1930. Since that time the increase has ever been greater. A. V. Shea, Jr., Instructor in the School of Rural Economics at the University of Virginia, gives some of the highlights on this increase in an article recently released for publication dealing with "The Financial Strength of Virginia." Virginia does occupy an extremely enviable position in regard to her bonded indebtedness: It was $22,089,318 in 1921, or slightly less than the combined debts of West Virginia and North Carolina. By 1930 it had been reduced to $20,877,536, while West Virginia had increased her debt to $43,024,600, and North Carolina had shouldered a debt of $148,664,390. The net debts of the three states as given by the World Almanac for 1934 are respectively: Virginia, $22,921,000; West Virginia, $84,675,000, and North Carolina, $167,692,000. In 1921, there were ten states without bonded indebtedness; one of these, Illinois, now has a debt of $215,409,000. Only three states are now without a bonded debt. They are Florida, Ohio, and Nebraska. Forty states have either assumed a debt or increased their existing debt. New Jersey has the doubtful honor of the greatest rate of increase, showing a percentage of increase amounting to 121,522, and an increase in amount from $116,000 to $141,116,000. Arkansas, Missouri and North Carolina are next in line. Virginia stands at the bottom of this list, with an increase of 4 per cent. The five states with the largest debts are: New York, $344,469,000; Illinois, $215,409,000; North Carolina, $167,692,000; New Jersey, $141,116,000, and California, $138,415,000. The combined debt of the several states is approximately $2,300,000,000.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

The new pastor of our Albemarle, North Carolina, Church, is Rev. Arnold Slater, who was a recent visitor to Elon College and, with his wife, attended, and was received into the Piedmont Christian Ministers' Association. Brother Slater becomes one of us and is rapidly becoming acquainted with the enterprises and institutions of which he becomes a part by virtue of his pastorate and work in our midst.

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, pastor, wishes attention called to the fact that Berea Church, at which the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference meets in annual session, Tuesday, Nov. 13th, is located on Highway, Route 54. Persons coming from Danville and vicinities North can come by Yanceyville or Reidsville. Those coming by rail will be met at Elon College or Burlington, N. C., if notice of their arrival is given to Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, R. 2, Burlington, N. C.

Rev. Enoch F. Bell, D. D., Secretary of the American Board and Editor of the Missionary Herald at Home and Abroad, has been spending about two weeks in the southeast. He was the principal speaker at the Florida Ministers' Convocation at DeLeon Springs, and visited educational institutions and missionary fields in Florida, Georgia, Alabama and North Carolina. He was present at the Conference of the Carolinas and at the ministers' meeting at Elon College. He has also spoken at several of the churches.

We acknowledge receipt of the Thorsby Institute Bulletin giving much helpful information as to the location, purpose, and need of this institution. Thorsby is a school affiliated with the Congregational Educational Society, located in central Alabama between Birmingham and Montgomery, and is an institution of good and growing repute and usefulness "which is primarily for rural Southern white young people of small means." Special needs mentioned are current expense, $9,000.00; student aid, $1,500.00. From The Bulletin it would appear that Thorsby is doing a worth while work.

Our good friend and brother, Dr. W. P. Minton, now State Superintendent of Congregational-Christian Churches of Pennsylvania, has moved from Dayton and has established his headquarters at 1109 South 18th St., Harrisburg, Penn. Extract from his letter: "As to promotional work this winter, I just believe the best thing for me to do is try to have a visit with every official board alone. I have already started this and find it extremely helpful. We have got to get on our feet as a state before we can go much farther. I believe the best way to do that is to hold up missions but I rather feel that this first year I should assume the burden of this effort with just such occasional officers and others as will best fit into the picture."

Rev. Hermon C. Eldredge, Dayton, Ohio, spent the week at Elon College, October 21st-28th inclusive, preaching twice daily at the Chapel services 10:00 A. M., and for the College and community in the church at 7:30 P. M. (Except Saturday.) No public speaker or preacher has visited Elon for years who brought more appropriate, appealing and dynamic messages than did Mr. Eldredge. The main thoughts and themes of his discourses were hinged upon a quatrain by an unknown author:

"The whole Christ for my salvation,
The whole Bible for my creed,
The whole Church for my fellowship,
The whole world for my parish."

That was a theme broad enough for the far-reaches of a great mind, and deep enough for the emotions of a great heart, and the preacher thus moved his audiences with him. By his direct methods and the use of personal and apt illustrations, Mr. Eldredge grips the mind and holds the attention of his audiences. His visit to Elon was a real epoch, results of which will be permanent and far-reaching.

IS PREACHING A SIDELINE?

We smile at the salesman who carries a sideline. It is a confession that he is a poor salesman and cannot deliver the goods or a sideline would not be necessary. It lowers the man in your estimation. Many reliable companies will not employ men who carry sidelines. They must make a choice between the old established line or the sideline. One must go. I wish our churches were as wise as our business houses. I wish they would say choose between the ministry and farming, teaching and business. Nothing lowers the standards of the ministry quicker than for its representatives to labor away at secular tasks during the week and fulfill the sacred office on the Sabbath day. Surely none could say he takes the ministry seriously who engages in some other tasks during the week and preaches on Sunday. To me such a procedure is making a sideline of the ministry. Can a man labor away for silver and gold during the week and then preach on Sunday? It seems to me that Jesus said "a man could not serve God and mammon too." May not a man mix and mingle with worldly things until his vision fades and he loses his enthusiasm for the sacred calling? Is preaching a mere sideline?

It was not to Jesus. Did not the Christ leave the carpenter's shop? Did not the fisherman give up their boats and nets and follow at the call of Christ? Did not the apostles give up certain minor tasks that they might give themselves more effectively to the work of the ministry? Catholic priests at their ordination service take the oath of poverty in order that they may give themselves completely to their work as priests. And shall we who are Protestant ministers do less?

But then someone comes along and says, "It is necessary for a preacher to do these things in order to make a living." Shame upon the churches and the ministry that this is true. An institution is unworthy of being called a church that will not care for the servants of God. And it is a poor ministry that is "not worthy of its hire." When I was ordained, I remember the preacher promised to look after the spiritual needs of the church and the church would look after the physical needs of the preacher.

That the churches have failed in their obligation is true. They haven't expected very much of their preachers so they have not been disappointed. As long as the minister preaches on Sunday once or twice a month, and visits once in a while, many are quite satisfied. That is not enough. A church has a mission in this world to fulfill. It is to light up the world for Jesus. And an inactive church with services once or twice a month is a poor witness to the Christ who gives his life in ceaseless activity. Our churches should be grouped in order that they might support a resident pastor. But churches, like their members, hate to be disturbed in their self-sufficiency. They seem perfectly satisfied to drift along as they have always done. They won't even cooperate with conference in its efforts to group churches. I believe that is one of the things that has kept us back in our growth. Well might we learn a lesson from our Methodist friends and create some circuits—and yet we say we are too democratic for that. Well take it from me for what it is worth—unless a church lives and moves and has its being in God, it's dead! And God is not static. O churches! don't you think it is time for us to pull stakes and move out on the open road in order that we may serve the races of men as they pass by on the Highway of Life?

Then, too, if the minister is not worthy of his hire, he is partially at fault. Some are overpaid for the services that they render. Many refuse to prepare for their calling. Many are guilty of underbidding other ministers. If one preacher will serve for two hundred dollars one of his fellow-ministers (often of the same conference) will come along and offer to serve for twenty-five dollars less and needless to say they almost always get the job. And often those who underbid are least prepared for the work. In the past, there seems to have been a tendency among our churches and conferences that if a man showed any native ability and wanted to preach we must allow him the freedom of our pulpits and full-fellowship in our conferences. More than once we have licensed them, seen them stir up strife in church and conference, and then we have repented with bitter tears and anguish. And yet we have not learned our lesson; for the next time a likable fellow comes along, one of our churches will fall in love with him, and will ask that we license him. And once again we say this is an extraordinary case and we yield once more. So often only to add to our hurt and sorrow. I think the time has come for our educational committees, conferences and ministers to demand a rigid standard for applicants for licensure and ordination. We need not expect others to have any respect for the ministry if our churches and conferences ordain unqualified men to this sacred office. Let us remember that the ministry is not a sideline. There is no place in it for men who have failed in all other lines of endeavor then drift into the ministry. The need of the hour is for men of character and ability who gladly face sacrifice if they may but be the messengers of the King eternal. And I say it sympathetically, and yet with sincerity, that no man has a right to be called a minister who does not serve, and no man has a right to be called a pastor who does not fulfill the pastoral office. I wonder if we would not do well to listen to Fosdick who says, "Stop playing with religion and listen to God." When we do this, churches will no longer be interested in part time services and preaching will no longer be a sideline.

APPLE'S CHAPEL.

Apple's Chapel, Guilford County, North Carolina, observed the 100th anniversary of its founding on Sunday, October 28th. It is recorded that in 1809 Rev. James O'Kelly preached on the spot, possibly under a bush arbor, where the present building, the third to be erected in the course of one hundred years, now stands, but there is no record in hand showing that the church was organized till 1834, the record showing that the first quarterly meeting of the organized church was held in December, 1834. The church is the mother of churches and of ministers, who through a century have made their contribution to the kingdom of God. Rev. H. E. Crutchfield is the beloved and progressive pastor of this church, which now has an adequate and substantial building of brick. The membership is large and growing. A great throng gathered in the all-day services on the 28th, four ministers being present and participating in the exercises of the day,—the pastor, Rev. H. E. Crutchfield; his brother, Rev. G. C. Crutchfield; Rev. J. L. Foster, a former pastor; and J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary. A chorus of singers from Greensboro added much to the program and to the delight of the great occasion. Mrs. R. E. Apple, the faithful and efficient secretary, read a brief history of the church, and there were other features besides the good fellowship and royal dinner that was served that made the day one of worth and worship and rejoicing. The Sunday School has an enrollment of 230; the church an enrollment of 357. One of the powers and pillars of the church is the faithful, consecrated and efficient superintendent of the Sunday school, J. E. Cook, Brown Summit, N. C. It is difficult to estimate, in fact no adequate estimate can be made of the worth and contribution of such a church through a period of one hundred years. And judging by the present intelligent and consecrated membership and the great audience that gathered there, the next hundred years will reveal even greater things in kingdom building than the past hundred years. It was an inspiration and a joy to be in the centennial celebration and service on October 28th.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christiau is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christiau world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

"THE HOPE OF THE NATIONS."

The Laymen's Missionary Movement has well and wisely flung out that topic for consideration on "Men and Missions Sunday," November 18, 1934. The call is for a thousand community men's missionary dinners, November 15th, and then thousands of sermons and services at the hour of worship on November 18th, that the men of the church, as well as the women and children of the church, may have brought to their attention in the most powerful manner possible the one and only "Hope of the Nations." We are reminded of the declaration from E. Stanley Jones that "the church cannot go further till it goes deeper." In facing frankly and squarely "The Hope of the Nations," the church may go deeper and thus further. A world in bewilderment, and in need, a sick and hungry world is seeking a way out to safety and security, and thousands everywhere are saying that Jesus is the only way of safety and security. Thus we, who profess to know Him and have Him as our Guide and Saviour, are called upon to take the Good News to those who know it not and thus give light to the dark places. We may, if we will, go in confidence and without doubt, knowing that He fulfills all His promises and is powerful to do that which He has undertaken through us, as Dr. McLeish of the World Dominion Movement, London, says:

"The basis of our confidence is that Christ Himself saves and keeps us from sin. If we do not know and have not experienced this, then we have nothing to take any one. Every fellowman needs this assurance and hope. Every Christian is a missionary, and if all were witnessing Christians, the need of our generation would be met. Christ demands obedience, 'If ye love me keep my commandments.' Our answer as to what our share in the world evangelization is to be, is required of us by Jesus Christ Himself."

The Laymen's Missionary Movement, in seeking to give impetus to the day and the occasion of "Men and Missions Sunday," (November 18), has issued a 15-page program full of suggestions and helps which any pastor or intelligent layman, taking and using, will prove quite effective in any local congregation. No offering for the event is anticipated, unless a pastor and church are moved by their own volition to take an offering for world-wide evangelization. J. O. A.

CHILDREN TO THE RESCUE.

Something happened at the Biennial Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church held in Atlantic City recently. The dynamic that blew the lid off, was a report to the Convention about meeting the deficits in the Boards of the Church the past three years. Says a reporter of the event in The Southern Churchman:

"The church suffering from lack of funds, and curtailed in its activities because of lessened giving, today was faced with a new interpretation. The men of the Church have raised about $300,000 to meet the deficit; the women $807,747.87; but the children of the Church contributed a total of 922,000 the last triennium."

Thus the children of the Episcopal Church gave and over $100,000 more than the women gave. And then the Churchman adds the declaration, made obvious by these figures; "The children constitute the largest givers in the Church."

With this, a new interpretation of the Scriptural truth, "A little child shall lead them," something happened at this Convention. It "was the scene of a missionary mass meeting at which a free-will offering was taken for Missions. The press reported that the service was characterized by the old-time evangelistic spirit. For more than an hour the laymen crowded to the altar, laying their offerings of fives, tens and bills of even larger denominations at the feet of the bewildered presiding bishop, who, when the collection was finished, found himself standing ankle-deep in money." Here, indeed, was a sight to gladden the heart of men and angels. A dignified and well ordered Episcopal Convention, stirred by the old-time evangelistic spirit, pouring on the altar three thousands of dollars, moved primarily by the great need of giving the gospel to a sin-suffering world, and inspired immediately to this fervor by the thrilling thought that the children of the Church had really cared and had done a magnanimous part, the most magnanimous part, in saving the Church from extreme embarrassment, if not bankruptcy. Verily, our Lord knew and revealed the message of heaven as well as the heart of mankind when He said: "Except ye become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven." J. O. A.

PROBLEMS.

We still believe that "problems" become privileges when transferred from the school-room and the economic domain to the church and the spiritual sanctuary. From the disciples' point of view, it was a most momentous, not to say a fatal, problem when Christ faced five thousand hungry men with only a few loaves and fishes to feed them. But under the blessings of the Master, the big problem became an immortal and moving privilege.

But call them "problems" for the sake of our common speech. For such, our Commission on Stewardship wishes us to consider them. The Commission gives us seven of them—maybe one for each day in the week, or maybe because seven is sacred and signifies completion. Come then and let SUN readers in all seriousness and in the light of the love of our Lord consider honestly, sincerely and sacredly these seven problems:

1. Is the wealth that comes to a man his, or is it a trust fund?
2. What is the relation of riches to character?
3. What is covetousness? What do the scriptures teach concerning it? (See Exodus 20:17; Psalms 10:3; Mark 7:20-23; Luke 12:15-21; I Cor. 6:9-19; and I Tim. 6:10).
4. Has one a right to receive as large a salary as he can get?
5. What is your answer to the man who says, "You cannot mix religion and business?"
6. How far is it possible for one man to practice the Golden Rule in industry when others may not be doing it?
7. Where shall we begin in the matter of Christianizing industry and conducting business to the Glory of God and the welfare of the worker?

Solving those problems, (and may each SUN reader seek to lay them to conscience) will carry the church forward at tremendous speed toward God. J. O. A.

REVIVALS—SOME REPORTS.

We have been receiving reports from some of our pastors concerning summer revivals. These reports indicate a difference of opinion as to their value, but all recognize the place of revivals, especially if supplemented with the normal parish program. Here are some of the reports given us. First, there is the report from Rev. Theodore L. Leverett of the Macedonia parish in Georgia, a parish of four churches. Mr. Leverett writes:

"During this quarter each church has had its week of meetings. The attendance has been gratifying and the spirit has seemed excellent. In every church except Trinity the accessions, while not large in number, have been encouraging. At Macedonia the meetings are said to have been the best in years. They are the best, at any rate since I have been here. For the minister there is in these meetings the satisfaction of making reiterated impression, the opportunity to bring his message night after night, morning after morning, to the group; and the privilege of a wider hearing. People of other denominations come at such a time, and, for some Georgians, protracted meeting is what Easter is for some in other surroundings, the one time of the year when they go to church. Then there is the thrill of seeing the decision to unite with the church, which sometimes is the decision for the Christian life, on the part of those one knows should take that step. A crowded church is also an inspiration to a preacher."

Rev Alan T. Jones, pastor of the Friendship Parish of four churches in Georgia, near Waycross, also writes interestingly concerning the revivals in which he has participated, as well as others in his own church. "The hottest season of the year is the busiest for a southern preacher. For over seven weeks in a row, seven days a week, generally two times a day we have been in revival services. For three of these weeks we have been outside our parish helping other ministers who in turn have helped us. What are the benefits of these revivals? From the preacher's standpoint, I find it helpful to visit other churches and enjoy the wider fellowship and take heart in the knowledge that mine are not the only churches with problems. This constant living with the folks cannot but make our preaching more to the point. Invariably the minister and his people understand each other better and are team-working as never before at the end of revival week. Thirty-two new members were recruited this summer in the four weeks devoted to this parish. The large portion of these young people came because of love of parents and friends, without whom the minister never would have won them. I believe that one has to make a decision for Christ. It will not do to be a mere spectator and wall-flower. Thirty-two folks made the decision for Christ. Again, the people enjoy once a year hearing the same gospel from another witness. At Antioch Church especially the folks were helped by the preaching of David Shepherd. For the first time in the knowledge of the preacher they buckled in and raised the apportionment and per capita tax money in full. Also they raised fifty dollars to put a new roof on the church and to paint it. The young men have been out in the ponds sawing great cypress blocks for shingles."

On the other hand, one minister, whose name is omitted, writes: "The summer's work has been very strenuous and efforts have been directed toward Daily Vacation Church Schools at each church; evangelistic meetings at each church from one to three weeks. These meetings have stimulated the church communicants, I hope, and from twenty to thirty claimed either conversion or reclamation. Personally, I am not much in sympathy with this inadequate method of winning men to Christ and the church. It is very obvious that little value results from such meetings. Our most valuable work in this relation is done thru regular church schools, teaching, pastoral efforts, personal approach, good books, and Daily Vacation Church Schools. Our young people are organized in the two churches for special work, study and emphasis on this type of church activities. This is true in our Quarterly Parish meeting. Such subjects as worship, missions, and mission books, home and foreign, evangelism, and local interests are considered."

Probably all would agree that revival meetings alone are not adequate, but all those who are influenced by such meetings should be established in the church and church life by every method possible. Furthermore, the value of revivals depends largely upon the nature and substance of the preaching and appeals. Most of us would agree that there is little permanent value in trying to scare folks into the kingdom by means of the fear of hell, but positive, convincing and winning preaching of the Gospel of Christ in an intensive fashion has a real place in the program of the church.

One of our pastors writes: "Not common with most churches, I feel that one of our great mistakes is that we have taught our people how to play when we should have taught them how to pray." After all, isn't it important that they learn both to play and to pray, that life may be wholesome and happy?

Rev. Alfred W. Hurst, of Chattanooga, writes: "Perhaps the most important achievement from our standpoint has been the raising of a special fund of two thousand dollars as a part of our plans to celebrate the twentieth anniversary of the organization of the church. This fund will enable the church to wipe out a small current deficit carried over from 1932 and reduce the indebtedness on the building $1,500. We are in the midst of our fall rally program with prospects for a splendid response. I believe we shall march up to the twentieth anniversary in the spirit of joy and victory. The most important results in the realm of personal character and social vision one can never compute nor can they be recorded in a report like this. But we are striving to keep first things first even while we struggle to put the church on a better financial footing."

THE PRICE OF A CHILD.

By ELISHA A. KING, D. D.

When Henry M. Stanley returned to England after opening up Central Africa his stories of adventure were hardly believed by the general public. He was severely criticized. All kinds of stories were invented to discredit him. One of them was about throwing an African baby into the Congo river. The truth of the story is as follows.

As the expedition, numbering many hundreds of men, advanced they often found native villages abandoned, scouts having warned the natives of the on-coming troupe. The villagers were never very far off, and as soon as the expedition had passed, they stole back to their huts and plantations. On one occasion, so great had been their haste, a black baby a few months old was left on the ground forgotten. The baby was brought to Mr. Stanley. Turning to his officers he asked, in a joking way, "Well, boys, what shall we do with it?" "Oh, sir," one wag cried, with a merry twinkle in his eye, "Throw it into the Congo." Then all the officers began to repeat the suggestion in fun. Mr. Stanley said that he would have taken the baby along with him if he thought it had been abandoned, but he knew well enough that the mother was not far off, perhaps even then watching from behind a tree. He ordered a fire to be kindled because the child was small and chilly, scooped out a cradle nest in the sand before the fire so that the little creature could be warm, sheltered and in no danger of rolling in. He lined the cavity with cotton cloth as a gift to the mother and when the company quitted that encampment the baby was sleeping as snugly as if with a mother beside it, and Mr. Stanley said, "I left a good notion for cradles."

Where will one find a better estimate of the value of a single child than in this narrative from the heart of darkest Africa? A prominent judge was the speaker one time at the laying of a corner stone of a prominent Y. M. C. A. building. The building was to have cost one million dollars. In the course of his remarks he said, "If this building is instrumental in saving the character of one boy it will justify the expense." The next day a lawyer friend said, "Say Judge, didn't you put that pretty strong yesterday? A million dollars for the character of one boy?" The Judge replied, "Not if it is my boy!" I wonder how much our boys and girls are worth?

It is not uncommon to hear people refer to the expense of bringing up a family of children. And it is an expense. From a purely business proposition rearing and educating children is an expense. But there is some consolation in the fact that sometime they may be able to pay back all this cost. Possibly in actual money, perhaps in some fortunate turn of circumstances.

There is something else, something deeper, something nobler that sways the parent's heart. First of all is the God-given parental instinct, the pride of family, the love of offspring. The parent lives in the child, and the affection actually generated in the heart and the spiritual satisfaction of seeing the child grow and succeed constitute a force and a fact greater and more compelling than can be measured by any material gift or advantage. All the money in the world could not purchase a son or a daughter from a normal and devoted parent.

Parents are often shocked into a sense of the value of a child when he runs away from home. No matter what the cause the parents know then how much a child is worth. When a child is kidnapped and a ransom is proposed parents usually stake all they have to get it back.

There are exceptions to this natural law which have been recorded in history which perhaps prove the rule but the causes that have led to the abandoning of children were and are abnormal—War, famine, epidemics, calamities of one sort or another and dire poverty have all served to disrupt and sometimes to destroy the very roots of human sympathy. These travesties on human nature are usually overlooked and forgotten because they are so completely out of keeping with the usual conditions of life.

One reason for the high estimate of childhood is the mystery of life itself and its surprising possibilities. The classic statement of this transcending experience is from the pen of Elbert Hubbard. He says:

"A boy is a man in the cocoon—you don't know what it is going to become—his life is big with possibilities. He may make or unmake kings, change boundary lines between States, write books that will mould character, or invent machines that will revolutionize the commerce of the world. Every man was a boy—it seems strange, but it is really so. Wouldn't you like to turn Time backward, and see Abraham Lincoln at twelve, when he had never worn a pair of boots?—the lank, lean, yellow hungry boy, tramping off through the woods for twenty miles to borrow a book, and spelling it out crouching before the glare of the burning logs?"

"Then there was the Corsican boy, one of a goodly brood, who weighed only fifty pounds when ten years old, who was thin and pale and perverse and had tantrums and had to be sent supperless to bed or locked in a dark closet because he wouldn't 'mind.' Who would have thought that he would have mastered every phase of warfare at twenty-six? and when the Exchequer of France was in dire confusion, would say, 'The finances? I will arrange them.'

"Distinctly and vividly I remember a squat, freckled boy who was born in the 'Patch' and used to pick up coal along the railroad tracks in Buffalo. A few months ago I had a motion to make before the Court of Appeals at Rochester. That boy from the 'Patch' was the Judge who wrote the opinion before granting my petition.

"Yesterday I rode horseback past a field where a boy was ploughing. The lad's hair stuck out through the top of his hat, one suspender held his trousers in place, his form was bony and awkward, his bare legs and arms were brown and scratched and brier scarred. He turned his horses just as I passed by and from under the flapping brim of his hat he cast a quick glance cut of dark, half-bashful eyes, and modestly returned my salute. When his back was turned I took off my hat and sent a God-bless-you down the furrow after him.

"Who knows? I may yet go to that boy to borrow money, or to hear him preach, or beg him to defend me in a lawsuit, or he may stand with pulse unmoved, bare of arm, in white apron, ready to do his duty, while the cone is placed over my face, and night and death come creeping into my veins.

"Be patient with the boys—you are dealing with soul-stuff. Destiny waits just around the corner. "Be patient with the boys!"

The Hebrew and Christian Scriptures have considerable to say about the value of a child. The Old Testament enforces its lessons by example rather than by precept. Most of the exhortations are in the interest of parents. Children are urged to respect their parents and the rules laid down are very strict. Children are called a heritage of Jehovah, they are referred to as olive plants and in the book of Proverbs we are told that a child maketh himself known by his doings. In the

SUFFOLK LETTER.

"But I say unto you, that whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery; and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced committeth adultery." (Matt 5:32.) "So then, if, while her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress." (Rom. 7:3.)

Jesus spoke the words quoted from the Gospel according to Matthew. Paul wrote the words recorded in the Epistle to the Romans. These words are quoted here to call attention to Scripture teaching concerning a growing modern evil—divorce. Modern society is seeking to popularize the drinking habit and easy divorce. Both of these tendencies should be studied from the standpoint of the Word of God.

According to the recorded teachings of Jesus there is only one Scriptural ground for divorce; fornication or adultery. For this offense a divorce may be sought on justifiable grounds. It seems reasonable to suppose that the innocent party would have a moral right to seek the marriage relation after being divorced. But the Scripture does not clearly give any light on that point. The Roman Catholic Church does not recognize any grounds for the marriage of people who are divorced. That Church is evidently right in its interpretation and teaching on that subject. There would be fewer divorces if divorced people could not be married.

Ministers who perform many marriage ceremonies are frequently called upon to officiate at the marriage of a divorced person. It is not always easy to refuse without giving offence. The divorced person sometimes asks for an explanation. The question arises: "Why should a minister set up a standard which contradicts the law of the state which grants the divorce and the license to marry after the divorce is granted?" Why should one minister refuse to perform the ceremony, when another minister, in the same city will consent to officiate? Why not perform a marriage ceremony for any two persons who have secured a legal license from the state to get married?

In answering these questions, other questions may be considered. Is the state right, according to the Bible, in granting divorce on any ground, saving for the cause of fornication or adultery? Is the state right in granting a license to any divorced person to get married? Which is the higher law for the minister, the law of the state or the law of the Bible; the Word of God? The state represents public opinion in the adoption and administration of many laws. Public opinion is not always based on the highest moral and spiritual law. For the minister, on the question of marriage, the Bible is the final appeal for his conscience and conduct.

But the question of divorce and the marriage of a divorced person must finally be considered seriously by the persons seeking divorce and a second marriage. Can a man or woman afford to seek a divorce and be a party to causing another person to commit adultery? Can a person enter into the marriage relation after being divorced, or with a person who has been divorced, when such a marriage is, according to the Bible, a state of committing adultery? People who lightly seek the divorce courts and then seek to marry another must answer these questions before the judgment bar of their own conscience and the Word of God. It may not be a serious offence for the minister to perform the ceremony, according to public opinion, but man cannot change the law of God.

GAINS AND LOSSES.

Our church organization in the South has three separate and distinct units—the local church, the local conference, and the Southern Convention. The conferences composing the Convention meet in annual session; all except the Valley of Virginia Conference, which meets in mid-summer, meet in the fall. Beginning next week, the four conferences in Carolina and Virginia will meet for the next four consecutive weeks. The local church reports to the conference annually. These reports deal with the successes and the failures of the church. As a rule, a great part of the conference time is taken up with the discussion of financial problems and plans. We are in the habit of discussing missions, the orphanage, and education almost entirely in the terms of money. Of course, it takes money to carry on missions, and money is a big part of the program; but money without the spirit of devotion is practically useless so far as achievements for the Kingdom are concerned. It takes money for the college—a great deal of money—but if the college exists for money, and for money alone, it would be well to close its doors and turn the campus into farm lands. The principal aim in missions is to carry the gospel to the ends of the earth. Money serves only as a means to that end. Of course it takes money to carry on the college. Heat, light, and instructors must be provided for the students; but the purpose of the college is the preparation of the mind and the heart of the student, himself, to the end that he may be a more profitable and useful citizen to society. After all, if we plan for the extension of the Kingdom, for the facilities for benevolences, and for an adequate educational program, the improvement of the individual is the ultimate goal for which we strive.

In our reports to conference, we also deal with the membership of our churches. We report gains and losses. I am sorry to say that, in many, many instances in recent years, churches have either reported no additions or have reported greater losses than they have gains. We seem to have lost our vision, our passion, and our great concern for those who are out of Christ. Christ came "to seek and to save that which was lost." That was true of Him in the days of his flesh, the same is true in this the age of His Spirit. He is still coming "to seek and to save that which was lost." He is coming in His church. How else could He come?

He looked out over Jerusalem, in her waywardness and sin, and exclaimed, "O, Jerusalem, Jerusalem! How oft would I have gathered thee . . . but ye would not." Today, He looks out over the unsaved, the unchurched, and with equal pathos He pleads, "Ye would not come unto Me that ye might have life." It would seem that the majority of our churches are quite content to continue year in and year out to wrestle with internal problems and to remain irresponsive and unpassionate toward the plight of those who have not yet received. There are, today, in this country, more than fifty million people who are unchristian and outside the church. These non-christian people are distributed throughout our country; many of them live in your community. They are citizens of your parish. If reached for Christ and for the Kingdom at all, in all probability, some of them will be reached by you, by your local church. How long will we be content to sit idly by and nourish complacently our own internal, individual problems while those who have not yet received Christ continue onward without the consciousness of the approval of God upon their lives, continue onward without the fellowship in His church, continue onward without the peace and satisfaction within that enriches and makes secure?

The responsibility of winning men and women to Christ is manifestly upon every church, pastor and people alike. This responsibility cannot be laid aside at will and without penalty. Certainly, we should face our own internal problems. We should raise our conference apportionments. We should raise our missionary assessments. We should raise our share of the support of the orphanage and of the college. These things we ought to have done, but we ought to do the more weighty thing, that of winning the lost to Christ. We should feel impelled and compelled to do this thing.

In these days of darkness and of uncertainty, there is a Voice that is calling; there is a Light that is striving to break through. Not in the history of the church has the time been more opportune for consecrated, aggressive efforts to win the lost to Christ. By observation and tragic experiences have we learned that material values are not lasting, that material wealth vanishes without warning, that the world itself, together with its wealth, passeth away. The riches of God in Christ endure forever. Arise, O, ye people, the possessors of the living truth, the servants of the living God, and bring to those who are without that they may taste and say that the Lord is good, that they may have fellowship in the church with us in Christ Jesus, our Lord!

ROANOKE, ALABAMA.

The First Christian Church at Roanoke, Alabama is now ready for a new conference year. We have turned over a new leaf in our books and so start off with a new clean page. Let's hope that everything that is written on its pages through the coming months will be for the upbuilding of our church. We are small in number, but we are large in heart and hope.

We have just closed a very successful year considering all the hindrances that came along. Our church has paid everything in full this year. We were fortunate enough to secure 50 copies of the "New Church Hymnal" from the Hope Publishing Co. this year to add to our church. They are good Gospel songs of strictly devotional character and add much to the worship service period. The men of our church were willing to devote their time and help and get the necessary materials for laying a paved walk in front of our church. That adds much to the appearance, while the women have put out quite a bit more shrubbery.

Several of our young people have gone away for the year and they are greatly missed in all our activities. Misses Nellie Rea Sledge and Ernestine Hood are attending Henderson State College, Arkadelphia, Arkansas, the former to study at the Conservatory of Fine Arts.

Rev. Millard Stevens, our pastor, is continuing his studies in his Junior year at Elon College. He was ordained into the ministry this past summer and continues his work with much zeal, in order that he may come back as a better prepared minister of the Gospel to the First Christian Church at Roanoke. Mr. Guilford Kitchens is attending Georgia Tech at Atlanta, Ga. Miss Hattie Mae Neese has recently gone to Burlington, N. C., to be with her brother. Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Beard are residing in La Grange, Ga., where the former is working. They are greatly missed among our young especially. Even though this goodly number has left our midst, we are endeavoring to keep the good work going and trying to bring others in to fill the vacant places made by their going.

Sunday, October 7th, was Home Coming Day for our church. It was good to see familiar faces come back and be with us for the occasion. One of our young boys, Edward Knight, just entering the ministry, delivered the message at the 11 o'clock hour. He was granted license to preach by our Conference this fall. A well prepared wholesome dinner was served in the basement of the church at the noon hour by the women. A short business session was held immediately after dinner at which officers for the church and its various organizations were elected. Elected to serve us as pastor for another year is Rev. J. D. Dollar. Other officers are: Mrs. Otis Gilbert, church clerk; Mrs. Mervin Harper, pianist and church reporter; V. E. Kitchens, S. S. superintendent; Lois Dunson, S. S. secretary-treasurer and also president of the Christian Endeavor.

At 2:30 P. M., Rev. Jesse H. Dollar gave us an interesting discussion of his visit to the Holy Land. Everyone enjoyed it to the utmost and only wished he could have remained with us longer to relate his interesting experiences. At the close of the lecture, Bro. Dollar, with most appropriate and fitting words, presented his elder brother, Rev. John D. Dollar with a copy of the Bible from the Holy Land bound in olive wood. This was a day of celebration for us and was indeed a happy day for all who attended.

Our Woman's Missionary Conference was held at Bethany Church, Saturday, October 13th, with good attendance of ministers, but not as many women as heretofore. The societies at Roanoke First Church reached their goal and are looking forward to a better year and greater progress.

Our church is anticipating a great year, in view of the fact there is a load for each one to carry. It is each one's duty to try to be a leader for some one else instead of a follower.

We are endeavoring to get THE CHRISTIAN SUN into every home of our members so that they may know the happenings of all of our other churches and it is next to the Bible in good wholesome, readable literature. Clean your magazine racks and make ready for it—THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

By TIMOTHY THOMAS.

It has become an American habit to vote against someone instead of voting for someone. All our recent elections of any importance have been negative in aspect. In the last national election we voted against Republicans and elected a Democratic administration. It is not so much the matter of choice as it is change of leadership. The situation creates an atmosphere of negation rather than positiveness. The net result is that unless a new administration changes the whole picture of national problems in a short period of time, we are ready to vote for a change out of a spirit of impatience, rather than to lend cooperation to a gradual building up of an ideal state of affairs. We demand of one administration to cure all our economic and social ills in less time than we can remedy our personal affairs. If this spirit of impatience continues, fifty years hence no President will be able to succeed himself.

Many people are becoming alarmed over what is termed reckless spending for direct and indirect relief, pointing out that the nation will soon become bankrupt between spending and lending.

When we were lending millions to foreign nations very little protest was heard and only a small majority of our people now seem concerned over the apparent fact that we are unable to collect these loans. We become hysterical over starving millions in foreign lands and place our sanction upon unlimited loans and gifts for relief, but when our Government undertakes to feed its starving millions the wail and cry go up that we are bankrupting the Nation. We need a little more consistency mixed with our criticism. Those who criticize the Government for feeding the hungry would also criticize it if the people were left to starve. It is costing us a vast sum of money to provide work, to feed and care for the unemployed, but the other aspect of it would be the cost and the loss of morale, the expense of crime as a result of unemployment and hunger, the undermining of our homes, and the loss of future manhood, assets which every respecting nation must have and maintain.

Various plans and panaceas have been offered to solve the ever present farm problem. All plans are directed toward direct relief for the farmer, which at best can only be temporary. The farmer's best relief must come through proper outlets and adequate prices for his product. The farmer is suffering because the teeming millions in cities are not eating enough. When wages in industrial areas slump, housewives of necessity lessen their buying of table supplies. Give the wage earner a regular and a full pay envelope and that envelope will go to the produce markets to purchase larger and better qualities of food. There are 25,000,000 families today that would increase the amount and quality of their table supplies if a sufficient amount of money were available. Multiply this by three, to be conservative, and you have 75,000,000 families that would increase their buying of farm products. If this increased buying averaged $1.00 per day per family it would mean $75,000,000 per day that would go into the pockets of the American farmers. This would be the very relief which they seek and which they need. This flow of money would not be temporary but permanent so long as the wage earner could make his purchases. The whole problem, then, is not a farm problem but a city problem. Solve the problem to keep city people employed and you have solved the farm problem.

A PRAYER.

FOR MISSIONS.

O Almighty and most merciful Father, Who didst send Thy beloved Son to die for the sins of the whole world, look down, we beseech Thee, upon all nations who have not known His Name, and in Thine own good time lead them to His Cross. Strengthen with the comfort of Thy Spirit all who bear abroad the message of the Gospel. Raise up among us a lively sympathy with their labours. Take away from those who hear all hardness of heart, and pride, and impatience; and so move them, blessed Lord, with Thine infinite love, that the day may speedily come when all the ends of the world shall be turned unto Thee, and there shall be one flock and one Shepherd; we ask all for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.—Bishop Westcott, A. D. 1825.

A KOREAN INN-KEEPER.

By IDABELLE LEWIS MAIN, in China Christian Advocate.

In Onseiri, Diamond Mountains, Korea, lives the Rev. S. Y. Yun, keeper of an inn. This Korean pastor shared with his guests the experiences of his life, bringing into clear relief what the Heavenly Father's care means to his heart. He came to Onseiri from the pastorate. He loved his work, but for three years he had slept very little because of strain. So he brought his family to this place of quiet. "I had nothing," he said, "I had no money and no strength. I thought this would be a good place to die. But I did not die. It was not the Father's plan. I bathed in the hot sulphur springs, cut branches for our fire in the forest and carried them home on my back. I scrubbed the floors and painted my roofs and begun to sleep."

When Mr. Yun came to the village, there was a tiny, struggling church. He began to preach, receiving no salary for his work. The church began to grow until today there are a hundred Christians in this village of about five hundred Koreans.

"God has prospered me," said Mr. Yun one day. "I do not drink, nor do I gamble. I work hard and save money. At night I am tired and sleep." For every ten yen given by other members of the church, Mr. Yun gives ten yen. Although there is a well-equipped, tax-supported school in the village, only one Korean child to five Japanese children is admitted. Therefore, the church is permitted to have a school for Korean children who would otherwise grow up in ignorance. Mr. Yun is principal of this school and gives largely to its support.

He has seven children. The oldest son is a photographer, living in the village with a wife and two children. The oldest daughter is a junior in Ewha Haktang. After school was dismissed last spring, she went with a classmate to a village in the far north of Korea for eleven days in evangelistic work. They held classes and meetings for everybody. They taught hygiene, simple home economics and child care. Above all, they told the love of Christ which changes the hearts of those who trust in Him. After her return to her home, Miss Yun spoke of those eleven days with great joy.

Eight years ago, one windy winter's night, a drunken Korean was sleeping under the shelter of the thatched roof of the church. He was so drunk that he did not realize his carelessness as he lighted his cigarette. The dry roof blazed immediately and the high wind carried the sparks to the other cottages of the village. Intent on saving the church, Mr. Yun did not notice that the fire had spread to his own home. Too late to save his possessions, he rushed Mrs. Yun and the children to a place of safety. By morning his property was in ashes and he was again near death because of weakness. "We were beggars; we had nothing with which to cover our heads. We had neither food nor money to buy it. Months before I had asked a friend to insure our place for 3,000 Yen and had given him the money. When I went to collect, I found that my friend had used the money and had not taken out the insurance. I thought of bringing my friend to law, but I knew that this would change us from friends to enemies, and change our sons for years to come into enemies. So I forgave my friend. I was tempted to blame God. I had done my best for the church and this was the result. Then I remembered that this was the trial of my faith. I believed in the love of God and took courage. Now I have my new hotel and home and my business has prospered. I work hard, but I am well again and we are a happy family."—Missionary Review.

THE PRICE OF A CHILD.

same book we are told that a child trained up in the right way will continue therein throughout his life.

The story of Joseph will always attract our attention and win the hearts of parents for it emphasizes the value of a single child. All the destiny of the Hebrew race depended on Joseph. And the little child Moses was saved to serve and upon the preservation of that one boy the whole succeeding Hebrew and Christian civilization hung.

The story of little Samuel in the Temple also emphasizes the value of a single life. Elisha's cure of the widow's child is another. The boy David is another. In the New Testament we have several children singled out as important factors. But the climax of Biblical teaching comes to us in the words of Jesus when he took a little child and holding him in His arms He said, "Whosoever shall receive one such child in my name receiveth me." Again He said, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not for of such is the kingdom of God." Jesus used a child as an example of humility when He wished to instruct His disciples. He loved children and saw in them purity of soul, openness of mind, perfect sincerity and readiness to learn which is teachable humility.

It was Jesus who put a price on childhood. The disciples with their grown-up ideas and petty politics came to Jesus one day and asked, "Who is the greatest in the Kingdom of Heaven?" (Matt. 18:1-6). Jesus replied by calling a little child and taking him in His arms, "Except ye become converted or turn and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. Whosoever shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the Kingdom of Heaven. . . . Whosoever shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea."

In Jesus' mind there could be nothing more valuable than a child. His price is above rubies and all the fold and precious things cannot be compared to the value of a little child. No wonder the Christian religion turned toward the rescue and saving of children even the most abandoned. From the beginning Christians gathered up the living children from the streets of Rome where they had been exposed to death. Orphan asylums flourished and do flourish in Christian lands. The whole civilized world is now working to save children.

II.

Scientists tell us that the baby's mind, at birth, is like a finely sensitized photographic plate not yet exposed. No impressions have reached it. What wouldn't a parent give to put the right thoughts and ideals into that treasure house which will control and direct the man or woman who is to be? Without doubt normal children are born with a strong religious tendency, and it can be cultivated and nourished naturally.

It has been estimated that the time from birth to maturity amounts to 105,000 hours, 1,000 of these hours are spent in Sunday School (if children attend Sunday School at all), 7,000 of these hours are spent in the public schools, and 97,000 hours or 92 per cent of the time is spent at home or under home influences. Thus it appears that the home in which the child lives has, or may have, the greatest influence in his life. The responsibilities of parenthood for the religious and moral training of children is very great. It constitutes one of the greatest opportunities in the world. The three institutions that influence the child most are the Home, the Public School and the Sunday School.

Thus far we have been talking in theory as if we were in a closed room. Now let us open the door and step out into the world of affairs. Before our eyes we see a report from the Juvenile Court which informs us that 200,000 gay, laughing, care-free boys and girls get into trouble every year. These delinquent boys and girls are from every sort of home, from the well-to-do as well as from homes of poverty.

Lewis Lawes, warden of Sing Sing prison, reminds us that fifty per cent of the population of the United States is between 15 and 30 years of age and yet they contribute 73 per cent of our criminals. The problem of crime is with the young. He claims that 99 per cent of these criminals have never come under the influence of a Church organization.

Judge John F. McIntyre, one of the most brilliant criminal court judges in the United States has had in a single year nearly 10,000 men and women before him for trial. 80 per cent of them were under 20 years of age. When asked what he thought was the cause of this condition he replied with eight specific statements. Among them he placed lack of religious training in the home. This he placed first. Next he placed absence of parental authority and discipline. In the third place he put the failure of parents to instill ideals of modesty and chastity in female children. And he included "the age-old problem of liquor." His last reason is this: "Unwillingness of young people today to work hard, and indulgence of this laziness by fcelish parents."

One might ask, What are the things we should teach the children to be or do? The answer is simple enough. I give them in the order that

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

SUFFOLK TRAINING SCHOOL.

The Suffolk, Virginia, Christian Church and the other churches near there will hold an annual Training School beginning next Sunday afternoon at two thirty o'clock and closing on Friday night with a commencement program. The pastors and Sunday school superintendents have planned the school and are doing their best to get patronage.

Dr. Elwood W. Jones of Franklin will teach course No. 2, on The Principles of Teaching, and Dr. N. G. Newman of Holland will teach The Message and Program of the Christian Religion. The Study of Later Childhood, Junior Psychology, or course No. 41, will be taught by Miss Gladys Yates of Suffolk. Rev. Joe French of Ocean View will teach courses No. 52-62-72, which is adolescent Materials and Methods. Those wanting credit in the Intermediate, Senior or Young People's Department can get it in this course under Mr. French. Rev. J. G. Truitt, pastor of the Suffolk Church, will teach course No. 101, The Life of Christ.

Dr. I. W. Johnson of Suffolk will give the commencement address. The editor of this page will act as dean and conduct the chapel services.

Books are now in the office of Mr. Truitt, and should be purchased and read before the school opens.

Young people who hope to be leaders in the years to come, teachers, superintendents, and all those who are interested in helping to build a Christian world should enroll for leadership training in this school, or one in some other place.

"I PAY MY PART."

Most young people want to pay their part in whatever they enter into. If it is a party, auto ride, feed, or whatever it may be, each one says, "I pay my part."

That is a fine characteristic. They do not want to sponge on others. Then want to take care of themselves and be generous to their friends. It is a manly spirit. They tell me that girls go to dinner and the movies "Dutch" with their boy-friends these days. This is particularly true of girls who work or otherwise have money of their own.

When this article comes from the press, I expect to be in Conference, a Conference that asks every church to share in carrying on the enterprises of the Church at large. A certain amount is asked from each church. Some churches will be able to stand up in Conference and say, "I pay my part." But some of us will not be able to say that fine phrase. We will have to say that if the Conference, the Southeast Convention, the College, the Orphanage, the Board of Christian Education, the Mission Board, and the other enterprises of the Church are to be supported as they should, someone else will have to pay for it. Of course we will not say it so bluntly, but the meaning is the same.

This same principle applies to the local church. Perhaps we can't pay all that others think we can. If so, that is no fault of ours, and we need not feel ashamed. The Master rewards with his smile those who can truthfully say, "I pay as much as I can." That is our part. I do hope that all my young friends will always be able to say about their church, "I pay my part."

THAT THANKSGIVING PROGRAM.

It is time you were thinking of that Thanksgiving program. God has been good to us this year. There is plenty for most of us, and many have more than enough. The church programs at Thanksgiving season should make vocal the spirit of gratitude which is to be found in every heart. But it will take time to prepare this program.

A friend of mine told me of how one New England church always decorates the church beautifully with autumn leaves, fruits, and flowers, and then puts on a real Thanksgiving program. The people come from far and near to this service because it appeals to their own spirit of thanksgiving.

You may want to have a union service on Thanksgiving day or the nearest Sunday with a neighbor church. The young people might stage a pageant or play. There is an abundance of stories, poems, etc., which can be found in every community. All you need to do is to think ahead, gather the best of the materials at hand, and proceed with a real thanksgiving program.

But of course you will want to make someone else happy. Food and flowers to the sick and needy, a visit to the prison with a Christian message and some little gift, or a liberal offering for the Christian Orphanage at Elon College, N. C., will help to bring happiness to your own heart. The children at the Orphanage are looking to our churches to furnish them with food and clothes. They deserve the best that we can give. Mr. Charlie Johnston is a real father to them and gives them love and guidance. It is a high honor for us to share with him in the work he is doing for Christ and the Church.

WHICH WAY DO YOU LOOK?

Some people look down. They always see dirt. Others look on the level. They see themselves and their fellow-man. Still others look up. They see God. "I will lift up mine eyes unto the heights (hills) from whence cometh my help."

Certain people look backward. They think of history and live in the past. The golden age for them is gone. History marks the beginning and the end for them. They cling to yesterday, and demand the continuance of the old land-marks. Change, for them, is always bad unless it turns toward the past.

Certain others see only the present. They care nothing for the past and less for the future. So they have what they want now they are satisfied even though it may mean tomorrow's famine.

Then there are the dreamers who look only at tomorrow. The past means little, the present less, for only the future is important, so they think. In the realm of religion they are those who say never mind the terrors of today for tomorrow will bring heaven. In politics, they are those who say make things bad today so there may be an equal divide tomorrow.

Jesus walked on the ground, mingled with his fellows, and looked up into the face of a loving Father. The Master remembered the past, lived in the present and planned for the future. His eyes turned in every direction while he grew into a noble character. To Him, everything was important, but none too much.

WORLD PEACE.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR NOV. 11, 1934.
Matt. 5:9.

A German Legend.

A Fool stands by the side of the road and watches the approach of a body of armed troops. "Where do these men come from?" he asks.

"From Peace."

"Where are they going?"

"To War."

"What do they do in War?"

"They kill the enemy and burn their cities."

"Why do they do that?"

"To make peace."

"I cannot understand," says the Fool: "To come from Peace and to go into War, in order to make Peace. Why don't they stay at Peace in the first place?"

—Quoted by A. Fenner Brockway in "The Bloody Traffic."

Worship Service.

Theme: "War Shall Not Be Again."

Prelude: "Dear Lord and Father of Mankind" (played softly).

Call to Worship: "Dear God, help young people everywhere to be friends of one another and help us to be friendly to the young people of all lands. May we remember that they are Thy children, as we are, and so, with us, a part of God's kingdom on earth.

"Teach us ways in which we may share our best with them, and knowing them better, learn to love them more.

"This we ask in the spirit of Jesus, who came a little child to earth to reveal Thy love to all peoples.—Amen."

—Florence Buck.

Scripture: Matt. 5:9; Isaiah 52:7.

Hymn: "In Christ There Is no East or West."

Prophets of all lands speak friendship. (To be read by different members of the group.)

1. "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so unto them."

"Through the winter's first cold snow

See the poor shivering ragman go,

Yet, he, too, is a son of man." (Japan.)

2. "If you would be well spoken of, learn to speak well of others." (Greece.)

3. "I will not be grieved that other men do not know me. I will be grieved that I do not know other men." (China.)

4. "He who hurts another harms himself:

He who would help another, helps himself;

Where love is, there God is also." (Russia.)

5. Pledge of Good Will and Love toward all.

"I pledge my loyalty to the goal of human brotherhood. . . I will try to think of all peoples in a kindly spirit. I will remember that they have rights and duties, as have I; that they are, like myself, human beings. I will work for some form of international organization that will outlaw war and bring the nations together, under common laws and for the common good." (America.)

Hymn: "God of Our Fathers."

Dismissal:

"Peace be within these walls.

Peace to young and old who enter here.

Hasten the time, O Lord God, when not alone holy places where thine honor dwelleth, but the whole earth shall be full of thy glory.

—Amen.—Adapted from New Hymnal for American Youth.

Sunday School Lesson
By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

CHRISTIAN GROWTH.

LESSON V—NOVEMBER 4, 1934.

GOLDEN TEXT: "But grow in the grace and the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ."

LESSON TEXT: Luke 2:42-52; II Peter 1:5-8.

A Jewish boy became "a son of the law" on his twelfth birthday, that is he became "religiously of age." Thus it was that when Jesus was twelve years old, his parents went up to Jerusalem for the Feast of the Passover. Happy is that boy or girl whose parents "take him to Sunday school and church" rather than send him, or what is worse, do not seem to care whether he goes at all, as is so often the case. One of the most important factors in the life and development of Jesus was his home life with its religious atmosphere, and its interests in things religious.

What a thrill the boy must have had as he came to the top of the Mount of Olives and for the first time saw Jerusalem resplendent in all her glory on the hill of Zion! And standing out above everything else was the Temple, indescribable in its beauty and its impressiveness. Strange emotions must have stirred the boy's heart as he entered into the city, and as he went into the Temple itself. The experience was well calculated to quicken and deepen emotions and convictions that had already been born in his boyish heart.

The Lost Boy.

The feast lasted seven days, but those who came to it were required to remain only two days. Thus it was that the parents of Jesus started back home. Those who went to and from the Feasts usually traveled in groups or companies, and although the parents of Jesus did not see him, they took it for granted that he was with some of his kinsfolks or acquaintances. But when he did not show up at night, they became alarmed and began a frantic search for him. Alas, he was nowhere to be found, and they rushed back to Jerusalem looking for him. For three days they looked for him, looked everywhere they thought he might be but they did not find him. In desperation, and perhaps at a last resort they went to the Temple, and lo, there he was, sitting in the midst of the teachers, both hearing the teachers and asking them questions. And so eager and alert was the boy, and so sound and searching were his questions that those who heard him were "amazed at his understanding and his answers."

Too many parents take too much for granted. They "suppose" that they have their boys or their girls. In most cases they do have them in the physical sense. But in a very real and tragic way they have lost their boy or their girl. They have lost their confidence, they have lost their comradeship, they have lost their intimacy, they have lost their boy or their girl. Between the ideals and the interests of parents and children there is a great gulf fixed. And many a boy and many a girl wanders in a far country because they do not find at home that which they have a right to expect.

In The Temple.

"After three days they found him in the Temple." After three days—the words are significant. Why did they not go at once to the Temple? The answer is that they had no idea that their boy would be there. They probably looked for him in the busy market places, among the crowds, on the streets, everywhere but in the temple. It is silent witness to the fact that Jesus was not so different from other lads. He was not a "goody-goody." He did not sit around the house reading the Jewish Scriptures and saying his prayers all day. He was a typical, normal, natural, growing boy, who gave no evidence it would seem that he was interested in religion in any unusual or extraordinary way. It never occurred to his parents that he would be in the Temple. And when they saw him "they were astonished." They could hardly believe their eyes. Like so many modern parents they do not know the heart of their boy. Of course they understood it in the light of what had happened. But let this story teach us that Jesus was a normal, natural Boy.

My Father's House.

"How is it that ye sought me? Knew ye not that I must be in my Father's house?" These are the first recorded words of Jesus. Is it not significant that in his first recorded words he refers to God as His Father, and to the place of worship as Father's House? Twelve year old boys and girls know more than we think they know about religion sometimes. Jesus seemed surprised that they had not expected to find him in the place that would have a powerful appeal to him. And there are evidences that already there was developing in his consciousness a sense of His peculiar mission to the world.

Subject Unto Them.

"And he went down with them . . . and was subject unto them." He knew more about vital religion in some respects than they did. But he was subject unto them, he obeyed his parents, he learned at their hands life's fundamental lesson—obedience. Modern youth with their desire for freedom and their sense of superiority over their old-fashioned parents might well learn from Jesus as their example in this matter.

And Jesus Advanced.

Jesus grew. He grew just like any other Jewish boy of his day, or any American boy of our day. He grew in stature, developing a strong, robust, rugged body, with strong muscles, clear eye, steady nerve. He grew in wisdom—he did not know everything, he had to learn like any other boy has to learn. He grew in favor with man—He developed the social graces, he learned how to get along with people, he learned to observe people, he learned to help people even as a boy and a young man. He grew in favor with God—he developed his spiritual life, his devotional life, his experience of God, his fellowship with God: it was a growing, unfolding, developing thing. There was nothing miraculous about it. Jesus was the Son of God but he was also the Son of Man. Jesus was divine but he was also human. This puts him in our category. The character that he developed he developed in the same kind of world among the same kind of people and according to the same kind of laws in which and by which we have to live our lives.

"But grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." The Christian life is not a static thing. It is a living growing thing. A man must be born again to see or to enter the kingdom of heaven. The tragic thing is not only that so many people have never been born again; the tragic thing is that so many people who have been born again have been content with just being born. They have not obeyed the laws of growth in the Christian life. They are still babes in Christ.

It is a poor compliment to anyone to say of him that he is no worse than someone that is bad.—Milton Lee.

2. Large numbers of young people are studying the causes of war, and thousands are putting themselves on record as refusing to participate in war even if it should mean imprisonment for them

3. President Roosevelt's policies toward the nations to the south of us have helped the cause of peace on this hemisphere more than can now be realized. It is doubtful, however, whether his policies toward Europe have helped relationships with those nations a great deal.

4. A strong effort is being made to remove one contributing cause to war, namely, the influence of munitions-makers who grow rich off the profits of war. They had a shameful record in the last war, and during the years that have followed.

MONDAY.

KINDNESS.

"In her tongue is the law of kindness."—Prov. 31:26.

"Be ye kind one to another."—Eph. 4:32.

"One never knows
How far a word of kindness goes;
One never sees
How far a smile of friendship flees;
Down, through the years
The deed forgotten reappears.

"One kindly word
The souls of many here have stirred.
Man goes his way
And tells with every passing day,
Until life's end:
'Once unto me he played the friend.'

"We cannot say
What lips are praising us today.
We cannot tell
Whose prayers ask God to guard us well.
But kindness lives
Beyond the memory of him who gives."

Prayer—O God, be Thou in our lives this day to make this world more cheery and hearts less sad. We ask it in Jesus' name.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

YOU HAVEN'T LIVED IN VAIN.

"Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break thru and steal; but lay up for yourself treasures in heaven where moth and rust doth not corrupt and where thieves do not break through and steal, for where your treasure is there will your heart be."—Matt. 6:9.

Much of the conversation we hear these days is regarding banished treasures and greed for gain, as if earthly treasures are the only things to be sought for in the world. There is a motion picture now on the screen whose title is "You Can't Buy Everything." The one comment heard from a group who was interested in it, was "Try and get anything without buying it."

There is an anonymous poem that is appropo just here:

"If you've made the world more cheery
And you've made some heart less sad
As you've gone about your work from day to day;
If you've lifted someone's burdens,
And you've made some soul more glad
That you've met as you've gone upon your way;
If you've won a smile of comfort,
If you've said the word of cheer.
If you've tried to soothe some other person's pain,
If you've from the face of sorrow
Tried to wipe away the tear,
You're a good sort and you haven't lived in vain."

Prayer—O, Lord, out of Thy soul, make us a help and a comfort to others. Make those we meet guests to our lives in the sense of Christian brotherhood. Make every act of ours a bit of human love. Make every deed some healing of some wounded spirit; and all praise shall be thine.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE CHRISTIAN SMILE.

"He that is of a cheerful heart hath a continual feast."—Prov. 15:15.

There is an old war song that has a lot of gospel in it.—"Pack up your troubles in your old kit bag and smile, smile, smile." Isolate this song from its war associations, and you have the gospel of good cheer. That person who can force himself to retain his sense of humor and good spirits when everything is going wrong, is likely to turn everything right. If he can smile when he is dying, he is likely to get well. "The merry heart goes all the way; The sad one tires in a mile."

One of the most precious qualities to be carefully nurtured is the ability to "Pack up your troubles and smile, smile, smile."

Prayer—Our dear Father, hold Thou before our eyes each day the glories of life,—life here and life hereafter. Show us the good that we can do, and the sacrifice it takes to do it, we can bear it all for Jesus' sake, and we will do it with a smile. This we ask in Jesus' name.—Amen.

SIGNS.

"Study to show thyself approved of God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."—II Timothy 2:15.

Do you believe in signs? The following is quoted for your consideration.

"If you give up after a failure without trying again, it is a sign that you will occupy a lower rung on the ladder that leads to the world's treasure house."

"If you cheat, it is a sign that promotion will be few and far between for you."

"If you lose your temper, it is a sign that you are going to be very unhappy."

"To smile and speak softly when you are angry, is a sign that you will be a leader of men."

"If you ask favors without giving them in return, it is a sign that you are going to lose a friend."

"To borrow money for personal pleasure or indulgence, is a sign that you are going to be poor all your life."

"To betray confidences is a sign that certain shame will come upon you."

"To do a favor for someone that cannot repay you is a sign that you will be happy for the next twenty-four hours."

"To tell a lie is a sign that you will suffer from an uneasy conscience; to tell two is a sign of a bad memory; and to tell three is a sign that disgrace is on the way."

"To own a fault and take the blame, is a sign that you will not repeat the offense."

"To stick to a job until you have mastered it is a sign of good luck."

"To be suspicious of people's motives or good intentions is a sign that you yourself will be cheated."

"To rejoice in another's good fortune, is a sign that you will have many good friends."

"To think twice before you speak once is a sign that you will be advanced to a position of trust."

"To be magnanimous towards an enemy when you have a chance to even up old scores, is a sign that you will be a great man."

HOW TO ENJOY WORSHIP.

"Exalt Him in the assembly of the people and praise Him in the seat of the elders."—Ps. 137:32.

1. Do not stand in the aisles and visit while the ushers are seating the people.

2. Enter the church, take your pew reverently, praying for a blessing as you do.

3. Sit quietly while waiting for the service to begin, and meditate, read your Bible, or the hymnal, or the responsives found in the hymnal.

4. When the service begins, take part in it,—sing, pray, follow the thought of the service, and when the collection plate is passed if the service has been worth a dollar to you don't put in a nickel.

5. Remember that the service is to save sinners as well as to offer worship therefore pray that the result of the service may save sinners.

6. Carry the spirit of the service home with you, and discuss its merits with the members of the family.

Try this and if you do not enjoy the worship, tell the preacher about it, for something is wrong with you, or maybe him. Get it straightened out.

(Taken from an Old Scrap Book)

Offer prayer now as you feel.

SATURDAY.

CHRIST'S "I WILL."

"I will: be thou made clean."—Luke 5:12-16.

When the leper told Christ that if He only would, He could heal his awful disease, he touched the spring of divine willingness. Instantly Christ responded, "I will: be thou healed."

The same thing is happening daily, hourly, all over the world. There is no lack of readiness in God. It is we that hesitate and not Christ. It is we that procrastinate, and not the swift Spirit of the living, loving Jehovah.

A man may well distrust his own "I will." It is a poor and pitiful thing at best, a wavering, worthless thing. But the Lord's "I will!" It is like the sudden parting of the clouds and the flashing forth of the unconquerable light.

Prayer—Even so come, Lord Jesus!—Amen
AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

"I'M ANOTHER."

"Wherein thou judgest another, thou condemnest thyself."—Romans 2:1-11.

The commonest reply to those who find fault, the almost invariable reply, is, in effect, "You're another." And in almost every instance the rejoinder is entirely warranted. Selfish people call others selfish. The miserly charge others with parsimony. The proud see pride in those around them. The cruel find themselves envied with cruelty. Procrastinators note that others put off what they should do.

Let us change that "You're another" to "I'm another." Before we condemn another, let us honestly examine ourselves. Let us be sure that we are without the sin before we cast the stone. Doubtless then the stone will not be hurled at all.

Prayer—Our Saviour, make us to hate judging. Our Christ, may we so shrink from it that we shall never do it unless Thy love compels us.—Amen.

BUILDING FRIENDSHIPS.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"A man that hath friends must shew himself friendly; and there is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother."—Pro. 18:24.

Our friends influence our whole lives. We are a part of the people with whom we come in contact. There is much yet to be learned about how much one person's influence may be felt in another. "No man liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself." We help each other live, and we give comfort to one another in death. We bear one another's burdens, and there is no escaping it. And conversely we build one another's burdens, for, to a much greater extent than we realize we are a part one of another. We are spirits, and our spirits blend and mingle one with another. Thus the Spirit of God blesses us, oftentimes much more than we are conscious of, or appreciate.

This matter then of building friendships is a very important one. It is one in which Jesus himself engaged. And as weak as they were it was the friends of Jesus that saved the day, and pulled back the curtain of time that the light of the Galilean might shine upon the pathways of the world. Yes, this matter of friends is important. It is one of the businesses of the Book, and some of its most inspiring pages turn upon it. In our text we are told how it is done.

But probably everyone does not desire friends,—but such an one is abnormal and unusual. Do not covet to be like that. That is too odd, lonely, and unnatural. We all want friends, need friends, not for what they may do for us, necessarily, but rather for what we may do for them. Our lives need the outlet of friendship. Paraphrasing one of the biblical proverbs, Iron sharpeneth iron; friend sharpeneth friend (Pro. 27:17). "Chance makes our parents, but choice makes our friends." Let us then observe a few things about building friendships.

I. The Foundation.

"I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: And the rains descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock." You cannot build a friendship upon shifting sand. Covet character. Be a rock. A rock does not have to remember what it said yesterday to keep from saying the wrong thing today. An unchanging, lasting, natural, dependable goodness,—the same, yesterday, today, and forever,—must be the unbroken foundation for real friendship. That sort of goodness is of God, my young friends, and to have it one must have an appreciative and abiding faith in God. A faith that may be rightly called a friendship with the Eternal God.

Sometimes it takes a lot of digging down deep in one's best self to reach that rock. The rubbish must be cleared away. The soft dirt of jealousies and the loose stones of hard words must be shovelled aside. As one digs one may find low ambitions, lack of ideals, loss of will power, and little ability to keep resolutions, but on down through these we must go. Do you make promises and break them? Dig deeper. Do you say, "Yes I know I ought to attend Sunday school and Church, but so many things happen to keep me from doing so?" Dig deeper. Do you fail in duty, and falter in trusts? Dig deeper. Deep down in your best self are qualities divine. If you go deep enough, seriously enough, sincerely enough,—and with a prayer for God's help,—you will discover your real self, the real "you" that God intended you to be, and believe me, it will be a foundation on which friendships may be built.

Jesus found it when he dug deep down into the best natures of the men he gathered around him in Galilee. Simon so shifting, so changing, became Cephas, a rock, under the craftsmanship of the hand of Jesus. James and John, sons of thunder, became sons of God in their refined goodness and gentleness and steadfastness. Even Mary Magdalene, the many-sided flippant of Magdala, became the first missionary of her risen Lord. When the prodigal son had spent all, he came to himself,—the most important of all his possessions he still had, namely, his own life and personality as badly as it needed repairing. So dig down until you come to your real self for the foundation for friendship.

II. The Corner Stones.

"A man that hath friends must shew himself friendly." So let us say the first stone is "interestedness." In the choice of friends you must have something of common interest. You may be sure that if you are interested in them you will have a common interest, for everyone worthwhile is interested in himself in the finest sense of the term. If I am not interested in you I can never be your friend, and vice versa.

You remember the beautiful friendship of Jonathan and David. How interested Jonathan was in the handsome young fellow that had been employed as the court musician to his father! And can not we be assured that Jonathan had gone down to the best there was in himself when he was willing to have this young musician to become the crown prince in his own stead. There was foundation enough in both of their lovely lives to build one of the world's most beautiful friendships upon. And one of the first foundation stones laid was interestedness.

I should say a second foundation would be sincerity. No cracks in character to be covered over with wax. Perfectly frank, honest and sincere. Creating the basis of trust in one another. Where is the storehouse of sincerity? Where can one find a huge stone of it to lay as a foundation stone of life's friendships? In the storehouses of the eternal God, my young friends; the Christian home, and the Christian Church (of whatever denomination). Jonathan and David came from two pious homes, and were taught to worship the true and living God. The disciples found the real meaning of worship, and a real faith in God before Jesus called them friends.

As a matter of emphasis I should like to suggest a third building stone—that of loyalty. There is no friendship without it, and nothing else of much value. A fellow that compromises the name of his friend for expediency's sake is not worthy of the name of friendship. Loyalty, in the dark, as in the light, loyalty. Loyalty: That is the first word in friendship. About the lowest thing in all the land is the betrayal of a friend.

And I should place as the fourth and final cornerstone that of mercy, or forgiveness, or patience or long-suffering. Call it by whatever name you will it will be needed. Somewhere down along the line you will be glad that that cornerstone was laid in the foundation of the friendship. We are all of us imperfect, and a perfect friendship cannot be built without this quality of forgiveness. Such was one of the first lessons taught by Jesus to his disciples. And it was one which they much needed, and one by which they were greatly benefitted. Good sportsmanship, to say nothing of affection, is not in your foundation of (Continued on page 15.)

A Story for the Children

STOPPERS.

"To me," chuckled Jerry, "there is nothing as thrilling as the bobbing of a cork."

"Yes, after hours of patient waiting," laughed Jimmie.

"There wouldn't be half the thrill in fishing, if you couldn't watch for the bobbing of the cork," agreed Daddy. "And I'll venture to say that of the millions of corks used every year, few people give them a thought, or have the remotest idea where they come from."

"They hang from trees, don't they," queried Jerry.

Jimmie and Daddy laughed.

"Oh, yes," giggled Jimmie, "they hang like apples, all sizes and kinds. A wonderful sight." And he went off into peals of laughter.

"Never mind," said Daddy, observing Jerry's embarrassment. "They really do come from trees, Jerry, but they are not in this shape."

"I don't know much about them," said Jerry. "I do know that they are dandy for fishing and have true 'stopping powers,' but that is the limit of my knowledge. Do tell me about them."

"Gladly," answered Daddy. "In the first place, upwards of fifty per cent of the world's cork is produced in Spain and Portugal. The very finest is grown in varicus parts of the six provinces."

"Whew," gasped the boys, "plentiful I would say."

"Wait until you learn how long it takes to grow it," smiled Daddy. "As you know, cork is a very elastic tissue consisting of thin-walled and nearly cubical cells. It is really the outer bark of the cork tree or cork-oak tree (as it is called. These trees are very tall, from twenty to sixty feet in height and about three in diameter. The leaves are evergreen.)

"How old do these trees have to be before their bark can be used?" interrupted Jerry, eagerly.

"There is something strange about that," answered Daddy. "The age of maturity varies in different parts of the tree. From eight to nine years is required for the trunk; from ten to eleven years for the first branches, and from eleven to twelve years for the second branches. It yields its best cork when it is about forty years old, but often goes on growing new coverings of bark until it is at least a century old."

"Good night," ejaculated Jimmie. "How do they take the bark from these remarkable trees, and how often?"

"Not until the sap flows freely through the tree—usually from June to the beginning of September—does the 'stripping' take place. And it certainly takes an artist to 'strip' a cork tree. An amateur would ruin a tree.

"First, the trunk and the larger branches are completely stripped of the outer layer of bark. A ring is cut around the trunk at the base and another one just beneath the lower branches; a vertical cut joins the two rings, and the bark is then easily removed. The bark from the first stripping is so coarse and full of holes that it is worth very little on the market but fortunately the tree at once begins to grow a new coat, and in eight or ten years is ready to be stripped again.

"When the cork has been stripped off it is allowed to dry or 'season' for a few weeks. Then it is boiled, to remove the tannic acid and to loosen the rough outer layer so that this may be easily scraped off. The cork is then packed in bales and it is ready for shipment to all parts of the world."

"But how are its 'stopping powers' formed?" asked Jimmie quickly.

"Stoppers are made almost entirely by machinery," answered Daddy. "The layers of bark are first put through a steam bath, so that they may be softened, ready for the scraping and cleaning process. A machine equipped with sharp knives cuts the layers into strips which are sent to a machine that punches out stoppers. The waste pieces are sent to smaller machines for the cutting of smaller stoppers. If they are to be made smaller at one end, they go through another machine. As a final step, they are held against a sandpaper wheel until the surfaces are smooth."

"But what is done with the waste from the smaller ones?" asked Jerry, alive with curiosity.

"Some of this is used in the making of linoleum which consists of cork powder mixed with linseed oil and spread on canvas.

"Spanish black,' a very fine color for paint, is made from the burning or carbonizing of cork waste. Cork boards, life-saving belts, floats or buoys for fish nets, shoe soles, and numerous things are all made beneficial with cork."

"Well," sighed Jerry, "who would have ever imagined that 'cork' was as useful as all that?"

THE PRICE OF A CHILD.

seems to be generally accepted, viz: obedience, love, truthfulness, helpfulness, kindness, reverence, forgiveness, trust, loyalty, unselfishness, courage, self-reliance, leadership and honor. All of these virtues and accomplishments are caught more than they are taught in the loving relationships and examples of parents in the home, and teachers in the school.

I have not said, in so many words, that a child should be taught to believe in and love God, but I assume that you will understand that I think children should be taught to know and love God and to love the kind of life that grows out of such love. The virtues above listed are the outgrowth of religion.

As a Church we are reminded once again of our duty toward the children. As teachers we are brought face to face with the incomparable privilege of helping children and youth into the way of the abundant life, and the larger responsibility rests on the homes of the children.

Bring in the Children.

Let the Church have or not have ample and well arranged buildings, but let it bring in the children.

Let the Church be in a crowded city, elegant suburb, pleasant town, village, or in the country, but let it bring in the children.

Let the Sunday School be or not be furnished with trained teachers, and equipped with charts blackboards, maps, library and all educational appliances, but let it bring in the children.

Let it be criticized as behind the times or praised as up-to-date, but let it bring in the children.

Let it have or not have normal class and graded system, but let it bring in the children.

Let it have its membership of thousands, its membership of hundreds, or only of scores, but let it bring and keep in the children.

Let it have or fail to have the finest music, a competent choir or chorister, but let it not fail to bring the children into its fold.

If it fail in this, the Judge will say, "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least (the youngest and poorest) of these, ye did it not to me."

Christian Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

The Thanksgiving season is a mighty good time to take an inventory of the many blessings God has granted to us during the year. It is the time of year when all the crops have been gathered and stored for the winter. It is the time when we can look back over the year and see how well the Lord has blessed us and how gracious he has been to us. After we count all of His blessings that He has bestowed on us one by one are we going to be so selfish as not to count the deeds that we have done in His name and for His unfortunates? He said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of these . . . ye have done it unto me."

There are nearly one hundred children in your Christian Orphanage, fine little fellows—but unfortunate. They are His and are as precious in His sight as any other child. He said if you minister to them it is the same as ministering to Him.

We are making a big effort to raise ten thousand dollars during the Thanksgiving period for the support of these little children. When you consider how much the Lord has done for you during the year, won't you show your appreciation by making a liberal Thank Offering through your church and Sunday school or mailing it direct to us. Then won't you speak a good word to your friends in behalf of the Thanksgiving offering in your church and Sunday school and help swell it to large proportions this year because we need it. October was one of our months of discouragement.

Our church people sent to us during the month of October the sum of $502.15 to care for nearly one hundred children. I have often heard it said that behind the darkest cloud the sun shines bright. Let us hope that your Thanksgiving offering will be large this year and make our happy burden a little lighter.

Thanksgiving envelopes have been mailed to each superintendent of the Sunday schools for distribution.

the building of friendship if you do not know how to forgive the faults of a friend. That is the real test of being friendly.

III. The Super-Structure.

Having reached the bed-rock of goodness of character; and laid the foundation stones of Interestedness, Sincerity, Loyalty and Mercy; the building will be easily erected with comradeship, kindness, unselfishness and appreciation. My young friends, I have not told you anything new. Nothing newer than the sign at the railroad crossing. But its value is not to be judged by its novelty. "The rains descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock." To have friends in the days of need, and friends in the days of plenty, yea, to have the joy of friends is a blessing worth working for all the days of our lives. In building friendship we shall need faith, hope, love; these three; but the greatest of these is love. "The only way to have a friend is to be one."

OBITUARIES

HAYES.

Alfred Hayes, son of James R. and Caroline Neal Hayes was born in Person County, North Carolina, June 8, 1872, died October 15, 1934. Aged sixty-two years, four months and seven days. On December 21, 1892, he married Miss Lula Haskins, who died December 8, 1902, leaving two sons, John Haskins Hayes and Frank A. Hayes. On July 15, 1912, he married Miss Anna Apt of Virgilina, Virginia.

When about fifteen years of age, he united with Olive Branch Baptist Church. In 1888 he located at Virgilina and at his death was from his residence here, the oldest citizen. After settling here he transferred his membership to Union Christian Church where he served as a deacon and superintendent of the Sunday school for more than thirty years, and for the past several years was Chairman of our Business Board. No member of Union Church for the past thirty years has given more in faithful, unselfish service to church and community than he. He could be found always on the side of right. For twenty years he served as mayor of Virgilina. The law to him was the sacred bulwarks of society. This was evidenced in his judicial decisions. Yet Justice was tempered by him with mercy. His ideals of morality and citizenship were high. His last public service for his town and community was in the interest of respect for and obedience to the laws protecting the sacred observance of the Sabbath.

In his home life he was kind, generous and devoted to his loved ones. As a neighbor he had no superior. No citizen was more universally loved than he.

Brother Hayes is survived by his wife, two sons and three grandsons. Also one brother, Walter Hayes, and three sisters, Miss Minnie Hayes, Mrs. Lucy Gentry and Mrs. Carrie Carter.

The funeral was conducted from his church on the afternoon of October 16th by the writer, assisted by Rev. E. R. Harris of the Baptist church and the burial was in the town cemetery. The

Farm Income High.—

Not since 1930 has the farm income reached a level as high as that reached in September, and this was in spite of the falling off in farm prices during the month that curbed the usual seasonal rise. The figures for October are not yet available, but it is expected that they will remain close to the $662,000,000 income recorded in September.

Raisins and Raisin Seeds.—

This country produces annually 200,000 tons of raisins, and in the seeding of these 200,000 tons of raisins there are accumulated 2,000 tons of raisin seeds. From these seeds is extracted a valuable oil which for obvious reasons is known as "raisin seed oil." The use for this oil, though, one would hardly guess, for after being extracted, it goes back where it came from—onto the raisin in the form of a fine spray which keeps the seeded raising from sticking together or to their paper coverings. It is also used, though not so extensively, as a vegetable oil for salad dressings, and as a lubricant. The seed pulp is compressed and used as a stock feed and for fertilizer, and in some instances for fuel. The grape sugar obtained by washing the seed before they are crushed is converted into alcohol, and after being distilled is used in making sweet wines.

An Innovation in Auto Insurance.—

Depression has forced many innovations in France. One of these has been the practical elimination of the automobile license tax and an increase in the tax on gas, thus emphasizing the "man-who-rides-pays" theory. The result of this change in tax was to bring out many cars that had been laid up for "necessary" driving. One insurance company took its cue from the government and is now offering liability insurance on a mileage basis. For example the policy-holder subscribes for a minimum of 3,000 miles, this is paid for, and after being used up, he may extend the policy for additional thousand-mile limits as they are needed. It is estimated that at the rates being quoted, it is of advantage to drivers using their cars less than 8,000 miles a year, to buy protection on the mileage basis. Incidentally France has an automobile registration of 1¼ millions compared with our 23 millions.

"Illegal" Liquor.—

From Business Week comes the following: "Recent raids by 'revenooers' in New England offer further evidence that illicit distilling remains a big business, despite repeal. One undercover still just stoppered in Massachusetts was turning out $300,000 worth of alcohol a month. Some time earlier another was discovered in the same state, producing at the rate of $270,000 worth a month.

'Hot' alcohol usually is cut, so that when sold it displaces on the market about twice its volume of legal alcohol. Legal distillers declare that half the total alcohol produced is illicit, that the illegal product can undersell the legal by as much as $5.00 a gallon." This is not news, but it is an interesting statement in the light of the claim that repeal would do away with the bootlegger. For notwithstanding the fact that the government is making larger appropriations to regulate than it did to prohibit, the illicit liquor business goes merrily on.

Martin Luther's Translation.—

Universal Bible Sunday commemorates this year the four hundredth anniversary of the publication of Martin Luther's translation of the Bible. Among his noteworthy achievements, this translation was certainly not his smallest contribution to Protestantism. It is still largely used by German-speaking peoples of all faiths throughout the world, and it is likely to be continued to be used as the world's most popular translation. In commenting on this translation, which was completed, after more than a dozen years of labor, in 1534, Dr. Abdel Wentz, professor of Church History in the Lutheran Seminary at Getysburg, Pa., says: "It is scarcely possible to over-estimate its significance. . . . It is valuable on two counts; its own intrinsic worth, and its pioneer character. It became and has remained one of the great classics of German literature. . . . Its clear, vivid, picturesque style captivated readers and hearers everywhere. . . . Simple without ceasing to be elegant, plain without ceasing to be eloquent, and incisive without approaching the bizarre, Luther's Bible clearly marked a new era both in literature and religion." Goethe, the German poet, regarded as one of the marvels of all literature that Luther should so completely master the great variety of style among Bible writers that he could "cast into one mold the poetical, the historical, the hortatory and the didactic note."

Lutherans Favor Merger.—

Replies to a questionnaire sent out by Joseph M. Lotsch to every clergyman of the seventeen branches of Lutheranism in the United States and Canada, show that of those who responded, 89 per cent favor a merger of all these branches into one Lutheran Church. Mr. Lotsch's figures reveal that 98 per cent of the United Lutheran ministers who replied favored the merger. Of the ministers of the Lutheran Synod of Missouri, the second largest of the branches, 95 per cent approved consolidation. Those of the American Lutheran Church were 82 per cent for union; the Augustana ministers voted the same way by 77 per cent; the Norwegian Synod were 72 per cent for it, and 55 per cent of the smaller bodies combined. If these seventeen branches of Lutheranism should unite, it would make a Lutheran Church of 4,381,094 members, with 15,469 churches. The Lutheran Church is now the third largest Protestant communion in the country, following closely upon the Methodists and Baptists, who are also divided into several branches. Mr. Lotsch, who gathered this information, is a director of Hartwick Theological Seminary, a trustee of Hartwick College, and president of the Lutheran Boys' Work Foundation. The results of his survey were sent to the Lutheran convention.—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

Democrats Add to Majorities.—

The Democratic landslide of last Tuesday was even greater than that which swept Franklin D. Roosevelt into the White House two years ago, giving them the largest Senate membership of any party in history. The lineup in the Senate as shown by incomplete returns is as follows: Democrats, 70; Republicans, 24; Progressives, 1; Farmer-Labor, 1. This gives the Democrats a majority of 44, a plurality of 46, and 6 over two-thirds of the entire membership. Among the Republicans defeated were Senators Fess of Ohio, Reed of Pennsylvania, and Robinson of Indiana. In the House of Representatives, a majority is assured. Of the 435 seats in the new house, returns showed: Democrats elected, 221, present congress 309; Republicans elected, 62, present congress, 114; Farmer-Laborites elected, 1, present congress, 1; Progressives elected, 3, present congress, none. Seats still in doubt on Wednesday, 148. The California election returns gave Merriam, Republican nominee, a plurality over Upton Sinclair of approximately 150,000. In conceding the election, Sinclair is said to have told his opponent: "We congratulate you on your brief victory and we are preparing for the next campaign." Among Republicans defeated was Louis T. McFadden of Pennsylvania, who has been called "the bad boy of the Republican party," due to his three efforts to impeach former President Hoover. He had been in Congress for twenty years. The Richmond News Leader, which may be considered conservative Democrat, calls attention to the fact that this "congress was elected in an atmosphere of lavish public expenditure: "It will take all the courage, all the patience and all the tact" that Mr. Roosevelt has to keep public expenditures from running wild, and it reminds us that, "Many of those who have denounced our great president as a radical will perhaps be looking to him six months hence to save them from a wild congress. It is no longer a question of the Old Deal against the New. It is a question of the New Deal against the Next. . . . He has received the nation's approval: he needs the nation's prayers."

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Dr. C. H. Rowland, Pastor, First Christian Church, Greensboro, has returned to his home very much improved in health after an absence of some weeks health-seeking at a sanitarium. This, indeed, will be cheering information to his unnumbered friends.

Rev. W. C. Hook, who was formerly a member of Eastern Virginia Conference, and now is pastor of Ingram Memorial Congregational Church of Washington, was in Richmond for a short time on Wednesday of this week. He was accompanied by Dr. Walter Spooner, Superintendent of the Middle Atlantic Conference, and both were visitors at THE SUN office while in Richmond. Ingram Memorial Church is located at the corner of Massachusetts Avenue and Tenth Street, N. E., and members of our united constituency will receive a hearty welcome there whenever in Washington.

We congratulate Lanett Christian Church, Rev. G. D. Hunt, Pastor, Lanett, Ala., on bringing to the public an official Church Directory, 1934-'35. "The Directory" is in the form of a 16-page booklet, in addition to the four cover pages, done in green board, carrying a striking cut of our Lanett Church. The directory not only carries a list of the present membership of the church but a history of the church from its organization by the late, lamented, Rev. H. W. Elder in 1896, with a historical sketch also of all the pastors since its organization, including the present, with a fine cut of the present pastor, Brother Hunt. The directory also carries cuts of the choir leader, treasurer, the president of the Woman's Missionary Society. It reveals in a very striking manner the history and spirit of this good church with its strong and growing membership.

Elon College community lost one of its most esteemed and exemplary citizens, when neighbor C. A. Hughes quietly and peacefully fell on sleep and passed from us Thursday, November first. As citizen, neighbor, merchant, and postmaster for eight or more years, he served his town, county and generation well. Quiet, courteous, Christian in conduct and attitude, "Ches." made a name for himself that our memory will not let slip from us, for we shall think of him as our Lord said of Nathaniel: "Behold an Israelite in deed in whom there is no guile." He was a member of Shallow Ford Church, and his pastor, Rev. T. J. Green, with the assistance of J. O. Atkinson, conducted the funeral from the home, the interment being in the church cemetery, Saturday, A. M., November 3rd. A very large concourse attended and the flowers were fragrant and bountiful. He leaves to his wife and fine family of boys the rich legacy of an untarnished Christian name and life.

Here are some Sunday School classes worth reading about. Both of them are in Bethlehem Church, Nansemond County, Va., where the annual session of the Eastern Virginia Conference met the past week. Comes first, the Ladies Star Sunday School Class of Bethlehem. This is a class of married and elderly women—65 on roll and has an average attendance of about 50 per Sunday. One member of the class is past 90 and still going good as a lover of her Sunday School. Mrs. U. T. Savage is the teacher of this class, which not only meets on Sunday at the Sunday School period but does things in the church and in the community for the cause of righteousness and world betterment. In the same school is the Men's Bible Class numbering about 70, with an average attendance of about 50. This class also has one member past 90 who is as loyal and true as ever. Brother H. T. Taylor is and has been teacher for 33 years last June and is now going strong in the 34th year of his good and gratuitous service. One could wish that other Sunday Schools could have such classes.

MR. ELDRIDGE AT ELON COLLEGE.

It is the custom of Elon College to invite an outstanding Christian leader to her campus for the purpose of addressing the students, faculty, and the church on high religious themes. Since the writer has been at Elon College, we have had Rev. H. S. Hardcastle and Dr. S. D. Gordon as speakers. This year the invitation was extended to Mr. Hermon Eldredge, assistant editor of the Advance, a member of the International Sunday Schools Lessons Committee, and young people's worker for the United Church to spend a week with us and speak to us.

Mr. Eldredge came and brought us ten inspirational and very helpful messages. He always delights his audience, holds before them high ideals, and inspires them to reach the same. I wish to express for all concerned our great appreciation of Mr. Eldredge's stay with us. He does not need to be commended to our people. He has already done this by the most efficient service through the years. But I do wish to assure all of the college's high appreciation of his helpful service.

A HUNDRED YEARS OF SERVICE.

The records of Apples Chapel Christian Church date back to December 6, 1834, making the church 100 years old. During the hundred years of its organization, the records show a total membership of 1,650, an average of 16½ per year. Fourteen pastors have served the church with a total of 26 deacons, seven treasurers, and six secretaries and 15 trustees.

Following is the list of the pastors and deacons: Alfred Isley, W. T. Walker, William S. Long, A. G. Anderson, James L. Foster, A. Frank Isley, J. W. Pinnix, J. W. Holt, L. I. Cox, J. F. Apple, C. E. Geringer, T. J. Green, R. A. Whitten, H. E. Crutchfield and deacons George Christman, John Paylor, Bingham Apple, George Loman, Ludwick Clapp, Jacob Huffines, Lewis I. Apple, Robert Maynard, Henry Apple, Asa Clapp, R. C. Scott, Zachariah Chrismon, Jr., Patterson H. Apple, William Brown, Lewis C. Apple, A. Joseph Brown, Milton V. Brown, David Apple, Alfred Apple, Jr., J. M. McIntyre, D. E. Michael, J. A. Cook, R. E. Apple, W. F. Andrew, John A. G. Shepherd, R. C. Apple. The last six named are members of the present board.

On July 22, 1934, a special service was held for the purpose of dedicating the present structure, the third in the history of the church. Those present and taking part in the services were Drs. J. O. Atkinson and L. E. Smith, Revs. J. L. Foster, T. J. Green, J. F. Apple and F. Ervin Hyde.

Dr. L. E. Smith preached the dedicatory sermon. The text from Matt. 16:18: "Thou art Peter and upon this rock I will build my church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." After which the dedicatory formula was delivered by Dr. J. O. Atkinson. A large audience attended and a happy day was spent. The week following was given over to our revival services. At the close of the services, 12 members were received making a total enrollment of 320.

On July 27, 1934 at a called meeting of the church, Rev. H. E. Crutchfield was elected to serve the church for the coming year.

The church has made progress both spiritually and materially and the past year has been one of her very best.

FAITH.

Oh, it isn't how good you can be with the good;
Nor how bad you dare be with the bad;
But, can you be true all alone or with few?
Are you living by faith or by fad?

Can you stand true and strong, when the crowd says, "You're wrong"?

Stand alone till you see you're not right?
Then "right-about-face," without shame or disgrace,

Self-contained as you walk in faith's light?

There's a faith that invents and a faith that contents,—

One that leads, one that follows behind;
One that sighs the unknown and dares seek it alone;
One that takes what another may find.

Is it faith when the many are managed by one,
Though he herd them prosperity's way?
May not each keep his soul, yet take thought for the whole,
As together they seek the new day?

—A. C. Townsend.

Lest the great glory from on high
Should make our senses swim,
Our Blessed Lord hath spread the sky
Between ourselves and Him.

Oh, shall we not the power of sin
And vanity withstand,
When thus our Father holds us in
The hollow of his hand?

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

This body is made up of great preachers, strong churches, able laymen, capable women and progressive youth. Its 114 years of service have given standing and dignity to the body, and it years its age with grace and vigor. However, this strong, capable body seems to have loaded itself up with churches of big debts and clamoring creditors. On this account, with all of its membership of more than 9,000 (there were 10,535 in 1932), and with all of its money paid into the treasury this year of more than $5,000.00, it has not planted a church in several years and depends for such growth as it has upon churches already established. On this account, there is decrease instead of increase in membership, since a Conference grows by adding churches, just as a local church grows by adding individuals. There are well established churches that will gain in a year and then there are others that lose, so that a Conference usually about balances up its membership and holds its own during any year in which no church or congregation is added. It would seem an easy task, indeed, for this vast membership, with its great prestige and power, to add one or more congregations and churches each year, and here is predicting that it will not be long till the intelligence and the consecration of this great body of people will lay to heart this fact and move out for enlargement, not for the sake of enlargement, but for the sake of making an increasing contribution to kingdom building.

There were three outstanding and unusual events of the Conference this year. One was the presence and the address of Mr. Hermon Eldredge of Dayton, Ohio, who, after Dr. L. E. Smith, had spoken on the contribution and needs of Elon, moved the Conference with the dynamic of his personality and the presentation of a gripping message on the atmosphere and background of a Christian college.

Then as a special feature, Dr. W. R. Kedzie of Chicago, Secretary of the Board for Higher Education and Congregational-Christian Churches, gave a most incisive and comprehensive analysis of education in a Christian environment and the need at the present of such institutions. Dr. Kedzie quoted more than one authority to the effect that America was bordering on, if not already in, the grip of paganism. Unless the Christian college can release the springs of Christian life, the way seems dark, indeed, for our civilization. In closing his masterful address, this man, who is acquainted with educational institutions throughout America, as few men are, said that in all of his travels and acquaintances in the United States he had not found a college whose ideals seemed to him more thoroughly Christian than those of Elon and whose atmosphere was more favorable and wholesome for producing Christian character and releasing the springs of life from the fountain of life. It was truly a great address, worthy of the great man who delivered it and the great body who heard it.

The third event of special note was an address by one of our own returned missionaries from Japan, Dr. E. C. Fry, who, as Dr. Staley once said, was not only a missionary but a statesman and had a statesman's grasp on national and world situations. The Conference was worthwhile in bringing to the great audience who gathered there these three men of distinction in their several fields of service.

Dr. N. G. Newman, president of the Conference, delivered the annual address, as he has for several years, with such fervor and vigor of mind and spirit as to give his audience a new vision of the power of the Cross and what it meant to live a life of cross-bearing for the Christ.

One of the events of this Conference also was the paper presented by the historian of the Conference, W. E. MacClenny, of Suffolk. It has been truly said that no people ever become great until they have a great history, and Brother MacClenny is making permanent contribution to his day and his church by preserving and presenting the history of a great and good people.

The addresses on "Home Missions," on "Stewardship," on "Temperance" and on "Christian Education" measured up to the average of such occasions and addresses and gave those who attended the sessions of the Conference much food for thought and meditation.

The churches sent up some over $5,000.00 to the Conference this year and also went on record as fully approving the vote of the last session of the Southern Convention at Suffolk with regard to the financial plan and program for the coming year.

Of course, the Conference was entertained in royal fashion, and the beloved pastor of the church Rev. R. E. Brittle, with his faithful coworkers, saw to it that all physical needs and comforts of delegates and visitors were cared for. The Conference voted to meet next year with our Franklin church. It was, indeed, good to be in the 114th annual session of this great body.

FINANCIAL PROGRAM OF THE CONVENTION.

It has been requested that THE SUN's editor re-state in our columns the program adopted by the last Southern Convention for the raising and distribution of Convention Funds. It is indicated that the program is not clear. Others are indicating that we are making great changes, and the complaint is uttered that before we get one financial program going, a new one is adopted. The plain facts are that the program adopted by the Convention at Suffolk last May for the Conference is identical with the program under which we worked for years and years prior to the Convention in Richmond in 1928, with this one exception, viz:—"The Easter offering to be taken by all churches for Missions shall count on the apportionment, also the Christmas offering for Superannuation, also the special offering during the College period for Elon College."

Bearing the above in mind, the Report of Committee on Finance of the Convention called on the Conferences for the next biennium to send up to the Convention each year the following:

Convention Fund . . . . .	$ 5,000.00
Convention (Home) Mis. . . . .	5,000.00
Foreign Missions . . . . .	5,000.00
Elon College . . . . .	12,500.00
Superannuation . . . . .	2,500.00
Religious Education . . . . .	1,500.00
Total . . . . .	$31,500.00

In order to properly distribute the askings of the Conferences, an Apportionment Committee of the Convention was appointed, and later in the sessions of the Convention distributed the askings as follows:

Eastern Va. Conference . . . . .	$12,500.00
The Valley Va. Conference . . . . .	2,000.00
Eastern N. C. Conference . . . . .	4,500.00
N. C. and Va. Conference . . . . .	8,000.00
Western N. C. Conference . . . . .	4,500.00
Total . . . . .	$31,500.00

It will be noted that the above funds are for Convention purposes, institutions and enterprises. In addition to the above, the Conferences, of course, will through their Apportionment Committee, ask of the churches such funds as the Conferences themselves may require for their own expense and promotional purposes. A new church letter is to be used, so that every church will divide its funds to the several enterprises, and needs of Convention and Conferences as they may see fit, just as was done in the years prior to the Richmond Convention in 1928. While this program will seem a great increase over that of the past year, it will be noted that the increase is not as great as would appear, because, as stated above, the offering taken during the College months for Elon and the offering taken by the churches at or about Easter for Missions and that taken at Christmas time for Superannuation will all count on the apportionment for these funds asked by the Convention.

This is a challenge to our loyalty and a trial of our faith. If proper effort is made and proper plans are adopted in the several conferences and churches, the enterprises of the church will be sustained and the work of the kingdom, as entrusted to our constituency, will go forward.

WORSHIP IN MUSIC.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN this week gives to its readers a contribution from the pen of Prof. Dwight Steere, principal of the Music Department of Elon College, which we trust will have wide reading. It is devoutly hoped that pastors, choir leaders and Sunday School superintendents, in particular, will read what Prof. Steere has to say. They will not agree with him throughout. In fact, they will disagree, but the contribution is worthy of due consideration. Certainly, without intending it, many of our Sunday Schools and even some of our churches have adopted, and used in their service of song, nothing else than pure "jazz." It is the "hop, skip and jump type" that makes one pat the foot, and applaud the swing with hand or body, to the performance. Makers of this "jazz" music for Sunday Schools and churches have taken selections of pious platitudes, and otherwise sacred stanzas, or poetic utterances and dressed them up with as perfect and complete "jazz" as one ever hears over a radio, or elsewhere, from a carnival carrying on, or a dance hall. Of course, the spirit of reverence is not there. The listeners or the participants, are highly entertained, sometimes amused and quite often thrilled. Many go away from the Sunday School or church saying, "Can't our chorus, quartette or choir sing. They certainly do thrill us with their music." How many ever go away from such singing saying anything about how inspiring the music, how uplifting, how reverential, how worshipful. The object of music in Sunday School and church is to help create an atmosphere of spirit and adoration, of praise, devotion, worship. "Jazz" music, whatever words it may embrace, cannot perform that holy task. Read Prof. Steere's article; disagree with the major part of what he has to say if you like, think seriously over the part you do agree with and let us see if we cannot improve the quality and kind of music we have in Sunday School, Christian Endeavor and church.

TRY THIS IN YOUR CHURCH.

The Christian Herald reminds us that a church in Montclair, N. J., recently made a survey "of the liberality of their members toward the Lord." Some very interesting facts were found. These for instance:

"Forty families pledge per year to the church less than the cost of one automobile tire.

"One hundred and nineteen families pledge less than the cost of two tires.

"Five families pledge per week just the cost of two packages of 'Life Savers.'

"Seven families are content to contribute per week the cost of one soda.

"Twenty-eight families reckon that the church is worth to them, per week, the cost of one admission to a movie balcony seat.

"Forty-six families make a weekly church gift of the cost of half a pound of candy. (Not too good candy.)

"Twenty-two more families are pleased to pledge to the Lord per week a sum equal to a day's smoke to an average man.

"Forty-nine families are content with a weekly pledge of the amount of one luncheon (at a moderate priced restaurant).

"One hundred and forty-five families pledged nothing."

Try out something like this in your own church and see who are dividing up, and to what extent, their earnings with their Lord. It is an interesting experiment and one that will prove worthwhile.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION WEEK.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, in her monthly report, has the following to say about the interdenominational observance of Religious Education Week in St. Petersburg, Florida. It presents a fine example of interdenominational cooperation, and the writer considers that the cooperative work of the denominational educational leadership in Florida is the best expression we have of cooperation in the state. We quote as follows:

"One of our pet 'projects' interdenominationality this year is our cooperative observance of Religious Education Week. It has worked out better in St. Petersburg than anywhere else and we felt that an experiment in a few places would give us something to build on another year. There were sermons and other special things on the two Sundays, at the beginning of the week and the end of it (October 14-21), a cooperative meeting in the big central park on Tuesday evening when a pageant was given by several of the churches together (each presenting one of the scenes), preceded by a talk by Dr. Barnett of the Southern Methodist Church—state worker—a cooperative Parent-Teacher Meeting on one night held in the Southern Methodist Church, with a speech on the Christian Home by the Northern Methodist minister, followed by two conferences for children and young people's parents and teachers led by the Presbyterian worker and myself. On Wednesday evening we field workers (all hanging around St. Petersburg to see how our newest enthusiasm was coming along) talked at the mid-week services in our own church and later attended the Synod meeting of the Southern Presbyterian Church. (The Synod was meeting in St. Petersburg that week and in order to cooperate they held their Religious Education meeting on Wednesday night. That was real cooperation.) On Friday evening the Northern Methodist church gave a beautiful play and pageant in the Congregational church. Our Associate minister was Chairman of the cooperative Religious Education week activities. On Friday we held our field workers' meeting and such a good time as we have at these meetings. At 1:45 we had recess to listen at a near-by radio to the broadcast of one of a series which came each day during the week. There we were experimenting too and were eager to see how they came out. St. Petersburg let us use their station on three days and Clearwater on the three alternate days."

PRAYER FOR A HAPPY MORNING.

Robert Louis Stevenson gave the world a beautiful prayer for tomorrow morning. When one realizes how full of sickness he was the prayer is all the more remarkable. "Give us to awake with smiles," he says, "give us to labor smiling. As the sun returns in the east, so let our patience be renewed with dawn; as the sun lightens the world, so let our loving kindness make bright the house of our habitation."

It is a great gift to be able to wake up in the morning smiling. It is not a universal habit, but if one has slept well and has good health he is expected to greet the new day pleasantly. If, however, one is ill and has not slept well the morning waking can hardly be a joyous experience. And there are some people who seem to wake up every morning with a frown. It is sometimes said of an irritated person who refuses to cheer up during the day that he got up on the wrong side of the bed! Be that as it may, the best way to greet the morning is with gladness and hope. A new day is a fresh beginning and all the world is made new. The night has gone, yesterday is a part of forever and now there is a chance to try life again.

A friend of mine once wrote a "Salutation to the Day" and among other things, said, "The dawn telleth the coming of the new day. I turn my eyes to the morning and purge myself in the purity of the dawn. My soul quickeneth with the beauty of the dawn. Today is and will be. Yesterday was, and has been. My Yesterday is what I made it. My today is what I will to make it. I have the power to build the day or rend it."

He declares that during the day courtesy will be in his heart to give to all, his joy will be to serve, he will think truly, will seek to know, and will be humble. He concludes by saying "O day which be the new day which descendeth upon me, I greet thee, O day. I cross thy threshold with gladness and thanksgiving. I will sing the day through with a glad song, that the problems of the day shall be as chaff before the wind and that others may harken to my song and be quickened. My countenance shall reflect the spirit within me, that all may see. Descend upon me, O blessed day of opportunity. Thou shalt not find me wanting."

IN FLORIDA.

The Congregational-Christian ministers of the Miami district, with their wives, had a pleasant luncheon together last week at the Southern Cafeteria. Fourteen enjoyed the affair. The State Superintendent was present and the group discussed many things, but especially the visit of Mr. Donald Adams of the Laymen's Advisory Committee, which is to occur in February. Plans were made for joint men's dinners and for visitations to the various churches.

The three Florida Associations are holding their fall meetings in November. These Associations correspond to Conferences in the Southern Convention. The South East Coast Association was held on Wednesday of this week with the church at Miami Beach. The South Association will be held with the St. Petersburg Church, November 13-14, and the East Coast Association will be held with the church at Daytona Beach, November 15-16. All of these Associations have taken the topic: "The Message of the Church," with such sub-topics as "The Preaching Mission," "The Social Mission of the Church," "The Church and its Home and Foreign Missions," and "Jesus Christ and the Mission of the Church." In each Association the work of the West Tampa Mission among the Cuban people, will be discussed, led by Miss Gladys V. Hall, Director of Activities, and other members of the Mission staff. There will be special luncheons for the women and also conferences or suppers for the young people, the latter being under the leadership of Miss Patie Lee Coghill.

HONOR THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER.

Dr. William T. Ellis, expounder of the Sunday School lesson for newspapers throughout the country, proposed a day for honoring Sunday School Teachers. How far the day was observed, we do not know, but he got an expression of approval from President Roosevelt. The letter from the President to Dr. Ellis included the following paragraph, "I suppose that most of us, at one time or another, have been helped by Sunday School teachers. I am one who strongly believes that the Sunday School teachers have helped shape the American character." It would be a good thing to repeat this in every church and Sunday school throughout the land.

There are 20,000,000 Sunday school pupils in our schools and 2,000,000 teachers. This makes quite an educational "system" and there is bound to be a very great amount of good done in such schools. Most of the teaching is voluntary and regular, though the task of recruiting teachers is a difficult one. Thanks to our National Religious Education boards of publication we have the very best materials for our teaching. Let us honor our teachers, let us give them some thought and make them conscious of the high regard in which they are held by the churches.

Occasions arise, during the Conference year, when a Committee has the opportunity of performing a real service for the advancement of the kingdom of God. It would be profitable for many of these Committees to have a meeting at an early date and plan the work, in advance, for the year.

The Conference several years ago passed a motion requesting all Committees to submit type-written duplicate copies of their annual reports to Conference. This request has apparently been forgotten. In a number of instances a member of a Committee has secured paper from the Secretary and scribbled out a report during the session of the Conference. Sometimes the report is written with a pencil; sometimes a part of it is written in ink, interlined and corrected until it is almost illegible. Probably the Committee has not had a meeting during the year, and no careful study has been given to the subject matter of the report. The report usually reflects the superficial ideas which are suggested and hurriedly compiled by the writer and such a report is a reflection upon the intelligence of the Conference and does not represent the mature judgment of thoughtful consideration. A Conference should call for the best thought, the keenest intelligence, the far-seeing judgment and the most careful preparation of all Committee reports and addresses.

An Annual Conference reveals many interesting things. It is surprising to discover many active workers who apparently do not study the Committee and actions of the Conference and Convention after being printed and distributed. This is a busy age for ministers and laymen. But it does seem possible that every minister could find time to study and explain to the people of his church the essential features of every Conference and Convention. The Convention proceedings and the Conference minutes should be familiar to every pastor. The members of the various Committees should appreciate the privilege offered and be willing to have a working knowledge of their department.

The Conference recently held at Bethlehem was forward looking and progressive. The Convention plans of finance were adopted, and the details of these plans will be presented in the SUN from time to time. Let us begin now to cooperate fully and faithfully in seeking to make the ensuing year progressive in every department of the church.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION.

The Committee on Education of the Eastern Virginia Conference, composed of Dr. I. W. Johnson, Chairman, Dr. W. M. Jay, Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, Dr. J. G. Truitt, and Rev. F. C. Lester, made a very comprehensive report to the Conference in session Thursday, November 1st.

In addition to defining the duties of the Committee according to the principals and government of the Christian Church, the report called special attention to Elon College as the "child" of the Southern Convention. Elon College was founded by the Christian Church in 1889. It began, of course, with limited equipment and a limited but most efficient faculty. The student body, of necessity, was small. Under the guidance and with the support of the Southern Convention, Elon College has advanced along all lines and today stands out as one of the principal educational institutions in the South. Its equipment commands the approval and admiration of all who are interested in the cause of higher education. The student body is of a very high order; and in numerical strength, it ranks favorably with student bodies of the church-related schools of the South. The second and third paragraphs of the report read as follows:

"In seeking to discharge the duties imposed upon us, as a Committee, two outstanding objectives should be brought to the attention of this body: First, the assistance and general oversight of candidates for the ministry; second, the promotion of the interests of Elon College, in particular, and the general educational interests of the Church.

"This Committee begs leave to call the attention of this Conference to Elon College as the child of the Southern Convention. Its record in the field of education speaks for itself. It is heavily burdened with debts, and the outlook for liquidation, at an early date, is not encouraging. But the work of the College goes on under the optimistic leadership of President L. E. Smith and his co-workers. The last session of the Southern Convention adopted financial plans for assisting the College. These plans are hereby commended to individuals, Sunday Schools and churches of this Conference for careful consideration and support. The College needs adequate financial support, and it should be patronized by the constituency of the Conference when the young people of our Churches consider going to College. If every church will raise its quota of Conference Apportionments, in full, a substantial sum will be added to the Elon College Fund, in 1935, from this source. This would not burden any church, and it would materially relieve the financial pressure in a systematic way. Churches and individuals are called upon to make special offerings, during the Educational Period in January and February annually; and the Sunday Schools are requested to give a special offering on every fifth Sunday for the support of the College.

There were three addresses delivered to Conference pending the adoption of the report. The first was by the writer, who spoke, in general, on the "Larger Tasks of the Church." Mr. Hermon Eldredge, assistant editor of the Advance and young people's worker for the United Church, delivered a most interesting and helpful address on the "Adventure of the Church in the Field of Higher Education." Dr. W. R. Kedzie, Executive Secretary of the Educational Society of the United Church, delivered a very strong and telling address on "Christian Higher Education." Both Mr. Eldredge and Dr. Kedzie closed with a most earnest appeal for the Eastern Virginia Conference and the United Church in the Southeast to rally to the support of Elon College. The many expressions of interest in the college on the part of ministers, delegates, and visitors at the conference were most encouraging, indeed. I want to express my appreciation of the Committee's report.

Elon College was particularly interested in the afternoon service on Thursday, when Messrs. Aubrey Todd and Lanson Granger, members of the junior class at Elon College, and Mr. H. G. Council, Jr., a student at William and Mary College, were licensed to preach the gospel by the Conference. The college wishes to take advantage of this occasion to express to these young men preparing for the gospel ministry its sincere hope for their continued success in preparing for the high calling to which they have dedicated their lives. At the college, we hope to have an increasing number of young men from the homes of our church who are willing to give themselves definitely to the cause of Christ for the purpose of proclaiming His truth.

L. E. SMITH.

A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM.

Our Hilly Grissoms have gone back to school at Durham, N. C., but will be with us here twice each month. We miss our Grissoms. They seem to be the life of the hills. I miss Mrs. Grissom as she used to dart in and out with her quick, sure step of a nurse; and her cheery smile. I miss Mr. Grissom, with his earnest prayers and his kind, efficient hand, every ready to lift the burden from a brother bent with care. But the Grissom baby—well, that baby just so belongs to our hills that her absence has simply stolen the sunshine from our mountains here. Oh, how great, indeed, is the power of a little child! No wonder our Master said, "Except ye become as a little child ye shall in no wise enter the kingdom of Heaven."

Little Savon Grissom can bring a smile to the lips, and the light of love into the eyes of the most rugged mountaineer. And each time you bring love, or a kindly thought into the heart of man, you lift him one step nearer God. So little Savon leads toward God.

Can you get the picture of love, or the mind at its highest, as you read my hilly, but earnest writing of this tiny baby among our hills? Her red curls make a splash of color on a green hillside, or among a clump of rhododendrons, dashing here and there like a ray of light among the rocks and winding trails. Oh, little feet I heard so often, I miss them now. As I write today, a heavy fog, known only to the mountains, wraps our hills in silent gloom and it reminds me of someone putting on mourning for a departed friend. It seems as if the hills would mourn for our baby Savon.

God grant that we may see again the flash of her red curls and her innocent beauty like a kiss from God upon our hills. God bless our baby.

How much this baby can teach one! She knows of, nor cares not, for the wealth of this world. She laughs because she is happily free from all the worries we older ones have and know about. She is pure, clean and sweet. She inspires one to look above these rugged peaks that shut us in. She reminds one that if he would have lasting joy he must draw it from the things that do not perish—from a God of Love. So she leads upward and onward, our little baby Savon.

A lot of work has been done on our Elk Spur church and school building here by the government. A few hundred dollars has been put on it and it looks nice once more. A new roof has been put on. It is now painted inside and out; windows and doors have been fixed like new; and even the basement and school grounds have been fixed up nicely. Now if we could fix the roof on the parsonage and paint it, all would be well at Elk Spur.

The day school and Sunday school here are in the hands of a willing young teacher. Mrs. Hall of Southwest Virginia. And we have a Miss Smith from Holland, Va., teaching at the foot of our mountains. So she will attend and help with the church work at Rocky Ford this winter. But you can always trust Grissom never to leave this place without leaving help here if he can. He loves these hills.

Miss Smith says she loves to teach among our hills and I think we are fortunate in being able to allure her here to teach.

And now once more school bells ring and little feet go scurrying over these silent trails among the towering peaks of Old Virginia.

I want to thank you Christian people once more for all you have done to guide these little feet in the right direction. Our church moves forward on the feet of little children and so does our nation. "A little child shall lead them."

VICTORIA OF THE HILLS.

KNOCKING AT THE DOOR.

"Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in and sup with him, and he with me."—Rev. 3:20.

Jesus has been knocking at the door of the hearts of mankind ever since He was taken up from the earth and given the royal seat at the right hand of the throne of God. He has knocked in many different ways: through His written Word, through the preaching and teaching of those ordained by him, through the dispensations of His providence. There are two acts on the part of mankind noted in this verse and both are essential to our salvation: hear and open. To hear His voice signifies the attentive ear; to open the door, the submissive will.

I was busy at my work when a friend came to the door and called to me. I answered and told her to come in but she replied, "I can't, the door is fastened!" Too often when Jesus knocks and calls us we are too busy with the cares of life and just call and tell Him to enter but do not open the door so He can enter. I wanted my friend close to me so that we could talk together so I left my work and opened the door so she could come in. If I hadn't opened the door she would have gone away sorrowing thinking that I didn't want to talk with her. In the same way Jesus stands and waits even after we have heard His knocking. He waits for us to open the door of our heart so that He can come in; He waits for us to put aside the things that are engrossing our time and effort and bid Him enter. If we hear and do not open to let Him enter. If we ourselves the blessed communion which He wishes to have with us; we bar Him out because we do not bring our will in subjection to His will and let Him control our every thought and action. As the machine is passive to the hand of the operator before it can go; as the instrument of music awaits the touch of the musician's hand to bring out the melody; even as the pencil awaits the touch of the fingers before any mark can be made; so must we let the Master enter into our heart's door and take full control before our lives can glorify Him and bless our fellow men. There is no lasting peace nor joy until Jesus is permitted to enter in all His fullness and when He is enthroned King of our hearts and lives there is a calm on life's troubled sea. If our plans are hindered we know that He sees what is best for us and is overruling for our good and we do not worry or fret but trust in His unfailing wisdom. He may permit us to see the "why" of our changed plans and He may not see fit to show us but we know that His way is best. He wants to be our Pilot and how safely He will guide us over life's sea and bring us to our desired haven: the beautiful port of the blest.

"And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to His purpose."

"All pathways are safe
Where God leadeth the way;
All places are peace
Where His presence doth stay;

"All darkness dies out
In the light of His face;
All losses are gains
In the wealth of His grace;

"All service runs fleet
In the track of His feet;
All labor is rest
In His fellowship sweet."

MISSIONS
REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary

THE HOPE OF THE NATIONS.

The only hope of the nations is Jesus Christ. Churchmen everywhere are agreeing as to that. The great question is how to bring the church to the realization of that salient fact. In an effort to help this along, the Laymen's Missionary Movement, in behalf of all Protestant denominations, has issued a striking and suggestive program, as THE SUN has stated before, which program calls upon all pastors and churches to observe "Men and Missions Sunday," November 18th, "and enter into a thousand community men's missionary dinners, November 15th—or another convenient fall date." One suggestion from the committee is that "every pastor is asked to preach a sermon suited to the purpose of this observance. Where the order of service permits have a layman make a 4-minute address at the morning service and also at the Sunday School assembly and men's class. A missionary hymn by a male quartet or chorus is always appropriate. Special advertising and telephoning will be helpful. Use the newspapers."

No offering for the day is anticipated, the sole object being to try to interest the men of the church, in particular, in the subject of Missions. The women are interesting themselves with their Missionary Societies, study books and programs, and they are going far ahead of the men and getting a knowledge of the world in its need of our Redeemer and Saviour. Here is an opportunity for pastors and churches to give some helpful information to the men of the church about the one and only "hope of the nations" and the biggest problem that confronts this world of ours today.

IN A COUNTRY OF CHANGES

By Miss D. P. CUSHING, News Editor.

Although a young woman, Mrs. Elizabeth Cushman Thelin—betrothed known to her many friends as "Betty"—has seen dramatic changes take place in Foochow, China, where she has been at work since 1925, first as a teacher in Wenshan Girls' School and for the past three years as the wife of Rev. Guy A. Thelin of the Foochow Union High School, and mother of a baby son. Age old customs and scenes have crumbled before the approach of a new spirit, sometimes unruly, but always significant. Physically the city of Foochow has changed its appearance, replacing the narrow lanes with widely paved streets, automobiles, bicycles and airplanes have succeeded to a great extent the old methods of traffic, although the picturesque jinriksha is still seen in some parts of the city.

With these changes in material ways, Mrs. Thelin has noted similar rapid and often violent changes in political and social ideals. Communist uprisings caused considerable worry and when these had subsided somewhat there came the Fukien rebellion of 1933 centering in Foochow. All these things while diverting attention from the regular work of the schools, gave the missionaries unusual opportunities for becoming acquainted with the psychology of the new Chinese youth.

If anyone has any idea that because Mrs. Thelin is now married and a mother that she has given up active participation in the work of the mission, they are very much mistaken. She was mission secretary for a time and has taught English in the Union High School. In addition she has some 23 pupils from the school and has been the accompanist for the Glee Club. While at Wen-shan Girls' School, Mrs. Thelin learned to know the Chinese girl students and now with her connections at the Union High School she is learning to understand equally well the Chinese boy student. The Thelins live in an attractive little house of semi Chinese architecture which has its latch string always out for missionary associates and Chinese friends alike.

From the moment Betty Thelin, then Betty Cushman, landed in Foochow back in 1925, she felt it to be "a place of tremendous contrast." She went out to represent Camp Aloha, which is made up of Congregational-Christian girls and during the intervening years has been known as the Girls' Missionary. Mrs. Thelin was born in Pawtucket, R. I., and is a member of the tenth generation of Mayflower descendants. In her childhood active things had begun to change and the neighborhood was becoming rapidly foreign. Her back yard was frequently the gathering place of many nationalities with whom she played indiscriminately, so she can honestly say, "I have absolutely no race prejudices so far as I know." Mrs. Thelin is a graduate of Oberlin College, though she spent one year at Brown University. She taught two years and was for another year assistant State Young People's secretary for Rhode Island before going to China under the American Board.

GRANDPOP VISITS MADURA.

Grandpa woke with a start. His servant picked up the picture of the lady doctor from the floor and handed it to him. Grandpa exploded: "Why did you do that?" he demanded, disregarding the fact that in the absence of chairs and tables in that Indian hut there was no other place to put it. "She gave it in kindness. It was wicked of you to put it there," and so on as only an indignant old Oriental can expostulate. Dr. Isabella Roberts of the American Hospital for Women and Children, Madura, India, had sent the picture at the expressed wish of Grandpa. It was his way of showing appreciation. So pleased was the old gentleman because a grandson had been born in the hospital that he gave the money for a new nurses' home. When he came to visit it a tray of cakes was placed before him. He looked them over carefully, then selected a small cake. They were passed to his servant who swept the remainder into his cloth for "future reference."

GHASTLY TRAFFIC FLOURISHES.

The rapid spread of the raising and selling of opium is undermining the morale of China, in the opinion of Miss Laura B. Cross of Peiping. In Shansi province, where a few years ago it had been stamped out, opium has become so common that you can buy it at almost any shop. In Manchuria it is worse than at any time. Whether the Japanese are doing it to weaken the country, or for revenue, or whether some unscrupulous Chinese are using the times to further their own interests, no one really knows. But they do know it is working havoc with that country. "Our churches and schools feel that it is up to them to fight this evil in every way," declares Miss Cross.

LABOR OF LOVE:

When the funds gave out on the new church in Bailundo, West Africa—dedicated in July—no one sat down and wept. Instead a call went out to every member to come in and give four days of free labor. No less than 11,000 persons responded, far more than were necessary, but because each one felt it a privilege to so work they were all welcomed. Some made bricks, some carried wood to the kiln, some toled completed bricks two miles to the church and others made benches and wood-work. That's the way they do things in Bailundo, says Rev. Daniel A. Hastings.

MUSIC IN WORSHIP.

By PROF. DWIGHT STEERE,

Director Department of Music, Elon College.

Breed, in his helpful book on the History and Use of Hymns and Tunes, describes the usual act of worship as containing three features: God speaks to us; we speak to God; and one speaks to us in the name of God. In the narrow sense, God speaks to us through His Word; we speak to Him in prayer and praise; the minister speaks to us in His name in the Sermon. According to that definition, the minister does much, the congregation little. The minister leads in prayer, reads the Word, and preaches on it; the congregation enters actively only in the praise service. You will recall that this was precisely true of the worship of our Congregational ancestors in Massachusetts colony three hundred years ago; the only music in the service was metrical versions of the psalms, sung to from six to twelve simple tunes.

In a wider sense, however, the act of worship is more complex, and these complexities largely result from the greater emphasis placed on music in church. Since the Puritan churches of three hundred years ago have come the following great changes: the entire body of English Hymns, beginning with Isaac Watts; has come into being; all of our Protestant church music, beginning with that of Bach and Handel, has been produced; and last, and by no means least, the organ and the choir have been accepted by evangelical denominations into the service of worship.

The hymnbook, the organ, and the choir, then, are the materials by which our worship has been enriched, and will be further enriched during the next few years. God speaks to us not only in the reading of scripture lessons by the minister or responsively by minister and congregation, but even more powerfully as those words come through the medium of music, by solo or anthem; and God speaks to us again by a still small voice, as the organ prelude bids us to silent worship. We continue to speak to God in a fuller service of praise, through our great hymns and anthems of praise. We lift not only our hearts to God in prayer, but also our voices in some of the great petition hymns of our language. And when soloist, quartette, or choir sings to us, if it sing with earnestness and sincerity, is it not speaking to us in the name of God? What I am trying to say briefly is this: music not only expresses every essential act of worship; it should also, by reaching depths in human feelings that the spoken word cannot always reach, express these same acts more fully, and round and coordinate by a touch of beauty the whole service of worship.

My purpose is to show, simply, how music may coordinate and enrich the service of worship. Reduced to its lowest terms, the problem is, first, the correct choice of materials for the musical part of the service, second, correct use of these materials.

I have mentioned the organ, the hymn-book, and the choir as the materials for musical worship. It goes without saying that the organ is essentially a religious instrument, and should be in all churches. But if you have not an organ, then what? The other day a student asked me to suggest a suitable piece for a saxophone duet, to be played at a Vesper service; my prompt answer was that I could not suggest a suitable piece for this use, because there simply is no such thing; the saxophone just simply does not belong in a worship service. That which does not, of itself, breathe reverence in a holy place, should not be permitted there; that which merely entertains has no place in worship. Use a piano for a prelude to the worship if you have nothing better; but if your pianist merely entertains you, drop the prelude. You would do better to begin your service with no music at all. In other words, if the associations aroused by the prelude or any other part of the worship service call up the outside world and the purely secular, that part has no place in the church.

A subject even more deserving of careful attention is the choice of the hymnal, for the hymn is the chief vehicle by which the audience participates in the service of worship. But the hymn is much more than that: it is one of the chief expressions of personal religion. Perhaps as often as a verse of scripture, a hymn learned in childhood may be the bulwark of an individual's religious faith, his strength and solace in times of trial. I feel I do not need to further stress the importance of choice in that which we all agree is a vital part of the expression of Christian faith.

Since I have been at Elon College, I have had occasion to observe the type of religious songs our college young people sing. I have been astonished at two facts which have become evident: first, that our young people are entirely unfamiliar with many of the greatest hymns of the Christian Church, and second, that the favorite religious songs of these same young people are to a large extent unworthy of any real place in Christian experience. It is apparent that a great body of the greatest hymns of the church are not being used in our churches, but, instead, much of what is cheap, sentimental, and altogether unworthy have taken their places. The reason that I have found is that in many of our churches the only hymnal available is a Sunday School hymnal, or book of gospel songs. That such a situation should obtain is deplorable, and presents a real stumbling-block to earnest, effective worship, I have no doubt.

Since the gospel song seems to play such a leading part in the worship of many of our churches, I should not fail to pay my respects to it. Those of you who have seriously studied hymnology know that the gospel song was born in the Moody-Sankey meetings in England in the 1870's, and under the great personality of Sankey soon attained the importance of an international movement. They were devised for one purpose only,—the evangelistic meeting. As a rule they were hastily written. The classic example is the old Ninety and Nine, which Sankey produced on the spur of the moment. Moody had just preached on the Good Shepherd. Sankey felt impelled then to use a little poem he had just clipped from a paper shortly before; he made up the music to that poem as he sang, line by line. After Sankey had brought popularity to this, and other songs of the same type, he and Bliss published in 1875 the first of many printings of Gospel Hymns and Sacred Songs. At first used in revival meetings only, they finally worked their way, for no good reason, into the Sunday School, then into some churches, and there they have remained to this day.

I would not want to say that there is no value in the gospel song. It has served its purpose well in the revival meeting and still does so. And a few of the gospel songs have made a place for themselves among the regular hymns of the church; among these I might mention "He Leadeth Me," "I Need Thee Every Hour," and "More Love to Thee, O Christ." There are certain others, such as those of Fanny Crosby, that have made a lasting place for themselves among the songs especially for youth. But I would be hard put to find much more of value from the list of older gospel songs.

But the story of the gospel song is not told without a review of the sweeping influence of Homer Rodeheaver, the singing partner of Billy Sunday. For Rodeheaver has brought Tin Pan Alley and the jazz age into the temple. Although he has put snap, pep, and rhythm into the sawdust trail, I cannot help but feel that the temple has been desecrated by the continued presence of that which is not sacred, but cheap and sensational.

I might, in the manner of the debater, pile up authorities on hymns to prove my point, but I prefer a more direct method. Let us take a moment to examine some of the common songs appearing in current gospel song books. I am neither picking at random, nor am I seeking the worst examples I can find. I am mentioning now some of the songs most commonly sung by our college students, many of whom learned all the religious songs they know in the churches you serve.

Let us examine the pride of the Rodeheaver crop: "Brighten the Corner Where You Are." It has a lilting tune, and a snappy, jazzy chorus; it would make a corking military march or football song. Its words are about doing small deeds, leading someone across a bar, clearing cloudy skies, reflecting the morning star, feeding bread, a hopeless jumble of mixed metaphors and meaningless phrases, sung because of the catch to the tune. And don't forget the beautiful parodies—Fight on the corner, and so on. Should it ever be used in a religious meeting? The answer is—never.

A close second to the song I have just mentioned is one which ends—"Every cloud will wear a rainbow, if your heart keeps right." Music—lilting and catchy, like the other. It sounds harmless, but the trouble is, it isn't true. There are many times in the life of the Christian when there just is no rainbow.

And then there is the present favorite with the students, called "I Shall Not Be Moved." This is its chorus:

"I shall not be moved,
I shall not be moved;
Anchored to the Rock of Ages,
I shall not be moved."

The song has very little meaning, but what there is is not especially challenging. Who wants to be anchored to any rock for life?

Two other examples should make my point clear. Here is a hymn which describes the ecstasy of the religious experiences, especially during a period of revival; this is its chorus:

"I'm living on the mountain underneath a cloudless sky;
I'm drinking at the fountain that never shall run dry.
Oh Yes! I'm feasting on the manna from a bountiful supply,
For I am dwelling in Beulah Land."

Ah, that is a fine hymn for revival time; but the song has the same transient value as the experience it describes. What happens when the meetings close and the evangelist leaves town? Most of us get down off the mountain rather soon. We find the manna we now have to earn by good deeds and the fountain, although it has not run dry, has to be kept open by constant Christian living. The song just does not fit the Christian situation.

Look closely at one more song, one which some of you perhaps like. It begins, "I come to the garden alone, while the dew is still on the roses." Then forget for the moment that this is supposed to be a religious song, and read the refrain:

"And he walks with me, and he talks with me,
And he tells me I am his own,
And the joys we share as we tarry there
None other has ever known."

And it continues:

"I'd stay in the garden with him
Tho' the night around me be falling,
But he bids me go . . . . ." etc.

Do you see the picture? The song attempts a religious allegory from the meeting of two sweethearts in a garden, where they remain together all day, and into the twilight. Do you like it? Making Christ human is one thing; making Him just common is another.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE.

A group of children and young people from the Christian Orphanage have just gone from my church on this Saturday night and left me to my meditation. They came to us with songs and Scriptures and prayers to make up a program of entertainment. But best of all they brought to us the sunshine of young life and the privilege of helping. Those of us who heard them and talked with them were stirred with new life and a new desire to share with them so they may have just as much as we.

The chairman of the board of trustees of the orphanage, Mr. J. M. Darden, is entertaining eleven of the children and two of the workers over the week-end, and is taking them to churches near Suffolk. He is doing a great work. He is giving vision to growing people, and is presenting to the churches a glimpse of what the orphanage is doing in the development of fine young life. Every church that is visited by these young people will be blessed with a bit of sunshine and joy.

All of us regret that Mr. Johnston, the superintendent, could not come with the children. And our hearts grieve with him in the loss of his own good wife. Our hearts are with him in the work he is doing. We like to feel that his love, loyalty council and good spirit given to the orphanage daily is backed by ours. It is his joy to share the young life of these happy children and to see that their needs are supplied. But without us he could not do a perfect work.

When our hearts are happy at Thanksgiving; when we plan for ourselves big feeds and pleasant visits at Thanksgiving, then we must remember the Orphanage. The boys and girls there must also have happy hearts, big feeds and pleasant visits. They must have food, shelter, clothes, schooling, and all the things that are necessary to the development of health and character.

They can have these necessities only if we who have more share with them. I am seriously calling on the young people of our churches to rally to the support of the Orphanage at Thanksgiving. Perhaps you can give the price of a meal, a movie, or a ball game. You can surely give something. But you can give more than money. You can talk to others about the children there and get others to give also. Please be sure that the matter is properly presented to your church people,—including the Sunday School, Christian Endeavor and all other organizations. On some Sunday near Thanksgiving all of our churches most certainly should give a real offering to the Christian Orphanage at Elon College, North Carolina. Every member who handles money at all should make a contribution. And it should be a liberal contribution, for the cause is worthy of the best. Will you do your best? Thank you.

SHALL I PREACH?

Three noble young men stood at the altar of the church in the midst of the Eastern Virginia Conference last Thursday and received license to preach the gospel. It was a lovely scene, especially to some of us who had gone through similar experience and knew the type of fellows that stood at the altar. Lanson Granger, Jr., is from my church, (First Norfolk), Aubrey Todd is from South Norfolk, and Herbert Council, Jr., is from Franklin. Herbert is in school at William and Mary College, and the others are students in Elon College. All of them are good students and high type Christian gentlemen. The future looks promising for them.

But will they get to preach? Will their main business be the preparation and delivery of sermons? The conference they joined said that ministers should give themselves entirely to the ministry and not enter into other professions. But it did not tell how all ministers can live on the money the churches pay. (The average salary reported to the conference was slightly above $1,400 but most of them were far below, and one was only $240.) But there is a greater difficulty than this.

Some of us find that there is little time to preach. Sermon preparation is almost impossible unless eyes are closed and other calls unheeded. Plans for the church activities demand much of our thought. Often there are repairs on property to be made. Members dislike each other, criticize one another, and fail in the performance of their duties. Community organizations recognize the value of the minister and use him as much as they can. Denominational enterprises must be supported. The sick must be visited. The wayward must be brought into the right way. The minister is the one to fit into a thousand places and to do a multitude of duties. It can easily happen that he has no time to prepare and deliver sermons.

And yet sermons should be prepared and delivered. I speak from experience as to how hard it is to get to preach. Saturday comes every week before the errands are run and the sermons are ready. My heart yearns for the time when I can think through some of the problems of my people and interpret the Bible in terms of their needs, and do this week after week when they come to the house of the Lord for worship. Happy indeed is the person who has time as well as the desire to preach the gospel of the Son of God. There is a need for a ministry of preaching. I hope the young men will enter into this noble profession and find the joy of its fulfillment.

If you are trying to decide what to do with your life, why not consider the ministry? It brings wonderful opportunities for service, and it fills the heart with untold joy. There is usually enough food to keep soul and body together, and there are joys which others cannot know. But, take my advice, and do not enter the ministry unless God calls you to the task.

A PRAYER OF YOUTH.

Father! the day will swiftly come
When I must be
Out on the battlefield of life,
Which none may flee;
Prepare me in my fresh, strong youth
With spirit free,
To hear the call and take my part,
Right manfully.

Not on the crimson field of death,
I ask for fame,
With passing honors of an hour,
And lauded name,
But on the common ground of life
Would put to shame
The false, the mean, unworthy thing
With steadfast aim.

Dear God, I need not wait for this,
For now and here
The trumpet rings right through my soul
Its mandate clear,
To front the wrongs within myself,
And those most near,
That I may stand in future strife
Faultless of fear.

O Spirit of the Living Christ:
To Thee I pray;
Gird me as Thou didst of old,
In Thine array.
The heroes of the truth divine,
For their stern fray,
And help me now to fight Thy fight
And win the day. Amen.

WHY SHOULD YOUNG PEOPLE ABSTAIN FROM ALCOHOL?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR NOV. 18, 1934.

I Cor. 6:19, 20.

Moments of Worship.

Theme: "I Would Be True."

Prelude: "I Would Be True."

Meditation: "Does Alcohol help one to be true, to be brave, to be pure? Can one drink alcohol and 'be friend to all, the foe to none?' There is a positive opportunity to live life at its best, to share in building a Christian world, to be well, and intelligent, and skillful that one may do his part. Alcohol is opposed to health and intelligence and skill. It calls one to 'enjoy' life, to forget reality, to give no thought of tomorrow."

Scripture Selections: I Cor. 6:19,20; Romans 12:1; Proverbs 23:31-33; 20:1; Daniel 1:8.

Prayer: (A petition for strength to overcome all the foes which will tear down life and strength and influence.

Hymn: "I Would Be True."

Discussion.

Have members comment on the following reasons by H. T. Stock on why young people should abstain from alcohol:

1. Because they are supposed to be intelligent. Intelligent people do not voluntarily make slaves of themselves, ruin their health, or shorten their lives.
2. Because they want real freedom. People who are slaves to habits do not have freedom.
3. Because they have the record of the past and present to guide them. Any person can learn of the effects of alcohol by observation and study. There is no doubt as to what it does to persons.
4. Because they want their adult lives to be useful and highly successful. Those who live for the moment instead of for future years are ruining their prospects, are making it impossible for the highest dreams to come to pass.
5. Because they are patriotic. Patriotism demands that we live so as to be of the greatest use to our neighbors, to the nation. An automobile driver, for example, is a menace to others if he has indulged in liquor.
6. Because they want to pass on to their children strong bodies and the very best of social influence.
7. Because they are committed to "Building A New World." This new world is to be as free as possible of all temptations to low living and corruption.
8. Because they are Christian. This involves

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

THE CHRISTIAN CITIZEN.
(ARMISTICE DAY)

LESSON VI—NOVEMBER 11, 1934.

GOLDEN TEXT: "All they that take the sword shall perish with the sword."—Mat. 26:32.

LESSON TEXT: Galatians 5:13-26.

Armistice Day is a reminder of the fact that millions of the flower of the nations gave themselves in what they thought was a supreme effort to win "liberty." Certainly there is no other word that more deeply stirs the human heart than the word liberty. When Paul talks about liberty, therefore, he is talking to all of us. "For brethren ye have been called unto liberty." To be free, to have liberty—that is one of life's most cherished goals. And we, who live in America, "the home of the free" boast ourselves of our liberty. As a matter of fact we are thinking primarily in terms of political liberty, of liberty in an external sense. Paul was talking about liberty in a spiritual sense, in inward liberty. For liberty in its best sense is not the right to do as one pleases, but the power to do as one ought. And many of those who boast longest and loudest of being free men are the most abject slaves. Jesus himself said, "Whosoever committeth sin, is the bond-servant of sin." No man is free unless he is free inside. No man is really free until he has the power to do what he ought to do. And Jesus added that if the Son shall set you free ye shall be free indeed. Christ has the power to set men free, to give them true liberty.

Liberty, Not License.

Paul adds, "only use not your liberty for an occasion to the flesh." A man ought to seek true liberty, but true liberty is not an end in itself; true liberty is a means to an end. Liberty is a means to service. A man is truly free only as he serves. Those who use their gifts and their gold in ministering to themselves are not free in the true sense. He is most free who uses his liberty in serving others.

Fulfilling the Law

All the laws of the Christian life can be summed up under the law of love. Love to God and love to man—this is the fulfillment of the law. Let every man be governed toward all men by the spirit of good will, of indomitable, indiscourageable good will, intelligent love, and the world's problems would be solved, personal problems, social problems, international problems.

The Eternal Conflict.

"For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit and the Spirit against the flesh." The unregenerate man is at odds with the regenerate man in the individual man. The flesh is at odds with the spirit. Every man finds within him a constant warfare, and every man who aspires to a holy life must fight the good fight of faith.

The Works of the Flesh—The Fruit of the Spirit.

The works of the flesh, the outward expression of the unregenerate life—what a list Paul gives: adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings, and such like—the words "and such like" cover a multitude of sins, which are the expression on the carnal mind, the works of the flesh.

But the fruit of the spirit—the inevitable expression of the spirit of Christ within one are also given: love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, against such there is no law. But they are the expression of the free spirit of the life of God in the soul of a man. A good tree will bring forth good fruit.

They That are Christ's.

Christians should never forget that they have been bought with a price. They are not their own. They are, therefore, to glorify God. Whatsoever they do, they are to do unto the glory of God. It is this sense of the larger or more inclusive sense of stewardship which gives dignity and power to life, and impulse to service.

Walking in the Spirit.

The Christian life at its best and in its purest and simplest form is a life of walking with God. The life is open to the spirit of God and obedient to the will of God. Religion is an unseen and inner fellowship with One Who walks with us and dwells in us. And His presence gives peace and power and purpose to life.

They That Take the Sword.

As was stated in the opening paragraph, today's lesson concerns Armistice Day. The Golden Text is in order. "All they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." Nations that resort to war will become the victims of war. The warlike spirit brings war. The martial spirit is suicidal. Not the strong and the war-like, but the meek shall inherit the earth. Jesus himself is the authority for that statement. Let all the nations that are engaged in a mad race for armaments take heed unto themselves. Let history have an opportunity to give its testimony on this point.

THE YOUTH FELLOWSHIP.

self-discipline and self-control for the sake of the highest self and for others.

After the discussion of reasons why young people should not drink, challenge the group to give one positive reason why young people should use alcohol. The absurdity of its use is seen by the inability to give a single valid reason for developing the habit of liquor drinking.

Questions.

1. Will drinking help me get a job? To have a good time? To get ahead socially? What is my attitude as a Christian toward drinking? Does drinking pay in dollars and cents?

2. Even suppose that I could drink without injuring myself, what about the people who cannot control their appetites? Am I my brother's keeper?

"Money spent for booze
Can't buy shoes;
Money spent for wet-goods
Can't buy dry goods.

"Liquor in the head
Makes gay dreams;
But you can't live
On dreams, it seems."

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE

MONDAY.

A GRAND ACKNOWLEDGEMENT.

"The Lord is my portion, saith my soul, therefore will I hope in Him."—Lam. 3:24.

"The Lord is my portion." This expresses the closest possible intimacy. It is the expression of a soul inseparable from God. It describes the whole action of one's spiritual being when he is face to face with the eternal God. It means "I know God," and that means to believe in Him, to fear Him, to love Him, and to love Him with all the soul, all the heart, with all the mind and with all the strength; it means to worship Him and to put implicit trust in Him and His Word and to serve Him forever.

Prayer—Our Father, we believe that our own concerns are neither too vast nor trifling to engage Thy attention. Dear Lord, we would place our affairs of this day in Thy hands that Thy will may be done in them, and we would place ourselves in Thy bosom in humble reliance upon Thee.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

THE LORD'S COMFORTS.

"I, even I, am he that comforteth you."—Isaiah 51:12.

What comforts doth the Lord give unto thee? The answer is found in the soothing quieting comfort which we find in Him when we come to Him in our distresses and afflictions; in the comforts which we have when He nerves us in the doing of our duty, though the doing of it gives us pain; in the comforts which He gives us when our minds are illumined by the revelations of His truth; in the gratitude we feel when disappointments or sorrow may have saved us from disaster; in the comforts which we have the friendships and kindnesses of life follow our pathway; in the comforts which we have during those silent looks of love which are more intelligent than the spoken word, yes, in the little stinging rebukes that we may receive from the glances of a loved one. If "day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge," thanks be unto God that there is nothing in which his voice is not heard, and in which His spirit is not felt.

Prayer—Dear Father, we pray for the blessing of spiritual insight in all the events of life. Thou dost reign, O do come and reign in our hearts, now and forever.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

THE RICHEST OF GIFTS.

"A new heart also will I give unto you, and a new spirit will I put within you."—Ezk. 36:26.

Just what is this new spirit and new heart which the Lord gives us? It is easy to answer this question when we think of the transformation of a moral reprobate to a beautiful christian character. We have seen such transformations. They stand out over the pages of history as living evidences of God's transforming, recreating and new-life-giving power. It is not so easy to describe the difference between a morally upright person and the new life which would follow thereupon, were he converted. It is our task today to determine the difference.

To determine this difference, we must think of the following traits of christian character: Loving others as thyself; rejoicing in God's Word, helping the poor in the name of Christ; continuing instant in prayer; sacrificing selfish plans, worldly projects, doubtful amusements, dangerous companionships, etc., for the sake of christian living; hoping in life and not considering our labors vain. To compare these traits with a moral but an unregenerate soul, we have somewhat of a very definite idea of that perfect transformation of the Lord.

Jesus spoke of "leavening the whole lump." The "lump" is the world, and it is by this individual process of transformation that He expects perfection. This is the unique claim of the Gospel, that "He that sitteth upon the throne will make all things new.

Prayer—Our Father, grant unto us this Thy richest of gifts. We can do without anything else but a new heart. Fill our acts, thoughts and influences with Thy newness of life,—a "pure heart," a "true heart," a "clean heart," a "perfect heart," is what we pray for. In the name of Christ.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

TRANSCENDENT LOVE.

"I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation."—Hab. 3:18.

God has given us abundant capacity for making merry, and, when things seem slow, we are usually able to start something that enlivens the crowd; all of which is right enough so long as they give relaxation, diversion and recreation in the true sense of the words. But this capacity which God has given us is for spiritual rejoicing as well as physical. So our task for today is to find out what that is.

First of all, to rejoice in the Lord implies sympathy with His mind and character. What He is, what He represents, and what He says, are to be free from all suspicions, doubtful thoughts or rebellious feelings. If we can believe that "all things work together for good to them that love God," midst greatest sufferings and privations as well as in prosperity and happiness, we can be happy and praise God. The martyrs did. They even sang, we are told, as the flames consumed their flesh on the pyre.

Again, rejoicing in the Lord implies an intimacy that bespeaks the closest of friendship. It is that quiet, tender intercourse that transcends formalities and convention, certainly as real as that which we know so well to exist between loving companions; in which asking, confessing, and thanking is transcended by a common love. In such cases, dead silence is more intelligent than words.

This intimacy is not to be taken as a substitute for our little praises. God must miss our praises when we only give Him our inner whispers, thoughts and meditations. Nevertheless, there are times when our affections are too swift for words, and mean a great deal more.

Think of Christ praying all night long. Was it to say words that merely fell vacant upon His own ears? It could hardly have been that. But His prayers must have been in still meditation in which He rose to rapture that was beyond speech,—a silence that was felt by God.

Prayer—Our Father, the least we can desire is communion with Thee. We would know Thee as a Father. Grant this to us and make each day a new experience with Thee.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

"STOP, LOOK, AND LISTEN."

"Ponder the path of thy feet, and let all thy ways be established."—Prov. 4:26.

That old time railroad crossing sign was grand gospel. Said one, "He that thinks twice before he speaks once will be advanced to a position of trust."

Goethe's life's teaching has been summed up in these words: "Gedenke zu leben," which is interpreted to mean, "Think to live." Cox, the author of "The Bird's Nest," interprets this philosophy more intelligently in saying, "If you would live rightly and well, you must think—think how it is best to live."

The fault of a great many people, especially young people, is a disregard for future security, and a following of the unspeakable dangerous tendency, viz,—"How far may I go in this direction and not get caught?" "There is no harm in the slight compromises of principle." "I can indulge and stop before I go too far." In these questions and many more like them, are the beginnings of evil. In them are the first fatal steps to a miry way.

The fact is that it is not in man to direct his steps aright. "We err in vision and stumble in judgment." It is for this reason that God has given us Jesus, His Word, and His spirit as a "Lamp unto our feet and a light unto our path."

It is imperative that we guard the future by present conduct. We walk in the midst of snares and temptations. There are ever before us false ideals, mistaken views of what we should be and do, and the only way through, rightly and safely, is, as the Psalmist puts it, "Taking heed thereto according to thy word." We have a better chance than David. We have a surer and fairer example than He had,—Jesus, the Perfect Man, the model of holy beauty, who teaches us how to be wise, how to bear wrong meekly, and how to press on bravely.

Prayer—Our Father, we rededicate our lives to Thee this day, praying for Thy guidance and blessing. Manifest Thou Thy love in our lives, and make our lives a light unto the pathway of others. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE SURE SUN.

"Jehovah will lighten my darkness."—II Samuel 22:25-37.

Men who are worried find the hour between two and three in the morning the most terrible hour of the day. At that time they wake up with a start, and find all the troubles of their lives, perhaps all the troubles of the universe, pressing down upon their bed. It is the darkest hour of the night.

That dread period calls upon them to summon all their fortitude and their faith. Other nights have seemed as black, and with the opening minutes of the joyous day have been quite forgotten. There is a Sun that always rises, the surest thing in all creation. There is a bright dawn that always comes, certain and invincible.

Prayer—Why will we not trust in Thee, O God? Why will we burden ourselves with weights that are not ours? This is Thy world, and Thou wilt conduct it to issues of joy and eternal peace.—Amen.

PRAYER FOR MERCY AND BLESSING.

By JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D.

"God be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine upon us; that thy way may be known upon the earth, thy saving health among all nations."—Ps. 67: 1-2.

Here is a prayer for mercy and blessing. It is not the first one that was ever prayed, and it is not the last one. This kind of prayer runs like a beautiful refrain throughout the whole Bible. This prayer is found in every human heart. It is the hope of the godly; Godness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I shall dwell in the house of the Lord forever, is one of the most familiar of the thirty-two thousands of promises in the Bible. Blessing and mercy, all my days, and the house of the Lord forever! What a hope, what a promise, what a prophecy, what a pledge!

"God be merciful unto us." What is mercy? "Forbearance from inflicting harm, especially in the way of punishment, under provocation, when one has the power to inflict it; compassionate treatment of an offender." We all want mercy. We want it for ourselves, for our families, for our church, and our world. Mercy! Compassionate treatment of an offender! And this is the cry of our text: "God be merciful to us." Probably my old colored preacher friend would say: "Everybody talkin' about mercy won't have it. Why? Becaus' dey's not willin' to do de rest of de requirement! At any rate we all want it. It is one of the chief prayers of the human race. God shows mercy to those who keep his commandments. We read in Exodus 20:6, "Shewing mercy unto thousands of them that love me, and keep my commandments." And the latest and brightest commandment, issued to the first followers of Jesus Christ, the world's Saviour, was: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen." Does my soul desire mercy? Let it help do that. Teach all nations of our God. Does my home want mercy? Let it be a home that never forgets to do that. Teach all nations of our God. Does my church want mercy? Let it do that,—teach all nations of our God! It is the indisputable pledge and promise of the presence of the Christ with us "always unto the end of the world. Amen."

Not only do we have here in our text a prayer for mercy,—that God will never "shut the gates of mercy on mankind" (Gray's Elegy),—but we have a further prayer: "God be merciful unto, and bless us." If the nations of the earth, especially in these days, should put a prayer into their national platforms would it not be: "And bless us." What suffering there is across the world like a dark, blighting shadow; and certainly we who have a Christian faith should pray, in the light of that need: "And bless us." We have all been quite willing to pray that prayer, haven't we? "The Lord bless me and my wife; my son John and his wife; us four, and . . ." Let us no more add the "no more," but let us with a Christian vision make a real Christian prayer for the nations of the earth and the peoples thereof.

"And bless us." The greatest blessing you and I can send to the needy world out yonder is Christ! If we give Christ, his principles, his teachings, his commandments, his promises, his salvation,— "saving health" to the nations we have rendered the greatest possible mercy and blessing. That kind of mercy is a blessing beyond measure. If we want blessing let us give that mercy!

"The quality of mercy is not strained
It droppeth as the gentle dew from heaven
Upon the place beneath: it is twice blest;
'Tis mightiest in the mightiest; it becomes
The throned monarch better than his crown;
His sceptre shows the force of his temporal power,
The attribute to awe and majesty,
Wherein doth sit the dread and fear of kings:
But mercy is above this sceptred sway;
It is enthroned in the hearts of kings,
It is an attribute to God himself;
And earthly power doth then show likest God's
When mercy seasons justice." (Shakespeare.)

The supreme prayer for mercy, and the sinning world's supreme blessing, is expressed in the words of Jesus on the cross: "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." Those words should so break your heart and mine that we would never look again with hatred or unconcern upon the peoples of other nations and other lands. It was our Christ who prayed that prayer! The one from whom we have our blessing, yea, and our mercy! No person, or church can expect to be greatly honored, or blessed of him who fails to keep that commandment. They may be blessed, but the promise is not to them a pledge, because they fail to keep their part of the requirement.

Do we wish God to "cause His face to shine upon us?" Then let us shine for him in one of the most godlike and unselfish ways there is beneath the stars, namely, that of freely and gladly giving of at least a tithe of our earnings to help in keeping his commandment to evangelize the world, both at home and abroad. God has caused his face to shine on this great old church. And it has had ministers and members who delighted to help in the great missionary enterprise. Are you still booga-booged with that old cry, "too many heathen at home?" If so, let you and me snap out of the heathen class, and make two less heathen here, by seriously seeking to help Jesus Christ save the world with our kind of giving and living! Are you and I thankful for God's blessings and mercy upon us? And do we wish it to be continued? Then let us trust him to take care of his part of the promise by joining heartily into the greatest benevolence in the wide world, namely, that of giving the Gospel to the nations of the earth.

Pardon me if I confess that I began my ministerial career with an absorbing and consuming enthusiasm for Missions. I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Jesus Christ because it was meant for all. I am not ashamed of the Christ that deliberately asks his own redeemed church to help him save the world. And I am not ashamed to preach on a subject not popular as it ought to be in every heart; because God has heard my cry; God be merciful unto me, and bless me; and cause His face to shine upon me. I have had in my humble career churches which have delighted to give to Missions before ever I served them, and I am thankful to say that their missionary giving increased rather than waned as I sought humbly to serve them. It is now an open secret with you that I desire this great old church, with its wonderful history in missionary giving, to go yet further in its obedience to the command of its Lord and Master, Jesus Christ, to "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations."

WITH PETER PAN IN KENSINGTON GARDENS.

My happy days began with going to see the guards at Buckingham Palace. It was a graceful, inspiring sight. I'm glad I went that day, for a few days afterwards they left London for their annual training and maneuver operations, and the first battalion Sherwood Foresters moved up to London from Dover and took over guard duties at the royal palace and the Bank of England.

After the guards left and I had surveyed the Victoria Memorial in front of the palace, I sat in the Green Park opposite for a long time, watching for the King and Queen of England—who were inside that very palace at that very time—to come out. As they did not appear I had to content myself with Milne's poems, "Buckingham Palace" and "The King's Breakfast." You recall that two lines of the first say:

We looked for the king, but he never came.
"Well, God take care of him, all the same."
says Alice. In "The King's Breakfast" the King said:

Bother!
I only want
A little bit
Of butter for My bread!

Then it must have been a fairy that prompted me, after lunch, with "butter," at Gorrings's Shop, to take a bus for Kensington Gardens. I remembered that a professor from Williams College whom I met soon after I reached London told me to be sure to see the Peter Pan Statue. Had he not advised me to get off at the Lancaster Gate, I would have had a sorry time locating Peter. As it was, I soon came to the Round Pond all unconscious of either the Broad Walk or the Serpentine, which later I explored. That day the fairy just conducted me opposite the Round Pond, and the voices of little children directed me to the statue. Yes, there, at the top of an old gnarled tree trunk, blowing his pipes of Pan, stood Peter himself! I was so glad that it wasn't lock-out time and I could stay with the children, for I had never been in a place more like fairyland.

Around Peter on the tree trunk were fairies and Wendy's mother, and all about the roots of the trees were gentle beasts, doves, rabbits, mice, squirrels, birds, and a snail—all carved solidly into the statue.

The sweetest sight I ever saw was the way the little children—quite a number of them, too, who were there when I was—lovingly handled the birds and the animals and gazed at Peter Pan. The shrieks of delight that escaped the lips of the children, the kind looks in their eyes, and no one to keep them from fondling, and no harm done to the stout workmanship by their carresses, made me feel that this was a veritable Children's Paradise.

After a while I turned my eye across the road to the Round Pond, where there were other children feeding ducks and sailing boats, and some children in boats. I wondered if the pirates, flying boys and girls, and the crocodile that went tick-tock because it had swallowed a watch, would come to light as they did in the days when Barrie played there with the little Londoners.

Upon that I began to dream, and had to pinch myself to get away from the Never-Never Land of the past. But the fairy quickly led me past the Road of Loving Hearts before any hobnailed elves came to whisk me away to a cul-de-sac where the iron bars would be up for life.

It was not too quick, however, for me to see a beautiful old house half hidden among the trees, and a whisper came that it was Kensington Palace where Queen Victoria lived when she was a little girl and that Kensington Gardens were once the gardens of a palace.

Hard though it was to leave, I was comforted by the thought that the best fairies are always with us, and I was so grateful that Sir James M. Barrie had erected that statue of Peter Pan—The Boy Who Wouldn't Grow Up—in Kensington Gardens. It was his surprise gift to the children of London. Don't you wish you could have been there the night it was set up secretly and revealed to their admiring eyes in the morning?—Mable Frese Dennett, in The Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty.

THE SUN'S PULPIT.

Will we lessen our gifts to Missions, to the Orphanage, to the College, to enterprises outside our own needs here? Will we let down? Will we retrench, or lower our flag, or lessen our goal? Let me say for you, and with you: "Not Suffolk!" God has blessed us too greatly in the past, and too marvelously in the present to allow us to even contemplate such a thing. Our love for our Christ, our former pastors and our late beloved members is too great for us to lessen our zeal or enthusiasm for that which lay nearest the heart of our Saviour.

"God be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause His face to shine upon us; that thy way may be known upon the earth, thy saving health among the nations." There is a reason for our prayer for divine mercy and blessing! There is a pledge of a purpose that reaches beyond the saving of our own souls. We are to have mercy and blessing and the shining face of God upon us for a reason. The prayer is not for ourselves alone. The last line of our text tells of a triumph yet to be, in which you and I may covet to have a part, namely, when the way of the lowly Christ may be known upon the whole earth, and his saving health among all nations! According to our text your redemption and mine is to help in bringing that very thing to pass. How can we pray, and then forget that?

Having God's way among the nations, and his saving health among the peoples will bring the next lines of this psalm into play: "Let the people praise Thee, O God; let all the people praise Thee. O let the nations be glad and sing for joy; for thou shalt judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon the earth." Nations shall be God-governed. And the earth shall yield her increase. And there will be plenty for all. "And God bless us; and all the ends of the earth shall fear him."

SALVAGING "THE RED."

All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose.—Rom. 8:28.

The record of every Christian's life has some pages in it which were written at the bidding of that severe teacher, Disappointment. Tears may have blotted and blurred the page at the time. But as we turn over to that page now and read it in the light of experience, we can write beneath it: "Thank God for those bereavements! They have saved my soul from being bereft of heaven."

Dear Friends:

We reached another rung in our financial ladder for this year. We passed the eleventh one and are going toward the twelfth. We are like a little boy when you ask him his age he is always going on toward the next year. We pass one rung and go on toward the next one. We have $8,530 yet to reach our goal for the year. Let everybody push by making a contribution and it will help a lot.

I overtook a man in the road one time stuck in the mud and he could not get his motor to pull him out. It would almost get out but could not quite make it. I stopped and asked him to let me give him a push which I did and out he went. Not because I was so strong but I had given the engine the help it needed to pull out. Your offering at this Thanksgiving may not be large but it might be the one that would push us across the $20,000.00 mark.

You will be happy; I will be happy; the little children will be happy; all of us will be happy. Let everybody push. Give your best effort.

"And He wept aloud: and the Egyptians heard and the house of Pharaoh heard."—Gen. 45:1-8.

An unemotional life is a weak life. Emotion is motion. It moves us, it moves those around us.

Suppressed emotion is force held back, a still dynamo, wasted and unknown energy.

When Joseph did not conceal his joy over his restored brothers, he did not conceal his love, his depth of feeling, his profound humanity. Those tears were not weakness, but strength. They were not unmanly, but heroic. Never was he more a prime minister than then.

Prayer—Our Saviour, by Thy weeping over Jerusalem, by Thy bloody sweat in Gethsemane, let us learn to express ourselves, and all of ourselves. As we weep with the sorrowing world we shall help to lighten its anguish.—Amen.

OBITUARIES

BAKER.

Whereas, our heavenly Father, in His infinite wisdom and love, has called to His eternal home our beloved co-worker and fellow-member, Brown Baker, we, the Sunday School of Mt. Bethel Christian Church, offer the following tribute to his memory: Resolved:

First: That God, in His all-wise providence doeth all things well, so, while we mourn the loss of one who was ever faithful and one who meant much to our Sunday School and Church, we bow in humble submission to His divine will.

Second: That we hold in loving remembrance his faithful attendance, and trust that his separation from us will only draw us nearer the throne.

Third: That we express our deepest sympathy for Mrs. Baker and her family, assuring them that we share with them to the fullest extent the sadness and the sorrow of his going away; but realizing in the sight of God, whom the deceased loved and honored and served so faithfully, that it is all for the best and that some day we will understand.

Fourth: That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, one put on the secretary's book, and a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

•• THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY ••

A Drive-In Theatre.—

The latest thing in moving picture "houses" is the "drive-in" theatre, which is no house at all, but an inclosure into which motorists may drive and enjoy a movie without getting out of their automobiles. Los Angeles is the pioneer in this kind of theatre.

The "Fair" a Fair Barometer.—

If the annual fairs held throughout the country are a fair indication of conditions in the agricultural belt of our country, then business is definitely improving. Attendance figures so far this year show a gain of approximately 10 per cent over last. The Department of Agriculture estimates that the attendance at 19 of the larger fairs at which it had displays totaled 4,316,325 this year compared with 3,881,098 for 1933.

An Older Bible.—

What is said to be the oldest extant copy of the Bible was recently found in Hungary. Its discovery amidst a pile of dusty and ancient manuscripts was recently announced by the chief of the manuscript section of the Austrian National Library, Hans Gerstinger. The pages are said to be laboriously written and dated back to the second century A. D. There were found at the same time several Greek philosophical works which had hitherto been believed lost.

Unemployment Insurance Sure.—

It is practically certain according to current information that unemployment insurance of some kind will be enacted this winter. Apparently a 3 per cent tax on payrolls is the present intention of Administration leaders. Two thirds of this would be levied against employers and one third against employees. It is not intended that this insurance shall apply to those now unemployed, but to people losing their places after the insurance becomes effective. At its best it will only be another tax. It may be an improvement over the present relief system, but it cannot take the place of thriftiness on the part of individuals. Most socialistic tendencies are better in theory than in practice.

Dry Land Fishing.—

Even an amateur angler could have caught fish if he had been at Lake Immonia, near Tallahassee, Florida, or rather where the lake had recently been. The fish story is as follows: Fishing at Lake Immonia was usually unusually good, but it became much better suddenly. About a month ago, the lake began showing signs of draining, and two weeks ago it had fallen to an area called the "basin," covering perhaps three acres. Then suddenly the "bottom dropped out" and through a sink hole approximately 15 feet in diameter, rushed the water leaving the fish "high and dry." Fish by the bucket, bag or barrel were quickly available, and the rake and wagon supplanted the conventional hook and line.

HOLC to Halt Loans.—

Just one week after the general elections, one of the Government's foremost money-lending agencies closed its doors against new loan applications. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation, with approximately $1,200,000,000 remaining in its coffers, announced that it could take care of approximately two-fifths of the applications already on file. Authoritative indications are that the incoming Congress will not be asked for additional funds. It was announced that there "was steadily increasing evidence that a large proportion of the private lending agencies" were reaching a point where they could take over the work being carried on by the corporation, and that a great many of the applications on file "can and should be taken care of" by such agencies.

Byrd Demands Economy in Government.—

Senator Byrd, of Virginia, in his first political address in several months, on Tuesday of this week demanded that the Federal Government balance its budget and end its extravagant expenditures. "For five years," he asserted, "we have been spending billions more than our income. Our public debt is greater than in any period of our history. . . Representative democracy cannot long survive a drain of that sort." Mr. Byrd said that the Federal deficit was increasing at the rate of $400,000,000 a month, and that though he realized the necessity of emergency relief, he thought that a halt should be called to extravagant spending. He declared that he would support the president in so far as he was able to do without becoming a "rubber stamp." He emphasized the fact that he was in accord with many of the aims of the present Administration, but let it be known that he still believed "rugged individualism" an important factor in America's future growth.

Borah Asks For Probe of "Waste."—

Senator Borah of Idaho, outspoken critic of New Deal relief policies, expects to ask for a probe of the waste incidental to relief activities throughout the nation. Virginia may have the rather questionable honor of being the focal point for this investigation according to latest reports. Figures for last April, submitted by the State Auditor to the Governor of Virginia, are said to be the "tangible evidence" which the Idaho Senator will produce in support of his claims. This report shows that administrative costs ran as high as 50 per cent, and he declared that he did not see "any extenuating circumstances that would justify such a cost." The State administrator, while acknowledging that the ratio of administrative costs to the amount of relief actually dispensed "was disproportionately out of balance," passes the blame on to the Federal Emergency Relief agencies, and the manner in which they held up Virginia allocations. The outcome of the tilt will prove interesting, but regardless of this outcome, there has been too much of the tax-payer's money wasted.

Are Profits Justifiable?—

There are those in this age of "progressiveness" who believe that if the profit motive could be removed from business, utopia would be reached and our troubles would be over. They have a right to their opinion if they have given the subject unbiased study. One doubts if they are right. An advertisement recently appeared in one of our leading national magazines, sponsored by a leading office equipment company, which asks the question: "What is profit anyway?" and inquires whether it fits the American scheme of things. People want things; they want ease, conveniences, health, good food, education, social advancement, the opportunity to travel. They want better homes, cars and radios. They want to improve themselves. The usual reason for starting a business is "to satisfy one of these universal wants. If a business does that, and is well managed, it grows into a 'profitable' enterprise. People are employed and receive wages. Because dividends are earned, other people are glad to invest more of their savings. A community of homes, schools and churches and hospitals grow up. . . Customers, workers and investors all are benefitted." But suppose the business fails to show a profit: "Investors lose their savings, workers are laid off . . . mortgages are foreclosed and homes lost. There come hunger, unrest, breadlines, sickness, undernourished children and increase of crime. An unprofitable business profits no one." One is reminded that profits have built our railroads, our industries, and run our government. Taxes must be paid from profits, or national wealth must be confiscated. "The average business rarely earns more than six per cent on the money invested, and many enterprises pay far more in taxes than in dividends. In the past year, railroads paid $249,603,895 in taxes, or $2.61 taxes for each $1 dividend. This slender margin is the real difference between sickness and rather feeble health. Sturdy business health is essential to national well being and prosperity." Do you agree with the argument of this advertisement writer? At least it is worth considering well, and if you reach his conclusion, you will with him say: "And so, business has more than a right to make a profit—it has an obligation."

The North Carolina and Virginia Conference showed the largest enrollment at the opening session for the past several years. The SUN's managing Editor regretted being compelled to leave on the afternoon of the first day.

"I am only one—

But I am one.

I can't do everything—

But I can do something.

And what I can do I ought to do;

And what I ought to do, by the Grace of God I will do."—Edward Everett Hale.

Rev. E. C. Fry, D. D., who had been a missionary in Japan for forty years, is attending our Conferences, and from his mature experience and long activity on the field is being heard with pleasure and profit. Besides attending and addressing twice the Western Conference last week, he was with Rev. M. T. Sorrell, pastor, in our Danville church, 11:00 o'clock Sunday, the 11th, and with our Reidsville church at the 7:30 P. M. service.

The Western North Carolina Conference last Thursday ordained as an elder to its membership former licentiate B. H. Lowdermilk. The ordaining presbytery was Rev. T. E. White, president of the Conference, Dr. J. H. Lightbourne, member of the Conference, Dr. E. C. Fry, missionary on furlough from Japan and J. O. Atkinson. Brother Lowdermilk has successfully served as licentiate and the Conference felt he was worthy of ordination. We welcome him to the full fellowship of those whose lives are dedicated to the work of preaching the Gospel.

From the Greensboro Daily News, November 10th: "Rev. B. J. Earp, new pastor of Palm Street Christian church will preach at the First Christian church Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, it is announced. Dr. C. H. Rowland, pastor of the church, has been ill for several weeks and is as yet unable to resume his duties although he is much improved, it was stated. For the evening service at 7:30 o'clock the cent-a-meal boxes, which were distributed among the members of the congregation several months ago, will be opened. There will be a special service for this occasion with W. B. Truitt as speaker.

The managing editor and his wife enjoyed a visit in the homes of Dr. Harrell of Durham, and Dr. Smith of Elon College, N. C., over the last week end. We saw many old friends and some few relations. Dr. Boone's Bible Class at the Durham Church had on a campaign to increase its membership and we think that it should be an easy task for the captains of the opposing sides when they have such a teacher. Dr. Harrell preached three times Sunday: twice at Durham and once at O'Kelly's Chapel. It was the first time your managing editor remembers hearing the same preacher three times in one day, though twice is not unusual. Each sermon was well worth hearing, and we were glad of the opportunity of visiting O'Kelly's Chapel.

Rev. R. A. Whitten, pastor, First Church, Portsmouth, writes: "I feel encouraged with the results of our Loyalty Week campaign, and our finance committee is pleased with the progress being made in the amount of pledges turned in thus far. I am told that more has already been pledged than has ever heretofore been pledged, and we are hoping our pledges will exceed our budget. We have been conducting previous to this Loyalty Week, a ten week's Layman's literature distribution. Several new tithers have joined, and we are making the matter of Stewardship a major item in our preaching these days, for I am convinced that a revival of stewardship responsibility will bring new life to the church." Out of long experience and observation, the SUN's editor can truthfully say that he has never known a revival of stewardship not to bring new life to a church and its activities.

Anent the recent call to recognize and honor Sunday School teachers throughout the world, some very interesting figures have come to the fore. For instance: William O. Easton, Secretary of the Philadelphia Council of Religious Education, says that Pennsylvania is the largest Sunday Schools State in the world. It is, he says, "one-ninth of the entire Sunday School enrollment of North America and one-sixteenth of the enrollment of the world. In the State there are 10,327 Sunday Schools manned by 191,000 officers, teachers and leaders, and with a pupil enrollment of over 2,201,000. Philadelphia has 722 Sunday Schools, manned by nearly 20,000 officers, with a pupil enrollment of nearly 300,000. In all North America there are 185,333 Sunday Schools. These are manned by an average of 12 volunteer leaders, totalling 2,197,400. The student enrollment totals 20,627,675. There are listed in all lands 361,145 Sunday Schools, with 3,301,784 teachers and officers and 33,245,045 pupils of all ages." With such figures, we are made aware that the largest army in America is not that of our standing army with banners, and uniforms and under the pay of the Government, but our army of more than twenty million boys and girls who go marching to our Sunday Schools Sunday after Sunday to learn of the way and the life and the truth" as revealed in the teaching of over two million volunteers for Christ.

WHERE DWELLEST THOU?

(A devotional service for adult groups based on Jno. 1: 29-39 prepared by Mrs. Carolin Hobart of Sacramento, California.)

"Rabbi, where dwellest Thou?" He said, "Come and see."

You are often asked, especially when you are away from home, "Where do you live?" In reply you name some city—New York, San Francisco, Sacramento—as the case may be, but you have not answered the question.

You said you lived in a certain city or town. What is that city or town? A place on the map—a vast collection of buildings and streets? That is not the city or town. The city itself is a vast area of activities, an intricate system of interests, a bewildering complexity of human lives. There are hundreds of thousands of different cities. In which particular one do you live? Where are we at home in all this confusion of interests, activities and desires? This question of our place of residence goes to the root of the matter.

It was so when the question was first uttered. John the Baptist saw a majestic figure coming down from the North. He saw this Man of Nazareth taking His first steps in a service that would change the moral history of the whole world. And as He approached, John said: "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world!" Two of John's disciples heard him speak, and they followed Jesus. And when they heard the accents of power fall from His lips, when they felt a strange and mysterious influence entering into their own hearts, they began to wonder where He lived. They said, "Rabbi, where dwellest Thou?" It was the same old question, "Where do you live?"

Well where did He live? What sort of a world was it in which He lived? How much of the world did He live in? How much of the world does any of us live in? Philosophers tell us that the only reality in the case is what a man sees and hears and feels—the world to which he stands related; to which he makes response. The only world there is for me is the world I personally see and hear and feel; the world with which I have relations and which I make response.

And what a variety of impressions the world makes upon us all. How many different worlds there are! The beauty and color of a lovely rainbow or sunset is not in a blind man's world. The melody and harmony of beautiful music is not a part of the deaf man's experience. And the world of spiritual values, forces, activities, does not exist for those who are dead to all these. In every case the presence or the absence of the faculty of perception determines how much of a world each one of us lives in.

Here we are with our heads among the stars, if we will have it so, in a world of outlook and inspiration. In which world are we most at home? This upper world is as real as the world of streets and lanes where our feet go.

In modern homes there are kitchens, dining-rooms, living-rooms, bedrooms, but we cannot live by these alone. If we are destined to live a real life, there must be an upper room in our minds looking out upon a horizon bounded by nothing but the stars and being of God and His Son, Jesus Christ. Unless we are sustaining relations with that world also, we are dwelling in a smaller place than that for which we are intended.

Here is one who dwells in a stream of commodities, a river of things to be bought and sold; another who lives in a world of books, ideas and outlooks, believing wisdom is the principal thing; another in a world of suspicion and insinuation. There is a fourth whose heart is full of visions, and dreams of better things. To him everybody is kind and good, hopeful and helpful. As a matter of fact a great many people are, when such a one is around. He stimulates others to better things; he is one who has true religion. He lives in a world where God the Father is above all, and through all and in all. He estimates all things in terms of spiritual values.

How far apart these four seem, and yet they may all dwell in your city or mine, or even on the same street. The world of human life is a great wide place; there, are to be found every conceivable type of life in every land, town or city. Everyone has to build upon his own planet of life by those realities to which he relates himself.

"Rabbi, where dwellest Thou?" Speaking after the manner of men, Jesus did not live in very much of the world. He was born in a stable. He was brought up in the home of a carpenter. His people were poor. When He reached maturity and went about doing good, there were times when He had nowhere to lay His head. He accepted lodging sometimes with the well-to-do and sometimes with those as poor as Himself. When nothing was offered He slept out, and ate raw wheat His disciples plucked in the fields. When He came to die, He died, not in a bed, but on a cross; and His body was laid in a borrowed tomb. The foxes had holes, the birds of the air had nests, but the Son of Man had no place to lay His head. That is the world Jesus dwelt in for thirty-three years. He lived where He could say, "I came not to do mine own will, but the will of Him who sent me."

There are but a few of the elements and forces in the world Jesus inhabited and they are easily repeated, but if we are to understand fully their meaning and see the world Jesus lived in, even afar off, we must enter into the valley and climb the mountains of spiritual experiences.

We may be dissatisfied with the city or the street—or the house—with the whole physical setting of our life, and be powerless to alter it. But with the real life, it is always possible to move. It can be done right here. If you feel your world has not been broad enough, deep enough, or high enough for the growth of a soul, then move out.

It is possible for all of us to live in this world of spiritual reality. No physical infirmity need deter; no long distance from such vantage grounds as are found in the Alps, the Andes, and the Sierras need hinder. The path of spiritual ascent is not far from any one of us. Up into that Highest world everyone must ascend.—From the Missionary World.

PARAGRAPHS TO PONDER.

By TIMOTHY THOMAS.

We can no longer persuade young people into our shrines of higher education by tempting them with money as education's aim—in fact that plea as an educational inducement has always debased the purpose of education. A new emphasis, a higher emphasis, must be placed upon the purpose and value of education. We must drive home the point that the primary purpose of education is not to make a living but to put more living into life. We must stand on a declaration of mental enjoyment and independence rather than one of financial gain and commercial success. The cultural value must come in for its rightful place from which it has been too often misplaced by the bread-and-butter idea and emphasis.

Considering the value of an education from a commercial or monetary standpoint, education has become its own rival. Through the processes of education man has spread his inventive genius through all industrial developments, placed machines in high gear, multiplied production until it has outdistanced consumption. Man has so humanized machines that millions are no longer needed to make possible the industrial production necessary to supply the needs of other millions. Toiling millions have no hope of regaining their places by discarding inventions. Their connection again in the industrial world depends upon an adjustment and not the abandonment of the skill of man.

* * * * *

The accusation that relief expenditures are being used as a political football cannot be considered lightly or too seriously. There never was a time in history when public funds were disbursed that some selfishness or irregularity did not exist. The very necessity of public expenditures afford opportunity for misplacing or debasing a trust. Abuses and irregularities cannot be laid on the philosophy of politics, but on the weaknesses of humanity. It is impossible to deal with millions and find perfection. Even among a few dozen policemen in a small city we find traitors to their trust. Single out any profession or group and all cannot stand a like demonstration. Humanity makes progress by the trial and error method. The innocent and helpless cannot be deprived of a need because there is not a 100 per cent perfection in meeting that need. Our sins in public affairs are mostly the sins of weak human beings, and it is an attempt to cover up this individual human weakness that we lay it to politics.

Elections make proving ground for good sportsmanship, except to a few who are not broad-minded enough to stand defeat. As a rule men who cannot stand defeat cannot stand a victory. Throughout the country in recent weeks millions have been spent on favorite candidates. Contributions have been made from various motives.—motives which combine many philosophies of life. The donor whose candidate lost will have regret only in proportion to his sportsmanship. The candidate who has lost has an opportunity to prove his sportsmanship by supporting public policies of his opponent who won. The attitude of a defeated candidate marks his opportunity or inopportunity for future consideration for public office. People hail a winner, but they likewise appreciate a good loser, and usually give another opportunity to the loser for his sportsmanship. Many men elect themselves in defeat.

The other evening a noted surgeon who is at the head of a great hospital in Turkey sat down with a group of business men and talked to them face to face and man to man on the subject of missions. This surgeon's father was a medical missionary to Turkey, the surgeon himself being born in Turkey, though educated in two great schools of America. "Gentlemen," said the surgeon, "as I see it the best and most practical approach to missions is through service and presenting Jesus Christ by a consecrated and devoted life." The great thing about missions, this physician declared, "is not our zeal and personal ambition to transplant any form of our western religion through some particular denominational avenue to an eastern people, but to carry to these nations the simple life of Jesus Christ, presenting Him as He is and not presenting Him through this or that denomination." Our fervor and enthusiasm for preaching, he thought, "should not be discounted, but our plans and purposes to make Christ known to the heathen can best be executed by coordinating our plans for one supreme purpose—to present Christ and not necessarily the upbuilding of some denomination."

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA.

The Conference met in its 64th annual session at Union Grove Church, in Randolph County, and the president, Rev. T. E. White, called the session to order at 10:00 A. M., November 7. Practically all churches of the Conference were present by delegate or letter at the opening session, and the attendance the first day was splendid. That cannot be said of the second day. Ministers in this Conference, as well as a very large per cent of the delegates, will attend the first day's session and then are absent the remainder of the Conference. This writer has observed quite often that if a Conference has a three days' program and session, two days will have good attendance and enthusiasm, but on the third there is a falling away. If then in order to have good attendance a Conference will cut its program from three to two days, there will be large numbers and enthusiasm one day with a painful falling off the second day. Our opinion is that if a Conference will make its program for a one day session, the attendance and enthusiasm for a half-day will be fine, but very few will attend the last part of the first day. It is difficult to explain the psychology of this, other than that many ministers and delegates feel that the last day or last half day of an annual Conference is of small consequence, and however short the session that last half or one-third may be cut off. In the Western Conference, much, if not most, of the important business affecting the work was attended to the second and final day when the attendance was comparatively small. However, there was continued interest manifest by those present till the last moment of the session. Rev. John M. Allred was the pastor of the entertaining church and he, with his good people, certainly gave royal entertainment with cordial greeting and abundant hospitality.

Rev. T. E. White, the president, preached the annual sermon with unusual fervor and directness. His text was: "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn," with the application made by the Apostle Paul in I Tim. 5:18; "The laborer is worthy of his hire." The thesis of the sermon was that the churches of this Conference were muzzling the ministers of the Conference in not paying them a living reward for their labors. He gave a summary showing very poor salaries paid generally in the Conference, and seriously inquired of delegates and his audience how could the Conference anticipate efficient and constructive service on the part of those who were called upon to live on such salaries. Every phase of church work in the Conference suffers and suffers dreadfully and will continue to suffer, according to Brother White, until the faithful ministers who, with patience, persistence and consecration are bending to their task, are privileged by the churches to render undivided time and service to their parishes.

Rev. M. A. Pollard, chairman, read a report on Evangelism that should cause determined effort on the part of pastors and people in the Conference to win souls and to increase the number of workers by persistent and fervent evangelism. Mrs. Hugh York, district superintendent of the Woman's Conference made the report of the Woman's Missionary Society. Mrs. York realizes that her district, covering a large area of the Conference, will not be strong, active and missionary until there is a Woman's Missionary Society in each church of the district. Certainly a Woman's Society creates a spiritual atmosphere that means power and progress in a church. Mrs. W. R. Sellars, chairman, made the report of Committee on Foreign Missions and brought to the attention of the Conference, that the Foreign Mission claims are primary and fundamental, and that a Foreign Mission church means a progressive church.

Rev. E. C. Fry, D. D., who has been in Japan as our missionary for forty years, was present and addressed the Conference, telling many of the achievements in Japan, of the missionary work and the leaven of Christianity there that is destined to leaven the whole lump.

The evening session was given to Youth Fellowship, the theme being "World Service," at which service Rev. A. W. Granger of Elon College delivered a very helpful and informing address on "Youth and World Service."

The second day of Conference was taken up with reports and routine business, there being much in the program that was inspiring. The Committee on Religious Literature called for the hearty approval of THE CHRISTIAN SUN and the constant reading of the Scriptures. The Committee on Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor brought in suggestive and helpful reports, provided those present will take to heart the suggestions and requests made. The report on Education by Rev. E. C. Brady created lively and helpful discussion, particularly the part having to do with the educational qualifications of the minister. There are those in the Conference who feel that to make educational qualifications essential to licensure, will mean putting a yoke on a call to the ministry; seemingly forgetful of the fact that it is not a Conference or a group of persons that puts a yoke on a minister or hinders him in his work, but that he himself alone puts the yoke on his own neck by failing to sufficiently qualify himself to teach those who hear him and to present the gospel in a way and manner, through his own life and speech, that will reach the heart of his hearers. The noblest and the highest of all callings is that of the ministry and, as such, it deserves the noblest and highest effort, determination and consecration in preparation for and in presenting the blessed truths of our Lord and His power to save. "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." The minister who prepares his mind, heart and life to search for and present the truth in the most telling manner within his reach will always have a hearing, since the world is waiting for and anxious to receive the Truth. Dr. L. E. Smith, president of Elon College, addressed the Conference, making appeal for Elon and for education in a Christian atmosphere, both in order to be good preachers and efficient laymen.

In the afternoon Superintendent C. D. Johnston presented an appealing program and address on behalf of the Orphanage. Other items of business closed the Conference, which, on adjourning, expressed deep gratitude for the splendid entertainment and decided to meet at Pleasant Union Church in next annual session. J. O. ## OUR ORPHANAGE.

Elsewhere in THE SUN this week Superintendent Johnston and others present to the mind and hearts of our people some of the merits of our Orphanage, and a plea for a liberal Thanksgiving offering. No one questions the wisdom of the management of the Orphanage, and the whole church has the utmost confidence in, as well as the profoundest respect for the superintendent. He and his helpers, under the able management of the Board of Trustees, commend themselves to all most highly and heartily by what they have done and are doing. All this goes without question and without need of repetition. That which does call now for emphasis and attention is that we express our devotion through gifts in a real Thanksgiving offering. It is the one offering of the year in which all the churches are invited to have a part. How fitting and timely this is? Through the year God's blessings and bounties have been abundant. He has smiled upon us, and, despite our defects and difficulties, His benevolent hand has been extended and His bountiful love has not been withheld. One of the fundamental virtues, as well as saving graces, for mankind is that of gratitude. Pity the mind and the heart that shows an indifference for favors received or that fails to express gratitude for blessings bestowed. Such a mind and heart dry up at the fountain and the tides of life surge through them in ever-decreasing volume. So, out of gratitude to Almighty God, the Giver of every good, we shall take our gifts in money and in kind and, through our church treasurer or individually, lay them upon His altar of service and sacrifice in support of our Christian Orphanage at this Thanksgiving season. Such gifts will neither hurt us nor cripple any other enterprise or interest of the church, since benevolence on our part prepares our own hearts to receive additional bounties from our Creator in His loving effort to make us more like unto Himself. He is benevolent, and through benevolent activity and service we will become more like Him in our love for Him and for our fellowman. Let every SUN reader and every member of our fellowship make a real donation to our Orphanage at Thanksgiving. J. O. A.

CAN WE KEEP OUT OF WAR?

How easy it is to cry, "Stay out of war!" How hard it is to stem the tide of popular passion for strife! Deep down in the human heart there is something that responds to the cry of alarm. How easily is passion and prejudice awakened. Before one knows it, almost, his blood runs hot and he is joining the crowd. In 1914 we worked day and (Continued on page 12.)

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

A GREAT MISSIONARY CONVENTION.

The most remarkable church meeting of the year in the matter of attendance and pageantry was the triennial session of the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Churches in Atlantic City, October 10th-23rd. In reality the great Convention, with its 35,000 attendants, turned out to be a missionary convention with some outstanding features of general and inspiring import as the following from "The Spirit of Missions" for November clearly indicates:

"A glowing loyalty to the Mission of our Lord and His Church was strongly evident throughout General Convention which has concluded its fifty-first triennial meeting in Atlantic City, N. J., as The Spirit of Missions goes to press. One graphic evidence of this loyalty—this determination to support the Church's world-wide mission, was the spontaneous offering given during the great United Thank Offering mass meeting.

Thousands of Churchmen and Churchwomen gathered in the Assembly Room of Convention Hall on the second night of Convention had just listened to a magnificent missionary address by the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, Suffragan Bishop of Long Island and Bishop-in-charge of Mexico, and were eagerly awaiting the announcement of the United Thank Offering for the triennium now ending, when unexpectedly a young man arose in the pulpit. He introduced himself simply as a "minister of Jesus Christ" and in a few clear words called upon the great assembled company to give evidence of their devotion to the Church's Mission by an adequate offering. In response to his request crowds of men and women rose from their places and went joyfully to the steps of the altar on which each placed his gift. It was a great occasion as line upon line of radiant men and women singing Onward, Christian Soldiers and other hymns passed up the aisle and across the broad chancel leaving their offerings at the foot of the altar. Gifts thus presented amounted to $7,916.

This spontaneous demonstration vividly reiterated the Church's answer to the missionary challenge laid before it in the Presiding Bishop's sermon at the opening of the Convention. Bishop Perry's statement that "the mission of the Church can be saved only by the united action of the whole body" and that "it must be seen and acknowledged as the first claim of Christian discipleship, the final object of all Church organization" was emphasized again and again as meeting succeeded meeting through the two crowded weeks of Convention.

Bishop Perry had hardly finished his missionary challenge when in response to the offertory sentences ninety laymen approached the sanctuary to offer the gifts of the men of the Church. For seven months laymen in every part of our land inspired by a small group in Southern Ohio, had worked to raise a fund to save the Church's world wide program from further curtailment. The results of that effort were now offered to God for His work in the world.

The Everyman's Offering to prevent a deficit in the missionary budget of the Church for 1934 amounted to about $270,000. But the interest and enthusiasm of the laymen did not cease with their offering at the opening service. They are going forward "with an awakened sense of partnership and a greater understanding of the business of the Church.

The women of the Church ever have been loyal enthusiasts for the Church's Mission. And for nearly fifty years they have expressed some small measure of this devotion through the triennial United Thank Offering. For many conventions an eagerly anticipated moment has been the meeting on the second night of Convention when the total of the triennium is announced. This year was no exception and the result, a gift of $788,977.73, was greeted with a heartfelt singing of the Doxology. Smaller than the gift at the preceding General Convention, the United Thank Offering of 1934 will ever be remembered as a most significant one, representing gifts from women of all walks of life, all nations wherein the Church is planted, and all affected by the economic chaos which has left no one untouched during the past three years. More women than ever before had a part in this offering and through their self-sacrifice other women will be able to carry the glad good tidings of our Master's message to still other women at home and in distant lands during the coming three years.

Another moment during General Convention which is keenly anticipated, is when the children of the Church make their special offerings. This year the offering made through diocesan representatives was presented at the mass meeting on religious education. The Birthday Thank Offering designated each triennium for a special object amounted to $23,724.44 for a chapel at Iolani School, Honolulu, while the Little Helpers Offering designated for the erection of fonts in the mission field was $4,047.24. In addition to these two special offerings, the children each year give generously to the Church's Program through their Lenten Offering. The total of these annual offerings for 1932, 1933, and 1934, was also presented symbolically at this time. Thus in this triennium the gifts of our children have reached the amazing total of nearly $925,000.

HELPING INDIA MEET THE NEW DAY.

By MISS D. P. CUSHING, News Editor.

Seldom has a young man acquired on the foreign field so soon after going out the distinction of becoming a college president as has Rev. Bryan S. Stoffer of American College, Madura, India. Added to his intellectual abilities and winning personality, Stoffer has been given the gift of a golden voice—a voice that would hold his audience if he proceeded to repeat only the alphabet to them!

Mr. Stoffer, who is an Ohioan, went out to India the same year that American College was founded, namely, 1923. From 1926 to 1927 he was in charge of the Theological School in Pasmalai. As a student in America, Stoffer attended Ashland College, Oberlin, and Chicago University.

India is reaching upward out of grinding poverty with its starving millions in village and town; out of illiteracy and binding castes, to a new day, says Mr. Stoffer.

"In religion, India's aspirations are many and complex. Old customs, habits and sanctions are decaying and many are frankly perplexed," he adds. "An increasing number are finding in Jesus the ideal and power for the shaping of their lives. . . In the educational field Christian missions have had and are having an enormous influence. . . The missionary must set forth upon his mission with the spirit of receiving as well as giving; he must be a friend rather than dictator, willing to decrease in authority that he may increase in the power of the Spirit. India still needs and will continue to need ambassadors of good will, with a friendly, open-minded magnanimous and self-sacrificial spirit."

A MISSIONARY'S EQUIPMENT.

- A life yielded to God and controlled by His spirit.
- A restful trust in God for the supply of all needs.
- A sympathetic spirit and a willingness to take a lowly place.
- Tact in dealing with men and adaptability towards circumstances.
- Zeal in service and steadfastness in discouragement.
- Love for communion with God and for the study of His Word.
- Some experience and blessing in the Lord's work at home.
- A healthy body and a vigorous mind.

—Hudson Taylor.

Reminding another repeatedly of the wrong he has done you is a poor way to make your forgiveness of it appear complete. If you have gone so far as to wipe the slate clean, then it is best not to let even the shadow of the old wrong fall across its surface. To forgive is not only to cease holding a matter against another; it is also to forget it.—Selected.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Sunday, November 11th, was a Red Letter Day for Berea Church, Driver, Virginia. For the first time the Sunday School Classes were assigned to the new Sunday School rooms. It was the opening day. One hundred were present for the session of the school. The children were very happy. They could hardly wait for the signal to go to their respective rooms.

Mr. J. M. Darden was present and made a talk to the school. His visit was greatly appreciated. He paid the bill for the doors and windows purchased for the building. This very liberal contribution came at a time when it seemed that it might be necessary to delay the completion of the building until another year. This gift encouraged the building committee, and was an incentive to others to proceed with the work.

Mr. J. C. Ramsey and his good wife were also present for the occasion. We were delighted to have them present. Mr. Ramsey was formerly a member of this church. He is a deacon in the Suffolk Christian Church. He very kindly offered to cut the new lumber needed for the building and provide the window and door frames. In a conference with him on Saturday concerning the payment of his bill for this material he graciously made a very liberal proposition to assume the cost of the building materials furnished by him, on the condition that the church pay all the other bills for finishing and furnishing the rooms. The pastor is not at liberty to announce the amount of this contribution, but it is the largest individual contribution made to the building fund. It is needless to say that the other bills will be paid in full at an early date. These and all other gifts of money, time, labor and material are greatly appreciated.

A number of other people have given generously to assist in completing this work. Letters of appreciation will be sent to every contributor in due time. It has been an inspiration to observe the deep interest and hearty cooperation of the members and friends of the church living in the community. Last week several of the ladies spent a day cleaning up the church and clearing away the rubbish on the church lawn. A number of men worked on this project for several days last week. The men gave their time and labor and painted the new addition without any cost to the church, except the paint used. Such support made it possible to reduce the actual cost of the building. The seven rooms were erected at a cost of less than $1,500.00 paid out from the building fund. A fair estimate of the cost, as the building stands, for a contract job, would be $2,500.00. The people had a mind to work. The building is adequate for the needs of this church. It is beautiful, spacious and attractive.

One feature of this building is the idea of memorial rooms. Room number one was finished and is to be furnished by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, his wife and children in memory of Deacon Willis J. Lee and Mrs. M. J. Lee. Room number two was finished by the family of the late Mr. and Mrs. Reps Williamson in memory of their parents. Room number three was finished by Mr. J. L. Brinkley in memory of his wife and daughter, the late Mrs. Mattie and Miss Mary Brinkley. Room number four was finished in memory of the late Mr. E. L. Everett and wife, by their children. Room number seven was finished in memory of the late Mr. W. L. Heffington by Mrs. W. L. Heffington and family. Rooms number five and six have not yet been taken, but it is quite likely that they will be paid for in the same way. It was estimated that the cost of finishing a large room was $75.00; the smaller room, $50.00. The cost of furnishing a room was approximately $50.00 each not including a piano.

I. W. JOHNSON.

SUPPORT OF THE LOCAL CHURCH.

The church came into existence as a result of the outpouring of the Spirit on the Day of Pentecost, which resulted in a great spiritual awakening, bringing forgiveness, cleansing, and transformation to literally thousands of individuals. The reign of the Spirit had begun. His works have been beneficent and miraculous all through the centuries.

It is true today as in days gone by that "if any man possess not the Spirit of Christ he is none of His." We may have clubs, organizations, conventions without the Spirit, but not a church. The presence and power of the Holy Spirit distinguishes the church. The Spirit is both wisdom and power to the individual and to the church. The one great need of the church today is a new realization of the Spirit of Christ within it. Under the refining influences of the Spirit, social distinctions, racial prejudices, and commercial greed are swept away as if by consuming flames. Doubts and misgivings are gone, and we are one in Him Who loved us and gave Himself for us. When the individual is possessed with the Spirit, he is not so much concerned about the things of the world as he is about the things of the Kingdom.

The possession of the Spirit is essential to the Christian life, to the power and efficiency of the church; but the church has material needs and is constantly faced with conditions that demand money. Fortunately, God has endowed us with the power to earn. It is not only our privilege to earn, but it is our responsibility to earn; and if we are possessed by the Spirit, we will take the Biblical share of our earnings for the support of our church. I have heard individuals plead poverty, when they knew that they had plenty and to spare. I have heard individuals who are members of the church say that they had no money to give, when they had profited greatly and were, at that particular time, investing large sums of money that they might add to their already large holdings. I have heard local churches appeal to conferences and mission boards, missionary associations, and the like, for financial assistance that they, individually, might be relieved of paying debts that they, as a church, had accumulated. At the same time members of these churches were withholding from the church money that really belonged to God. I know of no church in the whole Southern Convention which, if its members who earn would bring a tenth of their earnings on the first day of every week and place the same to the credit of the treasury of their local church whose debts could not be satisfactorily handled and in a reasonable length of time be completely settled. And, in addition to settling debts accumulated, it could meet its obligations for local expenses and to the larger interests of the denomination of which we are a part. I wonder sometimes how long the Lord will let us continue asking when we refuse to give even as we have received. If the churches of the Southern Convention would give a tenth of their earnings to the church and to the Kingdom, there would be plenty of money to meet all local and convention needs, with much to spare.

The Methodist Episcopal Conference of North Carolina convened in Greensboro recently. A proposal was presented to that Conference looking toward the equalization of pastor's salaries within the Conference, which meant that each church would pay what it could for the support of its pastor and then the Conference itself would pay the pastor according to the demands of his particular field. The proposal was voted down, but eventually it may pass. We constitute the body of Christ in the earth. We are all members, one of another. We are exhorted to bear one another's burdens. Can there not be some kind of a plan by which the individual member will be induced to contribute on the basis of his income and such contributions be used for the meeting of the needs of the church wherever these needs are? A church whose members are wealthy should, in some way, be of great assistance to the churches whose members are unfortunate so far as material values are concerned. The church of Christ that will eventually occupy the earth must be a sharing church—a church that will share its experience, that will share its spiritual power, that will share its material values in order that those less fortunate than they may have the conveniences and blessings of this world necessary for their material comfort and spiritual security.

I suggest that every local church take an inventory of its membership, ascertain how many members that it has who have jobs, ascertain the amount earned weekly by the members of the local church, determine a tenth of these earnings, see what the amount would be, and then put the matter on the hearts of all; and see if God will not assist in securing the willingness of every individual earning member to contribute the sacred tithe for the support of his church locally and abroad.

"Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

"COME—UNTO ME; AFTER ME; WITH ME!"

I heard the Lord say unto me,
"Come unto Me, ye sad;
Come as you are, come in your sin,
And I will make you glad;
Come with your grief; come with your doubts;
Come now at once to Me;
Your sins I bore; I died for you;
Believe, and you are free."

I heard the Lord say more to me,
"Come after Me," He cried;
"Come after Me and do My will,
And let the world deride.
And let your feet tread in My steps,
Your hands My work employ;
And keep your eyes intent on Me,
And let not sin decoy."

I heard a further word from Christ;
He said, "Come with Me, too;
I want your heart to blend with Mine
And in you live and do."
One with His heart a heart I find
To gladly walk with Him;
On Him I lean; with Him I talk;
His treasures thus I win.

MUSIC IN WORSHIP.

By PROF. DWIGHT STEERE,

Director Department of Music, Elon College.

(Read before the Piedmont Ministerial Association in monthly session at Elon College, October 15, 1934.)

If you are using a book of gospel songs in your church, or even in your Sunday School, I invite you to examine it carefully. Read the words of the song and ask yourself these questions: Do the words make sense? Or, are they a meaningless jingle? Do they describe earnest, understandable Christian experiences, or are they "pep" songs, excitable, merely enthusiastic? Are they truly reverent? Then play the music or have it played for you, and listen. Does the music of itself suggest worship?

Make no mistake: you cannot make jazz a guest in your church family, and still expect to have quiet family life.

After you have made the examination I suggest, make the decision to buy some new hymnals, and sell the idea to your board. If you must, continue your gospel songs for your revival periods, but keep them far from Sunday School and Church. If you can buy only one hymnal for both Sunday School and Church, I feel the best as well as cheapest is Worship and Song, published by Pilgrim Press. The best hymnals for use in church only are the Hymns for the Living Age (Century Company), the Pilgrim Hymnals (Pilgrim Press) and the new Interchurch Hymnal. For a Sunday School hymnal, the Hymnal for American Youth (Century), I feel to be the best.

I have mentioned the choir as being the third of the materials that go into the musical part of the worship service. All I care to say about the choir at this time is to point out that the choir should be the chief rallying point of the youth of the church; the choir should be the bridge by which the young people are led safely over the crucial divide between the Sunday School and the adult church service.

Given the materials of musical worship, how shall they be used best to strengthen the service of worship? The answer, I believe, is that whatever music is used in a service of worship should be used with, and definitely related to, a specific element in the worship. Perhaps I can best explain myself by describing what I feel to be the most effective worship service.

The service begins quietly. As the organ plays the prelude, the congregation assembles silently. The keynote is "Be still and know that I am God." Silent prayer in preparation of the spirit for the service should prevail. At the close of the prelude the choir sings a soft call to worship, the sentiment of which is "The Lord is in His Holy Temple; let all the earth keep silence before Him." A quiet invocation follows. Since man's first reaction in the presence of the Almighty is awe, the approach to the service of worship should be a feeling of awe.

The next reaction of man to his Maker is praise; hence the praise service should follow. It may begin with a praise hymn or the Doxology; its major content is one of the praise psalms of David, read responsively between minister and audience, the audience remaining seated for the reading. At the close of this psalm the choir sings a praise anthem, the purpose of which is to focus or complete the service of praise.

The next division of the worship is that of prayer. Its purpose is the full participation of each worshipper in prayer, as he has participated in praise. There are three brief parts to this section. The first, again responsive, between ministers and congregation, is service of personal prayer; its keynote is personal confession, personal consecration, personal service; it is closed by a brief choir response echoing the same theme. The second part of the prayer service is that of petition for others: the church, the nation, the city, the family; its keynote is "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth;" it is again a responsive service, ending in another brief, pertinent choir response. The third part is the pastoral prayer; it should not, as such prayers often do, cover everything under the sun and beyond it, but contain rather only such special petitions as are not touched in the rest of the prayer service; as in the other parts of the service, the prayer should end with a choir response.

The service thus far is built to serve the primary purpose of worship, i. e., the communion of the individual worshipper with God. The remainder of the service is concerned with the sermon, the scripture lesson is a preparation for the sermon. After the scripture lesson comes the necessary ritual of the evangelical church, the offering. This is the time when the choir, quartet, or soloist should prepare the way emotionally for the sermon. The musical number has been chosen because of its fitness to the sermon topic. At the close of this number, the sermon follows at once.

The minister finishes his sermon by a quiet prayer, going from the prayer quietly into the benediction. At the close of the benediction, the choir sings softly a closing response, the audience remaining seated. At the close of this response, there follows a few moments of silence. Then the audience quietly, reverently rises and passes from the church, carrying with it the calm and purposeful peace of that service. There is no organ postlude, no other word or deed to break the quiet of the hour of worship.

I have described briefly an ideal service of worship, one that I have never seen realized in its entirety, although it was my privilege to attend a church not long ago which came very close to it. I realize that there are a number of practical difficulties to the program I have suggested, some which a small church cannot surmount. The printed bulletin necessary to a service of dignity is an extravagance not many churches can now afford. The budget for music, if a church has one at all, is apt to be too meager for an ambitious program. But the greatest difficulty is our natural resistance to new ideas. Not long ago in an Elon College faculty meeting a change in procedure of some sort was proposed. After the arguments in favor of this change were all in, one of the oldest members of the faculty rose and said, "I still prefer the old way." I think we all prefer the old way—the way to which we are accustomed. I talk to a minister concerning some item in the order of worship. He will say, "I have always found so-and-so to be the best." I strongly suspect that so-and-so is the only way he has tried to do that particular thing. I know, however, that our order of worship is more or less set. I am not trying to sell you the ideal service. But, with the ideal service in mind, I want to make some practical suggestions as to how you can improve the service you have.

If you have an organ or piano prelude, see that the prelude really prepares your congregation for the service. Teach your church its purpose, and the proper way to approach the service of worship. If you have a welcoming committee at the door, shaking hands, and inquiring after the children, stock, and crops, keep that committee in the vestibule. No handshaking, exchange of greetings, or other conversation should take place within the church room itself. When the prelude begins, that

The Orphanage Badly Needs and We

WHY SUPPORT OUR ORPHANAGE?

The above question is not submitted because there can be any reasonable doubt as to the worth of orphanage work. Nor do we believe there are those of our people who are not in sympathy with the needs of helpless children. It is for the purpose of emphasizing a recognized obligation.

We should support our Orphanage because of the splendid way in which our Orphanage is managed. In so far as I have been able to observe the work of the Elon Orphanage, there is not a single vital need of the child that is not being met as adequately as it is possible for a charitable institution to meet it. On the other hand, I know of no item of the Orphanage program that could be justly termed an extravagance. We could not ask for a more competent management.

The care of the orphaned children is an essential part of the program of Christ's Church. The very Spirit of the Christ and the nature of His Gospel makes it so. His compassion for the unfortunate and His love for little children are the basis for the claim of the orphaned child upon those who call themselves followers of the Christ.

No time can be more appropriate for meeting the needs of the orphan child than the Thanksgiving season. No other religious occasion centers around the home in quite the way that Thanksgiving does. It is peculiarly fitting that as we give thanks for the blessings we have received, and rejoice in the associations of home and loved ones, that we remember the children of our Orphanage.

STANLEY C. HARRELL.

AN IMPRESSION AND AN APPEAL.

For almost three months now it has been my privilege almost every day to see some group or groups of our Orphanage children in action in some way, and I wish to say a word in their behalf and in behalf of the splendid work our Orphanage is doing. I have seen the children on the Orphanage grounds at work and at play, on their way to and from school, in the local church services, and in various other activities about the community, and in every case these children have been orderly and well-behaved. Whether at work or play, their conduct has been most commendable and worthy. Having had this opportunity to see anew our Orphanage family at close range in its natural and normal movements, I am impressed more than ever with the importance and value of the work this institution is doing.

Our Orphanage is in reality a home for about one hundred fine, promising boys and girls. To be in a position to observe, as I am, is to find a real home-like atmosphere in which these boys and girls are being brought on their way toward a noble and useful manhood and womanhood. A most wholesome family spirit is in evidence and is reflected in the work and play of the children, and in the various other activities to which they give themselves under the capable and consecrated leadership of those who have them in charge. It is here that a real home is being provided for this group, and that care and training are given in such a way that doors of opportunity and hope are being opened that would otherwise be closed.

In view of the fine and unselfish service that is being done by Supt. Chas. D. Johnston and his helpers, and in view of the urgent demands for funds with which to meet the needs of the winter and to carry forward the great work of the institution, all the people of our churches should feel called upon to make a most generous and substantial offering to this worthy cause as we approach the present Thanksgiving season. The Orphanage needs and needs very deeply the cooperation of all at this particular time. It is no little thing to provide food and clothing, training and care for a family of one hundred children. As a friend to the Orphanage, I wish to make this word of appeal to everyone to do all you can at this time for this most worthy enterprise of our church. May the Thanksgiving offerings of our people be equal to the needs of the institution. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, ye have done it unto me."

Main Building--Christian

G. O. LANKFORD.

ORPHANS.

Time moves us toward another Thanksgiving season. As November comes, we are reminded that winter is here. Spring and summer have come and gone. Crops have been planted and, in most instances, harvested. Field and forest have yielded their fruits. It is the season for reckoning, when we begin to count our blessings. Our blessings at this time certainly have been multiplied. We are at peace with the world. Industrial relations are becoming more perfectly adjusted. Poverty and want have been considerably dissipated. Our government has been most generous. Men, women, and children in almost all walks of life have been greatly benefitted materially. Farm products have sold at an unprecedented price. Many people have been able to pay debts and purchase things that they want. And so society and the world seem to move forward.

But, in this optimistic forward move, there are many unfortunates, the most needy of which are orphan children, without home, without father and without mother, and, in some instances, without friends. Our church in the South, years ago, founded the Christian Orphanage, located at Elon College. This is our way of manifesting the spirit of Christ in deference to those less fortunate than we. There are about one hundred children who have found a home in our Orphanage. They need food, clothing, and other necessities of life. Our Superintendent, Mr. C. D. Johnston, is doing his best; and he is doing a mighty fine job. He deserves, and I am sure that he has, the love and the respect of all. May we not give him our help?

This is to express the hope and to urge that out of our abundance we, all, in all of our churches, may give a large and generous Thanksgiving offering to the Orphanage. Let's see if we can gladden the hearts of the children at the Orphanage and of all who are interested in the institution with our gifts at this season of the year!

HOW THEY SANG!

That class that Supt. Chas. D. Johnston sent to Eastern Virginia under the care of Bro. J. M. Darden held the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference spellbound as they sang their hymns and anthems, and quoted from memory a most appropriate array of Scriptural selections. I cannot soon forget that evening. Old Bethlehem Christian Church, founded by Dr. W. B. Wellons many years ago, was packed with an expectant people; delegates, and officials had been grappling with problems and details for two long days; but with the appearance of a bevy of beautiful girls, uniformly attired in simple costume, forensic battles and formal resolutions were soon forgotten.

A letting up of a two-days' attack on Conference problems was ushering in a spirit of levity, perhaps almost inappropriate for so sacred and holy a place. Friends were greeting friends rather noisily, as the house was filling to its doors, and everyone seemed to catch a holiday spirit as the time for the service to begin arrived. But the appearance in the choir loft of this orphanage choir, the very manner of their coming in, their worshipful faces, their simple costumes, and the correctness of their postures, cast at once a hush of expectancy upon the entire house.

I knew they would sing. I saw it in their manner,—a light in their faces. But I did not realize that they would sing as they did! How they sang! The youngest must have been not more than four, or five; the oldest but somewhere in the 'teens; and yet, they did their altos, and obligatos, along with their sopranos, after a manner that made real music. It was as though they were saying to themselves: We will do our best for our dead mothers and fathers; we will do our best for our superintendent, and matrons, and teachers; we will do our best for the others of us who are left behind; and we will do our best for the large number of boys and girls, and men and women who make our Christian Orphanage home possible.

And the tiniest one of them all,—I thought they must have brought her for her sweet, childish grace, and her pretty face; but later I learned that they brought her also to sing! For after they had simply thrilled us with special numbers, solos, and scriptural selections, our little lady of four, or five, sang a solo of four stanzas so that every word could be distinctly heard by the entire congregation. Many could not keep back the tears, and every heart beat a bit faster as they thought how proud her mother would be if she could but see and hear that lovely performance. I feel sure no one regretted a penny they had ever put into the Christian Orphanage.

But that is not all I saw and heard. It was the little girl who was standing next in line to her.

She had been trained to keep her face to the front. But when her little partner had finished so beautifully, an irrepressible smile of pride in her partner lighted her sweet face with a light that was never seen on land or sea. It was the love of one little orphan child for another. I particularly noticed it between those two little orphan friends just at that moment of triumph. And it could be easily observed to be the general spirit of teamwork of the entire group as each one performed with such sweet perfection.

Thus the songs they sang loveliest were not in the books, but in their pretty friendships, their Christian keeping and training, their tender love for one another, and for those who make such a culture and kindness possible. The words of their songs were sacred words, and so was the music, but they were love-songs everlasting, and how they sang them!

WHAT THE ORPHANAGE HAS MEANT TO ME.

What the Orphanage has meant to me in the last five years, is more than I can possibly say. I have been given opportunities that I probably would not have had, if I had not come to the Orphanage.

When I came to the Orphanage, I was entering my freshman year in high school. Through the Orphanage, I met two very dear friends, who gave me the opportunity to study piano and voice at Elon College, during my four years in high school. My desire was to go to College and finish music, but that was an impossibility, so one of the dear friends made it possible for me to take a commercial course at the College last year and I was graduated this past spring, and am now ready to go out and make my own living as soon as I have secured work. I give a great deal of credit to the Christian Orphanage, and I also give credit to the people of the Christian denomination who contribute to the institution, because you help give me a home, clothes, and something to eat and an education.

The Christian Orphanage is a good institution and it is doing a wonderful service for the fatherless and motherless children who have been so unfortunate as to lose their mother or father. It is under the supervision of a good management and good training. Mr. Johnston, our superintendent, is a wonderful man and he has sacrificed his life for the institution. He is a friend and father to all of us, and he understands the trials and troubles of every child here. Through all of his troubles, he has stood by the institution, and I know he will continue to.

When I go out from the institution and make my own living, I shall not forget what the institution and the good people have done for me. I shall help support it, boost it, and pray that the Lord's richest blessings be upon the institution, its superintendent, helpers and the children. I wish to say that I appreciate all that has been done for me here. I want to appeal to every Sunday School, every church and every friend of the fatherless and motherless to make a liberal Thanksgiving offering this Thanksgiving to help it in its work. I know funds are very badly needed.

Sincerely yours,
DOROTHY MILLER.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

THE ORPHANAGE IS WORTHY.

There are so many calls for help these days that one simply has to select the objects to which one will give. It is impossible to give to all causes—at least it is for most of us. It becomes necessary for us to inquire as to the worthiness of the cause which makes the call for money.

My own conscience will not allow me to urge others to give to unworthy enterprises. I do not give to them myself, if I know the facts. If I did not believe in an enterprise of the Church, although I love the Church dearly, I would not recommend that people support that enterprise.

But I believe that all the things our Church undertakes are worthy of the sacrifice which we may make to support them. The Christian Orphanage is no exception. It is worthy of the sacrifice of men, women and children. It is worthy of the large sums of the rich and the little mites of the poor.

The Orphanage develops human life. From broken homes, from places of death, from poverty and neglect the Orphanage takes young life and gives it a chance for development. Not all the children of the Orphanage come from outcast parentage. Some of them come from the best families. Perhaps death has claimed one of the parents and the other has to work for daily bread and there is no one to care for the little children. Then the Church through its Orphanage takes the children and gives them care, training, love, and all the things that childhood and youth need to make it grow into full manhood. The Orphanage deals with life in its growing stage when it can be developed into worthy persons. It is not interested in dead things like stocks, bonds, bank accounts, or houses and lands. It is life that has most value. These other things have value only as they are transformed into the coin of the Kingdom, which is human life. The Orphanage does a fine piece of transforming money into fine, useful, devoted, idealistic life.

This means that the leaders of that institution are worthy people. One of the best things I have ever done for the Christian Church was to have a share in the movement that finally put Mr. Chas. D. Johnston in the Christian Orphanage. He is a Christian business man of the first class. He has run this church institution economically and efficiently. He is a father to the children who need a father. He and his associates, who are of the same type, have given to the Christian Church an institution of which we may all be proud. Our institution is really a home for those who need a home. Hundreds of children have known love and care who would have missed it save for the Christian Orphanage. There are no criticisms to be made of the kind of young life developed there.

Finally, the Orphanage tests the sincerity of our liberality. We can easily say that we believe in benevolences, that we think the Church should care for the unfortunate, that children should be given a chance to develop into useful Christian citizenship; but unless we share in doing the things we profess to believe our testimony is worth little. Most of us could not support even one person who is in need. But thirty thousand members of Christian and Congregational churches can support a hundred children in a fine home. The Orphanage gives us a concrete, visible challenge to our liberality. If we can be stingy in the face of this call we will hardly be liberal at any time. If we respond to this need, we may develop the spirit of Christian giving within our own lives.

The Christian Orphanage at Elon College, N. C., in my judgment, and I have reason to know much of the institution, is entirely worthy of a Thanksgiving offering from every man, woman and child connected with our churches and Sunday Schools. It is worthy of our sacrifice. It is worthy of the best that we can do. It is worthy of dimes and dollars. Let's make the hearts of our leaders happy by giving liberally at Thanksgiving.

DO WE WANT PEACE?

Sixteen years ago we did. When the armistice was signed and war ceased, the world went wild with joy. We were tired of war. We wanted peace.

But do we want peace today? Some do not. It would mean the end of their profits. They want to sell materials for war, and seem to care little who suffers so long as they reap financial returns. This is quite evident from the things revealed in the Senate investigation under Senator Nye.

Other want peace at any price. They believe that any kind of war is sin. War does not comply with the teachings of Jesus. They will not fight. Some think that they haven't enough moral stamina to fight, but this is hardly a fair criticism.

There are still others who believe that war is wrong, that is it non-Christian when carried on aggressively. They do not arm themselves nor guard their houses at night, but lie down to peaceful sleep. But if a burglar should attempt to rob or ruin the family they would fight in defense of the home. In like manner they would fight to preserve the nation. But they will not agree to pile up arms against a possible enemy, nor will they go into another land to kill and destroy. They believe in peace, they work for peace, they live peaceably, but they are willing to defend themselves, their loved ones, and their country.

But the world is aiming for war. Most of the leading nations are spending from 25 to 190 per cent more for armaments now than in 1913, the year before the world war. And America leads the list. Do we want peace?

YOUTH FELLOWSHIP CHRISTMAS CONFERENCE.

Announcements are going out to youth leaders relative to the annual Christmas Conference of young people and their leaders at Defiance College, Ohio. For the past few years representatives have gone from the South. Are there those who want to go this year? Will the various Conferences send a representative? Or will leaders from each Conference pay their own way? Should we be represented? These are questions that are being asked me, and I want to pass them on to you. What shall the youth of the South do? Shall we join with the denominational group at Defiance or shall we hold a conference of our own in the South, say at Elon?

These Christmas Conferences decide on the types of work that will be undertaken by young people for the coming year, and then begin to make plans for carrying out the ideals. Much good has come from these group meetings. There is much yet to be done.

The Board of Christian Education stands back of this work and is always ready to aid the young people in their work. But the leadership should be on the part of the young people themselves. Youth Fellowship officers and other youth leaders are urged to give this Christmas Conference matter immediate attention. If the Board can be of help, just write me what you think and I shall see what can be done to help.

A THANKSGIVING BANQUET.

The young people of my church are planning a banquet for the young people of the church for November 27th. The banquet is sponsored by the Christian Endeavor Society, but all young people are to share in the fellowship of the evening. There will be a small charge per plate, but the desire is to create enthusiasm for the church rather than to make money.

This is an idea that can be worked in almost any community. And it will have real value. So often there is no acquaintance among the youth of the church, and they know little of what is being done by the church. A banquet can be furnished at very small cost to anyone, and an evening of fellowship about the banquet table will do much towards developing church loyalty.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

THE CHRISTIAN AS A CHURCH MEMBER.

LESSON VII—NOVEMBER 18, 1934.

GOLDEN TEXT: We are members of His Body.
Ephesians 5:30.

LESSON TEXT: Matthew 5:13-16; Acts 2:41-47.

Being a member of a church does not make one a Christian. But if a man is a Christian he ought to belong to the Church. For the Church is "the body of Christ"—it is the organization instituted by Christ to give expression to His spirit, to carry out His will on the earth. A man can, of course, carry out Christ's will without joining any church. But in the long run, a man can do more for the Kingdom through the cooperative activity of the Church. Christ is the Head. The Church is the body. Members of the church as members of the body of Christ are to seek in every way and with all their powers to carry out the will of Christ and to express His spirit. And as every organ of the body is important, indeed as every cell has its place, just so does every member of the Church count. Christ depends upon every one of us to do his or her part.

Salt.

"Ye are the salt of the earth." Salt is a seasoning, preserving influence. Things taste insipid without salt. Things spoil without salt. The Christian is to be a seasoning, preserving factor in life. Home life, school life, business life, social life, church life, all of life ought to be sweeter because Christians are in the world. Christians also ought to preserve the world against the things that will cause it to "spoil." If Christians took the words of Christ seriously we would not have the liquor traffic, prostitution, immoral movies, war, etc. But salt that has lost its savor—it is worse than useless. Alas for the professing Christians who have only a form of godliness but who lack the life and the power thereof.

"Ye are the light of the world." Light cheers, light cleanses, light guides, light warms, light heals, light gives life. Ye are the light of the world—what a wealth of meaning there is in those words. Think what a different world it would be if every member of the church lived up to his privilege as a light to the world. And to our responsibility. For lights are supposed to shine. And we are to let our lights shine before men, and to shine in such a way that men shall see our good works, and then glorify our Father which is in heaven. The man who most truly lets his light shine seeks no glory for himself, but glorifies God.

Lights fail to shine when there is a broken circuit, where there is no replenishing of oil, when the medium through which they are supposed to shine becomes smudged or darkened. And the Christian fails to shine when he fails to keep in intimate contact with Christ, who is the light that lights every man coming into the world, and in Whom there is life that is life indeed.

"And there were added unto them in that day about three thousand souls." If the average church took in fifty members at the end of a revival it would think that it had had a great ingathering. But when Peter preached at Pentecost three thousand "joined the church." The Spirit of God moved mightily on the hearts of the people, to whom the gospel came with newness and freshness and power. It was, of course, an extraordinary event. We need not expect any such numerical results in the average church today. But if the ministers and the laymen yield themselves to the Holy Spirit as did Peter and his associates, and if the church of God would pray as did that group of one hundred and twenty a great revival would result in the church.

Continued Steadfastly.

"They continued steadfastly in the apostle's doctrine (teaching) and fellowship, and in the breaking of bread, and in prayers." It was more than a sudden emotional spurt with these people; it became a settled habit of mind and heart. They saw to it that they continued to take part in those activities which kept their spiritual life healthy and wholesome. It is not enough for a man to "make a profession of religion." He must give diligence to the cultivation of his religious life. It is not enough to be "born again." A man must grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Wonders and Signs.

"And many wonders and signs were done by the apostles." We cannot do some of the things that the apostles did. But alas for those who do not believe, and who do not see "signs and wonders" done by modern apostles and followers of Christ, both here and abroad. God works in various ways, but His principles hold true in all ages.

All Things Common.

There is such a thing as Christian Socialism. Indeed one feels that Jesus was the world's greatest Socialist. And when His Spirit comes fully into the hearts of his followers there will be enough for all. These members of the early church saw to it that every man had according to his need. One thing is sure: in a world that applies the spirit and principle of Jesus there will be enough for all, and all will have such as they need. Poverty and want in a world in which there is so much wealth is not the will of our Heavenly Father.

In The Temple

"And they continued daily in the temple"—they did not neglect attendance at the public services of worship. They nurtured their new spiritual life by worship and by service. For from the temple they went from house to house sharing their spiritual experiences with one another, and great joy and strong purpose filled their hearts. "They praised God, and they found favor with the people—there was that about their lives that attracted others.

Daily Such as Should be (or Were Being) Saved.

The spiritual impulse continued. Daily, not just once a year, or on special occasions, but daily the Lord added to the church such as were saved. All year round evangelism—that is the ideal way.

MUSIC IN WORSHIP.

place is holy ground. As unpardonable as noise in the congregation, is unnecessary activity on the part of the pastor at the same time; that is not the time to collect announcements, get a message to a deacon, or make any other open preparations for worship. It is a time for meditation and silent prayer. At the end of the prelude, the correct opening for the pastor is not "We shall now begin our worship by singing, etc."; the worship has already begun. Rather let him be careful to say "We shall now continue our worship by singing, etc."

Note: In the concluding installment of this article, Prof. Steere goes into the use of the hymn in the praise service. He concludes with a discussion of the so-called special music used.—Mg. Editor.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE

MONDAY.

DAY OF ATONEMENT.

"The life of the flesh is in the blood; and I have given it to you upon the altar to make atonement for your souls: for it is the blood that maketh atonement by reason of life."—Lev. 17:11.

"He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed."—Isa. 53:5.

"If we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin."—Jno. 1:7.

This is our day of atonement. Read the following references and give thanks:

Ex. 29: 38, 39; Lev. 23:26, 27; Matt. 20:28, Col. 1:19, 20; Heb. 9:26; 12:24; Rev. 1:5; 7:14; Jno. 6:51; Heb. 10:10-12; Jno. 1:29; Jno. 2:2; 3:14,15; Rom. 3:35.

The atonement means united with God through Jesus, the Son; heirs to the Kingdom of God and joint heirs with Jesus our Saviour.

As the "life of the flesh is in the blood," so the life in every event connected with our lives is in the sacrifice that makes it worthwhile. As the sap is in the tree, so God is in us to make us what we ought to be.

Prayer—Dear Lord Jesus help me this day to do my duty acceptably to Thee and man. May I not forget Thee in anything and in all things find Thee a consciousness in me and an ever present help in every need.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

FOLLOWING JESUS.

"Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with? They said unto him, We are able."—Matt. 20:22.

The disciples were fishermen of Galilee. Lake Galilee abounded in fish, and on its shores were great fish curing industries, whence they were exported throughout the Roman Empire. How natural it was that Jesus would perform the miraculous draught of fishes, and then call these fishermen to follow Him and be fishermen of men.

The disciples followed Jesus, but it cost them their fishing business. What has it cost you? What has it cost you in worldly projects, doubtful amusements, dangerous companionship. What have you given up for the sake of being a Christian?

Prayer—Our Father in heaven, we pray Thee for vision and understanding. We pray Thee for power to live above the mean things of life. We pray for poise of mind to rejoice in labors that bring reward, to be glad of labors that achieve ambitions. Give us the Christian idea in all things. We ask it for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

ABIDING FOREVER.

"He that doeth the will of God abideth forever."—1 Jno. 2:17.

The apostle has described the condition of the outside of the Christian community of the world as compared with that of the inside, contrasting the children of God with the children of the world. He has made it plain that only those who do the will of God will survive the catastrophe and share in the new age.

Jesus has stated the same thing in the parable of the house built on sand, and that built on a rock, saying that he that doeth the will of God shall weather all storms. His life will stand because his house is built on a rock. This is the meaning of the word "abideth." How we need this kind of truth in these stormy days! To know that "He doeth all things well to them that love and serve Him."

Prayer—O Lord we rejoice in Thy love through Jesus Christ our Lord. Be gracious to forgive us of all our sins, and lead us by Thy spirit every day. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

ACHIEVING, ABIDING.

"Cast thy burden upon the Lord and he shall sustain thee."—Ps. 55:22.

Well, the scripture is the answer.

"God lives! There rest, my soul;

God hears! Before him bow;

God sees! And can control;

God leads! Then follow thou.

God gives and loves,—

Look up above!

O heart, be done with all thy care!

You shall live with Him there."

Schmolke.

FRIDAY.

LIFE UNPERISHABLE.

"I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish."—Jno. 10:38.

Our life, the life we live and the things we live with, comes from God. This life and this living is indestructible. It may change its form and its mode of manifestation: but it never dies, and it cannot be annihilated. There seems to be such a thing as death, but Christ revealed that there is no death. In the words of the poet, "There is no death. What seems so is only transition."

Nature gives us a hint of this. In autumn, there seems to be decay, but it is only a disguise, for spring shows that none of the vital forces of its life were lost, rather increased.

Death would make us believe that individual life is destroyed; but all analogy of science and all we know of spiritual relations of individuals will not let us for a moment believe that death ends it all. Such is the life that Christ gives us.

"The flame may rise, the bush may burn

In deserts lone and bare:

There is no waste of any bloom

While God is present there.

That nothing walks with aimless feet;

That one life shall be destroyed,

Or cast as rubbish to the void,

When God has made the pile complete."

Prayer—Our Father in Heaven as we face the day and its duties, make it life to us and make us life to it, and be Thou the center of it all where we will adore and worship Thee forever.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

UNENVIABLE PEACE.

"They are not in trouble as other men."—Ps. 73:1-17.

The psalmist, like the rest of us, had his fit of envy of the arrogant rich who were unrighteous yet undisturbed in their unrighteousness. It seems so unfair that a man may do manifest wrong and prosper tremendously in it.

But does a man prosper tremendously in it? the psalmist asks. Does he prosper finally at all? Is not his "latter end" of unutterable misery that by which his lot is to be judged? And in view of that, is not our envy of him as unreasonable as his prosperity now seems to be?

Prayer—Thus, O Lord, we will be at peace in Thy universe, well knowing that justice, complete justice, is ultimately to triumph, and that Thy judgments, though they may seem long delayed to us mortals of a day, fall sharp and swift when measured in the infinite reaches of eternity.

—Amen.

CURATIVE WORDS.

"Peter, who shall speak unto thee words, whereby thou shalt be saved."—Acts 11:7-18.

Words, words, words! We are often impatient with them. Trifles light as air, do we not often rely on them too much? Can a word work a miracle? Can a word heal?

Yes, a word can heal, a word can work a miracle, now as in the days of Christ, the days of Peter and Cornelius. Words can save. Words are ropes to the falling, panaceas to the sick, water to fire, life-lines to the drowning.

Only, they must not be our words, but God's. They must be spoken through our lips, but by the Spirit dwelling within us. He will dwell within us. He will speak through us. And then what orators we shall be!

Prayer—Lord God, be with our speech. Lord God, may all our words be moved by Thee.

—Amen.

night to prevent war. Mr. Wilson was re-elected in 1916 with the slogan: "He kept us out of war," but what change came over us all in 1917! We must not forget that experience.

Let us forget all this turn to Mark Twain's "The Mysterious Stranger" written a year before the world war. Here is what he wrote:

"There has never been a just one, never an honorable one on the part of the instigator of the war. I can see a million years ahead, and this rule will never change in so many as half a dozen instances. The loud little handful, as usual, will shout for war. The pulpit will—warily and cautiously—object at first; the great, big, dull bulk of the nation will rub its sleepy eyes and try to make out why there should be a war, and will say, earnestly and indignantly, 'It is unjust and dishonorable, and there is no necessity for it.'

"Then the handful will shout louder. A few fair men on the other side will argue and reason against the war with speech and pen, and at first will have a hearing and be applauded; but it will not last long; those others will shout them, and presently the anti-war audiences will thin out and lose popularity.

"Before long you will see this curious thing: the speakers stoned from the platform, and free speech strangled by hordes of furious men who in the secret hearts are still at one with those stoned speakers—as earlier—but do not dare to say so.

"And the whole nation—pulpit and all—will take up the war-cry, and shout itself hoarse, and mob any honest man who ventures to open his mouth; and presently such mouths will cease to open.

"Next the statesmen will invent cheap lies, putting the blame upon the nation that is attacked, and every man will be glad of those conscience-soothing falsities, and will diligently study them, and refuse to examine any refutations of them; and thus he will by and by convince himself that war is just, and will thank God for the better sleep he enjoys after this process of grotesque self-deception."

THE HOST SAVIOUR.

By JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D.

"Jesus sat at meat in his house."—Mark 2:15.

In this series we have preached on "The Pardoning Saviour," "The Enthusiastic Saviour," "The Powerful Saviour," and now we are thinking about "The Host Saviour." The host Saviour! I can think of nothing more strengthening to one's character than the thought of having Jesus Christ as our host. By that I do not mean anything that the most virile young man in this congregation could not appreciate. To live with Jesus is to have the full use of our powers, full joy in our daily round of activities, and an outlook that challenges continuous growth.

We have in our lesson today the picture of Jesus acting as host either in his own house, or the house of his new made friend and follower, Matthew. Did it make anyone who came under the strength and beauty of His life as He acted as host that day "small," or "narrow," or "weak?" Did it lessen their chance of happiness? Did it make them so circumspect that they could no longer enjoy living? Did it lessen their chance of investing their lives in making a better and happier world? No, it did not!

What young man, or young woman is there among us, worthy of the salt that seasons his bread, who does not wish to make this a better place for having lived in it? Stop, and think. Do you want to develop into a parasite, depending upon the hard-earned savings of your father and mother, or the united charity of an over-taxed community for sustenance? Would you like to use your brains in some wholesome way, in making the world a better place, and your own life a much happier one by developing and using the very best powers that are within you? Then let us turn to Him who said, "I am come that they might have life and have it more abundantly."

It is a beautiful picture that we have here. Jesus is sitting as host at his table. A meal has been prepared. Guests are sitting down with him. And the passing Pharisees and scribes are peeping in to see what is happening. And they are seeing a strange, but beautiful sight! The fairest one who ever sat at a table is giving a feast. We do not what was before them, but we can be sure that it was enough and to spare. We remember the multitudes who ate with Him and the little fisher lad, and we cannot but think there was a plenty. There is full measure with Jesus Christ. He never deals us short, never turns us down, never sends us away empty.

There are his disciples sitting down with Him. How often they will eat with Him in the days to come! And what table-talk they will hear. What lessons they will learn. We can expect Jesus to have his disciples sit down with Him to meat. Other teachers were doing the same. And how appropriate it was to have them eat with Him.

But along with the disciples are many publicans sitting down to the table, too. Now that is strange. Here Jesus is beginning a great work, and teaching His disciples to carry it forward, but will not his disciples turn away and his following fall off if He takes up with these publicans? But maybe the fact that the publicans,—servers of the Gentiles,—who have lost caste by the work which they are doing are sitting down at the table of the Strange teacher can be explained on the basis that this is probably Matthew's house, for Matthew was a publican. At any rate they are taking their places with the full approval of Jesus.

Have you ever thought of how many kind of people we cannot eat with, and how many kind of people Jesus can eat with? Color, or caste, or condition, or kind keep them away from our tables, but not the table of Jesus. Half the world will go to bed hungry tonight with no access to the full and overflowing tables of earth, but not at the wish of Jesus. He would say to His followers across the world, as He said in ancient days to His disciples, "Give ye them to eat." The host Saviour would bid them sit at His table.

But also sitting down at that table in our Scripture lesson today are sinners. What a break! What a social blunder! For sinners in Jesus' day were not allowed. They were outcasts, ugly, despised. But they were being seated at Jesus' table! Now the strange thing was that while these were all sitting down together: Jesus, disciples, publicans, sinners there is no indication of discontent on the part of any. There seemed to be peace, and fellowship. The wealthy and the poor, the cultured and the unlearned, the good and the bad, the high and the low, the young and the old were sitting down together when Jesus was host. The only people I hear murmuring are the scribes and Pharisees who have not come to the Saviour's table, and who stand afar off and criticise. Can you imagine any more miserable set than they were? How they must have hated Jesus,—and eventually themselves! The happy people in the world are not those that stand off, peep in, and criticise the people who are humble of spirit, great of heart, and happy in their souls. If you see somebody happy do not be jealous, but be zealous in your efforts to make still others happy and happiness will come to you.

Having had Jesus for host they went out to change a world. Do people feel happier and stronger when they have been in your company? Do you inspire them to go and sin no more? Do their faces glow with the morning, and their spirits spring with beauty?

There are scores of people carrying burdens today that are needless. Harboring old hurts, caressing old cuts, and feeling that their dignities, and personalities have been offended; when what they really need is to accept Jesus as their host and feed at His moral and spiritual table. Then they would be able to sit down with their pet sinners, and poor publicans at the feet of Jesus and find a new objective in living, and a new way of forgiving.

Sometime ago I went into a crowded church in the middle of the week to hear a Bible teacher teach the Bible. And what did I see? I saw a great group of people hanging on the words of a middle aged woman as if she were telling the most interesting story in the world. She was telling how she had been a wealthy woman wondering what to do with her life. She was uninterested in the church and the making of the lives of other people happy. One day she heard a strange, sweet call to attend the meeting which was going on in her town and she sat as a guest at the feet of her Saviour. Since that day her life has been simply radiant with happiness and good deeds for others.

Again not so long ago I saw a young lawyer, a son of a physician, who had been given every advantage as the son of a wealthy father. He had trampled them rather ruthlessly under foot. Until one day he chanced to sit at the table of the Lord. He repented of his waywardness. Turned over a new leaf, and was radiantly happy in making the world a happier and better one in which to live.

This world has need of men and women who have eaten with the Lord. Many things in this old world are all wrong,—just starke wrong. They need making over. The world calls for men and women with the right spirit, in full possession of all their talents and powers to help right those wrongs. You can get the fun of your lives by companying with Christ, learning of Him, catching His spirit, and setting about in your own best way with His help to make a better and happier world.

Young friend, do you want happiness? Happiness of the real, lasting kind. Learn of Jesus. Count on God. Ask Him for a place in the world in which to serve Him. "This is my Father's world," and if I am going to fit into it I must find out my Father's ways, and will. And leave all to follow that. If I do that I shall never hunger. I shall come in and sup with Him, and He with me. "Jesus sat at meat in his house." And you and I have the privilege of sitting down with Him,—our host Saviour!

A Story for the Children

THE SCRAP-BOOK CLUB.

By LYDIA LYON ROBERTS.

"See what daddy gave me," said Doris Burns as she led the way to the playroom.

"Oh, what nice piles of paper!" cried Marjorie Newcomb. "I like the bright colors. What are you going to do with it all?"

"I don't know," said Doris as she arranged the yellow, green, pink, and blue papers neatly. "I should like to do something special with it because it's so pretty."

"It would be lovely for scrap-books," said Marjorie. "We could make each one a different color."

"And choose different kinds of pictures for each one," said Doris eagerly. "We could make the books big or little by putting the leaves together with brass fasteners the way my brother does with his college papers."

"I should like to make a yellow scrap-book full of pictures of children," said Marjorie. "I have seen lots of pictures of children in the newspapers and magazines and I should cut out the smiling ones."

"We could make scrap-books of animals and airplanes and flowers and boats," said Doris.

"I think a scrap-book of children's poems and stories would be fun to make," said Marjorie. "It would be like owning a real story-book."

"My sister May might like a scrap-book of crossword puzzles," said Doris, thinking hard, "and I know my cousin Ann would like one of birds."

"We can't make them all," said Marjorie with a laugh.

"It is almost vacation time now," said Doris. "I think it would be jolly to make scrap-books on the porch in the warm summer afternoons."

"I know what we can do!" said Marjorie excitedly. "Let's ask all the boys and girls on our street to help us. We can have a scrap-book club and meet twice a week at each other's houses."

"And save all our old magazines and newspapers and wrapping paper and colored paper," said Doris. "We can each choose a different kind of scrap-book to make and exchange pictures and stories for it. Come on, let's go and ask the other children if they would like to join our club."

Before the end of that week there were ten boys and girls in the scrap-book club. The boys planned to make scrap-books of trains, buildings, and wild animals. One boy decided to start a travel scrap-book in which he would paste pictures of foreign people and places.

"I am going to use wrapping paper and make a book big enough to hold some pictures from the photogravure parts of the newspapers," said another boy one afternoon. "The pages will be about fifteen inches long and ten inches wide and then I shall have room enough for the ocean pictures."

"You are making the biggest scrap-book and I am making the smallest one," said Doris, smiling as she held up a little blue book. "I have cut the paper into pieces about four inches square and I am pasting one real funny joke on each page. Over each joke will be a tiny figure or a little cartoon. The whole scrap-book will be full of funny things. I think I will give it to my college brother on his birthday."

"Oh, that gives me an ideal!" said one of the other girls. "My mother likes to read about gardens and how to grow flowers. I will make her a garden scrap-book out of this pretty green paper and put colored flower pictures on every other page. I hope you'll all save garden articles and pictures for me."

"It's going to be fun to watch for things for each other's books," said Marjorie.

"We can keep up this club for a long time," said one of the boys. "In the summer we can meet on our piazzas, or the cellars or the back yards, and in winter we can meet after school in each other's playrooms, or kitchens, or wherever we won't bother our mothers."

"Let's exchange scrap-books when we get some of them done," suggested Doris. "Then each one will have a chance to enjoy all the other books."

"Why not pass along some of the books to other children who would enjoy them?" said Marjorie. "We can start a lending library of scrap-books."

"My cousin who lives in the country is going to join the Boy Scouts next year," said one of the boys eagerly. "I am sure he would like it if I made him a scrap-book of pictures and articles about Scouts all over the world, and he could pass it along to the others in his troop."

"Every time the club meets we think of something else that will be fun to do," said Marjorie happily, and the other members quickly agreed with her.—Zion Herald.

THE ROSE AND THE CLAY.

A man in the East by chance took up a piece of clay which lay in his path, and was surprised to find that it had so sweet an odor.

"It is but a poor piece of clay," said he, "a mean clod of earth, yet how sweet it is! How fresh! But whence has it this scent?"

The clay said, "I have dwelt with the rose." Make friends with the good if you wish to be like them.—Aesop.

Everything in mortal life is temporary. It is not meant to endure. We cannot have things as we want them to be for long. They change, and we change also. Eternal things are the only security we can reach. If we lay hold on God and follow His will, our joy is permanent—but only then.—Young People.

The fairest fortune that can fall to a thinking man is to have searched out the searchable, and restfully to adore the unsearchable.—Goethe.

MARRIAGES

DOWNSON-DOFFLEMYER

On Oct. 19, 1934, Mr. Wilson Downson and Miss Leona Dofflemeyer drove from Washington, D. C., to my home, and were quietly married. The bride is a daughter of Bro. M. A. Dofflemeyer, and is a faithful member of Bethel Christian Church, and lived there until she went to Washington to work a year or two ago. There she met the man who measured up to all necessary requirements, and they are now married and happy. The groom holds a good position in the government printing office, and does indeed seem to be a fine man—just such as Miss Leona deserves. Here is wishing them the best of luck and the most of happiness during their married life.

MRS. D. D. SUTTON,
MRS. LAURA GILLIAM,
MRS. R. W. KERNODLE, Committee.

MAPHIS.

Charles David Maphis was born February 6, 1861, and died November 7, 1934, aged 73 years, 9 months, and 1 day. Bro. Maphis spent the last years of his life in Harrisonburg, though he formerly lived at Linville where he was an active member and deacon in the Christian church. After moving to Harrisonburg he did not attend the Linville church so often, but retained his membership and office of deacon there until his death. He was quite active during the last ten years of his life as a member of the Business Men's Evangelistic Club of Harrisonburg. He, with other members of the Club, did much good by holding services in surrounding territory. He was much in demand along this line, and was quite successful as a personal worker in winning souls to Christ. He is survived by his widow, and by one son and one daughter. Funeral services were held at the Harrisonburg Methodist church, November 9, 1934, in which the writer was assisted by Dr. E. L. Woolf, pastor of the Methodist church, and Dr. J. W. Wright, pastor of the United Brethren church, and interment was in Woodbine cemetery.

A. W. ANDES.

LISKEY.

Sister Mary Elizabeth Liskey, wife of Bro. A. H. Liskey, was born April 30, 1854, and departed to the better land September 30, 1934. Her age was 80 years and 5 months. Sister Liskey was a faithful member of New Hope Christian Church, as is her husband also. For some years they have lived at Bridgewater, Va., and because of the distance, and her ill health have not been able to attend their church as often as they did in former years when they lived in the New Hope neighborhood. However, her interest in the church did not wane, nor her spiritual fervor grow dim. She bore affliction patiently, and with an unflinching faith in God. Services were held at New Hope, October 2, 1934, in which the writer was assisted by the pastor, Dr. M. L. Weekley.

A. W. ANDES.

FREEZE.

Ruby Anne Freeze, little daughter of Luther and Nellie Freeze, was born Nov. 11, 1932, and died Oct. 20, 1934, at the young and tender age of 1 year 11 months and nine days. This is the second child to be carried out of the home by death, and much sympathy is felt for the bereaved parents. There yet remains one child. Funeral services were at Newport church, Oct. 22, 1934.

New China for the White House.—

Prosperity is returning—to the White House at least. An order has just been given for a new set of dishes at a cost of $9,301.20. The new china is American ware ivory, trimmed in blue and gold and bearing the presidential coat of arms. Work on the order is being speeded that the set may be completed in time for the mid-winter social season in the capital.

America and the Whaling Industry.—

If the catching of whales is essential to the future prosperity of America, then we are in a bad way. A contemporary tells us that we are being edged off the map of that once to us important industry. The department of Commerce reports that our once lusty armada of a thousand or more whaling boats has shrunk to just 14. In tonnage our present whaling ships amount to just 9,037 against 198,504 in 1858, when our fleet reached its zenith.

Christmas Savings Clubs.—

During the next two weeks more than seven million Americans will walk out of 5,500 banks with $370,000,000 in their pockets. They are those who have during the past twelve months been carrying their pennies, dimes and quarters and depositing them in Christmas Savings Club accounts each week. This year the average member will receive $48.25, or 10 per cent more than last year, and though fewer banks had savings funds accounts, the total of these accounts has increased 6 per cent. Should one wonder how this money is to be spent, that has been also ascertained. Approximately 42 per cent or $155,000,000 will go into the cash registers of retail stores to buy Christmas presents; 25 per cent will go back into permanent savings; the tax collector will take 12 per cent; 8 per cent will help reduce indebtedness, while 5 per cent will be paid as interest on these debts and a similar amount on insurance. Education, travel and charity combine to take the 3 per cent remaining.

South American Bonds Rise.—

Spectacular economic gains in Latin American countries have been reflected in the gains in quotations on the New York bond markets. Chile which probably suffered most is perhaps staging the most spectacular comeback. Her bonds are still low, indicating the depths to which that country's credit sank, but they have gained well over 100 per cent since the first of the year and the 6 per cent issue are quoted around 16 cents against less than 8 cents in January. Argentine 6s have jumped from 55 to more than 90. This country has been more successful in maintaining her credit than any of the other South American republics. Brazil is experiencing a domestic boom, and her 6½s are reflecting this by a rise during the year from 20¼ to over 33. Many of our financial institutions were urged to buy these bonds during the boom years before the beginning of this decade, and they played an important part in many bank closings, but the banks that weathered the storm and still hold these securities may yet get at least a partial return on them.

Inflation to be Urged.—

In spite of the assurances recently given by the Administration that there will be "no orgy of inflation," there will be attempts made to force such action through the next Congress. From three points come signs of this new drive: Senator Wheeler of Montana has announced that he will reopen his fight for the free coinage of silver on a ratio of not more than 16 to 1 with gold. Father Charles Coughlin, Catholic Priest and head of the "National Union for Social Justice," expects to create a "direct and above board lobby" to promote direct inflation. Then comes Senator Patman with his plans for paying the bonus through "controlled expansion of the currency." Inflation has so far, contrary to the expectation of the Administration, retarded rather than advanced recovery. The small business man has seen his proportionate working capital so reduced that he has been compelled to further reduce his activities and in some instances lay off employees, rather than to aid in the recovery program. It seems to have been proven that recovery should come first and inflation later if there is to be a steady return to prosperity.

Plans to Curb Arms Traffic.—

The only hope held out to prevent international terrorism and the secret arming of nations, is that offered to the Geneva Conference on Disarmament by the American representative. In presenting the plan, Hugh R. Wilson, minister to Switzerland, said: "My government firmly believes that without disarmament there is no sound basis for peace. It has never wavered from that conviction and in the future, as in the past, it will work earnestly to contribute to the final success of the conference." This proposal would license the producers of armaments throughout the world and make public all activities of armament-producing concerns. The proposal would not, in itself, be sufficient to prevent another World War, but it would certainly be a deterrent to the secret arming of smaller allied nations of the large powers. The general response to the proposal is said to be favorable, but there is some opposition from various sources. Three countries, Russia, Sweden and Spain, expressed approval of the American idea. The British representative welcomed it with caution, for there are powerful armament manufacturers in his country with which to deal. France was reported as "sympathetic," whatever that may mean. Italy, on the other hand dismissed the idea as "impractical." Germany and Japan might make interesting comment on such a plan, but they have remained silent. Meantime, Japan has declined to enter a pact proposed by Great Britain which would "guarantee" peace in the far East and preserve the integrity of China.

The Nether Millstone, Too.—

There is a tendency here in America on the part of liberals generally to stress the menace to liberty in fascist dictatorship, while minimizing the menace from communist dictatorship. It is an attitude that is not entirely without warrant, for communism sets before itself the goal of a socialized economy in which the wealth of the nation exists for the masses of the people, whereas fascism emphasizes and strengthens the factors dominant in capitalistic exploitation. Nevertheless, the menace to the ideal of liberty and to actual civil rights, as associated with democratic institutions, is as real in the one case as in the other. In a recent article in The Nation Emma Goldman charged against Soviet Russia a suppression of individual liberty more drastic and ruthless than anything that had occurred in either Italy or Germany. Now comes H. G. Wells, not indifferent, surely, to the better organization of society, who said recently, as reported in the Manchester Guardian, in addressing a meeting in London to protest against the Sedition Bill: "We must make it clear to the public and to the Government that we are fully aware of the danger of the nether millstone, which is much more dangerous systematic in its attack on liberty. If I wanted instances of what happens to a country that loses the conception of liberty I would talk of Russia." When cries of protest came from the gallery, Mr. Wells continued: "I have recently been to Russia. I was enormously impressed by the fact that Russia is likely to become an awful warning to the world of what the destruction of intellectual vitality may mean to a country. No mental life can go on without freedom to criticize." Further and persistent interruptions brought from Mr. Wells the comment, as he pointed to the interrupters: "You see how much they love intellectual freedom." Declaring that "there is something greater than communism, greater than anything else in the world, and that is the freedom of the human mind," Mr. Wells said that Russia, having achieved much in the Five-Year Plan, was now going slack because it would not listen to the honest voices of criticism. He expressed the view that "Russia was going to demonstrate that in matters of the mind and will a thing could not exist without its opposite, and that when you stifle all opposition you ultimately destroy your own energy."—Advance.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Under date of November 17th, Rev. G. D. Hunt, Lanett, Ala., writes: "Our State Conference last week was a great meeting, not so largely attended but well cared for and enjoyed by all. I am down at hard work again, my goal being for the year to pay the church out of debt and do some needed repair work on the building and lead many souls to Christ." Brother Hunt seems more vigorous in the work as the years fall lightly and lovingly upon him.

Dr. E. C. Fry, who attended the North Carolina and Virginia Conference last week, was happily entertained two days following the Conference in the home of Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, whose hospitality he much enjoyed, and then on Sunday, at 11:00 A. M., spoke to the largest congregation he had met in the South at Bethlehem Church, of which Brother Crutchfield is pastor. He enjoyed the evening service at Monticello with Rev. F. Ervin Hyde, pastor.

The fifth annual meeting of the Alabama Conference of Congregational and Christian Churches was held with the First Christian Church, Lanett, Ala., Rev. G. D. Hunt, pastor, November 13th-15th. The program was a most inviting one, and it is presumed was carried out with profit to all who attended. It is regretted that the program of the Conference did not reach us in time for publication in THE SUN. The hope is indulged that Pastor Hunt or some interested member of our Conference will give us an account of the proceedings and of the sessions.

Our good preacher, friend and brother to everybody, Dr. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, N. C., is safely put and happily placed in the Florida Sanitarium, Orlando, Fla., where he is to enjoy the blessings of a generous climate and find health, full strength and vigor at the hands of competent physicians, happy surroundings and be returned to his work and the rest of us in a few months. The SUN's editor journeyed to the sanitarium with the good doctor and speaks with authority in saying that he is so situated, surrounded and cared for that he is compelled to regain his strength and youthful vigor. We left him in the company of two or three other ministers who were climbing back to health and happiness, and they, with a number of good laymen and Christian friends who manage the institution, will make his surroundings so wholesome and helpful that health will come as the good Lord smiles upon him and compels him to forget the days of poor health and waning strength.

THREE WEEKS IN DIXIE.

By HERMON ELDREDGE.

In the "good old days" I have had many trips to Dixie but I have never had a more pleasant or profitable time in the southland than the three weeks I spent in Virginia and North Carolina last month.

The first week was in a Leadership Training School in Portsmouth in which the Congregational and Christian forces of Greater Norfolk cooperated. The Sunday preceding the school I had the privilege of speaking in Rosemont, First Church Norfolk and First Church Portsmouth. The congregations were cordial and receptive and I met many old friends of "Seaside Chautauqua" days and of the days when I, with my daughter traveled through this section. I fear that I played second fiddle in their thoughts however, for invariably the first question asked me after a greeting was: "How's Miss Lucy?" I was glad to tell them that she had never lost her love for the Southland from her Elon College days and her Christian Educational travels out of Richmond.

I was impressed with Rosemont's beautiful new edifice and the progressive atmosphere and good attendance at these three churches I visited on Sunday.

The Leadership Training School the week following was a demonstration of the splendid leadership of Rev. F. C. Lester, of the Board of Christian Education of the Southern Convention. Dr. Charles Eldred Shelton as chairman and the faculty of this school were not only capable leaders but faithful and devoted to their groups. The students were regular, on time and receptive even to eagerness through it all. It was a fine opportunity to get a first hand contact with our work in this section after being out of intimate touch with it for four years.

"Religious Education Week" at Elon College lengthened into ten days on its campus and more profitable (to me) days can hardly be imagined. I was delightfully domiciled and as delightfully passed about to breakfast, lunch and dinner all about the campus including (principally) the president's delightful home and the student's dining room with stimulating varieties of ham and chicken and Southern hospitality with members of the faculty.

Each day I had the privilege of speaking to the student body at the chapel hour and in the evening to the Elon College Church as well as to the students and faculty. Between sessions opportunity was afforded to talk with individual students on various subjects either suggested by these talks or concerning personal problems. I have known Elon College somewhat intimately for 18 years and I am careful and deliberate in saying that I have never seen a finer student body on her campus. It is not only a full hundred larger than at the time of my visit last year, but its spirit (in faculty as well as in student body) has moved up decidedly and inspiringly. It was a privilege to speak to them in public and in private.

Possibly there could not have been a better revelation of this spirit in Elon than the occasion of the "surprise" to President Smith on his birthday and when he was invited to attend a "Halloween Party" he (Southern style) "didn't suspect a thing in the world" and came into one of the most demonstrative and friendly receptions of his life when they dined and toasted him and brought in his birthday cake and presented him with a beautiful jeweled memento of the occasion. One needed only to be a guest at such an occasion (as the writer was) to appreciate the high regard in which President Smith is held by those closest to him in the great work he is doing surrounded by many financial handicaps. It is only fair and true to say that no one in our Southern fellowship is contributing more to its present and future welfare than President Leon Edgar Smith of Elon College. One could not live close to him for ten days without keen appreciation of this fact and of his need of the wholehearted support of his constituency. Dollars for Elon these trying days will bring larger results than at any time in its splendid history. It should have the backing not only of large givers (which it must have) but also of thousands of our people throughout our churches and Sunday Schools who can regularly contribute their "mite"—and do it with all their "might" and enthusiasm, knowing that such giving will bear fruit in lives and leaders of the work for tomorrow.

A day in Eastern Virginia Christian Conference was as refreshing as a summer shower after the burden and heat of the day. One who lives there can hardly appreciate what such an atmosphere means to one who has been out of it for some years. We used to have a good old Christian minister who said: "I love everybody, but I love my own folks the best" and the writer has been in so many Northern and Western and New England Conferences during the past five years in which he was continually making new contacts and new acquaintances and adjusting himself to a new order that it was great to find oneself in an old atmosphere among old friends with whom you needed no introduction and to talk "old times." We all rejoice in our forward step—or stride toward Christian unity, and we love our Congregational brethren but we cannot blame them and they will not blame us if some of us older Christians just can't help "loving our own folks best" and at the same time rejoicing that our children will grow up and love the new fellowship as we have the old.

The writer to the Hebrews after reciting the names of the heroes of faith something like this: "But time (and space) will fail me if I tell of Newman and Manning and Jay and Harcastle and West and the prophets who wrought righteousness and fought the good fight of faith through the years." To begin to name names is to be lost and to overlook many, so I close and leave the Southland after rest and food and fellowship with my fine friends of Dayton and Suffolk, Rev. John Truitt and his better half—to say nothing of Ann when much needs to be said of her. My only regret is that I ran off to the colder northland with friend Truitt's overcoat and I know that he will never cease to remind me of that.

If there were space I would like to dwell on a trip over and around and through Elon Orphanage with "Uncle Charlie" Johnson. It would be a libel on his work to attempt to crowd a description of it in a few short lines. Enough to say that the writer was more than ever impressed with the Christian love and intelligence which is in that work which maintains around one hundred homeless children in an atmosphere more "homey" than we have ever seen in such an institution. One eternal reward Uncle Charlie Johnston is sure of but I covet for him another and a more immediate one and that is that some day some one with a large heart and as large a pocketbook will help him do the things which are on his heart to do for these coming men and women who surround him now as children and love him as a child loves his own.

I close all this with these lines and apologies to Van Dyke:

"So it's home again and home again,
The Northland now for me;
But I can't forget the Southland,
Nor its welcome full and free;
It's blessed land of "time enough"
Beyond the Dixie Line,
Where friends are not forgotten
Though severed long in time."

PAID ON SUN SUBSCRIPTIONS.

We are listing below subscribers who have made payments on their subscriptions during October and up to and including November 22d. This list is not complete, inasmuch as there are some payments made previous to this date, which have not yet been turned in to the office in Richmond. Just as soon as possible after these are turned in, we will print a supplementary list, showing payments up to December 1st.

We wish to thank those who have responded to our appeal, and hope that there are yet those who will take the care to look at their label and see just how they stand. We wish to have as many of our old subscribers paid up in advance before we undertake to put on the campaign for new subscribers authorized by the Convention this year.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THANKSGIVING.

Thursday, November 29th, is Thanksgiving Day. In it we are invited by the President of the United States and the Governors of our States to assemble in our places of worship and there give thanks to Almighty God for the bounties, blessings and benefits we have enjoyed during the year. God has blessed us richly and far more abundantly than we ever merit or deserve. On this account our gratitude should be expressed with sincerity and our thanks rendered with praise and adoration to the Giver of all good. "Let us come before His presence with thanksgiving, and make a joyful noise unto Him in Psalms."

AFRAID TO FACE GOD.

Rev. W. T. Scott, in opening the 109th annual session of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference, at Berea, Alamance County, North Carolina, November 13th, declared that many of us, called to face God hide our faces because we are afraid to face God. God faces us with invitations and opportunities for service, achievement and the more abundant life, but we hide our faces, shirk our duty, and are afraid to go forward. Vice-Pres. Scott declared that there were duties and obligations clearly before us and about which we could not be mistaken, but we hesitate, are indifferent, or cowardly and unconcerned. Through the smashing of ideals, the tearing down of moral standards and the disregard for spiritual things, from all of which the world is today suffering, God is calling us to new courage, and is challenging the Christian forces of the world to go forward and face our dangers and and difficulties without fear and without dread. We cringe like cowards, afraid to look upon the God who loves us and made His Son our sin that we, through Him, might become His righteousness, and a power in the world for leading the nations toward security and the light. It was a challenging word to a great Conference. The fact is that Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, the pastor of the Conference church, had previously declared in the devotional service that there were no problems too difficult to solve if the church would rely upon God and take counsel with God as to what His will is for the church and for mankind. Brother Crutchfield recognizes the difficulties and dangers of our present time, but the arm of God is not shortened that He cannot help, and the love of God is not shortened that He cannot help, and the love of God is not quenched that it cannot lift and save. If the Conference lacked any sustained interest throughout, it was certainly no fault of these two vigorous and growing young men who brought us opening messages that thrilled and edified.

Dr. C. H. Rowland, president of the Conference, because of continued poor health, was unable to attend and W. T. Scott, the vice-president, presided so efficiently that he was later elected as president for the coming year. Rev. J. Everette Neese was the acting chairman of Religious Literature and made a very promising and forward-looking report. Rev. J. L. Foster delivered an address apropos of the report as to the merit and measure of the church paper and of the worth of having it in the home, and reading THE CHRISTIAN SUN in particular and other church papers when possible, making special reference to our Missionary Herald and also Advance, the general organs of the church. Mr. J. T. Kernodle, managing editor, spoke of enlarging the orbit of THE CHRISTIAN SUN and what it would mean if THE SUN went into an increasing number of our homes. He called attention to the fact that THE CHRISTIAN SUN costs the reader more than $2.00 a year, since those who read THE SUN are the largest givers and contributors to the enterprises and institutions of the church.

In the afternoon Rev. B. H. Watkins, Lynchburg, Va., in the absence of Mrs. C. H. Rowland, chairman, read the Report of Committee on Stewardship, which report declared that while all Christians should certainly consider themselves stewards of our Lord, there was definite biblical instructions as to how a particular portion of our stewardship—that of tithing—could be administered. Brother Watkins and his committee urged tithing (1st) as a source of increasing spiritual energy and activity, and (2nd) as a solution to the difficult financial problems of the church and kingdom. If church members would tithe their offerings, they would settle their financial difficulties and the kingdom of God would be speedily enlarged in the world. Rev. James H. Lightbourne, pastor of the Burlington Church, speaking to the report, gave a very succinct and comprehensive definition of stewardship and of how we, as church members, could be faithful stewards and thus fulfill our duties and obligations to man and to God. The report was followed by Supt. Charles D. Johnston of the Christian Orphanage, who, with his class of singers, brought forty minutes of real entertainment and delight to the great audience.

The first day's session was one of inspiration and joy, and the great gathering of delegates and visitors attested their appreciation by riveted attention. The Youth Fellowship Program at the evening hour, under the leadership of Rev. J. E. Neese, presiding, was one of joy and delight particularly to the great number of young people who gathered. Rev. F. C. Lester, secretary of Religious Education, Norfolk, Va., brought the message, "Youth Building a New World." Brother Lester always speaks with vigor and enlightenment and his presence and presentation were much appreciated.

The morning of the second day heard the report of several committees and many phases of our missionary work presented and discussed. Rev. W. T. Scott was elected president; Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, vice-president; Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, D. D., secretary; Dr. W. Waldo Boone, Durham, N. C., treasurer. The report of committee on apportionments drew a lively discussion, since it followed the plan as proposed by the recent session of the Southern Convention, and there were many present who, before the discussion had not fully understood the new program of apportionments. Rev. G. C. Crutchfield made the Report of Committee on Home Missions and Dr. L. E. Smith made a very effectual appeal for memberships in the Christian Missionary Association of the Conference. The Association, as now reorganized, is a growing body and is to have its second annual session at Winston-Salem with the United Church at Winston-Salem, December 4. Rev. C. E. Newman, reporting for the Committee on Foreign Missions, gave the Conference figures showing the number of our missionaries, stations, etc., and deplored the fact that funds had so decreased that some of our best missionaries were being called home. Mrs. W. P. Lawrence, secretary of the North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference, reported that her Conference had had a very successful year and showed an increase in activity and in offerings and had set as a goal the coming year a further increase of ten per cent in membership and in new Societies. Dr. E. C. Fry, a returned missionary from Japan, after service there of nearly forty years, spoke of his work and of the real contribution that the Mission work is making to the life and the salvation of Japan. Dr. Fry declares that while there are Christian Japanese now capable of going forward, even in the work of leadership and direction, it would be a calamity not to say a tragedy if they were left alone, a number so very few in a population of the unreached so very, very large—only 300,000 professed Christians in a nation of 65,000,000 souls, wide areas of whom know nothing of our Christ.

The afternoon session was devoted to the subject of Education. Dr. L. E. Smith, the president, spoke on financing the College and told how poorly the church was supporting the institution which is essential to its life and without which there is no hope of existence as a body, much less of progress. Dr. Smith feels that the great neglect is revealed in the inadequate financial support for the institution which is making such a contribution to our church life and growth. Dr. H. Shelton Smith, of the School of Religion, Duke University, carried the Conference to a high peak of interest and profound thoughtfulness as he asked and then discussed the question as to whether the Christian College can prove itself adequate, capable and courageous enough to save our civilization? Dr. Smith held up the dangers and difficulties that the Christian College faces and challenged Elon to prove to the world that it was and could be a real Christian College by squarely facing the economic, social, moral and spiritual defects and deficiencies of our time, and then give itself to the building of a civilization on the basis of a real Christian society. It was a great address dealing with momentous and pressing problems.

Mr. W. B. Truitt of Greensboro and Rev. F. Ervin Hyde of Brown Summit reported for and discussed the practical problem of Sunday School and Christian Endeavor.

The second day of the Conference was a day of practical problems and efforts to face and solve those problems in the fear and in the light of God. The SUN's editor, having agreed to accompany Dr. Rowland to Florida and see that he was placed where he could soon get back to full health and strength, was unable to be present for the third day of Conference, on which day the routine business of the Conference engaged the attention of the delegates and visitors. The Conference was harmonious and was beautifully entertained throughout, one of the very high and happy moments of same being that when the accomplished wife of our treasurer, Dr. Waldo Boone, with Mrs. W. B. Truitt at the piano rendered a violin minuet and meditation that brought joy and happiness to the hearts of all who heard.

Berea is one of our good, active churches and leaves no stone unturned to render faithful service in every line of activity that it undertakes.

SHARING TOGETHER.

When Paul wrote his letter to the Galatians and said, "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ," he was pronouncing a blessing to be received rather than a burden to be shirked. Burden-bearing in love to our Lord and fellowman is not a thing irksome to be borne, but a joy to be shared. Our Lord told us that much when He said, "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for my yoke is sweet and my burden is light." That is the meaning and the measure of the cross. Christ nailed to the cross may never have redeemed you and me, but, at any rate, He redeemed the cross. Up till the time they nailed Him to it, the cross was a symbol of a curse, the sign of condemnation. Since that time and because our Lord was nailed upon it, the cross has come to be a symbol of security, an instrument of adornment, a token of victory. Witness the cross as we see it on thousands of places of prayer, praise and worship; witness it as an instrument of adornment on our watch chains and other chains of precious metals worn for pleasure and adornment. Christ redeemed the cross and turned it from a curse to a cure, from defeat to victory, from disgrace to honor, and, by all this, we are taught that sharing together in Christ is a blessing to be sought and not a burden to be shirked.

One other concrete fact. In the Garden of Eden God created the family—"male and female Created He them"—and thus the home was instituted. From that day till this the burden of the home has been the burden of each member of the home and the sorrow of the home has been the sorrow of each member thereof. God created the home as an institution, that those who live therein might have a common burden to be borne, and a common blessing to be shared. And this has been the character of institutions since that day. Individually, we stand alone and, as such, each must bear his own burden. Collectively or institutionally, we stand together and thus learn to bear one another's burdens. Go further in history. God created the State that social, economic and political groups might unite to bear the burdens of Statehood and thus be drawn together in the bonds of patriotism; but for the burden of the State mankind would not have known the blessings and the benefits of patriotism.

And then God created the church that men and women might share the burdens and the blessings of spiritual experience and triumph. The church is a spiritual body seeking to build on earth the kingdom of God, an institution of service and of love in which all may have a part and all may share. We cannot share together unless we have institutions in common. We must have a common load to put our shoulders beneath, in order that our hearts may rejoice in a common achievement and blessing. Thus God has seen fit to unfold before us the purpose and the power of the church in order that through the institutions of the church He may bind us as His children together and unite us in closer and loving fellowship to Himself. As far as I know, all churches, certainly all evangelical churches, seeking with force and fervor to build up the kingdom of God on earth, have five and only five institutions or enterprises growing out of, and at the same time constituting the church, through which God is building His kingdom on earth and bringing us with the grip of His own power into closer fellowship with one another and with Him, our Father. I refer to—

1st. The local church.

2d. The missionary interests or institutions.

3d. The educational interests or institutions.

4th. The publishing interests or institutions.

5th. The benevolent interests or institutions.

This may be crude in its conception, but it is a statement of the bare fact that the church of whatever name or creed seems to have developed these five enterprises or institutions in order that through them we may share together our fervor and friendship in sustaining the local church; our zeal and our passion in pointing the way even to the uttermost parts; of seeking mutual intelligence and learning that we may bear our burdens with fortitude and with knowledge; that we may have the printed page and distribute the message of love and of hope and thus share our common thoughts and experience; and, finally, that together we may share the burden, the blessing and the privilege of caring for the aged, the impotent and the needy, the fatherless and the motherless.

God has not created these institutions that they may be a blight nor a burden, but, through them and our support of them, we may share together the joy of the heart, the passion of the soul, the light of the intellect, the pursuit of literature and the selfishness of benevolence and charity. We, Congregational-Christians, shall come together and completely merge as a body, a brotherhood and a sisterhood, if and when we come to share with each other the tasks and the trials as well as the triumphs and the trophies of these our blessed and hallowed institutions.

THANKSGIVING IN THE PSALMS.

By H. H. SMITH.

It seems very fitting that the Psalms should occupy the position assigned them in the Scriptures. The 117th Psalm is the middle chapter of the Bible. Worship is the very heart of religion, and we find this great body of devotional literature—the Psalms—in the very center of the Bible. And, by the way, this middle chapter of the Bible is a doxology, calling all peoples to praise Jehovah: "O praise the Lord, all ye nations: praise Him all ye peoples. For His merciful kindness is great towards us: and the truth of the Lord endureth forever. Praise ye the Lord." This suggests a meditation on the Psalms with reference to thanksgiving. For what did the Psalmists give thanks? (We say Psalmists, for there are several authors of these matchless productions.) We can mention only a few of the topics of thanksgiving.

We should observe, first of all, how impressively the Psalmists exhort all created things to render praise and thanksgiving to God. "Let the peoples praise Thee, O God, let all the peoples praise Thee . . . . O praise the Lord, all ye nations, . . . Praise Him all ye peoples . . . . Bless the Lord, all His works in all places of His dominion. . . . Praise ye Him, sun and moon; praise Him all ye stars of light. . . . Praise Him ye heaven of heavens. . . . Let them praise the name of the Lord, for He commanded and they were created. . . . Praise the Lord from the earth, ye sea monsters and all deeps; fire and hail; snow and vapors; stormy wind fulfilling His word; mountains and hills, fruitful trees and all cedars; beasts and all cattle; creeping things and flying fowl; kings of the earth and all peoples . . . . Let them praise the name of the Lord. . . . Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord. Praise ye the Lord."

As for himself, the Psalmist says: "While I live I will praise the Lord; I will sing praises unto my God while I have any being." Such impressive words of praise as those just quoted could come only from a heart having an intimate knowledge of God, and a deep sense of gratitude for His mercies.

We do well to observe an annual Thanksgiving Day, but let us not overlook the daily thanksgiving. "Blessed be the Lord, who daily loadeth us with benefits. . . . It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord; to show forth thy loving-kindness in the morning, and thy faithfulness every night." "Every day will I bless Thee." And if Paul teaches us to pray without ceasing, the Psalmist teaches us to give thanks unceasingly. "I will bless the Lord at all times: His praise shall continually be in my mouth."

The Psalmist found many things for which to thank God: for life, for daily bread, for victory over enemies, for forgiveness of sin, for answered prayer, for healing diseases, for deliverance from death, etc. But there were other blessings for which the singers of Israel were grateful to God; and none moved them more profoundly than the contemplation of the character of God: His majesty, holiness, omnipotence, omniscience, wisdom and love. They were awed by the majesty of God: "How terrible art Thou in Thy works." The justice and holiness of God humbled them and brought them to repentance. And for it all, they thanked God.

The Psalmists were without the clear revelation of the character of God which Christ brought to the world; but they were no strangers to God's wondrous grace as implied in the oft-recurring words, "goodness and mercy." This thought occupies the central place in their thanksgiving. "I will sing of the mercies of the Lord for ever; with my mouth will I make known Thy faithfulness to all generations." "Because Thy loving-kindness is good, His mercy is everlasting and His truth endureth to all generations."

The Psalmists seemed to have anticipated the teaching of our Lord; that in Him all the deep needs of the soul should be satisfied. Did they not know something of the peace and serenity of the soul fully committed to God, as stated in the 63rd Psalm: "My soul shall be satisfied as with marrow and fatness; and my mouth shall praise Thee with joyful lips; when I remember Thee upon my bed, and meditate on Thee in the night watches."

Our blessings are numberless and we should be deeply grateful for all of them, but first of all we should thank God for God—for what He is as we know Him through Jesus Christ our Lord. If the Psalmists saw God from afar and rejoiced and gave thanks; how much more should we, who have seen Him revealed in His Son, who is the image of the Father!

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The local church is a group of professing Christians who are associated for religious fellowship. These people may have the same outlook, as a church, as they have as individuals. They may look to the present, and interpret their needs and make their plans on the basis of existing circumstances; or, they may look to the future, and consider the best course for future development. The church has a future, and the people of the church should plan to make that future, in accordance with the will of God, and the best interests of the next generation.

One sometimes wonders why some churches are weak and others are strong. It is evident that the location of the church, and the general conditions existing in the community affect the growth and strength of every church. In the Southern Convention there are a number of strong churches. There are many weak churches, struggling for an existence. A study of the history of these churches will reveal some very interesting facts. All of these churches had very small beginnings, and, for the most part, the development has been tedious, slow and difficult.

The Suffolk Christian Church is the strongest church in the Southern Convention. When Dr. W. W. Staley accepted the pastorate of that church, in 1882, the outlook was discouraging. The membership was small and divided by an unfortunate controversy instigated by a minister of another denomination. The outlook for the denomination was discouraging. Other denominations in the community were, in a measure, hostile to the struggling church, and predicted its early death. The church was facing a trying crisis.

In the face of these conditions Dr. Staley accepted the call to the church and settled down to work with a determination to succeed or die at his post. He laid aside all selfish plans and personal ambitions, and devoted himself to the highest interests of the church. To the end of his life he labored for the upbuilding of the church and the promotion of the work of the kingdom of God. That is the explanation of the growth of the Suffolk Christian Church. In the beginning it gave no promise of great growth. It was not highly favored by location or great wealth. Many other churches within the bounds of the Convention could have been developed with the same type of leadership.

A forward-looking, consecrated pastor and a progressive church can succeed if there are enough people in the community to support a real program for the kingdom. The greatest human factor in the success of any church, is the pastor. He cannot accomplish the same degree of success in every field, but he can succeed, according to his ability and the will of God, in doing a good work, if he will follow the Master and give himself to the work of the plenteous harvest. He must be as wise as a serpent, and as harmless as a dove. This is not always easy, for there are poisonous serpents and ravenous wild beasts stealthily seeking whom they may devour. These evil spirits sometimes reside in human flesh, and ministers do not escape their fiendish purposes. A lion tamer does not fight the lion when in the cage, but he keeps his eye on him. Ministers are not called upon to fight every little evil spirit in his parish; but it may be wise for him to keep his eyes open and watch while he prays. When the Spirit of Jesus comes into the heart and is manifested in the life, the evil spirits are forced to go out.

But the minister cannot do everything. The church must cooperate in planning for the future. In the country places, churches should be grouped with the idea of forming a field with a pastor in their midst. Weak churches can be easily strengthened, if they will agree to combine in calling a resident pastor, who will be in their midst to be a spiritual leader. The churches must be willing to pay a salary sufficient to support a strong man, if they want the service of capable leaders. Ministers should be reasonable in their demands, and the churches should have the same attitude towards the minister.

THE NEED OF AN AWAKENING VISION.

(The following article represents an address prepared by the writer for the North Carolina and Virginia Conference. There was not time to deliver the address. Its publication has been requested.)

Some days ago, Rev. G. C. Crutchfield came into my office and said that he wanted me to deliver an address on the "Need of an Awakening Vision." That is rather a strange but a challenging topic. We not only need such a vision, but it is essential to our life. The prophet, Isaiah, said, on one occasion, "Where there is no vision the people perish." A vision may either inspire or awe us, but usually it projects us into action.

When the Master wanted to arouse the disciples to a sense of their responsibility, He said, "Lift up your eyes and look on the fields. They are white already unto the harvest, but the laborers are few." He felt sure that if He could induce them to behold the whitening harvest they, themselves, would be transformed into energetic laborers and would launch forth to gather that harvest before it was destroyed. The reason so many of us are not moved to action is because we have not seen. We have no vision. Should you open your eyes and see an innocent child in danger of being destroyed, you would immediately go to the rescue of that child; but if you did not see, as a matter of course, you would not be moved. Our spiritual eyes need to be opened that we, as individuals, may fling our very souls into the conflict with the hope of winning for Christ and for the Kingdom.

Our own position, the place where we stand, determines the sweep of our vision. In 1927, on a day in August, it was my privilege to be in Nazareth, the boyhood town of Christ. We spent the night there. Early in the morning, a friend and I arose and made our way to the top of a high mountain overlooking the city that we might see the sun rise from the mountain heights. On one side, in the far distance, stood Mt. Carmel, where Elijah offered up his sacrifice and fought his battle with the prophets of Baal. It was indeed a glorious vision. Just as we reached the top, the sun was breaking forth from the horizon, which seemed to be below us. Every mountain peak and hilltop were flooded with a golden light. Because of the height to which we had climbed, our vision was wider, clearer and far more inspiring. We saw the day as it was born, the morning light as it first began to appear. We saw it long before it flooded the valleys or kissed the waters of Galilee.

On the same trip later, I was in Cairo, Egypt. Late in the afternoon, we were at the pyramids. The pyramids, as you know, stand where the valley of the Nile, in its fertility, ceases and the Sahara desert, in its barrenness, begins. As the sun began to sink behind the desert, we started to climb the pyramids. Hundreds of feet we mounted until, finally, we stood on the top of the highest pyramid, 480 feet high. Just as we reached the top, the sun was losing itself behind the barren sands of the desert. The members of our party on the ground could no longer see the sun; but the heights to which we had climbed enabled us to see the sun, in its evening beauty, much longer. Our vision had a wider and a clearer sweep.

The trouble with so many of the best Christians is that they live in the valleys; they grope among the shadows. Their ambitions have never lifted them. They have never taken the time or the trouble to climb to the heights. They have not had a vision. They have been, constantly, looking down, trying to discover material values. They have never had a widened vision. They have not yet seen the beauty and attractiveness of spiritual and eternal values. Truly, we do need a vision—a vision that will awaken us, that will arouse us and enable us to see the higher and better things of life. We need to climb the heights where the light dashes first, burns the brightest, and lasts the longest.

In a recent address delivered by Mr. Hermon Eldredge at the college, he told us of three men returning to America from the great world war. These three young men had been with the army in France for three years. They had been away from America and out of touch with its opportunities and privileges. As they began to head into New York harbor, the city's skyline loomed up before them; their hearts leaped up for joy. One said, "Look at the lights! Broadway for me! Think of the joy, the fun to be had! I have been denied these privileges for three years. Now, I shall take full advantage of them." Another, interested in business, said, "Behold Wall Street, with its many opportunities! I have been fighting for three years. Now, I expect to win for a while. There are abundant opportunities for making money, and I shall plunge in to make my share." Another was a medical student in an American university before entering the war. He had been engaged in hospital service overseas. He felt greatly the need of further instruction and of opportunities to prepare himself; but, said he, "I have been in the university of experience. I have had opportunities that never would have come to me in any other way. Here's a great city, with millions of souls. I shall have opportunity to serve diseased and unfortunate humanity. Bellevue Hospital for me!" All three of these men had visions, visions that awakened within them desires and the possible realization of the things they wanted. One wanted pleasure, fun, happiness. He saw an opportunity to realize the same and rejoiced in the vision. Another wanted money, gold, wealth, great material possessions. He saw the opportunity to gratify his desires, and rejoiced in that opportunity. Another had a desire to serve—to serve unfortunate humanity. The vision that came to him convinced him that he was now in the grasp of such an opportunity, he would avail himself of the same without hesitation and without fear.

As you look from today out into the morrow, what do you see? In this day of apparent return-

MUSIC IN WORSHIP.

By PROF. DWIGHT STEERE,
Director Department of Music, Elon College.

(Concluded from last week's SUN.)

The praise service is principally concerned with the hymn; for sake of economy; I want to speak now not only of the praise hymn, but of the general use of hymns.

My first suggestion is, plan your hymns as you do your sermon. How often I have known of ministers who write their sermons with care, and pick out their hymns ten minutes before service; the result is usually the monotonous repetition Sunday after Sunday of a few hymns. Here is another minister, less careful, who turns the matter of hymns over to the choir director, who may pick pretty tunes, with no care as to the suitability of the hymn to the occasion. Here is another minister who selects hymns only for their thought and frequently is greeted by strong silence when he announces a hymn; the tune of which is entirely unfamiliar to his choir and audience; there is an obvious solution here: if the minister does not read music well, let him collaborate with his choir director in the choice of hymns, that both thought and musical elements may receive their proper consideration.

Second, I suggest that no more hymns be used than there is reason for. I believe that there is a pronounced tendency in our churches to sing too many hymns, to run them as padding between every two parts in a service. In a service in which choir and soloists play an important part, one hymn is often sufficient. Where there is less so-called special music, more hymns may be used. But I do not believe that the number of hymns in the regular service should ever exceed three.

I should like to digress for a moment to touch a matter which is not primarily musical—the tendency in many of our churches to take everything standing. It has become customary to stand for hymns. I note that in this section we seem to feel it necessary to stand for the responsive readings—why, I never could understand. And some pastors have the audience stand for prayer. I have been in services where it seemed to me I was constantly jumping up and sitting again. I would not mind so much if I were in the Episcopal Church, where virtue is acquired by such methods. But I submit to you that there is a common sense approach to this question: there are but two reasons for standing in church: first, to change one's position for the sake of relaxation, and second, to do something that we can do better standing than sitting. As to the relaxation argument, may I say that when exercise passes a certain point, it ceases to be relaxation and becomes labor. And there is only one thing we can do better standing than sitting, and that is singing. But I think that even here there are exceptions: the quiet prayer hymn or the hymn during a communion service should be done seated. I should like to suggest this rule: the audience should remain seated in church, unless there is some real reason for standing.

Third, constantly seek new hymns and new uses for the old hymns. There are hymns for all uses. By throwing a hymn into relief, make it serve you more completely. Some morning take a prayer hymn; and let choir, or choir and audience sing it as the morning prayer, seated, softly, with heads bowed. Can you make a finer prayer than that in Whittier's great hymn:

"Dear Lord and Father of mankind,
Forgive our feverish ways;
Reclothe us in our rightful mind,
In purer lives Thy service find,
In deeper reverence, praise."

"Breathe through the hearts of our desire
Thy coolness and Thy balm;
Let sense be dumb, let flesh retire;
Speak through the earthquake, wind, and fire,
A still small voice of calm."

Recall its great closing stanza:

About twelve years ago I heard a preacher, not a great one either, preach a sermon on a hymn. I have forgotten every word he said, but the hymn made its impression on me then, and has ever since been precious to me. The hymn is that great one of Oliver Wendell Holmes:

"Lord of all being, throned afar,
Thy glory flames from sun to star;
Center and soul of every sphere,
Yet to each loving heart how near!

"Grant us Thy truth to make us free,
And kindling hearts that burn for Thee,
Till all Thy living altars claim
One holy light, one heavenly flame."

Is not such a sermon worth while?

Have you found a new hymn you would like your congregation to know? Look in some great dictionary of hymns, get all you can of interest on that hymn, then interest your congregation in it: have your choir learn it, then teach it to your congregation.

Fourth, bring more critical thought into your selection of hymns, not only in selecting, but rejecting. You are thoroughly familiar, of course, with the present-day criticism of so-called bloody hymns, such as "There is a fountain filled with blood." I wonder whether an audience should ever be permitted to sing such an insincerity as that which appears in "Take my life and let it be"; it runs:

"Take my silver and my gold;
Not a mite would I withhold."

Or do you think a one of us really means what he says when he sings, in "O mother dear, Jerusalem?"

"Jerusalem, my happy home,
Would God I were in thee!
Would God my woes were at an end,
Thy joys that I might see!"

Or ask a returning missionary what he thinks of the sentiment of "From Greenland's icy mountains," the Christian complacent superiority in these lines:

"Can we, whose souls are lighted
With wisdom from on high,
Can we to men benighted
The Lamp of Life deny?"

We need to examine more carefully our hymn heritage.

Two other suggestions: the choir should always know what hymns are to be sung well in advance of the service. The choir should not only be encouraged to practice the hymns; they should be expected to practice them.

The announcement of hymns in church is, moreover, a peculiarly unnecessary, unsuitable procedure. Whether a church has a printed bulletin or not, it usually possesses a hymn board, and the places in the service where hymns are used are well known to an audience. Why not avoid this duplication in the use of eye and ear, avoid that which has no dignity, and save some precious time in our service?

The so-called special music in our service commonly comes after the scripture or prayer, and during the offering. Concerning the first number I have no comment; I wish to speak only of the offertory. I wish to emphasize that the offertory solo, quartet, or anthem is the proper preparation for, and approach, to the sermon. I recall vividly a blunder made by a minister in a strange pulpit (Continued on page 14.)

GOING OUT ON A CANVASS.

By DONALD A. ADAMS.

Before any man or any group of men can go out to raise money for church or any other institution and get real satisfaction from the job they must have the feeling that the church or institution is in first class shape and has its house in order. So far as finances are concerned there are many churches of which this is not true.

We first need a tentative budget which is thoroughly understood by all members of the church. If the results of the canvass will not carry this budget it should be revised to meet the situation. There should be an adequate bookkeeping system which at the close of any month will give a complete and true picture of the financial condition of all the church departments and also a finance committee or other control group which will hold monthly meetings and check monthly expenditures and receipts on the basis of the budget against the actual expenses and receipts. If discrepancies occur they should be explained and corrected.

Every canvass will be put over in a better spirit, and I am almost ready to say successfully, if the workers and givers know that the affairs of the institution are in correct shape. Nothing else can give the necessary confidence.

Assuming that we have the background of proper church administration, I am persuaded that there are few tasks more rewarding or worthwhile than the one of helping to raise the budget. Then, anyone can put his hand to this task not only without apology but also with enthusiasm. There is always satisfaction in being part of a good machine.

Perhaps the greatest individual gain one can receive from this task is an understanding of the affairs of your own church. The almost universal shortcoming of laymen is a lack of such knowledge. I have a feeling that in most cases this is not the fault of the laymen. They have not been afforded a good opportunity to learn. The Every Member Canvass, properly prepared and run, should go a long way to remedy this shortcoming. Those who participate in the canvass are not well prepared for the task unless they can answer most any question about their church. It is not just a "collecting job."

Another definite gain for those who share this service is an acquaintance with the parish. They will know more about the members—who they are—in what parts of the city or town they live—what sort of people they really are.

The greatest failure of our churches has been that they have not given the laymen enough definite, concrete tasks. If the individual church has the proper background there should be no difficulty in finding plenty of men willing to participate in a well set-up canvass.

Most of us are tired of thinking about our own troubles, fancied or real. This Every Member Canvass is one opportunity to partially remedy that situation. There is nothing which can act as such a tonic as the endeavor to help some one else.

Last but not least is the certain opportunity to meet new people in their homes and to get fresh and inspiring reactions from those we have known for a long time. Almost invariably at the close of a canvass the majority of those who took part tell with enthusiasm of the fine time they had. This is a good year to start a comeback on church finances and I am sure we can make that start if we will put on the Every Member Canvass as it should be done.—The Missionary Herald.

HE COVERS THE BATTLE FRONT.

Some folks seem fated to be sitting on the lid when things start popping—Dr. Hugh L. Robinson of Tunghsien, North China, comes in that category. When he was at Lintsing Hospital, he spent days and nights at the operating table caring for a flood of suffering men, wounded during the civil war. Then, too, banditry flourished in his area. Now at Tunghsien he has cared for seriously injured soldiers, victims of the Japanese invasion, who were shipped through the Chinese National Red Cross evacuation hospitals. Students, local church members, all gave generously of money for bedding and other materials. Then, last year, the hospital served the civilian refugees who crowded Jefferson Academy campus 10,000 strong. For weeks 100 came daily to the out-patient department. "Within the first 30 hours after the refugees began to arrive," reports Dr. Robinson, "seven babies were born in our hospital. The courage of the nursing staff in caring for the patients despite artillery fire, low flying bombing planes and general panic, was most admirable."

THE FRIEND OF CHINA'S WOMANHOOD.

By MISS D. P. CUSHING, News Editor.

Amusement, exasperation, and concern mingled in the face of a Chinese pastor as he entered the study of Miss Mary L. McClure of Fenchow, North China. "Do let me read you this letter which I have just received from a friend of mine," he said. It stated that this pastor heretofore with a good reputation in the community was now being talked about as having "run away with Mr. Wang's daughter." The facts of the case were that the daughter, accompanied by her father, her brother and her husband, had come to Fenchow with the pastor to attend the Woman's Bible School, Fenchow. "What shall we do to broaden the minds of such an unenlightened people?" asked the pastor in despair, tinged with amusement. "Persuade more women to come to the school," answered Miss McClure with a smile. Later as she looked into the faces of a group of eager, responsive women in her class, she was thrilled with the promise they gave of a new day for Chinese womanhood.

Miss McClure, who has been in China since 1918, is a teacher at the Woman's Bible School, Fenchow, with a Chinese principal and a Chinese dean of women. When she first went out she was principal, but under the new dispensation she happily becomes "just a teacher" while administrative responsibilities rest in the hands of the Chinese. There are over 80 women preparing themselves in this school for Christian service among their own people. Most of them, as indicated above, come in the face of ridicule from their own fellow villagers.

The new features in the school about which Miss McClure is particularly enthusiastic and in which she is a prime mover, are a Child Culture Course and a wool working department. The first to teach the young mothers how to care properly for their babies and the second to help students earn their way through the school.

Chinese fond mammas believe that babies should never be allowed to cry! At the first whimper, someone must take them up and hold them all day, if necessary. Imagine the consternation plus howls that arose when 11 babies found themselves in the new nursery of the Bible School under the capable nurse, Miss Hsiu, with a time schedule of when to eat, sleep, bathe, and cry, if necessary, but no coddling. The mothers taking courses in the school were assigned to the nursery two hours a day which they learned how to prepare the proper food, give baths, and weigh weekly their offspring. Miss Hsiu, who is a graduate of the Fenchow Nurses Training School, possessed of dignity, charm and warm heart, takes every opportunity to lecture the mothers informally on child care. Now the mothers are enthusiastic, the babies are calm and happy as larks, and Miss McClure adds, "I think we are blazing the way for a new development in our adult education." For this story in more detail and with charming illustrations see the "Missionary Herald" of June, 1934, "Camera News" and August, 1934, "Mothercraft to the Fore."

A SIGH HEARD IN AMERICA.

With Malaria, veldt ulcers, yaws, arthritis, catarracts, hernias and fractures they come, a 100 a month, to the little hospital in Mt. Silinda, East Africa. On foot, some for 80 or 100 miles, taking two or three days they make their weary way. They are pagans for the most part. Two small houses of sun dried brick, two rooms each, do not begin to meet the need. "If only we could build the second ward of our new hospital," sighs Miss Minnie Tontz, R. N.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

CHRISTIAN LIFE CONFERENCE AT WADLEY, ALABAMA.

Once again Southern Union College and the citizens of Wadley, Alabama, entertained the young people of the district when the Christian Life Conference met over the week-end, November 2-4. This year the theme of the Conference was "All Saints: Past-Present-Future." Since the conference opened on the day following All Saints, this was an appropriate theme. Saints of the Past and Present were presented in three-minute talks by the young people. They presented leaders of many fields: education, literature, medicine, invention, science, social service, social reform, industry, and missions. Following these presentations, the young people discussed life work and where they might contribute the most to the world. Mrs. Ross Ensminger and Dean A. R. Van Cleave led these discussions and Dr. Ensminger gave the challenge to the young people of today to become the saints of tomorrow. The second session was given over to a discussion of the proper use of the leisure time that is such a great problem of today. President Ensminger, Miss Eunice Boone, and Professor W. C. Edge of the public school, gave the leadership and inspiration of this session. The banquet was built about the idea of Saints of everyday life. After a good deal of fun and toasts to all kinds of people who have to be saints to get along with the rest of us, Dean Van Cleave brought a vital message giving some of the rules for getting along together, guaranteed to work if earnestly and honestly tried.

The Sunday morning services were linked together to the theme of the conference, for Mrs. Van Cleave led the group in a discussion of Prayer as the chief requisite for a life of Christian service, and Dr. Ensminger preached about the proper use of our talents. An impressive Communion service, conducted by Dean Van Cleave brought the devotional part of our conference to a close. The afternoon was given over to an interesting singing contest between delegations, with reports of societies and business.

Fun was not lacking in our conference and the weather helped us to carry out most of our plans. Our Friday night get-together was held about the camp fire and was a jolly occasion. Six of the delegations presented stunts that were most interesting and varied in character. We learned through the Southern Union stunt just why all of the students came to college. Even the calf and chickens were called in to testify. Games, songs, and stories made our camp fire program well rounded. Our picnic lunch on Saturday was rained out, but cafeteria style will do just as well, if your spirit is right. We were sure that our Sunday morning sunrise service and out-of-doors breakfast would be impossible when we heard the rain pouring on the roof Saturday night, but when we awoke the sun was shining brightly and the mists were rising from the lowlands. The sunrise service, with a real morning message from President Ensminger, was one of the high points of the conference.

Although most of the students at Southern Union were new this year and had never managed a week-end conference before, they did beautifully and we had a smoother conference than ever before. Some of the local young people were towers of help and all together gave us good reason to be proud of our young folks at Wadley.

New officers for the coming year were elected as follows: President, Buena Veazey; Vice-President, Edward Knight; Secretary, Nonnie Looser. The award for the best spirit shown by a delegation at the conference was given to Phoenix City. Such fine spirit was shown by so many of the delegations that it was hard for the Wadley committee to decide which one should be especially honored. Every year the spirit is better and we feel that the college is winning a very real place in the affections of all who visit it.

COMRADES MEET AT CHATTANOOGA.

Pilgrim Church, Chattanooga, is to have a busy week-end December 1st-2nd. This is to be Church reunion session combined with a meeting of the Comrades of Chattanooga District. The Comrades have postponed their fall meeting until this later date in order to take advantage of the excellent program prepared for the church reunion. The young people of Pilgrim church are sure they can take care of their guests without burdening the adults who will be busy with reunion plans. We know those young people are certain that they will entertain the conference well and easily.

NORTH CAROLINA AND VIRGINIA YOUTH FELLOWSHIP MEETS.

The Youth Fellowship of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference met in annual session during the conference held recently at Berea church near Elon College. The conference gave the young people the Tuesday evening service. The Fellowship meeting was presided over by the president, J. Everette Neese, and Miss Sally Higgins kept the records. A report was made of a fine week-end conference which was held earlier in the year at the Greensboro church. Greetings were brought from Eastern Virginia by Miss Dora Martin and Rev. Lanson Granger. The president of the Southeast Fellowship, Rev. Aubrey Todd, spoke briefly. The editor of this page endeavored to present the denominational program for young people and to show how Christian young people are trying to build a new world.

Quite a number of the churches were represented by young people and several churches had quite large delegations. The writer was pleased to note that a goodly group from the Christian Orphanage attended the meeting.

The Rev. Mr. Neese is greatly interested in the Youth Fellowship, and is doing some constructive work. It was a pleasure to the writer to be in this meeting and to meet many old friends.

background for your Christmas and New Year's meetings.

Secure and read copies of the Missionary Herald and all other bits of information you can find pertaining to missions. Make your worship services among the best you have ever planned. You will need a number of poems and quotations in prose which may be used to guide meditation and stir people to pray.

One of your worship services might be by candle light with the group sitting closely together so that they can study a good picture, which might stand on a table with candles on either side, which may transform one's views of the meaning of life or his own mission. Among the pictures which have been effectively used are: "The Light of the World," Hunt; "Christ, the Consoler," Zimmerman; "The Presence," Borthwick; "Christ Healing the Sick," Hoffman; "The Hope of the World," Copping; "The Nazarene," or "Christ Triumphant," Todd.

To share the "good news." Mark 16:14-20.
To save men from sin. Heb. 2:1-4.
To transform life. II Cor. 3:17,18.

A PURPOSE TRUE.

Lord, make me quick to see
Each task awaiting me,
And quick to do;
Oh, grant me strength, I pray,
With lowly love each day
And purpose true.
To go as Jesus went,
Spending and being spent,
Myself forgot;
Supplying human needs
By loving words and deeds,
A happy lot.

Robert M. Offord.

What is the purpose of missions? The answer may be put in three words. . . "Thy Kingdom come!" Or, to put this grand aim in other words. "To teach and live the principles of Jesus so that all men may know the finest way of life."

How have missionary methods changed? The purpose of the missionary, yesterday, today, and a hundred years ago, was the same. But his methods of accomplishing this end have changed and developed with changing world conditions. For example:

1. The modern missionary preaches a God of love rather than an angry God who will burn all the heathen in an unceasing fire.
2. There is a new understanding that Christianity is a universal, rather than a western religion.
3. The training of national leaders and the actual giving to them of the power to run their own church policy is the next step in recognizing Christianity as universal rather than as national.
4. Keeping the national work out his own way of following the Christ principles . . . this is the new missionary method.
5. A willingness for the church at home to learn from its missionary churches.

Discussion Questions.

Should we preach the gospel at all in the Orient which has its own great religions? Is not the social service of the devoted teachers and missionary doctors enough? Or is it necessary to change people if we are to have a new social order?

THE CHRISTIAN STEWARD.

LESSON VIII—NOVEMBER 25, 1934.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will set thee over many things; enter into the joy of thy Lord.—Matthew 25:21.

LESSON TEXT: Matthew 25:14-30.

Stewards.

A steward is one who holds something in trust for another. That which he holds is not his, but another's. He possesses, he does not own. As a steward he is responsible for that which he holds, and he is accountable to the one from whom he receives it.

The Christian view is that man is a steward. He does not own, he merely possesses. Money, talents, time, energy, influence, life itself—all that a man has, and is, he has received from God, and he is responsible to God for its use and development. This principle applies with double force to those who are Christians for we are not our own; we have been bought with a price; therefore we are to glorify God with all that we have and are. This principle of stewardship, if taken seriously and applied to all of life, is one of the most revolutionary principles in life. It goes to the heart of vital Christianity.

To Every Man According To His Ability.

Everyone of us has some talent. It is good in a way to be a five talent man. But it is just as good to be a one talent man if that is God's will. He has given to us according to our several abilities and according to His wisdom. And the one talent man is under just as much obligation to develop and to use his talent as the five talent or the two talent man is to use his talents

"And after a long time the Lord of those servants cometh and reckoneth with them." The day of reckoning finally comes. Men may deny, they may delay it, but eventually it comes. Everyone of us shall give an account of himself unto God. We shall be called upon to render an account of our stewardship—how we have used what we had, how we have developed the gifts God has entrusted to us. The wise man recognizes this fact and tries to use his talents in such a way that he can give a good account of his stewardship.

The Reward of Service Well Done.

"Thou hast been faithful"—not necessarily brilliant, or even successful from the standpoint of the world, or rich, or socially prominent—but faithful, what a premium Jesus put upon the quality of faithfulness. Alas that there are so many who do not realize the importance of faithfulness! If every Sunday School officer and teacher were faithful what a difference it would make. If every member of the church were faithful, the church would take on new life and power.

"Faithful over few things . . . ruler over many things." The reward of service well done is the ability and the opportunity to do bigger and better things, the increased capacity to do more and to do it better. Every task faithfully done prepares one to do it better. Every task faithfully conquered makes it easier to conquer the next temptation.

"Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Work faithfully and well done brings abiding joy. Good workmanship is its own reward. And this is true whether a man has five talents or two talents or only one talent. The man who had five talents and the man who had two talents received the same reward because they were faithful in proportion to their talents. The man who does the humble task well deserves and will get the same reward as the man who does the the big task well. The determining principle is not amount, but faithfulness.

The Penalty for Service Poorly Done.

"Take from him the talent"—it is not simply the words of an angry landlord; it is a principle of life written deep in nature and in life. Talents and gifts must be developed and used or they will be lost. The singer who does not sing will lose the ability to sing. The baseball player who does not practice will lose his skill as a baseball player. And so on through all of life, including the religious or spiritual life. Gifts abused will be lost.

"And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." There are those who feel that if one does not believe in a literal burning hell, a great deterrent has been sacrificed. But there is something far worse than to be burned with physical fire. To realize when it is too late that one has misused or abused life, that one had been given talents which he did not develop and use for the Lord of life, to know that life's fine possibilities and capacities had been prostituted to base ends, to realize that one had taken that which had been entrusted to him by a loving heavenly Father and had been neglected or abused or squandered—this is hell that is hell indeed. "Outer darkness," "weeping and gnashing of teeth"—they are picturesque language to describe the remorse and the self-inflicted penalty which comes to those who prove unfaithful to life's sacred trusts.

It need hardly be said that the penalty which was exacted upon the one-talent man was not exacted because he was a one-talent man, because he did not have two talents or five talents as did his fellow-servants. The penalty came because he was untrue to his trust. Jesus said he was wicked and slothful. The man himself confessed that he was afraid. Because he could not do as much as others, he would not do what he could. There are many of his kind in every church and every community. Because they cannot give as much as others, or speak as well as others, or play a musical instrument as well as others, or pray in public or lead a meeting as well as others, and so on and so on, they will not do what they can and ought to do.

Just as the good Master gave unto His servants according to their several ability just so did He judge them in proportion to their achievements. To whomsoever much is given, of him will much be required, and to whomsoever little is given of him will little be required. Let every one be faithful in his stewardship.

THE NEED OF AN AWAKENING VISION.

ing to prosperity, what do you see?—an opportunity for fun, pleasure, and happiness to be realized in extravagant spending and in extravagant living? Or do you see an opportunity to further increase your wealth and greatly to multiply your holdings? Or do you see an opportunity for greater and larger service to humanity? What do we, as a church and as a conference, see?

I am speaking in the interest of the Christian Missionary Association, that has for its purpose the building of new churches and the strengthening of weak ones. Do we stand today on the mountain top? Have we made our way to the heights? Does the light come to us in early morning, and does it linger with us until late evening? Are we sailing into harbor on a floating ship? Do we see opportunities for pleasure and for happiness, or for the gathering of wealth, or for the rendering of service? Within the bounds of our conference, there are scores and hundreds of individuals who are out of the church, who are in spiritual danger, who are, literally, in danger of being lost. Does this move you? Are you willing to give of time, of thought, and of money that a church may be built here or there in order that the gospel, with its power, may be carried to those who have not yet known, who have not yet received? The responsibility is ours. "The people that sat in darkness have seen a great light, and upon them hath a light shined." Without a vision we do not see the light, the light does not shine upon us, and we still abide in darkness. "Where there is no vision, the people perish." Where there is vision, we are aroused, we are stirred, we are awakened; and we fling what we have and are into the great conflict that righteousness may triumph over wrong, that Christ and His people may be victorious over the world.

THE FIRST NATIONAL PROCLAMATION.

The first National proclamation for Thanksgiving Day was issued by George Washington in New York, October 3, 1789. One other proclamation of National Thanksgiving was issued by Washington, Thursday, February 19, 1795.

John Adams issued a proclamation asking for prayers against impending foreign war, March 1798. Thomas Jefferson never proclaimed a national day for prayer, or of thanksgiving. Madison issued four such proclamations. Then came almost a half century during which no thanksgiving proclamations were issued.

In April, 1862, Abraham Lincoln summoned his countrymen to fall upon their knees, in their places of worship, especially to "Acknowledge and render thanks to our heavenly Father for signal victories, vouchsafed by Almighty God, to the land and naval forces engaged in suppressing an internal rebellion and for averting from our country the danger of foreign intervention and invasion."

Lincoln proclaimed a second day of Thanksgiving for August 6, 1863. The last Thursday of the following November, Lincoln again asked all to join in "Thanksgiving and praise to our Beneficent Father, who dwelleth in the heavens." Lincoln's last Thanksgiving proclamation was issued in the autumn of 1864, again setting aside the last Thursday of November. Andrew Johnson issued a proclamation setting aside the same day of 1865, in accordance to what he knew to be Lincoln's desires. From that time until this, no president of the United States has failed to proclaim the last Thursday of November as the National Thanksgiving Day. The governors of the several states in turn send out proclamations to the people of their commonwealths.

TUESDAY.

A PRAYER.

TEXT: "Offer unto God thanksgiving."—Ps. 50:14.

"The roar of the world is in my ears,
Thank God for the roar of the world
Thank God for the mighty tide of fears Against me always hurled!

"Thank God for the bitter and ceaseless strife,
And the sting of His chastening rod!
Thank God for the stress and the pain of life,
And, Oh, thank God for God!"

—Joyce Kilmer.

WEDNESDAY.

THANKFUL FOR WHAT.

TEXT: "What shall I render unto the Lord for all His benefits toward me? I will take the cup of salvation and call upon the name of the Lord. I will pay my vows unto the Lord, now in the presence of His people."—Ps. 116:12, 13, and 15.

"Nor for the mighty world, O Lord, tonight, Nations and kingdoms in their fearful might—
Let me be glad the kettle gently sings,
Let me be thankful just for little things.

"Thankful for simple food and supper bread,
Thankful for shelter and a warm, clean bed,
For little joyful feet that gladly run
To welcome me when all my work is done.

"Thankful for friends who share my woe or mirth
Glad for the warm sweet fragrance of the earth,
For golden pools of sunshine on the floor,
For love that sheds its peace about my door.

"For little friendly days that slip away,
With only meals, and bed, and work and play.
A rocking chair and a kindly firelight—
For little things, let me be glad tonight."

Edna Jaques.

O Lord, our Lord, whose love has never let us go, we thank Thee for the abundant riches of nature, for friends and loved ones, and for the heritage of Christian living that has lighted our pathway all along, for the life beautiful that has enriched the world, for all goodness so ennobling to the soul, and for all joys that come to us.

We thank Thee that Thou hast made our hearts restless till they find rest in Thee. We thank Thee for Thy help when we have come to the end of our road and the limit of our strength. We thank Thee for Jesus the author and finisher of our faith. O Lord, the world is still ours, and we thank Thee. Amen.

THURSDAY.

TEXT: "O, let the nations be glad and sing for joy."—Ps. 67:4.

"Come ye thankful people, come,
Raise the song of Harvest—Home!
All is safely gathered in,
Ere the winter storms begin;
God, our Maker, doth provide
For our wants to be supplied;
Come to God's own temple, come;
Raise the song of Harvest—Home!

"What is earth but God's own field,
Fruit unto His praise to yield?
Wheat and tares therein are sown,
Unto joy or sorrow grown;
Ripening with a wondrous power,
Till the final Harvest-hour;
Grant, O Lord of life, that we
Holy grain and pure may be.

"Come, then Lord of Mercy, come
Bid us sing the Harvest—Home;
Let Thy saints be gathered in!
Free from sorrow, free from sin;
All upon the golden floor
Praising Thee forevermore;
Come, with thousands angels, come;
Bid us sing thy Harvest—Home."—Anon.
Amen.

Prayer—Our Father, this day calls us to penitence and gratitude. Through the past years we have trusted too much to the outward good of prosperity and success, and too little to the admonitions of the Lord, our God, and we have suffered much thereby.

But we are grateful for the lessons which it teaches us, and that we are learning to share with our fellowmen, that we can understand some of the deeper appreciations and sympathies of suffering humanity. We thank Thee for those sufferings of life that make us comrades in a common sense. Forbid that we shall fail to learn all the lessons Thou wouldst have us learn.

Most of all we are grateful for the message and the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have been sustained through these depressing years, when we have been so unworthy of it all. We trust in Thee and commit ourselves to Thy guidance, and pray that in our personal lives we may have Thy un failing grace and guidance. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE EVANGELISM OF THANKSGIVING.

TEXT: "By prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God."—Phil. 4:6.

A thankful soul is a lovely soul. A grateful spirit is a Christlike spirit, for it was He who gave thanks every day and never failed in any prayer. A grateful soul is an humble soul. Into such a soul everything beams as it were from the heart of God.

Humble gratitude is a manifestation of faith. Not every one manifests such a faith. Christ healed ten lepers, but only one returned to give thanks. The others went on their thoughtless way, indifferent to Divine Providence for them. How thankful are we? The sun shines on millions every day? How many return to give God thanks?

Gratitude expresses hope and love. It is hard when our foreheads are knit and our minds absorbed, when bankruptcy threatens; when we are swamped by trials and troubles, crosses and vexations; when in the shadow of death, or bowed in grief, to say, "Praise the Lord." But if we know that God is all-wise, and doeth all things well, we can thank Him that He will help us in our need, that He will give us comfort to bear our burdens and griefs, and He will add to our lives glorious victories. Though "floored" by misfortune, or bowed in grief, or suffering distress, we can look at Him this way and say, "Praise the Lord."

Thanksgiving is a sign of the presence of God in the heart. The Ark was the sign of that presence with Israel. The cross is the sign to all Christians, and thanksgiving souls are found there.

Prayer—Our Father, forbid that we shall take everything too much as a matter of course. We would not be guilty of ignoring so many of Thy blessings which are a part of our everyday life. Teach us to think in terms of gratitude and praise. Strengthen our lives now by the thanksgiving we would make, and keep us ever in that splendid view-point of Thy graces. In this we would strive every day in every way to be like Jesus who has in each detail of our being given His love.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE WAY OF A SAINT.

"Thou shalt love the Lord, Thy God, with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself."—Luke 10:27.

It is not only love for God, but love for the neighbor, and good will toward men in universal kindness and gentleness that makes a Christian. One must give as well as take of goodness, gentleness and unselfish kindness to meet with God's approval.

If we do good deeds to others and try to help them to live happier and better lives, and if, we teach them of God within them, tho' we may not see results, like the seed we have sown, God in His own way will take care of it and make it grow.

Prayer—Our Father, forbid that we shall make the mistake of imagining that we are what we ought to be in merely professing Christ and letting it be at that. Show us hearts that are to be reached and helped; show us the chords of life which we may play and make sweet music, and give us the skill to play them. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

I am certain that the material herewith submitted will fill the page. With this in view I have deliberately omitted the item for Sunday.—H. E. R.

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D., Pastor.

FAITH IS THE VICTORY.

By JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D.

(Delivered before Eastern Va. Christian Conference.)

"By faith Abraham . . . obeyed."—Heb. 11:8.

One of the great needs of the day is faith. "By faith Abraham . . . obeyed." We have almost everything else in abundance. Many people go to church. Our churches are filled on Sunday. This church is packed tonight. We are told that 30,000 people attended the conference of Episcopalians in Atlantic City recently. Our churches, conferences, and conventions are well attended. Sometimes we hear of folks who are discouraged because of lack of attendance upon church, but those same people would probably be discouraged even if they had more. Faith would make the people who do attend church an unconquerable force for God.

People are still talking about evil. They are against it. They think wrong is wrong, and right is right. They know wrong from right. In other words we still have piety in abundance. There is as much preaching about good and bad today as ever in the history of the world. But faith. We need more real, vital faith. Faith that brings obedience.

Righteousness is still alive in the world. People are abhorring evil as much as ever. They would not stoop to do this, or that. Oh! I know there are plenty who would do wrong given a proper chance. But I know there are plenty who are righteous, honest, and fair and square. But faith? When the Son of Man comes will He find faith? Faith that moves where material powers are helpless; faith that obeys when others flee; faith that picks up where others throw down; faith that heals, and loves, and blesses where others forget, and condemn, and curse. Faith that brings not mere pious language, nor petty resolutions, but courageous obedience.

By faith Abraham was able to obey. Let us learn a lesson from him.

Abraham's faith led him out on a great adventure with God. He might have remained in the land of Ur, and worshipped the unhearing stone, and the unloving wood, and the grotesque figures fashioned by frightened men had he not had faith. Faith fair as the light of the morning shone into his soul, as the righteousness of God shone upon his young face as by faith he set it toward God's Land of Promise. "Up, out," was the command; and by faith Abraham obeyed.

We must not overlook the element of separation in this call. If we are going to venture with God we shall find the need of separation. Separation from the material idols of Ur; separation from many of the habits, customs, and conventions of our forefathers; and separation from much that would appeal to our personal fancy, as well as our personal comfort and happiness. The word separation here is something like the word "isolation" in the realm of chemistry. No use or value until isolated. "God setteth the solitary in families." (Ps. 68:6.) And it is the isolation of a real endeavor, the loneliness of real achievement. By faith Abraham could cut loose, and walk to the great adventure with God.

It is this call to "come ye out from among them, and be ye separate," that is too often being overlooked in these days. Jesus expressed it on His sermon on the mount: "Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.' Some man who would otherwise be a leader will let some foolish personal habit handicap him forever; or another who might walk out on the great adventure with God will let some little besetting cause him to limp along in the lost places far from the Land of Promise. The story is told of Paderewski that on his engagement to play in a great theatre in this country he repaired to the theatre early in the morning to set himself to a day of practice on the piano, and when the janitor arrived to begin cleaning up the place he found the great artist already hard at work. "Are you not the great artist who is to perform here tonight?" he asked. "Yes," replied Paderewski. "Then why are you not out with your wealthy admirers, being wined and dined about our great city?" "To be a real artist I must come apart to practice." He was entering the narrow gate to life. Few find it. Faith finds it. We need faith today.

Abraham's faith led him to the altars of God. It was nearly a thousand miles, by the route that Abraham took, from Ur to Bethel. But if one is traveling with God what matters miles, or mountains, or deserts, or distances? On he went through the land of Shinar, the great middle country of Mesopotamia, through Padan-Aram, through Syria, and finally on into the land of Canaan. How beautifully it is expressed in Gen. 12:8, "And he removed from thence to a mountain on the east of Bethel, and pitched his tent, having Bethel on the west, and Hai on the east: and there he builded an altar unto the Lord, and called upon the name of the Lord." The faith that does not lead us to God's altars is not much faith. Faith will fill our churches, and replenish our treasuries. Faith will answer the command of God to "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together as the manner of some is."

Do you follow the geography of the pitching of Abraham's tent at Bethel? He was going west. He pitched his tent toward Bethel. "Beth," house, "el," Elohim, God. "Beth-el"—house of God. Faith did that. Faith obeyed. Faith will face our homes toward the church, and will face our children toward its altars. But further: do you notice that we are told in the verse quoted that "Bethel was on the west, and Hai on the east." Hai means a "heap of ruins." His face towards God's house, and the ruins to his back. "Forgetting the things which are behind, I press on," says Paul, the greatest expounder of the Gospel of Christ.

Up from the altars Abraham arose at God's command to receive God's promises. "Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward and westward; for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever." And again, "Look now toward heaven, and tell the stars, if thou be able to number them; and he said unto him, So shall thy seed be." Thus at the altars of God our visions are broadened, our faith enriched, and our covenants with the Eternal confirmed. Faith brought Abraham to the altars.

The man of faith will prevail at God's altars. Abraham went to God, for instance, for the life of Lot in the city of Sodom. Save Sodom was his prayer. For fifty just persons? Yes. For forty? Yes. For thirty? Yes. Finally Abraham asked God if He would save it if ten could be found. And always God answered yes. Who stopped first? Abraham, or God? Who knows that if Abraham had the faith to say, "For Lot, will you save it for Lot alone?" that God would have heard his prayer.

"Unanswered yet?"

Faith cannot be unanswered;
Her feet were firmly planted on the Rock;
Amid the wildest storm, prayer stands undaunted,
Nor quails before the loudest thunder shock.
She knows Omnipotence has heard her prayer,
And cries, 'It shall be done,' sometime, somewhere."

Abraham's faith led him to the hills of sacrifice. We cannot understand Mt. Moriah. It is a great difficulty. An earthly father offering up his sons. It is beyond us. But neither can we understand the Mt. Calvary. It too, is beyond us.

MUSIC IN WORSHIP.

at one time. The choir had just sung beautifully, and the audience was hushed, expectant, ready for the sermon. The minister said, "I don't know what you are accustomed to, but I always like a hymn just before I preach." They sang the hymn—he may have been more comfortable about preaching, but he had lost contact with his audience which I do not believe he restored that day.

I believe, however, that the offertory number has not realized its greatest usefulness because it has been a "floating" feature. The choir director provides the offertory, and the minister prepares a sermon, but as a rule neither one knows what the other is going to do, very far in advance. Consequently, we may hear a solo on the Prodigal Son, and a sermon on Gideon. I am not trying to say that the Prodigal Son spoiled Gideon's effectiveness, for the mere religious fervor aroused by the one might prepare for the other. But would it not have been much better if both solo and sermon could have been on the Prodigal Son. Usually, however, the divergence of topic between offertory and sermon is not so marked as I have indicated here. In fact, once in a while the two by blind chance agree, and the audience says, "How appropriate the music was this morning." But I am wondering why an agreement should not be sought here; I may say honestly that I have never even seen it tried. Do you know what you are going to preach about a month from now? Then tell your choir director, and see if the director can find music fitting your topic. There are many, very many solos and choruses to fit your needs. And I feel that a little effort on your part and on the part of your choir director to plan your respective duties a month or six weeks in advance will repay you a hundredfold in making your sermons live to a degree that they may have never done before.

A word should be said here concerning the use of silence in the worship service. Most ministers know the value of the act of silent prayer in worship. Yet ministers frequently offend in failing to recognize the same value of silence after impressive music. I have known of ministers who cannot wait until the last note of the choir response to prayer is done, to announce that the church secut troop is to have a steak fry on Tuesday night; the thread of worship snaps instantly. And then there is the minister who, through nervousness or real haste, fidgets during the offertory, is on his feet before the organ has stopped playing, and has launched into his sermon before the organist gets the motor turned off. Not only has that minister layed himself open to criticism for plain bad taste, but he has destroyed at once not only the religious message of the offertory, but also the dignity of the beginning of his own sermon. Needless to say, the service should never appear to be hurried, and occasional periods of silence tend to strengthen the bond of communion between the worshipper and his God, the central act of worship.

I have already stated how I feel a service should end, the sermon going directly into the benediction and a quiet response. The audience should leave the service as they entered it—silently and reverently. No hands should be shaken or greetings exchanged until the vestibule is reached. Even then it should be possible for a worshipper to go to his home in silence, carrying the spell of the service with him. Your sermon has a much greater chance to sink in and take root if your congregation may continue in meditation on your words as they leave the church, their thoughts unbroken by the interruption of hymns and organ music.

I realize, however, that there is a large section of the Christian ministry who, having studied the question thoroughly, still favor the closing hymn. It is said that the hymn at this point drives home the sermon; it is furthermore a wholesome thing to close the worship by this act of Christian fellowship.

I, therefore, do not feel that the final hymn is a vital issue. But in regard to the organ postlude, it is different. I regard the organ postlude as an instrument of the devil, devised by him to destroy in one blow all the good that the service of worship may have achieved. Let us consider it a moment: in any church I have ever attended that has used an organ postlude, the procedure has been the same. The beginning of the organ piece is a signal for the beginning of general sociability—everyone shakes hands, talks, laughs. The organist plays louder to be heard, so the conversation must be louder to be heard. So neither the music nor the conversation wins out; it is a draw. I can therefore see no justification for the organ postlude in the worship service, and urge that, if you employ it, that you seriously consider discontinuing it.

I have brought you my best thought in regard to the most effective use of music in worship. At most I can hope that I have succeeded in suggesting to better heads than mine some of the problems concerning the topic I have discussed. I further hope that the result of this will be that you think through some of these problems I have only suggested, and that you may be able to use music more effectively in your worship service, to the glory of God.

THE SUN'S PULPIT.

But there they are. Two peaks that tower above the horizons of time. Let them tower there. Do not take them down. Moriah, and Calvary. Complete faith, complete sacrifice. God provided in both cases. God ever will provide in our extremity. Abraham's faith led him to obey. Jesus' faith led Him to obey. Let that be a staggering sobering thought. His faith. His faith in His Father. And His faith in His weak and wavering disciples. His faith in you, and me. His faith that He is calling us. His world needs us now. "By faith Abraham obeyed." Shall not we? Having faith we will. Let us renew our faith in God, and in our fellowmen.

Christian Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

At this Thanksgiving season let us in our imagination take the place of a little orphan child in its young and tender years without a home—with no loving kindred or friends to take it. No food, no money, nowhere to lay its head, no one to guide or train or teach it the right way. No one to whom to look for love and tenderness. Just in the world to drift no one can tell where. Oh! how would you like to take its place? Yet we have many in our denomination just in this condition. If you were in its place would you not like to have someone to feel interested in you? You have an opportunity at this Thanksgiving season to make an offering to help make 100 of them happy—will you do it?

"The poor ye have with you always" said the Master. It is wisely ordained that it should be so. They need us. We need them. They are an obligation and a blessing to us. Suppose we had no human need and no human suffering—no human sorrow to appeal to the tenderest part of our nature and pull at our heart strings. Don't you think that in a short space of time that our hearts would grow cold and as hard as a stone. Should we not thank God that we have in our midst the orphaned and helpless child to keep our hearts soft and tender and sympathetic?

If you withhold your hand from them and the Master says to you, "Inasmuch as you did it not to them ye did it not to me." What will your answer be?

I believe the greatest blow that could come to us would be to withdraw the appeal of the orphaned child. The Christian Orphanage needs ten thousand dollars by the first of the year. Please make use of the opportunity you have at this Thanksgiving season to help it reach its goal.
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

OBITUARIES

CLEM.

Mrs. Caroline Clem, widow of Ashford Clem, was born on January 31, 1846, and departed this life October 16, 1934, aged 88 years, 8 months and 11 days. Sister Clem's old home was near Joppa Christian church, and it was the first home in which I stayed on my first visit to Joppa when I became pastor there in June 1906. For some years Sister Clem has made her home with her son, the Rev. H. Russel Clem, now living and preaching in Massachusetts. Bro. Russel Clem is well known in our church, and his many friends will sympathize with him in the death of his aged mother. Surviving are one brother, two sons, one daughter, and one step-son. The remains were brought back to the old home community, and the funeral service was held at Joppa, where Sister Clem still held her membership, and the body laid to rest by the side of that of her husband, October 20, 1934.

A. W. ANDES.

McMASTERS.

Mrs. Lizzie McMasters was born September 27, 1857, and died November 4, 1934, aged 77 years, 1 month and 7 days. She was a member of St. John's Lutheran church, near Singer's Glen. One brother, Jacob A. Berry, is the only near relative surviving. Her husband died about seventeen years ago. Funeral services were held at Antioch Christian church, November 5, 1934, and the remains laid to rest in the Greenmount cemetery.

A. W. ANDES.

LIVESAY.

On October 28, 1934, God saw fit to remove from our midst Mrs. B. E. Livesay. We, the members of the Ladies' Aid Society of the Waverly Christian Church, offer the following tribute to here memory:

Be it resolved: First: that God, in His all-wise Providence doeth all things well, and, while we mourn the loss of one who was ever faithful and one who meant much to our Society and Church, we bow in humble submission to His divine will.

"Reveille" Editors Quit.—

Because of the refusal on the part of the authorities of Louisiana State University to allow "Reveille," the college paper, to print anything derogatory to Senator Huey Long, the business manager, the editor and the staff members of the publication have handed in their resignations. The student journalists pronounced themselves unwilling to submit to "censorship" on the part of a "faculty advisor."

ABC Board Turns Reformer.—

The Virginia ABC Board, according to latest reports has turned reformer. Sunday dancing has been going on in some of the establishments licensed by the board, and possibly other conduct that is questionable! So the board has revoked one license in Norfolk on the grounds that the establishment was an "unfit" place, and six other proprietors were warned that their beer and wine licenses were in danger should there be further reports of reprehensible conduct. Dancing on Sunday, warned the board, must be given up entirely. Can it be possible that the liquor board will succeed in curbing on Sunday what its wares promote during the week?

Italy to Pay $82,000 to Baptist Missions.—

In 1922 the Southern Baptist Foreign Mission Board bought approximately thirty-seven acres about five miles from the down town section of Rome, and on a high hill overlooking the city. A theological seminary was to have been built on the site, but the plan was abandoned, and the land has until recently remained unimproved. Last year the Italian government expropriated seventeen acres of this tract and has erected there barracks and a gymnasium for young people. The Baptist Board has already received $43,000 in payment for this land and were recently notified that they would receive an additional payment of $39,000 in the near future.

Blue Eagle Holds to Tombstones.—

The Blue Eagle has a secure hold on the tombstone industry according to the statement of a Washington news bureau, and it refuses to loosen even one talon. Eleven firms recently sought exemption from the retail Monument Code which requires the payment of a minimum compensation of $10 a week to outside salesmen, agents, and sales representatives. Their petitions were denied by NRA and the Industrial Appeals Board. This case, typical of many others, brought to light an interesting feature of the monument industry. For many years it has been the custom of many rural preachers to serve as sales agents for monument makers, their earnings depending upon sales. The code requires a $10 minimum weekly payment to agents, thus eliminating the country preacher.

Insull Asks Vindication.—

Having won his first legal battle on last Saturday, when he and sixteen co-defendants were acquitted of charges of a $100,000,000 mail fraud, Samuel Insull began to dream of a complete vindication. "I am ready," said he, "to face these other charges that are pending . . . I am confident that I will be vindicated." These "other charges" include prosecution by the United States Government on bankruptcy charges, as well as a state charge of embezzlement. Rumor runs through the financial world that the former magnate's dream is not only of mere vindication, but that he plans, if cleared of all charges, to re-enter La Salle street and the utilities field in an attempt to restore his former two-billion-dollar empire.

Girl Slaves in Northern Japan.—

It is reported that as many as 30,000 girls in Northern Japan were sold by their parents into virtual slavery. These girls ranged in age from sixteen to twenty-three years, and they brought prices varying from $3 to $300. The farmer of this district is said actually to celebrate over a bottle of wine when a girl baby is born, for she represents a future cash value. Approximately three-fifths of these girls are consigned to factories, where they are condemned to labor such as our people know little of, while two-fifths of them go to an even more awful fate, being consigned to a life of living shame. The Philadelphia Evening Bulletin recently printed an article by Reginald Sweetland, containing this and other facts which weave a story of such utter depravity that it would shock the moral sensibilities. The brokers find this girl slave trade most profitable.

"Champions of the People".—

In the Congress which will assemble the first of next year will certainly be those who will emerge as "champions of the people. There are several issues shaping that will present glorious opportunities. One is unemployment insurance, another is the proposed 30-hour week, while the revival of the question of trades unions' rights may furnish a third. Yet, strange though it may seem, think those that have studied the situation, a champion who is well-informed and reasonably brilliant, who will oppose unemployment insurance, the 30-hour week, and labor-baiting measures can "win the crown of public acclaim more readily and more permanently than any proponent." The reasons for this conclusion are: first be employed before they can hope to participate in payments made on account of lay-offs. . . . Enactment of a 30-hour week would 'freeze' wage scales . . . the closest students of industrial labor are agreed upon that . . . Pro-organized labor bills will be just as 'hot,' and by grasping the wrong end of the poker more than a few Congressmen may be blistered." So the conservative Congressman may not be so bad off after all.

Distiller's Silly Season.—

An association styled "The Distillers and Brewers Corporation," hitherto unknown to us, has inaugurated a campaign "for moderate drinking." Americans need no campaign to teach them to drink, but we understand what the Corporation means. Probably it has been disturbed by reports from the police and from charity organizations. It is beginning to realize that some, perhaps many, whiskey dealers are not averse to supplying any patron with all the strong waters that he wishes, and with much more than he ought to have, and on weekly payments. Against this practice the Corporation rises in protest. "We do not want a dollar of anyone's money," its president writes, "that should be spent on the necessities of life." We applaud the protest, but if this association means what it says, it will immediately take steps to abolish the fast-growing custom of permitting the retailer to sell on credit. To force drink on a befuddled customer, easing it down with the assurance, "pay when you feel like it," means in some instances the beginning of another drunken career. In many instances it means that when pay day comes, the retailer, on threat of withholding further dreams, will get most of the wage, and the children will be forced to go without sufficient food and warm clothing. Most liquor boards forbid the credit system, and then fail to enforce the order. A wholesale revocation of liquor licenses is the only argument some of these retailers can understand. It should be used immediately.—America, Catholic Weekly.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Mrs. M. E. Bullock rejoices over the prospect of a visit to Suffolk, Va., December 10th, to attend the anniversary of the Junior Philathea Class which she organized.

Rev. John G. Truitt, D. D., recently conducted a very successful revival in our Windsor, Va., church, Rev. N. G. Newman, D. D., pastor. At the close of the meeting twenty-one united with the church.

"The Tithe Is Mightier Than the Drive." It certainly is, and the reason we have to put on drives to save the church from crushing debt is because we will not pay the tithe as taught in the Word of God.

The Eastern N. C. Conference, in session last week, licensed to preach as probationers, William Alphonso Grissom, of our Liberty (Vance) Church, and Robert A. Whitten, Jr., of Elon College. These are two promising young men, and we wish for them fruitful service in the Master's work.

The Conferences of our Southern Conference are now over and the time to begin the work for a new Conference year is now. It is impossible for a pastor or a church to do twelve months' work in one month, or even two or three. The whole twelve months should be occupied with a definite planned, constructive program.

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, pastor, was beautifully and bountifully remembered by his good Berea congregation, Sunday night, the 25th. Brother Crutchfield thus begins the fourth year of his pastorate with these people, with gratitude for past favors, with courage and high hope for another year of delightful and constructive service.

The Mission Secretary has the program for the Woman's Missionary Societies for "A Service of Thanksgiving." The programs are certainly well planned and presented and every society should use them. They can be had on order at one cent the copy. The offering in the societies, the women have voted, shall this year go to our mountain work.

The November Number, Missionary Herald, carries the fine faces of President Ross Ensminger and Dean A. R. Van Cleave of Southern Union College, Wadley, Ala., and the Herald gives a very interesting account of the kind and character of the work these two strong, capable, Christian young men are seeking to do at Southern Union. They richly deserve, as no doubt they have, the cooperation of the community and the constituency into which they have cast their lot and life.

The Urbana, Illinois, Daily, in a recent issue, displays the fine face of our good friend and brother, Rev. J. W. Fix, pastor, Congregational-Christian Church of Urbana, reporting him in the role of an heroic venture. Hearing the screams of a woman somewhere in the neighborhood, Bro. Fix rushed from his home to find a man assaulting a woman. As the pastor came out on the street the man left the victim and made for cover, Fix giving pursuit, capturing and detaining him until the police arrived. Possibly Fix will turn out to be as skilled in the service of policemen as in that of pastor. The Urbana paper seems to give him credit to that end at any rate.

Rev. R. A. Whitten, pastor, First Church, Portsmouth, attended the Eastern North Carolina Conference and was present when his son, R. A., Jr., was licensed by the Conference to preach. It was a happy hour for the Conference and especially for Brother Whitten, Sr., to witness his son following in the way of his father. After the Conference adjourned, Brother Whitten, Sr., made a pleasant visit to his host of friends at Elon College who were glad to give a former townsman and neighbor a cordial greeting.

Brother Fix has recently put on a Home-Coming event in his church, which event attracted wide attention and made front page. Rev. Mr. Ealey, who was giving a history of our Urbana Church in his address, said: "In October, 1931, Rev. J. W. Fix came to us and took charge. He and his helpful wife have endeared themselves to not only this church but to all the churches and people of the Twin Cities. In the three years of his pastorate he has received into this church 166 members, consecrated a number of children and made 1,700 pastoral calls. The word busy is inadequate to tell the story."

Now that Conferences are over and new financial programs are to be faced, pastor and people would do well to consider going out on a canvass which is presented in our columns this week from Donald A. Adams in the Missionary Herald. The Lord's work requires haste and the King's business should require business methods and acumen. We know of nothing that hurts and hinders church work like the slipshod methods, or possibly no methods at all, that so many churches employ in carrying on their financial affairs. Read "Going Out On A Canvass" and get some salient facts that should be of interest to every man.

Hines Chapel Church, Rev. B. J. Earp, pastor, now rejoices in the organized and spirited service of a Woman's Missionary Society, which society gave a splendid program, with fine attendance, on November 11th. Our reporter further says: "Ladies' Aid, the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor are all doing a splendid work." This speaks well of the work of the retiring pastor, Rev. J. L. Neese, who is now pastor of our Reidsville Church, and opens the way for effectual, constructive service on the part of the new pastor. Happy, indeed, is the new pastor who when he arrives finds that the retiring pastor has labored to the last to make straight his path.

The SUN's editor, in not finding his friend and relative, Rev. Jesse E. Franks, present at the annual session of the Eastern N. C. Conference, sought him in his home nearby, only to find this faithful servant confined to his room now with a partial paralysis of his vocal organs which prevent his talking above a whisper. He has recently returned from a clinic and hospital where he was advised not to use his voice for sometime other than in a whisper. We found him cheerful and hopeful, trusting that a few weeks or months will give him back the voice he loves so much to use in preaching the gospel of peace and righteousness. His address is R. 4, Raleigh, N. C.

Mrs. May E. Bullock, of Trotwood, Ohio, writes under date of November 22nd of the death of Miss Irene Reiber, who was for some years secretary to the president of Elon College. Miss Reiber suffered from a stroke of paralysis May 15, 1933, and lingered till November 16th, her death following the third paralytic stroke. During the eighteen months of affliction there were only two days on which she had no company or callers. Funeral services were conducted by her pastor, Rev. W. G. Kershner, assisted by Mrs. Bullock and by Mrs. McD. Howsare. The burial was in Pleasant Hill cemetery, attended, in addition to the above, by Revs. McD. Howsare and J. G. Etter. Her pallbearers were young men whom she taught when they were in the Junior Department in Sunday School.

PARAGRAPHS TO PONDER.

By TIMOTHY THOMAS.

We are now entering our third winter struggling with our unemployment problem. The solution of this problem is not and will not be an easy one. The people of the nation are to be congratulated for their liberality in helping those who are less fortunate and the unfortunate are to be congratulated for their spirit of patience and calmness during the testing years of the depression. Since "hope springs eternal in the human breast" those separated from their positions did not lose faith, the result being that thousands have returned to their former or other positions. The remaining idle know, too, that a better day awaits them. Their hope shall yet be rewarded.

* * * * *

The masses of the people, except a negligible number, prefer work to a direct relief or charity. As an evidence of this, 4,000,000 men answered the call one year ago when the Civil Works Administration was inaugurated. The opening of this program of work was a challenge that was quickly met, met bravely and heroically. By available figures, an excess of 150,000 men and women sustained injuries in that five months battle of wage earning. Of this number, more than 2,000 laid down their lives, while more than 20,000 were either partially or totally disabled for life. But the opportunity brought a new day, temporarily at least, for more than 10,000,000 people, directly or indirectly. Men were able to laugh and sing again. It gave them an anchor for their fading hopes, renewed confidence, and strengthened their spirits to try again. It was the renewing of confidence, the kindling of spirit—that spirit that has always brought America back to her feet.

* * * * *

Under the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, regardless of the chronic critics, there is being provided work for many millions who would otherwise be thrown upon society as subjects of direct charity. Gradually this number is being absorbed by private business through resumption of manufacturing and necessary readjustments due to our economic breakdown.

* * * * *

Whatever our future plans may be for handling and feeding the unemployed, the word, "charity" is soon to pass from our vocabulary. Charity in the form of direct relief, whether food or money, will soon be a relic of the past, except in cases where members of a family are too small or physically unable to work. Funds are now and will be in future exchanged for work—the common sense thing to do. This will be America's future way of answering the call of charity. Charity has served well, but the new order will serve better. Work will add happiness and contentment to living, where the old method provided only food and raiment, gradually robbing the recipient of his spirit of independence, a thing so vital and necessary to good citizenship.

Thanksgiving is now approaching; Christmas is not far away. The spirit of these occasions is the spirit of the humble, the meek and the lowly—the spirit of grown-up and the spirit of the child—the spirit of the Christ. Those who have and those who have opportunity to earn will find a greater happiness in the having and in the earning when they have shared their blessings and their benefits with those who are not so fortunate. It has been the outpouring of this spirit of thankfulness, generosity, and kindness that has sustained millions who otherwise would have given up the battle and the struggle for existence.

The conflict between business and politics is not a conflict that concerns only business and politics. It is the common man who is affected by the ideals, the motives, and the aims between the business mind and the political mind. Cooperation must come between these two factions for the benefit of the depending multitude that is affected.

RESOLUTIONS OF APPRECIATION.

FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH,
GREENSBORO, N. C.

Whereas we miss his counsel, his comradeship and his leadership;

Therefore be it resolved that we as members of the First Christian Church of Greensboro, in annual conference assembled, do now, by rising to our feet express ourselves as follows:

1. That we shall continue to pray for our pastor, and we express ourselves as follows:

3. That we pledge ourselves to encourage the work here by regular attendance, by inviting others, and in support by time and means.

4. That we pledge ourselves through the deacons or other constituted body to hold all usual services and meetings until his return to the work.

PLEASANT RIDGE CHURCH.

Pleasant Ridge Church has just completed a successful year's work with Rev. J. Frank Apple as pastor. Ten new members have been received and deducting the three losses there has been a net gain of seven (7) members. The church paid all of its financial obligations and in addition spent more than $200 for improvements.

On Sunday, November 18th, Rev. J. Frank Apple preached his first sermon for the new year. During the coming year there will be two church services each month instead of one. The enrollment of the Sunday School is 163 including the Cradle Roll. The new Superintendent is O. Carl Brown. The attendance last Sunday (Nov. 18) indicated that the new conference year is starting well, and we hope to make it our best year yet.

GEO. T. GUNTER.

A Story for the Children

OTTO'S THANKSGIVING.

Down the broad street rolled a carriage, and in it sat a lady and a little boy with a white kitten in his arms. No one saw just how it happened, but suddenly the kitten sprang out, and ran down a narrow side street.

"Look at the cat!" cried the boys who were playing in the street, and away they dashed after her. At the sound of the harsh voices the little creature turned and ran across the street, but the boys followed, so back she ran, getting more bewildered and frightened every minute.

All at once a stone came, thrown with sure aim, and the kitten rolled over, but it was quickly up again, trying to run away.

Then out of a doorway a boy ran and caught up the kitten before the other boys could reach it. They ran at him to take it away, but just then back came the carriage. The little boy shouted with joy when he saw his pet, but when he saw the blood on her soft, white fur, he began to cry.

"Oh! who hurt her?" cried the lady, gently lifting the kitten out of Otto's hands.

"He did. Otto did," cried the boys, pointing to the boy who had saved the kitten from them. You see, they did not want to be blamed for it themselves, and they were cowardly enough to want to get him into trouble.

"Oh! indeed I didn't," exclaimed Otto, but the carriage had started away, and the people in it could not hear him. The coachman called back something about "a-boy who was coward enough to hurt a kitten," and about telling the police."

Tears of fright and anger filled Otto's eyes, and he hurried into the house, while the taunting voices of the boys called after him, "Cry baby, cry baby."

The next day was Thanksgiving, and in Otto's home they were planning a happy day. The father had been out of work for a long time, but for three days now he had had something to do, so the mother had bought their Thanksgiving dinner of bread and meat and potatoes, and they had been hungry so often that it seemed like a feast. Now, however, no one was happy, and although Otto's mother tried to comfort him, she was worried and anxious.

Some one else had seen what happened in the street. A doctor had been sitting near the window in the house across the street, and had seen and heard everything. He was a very busy man, but a kind man, too, and he managed that afternoon to find the kitten's little master and tell him what Otto had really done. When the boy heard all about it he wanted to do something for Otto, to thank him for what he had done. And he did.

Early the next morning, a loud knock at Otto's door frightened them all, for they were sure it was a policeman. But it wasn't. It was a man with a basket and a letter. In the basket was a dinner—such a dinner! A big turkey and all sorts of good things. And in the letter was something better—kind words for Otto, and an offer of work for his father.

"The kitten wasn't hurt much," said the coachman (for it was he), good-naturedly, "and may you all have a fine Thanksgiving." And they surely did.—The Herald and Presbyterian.

Those who cry the loudest that we are developing a nation of idleness are those who have not known the pangs of poverty. They look from afar off. They are criticizing a problem without offering a solution.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

The 109th annual session was with the Piney Plains Church, R. 4, Raleigh, N. C., November 20th-21st. The high peak of the session was observed in the closing service on the morning of the first day when Rev. C. Rexford Raymond, D. D., pastor of our Southern Pines church, preached from the text: "What Think Ye of Christ?" Dr. Raymond made the application, as well as the implication of his sermon, personal and immediately practical in abandoning the plural form of the text and asked each one of his audience: "What Do You Think of Christ?" "I am not inquiring now," said the preacher, "about your creed or somebody else's opinion given you which you may have made your own about Christ." "What Do You Think of Christ?" For instance, not half of us believe that Jesus knew what He was talking about in the Sermon on the Mount. Many, many people will tell you this Sermon may be good morals and safe religion but poor economy. The world will learn one day that Jesus knew just what He was saying when He preached the Sermon on the Mount.

Not half of us in the church believe that He knew what He was talking about when He said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every living creature." If I, as a church member, do a little benevolent deed around home, in the local church or maybe preach the gospel in the local church, I feel that I have discharged my duty and lie down with a clear conscience, forgetting the fact that Jesus knew what He was talking about and that He was saying what was best for me and all of His followers, when He said, "Ye shall be my witnesses, even unto the uttermost parts." The reason why the church at home is drying up is because it is not willing to trust that Name which is above every name. There is a Name that can set the nations on fire for God, and would do so if those of us who know Christ would decide emphatically that He knew what He was talking about and what was best for us and the church when He commissioned us to share His life and light and Name with those who at home and abroad are perishing without Him.

It was a great sermon, of a deeply spiritual tone and type and greatly edified the Conference.

The reports to this Conference were not reassuring. As a matter of fact, they were rather discouraging. We do not recall how long it has been since this Conference built and added to its roll a new church. On this account the Conference is losing in numbers and progress, since a Conference grows only by adding churches, just as a local church grows by adding individual members. The well established churches year after year about hold their own, and the only hope for growth and power is through additions of congregations. On the other hand, reports show that in this Conference one or two churches drop out, fall by the wayside or fail to make any report or, as far as is known, have any service. Moreover, some of the stronger churches of the Conference seem to be indifferent to the work of Conference and fail to make report or to give impetus in any way to the effect, purpose and program of the Conference.

The session at Piney Plains was in fine spirit on the first day, in particular, was very largely attended. It was rather distressing to note on the second day that there was a considerable falling off in attendance, even on the part of pastors and those whose presence was so much needed in the counsels of the day. Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, D. D., president of the Southern Convention was present and presented the program of the Convention as adopted at Suffolk, which program was later discussed at length and finally adopted by a very small vote.

The devotional services, conducted by Rev. B. J. Howard, Rev. J. A. Denton, Rev. H. C. Hilliard and Rev. E. M. Carter, were of the deeply spiritual type and quite helpful. The evening service of the first day was largely attended, the feature of which was an address by Rev. F. Ervin Hyde speaking to the reports on "Christian Education."

The features of the second day were an address on Japan by our returned missionary, Dr. E. C. Fry, and the address on "Our College and Its Needs," by Dr. L. E. Smith. These brethren gave the Conference much to ponder as they carried our thoughts first in the needs of Japan for the gospel and its saving power and then, by Dr. Smith, the needs of Elon College, the essential contribution it has made and is making to church life. The Conference was well cared for and entertained with abundant and generous hospitality.

His host of friends were cordial in their greeting to Brother J. A. Kimball, who always represents his church (Mt. Auburn) in the Conference, but who, having suffered from an automobile wreck last spring and having gone desperately and dangerously nigh to death's door in the total wreck of his car, and who lingered for weeks on the verge, had come back to sufficient strength to enable him to be on hand at the annual Conference. One of the faithfuls, indeed, is J. A. Kimball.

Dr. W. C. Wicker, president of the Conference, conducted the business with dispatch and in good spirit, and so directed the program and business of Conference that each item was called on time, even to the moment of adjournment.

Conference adjourned to meet next year with New Elam Church. J. O. A.

WILL WE LEARN?

An intelligent gentleman remarked in our presence recently that education was making our nation pagan and atheistic. He pointed to the increasing number of atheists, and the increasing number of pupils in higher education of learning and the absolute indifference, if not the open opposition, to any idea and teaching of the existence and reality of God. To clinch this argument he pointed to Germany, which a few years ago was the school room of the world, the educational center of all the nations and home of the greatest scholars on earth. Today it was repudiating the church, scoffing at God and was largely pagan in its ideas, if not atheistic in its teachings. The editor recalls being in Atlanta, Ga., awhile ago and on visiting the federal prison was told by the superintendent that his institution could on any day, with a few hours notice, supply sufficient teachers, administrators and instructors from president to associate professors for any good sized university. They had the educational training and the intellectual equipment with college and university degrees to qualify; and so that is that. The editor well remembers that in his days of college training, no education was complete without a degree from a German university, and when he himself graduated from Harvard, his own brother and benefactor wrote to inquire if he would not like to finish by going on to Germany and getting a degree that would entitle one to pose and offer as a real educated man. In those days Harvard graduates were not asked if they were going to Germany to complete their scholastic career, but to what university or particular place in Germany were they going for their degree. We were also taught in those days that Germany had largely solved the social and economic problems, since no one in Germany was a beggar or tramp save by his own volition and in face of law and custom. We were told that one could go from one side of the German Empire to the other without a penny in his pocket and yet never ask for a hand-out or be looked upon as tramp or a beggar. One could travel on foot a half day, then stop at a Government House and work a half day, secure free meals and lodging honorably in return for his work, and then travel for a half day as a respectable citizen. Practically all other social and economic problems in those days Germany "had solved." And then came the World War, and our nation of efficiency and education came nigh to wrecking civilization. These are facts fresh in our minds and without question.

Have we learned? Will we learn? Can we learn? Germany was enlightening the mind but not clarifying or enlarging the understanding. Germany was studying, teaching and learning to know; it was neither studying, teaching nor learning to know how. Our day is suffering not from education but from lack of it. Intellectual development and achievement is only a part of education; not the whole of it. It is giving knowledge without giving power or direction. Culture without Christ is chaos or will soon become so. A keen intellect without a developed soul is dangerous and a deadly weapon, and much of the so-called education leaves out wisdom and understanding. No man, however much knowledge he may have of biology, of botany, of physics, is or can have understanding of these things without a knowledge of God who created the very forces with which the scientists themselves are seeking to deal. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom; the knowledge of God is understanding."

And so that which our friend was talking about and that which the German universities were doing was that of giving knowledge, seeking intellectual power and penetration, but it was not the sort of knowledge that brought wisdom and understanding. A knowledge of God is understanding, and unless we get that knowledge we are not educated.

PRAYING PRESIDENTS.

We little reckon with problems that confront our Presidents and how, out of the very weight of their responsibility and power of their pull, some of these Presidents are driven to their knees. Every school boy is acquainted with the fact that George Washington prayed at Valley Forge, and that Abraham Lincoln prayed on more than one occasion in the dark days of the War between the States. Other Presidents, in their extremity, staggering beneath burdens they cannot bear and problems they cannot solve, supplicate the true source of wisdom. The Sunday School Times recently brought to light portions of an address by President McKinley, who, opening his heart in speaking at a meeting of Methodists, said:

"The truth is I didn't want the Phillippines; and when they came to us, I did not know what to do with them. I sought counsel from all sides—Democrats as well as Republicans—but got little help.

"I thought first we would take only Manilla; then Luzon; then other islands, perhaps, also. I walked the floor of the White House night after night until midnight; and I am not ashamed to tell you, gentlemen, that I went down on my knees and prayed Almighty God for light and guidance more than one night.

"And one night late it came to me this way—I don't know how it was, but it came:—that we could not give them back to Spain, that would be cowardly and dishonorable;—that we could not turn them over to France and Germany, our commercial rivals in the Orient, that would be bad business and discreditable;—that we could not leave them to themselves, they were unfit for self-government, and they would soon have anarchy and misrule over there worse than Spain's was.

"There was nothing left for us to do but to take them all, and to educate the Filipinos and uplift and civilize and Christianize them, and by God's grace do the very best we could by them as our fellow-men for whom Christ also died. And then I went to bed, and went to sleep, and slept soundly."

And so, we have the Phillippines and so we are sending missionaries out there—our own Dr. M. J. White of Christian Temple, Norfolk, being among the number who has been out ministering to the needs of our neighbors, the Phillippines.

WEST TAMPA MISSION.

That is the name by which the Congregational Latin-American Institute is usually called in Florida. For many years the West Tampa Mission has been close to the hearts of the Florida churches and especially to the Woman's organizations in the churches. For several years there has been conducted a graded day school in connection with the church program. This fall the day school was given up and in its place is being developed a fine program of social educational and religious activities. There was recently held a meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Institute to plan for the future, in view of the fact that Rev. Carl H. Corwin will cease to be pastor of the church on January 1st, after thirteen years of faithful and consecrated service, both as pastor of the church and superintendent of the Institution. The young women, who have been for three years teachers in the school and workers in the Mission in general, are now in charge of the activities which involve various forms of club work for all ages from mothers to kindergarten. They have a very active program involving not only recreational features, but also educational, and there is also a fine Sunday School and very active Christian Endeavor groups. Miss Gladys V. Hall has been designated as Director of Activities, and Miss Neoma Jordan as Social Worker, and Miss Lona Ward as Kindergartener. They all share in the religious work also.

The trustees have not elected a pastor for the Mission, but have arranged with Rev. Ray M. Busler of Tampa to serve as acting minister. He will continue religious services and in other ways cooperate in the activities of the Mission. Mr. Busler is well known to our constituency in the state and has rendered missionary service in some of the Florida churches as well as in Sunday School missionary work in the mountain regions. This Mission needs financial support and contributions of clothing and supplies, and such will be greatly appreciated. All communications should be addressed to Miss Gladys V. Hall, 2339 Laurel Street, West Tampa.

FLORIDA ASSOCIATIONS.

The three Florida Associations have recently held their annual meetings, which were all of a very high order. The attendance was not as large as in other years owing to present conditions, but the quality of the addresses, the spirit of the meetings and the fellowship were all of a very high order. One of the ministers from the Penney Farms group, who has been an outstanding minister in some of the northern conferences, remarked at the close of the East Coast Association meeting that he had been to many such meetings, most of them more largely attended, but none of a higher order as to quality of utterances and spirit.

All three associations had the same topic,—“The Mission of the Church.” There were such sub-topics as “The Preaching Mission,” “The Social Mission and the Council of Social Action,” “The Teaching Mission (Miss Pattie Lee Coghill speaking on this subject in all the associations) “The Woman's Mission” (Mrs. Robert G. Williams speaking at all associations), “Mission Work in the Southeast,” (Supt. Gillette discussing this subject), and the associations all closed with the theme “Jesus Christ and the Mission of the Church.” The association meetings were held at Miami Beach, St. Petersburg and Daytona Beach.

A PLEASANT SURPRISE.

The writer had a pleasant surprise a week ago. Upon leaving the meeting of the East Coast Association at Daytona Beach, Florida, he hurried into a cafeteria for a quick lunch, but discovered a long line of husky football players. At the end of the procession was a familiar figure and he said to himself, “that looks like the back of Dr. Rowland's head”; looking further along the line he discovered Dr. Atkinson. There was immediately very pleasant greetings and a friendly visit. We were sorry that Dr. Rowland had to come to Florida for his health, but glad that he came to Florida if he needed the health giving quality of Florida. It was pleasant indeed to greet these beloved brethren so far away from home and so unexpectedly. May the Florida sunshine and good doctoring restore our dear friend, Dr. Rowland, to perfect health.

CHRIST THE SOLUTION OF OUR SOCIAL ILLS.

By ELISHA A. KING, Miami Beach, Fla.

The little book of Hebrews contains a sentence that is common to the thought of every Christian, “Jesus Christ is always the same, yesterday, today and forever.” (Ch. 13:8.) The author of this sentence wished to encourage his readers and in the midst of confusion and strife to assure them that Jesus Christ is always the same leader, the same Saviour, the same good friend as He ever was, as He was yesterday, as He is today, and as He will always be.

The Christians of the first century needed to be reminded of the reality and stability of the foundations of their faith. The discussions with unbelievers and the persecutions of the faithful sorely tried them and they needed encouragement.

It is easy to forget people and events of the past. We forget our benefactors, even the sources of our blessings. We forget what sort of social and industrial upheavals we have had. We forget the many financial depressions we have passed through. We think only of our present problems. We are prone to forget the good things of life also and how liable we are to forget our good leaders and heroes and turn to others. I sometimes wonder how long the Christian Church would have remembered Jesus if He had not instituted the Communion Service! “This do in remembrance of me” was a wise command.

I have before me as I write a cartoon drawn by Charles A. Wells for “The Christian Herald” of New York. At the top of the right hand corner stands Christ with a crown of thorns upon His head. His hands tied behind His back. His head is bowed in sorrow. At His feet on the horizon is a crowd of people with clubs in their hands. In the sky, as if spoken by the Master, are the words, in large letters, “Thou shalt love.” The crowd beneath is looking on a terrible scene. At the bottom is a manufacturing village with factories and houses all being trampled into the dust by two big men engaged in a life and death struggle. They are trampling the buildings to pieces, knocking down the chimneys. These two men have clubs with which they are beating each other. In the lower right hand corner sits a man in distress and perplexity, resting his head upon his hand. On him are printed the words, “The rest of us.” Underneath the feet of the two struggling men, who represent “Capital and Labor” are the words “Recovery Program.” Now I did not tell you what the crowds of people were saying, the bystanders, the public, the world at large. They are represented as shouting, “Impractical! Idealist! Dreamer! Nonsense!” That is the verdict. Jesus Christ who gave the world its greatest and best solution for human ills is called an Idealist, a Dreamer, impractical and nonsensical.

But Jesus Christ is the same good leader today that He was in the Past and throughout all the struggles of man with man He has exhorted them to love one another. And He urges us to love as He loved, even to the laying down of our lives in utter sacrifice for the good of others.

Sometimes we become discouraged because we see so little progress in the practice of brotherhood. It sometimes seems as if selfishness and greed dominate everything and everybody. Some people become skeptical, cynical, hopeless of any betterment and the Church is called a futile instrument but the best antidote for this poisoned state of mind is history. One should read both ancient and modern history both sacred and secular and become acquainted with life as it has been lived in the past.

There has been a perceptible gain made in de-

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The attention of the American people has been called to Thanksgiving Day, November 29, 1934. This day should be observed with deep gratitude to God for the religious traditions of our country. The people of our land should be reminded that the Christian religion has played an important part in the development of our history. The early settlers sought freedom from the religious tyranny of Europe. The Christian churches founded the great schools, and made possible the development of the great system of public schools in the United States. The Government has insisted upon the separation of Church and State. But it has consistently recognized the fundamental importance of the church and the Christian religion in the establishment of a stable government of the people and by the people.

In this year of grace, it is fitting to pause and take inventory of some of the things for which one should be thankful. In the final analysis this is a personal inventory, but it is universal in principle if exceptional in detail. For one, if I may be personal, I am, today, thankful that my parents held before me the beauty and charm of the Christian life by precept and example. I am thankful for Christian parents. I am grateful for their teaching and example. I am thankful that God has given long life to so many of my family. My grandmothers lived to be nearly seventy; one grandfather died at 90 years of age; the other died at 95 years of age; my mother was nearly seventy at her death; my father is in his 83rd year.

I am thankful for the leadership of the church in American life. With all of its weaknesses and imperfection the church is the great hope of our civilization. Political leaders and social propagandists are making a determined effort, in these uncertain days, to undermine the faith of our fathers and relegate the church to oblivion. But the church is here to stay, unless our civilization fails to appreciate its opportunity and privilege. And it is here to stay as a positive force in our social and political thinking. If the church and its holy teaching shall fail, our civilization is quickly doomed. No system of economics or political economy can supplant the simple teaching of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The Gospel will grind all its enemies into powder. "And whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder." (Matt. 21:44.)

I am thankful for a call to the Christian ministry. And I am grateful for the fellowship of the Christian denomination, which has been merged into the Congregational and Christian fellowship. I have never apologized for being a member of a small denomination. I am thankful for a long pastorate in a country district. I have no apology to make for being a country preacher. I am grateful for the privilege and opportunity offered in such a field of service. I am thankful for the hundreds of loyal friends who have enriched my life by faithful cooperation and support.

I am thankful for faith in God and in my fellowman. Without faith it is impossible to please God. And without faith it is impossible to be at peace with your fellowman. Faith can look beyond the dark clouds and see the sun still shining; it can look beyond the sunset and the night, and see a glorious sunrise tomorrow. Yes, there is a tomorrow for those who live by faith; and that will be a glad tomorrow of unending joy and unbroken fellowship. In the hope of immortality, one can rest in this abiding faith, and leave the unsolved problems of life in the hands of our Father in heaven.

THE CONVENTION'S LARGER BUDGET.

The Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches is constituted by a number of conferences. These conferences are constituted by local churches grouped together. The churches, of course, are made up of individual members. These individual members express themselves to the local church, and through the local church to their conferences, and finally to the Convention itself. These members constituting our churches have a purpose and a program that require money. In our plan of church organization, the local church is a law unto itself. That is to say, it is neither commanded nor guided in its activities except as it may elect. However, when the local church expresses itself by delegated authority through conference, convention, or both there is certainly a moral and religious obligation in regard to these requests.

At the recent session of the Convention, held in Suffolk, Virginia, the Convention endeavored to face its whole program in the light of its financial requirements; and through a special committee, it received and approved a report setting up what we were pleased to think of as the Convention's Larger Budget. The total amount of the new budget adopted was $31,500, the same to be apportioned to the several conferences constituting the Convention, for the support of the Convention, missions, Elon College, superannuation, and religious education, which, of course means that eventually this apportionment must reach the individual in his local church.

All the conferences have had their regular annual meetings, and all voted accepting the ideals set by the Convention for them. The budget adopted is considerably in excess of the budget which the churches have been working to meet. In fact, when the askings finally get back to the local church, it means, in all instances, an apparently increased amount; but, in reality, the increase is not nearly so great as would appear. In the Convention's Larger Budget, all money raised by the churches, not including missionary societies or Sunday Schools, is to be included in the budget and credited on the church's apportionment. That is to say, what you raise in the Easter offering for missions is to be credited on your conference apportionment, and what you raise during January and February for Elon College is to be credited on your apportionment. I am asking the privilege, so far as the offering for Elon College is concerned, to add all money that is raised for the college through the churches or any of the churches' organizations to the amount to be credited on the local church's conference apportionment. That is to say, whatever is raised through the Sunday School, Dollar-a-Month Club, or any society or organization for Elon College and is sent to the college with a request that it be credited to the church, this amount, or these amounts, will count on your conference apportionments.

By checking over records, I find that there are a few churches that raised their quota last year, and these churches will not be called upon to raise more this year than they did last year. Also, when these churches to which I refer take the amount which they raised for the college and for missions and add the same to their conference apportionment last year, the result is that they raised—the year which is just closed—an amount equal to what the Convention's new plan is asking them for.

The budget under which we begin this year has the advantage in that it will enable the church to put in black and white the total amount of its givings, also will enable the Convention itself to ascertain what the entire church is giving. This, I think, is a virtue that will appeal to the average individual member who takes his church and religion seriously. At any rate, this is the plan that we adopted in Convention. If we were not present personally and voting, the ones whom we elected to represent us were. For one time, let's take the Convention's plans seriously, dedicate ourselves to the task, and see if we cannot reach the ideals that have been set for us.

At this writing, we are in the midst of the Thanksgiving period, when every individual church and all are expected to make a contribution for the support of the Elon Orphanage and send the same to Superintendent C. D. Johnston. Let's reach our goal in this offering!

The next will be the college offering which comes in January and February. The Convention's asking for the college through the churches is $12,500. This is by far less than any amount that we have asked for in a long time. This amount, of course, will not meet the needs of the college, but the college is happy to join in with the Convention and to do what it can to help the churches reach this goal. We will send out from the college information, data, and programs to be used by Sunday Schools, Christian Endeavor Societies, etc., in informing the people and arousing them in the interest of the college and of the annual offering. Should a local church or any organization wish additional material or outside assistance in reaching its quota, if they will write me I will be glad to see that their wishes are met. All together for the offering in January and February!

PORTSMOUTH HEARS A MESSAGE.

Portsmouth has been fortunate in observance of Men's Missionary week, holding the suggested men's dinner last night in Monumental Methodist Church, with one hundred and three men present for the occasion. Dr. A. W. Beaven, President of the Divinity School of Colgate University, Rochester, N. Y., and President of the Federal Churches of Christ in America, was the speaker.

His message to the men at the banquet was the most impressive message of the kind that I have ever heard and after the men's meeting, a meeting was held in the same church, to which the public had been invited. Dr. Beaven's address at the later hour was on world problems and the challenge of the church through the missionary cause to face them. He told of many difficulties, throughout the world. He stated that we had sent our trade men, our inventions, in fact, everything else, why not the Gospel? He spoke of the Orient as a part of the world which for the past thousand years had been placid and peace loving, but who, in the past fifteen years have become a changed people, demanding recognition. He says it is up to us to supply the need with Christianity. Not in words, but lives. Character is the test. He quotes Germany, from which country he has just returned and praises their heroism, unequaled since the days of Luther; the loyal ministers there who have sacrificed salary and even endangered their lives to stand true and loyal supporters in the face of an un-Christian dictatorial power. Said he: "A friend of mine in Geneva, told me recently that Einstein told him that when the Jews began to suffer at the hands of Hitler, he, (Einstein) thought surely his scientific friends would protest. He heard no word from that source. Then he said, surely my friends in the teaching profession will raise their voice against such cruel treatment, but no voice from them was heard. His professorial friends held their lips. He then took hope that the friends in the labor organizations would rise up and speak. But no sound of a voice, and said he: 'What do you think? The church, upon which I spat, despised, has risen to champion the cause with a loyalty that bespeaks praise'."

Dr. Beaven very graphically told the story of heroism, recorded many years ago in a book by Dr. Speer, "The Marks of a Man." How, sixty Christian men, condemned to die, unless they would forsake the Christ way. Having refused the acceptance of compromise they were taken under guard of soldiers, in charge of a centurion to the Alps, where they climbed the heights to die the torturous death of freezing. After these men had become almost exhausted by their hazardous experience of the climb, one of them died on the way. They were bidden to make a fire for the soldiers, and then having their clothes taken from their bodies, they were driven out into the blinding snow and ice to die for the cause which they espoused. Soon the centurion heard voices of a chant. It was these 39 men, chanting in unison, a prayer, praying for victory for their Christ. The centurion watched them as he listened to their song while they were huddled together like sheep in the blinding, biting wind and storm. One of the 39 threw himself at the feet of the centurion and said, "I recant, let me in." The centurion looked upon the man at his feet, and again at those tried and true. He knew they had something which he did not have. He felt something take place within his own heart and instantly he said to the man who had fallen from the ranks of the suffering men, "All right, I'll take your place," and throwing his tunic to the man who had failed to measure, the centurion rushed out and joined the thirty-nine, who with him, died for the sake of Christ.

Dr. Beaven pleaded for a whole hearted religion; for a deep consecration of life; for a liberal support of the Mission cause. He says the need of yesterday justified it. Tomorrow the need is greater. Without the message of Christ, said he, "There will be no tomorrow, but a long, dreary desert scene of bleached bones brought on by the wholesale slaughter of a world war with its merciless destruction for mankind."

He told of a young man, a member of his own church, who years ago, graduated from the schools with high honors. After his graduation to medicine, he was offered a partnership with a noted surgeon. A young woman who also graduated with exceptionally high honors, was offered a teaching position of $2,000 per year. One morning they stood before the altar in his church and were married in the presence of more than 1500 of their friends and next day sailed for the foreign field. Said he, "They believed the cause of Christ to be of far greater value than the offers which they turned down. So far as he knew, they never regretted the choice.

Please pardon this hurriedly written missive, and if there is anything in it you would care to pass on, please arrange it and do so. It was a successful men's dinner and I am sure the impressions made will not soon, if ever, be forgotten.

A REAL THANKSGIVING.

The parsonage of the Holland Christian Church has been built a little over twelve years. At the time of its construction the church was carrying a considerable church debt besides. During the pastorate of Rev. J. H. Lightbourne the church indebtedness was entirely liquidated, but the debt on the parsonage, while being considerably reduced has hung fire during these days of depression like many another debt. This debt of about $2,100 together with other accumulated sums had reached the amount of $3,859. At the very first meeting of the new and enlarged finance committee they tackled this problem with a determination to clear the church slate of all indebtedness. Each Sunday night for a month meetings were held. At each meeting other individuals were interested and invited to be present. The interest grew wider and wider and more intense with each meeting. Mr. A. L. Jolly is the new chairman of the committee, and at the third sitting he appointed a subcommittee consisting of Messrs. J. P. Dalton, H. V. White and J. R. Holland to do some definite survey work. This committee was very active during the week and at the last meeting with about thirty present its findings were reported in a most favorable manner. On the strength of these findings it was recommended that cash pledges be made by those present and the remainder of the church be canvassed at once. This effort resulted in checks being given to the amount of about $2,700. Pending the full canvass a men's banquet was arranged to be served on Friday night at 6:30 by the Ladies' Aid Society of the church.

When Friday night arrived about sixty men assembled for the sumptuous banquet of oysters and ham with their accompanying accessories and to hear the good news that the campaign had gone over the top to the tune of $3,919. It is needless to say that there was great rejoicing. The banquet hour reached its peak with the sterling and rousing address of Dr. P. Rowland Wagner, Baptist minister of Norfolk, Va. Dr. Wagner came here under the mistaken impression that he was to deliver an address to open the campaign to raise the funds. But his keen sense of humor and his brilliant mind came wonderfully to his rescue and for an hour he talked hard sense, mingled with

MISSIONSREV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., *Secretary.THE PRUDENTIAL COMMITTEE PRO-NOUNCES ON EVANGELISM.

The following is taken from the Minutes of the meeting of the Prudential Committee in Boston, November 13, 1934:

At the request of Dr. Goodsell, a statement prepared by Rev. Carl M. Gates was presented and it was Voted, that in view of the action taken by the International Missionary Council at Herrnhut calling "the churches and missions to immediate cooperation in a more earnest evangelistic endeavor," and our own conviction that a sane and sober, yet enthusiastic, evangelism is the very heart of the missionary enterprise; and in view of the desire expressed by the Committee on Evangelism appointed by the Committee of Reference and Counsel for "cooperation in maintaining in its central and controlling place the primary aim and purpose of our work as expressed by the late Dr. George Washburn, President of Robert College, 'to make Jesus Christ known to the whole world'"; and in view of the practical problems which are involved in the attempt to make evangelism central in the diversified program of modern missions;

Resolved that the Prudential Committee ask the Committee on Foreign Policy, either through a special sub-committee on Evangelism or in whatever other way may seem best, to make a careful study of this whole problem and bring in a report at the Plenary Meeting in October, 1935.

The Prudential Committee also asks the Committee on Foreign Policy, or its sub-committee on Evangelism if such should be appointed, to arrange for consultation and cooperation with the Committee on Evangelism of the Committee of Reference and Counsel in whatever ways may seem advisable.

And the following item from the Minutes is also of interest, showing the determination of our Mission Board to come direct to the question of Evangelism and then a hopeful note, indeed, from a prospective donor:

Information was given of the appointment of a Committee on Evangelism by the Committee of Reference and Counsel of the Foreign Missions Conference, of the changes in the By-Laws of the Cabinet adopted at its meeting on November 9th, of the prospective gifts from one donor of $50,000 to Istanbul hospital, $50,000 to Foochow Christian Union Hospital, $50,000 to Madura Men's Hospital, $20,000 to the Girls' High School at Sokkakulam, Madura, $20,000 to the Uduvil Bilingual School in Ceylon, and $10,000 to the Mt. Silinda Hospital, Southern Rhodesia, all on the condition that his name and that of his wife be given to the hospitals and schools respectively.

And then before the Committee closed its day's session, which must, indeed, have been a day, the following significant event is recorded:

As the order of the day at 3 P. M., Dr. John R. Mott, Chairman of the International Missionary Council, addressed the Committee, giving the results of his observation of conditions both in the Southern and Central African fields during his recent trip to that mission field. He dwelt on the most intimate relations that he had had through the years with the work of the American Board and his feeling that we are all on the threshold of a new day in missions, and his opinion that the continent of Africa presents one of the greatest challenges of this day to our combined missionary forces.

OUR MISSIONARY SOCIETY REPORT.

A brief report of the work done by the J. O. Atkinson Woman's Missionary Society of Liberty Church, from October, 1933, to October, 1934.

Our missionary society is named for our beloved Mission Secretary and is proud to bear his name. We hope that we will be able to live up to our name for if we do our missionary society will always go forward in the mission work, for Dr. Atkinson has given his life for Missions.

Our society has 33 active members, 2 honorary and 1 life member to join just before conference.

We held twelve regular meetings during the year. Studied the Book of Psalms with Mr. Madren as teacher. We sponsored a Home Coming day held the fifth Sunday in October, 1933, and a Rally Day in which all the church enterprises were represented the fifth Sunday in September of this year.

We raised about $200 during the year. We had a "White Elephant Party" and also served a supper and made right much of our money that way. Then we made six dollars on getting subscriptions to a magazine. We still clean the church and get $50.00 for that. We sold sandwiches one day before conference and made $7.00. We divide our money in two funds, a local or benevolent fund, and a mission fund. We do this to distinguish between giving to benevolences and giving to missions. Some people think when you help carpet a church or buy a piano for the church that you are giving to missions, but that is wrong. When you give to missions that goes to give the gospel at home and abroad to those who haven't it and know not the love of our Christ. So from our mission fund we paid $110 to our conference treasurer. We were apportioned $100 so we were very proud to reach our goal and go over it $10. From our local or benevolent fund, we paid to the church $65 for the parsonage; gave several funeral designs during the year; sent gifts last Christmas to our Mission Secretary; also gifts to Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Grissom and family who carry on our mountain work, and also gifts to some orphan children in our community. We try to help in any way that we can.

I think we have had one of the best years since our missionary society has been organized. And I wish to thank our pastor, Mr. Madren and all the other members who have labored so faithfully to carry on the work of the missionary society and also to the other women of the church who have helped that are not members of the missionary society. I would like to see every woman of the church enrolled as a member of the society. They do not know what pleasure and joy they are missing by not being a member.

We are very glad indeed to have Mrs. R. G. Ayscue better known as "Aunt Stella" as a life member of our society. Mrs. Ayscue is one of the oldest members of our church. I hope that we will have some more of the older members of the church to join as life members. By paying ten dollars to our conference treasurer one becomes a life member and will receive a certificate showing that one is a life member.

We are praying that the year 1934-35 will be better than the year just passed.

MARGARET ALSTON, President.

MISSIONARY RALLIES.

A series of three Missionary Rallies for the women of the Florida churches have been planned for early in January. Mrs. Robert G. Williams, President of the Florida Federation of Congregational Women, and Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, meeting with the women at each of the Florida Association meetings arranged the series. The purpose of these Rallies will be not only to stimulate interest in missions, but also to discuss very practical problems concerning missionary education and missionary promotion. E. C. G.

ALL FOR LOVE OF HUMANITY.

Traveling 200 miles—60 on foot—climbing a mountain with a 12-mile winding train, a young Indian Christian found Rev. Raymond A. Dudley at his camp and asked him for a letter of authorization to take three sick folks to the hospital in Madura. No such letter was necessary but Mr. Dudley sent the young man away with one, and a word of prayer. Back the long journey to Tiramangulam went the youth, then 12 miles by train with the three patients. Home was 15 miles by foot. And this was all done by an Indian Christian lad for three Hindu friends.

This building, named by the Orphanage Trustees in honor of the present Superintendent, houses the older boys and girls. It is the newest of the Orphanage buildings. Your gifts made it possible. Your continued support is necessary if it is to be used in the business of making useful Christian citizens.

BE THANKFUL.

Can we be thankful—and for what? How many of us ask ourselves that question this Thanksgiving Day?

When the Pilgrim Fathers celebrated their first Thanksgiving Day upon a bleak and rockbound New England shore, their hearts were so full of joy and gratitude that there was no room for anything else. They did not stop to regret the comforts and certainties they had left behind in England or to anticipate the terrors of winter and probable Indian massacres. They gave thanks for a harvest of their own efforts in this land they had crossed treacherous seas and faced unknown dangers to find so that they and their descendants could have equal opportunities to live, love and worship God in religious and political freedom. So, too, thousands of years before, the Children of Israel gave thanks for release from terror, tyranny, and torture and an opportunity to make a place for themselves and their children under the sun.

Sometimes we become so accustomed to plenty that our eyes and senses are blinded to our real blessings and we feel that we have nothing for which to be thankful. It is only when we become stripped of the unessentials or have our hearts and souls raw and sore from suffering that we are able to "Count our blessings one by one and see what the Lord has done."

Let us examine ourselves. Some of us do not have as much as others. But no matter what we have, it could be less. When we count our blessings one by one then imagine ourselves without even those, we can truly realize how much we have for which to be thankful.

The greatest thanksgiving of all is to really and truly give thanks for the want, suffering and sorrow we have experienced—if we have learned appreciation, understanding, joy, love and faith through them. Then and only then can we be thankful from the depths of our hearts. Then and only then do we really begin to live. Then and only then are we ready to accept the fullness of God's blessings.

We are not asked to be satisfied with our lot, no matter how meagre it is, and to give up all struggle in hopeless abandon, submitting to God's will. For that is not God's will. God wills us to have good things. But sometimes we have to suffer privation to learn appreciation—to be spurred on to greater endeavors so that we can truly find ourselves. Then in our exuberance of thanksgiving we can really value our rewards and our blessings.

God wants us to be thankful for everything, for the little things as well as the big things. Just as our earthly parents want us to appreciate their loving kindness and watchful care, so also does our Heavenly Father. The right sense of valuation and appreciation has a mysterious way of increasing our capacity to receive and of multiplying our blessings.

So it behooves us to be thankful. And we all have much for which to give thanks, if we only will.

SALLY HARBAUGH.

"Being thankful awakens our faculties, opens our eyes and guides our footsteps.

"Being thankful creates a vibration that brings us more things for which to be thankful."

YOUTH FELLOWSHIP IN FLORIDA.

"We are the host of the young,
Short years ago our chief concern
Was just to live, to sleep, to play.
But now this childish life will not suffice.
Within our veins the red blood surging
Calls us from simple childhood ways,
To do, to dare, to know.
A way of life adventurous we seek.
We care not what oppose, or may befall;
Give us the chance to live for some high cause—
We give our all."

Thus said the youth, representing 16 churches of Florida, who met last Friday and Saturday in the Congregational Church, Orange City, Florida, in a Youth Convocation. A banquet at 6:30 P. M., Friday was the opening feature. The service which followed had for its principle speaker, Prof. R. S. Sims of Fessenden (negro) Academy. The social time was at 9 o'clock, and at 10:30 the goodnights were said.

Saturday's program began at 7:30 A. M., with a communion service conducted by Dr. E. C. Gillette. At 10 o'clock there were discussions and worship. "Religion and Life Today" was the subject for the first discussion which was led by Mr. C. A. Hoyt of Jacksonville, and Dr. C. Arthur Lincoln of Daytona Beach, told of "The Council for Social Action and Youth."

At 2 o'clock the afternoon session opened. "World Citizenship Today" was the topic of the discussion led by Rev. Victor B. Chicoine. An open discussion, "Young People's Work in Our Churches," followed. At 4 o'clock the group joined in games; at 5:30 supper was served. At 6 o'clock the closing session was held in the church auditorium when Dr. Trevor Mordecai of New Smyrna talked to these young people on "Vital Christian Living Today."

Happy in heart these young people returned to their respective churches to spread joy.

THE SOUTHEAST CONVENTION.

The first separate session of the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches is scheduled to meet at the United Church of Raleigh, North Carolina, April 30th to May 2, 1935. This Convention includes all of our united church in Virginia, the Carolinas, Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, and Florida. The program is to be inspirational and educational, for the Convention is not intended to transact business other than such as is necessary to carry on its own functions.

The program committee is expecting to have among the speakers Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, honorary moderator of the General Council of Congregational and Christian Churches, Dr. Roy Helfenstein, pastor of our church at Dover, Delaware; Dr. Daniel A. Poling, president of International Christian Endeavor; Professor Arthur A. Holt, of Chicago Theological Seminary; Dr. H. Shelton Smith, head of the department of religious education in Duke University; Dr. Edwin C. Gillette, superintendent of Congregational work in the Southeast and several others. It is expected that the program will open with an evening session on Tuesday, April 30 and close with the evening session on Thursday, May 2, 1935.

Young People will be interested in knowing that plans are being made for a separate session for young people on the afternoon of May 2nd, and that the evening session will be largely for young people with Dr. Poling as speaker, if he can arrange his plans so he can be there.

The editor of this page is chairman of the program committee and will welcome suggestions concerning the program for that occasion.

PROBLEMS FACED ON MISSION FIELDS.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR DEC. 9, 1934.

Acts 19:23-41.

Planning this meeting:

How about trying a "Group Leader"? Appoint four or five young people to lead this meeting. They will all sit up in front, and start the meeting with an informal singing of old and familiar hymns which are sung the world around. They will lead in short prayers, and then conduct an informal conversation among themselves for twenty minutes or so, talking about missionary work, and how certain problems are being met today. The following material may be used to suggest topics for conversation.

What This Country Needs Is. . . So many people say "Missions begin at home," and there are needs in our state and nation. What are some of them?

(a) Underprivileged groups: Unequal opportunities for education of Negro children, the Indian, the immigrant, the white mountain child.

Our American Missionary Association faces the greatest need of people with a reduced budget, with 119 less teachers, and a number of institutions closed or suspended.

The problem of reduced income? Does that mean that Christians do not care?

What does this country need? What does the world need?

Problems the World Around.

The building of Christian homes is one of our major emphases this year. Perhaps some of the greatest service is being rendered in this realm. Here is one evidence from China:

"I can never be too grateful for all that the school has done for my wife," said Mr. Lao of the Women's Bible School in Foochow, China. "When she entered the school she was an ignorant, illiterate village woman with no interest in the things I was interested in, or in the work. Today she isn't the same person. She is interested intelligently in what is going on outside. She knows how to care for our child. Furthermore, she is spiritually stronger than I am, always ready with some helpful Bible passage when I am discouraged or am puzzled what to do."

Religious Education.

The action of some governments, regarding religious teaching has been a problem for mission stations. Here is what has happened in China and Japan.

When Government regulations in China forbade compulsory Bible study in all the curricula of any school, some felt that all religious influence would be destroyed. Happily there comes more proof that this is far from the truth. Rev. Harry S. Martin states that his voluntary Bible Study class had 40 out of 70 senior boys enrolled and 17 boys joined the church. Eleven of these were seniors. In Japan, Kobe College has this year engaged Directors of Religious Education with special time and salary for the work.

Facing Opposition.

The opposition of non-Christians tries the Christians in untold ways. Would we stand the test? Think of this picture from India:

Because she is true to her Christian faith, Sornam, of South India, suffers from the violent opposition of her husband. Two years ago he burn-

THE CHRISTIAN AS WITNESS.

LESSON IX—DECEMBER 2, 1934.

GOLDEN TEXT: "But ye shall receive power, when the Holy Spirit is come upon you; and ye shall be my witnesses both in Jerusalem, and in all Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth."—Acts 1:8.

LESSON TEXT: I Thess. 1:1-10.

Paul visited Thessalonica on his second missionary journey. According to Luke's account in Acts he spent three weeks there, but we know from Paul's own word that twice while he remained in Thessalonica the Church at Phillipi sent him aid, and also that he worked while there at his trade as a tentmaker. These statements indicate that he remained there a longer period of time. In any event he had a stormy time there, for in so many instances, his preaching aroused determined opposition, and he was practically forced to leave the city. His work bore fruit, however, for a church was established which grew rapidly, and which exerted a powerful influence throughout that whole section. Paul's letter from which today's lesson is taken was written from Corinth a few months later.

Grace . . . And Peace From God Our Father, And The Lord Jesus Christ.

The grace of God, and peace of God, how desirable, and how essential it is that both individuals and churches have them in their heart life. To have the spirit of God, to have peace with God and with one's fellowmen—this is to bring joy to the individual, and inspiration and life to others.

Making Mention of You in Our Prayers.

Paul had a large heart. He had varied interests. He thought beyond the circle of his own local and selfish interests. His intercessory prayer life had a wide range. This is only one reference to the breadth of his interests, and of his habit of remembering in prayer, with thanksgiving, churches and individuals, and interests. That native of interior Africa had caught Paul's spirit—and the Master's when he came to the missionary and said he wanted to learn geography so that he might know of more places for which to pray. How wide is the circle of your prayer life? What interests do you remember in your intercession? For whom do you pray? The soul that prays only for its own interests can never grow great or big.

Work of Faith . . . Labor of Love . . . Patience of Hope.

The Thessalonian church was evidently a live, growing, working church. There seemed to be spiritual vitality about it. Born in faith, expressed in love, and biding its time for the fruitage, it was exercising a spiritual ministry throughout the region round about. If folks love their church enough to give it their time and energy and gifts, and if they are not weary in well doing, they shall reap in due season if they faint not.

Your Election of God.

The word for church in the sense in which it is generally used in the New Testament means literally "the called out." The church, ideally speaking is made up of those who have been called out of the world by God, called into fellowship with Him. They are to be in the world but not of the world. Worldliness in the church robs the church of her power.

Gospel Not in Word Only, But in Power, in the Holy Spirit and in Much Assurance.

On one occasion Paul says that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation into every one that believeth. The word which is translated power in that sentence is the word from which we get our word "dynamite." The gospel, literally, is good news, but it is also power. And when Paul preached, he preached in the power of the Holy Spirit, things happened, men were changed, there was such a note of certainey in the message, and such a spirit of sincerity in the messenger, that the people who heard and experienced the gospel had an assurance that satisfied their deepest needs. The gospel proclaimed by a life that has already felt its power, is a power in the lives of others.

Followers of Us, and of the Lord.

That was a rather bold statement to make. Paul practiced what he preached. But people were safe in following him for he followed Christ. Yea, Christ lived in him. The preacher's life is the life of his preaching. The teacher's life is the life of his teaching. Jesus said "Whosoever shall do and teach them." We not only learn by doing; we teach by doing.

From You Sounded Out the Word of Life.

This is the heart of the lesson on The Christian As Witness. The reason the Thessalonian church grew was because the people had an experience of Christ, and they bore witness to that fact. They took literally Jesus' words that they were to be witnesses for Him. They were not to tell what they thought about Him. They were not to speculate about Him. They experienced Him, and then they bore their witness to what had taken place in their lives.

Here is the heart of the matter. The modern church has lost its voice, insofar as the ability to witness personally for Jesus. It is not bearing witness by personal word to the presence and power of Christ. Perhaps the answer is that the average church member does not have any witness to bear. He does not know Christ as a fact of life. He does not enjoy grace as an experience. He has no first-hand contact with Christ. He cannot tell others about Christ, because he has nothing to tell others. He can talk about the Jesus of history, but he has nothing to say about the Christ of experience. A great revival will come when members of the church again begin to bear witness for Christ, a witness that has a note of reality that will give assurance to others. Our modern world will still listen to the man who knows Christ at first-hand.

We Need Not Speak . . . They Themselves Shew.

By their fruits ye shall know them. Words are powerless if the life contradicts them. They are superfluous if the life confirms them. Not correctness of belief, but manner of life is the final test of orthodoxy. Those who have turned from idols to serve the living God, do not need any publicity agent. Their lives tell it far more eloquently than words can declare it.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE

MONDAY.

A LIAR.

"If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother (neighbor), he is a liar."—I Jno. 4:20.

In a recent number of "The Pulpit," a sermon magazine, a Rev. Dr. Patten makes a very striking comment on this scripture and challenges this text, saying that it is too strong, that such language is ungentlemanly and highly improper. Folks do not call others liars. To do so is most insulting.

According to the modern standard of gentle manliness, Dr. Patten is right. But, since the Bible uses it, there must be some good reason for it. The writer has exhausted every available reference in an endeavor to find the reason for using this word. To his amazement none can be found. Every one skips it, even the commentaries. He has come to the conclusion, however, that there is a possible explanation. In the apostolic age the use of this word, "Liar," was common in describing the opposite of truth, and it was used without a sense of giving offense and it was usually accepted without offense.

Jesus refers to the devil as "a liar and the father of liars." He referred to Himself once, "If I should say, I know him not, I would be a liar." The Cretians are called liars, and Paul told the unbelievers that it is better to let every man be a liar than to repudiate Christ. (Rom. 3:4.)

It appears from these and other similar references that it was common to use the word and no offense was given. All that has changed. That word is now ungentlemanly and unbecoming. Wherever it is used it results in no good, for as Dr. Patten says, it represents a bad state of mind, makes the other fellow mad, and usually starts a fight. Today, if you want to be a Christian and a gentleman, when you suspect one of lying, exhaust every alternative before you decide that he is a liar, otherwise you show your ignorance of human frailties, for most people see things differently, or receive distorted information, or are biased, and do not intend to lie. "Few people are out and out honest-to-goodness liars."

Prayer—Our Father, make us lovers of our fellowman, that we may not overlook the truth in them and harm their souls. We would be right and kind. In Jesus' name, we ask it.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

WHAT DOES LOVING GOD MEAN?

"For this is the love of God, that we keep His commandments."—I Jno. 5:3.

There are many passages in the Bible which tell us what is the love of God, and yet there is no Christian experience so lacking as a definite realization of that love. One often hears the question, "What does loving God mean? How can I know that I love God?"

The following is a gist of what Dr. Patten says about it: First of all God is the sum total of all goodness. We do not love Him for His power, nor because He is Creator, nor because He made us, but because of the good there is in the world, viz.—the good of people, of loved ones, of friends, the kindly considerations of life even from strangers, pleasant words, beautiful things, etc.—all of which seem to be placed in the world everywhere and each and all a particular benefaction to each of us.

We cannot witness a person wearing old clothes and going without necessary food in order to support his family; or a person serving others without regard for his own safety and welfare, without reflecting that there must be something beyond it all, and that something is God. If you love these things, you love God. Do you love God?

Prayer—Our Father, we acknowledge Thee in our lives this day. We know that no evil can come of Thee; and we know that all good must come from Thee. Grant unto us this day, our portion of this love.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

LOVING GOOD IS LOVING GOD.

"Every one that loveth is begotten of God, and knoweth God."—I Jno. 4:7, 8.

Again we will use Dr. Patten's ideas. Take, for example, a man loves truth. What for? Not for fame or honor; not for the purpose of conceit or contention; not for any money he expects to get out of it; but a man loves truth because he believes that truth is the supreme good, and he will have it or he will stick to it at any cost.

In the same way one loves the sunset, not because it is of any benefit to him in gains or in fame, but because he loves it. His whole soul responds to its beauty.

God is truth. God is beauty. Do you love God?

Prayer—Our Father, we bow in humble prayer before Thee. Through truth, goodness and beauty, we would see Thy glory and love Thee with all our hearts, soul, minds and strength. In His name we ask it.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN TO SEEK GOD?

"Canst thou by searching find out God?"—Job 11:7.

The goodness of people, and of loved ones, and the truth of life, and the beauty of the world, however abundant, are rather abstractions, to most folks. They want to know how they can make Him a part of themselves.

Dr. Patten uses this striking illustration: A person makes a certain resolution to goodness. He swears that he will be good, that he will not lie, nor cheat, nor hate anyone, nor get sore if treated unkindly, that he will be forgiving, and patient, and bear his lot in life without a grumble and he will seek the highest and best good in all things, and if he finds himself slipping or on the wrong track, he will pull himself together again for his pursuit of that goodness which is his ideal.

What is that but seeking God? After all, John's statement must be true,—the heart of the whole matter. "All love is of God." The opposite is not.

Prayer—Our Father, we know that in our frailties, we cannot love Thee perfectly, certainly not as Thou dost deserve, but we would love Thee with a heart that would be perfect, and we pray Thee to make us that for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

A WARNING.

"God is love, and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him."—I Jno. 4:16.

Whatever you do wrong and however far you get off the track, do not refuse to see the good in others. To ignore human need is to despise humanity; to despise humanity is to repudiate God, and to repudiate God is to refuse the work which we have been given to do in the world.

It is certainly right, as Dr. Patten says it, "If you say you love God and you hate someone, I will not say you are a liar, but I will say that you are either confused in your idea of what a loving God is, or else the God you love is not worth loving."

Prayer—Dear Father, teach us how to know love, and how to love Thee; and make us Thine forever. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

GOD IN THE DOCK.

"As God liveth, who hath taken away my right."—Job 27:1-7.

Many passages in the Book of Job take away our breath when we realize with what daring insolence they fling out against God. Job, in the height of his despair, does not hesitate to place God in the dock, to arraign Him as unjust, as cruel, as a conspirator against his peace and his health and happiness.

And as any honest soul reads the burning words, he is compelled to say, "How often I have treated God just as Job treated Him! When in my heart I inveigh against the justice of His universe, when I condemn Fate which is only another name for God, I am a second Job.

"How dare I, in my ignorance, my unrighteousness, my impurity, find fault with the All-wise, the All-right, the All-pure!"

Prayer—Forgive us, O our God, for our folly, our hideous impiety. Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

AN ANCHOR OF THE SOUL.

"A hope set before us which we have as an anchor of the soul."—Heb. 6:13-20.

Anchored souls are few. Most lives drift with the tide. Most lives are tossed hither and yon by the winds and the waves of circumstance. How good it is to see the steady eye, the calm face, the assured bearing of one whose heart is fixed on God, is anchored to the things that abide!

That blessed fortune may be ours, if we will. Beneath us God has laid a sure foundation, and we may bind ourselves to it firmly with our faith. There is no need of fluctuation. However distracted with changes our lot may be, they are only surface changes to which we are not at all obliged to yield.

Prayer—We will know Thee, O God. Thy substance shall be our substantial anchorage. The storms shall beat upon us in vain.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

We are not to base our service on the narrow period of our individual evidence: we are to remember that as the universe is larger than any star that shines within it, so humanity is larger than any of the personalities that people it, and we are to base our conduct upon the broadest conceptions of human life and human destiny.—Joseph Parker.

"Changed men can change the world and only changed men can change it. It needs new men for a new world. It was a new Paul that changed his day."

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D., Pastor.

THANKSGIVING.

By JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D.

"At midnight I will rise to give thanks to Thee."—Psalm 119:62.

We are likely to forget the background of thanksgiving. We must remember that thanksgiving came out of the night. It did so in America. It has arrived on very happy days, but it was born in the night. I wish that every man, woman and child in this congregation would come back here to this church Thursday morning and join in the union service which will be put on by the combined churches of the city. We should fill this great, old church to its topmost balcony seats. For we have so much to be thankful for. Our day is so different from the day in which Thanksgiving was inaugurated.

Not every one of the 102 Pilgrims that set sail from Leyden, Holland, July 22, 1620, attended the celebration of their first thanksgiving day in the autumn of 1621. No, not everyone of them, for 44 of them had perished of hunger and cold on the bleak, and bitter coast of Massachusetts Bay; and in the first clearings of that Plymouth Colony a little cemetery had been started, which within the first four months grew to 44 mounds! It is easy enough for us to pass over those words, but any of you who have lost loved ones within the year, or the years, will feel for that little band of Pilgrims, as far, far from home they laid their loved ones away in a strange land; and not knowing how soon, at the rate they were dying, they, themselves would be lost.

But summer came. Fruits, nuts, and a meagre harvest followed. Dying stopped. And there was proclaimed by Gov. Bradford a day of thanksgiving. "At midnight I will rise to give thanks unto Thee." Their ranks had been thinned,—58 of their 102 were left. They had fought, bravely and daringly, and their fighting was not over, but they would take a time off for thanksgiving to almighty God. And we here so near Jamestown will remember that while they were fighting winter, and weather, and hunger and heart-break up there that there was a struggling little colony of Cavaliers doing no less down here. And so our first thanksgiving was born in the night. "At midnight I will arise to give thanks unto Thee."

At first, thanksgiving was not held every year. However, during the Revolutionary War a day of national thanksgiving was annually recommended by Congress. Another proof that thanksgiving came out of the night of national deprivation, suffering and death. We should thank almighty God on this day for the good men, and women, our forefathers, and mothers, who did not forget God during those formative years so full of hardships and sufferings. Is the same type of hardihood, and faith being bred into our present civilization, or are we becoming soft, flabby, expectant of the best as a natural consequence without paying the price? Let us in this holy place become thoughtful as well as thankful, and ask ourselves if we are the sons of such brave sires, and are we making good the priceless heritage which they have left us?—and will we pass it on enhanced and blessed by our labors and lives?

Thanksgiving Day did not become regularly proclaimed every year by the president of the United States until it was so proclaimed by Abraham Lincoln in 1864. Is not that significant? Is it not a significant thing that our day of national thanksgiving should become permanently fixed in such a time of suffering and bloodshed, and struggle as that? "At midnight I will rise to give thanks unto Thee." So then our national day of thanksgiving was born out of those early privations and hardships, continued in the struggles of the Revolutionary War, and firmly established in the terrific fightings of the war between the States.

Our nation and the whole world have been passing through some of their hardest years. Our government, our schools, our churches, our homes have held. They have stood firm. Tested have they been, but thanks to the threads of an ancient fiber of faith and courage they have stood the test. The battle is not finished, but at least we should arise as others have arisen before us in the hour of testings to give thanks to God.

On that first thanksgiving day there was united prayer. They all came together to thank God for saving as many lives as he had saved, and for bringing the number of them he had through safely. And that spirit of gratitude, dependence, and thanks has been a bed-rock principle in our country from that day to this. May it ever be so. May we never feel boastful, haughty, and proud; but may we humbly seek to work out God's will in our destiny. To do that we too shall want to repair to our church and renew our covenants with our God, and to thank Him for His goodness to us.

On that first thanksgiving the Indians were invited guests. Peace reigned supreme. For the time at least the Indian was no longer looked upon as a potential enemy. The pipe of peace was smoked. Forgiveness and love, and harmony was the order of the day. There was nothing to waste on war. Starvation stared them too nearly in the face. Food, and implements must be conserved for the peaceable pursuits of health, and life, and happiness. Red face, and pale face alike lifted their faces to the Great Spirit for His blessings and His continued help. Is that not the great significance of our national day of thanksgiving? Are we to go to our beautiful churches with hate in our hearts, enmity in our souls, and a sabre under our cloaks? Will God honor our coming if we do? Rather has He not required that we come with forgiveness, charity and good will toward all. I cannot go as far as some of my pacifist brethren in my present light, and with national sentiment and nature being what it is, but I do think it will be an awful tragedy if this world is thrown into another war. I do long and pray for peace. I earnestly hope that our nation will turn to its altars with peace in its soul, and a prayer on its lips for international peace. I think that the significance of worship, and thanksgiving is its peace with God and man.

The way may sometime look dark,—yea, midnight-like—but whether it be as a family, church, home, state, or nation, let us never forget God, and our gratitude to Him. He guides our destinies, whether personal or national, and we can trust ourselves in His hands. Even at midnight let us rise to give Him thanks!

"We must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God."—Acts 14:22.—It is only through labor and prayerful effort, by grim energy and resolute courage, that we move on to better things.—Theodore Roosevelt.

It makes no difference whatever in the fact of immortality as to whether we believe in it or not. The eternal disposition of the human spirit is not in our hands. "The heavens are the Lord's . . ." It is likely, though, to make a tremendous difference in us.—Roy Campbell, First Congregational Church, San Diego, Cal.

CHRIST THE SOLUTION

ency, and life is infinitely more worth living now than ever before. Jesus Christ has meant much to the world and means much today. Principal Fairbairn once said, "Jesus Christ is the most powerful spiritual force that ever operated for good on and in humanity. He is today what He has been for centuries—an object of reverence and love to the good, the cause of remorse and change, penitence and hope to the bad; of moral strength to the morally weak, of inspiration to the despondent, consolation to the desolate, and cheer to the dying. He has created the typical virtues and moral ambitions of civilized man; has been to the benevolent a motive to beneficence; to the selfish a persuasion to self-forgetful obedience; and has become the living ideal that has steadied and raised, awed and guided youth, braced and ennobled manhood, mellowed and beautified age. In Him the Christian ages have seen the manifested God, the Eternal living in time, the infinite within the limits of humanity."

Probably His unseen and unobtrusive influence is greater today than ever and this is in part why, domestic bloody strife, criminal domineering, and selfish trafficking in the instruments of death seem so abhorrent. One never concerns himself much over things he does not see and understand, but eyes are not the only means of sight. It is possible to live for years in the presence of marvelous things without really seeing them.

Last summer I heard of an artist who spent some weeks in the country where the sunsets were unusually beautiful. He became acquainted with a little girl who had always lived in the village. Upon departure from the place this little girl spoke in exciting terms of the sunset as if she had never seen it before. The artist friend turned to the young girl and asked if she had not lived there all her life? "Yes, I have lived here always" was the reply, "but I never saw the sunset until you told me about it!" And it is Christ who has given us such an ideal of life, and set before us such a way of living that we now see everything in the light of His teachings. He is a divine conscience to us and He would have us, His followers, live in the light of what we know. He has given us religious and moral insight.

The life of the Church is not entirely in its ordinances, its rituals, or its temples; it is in its heart. What Christ wants is our heart's love. He is a teacher and friend, but primarily the Saviour. He would save us from our sins, He would inspire us with the hope of immortality. He would have us live together in peace and unity. He would have us love each other, bear each other's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ. The future of the world is with us and our children. The present is what we and our ancestors have made it, the future is what our children will make it so there is a chance for great improvement if we do our part with our children. You will recall that Jesus once said, "I have come that they may have life." What the Church needs today is what the early Church had, the sense of a mission, a dominating conviction or purpose in life. A real purpose to live as Christ would have us live. Then the ills of life would be cured, or well on their way to solution. Listen to the Christian principles and see if selfishness, strife, and war would not cease if these were practiced by Christian individuals and communities.

"And Jesus in the power of the Spirit returned into Galilee. And He came to Nazareth, where He had been brought up; and He entered, as His custom was, into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and stood up to read. And there was delivered to Him the book of the prophet Isaiah. And

He opened the book and found the place where it was written:

"The Spirit of the Lord is upon me,
Because He hath anointed me
To preach good tidings to the poor:
He hath sent me
To heal the broken-hearted,
To proclaim release to the captives,
And recovering of sight to the blind,
To set at liberty them that are bruised,
To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord.

And He closed the book, and gave it back to the attendant, and sat down; and the eyes of all in the synagogue were fastened upon Him. And He began to say unto them, "Today hath this scripture been fulfilled in your ears. And all bare Him witness, and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of His mouth."

"Finally, brethren, let love be without hypocrisy. Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good. In love of the brethren be tenderly affectioned one for another; in honour preferring one another; not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the opportunity; rejoicing in hope; patient in tribulation; continuing steadfastly in prayer; communicating to the necessities of the saints; given to hospitality.

"Bless them that persecute you; yea, bless, and curse not. Rejoice with them that rejoice; weep with them that weep. Be of the same mind one toward another. Render to no man evil for evil. Take thought for things honourable in the sight of all men. If it be possible, as much as in you lieth, be at peace with all men. Avenge not yourselves, but as it is written:

"If thine enemy hunger, feed him;
And if he thirst, give him to drink.
Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good.

"Now we that are strong ought to help them that are weak, and not to please ourselves. But let each one of us praise his neighbor for that which is good for building him up; not looking each one to his own things, but each one also to the things of others. For none of us liveth to himself; but we are members one of another. And if one member suffereth, all the members suffer with it.

"So then let us follow after things which make for peace, and things whereby we may build up one another. For he that herein serveth his neighbor is well-pleasing to God, and approved of men. Bear ye therefore one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ."

A REAL THANKSGIVING.

wit and humor to the great delight and edifying of all present.

Dr. Wagner strongly commended the men and ladies of the church and especially the finance committee for their matchless work and signal achievement for this special offering but he also challenged their loyalty and devotion in keeping steady step in the standard objectives of the church in the future and gave as the sure and sound solution of all financial problems of the church, "that they be stewards only" and pay tithes into the treasury of the Lord.

Short addresses were made by A. L. Jolly, J. P. Dalton, J. R. Holland and H. V. White and the pastor. The Ladies of the Aid Society deserve not only great credit for the splendid banquet served but for their generous donation to the debt fund, accompanied by their check. "Blessed be the name of the Lord who hath loaded us with His benefits."

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

The Thanksgiving Offering is starting off very encouragingly. Every church we have heard from has increased its offerings over last year except one. So far we have had but one disappointment. Some of the churches have more than doubled over last year. One church gave an offering last year of five dollars and gave us thirty-eight this year. This is nearly eight hundred per cent over last year. Now this question arises—What is your church going to do? Will you make us happy? I know you will not disappoint us. Let every church do something worth while in its offering this Thanksgiving season.

We have seven thousand dollars to raise in the month of December to reach our goal. I have confidence in you. I don't believe you will fail me.

OBITUARIES

MRS. R. E. BRITTLE.

Suddenly, but quietly, bereavement entered our community on the morning of July 10, 1934 at 11:45 o'clock, crushing our hearts when our pastor's beloved wife, Mary Sue Parker Brittle, co-worker and friend bade goodbye to her loved ones, embarked upon the ship of eternal life and quietly passed from this earth into the Great Beyond leaving behind to mourn their loss, a devoted husband, the Rev. R. E. Brittle, an infant son, Richie Parker Brittle, sisters, brothers and a host of friends.

We mourn her going. We miss her influence, the encouragement and inspiration of her noble life, but as we in sadness say, "She's gone," the angels in heaven are shouting in ecstasy, "She's here," and we are conscious of a guiding spirit urging us to follow in the footsteps of her Lord and Master, that we, too, when the summons comes, may receive a like welcome into the land of eternal joy and happiness.

In that quiet, effective and unassuming manner, ever sympathizing, serving and smiling, thinking of others, forgetting self, she moved faithfully into whatever path of service and duty she was called. Her life, shining in the beauty of holiness, was as a pearl of great price and enriched and blessed those with whom she came in contact. Patient, kind, unselfish, and generous, she exemplified a most beautiful Christian character and her death was the triumph.

Therefore, in view of the many beautiful and noble characteristics which adorned the life of our beloved member and co-worker, we, the members of the Ladies' Aid Society of Cypress Chapel Christian Church wish to express our grateful appreciation for her tireless efforts in behalf of the Kingdom and to emphasize our deep affection for her by adopting the following resolutions:

First: That we thank our Heavenly Father for her life of service, loyalty, love and devotion, and, while we sadly realize that we shall see her no more, that there will be no more earthly associations and while we shall always miss her smiling readiness to help lighten the burdens of life, we sorrow, not without the hope that we shall see her again in the "building of God, a house not made with hands eternal in the heavens," and we bow in humble submission to His infinite will, looking forward to that great day when we shall be united in Him.

Second: That we extend to her grief-stricken and devoted husband our loving sympathy in this sad hour, commending him to the great Comforter who said,

"Let not your heart be troubled."

Third: That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved husband, a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication and a copy be placed upon the minutes of our society.

Asks $900-Million, Offered $5-Billion.—

The Government asked for $900,000,000 recently, half of the amount being for eighteen months at an interest rate of 1 1-8 per cent, and the remainder being for from fifteen to eighteen years and carrying a rate of 3 1-8 per cent. The short term notes were over-subscribed seven times, while those for the longer period were over-subscribed more than five times. This looks good for the Government's credit, but it points out a condition that is unhealthy to say the least. That there should be over $5,000,000,000 lying idle in the United States, which fear prevents being invested in the ordinary channels of business and investment, and at the same time those who wish to borrow should be compelled to pay as high as 13 per cent interest for the use of money because of this fear, represents a condition that needs correcting—but one which can only be corrected by restoring confidence to the one having money to invest.

"How's Business?"—

Is it improving, are conditions worse, or is it "holding its own"? Reports from various sources make an answer difficult. One of the most generally accepted barometers of business trends is the retail dry goods trade, and department stores throughout the country report that sales are 9.8 per cent higher at this time than they were a year ago. But living costs are reported up 9.5 since March, 1933, which would account for a greater part of this increase. Mr. Donald Richberg thinks that the heavy industries will soon re-employ from 4,000,000 to 5,000,000 workers, but the facts are that employment has shown a downward trend since the spring of the year. Bank clearings are also reported 3.1 per cent below last year, and the sale of automobiles and trucks during October fell off from those of October, 1933. To counterbalance these reports are the better prices being received by the farmers. Answer the question for yourself!

Duty to Bear Arms Upheld.—

In deciding that "land grant" colleges may compel their students to take military training, the Supreme Court, on Monday of this week, ruled that every citizen must defend his Government. This decision settles the controversy of military training in colleges which formerly received grants of land from the Federal Government. The decision sustained the action of the University in suspending a student last year who claimed exemption from drill on religious and conscientious grounds. In delivering the opinion, which was unanimous, Justice Butler said: "Every citizen owes the duty, according to his capacity, to support and defend government against all enemies. . . There is no ground for the contention that the order requiring able-bodied male students . . . to take the prescribed instructions in military science and tactics, transgresses any constitutional right asserted by these appellants." The opinion handed down by the Supreme Court contradicts those held by many of the religious organizations of the country.

"Fit to Enjoy Prosperity."—

When there is in a man's private or business life something that is not "on the level," or not on a high level, and he determines to set it right, there is a true work of the grace of God, no matter whence the incentive has come, from Oxford Groupism, Billy Sundayism, Christian Science, conversion to Roman Catholicism, or the very normal process of becoming a member of a Congregational church—all of which at some time and in some measure, we have seen associated with that vital experience of life transformation. That does not mean that one religion, or one incentive, is as good as another, but it does mean that all really vital experience of religious quickening and ethical redemption partakes of that power of God unto salvation which is the foundation and source of the gospel. George Bernard Shaw never said a truer thing than when he wrote, some years ago, that "there is only one religion, though there are a hundred versions of it." We have been reading the testimony given at an Oxford Group meeting by a certain Major Swart, a former departmental manager of a large oil company at Cape Town. Some things that the Major said would seem to be a wholesome corrective to the rather sickly begood-and-prosper sentimentalism of certain other confessions. He suggested that prosperity was not the answer to the present depression—that men were not fit to enjoy prosperity when everywhere there was suspicion, fear, ambition and selfishness. In his own case when the challenge came he had to start first with his own home, and then with his business, getting things on a Christian basis in daily relationships. Even assuming that better social methods and a better social organization could be built up independently of basic human attitudes and relationships, we could never achieve a happy or stable society without supplanting suspicion, fear, ambition and selfishness with mutual goodwill and confidence, courage, high motives and unselfishness.—Advantage.

TVA and the Utilities.—

One of the most discussed programs of the New Deal has been that of the Tennessee Valley Authority. This pet scheme of the Administration certainly gives promise of cheaper electric power and of a saving to the consumers of that product throughout the district which it will serve. On the other hand, utility stocks are more widely held than any other class of securities. Little investors numbering millions have placed their savings here. Fifty-one legal reserve life insurance companies hold over $2-billions worth of utility securities, and savings banks would add another half-billion to this. There have two attitudes developed in regard to the government's activities among the directors of the utility companies. One group, headed by the Edison Electric Institute, is protesting this encroachment upon privately owned business by the Government. The others fear that resistance will call forth reprisals on the part of Congress, and they advocate selling out to the Government on the best terms possible and taking their loss. Speaking of the attitude taken by the Edison Electric Institute, David E. Lilienthal, director of the TVA, says: "The mask is off. The few men in New York City who . . . control the electric supply of 130,000,000 people have stepped from behind the 'widows and orphans,' . . . and are now speaking in their own behalf." Business Week replies that "His contemptuous attitude toward widows and orphans and little people who do own the utilities suggests the need of reminding Mr. Lilienthal and the public again that Wall Street does not own them. However much a destructive attack on them may irritate Wall Street, it is Main Street that really suffers from demagoguery." Dr. Hugh S. Magill, former secretary of the International Council of Religious Education, who resigned to become president of the American Federation of Utility Investors, believes that the New Deal is unjust and unfair to honest investors and a menace to the holdings of the more than ten million holders of utility securities. Dr. Magill asks, "Is it wrong to help honest people to protect their honest investments? . . . Until the advent of the Tennessee Valley Authority and other threatening New Deal proposals, these utilities were solid. No fault could be found with 90 per cent of them. They are all regulated by law, so that only a reasonable return was left to the investors who had made their development possible." It is to be noted that the life insurance companies are no longer in vesting in these securities, due, says President M. J. Cleary of the Northwestern Mutual Insurance Company, "to the threat of the government." Aside from the question of the right of the government to literally confiscate private property, is the fact that it is retarding business recovery by frightening the investor, both large and small, by the attitude it has taken on this question. Electric power is not expensive. It is very cheap, when compared to the cost of doing the things it does in the old ways. And it seems to be poor business on the part of the government to use taxpayers' money to discredit taxpayers' holdings, even though it may thereby reduce costs to others of its citizens.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

"Dost thou love life? Then do not squander time, for that is the stuff life is made of."—Benjamin Franklin.

Dr. L. E. Smith was in the SUN's office for a few minutes the past week. Mr. J. D. Kernodle of Graham, N. C. was also a visitor at the SUN's office, spending the thanksgiving season in the home of the managing editor. We were happy to have them both.

A recent line from Dr. C. H. Rowland, Florida Sanitarium, Orlando, Fla., says: "The doctor looked me over again this morning, and said I was doing as well as he could ask. I feel much improved. The folks here are so kind and considerate that I ought to get well."

Dr. and Mrs. Clarence A. Vincent commenced the season's pastorate at the Miami Shores Community Church on the first Sunday in October. A pulpit and Choir Platform, with railing and curtains has been put in. Sixteen new members were received on December 2nd. The Boy and Girl Scouts and Clubs and Sunday School are growing groups. An Endeavor Society has been organized. Dr. Vincent is preaching a series of three sermons: Dec. 2nd, "Inspiring Yesterdays"; Dec. 9th, "Critical Todays"; Dec. 16th, "Confident Tomorrows." Other improvements in auditorium are in mind.

The SUN's editor was assailed by a rather uncomfortable attack of the "grippe" a few days since, and while he is improved he does not feel that he can write an editorial equal to the two he submits from other pens—one, "Christmas and the Christian," from the editor of the Missionary Review of the World; the other, "Religion—Its Main Job," from the editor of the December Harper's Magazine. These make better reading than the SUN's editor could give even if well, and will certainly bring refreshing thoughts to others while he is regaining his poise from the unexpected assault.

Miss M. Alice True, a former missionary to Japan and now at home, 54 Cabot St., Portsmouth, New Hampshire, writes some interesting New England church news: "Emery's Bridge Christian Church, South Berwick, Me., celebrated its 100th anniversary Saturday evening, November 24th, with a capacity crowd—250 to 300 were the estimates of those present. The parsonage is renovated, and after thirty years of supplies or of inaction, the manse is again occupied. This church, Saturday, December 1st, entertains the Young People's Quarterly of York and Cumberland Conference. Groups from South Berwick, Hill, Laconia and Newton have charge of the program. Rev. Salleburg of South Brooklyn, N. Y. comes to Portsmouth, New Hampshire as pastor at Christmas time."

The editor learns with a sense of deep sorrow of the death of Lee Pretlow Holland, Suffolk, Va. When Pretlow was a youth and a student at Elon College, he boarded in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Atkinson at Elon and an admiration and a friendship were formed that lasted through life. In his going our home feels a sense of loss. The Virginian-Pilot, November 28th, carries the following: "Suffolk, Nov. 27.—Lee Pretlow Holland, 49, prominent Suffolk attorney, died at 11:15 o'clock tonight after a brief illness. He was the son of Col. E. E. Holland and the late Mrs. Otelia Lee Holland, and is survived by his father; one sister, Mrs. Gerald Creekmore, of New Orleans; a niece, Miss Sarah Lee Creekmore; a nephew, Gerald Creekmore, Jr., and a number of cousins living in Suffolk, Nansemond County and Norfolk. Mr. Holland, a graduate of Washington and Lee University, was associated in the practice of law with his father."

Rev. Alfred W. Hurst, pastor, Pilgrim Congregational Church, Chattanooga, Tenn., is rejoicing that Dr. Albert W. Palmer, president of the Chicago Theological Seminary, will preach in his church, December 2nd, celebrating the 20th anniversary of its founding. Of the man and the event, Brother Hurst sends us the following information: "The Rev. Albert W. Palmer, D. D., president of the Chicago Theological seminary will preach the anniversary sermon Sunday morning, December 2nd, when Pilgrim Congregational church will celebrate the twentieth anniversary of its founding. During Dr. Palmer's stay in the city he has consented to speak again Sunday evening at Pilgrim church. He will also address the Chattanooga Pastors' association Monday morning, December 3rd, and will speak Monday afternoon to members of Pilgrim guild. Other features of the anniversary program will be a reception in honor of charter members of the church Friday evening, November 30th, and a pageant to be given in the church Saturday evening, December 1st. The public is invited to all anniversary programs."

From the Winchester Evening Star, we learn that our Winchester and Timber Ridge churches are very happy in securing a pastor. Of the pastor and his wife, the Star, under date of November 26, says: "Unanimous calls were voted yesterday by the Congregational-Christian churches of Winchester and Timber Ridge, Hampshire county, W. Va., to the Rev. Ivan Smith, of Abingdon, Ill., to become pastor of those churches and he has indicated his intention of accepting the same and beginning his work here before the Christmas holidays. The Rev. and Mrs. Smith and the former's mother, who have been spending a week in Winchester and on Timber Ridge, left this morning for Illinois, the clergyman intending to arrange for the transfer immediately. He preached Sunday morning at the Timber Ridge church and at the Winchester church last evening. The two churches, which in recent months have been consolidated into one pastorate, have been without a pastor since the Rev. A. R. Van Cleave resigned last summer to return to college work in Alabama. The Rev. and Mrs. Smith and the former's mother have met many members and friends of the Congregational-Christian Church within the past week and already formed a number of friendships here. The Rev. Mr. Smith is a native of Jacksonville, Ill., and is a graduate of Eureka College, Eureka, Ill., and also of the Chicago Theological Seminary. He received his master of arts degree at the University of Chicago in 1929. He was ordained in 1932. The Rev. Mr. Smith married Miss Edith A. Strandberg, of Jacksonville, Ill., July 20, 1922. She is an experienced Sunday school teacher and actively interested in all other branches of church work. She studied piano at McMurray College in Jacksonville and at Eureka College, and is an efficient pianist and sings in the choir. She has gone along with her husband as a constant and cheerful helpmate and pastor's wife."

SOUTHERN UNION AT WADLEY.

Early in June, 1934, President Frank E. Jenkins of Southern Union College, valiant fighter for forty years for an opportunity for education for young people of the South, passed on to his reward. He died working for his wards. He said that he wished to live until every one of them had his turn. He preferred to be laid away in their country.

For three difficult years he raised the standards, added to the equipment and beautified the campus of Southern Union College. He was approaching an age of eighty years of zealous living. Two months before he died, he emphatically and eloquently recommended for the presidency of the college at Wadley, a man thirty years old, Ross Ensminger, then pastor of a Congregational church in Minnesota. His nomination was unanimously confirmed and we now introduce to you President Ross Ensminger of Southern Union College. Born in June, 1904, at Winter Park, Fla., where his father was a professor in Rollins College, the young man in good time attended Piedmont College, Georgia, where later his mother was professor for eight years, and Carleton College in Minnesota from which he graduated in 1925. His mother is now teaching in the college at Wadley.

At Carleton he met Margaret Goodhue, granddaughter of Horace Goodhue, a graduate of Dartmouth College. Young Mr. Goodhue was sent from the East to Minnesota to help start Carleton College, and was for many years professor and Dean there. His granddaughter, Miss Goodhue, became Mrs. Ensminger and is a gracious and able co-worker at Wadley. The Ensmingers have two little girls, Ruth Mary and Kathryn Ann.

Professor Ensminger attended the Divinity School of Yale University one year and graduated from Union Theological Seminary in New York in 1928. For two years he was associate Professor of Religious Education in Elon College, North Carolina. While there he was probably the first man to be ordained by a joint ecclesiastical council on Congregational and Christian Churches. Dr. Ozora Davis preached the ordination service. Before assuming the Minnesota charge he was minister at La Moille, Illinois, while taking two years of study at the graduate school of the University of Chicago.

President Ensminger advocated for use at Wadley the new educational plan of our junior college, which is a modification of the junior college plan of the University of Chicago. A promising lot of hard-working students is now diligently studying at Wadley.

We are proud of our President and of our Plan and wish to commend both to you.

Yours for an educational opportunity for our young people of the Alabama hill country.

Wadley and President of

PLEASANT HILL COMMUNITY CHURCH.

Pleasant Hill, Tennessee.

Thousands of American children have no chance at even an elementary education.

In hundreds of communities in the southern mountains children of America's frontiersmen are living in privation and want. Undernourishment and sickness are rife. Very many are even denied their one opportunity, attendance at the one-room mountain school, because they have not clothes to wear. I do not mean such clothes as you are used to seeing on school children; I mean overalls and two shirts for a boy and two simple dresses for a girl. Of thirty-five children in one mountain school only two had shoes.

The Save the Children Fund of America is doing a thorough-going work of child welfare in a number of mountain areas. Just now the workers are almost heartbroken because they do not have clothes with which to keep children in school. Three dollars will furnish a complete ket of clothes for a boy or girl—underclothes; simple dresses and sweater, or overalls, shirts, and jumper; coat; and shoes. Or used clothing will be gladly received. Almost anything sturdy can be used. It will be remodeled if necessary by sewing groups directed by the workers.

Surely every family that reads this has two or three used garments or some outgrown shoes that could be spared. A club, class, or other group can easily get together a shipment that may mean keeping a whole school going. Even one garment will be welcome. Please send direct to Save the Children Fund Distributing Center, Sneedville, Tenn. Express or freight Sneedville via Tazewell or Rogersville, Tenn.

School books are almost as badly needed. So are hot school lunches, cod liver oil, child health clinics, recreation material, toys and games, traveling libraries. Supplying any of these things for one little mountain community would make a fine project for a group. If you are interested please write for definite information to Save the Children Fund, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y. Checks also may be sent to the above address.

Very truly yours,

EDWIN E. WHITE, Minister.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

CHRISTMAS AND THE CHRISTIAN.

Can a Christian be uncooperative in Christian missionary work? That many who profess to be Christians are not missionary minded is self-evident. They do not even claim to be interested. The same anomaly applies to Christmas. Many who celebrate the coming of Christ into the world seem to have no real interest in the work He came to do. They join in the annual celebration but that is all. This is true in lands where Christ is generally known and widely acknowledged, as well as in non-Christian lands. In India, China, and Japan, and even among Moslems, one sees Christmas decorations and festivals and the exchange of gifts. But the promotion of the Christmas spirit is too often for social and commercial reasons and is not based on any desire to commemorate the birth of Jesus Christ. Nevertheless the prevailing spirit of joy, of unselfish thought of others, and a desire to spread peace and goodwill among men of all ages and classes and races, is something to be fostered and promoted even though it fails to express the heart of the Christmas message. "God is love . . . if we love one another, God dwells in us and His love is perfected in us."

But the meaning of Christmas and the heart of the Christmas message is not revealed in the spirit of friendly joy and good fellowship, nor in the giving and receiving of presents that bring pleasure to the recipient and profit to the tradesman. The heart of the Christmas message is the "Good News" that Jesus Christ brought when He came into the world over nineteen hundred years ago.

How then can any one truly celebrate Christmas and at the same time fail to be vitally interested in Christian missions? We enjoy Christmas music; we give Christmas presents; we join in Christmas festivals and listen to Christmas messages—but what are we doing to complete the work which Christ Jesus came to do and which He has entrusted to those who believe in Him?

Jesus himself proclaimed that He "came into the world to save sinners." History makes clear that men of all nations have made shipwreck of their lives. They have broken God's laws and as a result their lives have been destined for the scrap heap. They are like automobiles that have failed to fulfill the purpose of the Maker so that they need to be remade—to be saved—if they are again to function properly.

All that Jesus did on earth was done for the purpose of "saving the lost"; men who had lost the way in the world; had lost their contact with God; had lost their power and purpose. To seek and to save men Jesus Christ came to reveal God to men—in the fulness of His love and power. He came to redeem men who were slaves of sin and under penalty for broken laws. He came to show what men are intended to be and may become in the purpose of God. He came to make clear that life on earth is but the threshold of a larger life, the school in which to prepare us for eternal life with God.

Jesus came to bring joy to men, but it is the joy that follows release from bondage, the experience of full fellowship with one another and harmony with God. Jesus Christ completed His work—the work of revelation and redemption—but He left His followers to complete the work of making known the "Good News" to others.

Nineteen hundred years ago He commissioned us to carry the Christmas message, the Gospel by word and life, into all the world; and yet today at least two-thirds of mankind have no clear knowledge of this Gospel. Too often the deeds of professing Christians have shouted so loud that the world cannot hear what our lips testify of Christ. While the Christmas spirit of giving and love is expressed by gifts and songs, does not the anti-Christmas spirit prevail through the year—the spirit of selfish getting and indifference to the temporal and eternal welfare of our fellowmen and women?

Christmas celebrations are a mockery unless they are dominated by the spirit of Christ. This spirit of One who gave Himself is best expressed by giving ourselves to His service for the redemption of our fellow men, to carry out the purpose and program of Christ. Can any one be a true Christian and be lacking in missionary mindedness? Those who would truly celebrate Christmas and show the Christmas spirit will feel no indifference to the needs of men and progress of Christian missions. "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus," who, "being rich, for our sakes became poor that we through His poverty might become rich." Editorial in Missionary Review.

"RELIGION ITS MAIN JOB."

Many people think religion could do much more for our troubled world than it is doing if it were better understood and better handled. This view is not confined to lay observers but is shared heartily by many ministers of various denominations.

In Germany, the newspapers report that the Nazi Primate of the German Protestant Church, Bishop Ludwig Mueller, wants in Germany a single Church embracing both Protestants and Catholics. "What we want," he says, "is a German state free from Rome. The goal for which we are striving is one state, one people, one church."

Officers of the American churches have no aspirations so compelling as that They do not want a national church. The churches here get along together very well; none of them wants to destroy the other. They simply feel that the one great remedy for our troubles is to christianize our people, our policies.

That is, of course, the natural aim of Christian churches—what they are for, what they are all about; but their guardians do not feel that they are doing enough about it. They want better methods, more zeal, more effort. The Presbyterian pastors of New York resolved unitedly on October 1st to go in for a spiritual crusade through November which, as seen by one speaker, would "shake New York for God." The expression is a little ambiguous because of our very limited acquaintance with the Almighty and his expectations, but at least it means that the speaker hoped that the efforts of his brethren would wake up things on the spiritual side. Thirty-seven thousand communicants of the sixty churches in the Presbytery of New York are to be asked to sign a pledge against war, to seek the friendship of persons of other races, and to pray and read the Bible systematically.

That is all good. There was a suggestion that the Presbytery should "line up with the League for Decency" in which the Roman Catholic Church has been so active; but the suggestion was sidetracked for the sake of concentration on what they called the six points in the "covenant of reconsecration."

It might be said of this Presbytery effort in New York that even if it succeeded and waked up thirty-seven thousand Presbyterian communicants, that would only be a drop in the bucket; but it would make quite a splash, and it is by drops that the bucket has to be filled. More prayer, more Bible reading are both excellent suggestions. Prayer represents one of the most powerful agencies that can be operated by human beings. It needs to be far better understood—what it is, what it does, what it might do. Even imperfectly used, it is a great stabilizer of the spirit. It is not used as much in families as it was two or three generations ago. The speed of life has increased so much that family prayers do not fit easily into modern conditions. Prayer to be much worth calls for meditation. There may be meditation still in the rural districts, but town life does not visibly make for it.

As for the Bible, it still has an enormous circulation, still is the best seller of all books printed. It is translated into most of the known languages, but apparently it is not read as much as it used to be. Other reading has multiplied enormously; cheap reading abounds, much of it cheap in all senses of the word. Newspapers, of course, circulate vastly, and they are a necessary ingredient of our life. There is, however, a lot of news in the Bible, and the more one knows about that depositary the more news he gets out of it. It has survived extraordinary misuse; misunderstanding of it has been at the bottom of appalling cruelties and repressions, but it is immensely hardy, and so far as distribution goes it goes stronger than ever.—Editorial in Harper's Monthly Magazine.

O Lord, our failures we deplore

And seek Thy all sufficient grace,
That envious feelings may no more

Have in these hearts of ours a place;
May we through all life's storm and stress
The mind which was in Christ possess.

Canadian Baptist.

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST.

Does Premillennial View Cut the Nerve of Missions?

By REV. HENRY W. FROST, D. D.,
Princeton, N. J.

It is not the man who determines his objective; the objective determines the man. Objectives are fixed; it is the man who changes. Hence, as a man thinketh, so he is; and, we may add—since a man thinks as he sees—as a man seeth, so he is. Let a man see small and he is small; let him see large and he is large. Let him see near and he lives near; let him see far and he lives far. Let him see earth and he is earthy; let him see heaven and he is heavenly. Objectives are formative in their influence, transforming the watcher for woe or weal. Objectives, therefore, are producers of character, of whatever sort it is. Certain men of old discovered that certain other men were Christ-like. Their explanation was that they had been with Jesus and seeing Him had become like Him.

God recognized this principle in Old Testament times. It was not enough for Him to create Adam and Eve; in addition, He gave them an environment of "all things fair and beautiful." It was not enough to give them to see growing herbage of tender green and fruits and flowers; He gave them also the vision of the Lord God, who walked with them in the cool of the evening of every day. And thus, long later, He revealed Himself to Abraham, Moses, Isaiah, and many others as the "Vision Beatific," the sight of whose person could lift the low to the high, the little to the great, the self-centered to the altruistic.

It was this same principle of transformation by objective which was so powerfully operative in New Testament times. Take, for instance, the man Saul, who became Paul: spiritually speaking, what a small-minded and small-souled man he was as he went on his way to Damascus. Of course, he thought he was large and great, with letters in his saddle-bag from the influential Sanhedrin and with the mighty purpose in his breast of haling men and women and committing them to prison. But God suddenly gave him to see himself as he was by showing him Jesus as He was, and from that moment Paul was transformed from the paltry persecutor of Christians into the great apostle to the Gentiles.

Or take, for instance, John, the apostle who had seen Jesus on earth but had never seen Him in His heavenly state. He was, consequently, an incomplete and unperfected man, but, as he saw Christ exalted and enthroned, he fell at His feet as dead and immediately became God's mightiest seer and prophet. These were transformations by objective, Paul and John and many another New Testament saint being utterly and forever altered in character and purpose by looking upon Him whom to see is life indeed.

It was in expression of this principle of transformation by objective that God set before Israel in Old Testament times the promise of a coming Messiah. From the garden of Eden, when the seed of the woman was predicted to the Bethlehem manger, when that seed was brought into life and light, God, by all the enticements that He could devise, sought to make men look up and on to the coming of Him who should be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father and The Prince of Peace. It was this objective which made Israel to differ from the nations about her and enabled her to become a separated, holy and mighty nation. That statement concerning Moses in Egypt, "He endured as seeing Him who is invisible," in symptomatic, being the explanation of the miraculous fact that Israel had never been assimilated or annihilated.

Now, it is to be noted that what God did for Israel, He has done for the Church. For He has set before His present people, a new and great objective that He may lure them by sight of the coming King and kingdom, to noble purpose and splendid action. He has been frank to tell them that hard tasks are required. But he has incited them to undertake and accomplish these by the very splendor of the ultimate view. As to the outcome, think of these statements of the apostle Paul:

"Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world? . . . Know ye not that we shall judge angels?"

And think of that other statement made by the apostle John:

"I saw thrones and they sat upon them and judgment was given unto them . . . and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years."

Such visions of power and glory are almost overwhelming! And yet God gives them to us. Moreover and above all, He grants us to foresee the future, infinite exaltation of Christ as King of kings and Lord of lords. And all this is to constrain us to gaze upon the glory that excelleth in order that we may pass from glory unto glory. Israel had a great vision set before her, a babe, a man, a cross, an atoning death, a resurrection and an ascension. Powerful was the influence of this sight upon those who had eyes to see. But God has placed before us "the vision magnificent," a coming, a throne, a crown, a scepter, a King a kingdom; and he bids us visualize these things that something of their lustre and power may fall upon us.

The writer of these lines believes in the premillennial second coming of Christ. But he would not say that the premillennialists are the only Christians who have an inspirational objective before them. The postmillennialist looks for the personal return of Christ and for a kingdom which, through Gospel preaching, will be established on the earth. And the amillennialists look for a personal return of Christ and a kingdom which will be realized in heaven through the eternal ages. By the token of sanctified lives, all the world knows that hundreds of saints, as they have looked upon the face of their Lord, have been irradiated by the light that comes from his person. Moreover, men recognize the fact that this light, in the persons of these saints, has been shed abroad into most of the dark places of the earth, until tens of thousands of those who were dwelling in midnight gloom have come to know that the splendor of God's sunrising has shone even upon them. So then, it is our conviction that true Christians who look by faith upon the glory of the Lord are, each in his own measure, transformed both in life and service.

But the writer cannot leave the subject just here, for his experiences have been too deep and long to allow him to pass lightly over the value of premillennial truth, and this as related to missions. I well remember the day in Attica, New York, when Dr. William J. Eardman expounded to me the meaning of Nebuchadnezzar's dream as recorded in the second chapter of Daniel. I was a young man then—it was forty-nine years ago—and filled with earthly ambitions, to be rich, to excel in music, and to make my name known as a writer, with little thought of saving souls of men at home or abroad. But the good Doctor showed me that God's objective in the present age was that of making the Stone smite the image of the nations until it should become a great mountain, filling the whole earth. This, my friend said, pointed to the coming of Christ, the subduing of His enemies, and the setting up on earth of His universal kingdom. That was premillennial teaching, and it then and there changed the whole current of my life, for I saw that riches, music, literature and other things were desirable, but very secondary, and that the one great objective in life was to prepare the way for the coming of the King. The result was that I gave my life to missions, and to foreign missions, that I might do my small part in gathering out God's elect against the day of Christ's return. Since then I have become acquainted with hundreds of great and good men in England, America and other lands, who have gone through a somewhat similar experience and have confessed that the dedication of their lives to the cause of Christian missions, at home or abroad, was largely brought to pass by the acceptance of premillennial truth.

Indeed, I have reason to believe that literally thousands of men and women have gone forth into the darkest and hardest places of the earth, constrained by the hope of hastening the coming of the Lord. Mr. Hudson Taylor once told me that the premillennial view was the inspiration of his life and had been the chief incitement that had taken him to China and had led him to form the China Inland Mission. Most of his followers have been like their leader, for the large majority of the over one thousand missionaries connected with the Mission are in China today largely because they are looking and waiting for the advent of the Christ.

While premillennialists would not compare themselves with others, and would not criticize those who differ from them in respect to prophetic truth, they harbor the conviction that premillennial views have given them certain important and precious outlooks. I have no right to speak for others in this particular, and yet I may venture to classify their thoughts somewhat as follows: First, this doctrine has made Christ nearer and dearer to them, and His promised coming more realized and desired; second, it has given to them a sense of spiritual proportions which they might not otherwise have had, wherein the things which are seen are temporal, and the things which are not seen are eternal; third, it has developed within them the consciousness that there is only one thing really worth living for, namely, the gathering out, the world over, of the elect of God, in order that the way of the Lord may be prepared; fourth, it has formed within them the conviction that the only hope of the Church in her pathetic weakness, and of the nations in their pitiable distress, is in the coming of the King, the establishment of His visible kingdom, and the dispensing of law and justice such as no king, queen, president or judge has ever been able to bring to pass; and lastly, it has given them a desire, and with some a veritable passion of longing, to see the wrong that was done to Jesus Christ when He was here on earth, wholly and forever righted, and this in the very places where He was defamed and dishonored, which is His most just due. This, as a total, is the great objective which premillennialists believe God has placed upon them, and they find it uplifting and transforming in all the various walks of life. It is this objective that lures them onward and outward as evangelists of the King and the kingdom, for in thus doing they seek to "occupy" till Christ shall come.

With such facts before us, and with the added fact that it is indisputable that a large part of the peoples of the earth has been evangelized by those who believe in the premillennial return of Christ, it seems almost puerile to ask, "Does the premillennial view cut the nerve of missions?" Manifestly, it never has; and if those who have as their objective the glorious and impending appearing of Christ will continue to walk with Him who, in promising to come again, commanded that His gospel should be preached to every creature, it never will.—Missionary Review of the World.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Mr. Lee Pretlow Holland, son of Col. E. E. Holland and the late Mrs. Otelia Lee Holland, was born in Nansemond County, Virginia, September 2, 1885, and died in Suffolk, Virginia, November 27, 1934, at the age of 49 years 2 months and 25 days. He was a life long resident of Suffolk. He united with the Suffolk Christian Church when a youth. For several years he served as teacher in the Sunday School. In this capacity he impressed a number of young people by his intellectual ability and spiritual personality.

He was educated in Suffolk High School, Elon College, and graduated with honors in Washington and Lee University. After graduation from the University he returned to Suffolk and took up the practice of law as a partner with his father. He served in the A. E. F. during the World War. He was elected Commander of the Suffolk Post of the American Legion.

From his youth he suffered from asthma. At times these attacks were severe. At his best he was handicapped by this affliction. This disease prevented him from undertaking many tasks for which he was fitted by natural ability and scholastic training. About the first of this year, he went to Lombard Sanitarium, Lombard, Illinois, in search of health. He remained in that institution until about the first of July, when he went to the mountains of the western part of Virginia. He returned to Suffolk about October the first, apparently improved. But an attack of "Flu" three weeks ago aggravated his affliction of long standing. He sought relief in Lakeview Hospital, but medical skill and failing health could not stay the hand of the last enemy.

The funeral service was conducted on Thanksgiving Day at 3:00 P. M., in the Suffolk Christian Church, Dr. John G. Truitt, Pastor, officiating, assisted by Rev. Herbert N. Tucker of the Episcopal Church. Despite the rain a large company of relatives and friends gathered to pay tribute to the life and memory of this popular citizen. He is survived by his father, a prominent churchman, banker and attorney of this city, one sister, Mrs. Bessie Holland Creekmore of New Orleans, La., and a large number of other relatives and friends. It was a sad Thanksgiving Day for this family, the relatives and friends.

However, in a time like this, one may give thanks to God. The memory of his grace and charm is a rich heritage. He lived in a world of literary excellence, and spent much of his spare time reading the productions of the great writers. He appreciated the beautiful in literature, in art and in nature. His soul was sensitive to the finer things in life and character. He was especially fond of flowers. He knew them by name. He walked among them in the garden, and quickened his spirit by their beauty and fragrance. He sent them to sick rooms in home and hospital. He appreciated the good and the beautiful in human life. He found much joy in trying to make the dark day brighter for others by scattering the flowers and radiating the sunshine of good cheer. Quietly and cheerfully he lifted the load from many aching hearts and lonely lives.

After all much depends upon the viewpoint one takes of life. One may go into a flower garden and see the dull and the drab of cold, gray earth, and one may be blind to the glory of unfolding beauty. For gray earth and sweet flowers are in the garden. Flowers thrive best in unsightly soil. Plain, drab dirt does not stir the imagination. The day is cold and dark and dreary; the rose bushes have dropped their leaves; flower bulbs are sleeping in the earth; one must look to the spring to know what the garden will be. Faith stands in a dreary garden, on a winter day, and sees beauty and fragrance as a promise of tomorrow. Faith knows what a garden may become. Faith knows, also, what life can become. The hope of the resurrection plants eternal flowers of God's spring upon the cold grave, giving joy to human hearts, and comfort in human sorrow.

THE ALUMNI.

As sons and daughters, we represent our homes. We are the products of their environment and teachings. Some of us are credits to our parents; others bring reproach. The same thing is true of an educational institution. As young men and women enroll, they become definitely a part of the institution. The institution is theirs, and they belong to the institution. If they leave the campus to enter into the responsibilities of life, in a very definite way they are the products of the school itself. In their conduct, they reflect either credit or discredit upon the institution and its ideals.

The strength or weakness of a college is determined more or less by the alumni. If the college is strong, it represents a positive asset in the lives of those who look to it as their Alma Mater. If the college is weak, lacking in prestige and influence, instead of a help it becomes somewhat of a hindrance to all who have been trained on its campus. Every true alumnus is interested in his college during his academic days, but his interest becomes more intense with his days of preparation behind him and when he is at grips with the realities of life.

Elon College has had the privileges of enrolling as students during its forty-five years of existence more than ten thousand ambitious young men and young women. More than one thousand of these have received their diplomas, but all have been students. This is a mighty army, capable of fighting a winning battle for Alma Mater. If we, individually and collectively, could be aroused to the full measure of our privileges, we could complete gloriously the transformation that is now taking place on the Elon College campus. There is a spirit of cooperation between faculty and students and an earnestness on the part of all—seldom experienced on a college campus—now at work in our midst. This interest and enthusiasm cannot be confined to the campus. Already it is beginning to sweep out and affect the attitude of others.

The alumni are being aroused. Association units are being formed in different sections. For a number of years, we have had one Association unit, and only one. The Eastern Virginia alumni have a large and effective organization, and they meet annually for an inspiring program. Recently, under the influence and the enthusiasm of Mr. M. L. Patrick, president of the general Association, units have been organized at High Point, Winston-Salem, and Sanford. Friday, December 7th, a unit will be organized in Charlotte, N. C.; and another will be organized in Greensboro, N.

C. on Tuesday, December 11th. The officers of the general Association plan to continue this program of organization until there is a unit organized in every city, town, and county within the state of North Carolina. I am sure that all who are interested in the college will lend whatever assistance they can when a unit is organized in their vicinity.

This year, we are having a mid-year meeting of the general Association at the college Saturday, February 16th. It is hoped that we may have a large attendance for this meeting. The purpose of the mid-year meeting is to rally the strength of every alumnus in behalf of the college. We need the help of all that our student body may be increased, that our resources may multiply, and that the college itself may be greatly improved and made more effective.

The present administration greatly appreciates this unusual activity on the part of a group of interested alumni.

AFTER ELEVEN YEARS.

The first Sunday in November, 1934, we closed our eleventh year as pastor of Bethel Christian Church. I don't think we have ever closed a year's work here with a better or finer spirit than was manifested at the close of this year. The church building had just been painted both inside and out. The people seemed to be happy that they had had an opportunity to show their appreciation for a house of worship in this way.

As we went to our car to leave we found that it had been loaded with many good things to eat. We were so gladly surprised that we hardly knew what to say. It made us realize that these good people had not only thought of and cared for their church but had remembered their humble pastor as well.

These are a mighty fine people to serve, and we pray that God may give them many good things as they go forward in His work. We are beginning our twelfth year as the third pastor of the church. We are hoping and praying that this may be our best year yet.

The two preceding pastors were Rev. T. W. Stroud and Rev. J. S. Carden. The church has been established forty years or more.

HOPEWELL ITEMS.

Preparations are in progress for an attractive Christmas entertainment to be held Friday night before Christmas by the Sunday School of Hopewell church. Miss Dorothy Kirby, Mrs. George Robertson, Miss Thelma Elliott, Miss Cleo Watson and the Sunday School class of Mrs. Robertson have charge of the program. Mrs. Frank Lowe is superintendent of the Sunday School and reports a steady growth in attendance this fall, expecting to reach the one hundred mark by December 2nd.

At morning services Sunday, November 25th, at Hopewell church the Sunday School class of Mrs. George Robertson furnished the music. The young ladies entirely filled the choir platform and made a fine showing, about thirty in all. It was an inspiring sight and reflected much credit upon their teacher, who is a daughter of the pastor.

Wednesday night, November 28th all Protestant churches in Hopewell united in a Thanksgiving Service at West End Presbyterian church.

Rev. T. N. Lowe, pastor of the Congregational-Christian church brought the message.

THE TENNESSEE ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

The Tennessee women took a hint from the Woman's Missionary Conference preceding the Southern Convention and had the opening session of the meeting with Miss Eunice Thomas as the chief speaker. She is a missionary from China who is this year serving Pleasant Hill Academy, and finding there vital and interesting missionary work.

The Conference program was full of inspiration. President Campbell of the Seminary Foundation at Vanderbilt, preached the Conference sermon, and was chosen Moderator for next year. Dr. Beittel discussed The Totalitarian State. Mr. E. P. Pcste, a chemist and son of former President Poste of Franklinton College in North Carolina, is a leading citizen and Rotarian in Chattanooga. He spoke on Science and Revelation. Rev. A. W. Hurst spoke well on Contributions to Human Progress. Rev. A. L. DeJarnette led to a high point the thought of following practically the will of Christ rather than idly idolizing Him.

Mr. Dan Human, of Robbins, who had been ordained in another communion in the mountains, was granted licensure as a minister.

The T. V. A. territory is about the size of the State and embraces a good part of it. Prof. C. C. Haun told of the religious program in the now T. V. A. town of Norris.

A Survey of Ten Tennessee Communities was given by Rev. A. Nightingale of Crossville, who does a remarkable work at Norris and is director of the Cumberland Homesteads. The Conference gave a hearty welcome to the Rev. Hubert A. Allen, an able and experienced minister who came from Texas and is now pastor of Union, the older of our two Chattanooga churches. Rev. George L. Day had the communion service. Most of the leaders of women's societies and churches took Cent-a-Meal boxes for distribution in families.

THE ALABAMA ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

Rev. G. D. Hunt was the pastor-host in the fine Lanett Church. Delegations were present from all of the five Associations: North Alabama, East Alabama, Central Alabama, South Alabama, and West Florida. Alabama is only two generations from the time when much of it was settled; so "pioneering" was a good topic in the Associations and Conference. Home made clothes, two trips out a year for salt and provisions, long walks to isolated churches, primitive log schoolhouses, an abundance of deer, wild turkeys, and game, were recalled by many. Many talks on the application of Christianity to life were made. Rev. E. W. Butler, of Thorsby, the past State Superintendent, was greatly encouraged to hear the young pastors declare themselves on social Christianity.

Thorsby Institute was well reported and President Ross Ensminger, Dean A. R. Van Cleave, and Principal W. C. Edge of the Wadley Public School, who is President of the Board of Trustees of The Southern Union College, along with a group of the students, represented the College.

Memorial tributes were made to Drs. Bloom and Jenkins.

Important was the strong sermon preached the communion service by Dr. Dycer of Birmingham. The masterly discussion on Non-Violent Opposition to Evil by Claud Nelson, Social Secretary of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, Atlanta, was surely of lasting influence, as was also the moving lecture by Rev. Jesse H. Dollar on "The Land of Our Lord."

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE WEST FLORIDA ASSOCIATION.

Following the Oberlin Council, no Conference or Association has more dramatically faced the challenge of local organization than the West Florida Association. The Alabama-West Florida lynching had just occurred. Moderator Tillman, a distant relative of the Tillman of South Carolina, declared that a lyncher was a potential murderer. Later, in a Florida city, the seat of un-social action, he was cautioned not to talk so freely, but maintained his ground. The West Florida Association took the Christian position. A layman said that if a man's heart was right, he would not be a follower of a mob.

Dorcas Church, near Crestview, entertained the meeting.

Rev. Willie G. Miller, an organizer of churches, and minister in the Association since 1893, passed away during the year and was missed. Some of his grandchildren are active in the Dorcas Church.

UNION THANKSGIVING.

We had Union Thanksgiving service at the Holland Christian Church Wednesday night with a splendid program and a good attendance.

The Holland and South Quay Baptist churches, Holland and Holy Neck Christian churches and Friends church participated. The hostess church provided the program. The choir sang an anthem, the pastor was in charge of the services and the Rev. W. H. Corbitt of the Baptist churches delivered the sermon. Dr. N. G. Newman took an active part also in the service. An offering of about six dollars was received for local charity. The three local pastors have agreed to meet monthly for fellowship and concerted action. They meet alternately in each others homes on Monday after the Third Sunday of each month.

The Holland Christian Church is planning a White Gift Christmas service this year and the committee is already at work on the program.

REDEMPTIVE LOVE THE ONLY WAY.

An Introduction and an Apology.

By TOYOHICO KAGAWA.

I have been asked to write a preface for the Chinese edition of Love the Law of Life. It has made me very sad, for my nation is constantly breaking the Law of Love toward the Middle Kingdom. I myself love China as I love Japan. And for a long time I have been praying for the speedy coming of peace in China. It causes me intolerable shame to reflect upon the violence that Japanese militarism has done and is doing in China, in spite of all of my prayers. And I am surprised at the tolerance of the Chinese brother, who has translated my book, in spite of Japan's immoral acts. Though a million times I should ask pardon, it would not be enough to cover the sins of Japan. Therefore I have lacked the courage to write this introduction. Chinese leaders may well accuse me of impotence. I deserve the charge.

If only Japan will repent and establish permanent friendship with China. There is no other way than by the Law of Love. And not only in the relations between China and Japan, if we hope for a progressive uniting of all the cultures of the nations and races of the whole world, there is no other way than through the principle of redemptive love. The law of redemptive love is the fundamental law of the universe. Kropotkin's instinctive love is not enough. Instinctive love does not transcend race. It is the redemptive love that Christ lived and practiced that alone transcends race. This type of redemptive love must grow in us, and in cooperation with the spirit of the universe we must labor to save the unhappy peoples of the world. Since the Japanese nation was unable to sense this great redemptive love, I suffer the sorrows of the Prophet Jeremiah. Forgive us! You sons of Confucius and Motzu forgive us in the name of your great peace-loving sages! Some day the Japanese will cast away sword and gun and awaken to the love of the Cross. Just now I can think of nothing but to beseech your pardon. And there are an uncounted number of young souls in Japan who like myself are asking for pardon,—this is my message to Chinese brothers who may read this book.

DR. BREWER EDDY WRITES FROM CHINA.

TALKS THAT TOUCH YOUR HEART.

For the Board friends who have brought us to a new year without additional deficit, and who share in prospects of better things for missions as well as for America, the word of most interest from me is about our missionaries. Eighteen had to be withdrawn last spring from this group. This was the greatest tragedy that has befallen missions in China, since the Boxer riots and martyrdom. Absolutely forced by the radical drop in income at home, our missions have accepted it in wonderful courage. I have sat in intimate and affectionate conferences in many stations. If you were here, these talks would touch your heart with faith and courage from these good friends who represent us through the long hard years in this impressive work.

One group was asked to combine two stations and to carry on the two hospitals, the three schools and the many country churches in stations sixty miles apart, and yet not one gallon of gas was provided to run a car nor a dollar to meet the travel expense. But these friends were quietly planning to go back and forth, robbing their own already decreased income, suffering endless inconvenience, only anxious to keep up the morale and the courage of the Chinese workers who must now take the lead in all these institutions. Here are two hospitals without an American doctor, now under well trained Chinese who will show you at home a record of fine Christian service and increasing usefulness, worthy of your confidence.

WHAT AN OPPORTUNITY!

In this station from which I am writing, three out of seven missionaries were dropped. Important lines of service have had to be discontinued. Here are five thousand students in government and private schools of high school grade and above, without any missionary left to seize strategic contacts, discover possibilities for Bible classes, or of personal acquaintance always ending in Christian influence. This is our broadest country field in China, with work in ten counties and ten more unoccupied. It offers the greatest opportunity of success in mass education, in farmers' cooperatives, and in work through the 2600 villagers enrolled in Christian instruction. And now, it must all be covered by one missionary,—but the spirit of all these groups is wonderful. You would be proud of them if you could chat with them through the evening and visit their work and talk with the groups of Christians whom they have seen called forth by God's Spirit.

A GENERAL APPROVES.

All this is filled with the deepest Christian spirit, and is accompanied by direct evangelism in these simple but sturdy villages. You can imagine there is absolutely no opposition to work of this type. The General who gave us the feast yesterday was in warm approval of everything that can be done for these country districts. Unselfish friends in America who would study this work cannot help but agree on its vital importance and its apparent assurance of success."

MISS MARY L. McCLURE.

By MISS D. P. CUSHING, News Editor.

The wool-work department of the Fenchow Bible Training School has been developing along sound lines, so that there is now a group of students who have mastered the carding and spinning of the wool and are going eagerly on to a laboratory course in dyeing and to practice in weaving on locally made looms. It is two years now since this department was started, and Miss Mary McClure reports that it is in a lustrous condition and "bids fair to answer some of our economic conditions."

The women who come to this school represent different stations in life. One may be the wife of a business man who is away months or even years from his family, for Shansi men are the business men and bankers of China. They do not take their family where their business is but leave them home. This pupil therefore comes from a clean, harmoniously decorated home and is able to pay for her food and books, but across the mountains to Shensi, eight days by pack mule, is the home of another student hardly more than a cave with no picture on the walls except possibly the cover of a Literary Digest, the brightness of which has been cherished by the student returning to her home from Fenchow. Here life is a precarious adventure lived in the most primitive fashion. From this the woman comes to the school with its airy, sunlit rooms, its color and its wholesome diet. She finds books to read, plenty of water, and lessons in the Christian way of life. Mary McClure tells the story of one student, a widow named Ruth, with two small children. One day Miss McClure visited her room and found the six year old boy and the little year and a half sister chewing beans as hard as bullets. "I haven't had anything to give them for a couple of days but millet soup so they are having a feast on these parched beans which one of the students brought in to them," explained the little mother. Nothing but millet soup for two young healthy children, comments Miss McClure, who later managed to slip a small check into the mother's hand. In telling this story she adds, "I sometimes puzzle over the question, why, in God's good providence, 'so many of our brothers and sisters' must wait in darkness and privation until we, their Christian brethren, feel moved to share with them the Life Abundant which Christ came so long ago to bring.

A night trip over a lonely mountain pass, up narrow rock trails on pack mules and through a howling spring blizzard, added spice to a three-day journey taken by Miss McClure to attend an annual meeting of the Chinese Churches in that section. She does a great deal of rough traveling among "her people." She often takes with her an accordion which serves as a pipe organ and grand piano for many a mountain village. On one such trip she met up with Chinese bandits. In fact she went from the village near the bandit's retreat and had a conference with the bandit chieftain, arranging through bargaining, to have him change his mind about taking the village.

Mary McClure, who was born in Waltham, Mass., was sitting in her dormitory room at Oberlin College back in 1918. Outside torrents of rain poured down. Suddenly the phone rang. "This is Watts Pye speaking," said a strange voice, "and Mrs. Pye and I would like to have you come to afternoon tea." When Mary McClure left the Pyes she carried in her heart the feeling of having seen the biggest map in all the world, teeming with people needing her. Following Commencement she sailed for China under the American Board.

HOPEWELL MISSIONARY MEETING.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Hopewell, Va., has been especially active this new conference year.

Besides the interesting October meeting previously reported in THE SUN, this small Society had charge of prayer service the Wednesday night our Pastor, Rev. T. N. Lowe, was away attending conference.

They also held a public Missionary service on November 21st with splendid attendance and interesting, varied program of recitations, readings, addresses and good choruses and a guest soloist, Mrs. Chas. Melchon, choir soloist of the First Baptist Church of the town.

Mrs. J. H. Harrison, the president, was in charge and among those taking part were the Superintendent of the Sunday School, teachers of several of the S. S. classes and a member of the younger people of the church all of whom were assisted by the pastor, Rev. T. N. Lowe.

This is the fourth meeting of the Society this new conference year. The Society is growing and doing much personal work in the community.

AS OTHERS SEE US.

A vicious, disgruntled Colonel with 4,000 renegade soldiers ravaged for four months the defenseless people of villages in North China. The Government dared not take energetic measures for fear they would drive the desperado and his killing, looting henchmen into the demilitarized truce zone controlled by the Japanese and precipitate a "crisis." Eventually these brutal forces were overcome and Rev. William B. Stelle of Tungshien reports; "their Dillinger colonel escaped to Japanese territory." In a newspaper interview by a Japanese reporter on one of Japan's largest dailies, Rev. William Q. McKnight was said to have been born "in a rural community in Indiana 150 miles south of Chicago, the headquarters of gangsters." Sherwood Eddy, now in China, wrote the other day "The two countries which perhaps lead the world today in both corruption and crime are China and the United States. America has her gangsters and graft, and China has her bandits and 'squeeze'."

NO REASON FOR WHITES TO BE BLUE.

Surveys of large U. S. cities show that the amount of crime and juvenile delinquency is found, almost invariably in residence districts bordering on business sections. In Seattle they found one such center showing white on the chart where by all the rules it ought to be black. They investigated. It was the Japanese section of the city! As one Seattle citizen said gleefully, "Seattle was white where it should have been black because it was yellow." Miss Alice E. Gwinn, formerly of Kyoto, Japan, is working in this section under the Japanese church. For some time, she reports, the Japanese church and the Seattle Extension Society have supported a part-time young man worker among the young people of that section.

THE FINEST TRIBUTE OF THEM ALL.

Little Ling Mi, seven year old daughter of Principal and Mrs. Donald Hsueh of Foochow College, Foochow, China, looked earnestly at her father and then said: "Everybody says I look like you Daddy, so I must have your spirit too." The "spirit" of Donald Hsueh has been winning right along the admiration and affection of his Chinese and foreign associates as well as his students.

WHAT REPEAL HAS DONE FOR THE COUNTRY.

By REV. GEO. N. EDWARDS.

Just a year has passed since the repeal of the Prohibition Amendment which was hailed as the triumph of a "Crusade" for real temperance, for law observance, for the abolition of the bootlegger, the night club and the road house, as a measure of financial recovery, a means for decreasing crime and lawlessness.

A recent article by John Haynes Holmes of New York in the Christian Century calls attention to some of the actual results which have been quite the opposite. During the Christmas holidays that followed, Mr. Holmes reports from his own observations on the streets of New York more drunkenness seen in ten days than he had seen in ten years. Boston reported for that season a record of arrests for drunkenness that came within six of reaching the all time record for two holidays. And now a year later comes a report from Massachusetts that the chairman of the liquor law administration is shocked by the outrageous increase of drinking by women. A Back Bay hotel nearly lost its license because drunken women from the 'Cocktail Room' invaded other parts of the hotel and greatly annoyed other guests. A letter in the Boston Herald says: "I twice voted for repeal and hailed the day when it arrived. Today I find myself bitterly cheated by men who had millions to spend. If the women of America do not cease drinking, prohibition will return within three years and this time to stay."

From Chicago comes this report of the Juvenile Protective Association on conditions in a residence district which in pre-prohibition days never had a saloon, that now there are 240 post-prohibition "taverns" where liquor is sold openly to children 5 and 6 years of age, prostitutes soliciting without interference, high school boys and girls are being debauched, and closing laws ignored. F. Lauriston Bullard writes in the New York Times: "Actual students of conditions are of the opinion that repeal has so far increased drunkenness."

This is not confined to the North. A report from Atlanta says: "Drunkenness is definitely on the increase in this section of the country. Arrests for drunken driving have jumped in every large city in the past six months." If we need figures, a report for the nation at large by the Christian Science Monitor shows an increase of drunkenness for 8 months of 1934 over 1933 of 55.5 per cent in New York City, 21 per cent in Boston, 95.5 per cent in Los Angeles, 116.6 per cent in Denver, 116.8 per cent in Portland, Oregon.

At a convention of police chiefs in Washington, September 26th, the police surgeon of Hempstead, L. I., showed an increase of arrests for drunken driving of 100 per cent for Rhode Island, 122 per cent for New Orleans, 300 per cent for Philadelphia, 380 per cent for Cincinnati and 479 per cent for Los Angeles.

Mark Graves of New York State Tax Commissions, complains that the state is actually consuming 25,000,000 gallons of liquor, more than 9,000,000 gallons more than the estimate of prohibition days and paying taxes on an estimated 6,200,000 gallons only.

This indicates what is borne out by many other reports that bootlegging has increased instead of diminished. A "nationwide campaign" to eliminate bootleggers and illicit distillers, begun in Washington in April shows no signs of diminution. By July Joseph H. Choate, Jr., in charge of liquor administration, has nothing to report but alarm. In August the officials showed their failure to suppress bootlegging by a reorganization of enforcement units, and an increase of personnel from 3200 to 5000.

As for reduction of crime, 1934 promises to be the worst year for crime that America has ever known. Your own columns bear witness. There is no decrease even in kidnapping. Col. Calvin Goddard of the crime detection laboratory of Northwestern University states: "Statistics show that certain types of crime are on the increase," and predicted a new wave of major crime. "Bootleggers," he says, will continue to operate." Changes in liquor laws undoubtedly drive many criminals into new fields. Pres. Earle W. Evans, of the American Bar Association, declared lately that "crime threatens not only the prosperity and happiness of our people, but the very life of the nation itself."

If there is any respect in which legally permitting the sale of liquor has decreased the sale of it, increased the temperate use of it, diminished the illegal sale of it, decreased arrests for law violation, or improved public morals, we should be glad to hear of it.

The fact is that bootleggers and speakeasies, alcoholism, police corruption, and vice attributed to Prohibition by repealists flourished before Prohibition and are now evidently increasing since its repeal.

These are all bitter facts of society, not created by any law, but experience shows that they are aggravated by the free use of liquor. The matter is well summed up in a sentence by Dr. Holmes: "Repeal inevitably complicates the situation, and in the end defeat all constructive results by putting the law on the side of the liquor traffic. Prohibition simplifies the situation and in the end makes for progress by putting the law against the liquor traffic."

Society has the right and has long been engaged in the business of outlawing or prohibiting what it finds to be antagonistic to its welfare. "Some day if civilization survives at all, it must be learned of men that the liquor traffic like the slave traffic, the white slave traffic, the drug traffic, must be abolished altogether by due fiat of law, if its inherent evils, so fatal to the public welfare, are to be conquered."

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

A THOUGHT.

The sweetest experience that ever comes to one is to know that he or she is saved, and that God is their constant friend and helper.

Many things can be accomplished by Jesus through one who knows and understands Him. A glad handshake, a kind word, even a smile helps gladden some life and make others happy.

Would it not be a wonderful thing if each person in America might want to know Jesus and to seek Him as their personal Saviour? This is not impossible, for God stands ready at all times to enter into life's doorway. "Be still, and know that I am God." In that moment of quiet solitude there comes a still small whisper asking admittance into hearts. Will you let Him in, or let Him continue to knock at the doorway of life?

It was not the desire in the creation that man should live in an uproar or conglomeration at any time, for the angels did not speak of that but of peace—"peace on earth, goodwill toward men." Let us for a few moments stop in the midst of the busy cares of life and experience a few moments with the Master.

One may say, into my life there comes doubt, disappointment, and heartaches, but there is one who yearns to be helpful, to help clear away these. That is Jesus, if you will only let Him have His way with you.

"And Jesus went about all of the cities and villages teaching in the synagogues, preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing every sickness and every disease among the people." "But when He saw the multitudes, He was moved with compassion on them because they fainted and were scattered as sheep having no shepherd."

That is what Jesus wants to be—your shepherd to look after you as the shepherd would look after the sheep.

"I heard the voice of Jesus say,
'Come unto me and rest;
Lay down, thou weary one, lay down
Thy head upon my breast.
Behold! I freely give
The living water! thirsty one,
Stoop down and drink, and live.
I am this dark world's light;
Look unto me, thy morn shall rise,
And all thy day be bright.'

"I came to Jesus as I was,
Weary and worn and sad; ;
I found in Him a resting place,
And He has made me glad.

"I came to Jesus, and I drank
Of that life-giving stream;
My thirst was quenched, my soul revived,
And now I live in Him.

"I looked to Jesus, and I found
In Him my star, my sun;
And in that light of life I'll walk
'Till traveling days are done.'

THE GOLDEN TIE THAT BINDS.

At Christmas time we send, and receive, packages tied with golden cord. Perhaps that does not increase the value of the contents, but we like it better.

Alpine mountain climbers tie themselves together with a cord so that if one stumbles the others, including the experienced guide, can hold him and restore him to safe footing.

As we gather about the Communion Table there is a golden cord that binds us to those who sat about the table nineteen centuries ago. One strand of this cord is memory. We can forget the present, leap the centuries, and live with Jesus and his beloved on that eventful night. Memory is a marvelous thing. With it we remember and appreciate many kindnesses that have come to us from numerous friends. It binds us to those who built our churches and gave us our homes. It permits us to walk with kings and listen to prophets. It bridges the chasm of time and ties us to the past. Jesus knew of this golden cord when He said, "This do in remembrance of me."

Another strand of this golden cord is kindredness of spirit—like interests. We may remember the past, but unless we are interested in the events the memory means but little. One might stand by the table where Jesus ate and drank, but unless one could feel something of what was in the heart of the Master, one would not like to be there. It might even be torture. It seems to have been for Judas, for he went out into the night rather than remain. But when we have a kindred spirit, we like to linger and listen. Young people understand this. There are some whom we do not like to leave. We are interested in the same things. Spirits seem to blend into each other, and happiness comes from being in the presence of the beloved. Church people understand this, for sometimes they like to stand around after church and stay in the presence of their friends who have spiritual interests.

The third strand of this golden cord is love. It was love that bound the disciples to Jesus, and it was love that bound Jesus to God. And God is love. It is love, living, active love, that reaches out like invisible hands and draws us into the heart of Divine Love. It is love that binds the hearts of people with a cord that is more enduring than life and stronger than death. It is healing, purifying, helping love that binds into one fellowship all the Christians of the earth. It is love that leaps the centuries and binds us to Jesus and his followers of nineteen centuries ago. It is love that girdles the globe and binds into one eternal brotherhood all the nations of the earth. It was love that came to earth in a manger one Christmas night. It is love that makes us all suffer when one suffers. Love is the strongest strand of the golden cord that binds all human hearts together and fastens them to the heart of God.

It was about this golden cord that John Faucett, a young English minister wrote, when he refused to accept a call to a larger parish in the city and remained with his little flock in the countryside. He had started to move, but the people of his parish traveled with him for a while and continued to plead with him to return. The night of his return he wrote:

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love;
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above.

"Before our Father's throne,
We pour our ardent prayers;
Our fears, our hopes, our aims are one,
Our comforts and our cares.

"We share our mutual woes,
Our mutual burdens bear;
And often for each other flows
The sympathizing tear.

"When we asunder part,
It gives us inward pain;
But we shall still be joined in heart,
And hope to meet again."

WHAT MISSIONARY OPPORTUNITIES EXIST WITHIN TEN MILES OF OUR CHURCH?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR DEC. 16, 1934.
Matt. 9:35-38.

Worship.

I Corinthians 13, is a fitting chapter for devotional reading in this meeting.

"Help Somebody Today," "Somebody Did A Golden Deed," "Where Cross the Crowded Ways of Life," "O Master Let Me Walk With Thee," "My Task," "An Evening Prayer" are all hymns from which you may select the ones with a special message for your group. A short period of silence may be the best preparation for real Christian Christmas living in the midst of the opportunities which you discover. The poem following may be read as a clue to show how one may be a true missionary, by sharing God's gifts with those in need.

My Gift.

"If I have strength, I owe the service of the strong;
If melody I have, I owe the world a song.
If I can stand when all around my post are falling;
If I can run with speed when needy hearts are calling;
And if my torch can light the dark of any night
Then I must pay the debt I owe with living light.
If Heaven's grace has dowered me with some rarer gifts
If I can lift some load no other's strength can lift,
If I can heal some wound no other hand can heal;
If some great truth the speaking skies to me reveal.
Then I must go, a broken, wounded thing,
If to a wounded world my gifts no healing bring.
For my gift God gives to me I cannot pay;
Gifts are most mine when I give them all away,
God's gifts are like His flowers which show their right to stay
By giving all their blooms and fragrance free away.
Riches are not in gold or land, estates or marts;
The only wealth worth having is found in human hearts." —Selected.

For The Leader.

What missionary work can be done within ten miles of our church? The first thing to do is to survey these ten miles. Every neighborhood is different; every church has its own needs and problems which the young people can help to solve. Let us ask ourselves:

1. How many children in our neighborhood go to Sunday School? If there are not enough Sunday Schools available for all, how can we best start one?

2. Have the young "gangs" on our streets any place to play under proper supervision?

3. How many young people are eligible to come to our Christian Endeavor meetings? How many of these do come? What can we do to make our meetings more interesting so that people will want to come?

4. How many people in our neighborhood have no church service to which to go? What can we do about it?

5. Have I ever personally won anyone to Jesus?

6. Are there any institutions located within ten miles of your church where you may make some contribution in material gifts, or good cheer and encouragement? (County Homes, Children's Home, a Jail, or Infirmary.)

7. Are there people in need of friendship or help within ten miles of your church? (Visit those in charge of relief work. Learn the real conditions in your neighborhood. Study the housing situation. Report real life incidents and talk about what you can do to help.)

Most of the discussion of this meeting should center about reports which are brought in to give answers to questions above. You may be able to secure some added information from visitors, such as welfare workers, etc.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

THE CHRISTIAN AS TEACHER.

LESSON X—DECEMBER 9, 1934.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth."—2 Tim. 2:15.

LESSON TEXT: Mat. 7:24-29; Acts 18:24-28; 2 Tim. 3:14-17.

We call Him Teacher, or The Teacher, and we do well, for so He was. Indeed, it is significant that more references are made to Jesus as a Teacher than as a Preacher. He was, of course, a preacher. He came "to preach the gospel." But some of His most effective work was done as a Teacher. Most of His work with the twelve was in the nature of teaching, rather than in what we would call preaching, and "the training of the twelve" was one of the most important things that Jesus did during His ministry. He taught the people, He taught the disciples, He taught in the synagogues, He taught by the sea, here, there, everywhere to all classes and in all places, even in the Temple, Jesus taught. He was, and is, the Great Teacher.

And Jesus sent His disciples out as teachers. "Go . . . teach"—His last command, or the Great Commission as we call it, was a command to teach, or to make disciples of, all nations. The subject matter of their teaching was to be all things whatsoever Christ had commanded them. From the beginning, Christianity has been a teaching religion. Education, both religious and secular, have been hand-maidens of religion. The church of today must be a teaching church. The Christian leader must be a teacher—the heading of the lesson today is right.

The Great Teacher Teaching.

We have an instance of the skill of Jesus as a teacher in today's lesson. The lesson text is taken from the Sermon on the Mount, but in presenting it, Matthew says that when he was set . . . "He taught them, saying. . ."

A. Hearing and doing:

As a psychologist Jesus knew the intimate relationship between doing and learning. He knew that it was not enough to hear a thing: He knew that truth really became one's own only as he lived it, or experienced it. The wise man is the man who, when he hears the truth, immediately tries to obey it and to live it. Such a man has inner resources standing him in time of stress, even as a house built upon a rock stands in time of storm. The man who simply hears, who gives mental assent, but does not appropriate or obey truth, is foolish, even as a man who would build a beautiful and costly home on shifting sands. In another place Jesus says, "whosoever will do and teach these things"—one really cannot teach what he does not live. In fact the life of teaching is the teacher's life.

B. He taught them with authority:

The people heard Jesus gladly because He put great truths in simple language. And he spoke with authority. He did not repeat, parrot-like, simply what someone else had said. He spoke out of His own experience, out of first-hand and intimate contact with God. Preaching or teaching that comes fresh out of one's own experiences will always be heard gladly. The man who has proved what he is teaching, can speak with authority.

A Teacher of the Early Church.

Apollos was "an eloquent man," a man who could speak in fluent and moving terms, a man well versed in the Scriptures. (The only Scriptures he knew were, of course, the Old Testament books, for the New Testament had not been written as yet.) He was not only eloquent, and scholarly, he was "fervent in spirit"—there was some warmth and fire to his teaching. So many people teach and preach in a mechanical, lifeless way. It is no wonder that they do not move folks, for they are not moved themselves. Apollos was "instructed in the way of the Lord" but he knew only "the baptism of John." "He doubtless dwelt with point and force on the facts regarding the Saviour's earthly life," but he did not know of the deeper spiritual implications of these facts, or of the baptism of the Holy Spirit. But as is always the case, God honored the man who was doing the best he could, with the light he had. And as is always the case, God gave him more light. Now that light is an interesting story.

Aquila and Priscilla were humble Christian workers, man and wife who made their living making tents. But they had been brought under the grace of Christ, and they studied to show themselves approved unto Him, so that they might teach others. They evidently did some good work among their friends and those with whom they worked.

When they heard Apollos speaking in the synagogue they were impressed by two things: they recognized his ability and possibilities; and they perceived that there were spiritual insights which he lacked, and a rich experience which he had not had. Thus it was that these humble workers with their hands, were able to teach this brilliant, well-educated man, the things that concerned the deeper spiritual life in Christ. They initiated him into a richer spiritual experience, which gave new life and power to his preaching and his teaching. And all this is a parable of life. There are many well-trained and brilliant men and women who are teaching the content of religion, but they lack a fresh, vital religious life themselves. In many instances they have to talk about something about which they know nothing or about which they know only at second-hand. They talk about faith but they do not have a vital, personal faith themselves. They talk about prayer, but they do not have a deep devotional life themselves. They know the facts of the life and teachings of Christ, but they do not know Christ Himself. And in many instances, there are humble, even unlettered men and women, and even young people, who can teach them some things about real religion. The writer of these notes has learned many profound truths, and has shared many rich experiences with the humble colored man who was the janitor of his church.

This is not to put a premium on ignorance. Every preacher and teacher should "study to show himself or herself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth." But let everyone keep in mind the fact that religion is something more than of the head; it is also something of the heart. The humble heart as well as the brilliant head, the obedient spirit as well as the eloquent tongue, are prerequisites for the one who would effectively teach Christ's way of life. Indeed, the humble heart and the obedient spirit come first.

"Tall was my camel and laden high,
The city within was very fair,
'Just now,' said the porter, 'to make it less,

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

MONDAY.

God's GOODNESS.

"The Lord is good unto them that wait for Him."—Lam. 3:25.

What is meant by "good" in this text? The Lord is good to all. He can be none other than good. A story comes to us from a Mrs. Purcell Smith which is illuminating. She says, "I always knew that the Bible says that God is good. It finally dawned upon me that God is exactly good with the same kind of goodness that He commands us to have; and this revelation came to me through these words, 'O taste and see that the Lord is good.' I now understand that God is the opposite of all bad. To be bad is to know right and then not do it. To be good is to do the best that one knows. Now, since God knows all things He must know what is the best and highest good of all, and His goodness is beyond question."

This gives us such a view of the real actual goodness of God that it is impossible to conceive that anything would go wrong under His care. If we are in His care we need not worry about ourselves.

It might do us good, then, to form a habit, that habit to be: when things seem to be going wrong, when the world and everything seems to be against us (as it does sometimes), and we begin to question God's kindness and care, bring ourselves short up to the fact, "The Lord is good." When you do, it will become unthinkable that God can do a bad thing, and we will realize that He has placed us in a world of goodness. We walk in it everywhere.

Prayer—Our Father, do Thou surround us with Thy goodness every moment of our day. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

WAITING ON THE LORD.

"The Lord is good to them that wait on Him." Lam. 3:25.

Waiting on the Lord means to have implicit faith in Him. But it means more than that. It means also Prayer and Service.

Faith is that thing which makes us know that He will not fail, and stimulates us with courage, patience and fortitude to wait till the thing hoped for is accomplished. So then to wait on the Lord is not something that is a transient call but it is an abiding spirit and a permanent attitude.

But we said "waiting on the Lord also means prayer,"—that kind of prayer that is not a spasmodic flaring, but a prayer that is an attitude of the life and is more often effective in quiet stillness. Our Lord prayed all night. We cannot imagine His speaking in prayer all night, but we can imagine His spending the night in supplication of heart drinking in the Father's will and opening His soul to the Father's light.

We also said that "waiting on the Lord is service," and this, no doubt, is the highest meaning we can attach to this gospel. It simply means doing the commands of the Lord. For instance, a waiter, or a servant, is not one who sits by and waits for his Master to do something. He is a servant and anything less loses his job. He is a servant and that means giving his whole attention to his Master's bidding. It means work, and that is the crown of his toil, "Well done good and faithful servant."

Thus a Christian servant is one who is filled with the Lord and relies upon divine help in business as well as in prayers and devotions. That is the highest type of waiting on the Lord, praying to the Lord and serving the Lord.

Prayer—Our Father, we pause at this moment to wait on Thee with our whole souls. Thou art our Father and we are Thy dependent children who serve as loving children. Forbid that we shall fall short. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

AN ANGEL EVERYDAY.

"Behold I send an angel before thee, to keep thee in the way."—Exo. 23:20.

A consciousness of a divine presence ordering our way is one of the most satisfactory realities.

There are numberless evidences of that presence,—events in which unwittingly provision is made for our way, which order things aright and save us from loss and chagrin.

The writer would like to tell you of his own experiences, but he fears that it would seem too much like a set-up, and then, too, it is not in good taste. Saved from precipices; saved from an overleave and missing ship when sailing time had been changed without his knowledge; saved again in a similar manner when schedule of boat had been changed. Every day brings something, just ordinary to be sure, just the way things work out indeed, but miraculous providences which make the road right and save His child from error, providences with which the human element has had nothing to do. If you love God, trust Him and serve Him long enough, steadfastly looking to Him for guidance, such evidences must appear and convince you that there is a guardian angel who orders the way of him who waits on the Lord.

Prayer—Dear Father, we would walk in Thy way. We would be Thy servants. We desire that ever present consciousness of heaven's protection. In His name we ask it.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

SPIRITUAL WISDOM.

"The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, and the knowledge of the Holy One is understanding."—Prov. 9:10.

There is an inscription upon a window in the Stanford Memorial Church at Palo Alto, California which reads as follows: "Knowledge is intelligence and its impression is upon the mind. Wisdom is the desire of the heart prompted by God's highest and most divine nature and comprises all knowledge. Wisdom is the highest spiritual intelligence. . . . a man may have great intelligence and yet have nothing of the Christ life within him."

Therefore, God's words urge us to number our days that we may get us a heart of wisdom." It is a great advancement toward the fulfillment of life's purpose to live for this wisdom, and then to have it said of us, "He lived a Godly life."

Prayer—Dear Lord, may we belong to Thee forever in this mortal life, to serve Thee faithfully through its trials, to bear Thy cross as well as ours, and to be Thine forever in life eternal.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

A SIMPLE REQUIREMENT.

"And what doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly and love mercy."—Micah 6:8.

"To do justly." That is the basis of all moral character, the quality of every good man, it covers all relations of mankind to each other, and it places all men, of whatever station in life, on the same level. It is the basis of all law, it is the reason for every court, it is the highest attribute of God.

He says that he has shown us,—made it plain to us in visible form, "what is good." That manifestation is in the form of Jesus Christ. In Him and His life we see. Through His spirit we feel and by His deeds we know. The only other thing is to do His bidding, "Follow me."

Prayer—Our Father in Heaven, justice and righteousness are such a simple thing, and such a worthy thing, and such a necessary thing, we pray that we may have removed from us everything that would deprive us of it, and by Thy grace make us all that Thou wouldst have us to be. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

NO OTHER GODS.

"Thou shalt have no other gods before me."—Genesis 20:1-7.

Idolatry is perhaps as common today as it ever was, and almost as common in our own land as in India or China. For an idol is anything but God that is given the chief place in a life. A bank book may be an idol. A fine position may be an idol. Idolatry has become a trifle more refined than in the days of Baal and Astarte, that is all.

Let us not cheat ourselves, for we do not cheat God. He knows whether all our heart is His, or only a little corner of it, or no part at all. And as the Bible says, He is a jealous God—rightly a jealous God—for our own good a jealous God.

Prayer—We are Thine, O God, and Thou art ours. Nothing shall take Thy place, not even the dearest idol we have known. And when Thou art in Thy place, all other persons and things fall into their right places.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

OUR KINDLY WORLD.

"And Julius treated Paul kindly."—Acts 27:1-6.

That a prisoner should be treated kindly, even such a prisoner as Paul, was in his day deemed worthy of special mention. Prisons in Paul's time were foul places, dens of unmentionable horrors. Prisoners were beaten at their jailers' will till the bones were exposed, and not seldom till they were killed. Christianity has changed all that, and today our prisons are houses of mercy compared with those of olden times, and prisoners even prisoners of war, receive kindness and thoughtful consideration, which often leads the poor to commit crimes just that they may be sent to prison as a place of refuge.

The world has enough evils yet remaining, to be sure; so many that we need to console our thoughts with the memory of the far worse conditions out of which we have grown.

Prayer—And may we all, O most pitiful Father, labor to make this world a still more kindly place for all unfortunates.—Amen.

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D., Pastor.

MARY.

By JOHN G. TRUITT.

"Jesus saith unto her, Mary!"—Jno. 20:16

I. The name "Mary" is one that has persisted. It is taken literally from the old language of the Old Testament. It has come a long ways! It has deserved to come, and it has come. In the old Hebrew language it was "mara," meaning "tibter." It is the name Naomi chose for her sorrows. The Book of Ruth is one of the oldest books of the Old Testament. It gives the beginning of the name Mary.

A happy Jewish maiden whose name was Naomi had married young Abimelech, whose name indicates that he was a prince. And to her evidently he was her Prince Charming. To the happy pair two sons were born. Her name was "Naomi" which means "pleasant." And surely all was lovely indeed. But trouble beat down upon that happy family like a great hurricane out of the west. A famine prevailed. Food was wanting. And the little boys were going to bed hungry at night. The family was forced into Moab for food and shelter. And to add bitterness to want the young husband, perhaps through hunger and worry had contracted a fatal disease, and died.

The widow reared her sons to manhood and saw them break custom and commandment by marrying daughters of the Moabites. Bitterness still fell upon "pleasant" Naomi. Then followed a fatal disease which snatched her two sons away, and left her, herself a widow, with her widowed daughters-in-law! After that she said: "Call me not Naomi, call me Mara," for bitterness had been her portion. So the name Mary was born out of the pain of motherhood and the loss of loved ones.

It stood those bitter tests, and under the divine law of recompensation became a new name. The one Old Testament name of bitterness became six New Testament names of beauty. How lovely the name, Mary, must have been to Jesus! Jesus gave the name Mary a new grace and a new glory! Just as He gave a new meaning to the word cross! Humanity has accepted the word, cross, for the symbol of God's love. Just as it has accepted the name Mary for the name of girlhood,—the name of mother when she was a school girl. It is as though sons and daughters should say: "Public speakers and writers in speaking of her childhood called her 'Mary,' but I have called her 'Mother.'" "Mara" in Hebrew; "Mariam" in Greek and Latin; and "Mary" in English.

No name stands higher in the founding of the church than does the name of Mary. What realm of womanhood have these Marys not assumed? There is Mary, wife of Cleophas. Wifehood how exalted. It has the first sanctions of both God and man. It is the highest choice in human relationships. For if a man shall forsake his father and mother, and cleave unto his wife, and they shall be one flesh. The Holy Scriptures enjoin wives to submit themselves unto their husbands, as is fit in the Lord. The Holy Scriptures enjoin husbands to love wife even as himself. The very seriousness of marriage has caused many a jest concerning it, and yet it has a first grip on the very heart of humanity.

As I have said it is the highest choice in human relationships. It should be entered into soberly, discreetly, and in the fear of the Lord.

It has the specific sanction of Jesus Himself. Nothing is more glorious than the constant, true, appreciative love of husband for wife, or of wife for husband. Upon that combination rests the foundation stones of the whole fabric of human happiness, and human welfare. It is the relationship which Jesus used as a figure of His own relationship to the church. The highest figure of speech he could use,—the bride of Christ. "Bridegroom," and "bride" were great words on the lips of Jesus. The "Mara" of bitterness is quite changed into the "Mary" of happiness, indeed, when the bride and bridegroom meet at the altar of God.

II. Mary, the mother of Jesus. "Is not this the carpenter's son? Is not his mother called Mary?"—Matt. 13:55. I wonder if Mary herself ever told the Boy Jesus the story of Naomi. Or the story of Ruth, who was the one full burst of sunlight upon her embittered pathway. What more beautiful words of filial devotion can be found in all the pages of literature than those of Ruth to Naomi: "Entreat me not to leave Thee, or to return from following after thee; for where thou goest I will go, and where thou lodgest, I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God; and where thou diest, I will die, and there I will be buried. And may the Lord do so to me, and more also, if aught but death part thee and me." This girl became an ancestress of Jesus.

When God wants to get something done, it has been said, He does not get out His earthquakes, nor thunders, nor His volcanoes, nor His storms; but he has a baby born. He puts the idea into the mother's heart, and she into the child's mind; and He waits. God put an idea in the heart of Moses' mother. He gave Moses two teachers,—the royal princess, and the slave mother. But when Moses became a man, and with a mind to choose he chose the sufferings of his own people rather than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season. And Israel's deliverer came.

Mary pondered the messages of God in her heart. Jesus was taught them and when the day of His choosing came He chose the way of the cross that leads home. And the world's deliverer had come. Yes, His home was that of a carpenter's, and His mother was called Mary. And it was a Mary that God could trust to do a mother's part, and she never betrayed that trust.

"The oldest university
Was not on India's strand,
Nor in the valley of the Nile,
Nor on Arabia's Sands;
From time's beginning it has taught,
And still it teaches free,
Its learning, mild, to every child,—
The school of Mother's Knee."

"GOD'S PEOPLE."

Orthodox Hindus are breaking away from Gandhi's leadership, it is said. At Benares, the Mecca of Hinduism, reports say placards were carried reading, "Don't follow Gandhi. He is a Christian." But, as Rev. Lloyd L. Lorbeer, of Pasumalai, maintains "The Orthodox have their thousands and Gandhi his ten thousands." He continues his work for the Untouchables—"harijans," he calls them, or "God's People." He tours the country, visiting huts, digging wells, "fellowshipping"—thus he educates as he works. "Others have been the Garrisons and Lovejoys of this anti-slavery movement," points out Mr. Lorbeer, "perhaps Gandhi will go down in history as the Lincoln making it a national cleansing." The clever highest-caste Brahman is reading the handwriting on the wall, some say, and is becoming less "castey" than members of other Hindu groups.

ANOTHER KIND OF EXPORT.

When the bullet of a robber put an end to the rich life of Dr. James H. Ingram in China all his life's reel was reviewed. Reporters came to interview his friends and among them one who wanted incidents from Dr. Ingram's life of kindly personal acts. The next day in one of the most widely read Chinese newspapers appeared a human interest story which was seen by Chinese of all walks of life—mostly those having no connection with the church of foreigners. "Hardly ever in this city has such real appreciation for a foreigner been so widely expressed as in this and other papers," wrote Miss Bertha P. Reed of Peiping at the time. "It seemed," she continued, "as though the whole city was thinking of this life of such genuine kindness and goodness, and sorrowing over its end, feeling it an example of a life lived in the true Christian way." A memorial fund is under way with gifts coming in from Chinese in both civil and military life, as well as foreigners.

HUMILITY IN HEROISM.

A new house was rapidly going up on Lakewood Avenue. It was a beautiful little brick house. No one knew who would come to live in the little house, for it was being built by a construction company, and would be rented when it was finished. Carl and Albert spent an hour each afternoon watching the workmen. Bill worked in the furniture store, and could stay only a few minutes after school. Jim spent most of his time in the drug store now, but he had a half-hour occasionally to watch the construction. It was very interesting. The boys marveled at the way the little house grew from day to day.

One afternoon Carl and Albert could hardly leave. A brick mason was working on the top of one of the chimneys.

"It seems rather dangerous," Carl said, noticing the broad leather belt with which the workman strapped himself to his work.

"It is dangerous work, Carl. I've heard of stone masons being killed by simply making one false step."

"So much depends upon their management, it seems. I hardly see how they work at all."

Albert was looking steadily at the mason. "Something has happened to him, Carl!"

Carl looked up. "He isn't working. He is leaning his head against the chimney."

There was a sudden great crash, and bricks fell from the top of the chimney. What could have happened? Both boys were on their feet at once.

"Hey, you fellows!" the mason called. "Could you give me a lift? I'm sick."

Carl reached for his first-aid kit in his hip pocket. "Funny," he whispered to Albert, "I just put this in here this morning." Then, yelling up the ladder: "Hold on and don't try to move until we get there." Carl started up the ladder. "Bert, you'd better get one of those men working inside and come up on another ladder. Hurry!"

Carl reached the workman just before he released his hold on the chimney. He took a bottle of ammonia from his kit and held it under the workman's nose.

"I was almost gone," he breathed. "A little more and I would have fallen out."

"Don't bother to talk now," Carl urged. "We'll have help in a moment. When we get safely to the ground, we can talk."

Albert and the other workman rushed to the chimney with a strong ladder. Soon they were bringing the fainting mason down.

They made a bed of coats on the floor and placed the sick man on them. Carl gave him a small dose of ammonia, and Albert ran for Dr. Cleighton.

"Seems to be a heart attack," the Doctor said when he had heard a complete story of the case. "Have you ever been troubled before?"

"No," the man answered, "I have never been sick on the job."

"If you had not been brought down immediately the chances are you would have been dashed to your death in a few moments."

The workman was soon well and on the job again. "You boys saved my life," he said to Carl and Albert. "I want to reward you. What can I do that will help you out in some way?"

The boys were smiling. "We are glad to have been of some service," Carl said. "Our reward is to see you on the job again."

"I know you are glad," the mason said. "That's the kind of fellows you are. I've known that since the day I first saw you when we had to tear your playhouse away. But I want to give you some substantial reward—something that is somewhat valuable, as I value my life." He laughed rather seriously.

Albert smiled sincerely. "Then buy this little house and move on Lakewood Avenue," he said. "You'd be a good neighbor."

The workman put an arm around each of the boys. "Let it go at that, then," he said. "I can find a way to reward you some day. I am sure there will be much we can do for each other as neighbors. I was planning to rent the little house. I really want to live on Lakewood Avenue."

The boys were glad. "Then we have our reward already," they said.

"Those noble boys!" the workman said to himself as he went home. "I'm happy to know that my children will have such splendid boys with whom to associate."—Louise G. Thompson in the Gospel Advocate.

OBITUARIES

LUCK.

Mrs. Martha Graves Luck, wife of Houston Luck, aged 58 years, departed this life October twenty-seventh, 1934. She had been an invalid for sixteen years but bore her afflictions with the greatest of patience. She leaves to sorrow her going a husband, six sons and two daughters and a host of friends. It was the writer's pleasure to visit the home often. Sister Luck was always cheerful and happy. Funeral services were held at Huldah Baptist church of which she had been a member since early life. Service conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. Edwards, pastor of the church. May the influence of her life live on in the lives of her beloved family until they shall meet to part no more.

B. H. LOWDERMILK.

HUGHES.

Bro. C. A. Hughes of Elon College, N. C., passed from this life November 1, 1934 at the age of 50 years. He is survived by his wife and four sons: Blair, Kenneth, C. A., Jr., and Roy, all of Elon College, N. C., besides other relatives and many friends. Burial services were held in the home after which interment was made in Shallow Ford Cemetery where he had long been a member. The large crowd and the abundant and beautiful floral offerings expressed in part the high esteem in which he was held. He will be much missed by his town, his church and community. Services were conducted by Dr. J. O. Atkinson and his pastor.

T. J. GREEN.

ELLIOTT.

L. C. Elliott was born in Gloucester County, Virginia, in 1859, and died at the age of seventy-five year November 21st, following an illness of short duration. He was married to Miss Annie Florene Torksey, of Nansemond County, with whom he had lived for more than fifty-one years. He is survived by Mrs. Elliott and four children, two boys and two girls. Brother Elliott confessed Christ early in life and was for many

Briton Wins Peace Prize.—

The much coveted Nobel peace prize for 1934 has been awarded to Arthur Henderson, president of the World Disarmament Conference. In acknowledging the award, he said, "The day when hopes for the disarmament conference cease will be a sad one for the whole world."

Gold Mining in Colorado.—

Gold mining in Colorado has taken a new lease on life. There are now approximately 125 mines operating in the Cripple Creek district, with ore-shipments averaging from 1,500 to 2,000 tons daily. It is estimated that the gold mined here will reach $6,000,000 for the year 1934.

Philadelphia Mint Sets New Record.—

The Philadelphia Mint turned out 48,503,179 coins during the month of October. This was the heaviest monthly output in many years. It also set a new record for the number of coins minted in any one day, turning out 3,195,000 pieces, compared with the former high record, set in 1919, of 2,570,000. By far the greater number of the coins, however, were one-cent pieces.

Federal Government Employees.—

The number of Federal employees is now placed at 850,000 by the latest tabulations from Washington. This is an increase of 115,000 in the last two years. These statistics give the number employed by NRA as 2,800, not including several hundred "field workers." AAA has 5,000 employed in the capital alone, and easily leads in the number employed by any one division of the Recovery Administration. The total number employed by the "alphabetical" agencies is 61,570, of whom approximately 40 per cent are located in Washington.

Who Uses the Telephone Most?—

Who uses the telephone most, and how many times a year do they use it? One would probably guess that Mr. Average Citizen of the United States would stand at the top of the list, but he does not. Canada tops the list with 225 calls per person, while France stands near the bottom with only 20 calls. An Englishman talks only a little more, using his phone just 33 times. A list of other most frequent users of telephone follows: New Zealand, 206; United States, 204; Denmark, 152; Sweden, 138; Norway, 91; Austria, 83; Switzerland, 64; Japan, 52; and Germany ties with Great Britain with 33.

Increase in Automobile Fatalities.—

It takes a statistical report to give a plain, unvarnished tale of our automobile fatalities resulting from increased use of intoxicants. For the past ten months, according to the Travelers' Insurance Company, 28,400 persons have been killed and 740,000 others injured as a result of nearly 600,000 automobile accidents in this country. This record, if continued to the close of 1934, will be an all-time mark for automobile fatalities. Of those killed, 48 per cent were pedestrians and of the pedestrians involved in accidents, the records show that there was an increase of 55 per cent who were intoxicated. Also there was an increase of 24 per cent in the number of drunken drivers involved in the accidents.—Exchange.

Theologian Suspended by Nazis.—

Dr. Karl Barth, Swiss-born professor of Evangelical Theology at Bonn University, has been suspended from his professorship by Nazi authorities because of his refusal to take the oath of allegiance to Hitler. The professor was willing to subscribe to the oath provided he be allowed to modify it by adding to the prescribed words: "So far as I can defend it as an evangelical Christian." But that just wouldn't do for Mr. Hitler—with him it is Hitler first and then God, maybe, so Dr. Bernard Rust, Prussian Minister of Culture, refused to accept the addendum. Dr. Barth, a Calvinist and a Fundamentalist, has always insisted that the "Word of God" was of prime importance, and he was one of the earliest opponents of the Nazi German Christian Party and of Reichsbishop Ludwig Mueller. The Swiss government has informed German authorities that the dismissal of Swiss professors in German universities will be followed by wholesale ousting of German professors in Switzerland.

"The American Union of Fascists."—

An article in the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin tells of "The U. S. American Union of Fascists, Inc.," which defines itself in its own constitution as "an organization of American citizens who believe in God and the American flag." Its membership is open to any American man, woman or child, regardless of age, color or race. E. G. Astone, the "commander," claims a membership of nearly 500,000, scattered through New England and the Middle Atlantic States, and as far west as Illinois. Some of the members are uniformed, some are not. Most of the uniformed lot go in for drilling and sports and are known as the "sporting troops." The purposes for which this organization is formed are stated as follows: "To support and defend our own American form of government. Protect and defend every American principle. Promote a better understanding between the rich and the poor, between the employer and the employee. Create a spirit of unselfish cooperation in every walk of life between capital and labor. Promote physical and cultural instruction to the members." Members must be United States citizens, and in case they are not, they are helped to become citizens, and aided in obtaining their naturalization papers.—Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

Virginia and Local Option.—

The liquor-leaders in Virginia are thanking their stars, "or sumpin'" that there can be no local option elections in Virginia towns and counties during 1935. The so-called control law prevents the holding of these elections in any year in which local elections are held, ostensibly to prevent local officers from using prohibition issues in their campaigns. This law has already prevented local option votes in Bluefield and Culpeper, both places claimed as dry. The dries were beaten in Danville this year, but they won in Bristol, Pulaski, Bedford and Richlands. The latest dry victory was in the capture of York County, which on Tuesday of this week, said "no" by a vote of 461 to 93, when the question of wine or beer was raised. Even more emphatic was the vote against hard liquor, it being 471 to 83. The dries intend to go after the cities which are not affected next year by the control law. The daily press acknowledges that anti-prohibitionists are "gravely alarmed" by the dry agitation.

"Why the Discrepancy?"—

In the current issue of Advance, this question is asked, "Why the Discrepancy?" It continues as follows: Pennsylvania, with one-ninth of the entire Sunday School enrollment of North America, and one-sixteenth of the enrollment of the world, leads all states in Sunday School statistics. In that state there are 10,327 Sunday Schools, with 191,000 officers and teachers and 2,201,000 pupils. Yet, two days before we came across these figures, we heard a man from Pennsylvania deploring the backwardness of that state in labor legislation in social measures for the alleviation of poverty and the care of the aged." Our good friend, the editor, thinks that there is a chasm here that needs to be bridged, and he wonders whether the Sunday School scholars—the citizens of tomorrow—will bridge it. "Or," he asks, "is religion in that state kept out of politics?" Religion is certainly necessary in politics, if politics is to be kept clean. One wonders, however, if it is not because Pennsylvania leads in Sunday Schools statistics, that there is less need for "social measures" to care for those who are poverty stricken or grown old without having laid aside a penny for the "rainy day." Isn't it the function of Christ's gospel, whether spread through the Sunday School or otherwise, to make "men" who can and will care for themselves, rather than to encourage by legislation the making of state-dependent paupers? We do not know! We only raise the question, "Is there a discrepancy?"

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

We learn with regret of the illness of Mrs. R. A. Whitten, wife of the pastor of our First Church Portsmouth, Va., and hope for her a speedy recovery.

Rev. John G. Truitt, pastor of the Suffolk, Va., Church, received five new members last week. How many members have you received in your church recently?

The Christmas Fund, which is taken for aged ministers and their widows and orphans, should be taken by every church within the bounds of the Southern Convention. It counts this year on your conference apportionment.

The great football season is over. According to sport writers, it was a marvelous season and millions gathered to see the boys battle it out with the pigskins on the gridiron. Official figures so far state that "only" twenty-six players were killed outright. This does not include the scores that were wounded more or less seriously.

The Eastern Virginia Ministers' Conference will meet in Suffolk, Va., next Monday, from 10:30 to 12:30 o'clock. The managing editor of THE SUN hopes to be able to be present at this meeting. He was at the last meeting of the Ministers' Conference at Elcn College, and it proved a most interesting and instructive session.

Rev. J. A. Foss, pastor, sends us a copy of the Gospel Herald, Rush, New York, giving an account of the centennial celebration on December 7th of the North Rush Christian Church. A pageant was given displaying some of the main activities of the church during its one hundred years of service in the community. The church was founded on December 9, 1834, and from the Herald's account seems to be going strong with one hundred years of activity.

The ministers of the Eastern North Carolina Conference met with Dr. Wicker, president of the Conference, presiding, with some visitors present, at Catawba Springs, December 6th, to discuss in a friendly and informal manner the work within their Conference the coming year, having in mind an effort to stop the drop in the loss of churches in the Conference and to see what could be done in the matter of construction and progress. Every active minister of the Conference was present, and it is felt that the meeting was worthwhile and means the beginning of a better understanding and a new day in the work of this Conference.

"Peloubet's Notes will be ordered by the pastor for any who leaves orders with him. Leave your order early and be sure you get your copy before Jan. 1st." This notice is taken from the bulletin of the Suffolk, Virginia, Christian Church, Rev. J. G. Truitt, pastor. We are sure that your local pastor will be glad to order your copy for you if you so wish. Or, you may send your order direct to THE CHRISTIAN SUN office, 1536 E. Broad Street, Richmond, Va. Other valuable lesson aids are Tarbell's Notes and Snowden's Sunday School Lessons. Peloubet's Notes and Tarbell's are each $2.00, while Snowden's Lessons sells for $1.35.

Sunday, December 9th, was celebrated in thousands of churches and Sunday schools in America and in foreign countries as the 400th anniversary of the publication of Martin Luther's translation of the Bible. The Governor of North Carolina issues a statement urging the churches of this State to observe the day as Universal Bible Sunday. When Luther gave an open Bible to the world he made one of the greatest contributions of all time to mankind, and today the Bible is circulated in more than forty countries and is published and read in about two hundred languages and remains the "best seller" of any book published.

Rev. Joe French, pastor of our Ocean View Church, writing December 5th, personally says: "Last night we had a Fellowship Supper at the church for the members. It was a turkey dinner with all that goes with it. There were between fifty-five and sixty people seated in a circle at the table. It was, indeed, a happy group. We had stunts, readings, singing and appropriate stories. We have never seen a group of people join more heartily in an evening of fun. It was an honor and a pleasure to have Rev. and Mrs. Redd Turner of the First Presbyterian Church, Portsmouth, with us. 'Redd' was the hero of the evening's entertainment."

An unusual service was held at Catawba Springs Church, (Wake County, N. C.), Sunday, December 3rd. The service was in celebration of the 100th birthday anniversary of the community's best known and best loved citizen, Tom

THE UNATTAINED.

Above me and around me lies the unattained,
My spirit longs to walk the beckoning paths.
I fain would run, where now I inch along
Yet, while I stumble on and drag my feet
I keep my eyes upon the hill-tops fair,
And take deep breaths of the life-giving air
That comes from those far heights of UNAT-TAINED,—
Not what I am but what I will be then
Gives strength, and breathes into my fainting soul
The courage that still sends me on, and on,
And steadies me to tread the dusty roads
Which lie between me and the perfect day.

—Clarence A. Vincent.

Council. Brother Council is still active and vigorous after one hundred years, and when the service at the church and the great dinner spread for some fifteen hundred people were all over, Brother Tom took his one hundred years with him over to the airport and celebrated by an airplane ride over the City of Raleigh and the country around about. Friend Council is the father-in-law of Brother M. C. Sorrell, the long-time faithful superintendent of Catawba Springs Sunday School, and is the grandfather of Rev. M. T. Sorrell, pastor of our Danville Church.

Rev. Elwood W. Jones, pastor of the Franklin, Virginia, Church, began his fourth year at that place on December 2nd. Following the evening service on that date and an "anniversary" sermon on "An Interpretation of the Minister's Mission," the entire congregation accepted an invitation for a season of fellowship at the parsonage. Evidently, however, the congregation was prepared, for Brother Jones in a letter to the managing editor says that they surprised him with "a fine lot of good things to eat, and many articles of wearing apparel." Possibly they already know that he thinks they "are as fine a lot of folks as can be found anywhere," and that he is "happy in the work with them."

Joseph H. Choate, Jr., Gov.-Director of Alcohol Control Administration, Washington, D. C., according to an associated press dispatch, predicts "better liquor and lower price after the start of the new year." As he looks back over the year since December 5, 1933, when the 18th Amendment was killed by the 21st, he finds that "official estimates show an actual consumption for the year of around forty-two million gallons of distilled spirits and thirty-five million barrels of beer. Revenue to the Government, according to Mr. Choate, has been about $120,000,000 less than officials anticipated." He also gives the statement that the bootlegger is still very much alive and quite active, and the suggestion is made that "lower taxes be enacted to combat the increased competition of the illicit manufacturer."

United Church, Raleigh, through its Sunday School, is preparing a bundle of toys to help make the boys and girls of our Mission schools in Carroll County, Va., happy for Christmas. Our Danville Church, Rev. M. T. Sorrell, pastor, is preparing, through representatives, to go on Christmas Eve and carry Christmas gifts and cheer for many of the little people. Last year these good people of Danville sent more than 300 wrapped packages to our boys and girls of the mountains. Brother Sorrell used to be pastor and leader of our work there and knows what it means to get help and carry cheer and gladness to these boys and girls in their lack and need. Any other schools or individuals feeling interested in the matter should read what Rev. and Mrs. R. T. Grissom have to say in another column, "Jesus Knew."

Dr. W. C. Wicker preached at First Christian Church, Greensboro, Sunday morning, December 9th. The Greensboro Daily News carries this further item of interest to SUN readers: "At 7:30 o'clock Sunday evening, Rev. W. C. Lyerly, pastor of the First Reformed Church, will present in story and pictures, 'The Other Wise Man.'" This is a Christmas story written by Dr. Henry Van Dyke and based on Matt. 2:1-12. These visiting ministers are occupying the pulpit of the First Christian Church Sunday because of the continued absence of the pastor, Dr. C. H. Rowland, who has been ill for several weeks. Dr. Rowland is recuperating in a Florida sanitarium, and latest reports from him are to the effect that he is now able to take some exercise. During his illness the officials of the church are arranging with visiting speakers to occupy his pulpit.

President L. E. Smith of Elon College was at Charlotte, Friday night, December 7th, at the organization of a local Elon Alumni Association and reports a splendid meeting. In connection with local Alumni Associations, the Greensboro Daily News of December 8th, says: "Organization of a Greensboro chapter of the Elon Alumni Association will be considered at a supper meeting to be held next Tuesday evening at 6:45 o'clock at the Masonic temple, it was announced Friday by W. G. Stoner, chairman of the organization committee. Dr. L. E. Smith, president of Elon College, will be the main speaker and it is expected that he will bring a timely message concerning work of the alumni of the institution and of the college itself. This address will feature an interesting program being arranged for the evening. There are many Elon alumni in Greensboro and immediate vicinity, and there is considerable interest among them in the proposal to form a local chapter, it was said."

CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION.

The Christian Missionary Association of the N. C. and Va. Conference of Congregational and Christian Churches met in its second annual session at the United Congregational-Christian Church in Winston-Salem, N. C., Tuesday, December 4th. The session was called to order by the president, Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, at 10:30 A. M. The morning devotionals were conducted by Rev. D. M. Spence.

Approximately forty delegates and representatives responded to the Roll Call. Several visitors were present, among whom was Rev. Milo J. Sweet, pastor at large of the Congregational churches of the Carolinas.

The Christian Missionary Association is designed primarily to promote Home Missions within the bounds of the Conference, and the meeting Tuesday was educational, promotional, and financial. On the morning program an inspiring address, "Home Missions, A Spiritual Venture" was delivered by Rev. M. T. Sorrell, following which Rev. William T. Scott conducted a round table discussion on the "Problems of Home Missions."

Prior to the adjournment of the morning session, the president appointed committees to report at the afternoon session. A delicious luncheon was served in the dining room of the United Church by the ladies of the congregation.

At the afternoon session, Rev. J. L. Neese conducted the devotionals, and Rev. Milo J. Sweet spoke on "Home Mission Work of the Congregational-Christian Church of the Southeast."

In the absence of Dr. C. H. Rowland, Treasurer, Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, Financial Secretary, read the Treasurer's report, which revealed an increase of income for the year, the membership of the Association being composed of individuals and organizations paying annual membership dues. Out of this report grew considerable discussion concerning the reduction of the membership dues, and it was voted to make dues for the coming year as follows: Men, Women, and Organizations, $5.00; Children under 12 years of age and Junior Organizations, $2.50. It was also voted to set a minimum goal of 100 paying adult memberships for the coming year and to charge the Financial Secretary with responsibility of getting the pastors to assume leadership in promoting the work of the Association in their respective fields.

The session being held in the Winston-Salem Church gave an opportunity for the members of the C. M. A. to see first-hand something of what their money has done during the past three years. The rising opportunity of the Winston-Salem field in 1932 was in part responsible for the reorganization that put the first money into the new Winston-Salem work. The project in Winston-Salem received the commendation of the Association and it voted to give aid to the work amounting to $300 for the coming year. Other applications were referred to the executive committee for action with the Home Mission Board of the Conference.

The following officers were elected for the coming year: President, Rev. G. C. Crutchfield; V.-President, Rev. M. T. Sorrell; Secretary, Rev. William T. Scott; Treasurer, Mrs. C. H. Rowland; Financial Secretary, Rev. B. J. Earp.

Upon invitation of the Reidsville delegation, it was voted to hold the 1935 session in the First Christian Church, Reidsville, December 3rd.

There was keen optimism and growing interest shown throughout the entire session, and optimism for a most promising year prevailed. The closing prayer was offered by Rev. B. J. Earp.

WILLIAM T. SCOTT, Secretary.

JESUS KNEW.

Our Saviour knew what He was talking about when He said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Are you of the Christian Church, or as Christians, seeking real joy this Christmas? There are about six hundred people in your Home Mission Field who will see the same day of December, 25th, that you will see. In many cases the day will pass without a change in routine unless you help Mrs. Grissom and myself make this Christmas real for them. Our hearts are with these people. We feel that they are our own.

If you read these words could have been with us last year during our Christmas program and seen the shining faces as names were called, we are sure you would have shared some of the real joy that Jesus had in those words, "More blessed to give than to receive." We want you to have the very best Christmas ever. We feel that you will be most happy if you share with others; therefore, we say send us what you feel that you should to help make happiness felt in the more unfortunate homes of our own Carroll County folk.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

PERFORMING A SPIRITUAL ACT.

One wonders why there are not spiritual giants since spiritual "acts" are so numerous. What is a spiritual act? And what is spirituality? According to some writers almost any act, other than violent sin and crime, seems to be spiritual. Evidently, a spiritual act in the minds of many is a sort of soapsuds slush, to be dashed off or out at any time. As an example of this extreme type of loose thinking, commend us to the following sentence which seems to slide so glibly off from the pen of those who are defining a spiritual act: "Who gives a cup of cold water, performs a spiritual act." A glib half truth, or less, picked up and slung about under all sorts of conditions.

In early boyhood days this writer lived in a town where an open saloon did its deadly work by day and by night. No one in that town was more ready to "give a cup of cold water" than that saloon-keeper. But if anybody ever accused him of being spiritual, of seeking to perform a spiritual act, our youthful ears never heard the accusation. That man gave a cup of cold water and did all sorts of "benevolent" (?) stunts in order to lure men and boys to his place of drunkenness and destruction. He would make a man drunk and then "give him a cup of cold water" to help make him sober so he could sell him more liquor. Not much spirituality in that.

Three or four summers this writer was in New York and through curiosity, with one hundred others, went to the atheistic temple to see and hear what an atheistic speaker was like and would say. For the first twenty minutes of that blasphemous discourse we were thrilled with the plea for the "cup of cold water" and for "service to one's fellowman." And then the last fifteen minutes of that discourse made every God-fearing hearer wish he was under the bench or out of the house, or a thousand miles away. The speaker proceeded to ridicule the name of God and to vituperate the idea of the love of God, of the service of God, and to declare that God was a myth and that the churches were parasites and purveyors of falsehoods, delusions and snares of the human family. Not much spirituality in that man's gift of a cup of cold water, nor of those who gave the cold water with a kindred spirit.

Emma Goldman, the notorious anarchist, in a December magazine article, declares that her life has been worth living and if she could live it over again, she would spend it advocating the abolition of all power and authority, both of God and Government. "Authority suppresses individual initiative and power of personality and what the world needs is freedom, and if it had freedom it would cooperate in giving the cup of cold water and other forms of activity for human relief." One would hardly accuse this woman, without a country and exiled from this and other lands because of her dangerous and deadly tongue and teaching — one would hardly accuse her of being very spiritual, even though she insists on giving a cup of cold water in the name of freedom.

This loose philosophy and false teaching about the cup of cold water is derived, this writer is inclined to think, like many other half truths and no truths, from a Scripture quotation whose soul and heart have been left out. Why not get the truth as it is contained in Scripture? (Matt. 10: 42): "Whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you he shall in no wise lose his reward." Or, according to Mark 9:41, which makes the truth of the whole matter even clearer: "Whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink, because ye are Christ's, verily I say unto you he shall in no wise lose his reward." In both of these quotations the motive and the dynamic of giving the cup of cold water are clearly given, viz: In the name and for the sake of our Lord. Here is emphasized again the declaration of our Lord which said, "The first and greatest of the commandments is this: thou shalt love the Lord, thy God, with all thy heart." If we put the love of God first and act in the light and for the sake of that love, we then perform a spiritual act, indeed, because He is a Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth. And if we love God first and foremost, we may then come to keep and observe the second commandment, which is like unto it, but certainly does not leave it out: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

CHRISTMAS.

A noted magazine writer states the bare and painful truth when he says that we have diverted Christmas from its rightful place, as a time of reverence and devotion to Him Who gave us Christmas, and have made of the season a trade carnival. It is trade, trade, trade. Shop early. Avoid the rush. Do your Christmas buying early and vigorously. So the advertisements and the trade journals. And so we follow and must plunge into the carnival of trade, and thus obscure the main issue.

Christmas, the Birthday of Christ. May we not in our giving and in our preparation bear that great event in mind and keep in our thinking that salient fact? Millions in the world will have no Christmas this year because they do not know of Him. And millions who do know of Him will turn their knowledge into revelry and hilarity and forget the Man of Sorrows and the One acquainted with grief. It is His love and His life we celebrate this season. Let us bear that fact in mind.

One wonders if the following paragraph from the American Sunday School Union can have meaning and a message for us:

"Nineteen centuries is a period of time that most of us find difficult to visualize. On Christmas Day thirty-four more than nineteen hundred years will have passed since Jesus Christ came into the World. Though He lived so long ago and though His span of earthly life was only thirty-three years, He is the most outstanding character of history. Yet millions who have lived in remote places, cut off from the privileges of Christian teaching and training, do not know Him as a Living Lord and Saviour. For them, Christmas will be as meaningless as an anniversary of some heathen god on a south sea island is to us."

Christmas is and should be the happiest of all holidays. Let's make it so with love, helpfulness and joy in His name.

AN OPEN LETTER.

The editor of THE SUN has received a letter which he opens to SUN readers. It is of moment and should have prayerful consideration by our ministry and laity. The letter is by one of our consistent and anxious laymen and is as follows: "I have been trying since our Western North Carolina Conference to figure out why we are not growing. Growing in church membership? Growing in the establishment of new churches? Growing in our gifts to benevolences? Growing in interest for the salvation of the lost? Growing in consecration and a deeper spiritual life? Is the trouble in the lives of our laymen, or our ministers or the Principles of our church?"

"I should like very much to have our ministers and laymen discuss this important matter in THE SUN. We certainly need to locate the trouble and remove it that we may henceforth enjoy a more healthy growth all along the Christian front."—Layman, Star, N. C.

To give further point to this layman's inquiry, it may be stated that all the Conferences of our Convention have now had their annual meetings and at not one of these Conferences was there a petition for admittance of a single new church or church organization. Moreover, it was brought out at the Conferences that many of the weaker churches were suffering from lack of pastoral supply and that some had actually dropped out and passed from the list of organized and active churches. Carrying the inquiry further, it is recalled that only one minister was ordained in any of the Conferences and that very few licentiates were admitted on probation. There were other indications too painful and numerous to mention that there was lack of dynamic and power within our fellowship. In the light of these facts it is high time, indeed, that ministers and other laymen were joining with this good brother in anxious inquiry.

THE HOLY SPIRIT MOVES.

The press, secular and religious, is still giving accounts, varicous and sundry, of what happened at the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Atlantic City, October 10-20. Evidently, a most unusual incident occurred and a never-to-be-forgotten scene was witnessed by those who were gathered there when the Holy Spirit moved upon the mighty audience and the great dignitaries and formal officials of the church were moved to tears and to action. Let the editor of the Missionary Review of the World tell us what happened when the Holy Spirit moved:

"At a joint session of bishops and deputies, the Presiding Bishop emphasized the fact that missionary work is the chief business of the church, saying:

"We are here as Christian men and women to perform the chief work which Jesus Christ has committed to us. The whole membership of the church is embraced in the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society. The foundation stone of faith is loyalty of the individual to his Lord.

"Missionary work is the work of carrying out the mission of our Lord Jesus Christ to the world. This work is seriously hampered and endangered by lack of support. Vacancies in the field cannot be filled; volunteers for service must be turned away and work on the mission field must be closed."

This is true both at home and abroad. America must not be allowed to become pagan. There is need for vision, for courage and for self-sacrifice in loyalty to Christ. A deficit of $529,804 was reported in the missionary treasury. At the missionary mass meeting, a young man knelt at the altar and then made an inspiring appeal for a truly sacrificial offering. Only $5,000 had been received from over 25,000 people. He pleaded that those who really cared would reach into their pockets and bring a ten-dollar bill or whatever they could to the steps of the altar and lay it there with a prayer for the mission of the church. He led the way to the steps and, kneeling there alone, placed the first offering. There was a breathless moment of surprise, and then the Holy Spirit moved that great gathering and they began to come forward—at first by twos and threes, and then by hundreds and thousands until the missionary bishops had to act as ushers to guide the vast crowds. There were tears in many eyes, as men and women old and young, bishops, priests and laity, surged forward and placed $7,916 more on the altar."

THE COUNCIL AND SOCIAL ACTION.

The Rev. Dr. Charles Emerson Burton, secretary of the General Council of the Congregational and Christian churches of the United States, has made public correspondence with the Standing Committee of the Union Congregational church, Upper Montclair, N. J., concerning the relationship between resolutions on the social order passed by the General Council at its biennial meeting last June and the Council for Social Action which was established at the same meeting as a co-agency with the mission boards.

In a general resolution on the social gospel and economic problems, the members of the General Council by a vote of 130 to 17 declared that "we set ourselves to work toward the abolition" of "our present competitive profit seeking economy" and toward "the inauguration of a genuinely cooperative social economy democratically planned to adjust production to consumption requirements, to modify or eliminate private ownership of the means of production or distribution wherever such ownership interferes with the social good."

The Standing Committee of the Upper Montclair church through its clerk, George E. Voorhees, wrote:

"We find a tendency on the part of some people to interpret the resolutions as a definition of program or a set of marching orders for the new Council for Social Action. Others take the position that this is not the case but that the Council for Social Action is free to work out its own program on its own lines. Can you as secretary of the General Council give us your individual opinion as to the relationship between the resolutions and the new Council for Social Action?

"It is of course equally important to us to know the proposed sources from which the $60,000 budget of the Council for Social Action is to be derived."

Dr. Burton replied:

"I take it from your letter that the request for interpretation has reference chiefly to the general resolution on the social gospel and economic problems. My interpretation is that it does not constitute a platform for the guidance of the Council for Social Action and cannot be considered as its marching orders. This interpretation agrees with the genius of the General Council which is a body for taking counsel together and on occasion making recommendations to other bodies. Such recommendations are made to the mission boards. These recommendations are not effective unless and until they are adopted by the bodies to which they are referred. When the General Council passes resolutions affecting the interests of any board or body, they may be ignored or honored in the wisdom of the body concerned.

"As secretary of the General Council, in giving official notifications following the biennial meeting, I addressed the Council on Social Action through its director, Mr. Herbert C. Herring, transmitting copies of actions taken by the General Council which affected the work of the Council for Social Action. These transcripts were selected from forty resolutions or major subdivisions of resolutions. Eight of these resolutions in addition to the act setting up the Council for Social Action were specifically referred to that Council as follows: (1) a plebiscite on peace; (2) asking suggestions of procedure in case of war; (3) urban and rural religions; (4) purification of moving pictures; (5) alcoholic beverages; (6) the rights of the minorities; (7) Asiatic quotas; (8) the following resolution which was not voted by the General Council was referred to the Council for Social Action for consideration:

"Whereas, the selfish profit seeking system of economics has resulted in human misery and want in the midst of abundance, Resolved, that the General Council of the Congregational and Christian Churches endorse and use all available resources of affecting public opinion and social action to help usher in a new social order characterized by cooperative effort for the common good and motivated by the desire to serve."

"Seventeen other resolutions or major divisions of resolutions in the field of the Council for Social Action were voted by the General Council but not referred to the Council for Social Action; that is, one on rural life, five on alcohol, two on war and peace, eight on race relations, and the general resolution on the social gospel and economic problems.

"The interpretation is that no resolution which was not specifically recommended to, referred to, or otherwise committed to the Council for Social Action should be attentive to the opinion of any group within our fellowship, including the local church, the district association, the state conference and especially the General Council; the larger the body expressing opinion and the more representative it is, the more impressive its opinion; therefore the resolutions of the General Council, on subjects germane to the Council for Social Action should be considered as more significant than the expressed opinions of a single local church or of any smaller body. In this connection the Council for Social Action would naturally take into account the size of the vote and any other circumstances connected with its passage. The resolution on the social gospel and economic problems was passed by a vote of 130 to 17. There are over 800 members in the General Council, the small number voting being due to things: (1) the relative small attendance at the time the vote was taken, and (2) the fact that a considerable body of the Council preferred not to be counted on this particular resolution. It should also be noted that the resolution moves in a somewhat different area from that of the Council for Social Action whose chief functions are research and education with occasional action in specific situations, whereas the resolution deals with general principles and large scale social systems.

"In connection with the whole matter also there should be taken into account the fact that the dominant idea of the General Council regarding the Council for Social Action was that it was to be a body entirely free and untrammelled to pursue intensively its research into questions of social moment; to carry on its education in Christian social ideals, and in specific situations to act in its own name as a body of the church.

"Regarding the budget of the Council for Social Action, the General Council does not make appropriations; its function is to make recommendations concerning benevolences. The Commission on Missions at the instance of the General Council is asking the churches to contribute $45,000 for the Council for Social Action. This they may do or refrain from doing. This sum added to the regular budget of $15,000 heretofore appropriated by the Education Society for its Department of Social Relations would make a total of approximately $60,000. The transfer of income from the endowments of any board to the budget of the Council for Social Action is not contemplated. The total amount available from all sources for our purely denominational benevolences in 1933 was $3,539,519. This means that the proposal is to expend approximately 1.7 per cent of our budget in the field of social relations."

WHERE IS HEAVEN?

By J. H. BRENDALL, JR.

The City of God is in the state of the soul or the heart. The boundaries are the limitations of the individual soul's capacity to communicate with and fellowship with God.

The Kingdom of God is within man. It is perfect when God's will is done perfectly. It had individual residence in individual hearts, but its social aspect is realized in man's relations to man, and its divine aspect in man's relation to God.

Man's job here is to bring the kingdom of God upon earth until God's will is done upon earth even as it is done in heaven—or in the heart of one who perfectly obeys God's will and rejoices in doing those things which please God.

Whenever God's will comes to be done in all hearts which claim Christ as Saviour, then heaven will be complete. God already has the purity of the angels. Man's loving response to God's love will delight the heart of God as nothing else could. It meets the parents' hunger for a voluntary love from the child.

That's man's contribution to heaven. Jesus made it possible.—Nashville Advocate.

"I live for those who love me,
For those who are kind and true;
For the heaven that smiles above me,
And the good that I can do."

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Christian Missionary Association was organized at Elon College, May, 1892. Fourteen ministers and laymen effected this organization for the purpose of assisting in home mission work within the bounds of the Southern Convention. Col. E. E. Holland was elected President. He is the only surviving charter member of the Association. Each charter member paid a membership fee of $10.00. The amount paid in at the first meeting was $140.00.

At a later date a Constitution and By-Laws were adopted and the Association became a subsidiary of the Southern Convention. This relation was sustained until 1908 when it was decided to organize such Associations in the local Conferences of the Convention. Since that date the membership of this body has been confined to the Eastern Virginia Conference.

During the forty years of its history a goodly sum has been contributed through this channel, an amount approximately equal to $50,000, or more. The Newport News Christian Church is a direct product of this Association. Liberal contributions have been made to the Christian Temple, South Norfolk, Rosemont, First Portsmouth, First Richmond, Hopewell, Winchester, Waverly, Old Zion and other churches. The results have justified the faith and vision of the founders of the organization.

The last session of the Association met with the First Christian Church Portsmouth, Tuesday, December 4th. Rev. Robert Lee House of Newport News, Va., presided. Rev. R. E. Brittle is the efficient secretary; Mr. B. D. Jones, treasurer; Rev. Joe French, financial secretary.

The membership fees collected totaled $890.00. Sixteen churches have the honor of being represented in this membership and fees collected. Nearly two-thirds of the churches in the Eastern Virginia Conference are not represented in the Association. Every church should be represented by at least one membership. It is possible to reach this goal. Every member of the Association has been spiritually blessed by the sacrifice made in making this contribution. A great majority of the members count it a privilege to be represented in this work.

Appropriations were made to Newport News, Hopewell, Elm Avenue, Richmond, Ocean View and South Norfolk Christian Churches. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Rev. Robert Lee House, President; Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, Vice-President; Rev. R. E. Brittle, Recording Secretary; Rev. Joe French, Financial Secretary; Mr. B. D. Jones, Treasurer. The next session will be held with Rosemont Church, Tuesday after the first Sunday in December, 1935.

Every pastor and every church within the bounds of the Convention should enter upon the work of the Conference year, 1935, with three definite goals, or objectives, in mind: an increase in the membership of every church, the enlistment of inactive members in the work of the church and raising the suggested apportionments, in each church for the general and local enterprises of the church. Approximately one half of the members in the local church are not enlisted in the work of the church. It will not require any great financial outlay to make a determined effort to secure the cooperation of the inactive members in the enterprises of the local organization. This would mean a considerable increase in the financial contributions for current expenses, as well as for general enterprises. Here is a fertile field for every church to develop. This year should be rich in the increase of our membership. Make a determined, systematic effort to raise the Conference Apportionments in full for 1935.

I. W. JOHNSON.

WHAT CAN I DO?

It was certainly a pleasure and a privilege to visit our annual conferences in the interest of the whole program of our church. An increased interest in the affairs of the church was in evidence on all occasions, new members had been added, new work undertaken, larger amounts of money given, and new economies put into practice.

Holding the position that I do, naturally, I was keenly interested in the college and most zealous for its support and progress. Many interested friends came to express their concern for the college and to assure me of their cooperation and, further, to inquire, "What can I do?" Many asked this question, and perhaps it is the question that comes to the mind of every interested leader.

Here is an institution, founded in love, supported in sacrifice, and clung to in faith, absolutely essential to our intelligent existence and effective presentation of Christ to this day and generation, now in need—sorely in need—of friends, of cooperation, and of financial support. Something must be done. What can be done? What can I do? That is a practical question, a personal question, one that should be answered. Will you answer it? Let everyone answer for himself. Think for a moment! The college faculty—and the faculty is essential if a college is to be—has held on with the grip of faith. Many times the way has been dark and support has dropped below the "necessity" line; but still they have remained faithful and true, so that, today, we have a good school—the best in years. We have an enrollment of 352, higher educational standards than the school has ever had, and a spirit, an optimism, that is rarely if ever equalled. Such achievements are encouraging. We should not only hold the gains made but we should continue to go forward. What can we do to help? What can I do?

First, I can preach the gospel of optimism and expound the doctrine of faith. It is our institution; we have made it what it is. If she is to be bettered, we are the physicians. If her burdens are to be made lighter, I must do my part. If I fail, to that extent the institution fails. Not only is the institution a loser on account of my failure, but I myself will be denied the reward when my brethren receive theirs.

Second, I know that with the equipment that we have already placed at Elon College there should be a larger student body. Seats are unoccupied that ought to be filled. Class-rooms are unused that should be frequented by groups of students in search of truth. I know of young men and young women in my neighborhood, in my church, who need just what my college is offering. I will write for a catalogue, I will inform myself, and I will go over and speak to them and tell them what a great institution we have at Elon College. I will do my best to see that they are enrolled at the college.

Third, I have heard from many sources, that the college has been, and is, embarrassed financially, that it is greatly in need of money, that it needs money to pay obligations already assumed, that it needs money to pay faculty members—and they ought to be paid. I have also learned that the present administration is practicing the strictest economy in the conduct of the college. It has a pay roll, including faculty and other employees, numbering more than forty persons. The entire plant has to be heated, cleaned and kept in repairs. Many, many other things that cost money have to be done about the college. And yet, I hear that the total budget for the entire college expenses amounts to only $82,000. This, as I remember, is $100,000 less than the budget that the college has had in other years. It does seem that all the churches and friends of the college should come to the assistance of the administration, now, that the current budget may be balanced. But, I, personally, have a responsibility in helping to meet this budget, a responsibility that I cannot conscientiously shirk. Others may fail, but I cannot. I am not sure what I can give, but I can give something. I can certainly give one-tenth of one month's income for the support of my college, and I will set aside one-tenth of my income for the month of January for my college. And, further, I can see that my church puts the college program and the college appeal before every member and urge all to follow the example that I have set; and, in this way, we will raise our part of the conference apportionment that has been designated for the college by our conference.

Fourth, I can make my decisions known to all friends of the college, and I will. There are many other things that I might do for the college; but just now, as we come to the close of the year, I am determined to do my part along these lines.

L. E. SMITH.

LANETT, ALABAMA.

Our State Conference was very interesting and very well attended. About 75 ministers and delegates were enrolled. We have now in the state 85 churches. Some of them are not active and some of them are not having regular services, but it is the earnest purpose of the Superintendent to have them all supplied.

Our conference, was royally entertained by the church and friends in Lanett, dinner and supper being served in the church. Breakfast was provided in the homes of the good people.

We are still moving along at a reasonably good pace with our work here. We have reduced our debt to $400.00, but it seems now that we will have to do some repairing on our building before we can reduce the church debt much more. We are rebuilding our furnace at a cost of approximately $175.00. Our good women have added a nice little kitchen to the basement to the comfort and convenience of the church. The material for the kitchen was practically all donated by Mr. R. W. Jennings, who is superintendent of the Lanett Cotton Mill. Our church is very appreciative of his liberality. Brother Jennings is a great friend to all the ministers and churches.

Our missionary society is doing nicely with the work they have espoused. Indeed, the missionary society is the inspiration of the church, and they are continually doing something of value for the Kingdom of God.

We are planning a Christmas Service for the children and we hope for a pleasant service.

Incidentally, let me say that if there is anyone who has an organ that would be of service to a church and you would like to make a donation of it to the glory of God, please correspond with the writer at Lanett, Ala. Old State Line Church is in need of an instrument and will greatly appreciate the gift. This is the old church that has been reinstated after a lapse of thirteen years. I am praying that we may hear from someone.

A Story for the Children

A DOG SCHOOL.

"Where have you been this morning, grandpa?" said Allen, as grandpa hung his hat and came on a hook behind the kitchen door and sat down before the open fire in the dining room.

"Well, I have been to school the same as you have," said grandpa.

"Why, you don't have to go to school. It is only boys and girls like Bob and Ruth and Doris and me who have to go to school."

"I know you lads have to go, but I go because I like it, and you never get too old to learn, so I went to school this morning because I wanted to learn something new."

"Why didn't you come into my room and hear me read, that would be something new, for I just learned it this week."

"Well now, that would be something new, sure enough, but I went to the Dog School."

"The Dog School! I didn't know there was a dog school. Dogs don't have to go to school like boys and girls, they are too smart already. My Tim knows a whole lot now and he is only a puppy dog."

"O yes, puppy dogs are just like boys and girls. They have to be taught what to do and how to do it the right way, and the better they are educated the more useful and valuable they are." Now your Tim is supposed to chase rabbits, isn't he?"

"Yes sir, and dad says he is a full-blooded Beagle hound."

"Well, you will have to send him to school before he will know how to find rabbits. The other morning when you went to school Tim came over to see me and when I said 'go find a rabbit Tim,' he began to chase a grasshopper. So you see he doesn't know the difference between a rabbit and a grasshopper, and before he gets to be any account as a rabbit dog he will have to go to school. Or you might get a private teacher for him which would do as well as going to dog school."

"What do you mean by private teacher?"

"Why get some old rabbit dog that knows all about chasing rabbits, and let him take Tim out in the fields and show him how it is done, and if he is as smart as you think he is, he will soon learn how to find rabbits and to follow their trails after they start to run. Now do you understand why dogs have to be taught just the same as boys and girls?"

"Yes, but I don't understand about a Dog School."

"A Dog School is a place where some man takes a number of dogs and trains them for their owners. Don't you know where Mr. Montague has about twenty dogs at that little greenhouse cut along the Valley road?"

"Yes, daddy showed me those dogs one day when we drove along the road, but he did not say it was a Dog School."

"Well, that is a school for training bird dogs, and Mr. Montague has about twenty-five very fine pedigree bird dogs that he trains every day. Some of these dogs come from half a dozen states like New York, Ohio, and Pennsylvania. The owners are rich men who like to hunt birds, so they pay Mr. Montague a lot of money to take their dogs and feed them just what they ought to have to eat, and train them to hunt quail and other game birds. I wanted to learn how he does his training, so I just walked out to the school, and he told me how he taught them, and showed me how they learned to obey. You see, a puppy is just like a boy or girl, the first thing he has to learn is how to obey his teacher. Sometimes he has to punish them so they will remember not to do wrong things the second time."

"And our teacher sometimes paddles boys when they do bad things, or don't mind what she tells them."

"Well, after a young dog learns to obey his trainer, he is taken out into the fields and taught how to find birds. When he finds a bird he must stop and hold up one of his forefeet and if he is a pointer, he will point his foot at the bird in the weeds or grass. This is a school for bird dogs, but there are other schools for other kinds of dogs. You see, there are a great many kinds of dogs just like New York, Ohio, and Pennsylvania. The and girls. Some are trained for one kind of service and others for other kinds. Some are trained to chase deer, and some to chase foxes, and some to chase wolves. Then some are trained to drive cattle, and others to watch over sheep, and bring them home in the evening. Some dogs are trained to lead blind people around on the streets, and others are trained to hunt for people who are lost in the forests or in snow storms. Then there are others trained to trail thieves and robbers, and some are trained to work like horses."

"Yes, I know, Teddy Boyles put harness on his big police dog and made him pull him in a wagon."

"And another way puppy dogs are like boys and girls; they like to play."

"Yes, my Tim and Niger just run and play and 'rastle' and roll over in the grass, just like the boys do at recess time over at the school house."

"Then, some dogs are smarter than others, just like boys and girls."

"Well, Bob's Bud is smart. Why he can play ball as good as a boy, only he can't bat, but he can catch a fly better than John Powell can. And he can catch big rats and bring them in and show them to Aunt Esther, then he will look up and smile just like he was trying to say, 'Just see what I caught!'"

"Yes, I know that Bud is pretty smart, but he is so jealous that he can't bear to see any other dog petted. You know when Bob Helmick's little puppy was out here, while they were away on a vacation, Bud was so jealous he wouldn't let me pet the little puppy. And when the little puppy would come to me Bud would drive him away and

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

MISSIONS IN THE CHURCH SERVICE.

If a pastor wants to make his service of worship Missionary in temper and mood, how shall he go about it? Note the condition: he has to want to do so, to believe in it, before methods need be discussed. Some pastors hesitate because officials or others in the church "do not believe in missions" and will not want missions magnified. One reason for this belief is that the missionary spirit has not been maintained in worship services in the past but has been dragged in as an extra for special occasions. Suppose an officer did not believe in prayer? What would a minister do? Omit prayers? Manage his services so that he had a prayer once in three months with due notice of the event so that anybody who did not believe in prayer could stay away? Or would he try to put such life and power into the whole subject and exercise of prayer that disbelief would be dispelled and opposition withdrawn?

A minister has to believe in missions as an essential part of the Christian program, taking it for granted as definitely as he takes prayer for granted and accepting the duty of making that fact clear to the unbelieving. If he has cloudy ideas on the subject himself and salves his conscience by an occasional missionary outburst, timed caustically to avoid offense, he will not get far.

These notes are for those who believe in missions as an essential element in the Christian faith and want suggestions about "getting the idea across" to a congregation.

1. It cannot be done by any swift and easy process. Christian conviction does not grow in that way. One has to settle down to the long pull and the steady effort. There will be occasional outbursts, but they merely help forward the permanent outcome.

2. Missions need to become atmospheric in the church, to get taken for granted, assumed as past discussion, like the most familiar things of the Christian faith. It may sometimes need to be definitely and positively preached, may once in a while occupy an entire service hour. For the most part this will not be the way it is done.

3. Few men can preach frequent purely missionary sermons and not go stale. Three or four a year will be a good number, and even these must be worked out along varying lines to avoid a sense of repetition. The sermons could take up the great arguments for missions, specially the biblical ones; the great objections; major movements now observable; current criticisms known to the people and perhaps troubling some of them; and such explicit themes. They can never be easy sermons to prepare but will richly repay the labor required.

4. Every pastor can observe one week day prayer meeting each month as a concert of prayer for missions, taking that occasion to give missionary information and inspiration. This meeting is apt to be attended by the most open-minded believers, ready to see reasons for missionary work if they have not already committed themselves to it.

5. The pastor can put himself clearly on record with all his specialized missionary organizations as being heartily with them. The women, the young people, Sunday School workers, Bible class leaders should find that their missionary zeal never surpasses that of their minister who presumably knows the way of Christian faith as well as they do.

6. The missionary element can be introduced as a matter of course into the regular worship.

It can appear at many points. Of course always it will be in the prayer, not stereotyped and formal, as a routine, but vital, prepared, throughout, suited to the point in the prayer when it occurs. The Rabbis said centuries ago that a prayer with no petition for the Kingdom is not a prayer at all. There is room in any real prayer for missions, the development and spread of the Kingdom. Every pastor should bear up in prayer every Sabbath these workers who represent him and his church in difficult and non-Christian parts of the world.

7. The whole service should be set against a wide background. Many sermons are properly adapted to the narrower circle of the parish but the finest truths and the ones best worth preaching would be as true for a man in Africa or India as for the home parish. Their wide application and meaning can be in the minister's mind. Speaking of his minister, a witty man said once that whereas the Psalmist lifted up his eyes unto the hills from whence came his help, their minister made them lower their eyes unto the coal bin whence came their heat! He missed any sense of wide horizons or far-reaching meanings for the truth preached, of world significance in what was being said, of a certain world-wide influence which might issue from this small center. It is a serious and critical charge. Does a minister think in world terms? Does he expect any Kingdom of God to come in his community while there is no Kingdom of God in the rest of the world? Are coal bills and local salaries and local institutions the measure of his concern? Does he ever fall into the trap of supposing that because charity begins at home it can ever stay there without shame? If he says that "he that careth not for his own household is worse than an infidel," does he realize also that caring for one's own is no better than an infidel—that one may do that and be exactly like any decent infidel? It is just when one goes out beyond what most people mean by "one's own" that one becomes at last a Christian in spirit and conduct. That can be part of the warp and woof of a minister's thinking, or he can settle back into something easier and narrower.

8. But no minister who knows the joy of preaching to a missionary-minded church will ever be content to go along with a community-minded or even a nation-minded church. He will find ways of making his whole church life world-minded, planetary-minded. It is illogical to say, "I am a Christian but I do not believe in Missions." The two clauses do not go together in any rational understanding of either of them. The minister's glad task is to make them impossible, replacing them with the term: "I am a Christian, which means, I believe in making Christ known everywhere."—Cleland B. McAfee.

CHRISTMAS WITH A MISSIONARY KEYNOTE.

A Christmas Eve Service.

*Rev. Carl H. Olson, of Kent, Ohio, writing in Church Business, says in part:

"The commercialization of Christmas is a challenge to the Church to reawaken an appreciation of the religious significance of this holy season. Last year our church met this challenge with a Christmas Eve service which extended throughout the entire community.

"In many Christmas Eve services, the effectiveness of the atmosphere created by dim lighting is destroyed when the lights are turned on for the congregational singing of carols. In our program we tried, by entirely eliminating congregational singing, to avoid any interruption to the worship period, that all might feel the deep inspiration and power of quiet, reverent worship.

"Carols played by a quartet of trumpeters stationed in the lighted tower room drew an audience outside the church in addition to the one assembled within. As the service was to close exactly at midnight, pains had been taken to see that the watches of all persons taking part were timed correctly. Carefully prepared programs in the hands of the minister, choir director and pianist gave the closing time of each number, so that adjustments could be made with ease if the service proceeded faster or more slowly than had been planned. The items had been carefully timed at rehearsals, and took place in this sequence:

10:45 to 11:00—Carols by trumpeters, beginning with "It Came Upon a Midnight Clear" and ending with "O Come, All Ye Faithful."

11:00 to 11:03—Prelude by Pianist. As the last note of the trumpets died away, the pianist took up the same carol and played it softly while the robed choir and the minister took their places.

11:03 to 11:04—Foreword by minister.

11:04 to 11:06—"The First Nowell" sung by the choir.

11:06 to 11:09—The Christmas story from Luke.

11:09 to 11:15—Carols by choir.

11:15 to 11:23—"Service of Lights." Pageant by young people.

11:23 to 11:41—A Christmas story read by the minister.

11:41 to 11:47—Christmas anthem by choir.

11:47 to 12:00—Christmas sermonette by minister. The climax of this sermonette was an exhortation that the bells of Christmas Day might find joyous echo in the hearts of men, and coincided with the ringing of the bell which announced the advent of the Day.

"HEATHEN LANDS AFAR."

By MRS. GERTRUDE BOSS.

(An address made by Mrs. Boss before the public meeting of the W. H. and F. Missionary Society of Hopewell Church, November 1, 1934.)

In bringing this mission appeal, I shall not paint a very attractive picture. The following poem portrays the need and misery in "Heathen Lands Afar," for where there is distress there is need of Christ:

"Across the oceans wild and deep,
In other lands afar,
The heathen in their ignorance weep
Without a guiding star:
But to their gods of wood and stone
They sacrifice and pray
And thus endeavor to atone
For sin from day to day.

"The fields are white, the harvest great,
And laborers are few;
No language can the need relate—
'Tis hidden from our view;
But Jesus said that we should pray
For workers to be sent
To tell the world that He's the Way,
And preach that men repent."

I want to reply to those who find it in their heart to say, "Why, in the face of our own destitution, should we be concerned about 'Lands Afar'?" That is an old question. It is a worn out excuse for indifference. I, too, used to ask it; I no longer do. In this modern age we have learned what "The Brotherhood of Man" stands for. Call it modernism, if you please, or any other sort of "ism," I thank God we are marching forward and not backward as some would have us believe. Thanks to our beloved Missionary Secretary, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, I was led to see the light, for, from his teachings I learned that any person whose religious experience is not broad enough to encompass those in other lands and see their need of the gospel of Jesus Christ, is asleep on the steps of his own church, and contributes little to that church of either service or loyalty.

"What do we do for Home Missions?" we are asked. One who objects to foreign missions is sure to do little for Home Missions. "Charity begins at home," they say. So does evangelization. Read about our mission efforts in the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia and North Carolina. The Home Mission Board supports weak churches in all of the conferences needing such help. This very church may necessarily be the grateful recipient of substantial support if our city does not soon recover from its crashing industrial blows.

Again, we are confronted with this question: "Why not confine the activities to the local situation? Is there not enough distress here?" We should not neglect this phase of our Christian duty. We should do this through our committee work—such as sick visiting and relief committees. The attitude here is, rather, "Let not your left hand know what your right hand does" and all this effort is reported monthly under the head of "Personal Work." We do not neglect local work, nor do we forget Home Missions in church work.

I have a personal acquaintance with conditions in some foreign lands through friends who have gone out from Virginia, and with whom I have had close friendships through correspondence. Dr. Mary F. of India, sends all sorts of instructive material from there: pictures of temples, with outline of heathen worship; accounts of meetings with a Maharajah, with his gay headdress and long burnoose; and how he lives and the condition of the women of the household. She tells us the intimate things which rarely reach the press—such as the gaily decorated elephant all in red and gold trappings, coming down by her dispensary one day when she was tending the sore or maimed bodies of little children with the thermometer registering 115 degrees in the shade. A cry went up from a bevy of little brown pickaninnys, "Mam Sahib, come, look, see!" She tells me that she is the only white person in her mission station and the children think she is a witch.

We think we are poor. In India thousands of families live on nothing but beans and millet—never any variation of menu, year in and year out. In Calcutta, alone, there are 80,000 coolies and only ten per cent of them have a shelter over their heads. Many are born and live and die in the streets.

Another dear girl stationed on the west coast of Africa writes us the amusing as well as the amazing. When the ants ate up all her rayon underwear she wrote us she had concluded it was the will of her Heavenly Father that she be clothed with the garb of grace. Her area of blacks is some half million, about whom she is concerned in healing body as well as soul as she is also a nurse and had little difficulty in mastering the language.

Where there is no knowledge of God, civilization is backward and even the agricultural implements of the East are the same as used by men there two thousand years before the birth of Christ, when Abraham was called out of Ur of Chaldee. A plow to them is just a sharpened stick to scratch in the ground. It is impossible to picture to you the vast human harvest fields of India, Japan and Korea, also darkest Africa.

Everywhere one looks one can see throngs of suffering, half-naked bodies surging through the narrow lanes of the villages, with a gaunt look on their faces, looking for something to help. They are looking for the peace of Jesus Christ and know it not.

In China the common salutation is "Ping On." It is expressed daily by China's millions, and means "Have you Peace?" It is the outer expression of the inner longing of the soul. They are crying for peace. They are waiting for peace, and dying without peace. China is as large as the United States, Alaska and the Phillipines combined. If Jesus had begun to preach once a day in the villages of China, he would be there yet, as to time, for it would take one 2,800 years to preach just once a day in all the villages of China.

Japan is overcrowded and pressing on China by war on one side while Soviet Russia is pressing in by peaceful penetration on the other side with her Bolshevism and Atheism. The contest between Atheism and Christianity is on and it depends upon America whether China be Communist or Christian.

In all lands there is a universal belief in evil spirits which are everywhere seeking to destroy them. With no knowledge of Divine protection they are demon controlled and devil possessed. They never pray to the good spirits, but to the evil ones. They say the good ones will do no harm anyway.

In Korea, they erect great devil posts in front of their villages, so all the people can worship the devil. They come together and bow before hideous images. One of our mission workers tells how her meeting was disturbed by what is called a devil possessed woman, and how she sat down beside that woman and prayed that Jesus would loose her and cast out that demon, asking the woman to say, "Jesus, Jesus." At first she could not, but finally she whispered softly over and over, "Jesus, Jesus, Jesus." She said she would go home and try to have her family take down the Devil Shelf in the home and worship the true God. Off she went trudging many miles back to her home village.

The people of the orient are not only living in darkness but dense darkness. No one can ever see the suffering of these millions and be the same again. Something has gone out of the lives of our mission workers and something has come in that has set their souls on fire for the dying millions. One must see it to realize the need.

What do we know about poverty? These people are so poor they oftentimes sell their little girls for the equivalent of fifteen cents in order that the parents may get a little rice to keep them from starving. Some parents are constrained to stamp out the life of the little ones because they cannot stand the maddening cry for food when there is none. This is poverty and it brings death and disease. In India we are told there are 60,000,000 people with but one meal a day. They are born hungry and go to their graves hungry.

After the earthquake in Japan some time ago, the people in that section said they must sell the girls to keep from starving. Did they? All the girls there in that province from 13 to 30 years of age were offered for sale in either slavery or the well-known government protected vice dens.

In China all girls must be married by the time they are 15 years of age for protection or they are public property of any that come along. In one province in China, the girls have a secret compact to commit suicide when they learn they are betrothed and they dissolve the sulphur on the heads of matches and drink it, which is a slow and painful death.

One little wife came to the clinic of one of our missionaries in India and between sobs she told how she had been cruelly beaten on the face and even burnt with her husband's cigarettes till her face was marred for life and she said, "Surely this is the fire of Hell you have told us about."

Missionaries say, "When we reflect upon the blind women who lose their sight from cruel treatment or much weeping and gaze upon the ashen faces with helpless, hopeless misery written there, we pray 'Oh Lord, wake us up in America until we are compelled to do something.'" Let us in America thank God continually for the privileges of helping to carry His gospel to the benighted peoples of "Lands Afar."

"The son of God alone can save,
His blood can sanctify,
And make men noble, good and brave,
And fit them for the sky;
And so let's tell the gospel news
To every race of man
That he may have a chance to choose Salvation's only plan."

I hear you asking if there is no gleam of hope cast athwart those rice fields. Does no ray of light penetrate those infested jungles? Oh, yes! Christianity never had such a golden opportunity as in China today. She is ready for us, ready to accept our Lord!

Once the church has begun to catch the vision of a world Christianity through a renaissance missionary enterprise, men will hear more about the challenge of Christianity to the modern world and together we shall help realize God's purpose in the modern world. Only then can we sing John Oxenham's hymn, "In Christ There Is No East or West." Only then have we obeyed the command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel."

MORE BOOKS FOR THE MOROS.

More books for the Moros and also for the Filipinos and some Americans cut off from libraries. Dr. Frank C. Laubach of Lanao, Dansalan, P. I., puts in another plea for books you are through with. Both Mohammedans and Christians benefit by these volumes. There are 20 or more American men whose only reading supply is in this library, says Dr. Laubach. One of them can't read himself, so his Filipino wife reads aloud to him! The missionaries, too, eagerly scan each volume. What about those books you've finished with? A small package could be sent direct to Dr. Laubach but a query to the American Board about the way to send larger amounts would be wise. "We'll dance and sing for joy when they come!" declares Dr. Laubach.

LAST MINUTE SUGGESTIONS FOR CHRISTMAS.

Plans for Christmas should be practically completed by now. But some of us are slow in getting started, and a few suggestions may yet help.

Please remember that Christmas will be what it ought to be only as church people make it so. You need not expect others to bring honor to Jesus on His Birthday unless those who love Him lead in plans and programs. Others may furnish toys, drinks and dances, but the church must feed the poor, sing for the sick, hold socials that save, and lead in worship of the Babe of Bethlehem.

It is still possible to plan for a carol sing on Christmas eve or Christmas morning. Get a group of singers together and sing the Christmas songs on the streets and at the homes of the sick.

One church I know has just started to work on a play, "A Gift for the Christ Child." It is still possible to prepare a brief entertainment and Christmas tree for the children of your church and the children who attend no church in your community.

Then there may well be some socials planned for the holidays. Perhaps there will be some home from school in whose honor you can entertain. A social at church is fine. Then different members can have the group in their homes. Plan a schedule with as few conflicts as possible. Be sure that the entertainment is wholesome and uplifting. Don't let the Christmas pass without cultivating friendships for Jesus.

And be sure to remember the needy. The Orphanage at Elcn College needs your help. There are people in every community who need help. It is a Christian thing to feed the hungry, and furnish clothes to those who need them. And if we are to be Christian we must share. In that way we bring sunshine where there are shadows.

Now is the time to get busy. The time is short. "The King's business demands haste."

The article, "A Thought" last week was written by Miss Dora Martin of South Norfolk, Virginia, and should have been attributed to her.

WHY DID JESUS COME?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR DEC. 23, 1934.

John 10:7-18.

Have you ever held your Christmas meeting at the twilight hour with the church lighted only by candles? With this setting in mind and just as lovely as you can make it, we suggest the Service of Worship which follows:

Worship Theme: "The Coming of the Christ-Child."

Prelude: A medley of Christmas carols is suggested.

Prologues

"Love came down at Christmas,
Love all lovely, love divine,
Love was born at Christmas,
Star and angels gave the sign.

Worship we the Godhead,
Love incarnate, love divine;
Worship we our Jesus,
But wherewith for sacred sign?

Love shall be our token,
Love be yours, and love be mine,
Love to God and all mankind,
Love for peace and gift and sign.

—Christina Rossetti.

Hymn: "Angels From the Realms of Glory."

(It would add to the effectiveness if several girls could dress in choir robes and form a small choir to lead in the singing and for a few special responses, etc.)

As this is being sung by everyone, have two readers approach from opposite sides of the room dressed in white robes or choir robes. Each should carry an open Bible and take his place at opposite ends of a stand or table on which are a number of lighted candles.

The Christmas Story in Scripture:

(By the two readers. A very soft musical accompaniment adds to the effectiveness.)

First Reader:—Luke 1:26-28.

Second Reader:—Luke 1:29-33 and 38.

First Reader:—Luke 1:39-42; 46-49.

Second Reader:—Luke 2:1-7.

First Reader:—Luke 2:8-14.

Second Reader:—Luke 2:15-20.

Hymn: "We would See Jesus."

First Reader:—Matt. 2:1, 2, 9b, 10, 11.

Poem: "The Lad's Gift to His Lord," by Imogene Clark or any other suitable poem.

Hymn: "O Come All Ye Faithful."

Prayer: (By the leader.)

Prayer Response: "Into My Heart" or "O Come to My Heart Lord Jesus."

Offertory: "Away in a Manger." Chorus sings "We Give Thee But Thine Own" as offering is brought forward.

Discussion: "Why Did Jesus Come?"

1. To seek and to save." Christianity is active. It is a cause. It concerns itself with persons. How much we all need to be "born again." There is no hope of any new social order being a success (any more than the present one can be called a success) unless we have a new type of person to control and direct it. What is it we need to be "saved" from?

2. To do God's will. There was no selfish thought or act in all of Jesus' life. He had one purpose; to do the will of God. What would happen in our community if all Christian young people were committed to that single purpose? How can we know the will of God for our own lives?

3. To reveal the possibilities of human nature. He came to show us the kind of person we may become. Too often we say, "That was all right for Jesus. But we are different. We can't be expected to live like that—we're human." That is usually an excuse we make—not a real reason. In what respects can we duplicate the spirit of Jesus in our lives?

4. To establish a fellowship of disciples, which we now call the church. We need to take the church more seriously. What place are we willing to give it in our plans for 1935?

5. To train others to carry on their work. Do we often think that we have a responsibility as great as that of the first disciple of Jesus? Let the officers for 1935 realize how important their task is. Let each member of the society promise and give his unstinted cooperation.

To save the lost. Luke 19:10.
To save childhood. Matt. 18:1-11.
To reveal God. John 1:10-18.
To redeem men. Col. 1:9:18.
To proclaim God's dominion. Matt. 10:1-8.
To create a new way of life. I Pet. 2:1-25.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE.

THE CHRISTIAN AND THE LORD'S SUPPER.

LESSON XI—DECEMBER 16, 1934.

GOLDEN TEXT: "For as often as ye eat this bread and drink the cup, ye proclaim the Lord's death until He come."—I Cor. 11:26.

LESSON TEXT: I Cor. 11:23-26; also Matthew 26:30.

Today's lesson gives two accounts of the institution of the Lord's Supper, one by Paul, one by Matthew himself. The accounts differ in details, his by direct revelation, while Matthew was present in person and the account recorded in Matthew's gospel undoubtedly came directly from Matthew himself. The accounts differ in details, but they are fundamentally the same. They do not contradict, but rather supplement each other.

PAUL'S ACCOUNT OF THE INSTITUTION OF THE LORD'S SUPPER.

I Have Received of the Lord.

God does not speak directly to men. Through His Holy Spirit He makes known to us things that the wisdom of men cannot find out. It would appear that God made known directly to Paul the facts about the origin of the Lord's Supper. Ministers and teachers know that there are flashes of insight, new light on old truth, which are not the result simply of the human mind or spirit, but the action of the Holy Spirit bringing to our remembrance the things that are Christ's and guiding us into new truth. Let every man by prayer keep his mind and heart sensitive to the Spirit.

I Also Delivered Unto You.

God gives that we may share. Revelation of truth is not an end in itself. He who has truth is under obligation to share the truth with others. Happy is the preacher or teacher who feels that that which he gives others came to him from God. The Same Night In Which He Was Betrayed.

The words are significant. Christ knew that He would be betrayed. He knew who would betray Him. And yet on the same night in which He was betrayed He instituted His memorial meal. No bitterness, no self-pity, no loss of faith in human nature, no complaint, no whining—in serenity and sweetness of spirit He refused to allow the hatred and perfidy of one of His followers to influence His conduct or to spoil His spirit.

He Took Bread.

Bread, "the staff of life," one of the basic foods of life, symbolizing in itself the principle of that which has given its life, being a means of life to others. For as the wheat of the field gives up its life in the making of bread, and thus ministers life unto those who eat it, just so did Christ in giving Himself for us, become to us a means of life.

He Gave Thanks.

The Master had an innate sense of gratitude. He would make sacred that which was to symbolize His broken body, with a prayer of thanksgiving on His lips and in His heart.

This Is My Body.

Did He mean it literally? Did He mean that the bread actually became His body? There are those who say that it is to be taken literally, that when the bread is blessed it becomes the actual body of Christ. But there are those who take the words, not literally, but symbolically, but to whom the Lord's Supper is just as sacred and just as meaningful as to those who hold the opposite view.

Broken For You.

Perhaps the disciples did not fully realize what Jesus meant at the time, but after the tragic events on the Cross, they knew. They knew that He loved them and gave themselves for them.

In Remembrance of Me.

Men have gone to great pains and to great expense to erect memorials to themselves or to their loved ones, and many methods have been adopted to keep alive their memory. The genius of the Master is to be seen in His memorial. No stately monument, no magnificent building, no large endowment, no great foundation, in fact nothing tangible or material at all—simply the eating of a small piece of bread, and the drinking of a small portion of wine, either fermented or unfermented. And yet after nineteen centuries this simple memorial is observed by millions of people, and it has lost none of its effectiveness or its power. "In remembrance of me"—that is why it is done. Was there ever a more simple, or more significant service? Or a more spiritual one? This Man of Galilee, how well He wrought that last night of His life!

And the Cup . . . the New Testament in My Blood.

Again a simple thing—the cup which was used by the Jews in their Passover Feast, containing the fruit of the vine, symbolic again of life losing itself to give life to others. But He gave it immortal significance, for He made it a symbol of a new covenant which He made with them, a covenant signed and sealed as it were with His blood. And as often as they ate the bread and drank the cup in their simple, sacramental meal, they were to think of Him and keep Him in remembrance. How could they forget Him? By the law of association He forever fixed it in the hearts and minds of them and of all His followers.

Until He Come.

His coming has been, and is a subject over which there is wide divergence of opinion and alas, even bitterness of spirit. Whatever else it may mean, the words challenge us to keep up this memorial until His words are fulfilled.

MATTHEW'S ACCOUNT OF THE INSTITUTION OF THE LORD'S SUPPER.

Shed for Many for the Remission of Sins.

Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures. Through faith in Him we can have the remission of our sins. Without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins. He took upon Himself our sins and bare them in His own body on the tree. And by His stripes are we healed—not by magic, in violation of God's laws, but by the operation of a higher law, the divine law of love.

Until I Drink It New With You In My Father's Kingdom.

There is no note of pessimism or defeatism here. One of His disciples might betray Him, one might deny Him, all might forsake Him, but He was quite confident about the future. Some good day the Father's Kingdom would come. We are to help Him bring it in.

When They Had Sung An Hymn.

They went out to face the worst with a song on their lips.

LESSON XII—DECEMBER 23, 1934.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth, peace among men in whom He is well pleased."—Luke 2:14.

LESSON TEXT: Luke 2:8-19; Ephesians 6:1-4; Dt. 4:9-14.

The Christian Home.

The Christian Home—The Christmas Lesson—the themes go naturally together. Christ came into a home, He grew up in a home, He got His training in a home, He owed much to His home, He went often into the homes of others, He emphasized the importance of the home, and He has glorified and redeemed the home. The Christian home is one of the finest fruits of Christianity.

And it is one of the most strategic points in Christianity. If our homes are truly Christian, if atmosphere and environment and training are Christian, if the spirit of Christ rules between husband and wife, father and mother, parents and children, and if the principles of Christ are taught by precept and by example, the world would experience a great transformation. What a difference it would make if our homes were really Christian, if Christ really lived and reigned in our homes. But alas, the home is one of the many areas of modern life which Christ is in danger of losing. There are many forces and factors which are threatening to undermine the sanctity, and to destroy the wholesome influence of the home. Divorce, modern economic instability, divergence of interests, the entrance of women into business life, loose sex relations, many bad movies, etc., assail the integrity of the home and make light of its sanctity. It would be a good thing if we would think at this Christmas season about our own homes, and to take stock of them in the light of Christ's ideals and spirit. It would be Christmas indeed, if parents would dedicate themselves anew to Christ and seek during the New Year to make their homes more Christian if children and young people would pledge anew their loyalty to the home and to Christ's ideal for the home.

Christianity and the church must not surrender the home. There are other areas of life which are important but which are not imperative. The home, even more than the church, is absolutely indispensable to the program of Christianity. Let Christmas call us back to the Christian home.

The Christmas Story.

"There were shepherds"—humble, unlettered, simple-minded, humble-hearted men. It was to them that the message of the Saviour's birth came. Not to the self-righteous, proud, self-sufficient scribes and Pharisees, but to shepherds did God reveal His good tidings first. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him. He hides His truth from the wise and prudent and reveals them unto babes, unto those whose minds are open and whose hearts are responsive.

"The glory of the Lord shone round about them." The commonplace tasks of life light up with new meaning when the truth of God shines upon them, and the spirit of the Christ finds a place in them.

"Good tidings of great joy"—the gospel means just that "good news." It is not good advice, it is good news. It is the news that brings abiding joy into the hearts of those who hear it and believe it and act upon it.

"For all the people"—the missionary note was struck before even the content of the good news was revealed. The good news was for all peoples. It must be shared with others. Indeed it is only as it is shared that it really becomes vital in our own lives.

"For there is born to you . . . a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord." To you—it was a personal message; a Saviour—one who would save His people from the penalty and the power of their sins. He was Christ, the Anointed one, the One for whom Israel had looked so long, the One-Who-Should-Come and He was to become Lord, (Continued on page 15.)

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

MONDAY.

WALKING WITH THE LORD.

"And what doth the Lord require of thee but to . . . walk humbly with thy Lord."—Micah 6:8.

There is no scripture which makes God seem more personal and brings Him into a closer communion with men, than this one. It makes God personal and a friend with whom we may walk and talk. It gives us a God who feels our own impulses, listens to our talk, appreciates our point of view, hears our prayers, sympathizes with our weaknesses, and in turn, we draw from Him the inspiration of good feeling and all good action.

To walk humbly is to walk as a little child who is walking with his dad, asking questions inquiringly about everything and accepting answers with implicit confidence and trust. It was for this very spirit that Christ called us unto Himself, "Learn of me, for I am meek and humble, and ye shall find rest for your souls."

Prayer—O God, grant that we may be filled with this humility, with Thy grace and truth and thus be somewhat like our Master, Jesus our Saviour.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

LOVE AGAINST FEAR.

"Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment:—there is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear."—I John 4:17, 18.

Everyone should see the motion picture, "Death takes a Holiday." It is based upon this scripture and would teach that he who loves as Christ teaches us to love, has no fear of trials, criticisms or defamations of character, not even of death; and that to such people, death is a friend rather than an enemy, and is not an experience to be dreaded. It is the prize of the glory of the spiritual life. It is the master grace that transforms the soul of this life to the soul of the life beyond. He who loves with a perfect heart,—a love that is fostered with sincerity and from purely unselfish motives, has this power over fear.

To all of us there come days of inner experience which are days of judgment when we stand at the bar of conscience and meet God face to face. In these days we see ourselves, and the searching eye of truth is set upon us. What boldness can we have then if we have not a pure heart of love? This is what John is talking about as even more important than the judgment of death. When Jesus is in our souls, it puts love on the throne and the everyday judgments will not find us wanting, but rather we will find ourselves defended in Divine affections. Thus to be able to stand in the Eternal Light is the perfection of love.

Prayer—Our Father, Thou alone can preserve our going and our coming, our down-sittings and our uprisings. We pray to the throne of Thy grace for that perfect love that will give us this, and a clear conscience that suffers no enemy to come between.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

A FALSE WITNESS.

"Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor."—Exodus 20:16.

A "False Witness" means more than telling a lie, or going into court and swearing to an untruth.

It refers to fraud, cunning, insincerity, hypocrisy, wrong impressions, a wink of an eye that is intended to deceive.

It may go deeper still. One may get into mean pitiful habits of setting traps for his own praise, or contriving to take the best for himself, of "ducking" our share of expenses, or trouble, or ill-will, and thus acquire a false living as a second nature that one never thinks of repenting of.

Talking about "grieving the Holy Spirit," this is it; for all this is against truth, justice and honesty, and is hateful to the Lord. When one changes his words towards his neighbor at his back different from those spoken when before his face, speaking fair as long as he is before him, but critical and evil when he is gone and cannot hear him; when one makes a show of friendship as long as he thinks it will serve him a selfish purpose, but speaks roughly as soon as that usefulness is gone; surely there can be but few greater griefs to the Holy Spirit.

Prayer—Our Father and God, help us to so live that we can give everybody an immediate sense of truth and honesty. Grant, Lord, that we may do everything well, even as Thou dost consider things well. In His name we ask it.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

CHECKING UP ON SELF.

"Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves."—II Cor. 13:5.

A story comes to us of an old darky who was engaged with Col. Bob Witherall, we'll say. He had been there but a few weeks, when he dropped in at the drug store, close by, and requested permission to use the telephone. It was granted. On the phone he was heard to say: "Dat you Col. Bob? Yassah, well sah, I seed from de paper dat you want a colored man to wuk aroun' de house, I thought maybe I'd like to hav' de job. Was dat you say, suh? Say you dun got a man? Yassah, well is he satisfact'ry? Yas sah, dat's all right, sah. Goodbye colonel."

As uncle Jim was leaving the phone the drug-gist said, "Say, you want a job?"

"No, sah, boss, I don' want no job."

"Well, wasn't that what you were asking the colonel for?"

"Yassah, but I was jes checking up on myself to see if I was satisfactory."

Not bad at all. We all could do a little more of that checking up on ourselves.

Prayer—Our Father, without Thee in our lives, we shall fail in all things. With Thee there is no failure. Burn this into our souls, even if we have to suffer the burning. Be Thou our life, and we will be Thine forever.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

LIVING BY THE WORD.

"Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."—Matt. 4:4.

Living by the Word of God means to share the eternal life of God. When a man takes that share, it is not what he gets, nor what he accumulates, nor what he eats; but it is a standard of value that whatever elevates and perfects his personality, it makes him great and good, strong and beautiful, and he values everything that comes from the mouth of God as such and endeavors to live by it.

God's word gives us all this and more; it gives us truth; it binds us to do something which we have not been doing, and we see that obedience thereto gives us a clearness, a consistence, and a permanence of moral life which we hardly dreamed of before.

Prayer—Our Father and our God, speak to us from behind every veil and teach us and rule us by Thy grace. Teach us how to seek out and to find satisfaction to those deeper cravings of our souls. We ask it in the name of Jesus Christ.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

THE UNIVERSAL OUGHT.

"Can it be that the rulers indeed know that this is the Christ?"—Jno. 7:25-36.

The common people of the Jews drew a shrewd conclusion from the freedom with which our Lord was allowed to teach and to work His miracles. "The rulers," said they, "must know that He is the Messiah, or they would imprison Him."

In all our dealings with others, if they do wrong, we can confidently say to them, "You know better." "You know you ought not to do this." "You know you ought to do that."

However a man may blaze out against such a statement, his conscience may be confidently challenged. The leaders of men do not stop to argue, any more than Christ did. They lay down the law. They announce the immutable right. This is the difference between a prophet and a pedant.

Prayer—Thus may we deal with our own hearts O God. Thus may we hold ourselves sternly to the well-known Ought.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

THE HOLY FAMILY.

LESSON: Luke 1:5-80.

Our calendar for December brings us Unterberger's conception of the Holy family, which, since early Christian times, has been a favorite theme in art. In the picture there is Jesus' cousin, the infant, John the Baptist, who was six months older than Jesus, and Elizabeth, the mother of John.

The coming of Jesus at this time of the age was heralded by a great revival of the prophecies, we are told, even as in the case of John, who though he left no written prophecies and worked no miracles, was declared by our Lord to be the greatest of the prophets.

"O Word of God incarnate—

It is the golden casket

Where gems of truth are stored;

It is the heaven drawn picture

Of Thee, the Living Word."

—Wm. W. How

Prayer—Our Father, this is a day of Jesus, of His coming into the world. Make it a day of His coming into our lives more fully than ever before. Make it a week of praying, that midst all our busy cares we may ponder Him and His meaning to us and to the world, enough, that we may get a proper connection of Him and His life. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

CHRISTMAS WITH A MISSIONARY KEYNOTE.

By having a pageant, story, etc., of a missionary application and giving the sermonette the same keynote—all most appropriate to the occasion—the foregoing would make a deeply inspiring missionary presentation. An abundance of such material is to be found in most denominational literature departments. Excellent Christmas pageants and plays for schools, churches and clubs are listed in a catalog leaflet by The Woman's Press, 600 Lexington Ave., New York City.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D., Pastor.

GOD'S PRODIGAL WORLD.

By JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D.

"For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through Him might be saved."—John 3:16, 17.

It is no wonder that God loves the world. How beautiful it is. And He created it. It is His. The work of His hands, the order of His mind, and the expression of His life. How wonderfully our world is made. If we look out through the telescope until our eyes are able to see far into ilimitable space; and if we look through the microscope until we discern the tiny world within the dewdrop; we have not yet seen the great powers, and possibilities, and handiworks of God, for to see that we must look into the depths of the human life and soul. There is the crowning work of God. We stand awe-struck before the expanding valleys and towering mountains and call it grand; but if we could see what God sees in us: our power to love, think, achieve, aspire, build,—we would probably fall on our faces in awe at such a vision. With the psalmist we would sing: "What is man? . . . Thou hast made him a little lower than God." Jesus taught that the soul of man was more than the singing pleiads, and the wealth of the worlds within them.

We cannot measure God's great world. God can. And seeing it, He has made His children so much greater and better than His material universe in order that they might have dominion over the works of His hands. And what a dominion! And men and women are climbing its heights. But as they climb upward the physical scale, let them never forget that the greatest depths yet are the depths within. God greatly loved the world because He knows how greatly it needs and deserves His love. He knows its value. He knows the overwhelming greatness of personality, of goodness, of love; and He sees the infinite in each individual about us more clearly than the wise scientist sees the worlds within the dewdrop.

God has safe-guarded the worlds within the dewdrop. They cannot be lost. But He has made the world within us on a much higher scale,—a scale divine,—and that sovereign power of choice, of will, of mind, makes room for the choice of prodigality, or of destruction.

God would save the spiritual world with a spiritual instrument, namely, faith. And He has given the most tangible, real, and understandable object and manifestation for the building of that faith, namely an individual, Jesus. Nicodemus was standing in the presence of God's safeguard for the sinning world.

The world may see God in Jesus,—God's gift to the world. It will see His love, mercy, long-suffering, and goodness. No wonder it waited at His feet on the mountainside when He preached His marvelous sermons. They were willing to suffer the physical hunger if they might but have the spiritual food He was giving them. But Jesus gave them both. It is God's will that the hungry world should be fed. Looking upon Jesus we learn that. It is God's will that the sinner should be forgiven, his heart and life changed, and that he should go in a new strength to sin no more, lest a worse thing should befall him. Looking upon Jesus we learn that. It is God's will that the children should be His in care, in culture, and comfort and that they should grow up in a Christian nurture rather than into broken lives, and wasting opportunities. Looking on Jesus we learn that. And so the world may go looking upon Jesus, and seeing from a thousand, or more, measurements how far away it is from God, from home,—yea, how prodigal it is!

Looking upon Jesus the world may see how bitter are its husks, how ragged are its garments, and how sick its soul. And seeing Him and hearing Him, it may crucify Him, but my Christian friends, it is yours and mine to so live and serve that it will turn again home and honor Him as its leader and its Lord. It cannot be doubted that the world has its hunger-pains for goodness, and none can help it but the Father.

Coming out from the world's crowd has ever been its Nicodemuses with their age-old question: How can a man have this new life? How can he know the power of its strength? How can he have working within him a spirit that changes his old attitudes, and ideals, and set him on a new plane? It is the question of a man who has tried life. A man with responsibilities, powers, and duties. A ruler of the Jews. How can the life that is already in the wrong road be set a-going in the right direction? Jesus' answers were for the purpose of taking his hope off of self, and centering them by faith on God. It would make him a new creature. Nicodemus never forgot that night. He later risked his own reputation and life by deliberately stepping out on the side of Jesus even though He was crucified, for He was being resurrected in love already in the depths of his soul.

And coming out ever from the world's crowd have been the rich, young rulers inquiring a step further; for Nicodemus was a man looking at life which was in a muddle, and wondering how it could be made here and now better. Why is the need of living on such a low, uninspiring plane? was his question. How can a life be saved, and redeemed here and now? But this other rich, young ruler was inquiring about the "heavenly things" that Jesus deliberately left out of His conversation with Nicodemus. In other words, this young fellow standing in the possession of a lovely enough life for this present world by most earthly measurements wanted to know how he was to have an abiding assurance that life was to be forever. What must I do to inherit eternal life? And Jesus' answer was a prescription for the present life: Personal goodness, and public service,—thinking of self in the matter of personal godness, and forgetting self in the matter of personal gain. And thus the Christ is calling the world back to God. In other words, heaven is beyond the present life; travel the road of the present life in loving companionship with the Christ in goodness and service and heaven will come naturally on that road.

And a third persistent problem was sin. It was ruining God's beautiful world. Out from the crowd came Magdalenes, the sin-stricken men borne by others, and Jesus spake away their sins. For that God gave Him. For that He died upon the cross. For that He gave Himself. In the beginning I spoke of the awe-impelling distances of the telescope, and the awe-impelling revelations of the microscope; but if we really behold the Lamb of God giving Himself in death upon the cross for us, and appreciate the meaning of that our doubts will clear away, and we too will fall at His feet, not in awe merely, but in everlasting worship and devotion.

And lives thus sublimated by faith in Him, individual as they are and must be, will eventually be enough to save the world. Life by faith to the believing individuals that the world may be saved. There is the salvation of the social order, through personal belief in a personal God.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

We reached and passed two rungs in our financial ladder this week. That is fine! We now lack three thousand two hundred and eighty-seven dollars and nineteen cents of being to our goal. How much is your church and Sunday School doing to help push us up to it? If every church will do its share we will reach it. Climbing a financial ladder to reach a goal is hard climbing, indeed. The more help you give us the easier it is. Let everybody push till we get up to it.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

Lord of lords and King of kings, and of the increase of His kingdom there was to be no end. That was indeed good news.

"And this is a sign to you . . . a Babe wrapped in swaddling clothes and lying in a manger." The Christ as a baby! The Lord lying in a manger! God works in mysterious ways His wonders to perform. He would glorify the common-place, He would show that life does not consist in the abundance of the things which a man possesses, He would glorify childhood, He would show even the humblest man that God was really with us, He would show us that He works in orderly and natural processes, for that baby grew as any other baby grew.

"A multitude of the heavenly host praising God."—They announced His birth with songs and the Christmas music is to me the most beautiful music of all. Christianity is a singing religion. And it is a singing religion because it puts a song in the hearts of men.

"Peace among men"—peace between a man and himself, peace between a man and his fellowmen, peace between a man and his God. The original message was a message of peace and good will. Alas that we cannot keep the spirit of Christmas throughout the year.

"Let us go even unto Bethlehem"—they followed the light they had, they were not disobedient to their heavenly vision, they followed the Gleam, they acted on their highest impulses.

"And they found the babe lying in a manger"—because they followed the Gleam, because they followed their highest impulses, they found Him who was the desire of all nations.

"They made known concerning the saying which was spoken to them about the child"—they told others what they had experienced at first-hand. The news was too good to keep. If a man really has Christ he will have to share Him with others.

"And when they heard it they wondered"—and folks are still wondering. There are things about it that we cannot explain. Indeed the Christmas story is not so much to be understood as to be felt, not to be explained as to be experienced. And let no man's lack of understanding keep him from experiencing the blessing of the Christ-child's spirit upon his heart.

"But Mary . . . pondered them in her heart"—Every mother is her own translator and interpreter of that verse. Ah, the things mothers ponder in their hearts as they cuddle the new-born babies to their hearts! The sense of mystery and awe and wonder and hope and fear and longing and resolve that only mothers know under such circumstances!

A Merry Christmas And A Happy New Year To All Readers Of These Notes.

A DOG SCHOOL.

put his head up for me to pet him. And some boys and girls are that way, and they want every thing for themselves and want people to pay more attention to them than to anyone else. And if the teacher don't pet them they think they are not treated right at school. They always want the biggest apple, and the most candy and want to be first in all of the plays."

"Well, my Tim is not like that, he will play with any puppy, or with Ruth's kitten, and he don't mind if I play with Niger or pet Bud or the kittens."

"Yes, I know, your Tim is a nice little doggie, but he don't know how to chase rabbits yet, and you will have to send him to the dog school or get a private teacher for him before he knows anything but play, and that is all that boys know until they go to school."

"Well, I am going to school now, and maybe daddy will have somebody to teach Tim, so we will both be useful and know how to do our kind of work.—By Grandpa in the M. P.-R.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

No CHRISTIAN SUN next week. The editor, managing editor, printers and all will join in keeping Merry Christmas. And we wish a happy and wholesome Christmas to all SUN readers.

It is requested that treasurers of Women's Missionary Societies, North Carolina Conference, bear in mind to send their quarterly remittances to Mrs. C. H. Stephenson, Treasurer, P. O. Box 1486, Raleigh, N. C., Mrs. Stephenson being the successor to Mrs. W. R. Sellars, Burlington, N. C.

Rev. B. J. Earp, 763 Park Avenue, Greensboro, N. C., is financial secretary of the Christian Mission Association, North Carolina and Virginia Conference, to whom remittances should be made by members and others transmitting money to the Association. The treasurer of the Association is Mrs. C. H. Rowland, N. Edgeworth St., Greensboro. These are the officers elected at the recent session of the Association to handle the funds the coming year.

Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, pastor of First Church, Durham, was the preacher in Dr. Rowland's absence at First Church, Greensboro, Sunday, the 16th, 11:00 A. M. Rev. Milo J. Sweet, Elon College, will occupy the Greensboro pulpit next Sunday morning, using as his theme: "And The Glory of The Lord." The church, through its devout and interested laymen, is making marvelous progress, financially and spiritually, while their beloved pastor, Dr. C. H. Rowland, is gradually climbing back to health and strength at Florida Sanitarium, Orlando, Fla.

Rev. G. H. Veazey, Wadley, Ala., secretary, wishes it announced through THE CHRISTIAN SUN that the regular Fifth Sunday District Meeting of the Alabama Conference will be held with Caver's Grove Church, December 30th. "We feel," says Brother Veazey, "that these meetings are very valuable. I am serving McGuire's chapel this year, my old home church, which has been without service almost a year. The prospects are bright because of so many children living in that community now. I am also serving New Harmony, which has a fine group of young people and is doing fine work."

The day of Christian martyrs is not passed. There are yet some who are faithful unto death. Rev. John C. Stam and wife of Patterson, N. J., members of the China Inland Mission, are among the most recent who have offered their lives in the name and for the sake of their Lord. They went far into Inland China where Communism is rampant, to carry the message of love and the living God to the most desperate and the most needy, and they were murdered by Chinese Communists last week. Their infant daughter, however, was spared, the sheer helplessness of the child possibly appealing to the godless and heartless murderers.

The Hand-Book for 1935, issued by our Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life (for Congregational and Christian Churches) No. 287 Fourth Avenue, New York, has as its theme this year, "The Value and Method of Daily Bible Reading." It contains a year's guide for the reading of the Bible, prepared especially for this edition. This Hand-Book should be not only in the hands of ministers and interested laymen, but in every home of our fellowship. The price is only five cents per copy; ten or more, four cents per copy; $3.00 per hundred, postpaid. If a pastor wishes to make a Christmas present of real worth to the members of his congregation, he can find nothing more fitting and more helpful for the whole year than a copy of our Hand-Book.

Our Burlington Church had a great and good day, Sunday, December 16th. The event was celebrating the 50th anniversary of the beginning of our church in Burlington. Dr. A. B. Kendall, Girard, Pa., pastor of the church for eight years, preached at the 11:00 o'clock service to an audience that packed the main auditorium and Sunday school rooms adjoining. Dr. P. H. Fleming and Dr. J. U. Newman, two previous pastors, conducted the communion service. The ladies and friends served a bountiful luncheon in the church dining room, and more than an hour of delightful friendship was enjoyed. In the afternoon there were historical sketches of deep interest, one by Mrs. W. H. Carroll reviewing the first twenty-five years, another by Attorney D. R.

CHRISTMAS TEARS.

The day returns by which we date our years:
Day of the joy of giving—that means love;
Day of the joy of living—that means hope;
Day of the Royal Child—and day that brings
To older hearts the gift of Christmas tears!

Look, how the candles twinkle through the tree,
The children shout when baby claps his hands,
The room is full of laughter and of song!
Your lips are smiling, dearest—tell me why
Your eyes are brimming full of Christmas tears?

Was it a silent voice that joined the song?
A vanished face that glimmered once again
Among the happy circle round the tree?
Was it an unseen hand that touched your cheek
And brought the secret gift of Christmas tears?

Not dark and angry like the winter storm
Or selfish grief—but full of starry gleams,
And soft and still that others may not weep—
Dews of remembered happiness descend
To bless us with the gift of Christmas tears.

Ah, lose them not, dear heart—life has no pearls
More pure than memories of joy love-shared.
See, while we count them one by one with prayer,
The Heavenly hope that lights the Christmas tree
Has made a rainbow in our Christmas tears!

Henry Van Dyke.

Fonville, reviewing the last twenty-five years of the church's history. There were other brief addresses that made the afternoon service quite appropriate and interesting, and the great audience felt that Burlington's Home-Coming was an event worth while.

Our Presbyterian friends are certainly showing the rest of us something in the field of church service, financial and spiritual recovery, that is worth thinking about and emulating. One of their churches in Roanoke, Va., as reported in THE SUN previously, made an adventure in tithing for thirteen weeks, and the results were so amazing that they are setting other churches on fire with zeal. This special to the Daily News, Greensboro, should be an item of interest to all of us:—"Shelby, Dec. 16.—Two hundred elders, deacons and pastors representing 27 churches of the Kings Mountain presbytery agreed here this afternoon to recommend adoption by their congregations of the Belmont finance plan, whereby each member of a congregation gives to the church 10 per cent of his income. This plan, as old as Abraham, but new to modern church finances, is receiving wide interdenominational favor in the state. More than 15 Presbyterian churches have already tried it, some of them reporting increases of income of nearly 200 per cent." It is worth recalling again that the Belmont Presbyterian Church, Roanoke, Va., Rev. G. L. Whiteley, pastor, had 120 members whose average weekly earning was $18.00 and by agreeing to tithe for a period of thirteen weeks cancelled a $2,600.00 indebtedness on the church, paid current expenses and had money left in the treasury. Think of it! A church with 200 members with an average income of $18.00 per week would mean a church income of $18,720 a year under the tithing plan. We are going to recover in the work of the church when we adopt the plan of the Lord for financing His kingdom, and that plan plainly and emphatically taught in the Bible is tithing.

CHRISTMAS OFFERING FOR MINISTERIAL RELIEF.

It is devoutly hoped that all pastors will take the Christmas offering for ministerial relief, since our beneficiaries, ministers, their widows and dependents, are looking to us for this offering and we cannot disappoint them. The offering may be sent to J. O. Atkinson, Chairman, Board of superannuation, Elon College, N. C., or to Dr. Lewis T. Reed, Secretary, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York, the funds in either case reaching the beneficiaries for whom the offering is taken. By vote of the Southern Convention, this offering will be credited to the church on the regular Conference apportionment. It is certainly most fitting that at this Christmas time we remember in love and consideration those who have given years of their strength and life to preaching the gospel and to those who were and are dependent on them.

ELDER MEMORIAL.

The friends of Rev. and Mrs. H. W. Elder, deceased, of Richland, Ga., will welcome the opportunity to making contributions for the erection of a suitable marker and memorial to be placed at their graves in the family plot at Richland, Ga. No ones more deserving were ever members of the Christian Church. They both sacrificed their very lives that the Christian Church might be organized in Georgia and Alabama, and that the work of the Kingdom might be carried on through the church into the years to come. I have information of this movement from Mrs. D. S. Hogg, of Richland, a devoted friend of the family and a faithful member of the church.

It was my privilege to spend six months in the Elder home. I was there for my first brief preparation for my life's work. No one could have been more thoughtful, considerate, or patient than they were. It was my first experience away from home, and they were father and mother to me. I am grateful for what they did and for this opportunity of expressing my gratitude.

Brother Elder travelled constantly and continuously, preaching and organizing churches throughout the states of Georgia and Alabama. He organized more than twenty-five churches during his lifetime. Mrs. Elder remained at home, reared a family, and looked after business in general. Their lives were fruitful for the Christian Church. They were, literally, placed as "a living sacrifice on the altar." Brother Elder's last efforts were to raise money for the erection of a building for, what was then, Bethlehem College at Wadley, Alabama. It was while engaged in this task that his health failed, and he was stricken, from

THE FIRST CHRISTMAS.

(Luke 2:8-20.)

'Twas on the lonely fields away
In ancient Palestine,
The Angel brought the blessed news
Of Christ the Lord Divine.

The shepherds watched their flock by night
And lo, the Angel came,
And God revealed His glory then,
The glory of His name.

The shepherds were sure afraid,
But the Angel said "fear not,"
I bring to you good tidings now,
Upon this lonely spot.

Great joy to you 'twill not only be,
But all men everywhere
Shall share with you this Blessed Hope—
The Father's holy Heir.

"For unto you is born this day,
The Saviour of all men;"
Who is our only blessed Hope
To save us from our sin.

"The Babe you'll find in swaddling clothes,
And in a manger lying."
Just then the great Angelic host
Broke forth in music crying.

"Glory be to God on high
Heav'n's greatest work is done;
All men on earth rejoice at this—
The birth of God's dear Son."

The Angels then returned again
To heaven from whence they came.
The shepherds said, "Let's go in haste
And see this Holy Fame."

They found the parents and the Babe
Just as the Angels told them,
Then broke the news to other men
That they too, might behold Him.

CHRISTMAS NIGHT.

(The following is from one of our own poets and, though printed in THE SUN of one year ago, is worthy of reprint, re-reading, and re-learning.)

On Christmas Eve, for one still night,
We turn our faces to the Light;
We let our weary thoughts arise
To meet His angels in the skies,
Perhaps our only song this year.

On Christmas Eve we will forget
The trials and sorrows we have met;
And see, alone, that gleaming star,
That led the Wise Men from afar;
It will guide us if we but pray,
Perhaps our only prayer today.

On Christmas Eve, 'tis then it seems
That living is but tangled dreams,
We rid our hearts of earthly care
And find the angels singing there,
For one still night, almost divine,
A Star into our souls will shine.

THE TESTIMONY OF THE TOWERS.

What does it mean, that nickels and dimes have erected the towering Wrigley Building in Chicago and the Woolworth Building in New York?

Only this: that when a business can get money from many, in regular, frequent, small amounts there is no limit but the sky to that business.

Wrigley and Woolworth have taught the crowd how to spend money steadily "without feeling it."

The towers which compel the eye in America's first two cities testify that these men have acted according to a great secret of success; small amounts, from many people, paid regularly, and paid unceasingly. The towers testify that this is good business. When will the churches learn?

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

"ON EARTH PEACE."

The above is a quotation from the Angel of the Lord. Luke, the writer of the third gospel says so. It was not the entire song of the Angel, but the center and soul of it. Fact is that not only one Angel but a multitude of heavenly beings joined in the chorus which swelled to such volume that it frightened the shepherds who heard it. The message was good and glad enough—"on earth peace." The refrain was "goodwill toward men" or "peace on earth toward men of goodwill."

We mortals have picked up that immortal refrain and try with all our skilled and cultured voices, to sing like the Angels sang, using the very words that they used and repeating, as far as we can, the melody with which they thrilled and frightened the shepherds on the Judean hills on the first Christmas Eve.

Nineteen hundred years and thirty-four more have now passed, and we are still letting the Angels sing and still thrilled, but—What are we doing about it? Again and again, let us inquire, what are we doing about it? "On earth peace," but we haven't peace. In the year of our Lord 1934, when we celebrate the song and the coming of the Angels, there are more soldiers in training to kill and to be killed, more ships built or in building to sink or be sunk in horrible combat, more national antagonism, more racial prejudice and hatred, more rumors and threats of war than in any century of the past, since the Angels sang, "On earth peace."

This is not all. The most subtle and daring skill and genius of mankind is employed and directed, not to the arts of peace and goodwill, but to the science of man's undoing and destruction. If the skill and genius employed by the gangster and the gods of war for the ruin of man could be by some miracle directed to bringing peace on earth and developing goodwill among men, this whole world would soon be singing, with glad acclaim, the song the Angel sang and the hearts of mankind would thrill with new delight. When shall we do more than sing or say it? When shall mankind turn his genius, his wit, and his wisdom to bringing peace on earth and using goodwill toward men?

Only when the world shall come to realize that there is a Name, even the Name of which the Angels sang, which can and will bring peace on earth and goodwill among men. When that Name is proclaimed and accepted, there will be not a half-hearted, pietistic or a meaningless Christmas, but a Christmas of joy and cheer and bliss among the nations and the peoples of the earth. The author is not known, but his truth is prophetic and eternal:

"I know a soul that is steeped in sin,
That no man's art can cure;
But I know a Name, a Name, a Name,
That can make that soul all pure.

"I know a life that is lost to God,
Bound down by things of earth;
But I know a Name, a Name, a Name,
That can bring that soul new birth.

"I know of lands that are sunk in shame,
Of hearts that faint and tire;
But I know a Name, a Name, a Name,
That can set those lands on fire.
Its sound is a brand, its letters flame,
I know a Name, a Name, a Name,
That will set those lands on fire."

WONDERFUL.

Isaiah 9:2-7.

The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light; they that dwell in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined.

Thou hast multiplied the nation, and not increased the joy; they joy before Thee according to the joy in harvest, and as men rejoice when they divide the spoil.

For thou hast broken the yoke of his burden, and the staff of his shoulder, the rod of his oppressor, as in the day of Midian.

For every battle of the warrior is with confused noise, and garments rolled in blood; but this shall be with burning and fuel of fire.

For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Father, The Prince of Peace.

Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this.

(The wonder of the above is that it was written over seven hundred years before the event and not immediately afterwards, the Prophet himself writing as if the event was in his own time transpiring or had transpired.—J. O. A.)

CHRISTMAS.

"A little child shall lead them." None other than a child could lead the world into such a holiday and season as Christmas. The real Christmas spirit this year and every year, the Christmas holiday this year and every year will be found most perfectly in those homes where there are children. It is their season. They compel us. They lead us. Their young life fills us with joy, and the hope of an eternal Christmas. Not that Christmas will not be observed in homes where there are no children, for the spirit of childhood will flow over into other homes than where children are. But the spirit of the child, the abandon, the glow, the fervor, the unselfishness of childhood, must be there if there is to be any Christmas.

It is, indeed, a glorious and unspeakable thing that the birth of a Child in a manger, in far away Bethlehem of Judea, should grow in its significance and power, should increase in volume and momentum, till its influence spreads among the nations. But so it is, and we celebrate Christmas.

We have a long way to go yet, but of His Government there shall be no end. Only one-third of the human race, we are told, will observe Christmas this year, two-thirds of the family of man knowing nothing of the event or, knowing, will only regard it indifferently as some celebration to a pagan or an idol god somewhere. Two-thirds of the human family are yet to be taught the Name of the Child and the power, the love and the life of the Child. The two-thirds wait on the one-third till we who know shall tell those who do not know; and so in our Christmas songs and joys and delights we shall long for that time when the whole world shall have the spirit of a child, and be led by that spirit.

THE FIRST AMERICAN NEWSPAPER.

The first American newspaper bearing the name "Public Occurrences," was published on September 25, 1630. The National Christian Advocate calls attention to the fact that the reason the paper lived only four days was because it told the truth. The paper stated the reason of its existence in the following words: "That something may be done toward curing, or, at least, charming, the spirit of lying which prevails among us. Wherefore nothing shall be entered here but what we have reason to believe is true." In its first issue, "Public Occurrences" made the mistake (?) of telling the truth about the cruelty of the Indian allies practiced by Governor Winthrop.

Other papers beginning later as purveyors of the news learned a lesson from the early death of the first venture, and learned it so well, that they seemed to profit thereby. And now to quote the Advocate:

"At the same time we can cherish no hopeful outlook for the church if the vast majority of our members are dependent on the secular press for the interpretation of current events, and who look to some well-known columnist and propagandist as their oracles of wisdom. We may continue in the future with the secular press as the instructor of the large bulk of our church membership on moral issues."

But if so, what results may we expect in our attitude to the church and to the moral and spiritual teachings of the church? In some sections a large part of our own church membership depends upon the secular press and the notes therein and, the propaganda, far more than they do upon their church paper, and they show their preference by subscribing for and reading the former and by neglecting and failing to read the latter.

JOHN HUSS.

By JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D.

(Read before the December meeting of the Ministers' Conference of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference. Published by vote of the Conference.)

There is a province now in the heart of Europe known as Bohemia. Once Bohemia was a kingdom of Europe, over her proud and learned kings reigned, and in her borders culture and religion lived and thrived. It later became a part of the Austro-Hungarian empire. It is now a state in Czechoslovakia, with an area of 20,000 square miles, and a population of 7,000,000 people. It is a lovely country surrounded on all sides by beautiful mountain ranges. It is mainly an agricultural country, replete with stretching acres of gardens, meadows, pastures, and forests, inset here and there with lovely lakes. If one traversed this country in an airship he would see its pastures grazing nearly 3,000,000 cows and more than a million sheep. Also he would see great mining cities dotting its huge mountain belt, with manufacturing establishments turning out its iron, steel, glass, and chemicals. In Prague, their principle city, will be found two large universities, one of them with two thousand students and the other with more than four thousand.

The Christian religion began thriving in this country during the ninth century. In the latter part of the tenth century the bishopric of Prague was instituted. For a brief period during the thirteenth century Bohemia was one of the most powerful realms in Europe, and in the fourteenth century the great university of Prague, the oldest in the old German empire was established. When this university was twenty years old, and already famous for its professors, and student body, a baby boy by the name of John Huss was born in the year 1369, of poor parents in Southern Bohemia. He grew up in a peasant home, poor in this world's goods, but rich in Christian piety, and devotion to the church,—a loyalty which became political, powerful, and yet enslaving to its people. The boy Huss was destined to give a life literally as a first wedge in breaking that rock of ecclesiastical servitude. We are living today under a liberty which Huss helped directly, and primarily to beget. And in my studies of the lives of men who were frontiers in that religious liberty I find that the one great secret of the breaking of the shackles of that ecclesiastical servitude was the foolish business of preaching,—just plain, common pulpit work in college, and university auditoriums among gatherings of professors and students; and in public places in gatherings of the common people, who heard the preaching gladly.

When Huss entered the great University of Prague, he was one of the boys who had to work his way through; this he did by working with his hands at menial and manual tasks, and by using his voice in the university and about the city in the very beautiful business of singing. The young Bohemian had a rich, sweet voice, and fine mind, and an alert body; all of which he dedicated to God. By 1396 he was the happy possessor of the favor of a large student body and a learned faculty, and also the degrees of bachelor of arts and master of arts, and bachelor of divinity; and the master of arts was in those days more like our doctor of philosophy in these days. Two years later he was given a place in the university faculty and four years after his graduation for the last of his degrees he was chosen rector of the university. His preaching was attended by crowds of the learned churchmen, as well as the common people of his day.

The year John Huss was born there was in the great university of Oxford, with its then six colleges, a young and very learned professor and master of one of the six colleges by the name of John Wycliffe, about whom the Rev. H. S. Hardcastle will speak in our January meeting. Chronologically he should have come before John Huss in this series, for about the time John Huss was entering the university at Prague, in Bohemia, John Wycliffe was dying of paralysis and persecution in old Oxford in England, at the age of sixty-four. While Wycliffe's learned writings and dissertations on the New Testament theology and Christianity were being burned by orders of the Pope in England, copies of them were being eagerly studied by John Huss in Bohemia, so while truth was being crushed to earth at Oxford it was rising again at Prague; and while Wycliffe, called the Morning Star of the Reformation, was bidding farewell to life on the British Isles, Huss was standing at its opening threshold in the very heart of the Continent. And thus liberty refuses to be still-born, and the truth of God rides on from one generation to another, for while the palsied hand of Wycliffe dropped its pen in Oxford, the young, and steady hand of Huss picked it up in Prague.

Wycliffe laid down the principle that where the Bible and the church do not agree, we must obey the Bible, and where conscience and human authority are in conflict we must follow conscience. This principle, with all its implications became known in Bohemia as Wycliffism, and John Huss coming into great prominence and leadership was its apostle in Prague. The student of history does not have to be told that that doctrine would soon run counter with the established church of that day. And so soon Huss, while admittedly orthodox, was soon receiving the ill will of the Pope at Rome, and his churchmen in Bohemia.

Allow me to quote a paragraph from Phillip Schaff's "History of the Christian Church." Vol. V, "In the earlier years of his administration, Huss had the prelate's (the prelate of the see of Prague) confidence, held the post of synodal preacher and was encouraged to bring to the archbishop's notice abuses that might be reformed. He was also appointed one of a commission of three to investigate the alleged miracles performed by the relic of Christ's blood at Wylsnak and attracting great throngs. The report condemned the miracles as fraud. The matter, however, became the subject of discussion at the university and as far away as Vienna and Erfurt, the question assuming the form of whether Christ left any of His blood on earth." In a few years Innocent VII asked the see of Prague to take strong measures to stamp out Wycliffism, and to seize all Wycliffe's writings, and Huss was deposed from the position of synodal preacher. However, continued in other places his very popular preaching, and throngs assembled to hear him. A papal bull was issued authorizing the burning of all Wycliffe's writing, and although Huss and others protested two hundred manuscript copies of the English reformer's writing were cast into the flames amidst the tolling of church bells.

Two days later a sentence of excommunication was launched against Huss, but the excitement increased, and songs were composed and sung by the common people saying that the archbishop did not know what was in the books which he had set fire to. Like a great apostle of another day Huss refused to be silenced and continued his preaching in Bethlehem chapel. The preaching of the zealous young prophet and the singing of the common people was winning so many converts to protestant principles that the papacy decided that far more powerful measures would have to be resorted to, accordingly the heretic was ordered seized, delivered over to the archbishop, and the Bethlehem chapel razed to the ground. And they hurled three stones against Huss' dwelling as a sign of perpetual curse. By now the university was against Huss, and the ecclesiastical authorities, and yet popular sentiment was so greatly in his favor that the sentence could not yet be carried out. Jerome sided with Huss.

The efforts of Huss were redoubled. "Audiences," to quote Schaff again, "gathered to hear him on the marketplaces, in the fields, and in the woods. Lords in their strong castles protected him. Following Wycliffe, he insisted upon preaching as the indefeasible right of the priest and wrote that to cease from preaching, in obedience to the mandate of pope or archbishop, would be to destroy God and imperil his own salvation." Huss reminded his friends that Christ himself was excommunicated as a malefactor and crucified! Huss was exiled. But writing of that exile he himself says, "If I had been unwilling to come the king could not have made me, so numerous and so powerful are the Bohemian nobles who love me, and within whose castles I should have been able to lie concealed."

The Council of Constance was about to meet and Sigismund, king of the Romans, summoned Huss with the pledge of safe conduct to and from the Council. You recall that Constance is a city in Baden, Germany, and to that city Huss began his journey on October 11, 1414, reaching it twenty-three days later on November 3rd. One of the main objects for the calling of this Council was to put an end to the spread of Huss' doctrines. At this Council Pope John XXIII presided and it was attended by the Emperor Sigismund of Rome. On a false pretext Huss was thrown into prison in the city of Constance and held until next summer before he was given any hearing. During this time his friends did all they could for him, and two hundred and fifty Bohemian and Moravian nobles signed a protest in Prague remonstrating with Sigismund for not keeping his pledge of "safe conduct," but to no avail. Huss suffered much, but kept firm faith, writing on scraps of paper valuable opinions, dissertations, and letters. On June 15th, the Council took the far-reaching action of forbidding the giving of the cup to the laymen. Huss condemned this action as wickedness and madness on the ground that it was a virtual condemnation of Christ's own example and command. Huss also asserted the doctrine of the fallibility of the Council and gave as proof that one day it kissed the feet of Pope John XXIII as a paragon of virtue, and called him "most holy," and the next it condemned him as "a shameful homicide, a sodomite, a simoniac, and a heretic."

On July 6, 1415, Huss was, after six months of dismal imprisonment and deepening disappointment, conducted to the cathedral. He was not allowed to enter the council room until after mass had been celebrated, and whenever he tried to speak a word in his defense he was hushed up. They placed him upon a high stool in their midst and pronounced the sentence upon him as an ecclesiastical outcast and criminal. The bishop of Lodi preached from Romans 6:6: "that the body of sin may be destroyed." He was ordered degraded, and six bishops disrobed him of his vestments and destroyed his tonsure. Quoting Schaff, "They then put on his head a cap covered with pictures of the devil and inscribed with the word, heresiarch, and committed his soul to the devil. With upturned eyes, Huss exclaimed, 'and I commit my soul to the most gracious Lord Jesus.'"

A guard of a thousand armed men escorted him forth under the midday July sun, until they reached what they called Devil's Place. The prisoner's hands were fastened behind his back, and his neck bound to the stake by a chain. Straw, wood, and resin were piled about his body, and he was

SUFFOLK LETTER.

It is Saturday night, December 15th. Four couples have called upon the writer to perform for them the marriage ceremony. They were happy in plighting troth each to the other. They face a new world in this relationship which God has planned for the human race. Marriage is the normal relation for man and woman. Life can never mean as much as it should until one has entered into the marriage relation. Some people are unhappily married. Life is not all happiness. A census of the human race would disclose more unhappiness and discontentment among unmarried people than among married people, if the question is measured in the light of a lifetime.

The streets of Suffolk are crowded tonight. People are out Christmas shopping. Young and their friends and loved ones. Children are looking at the display of toys in the windows, wondering if Santa Claus will be kind enough to bring the dolls and doll-baby carriages for the girls; and the boys are keeping their eyes on the electric trains, bicycles, rifles and Indian suits.

This is the time for the Christmas spirit. It is in the air. Maybe it leaves out much of Christ and the deep radiant religious background; but it is Christmas. For the time being people are thinking about others. For weeks they have been working and planning to get ready for Christmas. Thousands will be busy for the next ten days trying to finish their work. Good things to eat must be prepared. Families come together at Christmas time. Children who are away at school will be at home for the holiday. They are counting the days. They have visions of eating at the table, with the home-folks, enjoying the food prepared under mother's supervision. Mother always puts a lot of love in the good things she prepares for the children returning home at Christmas time.

Many hearts will rejoice in the good fellowship of this holiday season. The business world has overworked the commercial phase of Christmas. But in spite of the prevailing effort to commercialize the anniversary of the birth of Jesus Christ, it is, for many people, the happiest season of the year. Some day the church will come into its own and reclaim the day for religious devotion and spiritual joy. The beautiful Christmas carols sung around the world and broadcast over hundreds of radio stations to millions of people help to preserve the religious spirit of the day.

One may ask, "How can one be happy, when one thinks of the thousands of people who are hungry; when one remembers that many children will have no visit from Santa Claus, but awaken to find an empty stocking?" The world was poor and needy and heart-broken when Jesus came. The shepherds watching their flocks by night were poor. But the angel said unto them: "Fear not; for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." "And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, goodwill toward men." The angels sang praises and they called upon the shepherds to rejoice and give glory to God in the highest. They knew that this Child was God's human touch with humanity. Christian people can sing in their poverty and distress; and rejoice in the Lord, when other people are in need. For they have good tidings of great joy for all people. A Saviour has come. Yes, a Saviour from poverty. When the nations accept Jesus as Lord, peace will come to the earth; and goodwill toward men will usher in an era of material prosperity surpassing the wildest dreams of a Golden Age. Welcome the Christmas day! Enjoy its fellowship. Give glory to God and praise the Lord with gladness. Jesus has come. He is a Saviour. He is waiting to bless a heart-broken world. The Prince of Peace can drive the war clouds away. He can break up gangland. He can close the Sunday movies and silence the yelling crowds of the Sunday baseball fields. He can stop the sale of strong drink. He can end trial marriages. He can make marriage sweet and sacred. He can save our homes. Hail the glorious Jesus!

THE SUPPORT OF ELON COLLEGE.

Nearly a half century ago, the leaders of the Christian Church in the South founded Elon College. It was founded as a church school for the purpose of training future leaders of the church

THE ANGEL'S CHRISTMAS.

Angels look down with sad surprise
And disappointment in their eyes.
That it should be so long
Since their glad song
Awoke the earth with heavenly harmonies
To welcome Christ her King.

Nigh twenty centuries
Have fled with swiftly flying wing,
And still we love to sing
Glory to the new-born King;
And yet we let the years go by,
And do not really strive and try.

With all our minds and hearts, to make Him King
Then would the whole earth ring
With praise of Him the mighty Prince of Peace,
Who would make wars cease,
And untold blessings bring within His train,
If we would only let Him reign.

—leaders for the pulpit and pew alike. The church has retained the control of the college through the years. Nominations for the Board of Trustees are made by the Convention and trustees are elected from the number nominated. Under the present rule, no one can be elected a trustee of Elon College unless he is a member of the Congregational-Christian Church. Through this and other methods, the church determines the personnel and the purpose of Elon College. At the beginning, the church recognized and accepted the responsibility for the financial support of the college. It has been more or less faithful to this responsibility until this day. The sources from which the college derives its financial support are as follows:

First, the students. The young men and young women who enroll at the college for the courses offered are required to pay tuition, fees, room-rent and board. Fees amount to from $60.00 to $75.00 per year. Tuition has been reduced to $75.00. At present, board is $4.00 to $5.00 per week. Room rent ranges from $30.00 to $65.00, the year. From these sources the college will derive a profit of approximately $40,000 annually. This amount, of course, will not pay the full cost of operating the college. Our total budget amounts to $82,000, which is considerably less than in previous years.

Second, endowment. The ones interested in the future of the college, years ago, began to build an endowment. Gifts of all proportions were made for this purpose until the endowment totaled near $500,000, which is a fair size endowment for a college the size of Elon. This endowment, however, has been hypthecated, so that today the college realizes very little income from this source. If we had a half million dollars endowment, free of all liens so that its earnings could be used for current expenses, it would help tremendously. It becomes our responsibility to free the endowment that we have and add to this sum until the total will amount to at least $500,000. $500,000 well invested would earn for the college around $30,000 annually.

Third, gifts. It has been the practice of the church for certain individual members who are able to make personal gifts to the college to assist in its financing. For a number of years during Dr. Harper's term of office, a large number in individuals contributed liberally toward this purpose. According to reports, these gifts totaled around $50,000 annually. As financial conditions throughout the country improve, it is the hope of the present administration that many of these friends of the college will again come to the rescue and contribute as in former years. Perhaps there are many new contributors who might be added to the list.

Fourth, the church. The church, represented in the Convention for a number of years promulgated certain plans for the support of the college. Realizing that not everyone is able to contribute largely but that all should contribute something, the Convention has asked a stated amount from the conferences constituting the Convention. The conferences have passed the Convention's askings on to the local church and to the individual. The Suffolk Convention, through a special finance committee, asked that the Convention raise for the support of the college $12,500, this amount to be a part of the conference apportionments. Consequently, each church is asked for a definite amount for the college. These amounts will be placed in the hands of the pastor and the church. The Convention designated January and February as "college period" in which every church is asked to make a special effort to raise the amount asked for. Whatever is given by the local church to the college during the educational period will be reported to conference by the church as a part of conference apportionments raised.

From these sources, Elon College hopes to receive adequate support. Our total budget requirement for this college year is $82,000. With $40,000 from the college itself, $30,000 from endowment, and $12,500 from the Convention, the college's budget would be met. But, unfortunately, we will not have the income from the endowment. Necessarily, we are forced to look to individuals to supply this need by personal gifts. Times are better, individual incomes are increased; and, out of the gratitude of our hearts, we should be glad to share. This is an appeal to churches and individuals to put the college in your prayers and on your list for support. Your gifts to Elon College will bear fruits in years to come that will be a benediction to church and state alike. In order to help with the church offering, I have asked that all money raised by the Sunday Schools in Fifth Sunday Offerings and sent to the college will be counted on conference apportionments if the local church desires. I am sure that all pastors and churches will cooperate in the educational offering to be received in January and February. Whatever amounts are given, they will be gratefully received and receipted.

THE CHRISTMAS SECRET.

By REV. ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, D. D.

Have you learned the Christmas Secret? It is the most wonderful secret in life.

Why is it that Christmas seems to bring heaven nearer to earth? As if by magic, joy and cheer seem to spring up everywhere at Christmas time. The clouds of life seem to brighten, the burdens of life seem to lighten, the anchors of life seem to tighten and life for us seems more secure as Christmas draws near.

The reason for all this is the fact that Christmas is the time of all the year when people think most of others. That is the secret of the Christmas cheer and the Christmas joy which is seen and felt wherever you go. That is the secret of the change in the very atmosphere during the Christmas season. Selfishness gives place to altruism. Indifference toward others gives place to thoughtfulness of others. The happiness of others becomes our chief concern. People think about those they love—how to make them happy. They think about the needy, those less fortunate than themselves—and how to minister to their needs.

That is why some people are the happiest at Christmas time,—it is because they think more of others, and try to do more for others than at other times. People who do not think of others, and of how to make others happy on Christmas, do not find Christmas any different than other days.

Christmas joy and cheer are largely an expression of our own creative powers. We create for ourselves and for others the Christmas atmosphere by thinking of others more than of self. We could create the Christmas Joy for every day of the year if we would but practice the wondrous Christmas Secret every day,—“thinking of others more than of self.” The Apostle Paul reminded the Elders at Ephesus about this wonderful secret given the world by Him whose birthday Christmas celebrates,—“Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how He said ‘It is more blessed to give than to receive’”—in other words said Paul, “People find greater happiness in giving than in getting.”

And the true joy of Christmas is only expressed by those who at this time and at all other times of the year are conscious of the fact that they have given themselves to the Christ and that they are daily giving themselves to the world in Christian service. Those who have sincerely given themselves to Christ and are giving their best in Christ like service to their fellowman find that Christmas joy is not determined by gifts received from others but by the love they may show to others in His name.

If this great Christmas Secret were known and practiced by everyone, what a happy world this would be.

Dover, Delaware.

THE THANKFUL HEART.

The song-writer says: “Count your blessings; name them one by one,” but that is quite an impossibility, for our blessings are innumerable and if we tried to name them we would be sure to leave out so many. Our blessings come in so many different ways: known, unknown and so often in disguise that we do not always recognize them. We need to pray the prayer that someone has written, “O Lord, that lends me life, lend me a heart replete with thankfulness;” and “always and for everything let our thanks to God the Father be presented in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ (Eph. 5:20).” We also need to “cultivate the thankful spirit! It will be a perpetual feast. There is, or ought to be, with us no such thing as small mercies; all are great, because the least are undeserved. Indeed, a really thankful heart will extract motive for gratitude from everything, making the most even of scanty blessings.” “A grateful heart, filled with thanksgiving, is a nobler thing than all mere outward worship.” So we need to realize that “thanksgiving is thanksgiving,” and “let our prayers be as frequent as our wants, and our thanksgiving as our blessings.”

An elderly couple were being congratulated upon the many luxuries that the Lord had permitted them to enjoy in their old age but they replied: “We worked for these with our own two hands;” seemingly leaving God out of the reckoning. Martin Luther said: “If, in His gifts and benefits, God were more sparing and close-handed, we should learn to be more thankful.” And from the sainted Bernard, “Thankfulness is a parching wind, drying up the fountain of pity, the dew of mercy, the streams of grace. It is a destructive thing, an enemy of grace, hostile to salvation. It blocks up the way against grace, and where it is, thence grace finds no access, no place. Grateful then and devout must a man be, who longeth that the gift of grace which he hath received should not only abide with him, but be multiplied.”

And again we say, let us cultivate the thankful spirit so that every day will be thanksgiving day for the Lord’s mercies are new every morning: great is His faithfulness.

Make a joyful noise unto the Lord, all ye lands. Serve the Lord with gladness: come before His presence with singing. Know ye that the Lord He is God: it is He that hath made us, and not we ourselves; we the His people, and the sheep of His pasture. Enter into His gates with thanksgiving and into his courts with praise: be thankful unto Him, and bless His name. For the Lord is good; His mercy is everlasting; and His truth endureth to all generations. Amen.

INVISIBLE RICHES FOR 1935.

Times are hard. That is a matter of personal knowledge as well as daily hearsay with most of us. Maybe we are partially responsible. Maybe too many are driving Packards who should be driving Fords, and too many driving Fords who should be pushing wheelbarrows. Maybe a lot of other things. I don't claim to know who or what is to blame for existing conditions and I have no new solution to present—so read on, if you care to.

"Times are hard." That is a plain fact—not a complaint. A few years ago, after facing the ceiling for months, I remarked to the doctor who was a daily visitor, that if I could only regain my health no one should ever hear me complain about material things. Sometimes we promise ourselves and our God many things when death seems near, then promptly forget them when strength returns—but I have kept that pledge.

"Times are hard"—so hard some folk don't feel able to pay a few cents for the clean religious magazine you are reading. Others begin their economy by decreasing their church contributions. But have you heard of even one man discontinuing the use of tobacco because times are so hard? And aren't silk hose as popular as ever with the ladies? I wonder why we "strain at a gnat" in the service of God and "swallow a camel" in self-gratification!

"Times are hard"—but God isn't dead, so we still have many things for which to be grateful this holiday season. I would not exchange my simple faith in Jesus Christ and my humble place in His Church for the combined honor and wealth of the universe. And, after all, the finest things in life cannot be purchased with gold. The real wealth of earth is not found in bankers' vaults but in human hearts and lives. It is impossible to buy love, intelligence, purity, health, self-respect, sacrifice or salvation—yet these blessings may be enjoyed by the man who is penniless!

The idea that life is more than a dollar proposition is not original with me. I found it in an old, old Book—along with an interesting short story told by a physician called Luke. It seems that relatives then were much like they are today when an inheritance is at stake; so the brother in the story asked the busiest Man on earth to use His influence in getting a division for him. The Man used this opportunity to impress upon the company a beautiful truth, in these words: "Take heed and beware of covetousness: for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things he possesseth."

We never know what is really best for us. What we consider a disaster sometimes turns out to be a blessing. I read a story about a noted climber who once missed his footing on a frozen pass and fell down the face of an Alpine glacier. It was a terrible experience, but he was rescued, and later said he had derived so much pleasure from telling about it that, taken as a whole, he had come to regard it as the most interesting event in his life! Maybe we, too, will some day discover some good that has resulted from "the present crisis." Maybe it will give us more sympathy for people who never know anything else but "hard times." And maybe we will think more about the one Land where "hard times" are unknown—and work harder to reach it.

Some one has said: "If you're not big enough to do without the thing you want, you're not big enough to have it." That is what I call a sentence sermon. There's really no credit in being cheerful when everything is going our way. Anyone can do that much—even a gangster! That type of "bravery" reminds me of the soldier who was boasting that during a certain battle he was "right where the bullets were thickest." With a twinkle in his eye a crippled comrade said, "Boys he's telling the truth: I saw him hiding under the ammunition wagon!"

"A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." Let's be thankful our Saviour said that—and make 1935 a new kind of year. Let's search our hearts and homes instead of our granaries and cash registers. If we shall find there an abiding faith in God, a clean soul, a deep love for our family, esteem for our neighbors, a joy in honest labor, a spark of courage, a sense of humor and appreciation of beauty in the commonplace things around us—then we shall indeed have honest cause to thank God for His goodness and for our own Invisible Riches! Let us make the most of those Invisible Riches in 1935.—By Bessie McClaflin in the Christian Herald.

HELPING BUILD A NEW CHINA.

By Miss D. P. CUSHING, News Editor.

"It is happy work with these Christian friends in Foochow College who are trying to guide their country aright in this day of reconstruction," says Miss Susan E. Armstrong, who since 1921 has been in Foochow, China. "It seems at times so little but the Chinese do want us very much. The help that we can give is sometimes just the bit that helps to tide over the difficult places."

It is this spirit of willingness to serve and a sympathetic understanding of the Chinese that makes Miss Armstrong a successful teacher and interpreter of the Chinese to America. She was born in Lebanon, Conn. After graduation from Oberlin College she taught for six years in Mt. Hermon, Mass., sailing in 1921 for China.

As a teacher of English, History, and Bible in the Junior and Senior high schools of Foochow College, Miss Armstrong comes in daily and personal contact with between three and four hundred young men and boys. In addition to her teaching she has done a great deal along dramatic lines, such as coaching plays.

In Foochow College are boys from wealthy, middle class, and poor families. The greater proportion of them come from reasonably well to do homes—for China—because only such can pay the tuition fees, but there are also some sons of poor families who work their way through the college and strangely enough one of the ways in which these boys often earn money is by tutoring some of the wealthier boys. The students among whom she works are very much like students anywhere in the world, for although Foochow is a thoroughly Chinese city with no water system or sewerage its citizens nevertheless have been exposed to modern ideas so that they differ in great degree from the interior country folk.

One of the things in which Miss Armstrong is deeply interested is the health problem since there is much tuberculosis among the students due to improper diet, poor hygienic conditions and lack of sufficient exercise. The school is doing what it can to introduce new ideas along these lines. For awhile Miss Armstrong lived in Ingtau which is 50 miles up river into real country. There she worked in the homes helping the women and got a good idea of the life they had to live.

FOUR TRACKS IN CHRISTIAN PROGRESS.

In a recent letter, Dr. Gaius Glenn Atkins described very clearly, and distinctly both the situation and the task of the Council. He said that there are four tracks which must be used in all Christian progress. There is the first track of the prophets, those seers who life up their voices like trumpets, and speak of the will of God. On the second track are found the idealists, the young men who dream dreams, and the old men who see visions, of shining cities of God on earth. The third track carries the sociologists, economists, and other scientists, who try to seek out controlling facts and laws concerning social progress. The last track carries the heaviest traffic, the men and women of practical affairs who are finally convinced of the practicality of the Christian program and see it as a going concern of life.

The task is to get traffic moving on all four tracks. It has been moving mainly on the first and second, the prophets and the idealists. The Council for Social Action is an opportunity to get more traffic started in the areas of the scientific fact-finders and interpreters, and, above all, in the areas of the great numbers of men and women who desire progress in practical and definite ways. The Christian program and Christian spirit cannot progress definitely and powerfully until all four of these groups are working harmoniously, and with common objectives and understandings. The Council for Social Action opens the gates of such an opportunity.—Missionary Herald.

A Story for the Children

A MOUNTAIN BOY'S CHRISTMAS GIFT.

By ETTA W. SCHLICHTER.

There was a fine ship in the North Countree,
It went by the name of the Golden Vanitee,
And it sailed upon the lowlands, lowlands low,
It sailed upon the lowlands low.

O Captain, O Captain, what will you give to me
If I'll go and sink the ship of the Weeping Willow Tree
As she sails upon the lowlands, lowlands low,
As she sails upon the lowlands low.

Oh, I will give you lands and I will give you shore,
And you shall have my daughter Jane when you return to shore,
If you'll sink her in the lowlands, lowlands low,
If you'll sink her in the lowlands low.

"What a funny song," said Ralph, as he and his father stood still, having heard a boy's voice singing.

Ralph and his father and mother had come to the mountains for their vacation and he and Daddy had gone pretty far up the mountain from their camp. Ahead of them they saw a little cabin and then they heard the song and stopped to listen. Ralph knew what it meant when Daddy motioned to hush. It was a mountain ballad the boy was singing and Daddy was very anxious to hear all of these ballads that he could.

Suddenly the song stopped. Ralph had stepped on a stick and it had cracked. The mountain boy's quick ear had caught the sound and he, too, stopped to listen.

Ralph stepped from behind the underbrush and smiled. "What's your name?" he asked the mountain lad.

"Jeff Sawyer," said the boy, "what's yours?"

"Ralph Page. That was a funny song. What's the rest of it?"

"That's a ballet," answered Jeff, but he would not sing any more.

"We don't sing that kind of songs where I live," said Ralph. "Do you know any more?"

"Uh huh," nodded Jeff.

Ralph had heard his father talk of the mountain ballads which he said the mountaineers called ballets. Mr. Page had said these mountain children had no songs of the kind we sing nowadays unless they could go to school, and many of them could not do that because there were no schools near. And they had no story-books. So these old ballads, which were really stories set to music, took the place of both story and song and the children as well as grown people loved them.

These ballads were very old, many of them brought over from England over two hundred years ago.

The two boys eyed each other. Something about each of them drew the other. They both smiled and that meant they were going to be friends.

"I'll sing you one of our kind of songs if you'll sing me another of yours," said Ralph.

"You go first," laughed Jeff.

Mr. Page kept among the trees for fear his presence might make the mountain lad shy.

"We sing this a lot," said Ralph, and began in his clear soprano, "My Country 'Tis Of Thee."

Jeff's eyes shone. "Why, I know that. We sing it in school."

"Where is your school?" asked Ralph. In all his tramps over the mountains he had never seen anything that looked like a schoolhouse.

"Down yon," answered Jeff, waving his arm.
"Some women folks keep hit. Hit's a mission."

Ralph wondered why Jeff said hit for it. He learned afterwards that most of the mountain people said hit, and that everybody did away back hundreds of years ago. The mountain people just hadn't changed the fashion as others had.

"This is one we learned in school," said Ralph.
"Have you had this one? It's in our new book.

Wind, you're in the tree-tops,
Wind you're on the grass, . . ."

"I never heard anybody talk to the wind," interrupted Jeff.

"No," said Ralph, "it's just a song."

"Our songs happened," said Jeff. "There's one about Barb'ra Allen.

All in the merry month of May,
When green buds they were swelling,
Young Jemmy Grove on his death-bed lay
For love of Barbara Allen."

"Sounds solemn," said Ralph. "Are they all solemn?"

"I don't know," said Jeff, doubtfully. He had never thought how mournful the ancient ballads were. To him they were just wonderful stories.

"They all seem to die," commented Ralph.

"Not all," answered Jeff. "There's

Can she make a cherry pie, Billy boy, Billy Boy?"

Jeff soon learned a number of Ralph's school songs, but it is doubtful if he liked them as well as he did the story songs of the mountains. He knew a lot of them. Sometimes his father and mother helped him sing them when Ralph came to the cabin.

All too soon the summer ended. Ralph went back to town to school and Jeff returned to the mission. Then one wonderful day something happened. Down the mountain was the general store and in a corner of the store was a tiny postoffice.
The Sawyers never asked for any mail. Who would there be to write to them? Their friends were all in the mountains. But this wonderful day Mr. Sawyer had gone to the store and the storekeeper, who was postmaster also, handed him a package. It was marked, "Master Jeff Sawyer."
The postmaster read the address aloud.

"That can't be Jeff's," said Mr. Sawyer, puzzled. "Jeff hain't nobody's master."

"Hit be though," said the postmaster. "Hit says, 'From Ralph Page,' here in the corner.
That's that 'ere boy that was here all summer."

So Mr. Sawyer doubtfully took the package to Jeff. Wild with excitement, Jeff opened it. It was the first thing he had ever had come in the mail in all his life. Tearing off the wrapper, he found a book. It was a book of songs, the kind that Ralph had sung, and it had notes. Jeff knew the notes. They were teaching him music now at the mission school.

But his delight at receiving the book was quickly followed by keen regret. No mountain boy likes to receive something for nothing. He does not understand gifts. He could not keep this book and not send something in return. But what? Jeff had never had a penny in his life.
He had never before owned a book. The books he used in school belonged to the mission. Whatever could he send to Ralph when he owned nothing himself except a rabbit he had tamed?

More and more troubled he became until at last Miss Martha, his teacher, noticed it. It was a long time before even Miss Martha could learn what was the matter. Jeff kept his troubles to himself. But at last it all came out and Miss Martha just smiled and said, "Why, Jeff, I know the very nicest thing you can send Ralph. I'll show you how to fix it. It won't go through the mail, but I am going home for Christmas and I'm going right through Ralph's town in my little car, and I'll take your present along and give it to him for you."

Jeff could hardly believe his senses. But he and Miss Martha worked together and this is what Ralph found at the door when the bell rang the day before Christmas—a lovely little spruce tree not over three feet high. He recognized it. It had grown near the Sawyer's cabin. Hanging from the branches of the tree were neatly folded slips of paper. Ralph took one off and unfolded it.

"Daddy, look!" he cried. How he and Mr.
Page had wished they had these mountain ballads in print! And here they were, neatly typed on the slips of paper, all the ones that Ralph had learned and he was afraid he would forget. Miss Martha had done them for Jeff on her typewriter.

On the top of the tree was another slip of paper, but this was in Jeff's own handwriting. It read,
"From Jeff to Ralph."

"O Daddy!" cried Ralph, "isn't that a wonderful Christmas present? Much nicer than anything that could be bought. Now I'll know Jeff's songs when we go next summer as well as he'll know mine."

JOHN HUSS.

offered his life if he would recant, and he replied,
"I shall die with joy today in the faith of the Gospel which I have preached." As the flames arose he called on Christ to have mercy upon him.
The wind mercifully blew the fire in his face, and his voice was hushed. He died praying and singing. And a great young preacher, at the age of forty-six, had literally lain his life on the altar.

The early martyrs were burned, or thrown to wild beasts by pagans. Huss was burned by the Christian church. So let us never be too sure that we are right in our councils, but let us humbly seek to have Jesus Christ's spirit of love and kindness, and his wisdom as our guide. It was hard for the church to give up any of its doctrines, and dogmas in that day. Is it easy today? A study of the privations, sufferings, and martyrdom of leaders of advancing truth in other years will help to keep us humble, and considerate, and sympathetic with those from whom we may differ in these years of international readjustment and change.

The innocent blood of John Huss still cries from the ground. His great pupil, Jerome, was likewise burned at the stake before the Council concluded more than a year later, and later the bones of Wycliffe were dug up and burned and his ashes thrown into the brook nearby which bore them to the Avon, and the Avon to the Severn, and the Severn to the sea, and the sea to the main ocean, emblematic of his doctrines being dispersed now the wide world over. These did not die in vain for a century later the reformation was growing apace and a new day dawned.

PRIZE NOTICE.

Prizes of $25.00, $15.00 and $10.00 will be awarded to church drama groups which submit the best photographs of cast, posed in action, together with an essay telling of the results of religious drama in their churches, are offered by the Guild of Inspirational Drama, Cleveland, Ohio. This announcement will be of interest to the many churches and Sunday Schools which have seriously promoted religious drama and to others who may contemplate such work. The contest is based on presentations to be given between December first, 1934, and April first, 1935. The judges of the contest will be Professor H. Augustine Smith of Boston, Lyman R. Bayard of Los Angeles, California and Marcus L. Back of Iowa City, Iowa, all well-known religious drama producers. Complete information regarding the contest may be secured by writing the Guild of Inspirational Drama, 404 Auditorium Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

THE GREATEST STORY EVER TOLD.

It is a strange, but familiar, story. Had it not come from a doctor whose truthfulness I cannot doubt, I could scarcely believe it. There are phases of the story, which, frankly, I cannot understand. And yet I do believe—I believe in the Christ of Christmas. Read the old, old story again, and think of what it meant the night the angels sang for earth, and of how the earth has echoed the song through the centuries. In all literature there is no greater story than the one told by Dr. Luke, the "beloved physician" who traveled with Paul, as it is recorded in Luke 2: 1-14 and reads as follows:

"Joseph went up from Galilee, out of the city of Nazareth, into Judea, unto the city of David, which is called Bethlehem; to be taxed with Mary his espoused wife. And it was so while they were there she brought forth her first-born son, and laid him in a manger; because there was no room for them in the inn.

"And there were shepherds abiding in the fields, keeping watch over their flocks by night. And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them; and they were sore afraid. And the angel said unto them:

"Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord."

"And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying,

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will towards men."

"ARE YOU READY FOR CHRISTMAS?"

How can you get ready for Christmas? How will you do it?

Some get ready by making and selling toys and trinkets. Business concerns put on new goods and increase their sales. Christmas is so commercialized that it is often difficult for the churches to put on a real program at this sacred season.

Many tire themselves out and go into debt to give presents to those from whom they hope to receive. Now presents are fine, but at Christmas they certainly should be given to Christ, or in His name. I know people who say they are too poor to give much to the church but who exchange costly gifts and clutter the house with toys which are soon destroyed. Is that right?

There are some who prepare for pleasure only at Christmas. Perhaps it is dancing or drinking. More people get drunk at Christmas than at any other season of the year. Where do they get such an idea? Not from the story of a star, of angels singing, of shepherds and wise men worshipping a Babe in a manger. It comes from heathen nations like Egypt, Greece, Persia and northern Europe. I am hoping that the young people of our church will follow the Christian ideas of Christmas rather than the heathen.

And I believe they will. Thousands of young people are thinking of how they can give to those who are in need, sing to those who are sick and shut in, share the joys of Christmas with many who do not know them, and are definitely planning for worship services in which they will lead many to the Babe of Bethlehem who became the Saviour of the world. The song of the angels will sing in their hearts at Christmas time and they will go forth to bring peace and good will among men.

Are you ready for Christmas? Is your own heart attuned to the Divine music, and are you ready to follow the star to the place where gifts may be worthily made and where you may worship God's greatest Son.

THERE CHRIST IS BORN AGAIN.

Wherever one repenting soul
Prays in its agonies of pain,
By God's sweet grace to be made whole—
There Christ is born again.

Wherever bond of ancient thrall
A strong soul bursts its shackling chain,
And upward strains to meet the Call—
There Christ is born again.

Wherever vision of the light
Disturbs the sleeping souls of men,
Night trails away its shadowy flight—
And Christ is born again.

Wherever a soul in travail turns,
And climbs the barriers that constrain,
With steady cheer Hope's sweet lamp burns,
And Christ is born again.

Where one foul thing is purged away,
And life delivered of one stain,
Love rims with gold the coming day—
And Christ is born again.

—John Oxenham.

THE VOICE OF THE CHRIST-CHILD.

The earth has grown old with its burden of care,
But at Christmas it always is young,
The heart of the jewel burns lustrous and fair,
And with its soul full of music breaks forth on the air
When the song of the angels is sung.

It is coming, old Earth, it is coming tonight!
On the snowflakes which cover thy sod
The feet of the Christ-child fall gentle and white,
And the voice of the Christ-child tells out with delight
That mankind are the children of God.

On the sad and the lonely, the wretched and poor,
That voice of the Christ-child shall fall;
And to every blind wanderer open the door
Of a hope which he dared not dream of before,
With a sunshine of welcome for all.

The feet of the humblest may walk in the field
Where the feet of the holiest have trod.
This, this is the marvel to mortals revealed,
When the silvery trumpets of Christmas have pealed,
That mankind are the children of God.

—Phillips Brooks.

MY CHRISTMAS WISH FOR YOU.

I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named,

That he would grant you, according to the riches of His glory, to be strengthened with might by His Spirit in the inner man;

That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith;
That ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth and length and depth and height;

And to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge;
That ye might be filled with all the fullness of God.

—Eph. 3:14-19.

Hymns: "Jesus Calls Us, O'er the Tumult," "Jesus, Saviour, Pilot Me," "In the Hour of Trial," "Take My Life and Let It Be."

Reading: "I Believe."

"I believe that He whose mercies are new every morning and fresh every evening, who brings into every new epoch of my life a new surprise, and makes in every experience a new disclosure of His love, who sweetens gladness with gratitude and sorrow with comfort, who makes every year better than the year preceding and every new experience an evidence of His skill in gift-giving, has for me a future of glad surprise, which I would not forecast if I could."

Closing dedication for the coming year:

"Dear Heavenly Father, be with us on the open road of life, be our good comrade in the every day burdens that we must carry on the road.

"Help us to be pioneers in finding the unknown truths of life.

"Help us to discover in our adventures on the road new ways and byways of love, beauty, service, and truth.

"This we ask in the name of the Great Companion of the Way."

Discussion.

All of us dream dreams. We think about the person we want to be in the future; the things we want to do and have. The girl dreams of beauty, of a home with love, of children, of service. The boys dreams of being successful in business, in a career, of a home and a family of his own, of making the world a better place to live in for himself, for his loved ones, for all men. What do these dreams amount to? They are the blueprints of our future. So it is very important what kind of dreams we have, and what we do about them.

The question with the Christian who has committed his way to Jesus is, "How can I be sure that the vision I have for my future is God's plan for me? How can I know that I am investing my life so that it will pay the best dividends both for myself and for God?"

Making our dreams realities. Dreams are only the blueprint . . . even the best of them. Next comes action—sweat—determination—belief in our dreams enough to cling to it through trial and trouble—the patient years of building. How far would the marvelous tunnel that runs under the Hurston river have gone, if the engineer had been content to stop at the blueprint?

The important thing to do in building is to be sure that we are building upon a solid foundation
. . . upon the rock. The ideals of Jesus Christ

TESTS OF A CHRISTIAN.

LESSON XIII—DECEMBER 30, 1934.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is begotten of God; and whosoever loveth Him that begat loveth Him also that is begotten of Him."—I John 5:1.

LESSON TEXT: I John 5:1-12.

Believing.

Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ, is born of God." "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself." Faith lies at the heart of the gospel, and is the beginning of the Christian life. He that believes that Jesus is the Christ, is God's Anointed, is the One who fulfills the demands which God's Christ was to be—such an one is born of God—through faith he becomes born again. And he may have the witness in himself. God's spirit bears witness with our spirit that we are His sons.

But John is not talking about intellectual assent when he talks about believing. He is talking about something more vital than intellectual knowledge; He is talking about personal trust. Believing on Jesus means believing in Him, responding to Him, trusting Him, committing one's self to Him. The ultimate test of a Christian is not what he believes, but whom he trusts.

Loving.

"By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God, and keep His commandments; and His commandments are not grievous." Faith in Christ begets love for Christ. And love for Christ begets love for others. A man's love for God is shown by his love to his fellowmen.

Obeying.

"For this is the love of God, that we keep His commandments." If we really love God we will keep His commandments. The one who loves seeks to please the one who is loved. It is idle talk for a man to say that he loves God and then do as he pleases. If we love God we will try always to do the things that please Him. We will keep His commandments. And His commandments are not grievous. Being a real Christian is not an onerous, uninviting, burdensome thing. The commandments of God are not grievous to the man who loves God.

Overcoming.

"For whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world; and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." He that is in us is greater than he that is the world. Christ's spirit within gives power against the things that are without. Christ's spirit within also gives power against the evil things that are within. Those who do not find in Christianity inner resources that give victory in daily living have not found one of the most essential factors in Christianity. Christ does give victory. Christ helps us in our every-day experiences.

Knowing.

John uses the word knowing. There is a knowledge that is more than simply of the head. There is the knowledge born out of experience. There are some things in religion that we can know by study, that can be arrived at through the head. There are other things that can be learned only through experience, that can be arrived at only through the heart. Jesus once said in so many words that there were many things that the wise and prudent could not understand, that those who were babes, (i. e. those who had the child-like heart and teachable spirit) received directly from their heavenly Father. Religion can be experienced as well as explained. Indeed there are some things about religion that cannot be explained, but which can be experienced. And that which a man has experienced is real to him. An experience with God gives reality and vitality and power to religion.

Living.

"And this is the record that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in His Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life." The gift of God is eternal life—it cannot be earned, it cannot be bought, it can only be received as the gift of God. It becomes the possession of any man and every man who through faith, repents of his sins, and believes in Christ. It is not primarily a matter of length. Eternal life is not simply life forever, it is not simply quantity or length. Eternal life is a matter of quality. It is life in abundance, life at its fullest, life in its richest aspects. John says that if man has found Christ he has found life that really is life. Life without Christ is simply existence. Life with Christ is life indeed. In Christ there is life and He imparts life to those who through faith come into union with Him.

And eternal life can be had here and now. Christianity is not simply or primarily a matter of life in the world which is to come. The Christian enters here and now into eternal life, he comes to experience in this world that quality of life which shall continue in the world to come. Jesus Himself said, "Verily, verily I say unto you, He that heareth my words, and believeth on Him that sent me, hath everlasting life . . . and is passed from death unto life." Alas for that man who is always talking about the joys which he will enjoy in heaven, and who does not have in this world joys unspeakable and peace which passeth all understanding.

"He that hath not the Son of God, hath not life." The man without Christ does not have life in its best sense. A man may be a good man, he may do good works, he may even enjoy life after a fashion, but he does not know what life really is or what life really can mean if he does not have Christ. Christ is life. Christ is everything. Let every man see to it that he enter into the New Year with Christ in Whom he shall find life more abundant, life that is life indeed.

THE IMPOSSIBLE IS POSSIBLE.

By JOHN MARVIN RAST.

"The Eternal said to Moses: Why cry to me? Tell the Israelites to march forward." (Exodus 13:1g. From the American Translation of the Short Bible.)

"I believe in Christianity because it is impossible." This is the declaration of Tertullian, Latin father of the Church, in the second century. He was doubtless thinking of the Red Sea experiences which he had had and Red Sea deliverances. He may have been thinking of the way Christianity back there in the early 200's had brought deliverance to captives, sight to the blind, and good tidings to the poor. We of this advanced period have seen far more than Tertullian of the power of religion—Christianity in particular—to transform impassable seas of fear, hatred and oppression into highways of peace and joy.

Our Father, grant unto us undiscourageable spirits. May we meet the challenge of the impossible with a confidence born of fellowship with Him who never knew defeat. Amen.

CHRISTMAS GLORY.

"Glory be to God in the highest and on earth, peace and good will toward men."—Luke 2:14.

What is the "Glory" that the coming of Christ brings to us? We will let a Theolog answer,—Hastings: "It displays all the attributes of God. A General arranges his army to display his wisdom and prowess; the orator arranges his argument to display his persuading powers; the philanthropist arranges his gifts to show his mercy." All these are seen in Christ in the fullest and sublimest manner and without a sense of boasting. That brings glory to God.

But Christ, as the embodiment of all the attributes of God, is not the greatest glory. His greatest glory is to be found in man who follows the Christ and becomes like Him. That glory is increased, as we, His children, embrace Him in our lives and give honor due His name in our own holy living. As we know Him more, His infinite perfection, His power, His wisdom and His love gradually increases unto the fulness of His glory.

The sweetest melody the angels of heaven ever heard is ascribed to be in their knowledge of souls being born again on earth. That is Christ coming to the soul, and that is "Glory to God in the highest."

Prayer—Our Father, in the Name of Jesus Christ we come to Thee. Make us able to please Thee in all our walk of life. Make our wills holy. Give us peace within ourselves, that we may give joy to Thee in the sense that Jesus, Thy Son, did in earth. In His name we ask it.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

CHRISTMAS DAY.

"Unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord."—Luke 2:11.

"I am the light of the world. . . He that followeth me, shall have the light of life."—Jno. 8:12.

"To the people which . . . sat in the region and shadow of death, light is sprung up."—Matt. 4:16.

No one who reads the world's literature, listens to the world's conversations, notes what people think about most, or questions his own heart, can be unaware of the darkened and bewildered state of men who live apart from Christ.

On the other hand, no one need be in darkness. We hear Jesus saying, "I am the light,"—"They which enter may see the light,"—"My light is the light of men,"—"I am the true light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world,"—"Come unto me," and "Ye are the light."

Do these sayings mean anything to you? That light has come to us, and the peace that steals over us is gracious and sufficient,—saving soulfulness to our souls, and they that walk with Him have seen the great light.

Prayer—Our Father, pervade our lives today, and see all the ensuing year with a deep peace, and may all our desires be fulfilled in Thee. In all the perplexities and events of life, we will place Thy light ahead of us that each moment may constitute the fulfillment of the Divine purpose. Day by day, breathe peace from circumference to center of our souls, and keep our hearts and minds through Jesus Christ.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

GOOD TIDINGS. FEAR NOT.

"Behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people."—Luke 2:10.

This is the world's first message from heaven to men. Of course, God had spoken to Abraham, and Isaac, and many others and through them the affairs of the early nations had been guided.

But to the shepherds of Bethlehem this message came with a new and unheard of power and significance. The birth of Jesus Christ was to be from now on a light, and a solvent for the fears of man. Through Him and His love they have walked in that light, have come into a sacred nearness individually which has inspired the world to the good that it is.

There is an awe in coming close to God and realizing how close He is to us, but it is an awe of goodness and inspiration; it is an awe that has no fear; but an awe that feels the satisfaction of having a loving, understanding and helpful friend. So true is this that "Fear not" almost became a theme word of our Saviour during His ministry. When you read the Bible, note how often He uses it. It comes to us with particular significance. At every turn of the road we can hear those cheery words. When the ship was going down, the disciples heard it; when Christ was leaving them, they heard it; they were included in the last words of the Master to the disciples, "Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." In all our experiences we can hear it.

This was the message of the Saviour and it should be the reality of our lives. Not a sweeter message of Christmas has ever come to us.

Prayer—Our Father, thou knowest and we know that Thou hast been speaking to souls throughout the ages, "Fear not." Thou didst come into the world to speak it and Thou art speaking it still. Grant us this Christmas time the reassurance that Thou art always with us and will never leave us nor forsake us. Thou hast overcome the world, the flesh and the devil, and we should not fear. Thou wilt overcome, and we would join Thee in the conquest; forgive us of our sins and save us for that service, we ask it in the name of Christ.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

ASHAMED.

"In Thee, O Lord, do I put my trust, let me not be ashamed."—Psalm 31:1.

The word "ashamed" as used in the Bible, means to be confused, to discountenance, to be overawed, cajoled, browbeaten; and does not refer to that emotion which comes by a consciousness of guilt or impropriety through reproach in dishonor, ignominy, and contempt, which causes a shame and disgrace; unless it be, in a sense, being guilty of a conduct which brings on one's own self reproach and insolence.

Jesus had the lofty and refined accomplishment of one who never for once needed to cringe or stoop. He loved and honored men, and He loved to merit their honor.

One of the noblest aims of life is to be loved by every people. To merit or earn that love, one has to live that way. Jesus is the way, the light and the power.

Prayer—Our Father, we approach the passing of the old year and the threshold of the new. Whatever failures have been ours in the past, give unto us for the new year, the inspiration to strive for the best gifts in life, and to keep our standard fixed in Him, who is our Saviour and our Lord. In Jesus' name we ask it.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

ANGER AND LOVE.

"I trod down the peoples in mine anger . . . I will make mention of the lovingkindness of Jehovah."—Is. 63:1-9.

Very striking in their contiguity are these two paragraphs of Isaiah, the first picturing so powerfully the wrath of God against the guilty, and the second with equal power showing the great goodness of God toward His people.

Some Christians forget this second side of the Old Testament, which is quite as marked, to say the least, as the first side. Some persons—not to say Christians—forget one or the other of the sides of God; but both aspects of Deity are to be heeded, and neither of them neglected, at our peril.

For if we are children of God's anger, we shall become too hard; and if we are children merely of His lovingkindness, we shall become too soft. We are to be children of God, of both sides of God, of all of God, hating sin with a perfect hatred, loving all men with the love wherewith Christ has loved us.

Prayer—Therefore may we be strong, O God. Therefore may we be gentle, O God.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SATURDAY.

SLINGS AND STONES.

"So David prevailed over the Phillistine with a sling and with a stone."—I Sam. 17:48-54.

Goliath was a mighty giant, but young David, with his sling and pebbles was mightier far; for with Goliath were only the idols of Gath, but with David was the King of kings and Lord of lords, the Almighty and Eternal.

Having Him on our side, whatever small and weak weapon we are accustomed to is invincible against the most powerful foe that can attack us.

Who cannot throw a stone against some evil? We can speak to our neighbor. We can write a letter to a friend. Perhaps we can get some lines printed in the local newspaper. And we have a ballot. And we have prayer.

Prayer—Thou hast not given us a siege-gun that can hurl a ton of high explosives, but Thou hast given us five pebbles and a sling. May we use them heroically for Thee.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

SIGHS—AND SIGHS.

"We bring our years to an end as a sigh."—Ps. 90:8-17.

There is the sigh of sadness and there is the sigh of satisfaction. This sentence is from "the prayer of Moses, the man of God." Now Moses did not bring his years to an end as a sigh; for when he came to die at the age of one hundred and twenty, "his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated." Not even does this psalm end with a sigh, but with the favor of God and the establishing of the work of one's hands. It reminds us of the end of Christ's life on the cross, which was not a sigh but a shout, the triumphant cry, "It is finished!"

So may it be with us as on this "old year's day" we look back on the twelvemonth gone. May it be with gratitude for all God's goodness. May it be with honest and modest joy in all the good we have been enabled through Him to accomplish. And may it be in the glad certainey of the endless years ahead of us.

Prayer—Thus, our Father, we lay down the burden of the year with a sigh of happy completion, for Thou hast been with us, as Thou wilt be with us forever.—Amen. AMOS R. WELLS.

HIS UNSPEAKABLE GIFT.

By JOHN G. TRUITT, D. D.

"Thanks be unto God for His unspeakable gift."
2 Cor. 2:15.

These are days when gift giving is in the minds of many people. Let us here consider "God's unspeakable gift." Let us remember that Christmas giving comes from God's giving. And that His gift was the Babe of Bethlehem. Our giving shall fall short of what it might mean to our own lives if it does not partake of something of the spirit of that gift, and if our gifts are not given in somewhat of a remembrance of the giving of God when He gave Jesus in Bethlehem. If our Christmas could only keep Christ in its center how happy would be our giving, how wonderful our dinner parties, and how beautiful the re-assembling of our families about the sacred hearth-side once again!

It would not mean less joy, but more; it would not mean less enthusiasm, but more; it would not mean less of the finest and best of Christmas sentiment, but more,—far more. So then let us think about God's gift. The beloved St. James says, "Do not err, my beloved brethren, every good gift, and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, in whom there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." God not only gave us the gift of Jesus, but He gave us the gift of giving, and hath meant that first in all our giving should be the giving of Jesus to others. We cannot give Him unless we have accepted Him for our own selves. If we have Him in our heart and daily living we have God's unspeakable gift.

"Unspeakable gift," is Paul's way of saying the gift which cannot be described in speech,—that gift which is beyond the words of man. It is a burst of beauty upon the lips of one of His humble servants saying, "How I love Him!" What great deliverance He has given my soul! What great victory He hath given my life! What opening doors of duty and challenge He hath set before me! What Courage He hath given my heart, what peace He hath given my soul!

Paul has just been writing down the immortal words of his commendation to his newly established Corinthian church, telling them how they have bountifully given of their gifts for the "poor saint in Jerusalem"; and telling them how their example has been used to bless others in the art and joy of giving; and further telling them that their giving has worked out a two-fold good, in that it not only hath blessed the needy ones in old Jerusalem, but also it has given them the spirit of thankfulness to God. This spirit of gratitude to God, thinks Paul, is a most worthwhile grace to covet. He keeps it ever uppermost in his own heart.

How is Jesus indescribable? I cannot tell you what it is to have Him born in my heart. I remember the day I went to the altar in Mt. Bethel Christian church, and the sweet victory that came into my soul. But how shall I describe it? And even that seems so far away today. It is the Christ born in my heart today that does for today. And how shall I describe that? Paul's description was little more than an ascription of thanks to God for that unspeakable gift.

Mary was the first one to try to describe His coming into her life, and how lovely her words are! How they seek to tell what great things He hath done for her! No more beautiful lines can be found: "And Mary said:

"My soul doth magnify the Lord,
And my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour.
For He hath regarded the low estate of His handmaiden.
For behold, from henceforth all generations shall call me blessed.

For He that is mighty hath done great things, and holy is His Name.

And His mercy is on them that fear Him from generation to generation."

Her beautiful words have been set to sweet music, and have sung their way down across the centuries; but far more has happened in the soul than on the lips when they have been sung,—for he is an indescribable gift!

Luke tells us that there was a man of God living in Jerusalem in the days when Jesus was born; "and the same man was just and devout, waiting for the consolation of Israel: and the Holy Ghost was upon him." Yes, he was a good man, just and devout, and perhaps versed in the sweet songs, and lovely language of the temple psalter; but when the Babe of Bethlehem was tenderly laid in his arms his words, sublime as they are, could never describe what he felt in his soul. "Then he took him up in his arms and blessed God, and said:

"Lord, now lettest Thou Thy servant depart in peace,
According to Thy word:
For mine eyes have seen Thy salvation,
Which Thou hast prepared before the face of all people;
A light to lighten the Gentiles,
And the glory of Thy people Israel."

A thousand years later, when church and state were one, and much that was best in the Gospel of Jesus Christ had been covered by the vanity and material power, Bernard of Clairvaux, whose pure and holy life has lived across the years, sang:

"Jesus, the very thought of Thee
With sweetness fills my breast;
But sweeter far Thy face to see,
And in Thy presence rest.

"O Hope of every contrite heart,
O Joy of all the meek,
To those that fall how kind Thou art;
How good to those who seek!

"But what to those who find? Ah this—
Nor tongue, nor pen can show;
The love of Jesus, what it is None but His loved ones know."

Striking are the words of Jesus in the light of our thinking thus far, when He said to the woman at the well, "If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that asketh for drink. . . ." Knowing the will and mind of God, Jesus looked upon Himself as God's gift to the world. Jesus is saying to this woman at the well,—a deep-dyed sinner,—if you know the gift of God, and who I am, you would not hesitate to ask living water! My friends, God so loved the world that He gave Jesus, in order that sinners, the very lowliest of them, might have living water, everlasting life; and that none should go without the mercy and love of God, choose they only to accept that so great gift!

There was something, indeed, for the heavens to sing about when the first Christmas bells rang in Bethlehem; when a star out of the pathway of the worlds hovered over the Judean village; and when the angels announced to mortal men: "For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." And strange, beautiful words of that self-same Saviour when He says: "Likewise, I say unto you, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth." In other words when Christ is born in our hearts heaven rejoices. The gift is accepted, and only heaven itself can know the glory and value of that gift!

Why men will be without Him I cannot see! Why we should ever turn a deaf ear to Him I do not know. Why we should ever doubt His goodness, mercy, and love I cannot understand; for He is such an unspeakable gift,—the glorious gift of God. May He be born in our hearts today, and may our love, and worship of Him be so great that He shall never be dethroned in our lives!

"O holy Child of Bethlehem,
Descend to us, we pray;
Cast out our sin and enter in;
Be born in us today.
We hear the Christmas angels
The great glad tidings tell;
O come to us, abide with us,
Our Lord Emmanuel!"—Amen.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

Richmond, Virginia

Christian Orphanage
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

Our goal—twenty thousand dollars for the year. Our financial report this week carries up to $17,485.43. We still lack $2,514.57 of being to our goal and have until January the first to reach it. Now, my friends, the joy you are going to get out of this Christmas season will not be in what you get for yourself but in what you do for others. Oh! the joy of giving! The joy of making others happy! Our people have always been loyal and responsive to the Orphanage in its appeals. Our churches are able to push us up to the goal and I have the utmost confidence in you to believe you will not fail me now. This is the eighteenth anniversary of our work here. We made our first Thanksgiving appeal for the orphanage eighteen years ago. We set a goal then and reached it.

We have set goals time and again since that time and reached them. You have been mighty good. We are grateful. You will not fail me now will you? See to it that your church makes its Thanksgiving offering and mails it in by January first. If you see that it is going to be a hard pull then just open your heart and mail us a personal check to help us reach the goal. Will you do your part? Don't you want to do something special to help us make our little children happy. The little girls will get dolls. But we have fifteen little boys under ten years of age. The finest little boys you ever saw. Just as sweet and obedient as they can be. They like little wagons, horns, drums and all kinds of playthings. How many do you want to make happy this Christmas by buying and mailing us a toy for a little boy age (?). See if you don't get just a little extra joy out of it.

are the finest, the truest foundation the world has ever seen.

Let us build as Sydney Lanier decided to build his life:

"As the marsh hen secretly builds on the watery sod, Behold, I will build me a nest on the greatness of God; I will fly in the greatness of God as the marsh hen flies, In the freedom that fills all the space twixt the marsh and the skies.

By so many roots as the marsh grass sends in the sod, I will heartily lay me a-hold on the greatness of God."

But how build the walls of this house of our dreams? Brotherhood must be built into this house of ours if it is to be strong and worthy. For every beam of self, there must be a crossbeam of others. For it is only by mutual support, by living and working with each other, that we can build the finest lives.

Using mistakes and failures as stepping stones to higher things. Many people start out with high dreams and get discouraged. Some lack the patience and persistence to build their dreams. Sometimes it is an appetite to which they surrender, or they have allowed a discouragement, or a temporary failure to stop their progress. These are the failures of the world.

What would have happened to our country if George Washington had given up at Valley Forge? But he went to God in prayer for help. Columbus could have given up . . . and yet . . .

"He gained a world! he gave that world
Its grandest lesson: 'On! sail on!'"

Joseph used his mistakes and misfortunes to help him forward to his goal. A young man thought his dreams of being a successful physician were shattered because of a serious disease of his heart. But through his study of this disease physicians are better able now to treat such patients than they would have been without that young man's remarkable story of his own disease. Louisa Alcott, cursed by limitations and deprivations and humiliations of poverty and debt, achieved her dream of success as a writer by telling in a book the story of that very poverty-stricken family, the story of those "Little Women" of whom she had been one, and of their mother and father. There is Phillips Brooks who planned to be a teacher but found that as a teacher he could not hold the wandering attention of mischievous students, and who said, after his first year of failure, "I don't care what happens to me"; but who somehow kept on dreaming, and became America's greatest preacher.

What do you know about the following?—Marie Dressler; Roland Hayes; the Wright Brothers; Dr. Albert Schweitzer; Thomas Mott Osborn; the apostle Paul.

—Adapted from C. E. World Quarterly and S. S. Herald.

"The kingdom of God can never be established by raising money, but it can never be extended without raising money."

which he never recovered. His life and works are known to the church. He never missed a session of his conference, never missed a session of the Convention, and never missed a local appointment except when there was death in his family.

I am sure that there are hundreds of people throughout the church who will want to contribute to this worthy undertaking, that a memorial, earned and deserved, may mark the last resting place of these faithful servants. Mrs. D. S. Hogg reports the following contributions:

OBITUARIES

UTLEY.

On December 7, 1934, Miss Nancy R. Utley died near Holly Springs, N. C., lacking only 13 days of having reached her eightieth birthday. For approximately fifty years she was a successful teacher, having taught until the infirmities of age necessitated her retirement. She was a refined and cultured woman, uniformly kind and considerate of others and spent her long life unselfishly in the service of others. Her father died early in the Confederate army and Miss Nancy acquired her education under the most trying difficulties. She taught hundreds of pupils in Wake and Harnett counties who are now useful citizens. In early girlhood she united with Wake Chapel Christian Church, Varina, where her funeral was conducted on Sunday afternoon, December 9th, by her pastor, Rev. Lee Johnson, assisted by Mr. Williams, pastor of the Methodist church and a friend of the family

CHAS. H. UTLEY.

MILTEER.

David H. Milteer died at his home near Suffolk, Va., December 6, 1934, aged 74 years. The funeral services were conducted at the home by the writer assisted by Dr. H. J. Goodwin. The burial was in Holy Neck cemetery. Mr. Milteer leaves one daughter, Mrs. W. A. Phillips, one brother, Charles B. Milteer, two half-sisters, Mrs. Essie Harlette and Mrs. Eunice Rountree, two half-brothers, E. Cleo and John T. Cross, and seven grandchildren. He had been a member of Holy Neck Christian Church since early life, and was an humble and consistent Christian.

WE CALL IT DEATH.

We call it Death.
It is not dying;
'Tis but a moment's pause
Beside still waters running deep;
The soothing calm of peaceful rest
Which, with the morn,
Summons softly its slumbering guests
To greet the radiant freshness of the dawn.

Death is a moment's pause.
Even as Comma, set with purpose sure
Within its sentence frame,
Sustains an instant's interlude,
Exalting with a gentle accent
Words yet to be spoken,
So Death but stills the words of Earth
For the passing of a silent breath
To emphasize their meaning,
And to render more magnificent,
In rhythmic continuity of thought,

The purer language of Life Eternal.
A moment's pause. . . . .
Even as cathedral choir stays its voice
For unsung measure of silent rest
To magnify the choral charm
Of surging notes that follow,
So Death is but that silent bar
Of music, without sound of note—
A quiet pause in mortal melody
That glorifies with brighter emphasis,
And harmony divine,
