A second fact is the rising national consciousness among all peoples, so that anything which the West has to offer is viewed with suspicion, and perhaps a measure of dislike, in the East. In other words, and briefly, the non-Christian world is not so ready as it once was to listen to anything that comes from Christian centers.

Then, thirdly, there is the changed attitude of the younger generation toward Christianity which expresses itself in the passing of the conviction that Christianity has something fundamentally important which other religions do not have; next is the light esteem with which organized religion and church organization in each and all expressions tends to be held; finally, in a draining off of enthusiasm into other issues, particularly social justice, race relations and the abolition of war.

Fourthly, the world situation is one characterized by great intimacy of contact between Christian and non-Christian people. Thus upon the missionary cause, no longer worked out in happy isolation, is heaped the odium of the seemingly endless iniquities of our Western civilization.

And lastly, the upheaval of the world-wide economic changes imperils the frail bark of missionary enterprise together with many another craft that seemed but a short time ago destined to years of peaceful voyages in the things of body or mind.

I have done scant justice to the searching analysis of Dr. Watson. It is the most adequate study of the world situation of which I have any knowledge and deserves most careful consideration. I have not tried to mention his detailed suggestion as to how each of these points of peril to missions can be met and turned.

Suppose, however, we set again before our minds those elements of menace, and, further, that we call up to remembrance the profound study of the mission task made from quite another angle of approach and for an altogether different purpose, The Laymen's Missionary Report. There are three broad considerations in which we may summarize our conclusions as to the future. This depends upon:

A. First, upon our ability to adapt our appeal to new conditions. Every so often I take a little while to read again here and there in a book I have read straight through several times. It is the life story of the young men and women who were killed at Paotingfu in the massacres of 1900. It is not a notable literary triumph, but it is a most deeply-moving story. The significance of it is not affected at all by the fact that the motives which led these heroic spirits to their martyrdom would not affect youth today. No, but youth is the same; ready and eager as then to give to the uttermost. What alone is necessary is such a phrasing of the appeal that as was said by a young man twenty-seven centuries ago, so still it shall be said, "Here am I; send me." Mrs. Buck, more effectively, but with quite the same intent as a good many others, has pleaded for this new formulation of the appeal for missionary service. We must not, through blindness of mind or fear of heart, trifle or fumble in this matter, but keep at the task of defining the appeal to take in earnest the life of Jesus Christ.

B. The second necessity is to hold steady the unchanging Truth that the Christian faith is forever and always a missionary faith. Wherever we find a form of it in which the desire of sharing its treasures with others is dormant or dead, we may assess that form as bankrupt. It is not a philosophy first of all; never a mere dogma; an ethic indeed, but not primarily that. It is a gospel, a good news of truth of such nature that to try to bury it in our own life or civilization is to forfeit it. Here is no time for debate or discussion. "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." "Except ye lose your life ye cannot save it." Such comments outline a commission which the church can justifiably ignore only after honestly repudiating its faith. This is not a consideration to be urged upon anyone doubtful about Jesus. But we, who believe in him, had better not make any profession of loyalty and then try to justify the neglect of an impulse which can no more be eliminated from his gospel than light can be eliminated from life.

C. Finally, we must cultivate the deep insight which discerns that all high inspirations of life are comprehended in Jesus. Think of any of the great goals in life today which are felt to hold the allegiance of our most adventurous, devoted lives.

The plain and simple truth is that insofar as any of these goals is won, Christianity is established to that degree. You cannot create a society where social justice prevails without creating one where love controls. And that is just what Jesus died to bring about. When race prejudice breaks down, it occurs through the recognition of the Christian teaching, "God has made of one blood all nations." Peace among men is only another name for brotherhood between nations that yet can remain as distict and separate as two individuals.

Was it Mark Twain who, after looking into the arguments of the group that claimed that Francis Bacon wrote Shakespeare's plays, declared that, "Shakespeare may not have done so, but it must have been another man by the same name?"

All these noble ends which attract youth today are literally Christianity by another name. And yet, Christianity is more than any one. It is more than the mere sum of them. It is the living spirit which seeks expression through each and all. It is not a matter of organization. Extending Christianity is not building churches but sharing our experience of Christ with the world. When that is done you have started the march toward economic justice, you have broken across racial barriers, you have begun to mold the larger goodwill.

This truth, that presenting Christ is the essential, unifying, underlying, universal task, it is the duty of leaders to interpret to youth so that their enthusiasms may be poured into it. And it is the inescapable duty of those who direct our agencies so to align them that youth will feel they can and want to work out through them. I have faith it can be done.

Not so long ago I was speaking with a young physician electing to undertake a missionary task of great promise but much difficulty. He was turning from a promising career in the United States to undertake this task.

"What makes you want to do this?" I asked.

"Because," was the answer, "I think the church has gone progressive."—By Ferdinand Q. Blanchard in Advance.

VICTORIOUS COMPANIONSHIP.

fear, for if in faith we go and in obedience to His command, we shall have that conquering companionship.

"Guide me, O Thou great Jehovah,
Pilgrim through this barren land;
I am weak, but Thou art mighty;
Hold me with Thy powerful hand."

I know of no better words than this prayer that I ask you to pray with me, with which I close my plea and message:

"O Spirit of Jesus, we need Thee. To change this world out of its wretchedness into Thy gladness, we need Thee. Oh, come with Thy great power. It was to the great hearts Thou didst promise Thy presence! 'Go ye into all the world,' Thou didst say, 'and lo, I am with you always.' Save us blessed Saviour, from ourselves, from our narrow nationalism and prejudice, save us from walking only by sight and give us faith to walk with Thee! Save us for Thy Kingdom. Save us for the world-wide brotherhood. Save us for Thyself. For we ask it all in Thy Name and for Thy Name's sake. Amen!"

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA YOUNG PEOPLE.

Each church in the Western North Carolina Conference is asked to have one or more young people in attendance at a meeting called for 2:30 o'clock, Saturday afternoon, April 13th, at the church, which is at Ramseur. The purpose of the meeting is twofold, to reorganize and to plan for a rally under the leadership of Miss Lucy M. Eldredge. Let us come and let us come promptly and with a fine spirit.

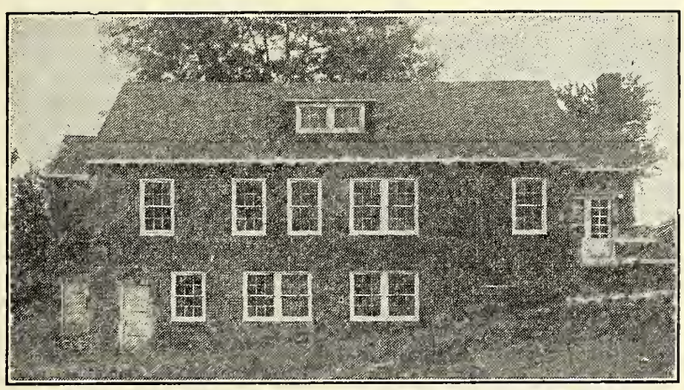
THE WINSTON-SALEM CHURCH A MISSION BOARD PROJECT.

Starting with only a few dollars and a few interested people, the United Church of Winston-Salem—the most recent project of the Mission Board—has made remarkable progress during the two and a half years of its life. It is just one example of what the Mission Board of our Church has attempted to do. For many years, there has been a manifest need of a Church center for the rural churches around Winston-Salem and in the summer of 1931, the Mission Board spent $17.00 in arranging for a rally of Congregational and Christian people in Winston-Salem. This rally resulted in the beginning of a promising work. In October, 1932, the congregation was formally organized and plans were immediately put under way for the purchase of a building site and the erection of a suitable first building.

With the assistance of the Mission Board, a large building site was purchased in the beautiful residential Ardmore section of the city, and with the assistance of the Congregational Church building society, the congregation erected a parish house and chapel. This building was completed and formally opened July 9, 1933 and was dedicated on Easter Sunday, 1934. The building is a brick veneer structure and is on the American bungalow style of architecture, with two floors, the basement extending under the entire building.



The Church at Winston-Salem—the Mission Board's Latest Project.

It provides a beautiful and worshipful chapel auditorium, seating over 200, and Sunday school facilities. The building is an example of economies practiced by the Mission Board. In consultation with the Mission Boards, the congregation in erecting this type of building conserved finances, yet erected an edifice in keeping with the beautiful homes surrounding it. Another feature is the fact that the building is so constructed that when it is outgrown as a chapel, and the complete church plant is erected on the corner lots of the building site, with a small expenditure it can be converted into a seven room parsonage, or it can be continued as an effective Sunday school unit of the Church plant. In this way the congregation has provided adequately for its present needs and at the same time has kept away from a temporary type of building, yet conserving almost its entire investment.

The congregation, facing the double task of building a membership and an edifice at the same time, has steadily grown in strength. The membership is now fifty with a list of 25 reasonably certain prospective members to be received within the next few weeks. The Sunday school enrollment has reached 114, with an average attendance of 65 during January, February, and March. On Sunday, March 31st, the attendance was 129. Financially, the church is doing remarkably well. Last fall, the every member canvass yielded ample income pledges to meet the local needs. The average contribution per member is more than 50 cents per week. The Conference apportionment last year was paid in full both to the Congregational and the Christian Conferences with which the Church is affiliated; and the 1934-35 apportionments, based upon the enlarged budget plan, will be met in full.

The United Church of Winston-Salem is a practical realization of the merger of the Congregational and Christian Churches. For years prior to the merger, both groups had looked upon this rapidly growing industrial city as a field of opportunity, but nothing was done about it until the two groups went at it cooperatively.

Considering the youth of the church in Winston-Salem, it has filled a definite and important place in the life of our churches in this area. Its beginning was largely responsible for the reorganization of the Christian Missionary Association in the N. C. and Va. Conference; and it represents a beginning of Church extension which had for some time been slowed up in the Southern Convention. For the past two years, it has sponsored the appearance of the Elon College Singers in the city of Winston-Salem, the first time Elon College had been brought to the attention of the city. It has worked hand in hand with the rural churches in the vicinity of Winston-Salem, having been largely instrumental in forming a pastorate consisting of Salem Chapel, Belews Creek, Pleasant Ridge and New Hope Churches, with Rev. D. M. Spence as pastor. These rural churches have likewise been of material assistance to the Winston-Salem work.

Rev. William T. Scott, the present pastor, has been on the job since the first rally in 1931. He says, "It has been a difficult but a worthwhile struggle to establish a work in Winston-Salem. I feel that the point deserves a financial nurture and sustenance, for I believe our work has possibilities of becoming one of our strongest and most influential churches. Let us further the cause here and in other fields of opportunity by a liberal offering to the appeal of the Mission Cause."

HISTORY FIRST CHURCH, PORTSMOUUTH, VA.

This church was organized October 27, 1901, by Rev. J. W. Harrell, in the old Y. M. C. A. building (now Colony Theatre), with thirty names on the list as charter members. The organization followed a two weeks' meeting held by Mr. Harrell. The Pythian Castle was rented as a place to hold the meetings and where the congregation worshipped until the lot was purchased, on the corner of Effingham and High Streets, (where Blumberg's Department Store now does a large business) and a small chapel was erected, being completed in September, 1902. From September, 1902, until June 5, 1910, this chapel was the house of worship. The present building, corner Washington and County Streets, was opened for public worship on June 5, 1910.

The following pastors have served the church: Rev. J. W. Harrell for thirteen years; Rev. H. E. Rountree for three years; Rev. Henry W. Dowding for about four years; Rev. H. Shelton Smith, supply pastor one summer; Rev. W. L. Wells for three years; Rev. Herman C. Caviness for six years; Rev. A. W. Hurst supply pastor for three months; Rev. Robert A. Whitten, now in third year as pastor.

The present membership roll shows about 240, with an enrollment in the Sunday School of about two hundred. The Woman's Missionary Society has twenty members, Ladies' Aid Society, (Three Circles) has seventy members. Young People's Missionary Society of 17 members, Junior Missionary Society of about 18 members. Intermediate Christian Endeavor has about twenty regular members and the Junior C. E. has fourteen.

Last year the church raised its total budget almost six thousand dollars, in every department. For Missions, the church and Sunday school, including Woman's Missionary Society raised three hundred and nine dollars and thirteen cents.

Within the past two years the church has painted the interior and exterior of the building, installed new electric lights, and put in and paid for, a modern steam heating plant, which today would cost more than two thousand dollars.

We have more than seventy regular tithers in the church and on April 1st, we began a thirteen weeks' campaign, known as the Belmont plan, in which every one entering the covenant will contribute one tenth of their income to the church. In this drive we hope to reduce the church debt, at present a little less than six thousand dollars. The entire membership has practically joined the Belmont plan.

A MISSIONARY MESSAGE TO SOCIETIES PLANNING PROGRAMS.

To our Sisters who plan Missionary Programs, Greetings:

One of our deep and fervent enthusiasms is well informed members of missionary societies. The sentiment of that hilarious song of the street, "I don't know where I'm going but I'm on my way," has no place in the plan and purpose of women organized to carry out the Great Commission.

"Into all the world" is not some vague place across the sea or beyond the mountain. It is a number of very definite places which merit our intelligent interests, and which need our devoted support with our prayers and our gifts. But if we do not know them, how can we love them?

And so, realizing our own need, and having found an ever springing source in our own Missionary Herald, I venture to urge that its material find place on our programs. From its ever artistic front cover to the back, each page has a vital message for us.

Our missionary friends, those who stand in the gap, speak on these pages. They write bravely of their hopes and achievements, they challenge our interests, and long for our understanding.

Can we fail to read?

Margaret B. Lightbourne,
Member Program Com.

Everywhere in the world there is some sort of industry, but in backward lands it is primitive. To raise any people we must improve their material conditions. Industrial missions show the natives that there is nothing mean or humiliating in work. To glorify work is to give a new meaning to life.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

SOME OF OUR MISSIONARY POINTS.

Some of them, many of them in fact, are not missionary points any more. It would be nearer the mark to say that many of them are missionary dynamos: power houses in fact, sending out their constant stream of missionary light power into the world. That is neither fancy nor fiction but plain and simple fact. Take this one instance. Well does this writer remember when Dr. J. W. Manning of Norfolk, came to our Board and asked aid in the sum of $250.00 to help secure land and boards to establish and cover a place of Christian worship in Norfolk to be known as "Third Church." The grant was made, and then for two or three years the requests for aid in similar sums came and were granted. A temporary house planked up and down was put up and a congregation was assembled. Then came one day the pleasing announcement to the Board, "You need help us more until we are ready to build permanently." And that congregation gathered in a building which no one could call a church house, save by the indulgence of a very prodigal imagination, began to take its place with the older and more active of our churches in support of Missions and the benevolences. Years passed and this child of daring and dreams laid aside its swaddling clothes and sensing its own strength in the Lord said, "Now, give us $40,000 and we will put up a temple of worship to the Lord that will cost not less than $150,000." We took them at their word: gave ready assent, and while the Board confined itself to its original pledge, the church went far beyond its original pledge and erected a building costing $250,000. And during all that time, and during all this time, Christian Temple has maintained its spirit of sharing with others, even to the remotest parts of the earth, the Gospel of our Lord. (I am not writing now of the struggles, I am thinking of the triumphs.)

How well the writer remembers how our Board stood by Zion Church—then on the outskirts, now in a residential section of Norfolk and called Old Zion—till the last dollar of its indebtedness was paid and it was able to face the world and share the Gospel with others: the Board helped when it was unable in its youth to stand and walk alone.

And so of Reidsville and Chapel Hill in North Carolina; of Lanett, Ala., and Columbus, Ga.,, of Winchester, Va., and dozens of other points in city and in country until they had builded and finished paying for their buildings. Others our Board has helped and is still helping, having begun when they were in their beginning, and who are not yet able to go without the encouragement and aid of their brethren and sisters of a common cause and name. Such is South Norfolk, Va., Raleigh, N. C., Newport News, Va., Ocean View, Va., Rocky Ford and Elk Spur in Carroll County, Va., and the most youthful and promising of our love, Winston-Salem, N. C.

It would fill more space than is allotted to me to name the points of our aid and fellowship who only asked and required help for one, two or three years and then took their places with us as burden bearers of our common task.

Not the last of our joys is our Richmond, Va., Church. Only a few years ago, it was, the Board asked the now President of the Southern Christian Convention, Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, D. D., then a student just out of seminary to go for us and make a survey of needs and prospects in Richmond. He went and returned a report of a lovely land and promising. The Board then asked him to go for us and undertake the work. He had made previous promise and could not go. The Board employed a pastor, paying all his salary to go and gather together our people there. Soon a congregation was gathered in one of the city school buildings. Soon the congregation was paying one-half of their pastor's salary. And then that congregation said, "Give us $30,000 and we will build a house that our fellowship will not be ashamed of." The Board voted and paid the amount and the present building in the capitol city of Virginia is the result.

But I must forbear. The Board has done its unselfish best. There are members on the Board now who were elected when the Board was first organized, and they have given unlimited time and the best they had for this glorious work of the church—and not one member of them in all these years has ever been paid a penny, or would have accepted a penny, as payment for their services. This paper only gives the faintest picture of even one side of its work: for through the years it has been and yet is, the policy of the Board and of the Church whose servant the Board is, to give as much to foreign as to home missions. And today along with the work here in our midst, we, by faith and in obedience to the command of our Lord are helping in foreign work even to the uttermost parts of the earth, where our Congregational-Christian Churches have a parish of 60,000,000 souls under ten flags.

FOR THE CAUSE OF MISSIONS.

The Christian religion is a missionary religion. Christ came "to seek and to save that which was lost." He found a small group who believed in Him. Because of their faith in Him, they were forgiven, they were cleansed, they were regenerated, they were made co-laborers together with Him in an effort to save the world. When He left them in the flesh, the mantle of authority was placed upon them, and they were commanded "to go and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." They were to carry the gospel, and those who came after them were to pick up its echo and see that the same was carried further. On down through the ages, this glorious gospel has been echoing and re-echoing in the hearts of men throughout the world. We rejoice that it has reached us; but no man can receive the gospel and keep it. The moment he receives it, the commission is upon him to go and give it to others.

As a church, we rejoice in the ministry of those who have inspired our church in missionary passion and in missionary giving. Personally, I am not acquainted with all the membership of the church; but somebody said to me one time that Rev. P. T. Klapp, now deceased, was one of the moving spirits in helping our church to begin its missionary endeavor. I happen to know that Dr. J. P. Barrett, at different times editor of the CHRISTIAN SUN, had a passion for missions. He had received but was unwilling to attempt to keep that which he had received; and with great joy he imparted it to others, moving his people to give expression to their consecrated emotions in their gifts for missions, so that, out of the Old Memorial Christian Temple in Norfolk, Virginia, went men and gifts that greatly stirred the heart of our church. But, perhaps more than anything else, the organization of a Mission Board for the Southern Convention has done more to encourage our church to formulate a constructive program for the advance of the church and the cause of missions and to secure funds for the prosecution of their program than anything else in our history. Col. J. E. West, of Suffolk, is the chairman of this Board. The Board, however, would have been helpless without an efficient leader to give his entire time to the missionary cause of the church. Dr. J. O. Atkinson, we all feel, was raised up out of weakness to bear the banner of missions in the front ranks of our church, that the membership in great faith and generosity might follow through the years the leadership that he has lent us and the church. Hundreds and thousands of dollars have been contributed for the salvation of men and women in this and in other lands. For nearly four months now, on account of insufficient strength, he has not been in our midst. May it be the prayer of all that God may restore him to health and give him the strength to give his passion and devotion for the coming of the Kingdom.

We have done something, but we have not done our best. We have accomplished much, but much more remains to be done. Dr. Atkinson cannot do it alone. We—all of us—cannot perform the task without our means. This is an appeal for the reconsecration of our church to the great cause of the Kingdom and for a sacrificial giving on our part, that the Kingdom may not be hindered in its coming because of the lack of material assistance. The Lord has blessed us. May we give according to the blessings received?

This issue of the CHRISTIAN SUN is a special missionary number. I trust that the whole church may read the same. Let everyone get ready to make his contribution on Easter Sunday morning. May the Lord bless the church in her giving!

CONVENTION MISSIONS.

When the Southeast Convention in session at Berea, Nansemond, church, several years ago, adopted a resolution providing for the additional apportionments for Home and Foreign Missions, an advance step was taken in the Conferences composing the Convention. Until this was done the missionary work of the Convention was practically limited to spineless resolutions and meaningless platitudes. A Christian Missionary Association had previously been organized to carry on Home Missionary work within the bounds of the Convention. This covered such a large territory that is was difficult to have a large attendance at the annual meetings. The Convention Association was disbanded after a few years, and the plan of Conference Associations and a definite Conference Apportionment for Home Missions was adopted as a substitute. An apportionment for Foreign Missions had been endorsed several years before this venture.

Just a few years ago the Apportionments for Home Missions and Foreign Missions were dropped from the Conference Apportionments, and the Convention authorized Special Offerings at Easter and monthly Sunday school offerings for Home and Foreign Missions. Many people regretted this change, as it appeared to be side-stepping the Mission work of the Convention, and many churches failed to support the work under this method.

The last session of the Convention voted to return to the former plan of asking the Conferences to make a definite apportionment for Home and Foreign Missions. The Easter Mission offerings and the Sunday school monthly offerings are to be continued under the present plan; but these offerings may now be credited on the Mission Apportionment adopted by the local Conferences, of the revised Conference Apportionments conform to the requests of the Convention. It should be said that this is the personal opinion of the writer on a matter which is not entirely clear in the Convention records. The history of these changes and the spirit of the Convention would seem to justify this opinion in reference to crediting the Special and Sunday School Offerings. At any rate the present goals are higher than the receipts have been under the former plan of the Convention.

It is well to make one point in this matter clear. Under the former plan, as has been stated before, the Conferences included all the Convention funds and Conference Apportionments in one sum. There was one Apportionment covering all funds, and the Convention made the division through a Committee on Finance. Now there are several Apportionments, in fact, one Apportionment for each fund. A local church should raise every Apportionment in full to get on the Honor Roll. For example, if a church exceeds its apportionment for Missions, it cannot consistently justify itself in not raising some other fund in full, for each fund is separate and distinct.

The churches are now in the Mission Period. Every church should earnestly try to raise its Mission Apportionments in full, if possible, during the Mission Period. Some churches, of course, include all these funds in the Church Budget. Whatever plan of finance is used, the aim should be to meet the expectations of the Conference and Convention. In the majority of cases this can be done, if the task is taken up in the early part of the Conference year. It will put new life into any church to succeed in doing its full share in this great work. And it will help the various enterprises of the church to know that we are united in our efforts to support the church of our choice.

I. W. J.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN AS A MISSIONARY FORCE.

One wonders why the members of the Christian Church are not stronger supporters of Missions. Certainly it seems that those members of the Christian Church who are readers of The Christian Sun should be enthusiastic in their zeal for Missions. For one cannot peruse the pages of The Christian Sun and escape the appeal, the challenge, and the spiritual adventure of the missionary enterprise.

To begin with, the Editor of The Christian Sun is so thoroughly imbued with the spirit of Missions, that should he begin a discussion of the Einstein Theory of Relativity, he would most surely end that discussion with an appeal for Missions. That is exactly as it should be. Missions are an integral part of the Christian Gospel. They are the very warp and woof of church organization. They are a part of the meaning and purpose of life. Anyone who sees life in its entirety and sees it whole must find his vision colored with the message of Missions.

Then there is the Mission Page of The Christian Sun with its stories of the victories of the Cross that are being won through Missions; and along with these the reports of the monthly gifts from the churches through the Sunday schools that show the extent to which we are supporting the out-reach of the Gospel. All of these things are writing themselves indelibly upon the tables of our lives.

We sometimes, however, overlook the fact that missionary endeavor not only exerts an influence outwardly in changing the lives of others; but that it works inwardly, revealing to the heart of the mission worker the unsearchable riches of Christ. When we attempt to measure the service rendered through Missions, we invariably recount the services that have been rendered on the mission fields. It is doubtless impossible to measure the influence of Missions within the Church itself. But all the facts seem to point to the conclusion that it has been through Missions that the Spirit of Christ Himself has been kept alive within the Church.

It is eternally fitting that we are called upon to make an offering for Missions at the Easter season. Easter reveals to us the extent to which Jesus would suffer for us that His love for us might work out our salvation. Our contributions to Missions show the extent to which the love of Christ has taken hold of our hearts and made them like unto the heart of our Christ. There is but one way to measure the Christ-likeness of an individual, and that is in terms of sacrificial love.

Let us remember, as we make our gifts for Missions and call upon others to give, that we are doing more than helping a worthy cause or ministering to needy individuals. We are identifying ourselves with the Passion of our Lord. We are establishing in our own hearts that which is of the essential nature of our Christ. We are putting our churches back of the program of our Saviour.

Stanley C. Harrell.

THE LOCAL CHURCH AND MISSIONS.

In our Southern Convention, it has been held wise so to divide the calendar year that certain periods are alloted to certain causes of the Christian endeavor. We are now in the period assigned to Missions, and while the whole period, March, April, May and June, is for missionary education and promotion, Easter Sunday is set apart for the receiving of an offering for Missions.

From the office of our Mission Secretary and through the columns of the Sun, the importance of this cause and the imperative need for funds for its support can be kept before our ministry and a few of our laity, but each local church must in some way agreeable to itself bring these before its membership.

The success or failure of missionary promotion and support in the Convention rests with the local churches. If the local churches refuse to cooperate, or do so half heartedly, then the missionary enterprise in the Convention suffers to that extent. In a recent contribution to the Sun, the writer presented a study of the missionary support provided by the churches of our Western Conference (N. C.). The Convention is rather helpless in the face of such a situation, a situation more favorable in some and worse in other of the conferences. The conference is helpless, too. But the local church is not helpless. The Convention nor the conference can dictate to the local church its policy nor its program. These must be determined by the local church itself.

Whether or not there will be missionary education and promotion in preparation for an Easter offering for missions rests with the local church. The character of the education and the intensity of the promotion will be determined by the local church. There is a wealth of educational materials and there is an abundance of promotional methods and programs from which local churches can select and choose, but the local church will be expected to take the initiative. The response by the membership of the local church will be largely governed by the ardor and devotion with which the church engages in this.

In the local church, in most instances, the pastor is the responsible agency. While the membership will not always respond to his appeals, nor when it does in the measure of his expectation, neither will it give when he has not asked, nor generously when he has lacked enthusiasm.

But we have churches without pastors and others in which the pastoral supervision lacks continuity, and in these churches the responsibility rests upon certain devoted and consecrated men and women. Unless these missionary-minded and missionary-hearted men and women assume the initiative, the mission cause in their churches, and among them, will suffer. And, where the pastor is present and active in the mission cause, always there is the need for the consecrated service and devoted cooperation of the interested laity.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson in person is not with us this year. His voice is not being heard at the Rallies. But his heart is with us. Let us gladden his heart this Easter time.

Ye pastors and ye local churches, choose ye this day what ye will do. But as for me and my church we will be missionary, and receive an offering on Easter Sunday.

J. H. Lightbourne.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE AND MISSIONS.

The missionary movement is a young people's movement. It was a young man who told young men to go to the ends of the earth teaching and baptizing. It was a group of college boys who prayed at a haystack until they were ready to go to non-Christian nations to tell of the Christ whom they loved and served and who challenged the American churches to begin missionary work. It is young people who volunteer for missionary service today. The old cannot stand the strenuous physical test which missionaries must undergo, they cannot learn new languages and customs so easily as youth, and they have often lost the thrill of living that makes youth unafraid to tackle the impossible with assurance that it will be accomplished. Oh yes, there are many older people who are excellent workers all along the lines of

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The fifteenth annual session of the District Rally Meetings of the Eastern Virginia Christian Woman's Missionary Conference was held at the Rosemont Church, Tuesday, April 2nd; Berea (Nansemond), Wednesday, April 3rd; Burton's Grove, Thursday, April 14th. If the meeting at Berea (Nansemond) was an index to the other two meetings, the people who attended had a rare privilege and pleasure. The writer did not have the privilege of attending the meetings at Rosemont and Burton's Grove, therefore, the account as given in this space must be limited to the Berea meeting.

Berea Church, with its beautiful auditorium and new Sunday school rooms, is an ideal place for such a meeting. There is something about this building that creates an atmosphere and issues a call to reverence and holy worship. This church has never had a large membership, but it has furnished many devout souls whose lives have been an inspiration to passers by. The memory of these dear souls and the architecture of the building furnish a background for reverence and worship. The ladies of the church provided a background for reverence and worship. The ladies of the church provided a delicious lunch for the occasion.

Mrs. B. D. Jones is Superintendent of the Nansemond-Suffolk-Gates-Franklin-Isle of Wight group. She has been superintendent for eight years. In spite of her protest she was re-elected for another year. If the delegates have their wishes carried out she will be re-elected again. She delivered a strong address on: "Situations and Problems." She has performed her duties with credit to herself and with great satisfaction to the Societies. Miss Lillye Holland is the capable and efficient Secretary and she radiates a spirit of optimism and good-will.

The worship service was in charge of Mrs. E. P. Jones of Franklin. The theme was "Our Spiritual Goals." This part of the program was well prepared, impressively rendered, and set a high mark for others to follow. Mrs. L. J. Daughtrey followed with an interesting sketch showing the relation and importance of the various organizations of the Women's Missionary Work.

A vocal duet: "Come Unto Me," was render- by Mrs. J. R. Vann and Mr. W. W. Ballard of Suffolk. A vocal solo, "I Come to Thee," was sung by Mrs. Mary Atkinson McCardell of Norfolk. Little Jewell Francis also sang a solo.

Rev. F. C. Lester delivered an inspiring and thoughtful address on, "Changing Ideals for Christian Women." He reminded the audience that ideals have rapidly changed during the past decade. He said in part: "You and I are doing some things our mothers and grandmothers would not have thought of doing. We have admitted some things into our social life, which, a generation ago, were banned. Some of these changes involve questions of life and death. We cannot afford to live a static life. Neither can we afford to accept the mandates and customs of an un-Christian social order without serious reflection and investigation. Surely we need to put a new sense of reality into our religion. Faith must be related to life; and life must be guided by our faith."

Rev. S. Hugh Bradley, pastor of Knox Presbyterian Church, Norfolk, delivered a striking address on the topic: "I Do Not Believe in Missions." "This topic," he said, "is a quotation and not an expression of my own convictions." He took up several of the reasons usually given by people who do not believe in Missions, especially Foreign Missions and answered these objections with authentic facts and figures. At the conclusion of the address the audience agreed that he made a strong plea for Missions. One wished that every member of our churches in the Southern Convention could hear this soul-stirring address.

Mrs. J. E. Cartwright, President of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Conference was present and added much to the inspiration of the day.

The program closed with a service of worship in charge of Mrs. Hendrix Jones of Holland, assisted by several members of the Holland Baptist Church. This was a fitting climax to a great day of worship and meditation. It was pronounced the best meeting ever held by the women of the Eastern Virginia Conference.

LET US BE MISSIONARY.

If we will read the CHRISTIAN SUN and answer its perfectly Christian challenge to Missions, our Church will grow. If we will read the Gospels and answer the call of the Christ to be Christian in carrying the Gospel to others, our church will grow. Dr. Atkinson, the editor of the SUN and our beloved Mission Secretary, is doing his full share, even though he is ordered to bed by his physician. How he longs to see our Church do something right worthwhile for Missions! His body is broken, and his heart is bleeding for the thing that should be uppermost in our churches, and in various ways,—through the CHRISTIAN SUN, through innumerable letters, and those blessed little postal card preachments which he keeps putting into every day's post,—he is still doing his part. And the prayers that he is sending up to God's throne for his Church, and his fellow-workers must not be in vain.

Have you read Dr. C. H. Rowland's letter in the SUN? Does it not also stir every reader of the CHRISTIAN SUN with an eagerness to reach down into his pocket and bring out a material bounty to be transformed into a spiritual blessing. I just want to draw out my purse, and say: "Take these dollars into Thy hand, O Christ, and bless them, and make them to be messengers of peace, and pardon, and love to the ends of the earth."

Did you read Dr. Jas. H. Lightbourne's letter in the SUN? It makes me want to see my church really rise up and make a new day for Missions. If we who know the value of honestly hearing Christ's command and heeding it would just say, "This period shall not pass without a new awakening on the part of ourselves, and our own churches on this matter of giving dollars,—dollars that speak our mind, our hearts, our hands,—dollars that show better, far better, than words our willingness to have the Christ as our Lord and Master." then, I believe that full many another would follow that leadership into larger giving for Missions.

How can we read these various writers, and many others in the SUN, without getting interested to such an extent that we will say: "I know not what course others may take, but as for me, and my house, we are going to give liberally to Missions. And there shall be one member, at least, in my church that gave liberally to Missions." If all who read this CHRISTIAN SUN would just make that promise to themselves and before their God right now,—to give liberally in their church this Mission period to Missions,—the Southern Convention would arise with a new and overwhelming strength. We would have something great to report through these columns,—columns that wait and hunger for some real load of love to be laid upon them!

What church would be left out without a single person making a liberal contribution for Missions during this period if all who read the CHRISTIAN SUN would answer this challenge? Is there a church in the Convention without a reader of the CHRISTIAN SUN? Is there? I fear there are many of them. And yet, my friends, even if every church which does have a reader of the CHRISTIAN SUN will find within it a person who will pledge a liberal giving to Missions during the Mission period our Convention will record a new day. Let us try it.

Liberal? Yes, liberal. You and your own God shall be the judge. You are poor? Your money is just as precious in God's sight as if you were rich! And if you have been blessed with this world's goods do not feel that your liberal check will be too much for your church to have included in its offering.

Let us be really Missionary. And expect God's blessings!

JOHN G. TRUITT.

THE LOCAL CHURCH AND THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The local church is in the process of change. We have been thinking in terms of the masses and have lost sight of the individual. Any plan we follow must begin with self. We talk about freedom, when we are bound, hand and foot, because we have lost the sense of the Divine. We talk goals and if we live up to the spiritual goals the material goals would naturally follow.

The church shoud put in its program love and a sense of reality. Youth is not alone in their failure to find a sense of reality in Christianity. Change things to a better goal and the process of change develops a better person, a higher type of character.

We should reach out and take in the progress of change—that may develop us. We need to have something for which we will stand.

The local church has material and organization, but without better cooperation, more faith and greater courage and a willingness to accept responsibility on the part of the whole constituency, we will find ourselves following the path of least resistance—the easy way.

Lay the task of the local church where you will and it will be left, unless, we have a motive to do, a will to live up to our ideals and standards and to follow the teachings and example of Jesus Christ.

The Woman's Missionary Society visions every woman in every church intelligently at work developing her spiritual, social and material resources. With this vision of service it must lead every department of the church in setting the wheels of progress in motion. We no longer think of Missions for women, young people and children, but Missions for the whole church. The laymen of the church must be enlisted and mighty things could be accomplished if they were as active as are the women. The church sponsored our Missionary Woman's Societies and from it we get our constituency and are dependent upon it for our most vital resources, therefore, we count it a privilege to turn something back into the church's program in a larger way during Mission months for, after all, it is understanding, love and dependability that has increased the giving of time, talent and resources in Missionary Societies and helped us to reach goals.

The need was never greater for Christ teaching and example in all phases of life than today. We desire to achieve. We want to walk with Him, and claim His promise, "Lo. I am with you alway, even to the end." But to claim that promise and to achieve, we must go with Him all the way. To begin at Jerusalem is the beginning of faith, but to remain there is the destruction of faith.

Let us be willing to share and thus have more ourselves.

What is there about religion that has value? Changing ideals may mean growth. It is by adventure that the child grows. Except we become as little children and live on the forward margin of our age, except we dare the unknown, learn to stretch minds and hearts and strength and skill in valiant searching, we cannot enter the Kingdom of Creators with God-of-What-Shall-Be. Our religion is a march with God.

We must stand by our church program in a larger way and Missions is fundamental to everything else.

Let us make glad the heart of one whose life and strength has been spent for the Cause of Missions. If we will but listen, we can hear his plea. If we will but open our hearts and purses, we may enjoy more of the Eternal.

As we approach the Easter season; as we see God's love there on the cross, let us do what He wants us to do. He said to Peter, "Feed my sheep." He says that to us and more. "If ye love me, keep my commandments.

MRS. J. E. CARTWRIGHT.

MAN FACE TO FACE WITH SELF.

Man is more willing to face anything than himself. We applaud the man who faces an enemy and call him a hero who falls facing his foe. There are many willing to face enemies in war, in business and in social life, but they are not willing to face self.

One of the twelve could face the Lord and face humanity, but when he faced himself he became a suicide. The reason we have had so many suicides in recent years is because men have been forced to face themselves and their own deeds.

No one will deny the fact that he has to face the Lord, but how do we face Him? We say, "He is all-powerful, and has all power in heaven and in earth. Then we reason, that we are so weak and so insignificant that not much can be expected of us. The matter is dismissed and we consider it no more. Man knows that he is a part of humanity and feels that he has certain responsibilities, but the task is so great. When man comes to face himself he does not want to know his own ability and his responsibility.

Why are so many local churches and Mission Boards crying, "We are defeated?" The trouble is that so many professed Christians are refusing to face themselves. It is much easier to talk about the short-comings of others than to do our bit. It is often heard, "If I had a million dollars, of the ability of some one I know, I would do great things for God and humanity." The Lord has never asked man to do what some other one can do, but "of every man according to his several ability."

For a man to really face himself, he must do it in terms of God and humanity. God is our Creator and Father: each one is a part of humanity, for "No man liveth unto himself, and no man dieth unto himself." Men and women make all manner of excuses for not doing the right thing for no other reason than that they are unwilling to face themselves.

Once a member of my church, a good man, said, "I am going to make a gift for a benevolence which I know, because in this I can see just what my money goes for." I told him there was a greater responsibility than giving for benevolence—for missions and the spread of the Gospel. Said he, "That work is too great, too far away, too visionary for me: why, my little will not count one in a multitude and among millions, so many." That man, a kind and generous fellow, was afraid to face himself. I tried to show him that the Lord wanted him to come face to face with himself and say, "Oh, Lord, what would Thou have me to do?"

There are many professed Christians today who are moral and spiritual cowards. They salve their conscience and satisfy themselves with a meager hand-out to some so-called charity or benevolence about them when, if they would with courage face themselves they would be giving not their money only, but their heart also to the cause of their Lord in saving the souls of men and women not only near by but afar off as well.

My appeal is that we each have and exercise the courage to face ourselves, our own individual responsibility and do our duty now to Missions, leaving results, responsibilities of our duty done all to Him, who said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations . . . and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

THE NEWPORT NEWS CHURCH.

The Congregational-Christian Church of Newport News observed the fifth anniversary of the new church building February 10th. The church property is valued at $30,000. During the last three and a half years the church indebtedness has been reduced from $16,200 to $10,400.

We have 325 members and a Sunday school enrollment of 336. During the past year the Sunday school contributed $106 to Missions. The church contributed $132.75. The Conference Apportionment ($300.00) was paid in full. Plans are being made for the Easter offering.

Some improvements have been made on the church since its construction. The church has also purchased an adjoining lot, providing ample room for possible expansion.

We are indeed grateful for the assistance of the Mission Board. ROBERT LEE HOUSE.

THE GREAT GOD LOVE.

In years gone by, a missionary passing through a native village saw a man dash out of his hut, place a small image on the ground and bowing before it, pray fervently and with deep feeling. When he rose, the missionary spoke to him.

"My friend," he said, "I know you did not pray to that little image just now, but to some great God. Tell me which God you worship."

The native replied, "He is indeed a great God, and I prayed that he would not send evil on me or my family, for we are his worshippers; and I asked him to keep us from the evil which other gods might send upon us."

This missionary looked at the man for a moment and then he spoke. "I too worship a great God, but I do not ask Him to send no evil, for all are His children and He gives them only good. Nor do I ask Him to protect me from other gods, for there are no other gods, since He alone is God."

Where do you pray to Him?"

"I pray to Him anywhere, for He is everywhere."

"And how do you pray to him?"

"I tell Him my needs and then go quietly about my work and He gives me all I require."

"And what do you call your God?"

"His name is Love," said the missionary, and then he went on his way to the next village.

The native thought of what the missionary had told him and decided that if what had been said was true, he should give up the old god and become a follower of this new God.

Now in that village there were few who ever had enough to eat, and when the native came in from the field he was very hungry, so he prayed, "Love, I am Thy child, for all are Thy children. I am hungry. Give me food." And his wife had been able to get food in abundance and it was waiting for him. Then he thanked this new God and was full of joy.

The next day as he ate, he looked across the road and saw his neighbor without food, and he prayed, "Love, he is Thy child, for all are Thy children. He is hungry. Feed him." And he took his bowl and shared it with his neighbor and told him of this new God and together they ate and were thankful.

As the days went by his neighbor's wife fell sick of a fever and he prayed, "Love, she is Thy child, for all are Thy children. She is sick. Make her well." And he sent his wife to care for her and for her family, and when his work was done he helped his neighbor and when night fell and the cooling breezes blew, the fever left her and she recovered. So, many in the village heard of the new God and worshipped Him.

At last one came to the native saying, "I am very wicked for I have bad thoughts and do evil."

But the native prayed saying, "Love, he is Thy child for all are Thy children. He says he is wicked. Make him good." And the man returned to his home and treated his wife and children kindly.

Now there came a day when the people were called out and told to arm themselves, for many men were coming from a distant village to destroy their homes and carry off their women and children, and they must defend themselves.

But the native prayed, "Love, they are Thy children for all are Thy children. They think they hate us. Make them love us, and we are Thy children, for all are Thy children. We think we hate them. Make us love them." And when the strangers appeared, dusty and weary from their journey, they saw a group coming to meet them. There was water to wash their feet and food and cooling drinks, and they were taken to the village and made welcome so that it was as friends they parted.

When years had passed, one day, as the missionary sat in his home, he was told that a man from a far-off village wished to speak to him, and when the latter was brought in, lo, it was the native he had seen so long ago; and the native told the missionary all that had taken place and begged that teachers should be sent to tell his people more about the great God Love.

And the missionary bowed his head and wept, saying, "Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord."—Sue E. Howard in Missionary Review.

THE PASTOR OF A MISSION CHURCH.

The Mission Pastor is your representative in areas where you personally cannot go. Because you cannot go, you send another by your contributions of money, prayer and concerned interest.

We have been "sent"—by you—to Winston-Salem. You sent us because the Lord has directed the vision of your Mission Board toward an area long neglected by our Church. It is now an acknowledged fact that our beloved Church has far too long neglected the great urban communities which have come into being during the past 30 to 50 years. It is estimated that there are approximately 12 millions of people in the southern states not in any church. Many of these are in our cities and within the reach of our Congregational-Christian Church if we will but go and send!

We have talked a great deal of late about avoiding "overlapping" and competitive work in our home mission fields. This is right and good, for we no longer feel that we want a Church in every city and community just to have a Church of our denomination there. However, there is another side to be considered. So long as there are people in these communities who are not being reached by the Churches already there, then we do have a right—yes, and a command from our Lord Jesus Christ—to go and take, and send His message there!

A home mission church comes into existence through your vision, concern, and obedience to your Lord. This home mission church is nurtured and sustained to self support by you. Therefore, it becomes your voice and strength, exerted for Christ, in an area where you cannot go except through the medium of your support.

Likewise, a mission pastor becomes your representative of Christ in the areas where you cannot yourself go. His effectiveness will largely be determined through the freedom which you can give him through ample financial and moral support. He is ready to do anything from the janitor's work to the function of a priest of God to his people. He needs your help!

MISSION GROUP ELECTS OFFICERS.

Mrs. B. D. Jones was re-elected today as the head of the Nansemond District of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference of the Christian Church at the largely attended fifteenth annual conference, held at Berea Christian Church at Driver.

Miss Lillye Holland was re-elected secretary, and Mrs. Herbert Harrell, vice-president.

The conference accepted an invitation to hold the next annual session at Antioch Christian Church.

Mrs. Jones presided today, and delivered her annual address on "Situations and Problems." The worship hour was in charge of Mrs. E. P. Jones, who had for her subject "The Seven Lamps of Devotion."

The principal address of the morning was by the Rev. F. C. Lester, who talked on "Changing Ideals of Christian Women."

In the afternoon, the Rev. Hugh Bradley, of the Portsmouth Presbyterian Church talked on "Why Some People Do Not Believe in Missions."

The Rev. M. J. W. White, a returned missionary from the Phillippines, gave an interesting talk on mission work in the islands and showed some of the beautiful handwork done by the people.

Mrs. Jones brought a message from the Rev. Dr. J. O. Atkinson, mission secretary of the Southern Christian Conference, who is recovering from an illness at a sanitarium in Florida.

A round-table discussion was held on mission work of the church, led by Mrs. Jones, and with Mrs. L. J. Daughtrey, the Rev. F. C. Lester and Mrs. J. C. Cartwright taking part.

Mrs. Hendricks Jones of the Holland, Virginia Church, conducted the closing period of meditation and prayer. About 200 persons were present.—Virginian Pilot.

MISSIONARY NOTICE.

The Junior Missionary Society of Liberty Springs Christian Church is busy as usual with their well-rounded program. Mrs. J. Leonard Byrd is the efficient superintendent of this enthusiastic group and she shows what can be done when a leader is interested. They have twenty-three on roll and have a splendid attendance at each meeting. They conduct their meetings in a real business-like way and are learning the art of expressing themselves in public in a commendable way. Their study has been on Japan and curios from that country are displayed to make it more interesting and real. Their money is raised by free will gifts. At Christmas they gave a program entitled "The Coming of Christ and Its Significance." Mrs. Byrd says it is a pleasure to work with a group who are so interested and willing to work and I am sure the children would say if asked that it is a pleasure to work with a superintendent who is so interested in them and the work.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

Rev. F. C. Lester, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

EASTERN VIRGINIA WOMAN'S MISSIONARY RALLIES.

The women of the Eastern Virginia Conference show their interest in Missions in part by attending meetings that give information concerning this kind of work. Recently some five hundred of them spent a day at Suffolk listening to Dr. A. W. Palmer tell of Orientals in America, and last week about the same number attended rallies at Rosemont, Berea and Burton's Grove.

Several parts of the program were the same in all three rallies. The theme was "Today's Needs." The morning worship service centered around "Our Spiritual Goals." The district superintendents brought messages on "Situations and Problems." A panel discussion told of how to organize missionary work in a local church, of the young people's work, and of the conference goals which should be attained this year. Mrs. J. E. Cartwright, President of the Woman's Conference, spoke on this last topic at two of the rallies. She illustrated in a very charming way her talk by the attainments of the noted flier, Mrs. Amelia Earheart Putnam. Dr. and Mrs. White, our missionaries to the Phillippines, told of the work they have been doing for our Church out there on the other side of the earth. It was the privilege of this writer to talk on "Changing Ideals for Christian Women."

There were also several differences in the programs, for each superintendent properly put her own personality into the program over which she presided. Mrs. J. F. Morgan, Mrs. B. D. Jones, and Mrs. E. T. Atkinson presided at the meetings with dignity and kept the program moving interestingly. The people liked their methods so well that these ladies were elected to serve the coming year.

Two Presbyterian ministers added much to the rallies. Rev. Hugh Bradley of Norfolk spoke at Berea on "I Do Not Believe in Missions." He answered with facts and figures the critics of the missionary work of the Church. Rev. George L. Cooper of Richmond challenged the Burton's Grove group with a thrilling message on today's needs in the field of religion. Mrs. Hendrick Jones of Holland closed the Berea Rally with the prettiest worship service I have ever seen. A cross-crowned altar lighted by candles was the center of the service. Music, pantomime, and Scripture were blended into a beautiful story. Church and national flags were carried by girls dressed in white. The pleasure-loving world was represented by a beautiful girl carrying a bunch of gay balloons, but who heard the call of God through the reading of Scripture and bowed before the altar where an angel in white crowned her with the diadem of life. The service was dramatic and devout pageantry that showed vividly the effect of Scripture on life.

Of course there was good food and fine fellowship at all the rallies. This is the custom of Virginians. Each group seemed to try to do better than the other.

One need not be a prophet in order to say that these women are helping to build a new world and that out of these meetings will come new spiritual life. One can easily believe that their devoted service and sacrificial giving will help to change the ideals of the world and make those ideals more Christian.

EASTERN VIRGINIA YOUTH FELLOWSHIP RALLIES.

Last Saturday was a rainy day but more than a hundred young people and their leaders met in Suffolk Church for their third annual spring rally. About half of the churches were represented. The program was of high order, and these young people seem to be interested in doing things that will build a better world.

After a bit of fun in a get-acquainted moment led by Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, Miss Dora Martin led the group in a fine worship service. The secretary, Miss Edna Fulcher, told of the Holiday Conference last Christmas at Defiance, Ohio, and of plans promoted by that group. Then followed discussion groups on: "What Young People Can Do About Peace, Alcohol, the Economic Order, Race Relations, and Leisure Time." Each group reported findings to the entire body for approval. Several definite suggestions were recommended (which will be reported on this page later), but one important motion was for each young person to write the newspapers asking them to discontinue printing advertisements for alcoholic beverages.

Mr. C. E. Worthington presided at the fellowship supper as toastmaster. The Board of Christian Education presented a playlet telling of the work of that Board particularly as it related to the work of young people. At the evening hour Chaplain S. Arthur Devan of Hampton Institute made a great address on the theme for the meeting: "What Young People Can Do to Help Build a New World." Dr. John G. Truitt administered the communion. Saturday was a good day for the young people of Eastern Virginia Conference, and one is inclined to believe that it was only the beginning of greater things.

LAST CALL FOR THE EASTER PROGRAM.

On the first Easter a young man rose from the dead and gave the world a new hope. That day some women, and they were not so old, were in the garden by the grave when day dawned. A bit later some young men came running to see for themselves that the grave was really deserted by the dead.

On many other Easters since young people, and older, have met early to think of the day when the Master sent Mary to tell His disciples to meet Him in Galilee. They have sung great music, they have prayed great prayers, and they have been lifted up on the wings of immortal hope as they worshipped the living Christ.

On the coming Easter Day literally millions of young and old will meet both early and late to consider the meaning of that marvelous story which comes to us telling of the resurrection of Jesus, and to worship the eternal Christ. I am wondering if you and your church will share in this beautiful service and get the inspiration of planned programs that lift one near to God. Surely no Christian will let this High Day of the Christian religion pass without joining with others in worship. And surely every church will have the best possible programs so all who attend will come to know the Master better. If your program is not ready, there is still time for you to get it ready, or to get something that will be very helpful. Please do it for the sake of the people who live in your community, and for the Master who reached Easter morning by way of Calvary.

DON'T FORGET THE GIFTS.

Pretty clothes and corsages for Easter are delightful. They seem to bring good cheer to the wearers, and they certainly make a pretty display in church.

But if we pay more for show than we give to Missions, how do you suppose the Master feels when He looks over the group of would-be worshippers? Our money for missions is our testimony to our belief in the resurrection and our willingness to go with the Master to the ends of the earth.

Let no young person be content to wear new clothes or pretty flowers at Easter unless there is a liberal gift to the church to send the message of Jesus to the ends of the earth. The people in China, Japan, India, and Africa need to know the meaning of Easter, and our mission money at Easter will help some of them to hear that marvelous story. Please do your best, and let that best be in terms of dollars, not good wishes.

A TRUE STORY OF CRITICISM.

A missionary came home from China on furlough. Her clothes were new but not according to the latest fashion. She had to buy new clothes to meet the criticisms. The next time she came she brought a beautiful fur coat that cost just fifteen dollars. The criticism of her extravagance made her have to lay aside the lovely coat and buy a more costly but less beautiful coat.

Most criticisms are totally unfair. And they certainly are when applied to missions and missionaries. Better know before you criticize.

WHY DO CHRISTIANS BELIEVE IN LIFE AFTER DEATH?

Christian Endeavor Topic for April 21, 1935

Hymns: "Christ the Lord Is Risen Today"; "Christ arose"; "Lift Up, Lift Up Your Voices Now"; "Resurrection Morn"; "Breaks the Joyful Easter Dawn."

Bible Readings: Why believe in Life after death? I Cor. 15:20-23. A lively hope. I Peter 1:3; Established by Jesus. II Tim. 1:9-10; Jesus promised it. John 14:2, 3; Jesus argued for it. Matt. 22:31-33; Jesus claimed it. John 11:25; Jesus exemplified it. I Cor. 15:12-17.

Poems:

"I know not what the future hath
Of marvel or surprise,
Assured alone that life and death
His mercy underlies.

"I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care."

"Not spilt like water on the ground,
Not wrapped in dreamless sleep profound,
Not wandering in unknown despair
Beyond Thy voice, Thy arm, Thy care,
Not left to die like fallen tree:
Not dead, but living unto Thee."

Helps for discussion: "The Assurance of Immortality," by Harry Emerson Fosdick; "The Other Room," by Lyman Abbott. Articles in "Christian Herald": Stanley High's discussion of immortality in "This Month's World," page 24, December 1934 issue and Dr. A. Z. Conrad's sermon in the April, 1935 issue of "Christian Herald."

"A French deist was once arguing against the immortality of the soul. His Christian friend heard him through in silence, then replied: 'Probably you are right; probably you are not immortal, but I AM.'"

The leader might have several young people discuss the above Scripture references which tell of Jesus' belief in immortality.

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

CHRIST THE SAVIOUR.

Lesson II—April 14, 1935.

Golden Text: "For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John 3:16.

Lesson Text: John 3:14-17; Romans 5:6-10; Philippians 2:5-11.

We call Him Master, Teacher, the Great Physician, the Great High Priest, the King of Kings, the Perfect Man, our Example, and we do well, for He is all of these, and more. But we never encompass the gospel or comprehend His mission until we call Him Saviour. It was, and is, as Saviour that He is distinctive and unique. That was made clear even before He was born—"Thou shalt call His name Jesus, for He shall save His people from their sin." And later He Himself said that He had come to save the world. The glad message of the gospel is that we have a Saviour. One Who can save us from our sin—both its penalty and its power. It is good to have the ethics of Jesus, it is better to have the example of Jesus, but it is best to have experience of salvation through Jesus. The glorious message of the gospel, that is the "good news," that He is able to save unto the uttermost them that come unto God by Him.

And this salvation is free. It is not to be purchased by money, nor can it be earned by good works. It is the gift of God. It is mystericus in a way. It is difficult to explain. But if it cannot be explained it can be experienced. The humblest man, and even a child can experience salvation through Christ, but the wisest philosopher cannot fathom all its depths. Thank God that though some of His ways are past finding out, and some cannot be explained, there are some things that can be experienced. Thanks be to God for His unspeakable gift, Christ the Saviour of the world, and our Saviour.

The lesson presents three sections of Scripture which emphasize Jesus as Saviour. They are, of course, only a few of many that deal with this great theme.

The Gospel in One Verse.

The gospel is summed up in John 3:16. Luther called it the "Little Bible" because he thought it condensed the whole substance and essence of the Bible as to the meaning and way of salvation. The Author of Salvation,God, a Father Who loved the world, who loved every man woman and child in the world, Who loved so much and Who loved so inclusively that He gave His Only Begotten Son, His Very Best, to save the world. Salvation was born in the great heart of a loving God.

The Mediator of Salvation—Jesus Christ, His Only Son, and our Saviour. Through faith in Christ men were to find salvation. Through Him men were to come into a relation with God that "saved" them. There is no other name under heaven given among men whereby they can be saved.

The Method of Salvation—faith in Christ. We are saved by faith. Not faith in the sense of intellectual assent to a creed, or acceptance of formal statements about Christ, but faith in the sense of personal trust, of right personal relationships. When a man responds to Christ and receives Christ into his heart, he comes into that relationship with God which "saves" him, which "makes him whole" which the word salvation really means.

The Objects of Salvation—whosoever, any man, every man,—of every age, of every creed, of every color, of every culture. There is one plan of salvation for all men. No man need to be left out. You and I are included. And so is every other person in God's universe.

The Purpose of Salvation—that we should not perish. This means more than simply punishment. He that hath not the Son, hath not life. Men without Christ are without that which really gives them life. But more. Salvation is positive as well as negative. God sent His Son also that we might "have eternal life." And eternal life is not to be measured in terms of time or quantity; it is a quality of life. And it is not to be postponed to the future; it is to be possessed in the present. He that believeth "hath" already. The law came by Moses, but grace and truth and life came by Jesus Christ.

Reconciled.

Christ died for the ungodly. He commended His love to us that while we were yet sinners, He died for us. But He did not die to reconcile God to us. God has always loved us and He will always love us. Nothing that we have done, or can do, will stop God from loving us. God did not have to be reconciled; it was we who needed to be reconciled. The Cross of Christ has spoken the last word about the love of God. God gave His Son because He loved us. His Son gave Himself because He loved us.

And if we were reconciled through the death of Christ, how much more shall we find life, more abundant life, through His life. The man who has the right relationship with God finds the secret of life in a fuller, richer, more vital way. He that hath the Son hath life that is life indeed.

The Mind of Christ.

In that classic passage in Paul's letter to the Philippians, he traces in outline the process whereby Christ became the Saviour of the world. Existing in the form of God, being on equality with God, He laid it all aside and took upon Himself the form, not of an angel or of some higher spiritual being, but the form of a man. But more. He took upon Himself the form of a servant, humbling Himself by becoming obedient, obedient even unto death—and there is significance in Paul's words "the death of the cross' for that was the last word in degradation and shame and suffering. This Saviour who was in the form of God took upon himself the sin and shame of man, and died upon the cross. And we miss the point altogether unless we realize that Jesus did this voluntarily, under no compulsion but the compulsion of love. He himself said that He had power over His own life. He gave himself for us, not because He had to, but because He wanted to. That is the thing that makes it hard for us to turn Him down. A man who does that makes a tremendous appeal to us.

He that humbleth himself shall be exalted. Because Christ humbled himself more than any other, God has given Him a name above every other name. And eventually every knee shall bow and every tongue shall confess that He is Lord to the glory of God. Let us have that mind which was in Jesus Christ.

If all the missions in the world were closed tomorrow, they would be opened up again the next day after by men and women who feel the urge of Christ's spirit to go with the good news to the ends of the earth.

"CHRISTIAN RESPONSIBILITY."

"We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak."—Rom. 15:1.

In this scripture we have the embodiment of tolerance. Tolerance is defined as "having a belief, and at the same time, being aware of another one's belief which disagrees with it." It means to feel that one has the power to combat, but forbears in doing so, in order that the loyal exercise of the same liberty may be allowed the other as one claims for himself. However, all Christians have a duty toward others. Every community has its contingent of weaklings, weaklings who think feebly, feel languidly, act irresponsibly and are wanting in Christian qualities, who need the unsleeping care and attentions of true Christians to be kept in the right path. In this, tolerance does not restrict one's usefulness.

An article in the February Atlantic Magazine, by Margaret Prescott Montague, lays a very serious charge at the door of the Christian. She says Christians are too smug in their houses of worship. "What are Christians doing to redeem fallen society?" She refers to a particular instance of a criminal returned from prison to society. The old gang gathers about him and soon makes a criminal of him again. There are at least ten Christians to every one criminal. What are the ten doing to lift these weaklings? If they are neglected they lapse to at least "limited redemption." Jesus Christ came to seek and to save the lost and nothing could kill or destroy his care for them, and He has commissioned His children to carry on that work.

This responsibility of His children can be done by giving personal encouragement; men are steadied by stronger men who show the way; it can be done by making the way smooth, the practice of personal virtue and godliness and the ministry of a helpful hand make the way smoother for any one. We are keepers of the road in which our fellows travel.

Smellie's Prayer—Our Father, "So let us overcome evil with good, and, out of the ruins, help us to raise temples to the glory of God."—Amen.

TUESDAY.

"THE SINNERS RESPONSIBILITY."

"Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly."—Ps. 1:1.

There are many wrecks along the road (perfectly good roads), wrecks which others, however well intending, cannot prevent. Every day the writer passes under an arch on which there is a sign saying, "Safety depends upon one man, and that man is you." The only prevention of wrecks lies with every individual. It lies upon his good sense, his good judgment, his obedience to the rules of the road, his consideration and courtesy to others. This done and there is the blessedness of safety.

There are many human wrecks along the road of life and there are many criminals who are wrecking everybody else they can. We are told that John Dillinger got his start as a criminal from one companion who led him astray one night in a dark alley. Such, no doubt, has been the start of every criminal.

It is obvious in our every day experience that the formation of character in others is not by abstractions, nor by churches, but by each one living and thinking beautifully, by minds acting upon minds, by hearts appealing to hearts, by lives touching lives; and this influence runs clear all the way through; in home, school, church and society.

Christ is the great personal influence for everyone's life. He shows us the way; He brings to us God's thoughts; He bestows upon us His love and His goodness; and His fellowship has the uplift of heaven.

Prayer—O Lord, Jesus, show us the way. Open Thou our eyes that we may see, and baptize us with Thy power that we may follow Thee.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"WHY PRAY?"

"Your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things."—Matt. 6:32.

One cannot keep from praying. The body prays for food, for clothes, and for warmth. The sick pray for the physician, the unfortunate pray for help; and so on. Prayer was such a common thing that Jesus took it for granted. He never thought it necessary to give a reason for it.

But what about praying to God? If God knows what we need before we ask Him, and if He is an All-Loving Father, why should we pray?

1. Because prayer is an attitude. It is an attitude of love. It is an attitude of trust. It is an attitude of listening for God's voice, for what God says to us is as important as what we say to Him.

2. Because prayer is a fellowship. We fellowship with friends; we talk with them, learn from them and they learn from us: We cultivate friendly feelings. How much more is this true in our relation to God!

3. Because prayer is necessary. It is necessary to receiving. "Ask and ye shall receive." To be sure, out of His loving heart, we receive a lot without praying for it, but even if earthly friends do not impose their help upon others when it is not sought. Prayer is a power that makes one receptive. It opens the soul to God making it possible for Him to come in.

4. It cleans the road. It removes our strivings from the path of desire and gives Him a chance.

5. Because it is the one necessary channel thru which man may pass from what he is to what he ought to be. It is man's only means of breaking down wrong and the setting up of right.

He who can completely relinquish himself before God, get away from the influence of others, and let his soul go out to God,—just be himself with God—truly prays. Such praying brings blessings incalculable.

Prayer—Pray as you feel.

THURSDAY.

"CLEAN SPEECH."

"Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth."—Eph. 4:29.

How few consider the extend to which the minds of other people are affected by the conversation they hear! The speaking of evil things, telling vulgar stories, the utterance of profanity, all, may be indulged with no intent to harm; yet, in so speaking their words leave a stamp of irreverence, of doubt, of sinful thoughts and of the lightness of sin: they dim the sense of purity and the fear of God. Nothing can inflict a deadlier or more cruel injury than this. Especially is this true of the influence of speech upon children who listen intently and drink in much that they hear.

Father, had you been a Christian, your child would not have been ungodly. Mother, if you are decided for Christ your girls may be Christian also. Growing children by natural instincts, rather than by acquired habits, trust their parents, and one of the most tragic things that can happen to the young life is when his confidence is shaken and he finds that his father and mother cannot be trusted. And this applies equally with all others.

Prayer—Our Father, as the tongue of the prophet was touched with fire in token of purity and power, touch Thou our tongue with the fire of the Holy Spirit, that in speech and influence we may be like Jesus. In His name we ask it.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

VOICES OF THE DUMB.

"A dumb ass spake with man's voice and stayed the madness of the prophet."—II Peter 2:1-16.

Many a strutting sage is less wise than a dumb ass. God has filled His world with voices, silent to the mad Balaams but clearly audible to the listening Ezekiels.

He that hath ears to hear, let him hear. Out of sticks and stones and clods of earth God will speak our guidance, if we will apply our ears. In every wind is a warning, if we will stop and heed it. The whole world is vocal to the heart of faith, the life of humble obedience.

Prayer—May mine be a listening soul, O God, and I shall never lack for Thy words.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

"VOICES THAT DELIGHT."

"When the ear heard me, then it blessed me."—Job. 29:1-11.

Few of us can say, as Job dared to say of himself, that all ears bless us when they hear us. Many of us have querulous voices. We go whining through the world, or our voices are loud and blustering, blasting their way into shrinking senses. Or they may be sharp, stinging with passion. There are almost as many ways for voices to offend as there are persons.

It is comparatively easy to make our voices blessings, sweet, assuring, delightful. The result is achieved not by working on the vocal cords, but by working on the soul. The spirit of loving helpfulness is what does it, and the spirit of calm trust in God. And our voices reach so many people, usually, in the course of every day that it is well worth while to take pains with them.

Prayer—Stand Thou, O Christ, at the doors of our lips.—Amen. AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

"TO ANTIPATRIS."

"So the soldiers . . . took Paul and brought him by night to Antipatris."—Acts 23:12-31.

It must have been one of the saddest times in the life of Paul when he was removed—finally, as it would seem—from the beloved Jerusalem and committed irretrievably into the alien hands of Rome. The Sanhedrin had seen their last of him; they had cast him off forever.

But it was all for the best. It was the only way to prolong his immensely useful life. God knows when to separate us from the familiar and the loved and send us to Antipatris, away from our fatherland.

Some ties are best broken—even the holiest ties sometimes. We have here no continuing city, and God knows when it is best to break the continuance.

Prayer—Be Thou, O God, our downsitting and our uprising. Lead us in Thine own ways, for we know that they are the best and happiest.—Amen.

THE MISSIONARY MOVEMENT.

By John G. Truitt.

"A ladder . . . and the angels of God ascending and descending on it."—Gen 28:12.

A lonely boy, an uplifted ladder, a living dream. Jacob dreamed. He saw the earth. He saw the heaven. And a connecting link, or ladder, bringing the two together. Heaven on earth, so to speak. He saw God at the top of the ladder. Heard his magnificent promise. His promise concerned earth. Abundant gifts. Abundant blessings. It included every family on earth! And a pledge of God's that he would not turn back until every family on earth had the blessing.

The lad awakes. He confesses the Lord. He builds an altar. Binds himself with a pledge. He and God are partners. Their pledges are to each other. "I will not leave thee until I have done that which I have spoken to thee of" . . . "Then shall the Lord be my God." Heaven and earth are linked with a promise,—a living ladder.

Jesus is the Promised One. He is from heaven sent. Made in the likeness of men,—the Son of God. In Him heaven and earth combine. To Nathaniel, Jesus says, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Hereafter ye shall see heaven open, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of Man." And in his farewell message to his beloved disciples, He said, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw men unto me." And He was lifted up.

And the veil was rent in the temple from top to bottom. The middle wall of partition was broken down, and Jesus became at once the high priest for every needy sinner beneath the sun, and on Him anyone could mout up to God. He became the Door. "I am the door: by me if any man shall enter in, he shall be saved, and go in and out and find pasture."

Jesus gave His life to help make that dream come true. That heaven and earth should be joined in harmony. That God's Kingdom might come on earth. His witnesses he has sent ever since out into the world to help bring it to pass. Through Jesus,—the living Ladder,—it may be accomplished. And everyone who has had the beautiful miracle of heaven's harmony wrought in his own life, so that he can and does know from experience that he is right with God, is, and of a right ought to be, a witness of that grace until every family on earth has been blessed thereby. That is the Missionary movement.

You and I may fail to do our part in it. But the Missionary movement will not fail. You and I may run into a day or generation when men and nations will think other things are more important, and the Missionary movement may be retarded, but it will not be stopped. "I will not leave thee until I have done that which I spoke to thee of." God will raise up persons, and peoples,—individuals, and nations,—who will always press the Missionary movement forward, for He does not turn back. There may be lean years. Years in which money is withheld from this movement, and given in untold millions to more mundane matters,—even to the building of unprecedented armies and navies, implements of cursing and death, rather than blessing and life. But God will bring it about. Jesus is the Door. And that Door will not be shut.

The humble-hearted, however greatly God has prospered them, will delight to be used as instruments in His hands to bring the Dream true. They will know that from the very first God placed the Dream in a poor, human heart. Jacob was far from protection. But God could lay a dream upon his soul. Jacob was lonely, and far from home, but God could give him divine companionship; and show him that he rested in the very doorway of heaven,—the eternal home. How marvelous God is! How He can take us when we least expect it and make us a blessing. And He will do it, if we but arise and confess our knowledge and love of the Lord, put our means into building God's altars upon the earth, and give Him the promise of His portion, and of our worship forever.

God blessed Jacob. Heard his prayers. And made him the father of twelve sons, one of whom was Judah. Out of Judah, far enough down the line, came Jesus! "I will not leave thee until I have done that which I have spoken to thee of." Jesus was born humbly. Worked in a lowly carpenter's shop. Found the dream full grown in His own soul and set forth. How humbly He wrought, up and down the ways, and byways of Palestine. Laying aside every temptation. Choosing everything right. Blessing on every hand. The multitudes fell away, then the disciples only were left; finally, they, too, fled. And when dying upon the cross, He cried out, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" But his heavenly Father had not forsaken him: "I will not leave thee until I have done that which I have spoken to thee of."

As He was dying the sun covered its face. Heaven bowed down. Heaven bowed down until heaven and earth touched each other as it were. And Jesus cried, "It is finished." Way for the two becoming one had been made. It was possible for earth and heaven to be interlocked. And truly Jesus was the Way! "I am the Truth, the Way, and the Life." And the living ladder was lifted up.

How will you and I,—Christians who love God, and His Son Jesus Christ,—excuse ourselves if we fail to tell that story to the extent of our ability? How will we escape the doom of Judgment Day, if knowing that story of God's love, and Jesus' death upon the cross for the world's redemption, we withhold it from the families of the earth? How will we escape His command to "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature?" Will we say we had some grievance against the pagan nations? How flimsy that will sound in the ears of Him who said, "Bless them which curse you, and pray for them that despitefully use you?" Will we say we had the needy at home, and remember how we spent our money on ourselves, and excuse ourselves for not helping in our day to move the Missionary movement forward as we should do? How futile will be all our excuses when we see as we are seen and know as we are known!

Will it not rather be for each of us a joy to learn that the Missionary movement is God's way of winning the world, and blessing the families of the earth, and bridging the distances between heaven and earth so that the freedom of the divine way may be found, and thus join in with all our might to do our part in our day! Shall we not lay aside our prejudices and be thoroughly Christian? Shall we not join hands with all who truly love Him, and tell His story unto the ends of the earth? Shall we not walk with the greatest and best in the pages of history, although our walk be a very lowly and humble one, and do our part gladly as Christians should while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work?

I have faith to believe that we will! For I can still hear His words, "I will not leave thee until I have done that which I spoke to thee of." God is back of the Missionary movement, and joins hands with all those who help to make known His Son to the ends of the earth. May we be co-workers together with Him. May we have His promise, and may He receive ours in full fruitage! Amen.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

We are having a hard time getting our garden planted. It seems that when the ground gets dry enough to work, it rains again. We always plan a good day's work for the boys on Saturday while all of them are out of school, but it seems that if it is not raining, the ground is too wet from recent rains to get very much done. It seems that it is hard to get two or three open days together.

We did get one day some time ago when the ground was dry enough to work in and we planted cabbage, garden peas and part of our crop of Irish potatoes.

Now we want to plant mustard, lettuce, carrots, garden beans and all that it takes to make a perfect garden.

We begin to plant in the early spring and keep planting all through the spring and summer in order to have vegetables from our garden till frost.

It keeps one busy to so arrange plantings so one planting will come in when one is going out.

Easter dresses are beginning to come in. The several Missionary circles of our Burlington, N. C. Church sent to us a few days ago a box containing twenty-nine dresses. We are grateful indeed. We have run short in dresses for our larger girls. They always expect a new dress for Easter. We are anxious that no one will be disappointed at this coming Easter season.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE AND MISSIONS.

missionary endeavor, but most of them began when they were young, and the others wish that they had. Only youth dare talk about changing the world, and only those who dare ever accomplish what they desire.

The young people of our churches are doing some fine missionary work. One conference group sends in more than a thousand dollars annually to help spread the Glad Tidings. Thousands of them gather in their meetings to study books, pack boxes, and in many ways aid in the missionary work. They read magazines, papers, and books with the hope of learning more of world affairs in order that they may share with the people of all the earth their most highly prized possession—their religion. But it is also true that many of our young people are not sharing in this fine work. We are just beginning. Some even think that they do not believe in missions. That is because they do not know. Those who do know can do missionary work by informing others who do not know.

In missionary societies, Christian Endeavor societies, and in Sunday school classes our young people are learning of missions and giving to missions. But we have just started. When the thousands of young people in our churches hear the call of Christ as it comes from all over the earth in the voice of the hungry, the deserted, the perplexed, the atheistic,—I say when our young people in all our churches listen for the voice of Christ in the world-wide distress and really begin to work at the task, the world will witness a new birth.

Right now is the time for those who believe that the Message of Jesus should go to all people should busy themselves with the Easter offering which will send the Gospel to the ends of the earth. Most young people I know can give much more than they are now giving. And all of them can make an appeal to some who do not give and in this way win friends for the cause and get new givers, and more money.

It will cost the church less to send the Gospel to the nations than it will to build battleships for protection. We can better afford to live with Christ among the people of all the earth as brothers than we can to build walls of suspicion behind which we live in terror. It costs me a hundred dollars annually in tax to own and operate an automobile. Why should I not give as much for the Gospel. Can girls who pay dollars for cosmetics and permanent waves be content to give dimes for missions? Can young men spend dimes daily for cigarettes and give dimes annually for missions and then lie down in peace at night and think themselves Christian? I wonder.

Young people, friends of mine, let's make this the happiest Easter we have ever known because of the sacrifice on our part as we give to send the Easter Message to those who know it not, and because we get many of our friends to share with us in this Youth Movement that has spanned the centuries and now girdles the globe.

SOME MISSIONARY THOUGHTS FOR OUR WOMEN.

"The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

"Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."—Mark 16:15.

"If ye love me, keep my commandments."—Jno. 14:15.

We are blessed to be a blessing. We inherit a blessing—Christ—all He has done, is doing and will do for us.

Love is the greatest missionary motive. There is no better test of real love than this, "Am I obedient to His command?"

The gospel of God concerning His Son is the world's greatest need. These tidings of great joy, exhibiting the grace of God, revealing the knowledge of the glory of God,—of immortality and the power of God, if believed in the heart and confessed with the mouth and lived in this life, bring pardon, acceptance with God, peace, hope and fullness of blessing. This word of salvation, truth, and life saves men from sin and sorrows due to sin.

Do we realize what sin is and what we are saved from? Do we realize who gave His life as our substitute to pay the penalty of our sin? No wonder we are called upon to tell far and wide to others the Good News of that gift offered to all:

"We have heard the joyful sound;
Jesus saves! Jesus saves!
Spread the tidings all around
Jesus saves! Jesus saves!
Bear the news to every land,
Climb the steeps and cross the waves;
Onward—'tis our Lord's command;
Jesus saves! Jesus saves!

The Great Commission of A. D. 33 holds good today. "Every creature"—evangelism falls to you and me. Have you ever said, "Lord, what Thou hast for me to do, I will do?" As one of God's appointed light holders, are you holding forth the Word of Life in your life?

Have you a world wide missionary vision?

Wherever there is a seeking soul God means someone to carry light to that soul.

Do you suppose that someone could be you?

During th Mission Period, we are calling the women of the church to give themselves in devotion to this cause. We are calling for gifts of self, service and sacrifice.

The very first and important call is that we give ourselves in prayer, every day, definite, earnest prayer for our work and workers.

Mrs. E. C. Cronk has said, "First in best methods for missionary work stands prayer. Prayer is not a last extremity, but a first necessity. It requires time and costs more than most people are willing to pay. Prayer reaches the heart of God."

If our women would determine upon prayer as their chief method of work what could we not accomplish?

"Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that He send forth laborers into His harvest."—Luke 10:2.

"Ask of me and I will give thee the nations for thine inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."—Psalm 2:8.

The second important call is that we may prove our love with our gifts. Frederick Agar says, "The need of the hour is for a church that lovingly pays to God at least the first fruits of all time, energy, and money."

Let us pray for such a church.

The needs are great. The challenge is before us. Let us live the gospel we profess. We are called upon to make an investment which will last for time and eternity.

"You may carve your name high,
Where the steadfast rocks defy decay,
But all you can hold in your cold, dead hand,
Is what you have given away."

MRS. W. R. SELLARS.

THE YOUTH FELLOWSHIP.

The following topics might be used effectively:

1. What Nature says about immortality as expressed in the spring, etc.
2. What Science has to say about immortality.
3. What other religions say about immortality.
4. What Christianity says about immortality.

Such questions as these would bring out the ideas of your group:

Does desire for life after death indicate that there is such life?

Does the resurrection of Jesus guarantee that others will be resurrected?

If Jesus had not been resurrected, would there have been any Church?

Does it seem reasonable to think that personality comes to an end with physical death?

In what sense do Moses, David and the prophets live today?

Would Jesus have been the character he was if He had not believed in life after death?

OBITUARIES

ROQUEMORE.

Reuben Jennings Roquemore was born March 1, 1926 and died April 2, 1935. He leaves to mourn his going his father and mother, three brothers and one sister, and a large number of relatives and scores of friends. Reuben was a bright little lad, active and energetic; a splendid "pal" to everybody. He loved his brothers and sister. He loved his parents with a devotion as strong as life itself.

He craved to get well but his little body did not yield to treatment and in spite of efforts of the physicians and nurses, he gradually grew worse. Just a little while before his death he asked his mother to "go home with him."

Death came as a relief after everything was done that could be done. Without a struggle he fell asleep. It won't be long before there will be a home-coming dear ones; weep not as those who have no hope, for in Jesus he will live again. Just before his passing we had a committal prayer with him; he died peacefully.

His little body was laid peacefully to rest in Lanett cemetery. The funeral was conducted by the writer at Lanett Christian Church, assisted by Rev. H. M. Gray and Rev. J. D. Dollar.

May God bless and comfort the bereaved. G. D. HUNT.

HOLLAND.

James Timothy Holland, son of the late Jeremiah and Margaret Duck Holland died at his home in Windsor, Va., April 2, 1935, aged 76 years.

The funeral services were conducted at the home by the writer, assisted by Revs. J. Sydney Cobb, Garland More and J. E. McCauley. The body was interred in Windsor Cemetery.

Mr. Holland is survived by his wife, who was Miss Ballie Stephenson, six children, John Quincy Holland of Montana, Mrs. C. P. Holland of Suffolk, Mrs. J. T. Bradshaw of Windsor, Gladstone Holland of Norfolk, Earl S. and Henry Holland, and a brother, J. Peter Holland of Norfolk.

May our heavenly Father comfort and keep His loved ones.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

Representing the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches.

IN ESSENTIALS, UNITY. IN NON-ESSENTIALS, LIBERTY. IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY.

VOLUME LXXXVII. RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, APRIL 18, 1935. NUMBER 16.

And the Angel said: "Fear not ye; ye seek Jesus who was crucified. He is not here; for He is risen, even as He said."
—Matthew 28: 5, 6.

"If Easter Be Not True!"

By HENRY H. BARSTOW.

IF EASTER be not true,
Then all the lilies now must lie;
The Flanders poppies fade and die;
The spring must lose her fairest bloom
For Christ were still within the tomb—
If Easter be not true.

If Easter be not true,
Then faith must mount on broken wing;
Then hope no more immortal spring;
Then hope must lose her mighty urge;
Life prove a phantom, death a dirge—
If Easter be not true.

If Easter be not true,
'Twere foolishness the cross to bear;
He died in vain who suffered there;
What matter though we laugh or cry,
Be good or evil, live or die,
If Easter be not true?

If Easter be not true—
But it is true, and Christ is risen!
And mortal spirit from its prison
Of sin and death with Him may rise!
Worth while the struggle, sure the prize,
Since Easter, aye, is true!

—From "Poems for Special Days and Occasions," Clark.

NOTES-PERSONALS

News from the Churches.

The program of the Florida Conference of Congregational Churches appears on page seven of this issue. It looks perfect with one exception. That is that we are unable to be there and enjoy it.

Easter Sunday should bring a large offering for Missions. The story of Christ's resurrection has brought happiness to us, and it is nothing less than a duty of all Christians to make it their personal business to see that it is carried to others.

Elon College has just issued a bulletin announcing the Summer Session for 1935. If you want to avail yourself of this opportunity for a pleasant session and to brush up on school work, write the college for a copy together with other information.

All roads lead to Raleigh on April 30th. Be sure that your church is well represented at the Southeast Convention. No finer aggregation of speakers could be brought together than that which has been assembled on the program which has been prepared by Dr. J. H. Lightbourne and Rev. F. C. Lester.

An editorial note in a Boston daily one morning years ago, ran thus: "It was a gloomy day yesterday, with overhanging clouds and pattering rain and clinging mist; but Phillips Brooks walked down Newspaper Row, bowing here and there to friends, and the day was all sunshine."

—Reader's Digest.

Lack of space preempts use of much material which should have appeared in this issue of The Sun. This includes one or two editorials and several contributions. Also it has been necessary to leave out the list of contributors to the Elon College Fund. There have been several additional contributions sent in since the last report two weeks ago, and these will be reported next week.

THAT RALEIGH CONVENTION.

April 30th—May 1st and 2nd.

Let us be there to catch the inspiration that such a meeting should give. Let us be there to see that our own church is well represented, and that the things we stand for, and believe in are emphasized. Let us be there to help look forward into a future that keeps step with growing needs of Pastors, and leaders in every local congregation should be able to do a finer piece of work after such a fellowship with one another and with the Christ as this meeting will offer. Let us be there to contribute of our own selves,—our communion with one another, our intercession for our churches and to offer whatever help our presence may give. Just as you can make greater, and better progress in a local church by having the members present, just so will we move forward in a finer fashion as a people if we have a largely representative number present at that Raleigh Convention.

John G. Truitt.

ALL ROADS LEAD TO RALEIGH.

Pastors and members of the churches of Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches should be making—if they have not already made—their plans for attending the sessions of the Southeast Convention which will meet in Raleigh on April 30th-May 2nd. Attendance at this Convention both involves a responsibility and presents a privilege. All those who go even from a sense of duty will find that they have had a high privilege, for such persons will be present, and such programs will be presented, as will enrich the lives of all those who attend.

Here is a Convention planned, not for transacting business, but for imparting information and inspiration, and for deepening consecration. Outstanding leaders, not only of our larger fellowship, but of other denominations, will bring inspiring messages and lead stimulating discussions. There will be periods of worship and devotion. There will be wholesome fellowship. There will be new outlooks on life, the opening up of new horizons, new insights into the problems of our time in their relation to religion, and an inventory of Christian resources for our day. In other words, this Convention stands for the things which pastors and laymen need for these trying times. Those who come to this Convention in the right attitude of mind and the right spirit of heart will find that life will be renewed and undergirded in a compelling way.

It will not be an expensive Convention. Costs can be kept to a minimum. And such money as is spent wisely will be an investment that will pay large dividends for the individuals and the churches. Where these is no vision the people perish. The Southeast Convention stands for that which will give us life in a more abundant way. Let all roads lead to Raleigh, April 30th-May 2nd. Let pastors and laymen and laywomen make definite plans to attend every session of the Convention. And let us pray that it shall be a veritable Pentecost in the lives of those who attend and the churches which they represent. Be there yourself, Mr. Pastor, and see to it that many of your people are also there.

H. S. Hardcastle.

SPRINGTIME IN THE MOUNTAINS.

Our hills are taking on new life once more. New buds, young blades that will be grass, and new hopes. The dreamy romance of springtime in the mountains now hangs over our misty, mysterious hills, and all is gloriously alive. And the fact that our Hilly Grissoms are home to the hills adds to the glory of Spring and brings joy to the hearts of our people here. The Grissom baby with her red curls just a bit brighter, and her happy mind carefree as ever, adds a note of real gladness to the Blue Ridge breeze this Spring. So now we have our loved ones back and we are all set for a forward march in the hills.

Speaking of hills and our churches here at Elk Spur and Rocky Ford reminds me that lots of our church people who supported this work and are interested in it, have never seen this part of the mountains. I speak of rugged peaks and winding trails and I forget that those who live in flat lands may easily get the impression that our church here is on a mountainside so steep one can hardly climb to it. So I want to give you some idea of the place. Our Elk Spur Church is on the crest of the mountain and a few acres up here are as nice as you could hope for. In fact, it is such a nice place that it is a credit to any mountain. It is easy to reach our place now as good roads run through our hills. The little parsonage has a nice level lawn on which the Grissoms are trying to get nice flowers started. The lawn rolls off to the East and the view is lovely as we are over three thousand feet in the air. You can see the chain of mountains rolling one hill upon another till they fade into the sky. And as you look down upon rivers and roads winding ribbon-like in the foothills you get the feeling that you are on top of the world. Little wonder that these rugged peaks have the power to cast a spell over people who come this way in the Springtime.

Our Rocky Ford Church is not on top, but nestled among the hills and is a little hard to find. Rugged hills tower high above hugging her closely. Mountain streams pour their crystal waters over the rocks and add a bit of music to the serene beauty of our hills. About June the rhododendrons blush by the wayside and the hills are a glory of green and blossom. We want to invite all friends of our church to come and see. We will put you up in a mountain home and it is not all bad here. If you will come to my place and simply state that you are of the Christian church you can find a welcome here that will cost you nothing except to put up with the lack of conveniences you find here. We never close our doors to any unless sickness in the home demands it. It is true that you may find little on the table besides the famous mountain potatoes that you read so much about in books, but you will be welcome to your potato. So plan to come to our hills this summer and see the place and the people where you have done your part to add a bit of sunshine and joy to the lives here by giving us Christ.

Yours always for our beautiful and beloved mountains,

Victoria of the Hills.

FROM NEWPORT NEWS.

For two months we have enjoyed special features at our evening services. During the month of February we had the following ministers: Joe French, N. G. Newman, F. C. Lester and J. F. Morgan. Not only was this a treat for "sermon-tasters," but their messages were a blessing to our church. Many of our people have so few opportunities for hearing the various ministers of the Conference. It was indeed a privilege to exchange pulpits with these splendid men.

We had special services of music during the month of March. Visiting musical organizations for the first four Sunday nights included: The Trinity Methodist Orchestra; The Hilton Village Male Quartet; The Sloan Sisters and the Hampton Institute Senior Quartet. Over three hundred were present to hear the Hampton singers. The junior, young people's and senior choirs and the orchestra of our church were all present with selections for the fifth Sunday evening service. These special services are worthwhile and were largely attended. The sermons dealt with some phase of the ministry of music.

AN EXPLANATION.

It seems only fair, though it seems to be self-evident, to explain that the article by Prof. S. M. Smith in the April 4th issue of The Sun came directly to the office of publication. The acting editor read the article before it went to the type setter, and though he certainly does not agree with it in its entirety, he saw no reason why it should be suppressed. There was, to his mind, certainly some good thought in it, and it was being printed in a paper whose readers are, he believes, most capable of reaching religious decisions for themselves. The acting editor assumes the entire responsibility for the printing of the article, but it is only fair to him to state that the rather lengthy editorial reply in this issue, places interpretations upon some of the passages in the original article, which are entirely different from the impressions we received. FOR YOUR INFORMATION.

The Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches was organized in Burlington, N. C., May, 1932, and met in Suffolk, Va., in May of 1934. This is the third session of the Convention, and the first session separate from the Southern Convention.

It is not a delegated body. The United Church of Raleigh invites all ministers, laymen, women, and young people of the Congregational and Christian Churches in Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Kentucky, Georgia, Alabama, and Florida to attend this meeting. Visitors from other denominations will be welcomed.

Entertainment will be on the Harvard plan so far as the church is able to supply homes. "First come, first served." Other homes will be available at $ 50 per night. Hotels are reasonable. The Carolina Hotel, right near the church, quotes rates at $2.50 for single and $4.00 for double rooms (bath included).

Meals and banquets will be served at the church at $ 35 each.

Adults will be admitted to the Youth Fellowship banquet, if there is room.

There is no registration fee. Offerings will be received at the evening services.

More important than disquisitions and protestations concerning liberty, it seems to us, especially at the present hour, is the thorcughgoing exercise of calm and critical inquiry to determine what restrictions, if any, are to be placed by law and society upon the individual in consideration of the condition and rights of other individuals and the welfare of society as a whole.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

EASTER JOY AND GRATITUDE.

The most joyous season of all the year is Easter. This is as it should be. It celebrates the greatest single event of all the ages—the resurrection of our Lord. In the flesh He had conquered all manner of diseases, cast out devils, forgiven sins. In the resurrection He had conquered the last and bitterest foe of all, Grim Death. He had robbed the grave of its dread and death of its sting.

Now, brethren and beloved everywhere, let us rejoice at this glad season—and express our gratitude!

Look! At Thanksgiving, we take of our substance and out of gratitude for material blessings and for harvest, crops and earnings, we make a donation to Benevolence. This we do in sweet charity's name to help the widow and the orphan physically and materially. At Easter, how fitting indeed, it is that we take a love offering, (even our alabaster box of precious ointment) and pour it out on our Lord for spiritual blessings and benefits, out of joy and gratitude for His goodness, mercy and love in forgiving our sins and winning our victory over death and the grave.

Every church in our Convention is called upon, given the privilege, at this Easter time to thus share the joy of our Lord and thus express our love and gratitude to Him for His unspeakable gift to us by making an offering to Missions. Shall we remember that He sacrificed even all, and came through the agony and ordeal of the Cross, first, that He might win the victory over Death and thus come to a glorious triumph in the resurrection? We will come to the joy of this season, that blessed spiritual joy, in no other way than by some self-denial, some sacrifice in His name and for His sake.

So, brethren and beloved of every household in our faith, let us deny ourselves now with a real offering for Missions at this Easter time. This is our spiritual task and privilege.

I need not say that every mission point we have, in the home land and the foreign, suffers now from lack of support from us. And we suffer spiritual deadness or defeat unless we make our self-denial offering on the altar of our Lord and for His sake. "Oh, I want to help the poor and needy about me whom I can see and know about." Well, listen at our Lord's plea: "The poor ye have with you always, but me ye have not always. Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached in all the world this that we [you] have done [in making a love offering to me] shall be told as a memorial of her [you] ! !

Let us on Easter day bring a love offering to our Lord that His gospel of salvation may be given to the whole world. This we beg of you, not for the sake of the poor materially, but for the sake of our Lord spiritually that He may save the poor who are perishing spiritually.

May God help us to do our best for Him at this Easter time even as He did His divine best for us.

"A NEW RELIGION FOR THE NEW AGE."

There appeared in the CHRISTIAN SUN of April 4th an article under the above head-line that THE SUN'S editor sincerely hopes escaped your reading. Just why such an article should be submitted to any church paper, is beyond explanation, save to say that it is deplorable and humiliating beyond words. I know the brother who wrote this piece of desecration and I know the thoughts and sacrilege he spread on a page of our paper were not his. To say the best, they were a cheap, and senseless psychology, so-called, with which he may be enamored for the time being. Surely our brother did not know the meanings and implications of these anti-Christian statements he made. It would have been far better for SUN readers if the writer had said, "I am an avowed Atheist and no longer believe in God," than for him to have veiled and sugar-coated his expressions with a show of Biblical or Christian doctrine. Then he would have come out in the open and even the unthinking reader could and would have brushed him aside.

What he did say was:

First. I am a pantheist of the most pronounced type and no longer believe in a real personal God or devil.

Second. Jesus Christ has about had His day and now another "world avator is in order."

Third. God is so imminent that no mediation (Mediator) is necessary.

Fourth. No Redeemer or Saviour is necessary because, "I am a child of the King and so am entitled to an everlasting inheritance in all the Kingdom holds." (May our Father in Heaven have pity and compassion on a soul who really believes that and so leaves no place for the grace of God, or the forgiveness of sin, since there is no such thing as sin to forgive.)

Fifth. Prayer is abolished, being no longer necessary since, (I quote his heart-sickening, soul stabbing words) "We do not have to beg God to send His blessings upon us. His storehouse is full and . . . these things are ours." Over against these words, just place the words of our blessed Redeemer who said, "When you pray, say, 'Our Father, who art in heaven . . . Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done . . . Give us this day our daily bread. . . etc.' No longer ask, beseech, pray, beg the Father—just walk in and take all you need since you merit and deserve in your own right all you see!

Now, dear SUN readers, go with me just a little further and see how this New Religion seeks to treat with irreverance and ridicule all that is nearest and dearest the heart of our Lord, and the souls of us who seek and trust Him. Look at this co-called New Religion, this religion of ancient pantheisms, now parading under the false name of "Psychology," "New Thought," "Infinite Force," etc., etc.

Just take the four points of the so-called "New Religion" that our brother himself names.

He says that:

1. "It will not be based on authority, either spiritual or otherwise." Then what in heaven's name will it be based on? Unless religion is based on authority, it has no base or foundation. The scribes and pharisees never said anything truer of Jesus than when they said "He speaks as one having authority." Brethren and beloved, the most authoritative thing on this earth is Truth. Unless the Church can speak with authority, it has no message for this or any other age. How is this for Authority, "I am the way, the truth, and the life." Jesus did not say, "I reckon, I hope, I think, maybe, I am the way," etc. The most authoritative sound that ever fell upon the ears of man is God's word, God's truth. Take this from the opening of Genesis (and trace it all through to Revelation if you like) "In the beginning God created." I guess there is authority for you. And you can't get away from or around that authority.

And in this paragraph, read this sentence, "The Church has too long made a slave of those who subscribe to its tenets." Brethren, think of a statement like that in a church paper. The freest, most liberal and loving souls that you and I know are in the Church, believe in the Church and in Him who is the Head of the Church. Men who are in sin, subject to sin, dominated by evil and wickedness—they are the slaves. Put over against this statement of Smith, the statement of our Lord, "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."

2. Smith would not have us look to God any more, but to the hills. Read this, "Man will learn what it means to look to the hills for strength." The Psalmist said, "I look unto the hills." But he found no help or strength there. And so he declares, "My help cometh from the Lord who made the heaven and the earth." So Smith would have us substitute the hills for the God who made them, as the source of our help. So his "New Religion" is to invite us to the hills to get our strength instead of to the house of God for worship.

3. "The new religion for the new age will insist that men be honest, fair and tolerant." Fine! I am glad the "new religion" is to have at least one feature and virtue of our dear old religion, for from the beginning the religion of our fathers and mothers has taught us that.

4. "The new religion for the new age will not be gloomy, ascetic, maledictory." Well, if Smith means to imply that our present religion is gloomy and ascetic and maledictory, I advise him to try the old and learn what he is trying to say. For the happiest, most joyous people on this earth are those whose faces are lit up with the radiance and love of God. Now reader, if you wish to feel how blind and heedless and futile this "new religion" is to be just read this: "It will not deal chiefly with sickness, sorrow, pain, death, but rather with health, joy, life and happiness. It will not be so much concerned with the evil and ugly etc. . . . as the recognition of the good and the beautiful." So Jesus was all wrong and out of date when He said, "They that are whole need no physician, but they that are sick. I came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance." From what rubbish heap of rehashed thinking was S. M. Smith quoting when he reverts to the old Roman and heathen notion of killing the weak, ignoring the feeble and the needy—and just revel with those who are in jolly good health?

Now look at this quotation and hang your head in shame and humiliation: "God will be interpreted not as a Being with a form as man, but rather as a great Infinite Force." So Jesus our Lord should never have referred to God as Father, but, "Oh, Thou Infinite Force, all Thou hast is ours and so without begging Thee, we are entitled to all we see and so will help ourselves." But Smith's "New Religion" entirely rules out our Saviour and Mediator. Read this: "No Mediator is necessary between Him and the smallest object of His creation." Now read the Apostle Paul, "For there is one Mediator between God and men, Christ Jesus." So the "New Religion" will need and have no Christ—certainly not since there is no evil, no devil, no sin. (Does this man never read his daily papers or look into his own heart to see and know that evil works by day and by night?)

I have made this reply all too long and have only touched the more glaring statements. I must include one more which in reading stabbed me to the heart, and sent me in sorrow to my knees. Just read it and go with me; go over this attempted fun making and ridicule of that which is most sacred, clear and sweet to the heart. I quote: "We must get away from the old idea and teaching that once upon a time a Supreme Being called God created a world, including man, started in on Monday morning and finished upon Saturday night and that He then set things a-going, withdrew and left the universe to be operated by physical laws." Now from that levity and ridicule I beg my reader to turn to the oldest description we have, and one of the most stately, accurate and sublime of God creating the world. Read the first chapters of Genesis and see how God called out to man in the garden, think of it. God seeking man, as He has ever done, that He might have fellowship and sweet converse with him who was made in the image and likeness of God. And then turn to the first chapter of St. John and see how, "In the beginning was the word, and the word was God . . . and became flesh and dwelt among us."

If Brother S. M. Smith knows anything, he knows full well that neither the Bible nor the Church, nor any "old idea" ever pictured such God and the Creative act as he has.

Yes, friends, this world still needs a Saviour and Redeemer: it still needs the religion that rests on the sane foundation; that Authority Who says, "I am the way, the truth and the life," and "No man cometh unto the Father but by me." And we still need to pray to a prayer-answering heavenly Father. May God help us.

I have been editor of THE SUN a long time and many foolish and meaningless things may have appeared in the SUN during the time, but never in all my recollection has anything been printed in our columns as sacriligeous or desecrating, as soulless as this "New Religion for the New Time."

May God grant that such never happens again!

J. O. A.

By putting Himself in the servant's place, our Lord has consecrated all service. The disciple who next washed the feet of the rest would feel that he was representing Christ, and would suggest to the minds of the others the action of their Lord and as often as we lay aside the conventional dignity in which we are clad, and gird ourselves to do what others despise, we feel that we are doing what Christ would do, and are truly representing Him.—Marcus Dodds.

OUR FIELD AND ITS CHALLENGE.

REV. R. FREDERICK BROWN, TH. M.

The subject is divided into two parts. The first part deals with our field and it requires a factual treatment. I know that facts are cold and uninteresting. It is very difficult to make a mere skeleton of facts vital, but we must face facts, or our field will not offer a challenge.

Our Field.

Mexico—Founded 1872; 2 stations; 10 out-stations; 5 workers; 56 native workers; 33 meeting places; 13 churches; 670 communicants; 35 added last year; 16 Sunday schools with 800 pupils; 1900 constituency; 6 schools of all grades with 686 pupils under instruction; native contributions to Christian work, $1,850; total receipts, $8,260.

Recapitulation.

Our foreign mission work is in its 124th year; 537 missionaries; 6290 nationals at work; 14 missions; 94 stations; 2124 out-stations; 740 native churches; 102,769 members; 448,785 constituency; 9 colleges; 31 theological and training schools; 1120 lower schools; 90,502 students under instruction; 73 hospitals and dispensaries; 644,700 treatments last year; $7,500,000 invested in lands and buildings; $684,437 contributed last vear by native Christians for all purposes. We have a foreign parish of 60,000,000 people under 10 flags.

The foregoing facts have been taken from the Year Book 1935 and other literature sent out by The American Board.

The facts for Porto Rico are not available for this summary.

A survey of our field and a tabulation of the facts indicate that we have only begun to discover our opportunity in the un-Christianized world. After one hundred and twenty-four years of effort our great church has only scratched the surface.

The Challenge.

We shall find our challenge when we accept the proposals which Christ made. To the early church He sounded a challenge. The challenge is fourfold:

1. He said to the disciples and He says to us: "Go ye." Never before, nor since, has there been such a challenge presented to the church. For two thousand years this challenge has been kept before the church. It is a command—not a request. It is the selective draft. The weak are culled and the strong are commissioned. While the weak drop out, it was not the purpose of Christ that they should escape this challenge. His command is an inclusive command—not exclusive. The proposal is made to all the church—not one member is excluded and not one church is excluded. If it becomes an exclusive act it is only because individuals have misinterpreted it. It is a blanket commission to the whole church.

Moreover, it is a comprehensive challenge. "Go ye into all the world." No part of the unevangelized world is to be left out. The church's mission is to thoroughly Christianize life—the intellectual, industrial, social, and moral. The world is tortured with fear and crazed with individualism and nationalism. Redemption by gunfire is impossible. At a time like this, when there is uncertainty, moral decadence, distress, and spiritual bankruptcy, there is absolutely no hope for the world unless the church accepts this challenge and sends forth healing streams of redemptive love into the angry emotions of a hopeless world.

2. The second part of the challenge is, "Preach the gospel." The Good News should be presented to the person who is ill, the person who is struggling with his agricultural problems, the student who is trying to pull himself away from old

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The radio has made a great contribution to entertainment and instruction in the home. In a short time millions of people accepted this instrument as a necessary feature of their evening hours. But it has supplanted personal singing in many homes. Pianos have been discarded, music lessons discontinued, both instrumental and vocal, and the former custom of taking part in playing and singing is a matter of history with many people. "Why should I try to sing when I can hear much better vocal music over the radio? Why should I learn to play the piano, if the radio furnishes me this entertainment?"

It is much easier to tune in and get the music over the air. It requires neither skill nor effort to do this. The music comes to you from the four corners of the earth, while you sit at ease in your chair. It is true that the music may come from skilled hands and trained voices superior to any possible achievement on your part. But something more vital than this is involved in this convenient entertainment. "It is more blessed to give than to receive," is true in this connection. The value of personal effort and persoal development is lost to many young people. Participation in music does something for mind and soul.

It is encouraging to learn that a plan is under consideration to include music in the regular curriculum of the public schools of Virginia. Now the church should encourage the development of latent musical talent in the young people. Before the development of the radio, the piano was in great demand. A home was not considered up to date without a musical instrument. It was a scurce of entertainment for the social circle. Instrumental music and singing occupied a prominent place in family life. The cultivation of a musical taste enriched and refined the moral and spiritual life of the community.

With the transition from the piano to the radio a great change came in the social life of the family. The radio can be tuned in and set for a whole evening. Music without effort and without price. That is too easy for growing youth and strong womanhood and manhood. What shall occupy the time and the attention in the home? What shall the family do without the leisure time in the evening? For many people, in these days, there is a choice between staying at home at the card table, or going to the movies. The easiest and most popular thing to do in the home circle is to play cards. Of course many people are knitting and others are engaged in other types of fancy work. But the popular choice will be a movie or bridge. It does not require much mental effort to look at a movie; and the bridge table may be entertaining, but it does not cultivate the finer arts of high thinking and spiritual meditation.

In this period of transition the home has sustained a great loss. The homes of Christian people are included in this disaster. The parents of today may lean back in their chairs, as they read this, and recall, with pleasure, the days when young people gathered around the piano, in the home, and spent happy hours playing and singing. The music was not all religious. The program included the music of romance, and adventure and love. But in the Christian home the sacred music found a place, and sometimes, the largest place. It was a sweet experience to youth and age. This music sweetened many lives and refreshed tired mothers and weary hearts. Did the young people enjoy it? Yes; and it brought them together in a fellowship of refinement and culture. Many homes would be different today if the piano were tuned and the song books returned from the attic, and the parlor once more ring with the voices of youth blending in musical notes of praise. This is not written to condemn the radio nor the movies, but to make an appeal for instrumental music and singing in the home and social circle and especially for group gospel singing.

I. W. JOHNSON.

CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP.

When a man become a Christian, the title of all that he has is transferred to Christ. He is no longer his own master. Christ becomes his master, and what he has and is are at His disposal. This is a difficult thing to do. So long as we are human, there is that within us that would say, "Mine, I want, I must have." We have been unable to properly relate our possessions, whether they be physical, material, or spiritual, to Christ. The majority of us who claim to be Christian find it more or less easy, I think, to transfer the title of our mystic spiritual possessions to Christ. We persuade curselves that we are willing to give Him complete authority over our spiritual selves, at the same time persuading ourselves that we can retain directorship of our acts and of our money.

We rather shrink from any apparent violation of the common rules of public worship, feeling that we are standing on holy ground. But, without compunctions, we violate the laws of the Sabbath, feeling that we are free moral agents and can do as we please with ourselves. If it is agreeable to attend church, we will. If it suits our convenience better, we will go to the beaches or to the mountains. Or, if it be to our advantage, we will make a trip. We take it that the Sabbath is given us to use as we like. Not only do we claim this liberty for curselves on the Sabbath but on all other days as well.

We assume the same attitude toward our possessions, toward our money. We have earned it. We got it honestly. It is ours. We know how we want to use it, where to invest it, how much, and where we want to give it. We are perfectly capable of handling our own affairs, and we propose to do it. We read the scriptures, of course; but so much of the time, we read with the ear stopped and eye closed. What we want to hear, we hear. What want to see, we see. Very few of us hear what the Lord has to say about what we are to do with cur lives, what we are to do with our money. We read these divine instructions and commandments, but we neither see nor hear them. In other words, we will give Christ authority over the mystical side of our lives; but when it comes to tangible and material things, we exert our own authority.

To what degree is a man Christian when he submits only what he has termed his spiritual life to Christ but submits his physical and material possessions to himself? Hebrews exhorts, "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that you present your bodies a living sacrifice, wholly acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." Christ, in all earnestness and with great anxiety for those who would be His, pled, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in Heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt and where thieves do not break through and steal." And further, He exhorted them, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you . . . Take no thought for the morrow for the morrow will take thought for the things of itself."

Christianity requires the dedication of life with all of its values and possessions to Christ. Why should we hesitate to meet such requirements? The giving of what we have and are to Christ will not impoverish us but greatly enrich us. Was a life ever lost by giving itself to Him Who said, "Whosoever shall save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel, the same shall save it?" Why should a man hesitate to let Christ speak in the matter of disposing of his money? All things are His. It is His to give and His to take away. How we do endanger ourselves, both for time and eternity by clinging to things of this world, apparently feeling that in them lies our salvation and our safety! Have we not yet learned that the world, with its riches passeth away? If we have not, the day is not far distant when we will. Of what value be material things in the light of spiritual riches? The one may follow to the grave but no farther; the other becomes our only hope and our sole possession when we reach the Great Divide.

At this season of the year, we are reminded in a definite way of God's precious gift to the world and of Christ's infinite sacrifice for our individual redemption. Out of the gratitude of our hearts, may we dedicate ourselves anew? Standing in the light of the resurrection morn, may we renew our allegiance to the risen Christ, and may it be our joy to bring ourselves and our gifts in loving remembrance and joyful worship of Him Who gave His all, Who came that we might have life, Who became poor that we, through His poverty, might become rich? Let us make our Easter offerings for missions more expressive of the Lordship of Christ and of our infinite trust in Him.

L. E. SMITH.

HINES' CHAPEL AND PALM STREET.

We began in the present field of service—Hines' Chapel and Palm Street, Greensboro, N. C., last November. All appointments have been met, the attendance at each church has been good. At Hines' Chapel a young people's Missionary Society has been organized and is doing nice work.

The Senior Society is planning a special Easter play.

At Palm Street a parsonage has been purchased and a cash payment of one-third the purchase price has been paid. Each church has done well on the College offering, and we hope to reach our Mission apportionment during the year.

The funeral of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Ritter was conducted in the Palm Street church on April 8th by Revs. J. L. Neese, of Reidsville, Charles Young, of Hillsboro, A. N. Hollis, of Greensboro, and the pastor. Three boys and a girl are left to mourn the loss of their parents. May God bless and comfort their sad hearts.

On April 4th, at 10:00 A. M., in front of the altar of the Palm Street Church, Miss Ophelia Morris quietly became the wife of Mr. O. M. Ritter, ceremony by the pastor. Mrs. Ritter is the popular president of our Senior C. E. and has a host of friends. May the Sunshine be theirs.

B. J. EARP.

This life is only the beginning, the planting of the seed. We begin here, but it is over there that we truly grow, expand, rise to higher and higher realms of life and being.

CHRISTIAN TEMPLE.

The Christian Temple has been helped in a large way by the Mission Board, and theTemple has also done a big thing for Missions through the years. It has been and is a missionary church and an effort is being made to keep it so. Even with its heavy obligations for the new building, it tried to keep up its misionary giving in proportion.

The present membership of the Temple is about nine hundred and fifty. It has a departmentalized Sunday school, and a splendid missionary organization among the women. Like so many churches it is not reaching the men with anything like an adequate missionary program.

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., Secretary.

THE ENVELOPES AND EASTER OFFERING.

By no fault of ours, but from circumstances, we could not control, the envelopes for the Easter offering for Missions were late, deplorably late, in reaching the churches. (One can't always control printers and Express Companies). We devoutly trust that our pastors and church secretaries will make special effort to overcome this uncontrolable circumstance this time and see to it that though late, every member of the church and congregation who will do so shall have an envelope and be given the urgent opportunity and obligation of making a liberal offerig to Missions.

The Church is depending on you. The Kingdom of God and the salvation of souls are depending on you! God has no hands but your hands with which to help your brethren in sin: no feet but your feet to go His journey in all the earth to carry the gospel truth! Yes, God in tender love for us has made the building of His Kingdom, the spread of His truth on the earth, dependent on us—His followers and His friends. "We are ambassadors of Christ as though God were entreating us." (II Cor. 5:20.) Yes, our Lord does beseech through us that we may bear His message of salvation to all men and women everywhere. Wherefore, cries Paul in the same verse: "We beseech you on behalf of Christ, be ye reconciled to God." Oh, how many of us there are yet who are not reconciled to this Missionary plan and message of God, but are saying, "I will not have it so, but will give my offering, not as an ambassador for God, but as a person in my own sight and name to assist some benevolence or person whom I can see and know" I pray you friend, be ye reconciled to God—His way of saving the perishing and dying of this world unto Himself.

Let us be reconciled to our obligation and duty as Christians in making a real love offering in the name of our Lord—as His ambassadors, His sent ones—His messengers of light, life and salvation from sin and death. J. O. A.

THE EASTER VICTORY.

Christmas is the children's festival—then the race renews its youth. Peace and joy and good will fill the air. Easter brings a new sense of victory—victory over the grave—triumph over life's struggles. The one gathers about the hearthstone; the other gathers about the altar. The Easter anthem resounds with the notes of victory. Are we going to send forth a new note of victory this Easter time?

For more than three months, special preparation has been in the making for the third Sunday in April. New life in the churches, larger contributions for missions and new additions to each and every church have been of special concern. With many these are busy days. In home and church school and special revival services the concern is for a big harvest on Easter. We are sure these efforts will be rewarded.

Ours is a resurrection gospel. That is the seal of His triumph, the evidence that the enernal life that was in Him has conquered death. It was this that established the authority of Christ. It was this that confounded the Jews of Jerusalem who had put Jesus to death. It was this that awakened a new life in the moribund Roman empire. We are now in an age dominated by materialism in which money is the one cure for all ills; but we cannot escape the awful fact of death. Here is the victory that overcomes the world and triumphs at the grave.

Our fine achievements this Easter time should send us on to world conquest—enabling us to make new conquests at home and larger victories to win abroad—N. C. Christian Advocate.

THE SEPARATED PORTION.

One of the great evangelistic needs of our day is to recognize the spiritual content of money and rescue it from sordidness and greed.

"It's not what you'd do with a million,
If riches should be your lot
But what you are doing at present
With the dollar and a quarter you've got."

1. Do you keep an expense account before, or, after you spend your money?
Do you make a budget?

2. Do you set aside a definite share of your income for Christian work?

3. Why is a separated portion vitally necessary?

4. Should the proportion of one's giving vary according to his income? If I give one-tenth of my income when it is $1,000 per year, should I give any larger share if my income is $10,000?

5. What is the effect of the separated portion on one's own soul?

6. What is the effect of the separated portion as it relates to worthy causes?

7. Is making a separated portion a spiritual act?

8. How does the separated portion affect a man's wife and children?

9. May the separated portion ever be less than the tenth of the pre-Christian era?

10. What have you to say in the light of the scriptures as to the giving of 5 per cent, 25 per cen or more?

11. If I am to love my neighbor as myself, how does this apply, "Not how much of my money shall I give to God, but how much of God's money shall I keep for myself?"

12. Do the scriptures teach proportionate giving?

13. On what basis should the proportion be reckoned?
a. Gross income? b. Net income? 3. Residue after living expenses have been paid?

14. If one sets aside a percentage for giving in good years, what should be done in lean years?

15. Is there money enough in the hands of Christians to enable the church to do her entire work as far as finances are concerned if Christians budgeted their income and gave a right proportion of that income?

16. What would happen in your church if 90 per cent of its members should take a real step up into stewardship?

17. For what purposes should the separated portion be used?

"Jesus' Teaching on the Use of Money" by Brown is a most helpful book. Has a full chapter on the "Separated Portion." Fifty cents from Pilgrim Press, Boston, or Christian Publishing Association, Dayton.

HOW TO ENCOURAGE THE LOCAL CHURCH IN GIVING.

The goal of missionary education is missionary giving. That is putting it bluntly, but honestly. And no apology need be given for that policy. People as a rule do not give to causes in which they are not interested. The missionary cause is the primary responsibility of the Church. But it takes money to administer and to extend the missionary program of the Church. The ultimate problem therefore is to stimulate such interest in missions as will result in constantly increasing gifts to missions. Know, glow, go, and give are key words in missionary strategy. The problem of encouraging the local church in missionary giving is the problem of creating and sustaining an interest in missions. The church which is not interested in missions will not give to missions. The church which is interested in missions will give to missions. That is the nub of the matter.

How then shall the pastor awaken and sustain an interest in missions so that his people will give to missions? There are several things he can do. For instance he can preach missionary sermons, not simply a sermon or two during missionary period of the Church calendar, but throughout the year he can in many ways present the missionary aspect of the work of the church. The pastor is the key man in this respect. Many churches are not missionary-minded because their pastors are not missionary-minded.

Missionary literature can be distributed from time to time. Our American Board has an attractive and varied supply of such literature, much of which is free.

Stereopticon lectures showing the missionary work at home and abroad can be used with good effect. Such lectures can be secured from the Commission on Missions, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York City, New York, by paying shipping charges.

Mission study books can be used in many instances as the basis for the mid-week services during certain periods of the year. These books present missions in an interesting way.

It will encourage the women and the young people if the pastor will attend the regular meetings of the missionary groups, not as a critic, not as a participant on the program, but as a friendly visitor and as a sharer in the work. The writer does this, and regards it as a wise investment of his time, even in a busy schedule.

A friendly letter, preferably during mission period helps to stimulate interest in missions and thus encourages giving to missions. It helps to enclose some interesting missionary material in such a letter, brief, colored, striking, appealing.

Finally, the pastor must practice that which he preaches. He must practice with his purse what he preaches from the pulpit. He must take the lead in missionary giving, even at a sacrifice. Folks may not give to missions even if the pastor gives sacrificially, but they certainly will not give to missions if he does not give himself. Missionary fire is contagious. As a rule, like priest, like people, here as elsewhere. Let every pastor of every church in our Convention see to it that we respond to the challenge which our Special Easter Offering presents to sacrificial missionary giving.

ARE OUR MISSIONARY EFFORTS IN CARROLL COUNTY IN VAIN?

Do you ever find questions arising in your mind about the Missionary work? Do you wonder where all the money is spent, and if it is being used in a profitable way? Do you wonder if Missions pay?

Our Lord was more concerned about what He put into life than what He got out of it. He told us to be making permanent contributions, "where moths, rust, nor thieves could reach." We are all human and should know what happens in Carroll County Mission field.

To you who do not know, I wish to say, you have buildings and equipment valued at about $8,000.00. The cost of repairs, buildings, and laborers for the last 16 years has cost you about $30,000.

Let us look at the actual spiritual conditions at present, and 16 years ago. Sixteen years ago, not a boy or girl here had heard of Christ through the Sunday school. At present there are about 100 regular attendants in Sunday school, most of them boys and girls. The boys and girls of 16 years ago are our citizens of today. We find difficulty in getting them to attend Sunday school regularly. We hope, and pray that our boys and girls of today who will be citizens of tomorrow will be Christian citizens.

Each boy and girl of school age is in reach of public school. We have a good school in one of our buildings.

There are about 150 people enrolled as Christians in our churches here. About 25 who were members have passed on to reap their reward. If we of the Christian Church who have made Christ possible for these could hear them say you made possible, through your sacrifices and prayers, a home in heaven, we would be repaid many times for each effort made.

As we plan our Bible Schools and other work this summer, Mrs. Grissom and I ask you to offer an earnest prayer that our Master's will may be done here in our home mission field, your home mission field, and God's home mission field.

Rev. and Mrs. R. T. Grissom.

HOPEWELL CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The Hopewell Christian Church of Hopewell, Virginia, was organized in 1928. Rev. J. W. Barrett was the first regular pastor, following him was Rev. J. C. Barrett. In August, 1931, Rev. T. N. Lowe was called and is still serving as our pastor.

Our membership reported at last conference was 173. We have on roll in our Sunday school, 117. We also have a Junior and Senior Christian Endeavor Society; a large and active Missionary Society; and a Ladies' Aid Society.

The Mission Board has assisted in the erection and support of our church. We are indeed grateful to them for their help during the past years and at the presenttime also.

Although the strike in this sity has handicapped us, we are still progressing under the leadership of our beloved pastor, Rev. Lowe, with the aid of the Mission Board.

OUR FIELD AND ITS CHALLENGE.

traditions, as well as the man who is seeking spiritual light. The gospel is good news to these people. In the midst of a darkened world and the pagan fury that convulses the heart of humanity, the church must accept this challenge and cause the spirit of peace to move upon the troubled waters. The gospel of love is the solvent of the world's problems. It is the first line of attack, and the attack must be made upon the hearts of men, for unless there is the right spirit in the hearts of men the foundation of all life will be overwhelmed. "Preach the gospel," is still the challenge to the church.

3. The third part of the challenge places upon the church the responsibility of "making disciples of all nations." Making disciples is the first work of the church. There are some church people who are willing to make disciples in Jerusalem, but not in Judea. These are the people who draw a circle about themselves and call it the world. They live to themselves. They are the people who expect the pastor to edify them on Sunday and in some way justify their individualism. I admit it is a good thing to edify the saints, but we have probably spent too much time on the saints and too little time on the sinners. The best apology for a domesticated Christian is an understanding of the world's needs, and a challenge to meet those needs. Without such a challenge, the best Christian will soon become a weak Christian, a mediocre Christian. The absence of a challenging task is the forerunner of religious dyspepsia. This probably analyzes the present state of the church.

4. The fourth part of the challenge brings us to the teaching work of the church. "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." This teaching program must begin at home, to be sure, but it must not stay at home. No one would think of keeping the child forever in the home. He must be allowed to get out if his vision enlarges. I have been interested in watching the growth of my boy who is now sixteen. When he was a baby, his only world was the home. To him there were only three citizens. His world was composed of three people and he was the first citizen, his mother was the second citizen, and his father rated a poor third. But he soon got out of this world. When he got out in the yard he saw other children and he played with them, fought with them and laughed and wept with them. His world was growing bigger—and different. From this part of his new world he went to the school and there made other discoveries. His world grew faster. At the present time he is engaged in a triangle debate of the state high schools and here he is finding a new world, a world with keen competition. He is rapidly becoming interested in national and international characters and world problems. I hope his vision will lengthen as he grows older, and that he may become a world citizen. This hope never could have been awakened if I had kept him in his first world.

Thus far I have presented the factual part of my theme and the challenge. I wish now to present the method by which the challenge may be met.

The Fourfold Method.

1. An understanding of the enormity of the chalenge is the first essential in meeting it. No need is ever met until it is understood. This is potent in the program of Christianity. "Ye shall know the truth," applies to the church and its world task.

In the factual part of this address I have indicated the missions, the number of stations and outstations, as well as other important information touching our foreign mission work. There are many other sources of information which may be had for the asking. Today many books are published, special articles written, letters from missionaries, lectures by returned missionaries, stories, pictures, posters, and other means of information are available to the church. The church should be informed. The church must be informed before it will begin to perform.

2. We must carry the challenge on our hearts in prayer. My information about our field and its needs will not greatly stir me until I find some way by which I can link this information to my prayers. In fact it is doubtful whether we will respond to the need at all unless we have been made keenly alive by the mighty working of the Holy Spirit in our hearts. Until this whole matter has been placed on the altar of our devotions and baptized with our tears it will ever remain a prosaic and a commonplace matter—a matter only for those who have lost themselves in the bigness and blessedness of the challenge. I do not wish to bring an indictment against the church, but I am afraid the church has not taken this matter to heart as it should have done. Perhaps the church has prayed little prayers, when it should have praved world-shaking prayers. So deeply was our Master absorbed in this challenge that He spent nights in prayer. I think He still weeps over the condition of the world. The proper time to visualize the challenge and plan to meet it is while we are on our knees.

3. If we believe in the challenge and if we believe in the possibility of world redemption, we must support that belief with a proportionate part of our income. To give intelligently, proportionately, and regularly is the next step after we leave the altar. That we are not giving much is evident when we look at our record. In a recent issue of The Christian Sun there appeared an article which stated that the Western North Carolina Christian Conference gave (exclusive of the Burlington Church) for missions 15c per capita per year, and for all purposes these churches gave 60c per capita per year. The average per capita gifts by the whole Southern Christian Convention for all purposes for 1932 was $6.86.

He who has been uplifted by the redeeming love of Christ cannot refuse, in the light of the need and in the face of the challenge, to give a proportionate part of his earnings to the great cause of missions. The Christian's high sense of fairness should impel him to share what he has in order that others may have the blessings of the Gospel.

4. The fourth method of meeting the challenge is found in the cooperative efforts of Christian men and women. Judging from the way some people rebel, the church as a whole has not learned the art of working cooperatively. Too long the church has suffered from a discipleship that has had very little faith in the great missionary enterprise. Rebellion in the ranks retards the progress. A miserly attitude halts the missionary machinery. The church should be weary of its swaddling clothes of spiritual infancy. It should put on the whole armour and preach the whole gospel to the whole world.

(The above address was delivered by the Rev. Mr. Brown during the missionary rallies at Ramseur, N. C., April 4th, and Grace Chapel, Sanford, N. C., April 5th.)

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

Rev. F. C. Lester, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

EASTER GREETINGS.

As the Easter day approaches, I wish to greet you, my friends scattered throughout the land. The greeting is a prayer for your happiness on this holiest of the church festivals. Most that I have to say is expressed in the language of Scripture and the poets.

I do hope that young people everywhere will follow the example of those who went early on the first Easter morning, and will be in their places of worship near the dawning of the day. I also hope that your joy will be made complete by bringing with you into the Church of Christ some of your friends.

It is said that when the early Christians greet each other at this season of the year they said: "He is risen," and the other responded by saying: "He is risen indeed." Let this be the message in all of our hearts, and Easter will be a happy season indeed.

GETHSEMANE.

And they came to a place which was named Gethsemane; and He saith to His disciples, "Sit ye here while I pray." And He taketh Peter and James and John and began to be sore amazed and to be very heavy; and saith unto them, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death; tarry ye here, and watch." And He went forward a little and fell on the ground and prayed that, if it was possible, the hour might pass from him. And he said, "Abba, Father, all things are possible unto Thee; take away this cup from me; nevertheless, not what I will, but thou wilt." And He cometh, and findeth them sleeping, and saith unto Peter, "Simon, sleepest thou?" "Couldst not thou watch one hour?" "Watch ye and pray, lest ye enter into temptation. The spirit truly is ready, but the flesh is weak."—Mark 14:32-38.

Gethsemane.

Breathes there a man who claimeth not
  One lonely spot,
    His own Gethsemane,
Whither with his inmost pain
He fain
  Would weary plod,
Find the surcease that is known
In wind a-moan
  And sobbing sea,
Cry his sorrow hid of men,
And then—
    Touch hands with God.

—Edmund Leamy.

From Gethsemane.

All those who journey, soon or late,
Must pass within the garden's gate;
Must kneel alone in darkness there,
And battle with some fierce despair.
The purpose in Gethsemane.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

THE CROSS.

And so Pilate, willing to content the people, released Barabbas unto them, and delivered Jesus, when he had scourged Him, to be crucified." And they bring Him unto the place Golgotha, which is, being interpreted, 'The place of a skull.' And they gave Him to drink wine mingled with myrrh, but He received it not. And when they had crucified Him, they parted His garments, casting lots upon them what every man should take. And it was the third hour, and they crucified Him. And the superscription of His accusation was written over, The King of the Jews." —Mark 15:15, 22-26.

Calvary.

Friendless and faint, with martyred steps and slow,
Fain for the flesh, but for the spirit free,
Stung by the mob that came to see the show,
The Master toiled along to Calvary;
We gibed Him, as He went, with houndish glee,
Till His dim eyes for us did overflow;
We cursed His vengeless hands thrice wretchedly—
And this was nincteen hundred years ago.

But after nineteen hundred years the shame
Still clings, and we have not made good the loss
That outraged faith has entered in His name.
Ah, when shall come loves courage to be strong!
Tell me, O Lord,—tell me, O Lord, how long
Are we to keep Christ writhing on the cross!

—Edward Arlington Robinson.

There Is A Man On the Cross.

Whenever there is silence around me
By day or by night—
I am startled by a cry.
It came down from the cross—
The first time I heard it.
I went out and searched—
And found a man in the throes of crucifixion,
And I said, "I will take you down,"
And I tried to take the nails out of his feet.
Bue he said "Let them be
For I cannot be taken down
Until every man, every woman, and every child
Come together to take me down."
And I said, "But I cannot hear you cry.
What can I do?"
And he said, "Go about the world—
Tell everyone that you meet—
There is a man on the cross."

—Elizabeth Cheney.

EASTER.

And when the Sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary, the mother of James, and Salome, had brought sweet spices that they might come and anoint Him. And very early in the morning, the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun. And they said among themselves, "Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre?" And when they looked, they saw that the stone was rolled away: for it was very great. And entering into the sepulchre, they saw a young man sitting on the right side, clothed in a long white garment; and they were affrighted. And he saith unto them, "Be not affrighted: ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified: he is risen; he is not here; behold the place where they laid Him. But go your way, tell His disciples and Peter that He goeth before you into Galilee: there shall ye see Him, as He said unto you."—Mark 16:1-7.

An Easter Wish.

May the glad dawn
  Of Easter morn
Bring joy to thee.

May the calm eve
  Of Easter leave
A peace divine with thee.

May Easter night
  On thine heart write,
O Christ, I live for Thee!

HOW TO TAKE PART IN THE FELLOWSHIP AND WORK OF THE CHURCH.

Scripture: John 14:11-14.

If you have not already done so, your Christian Endeavor programs might be varied by having one evening devoted to a discussion led by the best person you can get; one meeting should be a well planned consecration meeting; another might be made up of songs and a short worship program; and the other the usual and regular with worship, hymns, and short talks. The suggestions on this page each week will be in accordance with this idea, but may be rearranged as your program committee likes.

Suggestions for this program—

Hymns: "The Church's One Foundation"; "Blest Be the Tie"; "I Am Happy in the Service of the King;" "Give of your Best to the Master"; "To the Work."

Scripture: Church is for teaching. Isa. 2:3. Church is for worship. Acts 2:42-47; Church is for evangelism. Acts 5:41-42; Church is for fellowship. Hebrews 10:25; Church is for encouragement. Acts 20:28-36; Church is for missions. Matt. 28:19.

Poetry:

"How Sweet the Sight."

How sweet, how heav'nly is the sight,
  When those that love the Lord
In one another's peace delight,
  And thus fulfill His word.

When each can feel his brother's sigh,
  And with him bear a part;
When sorrow flows from eye to eye,
  And joy from heart to heart.

When free from envy, scorn and pride,
  Our wishes all above,
Each can his brother's failings hide,
  And show a brothers' love.

When love, in one delightful stream,
  Thro' ev'ry bosom flows;
And union sweet, and dear esteem,
  In ev'ry action glows.

Love is a golden chain that binds
  The happy souls above,
And he's an heir of heav'n who finds
  His bosom glow with love.

—Joseph Swain.

Prayer: That God will show us things to do. Things which young people can do and are doing to aid their church program:

A boy of thirteen came to me and asked what he might do during the week before Easter to help the church. Are there jobs for which he is asking in your church not only the week preceding Easter but the year around?

The pastor is eager to have your assistance. You might help him with his sermons by presenting sketches, pantomimes, short playlets, etc., which help illustrate his topic. You could be a valuable aid to your pastor if he does much office work, or you would find real happiness in assisting him with his visitation work among shut-ins, the sick, the inactive, the careless and indifferent members. If you investigate, you will discover that the pastor of your church has an overflowing schedule and will welcome his young people as assistants.

Young people find opportunities for service in the church choir, in the Sunday school as teachers, pianist or as other officers. A number of young people in your community are unemployed which gives you an opportunity to plan wholesome activities so that they may have something to do. Would a weekly Bible study class be worthwhile in your church? Fine musical talent is found in most groups. Maybe there is the possibility of organizing an orchestra.

Does the attitude of your young people toward alcohol, peace, leisure time, the economic order, race relations, etc., strengthen or weaken the progress of your church program?

Consult with the leaders of your church and find their ideas as to what larger part you can take in the fellowship and work of the church.

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

THE FUTURE LIFE (Easter Lesson).

Lesson III—April 21, 1935.

Golden Text: "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth on me, though he die, yet shall he live."—John 11:25.

Lesson Text: Matthew 25:31-46; Mark 12:26-27; Luke 24:1-12; John 14:1-6; I Corinthians 15:3-20, 50-58; I Thes. 4:13-18; Revelations 22:1-5.

The future life is of universal interest and of practical importance. All peoples of all times have been interested in it. And the interpretation which men put on it determines in large measure the way men live. If tomorrow we die, then let us eat, drink and be merry. Belief in a future life is necessary to any satisfactory and satisfying evplanatien of the present life.

This lesson en the future life centers in the story of the resurrection of Jesus. This is as it shculd be. For although the resurrection of Jesus dces nct explain everything about the future life, it makes a tremendous and a fundamental contributien to it. One thing is certain: if Jesus Christ did not rise frcm the dead, there is no future life. If death had ultimate power over Him, there is no hope for us. If He is not alive, we shall never live. "If Christ be not risen from the dead," says Paul, well, if Christ be nct risen from the dead, then Christianity is a huge lie, life is meaningless, and Christ Himself was both deceived and a deceiver.

But Christ is risen from the dead. There is no better attested histcrical fact than that Jesus Christ rcse from the dead. And because He lives we too shall live. We may not know the how of the resurrectien or of the future life, but we can know the fact of it. That is the important thing.

They Thought He Was Dead.

Those women—the women were last at the Crcss and first at the tomb, an example of the love of women for Christ—came to that tomb to annoint a dead bcdy. It never occurred to them that Jesus was anything but dead. The most that they hcped was that they might have the privilege of performing a ministry of love to their beloved Leaders' dead body. Their only fear was that they would not be able to roll away the great stone that sealed the tomb, that they would not be able to perform their ministry of love to the bruised and broken body of their Lord.

This is a significant fact. If the story of the resurrection of Jesus were an invention, if it were a fraud on the part of the disciples, this verse would not be in the gospels. Indeed these words are an incidental and undesigned, but strong confirmatien of the reality of the resurrection.

But He Was Alive.

When they reached the tomb they found the great stone had already been rolled away. God had done it. Many of the things we fear most and worry abcut never happen. God does not take all the great stones out of our paths to our heart's desire, but when we walk in His ways, it is surprising how the way often opens up, how barriers are broken down.

And when they reached the tomb they found nct cnly that the stone had been rolled away; they found that the bcdy of their loved Lord was not in the tomb "They found not the body of the Lord Jesus." The tomb was empty. They could not understand it. But they knew it was a fact. They were perplexed, but they were posessed of their right minds. They were not putting on, they were not hysterical, they knew what they saw was true, even though they could not understand it. That bcdy which they had seen put in that tomb on Friday was not there; it had gone. Where or how, they did not know. But they did know it was gone.

As they stocd there in their perplexity two messengers of the spiritual world made it all clear to them. The tomb was empty because their Lord had risen frcm the dead. "He is not here, but is risen." And lest they should think that it was all a dream, these men in white reminded them that, long before it came to pass, their Lord had predicted that this should ccme to pass. "The Scn of Man must be delivered up into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and the third day rise again." And then they remembered. It all came back to them with new meaning and power. Of course it was true. They could see now that it was the only way in which the thing could turn out.

"He is alive"—that was the heart of the Easter message, on that first Easter Sunday. It is the heart of the Easter Message on this Easter Sunday. Jesus Christ is more than a historic character; He is a living Person. And because He lives we too shall live. That is good news. That is the gospel.

So They Told Others.

The first thing they did after thev knew that Christ was alive was to tell others. They shared their experience with others. It is significant that the great Christmas festivals have the missionary message and motive at their heart. When Jesus was born the angel said it was "good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people" and when Christ rose from the dead His first command was to "tell others." The special Easter Offering for Missions is not something tacked on to cur Christian life; it is an expression of the essence of the Christian observance of Easter.

But They Did Not Believe.

"They disbelieved them." Who disbelieved them? Not the scribes and priests and Roman soldiers, but the apostles themselves. Here again is striking evidence that Jesus rose from the dead. The apostles were not expecting Him to rise from the dead. Indeed they accepted it as a fact only after thev had had an actual experience with the living Christ. There is no explanation of the change in the apostles, or for the Christian Church itself, apart from the historic fact that Jesus Christ came alive out of the tomb. It was because the apostles knew it was true that they went out to give their lives for Him.

But Peter Was Willing to Know the Truth.

Peter was among those that disbelieved. But on scber reflection he thought that there might be something to the matter after all. And when he made an honest investigation he too received evidence that his Lord had risen frcm the dead. Alas for those people who because they cannot understand everything in religion, have a closed mind in the matter. The spirit of honest inquiry, the docile mind, the willingness to learn, the willingness to follow the truth wherever it leads one —all these are indispensable factors in religicus knowledge and experience. "He that doeth the truth cometh to the light," said Jesus.

The Future Life.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

"WHAT HAS CHRISTIANITY DONE?"

"I thank my God always on your behalf, for the grace of God which is given you by Jesus Christ; that in everything ye are enriched by Him, and in all utterance and in all knowledge; even as the testimony of Christ was confirmed in you." —I Cor. 1:4-7.

There are some people who believe that Christianity has acomplished nothing. It is a question often arising. Suppose you were called upon to name a few definite and concrete things Christianity has done. What would you say? The following is quoted from Gaius Glen Atkin's new book, "Preaching and the Mind of Today," p. 63.

"Christianity has answered three questions: Whence, Whither and Why. It has furnished an individual ethic of a godly, righteous and sober life. It has produced generations of good men and women, charitable, devout, good home makers and good neighbors. It has comforted the sorrowing and inspired the downcast. It has helped the hard-beset to reconcile the experiences of life with their faith and an all-powerful and good God and thus, having delivered their souls, to go on bravely and hopefully, as they could not otherwise have done. It has steadily before us the vision of a kinder, juster human order, an ideal always unrealized and always unescapable. It has helped the dying to see through the shadows gathering about them, a light from beyond the hills of time. It has made earthly farewells with the hope of immortal reunion."

Prayer—Dear Lord, God of our souls, we pray for the gift to see things as they are and not as they appear to be. And we pray for the spirit to live as builders of Thy kingdom on earth.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

"WHERE HAPPINESS DWELLS."

"He that giveth heed to the word of the Lord shall find good; and who so trusteth in the Lord, happy is he."—Prov. 16:20.

"Nobody knows where happiness dwells
Or how to snare it by charms or spells;
It can fly like a lark; it can bud like a rose;
But the secret of happiness nobody knows.

"This much is true; it will not depart
From the way of a tender and loving heart;
It can veer like the wind, and it can turn like the tide,
But in the souls that have faith it will still abide."

Prayer—O Lord, teach us to bear all loss with patience and contentment. Teach us to endure hardship with smiling courage for love's own sake, and may every sacrifice be but a price we pay for life's richest blessings. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD."

"Ye are the light of the world."—Matt. 5:14.

Christ said, "I am the light of the world," and then to His followers He declared them to be the light, and that He was sending them forth with His light to show the way of life to the world. This it is, His children are that light. If we fail to carry that light on for Him, the world will fail to find its way. "Let your light so shine," says He, "that men may see your good works and glorify the Father which is in heaven."

"Because the road was steep and long,
And through a dark and lonely land,
God set upon my lips a song,
And put a lantern in my hand.

"Through miles on weary miles of night,
That stretch relentless on my way,
My lantern burns serene and white
An unexhausted cup of day.

"O golden lights and lights like wine,
How dim your boasted splendors are.
Behold this little lamp of mine;
It is more starlike than a star."

Prayer—Our Father give us the courage and the nerve to take up the torch of Christian love and to hold it high, bearing it on persistently and undismayed. Should we fail, or fall, or should our feet slip back, help us to rise again with faith and fortitude, and never slacken our efforts to keep on. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

"APOLOGIZING TO GOD."

"Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."—II Timothy 2:15.

My Goals.

"A little braver when the skies are gray,
A little stronger when the road seems long,
A little more of patience through the day,
And not so quick to magnify a wrong.

"A little kinder both of thought and deed,
A little gentler to the old and weak,
Swifter to sense another's pressing need,
And not so swift the hurtful phrase to speak.

"These are my goals—not flung beyond my power,
Not dreams of glory, beautiful, but vain,
Not the great heights where buds of genius flower,
But simple splendors which I ought to gain.

"There I can do and be from day to day,
Along the humble pathway where I plod,
So that at last when I am called away
I need not make apologies to God."

—Edgar Guest.

Prayer—Our Father, we remember that Thou hast said, "Be Thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life." It is that crown we would obtain. Give us the inspiration of love, and the power of faithfulness that there may be nothing wanting. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

"THE WORLD'S DARKEST HOURS."

"Now from the sixth hour there was darkness over all the land unto the ninth hour."—Matt. 27:45.

And they crucified our Lord. They took "The light of the world" and put it on Calvary, as they thought, to put it out forever. That deed was so dark, that midnight fell upon the earth. The light that filled the world was blotted out for three hours, and that was the world's darkest hour. Not only was the sun blotted out for three hours, but darkness blackened the heart of man. They that sat in darkness and saw a great light when Christ came and ministered to them, again were thrown into darkness and confusion and gave up the ghost.

But down through the ages comes a gleam from the top of that cross, a strange light that reveals the world's greatest message, "Jesus of Nazareth the King of the Jews." And although darkness of sin confuses the hearts of man still, never at any time has there been so much light, like the gleam of that inscription, shining in the world. Against every dark deed there is the gleam of righteousness, justice and peace, rising in outrage against the blackness of sin. Against the darkness of class distinctions there shines the light of brotherhood. Men of higher rank are discovering that there are real men of lower rank. Men of all ranks are discovering one another. The chasm between is reducing and filling in with comradeship, understanding and good will. This is what Jesus Christ lived for, died for and arose again for that men might be brothers and that all might be children of God.

Prayer—Our Father, as the sun shines upon a dark and dripping earth shine then in our souls and give us light, and life and salvation. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

"SMUG SATISFACTION."

"So they went, and made the sepulchre sure, sealing the stone and setting a watch" (Matt. 27:66), as if to say, "There, that is the end of you, thou deceiver. No longer will we be bothered with your deceptions and confusions."

On that night the soldiers stood guard to see that nothing happened, and everybody else probably went to bed and slept (if they could) the sleep of one having done his work well.

But who has ever been able to hold back the sun, or to stop the earth in its annual orbit around the sun? No more could they stop the resurrection and the rise of the Son of God. The darkness of man's heart was but for a space of two days, and then a new life springs up like the glory of blossom-time in spring, and a new hope of heaven siezed their hearts and in a way never to grow dim again. "In Him is life" and His life is our light, now and forever.

Prayer—Our Father in heaven, we are dark souls ourselves. We have fallen short of the glory of Thy salvation. We are sinners and there is no good in us. O Thou most High God, forgive us, come Thou into our souls and give unto us the fulness of the resurrection life. Forbid that we shall ever stray from Thee. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

"OUR RESURRECTION PROMISE."

"For our citizenship is in heaven;—that it (our vile body) may be conformed to the body of His glory, according to the working whereby He is able to subject all things unto himself."—Phil. 3:20-21.

In Christ's resurrection we have the promise of our own resurrection. This promise is for each simple soul which feels and enjoys its own life as the most precious possession in the world. Although one looks forward with sadness to losing life, this promise assures him that this precious life will not be lost, and that in due time, tho he lose it, it shall be restored again, and forever. This hath He said, who is the resurrection and the life.

It was not merely bodily death that Jesus conquered. He conquered spiritual death, so that at

MONEY FOR THE MISSIONARY MOVEMENT.

By John G. Truitt.

"Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of Hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." Mal. 3:10.

If every Christian would obey the command of God, and give one-tenth back to him there would be money for the Missionary movement. God did not leave so precious a thing as the Gospel without means for its movement across the continents, and across the centuries. Just as He has provided soil for the seed, and air for the wing of the bird, so also has He provided a vehicle for the carrying out of His every command. He has not intended that the world should live, so much of it, in superstition and fear and ignorance of Him for so long a time. He has provided a much better way.

To the command to give of the first fruits, the best of the flock, a tithe of all that one comes into possession of, He has added the approval of the loving Christ, and the proposition of "hilarious," joyous, "freely" giving, as Christians, above and beyond the "letter of the law." I suppose one who did not love God, or believe in Jesus, or join in with the great program of Christian righteousness would find it a pretty tiresome thing to give a tenth of all his earnings to God. I suppose he would. I cannot say from experience, for while I have tried tithing, I have never known the day when I did not believe in God, nor give my heartfelt assent to the program of the Gospel. But for one who loves God, who wants to help with all his might the program of righteousness and delights to see Jesus Christ victorious in the community, the state, nation, and world, it is a genuine joy to give a tithe and to add the "offerings" also.

And show me a man or woman, a boy or girl, who gladly gives a tenth to the Lord and I shall show you one who is a happy Christian, a blessing to his family, his church, and every worthy movement in his community. There may be exceptions to this rule, but personally I do not know a single one. I know many tithers. Thank God for them in this noble church. The tithers do not shy from the call of the church, and they help in every way they can to make the church's program a pleasure and not a drudgery. It is a joy for them to lay their gifts upon the altar, and an inspiration to all who see them do so.

But I was going to make a hasty study of this message of God through his kingly prophet Malachi. There are just four brief chapters in this book. And it opens with the prettiest words in the world: "I have loved you, saith the Lord." So I want to suggest that to Israel God is saying, "Come on now, let us get together on the basis of my love for you; my having chosen you; and having greatly blessed you, and awake the cause of righteousness in your nation." He continues by saying, "A son honoreth His Father, and a servant his master." (v. 6.) It is as though he is pleading with his chosen people to give him only the love due him, to remember his relationship to them. I delight to think that he taught them through Malachi that beautiful name, "Father." Jesus found that name in the Old Testament. He was the Son, and naturally knew it, but He could find precedent for teaching the Fatherhood to His own disciples.

Through Malachi God is saying: "Just know I have loved you (1:1), and just remember that to you I am as a father (1:6), and there will be meat in my storehouse, and money for the movement of righteousness across the earth." He adds (1:11), "For, from the rising of the sun even unto the going down of the same, my name shall be great among the nations; and in every place incense shall be offered in my name, and a pure offering; for my name shall be great among the heathen, saith the Lord of hosts." My name shall not be a joke, a by-word, a travesty,—instead of the name "Christian" being laughed at and despised it shall be great, and honored, and loved.

In the first verse of the second chapter I hear the God of judgment speaking to the leaders of His people: (2:1) "And now, O priests, this commandment is unto you, if ye will not hear, and if you will not lay it to heart, to give glory unto my name, saith the Lord of hosts, I will even send a curse upon you, and I will curse your blessings (benedictions)." I fear God too much to fail to lay this burden of supporting the Christian Gospel upon every Christian in my congregation. Not only that, my friends, but I must set an example for others in tithing as well as other matters.

Jesus had precedent for driving the leaders of all Israel out of the temple. Here ringing down upon the ears of all Israel is God's message to the priest, his messengers, declaring plainly unto them that they are not to fear men, but God; that they are not to stand in the way of his program, but to lead it; that they are to get on, or out! Our faithful pastors in our modern day are driven on to read leadership by tithers in their congregations who demand the preaching of the whole gospel, and who expect the practice of it in their preachers. More than one person in this church has actually asked me to preach on this message in Malachi. They have declared to me that they find it such a joy, and such a blessing, and such a necessity that they wish others to feel the goodness and grace of it. O, may the ministers of our people know that God blesses the church and the individual who takes God at His word on this matter of tithing. "Try me," He says.

In the quiet of my study I saw this verse in Malachi (2:17), "Ye have wearied the Lord with your words," and I paused, and I paused. "Ye have wearied the Lord with your words." With what words? Why the pussy-footing compromising words placating the people who profess one thing and practice another? Please God, I have tried to preach the Gospel sincerely, and honestly, and humbly, and I believe my fellow pastors do also, but I tell you we can afford to hear God speaking His warning to us in these stirring days when the gifts of the people are falling off by the millions for the Missionary movement: Is Jesus still the Christian's Lord? Are His commands to be obeyed? Has He changed? Is He not the same yesterday, today and forever? Is His Gospel too weak for the world's needs? Has it lost its power? More millions are being spent for other things,—there are more millions than ever before. Why do gifts for Missions fall off? They have taken a turn upward in other communions? Why not in ours? Christ has said, "Go ye into all the world," and He will not be satisfied with 'words.' "Ye have wearied the Lord with your words." Let us put two things together for our Easter program in our church: New members for the church, and new money for Missions. Let us set a new day into our records!

Christian Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

Every year since I have been at the Christian Orphanage, along the latter part of the month of March, when we generally have a few days of real warm weather, the little children have teased me no little to let them go barefooted. They would put up a fine argument that their feet were burning and they just could not keep their shoe on. To have some definite time set when they could go without shoes, we made it a rule that when they could find some dog-wood blossoms wide open we would let them go without shoes. Dog-wood blossoms in this section in normal seasons blossom in between the first and tenth of April. This year we have had so much cold and wet weather although the dog-wood are in bloom, we have not had a single request from any of the children to take off their shoes. One year out of nineteen.

Baseball season is here. Every little boy in the grades is now interested in baseball. If you want to have some real fun and see a game of ball you really will enjoy, you ought to happen along sometime when they are having a game. It is really amusing to watch them when they are enthused and all worked up to a high pitch of excitement. To watch the plays they make and the bases they steal and the mistakes they make, and the fly balls they knock makes one forget all the troubles they ever had. They take the knocks they get without flinching. Last week one little boy got a pretty hard knock on his forehead and raised a very ugly knot; but he kept on playing! The little fellows do need a mask, bats, balls and mits. What baseball fan would like to make all the little boys happy by supplying them?

CONGREGATIONAL-CHRISTIAN CHURCHES.

The United Church of Winston-Salem is one of approximately 24,330 Congregational-Christian Churches in thirty countries of the world, with a membership of approximately 2,330,750 members. Mission work is carried on in its world parish of more than 60 millions of people, living under 12 flags.

The Congregational Churches were first organized in England in the 16th Century, and Congregationalism sailed to America in the Mayflower as the Church of the Pilgrim Fathers. The Christian Church originated simultaneously in several parts of the United States in the latter part of the 18th Century. Similar spirit and ideals of these two denominations resulted in the merger of the two groups into one fellowship in 1929-31.

The Congregational and Christian Churches are bodies of self-governing Christian believers, associated together in the spirit of Christ for the purpose of bringing His Kingdom into the hearts of men and women. The individual who seeks membership in this Church is asked simply: First, To make Christian character the test of his right to fellowship and Church membership; Second, To make the Bible his rule of faith and life; Third, To exercise for himself, and accord to others, the right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience in all of his Church relationships.—Sunday Bulletin United Church, Winston-Salem.

Henry Ward Beecher, on a very cold day, stopped to buy a newspaper from a ragged youngster who stood shivering on a corner. "Poor little fellow," he said, "aren't you cold standing here?" The boy looked up with a smile and said, "I was, sir—before you passed."

Chapter 3:1: "And the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple." We need him. How our hearts yearn for Him. Our congregations should be larger. Our members should be better. Our church should be more effective. Yes, indeed, we need the "Lord to come to our temple." We all need Him. He will come if we carry His message of peace and pardon and love to the ends of the earth. To do less than that we are robbing ourselves of God, and robbing our church of its power. The church that honestly enters into its Missionary program will prospect better in all its local program. Religion is something we lose by holding, and keep by giving it to others. We must propagate the Christian religion to fully possess it. There is no middle ground. And the means, or money for propagating it will be forthcoming if we follow God's instructions in Malachi 3:10: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

And (4:2), "Unto you that fear my names shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in His wings." Did you need an outline for this sermon? Here it is: God's message; God's messengers; God's means for propagating that message. May we cherish his message of love: "I have loved you; may we pattern after God's great Messenger, Jesus; and may we gladly give our means for the spread of that message.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

which Jesus refers in the immortal fourteenth chapter of John to the future life. It is all rooted and grounded in faith in God and in faith in Christ. He that believes that God is a loving heavenly Father, that because we are the children of God He will not suffer us to be snuffed out at the end, that life has infinite but unrealized capacities here, that personality is sacred—he that believes these things is sure of eternal life. He may not know the how of it, but he knows the fact of it.

Wherefore.

Because we are creatures of eternity, because we have eternal life through Jesus Christ, because we shall live, let us not live for time alone, let us be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch we know that our labor is not in vain in the Lord.

And to you who have lost loved ones in Christ, remember that He who raised up Jesus from the dead, will also bring those who died in Him again with Him. Wherefore comfort your hearts.

THE FAMILY ALTAR.

last life would be swallowed up not in life but in victory. As Christ arose, so a defeated soul may rise to victory, if only in Him it fights on and never quits, or makes no covenant with sin or death.

"Hail garden of confident hope!
Where sweet seeds are quickening in darkness and cold;
For how sweet and how young will they be
When they pierce through the mould.
Balm, Myrtle and heliotrope
There watch and there wait out of sight for their Sun;
While the Sun, which they see not, doth see
Each and all, one by one."

Prayer—Our Father, we would rise unto that higher and more glorious life that is greatest and most beautiful, unto Him in the heavens. Give unto us that vision, and Thy resurrection strength forever.—Amen.

BARNES.

Whereas, Mrs. Eleanor Watkins Barnes departed this life on February 24, 1935, at her home in Suffolk, Va., and

Whereas she was a faithful member of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Suffolk Christian Church, and

Whereas, we desire to record our sincere appreciation of her devoted Christian life and faithful service in our midst therefore be it resolved:

First. That we bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father who doeth all things well;

Second. That in the death of this beloved member our Society has sustained a great loss;

Third. That we cherish her memory in our hearts and extend to the bereaved family sympathy in their great sorrow;

Fourth. That a copy of these resolutions be seut to the bereaved family, and a copy be forwarded to the Christian Sun for publication.

MRS. W. K. ANDREWS,
MRS. W. H. YATES,
Committee.

ANDERSON.

William Allen Anderson, the eldest son of Brother J. W. and Sister Hester Sterling Anderson was born August 19, 1925, and died February 10, 1935. Aged nine years, five months and twenty-two days.

Wellford was an unusually bright and attractive child, obedient to parents at home aud to teachers at school. He was sick for six weeks, beginning with an attack of influenza on January 7th and followed by whooping-cough and pneumonia. Everything was done by loving parents, neighbors and doctors, that was possible, but it was the Lord's will to take him to the heavenly home.

Two younger brothers, Thomas and Curtis survive. While Brother and Sister Anderson are deeply grieved over the taking from the home of their son, they sorrow not as those who have no hope. Both are members of Liberty Christian Church.

The funeral and burial was at Ellis' Creek Baptist Church, conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Cabiness of the Baptist Church.

Silver Bricks This Time.—

Anent the recent rise in the price of silver, the following story from a contemporary may be interesting: "Centuries ago, in the great Mexican silver camps, adobe bricks were made out of the sludge of the old 'patios' where the metal was precipitated by the crude methods of the day. Houses and huts were built of those sun-dried bricks. Today, with silver soaring, it is becoming profitable to tear down the old houses, extract the silver. Sometimes a single hovel yields 1,000 pesos.

The Hardest Artificial Substance.—

A new material made by combining the rare metal, boron and ordinary carbon, is said to be the hardest thing known, diamonds alone excepted. This Boron carbid, as it is called, will cut practically anything with which it is brought in contact. It is not affected by even the strongest acids or alkalies; its expansion under the influence of temperature is only a little more than half of that of steel; it is able to withstand a compression of fifty tons to the square inch, or the equivalent of over 6,000 atmospheres. Besides this it will withstand heat which would entirely consume diamonds, and is lighter even than aluminum.

Value of Exchange Seats Declines.—

Recently a seat in the New York Stock Exchange changed hands for the sum of $65,000, this being the record low since 1919. This price reflected not only the low state to which the exchange has fallen but the seeming despondency as to future operations. Stocks themselves have not declined in a much greater ratio, for only six years ago seats reached their peak value when one was sold for $625,000. When it is considered, however, that since that date of the 1929 sale, there was an increase in the number of seats of one-fourth, the peak price of the present seats was really $500,000. The present number of memberships in the exchange is 1,375.

Science and Immortality.—

Replying to the question, "Does science deny the immortality of the soul?" the Serbian herdsboy who became the American scientist, Michael Pupin, has this to say: "Science gives us plenty of ground for intelligent hope that our physical life is only a stage in the existence of the soul. The law of continuity and the general scientific view of the universe tend to strengthen our belief that the soul goes on existing and developing after death. . . The soul of man is the highest product of God's creative handiwork. Now, after God has spent untold time in creating man and endowing him with a soul, which is the reflection of his image, is it reasonable to suppose that man lives here on earth for a brief span and then is extinguished by death? That the soul perishes with the physical body? That it existed in vain?"

How the Relief Billions Are Divided.—

Although under the provisions of the $4-billion relief bill which Congress has just passed, the President may shift funds from one phase to another, it is possible that the divisions will run somewhat after this fashion: Highways and grade crossing elimination, $800-million; rural rehabilitation, $300-million; reclamation and irrigation, $200-million; rural electrification, $100-million; housing projects, $450-million; and so-called white collar projects, $300-million. Besides the above, it is estimated that the Civilian Conservation Corps will require $600-million, and forestation, prevention of soil erosion, flood control, and river and harbor work, will take $350-million. $900-million more will go to State, county and municipality waterworks, sewerage disposal plants and power plants, etc. Of these amounts it is estimated that $1,645-millions will go directly to labor in the form of payrolls, while $2,355-millions will be spent for materials, machinery, transportation, etc., and thus ultimately a large part of this will reach the wage-earner's pocket.

Stricken Formosa.—

About dawn of Easter Sunday, Formosa, the beautiful island off the southern coast of China, was stricken by one of the most disastrous earthquakes of modern times. This island was ceded to Japan by China in 1895, and the official language there is Japanese, though Chinese is the most spoken. While only one-third the size of the State of Virginia, it holds half again as many souls. First reports placed property damage at around $28,000,000, but later reports report a destruction of wealth running well toward $100,000,000. Three thousand, one hundred and fifty-two persons have been reported killed, while it is estimated that as many as 20,000 have been rendered homeless. Most of the victims are native Formosans. The assistance of the United States Navy was immediately offered to Japan, but its help was declined by the Japanese authorities "with sincere thanks." This earthquake calls to mind another one suffered by Nippon in 1923, when nearly a billion dollars worth of property was destroyed and death was brought to over 100,000 persons.

A Pipeless Electric Organ.—

What is seemingly impossible, a "pipe" organ without pipes, is reported in the current issue of Literary Digest. It says: "Musicians . . . last week examined the first technically perfect electric pipeless-organ, the invention of Laurens Hammond, of Chicago. Smaller than a piano, the instrument has a two-manual console, with pedal clavier and a power cabinet. . . There are no reeds, or other vibrating parts, and the instrument requires no air-system." We are told that the variety of tone is almost infinite, it being possible to duplicate not only the basic diapason tones of the pipe organ, but the flute-pipes, the strings and the reeds as well. The tones originate in an electric tone generator, and are determined by a "tone-wheel" which passes a fixed magnet, thus setting up electrical impulses in the magnet. We again quote: "Thus, if 440 high spots (on the tone wheel) pass the magnet extremity in a second, 440 corresponding impulses are set up, (and) if head phones were connected to the terminals of the coil, a musical tone would be heard: the audible for international standard 'A' pitch, which is 440 vibrations a second. The speed of the wheel determines the pitch of the musical note. Another wheel with a different number of high spots, revolving at the same speed, would change the pitch. In the generator unit of this organ there are ninety-one tone generating elements, each supplying a different pitch."

How Not to Prevent War.—

There is no doubt of the sincerity of those Senators and Congressmen who are undertaking to have passed the bills which will "take the profit out of war." Anyone who opposes them is suspected of motives that are not the best, and yet, an unbiased study of these bills will probably bring the conclusion that they are dangerous—that rather than accomplishing the object for which they are intended and for which every true American wishes, they actually increase the possibility of our participation in war. These bills do much to discourage industries that are necessary to our national defense. And while the sentimentalist might applaud this, Business Week points out that: "To cripple the United States as a power in the councils of the world is not to work for peace." We quote further: "Once our voice becomes feeble, it need not be heeded. When and where we can now speak for peace, we can then be ignored contemptuously. But even more important than that, these bills would give a war party complete assurance that if it plunged into war, it would have immediate and absolute control of all our man power, all of our industry, all of our commerce. . . These bills create an immediate and total dictatorship, a war machine ready to be seized by any reckless hand. . . It is an ungrateful and distasteful task to state these things. We loathe war and the things that make toward war, but the Nye and McSwain bills have not found a solution. Nor has anyone else found a short-cut to world peace. The only road seems to be the long and little-traveled one of genuine honesty, fairness, and good neighborliness among the nations."

NOTES-PERSONALS

News from the Churches.

The many friends of Dr. C. H. Rowland will learn with pleasure that he has greatly improved in health, and the past week returned to his home in Greensboro, N. C.

Practice also is the proper evidence of Christian fortitude. The trial of a good soldier is not in the chimney corner, but in the field of battle.—Jonathan Edwards.

When the next issue of The Sun reaches its readers, the Southeast Convention will have become history. What kind of history will depend upon you and you and you. Are you going to do your part to make it a success?

Would you like to have some news from the other churches of the convention? Then possibly they are just as anxious to hear from your church. If there is no time to write a letter, at least send a post card with a note on it for this column.

Friends of Dr. C. C. Ryan, who is now serving in Ohio, but was for several years in Norfolk and Richmond, will learn with pleasure that he expects to spent a few days during the next week in Eastern Virginia. Rev. J. E. McCauley of the Richmond Church announced last Sunday that he was expecting Dr. Ryan to fill his pulpit on Sunday the 28th.

We are re-running the program of the Southeast Convention this week. There are possibly some who did not read it last week, or may want an extra copy. A salesman who lives in Raleigh was in the office of The Sun last week and saw this program. He said that he had intended being in the southeastern part of North Carolina during the week of the first, but that he was going to stay at home and attend at least some of the convention sessions. If it is good enough for an "outsider" to cancel business engagements so that he can be there, it should certainly be good enough to cause our own constituency to attend.

Sun readers will learn from Dr. Atkinson's Editorial Correspondence in this issue that he has, or expects shortly to return to Elon College. Naturally he will again take over his full duties as Editor of The Christian Sun. The managing editor wishes at this time to extend his sincere thanks to those who have contributed editorial matter and in other ways assisted him while Dr. Atkinson has been in Florida. Especially are thanks due Dr. Smith, who handled the editorial department so efficiently during the busy "Educational Period," which included the months of January and February. We have attempted to give our readers the best paper possible, but we welcome Dr. Atkinson back to his desk, and we hope for him a continuance of his new found health.

OFFICIAL NOTICE.

Official notice is hereby given of the regular biennial session of the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches with the United Church at Raleigh, N. C., Tuesday, April 30th—Thursday, May 2nd. The Convention will be convened at 2 P. M. Tuesday afternoon, April 30th.

Jas. H. Lightbourne. Pres.

ALL ROADS LEAD TO RALEIGH.

All roads here in the Southland during the days of Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, April 30th—May 2nd, will lead to Raleigh for us Congregationalists and Christians, for in Raleigh our Southeast Convention will be in session. And what a program Rev. F. C. Lester and his Committee have provided for us. It is not every month in the year or even every year when we can have with us on the same prorgam men like Dr. S. Parkes Cadman and Dr. Dan Poling; a missionary on furlough like Dr. G. F. Shepherd, of whom Dr. Scotford writes, "Probably the most effective missionary at large in America today;" secretaries like Miss Lucy Eldredge and Doctors Halliday and Kedzie and University professors like Drs. Arthus E. Holt and Shelton H. Smith. And the others who will appear on our program have been carefully chosen and each will have a vital message for the occasion. Let us be there with every section of our Southeast area represented and the sections contiguous to Raleigh in large numbers. And let us be there with a unity of enthusiasm and purpose.

The subjects to be presented and discussed are all timely and vital and several are the ones with which the Church today is at death grips. What a treat it will be to sit at the feet of Dr. Cadman and discuss with him the message of the ministry for today. What an opportunity to think together with Dr. Holt concerning the Church in action. And what a privilege to sit under the addresses of men like Dr. Shepherd and Dr. Poling.

And I look forward to devotional periods under the leadership of Dr. Truitt, Dr. Clark, and Dr. Harrell, and to making an address or so myself when I can seize the opportunity from some of my brethren. Let us be there,—laity and ministry.

A Member of the Southern Convention.

CHURCH ATTENDANCE.

With the increased attendance at Sunday school there has not been a corresponding increase in church attendance. This is deplorable and is bringing pain to some of our Sunday school teachers. Good as the Church school may be, it never can, nor was it ever intended to, take the place of the morning worship. Someone has said, "Whether you will or no, your attitude toward the Sunday morning service indicates your attitude towards Christ's influence in your community."

God, Himself, planned the frequency of meeting weekly, and has given us a day for it—Sunday. On Sunday morning, you should go to Church with one motive only, as an act of worship, not caring specially what you are going to hear, or whom you are going to see: going to satisfy your conscience toward God: doing it for Christ.

The invention of printing, so that people can stay at home and read about Christ (if indeed they do); the coming of the radio so that one can sit at home and listen to sermons—these will never do away with the need of the church. It is God's plan that His people should assemble together at the appointed hour and place to honor Christ. If you are indifferent you are hurting Him and setting a poor example; if you are faithful, you are helping Him and testifying for Him.

What a difference it would make if we were all to pledge ourselves—unless detained by sickness or necessary work, "As long as I live, wherever I may be, I will go to church on Sunday morning." If you are not a regular attendant, will you not make this resolve? It will make a great difference in the remainder of your life.—From Greensboro Church Bulletin.

ANTIOCH AND NEW HOPE (ALABAMA).

I desire to use the pages of The Sun to inform any of its readers who may be interested concerning important services at the Antioch and New Hope Churches.

The Antioch Church will hold its Memorial Services on the Saturday before the second Sunday in May. This has been the regular time for holding these services during a large number of years. This church has changed its day for regular preaching services, but the day for the Memorial Services will remain unchanged. The pastor will preach in the morning, and Rev. Jesse Dollar will preach in the afternoon.

The New Hope Church is planning for a great service on the fourth Sunday of May. The church has held its Memorial Services on this day for a very long time. The day is made especially significant this year by the addition of a Service of Dedication. As the readers of The Sun have already been informed, the church building at New Hope burned in February of 1934. A new building has been erected and equipped with the necessary furniture, and is now ready for dedication entirely free from debt. The Memorial Service will be held at 11:00 A. M., and the Dedicatory Service at 2:00 P. M. The pastor will preach in the morning and the Dedicatory Sermon will be preached by the Rev. G. D. Hunt of Lanett. Brother Hunt served as pastor of this church for more than twenty years.

A cordial invitation is extended to all who can find it possible to attend these services.

A. R. Van Cleave, Pastor.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To the Young People of the Congregational and Christian Churches in the Western North Carolina Christian Conference Area:

On Sunday, May 5th, there will be a Youth Fellowship Rally with Miss Lucy M. Eldredge as the guest leader and speaker. All young people attending are requested to be present for the morning worship service, a service which we hope will be conducted by the pastor of the host church. You are also requested to bring picnic-lunch. The entertaining church will provide part of the dinner.

In the afternoon there will be a reorganization of our Fellowship Congress, Discussion groups, Worship and an address by Miss Eldredge.

The church at which the Rally will be held will be announced in next week's Sun and we hope from the pulpits of your churches and the platforms of your Sunday Schools.

Miss Lillie Horne, Pres.

IMMORTALITY.

Apple tree with blossoms blowing,
I'm a prisoner to thy charms that be;
Easing thou ceaseless worry of the heart,
Sounding depths of eternity.
Thy blossoms falling, a whispered breath
At my feet on this greed sod;
Resembling smiles of a little child
Curved and fashioned by God.
So when I quit this tent of flesh
Where the I of me now abides;
May thy beauty hold me close
As the I of me in silence rides
Grey horses of the morn;
Breasting fog to meet the dawning
Without fear to see the land ahead,
O'er hills of mist to eternal morning.

A FRIEND OF ELON.

There may be those who are unfriendly toward the college, and occasionally we find one who is out-and-out its enemy; but, even so, Elon College does have a host of friends. There are many in the church who love it and who are willing to sacrifice for its interest who would, if given an opportunity, make a contribution for its support. The following letter was received in the mail April 16th:

Rev. L. E. Smith,
Elon College, N. C.
Dear Sir:

As our pastor has not given us an opportunity to make an offering for Elon, I wish to send my little offering.

Enclosed find $5.00. Please give credit to ———— Church.

The name, address, and church of this letter are withheld. I wonder how many churches there are in the Convention that have not had the college presented, whose members have not been given an opportunity to make a contribution for the support of the school? The pastors who serve the churches of the Convention can easily answer this question. There are many, of course, who would not give if they had an opportunity, but there are some who are devoted and loyal to the enterprises of the church who would give if given the opportunity. L. E. Smith.

A Story for the Children

TIMMY TINKER'S GONDOLA.

Essa was always happy to visit her cousin Margaret. Essa lived in a little cottage on a cove on the west coast of Shetland, but Margaret lived in the capital, Lerwick, in one of those stone houses built cut into the water so that the waves lay around three sides of it, and if you wish to go out any way except by the front door, you have to leave by a window and jump into a boat. Of course nobody ever did leave that way, but Margaret's mother had known storms in which the waves had broken through the dining-room window and swept the dishes from the table.

But this day the sea was calm and sparkling, with a very high tide as there often is in the springtime. The air was warm and the sky a radiant blue seldom seen in those foggy islands. The little girls thought it great fun to watch the waves just a little way beneath the window ledge and they promised to be careful and not lean out while their mothers went to the stores to do some shopping.

"When you look down," said Essa, "it makes you feel as if you were in a magic house floating out to sea."

"It makes me think of Venice," said Margaret, who was a year older. "Have you studied about Venice in geography?"

Essa shook her head doubtfully.

"Then I'll tell you," continued Margaret. "It's a place where all the streets are water. They call them canals, and if you want to go to the store to get an ice cream cone you have to get into a boat to do it."

"I don't believe my father would like that," said Essa. "Wouldn't it be funny to go in a boat to tend the sheep or cut the peat?"

"It's different in Venice," explained Margaret. "They go in gondolas, and there's a gondolier who has a big oar, and they sing in the moonlight and there's a white dove flying around. See, here's a picture."

"I think sea-gulls are just as good as doves," replied Essa loyally, "and Venice can't be any prettier than Lerwick is today. Oh, Margaret, look! What is that coming toward us?"

True enough, only a few yards away, a long flat object was bobbing on the waves, and soon it was almost beneath the window.

"I'll find the old boat-hook,' said Margaret, "and then we can reach it without leaning out."

"Hurry, it's coming faster," called Essa after her, but in a moment Margaret was back, and safely drew out the treasure from the sea. It proved to be a boat—evidently once the plaything of some child in a far-off land—for Shetland children do not have such toys—with painted keel and varnished deck and a stub of a mast remaining, despite its perilous journey.

"You know," said Essa, laughing in glee, "it is shaped like the gondola in the picture. Wouldn't it be fun to put someone in it and let it drift to shore?"

"Nancy might fall out and get wet," said Margaret, glancing at her doll reposing in the rocking chair. "But there's Timmy Tinker," and she produced the jolliest little fellow made from a clothes-pin. He had wide-open eyes and a merry mouth painted on his round head, and he wore a little knitted jacket and blue trousers.

"Just the person for a boat ride," continued Margaret, "and if he falls out he knows how to swim. Only he might take a notion to float and go off in the wrong direction, so I guess I'll tie him in."

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

LIFE AT ITS BEST.

(Editorial Correspondence.)

Fla. Sanitarium,
Orlando, Fla., April 21st.

Ralph Waldo Emerson wrote truly when he said, "There is compensation in life, in every condition and circumstance." One finds it even so. For in a hospital or sanitarium one sees life, not at its weakest or worst, but at its strongest and best. It is easy to be busy and going about one's daily toil in health and strength. That is both easy and delightful. But to face bare idleness, to lie down and let the world go by—that is not easy. And yet during these nearly four months, I have been here, where afflictions and pain and disease are seen on every hand, or rather the evidences of them, not on word of complaint, cowardice, cringing, or cruelty have I heard. You see people, patients, coming and going, or being "wheeled" about you, and without exception there is the smile of courage and of hope—the word of good cheer and happy greeting. And not one unkind word have I heard from the lips of anyone in all these weeks. We simply see people at their best in hospitals; facing new situations, painful experiences—and doing it all with a glad determination that is contagious and encouraging. And then physicians, nurses and attendants all in hopeful and happy mood as they go about the day's business of relieving human suffering.

But more than this. Creeds are done away with in a hospital and deeds stand out. Jew and Gentile, Catholic and Protestant, look up to the same God and call Him Father. The very tenderest and most reverential prayers Dr. Rowland and I have enjoyed here were by an orthodox Jewish Rabbi who dropped in to pass a cheering word with us—and then at our request, he prayed. After that he came often, always to talk about the good things of a loving and merciful heavenly Father and to have sweet fellowship with and pray with and for his "brothers in the ministry and his friends in the service of the most high God."

Dr. Rowland, with glad heart, increased faith in God and fellowmen, with healthy glow on his face and the hope of many years service in his blessed ministry, left for his home a week ago, and this writer equally improved and blessed with untold renewed strength, plans to go by the time these lines are being read by our beloved Sun family. Life at its best, gratitude at its deepest, these fall to the lot of those who learn with patience and courage "to wait upon the Lord, for He does renew thy strength."

A RARE OPPORTUNITY.

The approaching session of the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches offers a rare privilege and a gracious opportunity that the members of our constituency cannot afford to miss. The Southeast Convention is not a delegated body. Everyone who can possibly arrange to attend should do so.

It is a unique privilege in that seldom have so many distinguished speakers of national and international reputation been assembled on a convention platform in the South. Certainly such an opportunity has rarely been accorded the members of our fellowship. If you will carefully consider the program that has been arranged for the Raleigh Convention, you will realize that you ought to be there.

There is another reason, however, why you ought to be in Raleigh Apr. 30th to May 2nd. The former Southern Christian Convention was so divided by distance from the rest of the Christian Church membership that opportunities for fellowship were rare. Our churches were restricted to a comparatively small section of the South. As a result of that fact, our interests and our viewpoints were frequently sectional, and all too often provincial. We touched only four states of the entire Southeast.

In the Southeast Convention we have the opportunity of building a fellowship that will be both comprehensive and inclusive. If we make the most of the new situation Virginia and Florida will be united in an intimate and vital fellowship. And all the territory between Virginia and Florida may be united in a comprehensive program. There is in the South a deep spiritual interest and a vital religious fervor which offer to such a fellowship as ours, both a challenge and an opportunity. Let's meet in Raleigh on April 30th, and see what we may do about it.

THE OLD RELIGION FOR THE NEW AGE.

All religion is old. Every age is new. It sounds progressive to discard old theories and accept new interpretations. But the pages of history attest the statement that this type of vanity has been evident in every race, and, in every age of the world. Two thousand years ago, the people protested against the traditions and religious faith of their fathers in the sublime confidence of their own intellectual and spiritual superiority. In some respects they were right; in others, they were deluded in their zeal and unfounded dreams.

There is a point where youth breaks with age, in the self-consciousness of having outgrown the knowledge of their parents. Every son one day thinks he is wiser than his father; and every daughter likewise is certain that her knowledge is superior to the experience of her mother. These over-confident young people will discover later that there is no process by which nature withholds from age the truth revealed to youth. For the most part, old age has already passed through the same experience, and calmly assures itself that youth will become wiser with the unfolding years.

Religious experience is subject to the same test of time. All through the centuries every age has heard the cry for a new religion. Religion is new to the convert. The joy of forgiveness is a new experience to one who has recently been born again. But sin is old. And the sinner suffers the same pangs of an accusing conscience, as recorded in the lives of Cain and David, Peter and Judas. These sinners of the long ago found the same kind of joy in religion, when they found peace—as the people of our day and generation.

Humanity has not changed in nature and in needs. Human nature is the same in every age. New faces cannot hide the marks of sin and sorrow. Every effort to flee from the presence of God, finds the Father in a new place with a new revelation of power and love. The ever-present, eternal challenge of a Father's love calls alike to youth and age to return to the salvation and security of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. This glorious Gospel cannot be interpreted by a few definitions, not exhausted by scattered applications to half-hearted groups of social students. The church has failed to include all Gospel truth in its theology, and the possibilities of its program have scarcely been touched.

The Christian religion does not rest its case upon the definitions and interpretations of its followers; nor is it based upon the changing opinions and frail wisdom of mankind. It has certain inherent, fundamental truths which do not change. The field is open for new discovery in Christianity. Civilization has not outgrown Christianity. The Gospel of Jesus Christ holds up ideals of faith and life and service, far in advance of our highest ideals and our most challenging program. The form will change but not the content; the method will be revised, but not the spiritual laws of God. Gravitation is a great law of nature. The modern airplane and the ancient ox-cart; the imposing sky-scraper and the humble cottage; the saint and the sinner; these must yield to the inexorable law of the natural world, or suffer the penalty. The airplane is a new machine, but it soars through the air by responding to the old principles and methods of the birds who taught man how to fly.

If social security is to come to society it will not come through a new religion. If economic justice is to exist in civilization it will not be instituted by a new Gospel. The Gospel of Jesus Christ will be the basis of the nation's hope for moral, economic, social and spiritual recovery. Many plans and schemes will be revised before the nations will move forward (not backward) to the standards of Jesus Christ. Jesus can renew the ancient call "Follow Me." This will be a new life and a new experience for many; but they will find the old Gospel is adequate to meet the needs of the new age.

PRAYER FOR PEACE.

The Church is the greatest agency for peace that the world has yet known. Jesus of Nazareth, the founder and head of the Church, prayed for peace. He exhorted His followers to pray the Father in His name for what they wanted. The Church has been accustomed to pray all of its conscious existence. Marvelous things have been brought to pass by prayer. James the Apostle, declared, "An effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." De we believe in prayer today? Has the Church lost her passion for prayer?

Today, the dark clouds of war seems to be floating above every land, casting her dark shadows across the pathway of all people. We are not sufficiently far removed from the great and terrible World War of a few years past to have forgotten the horrors and the degradation of war. They tell us that the only way to prevent war is to prepare for it—that the only way to evade a fight is to arm ourselves to the limit. I presume that it is difficult for a single nation to keep the world out of war. I presume that it is impossible for an individual to evade determined conflict. If we cannot look successfully to nations or to individuals to prevent such a calamity, are there no other sources? Is there no other individual to whom we may appeal?

I have in my hand now an appeal sent out by the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, directed to all the churches, calling on all Christian people everywhere to pray for peace —to turn to God and beseech Him to stay the possibility of war. Surely, He who created the world and Who made us has the power. Do we have the faith? Will the Church give herself to prayer, constantly and continually, until, in answer to our petitions, the Master Himself should speak, stilling the storms that sweep society and quieting the waves that disturb the peace of the world? He is able provided our faith is sufficient. "Ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." The appeal sent out by the Council of Churches is printed elsewhere in this issue. L. E. S.

A SECRETARY'S SABBATH SCHOOL RECORD.

(Florida Sanitarium, Orlando, Fla.—Dr. Rowland and the writer went to Sabbath school in the chapel here yesterday. We learned something. It is just a regular Sabbath school—held every Saturday at 9:30 A. M.—in a wooden frame, unpretentious building in which many of the employees and their families of this sanitarium and families living near the institution, worship. There are no wealthy people in the school, all of them earning their living by daily toil. Bear in mind that they pay their tithe through the Church and that these Sabbath school offerings are free-will offerings, independent of their tithe which supports the church and its home enterprise. Look! Every Sabbath's offering goes to Missions, Foreign Missions, if you please. Now, read and, as we were, you will be perfectly amazed.—J. O. A.)

Minutes of the Sabbath School.

March 30, 1935 Wyannah Chapel
Secretary's Report Orlando, Fla.

Being 13th Sabbath and the last Sabbath of the first quarter of 1935, the school program was somewhat different from the usual order. We were privileged to have a family reunion, as it were, since we had the Junior, Primary and Kindergarten divisions meet with us—all divisions of the Sabbath school thus being represented on our 13th Sabbath's Program.

Together we repeated the Lord's Prayer to open our school. Then the Kindergarten division was represented by six of its members in a dialogue entitled "Africa." In this exercise they expressed their intention to give their pennies to this far-off field so that needy souls might be won to the Saviour—and they did give. They more than doubled their goal for the 13th Sabbath Offering, their total being $12.15. There are 20 members in the Kindergarten division.

Next the Junior Division was represented when their secretary gave the school a synopsis of their reports for the quarter, following which 8 of their members sang, "We Shall See the King Some Day." The total offering for this division was $4.87, and there are 18 members.

Last, but not least, the Primary Division favored us with several selections. The first number was a song on "Temperance" sung by the group. The second number was a duet entitled, "Giving," sung by two small girls. And give they surely did, for they lacked only two dollars of doubling their 13th Sabbath goal; their offering was $8.00, with a membership of 14. The total offering for the day for these three divisions was $25.02.

After the children returned to their places, the General Lesson Study for the Senior division was conducted by Mrs. Ashton. If you missed this good study, you surely missed a part of the blessing God intended for you last Sabbath, for Mrs. Ashton is a capable and efficient teacher, as all who heard her will readily agree. "Are our body temples clean from all defilement?" was only one of the thoughts that were forcibly brought to our attention from the lesson review. Following this, the classes separated for the records and offerings to be taken.

To close our Sabbath school, we again listened to a duet by two student nurses, and we were dismissed with prayer.

The offering for the Senior division of 100 members was $92.41. The total offering for last Sabbath amounted to $117.43, plus $7.20 given in birthday offerings during the quarter, making a grand total of $124.63 for the school last Sabbath.

The total offering for the quarter including last Sabbath amounted to $467.11.

Our membership at present is 152. The average weekly attendance for the quarter was 120.

Shall we not, during this new quarter, strive for 100 per cent in offerings, daily lesson study and attendance?

Respectfully submitted,
WM. KUESTER, Sup't.,
M. CAROLYN BERGER, Secy.

(This Secretary's record was an eye opener to Dr. R. and me, since we suposed that a Sabbath School of 150 members would give in their offering about $4.50 or maybe $5.00.—J. O. A.)

ELON PRESIDENT SOUNDS PLEA FOR CHARACTER IN FIRST BAPTIST CLASS ADDRESS.

Dr. Leon E. Smith, president of Elon College, delivering a dynamic address before the Baraca Class of First Baptist Church, appealed to his hearers last night to let Christian character, courage and Christ dominate their lives.

"Is there anything in your life that rivals the Christ for first place? If so, then destroy the painting at once and begin your life all over again," declared the speaker, "for it must be constructed around these three elements that it may stand four square when the storms of adversity are breaking about you. Look out into the tomorrow and see the storms ahead; see the things that dissolve material values in life; then see the face of the Master who by His simple message stills the storms and holds us steady in spite of them."

Dr. Smith spoke at the monthly fellowship supper of the First Baptist Baraca Class, attended by one of the largest gatherings of recent months, and was presented by Rev. William T. Scott, pastor of the United Congregational-Christian Church of this city. The address, on the subject, "Three Words by Which Men Live," was compelling and gripping.

The speaker began by congratulating the men in the class for their fine organization and their loyalty to the church and its program, and he declared the church had a great deal to do with the making of this nation and finally it will write victory across the sky.

Character is the very essence of truth: it stands four square to all the winds; it does not cringe nor apologize and the Christian character always tells in a man, the speaker declared. He made his point by giving a story of the youth days of Daniel Webster who in later life declared in an address that his father was the finest Christian character he ever knew. And character makes it possible for men in public life to resist every form of temptation. When men high in public affairs come down they come down with a crash and usually bring others down with them. A bit of impurity got into the giant tree of the forest that had stood for more than a century like a sentinel and when its life had been eaten away it came down in a crash on the side of the mountain. Men rise to heights of fame and public esteem and confidence, then come down in a crash all because earlier in their lives character had not been properly built.

This day our nation demands courage, it calls for men who are courageous and who dare to stand for the right in the stress of the storm, the speaker declared. And he told of his admiration for Governor Ehringhaus, who in the face of public scorn, dared to change his position on the sales tax question in order that he might save the good name of the State of North Carolina.

"I detest men who float with the stream and who are moved about by every tide; men who dare not have the courage of their conviction," was hurled by Dr. Smith at his hearers; "oh, we need men today in public office who have Christian character and have the courage to stand for the right in the face of the storm."

In conclusion, he appealed that men have that third prerequisite to make life full and well rounded, the Christ, the most significant name that ever fell on human lips. "He is teacher, leader, Saviour, pattern to shape your life by, and I wonder sometimes what God does think when men take Christ as their pattern and then make such a miserable mess of their life."

The program was enlivened by a couple of delightful solos by J. E. Gibson, accompanied at the piano by Paul Pegram. The usual gifts were distributed to the members and guests. The meeting was presided over by Spruill Thornton, president.

A BOOK BY DR. KING.

Dr. Elisha A. King, minister of the Miami Beach Community Church, has a custom of publishing a small book each year, especially preceding Easter. This year his book, or booklet, is entitled "St. Paul of Yesterday and the Church of Today." It is a series of eight sermons on St. Paul and is especially enriched by the experience last year which Dr. King had of visiting the Holy Land and the scenes of Paul's life and service. It is illuminating and also most interesting, and brings to the reader a vivid understanding of the life of the great apostle. The book does not concern itself so much with Paul's theology, etc., as with his life's ministry, and they have helpful sermonic values. It is paper bound and has about one hundred pages, and can be ordered from Dr. King if desired. The title of the chapters will indicate the approach to his theme. They are as follows: "Paul's Conversion: Face to Face with Christ," "Changing Masters: A New Allegiance," "The Period of Waiting: Finding a Life Work," "Obstacles in the Way: Paul's Troubles and How He Met Them," "Organizing and Caring for the Churches: Paul the Administrator," "The Secret of Paul's Courage: Christ in the Heart," "Paul's Great Message: Salvation by Faith," and "Paul's Ideals: Love the Greatest Thing in the World."

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

At a recent meeting of the Ministers' Association of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, the writer had an assignment to the topic: "I Believe in Prayer." By request of the ministers, the paper is given for publication, as follows:

I believe in prayer:

1. Because I believe in God. The revelation of God, as recorded in the Bible, assumes the existence of a Being of Infinite Power, who is guided in His dealings by Infinite Love. Such a Being, with a Father's Love, reveals His desire for fellowship with man, and extends to him an invitation to pray. Omnipotence surely has the power to communicate with man, and in turn can invest man with the power to have fellowship with God in prayer. The command to pray is an evidence of the possibility of prayer.

There are many promises in the Bible extended to those who will pray. These promises, in themselves, add material for the expectant faith of the child of God. These promises, also, have been sustained by the experience and testimony of faithful saints during the history of Christianity. The revealed nature of God,—His power, His love, His commandments and His promises leads me to believe in God; and believing in Him, I believe in prayer.

2 Because I believe human needs can be met by Divine resources. One does not go far in thinking of self, or others, until one finds many human needs which cannot be supplied by personal resources, or the exercise of the human will. Man can supply many of his needs; but he cannot satisfy the spiritual aspirations of his soul nor bring peace to his troubled conscience when he falls into spiritual decline. His own helplessness, in the experience of his deeper needs, sends him to a higher power for help and relief. The faith which leads him to God, in such an hour is grounded upon the firm confidence that resources are adequate and available; and these blessings are reserved for those who pray in faith.

3. Because Jesus set an example and taught his disciples to pray. Jesus was a man of prayer. He emphasized this in His teaching; He practiced it in His life. He attributed his success and power to his fellowship with the Father. He spent much time in prayer. From the record of his life, in its relation to prayer, there is unmistakable evidence of the importance of prayer. If Jesus prayed, men ought always to pray.

4. Because of the testimony of many worthy witnesses. A great cloud of witnesses, of whom the world is not worthy, might be called to testify. Beginning with the first book of the Bible and running through the entire book to Revelation, there is a long list of people who believed in prayer. This group includes kings and princes, prophets and preachers, priests and peasants, masters and slaves, rich and poor, old and young,—who went through fire and flood, stress and strain, storm and calm, and witnessed to the efficacy of prayer. Added to these are the countless thousands who have lived in the light of heavenly fellowship since the closing of the Biblical record. And there are millions upon earth today who can add their testimony to rewarded faith, expressed in terms of devoted prayer.

5. Because of my own experience as a follower of Jesus Christ, I have been taught to pray. I have not always been willing to pray, as it is not easy to pray. Prayer does not imply that man leaves everything for God to do. Sometimes personal prayer involves the Christian in a greater task. I have prayed and found relief; I have prayed and received an answer to my petition; I have had fellowship with God; I have seen the evidences of Divine help. Prayer is the most effective and most satisfying experience of a Christian's life. I believe in prayer.

I. W. Johnson.

SEEING BEYOND THE HORIZON.

A devoted missionary of the gospel was preaching Christ and His resurrection to a group of natives who had not heard the gospel of the resurrection. It was new to them. One questioned the speaker, saying, "Have you seen the Christ with your own eyes?"

The speaker said, "No, but I am positive that He lives."

The native thought for a while, and later said, "Do you mean that you see Him with the eyes of your heart?"

And the missionary said, "Yes, I do see Him with the eyes of my heart."

Is that not an exacting and a definite definition of faith, of faith in the resurrected Christ and in the life beyond this life?

Later, this same missionary experiences the tragedy of losing his son. The missionary and his wife took the body of the child and buried it. The native said, "How can you do this? How can you bear it?"

"Ah," said the missionary, "it is only for a season. We shall see our loved one again soon."

"Ah," said the native, "this is the advantage that you Christians have. You can see beyond the horizon."

Is not this the message of this glorious season, the message of the resurrection—that, by the power of God manifest in Christ, clouds are lifted, the darkness is scattered, and we stand on the heights sufficiently elevated to see beyond the horizon and behold the glories of a life with Christ and the redeemed?

Our church is moved with a passion to carry the gospel, the gospel of the resurrection, to the ends of the earth, that all may have the privilege of hearing and receiving. We have missionaries anxious to bear the message. There are individuals far and near awaiting anxiously for that message. For the lack of funds, the missionaries cannot go and thirsty souls must perish without the water of life. Will not our church arise in its strength and out of its bounty place its gifts upon the altar, that the Kingdom of God may come in its richness and fulness both in this and other lands?

It is the hope and prayer of those who have been charged with the responsibility of the missionary program and endeavor of our church that the offerings on Easter Sunday and the Sundays following may not be disappointing. Let everyone give as he has received.

L. E. Smith.

CHRISTIAN LIFE CONFERENCE AT BLACKWOODS.

The second week-end conference for the young people of the Midland City group of churches was held during the last week-end of March, the 30th and 31st. The conference was initiated and entertained by the Blackwoods young people. They planned for the first day of conference, Saturday, to be spent at Sealacon, the camp ground of the group. At two o'clock the first three cars arrived with twenty-two young people from Blackwoods. They looked over the camp ground and discovered what improvements would be necessary before camp time in the summer, then turned to welcome seven from Christian Hill. A little later a carload of guests from Southern Union College with their President, Ross Ensminger, arrived. Last came Clio's delegation and the fellowship was complete. After group games, all sat on the ground for a discussion on "War and Peace" led by Phillip Havener, a ministerial student who had just gone to Blackwoods for three months of service to that church. While a mixed baseball game was loudly going on at the top of the hill, the supper committee fried ham and eggs and prepared supper. Clio led an impressive Vesper Service just at sunset on the crest of the hill above the camp, and President Ensminger gave a challenging message. All present hurried down to supper and fell to with a will, cleaned up in well trained style and gathered around the campfire. First came stunts with Southern Union, Blackwoods and Christian Hill performing nobly. Then came our business session with plans for camp grounds and camp program our chief interest. J. D. Teal of Clio, Dan Riley of Blackwoods and Luther Stevens of Christian Hill were made the group representatives for the grounds committees. The closing service at the campfire was conducted by Rev. N. A. Long, the Camp "Pa" and was deeply appreciated by all. The meeting adjourned to be continued at Blackwoods church in the morning.

It was a big day at Blackwoods and all day, too, with the biggest dinner imagineable spread at noon. First came the Church School service conducted by Blackwoods with class work for all ages. The young people of the conference joined in a discussion on "Boys' and Girls' Relationships." President Ensminger conducted the service and gave a helpful message for young and old. After dinner we did our best to sing, but with some difficulty. The young people's groups took turns leading and giving special numbers. Southern Union took charge of the Afternoon program and gave several helpful messages on the theme "Finding a Religion to Live By Today."

The evening session was a full one. First the Junior Endeavor of Blackwoods gave an excellent program and showed the young people that their ranks were to be augmented very soon. Second came a Missionary Presentation by Christian Hill young people. They gave in a very graphic way the history of Japan and its relation to the rest of the world. The last part of the program was conducted by Blackwoods Christian Endeavor. After an inspiring program which brought out the consecration of Christ to His task, we all went out of doors and joined in a large circle for a candle lighting service of consecration of ourselves to the carrying on of the task He began. The groups separated after the fine fellowship of the conference and promised to meet again at Sealacon, their summer camp, on July 15th, for a week of greater comradeship.

One deed may mar a life,
And one can make it;
Hold firm thy will for strife,
Lest quick blow break it!

Even now from far on viewless wing
Higher speeds the nameless thing
Shall put thy spirit to the test.
Haply or e'er yon sinking sun
Shall drop behind the purple West,
All will be lost—or won!

FOR YOUR INFORMATION.

The Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches was organized in Burlington, N. C., May, 1932, and met in Suffolk, Va., in May of 1934. This is the third session of the Convention, and the first session separate from the Southern Convention.

It is not a delegated body. The United Church of Raleigh invites all ministers, laymen, women, and young people of the Congregational and Christian Churches in Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Kentucky, Georgia, Alabama, and Florida to attend this meeting. Visitors from other denominations will be welcomed.

Entertainment will be on the Harvard plan so far as the church is able to supply homes. "First come, first served." Other homes will be available at $.50 per night. Hotels are reasonable. The Carolina Hotel, right near the church, quotes rates at $2.50 for single and $4.00 for double rooms (bath included).

Meals and banquets will be served at the church at $.35 each.

Adults will be admitted to the Youth Fellowship banquet, if there is room.

There is no registration fee. Offerings will be received at the evening services.

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., Secretary.

WITHOUT A PREACHER.

Paul asks a very pertinent question. Not only pertinent, but personal. Hear him in Romans 10:13-15: "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on Him in whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach, except they be sent, as it is written? How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace and bring glad tidings of good things."

It is God's will and place to call preachers to proclaim His gospel. It is our place and privilege to send those who are called. This is that for which our mission period is appointed—to give all of us the privilege of helping send those who are called to proclaim the glad tidings to those who are perishing in sin. We are not commanded to convert the world: we, as a Church, are commanded to preach the gospel in all the world, so that all may have a chance to be saved. The Church, which is the body of Christ, is not commanded to give material aid to the physically needy, but it is commanded to give spiritual aid to sculs in need and sin. Here in the homeland, yonder in the foreign, the spiritual need today is all the needs known to man today—and the only way God will or can relieve that need is through you and me—little though our help may be. Robt. Hare has a poem that tells it:

He Is Counting on You.

"He is counting on you, my brother, on you,
For the work He has planned, for the service in view!
And if you should fail, O what will He say—
When reckoning comes at close of the day?

"He is counting on you, my sister, on you!
In life, love and spirit, He whispers, be true,
And if you should fail, one star will be dim
That might have flashed out its joy for Him!

"He is counting on you and the angels will weep
Should you fail in the promise His love waits to keep—
With crown, and sceptre and throne all in view.
The God of the stars is waiting on you!"

MEN AND MISSIONS.

Why is it that by common acceptance men are exempted from missionary activity in the local church? They are very active in other matters of lesser importance, but their strength is rarely used in single or concerted missionary activity.

Why is it that in the average Christian Church no man's voice has been raised to champion the mission cause? Voices are raised in criticism and opposition, they are often raised to boost matters of temporary significance. But no one stands out as a herald of God's eternal Mission. One looks in vain for a man who stands out as a staunch supporter, a protagonist of missions.

This is a lamentable condition. It is a serious indictment, a distressing fact. It is one index to the weakness of our Church. What is the explanation? Is it beneath their dignity? Is it a task too small and tame to challenge their herculean strength? Is it too much to ask of gentlemen who are engrossed in weightier matters?

Or does the explanation of the matter rest back on that jovial, good-nature of man, so unselfish and accommodating that even in missions he is perfectly willing to "let the women do the work"? Perhaps it is merely another expression of that perennially chivalrous attitude of man given classic example when kings and queens were sent to the guillotine, the king invariably said, "Ladies first."

We need men who are missionary-minded. "Let this mind be in you (the men), which was also in Christ Jesus." (Php. 2:15.) How can a man claim to be a Christian if he lacks the missionary mind of Christ? The men should take an active part in the missionary society of the church. They should participate in or conduct study classes. It is by no means enough merely to make a contribution. How can one pray an intelligent prayer for missions if he has not studied it? How can a man pray a sincere prayer for missions if he is unwilling to inform himself concerning its achievements, problems and opportunities?

The men of the Church should be missionary in spirit and activity. They are capable. They have the time and the means. Many of our men under present working conditions have much more time to study missions than the ladies who compose the Missionary Society.

Missions is a man's job! And there is no stranger freak of circumstances than this deplorable practice of delegating the responsibility for missions to women. Our ministers are men. And they are without exception, exponents of Christ's mission. One would infer that by the way we relegate this matter to the ladies that our missionaries are women. Yet the roster of our missionaries is replete with the names of men: Dr. White, Dr. Barrett, and Dr. Fry, are men. Dr. Atkinson is a man! St. Paul, Barnabus, John Mark, Jesus Christ were all men! Missions is a man's job! And what Dr. Atkinson has done for missions in the Southern Christian Convention some man should do in every local church.

Robert Lee House.

NEWS ITEMS OF SOCIETIES.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Monticello Christian Church, Monticello, N. C., met in the home of the writer on Friday night, April 12th.

A splendid crowd was in attendance and Mrs. Jack Commer, President, presided. The devotional was conducted by Mrs. Nester Walker. A short business session followed and one new member was added to the society. Reports from delegates who atended the Missionary Rally at Pleasant Ridge was enjoyed by the society.

After this meeting, Mrs. N. G. Walker had charge of the program, the subject of which was "India." A very interesting talk was given by Mrs. W. G. Rudd. Mrs. W. R. McKinney gave a reading and various other talks were given following which the meeting was dismissed with prayer by Mrs. Jennings Kernodle.

An eight-minute Bible contest was held, using each letter of the word "Easter" to begin the name of some Bible character. Mrs. W. R. Burton and Mrs. Willie Rudd wrote the most names.

After this a social hour was enjoyed. Mrs. C. P. Thompson was hostess. Sandwiches, cake and coffee were served.

MRS. D. E. MICHAEL.

The Guilford District Woman's Missionary Rally was held with Pleasant Ridge Congregational-Christian Church, on April 10th. The weather was beautiful and the attendance was splendid.

The program was very inspiring and enjoyed by all present.

The meeting, however, was incomplete without our Mission Secretary, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, and Dr. C. H. Rowland, who always brings such encouraging messages which renew our missionary zeal.

The women of the church had prepared a delightful entertainment with special music. There was a delicious lunch.

The Rally was invited to meet with Hine's Chapel next year.

MRS. W. F. BURTON, Secy.

CHURCH AND KINGDOM FINANCE.

We believe that the church should set an example in the community by using the best and most thorough Christian methods in all matters relating to church moneys. Is not that a reasonable expectation?

1. What plan or system does your church have in its money affairs?

2. Does anyone know how much money your entire church in all its departments produces in a year?

3. Why is the financial atmosphere in so many churches so unsatisfactory? Is it irritating in your church?

4. Does the money side of your church life develop each member spiritually as well as produce money?

5. Does your church raise money usually rather than give it?

6. Does the money given to your church go for the purposes for which it is given?

7. Have you any organized financial program?

8. Do you give as much "for others" as for "ourselves"? What should be the ratio?

9. Are the benevolences in your church just a side issue, one item only in the budget, or, are they properly dignified by being placed on the same basis as current expenses?

10. Is it Christian to reduce the benevolences at a faster rate proportionately than we do the current budget?

11. Is it true that "church envelopes do not reveal nearly so often the poverty of our purses as they do the poverty of our souls?"

12. Who compose the Finance Department of your church? What type of people are they? Do they dread their task as begging, or do they realize it as a great spiritual opportunity?

13. Do the methods you use to acquire church moneys conform to the stewardship principles of the scriptures?

14. Why is the annual Every Member Canvass, when rightly prepared for, the best method known to Christian churches?

15. Are all the books of your church properly audited?

16. It is comparatively easy to get 50 per cent to subscribe but the challenge is to enlist the other 50 per cent. Why do you fall down there?

17. What is the primary cause for so many inactive members on your church roll? Compare Luke 12:34.

18. Why not dignify the Finance Department of your church by making it as spiritual and interesting as any other phase of your work?

19. Are you familiar with the way of acquiring and using church funds now in our united work? Apportionment? Per capita?

20. Does your pastor sustain the same relationship to the Finance Department as to the other departments of the church?

21. Do you make your budget speak in spiritualized or secularized terms?

It is hight time that we bring local church finances out of their present atmosphere into a most delightful experience. It can be done. It must be done. Your Commission on Christian Stewardship desires to assist you in every way possible. Write to any member of the Commission. (See General Council Minutes and Year Book for the list of members.)

WARREN H. DENISON, Exec. Secy.

DO "DILUTED" ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES SERVE THE CAUSE OF TEMPERANCE?

By DEETS PICKETT, Research Secretary, M. E. Board of Temperance, Prohibition and Public Morals.

Experiences of various American states since repeal of prohibition indicates that the so-called "light" alcoholic beverages offer no way out in dealing with the liquor problem.

A study of the states which have modified their prohibition laws to permit the sale of beer shows a decided increase in drunkenness, alcoholism, drinking by women, traffic accidents, and drink-caused delinquency and dependency.

Institutional evils of distressing character are also arising in connection with the sale of beer in these states, particularly in connection with small restaurants, neighborhood stores, country stores and gas station lunch counters.

This experience is disappointing and disconcerting as an agreement to permit the sale of "light" beverages and prohibit the stronger liquors would relieve the tension between the "wets" and the "drys," as well as proving a most convenient political and social adjustment, but only if justified by results. It is not justified.

Alcohol in concentrated form more quickly enters the blood stream but the slower absorption of diluted alcohol is none the less dangerous. The social effect of as little a quantity as two bottles of beer may be disastrous, due to retarded reaction time and defective perception. This explains many automobile accidents where the driver had been "drinking, but was not drunk." Professor Yandell Henderson, in a recent book, bases his thesis for dilution upon the assumption that beer is not intoxicating. A day of observation in any place where beer is sold to be consumed on the premises would convince him to the contrary. It is nothing uncommon to see a man drive up to a gas station "cold sober," spend forty-five minutes drinking beer, and leave in a condition making his operation of a car absolutely unsafe.

Professor Walter R. Miles, certainly a recognized authority, concludes, "There is no longer room for doubt in reference to the toxic action of alcoholic beverages as weak as 2.75 per cent by weight." * His opinion is based upon three years research at the Carnegie Institute at Washington.

Dr. Adolph Meyer, psychologist of Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, expresses an opinion that "dilution, while lessening the immediate results, leaves the final outcome unchanged."

It is a statistical fact that the largest national consumers of absolute alcohol in the world are the countries where beer and wine are the usual beverages.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

WE'RE OFF TO RALEIGH.

Next Tuesday afternoon the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches will begin a very important session at the United Church, Raleigh, North Carolina. The program appeared in last week's CHRISTIAN SUN, and for your convenience is re-printed this week.

Young people from every section of the Southeast are expected to be in attendance for the entire Southeast Convention. They will get together at odd moments to consider how they can work together more effectively.

Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock the Youth Fellowship of the Southeast will open its biennial session. Miss Lucy Eldredge of Dayton, Ohio, and Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein of Dover, Delaware, will speak during the afternoon. The business session will include the election of officers. There will be a banquet at 6 o'clock, and the young people will share in the Convention program at the evening hour. Dr. Daniel A. Poling, president of the World's Christian Endeavor Convention, will be the speaker for the evening.

Every young person who can possibly do so should be in Raleigh for this meeting. It ought to give inspiration for new work through years to come.

BOARD OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION TO MEET.

The Board of Christian Education will meet at Raleigh United Church on Wednesday afternoon, May 1st, at 1:30 o'clock. All who have business with this Board are invited to be present or to send their communication by mail.

Hymn for meditation as music is softly played: "We Would See Jesus."

Prayer Hymn: "Lord, For Tomorrow and Its Needs" or "Something For Thee."

Scripture: Matt. 5:13-16; Using our abilities. Matt. 25:14-30; Solomon's estimate, Prov. 22:29; Seek God's approval, 2 Tim. 2:15; Women can be workers, Prov. 31:10-30; Paul was a laborer, 2 Thess. 3:7-12; Fruit from my labors, Matt. 7:16-20.

Solo: "Somebody Did a Golden Deed, or "My Task."

May every soul that touches mine,
Be it the slightest contact, get some good,
Some little grace—one kindly thought—
One inspiration yet unfelt—one gleam of faith
To brave the thick'ning ills of life—
One glimpse of brighter skies beyond the gathering mists
To make this life worthwhile, and Heaven a surer heritage.

Things to Forget.

If you see a tall fellow ahead of the crowd,
A leader of men, marching fearless and proud,
And you know of a tale whose mere telling aloud
Would cause his proud head to in anguish be bowed,
It's a pretty good plan to forget it

If you know of a skeleton hidden away
In a closet, and guarded and kept from the day
In the dark, and whose showing, whose sudden display,
Would cause grief and sorrow and lifelong dismay,
It's a pretty good plan to forget it.

If you know of a thing that will darken the joy
Of a man or a woman, a girl or a boy,
That will wipe out a smile or the least way annoy
A fellow, or cause any gladness to cloy,
It's a pretty good plan to forget it.

Beautiful Things.

Beautiful faces are those that wear—
It matters little if dark or fair—
Whole-souled honesty printed there.

Beautiful eyes are those that show,
Like crystal panes where hearth-fires glow,
Beautiful thoughts that burn below.

Beautiful hands are those that do
Work that is earnest, brave, and true,
Moment by moment the long day through.

Beautiful feet are those that go—
On kindly ministries to and fro—
Down lowliest ways, if God wills it so.

Beautiful shoulders are those that bear
Ceaseless burdens of homely care,
With patient grace and daily prayer.

—Ellen Palmer Allerton.

To Lighten Care.

When you go out in the morning,
To begin the work of the day,
Don't neglect the little chances
You'll find along the way;
For in lifting another's burden,
And speaking a word of cheer,
You will find your own cares lighter,
And easier far to bear.

—Mrs F. S. Lovejoy.

This Is My Duty.

To use what gifts I have as best I may;
To help some weaker brother where I can;
To be as blameless at the close of day
As when the duties of the day began;
To do without complaint what must be done;
To grant my rival all that may be just;
To win through kindness all that may be won;
To fight with knightly valor when I must.

A Motto.

I would be true for there are those who trust me;
I would be pure for there are those who care;
I would be strong for there is much to suffer;
I would be brave for there is much to dare.

I would be friend of all—the foe, the friendless;
I would be giving and forget the gift.
I would be humble for I know my weakness;
I would look up—and laugh—and love—and lift.

—Howard Arnold Walter.

Prayer.

(This quaint prayer hangs outside the door of the Refectory of the Cathedral at Chester, Eng.)

Give me a good digestion, Lord,
And also something to digest;
Give me a healthy body, Lord,
With sense to keep it at its best.
Give me a healthy mind, Good Lord,
To keep the pure and good in sight,
Which, seeing sin, is not appalled
But finds a way to set it right.
Give me a mind that is not bored,
That does not whimper, whine or sigh;
Don't let me worry over much
About the fussy thing called "I".
Give me a sense of humor, Lord,
Give me the grace to see a joke,
To get some pleasure out of life
And pass it on to other folk.

Finish every day and be done with it. You have done what you could. Some blunders and absurdities no doubt crept in; forget them as soon as you can. Tomorrow is a new day; begin it well and serenely and with too high a spirit to be cumbered with your old nonsense. This day is all that is good and fair. It is too dear, with its hopes and invitations, to waste a moment on the yesterday.—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

The suggestion was made in the C. E. World Quarterly to ask several business men, carpenters, etc., from your church to tell you in five-minute talks, "Can I carry on my business as Jesus wants me to?" Ask them questions from real life.

Sunday School Lesson

THE HOLY SCRIPTURES.

Lesson IV—April 28, 1935.

Golden Text: "Oh how I love Thy law! It is my meditation all the day."—Ps. 119:97.

Lesson Text: Psalm 19:7-14; II Timothy 3: 14-17.

Immanuel Kent, the great philosopher said that two things caused him to stand in awe,—the starry heavens above, and the moral law within. The man who wrote Psalm 19 was likewise moved by the works and the word of God. In the works of God he saw God's glory; in the word of God he saw God's grace. And as he stood in the presence of these awe-inspiring things of God, he prayed that the words of his mouth and the meditations of his heart—his outward conduct and his inner spirit—might be acceptable unto God, who was his rock and his redeemer. "My" rock, "my" redeemer—the God who revealed Himself in the wonders of the world and in the wonder of the Word, was his personal God. In that far-off day, he had got at the heart of the matter—religion as an intimate, personal relationship.

The Word of God.

The Psalmist uses several words to characterize what we would call the Bible—law, testimony, precepts, commandment, ordinances, etc., but he is referring to what we would call the word of God, or the Bible. Without making any attempt to be exhaustive he emphasizes some of the characteristics of the Word in his day.

"Restoring the Soul."

There is renewing, restoring, refreshing power in the word of God. The words are spirit and life. Many lives that are weary and many hearts that are tired would find new vigor and new life in the reading of the Word. Here is a "pause that truly refreshes."

"Making Wise the Simple."

The Scriptures are so profound that the wisest cannot exhaust their meaning. But they can make wise even the simplest. He who reads the Bible with an open mind and an obedient heart will find a wisdom that is far better than mere book knowledge. No man is well educated who does not know the Bible, at least not educated in the best sense.

"Rejoicing the Heart."

The Book is a book of joy. It is the "glad book." It is the good news. There is no other book that has the secret of such abiding and abounding joy. To know the Bible and to claim by faith its promises is to find the secret of a happy life.

"Enlightening the Eyes."

Paul in one place refers to having the eyes of your understanding opened or enlightened. There are eyes that see not. But there is power in the word of God to reveal spiritual truth, and to illuminate the mind. In its light we shall see light.

"Enduring Forever."

The Bible is never going to be outgrown or outworn. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but its truths shall endure. It embodies eternal and universal principles that make it immune to the ravages of time. The Bible is just as true now as it was when it was written. And it will be as binding and as up-to-date ten thousand years from now as it is now. Times may change, but truth endures. His word is truth.

"Warning."

By them is thy servant warned. The Bible posts red lights at the danger points on the roads of life. It puts labels on the things that poison life. It erects light-houses and posts bell-buoys at the hidden menaces on the sea of life. It cries out and sounds an alarm at aproaching evils. Its record of the downfall of nations and individuals are a warning to nations and individuals of today and tomorrow. He who reads the Bible will find sufficient warning against the evils and the ills of individual and social life. The way of the transgressor still is hard. The warning of the Bible is still needed.

"Rewarding."

"In keeping with them there is great reward." It pays to be good and to do right. Godliness is profitable unto all things, having the promise of the life which now is, and of that which is to come. Blessed is the man who walketh in the way of the Lord and whose delight is in the law of the Lord.

"Cleansing."

"Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you," said Jesus. The Bible has a cleansing power. It purifies the lives of those who read it in sincerity of purpose. The man who has his heart full of the Scriptures will have inner resources which will help him to keep his life pure and powerful. Thy word have I hid in my heart, said the Psalmist, that I might not sin against Thee."

"Liberating."

"Let them not have dominion over me." The Scriptures have helped to set men free from the power of sin. This is especially true as they through faith in Christ revealed in the Word, have found the liberty of the sons of God. Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall set you free. His word is truth, and its truth has set men free.

The Word of God and the Manner of Life.

As the Psalmist thinks of the grace of God as revealed in His word he utters a sublime prayer that his life might be brought into harmony with it. Let the words of my mouth—the outward conduct, and the meditation of my heart—the inner spirit and motive, be in accord with the will of the God who is our Rock and our Redeemer. Life is to be judged not only by outward conduct, but by inner motive. Both the inner life and the outward conduct are to be the expression of the spirit of the living God.

The Word of God and the Spirit of God.

The Bible is not a mere human book although it was written by human beings. It is a divine book. Holy men of God wrote as they were moved by the spirit of God. There is no explanation of the Bible apart from the action and the influence of the spirit of God. The Bible needs no defense. It is its own defense. Let a man read it with an open mind and a responsive heart, and he will know that in this book God has spoken, that it is the word of God.

THE CHILDREN'S STORY.

"And couldn't we have a gondolier?" asked Essa. "He wouldn't have to be dressed up so much."

That seemed a sensible proposal, so Margaret got another clothes-pin, and by the aid of a pencil he was given a countenance, and a few bits of bright wool made him a sash.

"His face looks queer." said Essa doubtfully, then she added cheerfully. "I suppose they do, anyway, in those countries."

The gondolier, not being encumbered with clothing, was able to cling by his legs to the mast and as the boat touched the waves a tiny breeze waved the ends of his sash in a most sea-

MONDAY.

"TEMPTATION."

"Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit."—Col. 2:3.

"After the dove the devil," is the statement of a man who after a deep religious experience in which he gave himself unreservedly to God and gained the hope of eternal reward, found himself beset by evil and sin. The struggle was great, but he got the victory through constant prayer and consecration. In this he took the way of the Lord, who after His baptism, faced the devil for forty days. This must have been necessary to prove His character.

The Lenten and Easter Season is period of consecration in the church. Many a soul will find temptations to forsake the faith. If this experience comes to you, remember that the Heavenly Father did not elevate His Son to the dignity of Saviour until he had been tried and searched and proven fit. In a world hostile to God it could not be otherwise.

Many things invite one away from the holy way; friend, society, trickery in business, temptations to drink, the tendencies of wrong thinking, annoyaces of daily problems, bad compay, and all else so well known in the life of man. Be steadfast, friends. Do not let God go, and each victory won will make the next one easier. Joys will become longer and sweeter, character will be enriched beyond the world's gifts, and faithfulness will be the last test whereby His children will go forth in heavenly love and power.

Prayer—Our Father, we thank Thee that there is a time when the Devil quits, and that there is no end to the faithful wooings of Christ for our souls. We pray for the spirit and the strength to persist to the triumphant end.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

"A WONDERFUL WAY."

"Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth."—Col. 3:2.

It is considered that to live now as if one expects to live forever deepens and strengthens the meaning of existence, lifts above petty cares and ambitions and makes the things that are worth while precious to the heart.

To dwell upon spiritual values, to endure hardships patiently, to think more of the soul than of the body, to do good along life's way, purifies one's life and builds character fit for heaven.

Prayer—O Lord, the giver of every good gift, grant unto us the faith and the strength to follow Christ in all our actions, to live His truths, and find His peace and happiness.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"THE INVISIBLE REWARD."

"Blessed are those servants, whom the Lord, when He cometh, shall find watching."—Luke 12:37.

It has been asked: "Are we counted so capable of faithfulness that God believes that we shall despise the rewards of the world and be satisfied with simple Christian living? Is it possible that God expects of us faithfulness in this, till death? Can we, creatures of impulse, vanity, wavering, doubt, uncertainties, etc., be faithful till death?"

It is an inspiring thought that God does so believe in us. When deep pain comes upon us; when there is no encouragement but the voice of God (and that cannot always be heard) when we have to wage lone fights night and day and struggle on with the everlasting conflicts, and when there is no help from man, we must conquer in the solitude of our own hearts, then it means something to recall the words of our text, and that other noble passage, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

Prayer—

"Triumphant Christ, oh, keep us pure
By thine own passion to endure,
Till every heart in Thine shall beat—
Our sun, our shadow from the heat—
And no false sun or shade allure!"

Suffer no hate to innure our lives from Thee, and midst darkness, death and defeat may we find triumph in Thy love.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

"HEARING THE VOICE OF GOD."

"Speak Lord, for Thy servant heareth."—I Sam. 3:4.

Did you ever hear the voice of God?

In obedience to Divine Guidance, Elijah stood in the forest and the sweet, gentle and hamonious voice of nature opened up so afresh to his understanding that it became to him the person, the life, and the voice of God.

The sacred meditations and inspiring dreams of Samuel were so distinct to him that they became the Divine voice and by obedience thereto all Israel knew that he was a phophet sent from God.

The vision of Saul of Tarsus on the road to Damascus was such a real thing to him that he could not escape conviction. From that time the world knew that Saul was an apostle of Jesus Christ.

Were those voices articulate or not? We do not know. It does not matter. All that is of consequence is that these men recognized the presence of God and, coming forth in obedience thereto, understood God.

Surely God delights to manifest Himself to us in the same ways, yea, in many other ways. He speaks in all gentle, loving, kind and good things; He speaks in work, duty and service; He speaks in sensibilities, thoughts and conscience; He also speaks in meditations, books and friends; He speaks in the claims of righteousess, jutice and mercy. Obedience to His voice will bring to us the same revelations of Him which He gives to Samuel, Elijah, Moses, and others.

Prayer—

"Dear Lord and Father of mankind,
Forgive our foolish ways!
Reclothe us in our rightful mind,
In purer lives Thy service find,
In deeper reverence, praise."

We pray that all our strivings may cease and that whither we may hear every tender whisper of Thy call. Take from our souls everything wrong so that we may see the beauty of Thy peace.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

"QUARRELS."

"If any man have a quarrel against any; even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye."—Col. 3:13.

A quarrel is a dispute, ground of complaint, a breach of concord or understanding, strife, or trespass against another. Our Lord recognizes that men will trespass against one another and disagreements will occur, by reminding us that "offenses must come, but woe unto them by whom they come." Also He has shown us that it is not necessary that offenses must come for they can be avoided through forgiving and forgetting.

There is nothing that makes a sensitive soul more miserable than to be harsh, unkind and retributive. By the same token there is nothing that makes one happier than to feel the inflow of that freedom that comes as a direct result of forgiving one of trespassers. This is the thing the Psalmist was talking about when he said, "Blessed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity, and in whose spirit there is no guile." It is a sense of breaking down bolted doors, as it were, and walking in the freedom of a garden of flowers; is a sense of a lightened mind relieved of its load; it is a sense of the joyous rapture felt while standing upon a mountain peak, gazing upon glorious scenes of the vistas, where all is sunshine and beauty. Great is the peace, joy and rest of one who stands on the peak of God's forgiveness where all shadows are beneath him and none fall upon his own soul.

Prayer—O Father, we would be done with the sin of hate and retribution. We confess that all souls of earth are our brothers and that we should share our kindness. We pray Thy forgiveness and for the Christ Spirit to forgive. In His name we ask it.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

"MEMORIALS."

"What mean these stones?"—Joshua 4:15-24.

Those twelve stones out of the Jordan which were set up in Gilgal became a perpetual memorial of God's goodness in leading the Israelites through the tumultous dryshod. I have a feeling that if we knew where to look, we should find them there today. At any rate, we have a perpetual memorial in this chapter of Joshua and in the hearts of all God's people.

We need more of such memorials. Look back over your life. Do you not recall, as you search your memories, many a rushing Jordan through which the Lord has led you safely, you and your dear ones? It may have been sickness. It may have been a financial crisis. It may have been a fire. It may have been the fire of slander.

And what cairn have you erected? How often do you repair to the spot to recall with gratitude the goodness of God? How many Thanksgiving Days have you thus established in your years?

Prayer—Forgive us, all beneficent Giver, for our short memories, our halting gratitude. And may we hereafter set up many memorials beside our Jordans.—Amen. AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

"WHY GLOOM?"

"Why art thou cast down, O my soul? .And why art thou disquieted within me?"—Ps. 4:5-11.

Who does not experience periods of causeless depression? We can give no reason, physical, mental, social, or spiritual, for our gloom, and yet it weighs down upon us like the weight of a thousand tons. The sky seems to be upon our backs. Our spirits are crushed to earth in boundless despair.

We know it is so unreasonable and vet we have no strength to leap out of it all. There is no strength but the Psalmist's. We can not argue curselves out of it, or rebuke ourselves out of it, thought we scold ourselves with "Why?" till we are voiceless. But the Psalmist knew the way out: "Hope thou in God!"

God is our peace and our joy. Alas for him who seeks joy and peace elsewhere! God is our relief. God is our cure. Hope in Him, faith in Him, reliance upon Him, will surely lift the weight from our souls.

Prayer—We shall yet praise Thee, our Father. Thou art the help of our countenance. Thou art our God.—Amen. AMOS R. WELLS.

THE CHRIST ON THE ROAD.

By Maurice L. Marling.

"And behold, two of them were going that very day to a village named Emmaus, which was threescore furlongs from Jerusalem."—Luke 24:13.

Two disciples were on their way home. We know very little about them except for this fact. Cleopas was the name of one, and the other is unknown. They trudged the weary miles from Jerusalem to Emmaus as men who were leaving the hope of life behind them. Jerusalem was the "City of Shattered Hopes," and like all men, they sought to turn their backs upon the hopes that were shattered. The joy and enthusiasm of the entrance of Jesus on the first day of the week had been dispelled and shattered in the crucifixion of their friend. "We hoped"—but hope was gone. The King was dead, and with him all of their dreams of empire had been rudely crushed. For if Jesus could not redeem Israel, with the matchless control of divine power that they had witnessed, no one could.

So these two disciples left Jerusalem, with its crowds, its noise, its false hopes, and returned to their homes. Home is the place for the broken heart. And in the little village of Emmaus, where possibly Jesus had never been in person, they would find few reminders of the glory and the empire of which they had dreamed. They could forget. They would keep ever in their hearts the memories of Jesus, their Friend and Teacher, and have within their hearts a great love that could never die. But their days with Jesus would form only a chapter in their life story. They had loved, they had hoped, but Jesus was dead.

As the two disciples were thus communing together on the road, Jesus joined them, but their eyes were holden that they should not know him. Joining in their conversation, he brought to them words of comfort, words that stirred their souls. His words were more sublime than any previous word they had heard from Jesus. A risen Christ, a victorious Saviour now revealed the word concerning himself. Not in parables did he speak now, but in revelations. Then at the journey's end they went into the home at Emmaus, and there Jesus "was made known of them in the breaking of bread."

What a difference it makes when we have been with Jesus and know him! He vanished from the sight of the disciples, but hope was rekindled. In their great joy the sixty furlongs did not seem to be a great distance, and they set out to return at once to the city to tell others. Now it is again "The City of the Great King," and to it they went light-hearted and light-footed. "We have seen the Lord."

The Christ on the road, risen and victorious, is our hope. Easter dawns as a great encouragement for the sorrowing world. To the world that stands in fear and dread of death, Christ brings the word that he has been victorious over death. He brings the truth about life and death—that the power of life is greater than the power of death. Inescapable and inevitable death is no longer to be feared, for it has yielded to the power of him who is Life. Death and sin are terrible powers. Sin seems greater than our might; death is ever present. But these powers are not two, but one, and in overcoming death, the result of sin, Jesus brings deliverance to us. "Death hath he conquered, death and sin." "Because I live, ye shall live also," is the joyous Easter message.

Will you compare this great assurance with the comfort that we can bring to men? Our comfort is mere sympathy—a joining in their sorrow. We bring only the assurance that we too have suffered, and that we suffer with our fellows. No message of hope comes from men. Our own experience is as incomplete and unsatisfying as that of other men. But when we are forced to bring such empty comfort, we remember that we have a risen Christ. When all others fail, we can turn to him, hearing his gentle voice as it comforts on the highway of life. Had these two disciples, and the others as well, believed, they would not have been cast into this deep despondency. Their hearts would not have been broken. For the Master had told them that he would rise again. He had assured them that His power was greater than any power that he might face. Yet they had come to the extreme of speaking of hope in the past tense: "We hoped." Yes, and they came again to hope. Christ is our hope.

The Christ on the road, risen and victorious, warms our hearts as he brings to us his word. "Did not our hearts burn within us, while he talked with us by the way?" He warms our hearts as he brings the meaning of God's word. For some the word is cold, hard, barren of meaning. It is not a living word. But Christ reveals it to us as a "living word," a word become flesh. He shows God's word as He is at its center, shedding radiance through it. And seeing it thus, with Christ as its key, our hearts burn within us as the word comes to us, and we have intimate communion with Him. While the Master was with the Twelve, he had an inner circle of communion and fellowship, with Peter, and James and John admitted to that circle. Now, however, that intimate communion is for all—for the most humble as well as for the highest, for all who will "sit with him in the heavenly places." It is significant that Jesus did not appear first to the Twelve, nor to the inner circle of three, but to certain of the women, and then to these two unknown disciples. The warmth of his presence is not for the great only, but for all.

The Christ on the road, risen and victorious, interprets our suffering. "Behooved it not the Christ to suffer these things and to enter into his glory?" Suffering—then glory. Can we overlook the connection? In interpreting his own suffering to the disciples on the road, Christ interprets our suffering for us. Sometimes we suffer for our sin, as retribution comes quickly upon us. Sometimes we suffer because of another's guilt, as the innocent often must suffer. Sometimes it seems that there is no other explanation for our suffering than that of Peter, "Let them also that suffer according to the will of God commit their souls in well-doing unto a faithful Creator." "According to the will of God"—for his glory.

How do we suffer? Do we rebel against our lot, shrinking from the blow, cursing the fate that besets us? Or do we seek to be content in suffering to win glory and honor by means of the cross? The Christ shows the way and interprets our suffering. He interprets our suffering in terms of the accomplishment. For himself, in being lifted up he drew all men unto himself. He interprets our suffering in terms of the glory beyond. "If so be that we suffer with him, that we may be glorified with him." We cannot have life without suffering. Through suffering we are born, and through suffering we win everything in life that is worth having. The Kingdom comes to us through a new birth; yea, "through many tribulations we must enter into the kingdom."

The Christ on the road, risen and victorious, is revealed to us in the common things of life.

Dear Friends:

Rain! rain! rain! has been the order of the day in this community for weeks. This is the first year we have had in many years that we did not get fair weather enough in the month of March to plant our Irish potatoes. We got about half of our crop planted in March and the rain overtook us and we had to quit and we have had no land dry enough to work since. It is now the 22nd of April and nothing done toward planting our field crops yet. We have faith to believe that we will have weather to plant and a season to gather in.

The good women throughout our Church sent in many pretty Easter dresses for the children to wear Easter Sunday. The matrons spent much time Saturday fitting each girl out in a new dress to wear on Easter Sunday. The dresses were pretty. The girls were all happy to have a new dress. But what a disappointment when they awoke Sunday morning and it was raining and kept on raining and only a few got to go to church. If next Sunday is pretty and clear they will have the joy though a week late. It is lovely of our good women to make our girls happy each Easter season. We pray the Lord's richest blessings on each and every one.

In our letter last week we mentioned the fact that our little boys (the little frying-size fellows) from twelve years down needed balls, bats, mask and mits. Two good friends of our Burlington Church read the letter and supplied that need and the little fellows are happy. If these two friends could come and see the real happiness the little fellows get out of their gift, they would be well repaid.

If the good women could be present and see the happy smiles on the faces of the girls when they are dressed up in their Easter outfits they would be glad they had a part in making them happy. Remember we are made happy by making others happy. CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

manlike manner. Both he and Timmy Tinker looked very sporting and gallant and well worth admiring.

Just then they saw their mothers coming up the road, and they concluded that Timmy Tinker had been quite far enough for one day. Besides, they were intersted to know the contents of all those bundles.

"We'll save the gondola," said Margaret. "I'll call it Venice and paint a V on it."

"And we can make a Viking ship out of it if we want to," agreed Essa, "and the V will be just as good. Let's put Timmy Tinker in the chair beside Nancy so that he can tell her all his adventures."

"Perhaps he'll say he was in Venice and a dove sang on the top of the mast," suggested Margaret.

"And when it's bedtime perhaps he'll tell her about Noah and the ark," continued Essa. "Be sure to bring him to my house when you come, and I hope that something just as exciting happens the next time that Timmy Tinker takes a sail."—By May Whiting in Zion's Herald.

PROGRAM OF ELON SINGERS WELL PRESENTED AND RECEIVED.

A well arranged and presented concert of the Elon College Singers, conducted by Prof. Dwight Steere, was enthusiastically received by a large audience at the Fourth Street Church of Christ last night.

The program, given under the auspices of the Congregational-Christian Church and the Forsyth county unit of Elon alumni, included sacred and secular groups as well as vocal, violin and piano solos.

Professor Steere displayed a marvelous depth of interpretation in his conducting, as well as remarkable training of the members of his group.

The program opened with numbers by Handel and Bach in commemoration of their 250th anniversary this year.

The secular part of the program included a group of old English madrigals, the interpretation of which delighted the audience.

Ralph Caskey, student violinist, gave a brilliant interpretation of the "Scene de Ballet," by Duberiot.

Presentations of Arthur Steere, talented baritone, and Miss Helen Barney, organist and pianist, were the outstanding features of the program.

Mr. Steere gave a beautiful rendition of a ballad in modern setting and the numbers presented by Miss Barney, winner of the state federation contest, revealed remarkable talent which, it is predicted, will carry her to a brilliant career. Her work as accompanist in the program added to the audience's appreciation of her ability.

The program was brought to a close with a sacred number by Dr. Charles Wood, "Expectans Expectavi," which left a deep impression of the sincerity that characterized the singing throughout the entire program.

Another song, "The Shepherd's Story," by Dickinson, was a highlight of the presentations.

As a whole, the program was well rounded and revealed unusual talent and able directing.

The young artists were introduced by Dr. Fred K. Garvey, president of the Forsyth county unit of Elon College Alumni.

The program follows:

"Hallelujah Amen," by Handel; "All Breathing Life," by Bach; "Scene de Ballet," by Duberiot; "Fierce Was the Wild Billow," by Noble; "O Love Invisible," by Matthews; "Cherubim Song," by Tschaikowsky; "The Shepherd's Story," by Dickinson; "Scherzino," by Paderewski; "Black Key Etude," by Chopin; "A Roundelay," by Bainton; "Winter and Spring," by Borowski; "Cherry Ripe," by Hinton; "Nocturne," by Curran; "Shepherd's Holiday," by Matthews; "The Nightingale," by Tschaikowsky; "Lullaby," by Glokey, and "Expectans Expectavi," by Wood.

THE SUN'S PULPIT.

Jesus ever dealt with common people and common things. A little child was more precious in his sight than a reigning monarch. Things minute and common formed the figures of the Kingdom as he taught men. And this revelation to his disciples came through "the breaking of bread." A familiar gesture lifted the veil that had covered their eyes. He vanished from their sight, but in that moment the Easter joy was born in their hearts. For it is not Easter until we know Him as the risen Christ. These disciples had gone to the end of the journey, not knowing him. Only as they knew this stranger on the way as their risen Christ was hope reborn.

Walking by your side on the road today, amid the discouragement and the sorrow of these heart-trying times, is the risen Christ. He walks on your road where he may find you. He speaks to your heart words that no other can say—words of hope, words of warmth, words of life. He points beyond your suffering to the glory, the blessing that is yours. Do you know this Christ on the road? Is he the Christ in your heart? You can know him. He is revealed to you.—Christian Evangelist.

OBITUARIES

HAYES.

Roger Lee Hayes, son of Plumber and Julia Ann Hayes, was born June 14, 1881, and died March 27, 1935. Aged fifty-three years, nine months and thirteen days.

On April 20, 1902, he married Miss Cora Lee Daniel and to them were born seven children, four sons and two daughters, who survive as follows: Willie Lee, Annie Lee, Robert Thomas, Zella May, Chester and Plumber. Brother Hayes' first wife died in 1923. Later he married Mrs. Lula Boyd who survives him. There is also one sister and eleven grand children surviving. Brother Hayes joined Hebron Christian Church when young and was until his death one of the most faithful members.

The funeral and burial was at his church on the afternoon of March 29th, conducted by the writer.

The church would not seat the relatives and friends who had come to pay their tribute of love and confidence for this worthy Christian gentleman.

May the blessing of God be upon his family and may they follow his example in Christian living and meet him in heaven.

C. E. NEWMAN.

CARR.

Jesse Carr was born July 23, 1867, and died April 9, 1935. He leaves his widow and four children to mourn his going.

Funeral services were conducted at the home of his daughter, Mrs. T. J. Hendrix, Portsmouth and the body was interred in the Cedar Hill cemetery, Suffolk, Va. The pastor was assisted in the services by Rev. H. S. Hardcastle and the Rev. E. G. McGhee, pastor Jackson Memorial Baptist Church.

Brother Carr embraced the Christian religion early in life, joining Beaver Dam Baptist Church, later uniting with the Suffolk Christian Church, and for the past several years had been a faithful and loyal member of the First Christian Church of Portsmouth. He left testimony concerning his reward through his fine Christian character.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Cold Enough?—

The coldest place in the world, according to new Russion Arctic maps issued recently, is Cimekon, in the Soviet Republic of Yakut, Siberia. The temperature there is reported to fall as low as 103 below zero, Farenheit.

Three-fourths of One Per Cent!—

Only three-fourths of one per cent of each dollar spent by Americans goes for religion, a survey of all churches in the country by the Golden Foundation has revealed. This compares with forty-four per cent of each dollar spent on luxury, crime and waste. It is estimated that only thirty-seven per cent of the American people profess any religion, but we think that estimate is too low.—Exchange.

Religious Faiths.—

From the Columbia University Press comes the following interesting estimate of the religious faiths of the world. It reports that if the approximately 2,000,000,000 people constituting the present population of the world were proportionately reduced, according to their religious beliefs, to 100, there would be thirty-eight Christians, nineteen Confucianists and Taoists, twelve Hindus, eleven Mohammedans, eight Buddhists, one Shintoist and one Jew.—Exchange.

Population Must Increase.—

Italy's population is not increasing fast enough to suit Mussolini, who has insisted that it must reach 60,000,000 by 1943. So he has issued a warning to Italian townsmen that they must produce children, in keeping with the spirit of the regime. It is stated that the government is becoming exasperated with the fact that "birth statistics in not a few communes have not in any way comforted the directors of the regime's demographic campaign," and henceforth appropriations for benevolent and educational activities will be made only to communities where the birth rate coefficient is not less than twenty per thousand. The dictator failed to specify the sex ratio desired, but doubtless he will get around to that a little later.—M. P.-Recorder.

Gold from Coal Ashes.—

Everyone is cognizant of the fact that sea water contains gold. There have been attempts to extract this gold, but the amount is so minute in quantity that the cost is greater than will justify. Now scientists tell us that we do not have to live on the seashore to have our gold always with us, for gold has been found in coal ashes, and even in the soot that floats from the chimney. Not only has gold been discovered there, but we are told that there is also platinum, silver, enough arsenic to be even dangerous, and fifteen other more or less rare and precious metals. There is a question whether, with the growing scarcity of gold, it will be possible to make commercial use of this discovery which was reported to the American Chemical Society by Dr. V. M. Goldschmidt, of the University of Goettingen. According to the report gold ranges in quantity in ordinary ashes from 2 to 5 parts in 100,000, while platinum runs as high as 7 parts. The arsenic content may run as high as 8 parts in a thousand.

Church Contributions Lower.—

From an exchange come the following statistics, which should cause one to stop and ponder as to the future of the Church's finances: "Twenty-three cents a week was the average contribution of Protestant Church members during the last fiscal year for all church purposes, in the United States and Canada. The previous year the average was 31 cents. This is revealed in statistics of the United Stewardship Council just compiled. It includes the figures for 25 of the leading protestant denominations. A total of $299,416,781 was contributed by 24,816,206 members. Of this amount, $246,232,501 was contributed for congregational expenses and $53,184,280 for general benevolences. A decrease of 112,113 in membership is reported in the 25 denominations. The Moravian Church leads with per capita contributions of $24.16, followed by the Reformed in America with $21.42; the Nazarene Church with $21.20; the United Presbyterian with $20.52 and the Canadian Baptists with $20. The per capita contributions of the Methodist Episcopal Church is $14.58, and of the Southern Methodists, $8.97.

Labor Committee Gives Wagner Bill Its O. K.—

The American Federation of Labor has greeted with enthusiasm the approval of the Wagner labor bill by the Senate Labor Committee. Under this bill, if passed by Congress, all employers will be compelled to deal with collective bargaining committees chosen by groups of employees. It will create a permanent labor relations board with power to carry whatever decisions it may make, and will further give the labor organization chosen by a majority of the employees the right to speak not only for that majority, but for the other employees as well. Not withstanding the denials of President Green, such legislation as this is socialistic to the nth degree. A democracy is built upon the supposition that the majority shall rule, Bolshevism also means majority rule, but it goes a step further and coerces the minority. Are we going to remain a democracy or will this country, like Russia, become bolsheviki. One would think from the communistic legislation that is being offered by some of our legislators, that employer and employee were at each other's throat. This is in no wise the truth. Agitators make a lot of noise, but most of those who work together as employer and employee are friends and have an interest in each other that is mutual.

Lame Ducks and Otherwise.—

It has not been long since the people of the United States amended their Constitution so as to do away with "lame ducks." Indeed the present session of Congress is the first to sit under the dispensation which banished lame ducks from its midst. Whether or not the present members of Congress are better men or more qualified than those that would have served if this amendment had not been passed one would hesitate to say. They were lame, and when the time came that they would waddle along no longer—the law limited the time they might remain in session—they went home. This new kind of Congress has no such limitation placed upon it. It can stay and pass laws to please or displease the President just as long as it wishes. If it passes all of the laws that the President now wants, it will meet itself coming back when it does finally adjourn. In other ways the present session of Congress has been one of the most unusual in history. To begin with, the Democrats had a record-breaking majority in each house. It was predicted that the Republicans would not be able to interfere in anything the Administration wanted, and they couldn't. But these forecasts did not take cognizance of the fact that in addition to the Republicans there were Democrats at the Capitol who had begun to think for themselves in the third year of the New Deal. Republicans have been almost silent. But some of those recognized as the ablest Democratic Senators have not been. Further extension of the power of the Secretary of Agriculture over farm products, an approach to socialization of credit through banking act changes, the strangling of holding companies, the Social Security program levying huge taxes—all of these reform measures have come under the fire of thinking, hard-hitting Democratic Senators who want recovery more than reform. Indicative of the present trend of thought is the recent statement of Roger Babson, nationally known economist, on the Washington situation. He said, citing the huge relief rolls: "In other words, every two workers are supporting one idle worker. Surely we are now paying a great price for legislation and relief. Roosevelt should now think of recovery and quit his present destructive policies. In spite of the highest taxes in our history, the nation is going into the hole at the rate of $281,000,000 per month, or $66,000,000 per week, or $6,500 a minute. Never before in the history of the world has any nation so deliberately unbalanced its budget as the United States is doing at the present time."

LIFE.

By I. A. BARNES.

The most familiar thing with which we come in daily contact is life yet it is the most mysterious thing in the universe, and we know the least about it. The origin of life is shrouded in mysteries of "The beginning," and all that we know about it is confined to its manifestation and transmission. Authenticated scientific experiments have demonstrated that there is no such thing as spontaneous generation, but that life is transmitted by life.

In the two kinds of life manifestations that we designate as animal and vegetable life, there are these differences: the seeds or transmission element in vegetable life may remain dormant for a long period of time, but in animal life it is always active. And animal life has locomotion while vegetable life has only one motion. One of the most wonderful and interesting things about life is the infinite variety of forms, both in the animal and vegetable orders. From the amoeba, or single cell animal up to the great mastodon, life is found in every conceivable form. But the truth is forced upon us that the forms of life are dependent upon vitality; that life is everywhere and always precedes form. The life forces really construct the forms in which life is manifested. So that there can be no question but that life as a vital force is older than any form of life. Whence then, cometh life upon the earth?

There has been much speculation as to the origin of variety in the forms of life, whether of heredity and environment, but none of these attempt to explain the origin of the vital force which we call life. "In the beginning God," is perhaps the most satisfying explanation that man will ever have. And if we can have an intelligent conception of what we mean by God, we should have no fears for the ultimate destiny of the human family.

Jesus said, "As the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself." He said also, "I am come that ye may have more abundant life." Some people seem to live so much more than others. To them life means more than mere existence. Vital union and fellowship with Jesus is the source and secret of the abundant life, as well as the hope of everlasting life.

Men live and die, but the stream of life is not interrupted, man lives on.—Exchange.

JESUS AND THE FIG TREE.

Jesus spent many nights in Bethany; and at one time, as He returned to the city in the morning, He hungered. "And when He saw a fig tree in the way, He came to it, and found nothing thereon, but leaves only, and said unto it, Let no fruit grow on thee henceforth forever. And presently the fig tree withered away. And when the disciples saw it, they marvelled, saying, How soon is the fig tree withered away!" (Matt. 21:19-20.) Jesus did not curse the fig tree that He might gratify personal sentiment. He was never vindictive. Jesus was hungry, and the tree offered no food. It failed to contribute to the human need, was a worthless plant that produced only leaves. It simply cumbered the ground. The fig tree met its Creator and had no fruit to commend it. A fine suggestion; for man, too, some day must meet his God, and how will it be then? If man has not contributed to the world's needs, but has only existed and occupied space, how will he fare in the judgment? The barren fig tree furnished the occasion, and Jesus supplied the lesson. The miracle contained a religious implication.—W. F. Ledlow, in "Jesus and His Methods."

KIND HEARTS CIRCLE THE GLOBE.

In a railway station at The Hague, Holland, as I was last of the Christian Endeavor party to get to the gate opening to our train, the gateman shook his head over my ticket and sputtered as if something were wrong.

It was all "Dutch" to me. All I could do was point to my C. E. badge, and to our excursion train over there, bearing its C. E. streamers.

He hastily called a substitute, and, taking me by the arm, led me to a man at a desk, and both looked troubled, shook their heads and jabbered together in Dutch.

I sensed there must be some irregularity in the ticket; perhaps I could not go on to Paris with the others! My heart sank. They took me and my ticket to a man at another desk, and more discussion followed, not a word of which I understood. Then, presently, a bit of paper was attached to it, bearing an official stamp.

My gateman's face brightened as he took my arm and hurried me back to his gate. There was not a moment to lose before the train would leave. Already they were closing the coach doors. He looked worried, but not more than I felt.

Then the troubled gateman smiled at me encouragingly. He took me by the arm again and, motioning his substitute to remain there on duty, he hurried me across the tracks to my train, by a nearer way than I could have found alone, shouting and waving the conductor to wait.

And when I was shoved aboard the already moving train, he smiled gladly at me again, as he gave my hand a parting friendly squeeze.

He had done as he would have had me do to him. I wonder how many American gate-keepers would have done as much for a bewildered "Dutchman"? Many! There are kind hearts all around the world.—John F. Cowan in The Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

SOME STEWARDSHIP PROBLEMS ON CHRISTIAN STANDARDS OF LIVING.

When we examine the teaching and principles of Jesus on the matter of the use of money, many real questions confront the Christian. Have you considered such questions as these:

1. Simple or luxurious living?
2. What is necessity? Luxury? What is "enough"?
3. What about the attitude of life as shown by Kagawa, John J. Eagan, Sherwood Eddy, Muriel Lester, Albert Schweitzer, the Doctors Mayo, Fritz Kreisler and others?
4. What must be a Christian's practice on matters of food, clothing, shelter in view of the need of multitudes in our country and the world and in view of the needs of worthy causes?
5. Is it right for a Christian to live in luxury if he can afford to do so?
6. Is it a duty to save?
7. When does saving become hoarding?
8. Is there a Christian motive for saving?
9. Are there spiritual dangers in saving?
10. With multitudes in desperate, immediate need, can we love our neighbors as ourselves and justify saving for possible future needs?
11. Has a Christian a right to leave his family a large sum of money at his death?
12. What are you going to say to this, "I have earned my money honestly, whose business is it how I spend it?
13. How much of one's income should go back into his business?
14. How big a business has one a moral right to build?
15. What about "keeping up with the Joneses"?
16. Can we live richly without display?
17. Should personal expenses increase as income increases?

The Christian use and spending of money is one of the greatest problems men and women have to face. Why not form a group or study club in your church and discuss together informally such questions as the above and those occurring each week in THE CHRISTIAN SUN?

THE SPIRITUAL NERVE.

The Council for Social Action of the Congregational and Christian Churches that came to birth last June at Oberlin is the child of spiritual travail. For years the emotional conviction of the churches that Christianity is vitally interested in the Kingdom of heaven on earth has been a growing and deepening one. An emotional conviction, unless it is given intellectual content and meaning, tends either to wear itself away in foolish talk and irrational action, or else end in spiritual weariness and the sense of futility. Small detachments can discover ways and means but the army must begin to march in might.

No one can question the worthwhileness of the urge for the coming of the Kingdom of Heaven on earth. That the Kingdom is a matter of bread and butter, shelter, beauty, open opportunity, security for all men, fellowship with God, there can be no question among people who know the New Testament or the spirit of Jesus. That there are brains enough in the world and potential abundance at hand to make the Kingdom a possibility, given time, there is but little doubt among those who know the facts. What is wanted then, is the will to achieve, not the impossible, but the possible.

Two needs confront us: light and power. The churches require light from the Council for Social Action. What are the social facts? Do the churches have instruments to ascertain them? Of course, churchmen, like other men, have at their disposal all the sources of whatever facts are known. Then they can observe for themselves. But are there sources of social facts that have to do, primarily, with the social strivings of the peoples, in the light of the professed beliefs of the churches? To me, at least, the birth of the Council was the result of the will to be wiser in the matters that concern the warping, the crushing, or the saving of the souls of men. To me it does not mean this kind of economic order, or that kind, but merely the facts for the Christian conscience to act upon. There need be no fear of the Council running away with the churches. If it acts in a way I disapprove, for instance, I shall be forthright in my speaking against its conclusions or acts. There are about one million others who will do the same thing.

The other matter, and to me a most important one, is the spiritual drive that is imperative if the Council is to be a permanent blessing to the churches. How shall we conceive of this new child of our fellowship? Is it born of man or of God? Is it solely a will to serve the people? That is a matter to be reckoned with, always. Is it, on the other hand, a discovery in the will to serve the people the will of God? That is the greater motive.

In the Hebrew prophets and in Jesus the will to serve God was a major note. Elijah knew the will to drive the worshippers of Baal from the land to be the will of God. Amos heard in the cry of the hungry child and saw in the face of the oppressed widow at Jerusalem the summons of God to him to speak. The Unknown Singer of the Exile saw in the suffering servant the agony at the heart of God because of the wrongdoings of people. Jesus heard the voice of God come to him through the call of the hungry, the cry of the fearful and the despair of youth over a bright and shining way that was closed to them. God, to him, was not a Being afar nor a disinterested One who had other concerns that were deeper than his regard for the ordinary man of the street. The tragedy of the people was the tragedy in God's own heart. The spiritual drive that sent Jesus to his ministry and to his cross was the knowledge that not only was his own life inseparably linked with the lives of his own people and the people of all times and places, but that God was also in the midst of the struggle, and that to him had come the call of God to be his voice and his life in time.

Now the future of the Council for Social Action among the churches depends upon these two facts: how it carries on its work and what is its driving might. Are the churches convinced that they should be interested in the social well-being of all the people, merely? Surely the churches are composed of human beings who share with other human beings in a common interest in, and care for, the people who live in our present world and who will live in the world as it is to be. But this is not enough. Churches exist because there is a conviction that God cares, also; cares even to the extent of a cross.

Of course there will be differences of opinion as to the conclusions to be drawn from whatever findings the new Council may present to the churches. There also will be the clashes of judgments as to what ought to be done. The very nature of persons and the sacred traditions of our churches demand that this be so. It is good that it is so and the Council could not wish it otherwise. The more basic thing is this: the Council and the churches alike must hear—in the desperate need of the peoples now, and the tragic results for the future unless wise and consecrated efforts are made to put the churches at the service of these needs—nothing other than the summons of God to serve in his name. His voice can be heard, in these times, if we have ears to hear, just as much as he could be heard when Amos left sheep-tending for prophesying, and Jesus came out of the wilderness to teach, to minister, and to die.

For the churches to wrangle over methods only would be tragic. To strive to meet social needs of the time merely as social needs would be to go to battle but half-accoutered. To seek to heal the hurt of the world, with the deep sense that in its hurt God is hurt and that he is a Comrade in all social efforts, is the living nerve that can feed the churches sufficient life to make them strong and enduring in the new crusade.—By Walter Amos Morgan in Advance.

A HYMN OF PEACE.

TUNE: "All Saints."

The Son of God, the Prince of Peace
Seeks all the world to gain
To brotherhood and common good;
Who follows in his train?
Who best can curb his own desire,
And selfish pride restrain;
Who quenches hate's unholy fire,
He follows in his train.

All fearless souls who love their land,
But claim no better birth
Than that which makes humanity
Akin through all the earth;
Who will not seek by pow'r nor might
Another land to chain;
Who lose themselves to win the right:
These follow in his train.

Make firm our courage, Prince of Peace,
Unite our wills as one,
That we from striving may not cease
Until thy peace be won.
Give us thy strength to bear thy cross,
Be true, in spite of pain;
O Christ, to us may grace be given
To follow in thy train.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

WHAT IS LACKING IN THE CHURCH?

The Sun's editor while in the Sanitarium the past several weeks was happy in the acquaintance of a very intelligent and zealous layman of our Congregational fellowship—Chas. S. Bates, Exeter, N. H. Brother Bates was for many years on the Prudential Committee of our fellowship and, through his more than sixty years of church experience, has held many places of influence and distinction in the church. It is his delight to talk about the church, and more particularly the essential need of the church today as he sees it. Of such interest were his views that the editor asked if he would allow for the columns of The Sun some of his ideas as to what was lacking in the church and what could give the church more power and prestige in the world today. As to what is lacking, Brother Bates declares emphatically:

"Men, Christian young men, strong, virile, active, who have given their hearts to Christ and are walking in the Jesus way of life.

Boys in our Sunday School. If eighty per cent of the Church members come out of the Sunday School; we need boys in the Sunday School if we are to have men in the churches of the future.

Preachers, who are evangelistic in sermon and service and are preaching under the conscious guidance and inspiration of the Holy Spirit. Our records show a year in which one third of all our churches in the United States had no members unite on confession. I can't imagine what they were doing, but results show what they were not doing—they were not bringing any souls into the Kingdom of God.

The Churches lack an earnest loyal Christian membership in both men and women. Members who are truly saved, who have had an experience of Christ, who read their Bibles, believe in prayer, attend prayer meetings, go to Sunday School, whose works witness to a live active Christian faith.

I used to think attendance at the Prayer Meetings was a measure of the Spiritual strength of the Church. What is the percentage of spiritual power in a church membership of 250 to 300 where from 11 to 14 go to prayer meeting? And some churches are giving up their mid-week meeting altogether as not worth while. It's too bad, but it's being done."

Then as to what can be done about it, Brother Bates declares most emphatically that "direct personal evangelism is the cure and the only hope of the church—bearing witness to unsaved men and women, boys and girls on the part of those who are saved and in the church." He says with deep concern:

"I don't have to quote scripture to convince you that every soul Jesus does not save is lost; that unbelief is sin, that the wages of sin is death. We should not minimize the power and penalty of sin. I doubt if there was ever a time when the visibility of sin, in all walks of life, was clearer than it is today; and we should not minimize the vast difference between the soul that is saved and the soul that is lost, for the difference is as that between heaven and hell.

What can we do? If the Church needs men, we can go after them. Jesus came down from the glory He had with His Father to save men. You know about it. And before His ascension, He told His apostles that they were to be His witnesses. He told them all power in heaven and earth was given to Him, and He would always be with them. And down through the centuries to this day that promise is good to all who are witnesses in spirit and in truth. If we have deep enough convictions about the truth of the gospel to be anxious about the lost souls around us, we will be willing to be witnesses for Christ to them individually after meditation, and prayer for the inspiration and guidance of the Holy Spirit.

"The man out of whom Jesus cast the devils, that ran a herd of 2,000 swine into the sea, prayed Him that he might be with Him, but Jesus said, "No," and told him to go home to his friends and tell them what great things the Lord had done for him. We can go home and share our vision of Christ with our friends. That's personal evangelism.

"Each of us has probably had an experience of Christ. We know that our Redeemer liveth, and that the peace of God that passeth understanding is keeping our hearts and minds through Christ Jesus. We have friends and acquaintances, perhaps relatives or even members of our own families, who are not Christians, who know them, that they are lost souls.
however much we may admire or esteem or love not Christ as Lord and Saviour; and we know,

"What are we doing about it? Have we convictions enough to cause us to act as witnesses of Christ in a personal way, after meditation and prayer under the guidance and inspiration of the Holy Spirit, by going to them individually, sharing our vision with them, and asking them, yes pleading with them to turn from the darkness of unbelief to the light of knowledge of the glory of God in Jesus Christ! Can there be any question of our being able to do this, with Jesus holding all power in heaven and earth and with us always?"

When church members, real members of the body of our Lord, shall share the spirit of the early Apostle, and many of the saints since, and be willing to be humble witnesses for our Lord amongst our neighbors and our neighbors' sons and daughters who are out of Christ and unsaved, then the Church will retrieve her lost powers and become a mighty power in building up the kingdom of heaven on earth.

THE FIRST AND LAST PAGES.

A Baltimore paper of Saturday, February 16, 1935, carried on its first and last pages a comedy and a tragedy, both of which seemed to have had the same cause.

A colored man, befuddled by drink, wanted to make a withdrawal of some money which he had in bank. His mind was so confused by the liquor that he could not think of the regular way of getting at his funds, so he staggered into the building, kicked in one plate glass door and broke the glass in the teller's window. He caused a lot of excitement by the people of the bank, thinking it was an attempted robbery. He was arrested and the reporter made a humorous story of the incident. The little affair received what was really a clever write-up.

A high school girl was hit by an automobile on a broad street a few blocks from our home. She was thrown 35 feet and died three hours later in the hospital. A policeman in a nearby station heard the grinding of the brakes but before he could reach the scene the hit-and-run driver was out of sight. A neighbor saw the car slow up and heard a woman's voice cry, "Beat it, Larry," and the automobile sped away making no effort to aid the injured girl. A bottle half empty of whiskey was found near the body and it is thought that it was thrown out of the car at the time of the accident.

The acts of two minds muddled by booze thus appeared on the first and last pages of a daily paper and in the center of that was an editorial protesting against any raise in the tariff on wines in order to increase their use. The same paper on the day before had carried 214 inches of liquor and bar room advertisements. The journal may congratulate itself that it not only receives revenues from whiskey advertisements but can fill its columns with stories of deeds done while in liquor. A journalistic conscience is a queer thing and yet a plain man asks, how can those who profit from the promotion of the sale of alcohol be free from the blame of the consequences of its consumption?

There sleeps in death a girl, one of ten children from a humble home, a girl so ambitious for an education that she was working at night in order to get through high school. Her life was snuffed out because a man and a woman were out riding with a bottle. Somewhere a man named "Larry" drives an automobile. The car may bear no tell-tale blood spots but there is blood on his hands and the mark of Cain is on his soul. There is a woman somewhere, known only to her companion in crime and to the all-seeing eye of God, who is an accessory to the murder after the fact. Everything womanly and human in her for an awful moment died as she urged her man who had killed another woman to leave the broken, bleeding, suffering girl in the road and make the escape from identification in the darkness. What congealed the souls of a man and woman into such heartlessness? Was it the stuff in the bottle that was lying beside the body as the only clue to the perpetrators of the tragedy?

We feel like the responsibility for this murder lies not alone on those who drank the liquor from the bottle but those who sold it, and on those who promoted the sale by advertisement and those who made the public promotion and sale of it possible by legalizing the traffic in the drug that confuses the mind and hardens the heart of mankind until tragedy and comedy make their Devil's brew in our daily papers. It may be unfair to be too hard on anybody in the face of such things but it is really awful. The best that we can do is to pray for those who killed this fine young girl: "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do."

IS THE CHURCH A FAILURE?

By Torrance Phelps.

What is the church doing to correct the evils of society? What does all the effort of ministers, religious teachers and church societies accomplish to advance the welfare of the nation? Why doesn't the church advocate a special program to abolish poverty and to provide for human wants? What good is the church? Is it passing away?

These are questions upon the lips of many people, some of whom are sincere and some chronic cynics. Nothing is more necessary today than for those who believe in the church to show the immense contribution it has made and will continue to make to the life of the world.

What forces created this modern world in which it is safe for the critic himself to live? Nineteen hundred years ago Europe was a wilderness of barbarians. But Christian missionaries, working silently over vast areas, slowly converted them. Generation after generation they taught the Christian morality of purity, mercy and usefulness. As a direct result, barbaric Europe gradually became a group of civilized nations with the semblance of stable political and economic institutions. To what other influence would the critic ascribe this transformation? What other forces antedated Christianity to turn the warring tribes of Gaul into organized nations? If the Christian missionaries had not gone to England and humanized our fierce flesh-eating ancestors, what other influence would have established Anglo-Saxon civilization? In all the Ancient World where was there any impulse to progress except in the movement Jesus inspired?

The critics of the church ought, at least, to acknowledge that Christian social patterns, the ethics of the prophets and the Sermon on the Mount have been the source of the modern conception of democracy, education and social service.

A stable civilization has never sprung up save where Christian idealism has been taught. The principles are the foundation of our noblest modern institutions. Lyman Abbott said that we can trace our highest political and social categories to the Scriptures.

Suppose Jesus and the Prophets had never lived; who, then, would have been the teachers to supply the creative ideals of civilization? Would the disciples of Buddha and Confucius and Plato have converted Gaul and erected the modern world? Who would need to answer such a preposterous question? Gibbons, the historian, said that if Charles Martel, who was the front-line trench of the early semi-Christian movement, had not defeated the Moslem at Tours, Europe today would be a Mohammedan stronghold. Would there, then, have been an America?

The point is that through the tumultous centuries, drenched with barbaric warfare, the church has preserved the Christian principles of character and social service and transmitted them through its persistent minorities. Of course no age or nation has ever been wholly Christian, but Christian only in spots, or in certain conspicuous leaders, saints and groups. But who can deny that Christianity has furnished the basis of the best in the modern world and transmitted this inheritance through the church? Lecky, the historian, said: "The ideal of character furnished by Christianity through all the changes of eighteen centuries has not only been the highest pattern of virtue, but the highest incentive to its practice."

To those who ask what the church has done to promote human welfare or social justice, we may answer you by pointing to the critic himself. Where, Mr. Critic, did you get your ideals of family life, of education, or your social philosophy? Did you receive them from reading the Koran or the Vedas? Were you not reared in a home or community where the religion of Jesus and the Prophets was taught? What have you that you did not receive from the gospel?

It is true that the church has often been a constructive institution and that social reforms have often emerged from men and women outside its pale; nevertheless, even these, apparently non-religious leaders, had consciously or unconsciously derived their ideals from religious sources—a Christian home or a Christian school. These idealists shine by reflected light. The social pattern of behavior which they demand have been broadcast through centuries of Christian ministry, and as rays of a star permeate the void, so the teachings of Jesus Christ proclaimed by the church have leavened literature, art and the general social mind.

We would be quick to acknowledge that the church ought to exercise greater influence upon social institutions, but our present contention is that the best in modern life is the result of the efforts of the church to proclaim Christianity. Who, then, can deny, in the light of history, that the Christian religion has been the source of philanthropy, social ideals and service?. Is it not also a fact that the bulk of the members of all the boards of all movements for social service or for character building agencies, whether for youth or delinquents, are affiliated with the churches? For only in Christian nations do we find movements for reform, democracy and universal education. Even economic and political stability can only exist where the church has flourished long enough to sow the seeds.

In reply to the critics as to the futility of the church in the present crisis, can we not say that it is still motivating social progress and is the continuous source of social idealism? What else is doing it? From what other source than the Christian movement do the critics derive their ideals and their social vision? The church today is teaching with clarion voice the supreme value of personality and its enrichment as our primary concern. The principles which alone can create this world which liberals demand are the heart of the gospel. If men would but practice the Golden Rule, the Beatitudes and the Sermon on the Mt., there would be no economic problem. If we could have an awakening of the genuine religious spirit and realize that life does not consist in the abundance of things one possesses, and that the purpose of life is to grow in love, and live these principles in all social life, then poverty and disorder would disappear.

It is a remarkable fact, that as we survey history, the church has been the stabilizing factor restraining mob violence and inspiring that respect for law and orderly procedure which is the basis for security. Surely we must recognize that the fundamental element in the social structure is the high capacity of the individual for moral self-government, and even if the church has only centered on this factor in the past it has earned the gratitude of humanity. Let us hope that men will see the wisdom of building the coming age upon an orderly process of social evolution whose creative impulse is the Divine Spirit, and whose goal is Jesus' ideal commonwealth—the Kingdom of God.—Advance.

LIBERAL RELIGION IN A CHANGING WORLD.

Two forces have upset the entire human world today. First, liberal religious and social ideals. Second, colonization and imperial expansion on the part of dominant races. The last four hundred years have witnessed the vastest migrations of huge populations in human history.

These forces have thrown the world into confusion, and at the same time have consolidated world-wide empires of political and economic power. We have come to the end of expansion by population movements and have entered the era of co-operative development. Our white race has developed its culture and civilization by deserting old territories and settling in new. We have conquered the wealth of other peoples and have appropriated it to our own use. This has weakened others and has thrown them into a spirit of social revolt.

We are, therefore, today in only the first phase of the new world culture. There are always two periods in every movement toward human emancipation. First, the breakdown of old restrictions, the loosening of old walls and foundations. The second period is the consolidation of gains—the actual welding together of the emerging social structure and making it secure under new conditions.

The world was previously built around sectional cultures, as, for instance, the Hindu. Millions of people found their codes of conduct in Hindu forms of civilization. Restrictions limited them to certain individual and social expressions. They were able to stand on their feet without falling. There was no confusion. But suddenly, this sectional culture was overwhelmed by occidental, imperial impact. It was broken, shattered. And the Hindu populations were actually decimated. Millions of Hindu fathers and mothers became panic-stricken about their children and their security for the future. This same break-down of limited sectional cultures has overwhelmed the Buddhist world, the Mohammedan world, the European Christian world and the American Puritan world. There never was a really universal world culture. Consequently, the poise and character of each national or religious or cultural group was brought about by mutually exclusive codes of conduct. At present, every sectional culture has been blasted by the high pressure of modern scientific, social, economic and religious impacts. Everywhere, people are groping, having been swept off their feet.

The vital test of liberal religion is to direct, so far as possible, the formation of a world culture so that people will know how to act without fear or failure in every part of the modern world. We need liberal, universal codes of conduct that are applicable in Japan, India, Africa, Europe, America. If liberal religion cannot make a unity out of these confused cultural segments, then we are absolutely bound to revert to conflicting sectional groups through dictatorships and imposed authority. We are at the crossroads between liberal advance and a reversal to a feudalistic type.

This new international, interracial and interreligious impact has not resulted as we expected. Political empire-builders thought they could remake conquered people into carbon copies of their home populations. But this has failed. Missionaries thought they could convert and change vast native populations into their own likeness. This, too, has failed. We have a new world, seething, awake, progressive, but not what we bargained for. These world-wide racial uprisings have a powerful kick-back. Russia flings back our own social ideas into our face. And in many ways she has pressed our back against the wall by the sudden adoption of our social ideals and then ap-

SUFFOLK LETTER.

"I believe in the resurrection." That is a fundamental part of the creed of Christianity. Men may arrive at different conclusions in explaining their theories. Life does not depend upon theory; it precedes all science, disdains all philosophy, and overwhelms the imagination.

Nature is giving man some beautiful lessons on resurrection. A fig bush in my back yard furnishes one example. During the winter all of the branches dried up and showed no evidences of life. To all appearances the cold weather had killed it. But the spring days came bringing warmth; and that mysterious force called life, which had slumbered through the long winter, was aroused and began creeping up into those dry branches. There was no noise. The process was slow and the task tedious. As time went on the color and texture of the branches changed, and little spots of green appeared on the lower parts of the limbs. Little figs burst out in several places. Then the leaves appeared. today there are several tips of dry branches swelling under the silent force of resurrection life; and the buds of green are surely awaiting their time to open and join the green leaves which now cover the other parts of the bush.

This fig bush is an illustration of what is going on in many forms, in forest and farm, in trees and shrubs, in flower gardens and orchards, throughout the world, in the glorious springtime. Who can understand the fig tree and the flower garden? Who cares to wait for an understanding of this mystery of nature? Agnostics and infidels join with the saints of the earth in eating food from field and garden; they vie with each other in beholding the beauty of fragrant flowers. Why not accept the truth of that larger life "hid with Christ in God"?

It is reassuring to believers to think of the joy of the resurrection. For the resurrection is more than a doctrine of theology, or a dogma of the Church. The new life of budding spring does not end with putting forth of leaf and flower. Growth must continue to make preparation for another season and a larger life. Springtime is the beginning of new growth and new life. And this spiritual world, in which people move and have their being, is only a beginning. After the story of Easter, in sermon and song, the Church should show evidences of growth and development. Individual, personal life and testimony should bear the impress of spiritual aspiration and expectant hope. It is a high privilege to be a witness for Jesus Christ. The world will read and interpret Christianity by the lives of the followers of Jesus.

There are many ways to cultivate the deeper spiritual life. But the first objective is to find this eternal life. "What must I do to inherit eternal life?" That is the real question of lost humanity. It is the only question worth serious consideration, until one finds the answer in Jesus. Having found the answer and the life, one is entitled to all the promises and power of God in unfolding the possibilities of immortality. The Bible is the chart, the church is the institution and the fellowship of fellow Christians reveals the way of this life. In spite of all the sin, and sorrow, and sordid wickedness of the world, there are millions of devout souls in whose lives the glory of the cross and the resurrection may be discovered. There are old people who can no longer enjoy the fellowship of the church service. But they sit by the wide open window and read their precious old Book until they are tired and fall asleep with the wide open Book upon their knees. They awake and look through the window upon the awakening life in the great out-of-doors. And, somehow, in a way we cannot explain and with a faith which is unwavering, and a hope which is without fear, they look out into another world, with the calm and expectant confidence that they have eternal life within. There are people with broken health who do likewise. Youth may have the same privilege and opportunity. Jesus lives. They who believe in Him shall live. And they may—they should be—living for Him today.

THE ANNUAL MISSIONARY OFFERING—AN APPEAL.

For several years, the Mission Board of the Southern Convention has been asking the churches of the Convention to contribute annually for missions an amount equal to one-third as much as they pay their pastors. That is, our churches have been asked to give one-third as much for the preaching of the gospel to others as they give to have the gospel preached to themselves. The time set for the receiving of this offering from the churches is Easter Sunday. The Convention felt that, at this particular season of the year when naturally the mind and heart of the church would be turned definitely toward Christ in gratitude, this was the time to express our gratitude in a substantial way. Many of our churches have approved the plan and taken the matter of offering for missions seriously and have given generously. Others, apparently, have been more or less indifferent and have contributed but little for the cause of missions through our church. On the whole, the plan has been of great benefit to the larger interests of our Church.

Running true to custom, however, at the recent session of the Convention, we changed our plans for receiving from the churches money for the support of our missionary interests. By Convention action, the missionary offering, so far as the churches are concerned, was put back in conference apportionments, allocating for this cause 32 per cent of the total amount asked from the churches for all Convention purposes. This does not mean, however,—and I trust that no church will so construe it—that the churches are not expected to make their offerings for missions now; but quite to the contrary. The churches are not only expected but urged to make their offerings and to make them generously now. It would be fatal to much of our missionary interests for the churches to wait until the meeting of their annual conference to make their contributions to missions.

The Mission Board has its plans and has assumed its obligations—obligations that require monthly and regular payments at stated periods. It cannot wait until fall for receipts. At present, our Board finds itself somewhat embarrassed as it faces these various demands, which include financial obligations to certain mission points at home that must be met or the ones in charge of our home mission points will not only be embarrassed but tremendously handicapped in carrying out their program of Christian Education; and, further, the Mission Board is under obligation to help with salaries of mission pastors. These pastors have families to support and other obligations to meet; and unless the Mission Board meets its obligations to them, they will simply be in want. Perhaps our larger obligation is to points and missionaries beyond the home field. The American Board is looking to our Southern Convention for generous contributions. The offerings are needed now. We should not delay in helping to meet these immediate demands. The present plan of our Southern Board is to divide the money received annually between home and foreign demands.

This, then, is an appeal—an earnest appeal—to allindividuals and churches of our constituency who have not made their annual missionary offering to please make the same as early as possible. While the plan in receiving money for the support of our mission work has been changed, the sums asked for have not been materially changed and the time for the receiving of the annual offerings from the churches remains the same. Last Sunday, Easter Sunday, was the date set for the offerings from the churches. At Elon College, the weather was most unfavtorable. Sunday was preceded by a downpour of rain; and at the time of service, the clouds had not broken and the rain was still falling. If the same weather conditions obtained throughout the Southern Convention, many were unable to attend the Easter Services. Consequently, our offerings for missions were adversely affected. The clouds have lifted, the weather is inviting; and as you have the opportunity of attending your church services, won't you please make your offering for missions?

All departments of our church must be adequately supported if we are to have a forward-looking program and are to put that program into effect. We cannot lift one part of our denominational structure without deference to the whole structure. If we attempt such a thing, the whole plan breaks and but little good is accomplished. We need to get an adequate and sympathetic view of our whole church program and then to place itual—back of that program with the consecrated oll of our resources—physical, material, and spirdetermination that the whole job shall be accomplished. We need to get an adequate and sympathetic view of our whole church program and then to place all of our resources—physical, material, and spiritual—back of that program with the consecrated determination that the whole job shall be accomplished fully and completely. Do not fail to make your annual missionary offering through your church, to our Mission Board.

LENTEN SERVICES AT THE CHRISTIAN TEMPLE.

The Christian Temple had special Lenten services during the two weeks leading up to Easter, which were a great help to the church. Rev. Walter Spooner, Supt. of the Middle Atlantic Conference of Congregational-Christian Churches, was the guest speaker and he brought sincere, earnest, evangelistic messages throughout the series of meetings. He spoke out of an experience of Christ for himself, and out of a background of personal and pastoral evangelism which gave interest and reality to his message. In spite of the inclement weather, during the first week especially, the services were well attended, but as is so often the case, those who attended were, for the most part, professing Christians and members of the Church. As a result there were few professions in the meetings themselves, but Dr. Spooner's efforts bore fruit, for on Easter Sunday morning thirty-one people, a number of them adults and young people, united with the church, many of them on profession of faith. There were others who were not able to be present who had expressed a desire to unite with the church. Three baby girls were consecrated at this service.

The Temple choir, in addition to rendering special Easter numbers at the morning service, presented a program of Easter Music at the evening service. As is the custom the evening program was devoted to music. Mrs. S. H. Ferebee is the beloved and efficient organist and leader of the choir, and she has a supporting cast of faithful and willing members. They presented a musical program with organ and voice. It was a fitting climax to a great day.

plying them with the technique of coercion and force which we ourselves taught her. Japan flung back our own imperial and military technique, raising it to the ultimate degree and using it with greater power and finesse than we ourselves have been able to do. India, with the Oriental emotional tendency to leap immediately into the ultimate form, has adopted our Sermon on the Mount, and now flings it back into our own teeth. Our little secular, material, Western minds are shocked when a man like Gandhi even dresses like our Christ on a cross. We poke fun at him when he literally takes the words and the principles of Jesus as a practical program of life. We are perfectly willing to kneel at a shrine and superstitiously worship a naked Christ on a cross provided that Christ is two thousand years old. But when a man in a seething population that is in revolt, actually and dynamically challenges our economic and political and racial imperialism by an appeal to that Christ that we worship, we turn away from him or oppose him. In other words, we worship our ideals of supreme brotherhood and sacrifice so long as they are distant, but they scare us to death when anyone demands that we live them.

A New Religion in a New World. The new liberal dynamic will have three qualities:

First, it will be scientific. It need not, however, feel compelled to explain everything in rational terms. The profoundest wisdom in every age acknowledges, without apology, the existent mysteries of the universe in which we live.

Second, it will be ethical. But its ethics will be based on principles broad enough for every race and every culture and will not seek to build up its unity through petty restrictions or inhibitions or rules.

Third, it will be mystical but without superstition. The mysticism will consist in the deep drives of human nature toward that something hidden, and as yet unattained, toward which every race presses by a mystical expectation.

Our Free Church Fellowship must become a dynamic, living, irrepressible organism—a spiritual, mental, human unity. It will fail if it seeks to develop an ecclecticism or, in other words, a mere forced amalgamism of inconsistent forms. It will never get on if it remains in a trance of mere tolerance. It must become a home for free spirits —a pattern for a free man's behavior. It must develop new codes of free conduct that will stand tottering, modern men on their feet and that will bind decimated groups into sympathetic unity.

We moderns living in this twentieth century must remember that we have, by conscious and by unconscious high pressure methods, broken and blasted old cultural foundations. We have lifted old walls of protection off these foundations. But we have not developed a new support, a new discipline, a new protection. In other words, we have been tearing things down without a thought of the new structure that is to take their places. Liberal religion up to the present time has been principally a release from older forms of faith; but the task which confronts it now is to become a great constructive force and to build a new religion for this new world.—By Fred B. Fisher in Advance.

A SPRING STORY.

Dorothy was sick and sad. For many weeks she had lain in her bed full of pain. At first she was bright and cheerful, but as the days passed she lost her brightness; she grew gloomy and vexed. "I shall never be well again," she would say, but the doctor only laughed and said, "Be brave, little maid, and when the spring comes you will soon be well."

"When spring comes"—oh! but what a long, long time spring was in coming. The cold winds blew and blew, rain and frost, snow and hail. "Oh!" sighed Dorothy, "spring will never come." She could see the garden through her window, and all was bare and dead. "Spring will never come."

Gradually the days grew longer and brighter—there were sounds in the garden, twittering of birds. "Surely something is happening," thought Dorothy. Mother smiled at her and said, "Spring is coming, darling," Day by day Dorothy looked from her window; she saw the tiny shoots appearing; she saw the buds opening on the trees. Surely, surely all that seemed dead was alive again. Once more the sad-faced girl began to smile and slowly, yes, slowly, the pains in her limbs gradually grew less, and then disappeared. Oh! the joy of the days when Dorothy could get out of bed and could go downstairs, and then at length go out into the beautiful new spring world.

Dorothy had never been so excited and interested in the waking world. Every day she found something new; she watched the flowers, the grass, the trees. She watched the birds building their nests, she saw the lambs in the fields. "Oh! it's a happy world," she said as she hummed a song she used to sing at school:

"The year's at the spring,
The day's at the morn,
Morning's at seven.
The hillside's dew-pearled,
The lark's on the wing,
The snail's on the thorn,
God's in His heaven,
All's right with the world."

—Browning.

When Sunday came, and the bells in the old church rang out calling, calling all to worship, Dorothy went, oh! so gladly, to sing her thanks to the God of the springtime.

What a wonderful time of worship it was. Dorothy thought of the Psalm which begins:

"I was glad when they said unto me
Let us go into the house of the Lord."

As she sat quietly and listened to all that was said, she thought of the Great Father in Heaven, so great, so good, so gracious, so mighty, yet caring for His children, giving them all things in season. "Thank you, thank you, Father, for the spring," was the glad song in her heart as she went homeward. "Thank you, thank you for the spring," the little birds seemed to say. "Thank you, thank you for the spring," the nodding trees and the budding flowers answered. "Thank you, thank you for the spring," the sunbeams danced. "Thank you for the spring," we too say here today.—From the Christian Advocate, Birmingham, England.

If the men who are preparing for the Christian ministry can be fired with the gospel of peace within half a generation, the churches everywhere will renounce war as a sin against God. —Rev. Leyton Richards.

ATTENTION! WOMEN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.

The program committee of the Women's Missionary Convention of the Southern Convention is eager to place an abundance of material in your hands, to help you make the programs of your society more inspiring and educational One source of materials, especially of Worship Services, is the "President's Exchange." I wish to bring this abundant supply of helps to the attention of every society in our Southern Convention and to invite and urge you to join the Presidents' Exchange at once.

Does your society belong? If not, why not enroll at once? Do you know how to enroll and what the cost is? You enroll simply by writing to Mrs. D. E. Brown, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York City, giving the name of some person, preferably your President, to whom the material may be sent. You will then begin to receive abundant and helpful materials monthly, usually several times a month. Now for the cost. No money is required—all you are asked is that once a year your society will send in to Mrs. Brown some program you have worked out for your own church, whether it be large or small. This request need not frighten you, as the work is undertaken for small churches, and the materials you receive have in turn been prepared and used by churches and then passed on to you. There is one woman in every church capable of developing a good program. Simply send this in, and you will repay the President's Exchange for all the fine things it does for you.

Mrs. Brown wrote me concerning the work of the Presidents' Exchange, and I am going to take the liberty of sharing parts of her letter with you. She writes: "This service was started to help women in churches of small leadership to take advantage of programs prepared by other groups. The contributors are from all over the country and you are right when you say that we solicit, in return for this service, some of the programs prepared locally. We would be especially glad to have some programs from the South.

"The first requests that came in were for Worship Services. There are a great many women in communities and towns where library facilities are rather poor. Other states have not been used to anything more than an opening prayer. There has been a growing desire on the part of our church women to study a little more deeply into the subject of prayer and worship and to give it a little more attention. For this reason, the bulk of the programs have run to Worship Services, but we do want other programs as well and we shall be very glad of any cooperation that you can get for us. These Exchanges are sent out free of charge, upon request. If you know of women who wish to have their names placed on our mailing list, we shall be glad to send them whatever we get out. There are on the average two or three issues a month. I would like to have you tell the women in your constituency that this service is for Congregational and Christian women from Congregational and Christian women and it is one way in which we are helping each other. If any group wishes enough of any of the programs to give to each member present at a meeting, we shall be glad to furnish them in quantity."

Your program committee sincerely hopes you will take advantage of this generous offer of helpful materials. We know you will be delighted and benefited. In return, please consider it an obligation to share some of your good programs with the other women of our denomination. Two worship services and "A Creed of Giving" from the Presidents' Exchange were included in the packet of material your society received last fall. If you have used these, you know how fine they are.

RECEPTION FOR THE WHITES.

Members of the Christian Temple tendered a reception to Dr. and Mrs. M. J. W. White, missionaries of the American Board to the Philippines, now at home on furlough, at the Temple parsonage on Wednesday night from eight to ten o'clock. The parsonage was attractively decorated in spring flowers. Mrs. A. B. Jarvis and Mrs. J. W. Lightfoot welcomed the guests at the door. Dr. and Mrs. White and Rev. and Mrs. H. S. Hardcastle stood in the receiving line, and Mrs. R. P. Satchell and Mrs. C. C. Johnson presided at the punch bowl. During the evening Mrs. R. B. Wood presented Mrs. S. H. Ferebee who rendered a series of piano solos, and Misses Constance and Jean Ferebee who gave several readings each. A number of members of the Temple and friends of the Whites attended to the reception.

Dr. White is a member of the Temple, with his wife who was Miss Rita Rothgeb of Luray, Va., and their two children Doris and "Jack," has been visiting relatives in Norfolk during the past few weeks. He has also spoken at a number of meetings and he and Mrs. White have displayed their large collection of Filipino curios on a number of occasions. Dr. White has been engaged in hospital work in the Philippines for five and a half years, and has served as head of two of the American Board hospitals on one of the large islands. He has made a splendid record in his work. Dr. and Mrs White left Norfolk Thursday of last week to visit relatives in North Carolina and to attend the Southeastern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches.

JUST GOING HOME.

"I am an old man. I have held my children's children's children. I am now tired. I am not sick. Nothing hurts me. In this life I have been robbed of nothing and in my old age I have been blessed with new friends and acquaintances, principally the Lord Jesus, the child of the Great Chief. I go to Him, and to my fathers, with ill will toward no man,' so said Sekulu Malenga, 97 year-old teacher and friend of Rev. Henry C. McDowell of Galangue, West Africa, as he turned his face toward the setting sun and went home. As he talked to his white "child and friend" he explained much of his attitude toward death. To become sick, to suffer, to die, that he felt was unnatural. But to grow old, become tired, and pass on to be with your fathers, ah, that was natural. And the native would much rather blame man for the unnatural than God—hence his, to us, strange view of death by disease or violence. The beautiful story of the life of Malenga appeared in the April issue of the Missionary Herald.

17. Does your family have any adequate knowledge of our denominational task and how it is being carried on and supported?

18. Does your family know what its fair share of the finances for your church are? Its benevolences?

19. There are eight major things in life—food, shelter, clothes, government, education, religion, recreation, business. All these are essential for all of us. How important is religion? Where in the scale of your family expenditures do you place religion?

Your Commission on Christian Stewardship believes that if you will introduce its Syllabus, "The Christian Acquisition and Use of Money," into a study group of some kind in your church that your people will be greatly helped. The Commission hopes you will use these themes in your Conference and Association meetings and in institutes.

A CHALLENGE TO THE CHURCH.

By a Volunteer—Detained but Dauntless.

I was raised on the mission field. In my veins flows the blood of parents who gave the best of their life to the cause of world evangelization for Christ. From my early childhood there has been ingrained in my soul a yearning to follow in the steps of Livingstone, Judson, Lambuth, and the other great pioneer missionaries. With my own eyes I have seen, on the mission field, the tragic and appalling need of men and women, and boys and girls for the uplifting power of the gospel of Christ. For many years I have been positive of the leadership of God in my desire to give my life to the mission cause. Throughout college and graduate school I labored into the early hours of the morning, working my way through even at the risk of my health, with one sole purpose in mind: preparing myself sufficiently that I might be worthy of losing my life in the cause of world evangelization among the millions who have never had a chance at Christ. While in college I made hundreds of talks and wrote hundreds of letters in an effort to get other students interested in the same thing. I have now had 19 years of school training and three years of practical experience on a mountain circuit. I am having the time of my life working for Christ where I now find myself; but I feel that I cannot remain longer in this country when there is such urgent demand on the mission field. Others will take my place here, but others are not getting out to the mission field.

My wife has also heard the call of God and of his children abroad. She is willing to forego the comforts and luxuries of modern America for a life of hardships in a foreign clime. She and I both are anxious to lay our lives upon the altar of service and be burned up for God. Not only that, but with outstretched arms we will place our eleven-months-old baby on the altar, and give our all for the advancement of his kingdom. Others will take our places here. We are eager to go abroad; like race horses leashed before the race. We ask our church to let us go, and follow the winds with the glad news of Jesus, but she forbids and pulls tight on the reins. It is almost unbearable to be a race horse and not allowed to race. The brave old missionary souls out yonder in the feeble and crumbling ranks at the front, and the teeming millions of needy humanity whom they serve, are looking to America and calling for fresh warriors to take their places. As one volunteer among many, I have received a dozen letters from these brave souls at the front begging me to come on out. They have offered me a home free of rent to live in; they have sent official requests to the board of missions that I be sent out; I have offered to raise money for my passage. But the board asks the church for a meager salary, and she answers, "Thou shalt not! We're not having enough money to spend on luxuries these days; let the kingdom of God go. Do not send him." Oh, my mother church, I have offered my life to thee, and thou wilt not have it! But, who is God that the church should stand in His way? God has called. I must answer. If the church does not wish to give me her blessing, I must go without it. Will the church co-operate or must I heed the call without her?—In N. C. Christian Advocate (Methodist).

WHOSOEVER RENOUNCETH NOT ALL.

When Jesus said, "Whosoever he be that renounceth not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple," He stated the terms of discipleship in the plainest, strongest language He could use. It has been said that "renounce" is the strongest "give up" word in the language. We renounce when we make it publicly known that we give up all that we have, finally and forever, for Jesus' sake if He calls for it. He used the strongest word possible when He told us how we were to surrender. The Master used one of the smallest, yet in meaning, one of the greatest words we have when He told us what we were to surrender to Him. "All" looks little, but it is so big it includes everything we have any claim upon. It even means our aims, our plans, our wills are to be surrendered to His plan and will for us.

Jesus always told His hearers fairly what the cost of discipleship was. He never left room for doubt concerning it. Our Lord meant just what He said when He stated a truth. The Master Teacher did not teach a truth and then follow it up with a jest which would cause His hearers to forget the truth He was trying to impress upon them. Jesus taught plainly and forcefully and left it there that they might not forget it.

Men try to read other meanings into Jesus' statements. They tell us He did not intend for the rich young ruler to sell and give away all he possessed, in order to become a follower of His. But Jesus did not give in when the young man turned away. On the other hand our Lord remained unchanged and let him go. We cannot bargain with God as to what we will give up and what we will hold on to. He knows what is best, and He knows the training we need.

Jesus had told His disciples He must suffer many things, then He told them, "Whosoever doth not bear his cross and come after me, cannot be my disciple." The Master promised the daily cross, persecutions, tribulations and all that He had to endure. Our Lord told just as fairly the cost of discipleship, as He told the reward for faithful service. Then He left men free to make their own choice, for our Lord does not coerce anyone's will.

Jesus has given us two beautiful parables, the parable of the tower and the parable of the king going to war, warning us to count the cost and know if we are able to finish that which we have begun. After His solemn warning the Master again states the terms of discipleship in words almost stern. Words so plain they ought never to be misunderstood. If one of our fellowmen would state the terms of a business contract in the same words, we would not misunderstand it. But we read different meanings into Jesus' words. Some way when Jesus says "forsake all" or "renounce all," as the revised has it, we persuade ourselves to think it does not mean just that. When we sign our names to any instrument of writing which man has drawn up we know we will be held to all that paper contains. If it is a deed the property passes out of our hands. If it is a note we are bound to pay all the note specifies.

When we come out and confess Christ before the world, when we stand in the presence of the Church and pledge ourselves to take God's Word as the rule of our lives and put into practice its teachings, it is just as binding as though we had affixed our names to a paper which had written upon it Jesus' terms of discipleship, and that paper bore a seal which was stamped with the precious blood of Jesus.

It is no small thing to be a follower of the Lord. Neither is it an easy matter to go with Him all the way. The sincerity of our discipleship is submitted to many a severe test. Many have found the cost greater than they were willing to pay. Many have found the road rougher than they were willing to travel and have gone back and walked with Him no more.

Becoming a follower of the Lord Jesus Christ means soberness, it means thoughtfulness, it means a fixed purpose, it means we pledge ourselves to make it the business of our lives to meet all His requirements. Jesus does not want His followers to act unthoughtfully. He wants them to act with calmness and deliberation, to act with forethought, looking at the consequences and preparing to meet them. There will be difficulties, trials and temptations of every description. There will be testings, siftings, self-denial. Are we willing to "suffer all things that we may win Christ?"

This is the reason the Master gave us these two parables. He wanted us to count the cost and see if we were willing to suffer pain and poverty, contempt and false accusations for His sake. These all came to the Master and as the servant is not greater than his Lord they will come to us. Are we willing to meet them as our Lord met them? When some one sneers at our "religion," when we take a course different from that which others about us are taking, can we press steadfastly on, looking to Jesus only? When someone circulates a malicious, mean thing about us, can we keep silent concerning it and commit it all to Him who under like circumstances opened not His mouth? Can we place everything, every circumstance of our lives in our Lord's hands, and silently, patiently wait for Him to bring His will to pass?

Christ was not laying down the terms of discipleship just for the group He was talking to at that time. His "if any man," His "whosoever he be," includes every one down to you and me. Are we willing to pay the full price and enjoy the full power and protection and blessing He assures will be given those who renounce all that he hath to follow Him?

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

REV. F. C. LESTER, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

WHEN THE LIGHTS BURN LOW.

What do you do when the lights burn low? I mean those lights that burn within the soul and light the path you travel. What do you do when discouragements come and life seems scarcely worth living?

When the lights burned low in the house of the Lord where Eli was the priest, he and young Samuel lay down for sleep. That is what many do when the lights burn low. They simply go to sleep, and say that now there is no vision, no light to direct the path. They give up religion. They think they have lost everything because the lights of emotion have burned low. Since they cannot live on the mountain of transfiguration they will not walk in the valley of faith.

But Christianity is a religion of faith. The inner lights burn brightly sometimes, but even then a Christian is straining to see beyond the horizon. When they burn low, the Christian walks by faith and counts it a privilege to do so.

Those who joined the church at Easter have probably found their joyous exultation of spirit running low. Some may think they have lost their religion, or that after all it was not so very real since the "feeling" has faded so quickly. Some may have stumbled, fallen. They did when they were babies. But loving mothers and adoring fathers picked them up, set them on their feet, brushed away the tears, and set them trying again to walk. That is what the church needs to do for its infant members. But we seldom do. On the contrary, if one stumbles, we so often trample upon him, say mean things about him, cover him with mud, and crush his spirit. The saving influence of the Church should be felt by those whose inner lights burn low. The love of the church can put them on their feet and set them going with courage and faith.

Do you ever get discouraged, blue, ready to give up the struggle? If you don't, then you are not like other human beings that I know. Jesus went directly from the baptism in Jordan where the Father spoke to his heart into the wilderness where the tempter tortured his soul. You need expect nothing better for yourself. Sometimes the "gloominess" is merely a physical difficulty. Dr. J. U. Newman used to tell us that many good people think they have lost their religion when there is nothing wrong except a bad case of indigestion. As a student I thought he was making merry, but I have learned since that he was speaking the exact truth. Emotions cannot run high all the time. And emotion is not religion, but religion may cause emotion. Sin may be the cause of our discouragement, but more often it is simply a physical or emotional difficulty. Faith makes us able to change conditions, and to live even in darkness knowing the light will come.

If the old oil lamp burns low, the good housewife cleans the wick, puts in new oil, and turns the light higher. If the electric light goes off, someone tries a new fuse with the hope of making a new connection with the power-house. If the inner lights burn low, why not try some such experiment in the soul rather than give one's self over to despondency? Put new love into the heart. Start serving in a larger way. Purge the life of the things that hinder. Make a definite effort to hear the still, small voice that talked with Samuel when the lamps were low in the temple of God.

If tears must fill your heart because you stub your toe, then keep on trying to walk, and you will walk. If a cross darkens your pathway and your hope, just remember that after the cross comes a crown, after the crucifixion comes the resurrection, after Calvary comes Easter. If the afterglow of Easter seems a bit hazy, walk steadily towards the light, and you find that a new day is dawning and the sun will shine again in this world or the next.

Hark, hark, my soul! Angelic songs are swelling
O'er earth's green fields and ocean's wave-beat shore;
How sweet the truth those blessed strains are telling
Of that new life when sin shall be no more.
Far, far away, like bells at evening pealing,
The voice of Jesus sounds o'er land and sea,
And laden souls by thousands meekly stealing,
King Shepherd, turn their weary steps to Thee.
Angels of Jesus, angels of light,
Singing to welcome the pilgrim in the night.

EASTER IN MY CHURCH.

My church is no more important than your church, but I know a little more about it, and it demands my time more than yours. I sometimes wonder if you are interested in my church as much as I am interested in yours. In fact I wonder if you are interested in the personal things I put on this page. But wonder is all that I can do, for I seldom hear you think even though I should be delighted to know your opinions.

Easter in my church, First Christian Church of Norfolk, Virginia, was a very happy occasion. Oh yes, it rained steadily much of the week before and Easter Day. But we thought the rain drops were God's blessings upon Mother Earth so we can have food in the months to come. So all the week from Palm Sunday to Easter the people who were interested came to worship in the evening hour. Thursday we sat around tables and thought of Jesus and His beloved in an upper room one night when the Master ate bread and drank of a cup and said, "This do in remembrance of me." We loved Him as we ate and drank to His memory.

Friday, the pulpit, preacher and choir left the center of the stage and let an electric cross be the center. After a talk by the pastor on "Calvary" and some fine singing by Reverends Morgan and Poythress, most of the audience knelt at the altar in the light of a cross and tried to give their lives to One who was on a cross long centuries ago, and whose heart must still suffer because of our sins.

At six on Sunday morning about half a hundred gathered for the Sunrise service and the welcoming of members into the church. More than twice that many came through the rain for the morning service when two little children were consecrated to the Lord and still others joined the church. In the evening still more forgot the rain and came to worship and to witness the baptism of nineteen boys and girls and men and women.

When the day was done and the records completed we had consecrated two children, received twenty-three members, baptized nineteen people and received a hundred dollars (our quota) for missions. This is what the figures said. But there was much that figures can never tell.

Figures will never disclose what was in the heart of the laborer who lives alone but who put twenty dollars into the missionary offering. Nor will figures describe the joy of the man who said "Amen" when the minister had said, " . . . In the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost." Figures will never disclose the full value of the decision of those who became part of the Church of Christ and took a Bible home with them to make it the rule of faith and practice.

It will take all eternity to explain all that Easter meant in my church. And the same is true of your church. Easter brings new light and life. In the afterglow of Eastertide there is still joy in the hearts of millions of people who love the Master, the penniless carpenter of Nazareth whom H. G. Wells says is the greatest man of history.

THE PILGRIM WAY.

But once I pass this way,
And then—and then, the silent Door
Swings on its hinges—
Opens . . . Closes—
And no more
I pass this way
So while I may
With all my might,
I will assay
Sweet comfort and delight
To all I meet upon the Pilgrim Way!
For no man travels twice
The Great Highway
That climbs through darkness up to light,
Through night
To day.

THE ART OF MAKING A HAPPY HOME.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR MAY 12, 1935.

(Mothers' Day.)

Hymns: "Take the Name of Jesus With You"; "In the Service of the King"; "'Tis So Sweet to Trust in Jesus"; "Trusting Jesus"; "Sweet Hour of Prayer"; "If Your Heart Keeps Right."

Solo: "Pass It On."

Scripture: Luke 10:38-42.

Bible Readings: Unity in the Home, Ps. 133:1; Devotion to kinsfolk, Ruth 1:16, 17; Obedience, Eph. 6:1-3; Forgiveness, Eph. 4:32; Family worship, Deut. 16:11; Christ in the home, John 11:1-44.

A Prayer Hymn: This hymn is said to have been written by a nineteen-year-old servant girl. It was read to a large congregation by Dr. G. Campbell Morgan at one of his services last summer at Westminster Chapel, London:

Lord of all pots and pans and things; since I've no time to be
A saint by doing lovely things, or watching late with Thee,
Or dreaming in the dawnlight, or storming Heaven's gates,
Make me a saint by getting meals, and washing up the plates.
Altho I must have Martha's hands, I have a Mary mind;
And when I black the boots and shoe, Thy sandals, Lord, I find.
I think of how they trod the earth, what time I scrub the floor;
Accept this meditation, Lord, I haven't time for more.
Warm all the kitchen with Thy love, and light it with Thy peace;
Forgive me all my worrying, and make all grumbling cease.
Thou who didst love to give men food, in room or by the sea,
Accept this service that I do—I do it unto Thee.

SIN, REPENTANCE AND FAITH.

Lesson V—May 5, 1935.

Golden Text: "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and righteous to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.—I John 1:9.

Lesson Text: Luke 15:11-24.

The parable of the Prodigal Son, or the parable of the Father as it might better be called is not only an inimitable and immortal story; it is a comprehensive summary of most of the cardinal doctrines of Christianity. Dean Brown in his illuminating exposition of this parable indicates some of these as follows: the divine Fatherhood; the filial standing in the family of God; the idea of our dependence upon God, the freedom of choice, and the unescapable responsibility which springs from it; sin, conviction of sin; retribution; salvation; faith, a saving faith; repentance; the sublime fact of forgiveness; the necessity for open confession of sin; consecration; the witness of the Spirit; and even the idea of the atonement. Jesus nowhere showed His genius as a story-teller more than in this masterpiece.

The parable lends itself to our purpose in discussing the theme of the lesson, Sin, Repentance and Faith, for in this human drama there is clothed in human flesh these abstract principles.

Sin.

What is sin? This parable does not cover all the sins to be sure, but it does illustrate the principle of sin. "Give me"—setting our wills against the will of God, the act whereby a man makes his life separate and selfish, taking his good away from the eyes of the Father, the refusal to take any higher directions, to enter into any finer fellowship, the determination to be free from divine restraint, the abuse or misuse of talents and gifts and possessions and life itself. "The far country" is not necessarily a matter of geography; it is a matter of mind and heart.

Here is shown the inevitable separation that sin involves. When that young man was in a far country away from his father's home he was a symbol of the separation between a man and his heavenly Father because of sin.

Here is the picture of the contagion of sin. Riotous living, bad companions, wasted substance, hunger of body and hunger of soul. And here is the ultimate wages of sin, loneliness, degradation, bankruptcy of all the fine things of life, separation, despair, defeat. "This penalty comes inevitably when the life has been spending itself in disobedience.

Repentance.

"And he said, I will arise and go to my father, and I will say . . . and he arose and came to his father." Here is repentance. It is significant to note that the young man "came to himself." Sin is really an abnormal thing. Sin is really a form of insanity. When that young man began to think things over he saw what a fool he was. There he was starving to death out there with the swine, while even the servants of his father's house had a good place to stay and good things to eat. He began to get the "low down" on things. and when he did that he saw what a mess he had made of things.

There was a spirit of humility about the fellow that was wholesome. He did not feel worthy to go back as a son—he was content to go back as a servant. That is the essence of the spirit of penitence. There are some folks who turn to God as if they were doing God a favor. True penitence realizes how graciously God has dealt with us.

There was action. He said I will arise and go to my father and he arose and went to his father. Repentance is something more than being sorry—sorry because we have been caught, sorry because we fear the penalty; true penitence leads one back to the Father. It prompts one to stop the old life and to begin the new. It is in the Greek literally "to change one's mind" in the sense of having one's inner life changed. Repentance means an "about face" morally, getting out of the far country, away from debasing associations, back to where one belongs.

That young man did not send for his father's chariot. He had to walk back every step of the way. Repentance does not cancel the penalty of sin. Repentance rather restores a personal relationship. Repentance is man's part. God cannot do anything until a man has repented. God can do everything for the man who has repented.

Faith.

"I will go to my Father"—that is the essence of faith. That boy was still a son. That man was still his father. The son had forfeited—at least he thought he had forfeited all claim to the father's goods—and yet somehow or other he had the feeling that the father would receive him, perhaps would give him another chance, if only as a servant. That faith brought him to his feet, and to his father's house—he was saved by his faith.

Faith, not in the sense of intellectual belief, but as personal trust—this is an essential factor in salvation. How often Jesus said, "Thy faith hath saved thee." Faith brought the prodigal back to the father's house, faith restored a broken personal relationship, faith enabled him to claim again the privileges of a son, faith saved him.

There are, of course, many other lessons in this story. Certainly one can see in the fact that the father saw him afar off, ran to meet him, would not allow him to finish what he had begun to say, restored him as a son, and made merry over his lost son, a revelation of something of the heart of God the Father himself. Men have felt that this story tells not only of the waywardness of the human race, but of the eternal, brooding, eager love of the Father for His wayward children, and of His warm welcome to all those who turn again to Him. They are His sons and daughters, howsoever stained and stunted by sin as they may be.

"There is welcome for the sinner,
And more graces for the good;
There is mercy with the Saviour,
There is healing in His blood."

We have all of us met persons whose lot is much harder than ours, and yet who seem to have won their way to a joy that we have not attained. We feel humble in their presence but profoundly grateful to them. They are showing forth in their lives truth which we professional preachers have too often only showed forth with our lips. I think of a friend I met this year in London, who ten years ago had a country estate and far more than common comfort. Today he is poor and looking for any way to make a shilling or a pound. But he was not complaining. He said that physically, he had never felt better in his life. A Spartan diet had put his body in shape once more. And he went on to say, "I have never found life as intensely interesting as it has been during these last three or four years. What is more, save for an occasional and inevitable black fit of depression, I have never enjoyed it as much."—Dean Willard L. Sperry in an article in "Religion and Life."

"EVERY MAN A KING."

"Be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in love."—I Tim. 4:12.

The only way known to man whereby every man may be a king is for every man to be an example of kingliness in Christliness. Then, according to Matthew, "Ye shall sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel."

A striking example of kingliness comes to us out of the history of France. Louis XVI died and his son the seventeenth became heir to the throne, of which rights he was deprived. Not only was he to be deprived of these rights but also all that was good in his nature was to be destroyed and debased, if possible. Evil men, trained and hardened in evil thoughts, were made his daily companions; they were to train his heart into evil feelings, his mind into evil thoughts; his lips into evil words, in order to make him unworthy. Naturally he suffered, but when he could not endure we are told that he would cry out in anguish, "I can't say it, I can't do it, for I was born to be a king!"

Prayer—Would that we, O Lord, were all as determined as this young boy not to defile ourselves in any way. Teach us how to do so, Lord, for we are born to be heirs with Christ to the throne. Grant this in thy mercy.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

"WHERE DWELLEST THOU?"

"He that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God."—I John 4:16.

These words were the prayer of the apostles as they sought Jesus, and the answer was, "He that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and knoweth God, for God is love." If ye would know the Lord, "take heed unto yourselves that ye love the Lord."

Where dwellest thou?

Prayer—

"Not like the princes of the earth,
Who think it much below their birth,
To come within the door
Of people poor.
"No, such is Thy humility,
That though Thy dwelling be on high,
Thou dost Thyself abase
To the lowest place.
"Where'er Thou seest a sinful soul
Deploring his offenses foul,
To him Thou wilt descend,
And be his friend.
"Thou wilt come in, and with him sup,
And from a low state raise him up,
Till Thou hast made him eat
Blest angel's meat.
"Thus Thou wilt him with honour crown
Who in himself is first cast down,
And humbled for his sins,
That Thy love wins.
"Though heaven be high, the gate is low,
And he who comes in there must bow;
The lofty looks shall ne'er
Have entrance there.
"O God! since Thou delight'st to rest
In the humble contrite breast
First make me so to be,
Then dwell with me."

—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"FOLLOWING THE GLEAM."

"Seek thou good, and not evil, that ye may live."—Amos 5:14.

We are told that there are certain rays of light that are invisible to us, simply because of our optic nerve not being sufficiently sensitive to respond to the rapidity of their vibrations. The joy of life depends upon our capacity to see the light of truth as it is in life and as it is in God. And so much of it we miss!

However, every one can see some light of hope ahead, and the Bible says that light is enough that even a fool cannot fail to see it. It may be but the light of possible duty, a sense of honor, the urge to righteousness, the faith one may have in truth, or a trust in the future. If any of these lights be clear enough for us to follow, that is enough. In these things one may be on the road to glory though unable to see fully.

And do not forget that the gleam is not altogether from without. If a man is to reap light he must sow light. To have light for hereafter he must cultivate it now. As love begets love, so light begets light. If one is in a dark room he undertakes to make light, and further illumination comes to him by that light. To believe and walk in the light one has, that light grows more and more unto the greater lights of splendor.

For instance: Kiss a little child and you give him a new joy in the sense that he has a new friend, and that kiss makes you richer, and happier, for it is joy to be a joy to others.

So is Christian experience.

Prayer—Our Father, teach us how to follow Thy commands, tho' it means toil and a bent body. Through all life's experiences we would follow the gleam of the far eternal light of glory. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

"FRIENDS."

"Thy love to me was wonderful."—II Sam. 1:26.

"The love of Jonathan was knit with the soul of David; and Jonathan loved him as his own soul."—I Sam. 18:1.

"There is perhaps no word in the English language more abused or misused than the word, "friend."

In the course of a short time one meets many people. During the sojourn on this earth our memory book will recall hundreds, maybe thousands of acquaintances we have made, but if one fills out the Biblical span of three score and ten, and along the way finds as many as two genuine friends, the average is high and you have been blessed with priceless jewels.

"Man strives for glory, honor, fame.
That all the world may know his name.
Amasses wealth by brain and hand,
Becomes a power in the land.
But when he nears the end of life
And looks back o'er the years of strife,
He finds that happiness depends
On none of these, but love of friends."

—The Hoosier.

Prayer—O Lord reveal to us more and more the secret of true friendships. Make us friends and give us friends. If there are thoughts, desires, hopes, sorrows, ideals which we can shape, help us to do it. Make our friendship to others like Christ's who gave His life to others, than Whom there was never a truer friend.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

"THE GOOD SHEPHERD."

"I am the good shepherd."—Jno. 10:11.

We are told that eastern shepherds are always armed and are sometimes killed defending their flocks against the wild beasts that infest the wilderness.

When Jesus placed Himself as a good shepherd who giveth his life for the sheep He was speaking in a figure which His hearers could understand. The figure is beautiful. It ever appeals to the heart and imagination of sin-troubled and suffering humanity. It is more beautiful still when it is seen as representing Christ rescuing the sinner and symbolized in the straying lamb.

Prayer—Our heavenly Father, make us souls capable of following Christ, Thy Son, all the way, and prepare us for the cost it involves.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

"NOMINATION CONVENTIONS."

"Can we find such a one as this, a man in whom the spirit of God is?"—Gen. 41:37-44.

Joseph was nominated and elected by acclamation the prime minister of Egypt, because he had shown wisdom so far beyond the ordinary that God had clearly given it to him. Is it thus that our conventions work? Do we seek for our officers preeminently the men in whom the spirit of God is?

If this were so, how different would politics be, and how vastly would government be improved! For a man may have the most profound intellect; yet if the spirit of God be lacking, his term of office will be more of a curse than a blessing.

We speak of executive power, but that is not what we need so much as spiritual power. Doubtless there were many men among Pharaoh's councilors who were as good executives as Joseph, but they lacked the all-important insight into the will of God.

Prayer—May we place that first in our lives, our Father. May we seek not fame, not power, not wealth, but Thy spirit. Having Thy spirit, we shall have all things.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

"THE WELL OF WISDOM."

"The Lord shall give thee understanding in all things."—II Tim. 2:1-7.

If we had to find out wisdom by ourselves, we should be fools to the last day of our lives. If we had to buy our wisdom, we should find no market cheap enough to suit our pauper purses. If we had to go forth and fight for wisdom, we should never be strong enough to win the battle.

No; wisdom must be given to us, as the Lord knew well when He promised to give it to us. We have nothing with which to obtain so great a blessing, so He has promised it "without money and without price." And, best of all, He does not stint us in wisdom, but has promised us "understanding in all things."

So that we do not need to go groping through the world. We can see our way clearly before us. We can comprehend our destiny. We can know the doctrine. We can understand the mysteries. The most humble child of God is, in the affairs of the kingdom of heaven, on a par in understanding with the most learned sage.

Prayer—We want all heavenly love, blessed Giver of truth. We open our souls wide to all understanding. Give it to us more and more abundantly every day. For Christ's sake.—Amen.

FAITH'S HIGHWAY.

By W. W. Phares.

"That the proof of your faith . . . may be found unto praise and glory and honor at the revelation of Jesus Christ; whom not having seen ye love; on whom, though now ye see Him not, yet believing, ye rejoice greatly with joy unspeakable and full of glory; receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls."—I Peter 1:7-9.

The straight and narrow way that leads to life is the highway of faith. The sign over the entrance reads: "Believers Only," and those who walk in it walk by faith and not by sight. Peter asserts that the eternal life that we seek is the "end of faith," faith's outcome.

With the Bible as their guide, it is strange that men have so missed the Lord's way. Is it the fault of God? Has He failed to make His way plain?

Jesus thanked God that, though it was hidden from the wise and prudent, God's way was revealed to babes. He said to His critics, "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures." They did not know because they did not love the truth. If they had had their hearts set on doing the will of the Father in heaven they should have known of the doctrine. We cannot walk in God's way and cling at all to our own.

Coming to the Bible with our own preconceived notions, we find what we wish to find. Some coming thus have found the Ritualistic Way.

Several communions whose history dates back to ancient days believe that virtue resides in rites and ordinances. Baptism and the Lord's Supper, administered by properly ordained priests, have saving power in themselves. With this idea in their minds, they find many scriptures to substantiate their doctrines. The Christ Himself said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Peter, on the day of Pentecost, said, "Repent ye and be baptized . . . for the remission of sins." Many other passages, with a slight misinterpretation, can be made to teach baptismal regeneration and salvation by ordinances.

But baptism and communion, like circumcision, are not outward only. They are of the heart as well as of the flesh. They reveal but do not create a new heart. Their value is declarative and not procurative in nature. They are outward signs of a glorious inward signification.

Others, coming to the Scriptures with minds already made up find the Fatalistic Way.

Calvin more than any other is the father of this doctrine of predestination. According to the predestinarian view, man's fate is decreed. Certain men and angels are ordained to eternal life and certain others to eternal death. They have no choice in the matter.

Again Scriptures are found in support of a false position. Predestination, foreordination, and election are taught in the Word. It requires an open rather than an astute mind to discover that these Scriptures do not teach that any man is saved by arbitrary decree of God. God has decreed, foreordained, that men who were considered without the pale should be given an offer of salvation, should be chosen for salvation, but must be saved by the gospel which is his power unto salvation. All who hear are called; all who believe are elected, but it is our part to make that calling and election sure. God nominates us for salvation, but we in our own hearts and lives must ratify that nomination.

Another despotic way I know not how to name. It is the doctrine that man is born totally depraved and that he has no power to believe and be saved till he receives faith arbitrarily as a gift from God, that Father Adam ate sour grapes and all his children have their teeth set on edge; that the gate is shut until God choses to open it; that man's only hope is for himself and his fellowman to agonize before God till God changes His mind; that the Christ died to reconcile God to man, yet it is only by much pleading that God can be persuaded.

How contrary all this is to the Word of God! The Bible pictures the Father, instead of a despot on a throne, rather as a broken-hearted father pleading for his erring children to return, anxious to forgive and receive them unto himself. "All day long have I stretched out my hand unto you," He says. He will in no wise cast out any that come unto Him. The latch hangs on our side of the gate. "Whosoever will may come." It may take four friends to bring a poor paralyzed man to Christ, but no committee is necessary to persuade the Master to answer the call of faith. Christ died to reconcile man to God, not God to man.

The true teaching of the Scriptures is that the way of salvation is the Highway of Faith.

We enter by faith, we walk by faith. It is written, "The just shall live by faith," and that, "being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ."

What then of the ordinances? Was it careless speech in the Christ to say that "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved"? Did he inadvertently let baptism slip in where only faith was meant? Did Peter err in saying that both repentance and baptism were "unto salvation"? Do we have to resort to ritualism to keep from emasculating the Word of God?

Not if we have the clarity of vision to make distinctions where there are real differences. Our obedience to God is to show that we believe in Him and not in ourselves. The woman who was sick touched the hem of the Lord's garment and was healed. The power was not in the cloth, but in Him who wore it. He said, "I felt virtue go out of me," when she touched His robe. It was the woman's faith and the love and power of the Lord that wrought the cure. Touching the garment was only a sign of what was in her heart; Jesus accepted the sign. Another had clay and spittle applied to his eyes. He never dreamed of extolling the virtue of saliva and a certain kind of clay. He knew the power was in Him who applied them.

Baptism and the Supper are neither man's faith nor God's power; they are mediums through which man declares his faith. They do not create faith; they declare a faith that already exists. Speedometers do not make a car run; they show that a car is running, and how fast. The weather vane does not make the wind blow; it shows that the wind is blowing, and with what velocity. Just so do the ordinances of the Lord serve our purpose to show the state of our hearts toward him. When we speak of the power of the cross our minds are not upon an upright and a crossbar of wood, but upon Him who died on the cross. No more does baptism for the remission of sins imply that remission is a reward for the virtue residing in an ordinance. It is the reward of faith of which baptism is a mere implication. Either Jesus is the Son of God or He is an impostor.

If we sometimes long for the bright light of certainty instead of the flame of faith, we find that no other illumination leads to the city where

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

Our financial report this week gives us a pain in the heart. It makes us think that we are almost forgotten. Ninety children to care for; ten begging to come. They are from our Church and we ought to take them.

Lots of things we have to buy 100 per cent higher than last year.

Our income this week was $55.70. How can we keep from going in debt? Pray that God may touch the hearts of our people and may they remember the little children here with more liberality.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

THINGS THAT ARE ABOVE.

One who nas dwelt in the mountains will never be quite content to live in the swamps and marshes. So he who has once walked the highways of truth and love and righteousness will not find peace on the lower levels of character. Paul admonishes us to think on the things that are true and honest and pure and of good report, because, great psychologist that he was, he knew that having once let our minds dwell upon these things we shall thereafter "covet earnestly the best gifts." Jesus urged that his disciples seek to become perfect, knowing that the nearer they came to that ideal the more dissatisfied they would be with anything less. When we seek "those things which are above," we may not always attain, but there is joy—and growth of soul—even in the asking.—Christian Observer.

If possible have this meeting in a Christian home which influence radiates the community. Find out some of the secrets of that home. Ask the members to tell you about their home life. Begin with the father and the mother telling of the founding of their home. Many hardships were encountered. Maybe they will tell you of some of these difficulties and how they were overcome. Then have the children of this home tell why their home is happy.

It would be fine if this family would plan and carry out the program, making everybody "feel at home." It would prove more interesting to sing from memory the hymns which have a message for this occasion. The leader might arrange for light refreshments to be served by the hostess.

Thoughts for each individual: Is there mutual responsibility in your home? Does your love for your mother permit her to do the work you should be doing in the home? Are you a pal of your mother? Do the members of the family have confidence in your religion? Are you a Christian in your home?

THE SUN'S PULPIT.

we wish to go. We may ask with Job, "Why doth God give light to man at his wits' end?" But we find, as Job did, that man's extremity is God's opportunity. It is when the light of knowledge and reason fails that the lamp of faith is lighted. When we seek the fame, riches, or glory of this world we may say, "This or that I know." When we seek the things of heaven we must say, "This I believe." We believe because we cannot know.

But we believe on the only One who lays any just claim to having the knowledge which we are denied. He declared that he spake the things that he knew. He lived like one who spoke truly; he died like such an one, he arose from the dead like such an one. We believe in him because, like Peter, we have no one else to whom to go, in faith. We cry, "Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life." And we go, not knowing whither but believing—trudging the highway of faith, confident that the end is the City of God —our eternal home.—In the Christian-Evangelist.

He loved to have friends around him, and had many friends in the circle of his acquaintances. He is survived by his widow and one son. Funeral services were held at the Lacey Spring U. B. Church, April 11, 1935.

A. W. ANDES.

LISKEY.

Erasmus F. Liskey was born August 9, 1877, and died March 31, 1935, at the age of 57 years, 6 months, aud 22 days. Brother Liskey was a member of our New Hope church, and was a good man, and took au active interest in the work of the church until ill health forced him to give up the work and spend his last years in a hospital. He is survived by his widow, one son, and one daughter. Funeral services were held at Cedar Grove U. B. church, April 2, 1935.

A. W. ANDES.

BRITTLE.

Alice R. Brittle was born July 29, 1866 and died April 4, 1935, aged 69 years 9 months and 5 days.

Early in life she professed faith in Christ and united with Barrett's Christian Church; later she transferred to Wakefield where she remained until the end.

On December 21, 1891, she was married to William T. Brittle and to this union were born 5 children, 3 daughters and 2 sons.

Mrs. Brittle is survived by her husband, 1 daughter, Miss Ethel Brittle, Petersburg, Va., 2 sons, Thos. L., and John L. Brittle of Wakefield, one sister, Miss Antoinette Coker, Wakefield, one brother W. H. Coker, Waverly, Va.

The funeral was conducted by the writer assisted by Rev. G. A. Pearce, L. F. Callaham and interment was in the Wakefield cemetery.

We fouud in Mrs. Brittle a good woman, neighbor and friend and may God bless her family in this sad hour of her going.

Japanese Send Message of Goodwill.—

Upon the occasion of the arrival of Dr. Ivan Lee Holt, president of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, in Tokyo, Japan, a resolution of greeting and goodwill was adopted by the National Christian Council of Japan, for dispatch to America. In this resolution was expressed the desire "that all the Christians of the United States and of Japan shall in thoughts and attitudes transcend national and racial differences . . . ; and" that they be bound together as friends "through common faith in a common Lord."

King George's Jubilee.—

Throughout the far-flung British Empire, celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of King George's reign began on last Monday, and nearly a half-billion people, from the frozen northermost points of Canada to the tropical climes of Africa, joined in the events. In London, the ceremonials began with a religious thanksgiving service at St. Paul's Cathedral. The whole city was a mass of flags, bunting and flowers, and vast crowds from all parts of the empire gathered there in homage to their emperor-king, to give testimony of their loyalty and affection.

Civil Lassitude De Luxe.—

What is probably the ultimate in civil lassitude occurred in a Maryland town in a recent municipal election. The three town commissioners were standing for reelection, and there was no opposition offered. But this fact came near being their undoing. It was discovered just before the closing time of the election that the town's citizens had forgotten all about it. Not even had the officials of the election shown up. When the candidates for office discovered their predicament, however, each one went out and coralled a single voter on the streets and led them to the polls. Thus the town commissioners were re-elected by three votes each.

Senator Cutting's Death.—

The nation at large mourns the death of Senator Cutting of New Mexico. The tragic accident in which he, the plane's pilot, and two others were killed and nine injured, was caused by fog and the failure of the gas supply. Senator Cutting was born at Oakdale, Long Island, forty-six years ago, but went to New Mexico in his twenties. He was large physically, being over six feet in height and weighing more than two hundred pounds. While nominally Republican, he supported President Roosevelt in his 1932 campaign. He, however, did not receive Democratic endorsement when he ran for re-election last year, and though apparently re-elected by a small majority, his seat was being disputed by his Democratic opponent.

The Patman Bonus Bill.—

By a vote of 55 to 33 the Patman Bonus Bill passed the Senate this week. There is little doubt that it will be vetoed by President Roosevelt when it reaches his hands. It is just as certain that it will be passed over his veto by the House of Representatives, but the Senate must muster five additional votes if it would pass the bill over the presidential negative. Veteran organizations are talking of carrying their fight directly to the White House, and Father Coughlin thinks that "President Roosevelt is too clever a politician to veto the bill." He thinks it "would be a political suicide" for the New Deal Administration. To say the least the attitude of the administration would seem illogical. It wants to buy back prosperity by prodigal spending, many of those on its present relief rolls are ex-soldiers, and the payment of the bonus at this time would take that many off of relief, and at the same time pay an obligation of the government. As a matter of business, why should Uncle Sam give them money now, when he might accomplish the same thing by paying a bill which is owing, even though not yet due? Would it not be logical to let the Bonus Bill go through?

A Comparison in Armament Spending.—

From a contemporary religious magazine comes the following: "Japan will spend 47 per cent of her total budget next year for military purposes, as compared with 43.7 per cent last year. The United States is expected to spend about 25 per cent of its ordinary (the italics are ours) budget for defense, and Great Britain about 16 per cent. However, in the actual amount to be expended, the United States and Great Britain are well ahead of Japan." The figures which are given are, for the United States, $800,000,000; for Great Britain, $550,000,000, and Japan's budget amounts to $296,000,000. Attention should, however, be called to the last sentence which we quoted, i. e. that the amounts being spent by Great Britain and the United States are much more than that being expended by Japan. This is misleading on its face, for the building costs in Japan are considerably smaller than in England, and these, in turn, less than in America. When these differences in building costs are taken into consideration it will be found that America is not outbuilding either of the other countries. It is lamentable that such vast sums should be spent on military armaments, but any reductions made must be by international agreement.

Around the World for $84.—

No, not a personal trip, but for twenty-three words: "This is another step in the conquest of time and space by man, and proves there are no earthly limits to human speech." This was the message which literally was sent around the world recently by President Walter S. Gifford, of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. "Leaving New York at about half the speed of light," we are told by The Literary Digest, "these words crossed the continent to San Francisco by wire, rode a radio beam thence 9,000 miles to Java, were transferred to a second radio beam for flight of 7,000 miles to Amsterdam, passed by submarine cable underneath the North Sea to London, went overland to the Rugby radio station of the British post office, took passage on a third radio beam across the Atlantic, were caught in the web of an antenna at Netcong, New Jersey, and went by ordinary telephone back to the New York office of the company." The time required by the voice to make this circuit of the world is about one-fourth second, or the length of time necessary to pronounce a simple word of three syllables. As stated above, you can send your voice on a similar trip around the world for approximately $84.

Rail Pension Act Voided.—

The New Deal received another setback when on last Monday the Supreme Court's 5-4 decision invalidated the Reilroad Retirement Act. This is the first of a proposed series of experiments in so-called social security legislation, and was an attempt to set up a compulsory retirement system for all of the railroads. The decision was important because of its vitiating of the clause upon which the Administration had depended for most of its industrial legislation. The court held that Congress exceeded its powers under the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution. Just as important as the immediate decision, was the shift of Justice Owen J. Roberts, who wrote the majority opinion, to the side of the four conservatives, Justices Van Devanter, McReynolds, Butler, and Sutherland. Justice Roberts said: "It is arbitrary in the last degree to place upon the carriers the burden of gratuities to thousands who have been unfaithful and for that cause have been separated from the service . . . and the claim that such largess will promote efficiency or safety . . . is without support in reason or common sense. . . . This clearly arbitrary imposition of liability to pay again for services long since rendered and fully compensated is not permissible legislation." Chief Justice Hughes, in rendering the minority decision, in which he was joined by Justices Cardozo, Brandeis, and Stone, said that "The fundamental consideration . . . is that industry should take care of its wastage, whether that is due to accident or age." Regardless of the legality or illegality of such legislation, its ultimate result can only be the socialization of the State and the pauperization of its people.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

We give on page three of this issue the apportionments for the churches of the Eastern N. C. Conference, as assigned by the Apportionment Committee. Pastors and members should give this table serious consideration.

We learn that Rev. A. W. Andes, most efficient secretary of the Valley Conference, as well as pastor of several of its churches, has been unwell recently. Here is hoping for him that he will soon be feeling his very best again.

The managing editor of THE SUN, with Rev. J. E. McCauley, pastor of the Richmond Church, stayed in the home of the latter's sister while at the Raleigh Convention. We enjoyed very much our short stay in the home of Mrs. Cole.

We greeted many friends, old and new, at the Southeast Convention in Raleigh, last week. We would hesitate to list them for fear one might, even temporarily, escape our memory. Two who usually are present at such occasions, Drs. Atkinson and Rowland, we greatly missed. There were others, who for one cause or another were absent. They missed a worthwhile convention.

POINTERS FOR PASTORS.

Do you evaluate the missionary message as the greatest utterance of the Church? Your Master did.

Would you rate as the leading missionary educator in your church?

Have you shaped a definite policy and program for the church, and if so, is it unified in the sense that all departments of activity and study are correlated, or are they random and haphazard? Closer correlation, cooperative activity, are the watchwords of the day.

How far do you use the missionary sermon as a means of education in such a plan?

Are you carefully evaluating and utilizing significant new trends in missionary thought? A change is not a thing of merit in itself; but religion is under the same fundamental laws as the rest of the universe: and one of those laws is that of advance (or decadence); of giving new form and fresh expression to changeless ideals; of utilizing improved methods as a means of attaining paramount ends.

How do you sense these new trends and methods? Are you reading any of the new books recommended by religious publications?

Have you noted the increased stress laid upon missionary study and endeavor for men and boys, in place of the old-time relegation of such matters to "the women folks of the membership"? Have you organized those men and boys?

Is there a general missionary or planning committee in your church, with representatives from the subsidiary organizations, inclusive of the woman's society and the various departments of the Sunday school? Does this committee plan, correlate and supervise?

NO?—Then you are decidedly a back number.

Is there a definite course of mission study heading up in a school of missions, or world friendship, at some period of the church year? If it becomes a community affair with other denominations cooperating, so much the better.

Is there some definite project toward which the study heads up and of which it serves as a necessary expression? Without some such project the emotions and impulses to service evaporate and leave the soul more sterile than before.

Has the church as a whole, or have the Sunday school and the other subsidiary organizations, adopted a definite course of missionary reading each year—preferably along the lines of the United Study Course topics? Almost all the denominations can furnish plans and activating material for directed missionary reading for people of all ages.

Are you going to file the answers to the foregoing queries away in the archives of "Some-day-when-I-get-time," or will you take action at once to make the Gospel you preach dynamic and true to its Founder?—Missionary Review of the World

THE MOTHER'S HYMN.

"Blessed art thou among women."

By WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

Lord who ordainest for mankind
Benignant toils and tender cares,
We thank Thee for the ties that bind
The mother to the child she bears.

We thank Thee for the hopes that rise
Within her heart, as, day by day,
The dawning soul, from those young eyes,
Looks with a clearer, steadier ray.

And grateful for the blessing given
With that dear infant on her knee,
She trains the eye to look to heaven,
The voice to lisp a prayer to Thee.

Such thanks the blessed Mary gave
When from her lap the Holy Child,
Sent from on high to seek and save
The lost of heart, looked up and smiled.

All-Gracious! grant to those who hear
A mother's charge, the strength and light
To guide the feet that owe their care
In ways of Love and Truth and Right.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To the Elon Alumni and Former Students:

We are going to have a Lantern Festival at Elon on Alumni night and we want every one of you to send in the 50 cents asked for now, that we may have them on hand for Commencement. Thanks to all who have responded and to you who are going to respond.

POUNDED.

After the program which the young people of Berea had prepared and given so nicely April 14th, the writer was handed an Easter bunny bearing a card around his neck, on which the writer was told to hasten to his car, the which he did and to his surprise, the good folks of the church had placed many nice and useful things for the family as well as the table. These are fine folks to serve and are always seeking ways by which they can show their love and loyalty to the church as well as pastor. May God richly bless each of them. G. C. CRUTCHFIELD.

CONCORD CHURCH.

The addition to Concord Church which was started in March has been completed, painted, etc. One improvement prompts another. The business men of Yanceyville, N. C., have offered to improve the pulpit recess. This work is to be undertaken at once. Also there has been a suggestion that another group was contemplating doing some other work on the building of worship. We appreciate greatly the interest manifested and the cooperation shown for improvement at the old church. L. L. WYRICK.

THE UNITED CHRISTIAN CHURCH, LYNCHBURG, VA.

We have just closed one of the most successful revivals which has been experienced in this city in many years. We feel our church has gained one of the greatest victories which the Congregational-Christian Church can realize in any community due to the fact that the idea was born in the mind of the pastor of our church which was pressed upon the Ministerial Union of our city and through a most loyal cooperation of every Protestant church in the city. We put on a city-wide campaign for enlistment of the unenlisted church members and for the unsaved and as a result of the cooperative efforts on the part of the pastors of the city with their loyal and willing workers giving of themselves entirely to the task of rendering a real service to those who need Christ and His church we have seen upward of two thousand (2,000) people reclaimed and baptized into the churches of the city, which we believe is one of the greatest revivals the churches in this community has experienced in many years. This revival was sponsored by the Ministerial Union under an agreement that each pastor should conduct his own revival under the direction of an able director who has had former experience in a like campaign.

Our church has experienced one of the greatest revivals and has increased its membership by a larger number than has been in the past few years and we feel that our church is now in a condition to go forward in a more united way in the interest of the Kingdom.

We are pleased to make this encouraging report and we hope that other communities will see the value of a cooperative effort to place the Church in its rightful place in the hearts and minds of the people.

We feel very proud of our pastor, Rev. B. H. Watkins, because of his interest in a city-wide revival and being the one who has brought about a most congenial cooperation among our Protestant Churches and for the most inspiring sermons which convicted sin and laid upon the hearts of the church people their duty to their God, and to His church and we know that his efforts have been gloriously crowned with victory and we feel that the church will go forward now in a more united and effectual work of the kingdom.

MRS. FLOYD H. DUNN, Secy.

HOPEWELL CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The Woman's Missionary Society presented an attractive Mission Pageant at its April meeting. Ladies represented four of the nations in which we are doing mission work, and made an appeal to America for continued assistance. The native costumes and excellent musical program were so good that by request they will present a similar program at the May meeting, in which America will welcome representatives of all eleven nations where our work is going on. This will be the third public program this year. We have conducted regular church Wednesday night prayer meeting once and one cottage prayer meeting. We attended the City Union Missionary Quarterly Meeting, making a good report of work of society. Much personal work is being done and the membership now numbers twenty-five.

World Day of Prayer was observed and we have a large Cradle Roll membership, also.

The Junior Christian Endeavor numbers about 40 active young children under the guidance of Mrs. J. H. Harrison and Miss Virginia Edwards. This group gave an Easter entertainment Sunday just before the preaching service. Easter Monday they had a happy time on the lawn rolling Easter eggs.

CAN THE ETHIOPIAN CHANGE?

(Jeremiah 13:23.)

This question of the prophet Jeremiah is supposed to be answered by a short and final "No!" But let us look deeper into the question.

The name Ethiopian is from a Greek word which means sunburned. What has sunburn to do with the real man? Every man has the right and the power, with his Maker's help, to change his life and become a son of God. History and observation give ample proof that the sunburned surface does not affect the real man and so we change the answer to our question to an emphatic "Yes."

Do you ask for historical proof? We will give that proof first from Jeremiah himself. Read Jeremiah 38:7-13. The Northern Kingdom, the Kingdom of Israel, had forsaken the living God for idolatry and sin until carried into captivity by the Assyrians. The kingdom of Judah was fast drifting in the same channel, paying little heed to the voice of Jeremiah, God's messenger of promise. Their only hope lay in surrender to the king of Babylon who had already carried many of the best people of the nation into captivity and was still besieging the city of Jerusalem.

Jeremiah was arrested, tried for treason, condemned to death and thrown into a filthy dungeon to die of hunger. Note, if you please, God's choice of a man to come to the rescue. A man of sunburned skin, an Ethiopian slave in the King's household.

Ebed-melech, the Ethiopian, took his life in his hands and dared to approach the king to plead for the life of God's prophet. His pleading softened the king's heart and at the risk of his own life he ordered the Prophet's rescue and secret hiding. The Heavenly Father delights in exhalting His humble servants.

Nor did God forget that noble service. Six hundred years later He call Deacon Philip from a successful work in Samaria to send him down on a desert road toward Gaza. Why? Philip was God's messenger to meet another Ethiopian who was His servant seeking to know the way. They met and the sunburned seeker had the prophecy explained, its fulfillment recounted, and found Jesus and became His disciple. After his baptism he returned to Ethiopia rejoicing there to introduce the good news of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Ethiopia now claims five million Christians. Eighty years ago Ethiopia was marked on the map of Africa as an unexplored region, yet its kingdom dates back more than four thousand years. Its people never were worshippers of idols but believed in the God of Abraham. Neither was Ethiopia ever conquered.

It is truly God's country, as large as Texas and surrounded by deserts and unfriendly countries.

To Ethiopia Egypt owes its fertility, yes its life. Without its waters and fertilizer Egypt would be a desert. In Ethiopia lies a lake 5,000 square miles in extent which is the main source of the waters of the Blue Nile which carries also a great amount of rich soil into Egypt. This was Ethiopia's gift to Egypt from centuries before Joseph tided Egypt over the seven years of famine.

The Wise Men from afar, who saw the star that guided them to the new-born King of the Jews were doubtless sunburned men, if not Ethiopians. They came to worship and to offer Him precious gifts.

The present Emperor, Haile Selassie, who was crowned in 1930 as a descendant of the Queen of Sheba spent the night previous to his coronation in prayer to Jehovah. He had spent years as an apprentice of his predecessors. "An island of Christians in a sea of pagans, is the expression of a former emperor in referring to his country in a letter to the European powers.

Nor is Ethiopia alone of the sunburned nations who can change their lives. We have glorious examples among many nations. We mention only a few such as Ghandi, Kagawa, the martyrs of China and Harrison of "Green Pastures." All these have not only looked into the life and character of the Son of God but have been changed into His likeness from Glory to Glory.

YOUTH IS CHALLENGED TO UNITE FOR PEACE.

Raleigh, May 3.—(AP)—A call for youth of all nations to unite in a common agreement to preserve peace and combat the menace of war was sounded last night by Dr. Daniel A. Poling, of New York, who addressed the closing session of the convention of Congregational and Christian churches in the Southeast.

Dr. C. A. Lincoln, of Daytona Beach, Fla., was elected president to succeed Rev. J. G. Lightbourne, of Burlington, N. C. Dr. John G. Truitt of Suffolk, Va., was named vice president, and Rev. Geo. N. Edwards of Charleston, S. C., was re-elected secretary-treasurer..

Dr. Lincoln and Dr. Truitt with A. R. Rux, of Nashville, Tenn., will serve as a committee to plan for the next convention in 1937.

For the youth fellowship, the following officers were elected: Alanson Granger of Norfolk, Va., president; Carl Ekblod of Thorsby, Ala., Earl G. Ward, of Winter Park, Fla., and Miss Mary Moncrief of Knoxville, Ga., vice presidents; Miss Irene Cotten of Dendron, Va., secretary; and Miss Margaret Earp of Greensboro, treasurer.

Dr. Poling declared that "peace must be won during peace, for it is too late when the guns begin to rumble and belch death." He urged the youth of the nation to unite in resisting entrance of the United States into the world court, to oppose munitions shipments to aggressor nations, and to protest public and private loans to belligerent countries.

He observed that "nothing short of a federal plan will enable Europe to solve her differences," declaring that "nations," who fought in the world war have 9,000,000 more armed men now than they had in 1913."

"Outside of England and the Scandinavian countries," he said, "I found no man who seriously regarded the permanency of the present peace. The world must be willing to pay the price of peace."

Rev. A. D. Beitel of Nashville, Tenn., spoke at the morning sessions, and delegates were entertained in the afternoon. Dr. Arthur E. Holt, of the University of Chicago seminary was also a morning speaker.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THIS STRONG MAN.

It is not the function of the church merely to give alms to the poor and needy, but to give the "Name through faith in His name" to the poor and needy of the suffering. Peter and John on entering the Temple gave us the example and really taught us how the weak may be made strong so that they can care for themselves and have in themselves a source and a fountain of strength for others. This weak man, weak in body as well as in soul, "asked an alms." Then Peter said, "Silver and gold have I none, but in the name of Jesus of Nazareth rise up and walk. And he leaping up entered with them into the Temple, leaping and praising God." That is what our Lord meant when He gave to the Church the Great Commission, "Go, preach the gospel to every creature." And then Peter, explaining about the man, said, "his name through faith in his name hath made this man strong and hath given him this perfect soundness." It is not enough for the church, through benevolences and alms giving, to make good citizens or good workmen in shops and factories, fields and farms; the Church has a more powerful function and a greater task than that, viz: To make saints of God on earth, children of the true Light, souls saved in the kingdom of our Lord. The Church of God has the task of building the kingdom of heaven on earth and making men and women, boys and girls worshippers and followers of that Name which is above every name. The world's greatest need today is spiritual food, the Bread of Life that cometh down from above. Through our missionary effort we are trying to share that which is better than alms of silver and gold, viz:—The love and the saving power of our Lord with those who do not know and have not experienced this love and saving power. In this way it is given to men and women, boys and girls this perfect soundness.

DR. DILLARD WRITES A BOOK.

The fact is this man of culture and learning has written several of them, this last being the least in size but the largest in its lessons and its implications. "That's the worst sight in America," said a gentleman in a railroad station to Dr. Dillard, the remark being about a news stand close by. On looking it did seem to Dr. Dillard that this news stand was "more than usually brilliant with yellows and reds, pinks, greens, and blues." On inquiry as to why this was the worst sight in America, the reply was: "Oh, so many educated with no education, or not enough. They know how to read, yes, but read what? There you see it." The little book of four chapters which Dr. Dillard has given the public reveals to us certain principles that are beyond reading. We have gotten so much education that it is a peril and a sin not to get more. "Therefore, there is a way of going forward," and the grace of great books is in the way of this going forward to that which is greatest and best in education. We find so much sham, untruth and unreality in the literature of the news stand that the healthy mind, the man of culture, will go on to something better and, in going on, will find that the classics are never out of date, and a book written 2,000 years ago may be more modern than one written a year ago. The real classic expresses universal truth in an artistic way so that the truth and the beauty of it grows upon one with every reading. In the little booklet of less than fifty pages, Dr. Dillard has made a contribution to the worthwhile reading of our time. His publisher is the Stratford Company of Boston and the price of his book is a half dollar.

THE SOUTHEAST CONVENTION.

The Raleigh session of the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches is now history. This Convention is an interesting example of ecclesiastical experimetation and evolution. When the Congregational and Christian Churches were merged, the question immediately arose as to what organization might serve the combined interests in the Southeast.

It was felt that there ought to be some agency than would serve as a medium of fellowship among the churches of this region. The Christian Church was well establishel and organized in Virginia and North Carolina, with the churches close enough together to enjoy a certain sense of connection and fellowship. There were two conferences in Georgia and Alabama, that were not far apart geographically, and that were united with the churches in Virginia and North Carolina through the Southern Convention.

The Congregationalists were well established in Florida, with a strong State Conference. But in other sections of the Southeast though there were strong individual churches in some places, they were too far apart to constitute a compact organization. The need was felt for an organization that would represent the entire Southeast; in which a close acquaintance might be cultivated, in which we might face our common tasks, and through which our efforts might be unified.

It was first thought that the Southern Convention might serve as the organization that would represent the entire region. But the Southern Convention was responsible for a well established program that it must continue to support with all the recourses at its command. When the Southern Convention met it had to give much time to the consideration of its own individual enterprises.

And so the Southeast Convention was organized and first met in conjunction with the Southern Convention. It was found, however, that with two conventions meeting at the same time and place that there was not sufficient time for all the interests of the two bodies to be considered. If simultaneous sessions were going on there would be many who would feel that they were bound to be in both. And so it seemed advisable to try the experiment of a separate session of the Southeast Convention, meeting on the year between the biennial sessions of the Southern Convention.

The Raleigh session recently held was an experiment, and a most successful experiment it proved to be. It was not a delegated body. Any church within the area was free to send as many representatives as it saw fit. Some churches were represented by a half dozen or more individuals. Other churches were not represented at all. Those who were privileged to sit through the entire Convention surely must have felt that those churches that were not represented were decidedly the loosers. The attendance was creditable. Someone in speaking of the attendance said it was not as good as he had hoped it would be, but was much better than he had feared it would be. A high tribute was paid to the program builders in the fact that so many of those who attended stayed through to the close of the last session.

The Convention had for its objectives, information and inspiration. It sought to set forth clearly the enterprises and agencies now in actual operation within our borders; to acquaint us with their history, their achievements and their needs. It also sought to show how our own work is related to the total program of all the churches of Christendom.

There were three addresses planned with the purpose of better acquainting the Convention with our own denominational program. Dr. E. M. Halliday discussed the theme: "Christianity and Churches." Dr. Edwin C. Gillette spoke on: "Christianity in Our Denominational Program." Dr. W. R. Kedzie presented: "Our Educational Program." These addresses cannot be adequately reported within the limits that this article must observe. They faithfully and accurately portrayed the actual achievements that have been accomplished up to this present time. To this scribe they were the occasion of much inspiration.

There are many writers and speakers today, who when they discuss the institutions and achievements of organized Christianity up to the present time, give one the impression that to date, all the efforts of the Christian world have been spent for things that have not proven worthwhile. We would like to propose a vote of thanks to the brethren who discussed the subjects mentioned above. They left us feeling that even though all the things that had been attempted may not have achieved all that may have been desired; that they had accomplished those things which constitute a firm foundation upon which to build for the future; and that our hope for the future is immeasurably advanced by the achievements that have been already wrought.

Dr. H. Shelton Smith delivered an address on the subject: "A Divided Church in a Divided World." Many of those who heard Dr. Smith admitted that his address had left them feeling very uncomfortable. His analyses of religious, social and economic conditions were so thorough, and he stated his conclusions so plainly and emphatically that they did make one feel like writhing a bit. Perhaps we need to be made a bit uncomfortable. But we do Dr. Smith an injustice if we should give you the impression that his address struck a pessimistic note. Wherever he called attention to departures from the ideal, he so clearly set forth the ideal that it constituted an inspiration and a challenge.

There may be some of our readers who think that all addresses on Missions are very much alike, and that when they hear someone speak on Missions they have heard just another missionary address. Then they should have heard Rev Geo. W. Shepherd discuss: "Christianity's Outreach." Dr. Shepherd has had fourteen years of service in China. He has seen Communism in China at its best and at its worst. He portrayed for us the most remarkable experiment in Christian service that is being made by the native Chinese Christians in serving in those regions that have been desolated by the ravages of Communism. As we listened to Dr. Shepherd we felt that there is being written a Chinese Acts of the Apostles.

Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein discussed: "Evangelism for Today." Evangelical churches seem to be a little more certain of everything that enters into their program today than of evangelism. Evangelism has always been a major item of interest with Dr. Helfenstein. His discussion of the subject was as comprehensive and as hopeful as any note that can be sounded today. Such men as Dr. Helfenstein are helping the Church to again find herself in the work of evangelism.

Thursday morning was given to a discussion of the social problems with which the Church must deal. Dr. A. D. Beitel spoke on: "Christianity and Social Justice." Dr. Beitel's thesis was the part that religion has played in the struggle for social justice in the Jewish religion, and in the early days of the Christian Church. Prof. Arthur E. Holt spoke on the subject: "Christianity in Action." Prof. Holt heads the Council for Social Action of the Congregational-Christian Churches. He was a moving spirit in the discussions that stirred the interest of the General Council to the point that it was ready to set up the Council for Social Action.

Dr. S. Parkes Cadman was the outstanding feature of Wednesday's program. In the morning he spoke on the theme: "The Minister's Message for Today." In the evening he discussed: "Christianity in a Changing World." It is impossible to review or summarize one of Dr. Cadman's addresses. One feels that if anything that he says is left out, that an injustice is done to the address. And if his address were reported word ror word, even then the best part of the address would be left out, for the best part of the address is Dr. Cadman himself. Dr. Cadman is the only preacher this writer knows who is absolutely convinced that Christianity is the most important fact or factor in the universe and who has the ability to make the man in the street believe it soo.

Dr. Daniel A. Poling presented the closing address of the Convention, using as his theme: "Christianity Moves Forward." The Youth Fellowship of the Southeast was in session Thursday afternoon and evening. Youth was largely represented in the audience at the evening service. This was peculiarly appropriate, for there is none other that can speak to the heart of Protestant youth with greater challenge and appeal than Dr. Poling. Dr. Poling's address forcefully stated the conclusion toward which the Convention had been moving from the very first session, viz: That the power of Christianity is entirely adequate for the needs of any age, if only those who profess to be the followers of Christ will give themselves to his program.

The Convention elected as its officers: President, Rev. C. A. Lincoln, D. D., Daytona Beach, Florida; Vice President, Rev. J. G. Truitt, D. D., Suffolk, Virginia; Secretary-Treasurer, Rev. Geo. N. Edwards, Charleston, South Carolina.

TITHING IN HARD TIMES.

There is no better time to begin to tithe than a time of business depression. Then it takes both faith and courage.

If tithing were a sure thing like buying five dollar bills for $4.00, it would have no more moral value than any other form of bargain hunting. Everybody would tithe; the man most careful to pay the tenth might be the most avaricious man in town.

That's not the tithing God has promised to bless. Tithing is a sure thing; and usually it leads to material betterment. But not always; and never, in any magical or non-mortal way.

The law of the tithe is not a law for times and seasons. It does not rest on circumstances, whether good or bad. The true Christian will begin to obey it as soon as he realizes that it is a law, and that it is for his guidance and his good.

All true enough; nevertheless, there are special reasons and special values attached to tithing in hard times.

It is easy enough to thank God for pleasant experiences, though we know that often they may be simply barren. It is not so easy to be thankful for adversity, though difficulties and disappointments in our material affairs can provide the finest of disciplines.

Listen to Habakkuk the prophet:

> For though the fig tree shall not flourish,
> Neither shall fruit be in the vines;
> The labor of the olive shall fail;
> And the fields shall yield no food;
> The flock shall be cut off from the fold,
> And there shall be no herd in the stalls:
> Yet will I rejoice in the Lord,
> I will joy in the God of my salvation.

The tither who can make the prophet's word his own will not be deceived by prosperity, if and when it comes.

Prosperity is quite likely to come to the tither; remember that. Somebody has counted the Bible's reference to giving. They total seventy-two. And forty-eight "show open promise of God's blessing to the giver."

During a spell of hard times a bank auditor examining the books of many Toronto business houses found entries in the books of John Macdonald & Co., that showed the firm was setting aside a tenth of its profits for religious and philanthropic work. He closed his audit and recommended to the bank that the Macdonald house should have all the credit it desired. It was the beginning of a new prosperity.

John H. Converse, when president of the Baldwin Locomotive Works, was a tither who believed in doing more in hard times. One year, when his business was less profitable than usual, he gave $400,000 to religious and charitable work.

It is known and admitted that not everybody gets ahead financially by tithing. Why should he? "Getting ahead" may be a great curse. A tithing business man puts the fact thus:

"There are other successes than money ones. I've got something more than money from tithing; it's given me happiness and contentment that I never could have bought. Suppose some of the New England families who tithed did not succeed financially? Could science measure the contentment which these families might have through knowledge that God was a partner in home affairs?"

A man who is almost at the end of his resources will find his time of stress a good time to make a new study of his life.

The head of a great business did this once, when he was worse than bankrupt. One day he opened his Bible at Genesis 28:22, drew a pencil mark around the verse, and said, "From this moment on, as long as I live, of all that God gives me I will give Him one-tenth."

Since then he has prospered far beyond the ordinary. But what is more, he has made "hundreds of investments for human betterment and to advance righteousness on earth." The feeling that one can thus be a co-laborer with God is the greatest incentive to true living which man can have. It can make one's sunset days his best days.

A conscientious examination of your affairs now may actually show how you can save enough to pay the whole tithe. Consider more methodical ways of buying. Wait a week before buying something you think you want. Buy for use rather than for appearance or luxury-value.

Budget your income and outgo. Many people who begin to spend by a budget make a surprising discovery. They find that from ten to twenty cents of their dollar is being spent without producing any corresponding benefit.

So your whole situation may be helped as you see where your tithe can be paid without distress.

Whenever it can be put into practice, there's a big saving hinted at in the old saying, "He who cuts his own firewood is twice warmed."

Hard times are hard times for God as well as for us. His work suffers because, when depresion threatens, so many cut off, first of all, their gifts to religion.

Never mind trying to explain the theology of it. You know that benevolent agencies face lessened incomes. Students who would gladly work must leave college for lack of funds; church enterprises are forced to retrench their work; the poor, the sick, the distressed, all must know keener their sufferings because the church has less money to spend in their behalf. So the tither who tithes in hard times is doubly blessed—in his own life and in being the friend indeed who comes as the friend in need.

Tithing in hard times is a sharing of life with those whose "times" are harder than ours. None of our tithe literally gives "to God"; it goes to men and women like ourselves. It broadens the base on which the world's total usefulness must rest.

Hard times are good times to begin tithing, because it doesn't take so much moral backbone to tithe a small income as a big one. Many people have been tempted to quit tithing because their incomes became "too big to tithe."

A rich man told a missionary secretary during the war, "I'm sorry, doctor, but I can't give you anything for your work this year. Why, my income tax is a million and a quarter."

The tithe in hard times contributes to our spiritual self-respect. When we are prosperous, we may feel—as we should—that the tithe ought to be supplemented by free will offerings and gifts far beyond the tenth.

In hard times ye may not be able to make these gifts. But we know that in tithing we are acknowledging God, and declaring our faith. We are not offering to God that which has cost us nothing.

It costs, to tithe in hard times. But not to tithe costs more, in values that are as real then as ever, and that will last beyond all times, whether hard or easy.—The Layman Co.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Money is one of the chief topics of this age. There is an increasing emphasis of this factor in modern life. Church councils are giving much time to this theme. The public is deeply concerned about earning, saving and giving. Daily newspapers remind their readers that people want work. Men and women regard money as an essential in the pursuit of happiness and contentment. On this account working people are seeking to find employment in those occupations which pay wages in money. There is a deep-rooted feeling on the part of many that society owes every one a job.

If the church is to follow the leadership of those who are insisting that Christians should be active in reorganizing the present social order, the matter should be given serious and careful consideration. Some questions arise when this subject is brought to the attention of thoughtful people. What is the present social order? What is wrong in the present order? Is the present system wrong, or has it been abused? What is the best system for making the world a better place in which to live? Is it possible to set up any system which will correct existing evils and make the world happy, prosperous and contented?

These questions indicate the wide range of sane thinking necessary to be fair-minded in studying the present needs of the world; and the wisdom required to reach righteous conclusions. It is much easier to advocate social justice than to practice it. There are people who are more anxious to receive a pay envelope at the end of the week, than to render a service to their employer equivalent to the amount of the wages received. And there are employers who are requiring labor to produce profits far above the amount paid for wages. Admitting that there are many such cases of injustice and unfairness on the part of employer and labor, is it the function of the church, as an organization, to undertake to make an adjustment of these conditions, on the basis of justice and fairness to all concerned? Has the church, in its past history, proven to the world that it has been just in its judgment and fair in its dealings?

Where is the person, or group of persons, in the church, who can submit an adequate financial plan for all classes and conditions? Many plans and schemes are being offered by conscientious people, in the interest of human society. Who knows what is best? As a matter of fact it is difficult to remove the profit motive from any plan. Justice is not the paramount motive of this age. People want money. Some are willing to work for money; others are determined to have money, at any price, and they practice dishonesty or become thieves, if necessary, to get money. "The love of money is the root of all evil."

The desire for gain is the chief incentive to engage in war. If neither individuals, nor corporations, nor governments could make money by war, there would be peace throughout the world. The end of all war profits would be the end of all war. But the desire for personal gain must not be regarded as an evil in itself; it is the fruit of a spiritual condition which needs the uplifting power of the Christian religion. If this desire for gain and wealth leads humanity away from the path of honor and righteousness, it indicates a need of spiritual regeneration. The great world distress of the present time is rooted in spiritual departure from God. There is enough money and opportunity, and work for every one to be busy and comfortable, if money could make one happy. But money will not feed hungry hearts and nourish impoverished souls. Man does not live by bread alone. He must live by the word of God. The church should be able to call the world to penitence and consecration, and when the church renews its fellowship with God, and walks in the paths of righteousness, the depression will end—and Congress can adjourn.

I. W. JOHNSON.

A MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Elon Alumni:

Elon College has a little more than one thousand young men and women who have graduated from the college. It has approximately nine thousand additional ones who have attended, making a total of practically ten thousand, who in the days of their preparation, sought instruction on Elon College campus and from the faculty of the institution. This is a great record and a great host of friends. The college has faithfully served the ones who have come, to their best ability. In their search for truth, the College has sought to open up freely and intelligently, the fountains of information and the reservoirs of truth, so that in their search, they would find, and truly they did find.

The college is still here. The buildings are adequate. The grounds are beautiful, and the student body optimistic. We are now approaching the forty-fifth annual commencement of Alma Mater. She is anxious to see her many sons and daughters on this particular annual occasion, and is extending the heartiest invitation possible to all who will, to come.

Tuesday, May 28th, has been set aside as alumnae day. The program begins at 10:30 o'clock in the Whitley Memorial Auditorium. The Elon Singers will provide the music. The alumni day address will be given by Mr. Russell A. Campbell of Harrisonburg, Virginia. A barbecue luncheon will be served on the campus at one o'clock. The business meeting of the association will be held at 2:30 P. M. At 5:00 o'clock, President and Mrs. Smith will receive at tea on the campus. At 7:00 the alumni will meet in Alamance Hall to march to the Whitley Memorial Auditorium for the alumni address. Hon. F. F. Myrick, of Greensboro will deliver the address.

Following the address, the alumni march will be initiated by all who are present. The campus will be brilliantly lighted with Japanese lanterns. A supply of beautiful lanterns are at the college. Every aumnus is requested to contribute $.50 for the purchase of lanterns and other incidental expenses. Approximately three thousand lanterns will be used in lighting the campus. This will be a brilliant and fascinating sight. The old college will be dressed in her best, confidently expecting a visit from the members of her family who have gone out to do battle with the world.

The alumni march will end in the college dining room, where the annual banquet will be served.

I am sure you will be interested in these unusual and attractive features offered by Alma Mater. Then, of course, you will want to remain over for the graduating exercises on Wednesday. The Hon. Josiah W. Bailey of the United States Senate will deliver the literary address.

Of course, you say, I want to spend the night at the college, but where? Well, we have arranged to answer this question. The building known as the Ladies' Hall, has been unoccupied for the last three years. We are now cleaning this building and will furnish it with beds such as we can get together for the use of the alumni while here. We can accommodate, perhaps, fifty to sixty people.

It would be well for you who read this article, and who can possibly attend, drop me a card asking for reservations in the Ladies' Hall, which will be used as alumni headquarters. There will be no charge for the room. If you have sheets or blankets that you can bring without much trouble, we will be glad.

Meals can be had at the college dining room at a cost of $.40.

I hope that you are planning to attend. Please drop me a card.

L. E. SMITH.

NOT TOO BUSY.

He is busy. He is a very busy surgeon. Life and death often linger at his fingertips. His time must be guarded carefully. His work in the operating room is large, and consultations are numerous. Much also he has to do with the management of the hospital, which is always crowded. But he is not too busy to attend his church.

He reads much. His magazine table shows that he uses the periodicals, professional magazines, and daily papers that come to him. He is well informed in his surgery, and is sought as a speaker to his profession. But instead of eating his Sunday morning breakfast and turning to the Sunday paper he hastens to his church, for he is going to put a complete outline of the current Sunday School lesson on the blackboard in his large classroom in readiness for the forty young women who will presently await him there. He will go back home and bring his family to Sunday School after he has put the outline on the board in his classroom. Sunday is a day of rest. But he is not too tired to teach his Sunday School class.

He is a deacon. That means that he will be called upon to attend a special meeting in his pastor's study for prayer before the morning service. He is there. You should hear him pray. A man of science, and yet he talks to God like a child speaking to his father. He says, "Our Father, we know we can do nothing without Thee. Thou hast all power . . . " and so he prays. He is not too busy.

He attends church. A physician and surgeon, and yet he seldom, if ever, misses either the morning or evening church service. But you may say he does not operate on Sunday. In emergency cases he does, and not infrequently. And he attends prayer meeting Wednesday nights regularly. Conducts them himself sometimes. He is not too busy.

He is a father. That is what I am writing this little article to say: He is a father. There are eight fine sons and daughters who will tell you that any time you ask them. He is counting on these sons and daughters and well he may, for they attend Sunday School and church, too. And there is a reason why they attend while it is hard to get many young people to attend church.

His baby boy joined church last Sunday, and was baptized. This morning my telephone rang, and my surgeon friend was on the line. After a pleasantry, or two,—for he always has time to be happy and pleasant,—he wanted to know if I would have time to bring his son a box of church envelopes. A father knows that it makes a life-long difference if his little son receives the envelopes from his pastor's hands the first week he joins the church! His father had time to see that it was done!

Of these eight children there is a mother, too!

THEIR PASTOR.

A Story for the Children

WHEN THE WORLD WANTED TO PLAY.

"I'm tired of washing dishes, of dusting and making beds. I'm not going to help you today, mother," said Nell. "Mary and Margaret don't do any work at home and have so much more time to play than I have. I'm going to play with them today."

"All right," said mother, "you try your own way for today. I want none but willing helpers about me."

Nell picked up her doll and her skates and gaily ran out to join Mary and Margaret who always could play. They skated and had lots of fun until Nell fell down and hurt her knee and started to run to the house so mother could doctor and bandage it just as she always had, but she stopped when she remembered that she wasn't helping mother today and couldn't ask her to stop and bandage her knee. It would have felt better, but—

"Oh, well," she thought, "it soon will stop hurting if I just go on and forget it." Turning to Mary and Margaret she said, "let's play dolls now."

Nell's doll had pretty dresses that her mother had made for it, but the other girls had only the dresses that they could make.

"Mother hasn't time to sew for our dolls," said Mary, "she has too much else to do."

Nell thought how tired their mother always looked and wondered if she could not look better and have more time for them, if they helped her sometimes as she helped her mother, but she did not say anything about it because she was not helping her mother now.

They had a good time, but Nell grew tired of playing long before the day was over. Of course she wouldn't say she was not having as much fun as she thought she was going to have, since she had been the one who had thought playing all of the time would please her best.

At night when she told mother goodnight, she felt a bit sorry that mother looked tired, but she went on to bed without telling her so, and after falling asleep, she had a dream—

The little moon fairies said:

"We're tired of oiling our lamp and hanging it out each night. Little Nell is playing all of the time, why can't we just play too?"

So they didn't shine out.

The little stars said:

"We've been shining every night for years and years and we're tired, let's stop and play and not shine out tonight." What a dark night that was, without any moon and stars!

The raindrops came along and said:

"We want to play too. We're always so busy making things grow that we haven't had time for play. Let's drop our work and join in the fun," and they didn't rain any more.

The trees and the flowers said:

"If the rain isn't going to fall on us why should we try to grow and bloom when we might be having our games?" and they didn't grow any more.

All along the street that had been shaded with lovely green trees, there were only old stumps with dead branches. In the flower beds around the house and out in the garden where lately blooming flowers of beautiful reds and pinks, purples and gold had been, now there were withered stalks to show where they had grown.

What a strange place that was, without any green trees and growing flowers, and Nell didn't like it at all; and the darkness frightened her. Suddenly waking, she called: "Mother, oh mother I'm afraid!"

"I am here, darling," said mother, as she held Nell's hand in hers.

"Oh, mother! I thought you might have stopped mothering me, too," said Nell, as she told of the dreadful dream.

Then she told of the day spent entirely in play and of how tired she had grown before night; and she cried:

"Mother, I'm sorry you were so tired tonight because I didn't help you at all. I'll help you tomorrow, just see if I don't. I know now that play isn't fun if I play all the time. There is work to be done and if I don't do my share someone else must do more. I guess the moon and the rain and the stars and the flowers would like sometimes to play too, but they just keep on working, knowing that their jobs must be done and nothing and nobody can do their parts for them. How bad it would be for us all if they did stop their work to play."—The Presbyterian Advance.

SAVING THE BODY.

By A. M. JOHNSON.

We hear preaching and teaching everywhere about soul saving but we seldom hear much said about saving the body. Of course it is necessary to teach soul saving because the soul lives on after the body is dead, but the two are so closely associated, that it is impossible to live a real clean Christian life without having a healthy body. Just think for a moment—what causes that steady beat of the human heart—the blood coursing through the body, doing its little task; the momentum of the limbs, muscles and nerves? It is that little spark or unit which makes up our soul. When something goes wrong with our mechanism it retards that little spark (the soul), and we begin to loose a little faith. We begin to wonder what we have done to have this little feeling creep over us. We pray, but just praying does not correct our trouble. We must cleanse our bodies if we wish God's help. Purity of mind cannot be attained unless we have purity of body. To have this wonderful asset, we must take care to see that every organ is functioning, through proper nourishment.

Nature will punish us if we abuse our body, because we also abuse our soul, and, therefore, we commit sin when we drink and eat things that nature warns us against. We are, speaking candidly, governed by the laws of nature, laid down by our Maker.

We cannot serve our Master well if we allow our bodies to become wrecked through negligence; when we do, our bodies not only suffed but our minds and souls as well. God does not send this punishment on us; we bring it on ourselves by neglecting God and His natural laws which He gave us to follow.

Many people are dying in the prime of life, because they have neglected to protect and save their bodies when they ought to have lived on to a ripe old age and be of service to their God and their families.

I spent two months in St. Petersburg, Florida, this winter, and the tourists numbered something like fifty thousand. The tourists, like me, had gone there to enjoy that delightful climate—many hundreds were there trying to patch up the wrecked bodies which they say was caused by neglect in early life. But for many, it was too late.

Our soul must have a house to live in while we are among material things of the earth. Why not keep a clean house free of ills? Live right, and eat right, so that we may preserve our body and soul for our Maker.

PAUL E. NILSON SPEAKS.

By MISS D. P. CUSHING, News Editor.

Bringing the marvels of the moving picture for the first time to men, women and children in the interior villages of Turkey is one of the fascinating pieces of work carried on by Paul E. Nilson of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions in Talas, Turkey, who is now in America on furlough.

Films of the new Turkey, scenes from other parts of the world, modern industrial and agricultural methods, health information and character building stories make up Mr. Nilson's repertoire. He bumps along over rough roads in his automobile from village to village. Just as hearty shouts of laughter arise at the comical antics of Felix the Cat from these isolated Turkish villages as greet Mickey Mouse in New England towns. A welcomed guest in hospitable Turkish homes of all classes, Mr. Nilson has through his nearly 20 years' experience in Turkey come to know the Turkish people as a friend. He can interpret them to his countrymen in America with sympathy and understanding.

His major work at present is educational and as Principal of the American School for Boys, Mr. Nilson has under his care some 55 lads who are learning how to earn their own living by trades, how to keep accounts in both English and Turkish and how to read English, which is fast becoming the favorite "foreign" language in Turkey. Best of all they are learning through games and supervised recreation what it means to be "good sports."

The American School for Boys is emphasizing vocational training at the request of the Turkish Government. In spite of unbelievable progress under able leadership Turkey still faces a tremendous educational problem, and as one of her own officials states, will need 50 years at the present rate of progress to place a school in each village. "The average American home," says Mr. Nilson, "has more luxury, conveniences, books, spiritual and intellectual opportunity than a whole turkish village."

Mr. Nilson, who comes from Illinois, is a graduate of Beloit College, Hartford Theological Seminary and the University of Chicago. He first went to the Near East as a tutor at St. Paul's College, Tarsus. He had many difficulties during that early period, was kidnapped by bandits and saw his college raided by hostile forces. In 1919 he was appointed a full missionary by the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions and has been at work since that time at Talas.

AN INVESTMENT THAT PAID.

A Turkish orphan from a Moslem background came to our vocational High School with an unusual amount of pluck and stubbornness. After five years of patient teaching and care, he graduated in June, found work, and now writes his first letter of appreciation: (Can your High School graduates write as good a letter in French or German?)

"Dear Mr. Nilson,

"For a long time I haven't written you a letter, I believe you will forgive me. I believe I know and hope you asked yourself, what V—— is doing? Perfectly you have a right to ask that question. Because for five years you beared up my troubles and my 'inat' (stubbornness) and gave your care on my necessities. You were the only man that thought about him. You were the only man that talked and advised me for many hours. You were the dearest man that broke up my 'inat.' First for me second for the other boys you gave up your best hours. Perhaps you didn't heard me saying you thanks. Everybody's lips might say you thanks. But everybody's hearts 'can't say thanks. Mrs. B Mrs. N and you did these great things for me.

"I ask you what you got of me, what useful thing I did for you, nothing. And it will be nothing, but just one thing—a loving heart and a good charactered boy. (He means to say that 'a loving heart' and good character are all that he can repay for our five years of effort.)

"Let me explain what I did and am doing now. I went to the new factory and worked there on ordinary things. After many days the 'Montaj' (mounting machinery) work opened and the Russians came. The machines began to come. Quickly I went there and asked for work. They gave me a big drill to make holes in necessary things. About twenty-five days I have been working and getting one lira ($.70) a day. I like to work. I get enough money to live comfortably.

"Let me give an end it is growing too late, and I must go to bed.

Your loving student,

V——"

It is encouraging to see that our school work has given the training to hand and mind enabling a boy to earn his living on graduating from high school and to share in the building of industrial works of his nation. It gives one joy also to know that the training has given him strength of character to meet the temptations of life.

Students in the University of Illinois invested $100 a year in this boy.

PAUL E. NILSON.

HOW CAN A PASTOR PROMOTE MISSIONS?

This question assumes a pastor who is himself interested in missions and desirous of promoting the cause in his church. Perhaps that ought to be a justifiable assumption for the ministry as a whole, but unfortunately there is a good deal of evidence to show that the facts are otherwise. In a group of missionaries the statement was made not long ago, and supported by the group as a whole, that in a great majority of the churches visited by missionary representatives no adequate background of information or interest was found ready for the visitor's story; the speaker had to proceed on the supposition that his audience would know little or nothing about the cause which he was there to present. This statement, insofar as it is true to the facts, reveals a real failure on the part of the ministry and such failure can only be due to a lack of interest in the whole missionary project.

But we are addressing the pastors who do care, the men who believe heart and soul in the missionary obligation and desire to find ways in which they may more effectively impart their own deep interest to the minds and hearts of their people. What suggestions can be offered to such men, some of whom will be dealing with hard-boiled congregations that care little about the salvation of any souls beyond the horizon of their own community?

First, let it be said that a truly missionary-minded pastor will do something toward the creation of missionary interest by his very presence in pulpit and parish. The power of unconscious influence is very great, and when a sincere man believes anything deeply, that fact is bound to make itself felt in all his contacts with others. If a minister has any measure of the missionary mind of St. Paul, his people will know it and be influenced by it, and whatever their response may be they will at least know that the Kingdom of God in its world-wide aspects has come nigh unto them.

But the minister who has enough missionary conviction to be a source of radiating influence will never be content to stop there. If he were so content his influence would cease. The real advocate of the cause will go on with a positive campaign of instruction and inspiration. And just here, I think, is the pastor's greatest opportunity. The pulpit is his, and the program of the church is largely his to determine. He can preach as many missionary sermons as he will; he can season all his preaching with missionary references and the missionary spirit, and he can arrange such classes and study courses as he may find desirable. Of course all this must be done with fine tact and understanding. A misguided enthusiast might easily defeat his own purpose and do the cause harm by irritating repetition or provocative insistence upon his own view of things. But the pastor who, with real understanding of other points of view and a tactful presentation of his own, keeps the missionary obligation and opportunity constantly before his people, cannot fail to arouse interest in the thing which he himself believes so deeply. Just how the matter of pastoral instruction and inspiration is to be carried out must be left to the individual. Only, let every pastor keep steadily before him the fact that the primary responsibility is his and his alone, that the opportunity is also his, and that if he will use his opportunity of pulpit and classroom to the full, his church will not fail to see the Gospel of Christ for what it is, a missionary Gospel.

The pastor who cares will do well to remember that the main part of his task is the overcoming of ignorance and prejudice in the minds of his people. Perhaps we should say, ignorant prejudice. His procedure must be directed by this fact. For too many people in the pews the missionary is still the frock-coated, high-hatted busybody of the comic papers or, at best, the devoted but misguided enthusiast who has gone to foreign parts to induce contented non-Christians to change their religion. And with these are many more who, while holding a truer conception of missions, still withhold interest and support because "there is so much to do at home." The minister must be patient and infinitely tactful with all these of backward mind. He must shape his program with them particularly in view. Whatever tends to break down prejudice and give a truer picture of the missionary and his work, this he will use in sermon, study class, printed form—in any form in which it may be available. In other words, the missionary pastor is an ambassador for missions, just as he is an ambassador for Christ, and just as he seeks to commend his Master in all things to those who do not know him, so he seeks to commend the Master's world-reaching program in every way to those who as yet see that program only in reference to their own personal salvation. Such an ambassador is in the true apostolic succession from St. Paul who was at once the first Christian missionary and a good minister of Jesus Christ.—Missionary Review of the World.

EVANGELICAL STUDENT ACTIVITY.

Much is said and written about the deflection of college and university students from high standards of Christian faith and life. Most of them reflect the influence of their homes and later of school and college. With right teaching and example the coming generation would always be an improvement on the past. Recent reports reveal the fact that at least two thirds of the students in institutions of higher learning claim affiliation with some Christian Church. But in college church-going habits—if any—are broken. There is little Bible study or prayer except in denominational colleges and in small groups; the College Y. M. and Y. W. C. A.'s are less popular than they were a generation ago and the freedom and license of college life tends to lower the standards of Christian conduct for the majority.

But there are still strong Christian schools and colleges and uplifting evangelical influences in America and Great Britain. In the United States during the past ten years there has been a healthy growth of the League of Evangelical Students of America, an organization that recently held its tenth annual convention in Philadelphia. Between three and four hundred delegates attended representing forty institutions of learning in many states. Nine new chapters were admitted to membership in the League and definite plans were made to promote Bible study and aggressive Christian work, also for an active alumni association.

A similar organization is operating in Great Britain, called the Inter-Varsity Fellowship. Dr. Robert P. Wilder is now conducting meetings under their auspices, and with marked spiritual blessing. This fellowship, at a recent conference in Scotland, adopted the following "Declaration of Purpose," which reveals their true evangelical character and missionary purpose.

We, having been deeply impressed with the urgent need of increased efforts on the part of the Christian Church to reach the hitherto unevangelized people, purposes before God to make it our individual and collective responsibility to do all in our power to bring this challenge to our universities and churches.

Convinced that the immediate barrier to spiritual revival and world evangelization lies in our own low spiritual standards, we would unite in prayer to God that His Spirit may bring each one of us and our unions to a fit spiritual condition to take our part in this enterprise.

Having committed ourselves to Jesus Christ and so to His great purpose that the Gospel may be presented to every creature, we are resolved, as men and women who have been privileged with a college education, to accept our special responsibility in missionary endeavor. It is a point of spiritual honor. We cannot be true to Jesus Christ, our Lord, unless we carry to its completion the task of preaching to every tribe and nation the message of salvation.

Inasmuch, therefore, as every man and woman has a right to hear the Gospel, we are debtors to the whole world. The past generations have rendered inestimable service, and the evangel has been carried far and wide. They did their part. The call now comes to us to follow their heroic lead.

We therefore propose:

1. That we determine to make it our responsibility to spread as widely as possible the missionary challenge in our unions and churches, and among all whom we can influence. The need is especially urged of spreading information as to the true position overseas, and of impressing upon all Christians a sense of the tragedy of the unfinished task.

2. That this conference recommends to the committee of the evangelical unions:

(a) That each union should especially consider how God would have them respond immediately to this challenge both with regard to their responsibility to their university and to the mission field.

(b) That a committee be appointed to undertake responsibility for promoting a campaign to arouse missionary fervor in our universities and churches.

(c) That student deputations be sent to churches and wherever interest may be aroused.

(d) That a letter be sent to the leaders of the churches and missionary societies expressing the intention of the evangelical unions.

(e) That special prayer meetings be held in each union that God may greatly add to the number of those who have been awakened to the world need. . . .

TEN YEARS—TEN REFORMS IN TURKEY.

The remarkable story of the transformation of the Ottoman Empire into the modern Republic of Turkey is best told by the narration of the reforms of the past ten years.

1. On October 29, 1923, Turkey became a Republic and elected their military commander, Mustafa Kemal Pasha as the first president. For eleven years he has continued as President and has himself taken the lead in all the reforms.

2. On March 3, 1934, Turkey exiled the Caliph and the evil domination of caliph and Sultan over Turkey was ended.

3. On September 2, 1925, Turkey abolished the red fez which had been for centuries required to be worn in Turkey as a sign of the Moslem and the Turk. In one month the Turkish men abandoned the old fez and adopted the cap and hat.

4. January 1, 1926 saw the abolition of the ancient calendar and the adoption of the international calendar. Thus this year is 1935 in Turkey and not 1351.

5. From July 1, to October 4, 1926, the Turkish parliament officially completed the adoption of the civil, commercial, and penal code of Europe and abolished the old Moslem religious "sheriat" law codes. By this means, Turkey definitely turned her back to the ways of the East and adopted the laws of living of Europe.

6. By January 1, 1929, the difficult Arabic script and Arabic numerals were abolished and the new Turkish alphabet was officially adopted. The new alphabet is so phonetic and simple that children save at least two years in their elementary education.

7. In 1932, the Arabic Koran was officially translated into the Turkish. For the first time the Turkish people were able to read their Holy Book in their own language.

8. In July, 1932, a congress of historians met in Angora, the capital, and started the re-writing of the History of Turkey. The four books thus completed have stimulated the Turkish national spirit.

9. On December 22, 1932, the Turkish Grand National Assembly presented the world with a Christmas present present in the form of a very strict opium and narcotic law. Thus the leak in the vicious narcotic trade thru Turkey was stopped.

10. In 1932-33 Turkey completed treaties of commerce and peace with her neighbors and signed the London Non-aggressive Act. While Europe is stirring up war frenzy, the Near East has found in Turkey a center for peace activity.

Thus after ten years of strenuous reforms, 1934 finds the Republic of Turkey firmly established and moving forward steadily.

A MOTHER'S LOVE.

By Vivien M. Ogden.

Perfumed with the essence of goodness
As sweet as the lilies that bloom,
Her constant and tender devotion
Doth ever life's pathway illume.

Refreshing as dewdrops from Heaven
And pure as an angel's sweet song,
Her love in its tender compassion
Doth sweetly forgive every wrong.

Agleam with the jewel of patience
And sweet with the incense of love
Her prayers ascend to the throne
And blessings bring down from above.

Baptized with the oil of compassion
And patiently striving to win
She buildeth a bridge with her love
Across the deep chasm of sin.

Anointed with wisdom and mercy
By the Father who dwelleth above
She pours from her fountain of sweetness
All the wealth of a mother's great love.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

Rev. F. C. Lester, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

CONVENTIONS CAN WAIT.

The Southeast Convention and the Youth Fellowship of the Southeast had their meetings last week according to schedule. They were both great and will receive their proper reports. This week they bow themselves out of the paper in reverence for Mother. Next week they will appear.

MOTHER'S DAY.

The second Sunday in May is set apart by our American people as a day in which to do honor to motherhood. Our government puts no premium on children as some European governments do, but it does believe in its mothers, and delights to do them honor. Since Abraham Lincoln said: "All that I am or ever hope to be I owe to my mother," the leaders of our national life have recognized the rightful place of motherhood, and in recent years has set apart the second Sunday in May as Mother's Day.

On Mother's Day people wear flowers in honor of the ones who gave them birth, cared for them in infancy, and loved them through life. For a living mother a red flower is worn, preferably a carnation, and a white flower speaks of the purity of the departed. Individuals everywhere remember mother, and try to bring her happiness. The churches plan special services.

With the hope that those who read this page will have special programs in their churces in honor of mothers, and because the editor wishes to do his bit to bring happiness to the hearts of those who deserve highest honor earth can offer to its own, this page is dedicated to the mothers who are struggling with steadfast hope to train those whom they love for the highest and best.

GOD'S METHOD OF WORK.

Sometimes one wonders why God works as He does. Surely he could have children mature as quickly as other animals. He could have given them wisdom and knowledge without it taking so much time for them to learn. But He didn't. He put into the mother's hands the first few years of the life of the child. Out of the years of experience she is to teach the child how to live. She has greater responsibility than any other person. G. Newell Lovejoy sings of God's gift in these words:

"God thought to give the sweetest thing
In His almighty power
To earth; and deeply pondering
What it should be,—one hour
In fondest joy and love of heart
Outweighing every other,
He moved the gates of Heaven apart
And gave to earth—a mother!"

MOTHER'S TASK.

A real mother takes the life God has put into her hands and tries to develop it for the Giver. It is hers to develop the characteristics that are good and suppress those that are bad. She must discover the possibilities within the childish life and bring them to their fulfillment. By her smiles and words and love she fashions a soul that may be like God. She trains criminals or missionaries. She makes men worthy of the Fatherhood of God, or she dwarfs souls until they become hideous things.

Because she so often measures up to her high calling of God, the poets sing her praise and prophets tell of her power. Of course there are some who are physical mothers only. They think of nothing more than their personal pleasure, but they are not so many. It is the mother who loves and cares and serves who receives the honor. She is God's helper in making the world good. She it is who is remembered and cherished.

If you have a mother who can understand your heart, bring her joy on this Mother's Day.

What the Mothers Do.

Praying for the little people
(Closed are eyes of brown and blue),
By the quiet bedside kneeling
With a trustful, sure appealing;
All the Spirit's guidance needing,
Seeking it with earnest pleading—
This is what the mothers do.

Parting from the little people
(Heart of mine how fast they grew!)
Fashioning the wedding dresses,
Treasuring the last caresses;
Waiting then as years fly faster
For the summons of the Master—
This is what the mothers do.

—Mary L. C. Robinson.

A Mother's Birthday.

Lord Jesus, Thou hast known
A mother's love and tender care;
And Thou wilt hear,
While for my own
Mother most dear
I make this birthday prayer.

Protect her life, I pray,
Who gave the gift of life to me;
And may she know,
From day to day,
The deepening glow
Of joy that comes from Thee.

As once upon her breast
Fearless and well content I lay,
So let her heart
On Thee at rest,
Feel fear depart
And trouble fade away.

Ah, hold her by the hand,
As once her hand held mine;
And though she may
Not understand
Life's winding way,
Lead her in peace divine.

I cannot pay my debt
For all the love she has given;
But Thou, love's Lord,
Wilt not forget
Her due reward,—
Bless her in earth and heaven.

THE INVINCIBLE GOOD WILL OF JESUS.

Christian Endeavor Topic for May 19, 1935.

Jno. 13:1; Luke 9:51-56.

Hymns: "O Love that Wilt Not Let Me Go"; "Jesus! the Very Thought of Thee"; "Thou Didst Leave Thy Throne"; "The King of Love My Shepherd Is"; "Love Divine, All Love Excelling."

Bible Readings: Charity to rivals, Mark 9: 38-41. Love toward friends, Jno. 19:25-27. Patience, Luke 22:63-65. Forgiveness, Luke 23-34. Tenderness toward Judas, Matt. 26:47-50. Good will toward persecutors, Matt. 5:10-12.

Poem:

JESUS THE CARPENTER.

If I could hold within my hand
The hammer Jesus swung,
Not all the gold in all the land,
Nor jewels countless as the sand,
All in the balance flung,
Could weigh the value of that thing.
Round which His fingers once did cling.

If I could have the table Christ
Once made in Nazareth,
Not all the perils on all the sea,
Nor crowns of kings or kings to be
As long as men have breath,
Could buy that thing of wood He made—
The Lord of Lords who learned a trade.

Yes, but His hammer still is shown
By honest hands that toil,
And round His table men sit down;
And all are equals, with a crown
Nor gold nor pearls can soil;
The shop of Nazareth was bare—
But brotherhood was builded there.

—Charles M. Sheldon.

Good will toward all people is a right condition of the heart. Christ could never have loved the people who so shamefully abused Him had not the love of God dwelt in His heart so supremely that He forgot the personal wrongs and gave Himself to others.

The seller once said, "Let the buyer beware." From experience the seller has found that a better motto is "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you." His first thought is to please his customers.

Each of us can rightly be called ambassadors of good will, for young people today are eagerly joining with other people in creating good will. One example is the crusade for peace. At the 1934 Defiance Holiday Conference young people and their counselors suggested some things we are doing and can do about peace. Some of them are as follows:

a. Christian young people must have certain convictions against war.

b. We must put ourselves on record and aid the general peace movement by allying ourselves with active national peace organizations.

c. We should not belong to organizations which tend to glorify war.

d. Make special programs glorify peace. (How do you observe the Fourth of July, Memorial Day, Armistice Day in your town?)

e. Question the representatives in legislature. Are they encouraging the young college men who are refusing military training?

f. Be informed on current problems, reading best literature.

What would you add to this list?

To the Prayer Meeting Committee—You have noted the varying of these programs. The first program for the month was a consecration service, last Sunday outside speakers were suggested, and this program is intended to consist of worship, songs, and short talks by the members. Next Sunday the topic will be "Social Injustices—What Shall We Do About Them?". (Scripture: Matt. 25:42, 43.) Choose a person who can lead a real discussion.

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

Lesson VI—May 12, 1935.

Golden Text: "So we, who are many, are one —body in Christ, and severally members one of another."—Romans 12:5.

Lesson Text: Acts 2:41-45; Ephesians 4:1-7, 11-16.

The various portions of Scriptures which the Lesson Committee selected as a background for the lesson on the Christian Church give many suggestions about the Church. They can only be hinted at in the space allotted to these notes.

The Founder of the Church.

The Church was founded by Jesus Christ, the Son of the Living God. He said, "I will build my Church." It is His Church. He is its Founder and its Builder. It is a divine institution. If it had been merely a human institution it would hardly have survived. But it has divine life in it, and it shall never die, nor will it ever be defeated. In these days when the church has fallen on hard times, when so many determined forces are openly and secretly attacking the Church, let every Christian take heart. The Church is His, He loves it, and gave Himself for it, and He will see to it that it fulfils His good purpose.

The Future of the Church.

"The gates of hell shall not prevail against it," said Jesus. Hell, Hades, was the abode of the dead. Jesus was saying that the power of death would not prevail over the church. It would never die. The unseen forces had no power over it. When a man invests his life and his time and his talent and his money and his influence in the church his investment is permanent. The future belongs to the church. Those who predict the end of the church have not reckoned with the facts in the cast. Have no fear about the future of the Church. She will persist and she will prevail.

The Growth of the Church.

The early church grew by leaps and bounds. In one day three thousand souls were added to the church. That was because the church was filled with the Holy Spirit. If the church today were baptized withe the Holy Spirit anew, how quickly the kingdom would march around the world. A church set on fire by the Holy Spirit will attract and win converts.

And yet we must not despise the slow but steady growth of the church. Jesus Himself recognized the principle of growth and development. "First the blade, then the ear, then the full grown corn in the ear." Better than one great, sweeping revival at a stated time in the year, is the principle announced in the early chapters of Acts, "and the Lord added daily unto the church such as were saved, or were being saved.

The Fellowship of the Church.

The church is the inclusive company of those who believe in Jesus Christ, bound together in common ties, for fellowship, and for cooperative action. The fellowship of the church is one of the greatest contributions which the church has to make to human life. The man who remains away from the services of the church robs himself of one of life's inestimable privileges. The man who tries to work alone at his Christian task, carries a useless burden. There is inspiration in fellowship in common tasks. Jesus knew that, so he organized the church.

The Honor of the Church.

"Walk worthily of the calling wherewith ye were called." One of the first obligations of the members of the church is to live as members of the Church of Christ ought to live. If one looks at it in the right way, it is a great privilege to belong to the church. One who is a member of the church ought to be careful how he lives, and what he does. The greatest harm to the church comes not from those who are its enemies, but those who are its members, who by their manner of life, deny the things that the Church stands for.

The Unity of the Church.

"There is one body, and one Spirit, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all." In essence there is only one church, the Christian Church in its inclusive sense. The Church Universal is one. Alas that there are so many divisions, and unimportant differences. But the world is gradually waking up to the folly and the sin of a divided church in a needy world, and slowly but surely Christ's prayer "that they may all be one" is being answered.

The Variety in the Church.

Paul likened the church to the human body which has many members, differing in many respects, but all functioning toward a common purpose. The body is not one, but many members. And all members have not the same office. But each is important. Each has some contribution to make to the body as a whole. So in the church there is variety, but there must be unity. All cannot preach, all cannot teach, all are not prophets, and so on, but in the Church of Christ there is a place and a need for all.

The Purpose of the Church.

"For the perfecting of the saints, unto the work of ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ . . . unto a full grown man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." The church is to produce Christian character and to develop a Christian society. It is to be the expression of the mind and spirit of Christ in human life in its individual and social aspects. It is to bring in the kingdom of God. And for this task every one of us is needed. Every one of us has some contribution to make to this great end. The church offers every one of us the great privilege of building a new social order in which people of Christian character practice the principles of Christian conduct.

Rise up, O men of God,
The Church for you doth wait;
Her strength unequal to the task,
Rise up and make her great."

FEASTING ON GOD.

Once when I was sick a friend remarked to me, "You must find this long illness very tedious." I was compelled to confess, however, that I was not conscious of any ennui. To be sure, work was waiting, but work is not the only thing in life. I am given to life that I may live! My task at that moment was to fellowship with God on my bed of pain. There is no such thing as tedium for those who are constantly praising God for the joy of the moments lived with Him. We may feast to our heart's content—not on food, but on God. In dreaming and in waking hours, in sorrow and in laughter, we may walk in a world flooded with light.

Every moment of life is a revelation of the heart of God. He greets us in the kitchen. We breathe Him in the bustle and roar of the factory, or when hanging on to a strap in a crowded car. Always we are in the bosom of God.

"THE SOUL."

"What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul."—Mark 8:36.

The revised version of this scripture translates the word "soul" as "life," and it is explained that this word does not refer to those elements that make up a human person, but that it refers to the entire conscious living. It does not refer to something inside of one that may be in danger of hell fire or punishment, but that it refers to the qualities and harmonies which make up a man as a character, which character is like the character of God. Therefore, the soul is the life, the sum total of the vital powers of one's being. This soul is that true self that goes on beyond the grave.

To save the soul means to vitalize and energize these powers of our being to their best and noblest use. To lose the soul is to defile, spoil or waste these vital powers.

Christ is the Saviour of our souls. No other power or person has saved or can save one; and when one loses Christ, or does not know Christ, he has lost the sense of his nobliest self, he has lost the joys of spiritual things, he has lost his sense of harmony, rest and peace of living, he has lost the inspiration of ever bettering conditions, and, like the rich man, who lifted up his eyes in hell, he has lost eternal happiness.

Prayer—O Lord God, create within us a deep passion for the spiritual nature of ourselves to be fashioned in Christ, and with a true sense of the value of a soul, we would struggle on to be like Him, our Saviour.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

"IS IT TRUE?"

"We know that all things work together for good to them that love God."—Rom. 8:28.

"So long as one is in the circle of God anything that happens is good." Do we believe that?

This quotation was the theme of a layman's address made in San Diego recently. He provoked it by citing his own experience, the results of that plane crash in the Adirondacks of New York State in January. Check the truth of the statement yourself by checking results of misfortunes in your own experience or observations.

Early Christians were familiar with the dark side of life, physical suffering, mental disquiet, bitter sorrows, intolerable burdens, but out of all their experiences there has arisen steadily revelations and interpretations of a true God, and a thousand blessings which we enjoy these days coming to us as a direct product of the sacrifice of their souls.

God often conceals his designs in order that His children may learn to trust Him in the dark as well as in the light.

Prayer—Our Father, make clear to us the providence of Thy love and make our days and experiences sweet with eternal good. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"THE GREAT LIFTING POWER."

"And I, if I be lifted up will draw all men to me."—Jno. 12:32.

The religion of Jesus Christ is different from all other religions because it affects, appeals to and governs the heart. It is a heart force that brings the powers and passions of the whole being into subjection and control by its own love-claims. It is that inner light that addresses itself to the imagination and holds before it the most lively images of good and evil, of blessings and curs-ings, for time and eternity. It is that inner consciousness that awakens desire for good and aversion to evil in every human soul that embraces Christ. It is the power that draws the soul away from sin and that introduces it into the love and fellowship of God. It is a consciousness of a likeness of one's own being to Divine Nature, and which inspires one to cultivate that likeness until it rests in the bosom of the Father eternally.

"When I found Him in my bosom,
Then I found Him everywhere,
In the bud and in the blossom,
In the earth and in the air.

"And He spake to me with clearness
From the quiet stars that say,
As ye find Him in the nearness
Ye shall find Him far away."

Prayer—O Lord of Love, we pray for the light of Thy love in our hearts this day, for that supreme manifestation of Thyself in Christ. Enter every avenue of our being and sanctify it to our knowledge and love of Him. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

"CANNOT HELP IT."

"Love is of God; and everyone that loveth is born of God."—I Jno. 4:7.

There is no more illustrous example of this love than St. John himself. Between him and Christ there was always a harmony that made them one, and there was always that inspiration that elevated him about that which was evil, or even the changes inherent in human kind.

Archbishop Alexander speaks of a legend of St. John in which it is said that when he was old and too feeble to walk, he used to be carried by his friends to the assemblies of the Christians where he always spoke affectionately of Jesus, and out of that affection it seemed that the very word which he uttered to them was, "Beloved, let us love one another." If we love God and have Him in our souls, we cannot help loving our fellow man—personality radiates that love always.

"If love is not worth having, then life is not worth having," said Rossetti, "and gifts are not worth giving, if love is not."

"Vain is an offering and vainer our receiving —For there is nothing left worth achieving or retrieving, if love is not."

Prayer—Our Father we pray for Thy gift to be a daily witness of God's love in life and in the hearts of our fellow-man. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

"IN THE PRESENCE OF GOD."

"I love the Lord because He hath heard my voice and my supplications. Because He hath inclined His ear unto me, therefore, will I call upon Him as long as I live."—Ps. 16:1, 2.

To establish one's self in possessing a sense of God's presence and in a sense of talking with Him is difficult. One must first establish God as a person and visualize that person not only in his inner man where God does make Himself known, but also in the things of daily life which are of Him and represent Him. And second, one must apply to God with diligence, and speak with Him in terms of those inner holy impulses and in the language of those things of Him. After a while, with such care, one finds God's love inwardly exciting him to godly action, and he finds converse with Him in the harmony between himself and the Divine will.

Prayer—

"His priest am I, before Him day and night,
Within His holy place:
And death and life and all things dark and bright,
I spread before his face.
Rejoicing with His joy, yet ever still,
For silence is my song;
My work to bend beneath his blessed will,
All day, and all night long—
Forever holding with Him converse sweet,
Yet speechless, for my gladness is complete."

—Gerhardt Terstugen.

SATURDAY.

"ALONE WITH MY MORSEL."

"If I have eaten my morsel alone."—Job 31:16-23.

The spirit of sharing doubles every blessing. Eating one's morsel alone cuts the morsel in two. Generosity is the greatest multiplier. "The greatest of these is charity."

Job had only a morsel, not a feast; but what he had, he divided with others. His poverty might have served as an excuse for his stinginess, but he would have nothing of such an excuse. A lesser man would have said, "Since God has given me only a morsel, He cannot expect me to give any of it away." Job was too great for so small an argument.

Usually, indeed, the poor give more, in proportion to their possessions, than the rich. The poor widow with her two mites gave more than all the rich men. They have only a morsel, but they do not eat it alone.

Prayer—Thou wilt increase our morsel, dear Lord, if we share it, even as Thou didst increase the lad's luncheon that fed the five thousand. But we would not give for the sake of the increase, but for Thy sake.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

"WILD BEASTS AND ANGELS."

"And he was with the wild beasts; and the angels ministered unto him."—Mark 1:9-13.

Wild beasts and angels! What a strange contradiction! Yet was not all the world that our Lord met a medley of wild beasts and angels? There were John and Herod, there were Mary and the Gadarene demoniac, there were Nicodemus and Pilate, there were Lazarus and Judas, there were the Twelve and the Pharisaic mob.

Yes, and in one person there would be at one time an angel and at another time a wild beast—Thomas the bold and Thomas the doubter, Peter the confessor and Peter the denier, Judas the disciple and Judas the traitor.

But the wild beasts came first, the angels came last, with Jesus as with us, if we are true to our Saviour. After the horror of the cross, the angels of Easter morning; after the trials of our life, the glory of the celestial city.

Prayer—Dear Lord, prepare us for either. May we not fear the wild beasts, since Thou art with us in the wilderness. May we have all hope of the angels, since we live in the salvation of Thy cross and the promise of Thy ascension.—Amen.

THE POWER OF SELF-KNOWLEDGE.

By Dwight E. Stevenson.

"Commune with your own heart."—Ps. 4:4.

"Try your own selves."—II Corinthians 13:5.

Someone has remarked that "No one has really learned to live unless he can convincingly say to himself the eleven great verbs of like: I am, I think, I know, I feel, I wonder, I see, I believe, I can, I ought, I will, I serve." If this be true, self-knowledge is a great segment of creative living.

Narcissus brooded over his reflected image in the crystal depths of the pool, according to the legend. The ancients polished metal to a bright finish that they might see temselves in a mirror, even though the reflection was distorted and blurred. Modern man uses the "looking-glass." Did it ever occur to you as striking that we have so many mirrors in our homes and shops? We look at ourselves while dressing, while getting a shave or a hair cut, while shopping in mirror-lined stores, or eating in mirror-walled restaurants.

Now it so happens that the mirror is the outward symbol of an inner fact of human nature. It is man's amazing power to stand off a little way and look at himself. His is the power of self-knowledge. Alone in all the vegetable and animal kingdom, so far as we know, he can stand upright and utter words of overwhelming significance: "I am."

Sometimes in a moment of exaggerated self-consciousness we become acutely aware of ourselves. Our minds reel and we stagger in amazement at the mystery which we carry about within our own persons every hour. Sometimes one of us may feel compelled to say, "I am I—can it be possible that I am an individual like those I see around me? I, whose face I have never really seen except by reflection? I, who know myself so intimately, yet to whom I am the most distant stranger.

Now the very fact of self-consciousness shows us to be unitary personalities, but the paradox of character is found in our awareness of many persons within one. Sometimes a person is dominated by purely physical hungers. Sometimes his heart is ravished by the beauty of a landscape or the style of a great book or poem. Sometimes impulses of generosity shake him. Sometimes he becomes a grasping miser. Within him is both an angel and a devil. He is energetic; he is also lazy. Henry Sloan Coffin has well said, "There is a whole Noah's Ark of beastly qualities in every soul—pig, sheep, rooster, fox, mule, wolf, cat, snake—and the list is only begun."

But with all the warring factions within one, a person has a "bent" or a dominant character which he thinks of as his real "self." These other traits he thinks of as being alien to his real nature, the ghosts of selves he might have become. Like sinister shades they walk now and again before his clouded vision trying to gain the center of the stage. It is, moreover, just and right that we should deny our inner enemy selves a voice of authority in our personalities; otherwise energies and character are dissipated upon numerous dissimilar errands and purposes.

Now for a counsel of warning: It is a common failing of mortals to think of themselves romantically. "Others may have faults," one seems to say, "but I do not." One easily identifies the self he actually is with the self he would like to be. On every occasion he makes bold to commend himself on his good points and to excuse his faults. "I have a quick temper," he may say, "but then so had my father; and besides, temper is the mark of strong character. I put off things I ought to do, but then, I am very busy, and I really accomplish much more than many other people do anyway."

In keeping with this tendency to think of ourselves more highly than we ought to think, there are many sides of our natures—certain secret thoughts and longings—which we will admit to no one, not even to ourselves. If we should suddenly speak out the word of the thought that has found lodgment in the thought recesses of our brain, even though we were in solitude, many of us would be mortified and overwhelmed with our own profligacy. We all, without exception, tend to make out a good case for ourselves. We practice an unconscious hypocrisy and set up before our eyes a character far better than the person our friends know us to be.

The new science of psychiatry has written many tragic chapters about this unwitting hypocrisy which we commit against ourselves. Buried sex complexes, fear complexes, senses of inferiority, unadmitted, have wrought havoc in lives of men and women. We are told that the first stage in curing a festering complex is to get the individual to look it in the face and accept it as part of his make-up, no matter how ugly it may be. It may be unlovely, it may revolt him, but it is part of him. He is like that; he will never become better until he faces himself. Once he has done this, he has brought his enemy out into the open where he can fight it manfully and with new courage.

One of the hardest achievements of self-knowledge is to know our shortcomings—to "commune with our own hearts" and to "try ourselves," literally to put ourselves on trial for crime. It takes deep courage to look yourself in the face for what you really are. You see so many things which you don't like. You hate to admit your imperfections. But along this road lies much of earth's happiness and power.

For, after all, the most useful people in the world are those who have stopped acting as attorneys for their own defense. They are people who accept themselves as they are, and set about their work. The late poet laureate of England, Sir Robert Bridges, has a line somewhere that goes like this:

"Self-knowledge which teacheth the ethics of life." Certainly self-examination is the beginning of all intelligent morality. The person who would behave uprighty must first face himself, particularly his unlovely self.

In a Persian legend, which is very similar to the familiar "Divine Comedy," Arda Viraf, the Persian Dante, sees in hell a "soul fleeing full of terror from a pursuing demon, whose ghastly appearance made him shudder and cry in despair, but all in vain. The demon took hold of him and said, 'Wilt thou not recognize me? I am thine own self. Thine own crimes have made me the ugly creature that thou seest before thee.' "

"Try your own selves," said Paul. That suggests something of the judge, sitting on the bench, hearing the case, and passing the sentence. The Christian virtue, then, is not to flee in terror before our unlovely selves, but to sit in judgment upon them, their master.

One thing we need constantly to remember is that verb "I am" largely determines how we will say the verb "You are." The world we see is shaped and colored by the one which we have

Dear Friends:

I truly hope all who have a living mother will remember her in some tender way on Mother's Day—she deserves it. Mothers appreciate some token of love from her children on Mother's Day. If you are too far away to visit her and lay your arms around her shoulders and tell her she is just as sweet as she was when you used to get down on your knees by her chair and say your little prayer, "Now I lay me down to sleep." Write her a tender affectionate letter and tell her. Send her flowers to wear on "Mother's Day." Oh! Do something in a kind and gentle way to let that dear mother of yours know that you are thinking of her and that you love her though you may be far away. Don't forget how tender and sweet she was to you when you were in your young and tender years and the many sacrifices she made for you and did it in such a kind and loving way with a smile on her face and a song on her lips.

"Strive to emulate her virtues and to stimulate within your own heart the inspirations she planted there." Remember that behind every great man there is a great mother. The poet well said:

"O magical word, may it never die from the lips that love to speak it,
Nor melt away from the trusting hearts that even would break to keep it,
Was there ever a name that lived like thine, will there ever be another?
The angels have reared in heaven a shrine to the holy name of Mother."

"HELP US GROW"—A PLEA FROM YOUTH.

These verses were used in a Young Women's World-Wide Guild and voice the desire of earnest young people to be given more responsibility and freedom by the older members of the church.

We are come today with a simple plea,
We girls of the World-Wide Guild.
We are asking that you help us lay
The foundation on which we may build.
From the wisdom and strength of your greater years,
We seek inspiration to gain;
How we best may plan a life worth while
Where joy and service remain.

We ask the prayers of your loyal hearts
To strengthen us where we are weak.
We need now and then the encouraging words
It may be your pleasure to speak.
No doubt at times your patience we tax
By the faults and follies of youth;
But remember, also, our eyes are on you!
And we're searching for honor and truth.

As worth-while girls of the World-Wide Guild,
We are pledged to Christ's services and love;
Small bits to be shaped by the Master's hand,
And prepared for His Kingdom above.
But our feet are unused on the narrow way,
And perchance we may stumble in fear.
What a wonderful help and comfort 'twill be
To feel that you care and are near.

Now we're planning great things that we're ready to do,
We're alive, and we mean to grow!
But it helps a "wee plant" to be tended with care!
And that's where you will come in, you know.
For mothers, missionaries, deacons and dads
Are just girls and boys grown tall,
Perhaps if someone had not helped you to grow.
You might not have been here at all!

Practice also is the proper evidence of Christian fortitude. The trial of a good soldier is not in the chimney corner, but in the field of battle.

THE POWER OF SELF-KNOWLEDGE.

formed within us. Every time we are tempted to cast a harsh judgment, say an unkind word, every time the world looks drab and people seem mean and unworthy, we would do well to examine our own selves. The landscape may be blurred because our vision is clouded.

I have said very little about the treasures of personality envisioned through the power of self-knowledge. If I have neglected them, it is because I have tried to point out other aspects which we are all too ready to overlook. But there are treasures, rich and unsearchable, even in the meanest of persons, which will cause him to turn and say, "I am made but little lower than the angels and crowned with glory and honor."

"Commune with your own heart," said the Psalmist. But there is a deep danger in self-consciousness. Life can be spoiled by those who become morbidly engrossed in their own character. Self-knowledge and self-examination alone will make nothing more noble than a self-centered perversion of a true individual.

In Joseph Fort Newton's column I picked up this little story of Lord Dunsany's play called, "The Gods of the Mountain." It is about six green stone idols on top of a hill in India, and of six beggars who tried to palm themselves off on the people of the village as those stone gods come to life. All the villagers fell victims of the hoax except two men, who started to the hilltop to see if the idols were still there. Before they arrived the images had been stolen and carried away. Amazed to discover them gone, they now believed that the gods had come to life. So they hurried back to the village and prostrated themselves before the six beggars. Then, while they were deifying the men, the six beggare, for their sin, were turned into stone and sat in a semicircle before the people, stolid, lifeless, inert.

Anyone who uses his power of self-knowledge, at the exclusion of all others, to set himself up in a shrine of self-conceit, and falls down to worship himself, will soon find a piece of stone where a man had been. Self-knowledge is a part of life, a vital part, but it is not all. The Psalmist who said, "Commune with your own heart," also had something else to say. A little farther on down in that same Psalm he said, "Lord, lift Thou the light of Thy countenance upon us." The completion of self-knowledge is found when the individual turns toward the Force that created him, to live in that light of the Eternal Other, and when that individual unites his life with the lives of all his fellows in creative effort.

We live in a world where there is work to do. As we do that work we make ourselves. The artist paints a picture, faithfully portraying what his eyes behold in the landscape, and unwittingly he has painted a patch of glory into his soul. A farmer plants his seed and tills the soil, and new virtues of industry and self-respect are grown in the fertile reaches of his heart. He who loses himself in constructive labor for his world will find himself. The highest achievement of self-knowledge that I can attain, after all, is to learn that I am not the center of the world, but that there are others in God's world every one of whom is as worthy as I, and as deep a mystery.

Prayer—Our Father, which art the supreme goodness and intelligence of the universe, we pray that Thou may teach us to know ourselves. In the beauty of holiness we must worship Thee, and in the quietness of our souls we must seek that understanding of our own spirits which will enable us to see Thee as our creator and loving father. Often in humility man bows down before Thy face, and often in sorrow and remorse must we all come to Thy feet seeking forgiveness even as little children. Yet guide us also that we may recognize our strength as well as our weakness, so haply we may live true to our higher selves rather than our lower. We ask this especially in the name of Thy Son, Christ Jesus, ever our supreme example.—Amen.

OBITUARIES

CLEM.

John W. Clem was born September 5, 1857, and died March 22, 1935, aged 77 years, 6 months, and 17 days. When I first went to Whistler's Chapel to take charge of the church as pastor in the summer of 1906 he was one of the leading members there. For a number of years since then he lived in Washington, D. C., and Woodstock, Va., and I did not see much of him. He is survived by his second wife, and by five sons and three daughters. Funeral services were held at Palmyra Christian church, March 24, 1935.

A. W. ANDES.

STEVENS.

Brother C. W. Stevens, senior deacon of New Hope Christian Church was born June 28, 1859, died April 24, 1935.

He was married to Mariah Blackburn in 1878. To this union was born ten children, two of which preceded him in death, 56 grandchildren and 18 great-grandchildren all of which are left to mourn his departure. His beloved wife also preceded him in death.

He has been one of the most faithful and punctual men to his church that I have ever had the pleasure and privilege to know. Scarcely ever was he absent from his Sunday School of which he was the faithful Superintendent for approximately twenty-five or thirty years.

Just any little thing did not keep him away from the House of Worship.

He was quiet and humble in his life. A fine example of energy and courage. He was a good husband and father and in ether years a good provider. But when the depression came he lost his home and went to live with his son, at whose home he died.

He died suddenly; died as he had lived —peacefully and quietly.

The funeral was conducted by the writer assisted by Rev. A. R. VanCleave, the pastor of the church. We laid him to rest in the Church Cemetery by the side of his dear wife.

God bless the sorrowing ones.

G. D. HUNT.

Need for Christian Education.—

From reports formulated for the Presbyterian General Assembly which is scheduled to meet in Cincinnatti, Ohio, on May 23rd, it is shown that there is great need for the "extension of Christian education" to unreached children and young people. It is pointed out that Sunday schools and other church organizations are "still failing to enlist more than 40 to 50 per cent of the Protestant constituency," and that "millions of nominally Protestant children in our country are without any systematic religious training."

Judge Acquits Judge.—

A recent issue of a large city daily carried on its front page news to the effect that one of that city's judges had been arrested for careless and reckless driving. A short while later the news appeared that the "careless and reckless" judge had been acquitted. It was brought out in the trial that two lieutenants of police had "detected the odor of liquor on the judge's breath when he was arrested." But an attending physician was quoted as saying that "he was not drunk." The wife of the driver of the other car, a negro, was sent to the hospital for minor injuries. We are glad that "the court also dismissed a reckless driving charge" which had been lodged against him.

Safety Glass and Motor Cars.—

The demand for safety glass in automobiles is steadily mounting. Thirteen states now have laws requiring safety glass in all new cars sold within their boundaries. These states have a combined total of 45 per cent of all new car registrations. More than a dozen other states have legislation in regard to safety glass pending. Then, the riding public is becoming "safety-glass-minded" and even in states where law does not make it compulsory, they are more and more demanding that their car have this added protection. It is estimated that compulsory regulations, plus the popular demand in states where safety glass is still optional, will result in not less than 70 per cent of the new 1935 cars being so equipped.

Bible Society's Report Most Interesting.—

The 119th Annual Report of the American Bible Society gives some quite interesting and encouraging statistics regarding Bible distribution. If private Bible publishing houses have had similar records, there is no doubt that the Bible continues as the best seller among books. The society reports a total distribution of Bibles, Testaments, or portions of the Bible, amounting to 7,517,548 during 1934. These included printing in 148 languages and dialects, and circulation in more than forty countries. There was an increase in the United States of 30 per cent in the number of Bibles issued. Several new translations were made during the year, including Cherokee Indian, and Tai Lu for distribution in South China. It was reported that the total number of languages and dialects into which some portion of the Scriptures has been translated number 954, while the entire Bible is available in 175 languages and the New Testament in 374.

Peru Places Embargo on Silver.—

The rising silver price being engineered by Washington, has forced the government of Peru to place an embargo upon the exportations of silver bars and coins. Peru has two circulating silver coins—the sol and the half-sol. The currency value of the sol is approximately 47 cents, and when the price of silver in the world market rose to 60 cents an ounce, it became profitable for Peruvians to melt their coins into bullion for export. It was not, however, until the price of silver had spurted up to 80 cents that there was a rush to take the profit, which has resulted in a severe shortage of circulating coins. It is this that has compelled the government to place the embargo upon the exportation of silver. The ban does not apply to newly-mined silver, and there is small chance that the government at Lima will make official protest against the Roosevelt program, for Peru is the fourth largest producer of silver in the world, and she is benefiting greatly by the rise in price.

Roosevelt Says Opponents of AAA "Lying."—

Addressing nearly 4,000 farmers who have gathered at Washington, Mr. Rosevelt proceeded to gather the enemies of the processing tax and the opponents of the amendments to the A. A. A. giving Secretary Wallace additional powers, into one group, and condemned them as "lying about the kind of farm program which the nation is operating today." Earlier in the day these same farmers had been addressed by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, who adjured them not to be misled by those who "have waved the bloody flag and deluded the farmer." There is no one that will deny that there has been a great deal of good accomplished for the farmer—though of a temporary nature—by the A. A. A., but the blessings that is has brought have certainly not been unmixed ones. They, like the greater part of the recovery program, will have to be paid for at a later date. It should be beneath the dignity of those in high offices in this country, to stoop to the using of such propaganda as has been and is being used to carry over their programs. Those who are honestly opposing the ever enlarging bureaucracy that is attempting to replace American Democracy deserve at least fair play.

Advises Girls to Marry Young.—

Dr. Paul Popence, leader in eugenics movements in California and Director of the Los Angeles Institute of Family Relations, advises girls to select their husbands before they are twenty-one, if they would obtain the man of their choice. He says that the woman waiting until she is thirty-one will have virtually no choice at all. In most cases men marry women younger than themselves, and this difference in ages increases as they grow older. Thus, if a woman waits until she is thirty she will have to marry a man thirty-five or over, and the doctor thinks that males who have been so obtuse as to remain bachelors until they are thirty-five are very obtuse indeed. They "comprise a preponderance of mental and physical defectives, or men whose outlook is warped, so infantile or egocentric that even the most optimistic maiden, willing to marry a man to reform him, would recognize this particular job as hopeless." Looking at it from a geographical viewpoint, girls in the northwestern states of Wyoming, Oregon, or Washington, or in Nevada, may take their time, even waiting until they are thirty-four, for in these states there are 150 possible husbands for every 100 mariageable women. But you girls of North and South Carolina, and little Rhode Island as well, beware, for in these states there are two girls for every man that is at all worth marrying, if the doctor is to be believed.

Columbia's New Policies.—

In a brochure recently sent out by the Columbia Broadcasting Company, there is announced a rising in the standards of the programs which originate within that system. Consideration has been given "to recent trends" in several types of programs that have caused the company to take the position that it has. Of especial interest are the rules that have been laid down regarding "children's programs," and in announcing these, it is understood that "wide variations in viewpoint exist among parents as to programs which they regard as suitable for their children to hear, and similar differences exist between parents and children." And while the company "has no thought of setting itself up as an arbiter of what is proper for children to hear . . . it does have an editorial responsibility to the community which cannot be waived." Because of this, its new regulations prohibit: "The exalting, as modern heroes, of gangsters, criminals and racketeers." They insist that "Disrespect for either parental or other property must not be glorified or encouraged; cruelty, greed and selfishness must not be presented as worthy motivations; programs that arouse harmful nervous reactions in the child must not be presented; recklessness and abandon must not be falsely identified with a healthy spirit of adventure; dishonesty and deceit are not to be made appealing or attractive to the child." There are several other conditions governing these programs. Similar action by other chain and local broadcasting stations would improve broadcasting conditions. The regulations are effective July 30th.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

President Roy A. Larrick, of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Virginia Valley Conference, writes that the time of the annual meeting of the Convention is Thursday and Friday, June 6th and 7th, 1935; place, Antioch Church, near Harrisonburg, Va.

Miss Emma Thomas, Haw River, North Carolina writes: "We are to have Home-coming and the dedication of a memorial window to our deceased deacons of the Haw River Christian Church at the church on May 19th. All friends and relatives of the deceased deacons are cordially invited to be present."

Guests from Portsmouth added much to the musical program of the church services in Hopewell both Sundays during the revival. Mr. L. R. Baker, Mrs. Baker, Miss Louise Bonden and Mr. Compton (The Four-B Quartette) brought a spirit of inspiration indeed.

GOD IN THE HILLS.

The sun needs no recommendation on a winter's day; nor the steady downpour of rain after a dry spell; nor Jesus where there's good to be done. If we can just get folks to know the real Jesus, He'll do all that needs doing. And just now I'm thinking of the importance of letting Jesus out through our lives.

Last week our Mrs. W. R. Sellars of Burlington and Miss Mary Fix, also of Burlington, and no less ours, drove up to our hills. It was a lovely spring day when soft white clouds shut out the blue from the wind-swept azure sky and all was still. But the time, nor the place matters not for even rugged peaks and mountain fog cannot dim the light of love that radiates from lives like those of our Christian Church at Burlington—and I can say the same for lots of other places. What a blessing it is to have folks bring God into our hills! And one does not have to come as a preacher to do so. And and all who know, and love our Master can let Jesus out through their lives. It is great to run up to the hills in summer just to have a good time, to have our lunch on a rock by the crystal waters of a mountain stream, and it is great of course, to come up into the shadow of towering peaks to fall in love; but there is one thing greater than all these; that is letting Jesus out through our lives among the hills. Now what I means is—when Mrs. Sellars and Mary come to our hills one knows they have been, and knows that God has been too. That's the stuff! If we can't take God with us even to the hills our religion is no good and the hills will be better if we do not come. We can have a nice lunch any place most, we can see pretty flowers other places too, and I have seen people who could fall in love other places besides under the shadow of a mountain laurel. Of course, I would not shut you out if you feel that you just can't do all those things any place else, especially the latter. For I want people to enjoy our hills. But in all sincerity it is the greatest of all things to come to our hills with a higher purpose than just to seek our own pleasure. For, of all places on earth, this place needs God, and needs you to bring God here with you, as much, if not more, than any place in all the world. So please bring God when you come to our hills. Remember, the human souls groping in darkness and remember, too, that you represent the Christian world to people here. We may judge the Christian Church, or the whole of Christianity by you when you come. It is true that there is a Gospel according to you. And here we see few strangers, naturally we ask what church they are from. So a mistake here on the part of a Christian is more than a mistake. You recall what the Bible says about causing one of the little ones to stumble. Well, we are little ones here, and I trust there are other places we might do well to let our light shine also. However, I have no right to rave so about what people should or should not do while here, for, taking our visitors as a whole, they do come here seeking to help, and try to bring Jesus. Few have come who really hurt, rather than helped our hills. But I just fell to thinking of my last visitors from Burlington and could not help but feel that it would be great if all people come with the sincerity of mind and heart that these came. Mrs. Sellars' "God bless you," lingers still on the hills, and I know a Christian has been in our hills. It adds something, it seems, to the breeze.

The light that radiates from Christian lives is like a shower of rain coming to feed little plants; plants that are wilted, maybe broken in the sun to die. "Feed my lambs," you are doing that Christian friends when you bring us God here among the hills.

Our Hilly Grissoms are busy now making plans for revivals in our churches here this summer. Please lend your prayers for we will need them.

And we are always glad to have our people come and stay long enough to learn of mountain life and feel with us the need of Christ here.

Thanking you always for your support and prayers. May God bless you.

VICTORIA OF THE HILLS.

FROM MARTHA'S CHAPEL.

During the past five months that I have served the Martha's Chapel Church, I have gotten acquainted with a goodly number of Christian men and women who have been a real inspiration to me. The people there are cooperative in every respect. We have services each first Sunday morning, and we extend to the reader an invitation to visit us.

Sunday, May 5th was Memorial Day at Martha's Chapel. The morning service included some special music by a duet from the church and a sermon fitting to the occasion by the pastor. The service was concluded at the cemetery after flowers had been placed upon each grave. Dinner was served on the church grounds. The afternoon service included special music by the choir, quartette and two short messages by brethren of the church. The memorial service was well attended, and seemingly enjoyed by people from the neighboring villages and towns.

J. EVERETTE NEESE, Pastor.

FROM HAW RIVER.

During the past year and a half that I have served the Haw River Christian Church, I have found the people cooperative in every respect. Our work is progressing rapidly. Our Young People are joining with the 188,000 other Congregational-Christian young people in helping to "Build a New World." The young people of the Haw River Church are energetic, sincere, and cooperative; willing to render service anywhere, in order that the Gospel of Christ may reach others.

My wife and I received a real surprise Saturday night, April 27th, 10 P. M., when a group of the Haw River Christian Endeavorers drove to our home and brought a large box of pantry supplies and other useful articles. Along with these supplies was included a five-dollar love gift.

Mrs. Neese and I have found it a pleasure to work with this Christian Endeavor group and we assure them of our continued cooperation and prayers. May the Lord bless them in all their efforts.

J. EVERETTE NEESE, Pastor.

LANGDALE, ALABAMA.

I am pastor of Langdale, Richland and Mt. Olive churches. These churches are doing fine work. I came to Longdale three and a half years ago and organized a Christian church with 15 members and now we have 100 members. We have a good Sunday school twelve months in the year. We have a good Christian Endeavor and a good Woman's Missionary Society. We have a good prayer meeting once a week and preaching two Sundays per month. We have not had any church building but have been carrying on our work in the basement of the Sears Memorial Hall, but I have been raising money for eighteen months and putting it in the bank at West Point, Ga., to build a $4,000 church and the money is all in hand except $700. The church is going to be a beautiful one forty ft. by sixty ft, with a basement for class rooms and dining hall, and other conveniences. There are to be two rooms nine by fourteen; one on each side of the pulpit and the choir. The choir space is eight by twenty-eight. The pulpit is nine by twenty-eight. The church is going to be beautifully lighted and has a beautiful steeple fifty feet high. We have a very large church bell to go in this steeple. We are building this church on a beautiful lot 120 by 200 feet. We paid $400 for the lot.

The building is in the hands of a good contractor of West Point, Ga., and he began the work three weeks ago and it will be completed in the next three weeks. We are expecting to move into this church the first Sunday in June, but I must have the $700 in hand in the next three weeks so the church will be paid for when it is finished. It is my motto to cash the work as we go. I am putting my whole life in the work and have worked so hard that I am most given out. I am 58 years old and have been preaching for 30 years and my health is not very good, but I am willing to spend and be spent for the dear church. I want to finish this beautiful building for the good of the people and for Jesus' sake and I want to pay cash as I go. I may not ever be able to build another church, but I do want to finish this one. I built a beautiful church at Laneet, Ala., of which Rev. G. D. Hunt is pastor at this time. I raised $14,000 cash and paid for it when it was finished and I did it in one year. I do not deserve any credit for it. I have only done my duty and I give the good Lord the Glory for all that He has done for me and through me and the good people whom I have served.

I am making an appeal to all the readers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN to make a contribution to this building fund for Jesus' sake. If you just knew how much good it would do me and how it would lift the burden from my poor heart, I believe you would give me a lift. I am asking this of you in the name of Jesus and for His sake. I am giving all the money and the strength and power that I have to the work of my Lord and His church. I preach ten sermons every month and sometimes more and attend all the other meetings and I never have a vacation, or lose any time from my work. So if you will help me, I will appreciate it with all my heart. Pray for me brethren and sisters that the good Lord may bless my work.

Please send your contribution to

ELON SUMMER SCHOOL OF LEADERSHIP TRAINING.

JUNE 24-30, 1935.

The school is under the direction of the Church Extension Boards of the Congregational-Christian Churches, District of the Southeast, and the Board of Christian Education of the Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches and continuing the Blue Ridge Leadership Training Conference, and the Elon Summer School of Leadership Training.

What the School Is.

The Elon College Leadership Training School, through the merger of the former Blue Ridge and Elon schools, has a fine opportunity to render a very special service to the Congregational and Christian Churches of the Southeast.

Our two Churches have demonstrated their belief, held through the years, in "the union of the followers of Christ" in a way which is attracting the attention of Christians everywhere. Our greatest need now is to know each other better. This will mean a better understanding of the high purposes and a better knowledge of the type and quality of work which is being done in this section by both groups to meet the spiritual needs of our people.

For seven years Blue Ridge has been a meeting place for Congregationalists of the Southeast. It has promoted fellowship and has represented a fine cross-section of their work.

The Elon conference has been held continuously since 1922, and has been a mutual meeting place for the Christian churches.

The spirit and ideals of both of these conferences in the past should combine to make it possible for us to go forward together in fellowship and understanding and helpfulness to each other.

The Need.

Trained workers are greatly needed by the Church today. The rising tide of general education, the wide distribution of papers and magazines, the movies, and the radio all demand an ever-increasing preparation on the part of those who are to lead in religious education.

Methods of teaching are radically different from what they were a few years ago. New materials are constantly reaching the market. It is in a school like Elon that teachers and leaders get the needed information and inspiration to keep them on the up grade as Christian workers.

Who Should Attend.

This school is planned for ministers, Sunday school superintendents, S. S. teachers, missionary workers, Christian Endeavor workers, young people, and all who are interested in religious education.

If you desire to be a leader in a local church or elsewhere, it is very important for you to study. The Elon Summer School of Leadership Training invites you to attend, and believes that you will be benefitted.

Every church should be represented. Young people are urged to attend. All pastors are urged to plan to aid the school and receive its blessings.

What To Bring.

The College furnishes room, light, and water free. You should bring all the toilet articles and bed linen you will need.

Include Bible, note-book, pencil, and some stamps so you can write home to friends telling of your good times.

Be sure to bring a sunny smile and a willingness to cooperate in a serious attempt to make a Christian community.

The Cost.

Registration and Board will be only $7.50 for the entire time. This makes it possible for everyone to attend. It is a cheap place to take a vacation that will mean spiritual renewal.

Every student will be expected to have a book. The books will cost not more than $1.25 each. There are no other costs at the school.

Transportation by train or bus is cheap. So is it in cars when several share in the expense.

A Registration fee of $1.00 sent to the Registrar early will help the school and give you a choice room.

VOICES AND THE VOICE.

Voices said, "Stay!"
  But the Voice said, "Come!"
So I'm off and away
  To my transient home,
Be it mountains green,
  Or Alaskan snows,
Or under a tropic sky,
  Who knows?
Who cares?—if only
  It be a place
Untouched as yet
  By the Master's Grace;
Untaught as yet
  Of that Life, that Gift
That spoke God's power
  To redeem and lift.
Voices said, "Stay!"
  But the Voice said, "Go!"
Could I hoard the wonderful
  Truths I know ?
O heart, be strong!
  O feet, be swift!

WHERE HOTELS ARE MISSION MINDED.

When Secretary Howell Davies registered in the hotel at Redfield, South Dakota, his eyes were gladdened by the sight of a Cent-a-Meal box sitting on the counter. On inquiry he found that when they were given out at the church the proprietor had taken one for his family and one for his guests, and that the latter had already been opened three times.—Missionary Herald.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

HOME, SWEET HOME.

There is no place on this earth like home, sweet home. Now it did not take any physical exertion or mental effort to write that sentence. It has been written ten thousand times and spoken even more times than that, so that it just runs off of pen or tongue without energy or effort. Possibly all truth, great, good, simple truth is like that. It is just natural and easy. So the only excuse this writer has for repeating the sentence "there is no place like home, sweet home," is that this simple truth may just keep on being said and told, for when it shall have been said and told ten million times it will not then be over-said or over-done in the telling.

The trees are good and glorious elsewhere than at home, but nowhere are they quite so good and glorious as those at home. These about the home have a familiarity that betrays and reveals a friendship not found in the trees elsewhere. Maybe, in the abstract, they are not quite so graceful as some other trees, but their graciousness and generosity more than make up for any lack of outward grace and perfection that other trees may seem to have. Then the old "front porch" or the "back porch" at home are just a little more cooling and comforting, even if not as wide and long as those we have seen elsewhere. Then the "yard" or the lawn about the house may not be as extensive or as beautiful as we have seen elsewhere, but they are ours; they have come to be a part of us, and they are just a little more restful to the eye and comforting to the body and dearer to the heart than any to be found elsewhere than at home, sweet home. And what shall we say of the sweet and familiar rooms of that house which we have adorned with our love and now call home? What matters it that the rooms are not as spacious or ceiling not quite so high or the walls not so beautiful to look upon? It's home, sweet home, and love and friendship and favors there have so clarified the vision that one can see beyond the bare walls and say with fervor and in fact, "Man, this is home." No, the food does not have to be as elegant nor the variety as great, nor the flavoring so spiced; but it is food of our own table and in our own home, and wherein elegance and variety fail, friendship, familiarity and love have supplied and more than supplied the spicing necessary, and once more the aroma and the keen appetite in eating just plain home-cooked food.

The reason for all this is that God made the home. The fact of business is, God founded two institutions on this earth, and only two—the home and the church. Man has founded and builds other institutions for his own convenience, or safety, or improvement. God instituted the home and the church, one for the comfort, protection and strength of the body, the other for the comfort, protection and strength of the soul. And just as the home is the sweetest place on earth and the most glorious for the physical man, the church is the sweetest place on earth and the most glorious for the spiritual man. Out of these two institutions founded and builded of God, man has seen fit to evolve many other institutions, but woe be to man if he neglects or destroys, or seeks to destroy, the two institutions that God Himself founded and is building. There is nothing more serious and more to be deplored in the world today than the tendency to minimize the worth and the value, the prestige and the power of the home and the church. Destroy the home and you destroy the foundation on which society is built; destroy the church and destroy the temple through which the soul is regenerated and prepared for the life eternal. We may build all the institutions of every patriotic and benevolent type imagined. There is no institution of man that can take the place of home nor be substituted for the church. These are of God, and what God hath builded and joined together, let no man put asunder, except to his own final undoing. Home, sweet home, a comfort and a joy to the body; the Church, the Living Church, the body of our Lord, the spiritual body through which we are brought into the sweet and blessed fellowship of our Maker and our Redeemer.

MORNING, NOON AND NIGHT.

One wonders how many of families of those who read THE CHRISTIAN SUN have adopted and are using the Cent-A-Meal Boxes? This writer feels that the families that are not using them are certainly missing something out of family life. As the N. Y. C. C. State News very aptly says: "The dedication of a Cent-a-Meal links your family with the wide fellowship of many thousands in the church who care for others." Read further what the State News has to say of this joy and delight of the family dining table:

"It is neither a dollar, nor ten dollars, but the smallest coin minted by the government—a cent—that each family is asked to give. Here the privilege and opportunity of giving to the support of the greatest undertaking of the church is brought within the range of us all.

"This Cent-A-Meal box has great educational values: The giving of the cent frequently leads to some discussion of the work of the church in the various avenues of our national life and in the needy fields beyond the seas. The cent drops into the box and there follows a prayer, a thought, and a new interest in China, Japan, India, Africa, the Near East, the Philippines and the far flung borders of our United States.

"It is the family's recognition of God's goodness: The very act of dropping a coin into the box for such a high purpose says, 'We are thankful to God, the Giver of every good and perfect gift, who has blessed us with food, raiment, homes and friends. We acknowledge it is not only blessed to receive but also it is a blessed thing to share what we have with others.' It is in very truth a 'blessing box.'

"It brings joy: Any investment made in God's work is never lost. 'What we give we have.' All those who invest in the enrichment of the world's life have the assurance and joy that they have shared in the greatest undertaking in the world."

Unless your pastor has called attention of the Cent-A-Meal Box through which, out of gratitude to God, you and your family donate a penny a meal to the glory of God through the Mission cause, why not send a dime along to the Mission Secretary at Elon College and get a box for your family and put it on the dining-room table? You will find it a joy and a blessing and never a burden. Take this further word from the N. Y. C. C. State News:

"You can show your gratitude to the Giver of all good gifts by joining the 4,000 families in New York State which are now using the Cent-A-Meal Boxes. If you cannot make a pledge you can use this simple method of sharing for the Kingdom of God. In Illinois, $3,014.41 was taken from the boxes of 35 churches at the first opening. Send an order to the Conference office and give your church the opportunity of giving to the great work of the Church at home and abroad. The boxes cost 10c each and may be paid for in various ways—out of the first proceeds, out of the church treasury or by individuals."

ANOTHER FOOL CRAZE.

If any SUN reader is in doubt as to the credulity and gullibility of the public mind just let such a one learn something about this wild hysteria that is now sweeping the country under the title of "Send-A-Dime" chain letter. Writing under the above caption, the Nashville Christian Advocate very pertinently says:

"Where are the tree-sitters and the walking marathons? Gone into the limbo of forgotten things. But another craze has appeared. This time it is a sort of get-rich-quick scheme at the expense of credulous. 'Send-A-Dime' to one person and receive thousands of dollars in return is the new craze. Were it not for its pathetic lack of good sense, one could smile at the credulity of those who respond. The craze originated in Denver Colo., and, according to press reports, has spread over the land like one of the sand-storms which, by the way, also come out of the West. If we have any statutes covering such lottery and fraud schemes, our postal authorities should promptly act to close the mails to this type of gambling and prevent the further spread of the wild hysteria."

Of course, the above editorial was published before postal authorities at Washington issued the statement that such letters cannot be legally sent through the mails, as it is a species of gambling and effort to get something for nothing. Lotteries were outlawed a long time ago and our Government now finds need of this law to suppress this latest escapade in the realm of widespread gambling.

SOUTHEAST CONVENTION.

The Third Biennial Session of the Southeast Convention of Congregational-Christian Churches was held in Raleigh and was well attended and an inspiring event. The two previous sessions of the Southeast Convention had been in connection with the Southern Convention, this being the first session meeting by itself. The Southeast Convention combines the features of a large fellowship meeting for the churches and conference of the southeast, with some of the characteristics of the regional meetings which are held in other areas of the country. It has no ecclesiastical or business function. It is for fellowship, for inspiration and for facing the problems of our church and missionary tasks in the home land and the foreign field.

The program was a very strong one and brought together men of national repute and denominational leaders and there was time allowed for free discussion. The topic of the Conference was, "Christianity for Today." Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, Hororary Moderator of the Council, was present and spoke twice, first on the topic "The Minister's Message for Today," and again on the topic "Christianity in a Changing World." The social aspects of Christianity were discussed by Professor Arthur E. Holt, Ph. D. and Rev. A. D. Beitel of Nashville. The missionaries present and speaking were Rev. George W. Shepherd and Rev. Paul Nilson, both missionaries of the American Board. Dr. H. Shelton Smith of Duke University spoke on "A Divided Church and a Divided World," and Rev. Roy C. Helfenstein of Dover, Delaware, spoke on "Evangelism for Today." Dr. Ernest M. Halliday spoke on "Christianity in Churches" and Dr. W. R. Kedzie on "Our Denominational Institutions" and Superintendent E. C. Gillette spoke on "Christianity in our Denominational Program." Rev. E. C. Lawrence, pastor of the Afro-Christian Church in Releigh discussed the subject "Christian Union Among Our Negroes."

One of the outstanding features of the Convention was a Youth Fellowship program with Miss Lucy Eldredge and Rev. Daniel A. Poling, D. D., as the principal speakers. Dr. Poling also spoke at a large meeting in the church on the following Wednesday night.

The Worship services were conducted by Dr. John G. Truitt, Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, Vice-Moderator of the General Council, and Dr. H. S. Hardcastle. There was a group meeting of leaders of the Woman's Missionary Society, Mrs. W. R. Sellars presiding, with Mrs. D. E. Brown of the Commission on Missions participating.

The President of the Convention, Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, D. D., Burlington, North Carolina, presided most effectively over the sessions of the Convention, and the newly elected officers are Rev. C. A. Lincoln, Daytona Beach, Fla.; Rev. J. G. Truitt, Suffolk, Va., Vice-President and Rev. Geo. N. Edwards of Charleston, Secretary-Treasurer. The Convention voted to meet again in 1937, the place and date to be determined by the Executive Committee. The pastor of the Raleigh church, Rev. J. Edward Kirbye, D. D., and the members of the Raleigh church were indefatigable in their hospitality to the members of the Convention.

THE MISSION OFFERING BY THE CHURCHES.

Some of the churches, as our report shows, have sent in their Easter offering, and for these offerings we are grateful beyond measure. Surely, every church will take this Annual offering for Missions. The real hunger of the world today is heart hunger for the Bread of Life. The real need of the world today is the need of the soul for spiritual food. The gospel of the Son of God is this spiritual food, and through our mission effort we are seeking to establish churches of our communion and fellowship at needy and strategic points in the homeland and to share the gospel of the Son of God with souls in fields afar that are perishing without it. The real poor and the real needy of this earth are those without the gospel of the Son of God, and as our Lord has given us this gospel it behooves us to share it with others, for the message of love and life grows deeper and takes a stronger hold on our own lives only when and as we share that message and that life with others.

I am appealing to all our churches to take the Annual missionary offering, not for my sake, nor the sake of other human beings around about us, but for the sake of our Lord, that the kingdom of heaven might be built up on earth and that His Name, which is above every name, might be preached to every creature. It will not hurt, it will help every church and every individual to make this most unselfish and Christ-like of all donations.

MEN AND WOMEN OF FAR HORIZONS.

Jesse R. Wilson, General Secretary of the Student Volunteer Movement, has compiled and edited a volume of more than two hundred pages entitled, "Men and Women of Far Horizons." The Friendship Press, New York, is the publisher. The volume is composed of quite brief but exceedingly gripping sketches by and about Christian missionaries and their colleagues in mission lands today. If the reader of these lines shall wish to get a glimpse of a living gospel and the real dynamic of a living gospel let him read some of these sketches. Elsewhere in THE SUN this week is published one of the sketches entitled: "Mr Hesler's Own Story," which will give the reader some idea of the brevity, spirit and power of these sketches. They are wonderful. Also we are publishing under the title, "Voices and The Voice," a brief poem picked from one of the sketches. Possibly the best answer to the question, "Why do men and women live and act like these do whom we read of in this volume," is found at the close of one of the sketches in which Priscilla Holton, a missionary, tells why she and others like her went out and endured as a missionary: "It is because we have seen Jesus, the Christ!" There can be no other reason for men and women acting as these men and women have acted and are acting, and on no other grounds can we explain the life and labors of our missionaries than just that—because they have seen Jesus, the Christ. This book reveals the spirit, purpose and significance of the missionary enterprise today—an enterprise which still leads all the forces of civilization making for a better world. The book can be had from the Friendship Press, No. 150 Fifth Avenue, New York, in cloth for $1.00; paper 69c.

WANTED! $15.00.

What a fine thing it would be if three more members of the C. M. A. of the N. C. and Va. C. C. Conference would just pay their membership fee of $5.00; then the Financial Secretary would give receipt and Rev. W. T. Scott, our mission pastor at Winston-Salem, could be paid another month. Why not send yours?

MASSANETTA SPRINGS BIBLE CONFERENCE, 1935.

Massanetta Springs, located as it is in the heart of the historic Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, four miles east of Harrisonburg, with an altitude of 1,600 feet, offers not only an ideal vacation spot, but the program of the Conferences conducted by the Presbyterian Synod of Virginia is second to none in America. Outstanding Christian leaders of every denomination, both in this country and abroad, anually speak on its platform..

As a vacation resort it has unequalled attractions such as the famous health-giving spring; all athletic sports, including golf links; the wonderful underground caverns; points of historic interest and scenic worth such as the birthplace of Woodrow Wilson at Staunton, the tombs of Lee and Jackson at Lexington, Monticello, the home of Thomas Jefferson; the famous Skyland Drive atop the Blue Ridge Mountains which furnishes scenery which some have said rival that in Switzerland.

World-Famous Speakers.

Among the great leaders who will speak on the platform of the Bible Conference are the following:

Dr. Robert E. Speer, New York, one of the ablest laymen in America;

Dr. Albert W. Beaven, President of Colgate-Rochester Divinity School, Rochester, N. Y., and former President of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, an eloquent and popular preacher and lecturer;

Bishop Arthur J. Moore, who won the highest honor of his denomination through his gift as a passionate evangelist and his superb personality;

Dr. S. D. Gordon, known around the world for his evangelistic fervor and his devotional books;

Dr. Wm. Evans, said by Dr. G. Campbell Morgan to be the "greatest Bible teacher in America";

Dr. H. A. Ironside, pastor of the Moody Memorial Church, Chicago, whom Homer Hammontree, the famous singer, puts at the top of the list as a Bible teacher in this country;

Dr. Andrew W. Blackwood, Professor, Princeton Theological Seminary, who has won a reputation as a great Bible teacher.

Among the speakers from abroad, Massanetta Springs is fortunate in being able to announce the name of Dr. Wm. Erskine Blackburn, pastor of the Egremont Church, Liverpool, which is said to be the largest Presbyterian Church in England. He was for many years the beloved minister of the Renfield Street Church, in Edinburgh, Scotland, which had crowded congregations. He is described as a stirring and eloquent preacher who holds the interest of the youth of his congregation. He is to speak during August in the Marble Collegiate Church, New York, and Dr. Sclater's Church in Toronto, Canada.

Among the ministers of the Southern Presbyterian Church are Dr. D. M. Glasgow, pastor of the Independent Presbyterian Church, Savannah, Ga., and Dr. T. K. Young, pastor of the Idlewild Presbyterian Church, Memphis, Tenn., and a number of others.

During the first week of the Bible Conference there will be a Ministers' Forum. During this period certain timely topics will be discussed.

Elders' and Deacons' Conference.

An Elders' and Deacons' Conference will be held on Saturday and Sunday, July 20-21. It is planned to bring together as many of the 4,600 officers of the churches of the Synod as possible. The subjects to be discussed will be chosen with a view to giving the officers more careful training, and a vision of the great objectives of the Church.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Revival meetings were held during the past week in the Suffolk and Rosemont Christian Churches. In the Suffolk Church, the pastor, Dr. John G. Truitt, conducted the services which were well attended. Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, assisted Rev. J. F. Morgan in the services at Rosemont, and the people enjoyed the meetings.

Many ministers are deeply concerned about the attendance of the revival services. People who are not members of the church do not attend these meetings in great numbers. Frequently members of the church do not interest themselves as they should in these meetings. And, when they do come, there is, apparently, an unwillingness to respond to the call of the minister for reconsecration and personal work.

A generation ago revival meetings in Eastern Virginia were well attended in country and city churches. While it is possible to err in comparing conditions over a period of thirty years, yet it is evident that the church members are not as enthusiastic as they might be over the evangelistic work of the church. Ministers might well ask themselves whether they are deeply moved to prayer and consecration to this supreme business of the pastor.

There are two reasons for this lack of interest in revivals. First, the people do not want a revival. It takes a lot of grace, sometimes, to pray earnestly for the spiritual blessings one wants to receive; but it takes more courage to ask God for what He knows one needs. Usually church members, in prayer, are inclined to limit their petitions to their personal wants; and these wants are not always spiritual. When the church becomes as willing to pray for Divine power to meet human needs and consecrates itself to the task of cooperating with God, a great revival will appear in the churches. The second reason for this indifference is: The people are afraid of a real revival. Church members know by experience that a spiritual revival will change things in their own lives. Under the heart searching Gospel of a revival, human hearts are convicted of sins. And sin may be a very disturbing factor in a convicted heart, but people love the experiences which make them sinners in the sight of God. Yes, people love their sins, and do not want to give them up. The hideous memory of past sins may haunt them in their midnight dreams; but with the dawning light they desire to return to the indulgence in some shallow vanity. If these conditions exist in the hearts of many church members, how may one hope to enlist the interest of the outside world in the Christian religion?

The Church is not desperately wicked. There are thousands of devout, spiritually minded members of the Church. But the Church does lack spiritual power with God and mankind. Under the guidance of organization experts the Church has a complex machinery from the cradle roll to the old age pension bureau. But the power house is not in keeping with the machinery. In this static period the inactive members of the church are joining the outside enemies of the kingdom in personal animosity and ungracious criticism of the work of ministers and laymen. These critics know that the real trouble lies in a lack of spiritual interest and prayerful cooperation. The church is spiritually weak today in trying to create an increasing interest in the salvation of souls; but it has a potential power, yet undiscovered, unclaimed and unused, which is able to call indifference into activity, and opposition into support.

When the church wants a revival and is willing to pay the price, God will open the windows of heaven aud pour out this blessing upon a needy world. Then pastors will rejoice to see crowded churches, and sinners will move to the altar for prayer and spiritual regeneration. God hasten this experience and that great day of victory.

I. W. Johnson.

ELON COMMENCEMENT.

The Forty-Fifth Annual Commencement of Elon College will be held May 25th to 29th, inclusive. The program begins May 25th at 8:00 o'clock by the Elon Players, Miss Floyd Childs, Director. The Playmakers will present "The Late Christopher Bean," by Sydney Howard.

Sunday, May 26th, the Baccalaureate Services at 11:00 o'clock. Dr. William Horace Day, of Bridgeport, Connecticut, President of the Home Boards and Trustee of the College, will deliver the Baccalaureate Sermon.

Sunday afternoon at 4:00 o'clock the Music Department will present its advance students in instrumental and voice selections. This will be a very attractive service. At 7:30 o'clock, the President of the College will deliver an address to the Graduating Class. These services are open to all who may wish to attend.

Monday, May 27th at 10:00 A. M., the Senior Class will give its Class Day Exercises, which will close with a brief service under the Senior Oak, Monday night at 8:00 o'clock the Elon College Festive Chorus will present "The Cross of Fire" by Max Bruch. This will be one of the most enjoyable items on the Commencement profram. You will not want to miss this if you can possibly attend.

Tuesday has been set apart as Alumni Day. This day, of course, is of special interest to the Alumni and friends of the College. A very attractive program has been arranged. The 11:00 o'clock service will he held in Whitley Memorial Auditorium. Mr. Russell Campbell of Harrisonburg, Virginia, will deliver the address. Mr. Campbell is an alumnum of the College and a former member of the College faculty. His many friends will be delighted to see him again and to hear him.

At 12:30 the annual barbecue will be served on the campus. This barbecue is free to all who come.

At 2:30 P. M.. the Alumni Association will hold its annual business meeting.

At 5:00 o'clock President and Mrs. Smith will give a Tea for all the Alumni and friends of the College. The weather permitting, this Tea will be given on the campus.

At 7:15 all the Alumni of the College will meet in the Rotunda of Alamance Building and march to the Whitley Memorial Auditorium for the annual Alumni Address. The address will be delivered by the Honorable F. F. Myrick of Greensboro, N. C. Mr. Myrick is an alumnus of the institution and a former member of the faculty. Following the Alumni address the Alumni March will be instituted at which time the campus will be brilliantly lighted with Japanese lanterns. The alumni are given the privilege of helping to purchase these lanterns. Each Alumnus is asked to contribute 50c toward this unique project. If you are an Alumnus of Elon, and will not be able to attend commencement this year, won't you please forward your Alumni dues with 50c added for the lanterns to Mrs. C. M. Cannon, secretary, Elon College, N. C.? The Alumni March will end at the College dining room where a delicious banquet will be served. Music for all occasions, except the banquet, will be furnished by the Elon Singers.

Wednesday, May 29th, is Graduation Day. The Literary Address will be delivered by the Honorable Josiah W. Bailey of the United States Senate. Mr. Bailey is the senior Senator from North Carolina and is one of the most brilliant minds of today. The public will be greatly interested in his address.

From the above program, it will be observed that a number of unusual and attractive features are included in our program this year.

We are hoping that a large number of Alumni will return to the campus for this occasion. Ladies' Hall has been designated as Alumni House and accommodations will be offered to those who wish to spend the night on the campus. Please drop the writer a line stating just when you expect to arrive and how many will be in your party. There will be no charge for lodging. Meals may be had at a nominal cost in the College dining hall.

TIME TO ATTEND CHURCH.

His is a very active business. His business keeps him in the city month in, and month out. It keeps him in the office many hours of every day of the week. He has built up a very long list of friends who consult him about almost everything in ordinary life. His judgment is sought in every field of church, business, and politics in his community. He keeps in active touch with what is going on in the political and religious, as well as the business world. He needs a great deal of time for his reading, and for his correspondence. He should have more time to rest. But one thing I have noticed about him: He has time to attend church.

He gives a great deal of time to church boards and committees both conference and convention wide. He gives unending service to churches that are in financial distress, or without pastors; and he serves as chairman of the most important worship committee of his own local church, It would seem that he could sometimes excuse himself from attendance upon at least the prayer meeting of his church, but he does not; for he has time to attend church, even every mid-week service! . . .

For many years he has been one of the political leaders of his state, and one of its best and most honored servants. Some of the wisest legislation of his day in his state began in his own thinking. Long has he been in demand as a speaker and orator of the most stirring and vital type. It would seem that he might excuse himself from some work in his local church, but he does not, and it is hoped that it will be many years before he does; for he has time to be teacher of one of the finest classes of women in the State.

It is a delight to know him and honor him He has a very wide circle of friends who love and honor him, but those who know him best and live closest to him love him most. This word is not written to add any luster to his already unforgetable name, either in Church or State; but it is written to urge the laymen of the church to take time to attend church. It is written to suggest to them that after all they are not too busy to attend church. For here is one of the busiest laymen I know, and yet twice every Sunday, and every Wednesday night he has time to attend church!

A Story for the Children

SUMMER PLAYTHINGS.

By Emma Florence Bush.

Alice was going into the country for the summer. Aunt Elizabeth and Cousin Cora had come for her in the automobile and were to drive her to their farm, forty-five miles away. How Cora had laughed when she saw the big box of playthings that Alice had packed to go with her!

"You had better leave that box behind," she said. "You won't even open it, there are so many more interesting things to play with than those things you have played with all winter."

Aunt Elizabeth shook her head, too. "It is much too big a box for me to take," she said. "I have many things to buy and put in the car. Take Cora's advice and leave it behind."

So Alice had hastily picked up Coralee, her pet doll, and held her in her arms all the way to Aunt Elizabeth's.

Hardly had Alice's dresses been unpacked and carefully put away, when Cora seized her hand and cried, "Come, Alice, let's play with some of the nice outdoor summer playthings we can find." "I know," said Alice wisely, "daisy chains and daisy dolls and flower dolls of all kinds and things like that."

"Oh, those," said Cora carelessly. "Those are well enough if you have to play alone, or it is rainy and you have to sit still on the porch, but there are so many more other things to do when there are two of us. Come, and I'll show you."

Away the two little girls ran to the north pasture. Cora began picking up the cones under the pine trees. She gathered a lapful, then dumped them on a bit of level ground well covered with grass. "Wait a minute," she cried as she scrambled over the stone wall that led to the orchard. Soon she was back again with her hands filled with small green apples she had found on the ground under the apple trees.

"Help me set up two sets of tenpins, Alice," she said, "one set for you and one for me. We will see which of us can bowl our tenpins first. These little round green apples make lovely balls to roll. The one that wins the most games can choose the next game to play after we are tired of this one."

It was half an hour later that Alice suggested they play something else. "Pine cone tenpins is great fun," she said, "and I shall want to play it again. But let's play something else now. I think it is just as well that you have beaten me, for you know things to do that I don't."

Cora thought several minutes, then she said, "Let's go over by the burdocks and get burs to make baskets. We will line them with leaves and pick blueberries that grow in the pasture, too. You see, most of my summer toys grow in the pasture or in the garden. There is plenty of time in the winter to play with store toys."

Alice could not believe her ears when she heard the supper bell. They had spent all the afternoon in making their bur baskets and filling them with berries.

"I just love your summer toys," she said to Cora. "Are there any more of them?"

"Why, you haven't even begun to see them yet," laughed Cora, as she put her basket down carefully on the steps of the back porch. "Tomorrow we will go down to the brook and go in wading, and we will sail chips for boats. Father cut down an old tree last week, so there will be plenty of chips for us to use."

"Then I know how to make a doll's tea set out of the burs we used today. That will take a long time. And we can play jackstones with hazel nuts, and we can play store. We can have brown stones for potatoes and sand for sugar, and there are all kinds of wild flowers like butter-and-eggs that we can sell for vegetables and fruit. Why, summer isn't half long enough to play with all the things we can find right here on the farm.

"And," said Aunt Elizabeth, who had come up unseen in time to hear Cora's program for the coming days, "there are so many things you can make to take home for the winter to remind you of summer days. There are leaves you can press, and if you paste one of each kind carefully on a sheet of paper and bind the sheets together, and write underneath each kind of a tree it came from and all you can find out about it, you will have a useful picture book of some of the things from Mother Nature's summer playhouse. You can press flowers, too. Some pebbles from the brook, if you are careful to choose small round ones, can be put into a little bag made of cretonne or gingham and you will have a pebble bag with which to play beanbag."

Both little girls laughed at that.

"Oh, Cora, you were right," cried Alice. "With all the interesting things to do I didn't need any ready-made playthings at all."—Zion's Herald.

MASSANETTA SPRINGS CONFERENCE.

Young People's Conferences.

Massanetta Springs has become a mecca for the youth of Virginia. There were, last year, about 1800 young people from twelve to twenty-four years of age, on the Massanetta Springs grounds for the period of a week. The camp for Intermediate Boys and Girls, ages twelve through fifteen, surpassed all others in attendance, reaching the high mark of 528, including teachers and leaders present.

School of Sacred Music and Festival.

The School of Sacred Music and Festival, now an annual event in the South, attracts attention far and wide. The School, lasting for the period of a week, is built around the personality of Dr. John Finley Williamson, of Westminster Choir fame. The Music Festival of two days reaches a climax on the second evening in a sacred music program of marvelous beauty by a carefully trained choir.

Woman's Auxiliary Training School.

The Synodical Training School for Auxiliary Workers offers a program of unusual value to the women of Virginia. This is really a school where Home Missions, Foreign Missions, Auxiliary Methods, etc., are daily taught by leaders well qualified in these subjects.

Dates of the Conference.

The dates of the Conferences are as follows:

Presbyterian Young People's Conference —June 24-30.
Camp for Intermediate Boys and Girls—July 1-7.
Methodist Young People's Conference—July 8-14.
School of Sacred Music—July 15-21.
Sacred Music Festival—July 18-19.
Elders and Deacons Conference—July 20-21.
Lutheran Church Workers' Conference July 22-28.
Baptist Assembly—July 29-August 4.
Auxiliary Training School—August 5-12.
Bible Conference and School for Pastors August 12-25.

BUILDING A PROGRAM IN THE WOMEN'S ORGANIZATION.

By MERLE PICKFORD STEVEN.

How can we go about building a worthwhile program that will appeal to the women of our church?

That, Mrs. Average Church Woman, is the most encouraging question that you can put to your state officers or Board Secretaries. There are many worthwhile ones. There are many programs of interest to this group or that, but few with wide appeal. There are many more or less entertaining programs hastily scrambled together, but few carefully planned with a definite end in view.

Since the keynote of the Congregational-Christian Women's Code is "Every woman in every church in one united woman's organization" the problem at once assumes a definite aspect. No longer can a program on missions be prepared to be presented to a small group whose interest and endorsement are already assured. Instead, quite the reverse is true, and it constitutes a challenge to every Congregational-Christian women's group in the country, for the wider work of the church at home and abroad, in education and social action, cannot go on without their active support.

If, too, it is true, as recently stated, that educationally speaking, the level of the programs in our church women's groups is below that of the Woman's Clubs, the challenge is still more imperative. And the reason, Mrs. Church Woman, why your question is so important, is because nothing can be done to meet this challenge until you women in the local church recognize the situation and begin to do something about it.

Then, where Can We Start?

First, by defining the word "program." Do you mean the few minutes of instruction, entertainment, and music put on in the guild once a month, or do you mean a plan of work which shall include, beside the monthly presentation, an honest effort to make every woman in the church responsive to and responsible for some phase of the wider work of the church? Again, as the Code says, "Every woman in every church intelligently at work."

But, this sounds difficult, and we are not a large group of women. So much the better, for your problem is far less complicated. Suppose that for your group, an average size among our churches, you begin by bestowing new powers upon your "program committee" and rechristening it a Plan and Program Committee. No longer shall it consist of two or three women who got together hastily for an hour or two some afternoon to pick out a hostess and an appropriate sounding program topic for each meeting, and who, when the result has been embalmed in a neat little booklet consider their responsibility ended.

The personnel of this Plan and Program Committee is most important. Perhaps a program may rise higher than its source, but it seldom does. The committee might well include as its chairman the woman with training and experience in club affairs for whom her church is no longer local, but whose horizons have been pushed back to include the whole wide world and its needs. Although we believe in the forward step of letting down the barriers of the missionary society to include all women, we recognize the danger of the women's group wandering off on some by-path of purely secular interest; so it is important that one or two "old-timers" be added to the committee. It makes for continuity of effort and a straighter road.

Very well, but it is the younger women whom we can't interest. Have you seriously tried to find out what they want? You can do that effectively by adding at least two of your most promising younger women to your committee. Add also the woman in your church who really reads good things. Then, for good measure, and as advisory members only, invite the pastor's wife and the local librarian (no matter what her denomination) to sit in also.

With a Plan and Program Committee appointed this spring for a year beginning in September, get the idea across to them at once that theirs is no "hit and run" job. Instead they are an official study group charged first with the necessity of analyzing their local situation and collecting and becoming familiar with all types of materials from from which programs can be built, and second for endeavoring to work out plans of work which shall bring their woman's group a little nearer the goal of "Every woman in every church intelligently at work."

But, can you make a committee do all those things? Each Program Committee will have to work according to its own abilities and needs, but some things will be true of all. No such group will function without frequent and regular meetings, carefully planned and shared in by members of the committee. Special lines of interest may well be assigned to individual members with an obligation for collecting material, and keeping scrapbooks and files which may be passed on to the next committee. Each member should be made responsible for seeing that a particular program is presented as well as possible; the proper setting, a fitting worship service, perhaps a small exhibit—those things which make a mediocre program an excellent one. Interests of the committee should include, besides program and worship plans and materials, plans for handwork for local charities, our own hospitals and schools, or boxes for our own needy mission fields.

The majority of church women are unaware of the unlimited possibilities of interest from which a program committee must choose. Even the Plan and Program Committee itself will doubtless be amazed at the wealth of subjects and materials which only a little study will reveal. The whole field of the wider work of our churches in community, state, nation, and world is before them. Interracial conditions, the probems concerning peace, and legislation affecting women and children should all be brought into the consciousness of our church women. And if the level of thought of our church women is to be raised, along with all this must go the cultivation of better reading. The suggestion of one or two available, readable books on the subject of each program will usually result in requests for them. Try putting this problem up to the librarian on your committee.

In our haste to make progress we often discard as worthless invaluable methods and materials because they have been associated with outgrown frameworks. One thing the old missionary society did superbly was to imbue its members, few though they were, with a kindling interest in and zeal for the Master's work, because they learned to know it. With our one united woman's organization, we must now take the second step and form an unofficial group whose business it is not only to know the urgent needs of our "Christian" world, but who, because they begin to know, are also impelled to begin to do.

And so, Mrs. Average Church Woman, I commend for your earnest consideration some such Plan and Program Committee for your women's group.—Missionary Herald.

DEVOTIONAL SERVICE.

(The May number of the Missionary Herald carries the following devotional service prepared by our own Mrs. W. R. Sellars, President of the Southern Convention Woman's Board, Burlington, N. C.—J. O. A.)

"Lovest Thou Me? Follow thou Me."

A Call to love and serve.

Song: "Immortal Love."

Scripture: John 21:15, 16, 17-19.

Love through eternity endures
For God is Love,
And Love is God.
Thank God for Love—His first, then yours.
JOHN OXENHAM.

Prayer: "Father, teach me how to love."

Meditation.

Jesus called Peter to a great love and a glorious service.

In a question of three words the Lord reveals the secret of Christian service—"Lovest thou Me?"

This is the basis of all witnessing and working for our Lord.

"Love is the motive of service, the incentive of service, the heart meaning of service.

"For the love of Christ constraineth us." II Corinthians 5:14.

This was the master motive of Paul's life of service. There is no other motive for us who call ourselves Christian.

Self is the only prison that can ever bind the soul.
Love is the only angel who can bid the gates unroll.
And when He comes to call thee, rise and follow fast;
The way may be through darkness, but it leads to light at last.

HENRY VAN DYKE.

When the personal question, "Lovest thou Me?" is answered aright, then follows the command, "Follow thou Me." The first word is "Follow." The Lord Jesus is still the leader and He has a plan for each of us. This plan is revealed in His Word. John 14:12-15, 23 and John 15:7-17.

Obedience to His command secures for us fellowship with Him. We have the promise of His Presence with us, power in prayer, strength for service, joy unspeakable and a peace that passeth understanding; "life—a more abundant life."

Oh! Make Him the Master of all that you have
The Lord of your heart and soul,
Yield Him all of yourself
For His dwelling place
And let Him take the whole.

He will do for you,
He will work with you,
He will reign in your life alone
And you will find the blessing you have missed
And the joy you have never known.

Annie Johnson Flint.

To answer His command requires something of us. "Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me. Mark 8:34.

We are to be willing to give all. "To prove our love we must live it."

S. D. Gordon says, "The world should be won not by the preachers, though we must have these men of God for teaching, and leadership, but by every one who knows the story of Jesus telling some one and telling not only with his lips earnestly and tactfully, but telling with his life. That is the Master's plan of campaign for this world, and it makes a great difference to Him and to the world outside whether you and I are living the story of His love and power among men or not."

Prayer—Father, "Open my eyes, my heart, my hands that I may love Thee and serve Thee."

All for Jesus—all for Jesus—
This our song shall ever be;
For we have no hope or Saviour,
If we have not hope in Thee.

All for Jesus—Thou wilt give us
Strength to serve Thee, hour by hour;
None can move us from Thy presence
While we trust Thy love and power.

All for Jesus—at Thine altar
Thou wilt give us sweet content;
There, dear Lord, we shall receive Thee
In the solemn sacrament.

All for Jesus—Thou hast loved us;
All for Jesus—Thou hast died;
All for Jesus—Thou art with us;
All for Jesus—Crucified.

All for Jesus—all for Jesus—
This the Church's song must be,
Till, at last, her sons are gathered
One in love and one in Thee.

J. Sparrow-Simpson.

The angels are still singing. It's our wave length that's at fault.—H. Bertram Lewis.

MR. HELSER'S OWN STORY.

When James Gordon Bennett sent Henry M. Stanley into central Africa, his last words were: "Find Livingstone. Never mind the cost; find Livingstone and bring him back." I believe that Christ's word to His church today is: "Find my world. Never mind the cost; find my world and bring it back to me." With this in mind, H. Stover Kulp from the University of Pennsylvania and I from Teachers College, Columbia University, went a thousand miles into the interior of north central Africa.

It was on a crisp November morning in 1922 that we set our faces toward the land of our heart's desire. Six years and two days before, as a college freshman, I had thought and prayed all night in room 30 at Manchester College, Indiana, and had decided once and for all to be a foreign missionary. Three years in college and three years in graduate school work had made me a little impatient, but now we were off.

From England I wrote to the General Mission Board of the Church of the Brethren, at Elgin, Illinois: "When you receive this letter the night may be dark and we may be far from home, but we shall not be far from the strong Son of God. He will be the first to welcome us on Africa's shore." Nothing in the earth, above the earth, or under the earth can shake my faith in His presence.

During a consultation with his Excellency, Sir Hugh Clifford, Governor General of Nigeria, we received the necessary papers for our journey and for the establishment of a mission. By train, Ford, horseback and on foot we traveled 1,109 miles to the interior. Then we retraced our steps and located at Garkida, in northeastern Nigeria. We are south of Lake Chad, a journey of 1,030 miles from the west coast of Africa.

If the knowledge that I am getting on with Christ's work is the first reason why I like my job, the second is the apparent impossibility of the task. The shadows of disease and death stalk everywhere among the primitive people of north central Africa, and there are no cities of refuge. Dr. Burke and I visited a village which was deserted because of smallpox. Those who were able had fled to new quarters, those who were left were helpless and hopeless. As we went near to the door of one hut we heard a noise and saw a form. Inside lay a woman blinded and disfigured with smallpox in one of its worst forms. There were dead to be buried, with few to bury them. A few months before we had seen bodies twisted with cerebro-spinal meningitis. Lepers with bleeding hands and feet cry out for help from many a gateway.

I do not class the learning of a new language as a difficulty; we take that as a matter of course and get right down to it. But there are many languages in thi sarea and this creates a tremendous difficulty. In the Bura tribe where we are located the people had no written language. No Bible, no schoolbooks, nothing on paper. We found ignorance, polygamy, and devil worship in their worst forms, and they are entrenched as deeply as hell itself.

I like my job because it's His job and because it's hard. And what gives any one a greater thrill than to realize hopes against great odds? In three years we have begun to realize our hopes.

The doctor vaccinated the children and some grown people in a small deserted village. Some were delivered from an awful death and told of a Saviour's love. Now lepers are being treated and some are showing marked improvement. A new ray of hope has put a gleam in their eyes and a smile on their faces. Screams of anguish from little children are giving way to songs of joy.

The language is being reduced to writing. Mr. Kulp has given much time to this work. St. Mark's gospel has been translated and has been printed by the British and Foreign Bible Society. A first and second reader, an Old Testament story book, and the life of Christ have been written in Bura and soon will have been in use in the school for a full year. Ignorance is beginning to give way. Ninety-four pupils, sixteen girls and seventy-eight boys, have been enrolled in our school. Some of these can read every word that has been written in Bura. There are small beginnings in industry, and our industrial worker, C. C. Heckman, hopes to meet the growing need for this type of work. Our doctor gives regular instruction in sanitation and hygiene.

Much remains to be done, but we have a good start and are glad for the results that have already crowned our efforts to bring this part of the world back to Christ . . . . . Men and women of far horizons.

MISSION REPORT.

(Read at Union Meeting, Hopewell, Va., at which six churches were represented, including St. John's Episcopal Church, West End and First Presbyterian Churches, First Baptist Church.)

Christ sounds a challenge to us today, just as He did to the early church.

It is a four-fold challenge. He says to us:

First: "Go ye."

Second: "Preach the Gospel."

Third: "Make disciples of all nations" and

Fourth: "Teach them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

This challenge can be met only by a four-fold method:

First: "Ye shall know the truth"—showing we must be informed on the subject of Missions before we can perform.

Second: We must carry the challenge on our hearts in prayer.

Third: If we believe in the challenge and if we believe in the possibility of world redemption we must support that belief with part of our income.

The fourth method of meeting the challenge of Missions is found in such cooperative efforts of Christian men and women as shown by this Union Missionary gathering today.

I speak for the Congregational and Christian Church as a whole whose missionary work covers a period of 125 years. We have in all 537 missionaries, 6,290 nationals at work, 14 mission fields, with 94 main stations, and 2,124 out-stations; 740 native churches; 9 colleges, 31 training schools, 1,120 lower schools, and 73 hospitals and dispensaries. We have a foreign parish of 60 million people under 10 flags.

The church in Hopewell is proud to have a little part in this great mission work in our own denomination. Our local Missionary society now numbers 27 members. It has more than doubled this conference year, which began October 1st. We have assembled 18 times since then as follows:

Seven regular monthly meetings for study of missions; one executive and three committee meetings; two public meetings, one of which was a pageant: "In Lands Afar" in which America received four nations asking for help—these nations were represented by our members in costumes of those nations. This pageant was well attended and will be repeated on a larger scale May 15th.

I am authorized at this time to extend an invitation to all the missionary societies in Hopewell to favor us with their presence. We hope to have a pleasing program. Wednesday night we

"Youth at Work in the Church."

Rev. F. C. Lester, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

THE SOUTHEAST YOUTH FELLOWSHIP.

The first move towards organizing the young people of the Congregational-Christian Churches of the Southeast was in 1931, when, at the request of the program committee of the Southern Christian Convention, the Board of Christian Education of that Convention sponsored a banquet for young people in connection with the Southern Christian Convention meeting in Raleigh, N. C.

At this banquet one hundred young people accepted the challenge to organize their work and become a part of the convention. A continuation committee was elected and authorized to proceed in cooperation with the Board of Christian Education of the Southern Christian Convention and the Extension Workers of Congregational churches of the Southeast. Officers were elected, and the work began the night of the banquet.

Christmas Conferences held at Elon College, N. C., aided in perfecting plans for the youth organizations.

When the Southeast Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches was organized in Burlington, N. C., April 29, 1932, the young people asked to be admitted to that Convention as a Department of Young People to be known as "Youth Fellowship."

The third meeting of the Fellowship was in connection with the Southeast Convention in Suffolk, Va., May 3, 1934.

The Youth Fellowship, which is part of the denominational organization known as "Pilgrim Fellowship," shares in the work of the Church through the superintendents of the organization in cooperation with the youth organizations in Conferences and Associations of the Southeast.

THE RECENT MEETING.

During the recent session of the Southeast Convention in Raleigh, N. C., representative young people from the various states of the Southeast found time to counsel together concerning cooperative work for young people. Thursday afternoon many other young people from nearby came for a business meeting and to hear Miss Lucy Eldredge tell of Young People's work and Dr. Roy Helfenstein speak on "The Better Way in Evangelism." There was a big banquet with good food and fine fellowship. At the evening hour the Elon College Singers brought fine music. Miss Eldredge installed the new officers, and Dr. Daniel A. Poling inspired a large audience with an address showing how young people are moving the work forward. It was a great meeting because of the program, the people present, and the ideals which the young people held before themselves as a goal towards which to work.

THE NEW OFFICERS.

It was thought wise to select the officers in such a way that those most directly responsible could get together whenever it is necessary without too great expense, and yet have all parts of the Southeast represented so there can be direct contacts with every section. Officers were elected as follows:

President, Lanson Granger of Norfolk, Virginia, who is now a student at Elon College (N. C.). Vice Presidents, Carl Ekblad of Thorsby, Alabama, now a student at Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga., Earl G. Ward, Winter Park, Fla., and Miss Mary Moncrief, Knoxville, Ga., now at Piedmont College, Demorest, Ga.

The Secretary is Miss Irene Cotten of Dendron, Va., and her assistant is Miss Elizabeth Sharpe of Waverly, Va. The Treasurer is Miss Margaret Earp of Route 5, Greensboro, N. C., and the Editor is still the one whose name appears at the head of this page.

Counselors for the Fellowship include Mrs. W. B. Williams of Newport News, Virginia, Miss Priscilla Chase of Elon College, N. C., Miss Annie Campbell of Roberta, Georgia, Miss Marguerite Davison of Thorsby, Alabama, Miss Pattie Lee Coghill of Jacksonville, Fla., and Rev. F. E. Hyde now of Brown Summit, North Carolina, but soon to be in Tennessee.

A GROWING FELLOWSHIP.

I believe in the Youth Fellowship of the Southeast, and shall watch its growth and service with interest and confidence.

This faith is the result of the days spent in Raleigh when the Southeast Convention was in session in the early part of May. Preparation had preceeded these youth sessions. An attractive and suggestive Handbook, which any leader may secure by writing to Rev. F. C. Lester, recorded the history of the Fellowship up to date and outlined plans for its development. The young people who accepted offices did so after careful consideration of the responsibilities assumed by them. They glimpsed a great ideal, a goal, when the young people of the Southeast will all work together and through which first as youth, and then as adult leaders, they will make their contribution to the building of a better Church, and they decided to take the first steps toward that ideal. There was a note of purpose which gives hope for a growing Christian program in the Southeast.

For the first time a group which represented every one of eight states of the Southeast gathered into one room. For the first time youth from Georgia talked with those who lived in Virginia or North Carolina or Alabama about what this Youth Fellowship is and what it may become. That alone was tremendously worth while.

There will be no effort to develop a uniform program in all states or all churches. There will be comradeship in encouraging every state and regional group to develop the best program possible to enlist the enthusiasm and meet the needs of growing youth. Ideals and plans will be shared. United service projects will be agreed upon. Key young people in each section, and as soon as possible in each church, will be enlisted in the work of the Youth Fellowship, which is simply Congregational-Christian youth of our churches in the Southeast in action, discovering new and worthy activities and agreeing to secure the cooperation of all churches in them.

This means that Summer Schools will be necessary, and Elon (combining Elon and Blue Ridge) the last week in June, and Grandview, Tenn., the week just before Elon, are planning to do their part in training leaders for local church and Fellowship activities. It means that youth must take seriously the missionary task of the Church and find the plan which will lead youth into the largest possible participation. It means that this page of the Christian Sun, and possibly other means of communication, must serve as a medium for the exchange of ideas. It means that the Youth Fellowship of the Southeast believes that there is a better way, and that "Christian Youth Building a New World" is a real task in which they should share.

I believe in the Youth Fellowship of the Southeast, because:

I believe in the young people and the counselors of this movement with whom I talked in Raleigh.

I believe that the ministers and women of the Southeast are back of these young people.

I believe in the possibilities of Christian advance when a group has the spirit I shared in Raleigh.

I know that when definite plans are worked out, and carried through by consecrated Christian young people that undreamed-of paths of service are discovered, strong characters are developed.

There is no phase of the program of our churches in the Southeast which does not in a real sense depend upon what Youth Fellowship of the Southeast becomes. Therefore, it is necessary for those of us who believe in the movement to offer our cooperation in every way possible to make this more than a meeting, or another organization, or a mere program. It may be a living movement which will make its contribution to the building of a new world, a task which calls for the best that both youth and adults can give. What will this Youth Fellowship become? Youth holds the answer.

WHAT SHALL WE DO ABOUT SOCIAL INJUSTICES?

Christian Endeavor Topic for May 26, 1935.

Hymns: "Where Cross the Crowded Ways of Life"; and "In the Service of the King."

Scripture: Matthew 25:31-46.

Poem:

But when ye pray, say our—not mine or thine;
Our debts, our debtors, and our daily bread!
Before the thronged cathedral's gracious shrine,
Or in thy closet's solitude instead,
Whoe'er thou art, wher'er thou liftest prayer,
However humble or how great thou be,
Say our, thy brother man including there,
And more and more it may be thou shalt see
Upon life's loom how thread to thread is bound,
None for himself, but man and fellow-man,
Or near or far, meet on one common ground,
Sons of one Father since the world began.
So shall God's Kingdom come in might and power
When all can pray, not mine, or thine, but our.

BAPTISM.

Lesson VII—May 19, 1935.

Golden Text: "Go ye therefore and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit."

Lesson Text: Matt. 3:13-17; 28:19-20; Acts 2:38-41; 8:26-39; Romans 6:1-14.

Baptism is a controversial subject. Widely divergent views of it are held by different denominations and groups, and unfortunately, bitter feeling has often characterized a discussion of the question. Views of baptism represent the extremes. There are those who say that it is essential, not only to church membership, but to salvation itself. On the other hand Christians such as the Friends or Quakers believe that no water baptism is necessary at all—only the baptism of the Spirit. And in between these widely divergent views that are all shades and degrees of interpretations. Needless to say these notes will not solve the problem satisfactorily to all. They will simply present some facts based upon the lesson for today and related scriptures.

Jesus Was Baptized.

Jesus Himself was baptized. He came to John the Baptist, and over the protest of that humble and sincere man, insisted that John baptize him. In justification of this seemingly strange procedure—that He the Son of God should be baptized—He said "Suffer it to be so now; for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness." He thus put His stamp of approval on John's work, and He witnessed to the unity between the work of His forerunner and His own work.

It may be that Jesus was baptized by immersion. In any event He was in the water when He was baptized, for Matthew states that when He "went up straightway out of the water" after His baptism, the heavens were opened unto Him. No one can say, of course, as to what form of baptism was administered to Jesus. It is only an inference to say that He was baptized by immersion. But many people think the inference is well-grounded. So far as the writer knows, there is no specific reference as to the mode of Jesus' baptism. Perhaps there is significance in this fact.

Jesus commanded His Disciples to Baptize.

"Go ye therefore and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit." Baptism was an ordinance of the Christian Church from the first. When men believed and confessed they were baptized. Baptism as such was an outward symbol of an inward change. It symbolized the washing away of sins, and the public confession of faith in Christ.

But Jews Did Not Baptize.

John specifically states that Jesus himself did not baptize, but committed this work to His disciples. "Though Jesus himself baptized not, but His disciples." The comma is significant. It emphasizes the fact that Jesus did not baptize, not even His own disciples. And just as His own baptism attested to the unity between John's work and His work, just so did His refusal to baptize attest to His superiority to John. John said, "I baptize you with water." He said Christ would baptize with "the Holy Spirit and with fire." The baptism of Jesus was primarily a spiritual baptism.

And Paul Baptized but Little.

Paul wrote the Corinthians that he had baptized Crispus and Gaius and the household of Stephanas, but besides "I know not whether I baptized any other." This does not mean, of course, that Paul's converts were not baptized. It does mean that he did not emphasize the supreme importance of baptism as a means of salvation, but rather as an evidence of salvation. Paul was baptized, but alas, he failed to tell us how he was baptized. He was usually very specific about essential things. It seems rather strange that he was so silent about the mode of baptism if it were so essential.

The Meaning of Baptism.

What is the meaning of baptism? What is the correct mode of baptism? Even granting that baptism by immersion was the accepted mode in the early church it is rather difficult to draw the conclusion that the mode then used was thereby declared once and for all to be the only accepted mode. Furthermore it is difficult to demonstrate that the only accepted mode of baptism in the early church was by immersion. It would seem that the simpler view of the matter is to think of water baptism as a symbol of a spiritual baptism, an outer act to attest to an inner experience, an open confession of faith in Christ and discipleship to Christ. Certainly this is true, it would be difficult to prove that that great host of men and women through all the years who have never been baptized by immersion, were any the less Christian, or lacked any of the spirit of service and sacrifice, than did those who were baptized by immersion. And it is quite as true that there is no group of men and women who more uniformly manifest the spirit of Christ than do the Society of Friends who do not practice any form of water baptism, but who do emphasize the baptism of the Spirit.

If a man has the Holy Spirit, nothing else matters very much. If he does not have the Holy Spirit nothing else will help very much.

"BE STILL AND KNOW THAT I AM GOD."

There is a God who reigns on high,
Who keeps me every minute;
He made the stars. He made the world
And everything that's in it.
He told His people what to do
And how much they should love Him;
He watches o'er us day and night.
No other is above Him.

Be still and know that I am God.
My promise is supernal;
Love God and your neighbor as yourself,
And you will have life eternal.
I hear my Father when He says
"Religion you should cherish;
Come unto me and find sweet rest,
Or you shall surely perish."

Don't worry at your task, my son,
Your way seems filled with sadness;
I am your God. I'll be your stay
And fill your soul with gladness.
Your preacher may not preach the Word
As you would like to hear it;
It may condemn you for your sin,
But you should learn to cheer it.

Be still and know that I am God.
I know my people love me;
They do their best, they stand the test,
There's no one else above me.
I want my faithful ones to serve
And be the pieces of leaven,
Then when their work on earth is done,
They'll have a home in heaven.

"TROUBLES AND THEIR MEANING."

"Yet man is born into trouble, as the sparks fly upward."—Job 5:7.

Elipaz undertakes to tell Job that his afflictions are an evidence of his sins, and that he should repent and call upon God to deliver him out of his troubles, saying, "Happy is the man whom God correcteth." This text then, is a figure of speech representing this fact so true to life, and Elipaz uses it to impress Job of that fact. But Job, replying, dissents to this, and believes that his troubles are caused by something else. He believes that he is in the hands of an enemy, and it is for delivery from the hands of this enemy that he prays.

COMMENT: It is true that man is born into trouble. None escape it. But stones in the brook, while they may impede the progress of the stream, purify the stream, protect the stream's bed from erosion, and they produce the music of the waters. Surely all troubles are not of God. Some come from the devil or his Satanic influences. But even the troubles of Satan may be used by a child of God to strengthen character, and produce the harmonies of life. Blessed is the man who, midst all his troubles, is still found trusting God, and saying with Job: "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him."

Prayer—Our Father of Love and Mercy, we claim Thy promises to be delivered in the sixth trouble and in the seventh not to be forsaken. Forbid that we shall forsake Thee, but always found faithful.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

"DON'T GIVE UP."

"The eye of him that hath seen me shall see me no more; thine eyes are upon me, and I am not."—Job 7:8-also 9th verse.

Job is reduced to extreme misery and realizes his insignificance. He says that he is so insignificant that even God cannot see him.

When a soul fails its higher capacities and the meaning of life is obscured, it is a loss vast enough to make one shrink into insignificance. It is as the loom weaving its shutter into the making of cloth, one thread breaks and the loom stops lest the whole work be marred. Job felt that he was like a thread broken in the loom of life and that he was retarding the perfect and universal will of God, he prayed to die. To injure, blot, or ruin one's self is a small matter, but to be useless in God's work in the world is awful.

Of what earthly importance are we? Can we give a single reason why we should not be swept down the stream? That is the unconscious defense of many a ruined life. But we are some good. God has chosen to work out His designs not in spite of us but through us, and we are in a service that is greater than ourselves. We have been likened to a lighthouse keeper set to do duty on a bare rock. Why does the keeper sit through the long weary nights and keep his flame burning? Why doesn't he go to sleep and let his light go out? Because it is not his light; he is the keeper and, did the light go out, ships would be wrecked. You are a light keeper. To let your light shine is your trust, and so long as you keep it shining, others will be looking to you from the sea of life and thank God that your light is still burning.

Prayer—Our Father, if there are those looking for the gleam in our lives, make us faithful. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"A PERFECT WORLD."

"That which hath been is now; and that which is to be has already been; and God requireth that which is past."—Eccl. 3:15.

Man is bound upon the wheel of time endlessly revolving and continually bringing back to him that which has passed. "There is nothing new under the sun," said Solomon. Radio is not new; man has always had it; he has just discovered it and learned how to use it. The development of science is based upon that which has always been, and, in the development of everything, God requires us to take that which has always been. So the wise man gives us a picture of events moving round and round in an endless circle. The same idea is expressed in Jeremiah 6:16, "Thus saith the Lord stand ye in the ways and see and ask for the old paths where is the good way and walk therein,"—and, likewise, we find this truth taught in a practical way by the Proverbs (22:6)—"train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it,"—the past empounding in the future.

There is excellency in God's works and "eye hath not seen, neither hath it entered into the heart of man what the Lord will do for them that love him."

There is excellency in God's works of the universe and that excellency, as old as the ages, is still held before us as the "Mark of the prize of the high calling," to which we are called. It is a perfect world that has been the objective of the ages and we may expect it to come to pass through Christ according to His word.

And He hath promised that "eye hath not seen, neither hath it entered into the heart of man what the Lord will do for them that love him."

Prayer—Our Father, we thank thee that thou art "the same yesterday, today and forever," and that we believe that we can come to Thee in the same old way, and find Thy love and Thy life our own. Make this more real to us this day. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

"THE BITTER SWEET."

"Sorrow is better than laughter; for by the sadness of the countenance the heart is made better."—Eccl. 7:3.

The gates of heaven itself are unlocked by sorrow. It is the blast that burns out the dross and releases the gold. It brings out the true mastery of self without which our lives are incomplete. It instills into the heart a new state of faith Before sorrow, we may think we serve God, and so we do; but in sorrow we learn that whereas formerly our service was under the show of belief, now it emanates from real experience. George Eliot said, "it is not true blessedness to be free from sorrow while there is sin in the world. Sorrow then is a part of love and love does not seek to throw it off."

Would you heal a mother's heart and make it insensible to the sins of her child? Nay, indeed, you would leave that side of her life open and thank God for the capacity to weep and suffer for sin. Our Saviour, upon the mountain top weeping over Jerusalem, is an epitome of that sorrow that comes to a Christian's heart because of sin. There is a pain, you know, that gives life and not death. It was out of this great suffering of Christ's own heart that was born heaven's invitation of love, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest."

REFLECT: We owe much of life's purest and happiest experiences to sorrows. They draw us into sympathy with one another. They often bridge chasms between souls and reunite brothers in affections; they soften our feelings, refine our attitude and elevate our aspirations, and often, they bring forth an unsuspected wealth of kindness. The sweetest and best words that have been spoken have been the offspring of sorrow, in one form or another.

Prayer—O merciful Saviour who are "a man of sorrow and acquainted with griefs," and who is the perfection of happiness, brotherly kindness and loving fellowship, when we have to drink the bitter cup, make it sweet with thine own life. We ask it with thanksgiving.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

"ASSUAGED SORROWS."

"The Lord gave and the Lord taketh away, blessed be the name of the Lord!"—Job 1:21.

There are a great many sorrows of life which no one can justify. They seem to darken our understanding, confuse our judgment, and tempt us to unbelief. Is there no explanation? Is there no way out? Are we to look at sorrow and call it "good" always?

We knew one once, who in an unexpected hour, had everything he possessed swept away from him, but who, after a pause and reflection, said, "The Lord gave and the Lord taketh away; blessed be the name of the Lord!" We have known others struck down at the outset of the most promising career and rendered helpless for the remainder of their lives, yet who were able, almost at once, to accept it as the Father's will and be centent with it. The quotation bears repeating, "so long as we are in the circle of God, everything that happens is for the best." God is in front of us, with us, and in us, at all times, so that whatever happens we may not give way and be tempted to quit, but, in whatever burden, His strength may be available to us for the bearing of it, and if we realize this and use Hls strength we find nothing but good is the issue.

Prayer—Our Father, keep now so close to us that we may always have Thy strength for our needs. Strengthen the sinews of our spirit, increase and toughen our faith, teach us to look to Thee and pray, and may all experiences bring blessing to us. In His name we ask it.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

"SPILT WATER."

"We must needs die, and are as water spilt on the ground, which cannot be gathered up again."—II Sam. 14:1-24.

The wise woman of Tekoa reminded David of the brevity of life. Since death is so certain, and since life, as measured over against eternity, is so very brief, why should we spend even a day in hatred? Both David and Absalom were to be soon as spilt water. Why should the pitcher be broken by discord before its time?

So the wise woman of Tekoa speaks to us also. There is no fact of equal importance about which most persons are so careless as the sure coming of death. It is not morbidness to think much about it, it is only good sense. It is not empty

THE CHRISTIAN SUN'S PULPIT

Rev. John G. Truitt, D. D., Pastor.

THE NEED OF A REVIVAL.

By John G. Truitt.

"Lovest thou me?"—John 21:16.
"Wait . . . "—Acts 1:4.
"Ye shall be witness unto me."—Acts 1:8. . .

Let us ask ourselves: What kind of revival do we need? We are beginning here in our church, we hope, what will be a revival. What sort of revival shall we seek to make it? I do not know what we need to make it a revival of good music. We are blessed with that already. I do not know that we need to make it a revival of good times. We are not really suffering, not many of us, and none of us much, if any. I do not know that we need to make it a revival of contributions to the church. During the past month into our offering plates through all organizations have come nearly two thousand dollars, and that in a single month. We are doing well with our gifts. Not that some of us might not do better, but we are doing well there. What sort of revival do we need? We have been receiving new members on profession of faith and by letter. For the past four Sundays we have not missed a Sunday without receiving some new members. There have been already twenty-two of them within those four Sundays. And there are others who have promised to unite with our church. It is then not so much that we need a revival of new memberships. We are having that already.

But we do need a revival. We need to take an inventory that goes deeper than all that. A stock-taking that turns the searchlight of God into our souls. A checking up on our own personal professions, and practices. A looking within that answers to a good conscience toward God and man. So then in the first place I say, We need a revival of personal love to Jesus Christ. I want it myself. I want to love Jesus more. To practice His presence with me more sincerely in all my walk with Him. Ask yourselves that question. Would not you like to come into a finer fellowship with Jesus?

Cannot we hear Him sometimes saying to us: "Lovest thou me?" Peter had said, "We have left all to follow Thee." Jesus is looking at him now in the dim dawn of the early morning with his fellows laboring for the catch of fish which he has not found. Where did he get that old boat? Where did he get that net? That is Peter out there. My follower, who really loved me, and does love me still. But he is fishing again.

How interested Jesus was in his every movement. Looking upon that group of fellows who were following Peter he knew that largely upon them the whole effect of his death upon the cross rested. I like to contemplate him there watching his followers in that boat. He had looked upon them as fisherman before. He had called them from their nets to follow him, that they might become fishers of men. For them he had died. Now they are back at the old business. Any but Jesus would have been dumbfounded.

They were the best of them. They were Jesus' hope and chance. You are the salt of the earth. You are today of the best of them. Yon are today Jesus' chance to a certain area of his Kingdom. Have you done at times much better than Peter. Have we not all gone astray? Have we not grown cold, or formal, or faithless? Have we not often changed heaven in our souls for habit in worship? Have we not some of us gone back to the old practices, or bitter businesses? Are we not here in this holy place caught even now as Peter was caught by the Christ?

A movement on the beach. They lift their eyes from the nets. It is the Lord, says John. Peter replies with long strokes of his large hands in the water. He is moving to Jesus as fastly as he can swim there. Have you caught anything? What a rebuke! What a gentle, awful rebuke! No, they admit. Then Jesus himself tells them how and where. Result, one hundred, fifty, and three fishes. If we fought like Jesus with faith, if we lashed like Jesus with love, if we abused like Jesus with the bread of life much faster would the Kingdom come! Breakfast over, Jesus took his eyes off the group and fastened them on Peter. Maybe he is taking his eyes off this congregation now and fastening them on you. To Peter he is asking, "Lovest thou me?" And Peter is replying in truth: "Thou knowest I love Thee." Yes, and he does. He made his errors, but the record still shows that he loved Jesus. You may have made your slip, but you still love Jesus. Deep down in the depths of your soul there is a sweet, sacred, and eternal love for the Lord Jesus.

Deeper and yet deeper goes the searching question of the Saviour. And a revival of personal love and allegiance to the Lord is the result. My friends, how Peter was honored to have the Christ bring this out in him! He wants to do the same thing for us. He wishes to have us have a personal revival of our allegiance and love for him, even in this service.

Following up the fixing up of the individual Jesus turns to the group. And with all our social emphasis, and I suppose there is not a bit too much of it, after all, but nevertheless, with all of it, we must have a religion that saves the individual, that bring the individual to account with God, that sets upon the individual responsibility for his personal conduct. There is no religion that will save the group that has not the power to save the unit of that group, the individual. Let us never forget that. Jesus never did.

So then, in the second place, We need a revival of public worship. "Wait!" Wait said Jesus! Wait in the upper room. Wait in the place appointed. Wait in the place of prayer. Wait together in one accord. Wait as worshippers, intercessors, as those who take their orders from the infinite God. What do we need in Suffolk? A people who will wait in the sanctuaries, at their altars of prayer, until God gives them something inspiring in their souls. How busy are our lives! How madly we rush after pleasure, or gold, or other gods! "Wait!" My friends, I believe that if in all good faith and desire every Sunday God will do something mighty to your souls, to your personalities, to your careers. There is something about waiting at the feet of Jesus in sublime, beautiful worship, that simply transforms one. God himself has seen to that.

Show me a family that goes regularly, and devoutly to church, and I shall show you a family whose sons and daughters will rise up and be a blessing. Show me a young man, or young woman who delights in the house of God, and loves to worship there, and I shall show you one on the way to good success. We have as good congregations perhaps in our city as anywhere in our country. But yet one of the greatest blessings that could come to us would be to have everyone who is able on Sunday morning to get up and come to church to do so. It would pack every church in town and turn a city toward God, so that it would be easy for boys and girls to form the higher visions of life, and for young people to measure up to the demands of so needy an age.

Christian Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

We have received so far on our campaign for Octagon soap wrappers ten thousand. We want one hundred thousand. We are one tenth of the way to our goal. If we can get one hundred thousand we can finance some kind of electric refrigeration for all three of the buildings. In work of this kind it is badly needed. Buy Octagon soap and send us the coupons and you can leave the soap in the wrapper if you like. We can use it nicely. It takes lots of it to keep the little boys' ears clean.

I know of one orphanage in a neighboring state paying off a $25,000 debt with Octagon soap wrappers. Let every family help us to gather soap wrappers.

We are having beautiful rains and wheat and oats are looking fine. The health of our children has been excellent for the last year. A thing that we are grateful for.

Our school will close Thursday, May 16th. Our little folks will be happy as they are getting tired and are counting the days off as they go by. It will be ball for the little tots day after day and it will be work for the larger boys and not so much ball.

a member and you will receive the booklet for a year.

"Am I my brother's keeper?" What is your answer?

What are some of the unjust conditions in your neighborhood and community? Is there child labor and low wages? Bad housing? Death, pain, and sorrow resulting from liquor? Race prejudice? An investigation by several of your members will reveal the true conditions under which people are trying to live.

"A Christian is one who endeavors to keep informed on the issues of the day and to meet them in a way that will do the most good to his fellowman." This was one of the answers to the question "What Does it mean to be a Christian in 1935?" at Defiance Christmas Conference.

Give a good deal of thought and time to the preparation for this meeting. Some forward steps ought to be begun in this meeting by all the young people who have chosen for their theme "Christian Youth Building a New World."

Topics of June Meetings.

June 2—"Jesus as a Man of Prayer," Mark 1:35; 11:20-26. (Consecration.)

June 9—"How to Conquer Anger," Rom. 12:19; Eph. 4:26-31; Matt. 5:21-24.

June 16—"Why is Gossip Harmful?" Jas. 3:1-6.

June 23—"Cultivating an Eye for Goodness," I John 2:15-17; Matt. 6:22-23.

June 30—"What Makes a Nation Great?" Prov. 14:34. (Discussion.)

I do not wish to see my sins more plain,
But this: to know Thy life without a stain.
I would not see the vileness of my heart,
But this would know: how pure and true Thou art
I would forget my paltry life, so small,
And know Thy greatness, Thou, my all in all.

Too many of us neglect the hour or worship, forget the church, and follow things forever fleeting, while the eternal anchor of the human souls, and the immortal hopes of mankind goes begging. It should not be so. It must not be so. For that sort of revival I beg and plead. I pray for it for our country. I pray for a nation that turns back to the house of God, and to the hour of worship. A nation that hears the Lord's command "Wait."

To the command to "Love," and to "Wait," I would remind you that we must add the other "Witness." Having had a revival of personal love for Christ, and having found again the joy and benefit of public worship, naturally we shall witness for the Christ, and sell our wares of priceless worth to others. All too afraid are we to speak out a word for Christ or the church. It is not as frequently heard in the home, the shop, the street, as it should be. It is not as much shared with others across the world as is commended. So then in the third place I plead for a revival of witnessing at home and abroad the work of the Lord Jesus.

We expect to meet our conference apportionment both in the society and in the church allotment, and the Easter offering was for Missions.

We felt much encouraged in the advancement. our missionary society has made in spite of the discouraging outlook at the beginning of October, here in Hopewell. We are glad to cooperate with the City Mission and we ask your prayers.

brooding to get ready for it, it is only the barest prudence.

As I write these words I am preparing for a journey to Europe. I am getting my passport. I am reserving my stateroom. I have my ticket. I am packing my clothes. I am reading my guidebooks. And shall I be heedless concerning the journey I must make before many years from this world to another?

Prayer—Help me, my Saviour, to get ready for that passage. May the summons not find me unprepared.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

"THE BEST CARPENTRY."

"Wisdom hath builded her house."—Proverbs 9:1-6.

In a certain district of my town are many little houses that were built too quickly, too cheaply, and too carelessly. They were built to sell, not to live in. They were sold quickly, and then the trouble began. Leaking cellars. Leaking roofs. Bending floors. Cracks in the doors. Windows that would not open. Windows that would not shut. Plumbing constantly out of order. Poor carpentry does not pay, at any price.

But Wisdom's house—ah, that is solidly constructed! It will stand for many years; yes, for all the years. It is a joy to live in it, and the longer one lives in it, the more satisfaction does one get.

And Wisdom's house does not cost so much as Folly's—not nearly so much.

Prayer—God, the All-Wise, teach us Thy prudence. Receive us into Thy house with Thee forever. For Christ's sake.—Amen.

OBITUARIES

KNUPP.

Charles B. Knupp was born April 2, 1856, and died March 20, 1935, aged 78 years, 11 months and 18 days. Brother Knupp was a man of integrity and had many friends. He was a member of our Bethlehem church. Funeral services were held at St. Paul's Lutheran church, near his late home, March 22, 1935.

A. W. ANDES.

ANDERSON.

Bereavement entered our community Saturday morning, April 20, 1935, when a beloved brother, A. E. Anderson, was called by our Heavenly Father to his reward.

Brother Anderson had been a member of Hine's Chapel Christian Church for the past 20 years. We thank our Heavenly Father for his stay with us and for his loyal service to our church and community. He leaves his wife, one son, his father and mother, one sister and three brothers and also a host of grief-stricken friends.

We mourn his departure from our midst and know that we shall miss his encouragements. Pleasant memories of his useful services will linger with all those who knew and loved him.

We wish to express our gratitude for his tireless efforts in behalf of the Kingdom and to emphasize our deep affection for him by the adoption of the following resolutions:

First: That Hine's Chapel Christian Church record its grateful appreciation for the life of loyal services. We shall always miss his smiling face but hope to see it again in a better world.

Second: That we extend to his grief stricken and devoted wife, our loving sympathy, in this sad hour, commending her to the Greatest of all Comforters, who said, "Let not your heart be troubled."

Third: That a copy of these resolutions be entered in the records of the church, a copy be sent to members of the family, and a copy be sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Larger Church Membership Reported.—

The churches and synagogues of the United States have 60,812, 874 members, according to the Yearbook of American Churches just issued under the auspices of the Federal Council of Churches. Church membership of persons 13 years of age and over increased from 43,500,000, as enumerated by the Federal Census for religious bodies in 1926, to nearly 50,000,000 in 1933. These figures indicate a net increase in the seven years of more than 5,000,000 adults, or at the rate of about 1.67 per cent increase each year. A study of the indebtedness on church edifices, as reported by the larger denominations, reveals the fact that many of them as groups carry a small proportion of indebtedness as compared with the value of their property. The percentage for all churches and synagogues reporting was only 11.2 per cent. The membership figures seem high, as compared with previous reports.—M. P.-Recorder.

A Colossus of Rome.—

Giving as its authority the Rome correspondent of the London Morning Post,, the Sunday School Times tells us that a statue of Mussolini has been being secretly made in Rome which will exceed in size the Colossus of Rhodes, famed as one of the seven wonders of the old world. "This Mussolinian Colossus" says our informant, "is planned to be 213 feet high, and the moulding of the enormous figure is being done in special sheds erected on a jealously guarded part of Monte Mario, where the work has been going on for nearly a year in secret. No outsider has so far been allowed to see the model nor any sketch or photograph of it. The statue will show the Mussolinian figure with the torso and thighs swathed in lion's skin and with an 80-foot arm raised in Fascist salute over Rome. The head, already finished and cast, is 30 feet high and is otherwise about the size of a house. The finished bronze feet are 28 feet long, and the completed metal of the legs to the knees are each about 53 feet long." It is expected that another two years will be required to complete the statue. When erected it will be 62 feet higher than the Statue of Liberty in New York Harbor, which now holds title to being the world's largest statue.

Social Questions Not For Clergy.—

On the eve of the convocation of the Presbyterian General Assembly, which opens today in Cincinnati, The Presbyterian Banner has launched an attack upon "the spirit of secularism which is now sweeping over our Protestant churches," as well as against clergymen who are "turning their churches and assemblies into political platforms on which to proclaim their economic theories and propose their remedies." It criticizes the social and economic platforms adopted by Methodist and Baptist groups, as well as the program of social activity which has been the outcome of our Council at Oberlin last year, declaring that "the church cannot enter the field of socialism and politics without despiritualizing its work. It asserts that "Jesus himself lived in a capitalist system, yet He never said a word against it," and declares that "the problem of the economic order lies outside the field of the church." It calls attention, however, to the fact that "in opposing the church's espousing socialism or socialistic action, we would equally oppose the church's espousing capitalism." We are not passing judgment nor giving an opinion, but would suggest that there is food for thought in the question which the Banner raises.

Washington Snap-Shots.—

Unless all signs fail the next Presidential campaign is to be one of the most notable in many years," says James Preston of the Industrial Press Service of Washington. "Six months ago not even a dyed-in-the-wool Republican would have bet against the re-election of President Roosevelt. Now, as one New Deal experiment after another has become shaky, the Republicans have been stirring about more. At the same time the Third Party talk continues, with the possibility that it might so affect the situation as to throw the election one way or the other. Reports from all over the country indicate that the people are no longer following with blind faith but are casting critical eyes both at the Roosevelt program and at offerings of Republican leaders. All of this has the makings of a sizzling election campaign which will find houses divided against themselves as during the Smith-Hoover race of 1928. There is a noticeable drift away from regimentation and centralization of power in Washington. That may be the big issue of 1936, with the Republicans on the attack. In fact, they might adopt the Democratic platform of 1880 which declared 'opposition to centralization, and to that dangerous spirit of encroachment which tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism.' "

Are Jews a Race or a Religious Sect?—

The above question is one which is frequently asked. "The Religious Question Box," which is run by the National Conference of Jews and Christians, gives the following answer: "Professor Franz Boaz, one of America's most eminent anthropologists answers as follows: When it is said that a people represent a distinct race it assumed that they are descended from a single stock, like pure breeds of domesticated animals. On account of migrations which date back to exceedingly early times there is not a single group of people in the world that is uniform in descent. There is everywhere mixture and every people consist of a large number of different lines of descent. The course of events can easily be traced in Europe where migrations and intermingling can be proved to have occurred since a time at least two or three milleniums before our era. The original home of the Jews is a territory in which diverse types are found, such as occur at the present time among the Armenians, Kurds, and Arabs. The same types must have lived in the same area for very long periods and they are all found among the Jews. During the diaspora the Jews became intermingled with many European types, particularly since in early times the Jews were not averse to proselytizing, and since there were many conversions to Judaism as well as conversions to Christianity. In this way the Jews became still more mixed and we find at the present time a great many distinct racial traits represented in the Jewish population."

A New Publisher for "The Times."—

Adolph S. Ochs started his career as a publisher in the city of Chattanooga, Tenn., with $37.50 of his own and a borrowed capital of $250. At the time of his death he was publisher of the New York Times, having filled that position for forty years. It is unusual for the word "I" to appear in the editorial columns of a metropolitan daily, but in the May 8th issue of The Times there is a striking departure from this rule. Leading the mast head of that issue are the words: "Adolph S. Ochs, Publisher, 1896." Beneath this appeared the name of Arthur Hasy Sulzberger, the newly elected President and Publisher. Then follows Mr. Sulzberger's statement, referred to above, as follows: "For eighteen years," said Mr. Sulzberger's statement, which followed, "I have been close to Adolph S. Ochs. I have seen him in his office and in his home. I have watched him in the period of his full vigor, and during the time when ill health had diminished his participation in the affairs of this newspaper. I have studied him, admired him and loved him, and now that the responsibilities that he bore fall upon my shoulders, I pray that some of the qualities of heart and mind which he possessed in such amazing strength may be vouchsafed to me, and that I may never depart from the principles of honest and impersonal journalism which he, with such force and courage, impressed upon our land . . . Reverently we close our ranks and continue toward our objective." Mr. Sulzberger was born in New York, September 12, 1891. He was educated in the New York public school system and Columbia University. He married Iphigene Ochs, only daughter of the former publisher, in 1917, and became connected with The Times, after his discharge from the army in 1918.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

The articles appearing the past two weeks from the pen of "A Pastor" well describe two of the faithful workers in one of our local churches. If you have not read them go back and get these issues now, and read them. Such faithful members should be an inspiration to any pastor, and should serve as examples for other laymen.

The program of the Elon College Commencement this year is of its usual high order. Beginning on Friday evening with an oratorical contest, followed Saturday evening by an offering by the dramatic department, and then by the regular Commencement exercises, it should be well worth your attendance. The Elon Singers will furnish music for several events. The Music Department also offers a worthwhile program.

One of the most distressing accidents that has come to our knowledge recently was that which resulted in the death of William Horton, member of the Senior Class at Elon College this year, and valedictorian of the class. While walking on an iron rail which divides a part of the College campus, his foot slipped, and he fell, injuring himself internally, and resulting fatally. Our deepest sympathy goes out to his family and to the members of his class.

Rev. L. L. Wyrick, pastor of Howard's Chapel Church, brings in the full missionary appropriation from his church through the Easter offering, Howard's being the first church that we recall that has gone over the top this early in the year. Here is hoping that many churches will follow this good example, especially before the Annual Conference. Mission funds are so much needed that we may recover some of the ground lost during the depression and go forward in the work of kingdom building and in the enlargement of our church.

Rev. Frank J. Brown, for two years pastor of the church at New Port Richey, died at a hospital in Chicago just before Easter. Mr. Brown had been ill for about a month. He had served in several pastorates in Illinois and other mid-west states, and came to Florida for the purpose of retiring, but the church at New Port Richey urged him to take the pastorate of that church, which he did and served it most effectively. Since his death the church has arranged with Mrs. Charles DeBoer, a retired teacher living in New Port Richey, to serve the church for one year.

Rev. Orville D. Ullom, pastor of the Melbourne, Florida, church, reports an interesting new movement in his church. It is in line with the most recent effort of the denomination to meet a need of which there has of late been a growing consciousness under the leadership of Dr. Frederick L. Fagley, as Secretary for Adult Education of the Education Society. Mr. Ullom writes: "Each Thursday evening we have a class in Adult Religious Education. Last Thursday evening was the beginning. Mrs. Clauson Downey is the sponsor. This coming Thursday evening I am reviewing Ann Byrd Payson's book, 'I Follow the Road.' Last week Mrs. Richard Henley reviewed 'Green Pastures.' As soon as I get my accreditation, I am going to teach Course No. 3—The Old Testament of the International Council. There is a demand on the part of members of our church for such."

HORTON MEMORIAL FUND BEING RAISED.

Loan fund in memory of Elon College Valedictorian, Elon College, May 17th.

At a recent meeting of the Senior class of Elon College it was voted to sponsor and help raise a scholarship loan fund in memory of William H. Horton, valedictorian of the class of '35, who died recently as the result of an accidental fall on the campus. The class felt that a scholarship loan fund, to be used only by upper class students of outstanding scholastic records at Elon College, would be a fitting memorial to their classmate who had made one of the most remarkable records ever attained at Elon College.

The fund is first intended for the use of John Horton, brother of the deceased. Two years ago the two brothers were in school here together, John then completing his Freshman year here. Since then John has remained at his home in Ellington, N. Y., while helping to finance his brother's schooling here. It had been Bill's intention to, in turn, help John through the remainder of his college course. Thus the loan fund is designated to do what Bill is now unable to do.

Donations to this loan fund are being asked of members of the student body and faculty of Elon College and of anyone else interested in helping a worthy cause. Those wishing to pledge support to this fund may do so by sending money or pledge to Mr. Billy Andes, at Elon College, N. C.

REMITTANCES ON SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Below is given a list of those making remittances on their SUN subscriptions since our last report. These include payments up to Monday, May 20th. This is possibly the smallest list we have had in some time. We are appreciative of the amount that has been sent in. On the other hand, we urge those who have neglected their subscription payments to look at the address label on their paper, and unless it reads "5-1-35" or later to send in their renewals now. Subscription payments are as necessary to the running of a church paper as are editorials and contributions. Please help us by sending in yours.

MARGARET ROWLAND.

TERTIUS.

By DOROTHY BROWN THOMPSON.

"I, Tertius, who wrote this epistle, salute you in the Lord."—Rom. 16:22.

Though he was scribe for greater men,
Quiet his life, obscure his work—
The zeal with which he drove his pen
Was not the routine of a clerk

His carefulness with interest blent,
Not grudging, as beneath a rod.
And Paul, with such an instrument,
Achieved a lasting work for God.

Now younger, stranger companies
Are still admonished by his word;
And Tertius, down the centuries,
Salutes us in the Lord!

ELON SUMMER SCHOOL OF LEADERSHIP TRAINING.

JUNE 24-30, 1935.

ELON COLLEGE, NORTH CAROLINA.

The school is under the direction of the Church Extension Boards of the Congregational-Christian Churches, District of the Southeast, and the Board of Christian Education of the Southern Convention of Congregational and Christian Churches and continuing the Blue Ridge Leadership Training Conference, and the Elon Summer School of Leadership Training.

WHAT THE SCHOOL IS.

The Elon College Leadership Training School, through the merger of the former Blue Ridge and Elon schools, has a fine opportunity to render a very special service to the Congregational and Christian Churches of the Southeast.

Our two Churches have demonstrated their belief, held through the years, in "the union of the followers of Christ" in a way which is attracting the attention of Christians everywhere. Our greatest need now is to know each other better. This will mean a better understanding of the high purposes and a better knowledge of the type and quality of work which is being done in this section by both groups to meet the spiritual needs of our people.

For seven years Blue Ridge has been a meeting place for Congregationalists of the Southeast. It has promoted fellowship and has represented a fine cross-section of their work.

The Elon conference has been held continuously since 1922, and has been a mutual meeting place for the Christian churches.

The spirit and ideals of both of these conferences in the past should combine to make it possible for us to go forward together in fellowship and understanding and helpfulness to each other.

THE NEED.

Trained workers are greatly needed by the Church today. The rising tide of general education, the wide distribution of papers and magazines, the movies, and the radio all demand an ever-increasing preparation on the part of those who are to lead in religious education.

Methods of teaching are radically different from what they were a few years ago. New materials are constantly reaching the market. It is in a school like Elon that teachers and leaders get the needed information and inspiration to keep them on the up grade as Christian workers.

WHO SHOULD ATTEND.

This school is planned for ministers, Sunday school superintendents, S. S. teachers, missionary workers, Christian Endeavor workers, young people, and all who are interested in religious education.

If you desire to be a leader in a local church or elsewhere, it is very important for you to study. The Elon Summer School of Leadership Training invites you to attend, and believes that you will be benefitted.

Every church should be represented. Young people are urged to attend. All pastors are urged to plan to aid the school and receive its blessings.

WHAT TO BRING.

The College furnishes room, light, and water free. You should bring all the toilet articles and bed linen you will need.

Include Bible, note-book, pencil, and some stamps so you can write home to friends telling of your good times.

Be sure to bring a sunny smile and a willingness to cooperate in a serious attempt to make a Christian community.

THE COST.

Registration and Board will be only $7.50 for the entire time. This makes it possible for everyone to attend. It is a cheap place to take a vacation that will mean spiritual renewal.

Every student will be expected to have a book. The books will cost not more than $1.25 each. There are no other costs at the school.

Transportation by train or bus is cheap. So is it in cars when several share in the expense.

A Registration fee of $1.00 sent to the Registrar early will help the school and give you a choice room.

ELEGANCE.

A preacher was reputed to be proud of his English. He was much pleased when cultured hearers praised the elegance of his expression. A preacher can dress both himself and his sermon in gaudy colors. Neither is becoming. If he is well dressed, his apparel does not attract much attention. If his sermon is good and well expressed, his style will not occasion too much comment. His audience will rather be impressed by what he said, not how he said it. "Oh, isn't his English perfectly elegant?" I'd about as soon hear some flapper giggle: "Oh, didn't he have on a darling tie?" Gospel speech should be incisive and aimed directly at human conscience. A florid style can dull the point of truth. Jesus said: "Let these words sink into your ears." A professor, describing the outcome of a ball game, said: "They struggled to a stalemate." A rustic was asked about the results of the same game and bawled: "Nary'n to nary'n." At least he was understood. A prince of preachers said: "And I, brethren, when I came unto you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, proclaiming to you the testimony of God. For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified." Language is the servant of thought. The thought is the thing. The servant should not be allowed to steal the show from the master. Plain speech lends itself to greater vigor and is sparing in its use of adjectives. Its strength is found in nouns and verbs. If you doubt this, you might count the adjectives in the Sermon on the Mount.—Gospel Advocate.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

TOWARD A CHRISTIAN AMERICA.

Dr. Hermann N. Morse has written for the Council of Women for Home Missions and for the general public a very engaging book bearing the striking title, "Toward A Christian America." The book is sponsored by the Missionary Education Movement and tells in two hundred pages something of what home mission work in the United States means and has meant to our country through the years. It is quite difficult to define just what the home mission work is, but the author certainly gives the reader an idea of what Mission means in the following:

"He who studies the lives of missionary heroes, or who diligently seeks to discover what has moved the church to initiate and sustain the missionary enterprise, is not likely to be misled into supposing that any mere organizational loyalty or humanitarian enthusiasm could account for what he finds. That such loyalty and enthusiasm have played their part, sometimes worthily and sometimes not, no one will deny. But behind and under and around them has been something infinitely greater and more potent, a living faith in the uniqueness and all-sufficiency of Jesus Christ. One can explain the mission school, the hospital, the community station, and even, in some of its manifestations, the church, on grounds of human well-being and sound social policy. But much more is needed to explain the larger aspect of the church and of its missionary enterprise. That 'much more' is its Christian faith. Without a clear-cut, positive Christian gospel, home missions would not have been, would not be today. Some of its particular tasks would not be carried on, but the missionary enterprise, as such, would cease to be.

This is a case in which the obvious interpretation is also the truest. Home Mission is, in its motivation and purpose, a program of religious work, essentially and fundamentally a spiritual undertaking. And that means that, however much one emphasizes its concern with social or educational or economic or moral issues, its primary concern is religious and spiritual. However great a value one sets upon its institutional and service accomplishments, these do not hold its most essential value. The purpose of home missions has been to present Christ to men and to impress his spirit upon the life of each generation in turn. This spiritual and evangelical goal home missions has always accepted without reservation.

The essence of the matter lies in the conviction of the church that the Christian religion is, in the profoundest sense, a missionary religion, and that, therefore, the true Christian church must be a missionary church. Could the Christian church conceivably have become what it is had it proceeded on any basis other than that of the great commandment? The wife of an early missionary pioneer, when a particularly arduous journey was in prospect, was asked about its probable effect upon her health. She replied, 'I will go. I like the command just as it stands, 'Go ye into all the world,' without any exceptions for poor health.' So we may interpret the response of home missions to the Christian ideal for America as obedience to a command that permitted no exceptions.

ELON SUMMER SCHOOL.

In The Sun of May 16th a very engaging program is given for the Elon Summer School of Leadership Training. This particular is to be noted: "This school is planned for ministers, Sunday school superintendents, S. S. teachers, missionary workers, Christian Endeavor workers, young people, and all who are interested in religious education." The program as printed is certainly a promise of great and good things for all who attend. Since this school takes the place of the former Blue Ridge Summer Conference and also that of the Elon Summer Conference for ministers and church workers, there certainly should be a large attendance and a really great meeting. Our ministers in particular should not only plan to come themselves, but to urge that their congregations send representatives, both of their young people and others interested in the work of the church. We used to call it our Chautauqua, and many of us ministers remember, with great joy, the fellowship we had one with another at Virginia Beach and then later at Elon. Here is hoping that the ministers will take advantage of this "school" and that June 24-30, inclusive, at Elon College will be a period of inspiration, instruction and edification for a great number of our people throughout the bounds of the Southern and Southeast Convention. Dr. E. C. Gillette of Jacksonville, Fla., and Rev. F. C. Lester of Norfolk, Va., will certainly do their best to see that a great feast of good things is spread for all who come.

THE TEST OF LIFE'S VALUES.

Dear Brother Atkinson:

Your editorial "A New Religion for the New Age," commenting on a recent article by a radical thinker was most interesting to me, personally, for in my twenty-five years of active educational and religious labor in the Christian Church, I was considered rather a radical. I, then, for conscientious reasons entered the Unitarian field, where I soon became a heretic because I was too orthodox, among the humanistic element. Our roles in life are thrust upon us, far more than we are aware. For example, many men and women are true Christians, because they were raised in Christian home surroundings. For myself, I think this is largely so. And you know when we take credit for being descendants of certain men and women, it is false credit. We had nothing to do about it. I love the old Christian principles, because I was born and bred under their tutelage, and have always kept every affectionate relationship and a formal fellowship with my home folks. But it is the children we have, rather than the ancestors who were thrust upon us, that is the test of our life value.

So, may I suggest we should not be too hard on people who differ from us. We differ with them as they differ with us. The Christian church has always been hard on heretics. No persecutions in religion compare with the persecutions of Catholics in the Inquisition, or later of Protestants against their Catholic and non-conforming fellow Christians. We today are just emerging from this feeling of "holier than thou" because of religious and theological beliefs. Remember Salem?

It is quite difficult for a Fundamentalist to describe righteously a humanist, or for a humanist to picture a fundamentalist Christian, "as is." Our emotional reactions, especially of religious orators, get tangled up with our intellectual judgments.

During my lifetime, I have debated with some of the leading atheists in Chicago, New York City and Boston. To me they are less dangerous than the atheists in our Universities and colleges, some of whom are members of orthodox and liberal churches, who indirectly take away the faith of their students in the Architect of the Universe. When a man comes out under the banner of the four A's (American Association for the Advancement of Atheism), you know where to find him. He is honest at least. But when a man is under the banner of ethics, or philosophy or sociology, and destroys belief in God, he can snip immature youth from his hidden ambush, with deadly effect.

To quote a modern instance: Prof. John Dewey in his epoch-making little book, "A Common Faith," uses the term God in two ways. He repudiates for himself the belief in the existence of God, as a being. Why, then, should he use the term? It causes needless confusion, not clarity.

Personally, I believe that Spinoza used the term God, for all, when he did not believe in God. But we atheists had been horribly persecuting men of like belief as Spinoza, so he took the philosopher's way of evading what had happened to his friends. But it has confused the issue ever since, and caused the hybrid idea that a man can believe in pantheism and theism at the same time.

For myself, I think the supreme to worship is not the Bible, or the Church, or the State, but the Father of us all, whom Jesus called the only Good. But let us have mercy on our fellowmen! God has had mercy on us. Then we shall be children not simply by Creation but by adoption, a closed relationship,—because it is the relationship of the Spirit, if we are led by the Spirit.

The world is divided by nationalism, by religions, by racial animosities, by philosophical and theological differences. Is there not possible a unity which may be greater than any of these half loyalties?

Good people are not perfect. But the thing that unites kindred spirits is greater than that which divides.

THE CONVENTION—AN APPRECIATION.

The report of the Southeast Convention as written by Dr. Harrell in last week's SUN was greatly appreciated. Dr. Harrell's statement of the background and the purpose and significance of the Southeast Convention seemed to be quite clear and understanding and informing. His narrative of the events of the meeting and his interpretation of them were also fine.

The meeting of the Convention itself was most gratifying. I have been deeply interested in the development of the Southeast Convention as bringing all the conferences of the southeast into a friendly fellowship without ecclesiastical functions. This first meeting, distinct from the Southern Convention, seemed to me to be a fine beginning and a fine demonstration of the interest and purpose. The program was of a high order. There was scope in its interests, a frank facing of problems, an effort at fuller understanding of the different groups and departments of our united church life, and above all a very fine friendly fellowship which promoted acquaintances, understanding and good will.

The Southeast Convention is something like the regional meetings that are held in some other areas. Outstanding among these regional meetings are the New England Regional Meeting, the Mid-West Regional Meeting and the Pacific Congress. These regional meetings are more largely missionary and promotional in character. I feel that ours this year more rightfully stressed fellowship and a broad understanding of all our united denominational life. I feel that we could well increase the consideration of missionary interests at the next meeting. I also feel that in connection with the next meeting there should be a larger participation on the part of the women and an effort at promoting the common program of the Woman's Societies of the Southeast. I also hoped that two years hence the attendance of laymen will be increased.

I think that there should be public recognition given to the fact that the Commission on Missions had a generous share in the financing of the Convention. Fortunately the offerings were large enough so that the treasurer did not have to draw on the Commission on Missions for the full amount pledged. The Commission had promised to underwrite the Convention to the extent of $235, but Mr. Edwards, the treasurer, reports that only $160 of Commission money was used. It is hoped that the next meeting will pay for itself.

Again, I wish to express my sincere appreciation of the growing sense of unity in our southeastern fellowship, and a faith that all remaining problems will gradually be solved by the exercise of patience and good will.

AS SUMMER COMES.

Summer means vacation time for many and, often, a vacation from religion as well as from work. In many church schools we find a drop in interest and attendance or even closed doors. It is, assuredly, not helpful to attempt to carry on the regular schedule in a ragged manner that kills interest and creates distaste. Any school will profit by a change in program and summer is a good time for it. The plain necessity for something different often provides opportunity for trying out new plans and demonstrating their value to an extent that will lead to wholesome improvements during the rest of the year. Here are some suggestions.

1. The necessity of combining classes or departments has given the chance to make use of projects and group activities in which older boys and girls may help the younger to the advantage of both. Dr. Myers' "Teaching Religion Creatively" and Dr. Shaver's "The Project Principle in Religious Education" describes such projects.

2. In many schools it is being discovered that more can be done to give children an appreciative understanding of the Bible through stories told by a competent story-teller to the whole department than by the ordinary kind of class work. The summer period is a fine time to try this out. It has surprised more than one leader to discover the results obtainable through telling a good Bible story and then letting the pupils talk it over and express their own ideas and feelings about it informally.

3. Some schools have found this a good time to engage in missionary education projects such as are outlined in the various good books issued by the Missionary Education Movement. Again, this has frequently led to the discovery of values that are too great to be limited to the smaller numbers at the summer sessions and so have found their way into the fall and winter programs.

4. Outdoor sessions are possible in the summer. If the church is fortunate enough to have a spacious lawn with shade, any group may move outside with ease. But many have gone farther afield and have taken the whole group to some delightful spot where God may be worshipped in His own natural temples and stories and lessons from Nature may be effectively taught.

5. Projects of service and helpfulness may be planned: a visit to a hospital or old people's home, with an informal program of music, stories, etc. Why not let a department of the school transfer its morning session to some such place and share it with the others? It will give it new meaning for them. Or a picnic for under-privileged children may be shared without condescension or patronage.

6. The Vacation School has demonstrated its value repeatedly. More is often done in one session of four to six weeks with daily contacts and enriched curriculum than in as many years of ordinary Sunday sessions. This form of school has passed beyond the "mission" stage and in many communities is serving the children of the churches. W. Dyer Blair's "The New Vacation School" is a mine of helpful suggestions as to plans and methods. The Congregational Education Society has a pamphlet. "The Vacation Church School—Why, What, How," which may be had on request. Also, a new pamphlet. "Curriculum Materials for Vacation Church Schools, issued by the International Council of Religious Education, will be sent on request from the Education Society.

THE FAILURE OF THE STRONG.

The Christian Leader has a story which has a meaning for all of us as the situation has parallels in all denominations:

"When you leave I shall quit going to church," said a lady to her minister who had been called to a new field. "I don't think I could ever sit under any other minister—your work has meant so much to me."

And the minister felt sad at heart, and was silent, thoughtful. Then he addressed the lady thus:

"I am touched by your statement. It is not a light thing for a minister to find that he has really helped another human soul. But have I really helped you? You feel kindly toward me, and you are trying to express your kindness in what you have just said. You desire to show appreciation for what you think I have done for you. Perhaps you think I feel complimented by what you have said. If you could look into my heart at this moment you would realize that what you have actually done is to cause me a feeling of profound despair. For seven years I have labored here, trying to show that the basis of our fellowship together rests upon eternal principles of righteousness and truth, to show that we can best achieve in our search for the highest values of life by associating ourselves together in such a fellowship as this, to teach loyalty to an ideal. What you are really telling me is that I have completely failed in what I have tried so hard to do; you are telling me that all I have done for you is to make myself a crutch upon which I have taught you to lean, and, now that I am going, you tell me that you will be unable to walk without your crutch, and you will be worse off than if I had never labored here at all. Your statement is no compliment, but, instead, it is a deep accusation of failure."

We call this the failure of the strong for only a strong, unselfish, far-sighted minister would see in a personal testimony of affection the sign of the failure of his ministry.

The true minister of Christ seeks not to build himself into the hearts of his people or into the life of the community so much as he tries to build his church into the life of the neighborhood and the people into the life of the church. He sees that the church is an institution with a longer life than any individual. The church ought to do more for a man than the preacher can do for him and when an intimate friendship and personal affection becomes greater than the loyalty to the church the minister has failed worst with those who love him most. This is the consciousness that nearly breaks the heart of the strong man while the weak man glories in his personal triumph.—M. P.-Recorder.

THE PLENTY IN POVERTY.

Most of us would not choose poverty—so God sometimes chooses it for us. A life of "plenty" seems preferable to a life of poverty; yet we can have both. A Christian mother writes to the Times about some of her experiences when human resources have been very slim indeed but God's resources inexhaustible: "We are experiencing God's goodness and care so poignantly these days. Sometimes it's been rather hard to know just which way to turn, but there's always a gleam of light just ahead. Sometimes it seems the poor are more blessed than those who live in plenty, in that they experience a more deep and visible and wonderful sense of God's care and providence." God usually gives "the gleam of light" for the next step, if no more than that. But there may come times when there is, apparently, no light at all; and then we can hear God's voice: "Who is among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of His servant, that walketh in darkness, and hath no light? let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God" (Isa. 50:10). God's own Word is light, and we always have that. And poverty may bring greater plenty than can come through what the world calls "plenty." For "God is able to make all grace abound toward you; that ye, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work." (II Cor. 9:8.)—Sunday School Times.

STICKING BY.

It may be a difficult task which is before us, but we must not be discouraged. Difficulties are what make character; men who can go out into a hard field and succeed—they are the men we want. Any quantities of men are looking for easy places but the world will never hear of them. We want men who are looking for hard places, who are willing to go into the darkest corners of the earth and make those dark places bloom like gardens. They can do it if the Lord is with them.—D. L. Moody.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Spring cleaning has engaged the attention of many housekeepers for several weeks. "Have you finished your house-cleaning?" is a familiar question. This is a time when husbands are anxious to put in full time at the office, or, if they have some leisure, they will go fishing. A wife can find too much work for the husband when house-cleaning time arrives. Every piece of furniture must be moved; pictures taken from the walls; rugs carried out and cleaned; and many other things too numerous to mention enter into the program.

A man never gets old enough, or reaches a point of wisdom where he can understand all the ways and means of spring house-cleaning. It is a deep mystery to every man. Of course, he will not know where to find his bed, and for many days he will feel the spell of the timely renovation. In spite of all the changes wrought, the average man (whoever he is) will be pleased, provided he does not have to help with the cleaning. The clean floors, clear windows, spotless linens and dustless furniture will please the man of the house. He will survive the ordeal and be happier afterwards, provided he takes full cognizance of all the changes made, and compliments his wife for her good judgment and excellent accomplishments. But, for me, may I always be busy here and there, or be invited to go fishing, when spring house-cleaning time comes.

This writer is not opposed to spring cleaning. It should be done well. Much depends, however, upon who is engaged in this important task of human health and comfort. Every prospective husband should be trained for this delightful pastime. He should not get married until he can scrub floors, wash windows, make up a feather bed and hang window shades without hitting his thumb with the tack hammer. These things should be a part of his education, although he may be able to escape a call to put his theories into practice. This is not written to advocate putting husbands at the head of house-keeping; but an intimate knowledge will make the creatures more sympathetic with the wife. The good women, who seriously undertake spring house-cleaning, do much to add charm and cheer to our homes. God bless them in their work.

There are some spiritual lessons to be learned from spring cleaning. During the winter months, when the weather is cold, dust and soot will settle in little corners and places where ordinary methods of house-keeping will not suffice to keep the house clean. The process of this accumulation is so slow it is not easily discovered. Disease germs may lurk in some place of hiding. Health and happiness are at stake. And house-cleaning time opens war upon disease in the home. It is possible that the family may be so busy with work, that little things—so small they do not attract the attention—creep into the home life of parents and children and become a great menace to the moral and spiritual life? When house-cleaning time comes, it is a good time to think of home-cleaning time. Maybe it should be done this spring. Does the home—your home—need a spring cleaning? Maybe you have finished the house-cleaning. If so, when the husband is at home, and the children are in bed, and the day's work is over, why not inspect the home and see if it is safe for these children, as well as the husband and wife?

Spring cleaning removes some things from the house. And, usually, the good housewife wants to buy something new for the home. Something is removed and something added. And this process may be helpful when the home is studied for moral and spiritual spring cleaning. Christian people should remove dangerous and questionable habits and indulgences from the home. There is room in the home for many good and useful attitudes and practices. Make the home beautiful and make it a place of faith, prayer, devotion, honor, and love.

PUBLICITY FOR THE COLLEGES.

At this season of the year institutions of learning throughout the country are bidding for patronage. They are seeking to present themselves before the country in general and before High School graduates in particular with a hope of arresting attention and securing students for the ensuing year. Catalogues are printed and distributed, pamphlets, periodicals, photographs presenting the College in its best light and distributed far and near. Field workers, solicitors of various kinds and types are making what amounts to a house to house canvass in an effort to get the undecided prospective student on the "dotted line" that he may have settled in his own mind the institution he will attend for advantages in higher education. All of which may be profitable and I think is provided if exaggerations are not indulged in too freely.

The average High School graduate is far better fitted for life, regardless of his purposes, with College advantages. There is an effort today, on the part of some, to decide in advance, those capable of receiving a College education and those who are incapable. I content that in the majority of cases that there is no way of telling except by experiment, whether or not a youngster can do work on the college level. It frequently happens that better scholastic records are made in college than in high school, due to the superior instruction, more adequate equipment and a sincereness of purpose on the part of the student himself. Granting that an ambitious youngster is so unfortunate as not to be capable mentally of receiving instructions in the higher brackets of education, it must be conceded that the very atmosphere of a college campus will make a very valuable contribution to his life and character. I am persuaded that every youngster should have a chance at a college education. Let him and the college decide his capability or his inability.

We are interested in Elon College and her future. We are most anxious first of all to enroll young men and young women from the Christian and Congregational Churches but we welcome with equal enthusiasm those coming from other denominations or without church affiliations.

Elon College has something tremendously worth while to offer to the youth of the church and of the country. We are enthusiastic in telling the world what we have and what we are capable of doing.

We print catalogues and send them far and wide. We publish periodicals, pamphlets and college papers and give the same wide distribution. We send out field representatives. We invite young men and young women with high ideals to come to our campus for their training. We have splendid equipment, a capable and efficient faculty and are prepared to meet adequately the needs of the average young man and young woman in the efforts for preparation. We are aware of the social and intellectual needs of the students who come. We are also aware of their spiritual needs and we strive as faithfully to meet their spiritual needs as we do to meet their social and intellectual needs. Through student organizations, chapel services and Sunday worship services we offer opportunities in the field of personal and practical religion that are highly beneficial to all who will avail themselves.

Many are deciding now what college they will attend. Others are studying catalogues, making appeals for financial considerations and in many ways battling with the question of college education and where to secure it.

We have a larger number of definite applications at this time than any year since I have been officially connected with the college. We have a longer list of prospective students than we have yet had and we are bidding for a larger student body for 1935-36 than Elon has ever had in its history.

This is an appeal to the ministry of our United Church, to the members of the Church, and to the Alumni and to all friends of the institution to cooperate with us in making Elon College the kind of institution it ought to be.

By the time this article reaches the public, the forty-fifth annual session of Elon College will have passed and we will be definitely planning for the new college year. We need your cooperation and help.

WINSTON-SALEM.

The past two months have been important ones for our work in Winston-Salem. During this time there has been experienced a definite growth of strength. Our Sunday School enrollment now numbers 150 and the average attendance each Sunday during these months has been over 100. On Palm Sunday we had our largest attendance—230, which was the result of a rally day emphasis.

The spiritual life of the Church was deepened by emphasis upon prayer and devotions during the lenten season, and each family was furnished a copy of "The Fellowship of Prayer." On Thursday night preceding Easter, we held our communion service and received ten new members into the Church. At this service we made use of a very effective candle lighting program.

Our work has been furthered by a "Preaching Mission and Church Emphasis Campaign" during the week of May 15th, with Dr. James H. Lightbourne as guest preacher and leader. Dr. Lightbourne brought deep spiritual messages and his leadership contributed much to the life of the Church. Three members have been received thus far as a result of this effort.

On Mother's Day we presented "Motherhood and Home," in song, scripture, and drama, which was well received.

Our Church is cooperating with other churches of Winston-Salem in the "Easter to Pentecost" observance, which will include noon day meetings to be held during the week (June 3-7) preceding Pentecost Sunday, in the Carolina Theatre, with Dr. S. D. Gordon delivering each day one of his "Quiet Talks." On Pentecost Sunday, June 9th, at 8 P. M., a great union service will be held at the First Baptist Church, with Bishop McDowell, of Washington, D. C., as guest speaker.

We are endeavoring to do our best in carrying forward this mission point, and we covet your prayers and support to the end that a strong and progressing work may grow out of very promising beginnings. We have observed the College and Mission promotion periods, as provided for by the Southern Convention, and we will pay in full this year our apportionment based upon the expanded budget plan.

I BELIEVE IN WORSHIP.

[A paper read before the Eastern Virginia Ministerial Association, by Rev. Robert A. Whitten, Sr., and requested by said Association that same be published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN.]

"God is a Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth." John 4:24.

I believe in worship because Christ taught that we should worship God as our Heavenly Father, and as a follower of Christ, I believe in worship.

I believe in worship because I believe it to be fundamental to our welfare and that it is the highest expression of life. In the act of worship, the soul, the affections, the will, and even the body in some degree at least are brought into submissiveness and communion with the Eternal. Man is born for worship, for correspondence with his God. Words can never convey the deepest meaning of what takes place between the soul and its maker while the worshipper is thus engaged.

I believe in worship because it is a necessity, and not a luxury, for the soul of man can never be satisfied with less than communion with God.

God has implanted in the nature of people of all races, lands, and climes, the instinct for worship which must be met in some form or manner.

Worship helps one to think and act unselfishly. It develops the intellect and strengthens the will. It eliminates evil thoughts, subdues evil passions and provides strength to overcome temptation. I believe in worship because it is a medium of praise, prayer, confession, dedication and meditation. As a Christian one needs to cultivate the constant doing of each as a part of daily living in fellowship with God in the spirit. Long ago a prophet saw the Lord seated high on a throne in the temple, with flowing robes of majesty, and on either side adoring Seraphs did bend and worship and the theme of their worship was not God's power, God's wisdom, but God's Holiness. There comes to everyone a time when though conscious of unclean lips, we desire to adore the Holiness of God. Kant, the great German philosopher, said: "There are two things that always awaken in me, when I contemplate them, the sentiment of the sublime. They are the starry heavens and the moral nature of man." If you and I were merely disinterested spectators regarding the Universe about us, the wondrous works of nature and the marvelous possibilities in man ought to be sufficient to provoke us to worship. But we are more than disinterested spectators. We have been forgiven—redeemed. John saw from the Isle of Patmos a view of God's throne and heard the worship of the host of Angels, with the four and twenty elders and the four living creatures, and the theme of their worship was Salvation, Holiness and Redemption, honor, glory and power be unto Him that sitteth on the throne and unto the Lamb for ever and ever.

I believe in the worship of God because it is due Him. . . Jesus said "I am the light of the world." When human souls through worship, are brought into the marvelous light of God's Eternal Holiness, that light reveals two facts. The perfection of God's Holiness and the imperfectness or unworthiness of sinful man. Worship nourishes the deepest root of morality. When man faces a duty, one that suggests itself from within, rather than from the written code, it reflects the glory of man and marks him in the image of the Spiritual One that made him. I believe in the spiritual worship of God because only spiritual worship will be accepted by Him. God is Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth. All that I can say is but a poor expression of my reasons why I believe in worship, for how can one tell the reasons why we should worship God? They are as high as the vaulted heavens above, as wide as the dwelling places of all the people of all the earth and my soul finds its greatest good and receives its greatest gifts while in communion with God. Redeemer, Saviour and Friend in the act of worship.

ROBERT A. WHITTEN, SR.

A PRAYER.

"Come to us, O God, as we need; with just the touch of Thy hand, with just the whisper of Thy Spirit that we need—to the young in their fresh vigour and lightness of heart, with their natures yet unfixed; to the busy men, so busy, with buying and selling and getting gain, absorbed in 'the chase, the competition, and the craft'; to the bent with years, in whom passion has cooled, and expectation grows drowsy, while they remember the former times; to those who are encamped just now at Marah, where the waters of life are bitter; to those whose portion is sweet, and their souls are comforted; to the sufferer in secret; to the perplexed with doubt; to the thinker in his solitude; to the philanthropic in their labours; to the sentenced criminal; to the little dreaming child. Come still, with Thy teaching, to the world, for its further learning; and with ever-renewed inspiration to Thy Church, until it shall come to Thy perfection."—S. A. Tipple.

The goodness we seek never comes by accident; it is a matter of struggle and attainment.

Profession of certainty is not always an evidence of the profession of fact or truth.

HIS PRESENCE CAME LIKE SUNSHINE.

I met God in the morning,
When my day was at its best,
And His presence came like sunrise,
Like a glory in my breast.

All day long the presence lingered;
All day long He stayed with me;
And we sailed in perfect calmness
O'er a very troubled sea.

Other ships were blown and battered,
Other ships were sore distressed,
But the winds that seemed to drive them
Brought to us a peace and rest.

Then I thought of other mornings,
With a keen remorse of mind,
When I, too, had loosed the moorings
With the presence left behind.

So I think I know the secret
Learned from many a troubled way:
You must seek Him in the morning
If you want Him through the day.

—Ralph S. Cushman.

There may be times in the Christian life when one thinks chiefly of God the Father and prays to Him. But later on we realize that it may cause spiritual loss if we do not grasp the truth that each day and each hour it is only through faith in Christ and in living union with Him that we can enjoy a full and abiding fellowship with God. O Christian, if you would worship God aright, seek Him and worship Him in Christ! And if you seek Christ, seek Him and worship Him in God! Then you will understand what it is to have your life "hid with Christ in God."—Andrew Murray.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

GREETINGS FROM INDIA.

[Our American Board last fall asked its executive secretary, our good friend and brother, Dr. Fred Field Goodsell, to go at once to India, Africa, and our other Foreign Mission fields and make personal and intimate contact with our workers there and a study of our Mission situation as he finds it today. Dr. Goodsell is now on such a visit and sends to the Mission Secretary and to other members of the Mission Board the following very interesting and quite thrilling personal letter. SUN readers will get a personal and close up view of what Dr. Goodsell is finding and seeing and feeling. Every reader will find something of real interest in this personal letter.—J. O. A.]

Ahmednagar, India,
March 30, 1935.

Dear Prayer-partners:

I will be leaving India in a few days. It hardly seems possible that I have been in this fascinating country nearly two months. I have seen so much, I have suffered inwardly so much, I have faced so many problems, I have made so many new, delightful friends, I have had heart-to-heart talks with so many old friends, I have agonized over failures and rejoiced in so many successes, that it does not seem possible that all these experiences could have been crowded into two months!

I have been filled many times with an inexpressible longing to be back permanently on the mission field. No one can question the importance of "The Home Base" but "The Front" is where the most interesting things are happening. I have been in many missionary homes where pure zest for life and work makes your blood tingle!

How fortunate I have been in many incidental ways. For instance, Mahatma Gandhi was a visitor for three hours one evening in the missionary home where I was a guest. He came to talk over quite informally with my hosts the main points of his far-reaching program for village improvement based on the revival and scientific development of village industries. "Rural reconstruction" with Gandhi as well as with our missionaries is one of the great enthusiasms of the present generation.

Another instance of my good fortune was the opportunity to sit in at Madras at some of the sessions of the joint committee on Church Union in South India. A group of forty persons representing the Anglican Church, the Wesleyan Methodist Church, and the South India United Church (composed of Presbyterians and Congregationalists) spent several days considering the next steps in one of the most remarkable movements toward church union in our day. I wish you could have sensed as I did the moral earnestness of the Anglican bishops as well as of many others, including outstanding laymen. Those who know the history and inward growth of this movement are sure that the Spirit of God is leading the Christian people of India toward a great goal.

Naturally my most immediate concern has been to see and to understand the work and setting of our American Board undertakings in India and Ceylon. I have some very happy impressions to treasure. We talk about cooperation in Christian enterprises. Our missionaries are the most cooperative group I have seen, East or West. They stress not cooperation as an end in itself but cooperation as a mighty means which can put our great Cause forward. For instance: in the training of ministers and other Christian workers India fairly hums with the cooperative spirit. At Bangalore the United Theological College is jointly sponsored by five missions: Scotch, Wesleyan, Dutch Reformed, British Congregationalist, and the American Board. Other missions seem about to join this group. As the cooperative spirit reaches higher levels, anything that even resembles rivalry or competition is eliminated.

This leads me to speak of the task we face in India. Our aim has been and must continue to be to do our part in the building of a strong and vital Indian Christian movement at the heart of which is the Christian community and the Christian Church. I do not see how any earnest Western Christian man or woman could spend a fortnight in India in contact with her sheer, overwhelming human need without realizing that our task in India is very far from accomplishment. If we were called by the Haystack Men a century ago to share Christ with India, a thousand voices call us today to press on with the unfinished task. That we shall go on in fullest fellowship and cooperation with Indian Christians is to be taken for granted. They must increasingly assume responsibility but how earnestly they plead for our continued partnership at its best!

I am coming to feel that flexibility is one of the outstanding Christian virtues! It assumes that we have deep and abiding Christian convictions, "purposes ribbed and edged with steel," but it requires that we note the changes that are coming over the world so rapidly and that we resourcefully suit the deed to the need today. Here is a case in point. All over the world, including India, the deepening hunger of the masses as well as of the classes for education on Western patterns is stimulating governments to provide more and better schools. Mission schools are not unique as in former decades. In some cases they are not needed. Ponder this fact for instance: In one comparatively small district in India nine years ago there were 500 girls in schools of all types, today there are 6000. Mission boards have long depended upon the school as a chief means of contact and service. Under changing conditions can we develop techniques that will accomplish in our generation what schools have done in earlier generations? I believe we can. Undoubtedly our schools are still serving our Cause at many points. For instance, in one district in India the government authorities gratefully acknowledge that their best teachers come from our higher schools. Ninety per cent of all women teachers and thirty per cent of all men teachers among 3,000,000 people are from our institutions. This is strategic Christian service. But by and large we are called upon to develop new methods. I have in mind two areas where very remarkable techniques of what I would call twentieth century Christian missionary work are being developed. Rural reconstruction units, village guides or counsellors, health centers, friendship centers, volunteer Christian service, higher standards for Christian catechists, pastors, teachers and preachers, more suitable Christian literature in the vernaculars—these and other terms suggest most fascinating because realistic, progressive lines of Christian service in India today.

And so I leave India with a wistful eagerness to stay longer. How proud I am of our American Board missions in India. There is a great deal more you should know about them. How deeply I long to see the entire Fellowship of Those Who Care and of Those Who Might Care understand more clearly and support more sacrificially the efforts of our missionaries and of the Indian Christian churches, the real hope of India.

On April 3rd, I am sailing from Bombay on the S. S. Tairea of the British Line for Beira, Portuguese East Africa. I shall spend the period from April 20th to July 1st visiting our three missions in Africa—East, West and South. I should be delighted to hear from any of you, my address during June being c/o Rev. H. A. Stick, Adams, Natal, South Africa.

Yours sincerely,
FRED FIELD GOODSELL.
Executive Vice President of the American Board.

A Story for the Children

GOOD TIMES—WITH OR WITHOUT MONEY.

Patricia Brown hung her swimming suit on the line and came into the house. It was her duty to set the table for dinner, and this afternoon the plates, glasses, and silver went on to the table with a clang and a bang.

"Are you in a hurry, Patricia," asked her mother.

"No, mother," answered Patricia. "Why?" But her mother had disappeared into the kitchen. It was not until toward evening that Patricia had a moment alone with her mother, then she said: "It was no fun swimming at the Park Plunge today because none of the other girls were there."

"Why don't you girls all plan to go together some afternoon after school?" asked Mrs. Brown.

"The girls are not going to the Park Plunge any more," answered Patricia. "They say every one goes there, so they prefer to go to the Athletic Club to swim."

"I don't see why every one's going there should be an objection," answered Mrs. Brown. "The management of the Park Plunge looks very carefully after the health of the children and the cleanliness of the water."

"The girls say they prefer a private plunge like the Athletic Club. Their fathers are members of the club, so they can go there whenever they wish. Can't father join the Athletic Club?" asked Patricia.

But Patricia already knew the answer. The Athletic Club membership would cost quite a sum of money. Her father had suffered some financial losses recently and the whole family were helping to economize. Usually every one was very cheerful about it—Patricia included. So the subject was dropped for the time.

When Friday morning came, Mrs. Brown asked Patricia if she would like to have a little swimming party at the City Park Plunge after school and then bring the girls home to supper. Patricia agreed to ask them but said that she did not believe they would come. At noon she told her mother that only one girl accepted. Mary Ann Mason would come. "The girls were lovely about it," said Patricia, "but they said that a noted swimming expert was to be at the Athletic Club on Friday afternoon and would give an exhibition in swimming and then he would give a free lesson in stunt swimming—swimming while reading a newspaper, and things like that. So, of course they could not miss that for my swimming party."

Mrs. Brown suggested that Patricia invite two younger girls who were near neighbors, and a new girl who had just entered school, and another girl whose father was not a member of the Athletic Club. Patricia rather reluctantly agreed.

So on Friday afternoon five girls with their bathing suits assembled at Patricia's home and all together they walked over to the City Park Plunge.

At six o'clock, six rosy, tousled-haired girls came racing home, trying to see who would be the first to reach Patricia's house. "Supper ready?" called Patricia. "We are all starved—absolutely famished!"

"Hang your suits on the line," advised Mrs. Brown, welcoming the girls, "and then come in to the table as soon as you are ready. Dinner is served."

When they seated themselves at the table there was a shout of laughter, for Patricia's father was dressed like a chef and appeared at the dining-room door with a platter of baked ham in one hand and a large dish of scalloped potatoes in the other. Flitting around the table in white cap and apron was Patricia's mother filling tall glasses with orangeade. How good that dinner tasted! Hot dishes and salad disappeared miraculously, so did the home-made sherbet and cookies. And after it was all over, the chef and waitress sat down while the guests and Patricia served dinner to them in great style.

When they were all starting for home, they were very sincere when they told Patricia and her mother again and again how much they had enjoyed the swimming party.

Just as the last girl was leaving, Estelle Bradley passed on her way home from the Athletic Club. She saw Patricia on the porch and stopped a minute. "Did you have a good time at your swimming party?" she asked.

"I'll say we did,' answered Patricia, which was the truth indeed.

"Did you learn anything new from your swimming instructor at the Athletic Club?" she continued.

"He wasn't there," answered Estelle. "Had another engagement and forgot all about us, I suppose. Well, see you tomorrow," and Estelle went on her way.

The next day Patricia was quite gleeful when she reached home. She announced at once: "The girls all say they would have had much more fun at my party, and they asked me when I was going to have another one. And Margaret Wilson is inviting some guests to the Athletic Club next week for a swimming party and supper and Mary Ann and I are invited. May I go, mother?"

"Why, surely," answered her mother. "That will be fine."

"Isn't it nice," continued Patricia, who was somewhat of a philosopher, "that a person can have as much fun without a lot of money as with it, if only she goes about it in the right way."—Carrie Belle Boyden in Zion's Herald.

COMPULSORY ATTENDANCE.

Many feel that Church Colleges should not compel students to attend chapel and worship services. That no real benefit is to be had religiously by compulsion. That this matter of religion is a voluntary affair. Elon compels attendance on all such service. Such compulsion has its disadvantages but it also has its advantages.

A student at Elon College, a freshman this year, from a distant city, came to my office yesterday to talk over the possibility of her returning for the 1935-36 session. She explained that her parents were financially unable to pay all of her expenses but that they could pay a larger share. She then began to plead for consideration on the part of the College that she might be privileged to return. She said, "I want to come so much; this year has meant the world to me, particularly to my religious life. This year at Elon has saved me from Catholicism. My parents are members of the Congregational Church but I had definitely made up my mind to become a Catholic. If you remember when I came, I inquired how I might get to Burlington that I might attend mass. I was not a Catholic but had decided to become one. I resented the idea of being compelled to attend chapel and church but now I am happy that I was compelled to attend. I see clearly my error in planning to leave my church. I now love my church more than ever and the services at the college are responsible for my change of mind and heart." I appreciate this statement on the part of this young woman who is now a student at Elon. We will arrange in some way for her return.

During this year four different young men have made definite decisions for the gospel ministry. Christ said a long time ago, "By their fruits ye shall know them." This saying was true then; it is true today. There is a leaven of real religion at work on the campus of Elon College. Eventually it will leaven the whole lump. Should Elon College fail in imparting real and genuine religion to the students who come, it will fail in its most essential matter. Cultured and intellectual development is highly desirable; genuine religion is essential.

I appeal to the Church, its ministry and laity for cooperation in all matters pertaining to the College and the training of our youth with the assurance that faithfully and sincerely efforts will be put forth by capable authorities that the fruits of the College may be convincing and beneficial.

CONCERNING THE ELON CONFERENCE.

The program of the Elon Conference as printed in last week's Sun promises a fine program and a fine Conference. The writer has been designated "General Chairman," and about that he wishes to say a word. The real leader and head of the Elon Conference continues to be Rev. F. C. Lester who is to be Dean of the Conference. To Mr. Lester's leadership is due the fine record of Elon Conferences, and also the fine planning and program of this one. At the Conference he will continue as in the past to be the real head of the Conference. The committee in charge of the program, under the leadership of Mr. Lester, designated me as General Chairman, because of the fact that this year's Elon Conference will be a merger of the former Blue Ridge Conference, which the Congregationalists have been holding, and of which I was last year Chairman.

Mr. Lester and I have talked over our respective responsibilities and mine are largely those of the business administration, leaving him freer for the tasks of general leadership, the educational and other aspects of the Conference. It is a pleasure to work with Mr. Lester in this capacity and to share in the effort to make this Elon Conference one of special interest and value.

MINDING HIS BUSINESS.

Dr. Robert P. Wilder says: "Once when I was working in India I went to a place near Poona. On Saturday night when I entered the hotel dining room I found seated at the same table with me a naval officer, an infantry major and his wife, and a sergeant major and his wife. When the conversation started the naval officer said: 'Why don't these missionaries stay at home and mind their own business? You can get all the converts you want at a rupee a head.' It was the time of the Armenian massacres and there were rumors that the British fleet might be ordered to Constantinople. I turned to the naval officer and said: 'Suppose you were ordered to take your battleship to Constantinople tomorrow, and I was to say, 'Why don't you stay here and mind your own business? There is no sense in your going to the Bosphorus.' The man's eyes flashed fire as he said, 'I would tell you to mind your own business; if we are ordered to go we must go, even if every ship is sunk and every sailor killed.' I said, 'Quite right, my friend, and I have marching orders from the Divine government to preach the gospel to every creature, and the primary question is whether I am going to obey the last command of my Lord.' "—King's Business.

That was the best act that Mary ever did, and yet, if she had asked the twelve, every one would have said, "No, it would be a waste! Take your money and give it to the poor!" Thank God, she forgot the poor for a while, she forgot his disciples, she forgot herself, and love just flowed out, and she lavished her best possession upon her Lord!—D. L. Moody.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

Rev. F. C. Lester, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

SPRINGTIME IN OUR CHURCHES.

When it's springtime in the southland the churches have a new chance for helpful service. People want to go places and do things. They are eager to mingle with their friends. They feel the urge for life.

The little churches among the hills and fields and forests can be a haven of rest, a place of beauty, and a fountain of life. Whether it shall be this or a cold and dreary place depends upon the leaders in these local churches. The church grounds can bloom with beautiful flowers, and church buildings can be filled with their perfume if there are those who care enough to make it so. Church programs can be interesting, intelligent, and worshipful if the leaders will study and pray to make them so.

When it's springtime in the southland it is time for Sunday school superintendents and the teachers, Christian Endeavor and missionary leaders, pastors, and all who believe that Christ came to give life abundant to busy themselves with developing a better program of religious education and church services.

BOOKS THAT HELP.

These leaders will need the inspiration that comes from new books and from a restudy of old books. Of course the Bible heads the list, but there are others that are useful tools in the hands of skilled artists who deal in the development of human souls.

Song books are important. People need to sing the great hymns of the Church. Children should learn songs that are suitable for their experience. Young people respond to songs for their age, and older people like still a different type. The superintendent who opens his Sunday school on a bright morning in spring with "Shall We Gather at the River?" or any such song, has lost the spirit which God and the Church put into his hands when they made him the leader of the Sunday school. On my desk are a number of hymn books which I shall be glad to lend to any who are thinking of a new type of book for their church or Sunday school.

"Worship in the Sunday School" is another helpful book which could be used to advantage by all who have anything to do with worship services. People go to church in order that they may come in contact with God, and worship is the medium through which they become conscious of Him. Why not read a book on worship?

There is in my office numbers of books on the various phases of Sunday school work which can be borrowed by any who are interested. A new one is entitled "Experiences In the Church School Kindergarten." It is a book of 150 pages published by the Pilgrim Press in March of this year. Although I have never taught four and five-year-old children, I find this book by Jessie Eleanor Moore to be very interesting and helpful reading. Every mother of little children or teacher of little children will find a great many helpful suggestions in this little book which sells for ony $.75. There are chapters on "The Kindergarten in the Church," "Experiences: The Method of Learning," "What Is A Lesson?" "Seeing and Touching," "Learning Through Play," "Values In Story-Telling," "Children at Work for Others," "Children's Gifts As a Means to Friendship," Learning Through Fellowships," "Experiences and Worship," "Concepts of God and Jesus," and "Following the Children's Lead."

The reading of such books gives one a new lease on the springs of life which should flow freely in the heart of everyone who would "take a little child by the hand and lead him toward the Father."

FLORIDA STATE CONFERENCE.

Through the lives of the young people of our Florida churches is projected out into the life of the world the work of one more year. Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, State Extension Worker, has not spared herself in an endeavor to be of the most counting service to the young people of our churches. She knows personally and keeps in touch with a surprisingly large number of our young people. For instance, copies of the "Fellowship of Prayer" were sent to the Florida Congregational young people now in college and universities. A Youth Convocation, at Orange City, and several other Week-end Conferences were held during the year. Our annual Young People's Summer Conference, which was held last summer at DeLeon Springs, was a great success as was indicated by the large number of letters which came in at the close from faculty and students containing helpful comments and expressing satisfaction with the results.

One of the most helpful features of Miss Coghill's work now is the office work and follow-up from field work which has become increasingly important each year. The "News Bulletin" containing items of interest from all the churches over the state, which was sent out last fall, proved to be very worthwhile. An attempt has been made to make the use of our own denominational literature more effective in the churches of the state, and during the year sample copies of the Pilgrim Highroad, The Missionary Herald, and other periodicals have been sent to interested people with some very good results.

Our denomination has worked closely through the year with other state denominational workers through Miss Coghill's participation in the observance of Religious Education Week, Leadership Training School, Vacation Church School plans, and attendance at regular meetings from time to time of the state workers. Missionary Education for and through all the departments of the church has come in for considerable emphasis.

The 1935 Young People's Conference will be held at DeLeon Springs, June 8-15. A brief statement of the school follows:

Dean: Rev. Victor B. Chicoine, Winter Park.

Registrar: Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Jacksonville.

"What the Bible Teaches Us About Jesus"—Rev. Frank Atkinson, W. Palm Beach

"Personality Development"—Chas. A. Hoyt, Jr., Jacksonville

"Young People in the Local Church"—Rev. L. A. Gedke, St. Petersburg

"Creative Teaching"—Mrs. Russell Mason, Sanford

Interest Groups:

"Nature Appreciation"—Mrs. Russell Mason

"Music"—Rev. Everett Lesher

"Photography"—Chas. A. Hoyt, Jr.

"Dramatics"—Miss Martha Race

"Good Manners"—Mrs. Everett Lesher

World Friendship Trail—Guide—Rev. Gordon Brokenshire.

Book Trail—Guide—Rev. J. B. Root.

Peace Trail—Guide—Rev. Victor B. Chicoine.

Cost: $10.00 ($8.00 for room and board, $2.00 for registration fee).

For Further Information: Write to Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, 117 W. Forsyth Street, Jacksonville, Florida.

ELON SUMMER SCHOOL.

June 24-30, 1935.

Elon and Blue Ridge will unite for the finest and biggest school ever held at Elon College, Elon College, North Carolina, June 24th-30th, next. It is hoped that young people, ministers, Sunday school superintendents, S. S. Teachers, missionary and Christian Workers, and all who are interested in religious education will begin now to plan to be present. Each church ought to be responsible for sending at least one young person. The investment will be worth all the effort it might take to raise the money for paying the expense of this young person. Eastern Virginia's goal is "at least fifty young people."

Miss Lottie Mae Cross, superintendent of Leadership Training for Eastern Virginia Youth Fellowship, has written a playlet advertising the school which will be sent to key-workers and S. S. superintendents in Eastern Virginia. Other leaders can secure the playlet by writing to the secretary, Miss Edna Fulcher, 505 South Main Street, Norfolk, Virginia.

Othe announcements will be made concerning the school. Dr. E. C. Gillette, 117 W. Forsyth Street, Jacksonville, Florida, is General Manager and the editor of this page is dean.

JESUS AS A MAN OF PRAYER.

Christian Endeavor Topic for June 2, 1935.
(Consecration.)

Hymns: "Nearer, My God to Thee"; "I Love to Steal Awhile Away"; "Sweet Hour of Prayer"; "Near the Cross"; "Pass Me Not"; "Have Thine Own Way Lord."

Solo: "Prayer Is the Soul's Sincere Desire."

Scripture: Mark 1:35; 11:20-26.

Sentence Prayers: The leader should make each person want to pray. There may be a few moments of silence when the leader mentions things about which to pray. Close by prayerfully singing "Have Thine Own Way, Lord."

Poems:

"Into the Woods My Master Went."

Into the woods my Master went, Clean forspent, forspent.
Into the woods my Master came, Forspent with love and shame.
But the olives they were not blind to Him, The little gray leaves were kind to Him:
The thorn tree had a mind to Him, When into the woods He came.
Out of the woods my Master went, And He was all content.
Out of the woods my Master came, Content with death and shame.
When Death and Shame would woo Him last, From under the trees they drew Him last:
'Twas on a tree they slew Him—last, When out of the woods He came.

In Thy Presence.

Lord, what a change within us one short hour
Spent in Thy presence will prevail to make!
What heavy burdens from our bosoms take,
What parched grounds refresh as with a shower'.

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

Lesson VIII—May 26, 1935.

Golden Text: "This do in remembrance of me."—I Cor. 11:24.

Lesson Text: Matthew 26:17-30; I Cor. 11: 23-29.

Nineteen hundred years ago, a young Jewish teacher sat in a plain upper room in a historic city, and taking a piece of bread, and a cup of wine, which were used in connection with an ancient Jewish feast, He said: "This do in remembrance of me." It must have sounded rather strange, perhaps even silly to those men. Certainly it would have sounded strange to the ruler of the mighty Roman Empire if he had heard it. And yet today there are millions and millions of people throughout the world who observe that simple sacrament and thus remember Him. But who knows the name of the Roman Emperor of that day? This strange Man, Jesus—what a hold He has on the hearts of men and women and boys and girls after all these centuries! And what spiritual genius He showed in instituting this simple ceremony as a memorial to Himself!

The Old Feast.

The Passover was an ancient feast. It was rich in associative value—the last night in Egypt, the meal eaten hurriedly, the death of the firstborn of the Egyptians, and the deliverance of the Hebrews from the land of bondage, the goodness of God to His chosen people. An ordinance like that had tremendous value. Ordinances have a legitimate place in religion. They are the body in which the spirit of religion is incarnated and through which it finds expression. Let no man despise or neglect the ordinances of the Church.

Jesus kept this feast. He did not deal lightly with the traditions of the past. He would renew His spirit through the sacred ordinance of the Church of His day. "Those who neglect the ordinances of worship cannot quote the example of Jesus."

Making Ready.

Ordinances demand and deserve preparation. They are not to be rushed into hurriedly or unadvisedly. They are not to be taken unworthily. It is well to prepare one's heart for the ordinance of the Lord's Supper for instance. One does not have to be perfect, indeed one does not have to be good, to partake of the Lord's Supper. But he ought to be reverent and he ought to be penitent and he ought to be spiritually disposed. "Where wilt thou that we make ready" was no idle question. It had spiritual significance.

Jesus' instructions were somewhat vague—"into the city, unto such a man," (Mark tells us that he would not be bearing a pitcher of water). The way is not always clear. The end is not always in sight. But if we obey the truth we have, if we follow the light we see, we shall not walk in blind alleys. If we do as he says we shall find it is as he says.

One of the Twelve a Betrayer.

"One of you shall betray me." There was nobody but the Twelve there. Impossible! Certainly none of those who had companied with that man Jesus would betray Him! But this was not the last time that Christ has been betrayed by those who were supposed to be His friends. Indeed Christ suffers more at the hands of His friends than at the hands of His enemies. One must do more than simply keep in good company; one must respond to the highest and best.

Is It I?

It is a tribute to the disciples that in that tense moment each wondered if it could be he who would do this dastardly deed. John Newton used to say when he saw a drunken man: "There, but for the grace of God goes John Newton." And Emerson said: "I have never heard of a crime that I myself might not have committed." Let no man judge another. Let no man thinketh that he standeth, or he may fall. Let every man examine his own heart. And let every man consider himself lest he be tempted.

He That Dippeth His Hand With Me.

How courteous, how considerate Jesus was. Even though he knew who it was who should betray Him, he tried to keep it from the others. Christ always goes the limit, to save those that are bent on destruction. No man is ever lost until he refuses to be saved. Christ never gives up the attempt to save.

The New Feast—the Lord's Supper.

The Lord's Supper was symbolic of at least three things. It was a symbol of sacrifice. Bread—that represents sacrifice. The growing grain must give up its life if it is to become bread. The cup—the grapes must give up their life if they are to become "the cup." The scarlet thread of sacrifice runs through all of life. But in this Sacrament it finds an abiding significance and a beautiful symbolism.

Bread, the Cup—they represent food, nourishment, life itself. And as the body feeds upon the physical elements and gains strength and vigor, so does the soul gain strength and vigor as it feeds on Christ.

Bread and the cup, eating together—the idea of fellowship, of communion of interests. How petty do our differences seem when we remember that throughout the world millions of men and women just like us are observing this sacrament "in remembrance of Him." There are many members but there is but one body. We are all one in Christ Jesus.

Until I Drink It New With You.

He was not discouraged. He did not think His work or His influence had come to an end. The future belonged to Him and He knew it. He has made an engagement to drink it new with Him in the Father's Kingdom. Let us not be weary in well doing. Let us not be discouraged or cast down. There is significance in the fact that they sang a hymn as they went out.

WHEN DEFEAT IS VICTORY.

Victory in God's sight and victory in men's sight may be two different things. Strained situations arise in this life as suddenly as thunderclouds in summer, and only the grace of God can keep them from reaching the breaking point. At such a time the worldly man, by some clever, cutting remark, may apparently crush the Christian; and the Adversary will urge the Christian to try to outdo the other. But then it is that the man seeking "first the kingdom of God" will remember his Lord, and trust him, " who, when he was reviled, reviled not again." By saying nothing, or by a "soft answer," he can end the dispute, and the other man may think he has carried the day. And if the Christian feels a lingering sense of humiliation, what consolation is there for him? There is a great deal. Like Enoch, he has "this testimony, that he pleased God," which is infinitely better than pleasing himself; and he may rest upon Peter's inspired word: "But if, when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God." As a peacemaker he is "blessed," and his communion with God is unbroken.—Sunday School Times.

MONDAY.

"UNRIGHTEOUS RIGHTEOUSNESS."

"Be not righteous over much; neither make thyself over wise: why shouldest thou destroy thyself."—Eccl. 7:16.

To stress our own wisdom and righteousness, however much we might know, and however confident we may be, is egotism; and we all know what we think of one who thinks he is "it." His influence is lost.

Egotism breeds vanities. The author of Ecclesiastes had seen it all, in fact he had experienced it, and now he is writing of the remedies against it, and he is saying that the best remedy is mortification of self, patience in endeavor and self-assertion, and trust in God who giveth the increase, with whom all things are a failure.

Prayer—Our Father, suffer us not to be as the Pharisees who thought they were heard for their much speaking; but grant us the humble spirit of the publican who prayed, "Lord, have mercy upon me, a sinner." Forbid that we shall rest on the sinking sand of our own righteousness. Surely we cannot take our righteousness to Thee, but purify our souls and make us humble servants of Thine, seeking more of Thy grace and beauty of Thy character as each day goes by.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

"CORDS AND CARTROPES."

"Be not over much wicked, neither be thou foolish: .Why shouldest thou die before thy time?" —Eccl. 7:17.

This scripture seems to imply that one may sin to a moderate degree. Such an idea is out of keeping with the author's general outlook, it is out of harmony with God's revealed will, and contrary to the spirit and teachings of the Lord Jesus Christ.

However, the text is the expression of the reality that debauchery, or dissipation, depletes the energy and strength of the body, mind and spirit, and leads to an early death, if indulged long enough. Yea, these things are destructive to sane life, and therefore, death.

Apparently this text refers to the same thing that the prophet Isaiah writes about when he says "woe unto them that draw iniquity with cords of vanity and sin as it were with cartropes." (5:18.) Think of the tragedies of sin, and tyranny of evil, the bondage of wrong-doing, every act weaving another thread in the rope, and wrapping another rope about our lives, till liberty is lost, enslavement complete and a man is no longer master of his house. "Why will ye die?" Such are we when harnessed to sin.

Prayer—Thanks be to Thee, our Father, for the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ, for "redeeming our lives from destruction." We pray for that ceaseless undying power of the living Christ to blot out that ceaseless power of sin. We open our arms and our hearts to receive Thee. Make us Thy sons, and save us. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"LIFE AND DEATH."

"For the living know they shall die, but the dead know not anything, neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten."—Eccl. 9:5.

The writer is declaring the hope of life and the necessity of death, and that in life only have we any hope. Life offers every chance for achieving hope, but in death even reward can neither be sought nor bestowed.

Jeremiah was driven to despair because of the hopeless situation of the Jews because of their foolish and shameless impenitence, and he used an expression which seems to have been figurative but proverbial: "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved." The harvest (April-June it is said) and the later ingatherings of the summer fruit have passed and there is nothing. So may a life be. This is another way of saying what the text says.

Jesus gave expression to the same thing in his reply to the Pharisees who objected to His works of healing, saying, "I must work the works of Him that sent me, while it is day: The night cometh when no man can work. When I am in the world I am the light of the world."

Nothing He emphasized more than the importance of a "living hope" and the tragedy of a "dead hope." And, although this living hope is used in relation to the resurrection of Jesus Christ, it also embraces the idea of the hope of a living man. A dead man cannot think, cannot wish, cannot hope, neither can a man spiritually dead possess the Christian's living hope, and how true it is! The carnal mind is absorbed in carnal things, and to be carnal minded is "enmity against God" and "death."

It has been well said that "death and death alone is what we must consult about life. This body must die. It has no reality save between the cradle and the grave. Within it is I—my soul—and 'tis through it that I have expression in the world: 'tis by it my character is made. If I destroy it what shall I render to the Lord when life is behind and I face eternity? Surely, then the harvest will be past and there is nothing.

Prayer—O Lord our Father beget in us a lively hope through the Lord Jesus Christ Thy Son and our Saviour. Center our affections in Him so that at last no one shall lay any charge at our door. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

"KNOWING, LIVING AND LOVING."

"But the very hairs of your head are numbered."—Matt 10:30. Read 29-31.

Our Lord here speaks of the divine knowledge which embraces all existence; and our interpreters tell us that this illustration means that all that takes place is equally the act of God.

The spiritual allusion is, that knowledge is accompanied by a "living and loving interest in what is known." If the fall of a sparrow comes under God's notice, or the growing of the hair on the head is an act of His providence, He has a living and loving interest in the minutest detail of our existence. Likewise, the same truth applies to us. If we know God, we, too, will have a living and loving interest in Him and His work. We are interested in whom we know. We are interested in the things we know about. Strive to know God.

Prayer—Our Father, we know Thee but in part but we thank Thee that it enables us to know what the holiest mind has thought, how the purest heart has loved and what the most gracious wisdom has provided. O God, grant that we may follow on to know Thee in more fullness.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

"THE DAILY LIFT."

"For Jonah was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth!" —Matt. 12:40.

To be positive about an interpretation of this text is questionable. However, that Jesus is forecasting His own death, burial and resurrection is morally certain.

Three passages of scripture shed light on this. First, Matt. 16:21, "From that time forth began Jesus to shew unto His disciples, how that He must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day."

Luke 12:50; "But I have a baptism to be baptized with; and how am I straitened 'till it be accomplished."

John 12:31; "Now is this world to be judged: now the Prince of this world will be expelled. But I, when I am lifted up from the earth, will draw all men to myself." (Moffatt version.)

So we conclude that our Saviour's use of the experience of Jonah is a figure of His death, burial and resurrection, giving a concrete interpretation of the resurrection as a medium by which he passes to His wider activity, and a sign to which the apostle ever pointed as the proof of the Lord's Messiahship. Note, Mark 8:31, a reference among many similar ones of the Gospel writers.

Prayer—O Lord, our God, help us to die daily to sin and we pray Thee to lift us up daily from this death until we shall reach Thy throne, Thy presence and Thy happiness and joy forever throughout eternity.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

"THE NONSIGNIFICANCE OF STRAW."

"What is the straw to the wheat? saith Jehovah."—Jeremiah 23:23-32.

Wheat is not raised for the straw, but for the grain; yet in many a life the significance of the wheat is forgotten, and men exist for the straw.

The straw of life may count for a few years, as money and luxury and fame and power, but it does not count for eternity. The wheat of life is character, because it is the only thing we take with us into eternity.

It may be said that the value of any life may be judged by the value it sets upon wheat over straw. The wise, the prudent, the sensible, are those that keep the wheat always in view. The silly, the reckless, the abandoned, are those that hoard up the straw and throw away the wheat.

A time is coming when the straw and chaff will be burned in the unquenchable fire. How many barns will be empty in those days! Barns whose owners thought they were stored with endless abundance.

Prayer—God of all wealth, teach us the true riches. God of all the lasting abundance, may we abound in Thee.—Amen.

"UNRECOGNIZED PROFANITY."

"Swear not at all."—Matt. 5:33-37.

There is only one safeguard against profanity, and that is reverence. Some of the most profane utterances I have ever heard have contained no reference to the Deity. Some of the most profane books I have ever glanced into have been ostensibly religious. Profanity consists of a profane spirit, which may or may not manifest itself in profane words.

If to you the Lord God Almighty is the One Supreme Being in the universe, the center of your thought the goal of all your hopes, the aim of your affections and the foundation of your innermost life, there is no danger that any utterance of yours regarding Him will be profane, careless, irrever-

WHAT GOD LAID ON JESUS.

By John G. Truitt.

"The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all."—Isa. 53:6.

Let us see Jesus tonight as the world's burden-bearer. Let us see what God hath laid upon Him. Let us see what others have laid on Him. Let us ask ourselves the question: What will we lay upon Him? Looking at Him thus we shall see how infinitely good, and great He is. Perchance we shall come to appreciate what He meant when He said: "All power hath been given me both in heaven and on earth." He would need all power to carry the loads that have been laid upon Him!

"The Lord hath laid upon Him the iniquity of us all." A pattern of this was put into the ritual of Moses. "And when He hath made an end of reconciling the holy place, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar, He shall bring the live goat: and Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confess over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions in all their sins, putting them upon the head of the goat, and shall send him away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderness." Thus Israel went scot free. God had provided that faith, and obedience should furnish them salvation.

This business typified that which was to come in Christ Jesus. It was God making way for the redemption in Christ. A chosen people were being prepared to give God's chosen One to all the world for all time. It was the building up of the background for the appreciative understanding of the cross. Just as Aaron was confessing double-handed the sins of the people of Israel upon the head of the goat, just so were the sins of the whole world to be laid once and for all upon the "Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world."

Thus we read in the New Testament: "But Christ being come a high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building (the building which the writer had been speaking about by Moses made); neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by His own blood He entered in once to the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us." My friends, there is the heart of the Gospel message. There is what it is about. The words of the infinite God have said it, and it is everlastingly true. Let us continue to read: "For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of a heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh; how much more shall the blood of Christ, who throught the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?"

We believe that, my friends, and yet sometimes we cry out: How can God condemn to the cross Christ for our sins? How can He save us from our own sins through Christ? How else could He? It is the way of God,—the way of infinite sacrifice and infinite love. You remember when the children of Israel were crossing the wilderness that they were bitten by serpents. They were dying. By God Moses was commanded to make a brass serpent and put it upon a cross for the people to look upon with the assurance that everyone who looked upon it should be healed. Sounds fantastic, does it? Well, not too fast, my friends. Jesus remembered this story. You remember Nicodemus coming to Jesus by night, and the conversation they had there together? In the course of that conversation, when Nicodemus was like us asking how these things could be, Jesus said to him: "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life. For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." So you see it is from the conversation about the lifted serpent, and the lifted Son, that the best known verse in the New Testament was first uttered. Yes, "God hath laid upon Him the iniquities of us all."

II.

"And He bearing His cross went forth into a place called the place of a skull, which is called in Hebrew, Golgotha: where they crucified Him." "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me. This He said signifying what death He should die." "The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquities of us all," and the people of Palestine, along with the Roman representatives of the Gentile world, lay upon Him the cruel cross! How they mocked Him! What ugly sport they had spitting upon His bruised and smitten face! How they laid upon Him the lesh of Rome, and beat His burden-bearing back to a pulp! There was none to say, Nay! The world itself seemed helplessly to stand by and witness it well until He cried: "It is finished."

Whenever I feel somewhat faithless I read that story again. It sends me to my knees. It sends me to my pulpit. It sends me to the hearts and the homes of my parish. The cross, the cross of Jesus Christ. The world's cross carried by the world's Saviour. Jesus knew it. He looked forward to it. He would never have talked to Nicodemus about it, nor to His disciples about the death He was destined to die. He found His photograph in the formal sacrifices of the Old Testament. And about His Father's business He went. His Father's business of redeeming you and me,—of redeeming the wide world. Yes, yes, the people have laid the cross upon Jesus. They have made it hard for Him to bear. When we look at ourselves; when we look at the sins of the day, and age; when we see how people have let Him alone,—never even asking or answering the question of Pilate: What must I do with Jesus which is called Christ? We see that He is being crucified afresh.

III.

"Sir, I have no man when the water is troubled, to put me in the pool; but while I am coming another steppeth down before me." By reading that sentence to you I mean to say that the impotent, helpless world has laid many other burdens upon Jesus! Is not that just a picture of what so often happens today. We come to some place where we have no one to help us. There are conditions of the soul, or even of the surroundings in life where none can help but God.

For thirty-eight years this poor cripple had lain at the pool of five porches, the pool of Bethesda. Often the angel had made the water a healing fount by the flit of his wing. First in was healed. This poor fellow was never in all the thirty-eight years first in! What patience! The poor, sickened, helpless mass of humanity is fully pictured there! One of the most majestic portrayals in all the New Testament is that of the Christ walking down into that mass of broken, sickened, crippled beggars who waited there at that pool of Bethesda. I thank God for the Christ of that picture. The Christ who could take the burdens of that people upon Himself. "Jesus saith unto him, 'Rise, take up thy bed and walk.'" And

Christian Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

The Christian Orphanage had two children to graduate in Hight School on May 16th. A boy and a girl. Both have made good grades through High School. The girl, Beryl Duke, came to us from Suffolk, Va., and has been a member of our orphanage family since December 8, 1928. She and her two older sisters and younger brother all came to join our family on the same date. Louise, the oldest graduated in High School and a friend made it possible for her to take the secretarial course at Elon College and she graduated two years ago and now has a splendid position with the McEwin Knitting Mills, Burlington, N. C. The next oldest sister of this family graduated as salutatorian of her class in High School last year and a friend made it possible for her to take the business course at Elon College and she will graduate the last of May. Beryl was lucky as she was offered a good job on the day she graduated and left the Orphanage May the 18th to take up her work on May 20th. It is touching to see them go after being here a number of years. They win their way into one's heart and we learn to love them as our own.

And when the time comes to leave the home that has mothered them through their young and tender years and they look down and weep, we cannot help but shed a silent tear because we remember when we left the old home to make our own way alone.

Lynn Dorsett was the young man to graduate. Lynn has been a member of the orphanage since September 1, 1925. During all these years he has a record of never being punished a single time. He has lived as near perfect as any young man I have ever known. He has an ambition to go to college. If some friend who has money to invest certainly could find no finer young boy to assist in college than this young boy.

the cripple arose rejoicing and went his way healed, helped, and filled with a new hope.

Exactly! That is just what Jesus is asking you to do. Lay your burdens upon Him. "Come unto me all you that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Come all ye that battle with your burdens, that toil with your tasks, that take up and cannot let down. You have been loaded long enough. Lay your burden upon me and I will rest you as we walk along the way together! Have you learned that secret. Then thank God with all your soul!

ent. As you speak of Him, your soul will be on bended knees.

But it is very easy to be profane, and not know it. Pride leads to profanity. Worldliness is essentially profane. Selfishness is at the very heart of profanity. Lies are irreverent. Hatred is perhaps the worst form of swearing. As covetousness is idolatry, so whatever deposes God from His supremacy in our lives is profanity.

Prayer—Be Thou, O God, our All-in-all! May we allow no evil passion to draw us from Thy throne.—Amen.

A SIGNIFICANT MEETING IN RIVERSIDE CHURCH, NEW YORK.

The most significant meeting held in the United States for a year past was held in the Riverside church, New York, on the night before the American fleet sailed for its war maneuvers in the north Pacific. More than two hundred ministers and rabbis, together with a congregation of about 800 laymen, gathered to renew and to make explicit the solemn consecration of their lives to peace. Marching in a processional before which were borne, perhaps for the first time in a common religious ceremony, the three symbols of the tablets of the law, the star of David and the cross of Christ, these Jewish and Protestant ministers passed into a deeply moving service which reached its climax in the common swearing of this Covenant of Peace:

"In loyalty to God I believe that the way of true religion cannot be reconciled with the way of war. In loyalty to my country I support its adoption of the Kellogg-Briand pact which renounces war. In the spirit of true patriotism and with deep personal conviction, I therefore renounce war and never will I support another."

It has been frequently charged that under stress the pacifism which the churches have manifested in recent year of disillusion would quickly evaporate, and that the ministry would revert to the same sort of war propaganda which it spread twenty years ago. The final test of that belief has not yet come. But it is plain that, as the government's drift toward militarism continues to grow stronger, it is having the effect of consolidating and stiffening the allegiance of the ministry to peace. Gentlemen at Washington will be well advised to take careful heed of what happened at the Riverside Church. It is no light matter when such a group takes such a pledge "in loyalty to God."—The Christian Century.

We kneel, and all around us seems to lower;
We rise, and all, the distant and the near,
Stands forth in sunny outline brave and clear;
We kneel, how weak; we rise, how full of power!

Why, therefore, should we do ourselves this wrong,
Or others, that we are not always strong,
That we are overborne with care,
That we should ever weak or heartless be,
Anxious or troubled, when with us is prayer,
And joy and strength and courage are with Thee!

May 28. Before a task. Luke 6:12-16.
May 29. Thanks before eating. John 6:11.
May 30. For Peter. Luke 22:32.
May 31. In the garden. Luke 22:41-46.
June 1. For His disciples. John 17:1-26.

If you can secure a copy of the book "The Place of Prayer in the Christian Religion" by James M. Campbell you will have valuable material and help for this meeting. The following topics taken from the book can be interestingly developed by your members in short talks.

Jesus met every crisis in His life with prayer.

1. Jesus began His public Ministry with prayer.
2. Jesus prayed before the choosing of the 12.
3. He prayed for strength to overcome the subtle dangers of success.
4. Jesus prayed before giving to His disciples the full disclosure of the nature of His Messiahship.
5. Jesus was transfigured in prayer.
6. Jesus prayed in Gethsemane as He entered His final passion.
7. Jesus prayed on the cross.

We must remember that Jesus was tempted, but that He spent hours and even nights talking with His Heavenly Father who did not take away the temptation but who gave Jesus strength to overcome them. E. L. F.

The Foundation and the other Foundations that are affiliated with Vanderbilt University School of Religion comprise the only Interdenominational Theological School in the South. Through this affiliation the students enjoy the rights and privileges of Vanderbilt University.

DEGREES.

Candidates for degrees are required to have completed their college courses.

The degree of Bachelor of Divinity is offered to qualified students who complete the required courses.

Vanderbilt University also offers the degrees of Master of Arts and Doctor of Philosophy, in accordance with the regulations established in its several departments.

MORE THAN A SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY.

Because of our affiliation with Vanderbilt, our relations with other nearby colleges where our students can take courses without tuition, and the cooperation of the American Red Cross and other social agencies in the city, we prepare students for many types of Christian service.

OBITUARIES

BRANCH.

James Ivey Brauch was boru at Table Rock, N. C., January 30, 1858, and died at his home in Auburn, N. C., April 3, 1935, making him 77 years, 2 months and 4 days old at the time of his death.

He professed faith in God when a young man and joined Auburn Christian Church where he was made a deacon. Later he moved his membership to Mt. Hermon Christian Church. He loved the Sunday School and was a faithful worker, not only in that department but in all church affairs, living a most consecrated life.

Brother Branch leaves to mourn their loss a devoted wife, two sons, Marvin Branch of Raleigh, N. C., and Edward Branch of Auburn, two daughters Lucy and Nancy Branch of Auburn.

The funeral service was conducted at Mt. Hermon Christian Church by his pastor, assisted by Rev. Mr. Andrews of the Baptist Church and Rev. Bro. Hilliard of the Christian Church. Interment was in the church cemetery.

May the blessings of God rest and abide with the loved ones.

J. S. CARDEN.

MARRIAGES

HARRIS—GOODRICH.

A quiet, but beautiful marriage was solemnized at the home of the writer when he united in marriage Mr. William Elwood Goodrich of Wakefield, Va., and Miss Doris Aleathea Harris of Waverly, Va., on Wednesday, April 17th, at 6 P. M., using the ring ceremony of the Christian Church.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Harris of Waverly, Va., and was becomingly attired in a blue ensemble with accessories to harmouize.

The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Goodrich of Wakefield, Va.

Immediately after the ceremony the bride and groom left for a motor trip through the Valley of Virginia and to northern points of interest, after which they will be at home to their numerous friends in Waverly, Va.

If You Like Waffles.—

There is a new waffle iron on the market, electric of course, which automatically shuts off the current and lights a red light in the cover when the waffle is done. When the cover is raised a lifting attachment lifts the waffle off the grid. Luckily for the lovers of waffles, it has not been perfected to the point of eating them as yet.

Speed and Science.—

There is now under construction at Langley Field a "wind tunnel" capable of blowing 500 miles an hour, or more than eight miles a minute. The reason for this tunnel is, of course, experimentation in the production of airplanes. It seems incredible that any plane can ever be built that will withstand such speed. Certainly such velocity would make a man-sized hurricane seem a gentle breeze, and it would tear the wings from the planes of the past. Yet it is in this tunnel that the airplane wings of the future are to be tested.

Anent Public Utilities.—

Says Business Week: "The plan for a death sentence for utility holding companies at the end of 5 years will be modified by giving the Securities Commission discretion to extend the years of grace to 7. The significance of this change goes beyond the utility field. The argument that the whole scheme should be allowed to run into the Administration which will be electd in 1940 seemed effective." And it adds that this is "a curious hint that some New Deal legislators have lost their cocksureness that every New Deal proposal has divine inspiration." Since this was written before the Supreme Court action on the validity of the NRA, it is even more significant.

Protest Against Lee Statue.—

A resolution condemning the erection of a statue to General Robert E. Lee in Arlington, and denouncing the Commander of the Southern Armies as a "traitor" was placed in the Congressional Record last week. Senator David I. Walsh of Massachusetts had it placed in the record without comment. It was attributed to a Woman's Auxiliary of the Grand Army of the Republic, but has been "alternately disclaimed, denounced, repudiated, regretted and ridiculed." The proposal to erect this statue and which caused this now unclaimed resolution, is sponsored by Representative Hamilton Fish, Jr., of New York, who calls attention to the fact that such a memorial was first suggested by Charles Francis Adams, II, a Union officer, and the son of President Lincoln's Wartime Minister to England.

War in the Air.—

While the question of a war on the Pacific is being alternately predicted, repudiated and decried, there comes news that there may be a war in the air over the Eastern Atlantic if things continue as at present. Germany has already completed 10,000 bombing planes capable of high speed and long range, which are considered by the British as a menace to their safety and happiness. It is estimated that defense against such an air force will cost approximately $500,000,000 a year. The New York Times points out that as a result of Germany's swift progress in the development of such a formidable air force, Great Britain will be compelled to recast entirely her program of air-armament. It is more probable that an emergency program will be adopted for as many planes as possible during the coming year.

Independence Plan Approved by Filipinos.—

On May 14th, the "ten-year independence plan" was overwhelmingly adopted in a Constitutional plebiscite held in the Philippine Islands. More than a million ballots were marked and incomplete returns on the day following showed that 438,847 votes had been cast for the Constitution, while only 11,089 were reported against it. For the first time, women exercised the right to vote, and in some districts cast more ballots than did the men The first election under the Constitution will be held on September 30th, when the President and Vice President of the new ten-year Commonwealth will be elected for a period of six years. At the present time there seems to be no other candidate in the field than Manuel Quezon, President of the Philippine Senate, though there is yet time for an opposition to develop. Complete independence will come to the Philippines under certain conditions at the close of the ten-year period.

Decision Wipes Out Codes.—

Much has been in the newspapers for the past two weeks regarding the extension of the life of the National Industrial Recovery Administration. All of this became ancient history in the instant that the Supreme Court handed down its decision holding Section 3 of the Industrial Recovery Act invalid. The Court held that the authority delegated to the President by Congress had not been sufficiently limited or defined. It also ruled that "where transactions have merely an indirect effect on interstate commerce, the control rests with the states." The case upon which the Court ruled had been selected by New Deal Authorities to test their powers in regulating wages and hours of work through the more than 500 NRA "codes of fair competition." This case was selected as the most likely of several to receive the approval of the Court, and the result virtually wipes out the entire system of codes. There is likely to result much confusion and there will probably be attempts on the part of some concerns to gain undue advantage over competitors and employees as well, but there can be little doubt that the decision will have a wholesome effect upon business and tend to hasten real recovery.

"Pretty Raw."—

Under this caption, the May 25th issue of Business Week presents the Wagner Labor Disputes Bill as "an amazing thing." Its summary of the bill's provisions is interesting and instructive, and according to its own statement are "stated so impartially that the American Federation of Labor cannot point to a single misinterpretation." Here it is: "A new National Labor Relations Board is created, superseding the present board, which is in the NRA. The new board will be an independent agency, like the Federal Trade Commission and the Interstate Commerce Commission, and therefore will not be subject to the orders of the President. Representatives chosen by the majority of the employees in a unit appropriate for such purposes shall be the exclusive representative for the purposes of collective bargaining. Thus a non-union minority will be unable to bargain in its own behalf. And the board shall decide in each case whether the unit, shall be the employer unit, craft unit, plant unit, or other unit. The board therefore could compel an election in the entire automobile industry, for example, and if the American Federation of Labor won a majority, it would be the exclusive agency for bargaining with all the automobile companies at a single time. Employers are prohibited from interfering with their employees' rights of forming unions and bargaining collectively; from dominating, or interfering with, any labor organization, or contributing financial or other support to it; and from discriminating in any way against union members. But—employers are allowed to discriminate against non-union members by signing a closed-shop agreement with a union. And there is no provision forbidding regular labor unions to interfere with company unions or coerce the employees. If employers violate any of the above prohibitions, the board may order them to cease and desist; and if this order is disobeyed, the board may petition the Federal Courts to enforce the order, by injunction or otherwise. But labor unions get a free hand. For nothing in this act shall be construed so as to interfere with or impede or diminish in any way the right to strike. Well, there is it—a bill to facilitate the forming of unions in every line of business, and to threaten great and nationwide strikes. Which will surely come about. For employers will not submit to complete unionization. They will resist. If this bill becomes law, the United States will witness such vast and costly strikes as never yet have marred its history."

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Valley of Virginia Central Conference will be held on June 6th and 7th, at the Antioch Christian Church, near Harrisonburg, Va.

The Elon College Commencement for 1935 is now history. It was one of the greatest commencements that your managing editor has ever attended. We hope to have a complete account to present our readers next week.

One of the good things about College Commencements is the opportunity of former students to renew old acquaintances and form new ones with alumni who were in college at different times. This Commencement at Elon was a record breaker for such meetings.

In the death of Mr. P. J. Carlton of Richmond, on the afternoon of Thursday, May 23rd, not only his local church, but the entire denomination suffered an incalculable loss. Mr. Carlton lived and died a friend to man. We can give him no higher tribute.

It will be gratifying to his many friends to know that Rev. J. Everett Neese, licentiate of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, student in Elon College and pastor of two nearby churches, was the successful winner in the Smith Oratorical contest in the literary societies at Elon College, Friday, May 24th. Congratulations.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference is to be held at the Bethel Christian Church, on Route 62, 18 miles north of Burlington, N. C., on Thursday and Friday, June 20th-21st. Rev. J. F. Apple is pastor of the convention church and Mr. W. B. Truitt, is president. The secretary, Rev. W. T. Scott, has promised the program for next week's issue of THE SUN.

Rev. J. L. Neese, pastor of our Reidsville Church, finds it necessary to enlarge the Sunday School building, there being present on a recent Sunday 417 in Sunday School. The cost of the new addition is about $4,000, which Pastor Neese and his people propose to pay for as they go. Appeal is being made both to the members and friends of the church in Reidsville and elsewhere. The congregation has greatly increased and the work goes forward rapidly under the consecrated leadership of the present pastor.

Among the welcome visitors to the editor's home the past week were Rev. and Mrs. R. T. Grisom and Miss Victoria Edwards of Fancy Gap, Va. Their stay was short but exceedingly pleasant. These workers and friends of ours in the hills of Carroll County are very anxious that more of our people from nearby churches and Sunday Schools visit their churches and schools—Elk Spur and Rocky Ford—especially during the Summer months when the mountains are so gloriously arrayed. If the huge and glorious cluster of exquisite and fragrant Rhododendrons and azalea, brought by these friend's to the editor's home, are any evidence, it must be worth a trip for any one to see such marvels of nature as these hills now have to offer.

Under date of May 28th, Rev. J. L. Neese, Reidsville, writes: "We are in the midst of a great meeting here in Reidsville, with Rev. J. F. Morgan assisting the services." Brother Neese realizes more than ever the need of an enlarged building. He says: "We have had 69 additions to the church since we came here. In our Wednesday evening prayer-meetings we have from 150 to 175 present and our Sunday School has reached 417." Surely, Pastor Neese and our good people of Reidsville will be helped by those who can help in the enlarged building program which is to cost about $4,000. The desire of the church is to pay as it goes and any SUN reader that can send a donation may rest assured it will be used to great advantage in this good cause.

DR. D. M. HELFENSTEIN CELEBRATES ANNIVERSARIES.

Dr. D. M. Helfenstein, pastor of the First Christian Church of Lewisburg, Pa., has celebrated a round of anniversaries this Spring, all in the month of April.

On April 14th, he was eigthy-three years old. On April 18th, he and his noble companion celebrated their fifty-eighth wedding anniversary. On April 25th, he celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of his entering the Christian ministry. And the last Sunday in April he celebrated the tenth anniversary of the call to become the pastor of The First Christian Church of Lewisburg, Pa.

Dr. Helfenstein is the oldest active pastor in the Middle Atlantic Conference of Congregational and Christian Churches. In recognition of this fact, the recent session of the conference sent him a letter of greetings and congratulations, as a minor operation on one of his feet made it impossible for him to be away from home at the time.

This veteran of the cross preaches twice every Sunday to appreciative and growing audiences, is enthusiastic in promoting the work of his Sunday School which has more than doubled in enrollment during the ten years he has served the church, takes an active interest in all community movements, and assumes his share of responsibility in all inter-church programs. The membership of his church has increased fifty per cent during his ten years of service. No pastor could have a more loyal and appreciative membership than that of the Lewisburg church. As senior pastor in this college community, Dr. Helfenstein is called upon to officiate at more funerals among the non-churched people of the city than any of the other pastors.

He received his B. A. and M. A. degrees from Parsons College of Fairfield, Iowa, and his B. Th. and D. D. degrees from McCormick Theological Seminary of Chicago, Ill.

His brother, Dr. S. Q. Helfenstein of Dayton, Ohio, three years his senior, who this year celebrates the sixty-third anniversary of his entrance into the Christian ministry, was present to participate in the anniversary celebrations of the younger brother. Both were active leaders in the former Christian denomination from the time of their early ministry. These two veteran ministers of the Gospel come from a family that holds a unique record in the number of sons it has given to the Christian ministry since the days of Martin Luther, one family of the Helfensteins of which the father was a minister and all four of his sons were distinguished ministers in the Reformed Church in this country. Another minister of the family had three sons who all entered the ministry. Bishop Helfenstein of the Episcopal Church of Maryland is a direct descendant of the latter family.

The Lewisburg Church is anxious for Dr. Helfenstein to continue his pastoral relations, but he feels that a younger man should serve the church and that he is entitled to the novelty of retirement.

For fifty years, Dr. Helfenstein was a minister in Iowa, ten years of that time also serving as president of the Christian Church College of that state, and active in conferences and convention work of the denomination in the different sections of the country.

Because of his wide acquaintance and many contacts, many congratulations and felicitations have been pouring into his study through the mail the past weeks.

BRO. P. J. CARLTON PASSES.

On Thursday, May 23rd, Mr. P. J. Carlton, of Richmond, Va., passed from his earthly labors to his eternal reward. He had been confined to his home by illness for only a few weeks, but had been in declining health for more than two years. The funeral was held at his home in Richmond and his body laid to rest in Hollywood cemetery beneath a most beautiful profusion of flowers.

The family tomb bears a most unusual inscription, "Rest, Resurrection, Reunion." This inscription is expressive of the life, faith and hope of this good man.

The writer would not attempt to eulogize his life or to say what the loss to the local church and the denomination is, for he is conscious that words either spoken or written can in no way portray his virtues and benefactions. In fact it is doubtful if anyone or any few people know the amount of service he has rendered to humanity through Christian enterprises. But as his pastor, I know him as a man of profound faith in Christ, an ardent lover of humanity, a most generous heart and an unpretentious spirit.

Let those of us who are left behind thank God for such a man as Mr. Carlton and pray that He will send another or others into our midst with characteristics like his, in order that the kingdom of Christ might continue to be enlarged in our fellowship.

JOSEPH E. MCCAULEY, Pastor.

WORKING WITH YOUNG PEOPLE.

We are not surprised at the number of invitations that Rev. A. R. Flowers receives from ministers and church workers in his old home state, and in other states, to help them on in building greater Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies and other religious work. This and many other sections of South Carolina have been greatly encouraged and strengthened by his earnest efforts during the last five months. His visits to South Carolina at various times in the past have meant much indeed. It is to be regretted that we haven't more of these whole-hearted workers among the young people of this age.

The outlook of most people on life is fairly well fixed in their early years. It has been said many times that "the richest blessings of life are nearer on our fingertips than we sometimes imagine." And this is certainly true where thought of in connection with our early years in our homes and community. Too many young people fail to get, early in life, an idea of what real service brings. They have not had the personal influence of those who have been fruitful in making clear the spiritual view of life's work in contrast with the attractive materialistic standards of the world. One of the great needs of our rural districts, in this section of South Carolina, is a better program of religious training; one which will really advance the spiritual development of our young people and strengthen their love and loyalty to the church.

MISS COLEY HICKS.

Turbeville, S. C.

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS FOR MORAL EDUCATION.

By Roy C. Helfenstein, M. A., B. D.
Minister, People's Church, Dover Del.

Many leaders in Public School work believe that moral education is the greatest need of our day, but that it is the most neglected item in the long list of public school responsibilities.

Moral education is the very foundation of character, and nobility of character is the objective of all true education. Character is what a person really is. Its development depends upon what a person really wants to be. Hence, the importance of moral education to give the information and incentive essential to character development. Character is the composite of interests with which the individual is identified. The measure of character is the type of things in which one is interested. "Character is the capacity to identify oneself with causes and principles, the capacity to appreciate worthwhile things and to embrace them in thought and performance." Character is the capacity of an individual to seek the good and reject the bad, to support the right and oppose the wrong whenever and wherever found. The strength of character is indicated by the ideals one cherishes and by the degree of attainment already experienced in realizing those ideals. Character constitutes the dependableness of an individual, and determines in advance what his reaction will be to any moral situation. It is that factor in life by which a person is known and believed, regardless of false reports and maligning attacks.

The ancient sage Confucius declared that, "The foundation of all good is the virtue of individual men." How true these words are. The strength of a nation, the strength of human society rests back in the moral strength of individual boys and girls and individual men and women. The only good to be found anywhere is the goodness of the individual as expressed in his personal life and in his social relationships.

These facts make the need of moral education imperative. Moral education seeks to help the boys and girls to become men and women who will know right from wrong, and who shall be committed to the right,—men and women who shall have both personal regard and social concern, determined to live "the good life" and anxious to serve their day and generation to the limit of their ability and to the extent of their opportunity. Moral education seeks to give meaning to, and interpret all other education in terms of the highest life values, to create a moral consciousness on the part of the individual and the group in the use of all knowledge, and to assist the child in becoming "a self-directing, self-respecting, self-supporting, self-sacrificing member of society."

Originally the home was responsible for the entire program of education of childhood and youth. Little by little the state has assumed this responsibility. And moral education is the last part of the child's training for which the state is responsible and which the state should assume. It is naturally understood that the more cooperation the school receives from the home in every phase of the child's education, the greater will the school succeed in its task.

Only within recent years have the public schools begun seriously to consider their responsibility in giving moral training to the boys and girls. But it is encouraging to note that many of the leading educators of this day are advocating that the public schools not only should but that they must include moral education as their major responsibility. Moreover, the public is demanding with increasing urgency that the public schools shall accept their responsibility for the moral development of the nation's future citizens. We have tried for more than a century to safeguard the interests of society and insure personal and social security by delegating to the home and the church the responsibility for moral education. The mocking failure of such a plan, as evidenced by our juvenile courts and penal institutions, crowded beyond capacity, is the greatest challenge for society in self-defense to provide that hereafter the public schools shall accept the responsibility for giving moral education to every child. What right has the state to demand by its laws certain standards of conduct from its members unless it is willing to assume through its public schools the responsibility for giving childhood and youth that moral training which will prepare them to meet those standards by choice instead of by compulsion? Society today is insisting that the public schools shall produce moral character in its boys and girls. The slogan of the schools in recent years,—"Training for Citizenship" is not enough. However, that objective pre-supposes a certain emphasis on moral education. But "Training for Manhood and Womanhood of sterling character" is a larger challenge, and that is the real responsibility of the public schools. Moral education by the public schools is absolutely essential to the larger realization of both these objectives.

The fact that childhood and youth and adults have more leisure time than was experienced by any previous epoch of human history increases the peril to society if the rising generation is not fortified with those qualities of character that shall insure the proper use of leisure time.

It is the ambition of all worthy parents that their children shall have a better opportunity in life than they themselves enjoyed, and to that end that their children shall have a better education than they were privileged to receive. This ambition of parents is both the secret and the dynamic of all progress in education just as it is in every other realm of human endeavor. All worthy parents are more concerned about their children's "Character Quotient" than about their children's "Intelligence Quotient," as important as the latter is. Worthy parents are anxious that their children shall have character which will insure the proper use of the power knowledge gives, for knowledge is power either for the good or for the evil, according to the character of the one who possesses it. Intelligence plus goodness of life should be the goal of every individual. Such lives constitute the only hope of society. Such lives are the ideals cherished by all worthy parents for their children. That is the ideal we should cherish for all childhood and youth of our day,—"intelligence plus goodness of life."

Each year our schools celebrate the birthday anniversary of Abraham Lincoln whose life and service constitute perhaps the greatest benediction upon American history that our nation has ever received from one of its sons. He was known as "Honest Abe" because from boyhood until the hour of his tragic death, he practiced the principle of honesty without deviation and without compromise in all his relationships of life. Other men of Lincoln's day had received greater learning than he did, but none worked harder to gain knowledge, and none sought knowledge with worthier motives than did he.

It was because Abraham Lincoln made Character his first concern that the nation gave him first place in its leadership, and that down through the years the world has accorded to him the first place in greatness among the leaders of the 19th century.

I have a picture of Lincoln hanging in front of my desk with these words from the pen of that great American, the which explain the secret of Abraham Lincoln's greatness:

"I am not bound to win, but I am bound to be true. I am not bound to succeed, but I am bound to live up to what light I have. I must stand with anybody that stands right; stand with him while he is right and part with him when he is wrong."

Society needs men and women with that kind of character today! The only power that can preserve America as a nation is men and women in the common walks of life as well as in places of public leadership, who put moral honor above everything else. Nothing else really matters apart from that. Moral character is the only security humanity has. It alone can secure the welfare of the individual, the home, the school, business, industry, government, and inter-national relationships.

For the public school to meet its responsibility in moral education, it will have to revamp its entire program and "put first things first," placing the moral development of the child as its first concern instead of secondary as has been done in the past. It will need to place moral education or moral guidance as a special department in its set-up, and deal with the subject specifically and in a direct manner, as well as by the indirect method, instead of only by the "indirect method," as has been done in the past. Special courses on "The Conduct of Life" will need to be developed, dealing with the moral problems and the life problems of each age group. Each school will in fact then become "A Child Guidance Clinic," and seek to do for every child what the "Child Guidance Clinics" in some of our larger cities are doing for the mal-adjusted or problem children. The fact is that every public school has its full quota of mal-adjusted or problem pupils. Since these children come to our public schools unlabelled, and mingle indiscriminately with the other children it is imperative that the whole school be in fact "A Child Guidance Clinic." Children who are extremely unstable, impulsive, queer, dishonest, inclined to cheat and steal, lazy, selfish and quarrelsome, are classified as "Problem Children." And so they are. But the fact that every child has traces of some of these or of all of these traits of disposition makes in truth every child a problem if not "a problem child."

Moreover, for the public school to meet its responsibility in moral education, it must not only revamp its program and curriculum so as to place its major emphasis upon the moral development of the boys and girls, it will need also to change its tendency toward mass production in education and place the individual child at the center of its consideration. The old saying that "Some people cannot see the trees for the forest" is, alas, too true with many teachers who fail to see the individual boys and girls for the school. Moral education requires that the individual pupil is the chief equation in the school room, that the individual pupil must not be lost in the crowd, but that he shall be found by the teacher, and that the teacher by personal attention and careful study shall help the pupil to find himself or herself. Each school should, therefore, in reality, become a community home instead of an institution. Every class room should become a laboratory on life situations that in an environment of common interest and mutual helpfulness each child shall be given "opportunities to know the right, to admire the right to choose the right and to act the right."

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

DEAD YET SPEAKING.

The writer of Hebrews was thinking of Abel and his offering unto God as he penned the above line. His words were: "By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts: and be it he being dead yet speaketh." The writer of these lines is speaking of Brother Pleasant J. Carlton, who died at his home in Richmond, Thursday afternoon, May 23rd. God testifies of the latter gifts also: "And by this sacrifice he being dead yet speaketh." The God of this man permitted him to receive, and persuaded him by many signs and tokens that it was more blessed to give even than to receive. On this account he obtained a good report through faith, and in that report he lives and speaks to this and to future generations.

It is difficult for us of mortal vision to see clearly the immortal and the invisible. This we know, however, even as a physical fact, that as the sun sets in one country it is even then rising in another. Darkness and night, therefore, do not indicate that the sun has set, but that it has only slipped beyond our mortal vision for a brief period. Thus the pink and the purple of our horizon meet and mingle with the golden glow and the azure tints, and the glad dawn, of those who are beyond us. And even we shall see in a brief time the breaking dawn and the golden glow of the rising sun. It was on this account that the inspired writer of Hebrews could so graphically pen for us the declaration of God's testimony that the good man still speaks and lives even though beyond the ken of our finite grasp.

The magnificent vaulted, fire-proof Carlton Library on the campus of Elon College, our beautiful and splendid Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., First Christian Church, Richmond, Va., and United Church, Raleigh, N. C., and scores of other immortal shrines are God's testimony of this man's gifts, "and by these he being dead yet speaketh," and will speak to generations yet unborn.

What a story, indeed, this life, this brief life of only fifty years, tells us. First and foremost of all he was a gentle-man. In his presence one realized the spirit of gentility; utmost courtesy and kindness, with grace and graciousness of speech and attitude, marked him in conversation and in conduct. His was a marked modesty and yet a simple and natural dignity that evoked and demanded respect and esteem. And then this gentle-manness was seasoned and sustained by the Spirit of Him Who said: "As ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even also unto them." His was the courage and the Christianity of adventure and daring—adventuring through faith and at all times daring to do right. The romance of righteousness found a large place in the life and soul of this Christian gentleman.

We, of the Board of Trustees of Elon College, will miss his delightful fellowship and his keen penetrating wisdom, and his broad and splendid vision in questions of administration and execution. However, his safe counsel and delightful comradeship will never be forgotten. He loved his church and all of its interests and enterprises with a passionate fondness and devotion beautiful to contemplate. He served his day and generation well, and the world is richer for his coming and his legion of friends lament his going.

Profound sympathy is expressed to the bereaved wife, the two brothers, Herbert A. Carlton, of Raleigh, and Luther J. Carlton, of Halifax County, Va., and one sister, Mrs. Nannie C. Parrott, of Newnan, Ga. J. O. A.

THE CHRISTIAN CHALLENGE.

By BISHOP JAMES E. FREEMAN.

Reverence for sacred things, such as the sanctity of Sunday, insistence upon purity of life, the indissolubility of marital obligations and the finest things of domestic life, honor and decency in social and industrial relations—these today are being challenged. Take as an example the growing and widespread disregard for the observance of Sunday. Have we reached the stage where we are to make this day a Roman holiday, abandoned to any practice or device that the human will desires?

If reverence for Sunday goes, the Church as an institution, goes with it. If the clergy and professed Christian people impair the reverent practices of this day, they undermine the footings of the Christian faith itself. All the cheap substitutes we set up to appeal to the capricious wills of the people, especially the youth, will little avail us when once we have made Sunday a holiday rather than a holy day.

I press the claim for a Sunday habit and practice that is just, consistent and reasonable. I deplore the loss of reverence that characterizes the present trend of society in making the day one of excessive social indulgence. I make no appeal for a so-called "blue Sunday." I do not affirm that this day and its hallowed usages is vitally related to our physical, cultural and moral well-being, and that once it is secularized or abandoned we shall lose out of our life its most stabilizing and sustaining support.

I instance the concerns of the home and marital fidelity as transcending all other matters that challenge our attention today. No matter what else we may do to stabilize our economic institutions, we shall ultimately fail of our coveted aims and purposes, if the sanctity of marriage and the security of the home is imperilled. Loyalty to Christ begins at the hearthstone of the home. Let there be indifference to purity, decency and ordered discipline here, and the Church and all our other stable institutions will suffer.

America has the unenviable distinction of leading the world in its divorces and shattered home life. What stability can the state, society and industry have, when the central institution and the most indispensable, the home, is made the sport of those who for lust or incompatibility or less consequential causes, ruthlessly destroy its very being and abandon to their own devices its most sacred treasures, its children? Modern society regards looseness and license as they concern fidelity to marital obligations, as of such slight importance that they may be practiced with impunity. The libertine was once spurned by wholesome social circles; today his multiplied liasons give him an enviable distinction. This is particularly true in what are called the exclusive and upper circles of society. Were it not for the wholesomeness of the less conspicuous and less favored, we should have a state of moral laxity and indecency comparable to that of Roman civilization in the days of its decline and decay. The exploits of these destroyers of the fine things of the home and of the cleanest and best in social usage are made the choice and favored bits of news in the social columns of the daily press. When we are startled by wars and rumors of wars, of threatening misfortunes that may destroy the quiet and security of our cherished institutions, let us be admonished by an ancient if forgotten word that has deep significance: "From whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members?"

It is not a question of party allegiance that is called for today; it is a question of allegiance to those eternal verities; honesty, purity, decency, sobriety and the most indispensable and wholesome things of life, that challenge the true patriot and disciple of the lowly Nazarene. God has repeatedly saved society and the state from corruption and ruin by minorities. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit"; this has been the watchword and assurance of small groups of heroic men and women who have dared to stand against fearful odds and for that which they believed to be right.

A lonely Saviour, despised and rejected of men, has overspread the world with His mighty Gospel. What is lacking today in our Christian household is His courageous spirit. We reverently bow before His cross, but the sacrifice it implies we cautiously and lightly assume. We come to His table and receive the gifts it imparts, but we fail to espouse His cause when it affects our convenience or lays upon our personal interests a heavy or costly toll. We maintain a discreet silence in the presence of wrongs and injustices, and forget that He drove with knotted whipcords from the sanctuary, those who made a pretence of religion. We pay homage and deference to the favored and the privileged, waiting for the crumbs that fall from their ladened tables, rather than rebuke them for practices that bring shame and distress to multitudes of helpless and defenseless men, women and little children. Better that we suffered and starved for awhile, nourished only by His Spirit, than that we betrayed His cause and by our apathy and indifference hindered the progress of His Kingdom. It may be that the time is at hand when men who believe in Christ's teachings may have to exhibit courage, yes, and suffer humiliation, dishonor and pain, that His cause may prevail.—In Southern Churchman.

THE NEED FOR THE SMALL CHRISTIAN COLLEGE.

By Russell A. Campbell.

[Delivered before the Alumni Association of Elon College on Alumni Day, May 28, 1935, this address presents a most timely discussion of the need for the small Christian College. At this time when Elon is facing one of the greatest crises of her existence, members of the Congregational-Christian constituency should rally to her support as never before. Sacrifice made now will return blessings multiplied many-fold. Elon's welfare is vital to the continued welfare of our denomination, just as Mr. Campbell has pointed out that such colleges are essential to the well-being of our nation.—J. T. K.]

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen:

I wonder if I may be permitted to use as a salutation this morning a quotation I happen to recall from my Commencement oration at this institution one June some twenty-four years ago. "Freshmen may come and graduates may go; new buildings may fill our campus and surrounding lots; these old walls, hallowed by so many sacred memories may no longer ring with the echoes of happy voices and her battlements may crumble into dust, but over all these shall wave the billowy folds of maroon and gold, inscribed upon them in letters of rarest hue, 'Numen lumen," Light Divine, the symbol of all that is good and true among college men and women."

On that morning those words were but a valedictory to my fellow schoolmates. This morning they read in the light of prophecy. Little did we dream in so few years certain of her walls would crumble into dust.

I am not familiar with the detailed happenings following that tragic night in January 18, 1923, but the dawn of that next day must have revealed a sad sight—the administration building was in ruins and with it the hopes and apparent future of Elon College. But there were heroes in those days, sturdy souls, loyal hearts, and willing hands. "Where there is no vision, the people perish," we are told, and evidently Elon College resolved not to perish.

Out of that blackened night and from those blackened ruins has arisen a marvelous transformation in the physical plant of the College, and undoubtedly a greater Elon—worthy of the hopes, aspirations, and support of her every friend, both here and elsewhere.

And what a genuine delight it is to gather at this re-born Elon, to mingle again with the friends of yesteryear. For those whose privilege it is to return but seldom, what pride and satisfaction to find her under capable guidance, keeping the pace despite the insurmountable challenges of our present day.

Hitherto hath the Lord led us we may say, but now maybe it is time we exert a little more effort ourselves and see if we can't travel under our own power for a while, bearing in mind that, in all ages, blessings seem to come more abundantly upon those who exert themselves a bit to secure them.

Circumstances which we did not decree and over which we had no control have aided materially in presenting the constituency of Elon with a College of splendid appointments—a College of a type that fills a very definite need in the life of the church and its people today. In fact, I am firmly convinced that not only must the College of this type be prepared to hold its own by comparison with the larger non-sectarian or public university, but that it must assume a role of increasing relative importance. There are numerous unhealthy tendencies evident in our composite thought today, and some of us believe that a strong, vigorous, small College can provide very effective resistance to the fruition of these unwholesome theories.

You and I must admit that the economic, social, political, and religious thought of our time is coming more and more to be formulated and directed by College men. If you doubt this, call the roll of those in responsible governmental positions and, still more potent, those who serve in advisory capacity to Government officials of high rank.

A casual observer of world politics will notice a strong trend toward Government control of private lives, of working hours, of education, of leisure, and even of religion.

Our Government has undertaken and is carrying through a magnificent program for the material betterment of our people and yet all this NRA business, codes, and what not will be as sounding brass and tinkling cymbals unless the great heart of America beats true to the fundamentals of good citizenship: such as honesty, integrity, sobriety, thrift and, above all else, a sense of dependence on the God of Nations in whose name our nation was founded and by whose goodness we have grown.

This nation was built by men who practiced these virtues and it has been all but ruined by a generation which disregarded them. I do not believe Mr. Roosevelt or Mr. Richberg or Mr. Green or Congress or Wall Street or any alphabetical combination can ever make us the nation we ought to be, in themselves, but I do believe and know that if our people are again to enjoy that happiness and prosperity they once knew, we will have to build back into our lives those elements of character which have recently been so sadly overlooked and neglected. We laugh now at the alchemists of old who tried to make gold from copper and silver from iron, yet who knows but what succeeding generations may laugh at us for trying to build a dependable citizenship on agnosticism, and skepticism and profanation of holy things.

If a man rob you of your money, you have him thrown in jail and yet there is a robbery far worse than this going on every day and nothing is done about it and that is in some of our larger universities where our young people are being taught skepticism and unbelief under the guise of science. Now if you put a man in jail who robs you of a few dollars, what should be done with one who robs you of your faith?

These are but a few of the things which need the attention of right thinking people and in order to combat such we must have a larger and still larger number of people who understand the fundamentals of citizenship, righteousness and character. Regardless of politics, we all know we are having our lives regulated in a degree and to an extent that would be a striking surprise to our forbears of a few generations back. Thus we see the circle is very small. College men dominate our Government, and the Government dominates us.

Unfortunately, however, the College groups who today are dominating our Government are for the most part, those who came up through our larger universities wherein a balanced intellectual diet cannot be obtained. These universities offer plenty of literature, but no scripture, and plenty of science, but no God. They will pick creation to pieces with their test tubes and telescopes, but deny the Creator. They teach a factual universe operated by theoretical scientific law, rather than a theistic cosmos created, set in motion and controlled by a Supreme Being.

Education without God is worse than ignorance, and one is constrained to believe with President Hutchison of Washington and Jefferson College, who, in a sermon in Park Avenue Presbyterian Church in New York recently said:

"We are learning by bitter experience, that the principle of American education is not right.

"There has grown an assumption that society can be improved and men saved by higher education and ethical principles. The result is that we have more highly educated dishonest people than ever before.

"There is something more in religion and something more needed in life than ethical teaching."

What was needed, he went on, was not an ethical teaching to superimpose on the ethics of other religions but a religion with life and power which would transform the will of men.

All of our state and most of our independent larger universities are either prohibited from teaching, or by tradition, do not care to teach religion in its close up practical sense.

True it is, Yale has its Divinity School, Columbia its Theological Seminary, and other universities have similar departments, and these are all right for students doing graduate work, but conversation with and association with men reared solely in this atmosphere convinces one that they are lacking that vigor and virility of conviction, as well as the simple trusting faith so characteristic of those who have been fortunate enough to receive the ground work of their education in a small Christian College.

On the other hand, the immature undergraduate minds are not prepared for the atmosphere of Lehrfreiheit or so-called academic freedom of the larger university. Most of them are mere adolescents, still in need of tender spiritual nourishment, the sincere milk of the word if you please, personally administered by someone who cares, rather than be ruthlessly thrust into an ocean of agnosticism and godlessness where depending on mere fortuitous circumstances they may either sink or swim spiritually.

No wonder it is so hard to keep our boys and girls interested in Sunday School and Church after a year or two of university life. Send a boy or girl to such a College as Elon, and he or she will come back better prepared and willing to take a place of leadership in the church, but send him to a State or large university and he comes back with a sneer on his lips and a doubt in his heart.

In 1934, Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia University issued a report on "Where does Academic Freedom begin?" and in this report he said:

"Elaborate scientific examination and comparative study of despotism, of democracy, of republicanism, of Communism, of Nazism, or of Fascism," should be reserved for the mature research student in universities, for one who has put on the togo virilis, and who has a well informed, disciplined mind at his command.

Surely the youthful undergraduate should not be exposed to all the winds of doubt and waves of iconoclastic skepticism until his intellectual and spiritual facilities have attained a degree of development which will enable him to stand on his own feet and view with a trained, mature, discerning mind those things which have been thrust upon him. One wonders, too, if there has not been enough of this destructive criticism of things we have been taught to revere and if it is not about time to call a halt to this political and religious iconoclasm.

The most effective weapon we have found for dealing with this situation is our small Christian or denominational college. The church and its college form a happy union; the church furnishing the college with its students and the college returning these men and women to the churches trained and prepared to carry on its work. One is inseparably linked with the other and if one fails, the other must necessarily fail also.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The rolling pin is an important piece of our kitchen ware. It has many uses, such as rolling out dough for making biscuits, bread and pie crusts. This simple utensil has been the subject of many jokes suggesting its use as an instrument of attack upon unruly husbands. Cartoonists have put upon paper their artistic concepticns of wives chasing their husbands with a rolling pin in hand. But the rolling pin is not an implement of defense or war. It is strange that young wives are presented with a rolling pin with the instructions how to use it to manage the youthful husband and start him in the way of righteousness, submission and obedience.

The rolling pin needs to be defended from this malicious attack. Go to the kitchen and watch it at work. A rough mass of dough lies upon a table. Under the skilful hands of a busy woman the rolling pin is put into service. The flour in that dough was made in a mill. The wheat grew on a farm. Mules and horses, men and boys worked in the field from seed time to harvest to provide the brown wheat for the miller; and a group of men in the mill watch the miracle of transforming this wheat into white flour. The house-wife has added yeast and salt and other things and kneaded it into a rough looking piece of dough. During this journey from the waving fields to the kitchen table, this flour has been subjected to crushing experiences. It has been crushed and handled roughly. On the table, it is to be smoothed out by a rolling pin. It is amazing to see how large a piece of pie crust can be made out of one little piece of rough looking dough. Back and forth the rolling pin goes until the rough places are smoothed out.

When the work of the rolling pin is carefully done, it is a misnomer to say it is an implement of discord and disagreement. It requires good judgment and some experience to use a rolling pin. Otherwise the dough will stick to the pin and the day will be spoiled. Put some dry flour on the table and the dough, and rub some on the rolling pin before you begin. Don't undertake to complete the task too hurriedly. It takes a little time and patience to make the dough conform to your wishes and plans. But it can be done if you follow the directions carefully and wisely. And when the work is done the rolling pin has helped to feed the hungry and it did its work smoothly. A hungry boy watches this work with interest and anxiety; and, if he is normal, he hopes a little piece of pie dough will be left over and cooked on top of the stove for his personal use before the next meal is quite ready. This writer confesses that he has eaten many such left over pieces of bread.

An understanding of the rolling pin is essential to the happiness of human life. Before a girl is sixteen she should be taught the proper use of the rolling pin. Much depends upon whether she will be able to charm her husband by making good pies, or frighten him into submission by chasing him with the rolling pin. Homes are not made by luxurious living rooms and spacious drawing rooms. The kitchen is the place of peace or the scene of unending discord in family life. It is not essential for the wife in every home to do all the cooking and the other house work. If the income will justify it, servants may be employed for this purpose. But wealth should not prevent the joy of knowing how to prepare a good meal, nor deprive a husband the privilege of eating pie prepared by the good wife. And surely the children should have the precious memory of eating good things cooked under mother's skill and devotion.

Too many people overlook the opportunity of making life a bit smoother for others. They are willing to join in criticism and add their weight to the unpleasant and jarring experiences of the community. And the world needs the peacemaker, and many hearts are hungry for someone to speak a word of comfort and good cheer. God bless the people who help others along the way of life.

ELON COLLEGE SECURITY CAMPAIGN.

For a number of years Elon College has been seriously handicapped by debt. The college authorities have just entered into an agreement with a banking concern and with the principal creditors for a settlement. Under this agreement, the debts of Elon College may be settled for $183,000, plus a minimum amount for expenses. This settlement means a saving to the college of between four and five hundred thousand dollars. The requirements should be within reach of the college's constituency.

At a recent meeting of the committee on organization definite plans were laid for an aggressive campaign for funds required in settlement and for additional current expenses to meet immediate needs. This plan is a challenge to every individual interested in the college.

It will make its appeal to the membership of the United Church, to the Alumni, and friends wherever they may be. President L. E. Smith was made chairman of power to be known as the Executive committee. The responsibility of perfecting the plan of organization for the campaign and directing the organization in an earnest effort to secure the amount asked for. The amount which the committee proposes to raise is $250,000. This would settle the debts of the college, pay the expenses of the campaign and augment funds for current expenses sufficient to prevent annual deficits for at least three years. Dr. W. R. Kedzie, secretary of Educational Institutions, Dr. James Fraser, pastor of the First Congregational Church, Elizabethtown, New York, Dr. E. L. Moffitt, the former president of the college and Dr. James H. Lightbourne, pastor of the First Christian Church, Burlington, N. C., were present with the committee in an advisory capacity.

The campaign is to be known as the Elon College Security Campaign as a memorial to the merging of the Congregational and Christian Churches and to the late Dr. W. W. Staley for twelve years President of the college and a member of the Board of Trustees until his death.

The committee and the advisers present were most enthusiastic in laying plans for this settlement and were optimistic as to the possible response on the part of the church, Alumni and friends to make available the necessary funds to take advantage of this most unusual proposition. It is hoped that the church and all interested may be as enthusiastic in the reception of the plans for the college and that their liberality may measure up to the committee's hope and expectation.

Elon College is a standard four-year College. In addition to the regular liberal arts curriculum, thorough instruction is offered in music, dramatics, art and domestic science. The college is thoroughly equipped for superior work in these departments. Strong pre-med and pre-law courses are also offered.

Elon was founded by the Christian Church of the South in 1889. It was opened for enrollment of students in the fall of 1890. It has more than one thousand full graduates and an additional eight thousand who have been students here, making a total of between nine and ten thousand young men and women who have matriculated at Elon College for college work.

Our equipment is first class and is conceded to be as good as any small college in the country. At one time it was valued at more than $1,000,000 and the endowment more than $300,000. These values have been drastically reduced. The plant is still here, but its mortgage value would be negligible. However, it is adequate for school purposes and offers superior advantages for the work of a small college.

Under the above plan of settlement, all claims against the college will be cleared. It will release the income from endowment for current expenses.

There are twenty-four members of our faculty, nine of whom hold their doctor's degree from the leading universities of the country. Two have completed all requirements for the Ph.D except their dissertations and two others are at the present working on their doctor's degrees.

Enrollment for 1934-35 was 368. Prospects for 1935-36 indicate a considerable increase in our student body for another year.

Elon College occupies a strategic place in the United Church in the south. The continuance of the college means a trained leadership for the church in the future and an intelligent program for her activities on all occasions.

L. E. Smith.

NEW ELAM.

On coming back from Christmas holidays, Dr. L. E. Smith asked me if I would go to New Elam and preach for them Sunday, January 6, 1935. I went and was invited back to speak on January 20th, at which time I was elected their pastor for the rest of the Conference year. I have been serving them since then, preaching the third Saturday night and the third Sunday morning in each month. It has been a great joy and Christian experience, serving with them.

The work seems to be going well and there is a wonderful fellowship and cooperation being expressed by each individual member of the church. They are willing to do almost anything I ask them to do, even though a little different from what they are accustomed to do. There is a membership of about 150. The church is nearly always full on preaching days. It must be the custom for the people to turn out when preaching services are held here. There is nothing more beautiful and significant on Sunday morning than to see the people coming from all directions to church; some walking and others by cars. Every Sunday that I have been there, it has rained except the last one. That did not keep them from coming to church. More people need to have the spirit of going to church that these have.

On May 18, 1935, the Annual Memorial Service was held. A large crowd was in attendance, for every one tries to come to this service. At 10:30 A. M., the service opened with the choir singing and taking their places on the front seats. Devotional Services were led by the writer which was followed by a program given by the children. It was a wonderful program and the children seemed to enjoy it very much. There were recitations, songs, exercises and readings. Everything went off fine. They didn't forget their parts and didn't seem frightened to get up before a large audience and render their part. What a glorious experience and training for them, for upon them will fall the responsibilities of the church of tomorrow. As their program was over, each child carried a bouquet of flowers and marched into the cemetery, spreading flowers on each grave as they went along. It was a beautiful sight that I shall never forget.

Following the benediction we crossed the road into a shady grove where a large basket dinner was prepared. There was plenty for all and every one seemed to greatly enjoy this social hour, meeting new and old friends.

About 1:30 P. M. we went back into the church for the afternoon service. After the choir, most ably directed by Mr. Timmy Mann, had rendered several selections, seven memorials were read to the audience. They were written in memory of those who had died within the last year and had been buried in the cemetery. Addresses were made by the following: Rev. E. M. Carter, of Youngsville, N. C.; Rev. G. M. Talley, and Rev. C. C. Wheeler of the Baptist Church of Merry Oaks. All spoke in relation to the Memorial Service. They were quite inspiring and everyone enjoyed hearing them. Several laymen of the church spoke telling how they enjoyed the Memorial Services year after year. Rev. G. M. Tally pronounced the benediction.

This was the writer's first experience in a Memorial Service in North Carolina. It shall never be forgotten for it meant much to him. Everyone seemed to go away with new hope and new light. Many met old friends, new friendships were formed, old experiences brought to light and new experiences wrought, memories of friends, parents and loved ones refreshed, and new determinations made to live better Christian lives in the future.

Sunday morning, May 19th, the writer spoke in behalf of the Mission cause after which an offering was taken amounting to $11.18. Rev. E. M. Carter spoke concerning the Lord's Supper after which he administered Communion to those professing to follow Jesus Christ and believing on Him as their Saviour. Just before the benediction was pronounced a short prayer service was held for the family of Mr. A. W. Drake. Brother Drake's wife has been recently confined to her bed and has been very sick. She has always been a very faithful member of New Elam. May God's blessings rest upon her and the other members of her family.

One cannot help being inspired after serving such a good people. May God's richest blessings abide with the New Elam Church.

A GREAT REVIVAL.

Those who feel that the day of evangelizing has passed may take courage from this note about our recent revival in our church at Danville, Virginia. After much prayer and waiting on God for direction, we began our revival on Sunday, March 30th, with our beloved pastor, Rev. M. T. Sorrell, preaching, being the first revival he has held in his church during his pastorate of over eight years. As is the custom, we usually have other ministers to come in and conduct the revivals, but the official board asked our pastor to conduct the services which he consented to do.

Things went along fine, great crowds, many being turned away at times. Wonderful preaching, inspirational singing by our large chorus choir of over fifty voices led by M .G. Proffitt. With no other results than the usual meeting, we entered the third and final week. Conviction grew strong, hearts became heavy, sermons more powerful, praying became more intense and earnest. On Tuesday night before Easter Sunday the Spirit descended with old-time power, sinners began seeking God. Luke-warm Christians were quickened. Saints began to shout the victory. About 250 real conversions and reconsecrations were the results of the closing week. Our large Young People's department room was turned into an inquiry room. It was a real pentecost to see sometimes nearly four-score souls on their knees weeping their way to God, and then arising to shout the victory in Christ's name. One night this great inquiry meeting ran until after eleven o'clock.

We thank God for this victory. Many old soldiers of the Cross said it was like the days of our forefathers. At the close of the meeting on Friday night the congregation presented Brother Sorrell and Brother Proffitt with a love offering.

Yours in the Master's work,

God is Holy Ambition.

Some Further Thoughts About God.

God is all that we have indicated in our foregoing summary and much more. More than we can know or think is one great reason why we ought to adore and worship Him; it is that in all our thoughts about Him, we can do no evil. Let us think much about Him. It will help to purify our minds and cleanse our lives from all impurity and furnish us with sweet communion with Him. Our "Quiet Hour" will fill our hearts with the richness of His love and goodness.

Our vision of what He would have us become in our upward progress toward Him and His eternal peace, will become so clear and enlarged as to help us to see what He has designed us to be.

BLESSING BOXES JOY BOXES.

We doubt if our ministers and people, and SUN readers, generally, have realized the blessings and joys of the Cent-a-Meal Box. We wish they would. It is a very simple and yet a very helpful and joyous experience. Order through your pastor or direct of the Mission Secretary, Elon College, N. C., a Cent-a-Meal Box. It will only cost a dime and is a beautiful little polished box and serves gracefully as a centerpiece on the dining table. A penny a meal dropped into the box on the part of the family tells a story to every member of the household and adds graciousness to the Grace that father says, or the blessings invoked, as we begin the meal which God has given in the home. We give in the cut on this page a picture which the women of Maine are distributing with the Cent-a-Meal Box, and with the picture the following message in part goes:

Blessing Boxes are Joy Boxes When the Children Bring Them Home.

I am a Cent-a-Meal Box. My name means that each family is asked to place one cent in the box at every meal as a token of thanks to God.

Blessing Boxes Are Joy Boxes When the Children Bring Them Home.

Some call me a blessing box because I remind them of the happy things of Life; food shelter, raiment, friends, and—best of all—love of father and mother, son, and daughter.

A poet once said, "Joy is the grace of God," and as I sit on your dining-room table, I hope you'll think of me as your Joy Box. There'll be joy in your hearts when the pennies go in; and when they go out, they'll carry joy to other hearts.

Many pennies will travel to neglected areas in our own state. Others will cross the great oceans in ships. To Africa, to Greece, to Turkey, to India, China and Japan they will go.

Why do pennies travel so far? Because of the song the angels sang when the Christ-child was born—"Peace on earth, goodwill to men." Love is the greatest power in the world; and the more we scatter abroad, the more we have to use at home.

NEWS ITEMS OF SOCIETIES.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of Oakland Christian Church is doing some excellent work as is evidenced by the following: One of their recent meetings was held in the home of Mrs. W. C. Dailey, with Mrs. Bradshaw, presiding and conducting devotionals. Dr. I. W. Johnson led the group in prayer and gave an interesting talk on "Why I Believe in Missions." They have a membership of eighteen. Two visitors were present, Miss Jennie Saunders and Mrs. Ashburn. Dues for the day amounted to $10.55 and amount received from sale of hens $12.81, making a total of $23.36. One new member was added to the roll.

Mrs. I. Johnson conducted a contest or open forum, using questions from the Old Testament and fourteen reasons, quotations from the Bible, on "Why We Believe in Missions."

After the meeting adjourned the hostess served lovely refreshments and all went away feeling that they had spent a good season together and were much benefitted. Mrs. W. C. Moore is secretary and treasurer of this interested group.

The Young People's Missionary Society of Holy Neck Christian Church have made all their requirements for the year 1934-35, with Miss Lillye Holland as Superintendent and Miss Theodosia Beacham, President. They met in the homes during winter months and at church during the summer on each third Sunday night. They have increased in both membership and interest. On the first Sunday night in April they met and read together their foreign mission study book, "Japanese Women Speak." On the third Sunday night they put on their public program at the church before a large audience. On the second Sunday night in May they met jointly with the Holland Society and the Home Book "Orientals in America" was taught by five members of the societies. This was very interesting and seems to be the ideal way of putting our mission study classes over.

Why not send in a news item or something pertaining to your work which you have been doing or are planning to do in the future. This department or phase of the work craves your coperation and perhaps your methods if sent in, may be the answer to someone's query. Now, let us see who will be the first to send in something helpful for publication in THE CHRISTIAN SUN and thereby help to strengthen the work. Learn to read the SUN and you will find that it is full of helpful material for your mind, for your society and for your church. Be a booster. See to it that your society is on the map, as it were. Send all materials pertaining to our woman's work to Mrs. W. M. Jay, Holland, Va.

MISS LOUISE MEEBOLD.

By MISS D. P. CUSHING, News Editor.

"Oil for the lamps of China" might well be paraphrased "shoes for the feet of China" for when the Chinese villages at least adopt leather shoes it will be a boon to the mothers who spend many days carefully stitching the cloth soles and uppers for lively little feet that wear them out to the tune of about four or five pairs a year. But leather shoes would have to be low enough in price to meet the meager income of the farmers and the common laborer.

Miss Louise Meebold of Chicago, now in Fenchow, North China, under the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, is a young woman who travels much through the countryside of Shansi Province and knows from actual observation what these sturdy people endure and how their lives flow on in strenuous and often monotonous streams.

During the busy season, Miss Meebold reports, women and children work by the side of the men in the fields of cotton, kaoliang, millet and other grains which can be grown in the fertile but dry soil. Squash and beans major among the vegetables. Because the cotton growing country is part of her district, Miss Meebold tells of the whir of the spinning wheel which is heard through the land from long before dawn until late into the night. The women weave and dye their own clothes. They find time somehow to do beautiful embroidery and to decorate their dresses and aprons by the tie and dye method.

"Where the native dates are abundant the women make them up into very interesting designs," writes Miss Meebold. "When ripe, the dates are of a firm texture and a rich, red brown color. They are strung on strings in various pretty and interesting designs." These dates serve a dual purpose in that they are decorative and they can be eaten at any time. When special feast days like the Moon festival come along, the village women show their skill in making designs in dough cakes in the shapes of dogs, lions, fish and the like, much as New England mothers make gingerbread men.

"The age of the machine has not arrived in these hills," writes Miss Meebold. "As one sits in the average home and looks about one sees that practically everything is hand made. The house itself is probably a cave dug out of a hillside. Floors are brick, the furniture of wood occasionally beautifully lacquered; the dishes come from a local pottery and the clothes are almost entirely of cotton from their own fields. Even kerosene oil, which has found its way into so many isolated places, is a luxury here, and the small lamps on their high stands are still fed with oil from the castor bean."

Hard working, sturdy, these people have less than what Americans would consider the bare necessities. Their contact, especially the women, with the outside world is practically nil. "They need so much that enriching sense of fellowship with all other women in the world in the common quest for beauty and purposeful living," writes Miss Meebold, and to that need she has dedicated her life.

Miss Meebold was born in Chicago and graduated from Wheaton College. Her first experiences in China came when she worked in the Shawu Mission from 1920 to 1925. Retained in America for family reasons until 1931, she then returned to China for educational work in Fenchow. She is the sister of Mrs. Carl L. Anderson, Granville, Ill.; Miss Sophie Meebold; Chas. L. Meebold, 2335 Cowper Ave., Evanston, Ill., and E. J. Meebold, 1001 E. Main St., Kalamazoo, Mich.

Miss Meebold is the special representative of the First Congregational Church of Oak Park, Illinois.

DEDICATION AT OAK GROVE
(Gates County, N. C.)

The Oak Grove Christian Church, Sunbury, N. C., will be dedicated June 9th at 11 o'clock. This is the second building.

Dr. W. M. Jay, Holland, Va., will preach the Dedicatory Sermon.

The members will bring basket lunch and Lawyer Godwin, Gatesville, N. C., has been invited to speak in the afternoon.

All former pastors and members are invited to come with us that day, as well as friends of other churches and make this a great day.

A Story for the Children

SAILING WITH CAPTAIN DAN.

The twins, Bob and Rodney, lived for the summer in a cottage at Horseshoe Beach. All day long they played along the sand to the ocean. Mother let them wade in the water up to their knees all they wished, but beyond that she was afraid of the undertow, so they had promised her they would not go in any farther unless she or father was with them.

The other boys who played on the beach often laughed at them. Their mothers had told them the same thing, but they would run out way up to their shoulders, then dry out their bathing suits on the beach, and they teased the twins every chance they got.

The twins did not like this and bit by bit they played more and more in the creek. There was a boathouse there, and by climbing a board and looking in a window they found they could see a dandy boat painted white and green.

Some of the other boys who had been there years before told them, "That's Captain Dan's boat. He has been away two months, but he will be coming home soon. It won't do you any good though; he never lets any boy go out with him. He never pays any attention to us."

A few days later, as the boys were playing in the creek, some of the older ones came along.

"Oh, see mother's little sissy boys!" cried one. "Look at the curls!" cried another, lifting imaginary curls from Rodney's head.

Rodney drew back, flushing angrily, but just then a calm, cool voice said:

"That will do. Big ones like you should be ashamed to pick on smaller ones."

"Aw, but they are so sissy, Captain Dan," protested one of the largest of the boys. "They don't dare go out above their knees because they promised their mother not to." Rodney saw a tall, sunburned young man of about thirty-five, who was smiling pleasantly. As the big boy finished, the young man turned toward the twins.

"What have you to say for yourselves, boys?" he asked.

Bob blushed. "It is true," he answered. "We promised mother, and dad says a fellow always keeps his promise."

"Good," said Captain Dan, heartily. "And do you always mind as well as this?"

"Yes, sir," answered Bob, sturdily; "Dad says it is only a coward who does not mind those he knows are wiser than he is, and Mother knows."

Captain Dan's eyes softened as he looked on the faces raised to him.

"Many times," he answered, "little bears, tigers, rabbits, birds, and all wild life have saved their lives by following that principle. I wonder if you would like to go out on the bay with me. If your mother will let you go, I will take you."

While they were gone, Captain Dan turned to the bigger boys. "You have thought it strange I have never taken you out sailing," he said, "but you have the answer now. I have watched you summer after summer as you have been here, growing more and more disobedient and foolhardy about little things, and making fun of the boys who tried to follow the cautions of their parents. You have often succeeded in getting them to be as foolhardy as yourselves, but the shoe is on the other foot now. No boy sails with me who will not mind instantly and unquestionably. That is why these new boys are going on my boat and you are staying on shore."

He turned to the boat as the twins came racing along the beach, and soon the three were out in the waters of the bay, leaving a dozen crestfallen boys on shore, who realized that, too late for a summer's pleasure, they had learned why they did not sail with Captain Dan.—Leslie Blake in Advance.

NEED FOR A CHRISTIAN COLLEGE.

Unquestionably we are on the threshold of a new day, so far as man's humanity to man is concerned, and what we make of this new day will depend largely on the extent to which our christian colleges are able to leaven the every day thinking of the people of our country. From the time that douty old Britisher of colonial days built that first cotton mill in New England, and introduced into America, the idea of increased production by division of operations, up to this present day, money making and financial profit have been the motive back of the lives of most Americans.

But we are about to change. We are coming to another period of slavery vastly different however, from the type around which our civil war was waged. Now man is master and machinery the slave. The arms of man have been lengthened by a thousand levers in a thousand machines. The feet of man have been quickened by abundant means of rapid transportation. Regardless of what you and I may think of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the principle of a considerably shorter working day has been permanently set up in our land. By the use of these things and as a result of these things, we are going to find men more susceptible to reason with reference to the finer things. More leisure time is being created and during that leisure time our people are going to read about and listen to and follow after, those trained for leadership.

Now is this leadership to be of the agnostic radical type or the type as moulded by our church and its Colleges? This is a very practical question and is vital to everyone who owns a dollar's worth of real estate, a share of stock, or who has a child, which, in the nature of things, must expect to spend his life amid these conditions now in their formative period.

I am constrained to believe that somehow it will be laid upon the heart of every churchman in our land to rise up, meet these conditions by doing his part towards his church and his church college, and I do not believe the members of the Congregational-Christian Church and friends of Elon are going to fail her.

Here is a college of which we can feel proud. Large enough to be effective, small enough to be personal, rich in tradition of the finest type, and free from all taint of radicalism or ethical doubt.

Dr. Smith is to be commended for the splendid manner in which he is meeting and solving the many problems confronting the college, and I think this would be a very ungrateful group were we not here and now to reconsecrate and rededicate at least a portion of our time, talent, and means to the furtherance of the program of Elon College.

Elon College must go on just as every denominational college must go on, but Elon College cannot go on unless this Alumni Association as well as the entire constituency of the Southern Christian Convention, unite wholeheartedly in the interest of this their college, and I hope, Sir, that our meeting together here this morning may eventuate in solemn resolution on the part of both of these organizations to pledge you that support.

The religion of Protestants is personal devotion to Christ, the acceptance of standards revealed by him, and the type of "mystical" piety of which the Quakers are prominent witnesses.—Dean Inge.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

Rev. F. C. Lester, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

CONGRATULATIONS TO GRADUATES.

From the campuses of our colleges at this season of the year go numerous young men and women out into the world as graduates. For years they have followed the lure of learning and for a while they have been sheltered, guided, and inspired by the colleges of the Church. They have dreamed and hoped and planned. Many have worked and saved and sacrificed in order that they might come to Graduation Day and carry from the college of their choice a diploma and the commendation of those under whom they have learned.

Like Abraham of old, many of them will go out not knowing whither they go. The Land of Promise is only a dream for them, and yet there sounds in their souls a call to move on. They may not know it now, but there are wide rolling plains, turbulent streams, and "mountains of wearisome height" to cross before they reach the Land of Promise.

Some summers ago, out in the West, I saw men walking across a stretch of prairie one hundred miles between places where people lived. The sun was hot and the road was rough, but they were walking steadily onward facing the East seemingly unconscious of the difficulties over which they were then passing. Beyond the prairie lay some places in which they wanted to live. That same summer, with many another traveler, I drove to the top of Pike's Peak, the highest highway in the world. The road was steep and winding with precipices deep and embankment high, but steadily we climbed above the vegetation line and on up amid the clouds. Sometimes we were dizzy, and sometimes a bit afraid, but we kept on climbing. The view from the top was worth the effort.

Congratulations to those who have studied and learned and who are now ready to take the journey to the Land of Promise. For many of them there will be no lucrative job awaiting, but for all there is a marvelous opportunity for service. The world is desperately in need of the service which those who are skilled in the art of high living can render. We haven't yet learned how to divide an abundance so that all have a plenty and none too much. Alcohol is destroying people in increasing numbers. Automobiles kill more than our wars because we have not learned how to handle them. Races are constantly in conflict. Nations spend their money for protection and find that it does not protect. Into these fields of promise graduates from Church colleges may go in a day when individual influence can girdle the globe. Congratulations on being allowed to live and on being so prepared to live in a time like this.

A CHALLENGE TO YOUTH.

In every age youth is challenged. It is confronted with problems of righting the evils and of making better prevailing conditions. Youth, in reality, is challenged to find "a far better way," to look toward "a much higher path."

To a Tekoain shepherd lad in the long ago this challenge came. Reluctant to see the rich living in ease and debauchery, unwilling to see his nation turn from the God which it professed, Amos cried out "Let justice roll down as waters and righteousness as a mighty stream." A carpenter youth of Nazareth heard the call of "a far better way." Because of his desire to walk in that way and to lead others in that path, he submitted to the agonizing fate at the cross.

To youth today, as if across the years, the challenge comes to find "a better way." As did they of old, youth must heed the call to fight in the cause of righteousness and truth. As Ivah Deering said in a youth magazine sometimes ago, "Youth did not make any depression, and yet youth is confronted with a problem which has broken the morale of a great part of the world's people. We are challenged to take stock of liabilities and assets, to look within ourselves, and to dig out the abilities that lie buried."

Youth, therefore, must know its possibilities as well as its limitations; it must endeavor to maintain faith in itself, even through the darkness of disillusion; it must be ever confident of the fellowship of Him, the great champion of youth.

VALLEY SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Valley of Virginia Central Conference will hold its regular annual meeting at the Antioch Church near Harrisonburg, Virginia, on June 6th and 7th which is next week.

The theme for the Convention program is "The Far Better Way." An effort will be made to find the better way in conducting Sunday School and teaching classes, promoting mission activities, leading young people's meetings, and doing all phases of religious educational work.

These Conventions offer a good opportunity for those who are interested in developing their talents as leaders in local churches to do some studying and receive inspiration that will help them become better servants of the Christ.

Attention is also called to the fact that Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor societies are expected to make a contribution to their Convention. It is only a small sum that is asked from each church, and it seems reasonable to expect that all will respond to the call. It has been the custom of the Conventions in recent years to reserve sufficient funds with which to carry on the Convention work and then give the remainder of the money to the Board of Christian Education. It is through these Convention donations that the Board receives most of its funds with which to work.

WHERE WILL YOU SPEND YOUR SUMMER VACATION?

(Copied from a church bulletin.)

Will it contribute to your education, happiness, and future usefulness? Why not include some great meeting such as the following?

Virginia State Sunday School Convention, June 12-13. Lynchburg, Virginia. Sponsored by the Council of Religious Education. Outstanding speakers. Any who are interested should write to Rev. Minor C. Miller, Bridgewater, Va.

Elon Summer School of Leadership Training—June 24-30. Cost $7.50.

Virginia Christian Endeavor Convention.—June 27-30. Arlington County.

International Christian Endeavor Convention.—July 2-7. Philadelphia.

Ninth World's Christian Endeavor Convention—August 2-7. Budapest, Hungary. Leave New York with the Polings on July 11th, or with the Vere Abbeys on July 20th.

HOW TO CONQUER ANGER.

Christian Endeavor Topic for June 9, 1935.

Hymns: "Since Jesus Came Into My Heart"; "O Jesus, I Have Promised"; "Yield Not to Temptation"; "A Charge to Keep I Have"; "Jesus Saves."

Duet: "Angry words! O Let Them Never" (If this cannot be used as a duet, read the words:)

Angry words! O let them never
From the tongue unbridled slip;
May the heart's best impulse ever
Check them ere they soil the lip.

Love is much too pure and holy,
Friendship is too sacred far,
For a moment's reckless folly
Thus to desolate and mar.

Angry words are lightly spoken,
Bitterest thoughts are rashly stirred,
Brightest links of life are broken,
By a single angry word.

"Love one another," thus saith the Saviour;
Children, obey the Father's blest command.
"Love one another" thus saith the Saviour;
Children, obey His blest command.

—D. K. P.

Scripture: Rom. 12:19; Eph. 4:26, 31; Matt. 5:21-24.

Daily Readings:

June 3.—Do not strive to "get even." Prov. 24:29.
June 4.—Strive for self-control. Jas. 1:19.
June 5.—Let Jesus Help You. Titus 3:2-7.
June 6.—Be deliberate. Prov. 16:32.
June 7.—Use discretion. Prov. 15:1; 19:11.
June 8.—Hold your tongue. Eccl. 5:1, 2.

Speaker: "How to Conquer Anger."

"Managing One's Self" by James Gordon Gilkey will be a valuable aid to the speaker.

Study carefully what the Bible says about anger. Did those characters know anything about anger? Did Jesus have any such experiences? If so, why?

"My grandparents had terrible fits of anger. When the children in my neighborhood saw my father coming home from work, they ran. I couldn't possibly overcome my anger on my own strength. I asked Christ to control my life. He has." So says one young lady.

In order to conquer anger, is it necessary to have a substitute? Would love conquer?

TODAY.

Why should we mourn for departed days,
Or look on the future with dread;
Why long for a day that the future conceals,
Or a past that is faded and dead?

Let us look on the glorious present,
And make it a day well done;
For the past can never be retrieved,
And the future is not yet come.

All that we're sure of is just today
The future is all unknown—
And the past belongs to yesterday,
But today is our very own.

We shall find if we use the great today
In the sort of a way we should,
We'll have no regrets for our yesterdays—
The tomorrow will all be good.

For yesterday and tomorrow
Are just results of the way,
We have builded for joy or sorrow,
In our heritage of today.

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

OUR DAY OF WORSHIP.

Lesson IX—June 2, 1935.

Lesson Text: Genesis 2:2, 3; Exodus 20:8-11; Psalm 100; John 4:20-24; Acts 20:7; Col. 3:15-17.

Golden Text: "God is a Spirit; and they that worship Him must worship in spirit and truth." —John 4:24.

Talk to some people about "our day of worship" and you are speaking in an unknown tongue because they have no day of worship. Many of them have to work seven days in the week and in many cases when they do have one day a week off, it is not our Sunday. For this large group of people, there is no "day of worship."

Again, if you talk to many others who do have Sunday off, about "our day of worship," you are still speaking in an unknown tongue. For to millions of them, Sunday is not a day of worship. They rest, they read—what they read may be good, bad or indifferent—they ride, they roam, they play—it may be golf or bridge or some other game—they dance, they dine, they do this or that, they do most anything and everything, but they do not worship, either in private or in public. In America today there are millions of people who do not have a day of worship. So far as their spiritual life is concerned there might just as well not be any Sunday. To them it is a secular holiday; it is not a sacred holy day. They give no place in their lives to private worship, and they give no support to public worship. "Our day of worship"—to many it is not only an idle phrase, it is a foolish one. They look upon Sunday as an outgrown institution, a sort of relic of the days when people were foolish enough to believe that there was really something in religion, and that worship did have some value. But for many modern people, religion does not have any claim upon them, and of course worship can have no place in their lives.

But there are those who still believe that a "day of worship" has a place in our modern life. Indeed they would insist that the demands of modern life constantly demand, not less, but more, a day of worship, and the things for which that day stands. They look upon Sunday, not as a burden, but as a privilege and as an opportunity and they try to use it for the high purposes for which was ordained, and to preserve it in its essential spirit. They still believe God meant what He said when He said, "Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy." The day, as a day, and as an institution, was to be kept holy. It is different. It has a distinctive contribution to make to the life of man. Indeed it stands for something without which a man cannot live at his highest or at his best.

Dean Brown puts it this way in his inimitable style. "A missionary to the Indians once told them that if they planted their corn on Sunday it would not grow. In that perversity of spirit which we all understand, they immediately proceeded to test the claim. They planted one acre of corn on Sunday; they hoed it on Sunday, and "worked it" on no other day but Sunday throughout the season. And because they took such pains with it, it yielded more corn than any other acre on the reservation. The Indians laughed at the missionary and would not attend church. There is a penalty however, for hoeing corn on Sunday. It reveals itself not in the diminished yield of the corn but in the stunted growth of 'the man with the hoe.' The corn may grow to its full size, but the man will not grow to his full size, nor yield those fine fruits of the Spirit which belong to the human life at its best. There is that in every man which will not grow at all unless it be given the advantages for which the Sabbath stands. The day awaits us as a lovely green spot of leisure and repair, of higher aspiration and spiritual opportunity. It welcomes all those who plod wearily across the monotonous stretches of dusty labor. Many men thank God for it and use it in gaining that finer manhood which stands as its ultimate lord."—Brown: The Master's Way.

A Day of Gladness.

The day of worship is not to be looked upon as a burden, but as a day of privilege and opportunity. "Make a joyful noise unto the Lord, serve the Lord with gladness, come before His presence with singing, enter into His courts with praise, give thanks unto Him, bless His name . . ." on and on the note of joy, of gladness, of thanksgiving runs through the scriptures when reference is made to the Sabbath.

A Day of Worship.

"God is a spirit and they that worship must worship in spirit and truth." Worship is essentially a spiritual experience. There are many methods of worship and many materials of worship, but the heart of the matter is the spirit in the heart of the worshipper. He who in simplicity and sincerity worships God will find worship an enriching, enabling experience. Before the worshipper seeks God, God is already seeking the worshipper. The Father seeketh such to worship Him.

Of course, true worship can be offered anywhere. One does not have to be in a church to worship God. But to those who say, "I can worship God as well at home as I can at church, or out in the beautiful country or driving along the road" one might well ask, "You can, but do you?" And if folks are honest they will admit that although they can, they do not.

Furthermore there is an important place for public worship and social worship. One has done well when he worships in private, but he has not exhausted the possibilities of worship until he has worshipped socially in public services of worship. That church on your street or in your community stands for something which you need. Jesus himself, as His custom was, went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day. And He went to worship.

A Day of Inspiration.

"Whatsoever ye do, in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God the Father through him." Worship on the day of worship ought to inspire to noble living and loving service on Monday. Impulses felt on Sunday should find expression through the week. The experience of God enjoyed on Sunday should be shared on Monday. Sunday, the day of worship should give worth-ship to all of life. Come, let us worship. It is a good thing to sing praises unto our God.

Intolerance and prejudice in religious matters are often found in people, who, on other questions, are fair, patient and tolerant with those who may not agree with them. It will help us in most conflicts of the kind to make it a fixed principle in our minds that we may be right in what we claim for ourselves, and wrong and unjust in what we deny to others. The spirit of tolerance or brotherhood is needed today in America if we are to be permitted to continue to enjoy the benefits and privileges of freedom of conscience and of worship which the founders of the country bequeathed to us.—Dr. Albert E. Ribourg.

"THE POOR RICH AND THE RICH POOR."

"Woe unto ye that are full! For ye shall hunger. Woe unto you that laugh now! For ye shall mourn and weep."—Luke 6:25.

The meaning of this verse embraces also the twenty-fourth verse just preceding it. The Saviour is talking about the things that curse people, and in this particular He is talking about the curse of riches.

One of our solons recently broadcasted these words: "So long as a man is worth a million dollars and continues to be worth a million dollars while humanity around him is starving, he will not go to heaven." These are holy words, because they came from God's teachings.

Christ has put the same thought in other words when He said: "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God." Matt. 19:24. This, we understand, does not forbid a man being rich in possessions, but it requires of him to be rich in heart toward humanity and in the use of his wealth for the glory of God.

Much light is thrown upon the will of God, regarding riches and upon curses that will come upon those who are selfishly rich, in Nehemiah 5 and James 5.

Prayer—Our Father, enable us to see the righteousness and the godliness of living for others, and grant Thy inspiration and Thy help that we dedicate ourselves and all that we are to Thy cause and our fellow man.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

"DAILY DEDICATION."

"Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass away till all be fulfilled. Heaven and earth shall pass away; but my words shall not pass away."—Luke 21:32, 33.

Commentaries on this text are scarce and scholarship is not immediately available. Quoting from one author, it is said that our Lord is speaking about the destruction of Jerusalem. The apostles are to recognize that Jerusalem is already doomed (I Thess. 2:16). The city is to be surrounded with foreign armies and the Christians are to escape at once. The picture of the final end of the world, or the coming of the Son of Man in Judgment (verses 25-27) provides a background for the particular judgment prophesied. Meanwhile, in the awful terror of these days on Jerusalem and on the world at large, the disciples are to exhibit a paradoxial spirit. Midst all the terrors, they are to radiate a countenance of those who see their day dawning (28). Then follows our text as an assurance that these things (the judgment on Jerusalem) shall come to pass before that present generation shall have passed away, and it did; Jerusalem was actually destroyed in A. D. 70. The words "Heaven and earth," of the text refer to the heavens and the elements about us, and they are used here by our Lord to assure His listeners of the certainty of His word.

The spiritual lesson of our Lord is that for all time the coming of the judgment may find the world unprepared and that His children must needs maintain constantly the attitude of watchfulness and prayer. The parable of the virgins is a striking illustration of what our Lord meant to teach here.

Prayer—There is no better watchfulness than a daily dedication of ourselves with a view to the Glory of God in all that we do and say during the day. So pray ye.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"There is none that understandeth, there is none that seek after God."—Rom. 3:11.

This text is a part of a quotation from the Psalms and expresses the unfaithfulness of the Jews to their covenant.

In order to understand it's meaning, read the whole chapter, and imagine it a dialogue between a Jewish objector and St. Paul. The idea is taken from "The New Commentary" by Gore and others.

Objector: (V. 1) If what you say is true and the Jews, God's chosen people, are to be condemned with the Gentiles, what use is there in being a Jew? And of what use is the circumcision?

Paul: (V. 2) A great deal. The Jews are depositories of pre-Christian revelation.

Objector: (v. 3) Well, if the Jews are fallen and lost, has not God been false to His covenant in allowing them to drift into this condition?

Paul: (v. 3, 4) Not in the least. Even if "some" Jews have been unfaithful,, that does not effect God's faithfulness to His side. On the contrary, we must maintain God's truth even though all men should become liars.

Objector: (v. 5) Granted, but if the meanness of the Jews brings into clearer relief the goodness of God, do they not render a service? And, if they render a service by their sins, is it not unjust to visit them with His wrath?

Paul: (v. 6) God is the Judge of the world. He is altogether righteous and holy, and He cannot be unjust. Though He make the sins of His children serve Him, is no reason that the child should continue to sin.

Then Paul injects an indignant parenthesis (v. 8, 9) into the middle of the objection (referring to the slander of doing evil and calling it good). They who are guilty of such sins, thoroughly deserve the condemnation of their doom at Judgment Day. Paul deals with this subject more fully in the sixth and seventh chapters.

Prayer—Our Father, we pray to Thee with a new dedication of our lives on this Thy new day. Keep us from the distortion of Thy truth, but humble and pure always working to do His will and show forth His glory.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

"THE ONE THING NEEDFUL."

"Good Master, what must I do to inherit eternal life?"—Matt. 19:16-21.

The story of the rich young ruler recalls one of the greatest lessons Jesus ever taught. This law-abiding rich young ruler seeking salvation, was told to become unselfish and follow the Saviour, and he would have treasures in heaven. Our Saviour thereby made is plain that neither riches nor good morals alone can gain salvation. We must take up our cross and follow Him. When we come to the end of life, education, no culture, no riches, no success will count for anything—only goodness will count.

Prayer—Our Father, we pray for a sense of heaven's realities and values. Help us to put aside everything subordinate to a true life in Thee.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

"Take, eat, this is my body."—Matt. 26:18-29.

Knowing that His time was soon at hand and His earthly mission fulfilled, Jesus recapitulates His teachings that the first duty of man is to follow Him and embrace Him in all living, and declares Himself to be the spiritual food of mankind. It was thus the Lord's supper was instituted as a permanent token of that covenant between Him and them.

Prayer—

"O Bread of Life, Thou in Thy word hast said:
Who feeds in Faith on me shall never die!
In mercy hear Thy hungry children's cry—
Father, give us this day our daily bread!"
—Wm. Henry Gill.

SATURDAY.

"HANDS ON THE ARK."

"And the anger of Jehovah was kindled against Uzza, and He smote him, because he put forth his hand to the ark; and there he died before God."—I Chron. 13:6-11.

We may and we should be eager for the prosperity of the church of God. It is well to be eager for any great good cause, such as prohibition and world peace. We are happy in our earnest work for any small good cause, such as the finishing of the church tower or the forming of a men's Sunday School class.

But through all this eagerness is fine and rewarding, anxiety for God's causes is ignoble, depressing, uncalled for. It is a depreciation of God. It is as if a private in the ranks should go about muttering criticisms of his general's strategy and doubting his fitness.

Omnipotence is not to be thwarted. His will will be done. Men may fail, may horribly and forever fail, and we may well be anxious for men, but let us never touch with conceited and unnecessary fear for its safety the ark of God.

Prayer—Teach us, our Father, Thy sufficingness.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

"DIVINE DIRECTION TO DIVINE LOVE."

"And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God."—II Thess. 3:5.)

As a Master Musician produces from the great organ the music that is already in his own soul, so God draws from his children the harmonies of his own life. It is thus a soul may become "like Him."

How much more is a man than an organ! An organ is a mechanical thing. A man is a soul, a being of sensibilities as broad as life itself, sensibilities that have extended and penetrated to the far reaches of the universe in these days. Man is a being of love and hate, joy and misery, peace and discord, mercy and vindictiveness, long suffering and impatience, meekness and pride, self-abasement and self-exaltation, honesty and dishonesty, justice and injustice. Which shall reign in the lives?

There is no music sweeter than the harmonies of love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, meekness and brotherly kindness. These come from God's heart. Give Him a chance and they will ring in thy life now and forever. Jesus in life produces these harmonies. Therefore, "rejoice in the Lord always; and again I say rejoice." —Phil. 4:4.

Prayer—O God of compassion, enable us to cling steadfastly to the belief that all the harmonies of life came out of thine own heart. Thou hast created us to fulfil the music of Thy soul in this world. As Thy love shall not fail nor wilt Thou be frustrated in Thy part in us. Find Thou a way to undo all evil in us that Thy will may be realized in us. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

UNFEIGNED FAITH.

By John G. Truitt.

"When I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice; and I am persuaded that in thee also." —II Timothy 1:15.

"From a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures which are able to make thee wise unto Salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus."—II Tim. 3:15.

"The son of a certain woman, which was a Jewess, and believed."—Acts 16:1.

Paul was in prison. Prospects were not too bright. He expected the end, and declared himself ready. Of the future of the churches which he had established throughout Asia Minor, and Europe; and of those also which were yet to be established he was thinking. He faced death, and the issues were elemental. It was no time for trifling. Fantasies and foibles were out; the issues he faced were fundamental.

Who will carry on? Who will take charge like a Joshua to further the frontiers of faith? There will be struggle. Perhaps violent and wholesale persecutions of the people of the way of Christ. It will necessarily take one who has "learned to endure hardness as a good soldier." It will require one with unfeigned faith. It will require one who knows the Scriptures. It will require one who by birth and training understands the Old Testament religion out of which the New Testament religion grows. It will take one with the promise of years. One who was as particular as Paul about the persons who went with him on his missionary journeys will be very particular indeed about one to whom he may ask to go without him into "the care of all the churches."

He had better belong to the aristocracy of goodness! Timothy did. His mother's mother was a woman of faith. Paul does not go further back than that; perhaps many mothers prior to those two were also of the faith. But a girl who has been loved and trained and taught by a Christian mother should be able to rear a Christian son. No better equipment is there for a young mother to bring to the nursery with her than the heritage of a Christian mother for herself. The Christian faith of a person of the third generation in the aristocracy of goodness certainly ought not to be adulterated,—it should be "faith unfeigned."

May the merciful heavenly Father look with gracious compassion upon any young mother who coming to the care of her own baby boy or girl deliberately forgets the unfeigned faith of her forebears and fails to pass on the beautiful aristocracy of goodness. The world stands so much in need of men and women with a faith that has not been put on like a garment, but one that has grown into the very fabric for many generations,—"a thousand generations" of those who love God, and keep His commandments. We have been hearing about "Mother's Day." My friends, Mother's Day is the day she rocks the cradle! The "hand that rocks the cradle shall rule the world," but if she does not rock the cradle she loses her sceptre. If the young mother forgets her job, and plays with work which God himself has ordained to share with her then generations unborn are bound to suffer. But God will not forget the child whose mother has trained him up in the way of goodness. Timothy and Timothy's mother and grandmother had unfeigned faith.

He had better be familiar with the great teachings of the Holy Scriptures. Here again Timothy was qualified. "From a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures." The stories of faith, and goodness; the songs of peace and beauty; and the old prophecies of prophets who walked with, and spoke for God, were as familiar to Timothy as the Greek cultures of his own father. (His father was a Greek.) The language of the people of God did not have to be put on any more than did his faith. Boy and Bible and faith grew up together, under the tutelage of a young mother whose old mother had taught her in turn the triumphant march of a chosen people.

Young mothers will teach more by example than by examples! By rote they may set for their sons their little problems, but more than problems will be the persons eternally etched upon their souls. It is one thing to love the church, and honor it as God's greatest institution on earth, and the bride of Christ; and it is quite another thing to laugh at it in the presence of the younger members of the family. It is one thing to try to teach a child to respect his Sunday School, where he may become familiar with the Scriptures, and quite another to take him off any Sunday one pleases to see Aunt Jane as though it did not matter if he missed his Sunday School class. He knows he cannot miss classes on Monday. They mean something. He may miss class on Sunday. What does it matter? He has to be on time for Monday's class, but even Mother herself may miss or be late for the class on Sunday. Into the very fiber of his soul is begotten the "divine right" of desecration of the Holy Sabbath day! And may God have mercy upon that family, or nation whose children have no respect for the eternal truths found in the Word of God.

Read the speeches made by the colonial founders, or the constitutional formers, of our country, and you will find that they knew the language and principles of the Bible,— yea, even the King James version, at which the erudite sometimes love to laugh. There were mediocre people in those days it is true, and there were giants, and the giants were giants in goodness and stepped out often times of very poor cabins, but enwrapped in the riches expressed in the Holy Scriptures. They lived above the trifles of their day as the mountains tower above the plains.

Young mothers, do you expect your son to fill the ranks already overcrowded with those who do not care; or do you expect him to match up mightily to the measures of true greatness which will be uppermost in his day. Give him faith. Give him faith in God, faith in fellowman, and faith in himself as a child of God. Make whatever sacrifice necessary to give him that faith. Teach him the Holy Scriptures. Do it yourself as only mothers can. And let your church school aid you as only a church school can. There is place for the little Sunday School class, and may I emphatically add, there is a place for the exposition of the Word of God from the pulpit which should be enjoyed by every boy and girl in our land. I thank God for the boys and girls which delight to come every Sunday with their parents to hear the preaching of the Word of God from this pulpit, for while they may, or may not understand much that the poor preachers say, they will never forget that their mother and father worshipped God with them; they will never forget the stirring, soul-tones of this organ; they will never forget the singing of the songs, which songs will serve them in good stead throughout life; they will never forget the folks found here and their attitude toward things holy and divine; and sometime,

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

Our public school has closed and all the boys are ready for work. Since the school closed the weather man has given us so many rainy days and when it was not raining the ground has been so wet that we have not been able to do any work on the farm. We have had so much rain that we are fully a month behind with our work on the farm. We have lots of oats and vetch and clover that should have been mowed ten days ago but it could not be done. We are glad that we did not mow it as some of our neighbors did mow some real fine hay and lost it in the long rainy season. At this writing it has cleared up and the sun is shining, the birds are singing and we hope we will have at least ten days of clear weather. We are so far behind with our work and have so much to do that we hardly know where to begin.

Farming is an interesting vocation when the weather is favorable and the seasons are normal, but the farmer has his worries and disappointments as well as other occupations. He has the weather conditions to battle.

The writer was in a doctor's office sometime ago and he had a motto hanging on the wall that read something like this: "Anybody can smile when life flows along like a song but the person worth while is the person who can smile when everything goes dead wrong."

It is a little hard for a farmer to smile when the rain has kept him six weeks behind in his farm work. But why not smile. A frown will not change the situation. And too, you just make those about you feel better when you wear a smile. So whether it rains or the sun shines, just keep on smiling. CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

somewhere they are going to become aware that the church service is a "valley of decision" for the soul that nothing else quite is. And I can trust a decision made on the part of a boy or girl at the altar never to send a mother in gray hairs down to her grave. Tomorrow there is going to be a place for the girl or boy who has learned in the House of God the glory, and beauty, and meaning of divine worship.

He had better have a personal faith in Christ Jesus. The first thing we hear about Eunice, the mother of Timothy, from the historian Luke in the Book of Acts (16:1) is that she was a "Jewess, that believed." Here of course Luke is recording the fact of her faith in the Jesus preached by Paul. Hers was a personal faith in a personal Saviour. The next thing we hear of Eunice is from Paul when he is reminded of the unfeigned faith which both she and her own mother have. And then we have it from Paul that that same faith was in Timothy also. Mothers cannot have faith for us, but their faith in us and their faith in Jesus Christ, is next thing to having faith for us. If they have faith in us, and rightfully lead us to love the Holy Scriptures both by precept and example the faith which will be eventually found to be in us will be faith unfeigned.

OBITUARIES

KERNODLE.

Miss Mary Jane Kernodle was born November 7, 1861 and embarked for the spirit-land April 7, 1935 at the age of 73 years and 5 months.

Surviving her to mourn their loss are the followiug: Mrs. Sarah Neese, Whitsett, N. C., Mrs. Nettie Rich, Greensboro, N. C., Mrs. H. B. Gerringer, Florence, S. C., Mr. H. A. Kernodle, Brown Summit, N. C., and a number of other relatives and many friends.

Early in girlhood she professed Christ as her personal Saviour, joining Apple's Chapel where she remained a faithful member until the end.

In her normal days she was a very cheerful person, bringing sustenance to the lives of others with whom she associated. Miss Kernodle was always interested in the improvemeut and growth in spiritual things.

Funeral service was held in her memory in her home church, conducted by the writer aud Rev. C. A. Brown in accordance to her wish. May the Lord comfort the loved ones left behind.

BUSICK.

Inasmuch as our Heavenly Father has seen fit to remove from our midst our brother and fellow-worker, James J. Busick, we humbly bow in submission to the will of Him who knoweth and doeth all things well. Brother Busick was a member for the greater part of his life of Hines Chapel Christian Church, and for more than twenty years a member of the Board of Deacons, being the Chairman of this Board at the time of his death. Brother Busick was at all times very much interested in the work of the church.

Therefore, be it resolved:

First, that we feel greatly the loss of our beloved co-worker, and commend his soul to the rest of Heaven, which he richly deserves, and that we strive to meet him in the Home above.

Second, that we seek to profit by the example he set before us while living.

Third, that a copy of these resolutions be spread on our minutes, a copy sent to The Christian Sun, and a copy to the family.

COX.

Arthur Cox was born September 9, 1891 and died May 10, 1935. He was the oldest son of Brother and Sister J. T. Cox.

He was married to Miss Mamie Holloway January 30, 1911. She is deeply bowed in sorrow. Arthur was a good husband and very devoted to his wife who has been in poor health for several years.

He was a fiue Christian man. His frieuds were numbered by his acquaintances. He leaves to mourn his departure a father aud mother, oue brother, a neice and uephew, and hosts of other relatives and frieuds.

Arthur was killed by the accideutal discharge of his guu. He was removing it from his car when the hammer caught aud the gun was discharged killing him almost instantly.

This great bereavement fell with great force upou his wife, father and mother. It was so unexpected and sudden their grief was almost unbearable.

In the midst of a large assembly of loved ones and friends, his funeral was held Suuday, May 12th, at 2:30 P. M. in Lanett Christian Church. The large auditorium of the building was filled with friends of the family.

Revs. H. M. Gray and J. D. Dollar, former pastors, conducted the funeral service. The Masons had charge of the ceremonies at the grave.

God bless the bereaved ones and keep them uutil the Great Day and may his soul rest in peace. G. D. HUNT.

KING.

Dora Riddick Kiug, wife of John Walter King, died May 4th, 1935.

Off in the distauce the dull thunder of the cannonade could be heard as the battle rolled on to Appomattox. It was in April, 1865, aud the sun was setting on the Sounthern Confederacy.

Soou Geueral Robert E. Lee met with General Grant and the armies of the North aud South laid down their arms and returued to their homes to rebuild their nation.

Among those distinguished soldiers to return to their homes in Nansemond Co., Virginia (Cypress Magisterial District) was James Edward Riddick, father of Dora Riddick Kiug, to find the Yankees had laid waste their premises.

James Edward Riddick was a man of fine family lineage of zeal and character and he took the task of rebuilding the home, on the famous White Marsh Road, which winds its way down beside the Dismal Swamp and deep-tangled wild wood of Lake Drummou.

Iu this stately mansion, Dora Riddick King was born. Beauty there was with every season with its changes!

The soug birds had their nests hard by and the call of the whip-poor-will, the owl, the eagle, floated through the shivering foliage.

Here beneath the same sun, this child of nature learned the God of revelation and from her heart went up many a prayer. Early in life she identified herself with Cypress Chapel Christian Church, and received her education at beautiful Spring Hill Seminary. She drank from the waters of the old, old spring which flows at the foot of the hill.

The operations of her mind were energetic and intelligent. Her ambition was lofty and noble, inspired with higher thoughts and achievements; she aimed at diguity iu the same elevated spirit.

Her conduct was characterized by the grandeur of her views and the magnitude of her spirit. Her piety was genuine aud fervent. Religion mingled with the whole course of her thoughts and actions showed forth in her most useful life.

Iu rebuilding the uew church at Cypress Chapel, Virgiuia, at a cost of $25,000, Dora Riddick King with other members of the church and community gave herself unreservedly to the task of paying the church debt through the Ladies' Aid Society aud other agencies of the church this debt has almost been canceled.

On the Monumeut of Time and labors for the cause of the church and commuuity, Dora Riddick King's name is engraved, to shine as a beacon light to the ages. V. B. HARRELL.

FARMER.

Miss Sallie Bet Farmer, after an illness of several weeks, died April 7, 1935, aged 75 years. Funeral and burial at her old homestead. Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, Ingram, Va., conducted the funeral. She was a faithful member of the Home Department of Pleasaut Grove S. S. We cherish the memory of her quiet unassuming Christian life and may we strive to follow in the path she loved.

FULLER.

Little Richard James Fuller was born August 11, 1933 and died April 28, 1935 in the hospital at Fayetteville, N. C., at the age of 1 year, 8 months and 17 days. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Y. Fuller of Lumber Bridge, N. C.

Those surviving to lament his going are his devoted parents, three brothers one sister and many cousins.

Funeral services were conducted at Apple's Chapel by the writer and interment made in the church cemetery. The floral offering was very impressive. Richard's stay was brief on earth. He budded here to bloom in heaven. Our Lord gathers the lambs into His tender care.

May the comfort of our Lord be upon the loved ones.

Mechanizing Cotton Picking.—

There has been recently invented a cotton picker that its inventor claims has solved this age-old problem. It combs the rows, stradle fashion. It refuses to harvest the green cotton, accepting only the cotton from mature bolls. It will pick over 1,000 lbs an hour, the equivalent of a week's work for a good hand.

The "Normandie" Establishes New Record.—

On her maiden voyage from France to New York, the Normandie, the new trans-Atlantic palace of the French Line, established a record of approximately twenty-nine miles an hour, thus proving her claim to be the fastest as well as the largest passenger ship afloat. On trial runs off the coast of Brittany, her four 40,000 hp. motors carried her at the top speed of 30 knots per hour.

Jane Addams Passes.—

Jane Addams, possibly best known in connection with Hull House, widely known social settlement, died on May 21st, in her 75th year. She was born at Cedarville, Ill., on September 6, 1860. She graduated at Rockford Seminary and studied in Europe. Giving up a life of social pleasure and of idle wealth, Miss Addams decided to devote herself to bettering social conditions. Hull House, above referred to, was established in 1889, and through it untold good has been accomplished. Miss Addams was a leader in the suffrage and prohibition movements. She was a champion of world peace and as such the recipient of the Nobel Peace Prize.

Huge Lens Replaited.—

Astronomers of the Mt. Wilson Observatory, near Pasadena, Calif., have figuratively speaking, been holding their breath. It has been customary to plate the reflectors of telescopes with silver, and this operation has to be repeated at rather frequent intervals. Only recently, however, a process was invented by Dr. John Strong of the California Institute of Technology, whereby Aluminum might be used for this plaiting. Now the delicate operation has been performed and the world's largest telescope reflector is in use again. Its surface has been covered by a thin, bright and permanent coat of aluminum. Not only is this aluminum surface said to have the advantage of permanency, but it will reflect the ultra-violet rays of light, which silver does not.

English Church Invited "Home."—

An invitation to return to the fold of the Roman Catholic Church was extended by Pope Pius to England in a sermon preached on Sunday, May 19th. The Pope took advantage of a special service marking the cononization of two Britons, Sir Thomas Moore and Bishop John Fisher, to voice his plea for England's reunion with Catholicism. "We desire," he said, speaking in Latin, "that with your ardent prayers invoking patronage of the new saints you ask of the Lord that which is so dear to the Lord, namely, that England, in the words of St. Paul, 'meditating the happy consummation which crowned the life' of her two martyrs, may 'follow them in their faith and return to the Father's house' in unity, faith and knowledge of the Son of God." He said further: "Let those who are still separated from us consider attentively the ancient glories of their church, which were at once the reflection and the increment of the glories of Rome. Let them consider moreover, and remember that this Apostolic See has been waiting for them so long and so anxiously, not as coming to a strange dwelling place, but as finally returning to thetr paternal home."—Exchange.

The Smaller College.—

At this time when all small colleges are having a difficult time in providing for their budgets, and when our own Elon College is making desperate efforts to place itself in a more secure financial position, the following statement is most interesting and timely, though made some time ago. Former President Hoover, in a broadcast, said: "Whatever be the magnificent services of the larger and highly specialized universities, the liberal arts colleges place an emphasis upon personal contacts of teacher and student which renders them a vital part of our educational system. A primary purpose of education is a product of high character and noble ideals, which regards moral and spiritual qualities superior to mere material things, without which any purely economic system would collapse. Throughout our history these colleges have been and are now the seedbeds of leadership. They have contributed a large part of the presence in our land of nearly 3,000,000 college-trained men and women. . . . . The finest traditions in our country are rooted in their associations and their inspiration." There is no one in our entire constituency who cannot help make secure the college around which the Christian traditions of the Southern Convention have been builded. When the time comes, be ready to do your part.

"F. D. Envisions Martial Law."—

Two bills before Congress "must" be passed if we are to avoid martial law, according to a statement attributed to the President on Wednesday of this week. These bills are the Wagner labor disputes bill and the Guffey-Snyder coal stabilization bill. These measures are being most vigorously insisted upon by labor leaders. The United Mine Workers have made preparations for a strike beginning on June 17th, which will involve 450,000 miners. John L. Lewis, president of the miners' unions, says that only the enactment of the Guffey bill could prevent this strike, acknowledging that it would be impossible for the operators to meet the demands of the miners without the "price control" features of the bill, which would hand on to the consumer the cost of meeting these demands. The Wagner bill has been revised somewhat, in an effort to assure its legality; but it has not been revised at all in regard to the strangle-hold it would give the American Federation of Labor over employers and non-union employees. A compulsory thirty-hour week for industry, under present conditions, would seem a curse rather than a blessing to the working man. The amended bill is said to have the approval of the President, but the course ahead of it is not entirely smooth, as the majority of the House Rules Committee are opposed to bringing the bill to a vote.

The Passing of the New Deal.—

With the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court on Monday of last week, the NIRA, which had been at least feeling "unwell," passed away. Various newspaper and magazine comments have proved most interesting. Probably the most disturbing picture is presented by our own Advance, which thinks that the decision may "leave the way open for unregulated individualism, with no safeguards against child labor, the sweatshop, and other evils against which the NRA in its finer aspects has constituted a barrier." Further on it says: "We are probably in for a period of industrial and social debauchery, with inevitable strife"; but hopes that "out of it may come a reassertion, and a better assertion, of principles that have become well established, however much they seem to be immediately obscured." The writer of this page usually gives in as far as possible facts without personal opinions. This is a deviation from a general rule. NRA has most certainly not been an unmixed blessing. There have been many instances in which it has worked hardships that were almost unendurable: this has been especially so with the small employer. The worst of such a plan is that it presupposes that everyone who is in the position to do so is out to take unfair advantage of one's fellowmen, unless restrained from so doing by a code of laws, backed by the Federal government. Such, absolutely, is not the case. The unfair man is in the minority, just as is the criminal. It is this that makes such cases news matter for the front pages of our daily papers. The United States is not going to the dogs because the pet schemes of a rather bureaucratic government have gone awry. If the radical "leaders" with which this country is infested can be eliminated, the future will be secure. Mr. Average American citizen is still, as in the yesteryears, an honest, God-fearing man, and he will prove it.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

President L. E. Smith has been in Richmond several days this week in the interest of Elon College.

Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, Christian Temple, Norfolk, writes: "I am planning to bring a large group of our young people to the Elon Summer School." It is devoutly to be hoped that many other pastors are planning likewise for this good and great event. Pastors as well as members will profit by the splendid program that is to be presented. Remember the dates—June 24-30.

At its recent Commencement, Elon College conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity upon our distinguished friend and brother, Rev. Russell James Clinchy, D. D., pastor of Mount Pleasant Congregational-Christian Church, Washington, D. C. Dr. Clinchy has preached at Elon on previous occasions, and always with distinction, consecration and ability. The honor thus conferred is richly deserved and will be worn with becoming modesty and dignity.

Mr. W. B. Truitt, Greensboro, president of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, calls attention to the forthcoming annual session:—Place, Bethel Church, Caswell County, N. C.; Time, June 20-21. "Some of our superintendents are very busy and may forget. Will you get behind things at your church and get it represented? It is for superintendents, teachers and young people who will be leaders. May we depend on you? It's all for the Cause."

Rev. F. Ervin Hyde of our Monticello Church has assisting him in a meeting this week, Rev. E. J. Sanderson according to the following, special to Daily News: "Beginning June 2nd, Rev. Emmerson J. Sanderson, of Keswich, Ontario, Canada, will conduct a series of evangelistic services at Monticello Christian Church. Rev. Mr. Sanderson is the minister of the Keswish Congregationalist-Christian church. Members and also friends of the church are invited to attend. Services will begin promptly at 8 P. M.

Elon College at its recent Commencement very graciously honored itself in honoring Col. E. E. Holland of Suffolk, Va. In awarding the degree of Doctor of Laws to Col. Holland, the trustees of the College gave due recognition of real worth and merit, achievement and distinction, as well as of loyalty and faithfulness in service to College, Church and State. Col. Holland has served as a trustee of the College since its founding, forty-five years ago, and in that capacity has been one of the ablest and wisest counsellors of the institution. Seldom has he missed an annual meeting of the Board, and through many years has served as a special committeeman from the trustees in its various tasks of investment and administration. He has also served his State and his nation well, having been the Commonwealth's attorney for many years, also State Senator and Congressman from the Second District of Virginia. He has served faithfully his community, having been president of the Farmers Bank of Nansemond for many years and also teacher of the Men's Bible Class in the Suffolk Church. No degree the College has conferred has been more richly merited and deserved.

CHRISTIAN SUN readers will recall the very strong and striking contribution to our columns on the editorial pages of THE SUN of May 23rd, by Rev. Carlyle Summerbell, D. D. Little did we reckon at the time that this was the last message that Dr. Summerbell would pen for THE SUN to which he had contributed from time to time in the past years. The following from Advance of May 30th brings the note of sorrow: "Rev. Carlyle Summerbell, well-known minister of the Christian church, and one-time president of Palmer College, Albany, Mo., whose ministry in recent years has been among the Unitarians, and who was for five years pastor of the Unitarian church, Roslindale, Mass., died suddenly on May 21st, while attending the American Unitarian Association's annual meeting in Tremont Temple, Boston. Dr. Summerbell had just addressed the gathering, winning an ovation as he pleaded for the immediate adoption of a program of social action, which later was temporarily shelved by referring it to the Commission of Appraisal for further study. The applause continued as he left the platform and entered an ante-room, where a few moments later he was stricken. Death came at a moment that typified a life vigorous in action, powerful in debate, and manful in the fight for right. Next week's Advance will have fuller obituary notice and reference to the closing incident of Dr. Summerbell's career."

A CALL FOR COOPERATION.

The Executive Committee of the Eastern Va. S. S. and C. E. Convention hopes to have one of the most inspirational and instructive Conventions at Newport News Congregational-Christian Church July 23rd that it has ever had. The committee has held several meetings, arranging for this program. It has not relied upon its own wisdom for this arrangement, but has called into conference some of the leading ministers and workers from our own denomination and outside as well to help in working out a practical, helpful program for our people.

The committee took this step because it felt that our people wanted the best and deserved the best that could be secured. Now in order for our local Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies to get the benefit of this Convention, we are asking that each minister and Sunday School Superintendent plan: first to be there in person, second, see to it that every Superintendent of the various departments of the Sunday School and every Christian Endeavor president be there, third, have the delegates duly elected in time to plan to go, and fourth, see that the dues are sent in from your school and society ahead of time, fifth, leave home in time to get there by ten o'clock and stay for the night service, one of the best features of the day will be at 8 o'clock. The program will close in time for you to get to your home before very late.

We are counting on you to cooperate with us in this. If you read this article, see that your Sunday School complies with its request.

JOSEPH E. MCCAULEY, Pres.

INCREASES REPORTED IN GIFTS TO CHURCH.

Montreat, May 26—A. P.—The gain of approximately $42,000 in gifts to its benevolent causes, reported by the various boards of the Southern Presbyterian church is due in large measure to the more than 700 churches which have completed or are using a 13-week period of tithing, says the annual report of the committee on stewardship and finance which is to be presented to the church's general assembly meeting here Thursday.

The 13-week tithing plan, popularly known as the Belmont covenant plan, originated in the Belmont Presbyterian church, of Roanoke, Virginia, of which the Rev. G. L. Whiteley is pastor. The plan presented to the assembly a year ago has spread over the church's entire territory of 16 states and has resulted in an increase in interest, attendance and gifts to the church, the report said.

The report added that the plan had attracted wide attention all over the United States and in several foreign countries, requests having been received from 12 other denominations for information and literature.

As a result of a widespread adoption of the plan, the report said, an increase of nearly 12,000 tithers was noted during the year, making a total of approximately 30,000 Presbyterians who support their denominational benevolences and local work by the scriptural plan of contributing ten per cent of income to the church.

The committee members said financial leaders are confident that participation by so many of the churches in the tithing plan will more than offset the results of the slight decrease in the number of churches conducting an every-member canvass for the year.—Greensboro Daily News.

RECEIPTS ON LANTERN FUND.

This completes the list of those from whom I have received money for the lanterns. We will gladly receive donations from others who have not had a part in this and wish to contribute. This was a most pleasing feature of Commencement and the lanterns will be used during Commencements from year to year.

CONVENTION OFFICERS.

President, Mr. W. B. Truitt, Greensboro, N. C.
1st Vice President, Mr. W. T. Dunn, Lynchburg, Va.
2nd Vice President, Rev. C. E. Newman, Virgilina, Va.
Recording Sec'y., Miss Evelyn Stewart,, Greensboro, N. C.
Ass't. Recording Sec'y., Mr. John R. Foster, Jr., Greensboro, N. C.
Corresponding Sec'y., Rev. Wm. T. Scott, Winston-Salem, N. C.

BASIS OF CONVENTION MEMBERSHIP.

The membership of the Convention consists of the pastors of the conference, Sunday School, Divisional and Departmental Superintendents, Presidents of Christian Endeavor Societies, and one representative from each Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society for each twenty-five members or fraction thereof.

(Be sure to elect and send your delegates.)

CONVENTION FINANCES.

The apportionment for each Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society constituting the Convention is five cents annually per enrolled member of each Sunday School and Society holding membership in this Convention.

(Make an earnest effort to send your apportionment to the Convention, for that is the only way of securing funds for furthering the work of Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavors.)

AN INSPIRING EXAMPLE FOR BOYS.

Hon. Clyde R. Hoey's offering himself for governor will bring an inspiring example to the attention of thousands of boys in North Carolina who are conscious of limitations that tend to discourage them as they look ahead. Doubtless thousands will profit by the success that has attended this native Tar Hell.

In proof of this we quote from a sketch written by Lee B. Weathers of Shelby, editor of the Star. Our friend, Mr. Weathers, says:

"Clyde Roark Hoey, born in Shelby on December 11, 1877, the son of a Confederate army officer, Capt. S. A. and Mrs. Charlie Roark Hoey, his life story reads very much like a chapter out of fiction instead of real life.

The average North Carolinian not familiar with the intimate details of the Shelby man's life would hardly realize that he has not attended school since the age of 12 years, except for a short law course in the University of North Carolina summer school. Yet his self-education, started in boyhood when it became necessary to leave school in order to earn his livelihood, has been so thorough that for years he has been ranked as one of the state's leading attorneys and one of the South's most outstanding orators.

He worked on a farm, while not attending school until the age of 12 and then entered a printing office and began work as the 'shop devil' to learn the trade. At the age of 17 he purchased, on credit, the newspaper for which he worked and became publisher and editor thereof. When only 20 years of age he was elected to the state legislature, serving two terms in the house and one in the state senate. He studiew law, in the meantime, at night, at home and during the rare few hours of leisure at the printing office, where he was still one of the printers as well as owner and editor. In 1908, after 14 years as 'devil,' printer and editor-lawyer he disposed of his newspaper interests and has since devoted his full time to the practice of law.

Few men have participated in more political campaigns for the Democratic party and, during the last 20 years he has spoken in practically all of the 100 counties in North Carolina. Mr. Hoey's persuasive oratorical talent has been drafted, or rather volunteered, for every state and national campaign of any importance since 1910. Despite his work for the party and its candidates, in which he has remained consistently Democratic through victory and defeat, the widely known Shelby attorney has held only one elective office, and that for a very short period, since his early experience in the General Assembly. He was appointed assistant district attorney of the United States district court, Western North Carolina district, in 1913, and served in that capacity until 1919, when he was elected to Congress from the old Ninth, now the Tenth district, but declined to seek re-election.

He has been a member of the Methodist church since the age of 10 and is today one of the best known laymen in the Southern Methodist Church. For 15 years he has taught a large Bible Class in his home church and is a member of the following lodges: Masonic, Odd Fellows, Junior Order, Woodmen of the World, Knights of Pythias, and Kiwanis.

Mr. Hoey married Miss Bessie Gardner in 1910 and they have three children: Clyde, Jr., Charles and Miss Isabel."

In the long ago when James A. Garfield was nominated for President of the United States, this writer was a country lad, who with thousands of others was thrilled to hear the story of how little "Jimmie" Garfield drove the mules of the tow-path of the canals in order to help his poor mother make a living for the family and how the boy of the tow-path was to become President of the United States.

In like manner there will be poor boys in mountain coves, on the farms, in the cotton mills, and in the towns and cities of North Carolina, where their opportunities are not equal to their associates, who will rejoice to read the life story of Clyde Hoey, the best known and best loved private citizen of North Carolina, and whom the people delight to honor.—Editorial in N. C. Christian Advocate.

HOME.

Home's not merely four square walls,
Though with pictures hung and gilded;
Home is where affection calls,
Filled with shrines the heart hath builded!

Home! go watch the faithful dove,
Sailing 'neath the heaven above us;
Home is where there's one to love!
Home is where there's one to love us!

Home's not merely roof and room,
It needs something to endear it;
Home is where the heart can bloom,
Where there's some kind lip to cheers it!

What is home with none to meet,
None to welcome, none to greet us?
Home is sweet——and only sweet—
When there's one we love to meet us!

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

SERMON AND ADDRESS.

Baccalaureates, both in sermon and address, are supposed to be the best, the latest and the last word of preacher and speaker to graduates. It was significant at the recent Elon Commencement that, although the minister came from Connecticut and speaker from the Senate of the United States, both sounded similar if not identical notes to the graduates to whom their messages were delivered. The significance was in the fact that in this time of doubt, disputation, and chaos, both preacher and speaker harked back to fundamentals and made a plea for the Past. Both contended that while the present was offering many solutions, theories and prophecies to solve the problems confronting us, the one hope of solving these problems was in the light of experience coming out of the Past.

Rev. Wm. Horace Day, D. D., Bridgeport, Connecticut, who preached the baccalaureate sermon took for his text, "We should obey God rather than man." Senator Josiah W. Bailey of North Carolina, took for his theme, "'The Constitution of the United States," and declared that as citizens obedience to the Constitution was imperative if our Republic is to endure.

Dr. Day's sermon dealt principally with the contribution that the Puritans had made to the religious thought and stability and life of our church and the nation, and declared we could not with safety depart from the fundamental teachings and experiences of our ancestors. The fundamental law of life is obedience to God as He speaks to us through our convictions of duty and righteousness. We cannot afford to let the new things sweep us away from our moorings nor obscure our convictions of duty and righteousness and truth as taught in our sacred Scriptures and the experiences of the past.

Senator Bailey declared himself a friend to the President of the College and of the College itself because of the spirit of devotion to duty and to God clearly manifest in the attitude and activities of the president and of the college. It is this call of duty to the higher things of life that we cannot with impunity ignore. And he warned the class of graduates that the past had much to offer, in fact the best that could be offered to them, as they would on tomorrow take up their pilgrimage in a torn and a weary land. The Senator declared that the Constitution of the United States was not the product of the mind of any one man or a single group of men, but that it was a growth out of the minds and experiences of men through hundreds and thousands of years, and was the ablest and the safest document guaranteeing human rights and liberties that had ever been formed out of the minds and experiences of men. Man's most difficult problem through the ages had been that of securing and protecting human rights, equality before the law, and liberty. The Constitution of the United States, like the ten Commandments, is as fresh and as modern today as when first written. Moses, the ancient law-giver and faithful man of God, helped to carve nations out of serfs, slaves and bondsmen, and in doing so gave to the world the ten Commandments which were, indeed, a covenant of God with man and man with God. Out of the ten Commandments and magna carta and every bill of rights since written grew the Constitution of the United States, and it is fundamental to our life and existence as a nation and a republic. The President of the United States, our Senators and Representatives in Congress are required, said the speaker, to take one oath, and one oath only, and that oath is to defend and support the Constitution of the United States. As the voice of God is fundamental to the spiritual and religious life of a people, the Constitution is fundamental to the political, economic and social life of the Republic.

So these baccalaureates, speaking their last words to the graduates who are about to go forth into a worn and weary time, summoned them to be true to the fundamentals of the eternal principles of Deity and of duty which time had proven true and which would not fail us in a time of doubt and chaos.

THEIR PROBLEM NOT YET SOLVED.

The News-Leader, of Richmond, Va., was a desperate advocate of prohibition repeal and open stores for the sale of liquor. As public drunkenness is now on a tremendous increase in Virginia, the News-Leader gives this warning to its readers:

"The increase in public drunkenness since the opening of the ABC stores represents a serious threat to the future of state control. Some increase was to be expected when men, for the first time in many years, could get liquor as they wanted it. Other individuals, as always, misuse their liberty. Employers will deal sternly with drunkenness among their own workers, but all of us must combat excessive drinking. Unless we do, we may expect a public uprising, against drunken drivers especially. And if an uprising should come, Virginia may swing back to prohibition."

And would it not be awful, especially for the News-Leader and other papers of its kind through out the state that fought prohibition so vigorously, if prohibition were to return? It would mean a loss of several thousand dollars monthly to these papers in advertisements, as one may judge from the columns of liquor ads they carry.

SUMMER CONFERENCES.

One of the most vital phases of our modern church work is the Summer Conference program which is largely for young people. These conferences face life and religion with open mind and furnish opportunities for study, discussion, recreation, fellowship and worship. The inspiration gained therefrom and the stimulus and challenge, combined with the training for better service and better Christian living, make these conferences most valuable to our church life.

The schedule of our denominational conferences in the southeast, so far as they have been reported to the writer, is as follows: Florida, DeLeon Springs, June 8-15; St. Simon's Island, (Rev. Alan T. Jones' parish) June 8-21; Grandview, Tennessee, June 17-24; Elon College, N. C., June 24-30; Wadley, Alabama, Southern Union College, July 8-14; Southeast Alabama, Midland City, July 15-21; Georgia Conference, Piedmont College, July 22-29. There will be two negro conferences as follows: King's Mountain, June 18-26 and Kamp Knighton, Morbihan, La., July 1-10. The Conferences at Grandview and Elon College will serve as substitutes for the former Blue Ridge Conference.

In each of these conferences the state superintendents and the extension workers will be in general charge. At the Elon Conference, as formerly, Rev. F. C. Lester and the Board of Christian Education, combined with Superintendents and Extension Workers of the Carolinas, Georgia and Florida will be leaders.

The total attendance at all these conferences last summer was eight hundred.

STUDENT SUMMER SERVICE.

The Student Summer Service is another interesting phase of our summer church program. It affords a splendid opportunity for young people in colleges and theological seminaries to bring the aspirations of their lives to young people and others, especially in our rural churches, though they also serve in larger towns. These young people conduct Vacation Church Schools and in other ways help to build up the church work among children and young people, and their service brings to a multitude of young people a new conception of religion and the fact that Christianity means something of practical value in the daily round of life. In the southeast this program of student service was largely developed under the leadership of Dr. W. Knighton Bloom, who was greatly beloved by all the students who worked under him. Under his inspiration several hundred of them worked and ministered, and many of them have entered into the Christian ministry or devoted their lives to Christian service.

The following students have been appointed for service this year: Those serving under the direction of Rev. Milo J. Sweet, Pastor at Large for the Carolinas and Georgia, are as follows: From Elon College, Wm. Andes, Jennie Belle Abernathy, Joy Grigsby, Sarah Hook and Aubrey Todd. From Piedmont College, Bernice Davis, Mary Moncrief, Sarah Nation and Gerald Smith. From Southern Seminary Foundation, Nashville, Cary Key and Guy Usher. From Union Theological Seminary, N. Y., Eben Chapman. From Middlebury College, Vermont, Loring Chase. From Schauffler School, Cleveland, Dorothy

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS FOR MORAL EDUCATION.

By Roy C. Helfenstein, M. A., D. D.
Minister, People's Church, Dover Del.

"Article II.

For the public school to meet its responsibility in moral education, every teacher in every department of the school should not only know enough to teach the boys and girls, but should first of all, be good enough to teach the boys and girls. In other words, every teacher should possess a moral character that is above reproach. The superintendent of a large Consolidated School system in the Middle West made this declaration recently, "When employing new teachers, I am more anxious to ascertain what the applicants are,—their moral character, than what they know,—their intellectual fitness. Their educational background and teacher's certificate indicate that they know enough to teach in my school. I must make sure that they are good enough."

A few years ago a young man who had graduated from one of the leading colleges of the nation, receiving his A. B. degree "Magna Cum Laude" at the age of nineteen years, entered one of the first rank universities of America for graduate study. Here again he distinguished himself by his intellectual brilliancy, winning the highest scholastic honors of the university and receiving the M. A. and Ph. D. degrees and a two-year scholarship to pursue his studies in one of the largest European universities where again he won special scholastic honors. He was an intellectual genius. Returning to America, he received a position as Associate professor in his Alma Mater. Within three years he was promoted to a full professorship to be the head of his department. But one day, the President of the institution learned that there was a serious moral flaw in the young man's character, a moral twist which all through his high school, college, and university studies had not been known by those who cared. He was brought before the Board of Faculty Advisors and the Board of Trustees to make his defense. He had none except the fact of his scholastic attainments, the which, no matter how great, can never be a substitute for character. He was forthwith discharged from his position because, though intellectually qualified to head his particular department in any university in the land, he was not good enough, not morally qualified, to be the teacher of any man's son,—not morally qualified to be a leader of young life. Though at the time of his exposure and discharge he was one of the highest salaried professors in the nation, yet, after that, regardless of scholastic attainments he could not secure a position as teacher of a district school at a country cross-roads at fifty dollars a month because his character was known to be wrong. "Intellectual attainment is something, but nobility of character is everything."

A certain school board in New England had been petitioned by interested parents regarding the desirability of discontinuing the services of a member of the high school faculty who headed one of the departments by reason of his exceptional intellectual efficiency, but whose life of duplicity and low moral standards were a reflection upon the community as well as upon the school. The superintendent appealed to the board to replace the man in the interest of the moral ideals of the school. But the president of the board replied that this professor was too valuable a member of the faculty to lose. "You are wrong," declared the superintendent, "No teacher is too valuable to lose if his character is not what is ought to be. No teacher, regardless of his intellectual efficiency, if his moral lapses or even moral indiscretions become gossip material for the students and the parents has any value whatsoever to our school."

It is needless to say that after such a declaration by the superintendent, the precident of the board saw the whole question in a different light, and the petition for a change was heeded.

In considering the responsibility of the public schools for moral education, too much emphasis cannot be laid upon the intellectual equipment of a teacher. But personality and moral character are of even greater importance. It is not a question of "either intellectual efficiency" or "moral consistency,"—it is a question of "both intellectual efficiency and moral consistency." With 27,000 unemployed teachers in America holding first grade certificates, the public schools are in a position to demand and to secure only "morally qualified" teachers.

The reason it is so important that only teachers of the highest moral character shall be employed by the public schools in order for the schools to meet their responsibility in moral education is because the teacher touches the child's life in such a vital manner. Elizabeth Browning in conversation with Chas. Kingsley, whose noble life she so greatly admired because of its genuine goodness, asked Mr. Kingsley, "What is the secret of your wonderful life? Tell me so that I may make my life beautiful too." Mr. Kingsley replied, "I had a friend." How much a single friend of noble character can mean to any life! What tragedies come to lives because of a single ignoble friendship! But teachers may come closer to the life of a child than any friend can come in later years. Hence we cannot over-emphasize the importance of having only teachers of high and noble character, teachers whose lives ring true in our public schools. How many men and women who have made good in life,—men and women who have attained places of prominent leadership in the world,—if asked the secret of their character and success would give the answer, "I had a teacher." Some teacher with a fine character back there in public school during the impressionable years of life won their admiration, touched the spark of their aspirations, and by genuine goodness of life inspired them to seek "The Good Life" for themselves.

Thirty years ago the major emphasis by the public schools of our nation was "Better Prepared Teacher," and the standards of intellectual training were raised in a very drastic manner, many teachers who had been teaching for years in the public schools being compelled to drop out because they were unable to qualify—the new educational requirements were beyond hem.

Then about twenty years ago the major emphasis became,—"Better School Buildings and More Adequate Facilities." It was insisted that the public school buildings should be an extension of the best homes in the community; that the public school buildings should express hopes that the parents cherished for their children, and the faith of the present in the future. As a consequence, a new "School-Building-Program" of gigantic proportions was launched throughout the nation. The proverbial "Little Red School House," which was usually white or drab gray, gave way to the large, beautiful "Consolidated Township School Building." The old factory-appearing and architectural monstrosities, serving as city school buildings, gave way to imposing, artistic edifices properly designed and equipped for educational purposes—the pride of nearly every city in our broad land today. This delayed emphasis on the need of better designed and better equipped public school buildings received enthusiastic response in every section of the country.

And now within very recent years, the major emphasis among outstanding leaders in public school work is the responsibility of the public schools in giving moral guidance to children and youth, and the imperative need not only of having well-trained teachers of high moral character in every department of the school, but also the need of having special teachers who are specially trained and specially qualified to direct the program of moral education in each school just as the schools for several years have had special teachers to direct the physical education, the music, and the manual arts program of the school.

The real function of the public school is not merely to direct the mental discipline of the child, but also to direct the moral discipline of the child by cooperating with the home and the church in training childhood and youth to become worthy members of society, and in preparing the boys and girls to play their part in the great drama of life in the home, in industry, in business, in the professions, in the church, and in social life. It is just as important to develop proper attitudes within the child's life as to cultivate certain skills. It is just as important that the child shall have correct ideals as that it shall have correct ideas. Character is just as essential as knowledge and even more essential for both pupils and teachers. That is the conviction of leaders in public school education today. And no doubt the Parent-Teachers Associations throughout the nation are largely responsible for this new emphasis on moral education.

Those who are opposed to the idea of the public school accepting responsibility in moral education are finding the rising tide of both public and educational sentiment against them. But there are still certain leaders in public school work who say that the whole problem of moral education or training in the conduct of life rests with the home and the church, and that the one business of the public school is to direct the mental development of the child. They would prepare the boys and girls to meet certain intelligence tests, but leave them unprepared to meet the even more important character tests that life imposes. The fact is that high school graduates should be required to meet certain revealing character tests, the same as they are required to meet certain intelligence tests in order to matriculate for College or University. It is a very serious question whether society should give further education to those finishing high school with certain moral twists, and unable to pass a character test, just because they have keen minds, for education equips a person to become either a bigger friend to society or a bigger enemy. As Will Rogers puts it "The educated crook is the crookedest crook." And we all know that the educated scoundrel, the educated criminal, the educated libertine naturally becomes the leader of his particular gang. It will be a happy day for society when in its whole system of public school education it will place moral education first, and condition the promotion or advancement of the student for further intellectual training upon evidence of the proper response having been made to the moral training already received.

(To be concluded.)

I have been impressed by the fact that few missionaries are pessimistic, though they work in the hardest fields in the world. The real danger to Christianity is in slowing down. Going on is a secret of victory. It was the late Dr. A. C. McGiffert who said, "Vision of God comes from activity."—Bishop Frances J. McConnell.

One obvious test of progress in religion is a questioning and an awakened mind. To be asking questions about our religion is surely a sign of growth of grace.—Canon F. R. Barry.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Oak Grove Christian Church in Gates County, North Carolina, is to be dedicated the second Sunday in June. The program will include a service at 11:00 A. M. and another at 3:00 P. M. Dinner will be served after the forenoon service.

This church is a child of Damascus Church, of Sunbury, North Carolina. Rev. C. E. Gerringer is the pastor. Several years ago, under the pastoral care of Rev. J. M. Roberts, the former building was entirely remodelled, and several Sunday school rooms were added. The church has made many sacrifices to pay off the building debt, incurred at that time. Friends of the church will unite in rejoicing that the debt is paid, and the beautiful building may now be formally dedicated.

On the second Sunday in July, Berea, Nansemond, will dedicate the new Sunday school rooms built last year. Dr. N. G. Newman, a former pastor, is expected to preach the dedicatory sermon. The service will be held at 11:30 A. M., and the public is invited to attend. There will be no appeal for money to pay for the building, as the rooms were added on the pay-as-you-go plan.

This addition has created new interest in the Sunday school, and the people are much pleased with the improvement.

On the fifth Sunday in June, Mt. Carmel church will have a Home Coming Day. There will be two services; one at 11:00 A. M. and the other at 3:00 P. M. Dinner will be served at the noon hour. The church desires all former members to be present with the present membership to enjoy this day of fellowship and worship. This church has had a wonderful history, and has made a rich contribution to the community and the denomination. A historical sketch of the church is being prepared, and will be read on that day.

Dr. W. M. Jay has completed his term as pastor of Holland Christian Church, his resignation being effective June 1st. This leaves this strong church without a pastor. It is the wish of many friends that Dr. Jay may secure full time work and remain in the Conference. He is serving as pastor of Damascus and Eure. It is the wish also that the Holland church may secure a pastor at an early date, and continue the fine work of that large congregation. Every church needs the leadership of a pastor to carry on the larger work of the kingdom.

The churches are facing a great opportunity in this day of political and social unrest. This is not a time to convert pulpits into public forums and substitute political and economic addresses for Gospel sermons. Society needs the wise counsel of consecrated ministers; but ministers err in using their pulpits for biased propaganda in such a time as this. No political party nor platform can set the world right, and no economic scheme can bring permanent prosperity without a foundation of Christian character and friendly understanding. But the gospel of Jesus Christ offers a better way of life for individuals and organized society. Why not give this a trial? Why not try the experiment of making Sunday a day of universal rest and worship? More people in Suffolk, attend the Sunday afternoon games of baseball than the evening services in the churches.

The cheers, boos, yells and enthusiasm of a Sunday baseball game are not conducive to a spirit of worship at evening time. People are weary. Not many of these people attend church on Sunday night. Maybe they would not go if there were no baseball game. But they would be more inclined to go to church, in larger numbers, if the public sentiment of the people could be turned in that direction. The church can help this situation, not by fighting baseball games and Sunday movies, but by creating a united interest and sentiment in favor of church attendance. If all church members will keep the Lord's Day as a day of rest and worship, Sunday movies and Sunday baseball will soon be discarded. The world needs consecrated church members.

ELON COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

On May 29th at noon, the forty-fifth annual commencement of Elon College came to a close, which was by far the best commencement that we have had since I have been connected with the college officially. The weather was ideal, the program was inspiring and the attendance was everything that could be wished.

The program began with the Smith Oratorical Contest on Friday evening at eight o'clock. The orator's medal was awarded to Rev. J. L. Neese. Mr. Neese will be a member of the senior class next year. He is a very effective preacher, and has a pleasing and convincing manner as a speaker. Other contestants delivered good orations and delivered them well, but the judges gave the award to Mr. Neese.

Saturday evening at 8 o'clock, the dramatic department under the direction of Miss Floyd Child, presented "The Late Christopher Bean" by Sidney Howard. The parts were all excellently taken and the whole evening was very delightful.

Sunday at 11 o'clock, the members of the senior class, led by the college choir, the college pastor and the commencement speaker marched from the rotunda of Alamance Building to the Whitley Memorial Auditorium, where the services were held.

Dr. William Horace Day, of Bridgeport, Connecticut, delivered the sermon. Dr. Day spoke from the exhortation: "We should obey God rather than man." In the course of his remarks, he made plain the difficulties and hardships to be encountered by one who would lend himself to the voice of God, disregarding the voice of man. This fact was illustrated by the Pilgrims and the early settlers of our country, who came to these shores that they might have the liberty of obeying God rather than man; and, further, that when a man obeys God perfectly that he will find God clearly and that others will be able to see God through him.

In the afternoon at four o'clock, the Music department presented members of the department in graduate and certificate recital. This program was of a very high order and splendidly received.

At the evening service, the President spoke to the graduating class on the topic, "An Open Door," stressing the fact that to the college graduate today doors are opened wide—the doors of opportunity, of knowledge, of service and of hope and that no man can shut them.

Monday was Class Day. The 1935 graduating class gave its program at 10:30 in the Whitley Memorial Auditorium. The program was spiced with wit and humor. The Class Day programs are becoming attractive features of our commencement exercises.

In the afternoon Miss Lila Newman gave her annual Art Exhibit, demonstrating the work done in this department.

The Home Economics department received At Tea in connection with the Art Exhibit.

At eight o'clock the Music department under the direction of Professor Dwight Steere presented "The Cross of Fire," by Max Bruch. This was perhaps one of the most artistic presentations that the Music department of the college has yet presented.

Tuesday was Alumni Day, and a full day it was. The program began at nine o'clock with breakfast for the class of 1910. The breakfast was provided by President and Mrs. Smith. Ten members are in the class. This was our twenty-fifth anniversary; six members out of the ten together with their husbands or wives were present. This was a most delightful occasion for the class.

At eleven o'clock, Mr. Russell A. Campbell of Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, an alumnus of the institution and former member of the faculty, gave a most delightful and helpful address. Mr. Campbell spoke on "The Place and the Importance of the Small Church College in our Present Day Educational System."

Following Mr. Campbell's address, the Annual Barbecue Luncheon was served on the campus. There was an unusually large attendance for this part of the program. However, the ones in charge had anticipated the crowd and there was plenty of barbecue and to spare.

The Alumni Business Meeting was held a two o'clock. Among other business transacted, new officers were elected: Hon. J. O. Atkinson, Jr., of Greensboro, was elected president; Mr. Howard Richardson of Suffolk, Virginia, was elected vice-president; Mr. M. L. Patrick of High Point was elected secretary and treasurer.

The visitors on the campus had been attracted by a network of wires covering practically all of the front of the campus. At irregular spaces, Japanese lanterns hung from these wires. At twilight there was no further question about what was going to happen, and really when evening had come the campus was aflame. The lights were beautiful and tremendously inspiring. At 7:15 all alumni present gathered in the Alamance Building and marched, according to classes, to the Whitley Memorial Auditorium for the Annual Alumni Address. Many said that this was the largest number of Elon alumni that they had ever seen together.

The address was delivered by Hon. F. F. Myrick, an alumnus of the institution, of Greensboro. Mr. Myrick dealt with the menacing danger of socialism, communism, fascism and Hitlerism to this country and to our democratic government. He raised the "red flag" as a warning to good citizenship and sound government.

Following Mr. Myrick's address, the Alumni March was instituted. Leaving the auditorium, led by President and Mrs. Smith, the march extended around the Circle, to the Christian Education Building, to Alamance Hall, west to the corridors, ending in the dining room for the Annual Alumni Banquet. Mr. Patrick presiding. This was a most enjoyable and delightful occasion. The College dining room was completely filled with alumni.

Wednesday—Graduation Day! This day, of course, was uppermost in the minds and hearts of the class of 1935. It was the culmination of their college career. They were to receive their diplomas and degrees were to be conferred. The academic procession was impressive. The spacious auditorium was filled to overflowing. On this occasion the speaker was Senator Josiah W. Bailey, who after referring in a complimentary manner to the founders and presidents of Elon College, addressed the graduating class and the large assemblage on "The Constitution of the United States," emphasizing its sacredness and its importance to this country and its future. He declared that no political officer, however insignificant or important, was under obligation to carry out the wishes of the people, but that he was under oath to uphold the Constitution of the United States, and that he was to carry out the will of the people only when the carrying out of the will of the people meant the protection of the Constitution and the furtherance of good government.

Following the conferring of Bachelor of Arts degrees upon the members of the class of 1935, two honorary degrees were conferred. Colonel E. E. Holland of Suffolk was awarded the honorary degree of doctor of laws and Rev. Mr. Russell Clinchy of Washington, D. C., was awarded the degree of doctor of divinity. Both of these men have achieved in their respective fields and are highly deserving of this honor.

A delightful musical program for all major services was furnished by the Elon Singers, which added materially to the effectiveness and success of commencement. The singers were enjoyed by everyone.

Dr. Clinchy of Washington, D. C., pronounced the benediction and the 1935 Elon College Commencement came to a close.

ELON: JUNE 24TH TO 30TH.

Why not have our pastors, and a large number of Sunday school teachers, and prospective teachers assembled for intensive training and enlarging of vision at Elon during the last week of June. Everything will be in readiness. The faculty chosen. The college buildings ready. The campus beautiful. Music under the leadership of Prof. Steere. And friends and acquaintances from all over the Christian Convention. One week together with the pastors, leaders, and instructors of those who are in turn leading the youth of our local churches. What could be finer? Some real vision of our world, its needs, and the effectiveness of the Gospel of Jesus Christ for the meeting of those needs should be gotten in such a week of inspiration, and prayer, and study, and fellowship.

What an inspiration it should be if we could get thirty, or forty or more of our pastors there to work together, plan together, and think together about our opportunities and responsibilities! Suppose we could average at least one good, and regular Sunday school teacher from every Sunday school in our Southern fellowship! And if we could have groups of three to a dozen or more from many of our local churches of our splendid young people what an inspiration it would be! A little definite thought and planning will make it possible. It is only one week, and only one Sunday away from the local church, and that Sunday is the fifth Sunday in the month. Surely many pastors will find it a real inspiration and blessing to be present with their young people.

The Ladies' Benevolent and Social Union of the Suffolk Christian Church has voted $30.00 in part payment of several persons from our church to the school, and the Young People's Christian Endeavor has added another $10.00. Are there not many organizations, Sunday schools, and churches which will provide all, or part payment for capable and useful persons in their churches to this Standard Training School at Elon for one week? The expenses are very small, $7.50 for the week, which includes registration, room and board for the entire seven days. By helping young persons to attend this Standard Training School for one week you may do far more good than you can realize, both for the individual and the church which will be helped by them in turn. Pastors, teachers, young people, leaders all, let us make this week a real credit to the Southern Convention which sponsors it, and make it mean something really worthwhile to our great church.

HAYES CHAPEL.

On February 3, 1935, I got my first sight of Garner, North Carolina. As I looked around I saw several churches and wondering just where the Christian Church was, I asked and was then informed as to its location. All I had to do was to walk a few steps from the railroad station and I was there. A queer feeling comes to one as he steps into a strange church not knowing anyone but Jesus Christ in that church. But it wasn't long until I was acquainted with quite a few people and was enjoying their friendship. After Sunday School I endeavored to speak with them concerning Jesus Christ. I was invited to come again on the first Sunday in March and did so. At that time I was informed that they had called me to serve as their pastor for the rest of the Conference year. Since then has come to me the privilege of serving them in their pulpit each first Sunday.

The congregations have been growing from Sunday to Sunday and a fine spirit is being manifested in the church. We desire that members of the neighboring churches come in when we have services and then we want to go to their services when they meet. We are working for a closer unity among the churches in Garner in order that we may carry on God's work more effectually.

ONE PURPOSE RUNS.

Though cynic doubters vaunt that havoc rules
Events and men, and good and evil blend
Till all is smirched with ill, and they are fools
Who dream we move toward some more glorious end,

By faith we know that, through long centuries
Fro mprimal dust and slime, One Purpose runs
Of mind and heart and soul, and God still sees
Our little world unfold midst myriad suns.

Behold the men who bear on high their light
To show the long, dim road within the Plan:
Great statesmen, teachers, prophets, sons of might.
Above them all, the Christ, divine, yet man.

And countless are the common men who live
The Purpose, knowing not the part they give.

Mistakes are only final when you stick to them.

[M]re of [th]ny of them are not really members of Christ's Body, or they would feel the more abundant life flowing through them and inspiring them to serve Him wholeheartedly, laying their gifts at His feet, as the wise men from the East did, when they brought their gold and frankincense and myrrh to His cradle at Bethlehem. The crisis through which the Church is now passing, presents a challenge to her members to prove the reality of their faith in Christ and their devotion to Him. We are not called upon to make the supreme sacrifice as many of our soldiers were in the Great War, but we are called upon to show that we are true soldiers of the Cross and are therefore willing to make any sacrifice needed to enable the Church to go forward instead of standing still, or what is worse, making an inglorious retreat. Whitsunday, the birthday of the Christian Church, will afford us an opportunity of making this necessary sacrifice and in the interval we may well prepare ourselves by earnest prayer and meditation to go up to the House of God on that day, with the loyal determination that His Cause shall no longer suffer through our neglect and indifference.—Southern Churchman.

MEET THE MISSIONARY.

Rev. C. E. Chaney, field secretary for the Baptist Mission in Burma, after a tour in the Chin Hills district, writes in the Watchman-Examiner.

"On arrival at Haka various ones came to meet us and shake hands with us. One was a blind Christian who had heard of the visiting missionary and had walked 100 miles just to shake his hand. Two preachers walked 25 miles to meet the visitor from the south. One evening I saw the shadow of a man on the veranda. He was slipping away. I called my companion's attention to him and went to speak to him. He had walked over 30 miles, and had, unknown to us, been waiting a long time to see the visitors. He was too timid to intrude. During the past 35 years great changes have taken place among the Chins.

"It was my privilege to meet the first Chin convert, baptized in 1905, who is now a pastor in the hills. There are fully 3,000 baptized Christians, and nearly 500 came into the church this past year."

EARLY DAYS IN BORNEO.

Just after the Boxer uprising when 16,000 Christians became martyrs, a Christian Methodist of Foochow, a man of wealth and education, decided to do as the Pilgrim Fathers and seek a land of religious freedom. He found many willing to go, but where was the land? Like Abraham he set out, not across the plains, but into the South Seas, not knowing where he went. When he arrived in Singapore, he was directed to Sarawak as the land best suited for such an undertaking, where Raja Brooke owned 36,000,000 acres of good land. Here he met the Rajah, who not only liked the scheme, but willingly gave land and money to charter a boat to bring the colonists over. Then he returned to China to get his men, and out of the crown he picked about five hundred men and twenty women, mostly Methodists, and put them on his chartered boat, but sailing away from friends, and home filled many with fear, and they put in at Hong Kong. It happened that Bishop Warne was there on his way to Manila. Hearing of this boatload of Methodists on their way to Borneo, he went to visit them, and when he saw how fearful they were, he said, "Don't be afraid, I will go with you." He stayed ten days with them, organized a church, and from this band has grown a Christian community of more than 10,000. The small clearing in the jungle is now more than 200,000 acres of cultivated land; five little chapels have developed into 46 appointments; a membership of over 300 is now over 3,000 with 900 adherents, and more than 1,500 baptized children under twelve years of age. The school of 33 boys has grown into 38 schools with over 1,800 children, of whom about 1,600 are Christians, and from a staff of two teachers, there are now 91, all of whom are Christians.—Malaysia Message.

MRS. ELIZABETH L. ENNIS.

A Ford can do anything but climb a tree, in the opinion of the Ovimbundus of West Africa, says Mrs. Elizabeth Logan Ennis, sister of Mrs. W. E. Newman, 2703 McKinley Building, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, at work in Dondi, West Africa, under the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions with her husband, Dr. Merlin W. Ennis. Mrs. Ennis,, who was in America on furlough last year, recently made an auto trip to an "Ombala," the site of an ancient native capitol to visit Christian Ovimbundu friends who had established a village nearby.

Attending a "union" church service held in the open air, Mrs. Ennis comments on the complete freedom and lack of strain which the gathering illustrated. "We were treated to several numbers of music from various village 'choirs' " she reports. "Groups of men, women and children would arise and sing beautifully in harmony and from memory. Women attended to the natural needs of their babies, many of whom they brought on their backs, without anyone turning an eye in their direction. An absolutely naked youngster carrying three books on his arm sauntered across the empty space and delivered the volumes to his father. An uneasy dog climbed up on a box and tried to sleep but presently preferred the ground and no one paid any attention to him.

"People were well dressed or in rags or unclothed as they could afford, but it did not affect their status. I remembered once while I was in America a squirrel got into the church and for a few frantic moments before the service the Janitor was chasing the little creature from end to end of the building. It disappeared finally and during the service peeked out and caused a great deal of giggling and whispering on the part of the choir and congregation."

During this trip the king from the nearby "Ombala," dressed in a brown velevteen suit, accompanied by his youngest wife, came to call on the Ennises inquiring if in their many books they did not have some formula for driving away locusts. It was reported that in Sachikela, where the Ennises have worked for most of their thirty years in Africa, the king had given out word that he could make medicine to get rid of the locusts if the people would bring him two children to be sacrificed, a boy and a girl. One child was actually stolen and taken to the king but authorities intervened in time.

The Ennises took the king and his wife back to their "Ombala" in the Ford much to their delight. In fact his Majesty was so pleased that he rode several miles with the Ennises on their way back to their own station, taking his young wife along with him for a treat, and walking back.

Mrs. Ennis was born in Hortonville, Wisconsin and is a graduate of the University of Oregon. She also studied at Wellesley College. Mr. Ennis was born in Douglas Center, Wisconsin, and is a graduate of Beloit College with a B. A. 1900, and D. D. 1922. He is also a graduate of Yale University with a B. D. 1903.

The Ennises are the representatives of the First and Second Congregational Churches of Beloit, Wisconsin, and a group of ten other Congregational churches in Wisconsin.

A Story for the Children

THE KITE.

Once there was a piece of paper. It was just a plain piece of paper, lying in the closet with many other things.

There were bits of string, and a hammer, and nails, and scissors and pencils and pieces of wood.

One morning a boy came to the closet. He took out the piece of paper. He took the string and the hammer and nails, the scissors and the pencils and the pieces of wood. He carried them all over to the table by the window. He sat there working for a long time.

When he had finished, the boy took what he had made, and went out of doors with it. It was a kite. It had a tail made out of string with little pieces of paper on it. It had a very long string to hold it by.

The wind was blowing. Up, up, up, went the kite. The boy held tight to the string.

Suddenly the wind gave a big puff. It blew the kite string against a tree. The string caught on the branches. The boy could not get it down.

He ran into the house to ask his father to help him.

While he was gone, the wing gave a big jerk. Up, up, up went the kite. When the boy and his father came out, they could just see it, like a little speck against the sky. The boy felt very sad, but his father said, "Never mind, son. I'll help you to make another."

So the kite went sailing on the wind. It sailed over the houses, the churches, and the stores of the town. It sailed over the river, and over the fields and over the houses, the churches and the stores of another town.

And then the wind stopped blowing. Down, down, down came the kite, into a little girl's yard.

When the little girl looked out of the window and saw the kite, she was very glad. She had never had a kite to play with before.

She ran out to pick it up. Then she saw that the boy had written his name on the back of the kite. Underneath his name was the name of the town where he lived.

That night the little girl wrote a letter to the boy. She told him that she had found his kite, and asked him to come and get it.

The next afternoon the boy and his father and mother climbed into their car. They rode past the houses, the churches, and the stores of the town. They rode across the bridge over the river through the fields, past the houses, the churches, and the stores of another town, until they came to the little girl's house.

But the boy did not take the kite home. He told the little girl that she might keep it, because his daddy had helped him to make another.

"Some day," said the boy to the little girl, "I will come over to play with you, and we will sail our kites together."

They did sail their kites together, and the little boy and the little girl have been friends ever since, all because the kite went sailing by itself on the wind.—By Verna Hills in Zion's Herald.

HIS BUSINESS.

A man in a covered wagon, driving through a western town, stopped and hailed a man on the street. "Hey, any saloons in town?" he asked. "Yes, four," was the answer. "Giddap," said the stranger, moving on. "I can't locate here; I've got three boys in this wagon." "Stop a minute," yelled the stranger, "what's your business?" "My business is to save these boys," came back the answer, as he disappeared around a bend in the road.—Publisher Unknown.

HONESTY.

In the midst of a confused world where the simple virtues seem lost, or futile, the lone believer is bewildered. He is tempted to surrender everything and conclude with the Psalmist who says, "There is none that doeth good," or with King David when he says, (though in haste) "All men are liars." But he cannot actually do this because he has within his soul a conviction that in the long run right and justice will prevail. He believes in a good God, in an orderly universe "the good man" as one who never turns his back, but marches breast forward, never doubts clouds will break, never dreams though right be worsted wrong will triumph.

We who have some faith and conviction along these lines must continue to live in the atmosphere of sordid selfishness, but we need not be a party to it, and, in any case we cannot surrender our belief in the fundamental reality of the commonly recognized social virtues. Integrity of character and uprightness of conduct still stand as the measure of successful living. Nothing can take the place of honesty. Without that all is lost and it goes without saying that its basis is laid in religion.

It is possible to drift away from the common standards of integrity and do little, undiscovered dishonesties and "get by with it"; but the dishonest act leaves its mark on the soul that does the trick and some day will lead to something worse. A famous English statesman in debating the "Petition of Rights" said, "No man is bound to be rich or great, no, nor to be wise, but every man is bound to be honest." A famous preacher discussed the theme, "Why Be Moral?" and his reasons all summed up were "Because there is no other kind of life that brings happiness or does anybody any good." There you have it. Everybody knows that if all men were honest today, if integrity of character and upright conduct prevailed the present world confusion would soon solve itself. E. A. K.

ARTICLE I

We seldom hear or read ... privileges of a Minister. Th... sized. Writers, criticising the Church, often tell the readers that, in preparing the article, leading ministers, whom they consulted, insisted that they, if they were beginning life again, would not enter the ministry, nor do they want their sons to enter this profession. It seems to me that they fail to appreciate the place and work of a preacher and pastor. Dr. Theodore Cuyler on the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination said that he often felt faint when he recalls that he ballanced for several weeks whether he would study law or enter a Theological course. I do not underestimate the work of an honest and capable lawyer or judge, but, after years of experience and observation, I consider the place and work of a Minister as giving countless opportunities for service and rich payment in satisfaction.

Wife.

The first privilege of a Minister is the Minter's wife. She is usually in sympathy with his work and enters by necessity and opportunity into it as no other occupation offers. Her sympathy, unselfishness and courage stimulate those qualities in her husband. Her friendly interest in the people and the thoughtful attentions she pays to the sick, the aged, and indeed, to all, is a telling example to the minister himself. The cheerful home to which he comes after the nervous exhaustions of his sermon, funerals and calls multiplies his efficiency. Mrs. Wesley, wife of Samuel Wesley, a rector in the Established Church, was the mother of nineteen children and taught them all "to cry softly." Her influence over her husband and her children was remarkable. Her advice was far-sighted and wise. From such a home came the founder of the Methodist Church and one of the hymn-writers of the ages. John Wesley's work was of priceless value, but what a loss to him and, perhaps, to the world, was the type of wife he had. Lyman Beecher's second wife's influence shaped remarkably the life of her husband and helped to make the children the most remarkable family in the United States.

I have known ministers whose work has been limited by the wife's lack of sympathy. Several gave up their work and the rest of their lives did not satisfy themselves nor accomplish much for the world. Phillips Brooks, because of rare ability and profound sympathy shaped many lives, though he was a bachelor, but a sympathetic wife and a family of children would, many think, have made richer this rich ministry. The emotions which a family awakens, the insight which a family gives a minister and the joy which radiates in a home, are among the richest blessings, and most effective cultural influences of a life. The price of a capable and sympathetic minister's wife is above rubies.

It is a call to cleanliness. During the cold and rains of the winter, things get stale and stagnant. The March winds and April showers refresh the earth and make it clean. The housewife doing her spring cleaning is following the method of nature. And so is the person who tries to keep the body, mind, and spirit clean.

It is a call to beauty. When spring comes, nature covers the rough and rugged places with velvety green and blooming flowers. This is an invitation to come out into the open, see nature's beauty and pattern our lives accordingly.

It is a call to harmony. There may be many colors of green in one field or forest, but they all harmonize. This is nature's way. Man brings discord, the winter reveals ugliness, but springtime brings harmony.

It is a call to peace. Growing plants, leafing trees, blooming flowers, warm breezes, and the music of nature in the springtime all sing of peace. In the city one's nerves may be wrecked by rasping noises, but out in the open where springtime has its chance, there is peace and a call to peace in the human soul.

It is a call to faith. The dead earth springs into new life and bids one look out and up into the face of the Infinite who robes Himself in beauty and challenges us to believe. If you have stood by the grave-side of your beloved and felt faith slipping away, when springtime comes you know that they live again. The resurrection of physical life in the spring gives assurance of immortal life for the soul. If springtime comes with its beauty and blossoms, surely there will be summer and autumn with fruits and harvests.

All of which means that the call of spring is a call to new life,—a life of cleanliness, beauty, harmony, peace, faith. "Consider the lillies how they grow." They do not get excited, they do not worry, and "Yet Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." Listen to the call of springtime, sing with the birds, enjoy the beauties of nature, and worship the God of all life. This is the way to the best.

JUNE.

And what is so rare as a day in June,
Then, if ever, come perfect days;
Then heaven tries earth if it be in tune,
And over it softly her warm ear lays;
Whether we look or whether we listen,
We hear life murmur or see it glisten;
Every clod feels a stir of might,
An instinct within it that reaches and towers,
And, groping blindly above it for light,
Climbs to a soul in grass and flowers.

—James Russell Lowell.

MODESTY.

Modesty is not the prevailing virtue of the present generation, but yet it is a virtue which can be found even today. Recently I heard a young fellow say he was glad to see a girl who could still blush.

But I am thinking particularly of a very modest man. He is unusually careful to give credit to the other person; in fact he is a little too eager to do that. I refer to Rev. Edwin C. Gillette, General Manager of the Elon Summer School of Leadership Training. The school at Elon this summer is to be a combination of Blue Ridge and Elon. No one wants Blue Ridge to pass out of the picture. The workers who have gone there will be welcomed to Elon and should feel that they have as much right to be present as anyone else, for it is their school. Dr. Gillette has been in charge of Blue Ridge recently, and is to be the General Manager for Elon. He and Miss Coghill have had a real share in making the program and planning the work for the combined school this year. If the school is a success, and I sincerely hope that it will be, much of the credit will be due to Dr. Gillette and his able assistant, Miss Coghill. It is my happy privilege to work with them and under the leadership of Dr. Gillette. I am merely the Dean and take only my share of the work as it has been agreed upon . The kind things which Dr. Gillette has said through the paper about me are the outgrowth of his modesty and should be so considered.

I am writing this item to keep the records straight and to invite all Christian Church people to attend the Elon Summer School, June 24-30, so they may know better the courtesy and kindliness of a Congregational minister who is now a leader in the United Church in the Southeast.

CARES.

The little cares that fretted me,
I lost them yesterday
Among the fields above the sea,
Among the winds at play;
Among the lowing of the herds,
The rustling of the trees,
Among the singing of the birds,
The humming of the bees.

The foolish fears of what may happen,
I cast them all away
Among the clover-scented grass,
Among the new-mown hay;
Among the husking of the corn
Where drowsy poppies nod,
Where ill thoughts die and good are born,
Out in the fields with God.

WHY IS GOSSIP HARMFUL?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR JUNE 16, 1935.

James 3:1-6.

Hymns: "Follow the Gleam"; "More Like the Master"; "Wonderful Words of Life"; "Let the Beauty of Jesus Be Seen in Me"; "An Evening Prayer" (Battersby).

Prayer:

For hope that sees through blinding tears
Dear Lord, upon my knees I ask
For strength to do each given task;
For graciousness of heart and mind
To be not only just but kind;
For hope that sees through blinding tears
The mystery beyond the years;
For faith that ever stronger grows
Like Job's, in spite of anguished woes;
For courage that will make me sing
No matter what the harsh days bring;
For wisdom to be finding worth
Within the simple things of earth
And loveliness in shaded nooks,
In flowers, trees and running brooks,
In meadow, hill, woodland and glen,—
For these things, Lord, I ask. Amen!

Talks: Have short talks by a number of your members and others using Bible references, etc.

What is Gossip? Look up the word in a dictionary. Note the several definitions and how they have changed.

You might find it profitable to begin your meeting with the game of "Gossip." The first person whispers something to the next so quickly that it is difficult to understand what was said. Without asking questions, that person whispers what he or she heard and so around to the last person. The first person then tells what was said at the beginning of the game and the last person tells what he heard. Did the last person get any of the truth of what was actually said?

Why do people gossip? A short time ago a tale was told. Upon investigation, it was found to contain not one bit of truth. It appeared that somebody told a falsehood in order to carry his point. Had the story gone further, the person about whom it was told would have been greatly harmed. Suppose the story had been true, would there have been any value in telling it? In this instance the cause for talking was jealousy. What are the other causes for people spending their time in "idle chatter"?

It might be well to ask yourself three questions before repeating things you have heard: Is it true? Is it kind? Is it Christian?

Read the story "Converted" in the November, 1934 issue of The Christian Herald where a German, a Russian, and an Englishman find that none of the propaganda about each other is true.

GOSSIP.

Gossip went a-whispering,
Whispering through the town;
Someone had a character
She wanted to tear down.
So Gossip found a silver thread,
To weave, and weave, and weave
A very lovely pattern
That was fashioned to deceive.
She tore somebody's crimson gown,
Threw stars upon the ground.
Vanished children's laughter,
Scattered doubt around.
Plucked roses from the gardens,
Stuck pins in toy balloons;
Gossip went a-whispering
Through many nights and noons.
Gossip was a shadow;
At dusk a silhouette
Who whispered very sinister things
That people can't forget.
And when some folks pricked their hearts
Beneath the thorny crown,
Gossip went a-laughing
Like a maudlin through the town.

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

THE HOLY SPIRIT (Pentecost Lesson).

Lesson X—June 9, 1935.

Golden Text: "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, these are sons of God."—Rom. 8:14.

Lesson: Joel 2:28, 29; Luke 11:9-13; John 3:5-8; 14:16, 17, 26; 15:26, 27; 16:1-15; Acts 2:1-21, 32, 33; Romans 8:1-17, 26, 27; I Corinthians 12:1-13; Ephesians 1:13, 14; 3:14-21; 4:1-6, 30.

There is no more important doctrine in the Bible than the doctrine of the Holy Spirit. There is no more vital truth in Christianity than the person and work of the Holy Spirit. And yet there is but very little teaching and preaching about the Holy Spirit. One seldom hears a sermon on the Holy Spirit, and one does not hear much about the Holy Spirit, even in religious circles. These things ought not so to be. We should not allow those who have gone to extremes on the subject to keep us from presenting the great truths about the Holy Spirit. The various and numerous Scriptures of today's lesson give us some interesting teachings on the work and the fruits of the Spirit. And by the Holy Spirit we mean the Holy Breath, or the Spirit of God breathing in us so that we live a divine life. God the Eternal Father, Who manifested Himself in and through Jesus Christ, now works in the world and in the human heart by His Holy Spirit.

The Spirit Promised.

Joel the prophet, foretold the coming of the Spirit. In that far-off day, he said that God would pour out His Spirit upon all flesh, and upon the servants and upon the handmaidens in those days would He pour out His spirit. Jesus also promised that He should go, but if He went, He would not leave them comfortless or "orphans" but that He would send the Comforter or the Holy Spirit, Who should abide with them always. On other occasions, and in other words, Jesus promised that the Father would send the Holy Spirit.

The Coming of the Spirit.

The Holy Spirit was given at Pentecost. Christ fulfilled His promise at this time. Peter took pains to make this clear when he preached to the multitude on that great day. He said that Jesus, being at the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Spirit, had sent forth that Spirit as the people now saw and heard. Pentecost was the fulfilment of the promise of the coming of the Spirit.

The Work of the Spirit.

When one turns to a study of the work of the Spirit, he finds many offices ascribed to it, so many that all of them cannot be given here. But the scriptures which are given as the background of today's lesson suggest many striking functions of this Spirit.

For instance, Jesus said, in talking with Nicodemus, that a man cannot enter the kingdom of God unless he be born of the Spirit. The Spirit is the regenerating power of God. By it a man is born anew or again. By it he becomes a new creature in Christ Jesus.

Jesus says also (John 14:16) that the Holy Spirit is to abide with His disciples always. One may grieve the Spirit; he cannot drive Him away.

The Holy Spirit is to be our Teacher, and our Reminder. "He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." Blessed is the man who is taught by the Spirit.

The Holy Spirit bears witness or testifies of Christ. Jesus said, "He shall testify of me." John 15:26.

It is the Holy Spirit who convicts and convinces and converts. And it is the Holy Spirit that guides men into all truth. We have the words of Jesus Himself to this effect. John 16: 7-15.

Of course the word which Jesus used for the Holy Spirit, "The Comforter" suggests one of His ministries—the ministry of comfort. Not weak sentimentality, not maudlin sympathy, but the giving of strength, the making strong within.

When we turn to Paul's references to the work of the Spirit, in today's lesson we find that he gives life, that he quickens our mortal bodies, that he helps us to "put to death" the deeds of the body, that he bears witness that we are the sons of God and reveals God as our Father, that He helps our infirmities, that He makes intercession for us, that He bears witness that Jesus is the Christ, that he makes us fruitful in good works. Furthermore Paul says that we are "sealed with the Holy Spirit," that we are strengthened with might by the Spirit in the inner man, and again that we are sealed unto the day of redemption by that same Spirit.

One can readily see from these brief references that the Holy Spirit manifests Himself in many ways and performs many functions in the life of the believer. Indeed He is the indispensable need of the Christian. Without Him there can be no Christian life in any real sense.

The Fruit of the Spirit.

"By their fruits shall ye know them," said Jesus. And the fruit of the Spirit, said Paul is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance.

The Gift of the Spirit.

"If ye being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?" The Spirit is the gift of God to those who in sincerity repent of their sins and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. "Repent, and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." God will not withhold His Spirit from those who yield themselves to Him. Men are poor spiritually of their own choosing. The Holy Spirit is not to be had simply for the asking, but He is to be had for sincere asking.

THE MESSENGER OF TRUTH.

There stands the messenger of truth, there stands
The legate of the skies, his theme divine,
His office sacred, his credentials clear!
By him the violated law speaks out
Its thunders, and by him, in strains as sweet
As angels use, the gospel whispers peace.
He establishes the strong, restores the weak,
Reclaims the wanderer, binds the broken heart,
And armed himself in panoply complete
Of heavenly temper, furnishes with arms
Bright as his own, and trains by every rule
Of holy discipline, to glorious war
The sacramental host of God's elect.
Are all such teachers? Would to heaven all were!

FAMILY ALTAR

Conducted by H. E. Rountree
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

MONDAY.

A Prayer.

"God, let me blossom as a tree
That bears the storm with majesty.
Let Thy young body, washed by pain,
Be refreshed as tree from rain.
Let me grow as steady as a fir
That feels the wind with gentle stir
Of all its branches, yet is still
Teach me, O God, to live and grow
As straight as trees in sun and snow;
And with the trees that bear old scars
Lift my young body to the stars."

—Eleanor Allen.

TUESDAY.

"Getting it in the Neck."

"This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."—I John 5:4.

A quip from the morning paper some time ago said, "Every time a man gets it in the neck, he realizes how little he amounts to."

There is a victory in reversals. Science and every other good thing achieved in this world has marched forward on its failures and an understanding of them.

As the descending curtain of death falls at the foot of the cross marking what some thought was the greatest failure of the world, Christ was heard to say, "It is finished." That finished task was the goodness of God in man. Whatever failure there was in the cross, it was a crown of a conqueror who could say to his Father, "I have finished what Thou gavest me to do."

"'Tis finished, Son of God, Thy power,
Hath triumphed in this awful hour:
And yet our eyes with sorrow see
That life to us was death to Thee."

Prayer—Our Father, we realize our many failures, that when we would do good evil is present with us. O Lord, be Thou our strength and lift us up. Whatever failures come, take them, take us, and make us true Christians in Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"Man, Boulder Dam and God."

"What is man that thou art mindful of him and the son of man that thou visiteth him?"—Ps. 8:4.

"The Lord shall go forth as a mighty man."—Isa. 42:13.

"Let not the mighty man glory in his might."—Jer. 9:23.

How I love it! As I stand on a cliff of the Colorado River, I behold the most colossal structure known to man. It is a concrete dam 727 feet high, 650 feet thick at its base, 1,180 feet long and 45 feet thick at the crest raising the water surface of the river 584 feet. The base thickness is greater than two normal city blocks and its crest is four blocks long. This dam will provide ample irrigation for all the southern states west of the Rockies making arid deserts bloom as a rose with vegetables, fruit and flowers.

I see a slot through the middle of the dam. It provides the supply lines of the cooling system. This slot which looks like a narrow crack is big enough for a railway train to go through.

This vast bulk of a dam has been built of concrete at a temperature of 40 degrees. To cool naturally it would take 150 years, and, at that, it would be cracked all to pieces. As it is it has been built in five years and cooled now solid cement without a crack, and, so far as man can see, there is no possibility of a crack.

Men look like specks on the horizon handling pipes 30 feet in diameter transporting them to the pipe lines that will carry the water from the reservoir to the power plants. Likewise box cars loaded with machinery are lifted from their tracks and transported over the side of the precipes to the power plant at the bottom of the river bed where the machinery is set in place for operations.

A man so small producing the most gigantic, colossal, stupendous structure of the ages, and done so perfectly. It is a miracle! It all had to be thought out in the mind of a man, and there stands a man there; just a "speck" of a man who has thought it all out; he has every inch of it in his mind, and directs every movement of operations. What a man!

Bow down and worship. O no, do not worship men, but worship God who has given it to man to achieve something like this. There must be something divine in man that such can be done, and even to the doubting ones the idea is impelling.

Prayer—O God, O God, O God! What is man that Thou art mindful of him? Yea indeed we may be worth something. This is Thy glory, and more to come. Use us, dear Lord, for any glory we can be.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

"Christmas the Endless Beginning."

"Of His Kingdom there shall be no end."—Luke1:26-38.

Gabriel's reassuring words to Mary may well reassure us also. For sometimes things look very dark. Sometimes our own lives, given to Christ, seem to be failures.

But no Christian has a right to live other than the victorious life. That is Gabriel's message to us as to Mary. We have entered Christ's kingdom, and that kingdom has no end. With its small beginning in Bethlehem, it has gone on ever enlarging its bounds, ever exalting its glory.

So the Christian, with the Christmas spirit in his heart, lives in the power of the endless years. These brief years on earth are infinitely meaningful and precious that shall never end.

Prayer—Thy Kingdom come, Lord Jesus! Thy kingdom has come.—Amen.

Amos R. Wells.

FRIDAY.

"The World's Question."

"Whom say ye that I am?"—Matt. 16:15.

What does the world think of Christ today? It seems that people are staggering through a burden of increasing doubt. We read a lot about fatality, but very little about faith. Men are seeing things that get us down and are proposing many ways to solve our problems, but only a few speak of the Christ as the remedy, as the power that lifts up.

Notwithstanding, the leaven of Christ in the net work of life is growing. Note the things that take place everywhere on Easter Day, sunrise services, increased and enlarged church services, hundreds of various celebrations expressing the Easter idea, children, egg-hunts, parties, etc. To be sure some of the activities are just a big show, but there is a leaven of lift in it all, and there is an insistent demand well expressed by Paul ages ago "Let us keep the feast, not with the old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth."

Thank God, thank Christ, and thank Paul, that righteousness is still best and clamors for its rightful place in the hearts of man.

Prayer—Our Father, we believe that Thou will go on till Thou hast put all enemies under Thy feet. We cast our lot with Thee. Use us to further Thy righteousness in the world.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

"Inferiority Complex."

"In lowliness of mind let each esteem the other better than themselves."—Phil. 2:2.

This scripture has no reference to that state of mind known in the modern term "inferiority complex." It refers to egotism, which, defined, is the practice of too often using the word "I". It refers to self-exultation and self-exaltation. It refers to self-praise. It refers to living for one's own ideas, appetites and interest. It refers to the attributes of Christian character, humility, at attribute which in honor prefers the other fellow.

Most of us have a certain amount of egotism. It is a state of self-regard and confidence essential to initiative and success, but like most other God-given characteristics it is to be governed by that gift of God, known as "a sense of human values." That sense deals not only with concrete values as they may be, but it digs down into the roots of potentialities and has regard for what others could be if they had a chance. We recall the following story: A man was motoring. He saw a tramp on the road who appeared to be a poor bedraggled specimen of humanity. His sympathies went out for this unfortunate and he said, "but for the grace of God there goes I."

Some people fear that if they do not "toot their own horn nobody will toot it for them." That may be true in a worldly sense. But such an attitude denies the power of God and the working of Spirit; it ignores the reward He gives for faithfulness. Read the parable of "Taking the chief seat at a Wedding Feast." Luke 14:7-11. He says, "take the lowest seat," and he who does shall be invited to take a higher one. He that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

Prayer—Dear Father in the interest of others, of our neighbors, of those we see along life's way, yea, in the interest of humanity, may we forget ourselves and do Thy will today and forever.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

"The Unstinting God."

"He that spared not His own son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not also with Him freely give us all things?"—Rom. 8:31-39.

One act is enough to prove the nature of God forever. He is not a changeable God. One day with Him is as a thousand years and a thousand years as one day. God in Christ is the same as God in nature, and God in history, and God in present social life, and God in the infinite future.

Herein is the endless significance of the cross for us. It proves that the essence of God is self-sacrificing love. In giving His Son for undeserving man, it shows that there is nothing else that He will not give him.

So we can go to God with perfect confidence. So our prayers are answered before we ask them. So—if we ask any true blessing—we know that we shall receive it even as we ask it.

Prayer—How we thank Thee, O Thou unstinting God!

Amos R. Wells.

WHAT IS YOUR LIFE?

By William P. Taylor.

"Thou wilt show me the path of life."—Psalm 16:11.

In the late summer of 1926, I saw a play, the title of which was "Love Is Like That." The play portrayed the story of a wealthy American girl who was in love with a poor, but hard-working boy. But a handsome foreign prince, exiled from his country, steps into the picture, becomes infatuated with the girl, and for a time, seems to overshadow his less romantic rival. The play closes, however, with the American girl in the embrace of her first lover and its final comment furnishes its title, "Love Is Like That."

When we make our comment about love our minds are filled with the romantic, but when we say, "Life is like that," it is generally the reflection of a different mood. It is much the same as saying, "It's all wrong, but what more can one expect in such a world as ours?" Everyone feels that way now and then. You find that mood reflected in many places.

"What is your life?" asks the New Testament Epistle of James; and gives its answer, "It is even a vapor, which appeareth for a time and then vanisheth away."

"Therefore I hated life," says the writer of Ecclesiastes.

Job cursed the day of his birth.

The modern novelists seem determined to picture life in the well-known words of Hobbes, as "poor, nasty, brutish, and short."

In a volume entitled "The Great American Bandwagon," Mr. Charles Mertz attempts to give us a picture of contemporary American life. His main theme is that we are an adventurous, restless, pioneering people. But the frontier is gone.

The wild animals are no longer a menace. The Indians are safely herded on reservations. So life has become drab and monotonous. And he points out the ways in which we try to put the romance back into life.

He traces this same quest for a lost romance and thrill through the radio. Seven million sets run through the day and the greater part of the night. Twenty stations were on the air for 651 hours in one week; during that week they gave 84 hours of talk, 119 hours to serious or semi-serious music, 448 hours to jazz.

It is the old tom-tom, Mr. Mertz says, brought to life again, to dissipate something of its drabness. There are five thousand golf courses, with two million people tramping over them.

There is also football, which thirty million people now pay $50,000,000 every autumn to see; the movies which twenty million people attend each day, in order to get one more glimpse of the Indians, cowboys, the wide open spaces, and of people making love.

He tells of the forty thousand people who paid $2,600,000 to see the last great prize fight and of the fifty reporters from fifty metropolitan dailies who were sent to a little town in Connecticut to report a certain murder trial, and wired 12,000,000 words to their papers—more words than there are in the libraries of most of our homes.

Yes, life is like that and it is usually something of the kind that we have in mind when we make the statement.

But life is not all like that.

And why do we not use the phrase in describing those other things, things of the opposite stamp? Those steady, quiet, strong features of daily living.

I read again the other day Heine's famous description of Immanuel Kant:

"He lived an abstract, mechanical old-bachelor existence in a quiet, remote old street of Konigsburg. I do not believe that the cathedral clock of that city accomplished its day's work in a less passionate and more regular way than its countryman, Immanuel Kant. Rising, coffee drinking, writing, lecturing, dining, walking, each had its set time. And when Immanuel Kant in his gray coat, cane in hand, appeared at the door of his house, and strolled toward the small avenue of linden trees, which is still called 'The Philosopher's Walk,' the neighbors knew it was exactly half-past-three by the clock. So he promenaded up and down, during all seasons; and when the weather was gloomy, or the gray clouds threatened rain, his old servant Lampe was seen plodding anxiously after him, with a large umbrella under his arm, like a symbol of Prudence. And when he passed at the appointed hour, the good people gave him friendly greetings and set their watches."

And opening John Ruskin's Praeterita you have this unforgettable picture with the author's comments:

"I had been taught the perfect meaning of peace, in thought, act and word.

"I never had heard my father's or mother's voice raised in any questions with each other; not seen an angry, or even slightly hurt or offended glance in the eyes of either. I had never heard a servant scolded. . . . I had never see a moment's trouble or disorder in any household matter; nor anything whatever done in a hurry. . . . I had no conception of such a feeling as anxiety. . . . I had never done any wrong that I knew of—beyond occasionally delaying the commitment to heart of some improving sentence, that I might watch a wasp upon the windowpane, or a bird in the cherry tree; and I had never seen any grief.

"Next to this quite priceless gift of peace, I had received the perfect understanding of the natures of obedience and faith. I obeyed word, or lifted finger, of Father or Mother, simply as a ship her helm; not only without idea of resistance, but receiving the directions as a part of my own life and force. . . . And my practice in faith was soon complete; nothing was ever promised me that was not given; nothing ever threatened me that was not inflicted, and nothing ever told me that was not true. . . . "

Let us never forget that life is like that, too.

But turning from these biographies to those that will probably never be written, I look back in memory to scores of people who stand out unforgettable.

Among them there is the picture of an elder, a shoemaker by trade and limited in education, but when I looked at that handsome face, so filled with character and dignity across the communion table, and heard the gracious and appropriate words that fell from his lips, it seemed that I was in the presence of a knight who had found the Holy Grail.

And I think of a little woman whom I used to go to see when I had time; hopelessly crippled, with one limb severed at the hip. I would find her in her wheel chair attending to the cooking and her other work, always cheerful, with a smile for everyone, and helpful and considerate. I remember how when the church was under financial strain of bringing in a well-known evangelist she decided that we should have a singer too for the meeting. So she with another woman went to work and baked pies and sold them and had the money ready for the singer when he came.

Christian Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

We had expected to have at least fifty thousand Octagon Soap wrappers with a Kelvinator or some make of refrigerator but while the weather is warming up we do not have that many and we are patiently waiting for our Sunday schools to gather them up and mail them to us. A small number of wrappers from each family would put us across and the buildings would be supplied with a blessing that we have needed for a long time. Soap wrappers are just small, insignificant things but one hundred thousand would enable all our buildings to have this blessing we are appealing for. Nickels are just a small piece of money—not much value but twenty of them make a dollar.

Large fortunes have been built up from selling articles for a nickel. Sunday school offerings are largely made up of nickels, but if we can get enough of them together we can finance an orphanage with one hundred children.

They are very important when we get a large number together.

We are supposed to have around thirty-two thousand members in the Southern Convention. Suppose each of these thirty-two thousand would contribute one nickel each Sunday. Then we would not worry over finances. More little children could have a home here and a great work could be done—all from the income of nickels. It's all working together at the same time for the same cause.

It reminds the writer of work at the orphanage—last Friday we had fifteen acres of fine hay in the fields ready to haul to the barn. Mr. Wagoner, my assistant, took two wagons and one truck and started one team raking. The boys divided in three groups and by Saturday afternoon the hay was in the hay-loft. If all of our churches and Sunday schools would work so unitedly we would have a happy time running the Orphanage.

THE SUN'S PULPIT.

There is the young boy with the responsibility of taking care of his family suddenly thrust upon him by his father's death; there are fathers worrying about their boys; there are men holding on to their jobs, and fearing that any day they may lose them, and knowing all the while that that job is all there is between them and the county farm.

There is a whole host of people. I carry them gratefully in my prayers before God—people as Paul said of himself, persecuted but not forsaken, cast down, but not destroyed, perplexed but not in despair, sustained by some great hope in their hearts, the same bright hope that shone in the faces of the prophets and apostles and martyrs through the ages.

Ruggedness like that of Martin Luther, a simple unquestioning faith like that of Francis of Assisi, a courage and devotion like that of Shelton of Tibet, and a patience and a pity like that of Jesus of Nazareth—they are all around us if we only have the eyes to see.

Life, plain everday life, is still like that.—In Christian-Evangelist.

The Methodist Protestant-Recorder of Baltimore, notes that "Churches of the Congregational and Christian Conferences of Pennsylvania reported a net increase of 391 members at the recent annual assembly held in Everett, Pa. MURMURING A GREAT SIN.

Murmuring seems to be a universal habit among all classes of people, both Christians and sinners. It seems that Satan has a way of whispering to people and inducing them to make complaint in numerous ways. Fault-finding and murmuring seems to be as old as the race of man. It is a disease that people often bring upon themselves, in many instances through their own waywardness. Cain complained after he had killed Abel that every man's hand would be against him and would kill him; so the Lord put a mark upon him that would save him that far. Some people murmur about almost everything that comes their way. They are like a kicking mule that kicks at everything in sight. The opposite of murmuring is patience, enduring without complaining. Job is an excellent example of patient endurance, for when he lost his property, he did not murmur; and when he was covered with sore boils, he murmured not. His wife told him to curse God and die. Job told her that she spoke like a foolish woman. One of the most noted examples we have of murmuring is that of the children of Israel. Those people murmured at Moses and Aaron. They said "would to God we had died in the land of Egypt." You hemember in the land of Egypt they suffered the greatest cruelties that perhaps any people ever endured and for a long period. Moses tried to keep the people pacified. He prayed to God for them; and when they were thirsty and the water was bitter, the Lord, through Moses gave them water that was sweet. When food was scarce, the Lord rained down manna from heaven and the people ate angels' food. He also gave them quails for their meat. They knew well that murmuring against Moses and Aaron was murmuring against God Himself. This murmuring of the children of Israel appears to have been the greatest of their sins. It seems to be the one outstanding sin of the whole nation. Because of their murmuring thousands were destroyed by the destroyer in the wilderness; and of all that went out of the land of Egypt only Joshua and Caleb were permitted to enter the promised land. Paul, in writing to the brethren of the church of Philippi says, "Do all things without murmuring and disputings." Doubtless, the peace and happiness in many homes is destroyed through the murmurings of husbands and wives or children. Either party may be the cause of troubles that destroy the peace and harmony that might otherwise exist.

We do not mean by this that strict discipline should not be enforced, but each member may perform his duty with murmuring. There is much murmuring and fault-finding about management of schools and colleges. We cannot begin to say that managers and teachers in schools always do the right thing; for their is no human perfection under the sun; but all should work together with as little friction as possible. It should be the prime object of all teachers, of officers and parents of children to have all possible patience; for in your patience possess ye your souls, some writer has said. Paul saw that murmuring and disputings often damaged seriously the workings of the churches. There are often murmurings about the pastors and other church officials. Through disputings serious divisions take place. We murmur over the way the laity of our churches are conducting themselves. We complain about the way the officers of the nation, state, township, city and town are conducting affairs, from the president to the lowest officer in the land. There is no doubt but there is great room for improvement in every phase of home life, community, national and church life. But will murmurings remedy the evils? In many cases they will have a tendency to make bad matters worse. If we would each try to do our duty without murmuring or disputing, how much better the world would be today.—The Free Will Baptist.

It is all we can give him, and the least we can give; therefore let us diligently render to him our thanksgiving.—Charles Haddon Spurgeon.

OBITUARIES

WINN.

Sadness entered the Epsom community Sunday, April 7, 1935, when the spirit of Mrs. Lucy (Hight) Winn returned to God who gave it. She was born August 7, 1861 in Franklin County and lived near Epsom all her life. She was the devoted wife of W. G. Winn, senior deacon of Liberty Christian Church.

Mrs. Winn united with the church in girlhood and was loyal to the church, attending when possible. She had been in declining health for 20 years, but was confined to her bed only a week. She was highly esteemed and loved by all who knew her, and I count it a blessing to have had her for a neighbor and bosom friend for more than 25 years.

Her home was a place where peace and love reigned. The devotion of her family was remarkable and truly they can rise up and call her blessed.

She leaves to mourn their loss, a devoted husband, three loving children, W. G. Winn, Jr., Mrs. P. L. Ellis, and Miss Zola Winn all of Epsom, Va. One sister, Mrs. J. M.Woodlief of High Point also survives.

The funeral was in charge of Rev. S. E. Madren, pastor of Liberty church, and the body laid to rest in the church cemetery. The host of friends that attended with the beautiful flowers was a token of our love for her. May God bless the bereaved.

Heredity Scores.—

In the game between heredity and environment, heredity has scored at least one point, if Dr. Raymond Pearl, of the Johns Hopkins School of Hygiene, be correct in his conclusions. Dr. Pearl has made a study of the cases of 2,000 persons surviving beyond the age of ninety, and he says: "The first and by far the most important requisite of longevity is having ancestors who were long-lived. In other words, you inherit the biological characteristics of living a long time, just as you inherit blue eyes and red hair."

A Traffic Policeman.—

It sounds rather commonplace, but there are two such in the City of Richmond who have lifted such duties out of the commonplace. This does not mean that there are not other good traffic officers in the city, but these two men have corners that are unusually crowded during the morning and evening. To see the manner in which they pilot dozens, hundreds, possibly thousands of cars past these two corners where Ninth Street intersects Grace and Franklin during the rush periods between eight-thirty and nine-thirty in the morning and four and six in the evening, without confusion, with ease and rapidity, causes one to realize that theirs is indeed a science. It is not what the job is but how it is done that counts. We salute Officers Owen and Updegraf.

More Honor to the Cardinal.—

The Bay State will have no legal lottery. A bill to establish a state lottery to finance an old-age pension system had been introduced in the Legislature, and the vote had stood 110 to 110. Then the Church woke up. Puritan prejudices against gaming combined with Cardinal O'Connell, who had waged battle against the bill, and when it was again brought to vote, seventy of its 110 supporters deserted it with a rush. In commenting on the final result the Boston Evening Transcript said: "Defeat of the lottery bill has done far more to protect the good name of Massachusetts than than people now dwelling here may clearly realize." William Cardinal O'Connell wields an influence in Massachusetts, and rarely has the influence of a high-ranking Catholic churchman been used to better advantage.

Motion Pictures.—

At a North Carolina Conference last fall it was suggested by someone that the church paper might do valuable service by printing lists of motion pictures that might be seen with profit to the individual. It is hardly practicable to do this, but there are some pictures—not many as yet—that are worthwhile. One of these is Cardinal Richelieu, in which the leading role is played by George Arliss. A stage actor of note, he has carried all of his marvelous power of impersonation to the screen. He is well supported by an excellent cast in this story of intrigue which surrounded the throne of Louis XIII of France. Another picture which has the approval of those fighting for clean pictures is "Les Miserables," while a third is that famous story by Charles Dickens, David Copperfield, in which Mr. Micawber holds sway. One might wish that when the next Christmas season approaches, the Christmas Carol will find its way on the silver screen.

General Booth on Tour.—

Evangeline Booth, who is the international head of the Salvation Army, has only recently returned home from a tour covering Europe, Asia, Australia, New Zealand and the United States. When asked of the work of the Army, she replied: "This tour has been a revelation to me, for I have found that the Army today, despite the world-wide depression, is more vigorous and active than at any time in its history. Whether it be in the leper colonies of India, the children's homes in Australia, the work among inebriates in New Zealand, or any other of our far-flung activities, one consuming ambition runs through the whole—that all men may know the salvation purchased by our Lord on Calvary. I found, I am glad to say, among all nations a genuine yearning for the comfort and solace which religion alone can give to a weary world." When questioned as to the danger of war in Europe at the present time, General Booth replied: "I found an all-absorbing desire for peace. In my talks with rulers, cabinets, and the common people, I discovered a healthy horror of war. . . . The world is getting a saner view, and I'm sure it will not be stampeded by any bellicose statements into another shambles."

A Television Cable.—

Perfection of a cable that would successfully transmit television for great distances has been the object of laboratory research work. The first installation of such a cable, designated as a "coaxial" cable, is to be made between Philadelphia and New York in time for use early next year. This "coaxial" cable is really a pipe-line, consisting of an outer flexible copper tube, within which is a copper wire, supported by rubber-disk insulators. The space between the wire and the inner sides of the tube is filled with nitrogen, known as the laziest of gases. But it helps to make the cable a worker worth while, for the tube and wire both carry electrical impulses, and together will transmit a band of frequencies around a million cycles in width. This means that this so-called coaxial cable will transmit as many as 200 telephone messages simultaneously, while the ordinary single wire circuit now in use will carry only four. The cable to be installed between the cities mentioned above will consist of two of these special cables, supplemented with eight ordinary wires. It will be capable of accommodating two television transmissions and thirty-two telephone calls at one time, or when not used for television purposes, a maximum number of 432 conversations may be carried on at once over this cable.

"Industrial Dixie."—

Daniel C. Roper, Secretary of the Department of Commerce, writing in the June issue of Scientific American gives some most interesting information regarding "Industrial Dixie." Says he: "Certain basic factors place the South in a position especially advantageous for industrial development. These factors [which include cheaply available electric power and a relatively low living cost], together with its proximity to sources of raw material, indicate a continued advance in its industrialization." He says that scientific research is doing much to assist in the development of industry in the South. Among the industries mentioned are paper making, the manufacture of rayon, and the increase in canning operations, especially the canning of citrus fruits and fruit juices. In 1934 there was more than $20,000,000 invested in the last named enterprise alone. The tung-oil industry is also coming to the front and the tung oil from trees propagated in the South is said to be superior to the oil obtained from China. Bromine, which was formerly imported is being obtained from sea-water in a North Carolina plant, where 15,000 pounds is being produced daily from 37,000,000 gallons of sea-water. "The South," says he, "with slightly more than 30 per cent of the country's population, now employs about 20 per cent of the entire country's factory workers." One hundred and twenty-five years ago it contained slightly less than half the population and contributed about one-third of the manufactured commodities. Virginia, at that time, outranked all states except Pennsylvania and Massachusetts. Twenty years later, or about 15 years after the close of the War Between the States, the South's share in manufacturing had dropped to 9 per cent of the country's total, but as stated above it had, by 1933, risen to 20.3 per cent. The seven leading industries of the South in the order of their importance and their percentage to the United States totals in 1899 and in 1933, are as follows: Cotton goods, 34.4 and 72.3; lumber and lumber products, 42.6 and 52.6; knit goods, 8.9 and 35.6; railroad shops, 23.0 and 28.2; tobacco, 17.4 and 49.4; steel or rolling mill products, 6.9 and 12.8; rayon, none in 1899, 67.9 in 1933. North Carolina leads all other southern states, both in the number of factory employees and the value of products. In the peak year of 1929, there were employed in that state 210,000 wage earners, and the amount added to values by manufacture was $693,000,000.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Any and every church that has not taken and finished the annual missionary offering should hasten now to do so as June is the end of our missionary promotional period.

"Without the evangelistic and missionary spirit, our churches cumber the ground," declares the editor of Christian-Evangelist (Disciples). We wonder how many of our Congregational-Christian Churches cumber the ground?

We learn through Dr. W. A. Harper, that Carl R. Key, an Elon "boy," recently receiving his diploma from the Vanderbilt School of Religion, has been awarded the highest honor that can come to a graduate of that school. He has just won the Founder's Medal for 1935, the subject of his thesis being, "Creative Teaching." We join with others in offering him congratulations.

MORGAN HOME-COMING.

Plans are being made for a "Morgan Home-Coming," on the fifth Sunday of this month (June 30, 1935) at the old Tyra Methodist Church, not far from the old home of the late Mr. and Mrs. George Morgan, in Moore County, N. C.

The affair is to be an all-day occasion, beginning at 10:30 A. M., with an informal get-acquainted hour, after which there will be religious services conducted by the Rev. J. F. Morgan of Norfolk, Virginia. This will be followed by lunch, and an hour of greeting of relatives and old friends. After the lunch there will be another service in the church.

The Morgan relatives and friends who attend the meeting are asked to bring a basket lunch. A most pleasant gathering is anticipated and a large attendance is expected.

HOW WILL YOU VOTE?

Whichever way you do vote on any question, it is important that the vote shall represent an intelligent conclusion based upon reliable data. The Education Society has tried to help everyone who is to vote on the Peace Plebiscite to get such data and to face the whole question with understanding.

The holding of the Plebiscite was referred to the Council for Social Action by the General Council. The vote is to be taken in November. Five main statements have been published indicating different ways in which each person may contribute to the cause of Peace. Several methods of working for world peace are also suggested from which the voter is asked to indicate those that appeal to him as most advisable or effective.

The Education Society staff realized that this project would be much more valuable if the actual taking of the vote were preceded by some thoughtful consideration of the arguments pro and con with reference to these various questions. The matter was referred to the Department of World Fellowship in cooperation with the Department of Social Action. The result is a sixteen page pamphlet prepared by Secretary J. L. Lobinger and submitted for comment to the Council for Social Action and a number of other leaders. A large edition has been issued and has met with a very favorable response. Orders are coming in rapidly. It is hoped that this pamphlet will be used in all our summer conferences and in many churches and local groups in the early fall.

The purpose of the pamphlet is to present statements representing the positions of thoughtful advocates of the various points of view included in the Plebiscite, taking care to do full justice to differing opinions. This Dr. Lobinger has done will skill and fairness. A concluding section gives a list of carefully chosen references to books and magazine articles, thus enabling any individual or group to extend the study and secure additional information.

Copies of this pamphlet may be secured on request from the Education Society, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass..

THE WAY OF LIFE.

As we travel through the labyrinth of life, we know not what trials await us. If we did we would despair; but God cares and suffices strength in time of need.

Experiences come thick and fast, influences are thrown around us that change our lives for better or for worse. "From Jerusalem to Jericho we travel every day."

And many are the fallen ones we see along the way." The poor needy man, robbed, wounded and dying, and on comes the priest representing the church whose time is so filled that it does not have time to stop and see the needs of the fallen ones.

Members often support the church, attend services, and help carry on the work. The remainder of their time is spent in seeking pleasure and material things. They would not rob you, or wound your body, but often they rob you of your good name, character, friends and loved ones, and then pass by on the other side, leaving you broken-hearted, forsaken, wounded and crushed under the burden of sorrow.

As members of the church we are supposed to be one in Christ, bound by the strongest ties of love. Our aim should be to love one another, pray for one another, bear one another's burdens, and inspire each to a closer walk with God. But we live in a restless age, going to and fro with but little time to visit the sick or hardly bury the dead. We do not take time to worship God, to seek to know His will.

We have a limited time to spend in service and must close on the minute if we please the majority of people. We wonder if that pleases God? Jesus told the disciples to tarry at Jerusalem until they were endued with power. No wonder our churches have lost much of their power. Are we taking time to meet God face to face, seeking His power that will enable us to do the best for Christ and His church? Are we helping those in need, those who are sin-sick, those who are heart-sick, those who are crushed under the burden of life? Are we taking time to tell them of Jesus and His healing blood, that saves from sin? Are we in a loving way giving a word of comfort and cheer to bind the broken hearted, to inspire hope that will enable them to look beyond the vale of tears? Or are we leaving them to fill our State prisons, our State hospitals, suicidal graves, or bear their burden alone, while we pass by on the other side?

Remember that Jesus said he that is without sin cast the first stone and no stones were cast. He said, "Neither do I condemn thee; go and sin no more." He also said: "Ye that are spiritual help the weaker ones," but often we help them on the downward road. Jesus is our example and if we follow Him we will not pass by on the other side.

On comes the Levite and he looked at the needy man, then passed by on the other side. The Levite represents a careless and thoughtless world. The worldly-minded do not know the way of life because they have not been transformed by His redeeming love, and are unable to say, "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." They cannot say with David, "Thy word have I hid in my heart that I might not sin against thee." The Bible is the waybill, read it to be wise, believe it to be safe, practice it to live right. So often we are the only Bible the careless world will read, and what if the type is blurred and they fail to see Christ in us? Therefore the world, failing to know Him, who is Love, they have no sympathy or love for the fallen ones by the wayside. They are seeking pleasure, wealth and fame, giving but little thought to those who are in trouble, in sorrow, with the loss of loved ones. They seemingly think if they go near these poor needy ones, they will be looked upon as disgraced or classed with the fallen ones. The priest and the Levite seeing this poor needy man, looked at him and then passed on the other side. But thank God for the good Samaritan that truly represents every spirit-filled Christian.

When the Samaritan came along, may we notice that he did not pass by on the other side, but came to the man, had compassion for him. He bound up his wounds, carried him to the inn, a place where he could have good attention and needed care, paying all his bills. Just so with true Christians; they will find the needy ones, and give them aid in their distress, comfort them in their sorrow, and sympathize with them in their misfortune. Life's experiences are not all joy on the mountain top, but too often they come in the valley of sorrow and tears.

When misfortune and sorrow comes and our dearest loved ones slip away and leave us forever, we then need the sympathy, fellowship and love of real Christians. Through their kindness, love, encouragement and prayers and by the grace of God, we one day will overcome.

Those who take time to be holy; to speak oft with their Lord, will take time to share our sorrows and help to dry our tears. Thank God for them, for one day they will meet and there will be no more sorrow. They will hear the glad summons, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord," in a land where death comes not and the meeting will be eternal.

(Dedicated in loving memory to one who departed this life June 12, 1934.)

COMPANION.

WHERE THE CHURCH COMES IN.

Right where the handclasp's a little stronger
Right where the smile dwells a little longer,
That's where the church comes in.
There's where the sun is a little brighter,
Folks treat each other a little whiter,
And the bonds of home are a wee bit tighter,
That's where the church comes in.

Over its steeple the skies seem bluer,
Friendships within are a little truer,
For that's where the church comes in.
There's a breath from God like a fresh breeze blowing,
There's a stream of happiness, banks o'erflowing,
And the richest reaping from patient sowing,
That's where the church comes in.

When children's lives are in the making,
Or someone's heart with grief is aching,
That's where the church comes in.
Where there's more of singing and less of sighing,
Where there's more of giving and less of buying,
And the strong to help the weak are trying,
That's where the church comes in.

THE RESPONSIBILITY OF THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS FOR MORAL EDUCATION.

By Roy C. Helfenstein, M. A., D. D.
Minister, People's Church, Dover Del.

(Conclusion.)

If moral training is not given in the public schools, thousands of boys and girls will be thrust out upon society without any moral training whatsoever, because their home life is absolutely void of moral influence, and the children in such homes are usually not given the opportunity to receive the small amount of moral training the church is in a position to give. I say "small amount of moral training the church is in a position to give," because the church through the Sunday School has the children such a small fraction of the child's time. The public school is the only agency in society that is in a position to give the moral training which future citizens should have, because many homes absolutely fail to give any moral training to the children, often the training received in such homes being actually anti-moral, —the children actually being commended for doing anything they want to do, regardless of how wrong it may be, if they can "get by" with it. It seems unbelievable but it is nevertheless true that some of the children with whom your own boys and girls have to associate, are actually taught to do the very things you admonish your children not to do. There are children whose parents teach them both by example and by precept to steal, to lie, to cheat, and to evade the laws. The story of the boy who was asked how old he was illustrates the point. He replied that he was four years old when he rode on the train—five years old at home—and six years old at school.

The public school can best combat this anti-moral influence of some homes by an adequate program of moral education. The public school is in a better position to give this moral training than is the church, because it has the boys and girls under its direction five hours a day and five days a week, as compared with the one hour, one day, a week that the Sunday school has the boys and girls who are under its direction. Moreover, the public school has all the boys and girls of a community because of the laws for compulsory attendance, whereas the Sunday school only has perhaps half of them, if even that many, when they feel like attending or when their parents are disposed to have them attend.

Hence society is rightly demanding that the public school accept its responsibility for moral education. With a large percentage of the children receiving no moral training in the home, with some actually receiving anti-moral training at home, and with more than half the children receiving no moral training from the church, the moral training that the others receive in the home and the church is constantly militated against by the constant contact with playmates and classmates whose moral training is lacking. "A little leaven can leaven a big lump of dough. And a little devil can devil a big crowd of boys." But if the public school would accept their responsibility for moral education, all the children of public school age would receive the benefit of such training, and the homes that are giving moral training, and the churches likewise would thereby be assisted in their task. Moral education in the public schools would not be a substitute for moral training by the home and the church, but instead would be a greatly needed and a most encouraging supplement to that training.

We all recognize that there has always been a certain emphasis laid upon moral training in our public schools, in some schools more than in others, just as a generation ago certain emphasis was laid upon music in the schools when no specialist in music was employed to teach music or promote the music program of the school; each teacher being responsible for "helping lead the singing." The same was true in those days with physical education, manual training, domestic science, etc. The value of these subjects was then recognized, but not considered of sufficient importance to employ a teacher specially trained and specially qualified to direct the work. But every standard school today has a special teacher at the head of each of these departments. Just so the time is near at hand when every standard school will also have "A Department of Moral Education" with a specially trained and specially qualified teacher to direct the program of moral guidance from the first grade on up through the High School. A number of the leading public school systems of the nation have already accepted their responsibility for moral education, and have already adopted courses on moral guidance for every grade in the school.

This question of moral education cannot be dealt with adequately by the indirect method, which consists of possible moral deductions made by the pupil, and occasional moral applications made by the teacher on the lessons of the day. We all recognize that every teacher in the public school has a definite opportunity to give moral guidance to the boys and girls in this indirect manner. But with a specialist at the head of the department of moral education in the school, every teacher on the faculty will thus be able to cooperate and render even more valuable service in the moral guidance of his or her students, and thus be of incalculable assistance to the head of the department of moral education in promoting the entire program of Moral Training in the school.

A definitely prescribed course of study in moral guidance or "The Conduct of Life" is needed in our public schools to deal sympathetically and scientifically in a direct manner with the problems of the boys and girls in the different age groups. Life situations which have moral implications can then be presented for the children to pass judgment upon and decide what responses moral honor would require in such situations.

We all recognize that every course of study has certain possibilities for moral deductions and moral emphasis, and that every course of study in the public school curriculum may therefore make a certain contribution to this task of moral education, provided the teacher of the particular subject is so inclined. But what if the teacher is not so inclined? That is the weakness of our provision in the past for moral guidance in our schools. What if the teacher is not interested? Some courses naturally contribute more definitely than others in developing honesty, some in developing courtesy, some in developing altruism, some in developing cooperation, and so on. But the responsibility of the public school cannot be met by the moral training given merely as a sort of a by-product from the various subjects of the curricula. Moral education is of too great importance to be placed secondary to any other consideration of the school. Moreover, moral education is needed to integrate all the other courses of study into the life equation of personality.

Moral education should be promoted in the public schools by both the direct and by the indirect methods. To that end, in addition to each teacher being interested in giving his course with whatever moral values may be indirectly deduced, there should be both a man and a woman specialist in "Moral Education" in every public school that is able to have specialists for teaching music, physical education, manual training, etc.

Someone asks the question, "Do you think the public schools should include religion in its program of moral education?" Absolutely not! In saying this I do not in the least minimize the importance of religious education, or make it subordinate to moral education. I believe that religious education is of supreme concern. No education can be more important. But I recognize that moral education is possible apart from religion. And I believe that religionists are wrong in contending that moral education and religious education of necessity must go together. I, too, believe that they should go together, and that the highest moral development is only possible when motivated by religious impulses and when encouraged by religious contacts. But I also realize that beautiful moral character may be developed apart from religious training. And it is tragical that we of the church should fail to encourage moral training anywhere and everywhere possible just because we are unable to link religious training along with it.

The separation of Church and State make it absolutely necessary that the church alone can be responsible for religious education. But the public school as a state institution is responsible for giving moral education to its future citizens. The public school is not supposed to deal with religious education. Moral guidance is large enough responsibility for the public schools to assume in addition to its responsibility of intellectual guidance.

Someone else asks the question, "Do you think that the question of sex should be included by the public school in its program of moral education?" My answer is that no program of moral education would be complete that left out the important subject of sex. The reason some people have developed a false modesty about so sacred a subject as sex is that they have assumed that ignorance or misinformation on the subject was a virtue. But the subject of sex requires a teacher who is specially trained and specially qualified so as to lift the subject out of the muck and mire and even filth where ignorance has dragged it.

Because of the significant part that sex plays in human life, no course in moral education is adequate that does not take this factor of life fully into account. One wonders why the subject of sex has been tabooed by many intelligent parents and by many intelligent teachers as if it were something vile when it is the most sacred phase of human life. People who prefer to let boys and girls secure their information about sex from promiscuous and chance suggestions and intimations are not playing fair with the child nor with the future. The child is being educated in sex either the right way or the wrong way all the time. It is the business of the public school to see to it that this sex education shall be the right kind, —pure, noble, and helpful in order to counteract the wrong impressions of sex that children get from newspapers, magazines, billboards, motion pictures, and from their mis-informed and misguided playmates. Wholesome and sane sex education in the public school is absolutely essential to counteract in the child's life the vulgar, distorted, unwholesome and often even vicious conceptions of sex the child receives from the street and wayside contacts.

The moral education needed on the subject of sex is of the most vital importance to boys and girls of public school age, and can only be given by specialists in moral guidance. Authorities on child life declare that by the time the child is only seven to nine years of age it is receiving impressions about sex. It is impossible to over-emphasize the importance of having those early sex

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

SINCE 1870.

We are indebted to Mrs. T. W. Chandler, Virgilina, Va., for a perfectly preserved copy of the Minutes of the Christian Conferences for 1870—Ministerial Directory, Addresses, and other valuable matter. This record of more than fifty pages brings us much information out of the past that we of the present, who are interested in the church, may well profit by. Rev. W. B. Wellons, D. D., of sainted memory, was the editor of the booklet and it was published by the Christian Board of Publications, Suffolk, Va. We could fill up two or three pages of THE SUN with items of absorbing interest that engaged the consideration of our brethren nearly three-quarters of a century ago in their Annual Conferences. We find one Conference, for instance, pledging to raise during the year $203.00 to place in school at once, "and kept there until their education is complete, Brothers Wm. W. Staley and Peter T. Klapp. They possess good minds, unblemished characters and talents capable of extended cultivation."

How well, indeed, this Conference prophesied especially in this particular under the Committee of Education, whose chairman was J. N. Manning.

Foregoing for the present the consideration of many other items of interest contained in this booklet, there is one particular item that makes us wonder if our Conferences have really progressed or defaulted. I find in these Minutes, published along with the Minutes of the churches of our White constituency, the Minutes of the North Carolina Colored Conference. These Minutes show that the North Carolina Colored Conference met in Raleigh October 20-22, 1870, and that Rev. H. B. Hayes, of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, (White) acted as secretary. This Colored Conference had in 1870 twenty-two churches with sixteen ministers, "and is in a thriving condition." The following record is made prefacing the work which had developed in Eastern Virginia among our colored constituency in large proportion:

"Rev. Justin Copeland, a colored preacher, whose post-office address is Suffolk, Va., has charge of three or four churches in Nansemond and Isle of Wight counties. Lewis Darden and Tabitha Briggs have also been licensed to preach."

That which is of significance in this matter is this question: Why is it that we are not printing and getting in form the Minutes of the various Conferences of our colored fellowship? And why is it we are not, as a body, as a Convention and as Conferences, cultivating this fellowship and acquainting ourselves with the work that our Negro churches are doing and their Conferences are achieving? The Mission Secretary happens to know personally not a few good and faithful ministers and lay-workers in our Negro churches, but are we, as a church, acquainting ourselves with their work and seeking to develop their work along with our own, and thus unite our efforts among the White and Negro churches and conferences to build up and extend the kingdom of our Lord? Is it not time that our Conferences were either returning to our custom of 1870 or, at least, seeking to carry on the splendid work that our fore-fathers were doing in this particular line. Our Negro constituency at present is without a common center around which to rally their interest and their loyalty. They once had a paper, but suspended publication some years ago. They had a college for the education of their ministers and leaders at Franklinton, N. C., which is now closed up, but which is ready to be opened when funds and leadership and fellowship are secured. They, too, are wishing to move forward and extend the kingdom of our Lord and to unite their efforts and merge their interests with the rest of us, and with our larger Congregational fellowship merger. And, as we happen to know, many of them are only asking the way in which to go and method by which they may be brought into the larger fellowship and be more efficient in the name and for the sake of our Lord and Saviour.

CHRISTIAN UNION.

If any reader of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is in doubt about the attitude of our Christian Churches Christian Union, the following will be of interest. We are giving from the Christian Annual of 1870 a corporate statement of our position on Christian Union:

"The following preamble and resolutions adopted by the General Convention of the Christian Church at its last session held in May, 1870, at Suffolk, Va., gives the position occupied by the Christians on the question of Christian Union:

"Whereas, the members of the General Convention of the Christian Church are profoundly impressed with the belief that harmony in the Church of Christ is essentially necessary to the true interests of our holy religion; therefore,

1. Resolved, That we appeal to all true Christians of every denomination, to aid us in the great work of promoting that 'unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace' which should prevail among the members of the body of which our Lord Jesus Christ Himself is the Head.

2. Resolved, That while we freely concede the inalienable right of every man to exercise private judgment and liberty of conscience in matters of religion, yet we recognize the necessity which demands that certain fundamental doctrines should be believed and acknowledged by every one seeking admission into the visible church.

3. Resolved, That, in our opinion, there is a sufficient community of feeling and belief among evangelical denominations to form a basis of union, without binding the consciences of men in those matters which are but of secondary importance and are not essential to the constitution of the church instituted by our Lord and established through the instrumentality of his apostles and ministers.

4. Resolved, That we call upon every true friend of our holy faith, everywhere, to come out openly in favor of Evangelical Christian Union—the only safeguard of Protestant Christianity, and the only means of promoting that spiritual unanimity and perfect peace which are the crowning glory of the Gospel."

The following comment is made on the above on the page following that on which the Resolutions were printed and, we presume is of later origin:

"The position taken by Christians on the subject of Christian Union is drawing towards them several other denominations, and affiliation with others, to some extent, will probably be the result. The preamble and resolutions to the Convention at Suffolk, by Rev. C. A. Apple, and which were fully discussed and unanimously adopted, as an expression of the feelings and sentiments of the body on this subject, have been extensively read and commented upon by the religious press of the country, and in the present state of feeling in the country in reference to the union of the followers of Christ, have met with much favor.

CROWDED CHURCHES.

We write not of the golden days of the past when people went to church in throngs because they had nowhere else to go, nor of the age to come when every knee shall bow, but of the days in which we live. Within a week we have seen crowded churches. We could easily gather an anthology of woe and print the laments of those who grieve because of the failure in church attendance on the part of many but today we want to report another series of facts. Just as one swallow does not make a spring so two happy experiences of an editor do not constitute a survey of the state of the church, but as one swallow shows that spring is a possibility, so several visits to crowded churches do bear evidence that in some places under some conditions some people do go to church in crowds that tax the capacity of their places of worship.

While attending a ball game in Pittsburgh, one of the ministers in the party remarked that it would be a great thing if people would go to church in such crowds. Looking at the acres of empty seats, we replied that according to the size of the stadium, it seemed to us that the ball game had pulled a crowd which in our churches we would hardly regard a good prayer-meeting attendance. This was on Monday afternoon. On Tuesday night we saw more people in a church than we had seen at the ball game.

The high hour of worship in which we saw such a tremendous audience was in the new East Liberty Presbyterian Church. This building was dedicated only a week previous to our visit. We were told that it cost more than four million dollars. Everything that architectural genius could do, when given a commission unhampered by any consideration of economy, had been done to make a church of beauty, convenience and completeness for service. The stones carry symbols of the gospel of Christ and the light that sifts through the windows is broken by illustrations of the truth of God.

The auditorium seats seventeen hundred and the system for amplifying sound makes it possible for more than five thousand to hear a service conducted in the chancel. Science has done its perfect work in ventilation, lighting and amplification. The service which we attended was called a recital. There was noble music by the organists and choirs but the music was religious and the selections were those rendered by many choirs. The address, the responsive readings and the pastoral prayer were without sensation and in the form to which we are accustomed in well organized programs of worship. It was a religious service without any attempt at any kind of a stunt. The nave, transept and galleries were crowded with a congregation which began to fill the house forty minutes before the hour announced.

This church is said to be the last word in church architecture for Protestantism. It looks extravagant to us but when we see the buildings which the Mellons have erected in Pittsburgh for commercial and educational purposes we are rather glad that when a church was built as a memorial to saintly mothers and the glory of God, religion was not discounted by limitation of funds. This temple erected to the most high God is the finest that the thought and wealth of our times can produce. Thither the crowds went up on the blessed night when we visited the matchless sanctuary.

From the metropolis of Western Pennsylvania we went in the same week to a dear little town of the tidewaters of the Chesapeake to take part in a memorial service in old Wesley Chapel at Rock Hall, Maryland. On Saturday night we passed the motion picture hall and it is our guess that it will not seat as many people as can be comfortably taken care of in Wesley Chapel. We saw this church crowded three times on Sunday and we were told that the special services with a lot of visiting preachers did not give the church the high count of the year. This is an edifice built of brick in the year 1851 and stands beside the road in a grove of giant oaks. A social hall adjoins, in which the primary and junior departments of the Sunday school have their class rooms. The building is in good taste. The special service which called us across the bay was made interesting by a reopening after the decoration of the walls and the purchase of a new carpet. A memorial tablet was unveiled to call attention to the five Methodist Protestant ministers who rest in the lovely cemetery surrounding the church. Two of these ministers are in unmarked graves beneath the present church building. This is a fine old church, active, aggressive, conservative, loved by its members who seem to love each other, and they all unite in loving the pastor who is a friend of man and master in leadership. It is very much like thousands of village churches in America. It is different from many by the crowds who worship there.

We have seen crowded churches this week. How do they get that way? Surely this editor has no receipe and painful recollections of vacant pews during thirty years in the pastorate make him reticent. The crowds of these two churches seemed to come because the churches had made great adventures. The churches tried to go ahead and the people went with them. The members of the church have got in the habit of going to the church and the community follows and there are crowds. The churches offer a program of worship which feeds the souls of men, a fellowship that makes the heart warm, a pleasantness of approach which makes worshippers welcome and a service which makes men feel that it is worthwhile to be in the church.

The drawing of crowds to a church lies within the power of the church. There is no cheap and easy way to get and hold crowds by tricks or sensation. The method is by courage, initiative, sacrifice, fellowship and a sense of God in worship. The pull of a church on a community lies in the personal attitudes of the members and ministers of the church.

If any critic should say that this editorial lacks the spiritual note we beg him to remember that we cannot say everything we think in a page and that today we are writing of one definite thing, and that is the efforts that men can and should make to lead men to the church. We believe that God is in every church and in every service of worship, but the way men act toward us when we go to church has a lot to do with making us want to go back to that church. The kind of a church that men erect to the glory of God has a lot to do with our sense of the reality of God when we go in the church. We think that the Bible has a clear suggestion that the spiritual experience and power in a service is the result of a crowd rather than the means of getting a crowd. God expects us to do what we can to lure men to the church so that he may do for them what we cannot do. God was no more in the crowded churches we have seen in the last week than in other churches where worship has sometimes been an effort. We ought to try to make worship easy. It was when all were with one accord in one place that they were filled with the Holy Spirit. The crowd came before the charism. We testify that with the multitude in worship we felt with new intensity the presence of God.—Editorial in the Methodist Protestant-Recorder.

THE TEMPTATION OF CHRIST.

By E. E. Sewell, in Gospel Advocate.

What would have been wrong in turning stones into bread? Jesus was hungry from his long fast, and may have been too weak to reach some place where he could find food. It would have been (for him) a simple matter to use his divine power and provide himself with food, and then go on about his work, stronger in body and more fully confirmed in his conviction that he was the Messiah. But there was more in it than just that. Since he was human as well as divine, if he had yielded to this temptation, he would later have yielded to another one: to turn stones into gold and silver. He would have wanted some of the "good things of life" such as a good house, good clothes, good food, and, in terms of today, a car, a radio, leisure for study and travel, etc. What would have been wrong in his using his power to provide such things for himself and his followers?

Aside from any question of doing actual wrong to obtain these things, would he not have been doing just what most of us human beings, even Christians, are doing?

But there was more than this in the temptation. In Nazareth and other parts of the land of that day, Jesus must have seen much hardship and suffering because of poverty. It must have been a temptation to him to use his divine power to relieve this suffering. It would have given him the keenest of pleasure to "visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction," give food, clothing, and shelter to the needy, pay off mortgages, "liquidate frozen assets," remove toiling, and relieve poverty-stricken farmers. He could thus have made many hearts glad, and would have himself been of all men most popular. Surely there would have been nothing wrong in this.

It is not a question of right and wrong so much as a question of what is good on the one hand and what is better and best on the other. What course in life would have given Jesus himself the greatest happiness as a human being on earth and been the best example of unfailing happiness? Would it be a selfish life of ease and comfort, or a life of self-denial and unselfish service in behalf of others?

Jesus was not deceived. He saw in man a need far greater and more important than the need of relief in material things. Had not God already given to men material blessings in abundance, not only to the good, but to the unthankful and evil also? There has always been plenty for all, if men only had a generous spirit of sharing with others instead of a disposition to appropriate everything possible for themselves. Man's greatest need was, and is, a change of heart. Consider that Gadarene demoniac, who lived among the tombs. All the wealth of the world would mean nothing to one in that condition. Only one thing could give him happiness, and that was what Jesus did for him when he restored him to his right mind.

Men are not demoniacs, it is true; but when their minds are filled with such evil spirits as ignorance, superstition, fear, and dread—terrors known and unknown—they are as incapable of straight thinking and right living as the Gadarene demoniac. Before men can get any real happiness out of life, all these evil tenants must be cast out and their place filled with a knowledge of God as a Father, with consciousness of sins forgiven and duty done. When such a change takes place in the heart, then a corresponding change takes place in the way of living, for "out of the heart are the issues of life."

I ask nothing better for my children than that they may not be merely mominal "church members," but that the example and teachings of Jesus may fill their hearts and direct their lives.

It was this state of mind that Jesus proposed to give to man. What a stupendous undertaking that was! How many of us have succeeded in changing the hearts of even one person? Many utterly fail to change the hearts of prodigal sons or daughters, though they have striven earnestly with prayers and tears. Yet, Jesus proposed to change, and has changed, the hearts of millions since the day he was "lifted up" to "draw all men unto" himself.

Since the days of Plato, if not before, men have dreamed of an ideal commonwealth, in which there would be no rich nor poor, no backbreaking toil for many, while a few enjoyed ease and comfort; but rather a time when righteousness, justice, peace, and plenty would prevail. This golden era is supposed to come by some ideal form of government. But thoughtful and experienced observers have long given it up as a vain dream, knowing that such a state of things can never be realized while human nature remains unchanged. That change is not expected by any one. Such plans are concerned wholly with outward surroundings and God is left out altogether.

In their view of the millennium, future-kingdom advocates depict about such a golden era, with the addition of Jewish and Christian elements. They understand that God will set up his kingdom throughout the world, all in a moment of time. But Jesus made no promise of a golden age to be achieved by man without God's help, nor of a kingdom to be established everywhere by God without man's cooperation. If he had pictured the eternal glories of a future earthly king-

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Nineteen hundred and five years ago the Spirit manifested His power and presence in the prayer meeting at Jerusalem. The disciples of Jesus had lived through fifty days of trying experiences. They had witnessed the betrayal, trial and crucifixion of their Lord. One of the twelve had gone the way of a suicide. The others were disappointed, discouraged and distressed. Back to their fishing boats they went to find some means of subsistence and relief. During the forty days leading up to the ascension their faith had been recovered by personal contacts with their risen Lord. They were comforted by His words, and convinced of His resurrection.

But the ascension from Olivet took the Lord away from their sight. He promised to return. But the date of His second coming was not designated. Before His ascension he commanded the disciples to "tarry in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." "But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and in Samaria and unto the uttermost parts of the earth." (Acts 1:8.) That was a great promise, followed by a great challenge. These disciples had no unusual human ability. Three years of training under the great Teacher had given them a new insight into the meaning of life. Good seed had been sown in fertile soil. There is abundant life in the word of Jesus Christ.

"Tarry"—wait on God—and wait for God. Prayer is the vital element in the secret of spiritual power. Ten days of prayer by men who believed in Jesus opened the windows of heaven and brought a flood-tide of power. The city of Jerusalem felt relieved after the crucifixion. The people who sought the death of Jesus rejoiced in the accomplishment of their dastardly purpose. During the ten days of the prayer meeting a strange uneasiness kept many people awake at night. Groups had gathered to discuss their experiences and purposes. And when the Spirit came upon the disciples, in such visible power, a vast congregation gathered to witness the event and to hear the sermon of Peter. Many explanations have been offered as to the size of the congregation. There were three thousand converts and additions to the church on that day. It would be unreasonable to suppose that all the people who heard Peter were converted. It is perfectly natural to blieve that many others heard the sermon. Why were so many pople in one place? Why such a large congregation to hear the sermon about a crucified Lord?

The answer to these questions will suggest the explanation of other great revivals—united, prevailing prayer. Such a prayer meeting will touch the people of any community. Effective preaching depends upon effectual, fervent prayer. Too much emphasis should not be attached to the sermon. The prayers of the preacher and the congregation are more important than the testimony. The disciples became witnesses—after the prayer meeting. Many vacant churches in the country places and in crowded cities can be filled by prayer and spiritual consecration. Spirit-filled Christians have power more effective and more attractive than the temptations of the world. The church must learn how to pray and be willing to pray, before the promise of power is verified in a great experience of spiritual victory.

The present day task of the church is no greater in proportion than the commission Jesus gave the disciples before His ascension. They obeyed His command, followed His instructions, and verified His promise. The unlimited resources of Divine power are available to all who will meet the spiritual requirements of the Holy Spirit and the word of God. A local church may not have an opportunity for numerical growth and power. That is possible in our day and generation.

PLEASANT J. CARLTON.

The Christian Church and all of her institutions are called upon to chronicle the death of Pleasant J. Carlton of Richmond, Virginia. In the death of Bro. Carlton the entire denomination loses one of its most valuable members. Bro. Carlton was interested in every enterprise of his church. The Christian Sun and Elon College were regarded by him as the more important. On different occasions he would say to the writer, "We must have the College. If we are to amount to anything as a Church we must have a trained leadership." Country churches are demanding trained ministers. The only way to train them is to keep the College going. Then we need the church paper to keep the whole church informed as to what is going on. If we have these two agencies in full operation, other interests of the Church will of necessity advance. He was a generous supporter of all the enterprises of the Church but centered his efforts around the College and his church paper.

It would be difficult to tabulate his benefactions to the College and his real worth could never be estimated.

The records show that he was an important factor in the rebuilding of the College after the destructive fire January 18, 1923. He, together with his sister, Mrs. Nannie Carlton Parrott and his brothers, Luther E. Carlton and Herbert A. Carlton gave the Carlton Library Building to the College including the most modern furnishings and stacks for the books that could possibly be obtained. The Library Building now contains about twenty-three thousand volumes and is a model institution within itself for a small college.

In this gift alone the benefactors memorialized their names and the name of the famous Carlton family so long as Christian education endures. In the College Catalogue on page forty-three this interesting and significant note is found: "The Carlton Fund.—The family of the late J. W. Carlton, of Richmond, Va., consisting of Messrs. P. J. Carlton, H. A. Carlton and Luther Carlton, and Mrs. T. S. Parrott, have given the College for its permanent funds, certain R. F. and P. Railway stocks valued at $50,000, to found a Professorship in Christian Literature and Methods in memory of Mrs. J. W. Carlton."

In addition to his share in these generous and most helpful gifts, Mr. Carlton was a most liberal supporter of the College in its current demands. On different occasions he gave substantial sums to save the college from embarrassment. He was a member of the Board of Trustees at his death and for many years he gave of his time and counsel for the advancement of the College. He was a man with rare gifts of sociability, of friendship, of keen insight into business, of sound principles, of good judgment, of large sympathies and of overcoming faith. Surely there is no one left among us to take his place. This would be impossible, but may God raise up others with like gifts and inclinations who will fling themselves, what they have and are, into the battle for Christian education and righteousness that the Kingdom of God may continue to come through the Church.

Elon College, in recognizing its severe loss, expresses to Mrs. Carlton, his devoted wife, his brothers, his sister and all relatives its unfailing sympathy in this time of loss and sorrow.

AN IDEAL AND A NECESSITY.

Viewed by a National Safety Council Official.

Beyond question, total abstinence from alcoholic beverages is a proper ideal for American youth. It is something to strive for, and, unfortunately, active striving would seem to be necessary at the present time when drinking is so notoriously fashionable.

But total abstinence is no theoretical ideal for the automobile driver. It is a practical necessity. The abrupt rise of motor vehicle fatalities in 1934 to a total of 36,000 deaths may not be entirely attributable to the repeal of our prohibition laws, but that the increased use of liquor on the part of drivers played an important part in this rise, there is no doubt. Thus abstinence for the driver is no ideal to be striven for, but a life-and-death necessity to be insisted on—and the insistence needs the hard hand of the police to back it up.

Why is it so dangerous to drink a quantity of liquor which is generally considered moderate? Why is he morally bound to abstain from whiskey, gin and beer? Why do we strive to educate all people that drink is harmful (which it undeniably is); but demand that drivers not touch a drop?

The general reason is not hard to find. It is that the driver is in a position to kill and maim. His car is a potential weapon, as deadly as a machine gun, if misused. It can kill him; it can kill the people riding with him; and it can kill and cripple, defenseless men, women and children who use our streets and highways, either as motorists or as pedestrians.

Specifically the reason for requiring abstinence on the part of drivers is that ethyl alcohol is a depressant. Even in the smallest quantity, it is always a narcotic drug and never the stimulant it is commonly thought to be. True, doctors sometimes prescribe brandy or whiskey to make a sluggish heart beat faster—and this is one of the very few therapeutic uses of the drug—but the alcohol does not stimulate the heart as coffee does, for example. It merely depresses or hinders the nerve which leads from the brain to the heart and controls the heart action.

Alcohol in a man has a peculiar and interesting action. While it makes him feel smarter, quicker, more capable, and braver than normally he is, at the same time it makes him less capable of thought and action than ever. Nearly everyone has heard a drunken man boast that he can "lick anyone in the crowd" when, as a matter of fact, he can scarcely stand upright and is utterly unable to control his hands sufficiently to light a cigar.

His mental controls are out of commission. The seat of his judgment is askew. Normally he may be courteous to all people; under the influence of drink he may insult women. The combination of these circumstances is what makes the drinking driver such a menace. For while his judgment is impaired, so is his physical and mental efficiency. He really believes that he has better control than ever of his automobile and is more capable of extricating himself from a tight place and he is, therefore, more willing to take a chance. As a matter of fact, his arms, his hands, his feet, his eyes, all are under par.

An interesting series of psychological studies has been completed by two Danish experimenters in Copenhagen. They tested the effects of small quantities of liquor on those functions which are used most in driving. There is no man or woman, no driver, passenger or pedestrian, who is not vitally concerned with the findings of these scientists.

I have mentioned the incontrovertible fact that automobile accidents have increased since repeal. There are three outstanding causes of this. The first is the increase of travel by automobile in 1934 over 1933, and, of course, this has augmented the natural exposure to accidents. The second is the increase in the power and speed of low-priced cars, which means that the proportion of cars with a high destructive power is greater than ever. The third is that alcoholic liquor has become very cheap and easily available to everybody. Our highways are lined with bars!

I have given these causes for the automobile increase in tragedies in the order of their importance as I believe this order to be. But I must admit that it is entirely possible that liquor under the belt of the motorist may actually be the outstanding cause of the disastrous and sudden jump which automobile death took last year.

While our ultimate ideal, therefore, may be universal abstinence, we must insist now that no man shall drive a car after he has been drinking.

RESPONSIBILITY OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

impressions interpreted to the child by a specialist in moral guidance, to preserve in the child "A wholesome adolescence, an intelligent and sympathetic guidance by a teacher of noble character, specially trained in this field of education, might mean more to the whole education and life of the students than any other part of their public school training.

Every teacher cannot handle this important subject any more than can every teacher train the students in music even though they may know something about music and appreciate its value. Every school should have a specialist to teach music, physical education, domestic science, etc. But I submit that as important as knowledge of music and these other subjects is to the life of boys and girls, knowledge about self and "The Conduct of Life" is vastly more important. We would not risk that boys and girls secure their knowledge and appreciation of music or of the sciences or of the languages and the rest merely from the indirections of contacts with teachers who had a casual knowledge of these subjects. But we give them every advantage by securing teachers who are specially trained and specially qualified to teach these subjects. Whereas we have expected the most important subject of all "The Conduct of Life" to be cared for by anybody and nobody. But parents and teachers are recognizing more and more the inconsistency and weakness of our present educational system which considers moral education as a by-product of general education instead of recognizing moral education as a specific responsibility of the school to be treated by both the direct and indirect method.

There are those who say that the times are changing so fast that the moral standards of today may be relegated to the junk pile of "a forgotten past," tomorrow. But they fail to take into account the fact that the great moral values of life never change. Conventionalities may change. But conventionalities are not always moralities. The great moral values of life never change. Human life could not endure without them.

Take, for instance, personal honor, modesty, honesty, reliability, dependableness, justice, efficiency, kindness, purity of thought, clean living, social mindedness, cooperation, altruism, the higher loyalties, etc., etc. These will never change in their importance and significance to human life. And children need to have that moral training which will enable them not only to know what is right and what is wrong, but also to discriminate between the lesser and greater values, and which will make the immoralities of life absolutely repulsive to them.

Parents, who would be alarmed if aware of arrested development in the life of their child, have reason to be far more alarmed if there is evidence of arrested moral development in the life of their child. And the public school should dedicate itself to the proposition that every effort shall be put forth to the end that there shall not be an arrested moral development in the life of any child that comes under its supervision.

"As youth grow wiser, they ought also to know better."

For the sake of society and for the sake of youth themselves, the public schools of the nation should accept their full responsibility for moral education. We should all be tremendously concerned about this responsibility of the public schools because the main business of all adults is to serve the rising generation. Will Allan Drumgoole has forcefully expressed the attitude of every worthy parent and of every worthy adult toward childhood and youth in his poem entitled "Bridge Builders":

"An old man going a lone highway
Came at the evening cold and gray,
To a chasm, vast and deep and wide,
Through which was flowing a sullen tide.

"The old man crossed in the twilight dim,
The sullen stream held no fear for him.
But he turned when safe on the other side,
And built a bridge to span the tide.

"Old man, said a fellow pilgrim near,
You are wasting strength in building here.
Your journey will end with the ending day,
You never again will pass this way,
You've crossed the chasm deep and wide
Why build a bridge at eventide?

"The builder lifted his old grey head,
Good friend, in the path I have come, he said,
There followeth after me today,
A fair-haired youth who must pass this way.
This chasm which has been naught to me,
To that fair-haired youth may a pit-fall be.
He too must cross in the twilight dim,
Good friend, I am building the bridge for him."

The child comes into an adult world. Adults are responsible for every inequity, every injustice, every inhumanity and every moral illusion in society.

Adults have bequeathed to childhood and youth "the sorry mess" of confusion in every realm of life, largely because this moral education program was denied the generations past. Now by an adequate provision for moral education in our public schools, we may help build the bridge over which the present generation of childhood and youth may pass from the present moral and social disorder to the New Social Order for which we have all hoped and labored, and prayed.

Without the giver the gift is bare.

FATHER AND FOUNDER OF MISSIONS.

[Writing in The Christian Evangelist (Disciples), Dr. W. G. Johnston names both the father and then the founder of Christian Missions.]

Abraham has been called "the Father of Missions." He did receive a command from God to go out from his father's house, from Ur of the Chaldees, to a land that God would show him; he also received the promise that "in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed." He obeyed the command, and sought "the city that hath foundations whose builder and maker is God." He became missionary to the world and his influence is an ever lengthening shadow.

We do not expect to find in the Old Testament the same emphasis on world-wide missions that we find in the New, for the reason that a vast preparation was necessary before it was possible to make spiritual conquest of the world. Nevertheless missionary conquest is implicit in the whole of the writings of the old dispensation. The Books of the Bible have been represented as the story of God's search for man, while the sacred books of other religions describe man's search for God. God was indeed the first missionary, searching for Adam after his fall, and bringing hope to the guilty pair with a promise of triumph over their enemy. It is not strange that Isaiah, the great Messianic, should have visions of the nations seeking the God of the Hebrews. He could see them coming as doves to their windows. But it is in the Book of Jonah that we have the greatest missionary story of the Old Testament. The episode of the whale comes to mind when we think on Jonah; but that is not the greatest thing in the book: the fact of his being a missionary to a heathen nation, and the fact of this nation's repentance are the true marvels of the Jonah story.

Immanuel Kant, considered by some to be the world's greatest thinker, never traveled more than 65 or 70 miles from the place of his birth. It is doubtful whether Jesus was ever beyond the confines of Palestine, a small country, in shape and size about like our state of New Hampshire; and yet he came to make one nation out of the various bloods of the earth, to establish one kingdom, the kingdom of God, in the world. He was the greatest religious leader of all time. He was the missionary spirit incarnate. His disciples could not be obedient to him and not be missionaries, for he said to them: "Go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature."

CHRIST'S COMPELLING COMMISSION.

Let us get the mission of the Great Commission clearly in mind. Was it "to overrun the world with armies and beat it into submission with the sword? To set up a world-empire of earthly power and splendor?" There is but one answer to these foolish questions; an emphatic negative: No; but to "make by the gospel as preached by the Christians, disciples of all the nations." The Great Commission contains three great fundamentals; namely, the invitation of mercy, the welcome of grace, the promise of fellowship. It is obvious that Jesus would have his church understand that world-wide evangelism is the passion, purpose, plan, program for the church. The famous missionary, Dr. Samuel M. Zwemer, has given the following suggestive classification: "City missions—Jerusalem; district missions—Judea; missions to aliens—Samaria; foreign missions—the uttermost part of the earth." Because the Lord Jesus Christ has all authority, he has the right to send his disciples wherever he will, even into every corner of the earth, persuading men to become disciples, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, and teaching them those things which Christ had spoken. "Ye shall be witnesses unto me"—world-wide witnesses. Jerusalem, Judea, Samaria, uttermost—see the circle ever widening reaches into the frontiers of earth and time. The very soul of our religion is missionary. It would cease to exist if it ceased to be missionary. Softly! "The missionary enterprise is not the afterthought of the Church," remarks Henry Van Dyke: "It is Christ's forethought."—Exchange.

A CHURCH OF SEVEN THOUSAND MEMBERS.

By UNA JEAN MINTO.

At Bailundo is probably the largest church organization in the world under Congregational leadership. One can scarcely call it a Congregational church for its members do not know that term. They call themselves Vakuekongelo lia Yesu Kristie "Those of the Church of Jesus Christ" or more simply just Vakuayesu "Those of Jesus."

This church was founded by Dr. Wesley M. Stover in 1885 when he baptized fourteen young people, the first Christians of the Ovimbundu tribe. The Church grew steadily but slowly in numbers. New converts were put into classes for instruction in Christian principles and conduct, and baptism given only after years of testing.

So it was not until the middle of the last decade that Bailundo church members numbered more than 1000. Since then the growth has been phenomenal, almost unbelievable. In 1934 nearly one thousand were baptized, making a little under 7000 communicants.

Its Pastors.

It is a statesmanlike task to direct or control the working of so great an organization and it demands unfailing wisdom, tact, and understanding. Abraham Ngulu, the revered veteran pastor, was one of the Charter members. He has been a preacher all his life, and was the first Ovimbundu to be given ordination in the year before the Jubilee of 1930.

Four years later the growth of the church demanded a second pastor, and a younger man, Horacio Arao, was chosen and ordained. He is a graduate of Currie Institute, Dondi, and in his many years as church secretary has had a fine apprenticeship in the understanding of both outstation work and church methods. The two missionaries with the African pastors are Rev. Daniel A. Hastings and Rev. Richard S. Webb.

Both pastors have homes at the Mission Station which is after all only a little village itself. But the native Christians speak of it as the Ombala, the Capital, for here live their leaders and the missionaries. Here, too, are the schoolhouses and the dormitories for boys and girls of the boarding schools, and here is their beautiful new church built entirely by native Christians under the direction of Dr. Hastings.—Missionary Herald.

HOW BAD IS JAPAN?

By DARLEY DOWNS.

There are some things that can be said about her that are perfectly true and are pretty bad. Upton Close says the most of them—besides some that aren't true.

No one can feel more bitterly against Japanese militarism than the missionary, who sees what it does to the fine young men he meets in school and Bible class.

But the West sometimes fails to remember that she taught Japan modern warfare; and that Japan alone among Oriental nations stands as an acknowledged world power because she showed the world that she could fight.

Can you wonder that the Japanese, seeing their potentially far stronger neighbors overrun and treated with insolent contempt, or at best indulgent condescension, by western nations, look upon their army and navy with gratitude and respect.

When we are asked, "What sort of people are the Japanese, anyway? Do you trust them? Do you feel safe there?" we answer, "They are kindly, friendly, generous, honest, marvelously polite, and possessed of a very noble culture. We do trust them, and we feel safer here than we would in Chicago."

The fact that American and European parents, the past twenty-five years, have let their children from five to eighteen years of age go across the great city of Tokio to the American School, all alone, is a pretty good evidence of the essential decency of the plain people there.

The almost innumerable instances of recovery of lost articles have convinced westerners in Japan that the average Japanese is honest. There are no gangsters, no bank holdups, no kidnapings for ransom in Japan. We know that the human material in Japan is good—just as good as anywhere else on earth.

At the same time, we know the evils in Japan: prostitution; bad industrial conditions; terrible economic, moral, and physical waste through the liquor traffic! suppression of freedom of thought; militarism.—Missionary Herald.

"Prejudice is a recluse, living behind the closed doors of the heart."

DOWNWARD MOMENTUM.

For four years there has been a fairly consistent downward movement in the giving of the churches for their state, national and world-wide work. We had hopes that 1935 would show an upward swing in that curve. Instead there is revealed a further loss of 18.34 per cent in the giving of the first four months of the year. It is true that the same months in 1934 showed a gain over 1933, so that the loss for 1935 over 1933 is but 9.45 per cent. It should also be remembered that receipts for the first third of the year constitute approximately but 15 per cent of the giving for the year, so that too much weight should not be attached to the earlier reports.

The significant thing is to note that when a thing starts downhill it requires effort to stop it. If the thing is something we do not care about, we let it go. If, on the other hand, it is something in which we are greatly concerned, we strain every nerve to stop it. We believe our churches are concerned about our missionary work—certainly so, when they realize the significance of that work and the emergency upon which it has come. May not the chosen representatives of the churches count upon those churches not only to check the downward movement but to lift the level of giving to the salvation of the work?

LAYING UP TREASURES.

A thing of great value is not easily received. A real treasure, either material or spiritual, is not easily acquired. Gold and silver and precious stones must be searched for diligently and dug by hard labor deep down under the surface of the earth. The wilderness is converted into valuable farms only through much toil. The same thing is true of spiritual blessings. We must labor in the vineyard of the Master. The apostle John in his revelation saw a great throng in white robes and the elder spoke to him, saying, "What are these things which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they?" And John said, "Sir, thou knowest." And the elder said, "They are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." They had not obtained those white robes easily, but through great tribulation. No doubt the greater part of them had given their lives in this world to the idolatrous executioners rather than deny the name of Christ. A robe like those saints were wearing is of far greater value than the treasures of this world. Those were robes of righteousness, incorruptible and undefiled. Such robes can only be acquired through "patience continuance in well doing." If you set your affections on things above, you will concentrate time and attention to laying up treasures in heaven; but if you set your affections on the earth, you will concentrate time and attention to acquiring worldly treasures. The worldly treasures are corruptible—they last for but a little time; but the heavenly treasures are incorruptible and eternal. To lay up much treasures in this world requires so much time and effort that it is very difficult for a man at the same time to prepare for himself a robe of righteousness and lay up treasures in heaven. The Saviour said: "The kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant man, seeking goodly pearls:' who, when he had found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had, and bought it." The incorruptible inheritance of eternal life is that one pearl of great price; and as the merchant in the parable sold all that he had, even so must we make our duty to God preeminent and seek "first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness."—*F. A Story for the Children

PATRICIA SOLVES THE PROBLEM.

An auto gave three warning toots as it sped past a group of school girls. Patricia and her friends were so deep in a discussion that they did not even notice that they were crossing a busy street. The new girl, who had just entered school was the subject of their conversation.

"She doesn't seem to want to make friends," said Mary Ann. "I asked her if she was going my way and said that I would walk with her, but she only smiled and shook her head, and turned the corner as if she were in a hurry."

"I had about the same experience," said Katherine.

"Perhaps she is an heiress and feels superior to the rest of us," suggested Estelle, who had blond curls and always wore lovely clothes.

The girls all laughed at this absurd idea, then Margaret asked, "Have you noticed that she never recites in class? Miss Bradley never calls on her for anything."

"Maybe she is dumb," suggested Ruth. "You know, a deaf-mute."

"Oh, no, she isn't,' answered Patricia. "I walked along behind her when she was walking with her brother the other day and she was talking all right, just like any of us."

"It seems funny, though, that she never talks to anyone," said Eleanor. "Why does not some one go and call on her? Do any of you know where she lives?"

No one did, so the mystery about Marie La Fleur, the new pupil, was not solved that day.

Patricia thought quite a bit about Marie La Fleur and wished that she might have an opportunity to make her acquaintance, but Marie always seemed in a hurry after school and slipped away by herself before anyone could speak to her.

But one afternoon the wished-for opportunity came. Patricia was coming home from the grocery store about five o'clock when she saw Marie La Fleur hurrying toward her. And of all things! Marie was crying—and she was carrying something close to her. What could it be? Why, it was a little kitten.

Patricia hurried toward her. "What is the trouble?" she asked. "Can't I help you?" Marie silently shook her head and wished back the tears.

"I live right here," said Patricia. "Please do come in a minute," and she put her arm about Marie and led her up to the porch swing. Marie stroked the kitten a minute to gain control of herself, then she said, "the—the boys were t-t-teasing the kitten."

"Is it your kitten?" asked Patricia sympathetically.

"No, b-b-but they—were t-t-tormenting it and it was so little. I interfered and they m-m mimicked me. I st-st-stutter when I do-don't know people very w-well."

"The mean things!" said Patricia. "Some boys are nice—gentlemanly, you know—but the majority of them at that age are rude. What a darling kitten! Don't you hope you can keep it?" And the two girls were soon visiting like old friends. And as Marie became acquainted with Patricia she did not stutter at all, as Patricia had told the girls.

Marie did not stay long, for she said that her mother would be wondering what was keeping her but she promised to call for Patricia on her way to school the next morning.

That evening Patricia went around to see a few of her best friends. She told them about Marie and the kitten and said that Marie was sensitive about stuttering before people and probably that was why Miss Bradley never called on her to recite in class. She suggested to the girls that they all welcome her quietly into their group but make no special effort to talk with her for awhile. Patricia was very sure that after Marie became acquainted with them all she would talk quite naturally.

"But what can we do about the boys?" asked Ruth. "They will just delight in mimicking her now that they have found out that she stutters."

"We shall have to put our heads together and plan some way to appeal to those boys," said Patricia thoughtfully. "There must be some way to reach their hearts and get their cooperation. They do not mean to be unkind. They are just thoughtless."

"Well," said Ruth, "you know the old saying, 'The way to a boy's heart is through his stomach.' "

"Good idea," said Patricia. "Let's plan a feed and tell them there is a string tied to it. The string will be that they must behave like gentlemen if they come to our party. We need not mention that in the invitation, but if we tell Tom Leslie and he can tell the rest of them. He was one of those who mimicked Marie when she asked for the kitten."

And so it turned out. They consulted Miss Bradley and she agreed to make it a class picnic supper and it was to be held in Patricia's back yard on Friday afternoon. Everybody took hold of the plan with enthusiasm.

The boys all came, and so did Marie with the kitten. When the games were played no one was more popular than Marie. She became so interested that she forgot to stutter, and if she did slip occasionally, the boys were all too gentlemanly to notice it. Every one helped set the table by spreading large tablecloths on the grass and setting out appetizing dishes of home-made baked beans and brown bread and vegetable salads. The girls cut the cakes that they had brought, and when it came time, the boys served the ice cream that was their part to provide.

It was a great success, that picnic supper under the trees in Patricia's back yard. Everyone who was there said to Patricia when they met, "Didn't we have a grand time last night, Patricia? I really think it was the nicest party that I ever attended."—Carrie Belle Boyden in Zion's Herald.

"To be of greater service, Lord,
A closer student of Thy word;
To help to bear a brother's load;
And cheer him on the heavenly road,
To tell the lost of Jesus' love,
And how to reach the home above;
To trust in God whate'er befall,
Be ready at the Master's call
For any task that he may give;
And thus through all the year to live
For Him who gave Himself for me,
And taught me that my life should be
A life unselfish, not self-willed,
But with the Holy Spirit filled."

Protestant religion is evangelical or nothing. It may be liberal or orthodox in its formal definitions, but it has no meaning except as it brings men face to face with God as revealed in Jesus Christ, with all that that momentous confrontation implies for the conscience and the will. There can be no place for preaching, at all events, in a church which does not believe that Christ's religion is indeed a gospel: good news of the nature and the will of God, good news of the way to attain communion with God and to find liberation from sin and fear.—*Ernest H. ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

Rev. F. C. Lester, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

AMONG THE MOUNTAINS.

God has made the mountains for the joy of the human eye. Those who live in the lowlands need to steal away occasionally and climb up among the mountains where they can get a longer view, purer air, and a renewal of faith. The Skyline Drive in the new National Park on the top of the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia is as beautiful a drive as can be found in this section of the country. For forty miles this new highway winds about on top of the picturesque Blue Ridge. To the west lies the Page Valley and beyond is the Massanutten Mountain Range. To the east are the declining hills which lead eventually to the sea. Here among nature's beauties the Federal Government has placed a beautiful highway so the travelers can enjoy the mountain breeze and scenery.

Some of those who live among the mountains and Valley of Virginia gathered last week in Antioch Christian Church for their annual Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention. It was the joy of this writer to be present with them one day and to share in their program.

The theme was "The Far Better Way," and those present seemed to be dilligently seeking the better way for church work. Among the visiting speakers were Rev. and Mrs. W. T. Scott of Winston-Salem, the editor of this page and his secretary, Miss Edna Fulcher. A newcomer to the conference who made a real contribution was Rev. Ivan R. Smith.

The officers for the ensuing year are as follows: President, Roy A. Larrick, Winchester, Virginia; Vice-President, Roy H. Andes, R. F. D. 4, Harrisonburg, Virginia; Secretary, R. O. Rothgeb, Luray, Virginia; Treasurer, Walton E. Brill, Hooks Mill, West Virginia; Secretary Organized Classes, Kenneth B. Hook, 1002 Amherst Street, Winchester, Virginia; Secretary Home Department, Miss Amy Louderback, R. F. D. 1, Shenandoah, Virginia; Secretary Cradle Roll, Miss Anna Lou Showalter, R. F. D. 4, Harrisonburg, Virginia; Secretary Teacher Training, Mrs. R. C. Myers. R. F. D. 1, Broadway, Virginia; Secretary Missions, Miss Thelma Morris, Dyke, Virginia; Secretary Christian Endeavor, Miss Minnie Dofflemyre, R. F. D. 2, Elkton, Virginia.

FINANCING RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

Religious training is the surest of all guarantees against crime. It does more than any other one thing to develop society. It is far cheaper to educate children in the realm of religion than it is to search out and condemn criminals. But it too often happens that we spend very stintingly on religious education while larger items go for pleasure and other unimportant things.

The Board of Christian Education of the Southern Convention undertakes to aid churches in training leaders and inspiring young people to do the work of religious education. The Board conducts training schools like the one to be held at Elon, June 25th-30th and like those conducted in Suffolk, Norfolk, and other places. It furnishes reading material for superintendents, and teachers, and young people. It guides the Youth Fellowships. In every way possible it carries on the work of religious education.

The Board is financed quite largely by the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions. For the past few years nearly all of the money received has come from these Conventions. This makes it very important for the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor societies to send to the Conventions the amounts of money which are asked. I sincerely hope that every school and society will do its best to send in all of the dues and something extra, if possible. This will be a great help in carrying forward the work which the churches are undertaking through the Board of Christian Education.

NOBILITY.

In doing, each day that goes by,
Some little good—not in dreaming
Of great things to do by and by;
For whatever men say in their blindness,
And spite of the fancies of youth,
There's nothing so kingly as kindness,
And nothing so royal as truth.

We get back our mete as we measure—
We cannot do wrong and feel right,
Nor can we give pain and gain pleasure,
For justice avenges each slight.
The air for the wing of the sparrow,
The bush for the robin and wren,
But always the path that is narrow
And straight, for the children of men.

'Tis not in the pages of story
The heart of its ills to beguile,
Though he who makes courtship to glory
Gives all that he hath for her smile.
For when from her heights he has won her,
Alas! It is only to prove
That nothing's so sacred as honor,
And nothing so loyal as love!

We cannot make bargains for blesses,
Nor catch them like fishes in nets;
And sometimes the things our life misses
Helps more than the things which it gets.
For good lieth not in pursuing,
Nor gaining of great nor of small,
But just in the doing, and doing
As we would be done by, is all.

Through envy, through malice, through hating,
Against the world, early and late,
No jot of courage abating—
Our part is to work and to wait.
And slight is the sting of his trouble
Whose winnings are less than his worth;
For he who is honest is noble,
Whatever his fortunes or birth.

STEWARDSHIP MOTTOES.

1. Stewardship puts the Golden Rule in business in place of the Rule of Gold.

2. Not how much of my money shall I give to God, but how much of God's money shall I keep for myself.

3. Give not from the top of your purse, but from the bottom of your heart.

4. When a man gets rich, either God gets a partner or the man loses his soul.

5. Jesus teaches that the average man's attitude to the Kingdom of God is revealed by his attitude to his property.

6. The Kingdom of God can never be established by raising money; but it can never be extended without raising money.

7. Each new generation makes some transforming discovery out of God's Book. What is "Stewardship" but God's Word for this generation?

8. Unconsecrated wealth of Christians is the greatest hindrance to the Church's progress.

CULTIVATING AN EYE FOR GOODNESS.

Christian Endeavor Topic for June 23, 1935.

Hymns: "Rejoice Ye Pure in Heart"; "Open My Eyes that I May See"; "In the Hour of Trial"; "Let the Beauty of Jesus Be Seen in Me."

Scripture: I John 2:15-17.; Matt. 6:22, 23.

Daily Bible Readings:

June 17.—Renewing the mind. Rom. 12:2.
June 18.—Seek the best. Phil. 4:8.
June 19.—Look to Jesus. Heb. 12:1, 2.
June 20.—Choose the right path. Matt. 7:13, 14.
June 21.—Walk in the Spirit. Gal. 5:16, 17, 22, 23.
June 22.—Grow in grace. II Peter 3:18.

Prayer: That we may train ourselves to look for the fine and beautiful things in others, and that we may help them by recognizing their fine qualities.

Poem: "You May Count That Day":

If you set down at set of sun
And count the acts that you have done,
And, counting, find
One self-denying deed, one word
That eased the heart of him who heard—
One glance most kind,
That fell like sunshine where it went—
Then you may count that day well spent.

But if, through all the livelong day,
You've cheered no heart, by yea or nay—
If, through it all
You've nothing done that you can trace
That brought the sunshine to one face—
No act most small
That helped some soul and nothing cost—
Then count that day as worse than lost.

—George Eliot.

A class of little settlement girls besought Mrs. George Herbert Palmer, one insufferable summer morning, to tell them how to be happy. "I'll give you three rules," she said, "and you must keep them every day for a week. First, commit something good to memory each day. Three or four words will do, just a pretty bit of poem, or a Bible verse. Do you understand?" A girl jumped up. "I know; you want us to learn something we'd be glad to remember if we went blind." Mrs. Palmer was relieved; these children understood. She gave the three rules—memorize something good each day, see something beautiful each day, do something helpful each day. When the children reported at the end of the week, not a single day had any of them lost. But hard put to it to obey her? Indeed they had been. One girl, kept for twenty-four hours within squalid home-walls by a rain, had nevertheless seen two beautiful things—a sparrow taking a bath in the gutter, and a gleam of sunlight on a baby's hair.

Discussion: Helps for the leader will be found in the August, 1934, issue of "The Christian Herald"—Stanley High's comment in "This Month's World" and in the article "Lee of Oregon" in this same issue. "An Old Game" in the volume of "Half Told Tales" by Henry Van Dyke; and a story "Acres of Diamonds" by Russell Conwell.

"There is so much good in the worst of us,
And so much bad in the best of us,
That it hardly behooves any of us
To talk about the rest of us."

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP.

Lesson XI—June 16, 1935.

Golden Text: "It is required in stewards that a man be found faithful."—I Corinthians 4:2.

Lesson: Deut. 8:11-20; Malachi 3:7-12; Matthew 25:14-30; I Cor. 16:2; II Cor. 8:1-9:15.

The basic principle of stewardship is that one holds something in trust, for which he must give an account. Christian stewardship rests on the basic principle that all we have and are belongs to God, and that we are to develop and use it for Him, and that we are to give an account of our stewardship to Him. Man possesses; he does not own. The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, the world and they that dwell therein. The silver and the gold are His, and the cattle upon a thousand hills. It is the Lord God who giveth thee power to get wealth. Ye are not your own; ye are bought with a price. These are some of the typical expressions of the idea of stewardship in the Scriptures.

Lest Thou Forget the Lord Thy God.

Hard times have their dangers. The depression has meant broken-up homes, stunted bodies due to under-nourishment. lack of education, lack of cultural advantages and mental breakdowns, the breakdown of self-respect, and many other unwholesome things which might be mentioned. But good times have their dangers too. Prosperity is perilous. Moses knew that. In spite of the hardships of the wanderings in the wilderness the children of Israel had done rather well. Above all else they had come to a sense of dependence upon Jehovah, and they had developed a sturdy religious life.

But Moses saw the peril of their potential prosperity. He was afraid—and his fear was well-grounded—that when they got into the promised land, when they piled up material things, when they prospered, they would become proud, and they would forget God. And that would be a tragedy. In his farewell address, therefore, he warned them to beware, lest they forget, and lest through their forgetfulness, they should lose something more precious than property. America in the prosperous days of 1929 seemed to have forgotten that they needed God. Her heart was lifted up. In spite of her prosperity of material things there was a poverty of spiritual things, and she has been humbled in her false pride.

Power to Get Wealth.

"For it is He (Jehovah) that giveth thee power to get wealth." Self-made men, self-made riches —there is no such thing. Our gifts and capacities are God-given. What we accomplish is made possible by Him. We are stewards for Him.

Robbing God.

Malachi bluntly told the people of his day that they were robbing God. And he was specific—he said they were robbing him because they were not paying the tithes. He said something else: he said a curse had come upon their land because they had not been good stewards; and he dared them to take God at His word in the matter.

There is a great deal to be said about the tithe. But the facts are against those who do not believe in the tithe, and who do not practice tithing. The thing has been tried too long, and it has demonstrated its validity under too many tests, to be lightly swept aside on the grounds that it is Old Testament legislation. It may not be the final word on the subject, but it is the place to begin. And if the members of the church would obey the Scriptural teachings on tithing, the financial and large measure the spiritual problems of the church would be solved.

As One Sows.

Paul says that natural law works in the spiritual world even as spiritual laws work in the natural world. If a man sows in a niggardly way, he need not expect to reap an abundant harvest. If he sows bountifully, he has a right to expect that he shall reap bountifully. All other things being equal, the man who sows a bushel of wheat has no right to expect as much as the man who sows ten bushels of wheat.

Now of course Paul does not mean that one's gifts are to be measured in terms simply of quantity. Indeed one who gives a dollar may be giving far more in proportion than the one who gives ten dollars. We are to give as God prospers us, each according to our several ability. But the principles hold true, that he who gives sparingly shall reap sparingly. The nation, and even the world is paying tribute to Jane Addams. She sowed not sparingly and grudgingly, but generously and bountifully, and in her life as well as in her death she reaped bountifully.

Having Always All Sufficiency in All Things.

Giving must be done in the right spirit if it is to be acceptable to God. Not grudgingly or of necessity, says Paul, God loves a cheerful—the word in Greek really means "hilarious" giver.

And Paul says that when men honor God with their substance, He will provide for them a sufficiency in all things. He is able to make all grace to abound unto them, so that they may abound unto every good work.

It is not true, of course, to say that those who are on relief are sinners worse than the rest of us. So inextricably are we caught up in the web of life that economic depression may make many innocent people suffer. But it is undoubtedly true that there are many who have fallen on hard times because they did not honor God with their substance. Not that He is vindictive, but that it is the operation of inexorable spiritual laws.

There is nothing that presents more of an acid test to the followers of Christ than the matter of stewardship. This is true, of course, of the stewardship of money. But it is true also of the larger stewardship, the stewardship of time, of gifts, of influence, of life itself. It is required of a steward that he be faithful.

LIVING OR DEAD.

Sometimes I wonder if we are like the fig tree Jesus saw as he went to the temple on the Monday in April before he was crucified on Friday. The tree was supposed to bear figs, but it didn't. It appeared to be living, but it was dead. Monday it looked green, but Tuesday it was wilted. The only difference was the leaves. Why have green leaves on a dead tree? It does not deceive the Master. Young people may well study this parable, and then think of the fruits of their own lives. Are we really doing the Christian things, or are we just talking about doing them?—Free Will Baptist.

What does the church stand for? It stands to offer men Christ; to tell men that way of life is possible by which they become sons of God; that life can be victoriously lived; that Christ offers a re-informed personality, an inward serenity, an infectious gaiety, an outgoing love which would invite the whole world not into a system of belief primarily but into an experience which spells the mastery of the art of living.

"IRRESISTIBLE FAITH."

"If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you."—Matt. 17:20.

Stanley Brown-Serman in his recent book: "What Did Jesus Think," has the following to say: "The reason, perhaps, why we do not make the most of life's resources, why we do not call upon them for all the succor, all the contentment, all the power, they could give, is either because we are entirely out of touch with God—like a cataract dried and bare since something has dammed the upper channel—or because our faith in Him is so imperfect as to be ineffectual—like a chord of music from which the dominant notes are lacking. Faith is the attitude of mind—rather, of the whole personality—by which a man enters into a living effective touch with God. It is not as so many think, as passive state, but ardently dynamic It is faith which makes God's power available to man: and men may share this faith with Jesus, and so enter into His power."

Prayer—Dear Heavenly Father, manifest Thy kingdom to us every day, and help Thou our faith that we may penetrate beyond the material and always be conscious of a touch with Thee.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

"LIFE'S SUGAR BOWL."

"Saul and Jonathan were sweet in their lives." II Sam. 1:23.

Listening over the radio the other morning to the broadcast of the Country Church in Hollywood, the idea of using more sweet in our lives was brought vividly to our thinking. And that idea was this: Back in the early days when we were children, when sugar was scarce and ten cents a pound, at the table one morning the father of the family took just a half spoon of sugar and sprinkled it on the strawberries which had been served the little boy. The boy grabbed the sugar dish and dumped it all in his saucer of berries, and said, "You can't keep me from being sweet."

However much that was a breach of discipline it would mean much if applied spiritually. Use the sugar bowl of life and pour out sweetness on everything as you go along. When we get to heaven, we are going to wish we had used the sugar bowl more along our pathway.

Prayer—O Lord, Rock of Ages, let us hide in Thee. In all our attitudes toward things and people, may we be sweet because Jesus was. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"ALL HONOR TO GOD."

"For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever, Amen."

Still quoting from "What Did Jesus Think," quote: "There is war because some of the rulers of the world are selfish: there is poverty and unemployment because some of the organized forces among us are greedy: there is sorrow because some are unfaithful: there is bitterness because some are uncharitable. And so through every verse of the dirge of civilization. But it need not be . . . . Miracles could happen to us. We stand at the close of our day and look forward, far into the future. And we see men and women just like ourselves, living in our world. But the miracle has happened. Their faces are smiling, their bodies are sound, their lives are peaceful and serene. It is because everywhere and always, men have heard the voice of God, and have found that it is more blessed to obey it than to disregard it. It will never be unless, and until, we admit our own inadequacy, and learn to hold out humbly our hands to that God who searches for us more eagerly and more untiringly than we ever search for Him. In Him, at the end as at the beginning, lies the kingdom, the power and the glory."

Prayer—(Say the Lord's Prayer.)

THURSDAY.

"GODLY LIVING."

"Know ye not that ye are the temple of God." —I Cor. 3:16.

The same author as above is quoted again. "The kingdom of God with all its miracles, is only even for us in this apparently mad twentieth century, just below the horizon, if we would universally accept its one condition—obedience to the will of God. If we could picture the world as it would be with the condition fulfilled, with God's sanctity the measure of every life, there would be among us very little of what we would call evil. As to physical ills, a prominent doctor has declared in public that, excluding epidemic and surgical cases, nine-tenths of the ailments he was called upon to attend were either caused by, or seriously aggravated by, the mind of the patient. Were those minds attuned to the peace and serenity of God? As to the surgical cases, how many were caused by undue haste, by recklessness, by indifference—none of which are compatible with the will of God? If we ordered our eating, our drinking, our resting, our periods of work and play with due regard to a balanced life, how little disease would be left among us! Even death itself—no one would want to abolish death. But death would be, if we all learned to obey the will of God, not a tortured, premature rending of soul and body, but a gradual slipping away in peace and loveliness—as it is, even now, for some of the very aged and the very beautiful."

Prayer—Dear Father, all Thy works in this world speak of Thee. Reveal unto us their directive purpose for our lives and make us well soul, body and spirit.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

"CONSCIOUS OF ETERNAL VALUES."

"Day unto day sheweth speech and night unto night showeth knowledge. There is no speech nor language where their voice is not heard."—Psalm 19:2, 3.

Still quoting from "What Did Jesus Think." "To make His children conscious of eternal values the Father surrounds them with lasting evidences of what is beautiful, and true, and good. All they need to do is to look through nature, through the wonders of the physical universe, through the lives of saints and martyrs and heroes, through the outward and visible sign of an inward and invisible spiritual grace, into the Father's face.

"Jesus saw the beauty of God in the lillies of the field, the truth of God in the seed cast by the sower, the love of God in the helplessness of a flock of sparrows, the dignity of God in transfigured lives of Peter and John. . . . Each one of these speak of God in ineffable grandeur, or, by denial, suggests God's immeasurable care. It was in this majesty that Jesus approached God. And this is exactly the same as the approach of an understanding earthly child to the father who is the head of the household. These new books, this rare picture, this carefully planned vacation, this gathering of friends—what do they really mean but the thoughtful provision of one who wishes, through their influence, to be remembered as a helpful and far-seeing benefactor?"

Prayer—Dear Father, Author and Giver of every good and perfect gift, we come to Thee as our heavenly Father for that succour which we need today to make us whole and happy. We commit ourselves to Thee. Be with us and make us Thine.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

"ANSWERS THAT ANSWER."

"In thy faithfulness answer me, and in thy righteousness."—Ps. 143:1-6.

Most of us would ask God to answer our prayers in His compassion, His forgiveness, and His love; but David more wisely asks for an answer in accordance with God's faithfulness and righteousness.

An answer to a prayer that did not square with God's fidelity and with His right and true laws would not aid us in the least. We would not, if we were wise, petition for anything that was not approved by a faithful and righteous God.

We must not be like some children, who expect to get things by teasing for them. We must go to our Father in the knowledge that He knows best. He likes to talk over our desires with us, and, if it is for the best, He will grant them.

Prayer—Answer us in Thy faithfulness, O Thou faithful God! Answer us in Thy righteousness, O Thou the One righteous! And we shall praise Thee forever.—Amen.

"GALLOWS FOR HAMANS."

"So they hanged Haman on the gallows that he had prepared for Mordecai."—Esther 7:1-10.

Haman, the wicked plotter, stands forever as an example of those who prepare pits for others and fall into them themselves, who brew poison for others and drink it themselves, who build gallows for others and themselves are hanged thereon.

It is never anything but a suicidal policy to make evil ready for another. Even the thought of it in our hearts, even the desire for it, is suicidal. The only safety is to build for others not gallows but homes of delight and protection. The only assurance against Haman's fate is Mordecai's innocence and brotherly kindness.

What Haman but trusts in his power and skill? He can hang any beggarly Mordecai fifty cubits high. But he forgets that God is on the side of Mordecai, and God is even greater than the king.

Prayer—Cleanse our hearts, O loving Christ, of all hateful feelings.—Amen.

INTERRELATION OF FOREIGN AND HOME MISSIONS.

Home missions and foreign missions are the two ends of the same stream, its fountain and its sea. We cannot stop one without drying up the other also. Stop the fountain and the sea will ultimately become a dry bed; evaporate the sea and the fountains will dry up. Home missions are needed to keep the church at home alive and to help it grow. Cutting off foreign mission interest and activity is a sure way of killing home missions. Foreign missions bring returns a thousand fold at home by sending streams back upon the churches to revitalize them and fill them with more abundant life.—Missionary Review of the World.

A GREAT NATION.

By John G. Truitt.

"I will make of thee a great nation."—Gen. 12:2.

It was a great promise, and greatly fulfilled. One of the greatest stories that adorns human history is that of the call of Abraham out of Ur of the Chaldees, and the tremendous results. "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee; and I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing: and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee: and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blest." A big order. A great promise. And great was the result! And the story is not finished even unto this day. How God blesses those who hear and heed His call! And how generous are His blessings, multiplying until they bless all the families of the earth! If you are heroic you are not heroic alone. The good man is a benefactor far beyond his realization.

"I will make thee a great nation," said God. How? That is the query of this message. What is it that makes a great nation? We wish to feel that ours is a truly great nation, and it is. It must be greater. You and I must help make it greater? How is a nation made great? How did God fulfill His promise to Abraham? For you will perhaps agree with me that God did make the descendants of Abraham a great nation. Nearly forty centuries have stamped their approval on the keeping of the promise. And today without a government, without armies, or navies, without president, congress, or parliament, without lands, territories, or boundaries that nation still persists as compact and well defined as any on earth. You will as quickly speak of them as you will the English, French, German, or American,—the Jews, they are a people, indeed! What has caused them to ride like some favored ship across the storms of civilization, through the seas of national persecutions and imprisonments, and international hate and scorn? Every time they mount the waves we may hear ringing across the centuries the divine promise, "I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great"

They had a great sense of God! Not great armies, nor great navies, but great ideas make great nations. For the first time there came into national thinking: "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord: And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind and with all thy strength." Their sense of God, Creator, Preserver, and Ruler of the Universe was sublime! And they were His, and He was theirs. They believed they came from this one and only God; they believed He would control their destinies; and thus they did march with the glow of the infinite upon their brow.

Other nations in the course of that ancient civilization had their difficulties assigning certain tasks to certain gods, and certain privileges to certain others, but not so Israel. Upon whom might they depend? Israel answered: God! To whom were they accountable? Israel answered: God! From whom did they come? Israel answered: God! To whom did they go? Israel answered: God! From whom had they their laws? Israel answered: God! Who could forgive their sins? Israel answered God! And who could fight their battles for them? Israel answered: God!

They walked with God, talked with Him, entertained His angels, looked on His glory, ascribed their victories to Him, and their failures to their own disobedience of Him. Their prophecies were from Him, their psalms in praise of Him, and they were His chosen emissaries! They gave the world the Old Testament which contains the Ten Commandments, the New Testament, and the Christ; and for good measure, added John, and Peter, and Paul and all the Apostles. Let me repeat they gave the world Jesus! Such the record of the nation which had a great sense of God.

They had a great sense of the sanctuary! It was God's House in a sense and measure not found in other faiths. From the first open altars of Abraham to the temple built by David's son it was the House of God. Abraham's grandson found it in the fields as he rested from a weary journey; Moses received the pattern for its building from God on Mt. Sinai. And that is not all the world has to thank Moses for receiving from God on Mt. Sinai. The tabernacle was the meeting-place between them and God. It was the center of their national life. About this they built their worship. To it they came to God. In it they preserved their covenant with God,—a covenant which made God their king! There is an idea for you in itself. God as King of kings, Lord of lords.

In their House of God, cleansing of soul could be perfected, consecration of life could be done, and intercession for others might be made, so that the house of God became a house of prayer for all nations. In it they worshipped God, and their strength was renewed like the eagles. In it the people were taught about God, and the living of a good life. So important was this that synagogues grew in every section as a supplement to the temple in order that little children, and those who could not go to the temple, might still be taught concerning the one true God. To them the sanctuary was of supreme importance.

Certain persons coming to Jesus in behalf of a centurion whose servant was sick pleaded the worthiness of the centurion with these words: "He loveth our nation and hath built us a synagogue." His true appreciation was expressed in the very fundamental thing which he had thoughtfully done. To them patriotism concerned itself with the religious welfare of the nation.

They had a great sense of the value of the individual! This appreciation culminated in Christ. He gave this idea its final full standing among those who worshipped the one God. For instance see what Peter says. Peter was at times almost narrow in his views. He learned slowly, but surely. In no place is what in our science of government we call democracy so well expressed as Peter, a disciple of Christ, has expressed it. Mind you, he is addressing himself "to the strangers scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia," and yet he says, "Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood!" Take the two words, "royal," and "priest" and look carefully at their meaning, and you can ask for nothing more democratic than that. Every man a prince, every man in direct touch with God. Every man equal in the sight of God. And not only equal but princely besides. And every man able to prevail with God in the hitherto conceived functions of the priest. The functions of a priest were: sacrifice, intercession, and benediction. The "strangers" (or pilgrims, or nobodys, or whoever) throughout the nations of the earth might, being the royalty of the infinite God, have the perfect

Christian Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

The orphanage farmer boys have had quite a busy time for the last ten days trying to get in a crop. The continuous rains and extremely cool weather up to the first of June has hindered very much in our spring work. We planted our corn the first of May and the wire-worms killed so much of it that we did not replant it, but just planted it over.

Farm life is interesting because it is out of one job into another and it keeps one busy planning how to get through one in time to catch the next job. It is like planting vegetables so when one patch of beans or cabbage gives out to have another one coming in so we can always be supplied with vegetables for the children.

Good food with plenty of vegetables and regular habits generally keep children in good health. The Orphanage family has been richly blessed with good health for more than a year. We are indeed grateful that the good Lord has been so good to us.

liberty to "worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences."

The parallel is plain; may it never be dimmed! The founders of America believed in God. They believed in the holy sanctuary. They believed in democracy. These are ideas greater than armaments, as lasting as the eternal hills. Forty centuries finds them fresh and bright, and full of the elements that make a people great. Forget God, or worship, or fellowmen and a place in the land of Forgotten Nations awaits us; but remember God, and worship Him in His sanctuary, and the full value of our fellowman and we too shall hear God say, "I will make of thee a great nation."

For the few cases where "one man's food is another man's poison," there are a hundred instances—especially in automobile days—where one man's drink is another man's destruction.

I never see a man go wrong in any direction, but what I stop and check up on myself.—Dr. John Gunn.

THE YOUTH FELLOWSHIP.

Jesus is an example of one who looked for the good and loved people for the good which he found in them, although many things which they did met not his approval. Wherever there was beauty, he found it.

Is it natural to look for the good or the evil? What happens to us when we see only the bad in people? What happens to the person in whom we see no good? John Dillinger tried to forget his first offensive act and become one of the respected young men of his community, but because many people saw only the wrong, he found no place in the best life of that community.

Some children seem awkward with no ability or talent, but the confidence and love of parents make them into useful citizens of their country.

Remember, you have to cultivate an eye for goodness. Look only for the good in the person and you will soon forget to look for the bad.

THE TEMPTATION OF CHRIST.

dom as these advocates do, he would have made men dissatisfied with conditions under which they were and are living, and would, if possible, set their hearts more firmly on earthly possessions and surroundings. If he had set forth such earthly things as desirable, he would have encouraged the delusion so widely cherished that happiness depends upon outward conditions, and would have at the same time, fostered the illusion that happier days await in some far-away clime or some far-off future.

The man that claims that the main purpose of Jesus was to set in order such an earthly kingdom, and that repentance is merely a condition, or incidental, misses the very fundamentals of Christ's teaching. So likewise does the one of us who pictures the future kingdom of God, whether on earth or in heaven, as a place that will make everybody happy merely because of its delightful surroundings.

Jesus said not one word about the outward aspects of the coming kingdom. On the contrary, he directed his efforts wholly toward creating in man a clean heart and renewing within him a right spirit. He tried to pull men's hearts away from external possessions and conditions long enough to get them to see that happiness comes from the spirit of man, his state of mind, chiefly, not from outside things. "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." "It is the spirit that giveth life; the flesh profiteth nothing." "Labor not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life." "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

Milton represents Satan as saying: "Myself am hell." Wherever he went was hell, because he carried it within him—in his heart. Even heaven itself would be hell to such as he, even more so than anywhere else. He would be as happy as a gambler at a prayer meeting. Just so the one who gets to heaven will be the one who carries it with him—in his heart.

Therefore, Jesus gave his whole attention towards changing the hearts of men, knowing that a changed way of living would follow.

Outward conditions, of course, do have their effect on man's happiness. No one denies that. The lesson is to put first things first, to seek "first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness," and all needed material blessings "shall be added unto you."

LIVING FOR OTHERS.

Leland Stanford lost his only child. Though he was United States Senator from California, he said to himself: "I have nothing to live for. I have no children." He put a million dollars into a private home, but it was not a home to him. One night he had a dream. In this dream his son appeared to him and said, "Father, never say again that you have nothing to live for . . . live for humanity, live for other people's children." There soon arose at Palo Alto the Leland Stanford Junior University at a cost of $20,000,000. He and Mrs. Stanford became the devoted servants of the poor, the orphan, and the suffering, and left all their property to go on doing good to the rising generations.

HORACE GREELEY'S ADVICE.

Horace Greeley once received a letter from a woman stating that her church was in distressing financial straits. They had tried every device they could think of—fairs, strawberry festivals, oyster suppers, a donkey party, turkey banquets, Japanese weddings, poverty sociables, mock marriages, grab bags, box sociables and necktie sociables. 'Would Mr. Greeley be so kind as to suggest some new device to keep the struggling church from disbanding." The editor replied: "Try religion."—The Presbyterian Record.

OBITUARIES

GRIFFIN.

Quinton Griffin was born January 1, 1918, and died May 29, 1935. He was 17 years, 4 months and 28 days old.

It was my great joy to have him enrolled as a member of our church during his sickness. When he was so weak he could not talk, his eyes would look upward and his lips would move as he thus talked with Jesus. Every time I would visit him we would have a season of prayer together.

He leaves a devoted father and mother, six brothers and sisters and a large number of other relatives and friends by the score to mourn his going.

The funeral was held at the Lanett Christian Church in the midst of a large assembly of neighbors and friends. May God especially comfort the heartbroken father and mother, one of whom has been constantly with him throughout the entire time of his affliction. They will miss him as none else will, but God will fill the vacuum with His own presence, so soon.

May you hold to the Unseen Hand.

G. D. HUNT.

SHAW.

We, the members of the Sunday School of Concord Christian Church, wish to pay tribute to the memory of Sister Anna H. Shaw, who died January 21, 1935.

Her going has brought us deep sorrow.

Therefore be it resolved that:

1. We know that our heavenly Father doeth all things according to His love and mercy. Even though we cannot understand, we bow in submission to His will.

2. We hold in loving remembrance her service and her meek and quiet personality.

3. We extend our heartfelt sympathy to her companion and relatives and commend them to God whose grace is sufficient for them.

4. A copy of these resolutions be given to her companion, a copy be sent to The Christian Sun for publication and a copy be spread upon the Sunday School secretary's book.

Respectfully submitted,

MRS. JOHN P. UNDERWOOD,
MISS EMMA TERRELL,
MRS. ETHEL TATE,
Committee.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Platinum.—

World consumption of platinum last year was approximately 200,000 troy ounces, compared with 175,000 in the preceding year. Due to the devaluation of the gold content of the dollar and the corresponding increase in the cost of gold, the prices of the two metals are now about the same. This possibly accounts for the increased use of platinum.

Grade Crossings and Automobiles.—

Grade crossing accidents during 1934 numbered 3,332, and resulted in 281 fatalities. A report of the Interstate Commerce Commission reveals that fact that in 1,287 of these accidents, the automobile drivers ran into the sides of trains. A contemporary notes that "a great many automobile operators fail to realize that where the railroad tracks lead the train must follow."

Pure Nickel.—

There are twenty-eight countries which use pure nickel for monetary purposes. Ethiopia is the twenty-eighth country to coin pure nickel, having recently put into circulation 10,000,000 "25-roul pieces" and 5,000,000 "alati." Strange as it may seem, the United States is not one of the twenty-eight countries referred to above, as our "nickel," or five-cent piece is only one-fourth nickel and is seventy-five per cent copper.

Farm Population Reaches All-Time High.—

According to statistics of the Bureau of Agriculture Economics, the American farm population reached a new peak on January 1, 1934. The total number of persons living on farms at that date was 32,779,000, or an increase of 270,000 persons over the preceding year. This increase was not attributed to any marked "Back-to-the-farm movement," but was due rather to the surplus of farm births over farm deaths. Indeed, the migration was from the farm rather than toward it, for the total migrations to the farm during the previous year was said to be 783,000, while the persons moving from the farm to the city numbered 994,000. Thus the net migration to the city was 211,000. This loss was taken up by a surplus of 481,000 farm births over farm deaths, giving the net increase as noted above.

A Fertile Garden of Eden.—

"The startling frequency with which modern science has corroborated the descriptions and narrations of the Bible," says Methodist Protestant-Recorder, "bids fair to have its most epochal sequence in the restoration of the Garden of Eden to its fertility. Again will be seen there 'every tree that is pleasant to the sight and good for food'; again it will be the veritable paradise of Adam and Eve. Modern irrigation, similar in many respects to that of the ancients, will accomplish this transformation. Today this traditional site is an arid waste, with only an occasional oasis. But the Iraq Government has made definite plans to dam the Tigris at Kut and thus to divert sufficient water from that great river, by means of a canal, to keep well supplied the Shatt-el-Gharaff, which is perhaps the very stream, now a dry one, that once watered the Garden."

"Carolina, One Up."—

Under the above caption, an editorial in the Richmond News Leader has this to say: "North Carolina's experiment in the consolidation of three institutions of higher learning into one great university will be watched by Virginia taxpayers with interest and envy. The merger . . . is going into effect this year. The University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, the North Carolina College of Agriculture and Engineering, Raleigh, and the North Carolina College for Women, in Greensboro, will function as a single unit. . . . It resembles a grouping that repeatedly has been suggested in Virginia. It will save overhead. . . . it will make for better graduate work, it will retain all of the good features of regional educational service." The editorial continues that the reasons Virginia has not done the same thing may be first, that she was not forced to by a large deficit, but the main reason may be "laid at the door of a political leadership that has not had the ingenuity or the desire to add such a move to its modernization program." Virginia has today, not one engineering school, but three, and there are four State teachers' schools, so it seems that she even more than her sister State, has grounds for consolidations.

Tax Rates Now Before Congress.—

Below are given some of the specific taxes which expire on June 30th. Under the schedule passed this week by the House and sent on to the Senate, they will be extended two years: First class postage—3 cents instead of 2 cents, estimated to yield $75 millions; Gasoline—1 cent a gallon, producing revenue amounting to $170 millions; lubricating oil—a tax of 4 cents a gallon, producing $28 millions, and tires and tubes, taxed at 2 1/4 and 4 cents a pound, respectively, $27 millions more. Auto trucks carry a tax of 2 per cent, as do accessories, while other automobile and motorcycles must pay 7 per cent, all giving an estimated tax income of between $47 and $48 millions. Toilet preparations, with either 5 or 10 per cent tax are looked to for $12 millions. Furs selling for more than $75 are taxed 10 per cent, with an estimated revenue for the government of $2,500,000; while jewelry, with the same rate of tax should produce nearly three-fourths as much. Radios and phonographs, with a 5 per cent levy, will produce $3,700,000, and mechanical refrigerators, also taxed 5 per cent, will bring in $6,800,000. Sporting goods, firearms and cameras must pay 10 per cent, and are expected to produce more than $7 millions in revenue. Matches are looked to for that much more; while chewing gum must account for $600,000. Other items include taxes on telephone and telegraph messages, said to be estimated at over $20 millions; electrical energy tax of 3 per cent of bill, amounting to $33 millions, and transfer taxes on bonds and conveyances of property, estimated to yield nearly $15 millions. Admission taxes on tickets sellfor 41 cents or more should bring in a return of $14 millions on a 10 per cent tax.

The Work Relief Program.—

Approximately two months have passed since Congress passed the bill authorizing the spending of $4,000,000,000 on work relief. At that time there was a conservative minority that opposed the bill, believing that the legislative branch of the Government was turning over entirely too much authority to one man. The majority seemed to think, however that the President could do a better job than the 531 members of the House and Senate. Now David Lawrence tells us that even the plans of Mr. Rosevelt have turned out to be impractical and must be abandoned. "The amazing thing," he says, "is that it took two months to divide $4,000,000,000 by 3,500,000" —the number of men to whom it was planned to give employment—and "to find out that the expenditure per man could not possibly exceed an average of about $1,140 each." Of course there were one or two hard-headed business men present at the very first meeting, "when all the theories in the New Deal were gathered together with their fantastic plans and projects . . . . but then hard-headed business men are . . . a species to be used for purposes of political condemnation and not for cooperation." In addition to the very impracticableness of some of the Administration's projects, it should be noted that the President has certainly been handicapped by the insistence upon the part of organized labor that "prevailing" wage rates be maintained on all projects. And it seems that political influence, which it was claimed would be avoided by delegating the spending job to the President, has become a major factor in the placing of projects. Whether justly or unjustly, Mr. Roosevelt is being accused of using this vast fund as a whip to force through Congress legislation that he wants passed. One thing is certain, that with the exception of a few projects, amounting to less than 5 per cent of the total he has left the $4,000,000,000 unallocated.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Suffolk's pastor says: "We have fourteen persons signed up for the Elon Training School, June 24th-30th." How many are going from your church?

Rev. M. T. Sorrell, pastor of our Danville Church, writing under date of June 3rd, says: "You may state through the CHRISTIAN SUN that we will broadcast our Wednesday evening services from 7:30 to 8:30, beginning June 5th, the broadcast to continue indefinitely over Station WBTM.

Our American Board sends this information: "The Cent-a-Meal boxes have been distributed to more than 50,000 individuals, but many are yet unused. This is the moment for each family to start the plan afresh." The interest in the plan of the Cent-a-Meal box is increasing, as many families are finding this a real source of not only of reveuue for a divine cause, but of gratitude to the Giver of every good.

Mrs. J. C. Ellis, writing under date, June 14, from Portsmouth, Va., sends this encouraging item: "Our church has recently had the pleasure of a ten days' revival service, with Rev. Lee Fisher of Portland, Ind., as the evangelist and singer, and we feel that much good was the result. The work at Portsmouth is progressing nicely under Mr. Whitten's pastorate, and we are much encouraged for the future."

The State Christian Endeavor Union of North Carolina was in session at Elon College three days the past week. Rev. F. C. Lester, of Norfolk, Va., and Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, D. D., of Burlington, were among the speakers on the program from our churches, and there were distinguished speakers from other churches in the state. The sessions were well attended and reports are that it was quite an inspirational and successful meeting.

Dr. W. H. Denison, Stewardship Secretary, C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio, has issued a very valuable and suggestive pamphlet of eight pages entitled "Financing the Local Church." The pamphlet is issued by The Commission on Christian Stewardship and can be had by addressing The Commission, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York City, or C. P. A. Bldg., Dayton, Ohio, at 5c the copy; 50c per dozen. The pamphlet gives very succinctly and suggestively the set-up of the financial plans and procedure of the local church and is worth the attention and consideration of all our pastors.

In First Christian Church Bulletin, Portsmouth, June 9th, Rev. Robert A. Whitten, the pastor, has the following under the title, "My Church":—"My church is a medium of expression through which I may bear testimony to the world of what great things God has done for my soul. My loyalty to my church speaks louder to the world than my uttered words in its behalf. My contribution, God's portion, of my income is more persuasive for winning souls than recited creeds, for without our gifts to support the work, we would have no church. My presence in the pew is a greater argument for Christ than my defense of words. My church is what I have helped it to become. My prayer is that through Christ, it may yet be what Christ and I desire it to be."

The following from the Methodist Protestant-Recorder (Baltimore), will be of gratifying interest to the many friends he made while a student at Elon College: "Lon B. Exell, for the last three years head of the Department of Education at Westminster College, has been appointed dean, the appointment to take effect in September. Mr. Exell, a native of North Carolina, holds the B. A. and M. A. degrees from Elon College, and the M. A. degree from the University of Texas. He is now a candidate for the degree of Doctor of Education. Having worked for several years in public and private high schools, and having served as a member of the faculty of Mercer University, Texas Wesleyan College, and the University of Texas, Mr. Exell brings to his new position ripe experience, sound scholarship, and a great enthusiasm for education."

To the editor's way of thinking, THE CHRISTIAN SUN has not carried a more thrilling story in many months than it carries this week under the title on another page, "The Story of a Century," by Miss D. P. Cushing. Not all of the real heroes died a thousand or more years ago. For down-right courage, unfaltering fortitude, reckless daring, commend me, please, to the six heroes and six heroines of whom Miss Cushing writes. By the way, we wonder if any CHRISTIAN SUN reader can give us the names of any living descendants of the Revs. Daniel Lindley and Alexander E. Wilson of North Carolina, or of Mrs. Lindley and Mrs. Wilson of Virginia. Heroes and heroines like these do not spring up and pass out in a day, and the iron of their blood must still be imperishable in the veins of their descendants. Turn to page 5, read Miss Cushing's story and learn who these Lindley's and Wilson were and are.

MAKING JESUS KNOWN.

By CARDEN A. HILLMAN.

The first Christmas message was the first missionary message. It was good tidings of great joy. It was good news. Men heard it and were astonished. From among those who heard, the wise men came to Jerusalem to worship him. The wise have worshipped him from that day to this. So long as there is a man to make Jesus known to men, just so long will the wise come from the east and the west and the north and the south and worship him. In so doing their treasures shall be opened, and they shall present unto him gifts—themselves, together with their gold.

The shepherds received the "good news" first. They were the only ones prepared to receive it, because they were the only ones ready to tell it to others. To them it was too good to keep. A Saviour had been born, and they made it known abroad. Too good to keep? Yes. But to keep it they must tell it. They told it two thousand years ago, and we receive it today. To keep it we must tell it, tell it abroad. "Go, make disciples of all nations."

Jesus is the supreme need of the world. He must be made known to men the world round. Who will make him known? Men live in darkness; Jesus is the Light of the World. Countless thousands die for the want of bread; Jesus is the Bread of Life. Perhaps as never before men are uncertain as to the way; Jesus is the Way. Our loved ones die and are buried; we ourselves must die and go back to dust. Jesus is the Resurrection and the Life.

The Church has said she would make him known. To her belongs the Great Commission, but not to her alone. Every Christian shares with her the honor of carrying the good tidings. It is an honor to be able to open the hearts of men and leave there a Saviour. But it is more than an honor; it is a God-given privilege, the highest privilege given to man. Today we know Jesus because the Church made him known abroad, because someone, having seen him through the eye of experience, carried the good news to someone else, and that one to another, and on and on until we heard the news and felt the thrill. The greatest sight since the angelic host sang together, saying, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men," and the shepherd boys went abroad making Jesus known, is the Church on the march, proclaiming the good news, "Unto you is born this day in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord," preaching "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." To make Jesus known to all men the Church has adopted the plan used by our Lord and which he put in the form of a command, "Go, teach, preach, heal."

A new day has dawned in the field of education. Today the Church has a unified program of Christian education. And never before in the history of the Church has she had such a great army of consecrated and qualified teachers who make it their business to teach Jesus. A trained leadership is rapidly being developed, thanks to our schools and colleges. Leadership training is the salvation of the local church situation. Using the words of Bishop E. D. Mouzon, "We have done well; we are now in a position to do better."

He who preaches must preach the Word. "The Word became flesh, and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only-begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth" (John 1:14). "John bare witness of him." The shepherds, in making Jesus known abroad, bare witness of him. They preached with authority. Our authority to preach is a heart experience of God and Jesus as One who saves his people from their sins. Someone has said: "One cannot preach unless his secret life is a sermon." Dean Tillett often said to the theological students who came under his tutelage: "Your congregation will place a plus or minus sign by every sermon you preach. It will be strengthened or weakened by what they think and know of your life." The time has come and now is, when he who preashes should preach with authority or refrain from preaching. The modern pulpit needs the great preacher whose message is that of the Christ flowing through him as a stream of living water. Men of the pulpit, our business is to make Jesus known to men, that he may save his people from their sins.

The ministry of healing has been used to great advantage in making Jesus known abroad. The skilled surgeon has cut his way into the hearts of pagan men and nations, and thus Jesus has been made known abroad. Go and do thou likewise. "The broken body is an open door through which Jesus may be carried." What an opportunity! What a challenge? If the whole Church, with its vast resources, would hasten to accept the challenge, glorious results would follow. The "greater works" of which Jesus spoke would astonish men as did the miracles in the days of our Lord. God's Kingdom cannot come in all its beauty and power to a sick man or nation. That no man or nation be deprived of God's kingdom in all its fulness, let us go forth in the name of him who said, "Go, heal."

Every Christian must have a part in making Jesus known abroad. If we would make him known, we must open our treasures and present unto him gifts—ourselves, our gold, and our all. With every gift will go the good news, "Unto you is born . . . a Saviour, which is Christ, the Lord."—Nashville Christian Advocate.

THE PRIVILEGES OF A MINISTER.

By Clarence A. Vincent, D. D.

Article II—Par Value.

A minister, when he enters a field, is received as a trustworthy man. The church thinks so, or the call to the pastorate would never have been made. The community thinks so, and asks him to do many things that they would not ask if they doubted his character. A teacher is received with the same confidence. No member of any other profession has at first a like confidence. This is a tremendous asset, as one commences work among strangers. It gives his message power. His influence as a citizen in public affairs is accepted at once. Leaders in true or fad reforms seek at once the influence of his name and his active cooperation. Agents who sell insurance, books and many other things from door to door, try to get the use of his name.

Lost Confidence.

This confidence is to be sacredly guarded. It is a thing that can be easily lost. Self-will, uncontrolled temper, the running of bills, living beyond one's income, trifling relationships with women, attacking the evils of a community before he has learned the facts and before he has proven that his statements have back of them facts that have been learned through careful observation, are ruinous to his influence, and should be. It means a short pastorate and a limited harvest. Not the reception a church and community gives the pastor when he comes but the one they give him when he goes, indicates his success.

Growing Confidence.

On the other hand a minister of character, of courage, of gentleness and of tact, who loves his people and unselfishly and sympathetically and lives for them and for the whole community, strengthens the confidence they gave him at the beginning, awakens in many a love for him and opens may doors of usefuless through which he enters farther into the constructive life of a church and community.

An Illustration.

There have been many such ministers, in stately cathedrals and churches and in simple meeting-houses, in cities and villages and at country cross-roads. In my boyhood I had such a pastor as awkward as Lincoln and with a mind and love like the Emancipator, receiving a salary of $300 a year and a parsonage, pastor of a church of less than fifty members, yet out from that little flock went young men and women into the ministry, into the schools as teachers, to practice medicine, founders of families, able business men, who were loyal to Jesus Christ and tried to live as unselfishly as did the Master and the pastor of their youth. I shall never forget the overwhelming emotion that stirred me as I saw in a Chautauqua assembly which I was addressing on the "Message of Lincoln to this generation," this minister, now old, who had come many miles to hear the lad of his earlier congregation. Falteringly, I said, "I see before me the Minister who for years did a work of strength and unselfishness on a salary of $300 a year and to whom I owe more than to any one else except my parents." The audience applauded and would not be satisfied until the aged man arose. Countless numbers of ministers and their wives have carried on in difficult fields, in the sweetness of a loving and sacrificial spirit, and many in Heaven and on earth are grateful that they shared the shaping influences of such lives and the ministry they gave.

People mostly get the preaching they deserve and expect.—Dr. W. B. Selbie.

CHURCH COUNCIL APPEALS TO CLERGY TO SAFEGUARD MARRIAGES.

The Federal Council of of the Churches of Christ in America today issued the results of a study made by its Committee on Marriage and the Home on methods of safeguarding the marriage relationship against careless and ill-suited marriages and hasty divorces. The statement, as issued by Dr. Samuel McCrea Cavert, General Secretary of the Federal Council, after official approval by the Executive Committee, declares that the standards of procedure on the part of many of the clergy in dealing with marriages are too lax, and that it is the duty of the minister who unites people in marriage to give instructions on the subject. The fact that a couple can go to a clergyman who has never seen them before and can be married and gone in a few minutes, never to be seen by him again, is cited as an indication of a lack of deep regard for the sacredness of marriage.

The results of a questionnaire sent out by the Committee to clergymen who have taken a special interest in problems of family life reveals that relatively few are giving serious attention to premarital counselling. One minister replied: "Of two hundred and eighty-five couples whom I have married, I know the whereabouts of only eleven, and I am in touch with one." Another minister said: "One doesn't know of the weddings usually until they arrive at the door."

A movement among ministers for holding premarital interviews with couples who come to them for marriage is reported as making rapid headway. An inquiry into the instruction given on this subject in theological seminaries discloses that in at least thirty-three of the leading theological institutions students are definitely advised to conduct pre-marital interviews in connection with the marriages which they perform.

The danger of hasty and unwise marriages is illustrated by reference to the record of Los Angeles County, California, where an interval of three days is required between the application and the final granting of the marriage license. Of twenty thousand couples applying for marriage licenses in this county in a single year, twelve hundred, or six per cent of the total, changed their minds during the three-day interval. The Committee concludes from this evidence that a considerable percentage of couples who appear before ministers for marriage could be discovered, in the course of a serious interview, to be acting hastily and unwisely and should be advised to wait for further light before taking an ill-considered step.

Among the subjects on which the Committee insists that the minister should be informed are the degree of acquaintance and compatibility of temperament of the persons in question, their religious backgrounds and the attitudes of their families toward the marriage. Ministers are further urged to ascertain whether prospective mates understand the nature of permanent love, whether they are in sympathy with the distinctive aims of Christian marriage, the responsibility of parenthood, the protection of the health of mothers and welfare of the whole family.

Well-planned courses of training for marriage and home-making, from childhood up, are urged as an integral part of the program of religious education in the home and the church.

Important sections of the report dealing with the minister's responsibility are as follows:

"The preventative emphasis which is characteristic of our time may be as usefully applied to marital failure and unhappiness as to other problems. While great progress has been made in preventing epidemics, accidents, fires and floods, little public or professional attention has been devoted to the prevention of a most serious evil, namely, the disintegration of families. Ministers have been more given to approaching the question of marriage with generalizations and with sermons against divorce than to the preparation of young people for successful adjustment.

"While the chief responsibility for the ultimate success of marriages must rest mainly with those who enter into them, the pastor is bound by the nature of his position as a man of God to treat each marriage as a matter of the utmost importance. He can hardly claim to have done this unless he interviews his couples carefully and wisely. As a civil official, temporarily, acting with the power of the state, the minister brings the couple into a union which is legally binding, but it is much more in accord with the genus of his function as a religious leader that he should help them enter into a marriage that is spiritually vital.

"There is little value in blaming the individual pastor who is merely following an unfortunate tradition and is often a victim of unfavorable circumstances for which he is not entirely responsible. But when we think of the ministry as a group, the conclusion is inescapable that most Protestant ministers in America are lending themselves to a careless type of marriage procedure."

The report advises ministers to encourage prospective husbands and wives to have a medical examination. The Committee says:

"Even in the great majority of cases in which a medical examination would reveal no obstacle to marriage, a competent medical adviser can give the couple such valuable help that it is to be desired that physicians should give more attention to pre-marital counselling and that a medical examination should become a regular part of the preparation of young people for marriage."

On the remarriage of divorced people the report says:

"We are not here raising the question as to whether ministers should marry people who are divorced. Some refuse to marry all such persons. In any case, the minister is concerned both to help the people who come to him and to maintain Christian standards of marriage. If he feels justified in performing the ceremony, he will have a special concern for helping the person who has made one failure in marriage to understand the destructive factors which wrecked his or her first marriage, and to avoid these things in the second. Some divorced persons will already have developed insight into the causes of their first failure, but others will be under the illusion that all they needed was a change of partners, when, in fact, the reason for the failure was partly in themselves."

The significance of religious training in pre venting divorce is summarized as follows:

It is of no slight importance that families in which the members are faithful to their religious duties show a much smaller, in fact, almost negligible percentage of divorces. Homes whose domestic ties are bound together in God are more secure than are homes established on secular motives. Young people respond to the highest in thoughts of the home which they are to establish, or may be led so to respond. Their love for each other stirs up the best in them and makes them sensitive to the spiritual appeal. If the minister presents the help of religion to their venture with the earnest wish to build up the life of the two whom he is to unite he will not only help to safeguard the marriage but will also be building the true household of God on earth."

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

AN URGENT APPEAL TO PASTORS.

Elon Summer School of Leadership Training is to be held June 24-30, 1935, Elon College, N. C. On account of this the dean of the school, Rev. F. C. Lester, sends the following:

Dear Brother:

Sunday after Sunday you preach and point people upward. It is a great work, and you are the leader of your church.

Do you sometimes almost weep because you have so few leaders, and because you can do so little yourself? Most of us do.

Your Church is trying to take the tears away by making you a better leader, and by training some of your people. The Elon Summer School of Leadership Training is planned just for that purpose. Look at the courses and see how much they can help you and your church.

The course under Mr. Hardcastle and the conferences with Dr. Dana and Dr. Lightbourne will put new reading in your book that may sometimes seem to be blank. Your Sunday school superintendent, teachers, missionary leaders, and young people will find much to help them.

Several ministers have asked the Board of Christian Education to put in just such courses as we have this year, which means there will be representatives from Virginia to Florida. Your leaders have done their very best to plan a good school.

Did you ever plan an especially helpful service and then find that those who needed it most were not present? I have, but I do not like the feeling, and I hope that it will not be true of the School at Elon.

Please, Sir, can we depend on you to come and bring some of your leaders and young people? I am begging you to come and bring others because I believe it will be worth far more than it will cast. The school needs you. And we believe that each pastor needs the school. If you had decided not to come, please think it over again. Why not lead your people to their college, and to training for Christian service? Please?

Just think of what it can mean to your church to have trained and enthusiastic leaders. You are their leader. They will follow you. I believe some of them will follow you to Elon, and to trained leadership. And I sincerely hope so. It will take work and sacrifice. But that is a minister's highest joy.

Meet us at Elon June 24th, and remain for the closing Communion June 30th, at noon.

THAT IS NOT CHRISTIANITY.

Hear Dr. Austen Kennedy DeBlois for a paragraph, for he is saying a word that is worth hearing:

"It is often said that 'the only true way to serve God is to serve man—that is Christianity.' But that is not Christianity, though it has seemingly become the creed of many churches, as it is the ground-work of much of our modern humanism. The first command is to 'love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and mind and soul and strength' and fellowship with Christ can alone teach us how. It is at this very point much of our weakness lies. We have substituted all manner of things for the one thing."

Atheists, communists, humanists, all, join many church members in declaring that "to serve man" is the highest and all-sufficient aim of life. They simply rule God out of the situation.

If service to man is Christianity, then Soviet Russia is about the best specimen we have for Christianity. And all of us know Soviet Russia is declaring and teaching that there is no God.

Hear Dr. DeBlois in another brief paragraph, for he is saying something that is worth hearing in our day:

"I would not for one moment minimize the value of religious exercises, nor of social service and helpful philanthropies undertaken by the church. But all this is secondary. The first thing is a living faith in Jesus Christ, begetting heavenly communion, and joyous obedience to His will. This truth cannot be too constantly presented and reiterated, nor can it be too strongly emphasized. The church has plenty of religion but too little faith. The age is materialistic. Too many of us are practical agnostics."

Many in the church feel and say that if they help human beings in need of help around about them, they have fulfilled the demands upon them as church members and Christians. It is true, Christ opened the eyes of the blind, unstopped the ears of the deaf and helped to give physical relief to the poor, but all of this was secondary to the main purpose of begetting in His hearers and those whom He helped a living faith in Himself, a conquering faith in God. On this account, Jesus climaxed his message to John: "The poor have the gospel preached to them." And on this account, He climaxed all His commands and teachings, as well as His death and resurrection, with the one command to the church: "Go, preach my gospel to all peoples."

CHRIST IN THE NEW AGE.

We are hearing much about the new age, this new time, a new church, a new religion and such like. President DeBlois, of the Eastern Theological Seminary, Philadelphia, and editor of The Christian Review, has recently given to the world what we regard as a most timely volume on "Evangelism in the New Age." He writes as a man with authority and far-reaching insight, as well as broad scholarship, and, in the heart of his book, declares:

"In all of its periods of spiritual power and influence the church has embraced with joy the elemental fact of Christ's deity. There has been no new revelation; Christ is the Alpha and Omega. There is no need for a new revelation; there is urgent need, however for a new emphasis on the old revelation. Churches which deny, or which fail to set forth, the Deity of Jesus Christ are not genuine Christian churches. The tap-root is cut. They have become societies for social and ethical culture. Every true church, in the life and faith of its membership, is animated by Christ's divine authority. 'Other foundation can no man lay, than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ.' What ails the church? Wherein lies its great lack? It lacks the full and final voice of spiritual authority, throbbing in its tones and uttering the divine message through the lives of its members to the life of the world. It fails to hear and to interpret that voice. So its actions, methods, work, are too often blind and confusing. It is the sense of Christ's Holy Presence that we need. It was that vital, primal faith in Him that was so constant and effective in the early church."

If the church has lost its power, it is because it is seeking the power of the world or becoming like the world instead of converting the world to its Holy Power through the presence and personality of the Founder and Maker of the Church.

MISSIONS AND THE MONEY.

It is most likely that one ancient falsehood will never, never die. It seems to thrive on being false. It is the old, old falsehood that it takes "half the dollar to get the other half over," which means that for every dollar collected for Foreign Missions half of it is spent before it arrives on the field for service. That the opposite is true, and that a dollar actually increases and does more for righteousness and is handled with more economy and security than any dollar otherwise invested, makes little difference with the evil-minded ones who perpetuate this falsehood from the lower world. Look at this statement recently issued by the Commission on Missions:

"Last year the local constituencies served by the missions of the American Board, (including government grants) paid fifty per cent more in terms of American dollars than the total gifts of our churches to foreign missions.

"The percentage of self-support increases steadily. Missions have proved their case in meeting practical and vital needs in mission fields.

"Our major emphasis is ever to reach the souls of men through the Gospel of Christ which alone can supply the power for the transformation of the individual and the reformation of society.

"Work which produces such results deserves the support of all our churches and individual friends."

THE STORY OF A CENTURY.

By Miss D. P. Cushing, News Editor.

[Editorial Note:—If Christian Sun readers are looking for a thrill that comes from adventure, daring, romance, we advise them to read the following which sounds more like friction than facts.—J. O. A.]

One hundred years ago six American young men with their brides sailed out of Boston Harbor for Africa where they enacted a story of pioneer fortitude and drama unequaled even in the annals of the covered wagon when settlers braved the unknown and dangerous wilderness of the West. From June 15th to July 1st at Adams, Natal, South Africa, the American Zulu Missions, founded by the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions in 1835, celebrates its Centenary.

Among the guest speakers will be Dr. Fred Field Goodsell of Boston, Executive Vice-President of the American Board; His Excellency, the Governor-General of South Africa, Lord Clarendon; Honorable J. H. Hofmeyer, Minister of the Interior and Education; the Bishop of Natal, and Paramount Chief Mshiyeni.

From New England and the South came the six founders of this work in Africa which was to be carried on for 11 years before the first Zulu became a Christian, but which today has 30,000 church members, giving annually over $60,000 to churches and schools and wholly supporting its own trained native pastors. These founders were: Aldin Grout and Mrs. Grout from Massachusetts; Newton Adams, M. D., from New York and Mrs. Adams from Ohio; Rev. George Champion from Connecticut and Mrs. Champion from Massachusetts; Rev. Daniel Lindley and Rev. Alexander E. Wilson, both of North Carolina; Mrs Lindley and Mrs. Wilson, both of Virginia; Rev. Henry I. Venable from Kentucky and Mrs. Venable from Indiana.

Although the South Africa Mission Centenary is being celebrated in June, because this is the most convenient time, the first missionaries actually reached that country in February, 1835, after a three-months' voyage by sailing vessel, living principally on salt meats and cod fish, a journey which today takes hardly six weeks.

They entered a land where two African chiefs, Tshaka and Dingaan, known in history as "the Neros of South Africa," were spreading death and bloody terror over the country. Everywhere as they traveled they saw skulls and skeletons where men, women and children had been murdered, cattle confiscated, kraals burned to the ground. Mothers saw their babies rammed onto the cattle kraal posts. Each soldier was armed with a short man-killing spear and a tall stiff cowhide shield. When Tshaka's mother died, he ordered 1,000 Zulu mothers put to death in her honor. An entire regiment was forced to leap to its death from a cliff. Into this scene went these young Americans with the message of the Cross.

Today the American Board Mission schools alone have 10,000 children and young people enrolled. Amanzimtoti Institute at Adams, Natal, known as "the Hampton of South Africa," has 300 students and its graduates are in demand as agricultural supervisors and teachers. There are now over 10,000 Pathfinders and Wayfarers in South Africa, (corresponding to Scouts in America) thanks to the missionaries who started this movement there.

Three of this original group missionaries, Messrs. Grout, Adams, and Champion, determined to visit the kraal of the bloody chiefs at whatever the risk. Strangely, the chiefs looked with favor upon the young men from "Pesyeya" or "beyond," and permitted them to locate. Later, however, when they saw the people flocking to the mission, jealousy seized them and because of this attitude, fraught with danger, and because of war which broke out between the Dutch Boers and the Moselakatsis, the missionaries had to flee by night across flooded rivers.

Fear—stark, deadly, unreasoning fear—held, and still holds in its awful grasp the pagan peoples of Africa. Fear of the witch doctor with his inflated goat bladders bobbing from his head, his cow's tail wand, his divining apparatus made of the ankle bones of a sheep; fear of the "Imikovu," messengers of evil made from corpses shrunk up and brought to life by the witch doctors; fear of "O Tikoloshe" who lives in ponds and drags people down to their death; fear of hundreds of awful spirits and creatures who lie in wait for you by day and by night.

Old people, too weak to work, were carried to the edge of the bush and left to die of starvation or to be devoured by wild beasts. Twins were killed—starved, smothered or perhaps buried alive. All sickness or death, was, and still is, to them the results of black magic and someone's ill will. Babies cutting their first teeth in an upper jaw are likely to find their days numbered. Kilts for the women and aprons for the men made of cowhide comprised the costume of the people and these garments were never washed but only scraped with stones and rubbed with more grease every few years.

Not for fear of the people but because wild animals abounded, the missionaries in those early days always carried guns and they slept with them by their side in temporary wigwams built of tall grass while hyenas howled close by. They were the first white men the native people had ever seen. Native huts were caverns with soot hanging in black stalactites from the roof. Cockroaches dropped casually to the dirt floor. Snakes, hens, lizards, and stray dogs shared the dwelling.

To the delicate American white woman brought to her first jungle home in a great Dutch wagon drawn by 16 oxen, the first nights were times of terror. Living in houses thatched with mud in the chinks to keep out reptiles, she awoke many times to hear wild animals at her very front door. A glance into the night revealed along the edge of the bush green eyes gleaming in the blackness, some high, some low, for snakes infested the region. Rising, the young wife would frantically push trays against the small windows in terror lest these preying wild things break through and kill her baby.

Today the Christian Zulu lives in his neat little home, with his garden, his one wife and his children brought up in Godliness and cleanliness. Quite likely his wife, possibly an Inanda Seminary girl, will show you her sewing machine and serve you tea in dainty cups on spotless linen. There is no fear in her gaze, for she knows evil spirits cannlot touch her.

One of the immediate and seemingly insurmountable difficulties which these pioneers met was the language with its fearsome medley of clicks and snaps utterly unintelligible to these lads versed in Hebrew, Greek, Latin, and plain Yankee. By the "point" and repeat" system they evolved a vocabulary and even named the three "Clicks," the dental, palatal and lateral! Before they finished their work they gave the Zulus a million pages of printed matter.

To the Congregational church of the United States belongs the honor of contributing, through its missionaries, the Bible in Zulu. Recently Dr. James D. Taylor of the American Board in Johannesburg completed a revision of this first Bible comparing it with the Hebrew, Greek, English and Zulu. Today no young missionary takes up permanent work without a year of language study.

From the lips of a veteran missionary from this same section now celebrating, with lovely choirs, well planned programs, reaching thousands by means of loud speakers, barbeques and fellowship, its Centenary, comes a single example of her own experiences begun in 1893 at Umzumbe, South Africa, where her parents before had worked.

"I had no medical training but I could not watch little babies dying around me and do nothing to help them," writes Mrs. Amy B. Cowles, who is now living in Alhambra, California, and whose daughter, Miss Ruth Cowles, is a nurse in Johannesburg. "Our doctors at Durban gave me medicine and I set to work. In Zululand it is the age-old custom to feed newborn babies with solids—sweet potatoes mashed with water, put through a dirty grass strainer, or beer or curdled milk, poured down tiny throats. As a result 500 out of every 1000 die and in the slums of Johannesburg, 800 out of every 1000. Mothers came flying to me with their babies. On arrival they would untie the goat skins that held the baby to their back and proceed to feed it from a gourd coated with stale food and swarming with flies."

One day a mother carrying a small boy of two years came. He lay limp and almost lifeless in her arms and lifted an agonized face to Mrs. Cowles. "Oh, Nkosikazi, (Lady Chief) help me. I no longer know what it is to sleep. My little boy is so sick. Ten of our doctors have tried to cure him and here he is, like this."

Mrs. Cowles examined the child. His feet were swollen, bloody gashes covered him from head to foot. His scalp had been opened and the skull scraped. "What is the matter with the child?" she asked the distracted mother. "Animals—animals—and see the doctors have been cutting him to let out the evil spirits," was the reply. "What did you do when the doctors were cutting him?" asked Mrs. Cowles. "I ran and ran," cried the mother putting her hands over her ears.

"That Zulu mother trying not to hear the crys of her baby as the men held him down and gashed him, that mother who kept 'running and running' is to me a picture of darkest Africa," concludes Mrs. Cowles.

Today in American Board hospitals at Durban and Johannesburg there are more than 10,000 patients with native nurses being trained; in addition there are dispensaries, clinics and small hospitals at seven other points. Recently a plan to train African young men under government supervision was adopted by the South African Government along the very lines which have been urged for years by Dr. James B. McCord, medical missionary under the American Board and head of the Durban American Zulu Hospital.

The Zulu Christians are not forgetting their pagan brothers and sisters at this celebration and they have arranged for a feast, dear to the native heart, when four oxen will be killed and 50 camp fires burn under native pots. If these untutored guests go away with something more than full stomachs the Zulu Christians will be happy.

THE LEARNED DOCTOR FROM BOSTON.

An Indian journalist met Dr. Fred Field Goodsell in Madura, South India, and sent word to a Boston newspaper of how church members in the "suburbs" came 40 or 50 miles beneath the hot sun to meet "the learned doctor", garland him, sing to him and shake his hand. The American Board, Dr. Goodsell told them, is not a building or a city, or a river, or a clock or a bank, but "a spirit of fellowship with all the peoples in all the countries of the world."

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The Church is sick. The cause of this sickness is obscure, but many religious experts are subjecting the patient to rigid examination and careful diagnosis. A perfect Church is the dream of spiritual idealists. Through the nineteen centuries of the Christian era the Church has suffered at the hands of both friends and enemies. Friends have expected too much of imperfect leaders, and enemies have been too insistent upon emphasizing the non-essentials and exaggerating the mistakes and errors of the mixed multitude. In the midst of all this confusion the promise of Jesus has strengthened the faith and encouraged the hopes of believers, for He said: "the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

This sickness is not unto death. Great distress may be occasioned by any illness, but health is often restored by proper treatment. Danger signals flash along the highway of life to give warning to those who pass by. Sickness is a danger signal. The good physician seeks to cure the sickness; and, in turn, advises the patient how to prevent and avoid illness. One of the important factors in treating a patient is the mental attitude. Good doctors and nurses cultivate an atmosphere of cheerfulness and hope. Preachers and laymen have much to learn, in this respect, in seeking to help the church to recover health and spiritual power. Many church meetings are little more than a committee of consulting diagnosticians. Did you ever hear this: "the trouble with the church is ——." A book of "church diseases" would be as large as a physician's reference on General Practice.

The people who are looking for a church funeral and burial will be disappointed. The church is undernourished. The critics are not busy providing a generous, wall-balanced, supply of food. Many of the friends of the church have overlooked the importance of daily bread. Think of how little the church lives on! Less than fifty per cent of its members give any money to its support. A large per cent of the members do not attend the Sunday school, and absent themselves from the regular services of the church. Ministers are expected to keep abreast of the times, be well educated, dress well, give liberally, take an active part in all the community affairs, pay their debts, save money, provide for their families, be cheerful, faithful and full of hope. The church does not receive the prompt financial support of all the members, and the critics wonder why it is so slow in paying its bills and expenses. It is made of individuals. The church is composed of persons. When individual members do not feed the church it is financially undernourished. Money affects the spiritual life and power of the church. That is why Jesus said so much about money in His teaching. When church people rob God and neglect to give to the church, they lose their spiritual power.

The church is suffering from a lack of divinely directed spiritual activity. There are certain kinds and forms of activity in the church to indicate that it is not dead. But there is not enough individual effort. Every church member, who can read, should, in time, have a Bible well worn by constant use. The knees should be frequently used in prayer. Then it would help if more people could find time to attend their church business meetings; and manage their affairs every Sunday so as to be in their places for every service in their church. No wonder the church cannot move onward and forward with a greater program, when the members cannot find time or money to give to its activity and service.

The whole trouble lies in individual attitude and conduct. There is the problem and there will be found the solution. When the people get right with God and the church, they will discover the church is much alive. A real revival of personal religion is the need. Pray for that blessing to come quickly and with great power.

NOW IS THE TIME.

Everyone comes to the place sooner or later when an immediate decision is required. Delay in making that decision may result in serious consequences. Practically every young person is facing such a time today, not tomorrow nor the next day, but today. Now is the time, young man or young woman, for you to think seriously and to consider carefully your future.

Will you launch out into the tomorrow before making an adequate appraisal of your own abilities and the demands that will be made upon you, hoping and trusting to luck that you will arrive, or will you take the time to discover the talents that you possess, to ascertain for what you were meant in life, to evaluate the demands that will be made upon you and then put forth every effort to prepare yourself for possible future eventualities? For the past ten years it has been popular for young people to go to college. Ambitious young people, with or without funds, have, as a rule, found the way to secure for themselves the advantages of college life. Ambitious young people are still finding for themselves such advantages. Young man and young woman, the majority of your colleagues in life and the majority of those with whom you will deal will be college bred. Your chances for success will be greatly accentuated if your preparation for life is equal to theirs.

There are certain requirements for college entrance. Twenty-five years ago an ambition and a determination to enetr college about met the requirements. The real test came after entering. Educational standards and college requirements have changed. If you are to enter college, you must have to your credit, the successful completion of high school requirements. With fifteen earned units from an accredited high school, you can enter any college in North Carolina without an entrance test.

If you are a high school graduate, then you may count yourself fortunate. Hundreds and thousands of your generation have longed for such opportunities as you have had and they are coveting the achievements that you have obtained. Opportunities for training and development have been denied them. Considering the advantages and the disadvantages that have arbitrarily been accorded free individuals in this complex society of ours, it would seem that the world has been both selective and cruel in its dealings with men and women. Some have been favored richly; others have been denied harshly. I do not believe in fatalism, nor do I believe in the "survival of the fittest," but I am a great believer in the gospel of determination and in the spirit of stick-to-it-tiveness. Few things will stand in the way of an intrepid determination founded on the principle of eternal righteousness.

The apostle Paul, on one occasion, said: "I can do all things through Him who strengtheneth me." This saying was true then: it is true now. In Him and by His strength any and all may conquer. If a young man or young woman has caught a vision of the future with its requirements and has been fired with a passion to fulfill that vision and meet its requirements, nothing can hinder. Neither perversity nor apparent lack of interest hinder, but the decision must be made. Now is the time. Now is the time to make that decision.

Young men and young women by the thousands throughout this country have completed their high school courses. The next step in their preparation for life is college. There is a gap between high schol and college. To cross this gap is a bit hazardous, but it may be crossed, even by those without money, but can never be successfully crossed by those without ambition and without decision. There are scores of colleges throughout the country that have been built to accommodate high school graduates who are ambitious and who have the courage to decide. Their campuses are waiting for you, young man or young woman, and their gates are open to you. Others are deciding. Now is the time. Now is the time for you to make your decision.

You should chose your college somewhat on the same lines as you choose your friends. You want a college with character, with an atmosphere, with high ideals, with an inclusive curriculum, with a faculty prepared to interpret and impart the subjects of that curriculum and with Christian ideals that will be a force in building your own character for the requirements of an unusual day of an unusual age.

Elon College, the college of the Christian Church in the South, is an institution of higher learning, fully accredited and entirely capable of meeting your demands. Give it a trial. It will satisfy you. Now is the time for you to decide. Scores of others have already decided. At this writing, our definite decisions for next year's student body more than double the decisions we had a year ago.

If you are undecided and would like to consider Elon College for your training, write for the desired information.

S. S. & C. E. CONVENTION, VALLEY OF VIRGINIA.

Mrs. Scott and I were privileged to attend the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Virginia Valley Conference, June 6th and 7th. The Convention was held with Antioch Church, near Harrisonburg, Rev. M. L. Weekley, D. D., pastor. Antioch was organized in 1833 and the strength and future possibilities of this grand old Church could easily be seen.

The Convention theme was "The Better Way," and the meeting was ably presided over by the president, Mr. Roy A. Larrick, prominent layman of the Winchester Church. The program included the vital interests of our Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies as parts of the program of our Church.

Among the highlights of the convention were the meditation talks given by Rev. Ivan R. Smith, the progressive pastor of our Winchester and Timber Ridge Churches.

The writer represented Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary, and on Thursday morning spoke on "Missions—A Charge to Keep I Have," and, in the absence of Rev. F. C. Lester, he spoke Thursday night on "The Church as Teacher of Religion." Following the report on Missions by Miss Thelma Morris, Mrs. Scott addressed the convention, using for her subject, "Our Field and Its Challenge." Mrs. Scott also met with the Women's Board of the Conference and assisted in planning for the coming meeting in July.

Professor Kenneth B. Hook delivered the annual address, his subject being, "The Abundant Life"; the Orphanage's message was presented through Mrs. A. W. Andes; Reports were heard from the various Sunday School Departmental Secretaries: Home Department, Mrs. H. W. Seabright; Cradle Roll, Mrs. J. Walter Stearn; Teacher Training, by a member of the Convention, and Mr. Clarence Phillips gave a helpful and suggestive address on "Worship in the Sunday School." Miss Minnie Dofflemyre reported on Christian Endeavor work.

Rev. F. C. Lester, who was unable to be present on Thursday, was present Friday and delivered two very instructive and challenging addresses on "The Better Way in Work," and "The Far Better Way in Worship."

The sessions were well attended and the active interest in Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work reveal promise of much substantial growth in strength of the Valley Churches. The Antioch Church very bountifully cared for the needs of the outer man, and the deep spiritual note sounded throughout the sessions brought challenge to the souls of those attending. It is needless for me to say that Rev. A. W. Andes was present, for he is always on hand for the meetings of the Valley Conference. Perhaps there is no man in the Southern Convention who deserves more praise than Brother Andes. For nearly thirty years he has faithfully given of himself to the service of his Lord among his own home-folks of the Valley Conference. Rev. and Mrs. Andes were our gracious hosts during our stay in the Valley. We appreciate very deeply the privilege of attending the Convention sessions.

APPRECIATING YOUR CHURCH PAPER.

There are more ways than one to show your appreciation and also to help your church paper and the good cause which the paper represents. The Nashville Christian Advocate tells how it may be done quite effectively:

"Do you appreciate your church paper? What is it you like in this issue? Suppose you talk about it at prayer meeting, Sunday school, the young people's meeting, or missionary society. Suppose the preacher should speak of some of the good thoughts he received while reading his paper. It may be difficult to talk about religion to one's fellows. Well, talk about what you read in the church paper. Pass the paper on either by telling what you have read or by lending the paper to one who is not a subscriber. If all our readers would show such appreciation of the church paper, pastors everywhere would be beseiged with persons desiring them to send in their subscriptions. That is true and a sure method, because it has been tried. Suppose you try it!"

CARY REVIVAL.

Revival services were held at Cary Christian Church beginning June the third and extending through the week. Rev. H. E. Crutchfield assisted the pastor. Deep and inspiring sermons were preached by Brother Crutchfield, and the services were attended earnestly and faithfully by large numbers. The church members exemplified increased interest, and there were several new additions to the church.

A Story for the Children

NO SHOES.

Mildred was sitting on the floor with one shoe in her hand, the other on the floor. Grandma looked up and spied a tear trickle down Mildred's cheek. She spoke:

"Mildred! What's wrong; what's worrying you so much that you shed tears?"

"Why, grandma, I can't go to Sunday school tomorrow!"

"Well, why is that! I see no reason why you shouldn't!"

"'Cause," she said, sobbing, "my shoe has an ugly scratch across the toe and I just cannot wear it to Sunday school looking like that!"

"Why Mildred! tut, tut, why be so snobbish? When I was a little girl like you I went to Sunday school barefooted. Put your pride in your pocket and forget about a little innocent scratch; your shoe can't help it, neither can you. You are going to Sunday school just the same."

"Now, Grandma, did you honest to goodness go to Sunday school barefoot, do you expect me to believe that?"

Mildred jumped up forgetting about the shoe, for grandma was always chuck full of stories.

"Tell me about it, grandma."

"About what, child?"

Grandma had a knowing smile just the same.

"Why, about your shoes, and why you did not wear your shoes."

"Well, the reason's plain: I didn't have any to wear."

"Why, grandma! Didn't have any to wear? Why didn't your daddy get you some? My daddy does me!"

"We were pioneers."

"Pioneers? What's that?"

"Don't interrupt me so much. I'll lose my train of thought."

Mildred scowled and went back to her shoes, grumbling.

"Well, grandma, if you can't talk so I can understand—you may just not tell it. I'm not going to Sunday school barefoot, I know that!"

She began fiddling with her shoes again. She rubbed and rubbed at the offending scratch, glancing out of one corner of her eye to see how grandma was taking it. Grandma feigned unconcernedness but inside was shaking with laughter. Mildred spied the convulsions and up she jumped like a cyclone, and snapped out, "Grandma, if that story is so funny. I want to hear it!"

Grandma straightened up like there was something very important.

"Well, well; is that so, little Miss Importance? What was I saying?"

"You were talking about a pioneer. Whatever that is."

"Oh, yes! and shoes. You wanted to know what a pioneer was. Well, my father and family, were pioneers."

"Yes. but what did pioneers look like, monkeys, or bears, or —"

"Oh, no, no, just people like your daddy and mother; only they were folks that had moved to a new country and were hard up. Sometimes we had shoes and sometimes we didn't. I remember one time I had a good calico dress; and sometimes I had to wash it on Saturdays so I could go to Sunday school next day. And again, sometimes my dress was all in rags and I couldn't go. My father was a farmer, we didn't live in a city like you do."

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., Secretary.

ONE MISSIONARY SPEAKS FOR ALL.

"At times I feel like a soldier attempting to hold a long trench single-handed, running back and forth, trying always to be at the point of greatest need or danger. It is difficult for one person to look or act like a company. He will not deceive himself or anyone else into thinking he is doing all that a full company could. As a strictly defensive measure, this may work for a while, but when the times comes to go over the top—well, then the game's up!

Right now the church ought to be going over the top with every man and all the equipment she can command. Unfortunately, the American Board trenches are lightly manned by tired survivors. Casualties have been heavy the last few years, and there have been practically no replacements for a decade. Also the supply trains have been coming through very lightly loaded. Pardon a martial figure, but it illustrates the predicament in which we find curselves these days.

"It seems to me this is a startling situation fraught with the gravest danger. How long is it to continue? Are there to be any new recruits? Must we on the field hang on as long as we can, dropping away one by one as sickness and death claim us? Or are the Congregational-Christian churches of America going to rise to the challenge and insist that new blood be injected into the old body, and that new life meet the wonderful challenge of the new day?"

So writes a secretary of our American Board.

THE REAL HOPE OF INDIA.

Dr. Fred Field Goodsell, Executive Vice-President of the Board, has completed his tour of study of the changing conditions in India, and is now traveling through the Board stations in Africa. This is the first extended trip Dr. Goodsell has made, to study the politics, methods and results on the fields, since he became the Board's leader.

In two months, he visited the principal stations in India and had the good fortune to visit with Mahatma Gandhi for three hours in a missionary's home, discussing the far-reaching program for various improvements based on the scientific development of village industries. "Rural reconstruction, with Gandhi as well as with our missionaries, is one of the great enthusiasms of the present generation." Dr. Goodsell also shared in Madras, the sessions of the joint committee on Church Union in South India, with a group of forty persons representing the Anglican Church, the Wesleyan Methodist Church, American Presbyterians, and Congregationalists. Several days were spent considering the next steps in this remarkable movement toward church union.

"Naturally my most immediate concern has been to see and to understand the work and setting of our American Board undertakings in India and Ceylon. I have some very happy impressions to treasure. We talk about cooperation in Christian enterprises. Our missionaries are the most cooperative group I have seen, east or west. They stress not cooperation as an end in itself, but cooperation as a mighty means which can put our great Cause forward. For instance: in the training of ministers and other Christian workers, India fairly hums with the cooperative spirit. At Bangalore, the United Theological College is jointly sponsored by five missions—Scotch, Wesleyan, Dutch Reformed, British Congregationalist and the American Board. Other missions seem about to join this group. As the cooperative spirit reaches higher levels, anything that even resembles rivalry or competition is eliminated.

"This leads me to speak of the task we face in India. Our aim has been and must continue to be to do our part in the building of a strong and vital Indian Christian movement at the heart of which is the Christian community and the Christian Church. I do not see how any earnest Western Christian man or woman could spend a fortnight in India in contact with her sheer, overwhelming human need without realizing that our task in India is far from accomplished. If we were called by the Haystack men a century ago to share Christ with India, a thousand voices call us today to press on with the unfinished task. That we shall go on in fullest fellowship and cooperation with Indian Christians is to be taken for granted. They must increasingly assume responsibility, but how earnestly they plead for our continued partnership at its best.

"I am coming to feel that flexibility is one of the outstanding Christian virtues. It assumes that we have deep and abiding Christian convictions, 'purposely ribbed and edged with steel,' but it requires that we note the changes that are coming over the world so rapidly and that we resourcefully suit the deed to the need today. * * * For instance, in one district in India, the government authorities gratefully acknowledge that their best teachers come from our higher schools. Ninety per cent of all women teachers and 30 per cent of all men teachers among 3,000,000 people are from our institutions. This is strategic Christian service. * * * Rural reconstruction units, village guides or counsellors, health centers, and friendship centers, volunteer Christian service, higher standards for Christian catechists, pastors, teachers and preachers, more suitable Christian literature in the vernaculars—these and other terms suggest most fascinating, because realistic, progressive lines of Christian service in India today."

Dr. Goodsell leaves India "with a wistful eagerness to stay longer. How proud I am of our American Board missions in India. How deeply I long to see the entire Fellowship of Those Who Care and of Those Who Might Care understand more clearly and support more sacrificially the efforts of our missionaries and of the Indian Christian churches—the real hope of India."

A DEDICATION SERVICE FOR CENT-A-MEAL BOXES.

As Prepared by Clifford W. Hilliker and Used at the Church at Sherburne, N. Y.

After the Cent-a-Meal box had been placed on the communion table, the congregation joined in the following service:

To my Father in Heaven,
I dedicate this my gift.
To Jesus Christ, my Saviour,
I dedicate this my gift.
To the strengthening and advancing of Christ's Kingdom in this Empire State,
I dedicate this my gift.
To the strengthening and advancing of Christ's Kingdom in this my native or adopted country,
I dedicate this my gift.
To the strengthening and advancing of Christ's Kingdom throughout His entire vineyard which is the world,
I dedicate this my gift.
To the envisaging of that larger field of service of which my church here in Sherburne is a part,
I dedicate this my gift.
To the bringing in of the light at eventide into the lives of the veterans of the Cross,
I dedicate this my gift.
To this outward manifestation of my love for Thee which may be seen by those about me and thus cause them to glorify their Father which is in heaven and on earth,
I dedicate this my gift.
To the sacred memory of all those who have or are giving of their lives for the promotion of Thy Kingdom, O God, at home or abroad,
I dedicate this my gift.
To the cleansing and purifying of my own life by the further indwelling of Thy spirit,
I dedicate this my gift.

FIVE CHURCHES UNITE IN A NATIONAL NON-COMPETITIVE PACT.

The "National Comity Agreement" of the Baptist, Congregational-Christian, Methodist Episcopal, Presbyterian and Reformed boards will bring to an end on October 1st a hundred years of competitive missionary expenditures in America between these denominations. The agreement was signed in New York (Friday, May 17, 1935) by secretaries of the respective boards. The board of a sixth denomination, the Disciples of Christ, has voted to participate in the agreement, and a seventh, the Evangelical Synod, is expected to do so.

The Agreement was reached after a series of conferences over a period of two years under the chairmanship of the Rev. Dr. Ernest M. Halliday, general secretary of the Congregational and Christian Church Extension Boards and since January president of the Home Missions Council which represents twenty-three denominations.

Under the Agreement situations which are apparently competitive and cannot be solved locally will be brought for adjudication to inter-denominational comity committees in the respective states. The denominations represented in the Agreement carry on more than fifty-five per cent of the Protestant mission work in this country.

"Protestantism in the United States," according to Dr. Halliday, "has entered upon a new era with the major missionary need shifted from the establishment of new churches to the strengthening of the existing church work in under-privileged neighborhoods and communities. 'Home' or national missions were begun in order that the churches might keep up with the great westward expansion in our country. The expansion represented a great migration—the greatest the world has ever seen. Denominations today can only discharge their duty to this country which is as much in need of vital religion as ever in its history by adapting themselves to the new epoch. The conditions call for increased cooperation which will eliminate competitive expenditures, which will allocate responsibility for missionary needs and which will unite the denominations in common tasks such as, for instance, the recently established interdenominational bureau of architecture of the Home Missions Council."

BEWER EDDY SAYS:

Modern China—

Has the best government which she has known since the founding of the Republic in 1911.

Forty thousand miles of new roads have been built in the last five years.

Broad avenues have been cut through the poverty-ridden sections of many of her cities.

"Clean-up campaigns" have improved the sanitation of a host of towns and villages.

The railroads, telegraphs and mails grow daily more efficient.

Increasing education is lifting the moral tone of the people.

The "New Life Movement" is stimulating many reforms, such as the attack on the opium trade which has taken place in many provinces.

But—

Although numbering only one in a thousand of the population, the Christian group has supplied an astonishing proportion of the leadership of the country.

Fifty-one per cent of the college graduates listed in China's "Who's Who" are the product of Christian schools and colleges.

The American Board high schools for boys and girls in Peiping last year took first place in the government examinations for that area.

In addition to introducing modern medicine to millions our mission hospitals have shared largely in the launching of public health campaigns.

The Gospel of Christ has been presented by our missionaries in such practical terms as to inspire the movement toward Rural Reconstruction and to awaken opposition to political corruption.

Last year the local constituencies served by the missions of the American Board (including government grants), paid—for treatments in our hospitals, for tuitions in schools and colleges, and for the support of churches and social institutions —fifty per cent more in terms of American dollars than the total gifts of our churches to foreign missions.

The percentage of self-support increases steadily. Missions have proved their case in meeting practical and vital needs in mission fields.

Our major emphasis is ever to reach the souls of men through the Gospel of Christ which alone can supply the power for the transformation of the individual and the reformation of society.

Work which produces such results deserves the support of all of our churches and individual friends.

THE CHURCH IN BAILUNDO.

Walking miles, and planning days ahead for the food they will carry, Christians of the Bailundo church in West Central Africa, probably the largest church organization in the world under Congregational leadership, gather for a regional communion service. Often grass huts are built to accommodate the visitors. The pastors are busy in the hours before the actual ceremonies because joining the church there is no incidental hit or miss affair. Every candidate must be recommended by his local teacher and then questioned. "Evidence of Christian practice as well as knowledge of Christian doctrine is essential to satisfy the native elders," points out Miss Una Jean Minto. "A single visit to the witch doctor or some underhand dealings in business or attendance at a beer drink in a heathen village—all are sufficient to disqualify an aspirant from membership in the church. And if he persisted they would remove his name from the list. Such actions are regarded as positive evidence of insincerity in the applicant's purpose to follow the Jesus Way."

A LESSON FROM RUSSIA!

It is said that one-third of the world's illiterates are in India and that of the 350 millions in that land, only about 25 million can read and write (a ratio of about 1 to 14.) It would take some 920 years at the present rate to make India as literate as Japan, Dr. Laubach maintains. When the Communists took over the government in Russia they found 66 per cent of the people unable to read and write. So they put literacy into their five year plan because if folks can't read how can you teach them about Communism? "We Christians," points out Dr. Laubach, "have the greatest news in the world in the Gospel story and we cannot rest satisfied until all people everywhere have daily access to that saving news. Illiteracy cuts straight across the path of our objective for if men cannot read their Bible they must be fed by others—or else starve." Christian leaders in India, therefore, are intensely interested in Dr. Laubach's literacy work.

MT. SILINDA GOES IN FOR ROYALTY.

There is an African Chief entering Mt. Silinda school, East Africa, this year—the first in the school's history, so far as Mrs. Mabel Larkins Hack can discover. It is not easy to be a Christian Chief in the midst of paganism. With Chief Zamchiya came four others. What had inspired these young men to seek higher education? The answer was found in Harry Dhliwayo, a Mt. Silinda boy who, although he had not been able to finish school was doing a fine piece of work teaching in the little village from which Zamchiya came. Long live the Christian Chief and the teacher who taught him.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

Rev. F. C. Lester, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

OFF TO ELON.

Lest we should be late, some of us start to Elon the day this article comes from press. Of course the North Carolina and Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention may use some of our time Thursday and Friday and a marriage may give us a thrill on Sunday, but the four of us who leave from here next Thursday are eager for the Elon Summer School of Leadership Training to open. Present prospects are that six or more will go from my little church in Norfolk.

Some have been before and are eager to meet old friends. Others will go for the first time and will make new friends. Courses of study call to all who want to work for the Master. Hours of worship indoors and out promise a new vision and hope. Youth looks to leaders for guidance, and leaders look to youth for courage. Each will be a blessing to the other.

Ministers mingle with young people and get new hope. Teachers learn their art and share it with others. Both yound and old dream, plan, and hope in a finer way because they share at Elon.

Monday, June 24th to Sunday, June 30th, will be a wonderful week for those who are at Elon for the Leadership Training School. Life will never be so drab and dreary afterwards. Hope will come to life in the hearts of many. It is my sincere wish that all who read this may be with us at Elon. Come with us and do us good.

If you play an instrument that can be handled easily, bring it with you. Violins, banjos, cornets, etc., will find a welcome and a service. If you have a good stunt—songs, games, charade, anything interesting, sparkling, full of fun—bring it with you. Don't forget your Bible, notebook, pencil, bed sheets, pillow, if you want one, and toilet articles. Be sure to bring a cheering smile and a willingness to cooperate in an attempt to develop a Christian community. Come with eagerness to learn the "better way" in Christian living and serving.

Great days lie ahead of us. The world is waiting for our message and service. Elon bids us welcome to halls of learning and days of happiness. We're off to Elon. Meet us there next Monday without fail.

TO MY FATHER.

He called me his little woman—
It made me so proud and glad.
My ideals of men and marriage
Came from my Mother and Dad.

I had a daily allowance—
No woman should beg for pay.
He always expected the truth—
That's why I'm honest today.

My greatest regret was always
That his death left me bereft,
My priceless heritage has been Living the ideals he left.

Even in my childhood fancy
I dreamed the future I'd have—
True love, home and children—with a
Husband as fine as my Dad.

—Sally Harbaugh.

YOUR NAME.

You got it from your Father. 'Twas the best he had to give.
And right gladly he bestowed it—it is yours the while you live.
You may lose the watch he gave you and another you may claim,
But remember when you're tempted, to be careful of his name.

It was fair the day you got it, and a worthy name to wear.
When he took it from his Father, there was no dishonor there;
Through the years he proudly wore it, to his Father he was true.
And that name was clear and spotless when he passed it on to you.

Oh, there's much that he has given you that he values not at all.
He has watched you break your playthings in the days when you were small.
And you've lost the knife he gave you, and you've scattered many a game,
But you'll never hurt your father if you're careful of his name.

It is yours to wear forever, yours to wear the while you live,
Yours, perhaps, some distant morning to another boy give;
And you'll smile as did your father smile above that baby there,
If a clean name and a good name you are giving him to wear.

—Author Unknown.

BE THE BEST OF WHATEVER YOU ARE.

We all dream of great deeds and high positions, away from the pettiness and humdrum of ordinary life. Yet success is not occupying a lofty place or doing conspicuous work; it is being the best that is in you. Rattling around in too big a job is much worse than filling a small one to overflowing. Dream, aspire by all means; but do not ruin the life you must lead by dreaming pipe-dreams of the one you would like to lead. Make the most of what you have and are. Perhaps your trivial, immediate task is your one sure way of proving your mettle. Do the thing that is near at hand, and great things will come to your hand to be done.

If you can't be a pine on the top of the hill
Be a scrub in the valley—but be
The best little scrub by the side of the rill;
Be a bush if you can't be a tree.

If you can't be a bush, be a bit of grass,
And some highway some happier make;
If you can't be a muskie then just be a bass,
But the liveliest bass in the lake!

We can't all be captains, we've got to be crew,
There's something for all of us here.
There's big work to do and there's lesser to do,
And the task we must do is the near.

If you can't be a highway then just be a trail,
If you can't be the sun be a star;
It isn't by size that you win or you fail—
Be the best of whatever you are!

—Douglas Malloch.

HUNGRY FOLKS.

Some folks hunger for a friend,
For friends make life worth while;
And other hearts are hungry
For just a pleasant smile.
Kind words and deeds have wondrous power
To save a soul from sin;
To drive the threatening clouds away
And let the sunshine in.

Folks are hungry all the time—
They're hungering for love,
Like the Master brought to earth
From the home above.
Let us follow in His steps
By doing loving deeds;
For sympathy and kindness
Are all this old world needs.

DUTY.

So nigh is grandeur to our dust,
So near is God to man,
When duty whispers low, thou must,
The youth replies, "I can."

—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS.

Lesson XII—June 23, 1935.

Golden Text: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to the whole creation."—Mark 16:15.

Lesson: Genesis 12:1-3; Isaiah 45:22; 49:6; Jonah 3:1-10; Matthew 28:19, 20; Acts 1: 6-8; 13:1-12; 16:6-10; 26:12-20.

It is not enough to say that Christianity has the missionary spirit. Christianity is the missionary spirit. Unless Christianity is missionary it is not really Christian. The spirit of missions is the essence of Christianity. And by missions we mean the program and the process of sharing the gospel with others, with all others throughout the world. Those who say that they do not believe in missions really do not understand what they are saying, that is if they are true Christians. Robert E. Speer once said, "If Christianity is not true we ought to give it up; if it is true, we ought to give it away." He might have added, "If we do not give it away, we cannot keep it." For that is the heart of the matter—we can get and keep it only as we give it.

The Bible and Missions.

The Bible is a missionary Book. One does not have to be a fanatic to see that. From first to last there runs through it the dominant theme of missions, the sharing of the good news with others. The sections in today's lesson illustrate that. In the story taken from Genesis, "all the families of the earth are to be blessed in Abraham." Indeed God promises to bless him in order that, or perhaps on condition that he be a blessing to others. This is certainly true of the inimitable story of Jonah. The book of Jonah is one of the most missionary-minded and -spirited books in all literature. It emphasizes both the challenge of high privilege, and the penalty for rejected responsibility in missionary matters. The passage from Isaiah also emphasizes the fact that there is one God, and that the Jews who know the one true God are under obligation to share that knowledge and their experience with the ends of the earth. Time and space would fail to enumerate the countless references to and implications of missions in the Bible.

Jesus and Missions.

Jesus was missionary. The passion of His ministry was to share His knowledge and His experience of God with others. When on one occasion his followers would keep Him in one place He insisted that He must go "into the other cities, for thereto had He been sent." Some of the sternest rebukes were to those who refused to live up to the high privileges of sharing the gospel with others.

Jesus commanded His followers to be missionary. When He said "Go ye into all the world and make disciples of all nations" it was not a wistful hope or a pious request; it was an unequivocal command. And that command came after Jesus had asserted that "all power (or authority) in heaven and in earth had been given unto Him." It was a risen, regnant Lord who commanded His disciples to go. That command was based on Jesus' knowledge that all the world needed His gospel, and His confidence that He was able to meet all the needs of all the world. And He promised His presence to those who in obedience to His command undertook to do His bidding.

The Apostles and Missions.

The apostles believed in missions. They did not know what it was all about at first. Indeed, they asked Jesus if He was going to restore the kingdom to Israel—if He was going to establish an earthly kingdom. But with characteristic patience He led them into the larger truth, and they caught in some measure at least the glow of His missionary fervor. When the Holy Spirit came at Pentecost, they shared the good news with others, beginning first at Jerusalem, and then widening the circle to include Judea, Samaria, and finally going into the whole world of their day. The early church was a missionary church. It is significant that it was a missionary church that expressed its contagion largely from person to person. The early missionary movement was a layman's movement, and it functioned largely in a personal way.

The Early Church and Missions.

The early Church was missionary. It is significant that what we call foreign missions originated in a church which was composed of Jews and Gentiles on an equal footing. It was in a church of this wider fellowship that the missionary enterprise developed in a larger way.

Several things are noteworthy in connection with this missionary movement, in addition to the fact already alluded to. In the first place the movement was born in prayer and under the direct inspiration of the Holy Spirit. Missions is God-begotten. Again this Antioch Church gave its best to the missionary cause. Paul and Barnabus, the outstanding leaders not only of the local church, but men of influential place in the larger fellowship. The Church might well have argued that it would be suicidal to give their best leaders to this "foolish business of trying to convert the heathen," but in obedience to the command of the Holy Spirit they set apart Paul and Barnabas. It was well they did. God had trained Paul for this particular work. Paul was the one man in the entire church, and in the Roman world who could do what needed to be done. The missionary cause demands and deserves the best, both from those who go and from those of us who remain at home. God have mercy on those of us who remain here, that we usually give to missions the left-overs and the second-bests. Another thing to be noted that then as now missions had obstacles to overcome and adversaries to subdue. Elymas, the sorcerer, was not the last embodiment of the spirit of selfishness and sin which seeks to thwart the efforts of Christ's followers to share the good news with others. Alas, too, missions have suffered much, not simply at the hands of its enemies, but still more at the hands of those who ought to be its friends.

The Present-Day World and Missions.

There was never a time when the world and the peoples of the world needed the gospel more than they need it now. Christ is the only ultimate hope of the world. He has the only ultimate answer to the world.

The conclusion summed up in the report of the men and women who wrote Rethinking Missions, states the matter plainly: "To ask whether missions in essence should any longer go on is like asking whether good-will should continue to express itself." Today, as always, the aim of Christian missions is, namely, "To seek with people of other lands a true knowledge and love of God, expressing in life and word what we have learned through Jesus Christ, and endeavoring to give effect to his spirit in the life of the world"—this aim must be the primary responsibility and task of the Church of Jesus Christ.

"ON THE SUBJECT OF PRAYER."

"Pray to thy father which is in secret; and thy father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly."—Matt. 6:6.

Prayer to God is what association and converse are in friendship. Therein lies its supreme necessity—in fact, it is inevitable, for, as set forth by Stanley Brown Serman, "where we are in touch with a personality whom we can neither see nor hear nor feel, and yet a personality which is linked, in some inscrutable way, with the deepest and most responsive fibres of our being, it is natural that we should make the fullest use of the only means of communication placed within our power.

"Prayer, in our approach to God, has to take the place of the handshake of friendship, the glance of understanding, the word of sympathy and comfort. Therefore prayer has to be very compelling, very comprehensive, 'the exercise of the whole man.'" If this be true it is no surprise that Jesus spoke so often of it. The greatest surprise is that men and women do not feel the need of it. We wonder where their faith is. If they did believe it seems that they would crave that communion with God which prayer, in some form or another, alone makes possible.

Prayer—O Lord, teach us to pray according to our faith, and if we haven't the faith, teach us to pray for it until we shall have a faith that lifts our cravings to Thee. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

TUESDAY.

"WHY WORRY."

"The Lord shall fight for you and ye shall hold your peace."—Ex. 14:14.

As the cowering band of Israel stood hearing the chariot wheels of the Egyptians behind them, their hearts sank within them, and when they turned to their leaders for guidance, they received a message which is our text today.

Moses was bidden to go forward on faith, and was divinely assured that his problems would be solved for him.

It is hard for us weak human beings to keep from worrying when things go wrong. He who trusts God most and lives closest to Him worries least. Such have learned that God can be trusted and that whatever happens will be for the best. So long as we are in the circle of God, that is true.

Prayer—Dear Father, to do thy will, we know, is as important to our well-being as praying. We pray thee to instruct us in thy will, make us conscious of thy spirit, show us thy work, and send us out to do it. May we never falter in our will to do this. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"THE RECIPROCITY OF PPAYER."

(Taken from "What Did Jesus Think?")

"Give and it shall be given to you."—Luke 6:38.

Jesus began prayer, as he began everything else, with God. As he said, "Hallowed be thy name, thy kingdom come," he was filled with the thought of the splendour of God, the holiness and might of God. And as we follow Him along the Galilean highways teaching and blessing the people He pointed out that this holiness and might was expressed in countless mercies, in the beauties of nature, in the kindnesses of life, in the forgiving spirit of God and man, in the tenderness and brotherliness of mankind to one another.

As Jesus began prayer with God, He also began prayer with giving. In this He was the expression of God, for in any relationship there must be two factors, the giving and the taking. We feeble creatures know that in our cravings for one another we must give as well as ask. Vital fellowship with God must offer as well as ask. It is by this kind of reciprocal fellowship that we rise to His heights.

Prayer—Dear Father of us all, we can never give enough to compensate for what we receive. We humbly confess our inadequacy and we rededicate ourselves to Thee in love and gratitude. —Amen.

THURSDAY.

"IRRESISTIBLE FAITH."

"Though he slay me yet will I trust him."—Job 13:15.

"There is no unbelief!
Whoever plants seed beneath the sod,
And waits to see it push away the clod,
He trusteth in God..

Whoever says when clouds are in the sky—
'Be patient heart, light breaketh bye-and-bye,'
Trusts the Most High.

Whoever sees, 'neath winter's field of snow,
The silent harvest of the future grow,
God's power must know.

Whoever lies down on his couch to sleep,
Content to lock each sense in slumber deep,
Knows God will keep.

There is no unbelief!
And day by day, and night, unconsciously
The heart lives by that faith the lips deny—
God knoweth the why."

—Lytton.

FRIDAY.

"HOW CAN I KNOW."

"God hath given to us eternal life."—I John 5:11.

Knowledge of anything comes by interest in that thing, and the lack of knowledge in anything is death in that thing.

By the same token we may know God. Knowledge of Him is in proportion to the interest we take in Him. This is substantized by the Scriptures: "If any man shall do his will, he shall know the doctrine." "When ye have lifted up the Son of Man, then shall ye know that I am he." "Love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples." "This is eternal life that they may know Thee." "Know ye not of yourselves that Jesus Christ is in you."

If knowing Christ is faith in Him, is doing His will, is lifting Him up in my life, is loving folks, is confessing Him, is living right, then by actual reasoning I know God, and if knowing God is having eternal life, I know that I have eternal life, so long as I do not become reprobate. . . .

Surely our knowledge of Him and eternal life is as Paul said "seeing in a glass darkly," but we have the promise which he reminds us of, that one day "we shall know as we are known."

Prayer—Our Father, we seek to let Thee in our house and our lives this day. Come in and make Thy abode here, dwell with us and make Thy temple here. This we ask for Jesus sake.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

"TOPPLING TO A FALL."

"Wherefore Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall."—I Cor. 10:1-13.

Paul's "wherefore" looks back upon the long line of falls from grace in the history of chosen people: since the fathers fell—Moses and the rest of them—who were the Jews of Paul's time, even though they were Christians, that they should regard themselves as exempt from the same peril?

Yes, and who are we, since the same sad history has continued down to our day?—standing, and then tumbling down, and rising up only to fall once more? If the past has any lesson for us it is this, that we are liable to error, prone to sin.

So we need to keep on the watch. We must take zealous heed. We must be on our guard day and night. An enemy is attacking us, one that never sleeps, one that has no mercy, one of almost endless resource.

Prayer—But Thou art our Resource against him, infinite Saviour. Thou wilt hold us up, lest we fall. Thou will bring us into Thy presence with exceeding joy.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

SUNDAY.

"YOUR RESTING-PLACE."

"Arise ye, and depart; for this is not your resting-place."—Micah 2:6-11.

You shall be known by your resting-place. If you have chosen this world to abide in, to lay down and take your rest in, you are as one who goes to sleep in the trough of a wave or on the top of a mast. The place on which you rest is not itself at rest. It will disappear as the mist before the morning sun.

Micah knew where the permanent resting-place is. He had set his heart on what endures. His home was in the heavens. No storm could tear it down, for it was above all storms. He urged all his people to leave their temporary abode for this substantial resting-place.

Why do men so persistently regard spiritual things as fleeting and vague? Why do they not see that all the pillars of the universe rest upon them as their firm foundation?

Prayer—May our hearts rest upon reality, O God. May we withdraw our souls from all their unworthy resting-places, that they may rest in Thee alone.—Amen.

AMOS R. WELLS.

A PRAYER.

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, guide, we beseech Thee, the Nations of the world into the way of justice and truth, and establish among them that peace which is the fruit of righteousness that they may become the Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.—Amen.

Be patterns, be examples in all countries, places, islands, nations, wherever you come; that your carriage and life may preach among all sorts of people, and to them. Then you will come to walk cheerfully over the world, answering that of God in every one; whereby in them ye may be a blessing, and make the witness of God in them to bless you: then to the Lord God you shall be a sweet saviour, and a blessing.

THE MYSTERY OF LIFE.

J. Delman Kuykendall, D. D.

"And Jehovah God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul."—Gen. 2:7.

Life is a mystery that seems to become more incomprehensible the more we learn of it. The word of life formerly was applied to plants and animals, with the assumption that activity is a symbol of a more fully developed life. We now are learning that the whole universe is alive. The solid, apparently unchangeable rocks are composed of atoms, infinitely small, within which is the tumultous activity of electrons and protons. Cosmic rays shoot through vast spaces at incredible speed. The whole universe is vital with a life principle. Nothing ever dies. Some power seems responsible for the constant motion, the constant change that is life.

Here on this little pin point that we call earth there is something more specific and intimate than the cosmic life principle. Life that expresses itself in plants, in animals, in man, brings a constantly deepening mystery as we try to discover the relationship of this life with the larger life of the universe. The life of man, in particular—what is it? Why it is? Where is it pointed? What are its real needs, and what are the resources for supplying those needs?

According to the philosophy of the Navajo Indians man is but a part of the landscape, of no more importance than any other animal that the Great Spirit has placed there. He feels himself an actor in a drama that has been written for him and which he does not pretend to understand. The white man considers himself the ultimate achievement of the Creator, lord of all other creatures, and placed here to arrange the natural resources for his own needs or according to his own designs. The Indian accepts pain and death as part of living. The white man seeks to correct the inadequacies of life.

In a way, both the Indian and the white man are right. Man may never create life or discover its real origin, but it is becoming clear that it is universal, and every specific expression of it is but part of the life principle. Man, therefore, is as the Indian believes, an actor in a drama that has been written for him and that he may never understand. On the other hand, the white man, we must believe, is right. While an integral part of the universal life, man is the supreme accomplishment of that life, so far as we can know. He was put on earth for a purpose, and included in that purpose is the obligation to arrange the landscape, to make use of the raw materials of living in such a way as to insure himself a richer, pleasanter, more powerful existence, and to use his understanding, so far as he can, toward a solution of life's mystery. That mystery intrudes at three points in the span of man's life.

It has to do, first, with origins. The mechanistic explanation of life is understandable up to a certain point. Yet, if we admit all the postulates as to the mechanical organization of everything that bears any of the aspects of reality, including even thought, there remains a hiatus between our comprehension and our apprehension of the life of man. We seem to apprehend something that we cannot comprehend within any of the recognized laws of mechanics. The life of man goes out beyond any other manifestation of life.

Perhaps no better explanation can be found than the tradition recorded in Genesis, that God made man out of the ordinary physical elements and breathed into him the breath of life, and man became a living soul. This lifts man to the supreme place in the creative plan, and justifies the assumption that man should use all the varied resources available to him to bring to himself a more abundant life.

The second mystery is the contemporary objective of life. It must mean something more than mere mechanical existence. Human consciousness makes life a thing for gladness or despair, and often it seems to be weighted with despair. Yet, men cling to life when it seems to be nothing more than a monotonous process of feeding the physical. If life means nothing more than this it is a mystery. If it means not only keeping the body in order, but expanding the reaches of the mind and extending the antennae of the soul, something of the mystery disappears. There is some reason for struggling to maintain the present physical existence. There is a real contemporary objective. Even pain and suffering have their place if they become the means by which expansion of the mind and soul may be achieved.

Even the rich and abundant life for a little span of years here, however, leaves still the third mystery. What is the ultimate project of life? It is difficult to believe that the breath of life that God breathed into man so that he became a living soul is the only thing in the universe that is destined to die. Everything else seems to live eternally. Life is the fundamental fact of the whole universe, and it seems reasonable to assume that the life of man must have an ultimate project beyond the span of our years here.

The ultimate project probably always will remain a mystery, and it is as well that it should. It is enough to believe that the God who breathed that breath of life into man and made him a soul will breathe that living soul back into a satisfactory relationship with the universal and eternal life. There seems ample reason for the faith that there is an opportunity for abundant living here on earth, and that there are spiritual resources amply provided by which man may equip himself for the ultimate project, for final entry into the eternal and infinite life. Life is a mystery, a congeries of mysteries, but in the shadows of that mystery there are assurances enough to make life vastly worth while, and to compensate for the struggles and despairs of our days, for man is a living soul.

Heavenly Father, we thank Thee through Jesus Christ, our Lord, for that eternal crown which thou hast promised to those who endeavor to win it. Help us to strive with unceasing perseverance after that crown. We know that our earthly life would have been in vain, if we should fail to attain to our heavenly vocation. But we live in a world full of temptations, and our vision is dimmed and distracted by the visible world and its alluring pleasures. We are sinners, and therefore ask Thy forgiveness through the redeeming blood Saviour. Help us to gain the power to lead a Christian life, clean, truthful and faithful, so that after the trials of this life we may enter the blessed life in Thy presence.—Amen.

Jesus is pre-eminent among men because He alone has discovered something that is completely satisfying. The immensities of eternity are contained in the conception that ruled the mind of Jesus.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

June 13, 1935.

Dear Supt. Johnston:

A friend of ours who recently visited in our home saw your letter in the May 16th copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN and gave me the enclosed $10.00 to send to you to buy Octagon soap or other products on which coupons count, giving you the soap and the coupons to go toward the electric refrigeration, now so badly needed in your institution. I am hoping that you reach your goal.

I am collecting them for our Methodist Orphanage in Columbia, and am mailing 750 today, making 2000 for our Missionary Auxiliary. I hope to get 3000 more soon.

This friend asks that his name not be mentioned—just a friend.

If the various churches once get interested in this great work, which I feel sure they will, you will be able to put it across. I really enjoy the work and the people have been so nice to me and glad to give their coupons.

Wishing you every possible success in your great work, I am.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Friends:

The above letter conveys to us a great deal of joy as well as the ten dollars with which to buy Octagon soap so we can get the coupons. Who will be the next one to send us ten dollars to buy soap? It takes a lot of soap to keep one hundred children clean and to wash their clothes.

We have a great many members of our church who could send us coupons. They are just little things—hundreds of them thrown away, but think what one hundred thousand of them would mean to us. It would mean refrigeration in each building. We have always had faith in our people and they have always stood by us and I feel sure you are getting together now, coupons to send us.

We have so much faith in you we bought one unit for the main building and made a nice payment on it with Octagon soap coupons. We feel sure that by the time the next payment is due we will have coupons to meet it.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

I called my pet lamb Belle and sister named hers Katy; and when they were grown to be big, fat sheep my father made mutton out of them; we felt so bad we cried."

"Now, what is mutton that it made you cry, something that scared you?"

"Why, child, does not your daddy ever buy sheep meat?"

"He buys leg o'lamb, I know he does 'cause I went to the barber shop with him when he bought it."

"Oh!" And grandma just roared. "Meat at a barber shop."

"Well, it was some place where he got meat." And Mildred began to cry. "There, there, child, that's all right; you did go to the barber shop with daddy, but the meat market is where you get meat. And mutton is sheep meat—so you see he killed our pets for meat; that's why we cried."

"Oh, for goodness sake—such a daddy; I'd a cried too!"

"Yes, I think you would. We had so much fun with our pets and loved them so dearly it was hard to give them up. But you know, dear, we had to have meat. But another hard thing was when mother killed our pet chicken and cooked it. I wouldn't eat any of it I felt so bad. Of course it wouldn't stay out of the house and she wouldn't stand that."

"Didnt' you shut the screens?"

"We didn't have any. Didn't know what screens were. That was pioneer days. Well, to go on with my story: Some Sundays when our parents were gone we would—"

"Wait, wait! Grandma, what kind of a car did your daddy drive? A Ford?"

"Car! There was no such animal! We never heard of such a thing. They hadn't ever been made yet. We had to ride in a big lumber wagon that jolted so hard it made your stomach ache."

"No, no! Not my stomach, I wasn't there, it was yours!"

"Yes, very true, but I meant: So to speak."

But, grandma! How could it jolt on the pavement?"

"Oh, you bother me so much! We didn't have any pavement."

"Well, I guess you didn't have anything, at least what you ought to have."

"I'll tell you, when it rained it was mud, mud, and some hills were clay and almost—yes they were—as sticky as dough; and sometimes we stuck on the clay hills and had to have four horses to pull us out."

"Hurrah! I wish I had been there!"

"You'd a-wished you weren't if you had been. But, as I was saying, we roamed the woods all day and had loads of fun; we found May apples, wild plums, grapes, crabapples, cherries, all kinds of berries, and made grape-vine swings and hunted birds' nests and took their pretty little eggs—some blue, green, white, and all speckled—so pretty we took them home and strung them on strings for ornaments."

"Why, grandma, I'm shocked! Didn't you belong to the Audubon society, not to kill birds or take their nests or eggs?"

"You ought to be thankful, Mildred. We had not been trained as you have, we didn't know any better. You are living in a wonderful day. We had no societies for good as you have. We had no telephones, no radio, no electric lights, no sewing machines, and oh, so many, many things too numerous to mention. But, Mildred, we were happy and enjoyed life as much as you do I reckon—but look here, it's time for a little girl to go to bed so she can go to Sunday school, shoes or no shoes."

"But, grandma, aren't you sorry you took the little bird's eggs?"

"Yes, dear, I'm sorry—sorry for so many things done in ignorance. Now off to bed."

And, off she went. As she reached the door of her room, she looked back and called:

"Grandma! I'm going to be a pioneer some day."—Anna V. Bertch in Religious Telescope.

NOW it came to pass in the days when the judges ruled, that there was a famine in the land. And a certain man of Beth'-le-hem-

The Foundation and the other Foundations that are affiliated with Vanderbilt University School of Religion comprise the only Interdenominational Theological School in the South. Through this affiliation the students enjoy the rights and privileges of Vanderbilt University.

DEGREES.

Candidates for degrees are required to have completed their college courses.

The degree of Bachelor of Divinity is offered to qualified students who complete the required courses.

Vanderbilt University also offers the degrees of Master of Arts and Doctor of Philosophy, in accordance with the regulations established in its several departments.

MORE THAN A SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY.

Because of our affiliation with Vanderbilt, our relations with other nearby colleges where our students can take courses without tuition, and the cooperation of the American Red Cross and other social agencies in the city, we prepare students for many types of Christian service.

OBITUARIES

BRADSHAW.

J. Eddie Bradshaw was born June 13, 1877 and died May 10, 1935. Aged 57 years, 10 months and 27 days.

On Dec. 28, 1898, he married Miss Essie Lea Johnson, and to this union was born 13 children.

He is survived by his widow, four sons, four daughters, nine grandchildren, one brother, three sisters and his step-father.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer, his Pastor, from Antioch Church of which he had been a member since young manhood, assisted by three other pastors, on Sunday, May 12th, in the presence of a great gathering.

May God comfort those who mourn.

C. E. GERRINGER.

MILES.

Mrs. Sallie Miles was born January 15, 1870 and died June 3, 1935. She was the mother of six children. She leaves to mourn her departure her husband, son, four daughters, fifteen grandchildreu, her mother who is now 84 years of age, four brothers and oue sister.

She joiued the church at New Hope when 13 years old and remained steadfast in the faith until her death. Rev. J. D. Elder received her into the church and baptized her.

She was a fine Christian woman, one who endured much hardship and sacrifice in her life. She bore her burdens and affliction with fortitude and patience. Her life was one complete sacrifice for the comfort of others. She was so quiet and kind; so noble and true, the home and friends will miss her, but bye and bye you can meet her.

Mother, thou wast mild and lovely,
Gentle as the summer breeze,
Pleasant as the air of evening,
As it floats among the trees.
Dearest mother, thou hast left us,
Here thy loss we deeply feel,
But 'tis God Who has bereft us
He can all our sorrows heal.

The funeral was conducted by Revs. C. W. Carter and G. L. Shadix at New Hope church on June 5th.

After many years of faithful waiting her form sweetly rests near the place where she gave her life to Christ.

May the Lord comfort the bereaved.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Christian Endeavor To Meet.—

The Thirty-fifth International Christian Endeavor Convention will meet in the City of Philadelphia next week. The opening session will be on the evening of Tuesday, July 2nd, and the convention will continue through the following Sunday. It is expected that not less than 20,000 will be in attendance, representing practically every civilized country. The key-note address will be delivered on the opening night by the president, Dr. Daniel A. Poling, and there are numerous other speakers of national and international note on the week's program.

Church Membership Gains in 1934.—

There has been a steady rise in church membership in the United States since 1926. Rev. Geo. L. Kieffer, statistician of the National Lutheran Council, writing in the July issue of The Christian Herald, gives figures that indicate a very definite trend toward the church. These figures show that the percentage of the total population reporting themselves as allied with the church had risen from 46.6 per cent in 1926, to 49.07 per cent in 1934. At the later date there were 207 religious bodies in the United States, with a total adult membership of 62,035,688. Of this number 60,630,990 were members of one of the fifty larger bodies, while the other 157 organizations had a combined membership of only 1,404,698. During the past year the gains in the fifty larger bodies total 1,248,165, while the other bodies reported a loss of 25,101, giving a net gain in church membership for 1934 of 1,223,064.

States Turn to Sales Taxes.—

In April, 1932, only Mississippi, North Carolina and West Virginia had retail or general sales taxes. At this time there are twenty-four states, or just one-half, which are utilizing sales taxes as a means of raising revenue. These taxes are divided into four general groups, which are given below, with the names of the states which have enacted them. General sales tax: Arizona, North Carolina, Washington. Gross Receipts taxes: Mississippi and New Mexico. Gross Income taxes: Indiana, South Dakota and West Virginia. Retail Sales taxes. Arkansas, California, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Kentucky, Maryland, Michigan, Missouri, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Utah, Washington, West Virginia and Wyoming. After July 1st, New Jersey and South Dakota will be included in this group as well. It will be noted that West Virginia and South Dakota are included in two of these groups. Most of these taxes have been adopted as temporary or emergency measures. Many states are making a determined effort to balance their budgets by these temporary measures and by cutting down so far as possible on their budgets in an effort to finally reduce the tax burden on their citizens. On the other hand the Federal deficit continues to mount, without heed to future consequences.

Ministers and the Union Label.—

No chance is being missed, however remote it may be, to bring this country under the domination of so-called Labor Unions. This time it is through the church. We are told that "a campaign is being undertaken by the 'Ministers' Union of America' to get churches to support the Union Label. An appeal is being sent to over 1,300 ministers in Greater New York, urging, that as a first step in this direction, they have their own printing done in union shops and demand that the union label be put on all such printing." It is stated that the campaign is to be extended elsewhere as rapidly as possible. Information is not given as to the composition of the "Ministers' Union of America." Whatever it may be, it is likely that its action, should it spread further than the city of its origin, will receive scant support from thinking ministers of any denomination. The church is certainly concerned with the physical welfare of all mankind, but its place is not in playing politics of the kind which the above calls for.

How Will Relief Money Be Spent?—

Up to the present time very little of the $4-billion relief fund has been allocated, but if we are to believe reports from Washington, then "after July 1st the money will begin to pour out." Temporarily, at least, Harry L. Hopkins, "who fostered the Civil Works (leaf-raking) program last year," has ousted Secretary Ickes, the PWA administrator, having been announced as the big spender by Mr. Roosevelt. Mr. Ickes, however, has indicated that he does not intend to remain ousted. The fight is on, and the question arises as to how the money will be spent. We quote: "In its essence, this fight over the manner of spending lies between the Hopkins theory of shoveling the billions out for any kind of work, and the Ickes plan of allocating the construction funds so as to stimulate private industry and thus take care of many of the unemployed with private payrolls. In the Hopkins plan the government must undertake to take care of all the 3,500,000 employables who are estimated to be idle. This will be done by made work, with a minimum of materials bought, and intended only to keep idle hands busy. Ickes would undertake major highways, bridges and other types of work which not only employ direct labor, but would put many others to work indirectly within factories making the materials. Under this latter scheme, the government would gradually withdraw, while under the leaf-raking program the unemployed would still be unemployed after the billions are gone." On the other hand this same writer reminds us that, "Probably not even Mr. Hopkins, and certainly not Jim Farley, would deny that the money is more useful politically when handed out direct to voters."

President Insists on "Share Wealth" Tax.—

The President has a "tax-the-rich" program of his very own, and he is insisting upon its immediate enactment. At a conference between the President and several of his key-men in Congress the first of the week, it was decided to attach this program to the now pending $500,000,000 nuisance tax measure, which was noted on this page last week. In regard to the program itself, there is a certain indefiniteness. Paul Mallon, Washington columnist, says that Mr. Roosevelt wisely neglected to mention any rates in his wealth-sharing inheritance taxes, and that this makes it difficult to form an idea of what is to be expected from them. The program proposes (1) to enact additional "inheritance, succession and legacy" taxes; (2) imposition of higher income rates on income above $1,000,000; and (3) graduated taxes on earnings of corporations, substituting for the present 13¾ per cent tax, one varying from 10¾ per cent for the smaller corporation to 16¾ per cent on the net incomes of larger corporations. Turning to Mr. Mallon's analysis, we find that in 1933, the latest figures available, there were only 46 persons in the United States with incomes of more than $1,000,000. The combined incomes of these persons was $81,000,000, upon which they actually paid a tax of $26,000,000. If the government had confiscated the entire amount, it would have amounted to only about 45 cents additional per capita for the country. The estate taxes paid to the Federal Government during the same year amounted to $28,000,000 on estates valued at ten times that sum. If the government had seized the entire sum, it would have received only a quarter-billion more than it did, and would have eliminated a source of future revenue. In regard to the change in corporation taxes, "If you take a million-dollar corporation income as the dividing line between big and little business and apply Mr. Roosevelt's formula, you will get $37,000,000 more revenue each year above the line and $27,000,000 less below it. Certainly the entire confiscation would not meet the approval either of Father Coughlin or Huey Long, not to say of Mr. Roosevelt, and without confiscation the results of the suggested changes would be negligible. One must be forced to agree that "the President's idea is likely to capture more votes than money." One political economist has figured it out that "each single letter in each word of the tax message will bring 100 votes to Roosevelt," which is possibly the ultimate aim of the message.

NOTES-PERSONALS

News from the Churches.

Dr. and Mrs. M. J. W. White, missionaries on furlough from the Philippine Islands, are spending their summer, to the delight of their many friends and acquaintances, here at Elon College. Dr. White is doing considerable deputation work, showing interesting slides and giving much information about the work among the Filipinos. He is considering an offer from the Home Boards to take up medical work in connection with the Rider Hospital in Porto Rico at the close of this furlough period. He is a skilled surgeon and physician and did a splendid piece of constructive work among the Filipinos, one of the hospitals over which he presided now being self-supporting and in charge of natives.

We congratulate Rev. Jesse H. Dollar, pastor, United Church, LaGrange, Ga., in issuing an attractive and readable paper for the people of his congregation and their friends. The United Voice is now in its fourth volume and is filled with valuable information for his people. In the June number, under the caption, "Pastoral Letter," Brother Dollar says to his people: "Dear Friend: Your pastor, like a shepherd, is interested in every individual in the church and community, their success in material and spiritual things is of vital interest to him. It is the desire of his heart to call in the homes of each one frequently, but time very often does not permit. This church magazine gives an opportunity for him to speak a message of love, good cheer and encouragement. Not only is there a common interest between the pastor and his people, but there is a bond of love and affection that binds the church together into a common union. As a result they share each other's joys and sorrows; when one member suffers, all other members suffer; when one rejoices, all rejoice. It is a source of great joy to see this spirit manifest among our group of people. Paul in his letter to the Thessalonians thanks God for their faith in, and their love toward, each other. How do we account for this common interest? Paul in writing to the Corinthians: 'For by one spirit we were all baptized into one body.' Each life is under the control or influence of one spirit. Just to the extent that we yield our hearts to this influence do we have that fellowship with each other and that interest in each other's welfare. If that be our experience, envy, jealousy and like characteristics have no place in our lives. That spirit satisfies a longing in our hearts. Even Jesus, in the garden when the burden of the sins of the whole world were resting on his shoulders, longed for the fellowship and sympathy of his disciples. One of the aims of your pastor is to increase this spirit of fellowship in the church and community."

JOINT AMERICAN BOARD AND MID-WEST REGIONAL MEETING.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Oct. 22-24, 1935.

One of the greater feasts of our fellowship will be held at Grand Rapids, Mich., Oct. 22-24th, when the regular Mid-West Regional Meeting will be combined with the annual meeting of the American Board. Recalling the great occasion of the joint meeting of the Mid-West and the Home Boards in Oak Park in 1932, the forthcoming occasion at Grand Rapids may well be expected to attain highest levels of attendance, inspiration and fellowship. Outstanding missionaries such as Ray Phillips of South Africa, Frank Laubach of the Philippines, George Shepherd of China and Isabelle MacCausland of Japan, are expected, in addition to others who will serve in group meetings. Home Board interests will be represented by Dr. M. Russell Boynton, of Chicago, who will speak on "The New Home Missions" and, it is hoped, by Hon. John Collier, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C., who has been invited to speak on "The New Deal for the American Indian."

Wednesday afternoon will be wholly devoted to "Social Action," with a panel discussion by six prominent laymen and including a challenging summary by Prof. A. E. Holt of Chicago. Nationals from the foreign field will be present also. And the report of Dr. F. F. Goodsell, coming directly from his world tour, will be awaited with great expectancy. Among the special features will be the American Board seminars on the various countries under the direction of the Field Committees of the Missions to these countries.

There will also be interesting between-session activities, dealing with methods for leaders and including moving pictures from the mission fields. It is hoped that Dr. Ivan Lee Holt can speak the final evening on "Missions and the Church in the World," following his world tour as President of the Federal Council of Churches. On the day before these sessions open there will be meetings of the Mid-West women state presidents and of the Mid-West Regional Committee, and also a retreat of the missionaries and secretaries of the American Board. And there will be simultaneous pre-session seminars Tuesday morning for men and women separately when inspirational leadership will be given by such leaders as Mr. Donald Adams, Mr. Harold Belcher, Miss Ruth Seabury and others. Rev. T. K. Vogler of Duluth will serve as chaplain. There will be fellowship dinners for adults and young people separately. The successfully tried plan of forum periods for questions after addresses will again be used. A special effort will be made to secure the attendance of laymen.

CHRIST ANSWERS A CRITIC.

By Rev. E. S. Fooks, D. D. in M. P.-Recorder.

There are a good many people in this world that are born critics. They always array themselves on the opposite side; they take great delight in setting intellectual traps for the thinker or the student. They hurl confusing thoughts at public speakers—not because they care a rap about the answer, but because they like to embarrass them publicly. When they go to a political convention or to a church—they bristle all over with question marks and come away without a kind word for anybody. They will argue just as long and just as earnestly over a comma as over a creed, over a molehill as over a mountain, over a flaw as over a fundamental.

One of these smart Alecks undertook to floor Jesus Christ one day. A lot of people had been trying to entangle and confuse Him, and had got hurt by the operation. This ecclesiastical pettifogger was standing by, and after all the others had been silenced, he tipped them a knowing wink, as if to say, "Watch me discount this Galilean rabbi," never doubting but what he would win their applause as a sharp cross questioner, so this little manikin lawyer, hunting for cheap notoriety, brought out his great gun and bombarded Christ with this question: "What is the great commandment of the law?" If Christ had replied the first or the fourth, or the seventh, or any one of the ten—this little infinitesimal lawyer had a poser right on the end of his tongue, as an argument to complete his victory. But he had found his match at last, and Christ simply swung round where he could fire a whole broadside at once and said, "The first and the last, the greatest and the smallest, the inside and the outside, the meat and the kernel, commandment is love to God and love to man." All the law and the prophets hang on one word—L-O-V-E, and the little sharpshooting Scribe disappears in the picture.

Every now and then some little bantam hair-splitter rushes into print about the virgin birth, or the Bible as a miracle, or the bodily resurrection of the dead ad infinitum! Love is the whole law. It is not a question of sect, color or creed. We do not need to know the mind of God. "Secret things belong to God, but the revealed belong to us and to our children." What has love got to do with any of these things?

Love never discusses the difference between tweedle-dee and tweedle-dum. Love never harps on non-essentials. Love serves with Jacob fourteen years and counts it only a few days. Love denies itself of every comfort and indignantly repudiates the charge that sacrifices are hard. It has been the biggest asset in our great country during the long depression. When fortunes have fled, unemployment widespread, homes have been kept intact, families held together, high hope has not died on the altar of our hearts. Drummond wrote his immortal epic on "The Supreme Gift." Paul in his summation said: "Love never faileth," and every Bible student in the world knows that love is the greatest attribute of God, and the most powerful and compelling force practiced by mankind. In this day of numerous codes, let us adopt this one of Jesus of Nazareth—L-O-V-E—and win this old world over to our Christ!

BE A SOUL WINNER.

Cast your eyes upon the world
And see if you God's Word unfurled
To some lost benighted soul,
Think!

Jesus died on the cruel tree
To save sinners and make them free,
To them He says "Come unto Me."
Win a Soul!

The Holy Spirit bids you 'rise,
And open wide your dormant eyes
For "he that winneth souls is wise."
Win one!

If you salvation are now enpoying
And would have a crown of rejoicing
When you the praises of God are voicing,
Win a soul!

During eternity's endless day
When sin and sorrow pass away
If you have won a soul you'll say,
This is the crowning day!

—Ruth Hamill.

DRIFTWOOD.

"Seeking the door that opens to your heart,
I stand outside—repentant and alone . . .
Defiant winds have torn my robes apart,
The bread I long have carried turned to stone.
So many roads . . . so many paths that wind—
The darkness came . . . I almost lost the way.
And now beside your bolted door I find
A silence that is sinister and gray.

"The years were piled like jetsam on a beach—
All purified by retribution's tears . . .
Lying upon the shore within my reach,
And I have gathered them . . . the empty years
Beside your ample hearts when day is done—
Oh, let us burn them slowly . . . one by one."

THE PRIVILIGES OF A MINISTER.

By Clarence A. Vincent, D. D.

Article III—Time.

A minister's entire time is devoted to the welfare of others. Even in the "serving of tables" he does it with a conviction that it strengthens the church in its spiritual and social ministries. Much which he is compelled to do which others should do seems like a waste of time and energy, still in the doing of it he trusts that it has a bearing on human welfare. A doctor's time is consumed in ministering to patients, a teacher's in making his teaching effective and a minister's in direct or indirect service to others. This makes the satisfactions of life rich and constant. Even the anxieties of such work do not wear one out. The two healthiest occupations in life are the Ministry and Teaching. There is something in an unselfish life that ministers to health and longevity. Love in the innermost self makes the physical part of man able to withstand many a dangerous germ, and drives away worry and gives peace of mind. In his study, in the planning of the work of the church and in the varied tasks of a pastorate the minister has in mind the welfare of the people.

If the minister has the ability to write for the press or to express in poetical forms the thoughts and feelings of his own mind and heart, he has the opportunities by conserving his time to quicken and comfort a wider congregation than that which listens to him every Sunday. Dr. Josiah Strong wrote the burning appeals of "Our Country" in the taxing work of his pastorate at Sandusky. Dr. Jefferson sent out in the strenuous pastorate in New York the books that gave courage and cheer to many. Dr. George Gordon in the responsibilities of Boston and Harvard shared with the world the deep soundings of truth which he had made. One never knows what a world wide healing an article or poem may cause. A poem in the Christian Endeavor World ten years ago still comes through the press from different countries as a "poem to be remembered," or through a personal letter speaking of courage received.

Longfellow appreciated this ministry of the printed page:

"I shot an arrow into the air,
It fell to earth, I knew not where;
For, so swiftly it flew, the sight
Could not follow it in its flight.

I breathed a song into the air,
It fell to earth, I knew not where;
For who has sight so keen and strong
That it can follow the flight of song.

Long, long afterward, in an oak,
I found the arrow still unbroke;
And the song, from beginning to end,
I found again in the heart of a friend."

THE RETURN OF PENTECOST.

We have just passed Whit Sunday—the anniversary of Pentecost, and noticed the singular absence of reference to the day in current religious papers and in the reports of pastors getting ready for Conference. The Department of Evangelism of the Federal Council of Churches in America issued a call for activity during the great fifty days between Easter and Pentecost but so far as we can see there was a very small observance of the season as compared with the universal celebration and use of the pre-Easter dates. The failure to make the most of the Pentecost anniversary deserves at least a few comments.

The importance of Pentecost in the early church is well known. The fact of Easter did not challenge the world until the disciples began to preach the resurrection in the power of the Holy Ghost. Then was the church born, then was the word of God multiplied, then began the ingatherings which have never ceased. Why do we think so little of the date that means so much in the history of the church? Certainly it is not because we know not its place in the Scriptures. Obviously it is not because the leadership of the church has not confessed that the supreme need of our church is the enduement of the Holy Ghost which inspired the church at its beginning. The acknowledgement is to be found in the statement of every discerning prophet and apostle of our time.

The calendar has much to do with the failure to emphasize this anniversary. Memorial Day is observed and Children's Day is held in most churches about this time. Pentecost is a changing date following Easter and frequently falls on the Sunday that seems to be occupied with other things. The summer holidays begin with Memorial Day in many places and the week-end exodus begins. Children's Day and commencements make demands that are imperative, though to the discerning they seem less important. It is hard for religion to overcome the calendar and triumph over a rising thermometer.

The failure to observe the date need not be a final loss for Pentecost was a day that did not end in itself but began things that continued in the early church. The peculiar phenomena of that day were not repeated. When the disciples were filled with the Holy Spirit at other times there were other accompaniments. That which followed Pentecost really builded the church and not the ecstasy of Pentecost itself.

The activities of the church which perpetuated Pentecost were listed in the notable sermon by Dr. Covert to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the U. S. A. in its recent session. The sermon has had wide quotation. Following Pentecost there were singing, sharing, healing, praying and preaching, all bearing fruit in the saving of men and the building of the church. These things made the early church what is was. They are the ordinary activities of the present day church. The trouble is that they are so very ordinary in our days. Only the filling of the Holy Ghost can make them extraordinary now as it did then. We need the plodding, pushing of the program of the church but we need something to raise it above the hard plugging of common-place toil. It will be only that unless we are aflame with the holy fire.

The anniversary of the Pentecost has come and gone scarcely noticed by so many of us. We are engaged in the work of the church which will be growing harder and less fruitful as the summer days come. It is possible to analyze the labors of the Apostolic church and see many parallels in our own technique. The principles and practices are very much the same. The thing we need is the power that was in that early church. It would be a good thing for all of us to return to the upper room and to tarry until we receive power from on high, for without the Pentecost unction we will be lacking in the joy and fruitfulness which will enable us to meet victoriously the task and the conflict that we face in the days that are ahead.

Come, Holy Spirit, heavenly Dove,
With all thy quickening powers,
Kindle a flame of sacred love
In these cold hearts of ours.

In vain we tune our formal songs,
In vain we strive to rise;
Hosannas languish on our tongues,
And our devotion dies.

What then remains? Courage, and patience, and simplicity, and kindness, and, last of all, ideas remain; and these are the things to lay hold of and to live with. —A. C. Benson.

In the secret place of my heart there is a little gate which, if I open and enter, I am in the presence of God. Anywhere, at any time, alone or in a crowded street, in the turning of a thought, I am where God is, rejoicing. When I open the gate of prayer, all life has meaning and music; I know without asking; my hunger is fed and fevered thirst is quenched. The fret and hurry of life are lost in a great quiet; time has melted into eternity. My sorrows flee away like shadows in the dawn, and I see the everlasting hills whence cometh my help. Big things seem small and small things become great; the near is far and the far near. My fellow men are with me in a new intimacy of fellowship, not one forgotten, and those whom I have lost are strangely close and dear when God is near.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

A STATE-WIDE MOVE FOR SOBRIETY.

At the Summer Institute at Duke University last week, we are advised that more than one hundred representatives of the various churches and women organizations of the State approved a plan for teaching temperance and the baleful effects of alcohol in the homes, schools and churches of North Carolina. The politicians and wet advocates have claimed that the churches had gone into politics when they advocated prohibition and declared over and over again that the church should not be in politics but should teach temperance and sobriety. Very good. Now let's see how many wets, and those who advocate saloons and all the rest, will join with the churches and the women organizations, and the rest of us, in trying to promote genuine temperance by teaching the same.

The plan worked out by the committee and adopted at the Institute at Duke University and unanimously approved by the group gathered there is as follows:

The North Carolina Christian Union for Temperance Purpose.

The purpose of this Christian Union for Temperance in North Carolina is to foster sobriety by teaching temperance in the home, the school and the church. The ministers and all other Christian leaders of each community are expected to take the lead in this effort to guide the people in the ways of temperance and sobriety.

Organization.

1. There shall be a central committee composed of representatives from the several religious and educational organizations of the state, whose chief work will be to encourage the ministers and all other Christian leaders of each county in the state to organize for carrying out the purpose of this union.

2. The Central Union shall have a president, a vice president, a secretary, and a treasurer. These officers, with five additional members, shall constitute the executive committee. We nominate for officers of the Central Union:

For President—M. T. Plyler, Greensboro and Durham.

Vice President—Dr. Trela Collins, Durham.

Secretary—Mrs. Josephine R. Davis, Guilford College.

Treasurer—to be appointed by executive committee.

3. The county unions shall be composed in the same way and organized after the same fashion as the Central Union. This makes for simplicity of organization and magnifies the functions of the county union in this effort for temperance and sobriety. We recommend that each county be asked to raise ten dollars or more and forward to the treasurer at Greensboro for the purpose of organizing the counties of the state, and carrying on the work of this organization.

Methods of Procedure.

Inevitably the pulpit and the school room will be of first importance in this educational effort to show forth the hurt of alcohol, but by no means all. The temperance pledge and the many organizations of the women in their churches and schools and club life can be made wonderfully effective. The methods of procedure will vary in the different sections of the state. These will appear as the work develops.

The executive committee of this union is instructed to find what is the present status of temperance education in the public schools of North Carolina and then inform the public, especially the county unions of this organization.

Surely the time has arrived when temperance should be taught, as drunkenness is on the increase and drunken drivers are the agents and instruments of death on our highways.

It is, therefore, hoped that county organizations will be formed through the State to foster temperance education and to encourage a teaching of temperance, a thing that no one can deny is needed in our day.

THE CONVENTION AT BETHEL.

It was not the editor's privilege to attend the S. S. & C. E. Convention of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference at Bethel, Caswell County, N. C., the past week, but reports are a most excellent two day session. Practically all the Sunday Schools and Societies of the Convention were represented and the Convention was largely attended. There were general regrets that Bro. W. B. Truitt, who has been the very efficient and capable president the past several years, declined further to serve in that capacity. Officers named for the coming year are:

Rev. W. T. Scott, of Winston-Salem was chosed president and W. T. Dunn, of Lynchburg, Va., was elected first vice president. Other officers for the ensuing year are C. E. Newman of Virgilina, Va., second vice president; Miss Evelyn Stewart, of Greensboro, recording secretary, and Miss Florence Smith of Greensboro, assistant recording secretary. Secretaries of departments are: Mrs. Robert Simpson of Summerfield, Children's; Miss Avis Dunn, of Ingram, Va., Young People's; S. D. Scott of Greensboro, Adult; W. B. Truitt of Greensboro, Administration; Rev. B. J. Earp of Greensboro, Christian Endeavor.

An address, "The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor as a Part of the Church," by Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, pastor of the Bethlehem Christian Church, featured the morning's program.

During the business session reports of the institutions and interests of the church, including missions Elon College, the Orphanage and the Board of Christian Education were submitted by Miss Jessie Sharpe, Prof. A. L. Hook, C. D. Johnston and Rev. F. C. Lester, all of whom are departmental secretaries.

FADS AND FAKIRS.

It would be to laugh at the fads, fakes and fakirs for which we Americans so readily fall but for the millions of money taken from the unthinking and often the very needy. The latest and one of the most ridiculous now, of course, was the chain letter fad that called for a dime or a dollar. The editor of the Greensboro Christian Advocate thinks of it in these words:

> People not a few thought all they had to do was to keep up the chain and everybody who put a dime into a letter would take out sixteen hundred dollars. Think of it. A dime was going to hatch out sixteen thousand dimes simply by writing letters. How such people escape the lunatic asylum is more than we can figure out.

No, Brother Advocate, it was not lunacy, but the gambling instinct that made the unthinking fall for this fake, an instinct more prevalent than we like to think about. It just takes some fake or fad like this to challenge the instinct and give it a chance to express itself.

By the way, the Western Union Telegraph Company is to be called upon in the courts to pay for its part in being used by those who yielded to the fad. A few very industrious ones, who fell for the fad were unwilling to use the mails and so gave their messages over the Western Union Telegraph lines. Since they did not get results and win the money they were expecting, they now figure out that they should have had some over $3,000,000 for the telegrams they sent and, accordingly, they have entered suit against the company, so the daily press tells us, to recover to the extent of more than $3,000,000. At that ratio, we wonder how many millions the fadists would like to have out of the United States Government who carried their chain letters that failed to bring replies.

Possibly the idea of trying to get something for nothing is as old as the human race, and there is much to be done yet to teach the race that when one gets something for nothing another gets nothing for something.

A CHURCH ON THE WAY TO DISSOLUTION.

Do our ministers know that a local church, "conscious only of its own desperate needs," is on its way to dissolution? The editor of the Christian-Evangelist (Disciples of Christ) says that ministers, "our ministers," know that fact. And, declares the Evangelist, "our church members know that. It is implicit in the very basis of Christianity." We sometimes wonder if some of our ministers and church members really know this fact, and yet it is a fact. Notice it when you will; when a church feels its own needs to be the most desperate and on that account becomes "ingrown," it will soon be seeking another pastor or will begin to talk about getting help from the outside and gradually discover that it is, as the Evangelist declares, on the way to dissolution. We quote from the editorial in the Evangelist:

> We know of the difficulties with which local churches are faced in their efforts to maintain even themselves. We know of the building debts, of the ministers receiving too little remuneration even to maintain themselves at a decent subsistence standard of living. We know of church members—loyal, interested, active in their support in former years—who themselves have lost business or jobs or income. Every day letters come into our office telling of these things. Every day we meet ministers who tell stories of tragic want.
> But it is vital to a church to give support generously to the world-wide enterprises of its communion, if it wishes to save its own soul. A church ingrown and essentially selfish, conscious only of its own desperate needs, is a church on the way to dissolution. Our ministers know that. Our church members know that. It is implicit in the very basis of Christianity. Local church financial troubles aside—and we would be the last to minimize them—our congregations and our people must still give to their world missionary and educational enterprises as broadly and generously as humanly possible.

Many pastors learn too late, both for their own welfare and the welfare of the church, that Philip Brooks' advice to the pastor of a church in desperate need was not only logical but wise and the way to safety and progress. When the pastor of a rural church appealed to Bishop Brooks for advice as to what he should do to get his church out of debt and pay its pastor a living salary, it is reported that Brooks replied: "Go home and preach missions, foreign missions, to your church until that church becomes missionary in spirit and then it will pay its debts and its pastor." This advice is worth considering in the light of facts and failures.

THOSE PRECIOUS MOMENTS.

By Stanley Cummings in Advance.

The passage in Romans 12:16, Mind not high things, Dr. Moffatt translates, "Instead of being ambitious, associate with humble folk." We may associate the thought with humble experiences as well as humble folk.

A letter appeared recently in the correspondence column of one of the daily papers, over the signature of a New York man. The editor entitled it, "Those Precious Moments":

> If you look back over an old diary and read: "Lunch with Brown, 1:30," "W. L. Conference, 3:00," "Dinner and bridge with Smiths, 8:00," what picture do you get of that day or that year?
>
> Read entries such as these, taken from the diary of a person who understood the value of life, and you realize that each year has its great days and each day its significance:
> "Today I passed outside ——— station, an old woman selling violets. She had the face of a very old and very wise Madonna, and the fragrance of her wet violets hung before her like incense. I shall not forget."
>
> "This evening I read Francis Thompson's Hound of Heaven. If I had done nothing else all the year, this would have made it a great year."
> "In X—— street a child, small and grubby, looked up at me and smiled. Her eyes were as blue and as innocent as the speedwell blossom."
> A diary kept in this manner is a real possession. It embalms and preserves those precious moments, occurring every day, but so soon overwhelmed and forgotten in the press of daily life, that make one's life so very much worth living.

The fragrant incense of wet violets; Francis Thompson's Hound of Heaven, under the soft light of a shaded lamp, before the open fire; a little child's smiling eyes, blue as the speedwell blossom—those precious moments.

Our eyes are too often slanted in the wrong direction in our search for the things that make life worth living. It is so easy to measure the value of experience in terms of great and extraordinary occurrences. How vividly I recall my first trip to New York as a boy—the Richard Peck night-boat, which one boarded in New Haven in the evening and from which one emerged the following morning among the bewildering sights of the city; the old Madison Square, at that time little more than a glorified village green; the Hippodrome; and all the rest. And then there was that memorable evening, not so long ago, when I drove to a nearby town and heard for the first and only time in my life the great Polish pianist, Paderewski. The little Schubert number which came as his final encore was a never-to-be-forgotten experience.

Obviously, such incidents do enrich one's life. They furnish material upon which the memory can dwell fondly, through all the aftertime. They will be registered as red-letter days in the calendar of our lives. But such events as these are by their nature unusual and rare.

Not that they are to be treated disparagingly. We can thank God that we have had so many of them. All of us "have owed to them in hours of weariness sensations sweet," as Wordsworth says. But if these alone made life worth living, our life journey would have to be regarded as consisting of a few oases in an extended desert.

The writer of the above letter uses the term "great days," "a great year." But he makes it clear in his final paragraph that "every day" contains elements of possible greatness. Every day brings its precious moments, if only we have the insight to recognize them. Perhaps we need not go so far as to keep a diary, to embalm and preserve them, but we can at least learn to extract from commonplace and ordinary experiences a quality that makes the heart tingle with the zest of joyous living. Instead of measuring the calendar of our lives by sensational events, "we should count time by heart throbs," and these may be inspired by apparently unimportant and trifling happenings.

Why should we be so unconscious of the glories of the commonplace? No doubt it is to be regarded as a species of blindness. We have developed a sensitivity to certain aspects of our environment, but they are not always the most significant aspects.

> The spring blew trumpets of color;
> Her green sang in my brain—
> I heard a blind man groping
> "Tap-tap" with his cane;
> I pitied him in his blindness;
> But can I boast, "I see"?
> Perhaps there walks a spirit
> Close by, who pities me—
> A spirit who hears me tapping
> The five-sensed cane of mind
> Amid such unguessed glories—
> That I am worse than blind.

The stern teacher, misfortune, will sometimes secure the desired results, when all else fails. There are invalids, confined to their beds or at most to their rooms, who never have a chance to visit noted objects or partake in great community events, who nevertheless see more, hear more, sense more than you or I can ever hope to see or hear or sense, cursed as we are with an indifference to the higher values of life. That great public misfortune—or shall we call it a public fortune?—which has now lengthened out into nearly six years, has taught countless thousands to find undreamed-of possibilities in things which had formerly been scoffed at as altogether too tame and uninteresting to men and women bent upon discovering bigger and better thrills. If this be the price which must be paid for the discovery of life's real values, who shall say that the price is too great?

Without keeping an extended diary, why not select a single day, and faithfully record its precious moments? Let the record begin with the sensation in the early morning, when upon arising you look out of doors upon a scene of extraordinary peace and beauty, at this season when "heaven tries the earth if it be in tune, and over it softly her warm ear lays." Then set down that feeling at breakfast time, when you open a letter in your morning mail and your eye falls upon a beloved signature at the bottom of the page, the effect of which is to create a gracious communication of spirits across the miles.

Do not fail to record that apparently trivial incident in the later morning, when you walked down the street, and a friend, passing in his car, lifted his hand a moment from the wheel, with such a cheerful greeting and with a smile of such obvious sincerity that all the rest of the way down the street you walked with a lighter step and with a feeling of being more completely en rapport with the world. Note down the thrill which came to you at evening time from a certain paragraph or perhaps a single line of felicitously chosen words on the page that you were reading, or that indescribable feeling that came as you heard those majestic chords in the opening bars of the first movement of the first symphony of Brahms—chords that roll on like peals of thunder, melting into one another and soaring heavenward until they cause your body to writhe with ecstatic bliss.

Last of all, set down in words—if you can—that feeling when you passed upstairs at bedtime and into the children's room, when you were conscious of a peculiar tightening of the throat as you watched how the light from the hall streamed in across the peaceful features of a sleeping child, his little head thrown across his arm.

It is things like these that make life a thing of beauty and a joy forever. Why must we have "the restless will that hurries to and fro, seeking for some great thing to do or secret thing to know"? Every day has its precious moments. Every common day can be for us as a string of pearls—the fragrant incense of wet violets; Francis Thompson's Hound of Heaven, under the soft light of a shaded lamp, before the open fire; a little child's smiling eyes, blue as the speedwell blossom.

The spiritual kingdom can be realized only as there is harmony of effort on the part of every member and mutual support to a common end. Opposition and conflict is frustration. "All the law is fulfilled in love." Science is tearing away shred by shred the covering that has hidden from us a material creation bound into one by unvarying obedience to universal law. Our reason, working with precision, discovers to us a parallel but superior spiritual realm wherein the achieving of the final "good" depends on similar obedience to similarly universal law. "One law, one God, one element, and one far-off, divine event toward which the whole creation moves" is soundly and profoundly rational. It paraphrases accurately Christ's key teaching.—The Expositor.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Lightning bugs shine in the darkness. The sun obscures their light by day; the moon and stars dim their flickering light. The darker the night the brighter the light of the lightning bug. It is a mystery why nature did not provide the bug with a head-light. But such is not the plan of nature. The light may be for protection rather than a guide for the bug. It may serve to give other bugs warning of the presence of the bug, and thereby prevent other bugs from collision in the air.

The lightning bug is more interesting in the dark than in the sun. Its brightest light would not be discernible in the light of the sun. The only hope of attracting attention depends upon outer darkness. During the bright day this poor little bug hides under the rubbish or in the grass quietly waiting for the darkness, to fly out over the fields and through the gardens with their little flashes of light. It seeks the darkness of the night for going forth on its little round of activity.

It may be that man may learn some lessons from the little lightning bug. Jesus said : "Men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil." And again the Master said: "I must work the works of Him that sent me while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work." For man the day has been appointed as a time for work; the night a time for rest. People who are seeking to live a normal life devote themselves with zeal and high purpose to useful work while it is day. They try to live and work in the light of the day. They do not undertake to live, physically, mentally or spiritually, by their own little light. Unlike the lightning bug they go forth in the light of the day to make life worth living for themselves and others. They try to let their light shine; but it is a light borrowed from the Sun of Righteousness, and they are safe for others to follow. They are not dangerous to themselves or others.

But there are many people on the earth who are learning their lessons and planning their lives somewhat like the lightning bug. They prefer the darkness. In the presence of a shining light they are obscured. They work under cover. The night—and the darkness—has a charm for them. In a lightning bug convention they shine with others of their kind. They defy the sun and dislike the moon and the stars. Landscapes and gardens, fields and forest have no charm for them except as a place for secret conclave and private consultation. The later the hour and the darker the night, the better for them. They love darkness; they hate the light.

When the twilight falls and the shadows come; when the sun goes down and the stars shine forth; then in the quiet of home, in the evening hours, there is opportunity for study, reading, meditation, family fellowship and personal development. But how often books and music and family fellowship are cast aside and the family is scattered here and there until the midnight hour, or the early morning hours. And alas! the return to home and family brings no new hopes, and higher ideals, and richer culture and finer character. For, too often the sleep is disturbed by dreams wrought out of hideous thoughts and heart-breaking experiences.

"Ye are the light of the world.—Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 5:14-16.) Men and women should shine with the light of God in their eyes. But shine that men may see their good works. Shining has little value, in human life, unless it is a revelation of good works. Shine where you are and do good works, that men may glorify God in your reflected light.

INGRAM CHURCH BUILDS EDUCATIONAL PLANT.

Ingram Christian Church, Ingram Virginia, was organized November 3, 1891, by Reverend P. T. Clapp. There were eight charter members, the majority of whom are still living and active in the church. Revs. P. T. Clapp, J. W. Patton, W. T. Walters, J. W. Holt, S. B. Clapp, W. S. Long, R. F. Brown, C. E. Newman, John G. Truitt, J. E. McCauley, W. B. Terrell, T. Fred Wright, and M. T. Sorrell have all served as pastors of Ingram church.

Rev. H. E. Crutchfield is the present pastor. Brother Crutchfield has served most acceptable since 1932. The church has grown in membership and prestige until it is now one of the most efficient and influential churches in the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference. It has within its membership some of the most substantial members of the community and of our church. The progressive leadership of the church, including the pastor, Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, have manifested unusual insight into the needs of the community and have provided to meet these needs most acceptably in the building of a new educational plant and the complete remodeling of the church building.

The new addition consists of six individual class rooms, an assembly room, modern heating equipment and a kitchen where banquets may be prepared for service in the assembly room. Ingram Church, together with the new addition, constitutes a real community center and affords facilities for the most modern educational program in connection with a church and Sunday School organization.

The heating plant is modern in the strictest sense. Ingram Church will have what no other church that I know of now has. It will have air conditioned heat. It will be warm in winter and cool in summer. Fans will not be necessary. I congratulate the pastor and congregation on providing this comfort. I fancy that on these extremely warm days that there will be many attracted to Ingram Church because of its comfort. Coming for bodily comfort, I am sure they will find spiritual benefit and religious consolation.

Our forefathers had an idea that true religion bust be evidenced by discomfort, unpleasantness, and even torture. The test of one's piety was to be able to wear a hair shirt next to the body without complaining, or even stilt one's self on a stone pillar for weeks and months in a standing posture, exposed to the weather, with the least possible nourishment. Thank God this conception of religion has been dissipated. Religion is designed to relieve individuals of discomfort and torture, and to add to their pleasure and happiness. Of course if to endure persecution is necessary to demonstrate faith, then no one who is a Christian would evade such persecution, but would trust in God for strength to endure.

I congratulate Ingram Church, its pastor and its congregation, on seeking to make their place of worship inviting and comfortable.

The corner stone for the new building was laid Saturday afternoon, June 15th, at 3 o'clock, by Vernon Masonic Lodge No. 181, of Ingram, Virginia, Mr. Baxter Wilson, Worshipful Master. The ceremony was impressive. The address was delivered by the reverend Dr. Riley, pastor of the First Baptist Church of South Boston, Va. There was a large attendance of members and friends of the church on this occasion.

In addition to the class and assembly rooms, the new addition provides for choir loft and pastor's study. Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Carlton will install a memorial window commemorating the faith, the hope, and consecration of their parents. When this work is completed Ingram congregation will have a most complete and comfortable place, both for Christian education and divine worship.

AN EDITORIAL FACT.

Dr. W. W. T. Duncan, pastor of the Lakewood Methodist Church, Ohio, wields a trenchant pen and in his little weekly church paper often comments on what is going on in the world. Recently he printed a paragraph which deserves wider circulation. He writes under the above heading:

> "It is astonishing that intelligent writers on the subject of automobile accidents persist in disregarding liquor as a vital factor in the problem. President Roosevelt did this when he addressed a letter to all the Governors of the nation, stating his very grave concern over the situation yet making no mention of liquor.
> "Now a writer in Harper's does the same thing. The data he presents are most informing and evidences careful study. He shows that the accidents are not due to defective mechanism as was the case formerly. It is the driver at the wheel. His equipment is better. He himself seems to be worse.
> "Does it not occur to anyone that alcohol ('good,' legally permitted alcohol) shortens the vision, makes the hand unsteady, depletes the brain action and yet at the same time intensifies the impression that one is even more competent than he was before? Superiority complex and inferiority competence are simultaneously produced in those who drink."

E. A. King.

"I worked for men," my Lord will say
When we meet at the end of the King's Highway.
"I walked with the beggar along the road,
I kissed the bondsman stung by the goad,
I bore my half of the porter's load.
And what did you?" my Lord will say,
"As you traveled along the King's Highway?"

"I showed men God," my Lord will say,
"As I travedel along the King's Highway.
I eased the sister's troubled mind;
I helped the blighted to be resigned;
I showed the sky to the souls grown blind.
And what did you?" my Lord will say,
When we meet at the end of the King's Highway.

Just as Thou wilt is just what I would will;
Give me but this, the heart to be content,
And, if my wish is thwarted, to lie still,
Waiting till puzzle and till pain are spent,
And the sweet thing made plain which the Lord meant.

A Story for the Children

PEARLS.

Suppose that a great many people, looking at a beautiful string of pearls, admire them without thinking of the strange and wonderful transformation that has come about in their history on their journey from the bottom of the sea to be the adornment of some lovely woman in a luxurious mansion. The best pearls are found in a very large species of oyster shell, the shells being as large as an ordinary sized dinner-plate. They are found in the waters of nearly all tropical seas, but most of the pearls that are in the market come from the gulfs of Mexico and California and the waters around the islands of the Pacific, and along the northern coast of Ceylon and Australia.

Men used to dive for these pearl shells just as boys go in swimming, and of course could stay down only a little while; but diving-suits have been invented by the aid of which the diver is able to stay under water a long time. These diving-suits are made of waterproof material, the coat, vest, trousers, and stockings all being in one. The only inlets are the wide collar and the wristlets. The diver puts on a double set of heavy flannels to absorb the perspiration for it is a very warm business. Then he puts his feet in at the collar, and by the aid of his helper works his way into the dress. The rubber wristlets are made very small and he has to soap his hands to make them go through, as a boy does his instep sometimes to put on a tight boot. Then the boots are buckled on. They would not do very well for bicycle shoes, as they are leaden-soled and weigh thirty-two pounds. Then there is a corselet or shoulder-piece screwed tightly to the collar of the dress. Back and chest weights are suspended from the shoulders, weighing eighty or more pounds. There is a life-line and air-pipe attached and a helmet screwed on to the collar. Then the diver is ready to go down to the bottom of the sea. The depth at which they usually find these shells varies from sixty to one hundred and eight feet, though at the latter depth a man can only stay down ten minutes. Where the water is more shallow he is able to stay about two hours on the sea bottom.

Pearl-diving is very hard work, for the diver sometimes walks twenty miles on the bed of the sea in search of shells. Two hundred pairs of shells is counted a good day's work, though sometimes a diver has been known to gather one thousand shells in a single day. Not all the shells have pearls in them. Sometimes a diver will open a ton of shells without finding a single pearl, and then again, in one day's work, he may find pearls that are worth a fortune.

The most famous pearl discovered in recent years was on the coast of Australia, and is known as the Southern Cross. It consists of a cluster of nine pearls in the shape of a cross, and is almost as perfect as if made by a jeweler. This strange piece of natural jewelry was picked up at low water by a very poor man, who, when he opened the shell and saw the pearls in the shape of a crucifix, was greatly frightened and was very superstitious. He buried it for a while in the ground, and afterward dug it up and sold it for a very small sum. It has since been sold for over $50,000.

The pearls do not seem to grow naturally in these mother-of-pearl oyster shells, but owe their existence to some foreign substance, such as a little particle of sand or something of that kind, getting into the shell. This probably wounds and hurts the delicate body of the mollusk, and the offending substance becomes covered over with the same secretion with which the pearl oyster lines the interior of its home. Thus one of the most beautiful gems in the world is produced by a little creature struggling against the hardships and trials which beset its existence.

This ought to teach us the lesson that trial and temptation and hard experience may help us to develop beautiful pearls of patience and goodness in our own character, if instead of idly fretting at the things that annoy us we set to work to get whatever of good or beauty there is out of them.

When Jesus was on earth in one of His sermons He compared the kingdom of heaven to a merchant seeking goodly pearls: "Who, when he had found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had and bought it." Whatever earthly pearls we may succeed in obtaining, they will all seem as nothing to us at last compared to the precious pearl of our Saviour's forgiveness and love.

—Banks in Free Will Baptist.

In the darkest hour through which a human soul can pass, whatever else is doubtful, this at least is certain. If there be no God and no future state, yet even then, it is better to be generous than selfish, better to be chaste than licentious, better to be true than false, better to be brave than to be a coward. Blessed beyond all earthly blessedness is the man who, in the tempestuous darkness of the soul, has dared to hold fast to these venerable landmarks. Thrice blessed is he, who, when all is drear and cheerless within and without, when his teachers terrify him, and his friends shrink from him, has obstinately clung to moral good. Thrice blessed, because his night shall pass into clear, bright day.—F. W. Robertson.

PRAY ABOUT IT!

PHILLIPPIANS 4:6.

Many times I hear a saint
When to him I made complaint
Say—"you need not fear or faint—
Pray about it!

And that counsel, that refrain
Ever rings in hearts and brain.
Now—I, rather than complain—
Pray about it!

Nothing is too small to bring
Even to our Lord and King.
We may tell Him everything—
Pray about it!

So I pass this word to you.
If you listen, and are true,
He will guide you what to do,
Pray about it!

Are you lone and need a friend?
God can just the right one send—
One on whom you can depend.
Pray about it!

Is the testing time severe?
Are you full of doubt and fear?
Faint not, trust Him now and here.
Pray about it!

Supplicate at His behest;
With thanksgiving make request:
He will give to you the best!
Pray about it!

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., Secretary.

HOW A PASTOR HANDLED SUCCESSFULLY THE CENT-A-MEAL BOX.

The following should be of interest and quite suggestive to pastors who are interested in raising their Conference apportionments for Missions:

"My Dear Dr. Atkinson:

"The following facts might be interesting to you as to how we work the Cent-a-Meal Box in our church:

"For the sake of convenience, we divided the church membership into seven groups and appointed a captain over each group. The captains represented the various departments in the church and the school work. We even had one child as captain of one of the groups. We ordered the boxes on open account. Put one in each family of the church and Sunday School membership. These boxes were distributed within a day or two, asking that each family begin contributing at a given time. They were kept in the homes for eight weeks. Then we asked that at the last meal an extra dime be placed into the box to pay for the same. At the end of eight weeks we had a special service at which time each captain was asked to have the members of his family with their box present at the special service. More than 75 per cent of the families of the church responded to that request. We then visited the homes where the boxes had not been returned and asked for them. Only two returned the boxes with nothing in them, four returned them with less than a dollar but the majority complied with the request of putting in a penny a meal in the box.

"We especially stressed the importance of a special prayer service with the deposit of a penny at each meal. The pastor reminded the people from the pulpit of the expectation and urged them to live up to the proposed plan of regular contributions and prayer for the cause. The result of this was that we got more from the membership as a whole than had ever been given to Missions.

"We used the Cent-a-Meal Boxes for the college period too, but did not have as good success as we did for missions. Probably sickness and the time at which the campaigning was on had something to do with this."

We can furnish these Cent-a-Meal boxes for 10c each and they are a real ornament for any dining table, as well as a constant invitation for the family to express real gratitude for their daily food.

We note that over 50,000 of these boxes have, up to this time, been taken by the people of our united fellowship. All of our pastors using them, who have reported to us, find the boxes very helpful.

J. O. Atkinson,
Mission Secretary.

THE GOSPEL ON NEW WHEELS.

On June 11th a unique broadcast of song, prayer, and address went out over station WMBI, Chicago. The entire Moody Bible Institute personnel—faculty, students, business staff and the workers, with many visiting friends—gathered in the court before the historic Original Building for the dedication of four new auto busses, which are to carry students to every section of the city for open-air meetings during the summer and autumn months.

In his brief address President Will H. Houghton made reference to numerous events and meetings enacted in the open air indicated in the Bible, and stressed the needs of the troubled world in this critical hour. He said, "We are dedicating these busses today to a militant Christianity. Communism and atheism are on the street corner By the grace of God we are going to the corners with the gospel message."

Since the days of its founder, D. L. Moody, the Institute has made the wide Chicago area the clinic for practice following the soul-winning lessons of the classroom. Horse-drawn vehicles were superseded by motor busses, the last four serving for nine years. The bodies of these, reconstructed and decorated, are now mounted on new and powerful Ford V-8 chassis, and painted with Institute colors, maroon trimmed with white.

Nearly half the cost of the present equipment came as special gifts from those who sense the value of the open-air work. The coming summer will mean, under God's blessing, the hearing of the gospel by thousands who never enter church doors, the scattering of much gospel literature, and the conversion of scores of the unsaved.

GIPSY SMITH.

Gipsy Smith preached and sang from a Gipsy caravan in Epping Forest, May 11th, under an ancient hornbeam on the very spot where he was born 75 years ago. Ten thousand people gathered to hear him and to applaud the tributes of his friends. He was converted in his boyhood, when he could not read or write. But his mind awoke with his heart and he soon mastered the Bible and the dictionary, and has since spoken to millions of hearers the world over, and won thousands to Christ. Campbell Morgan couples his name with Dwight Moody's as "one of the world's greatest evangelists." President Younger of the Methodist Church, sent the Gipsy a letter of greeting, in which he said:

> "You have been through all the years a faithful servant of our Lord Jesus Christ. Gifted by nature and equipped by grace, you have placed at the disposal of the world-wide church your powers and time for the conversion of men.
> "I want to assure you as president that Methodists everywhere hold you in the most affectionate gratitude in a special way. . . . Every Methodist in spirit will gather with you in the Epping Forest. . . .
> "May God richly bless the meeting. On my own behalf, I have always listened to you with joy and always gone home with a deeper faith and a richer spiritual experience."

And the gracious and cultured Dr. F. L. Wiseman told the people that "wherever the gospel is preached as Gipsy Smith preached it the crowds still come." Rodney Smith is now seventy-five years old.—Christian Advocate.

BROTHERS IN THE SKIN.

The man who sells Brooklyn Bridge to the naive visitor—if there ever was such a transaction—and the old native near Mt. Silinda, East Africa, who went about among the terrified people telling them that a great calamity would befall unless they bought from him medicine to ward off the evil spirits, are not only brothers under the skin but in the skin. The African crook had a sure gamble for he knew that there was to be an eclipse of the sun. Victimized by both black men and white the native has little chance unless the freedom of education and the Christian faith brings light into darkness where fear of the unknown makes him an easy prey for unscrupulous people.

THE BUSIEST PLACE IN CHINA.

It is in this Kiangsi Province where Mr. Shepherd has been working and where Rev. Hugh Hubbard is carrying on during his absence that marvelous progress is being made. Over 10,000 li of motor roads have been built in two years; a fleet of six motor buses start off each morning with the same precision you expect from Park Square, Boston; the third largest air drome in the world, able to house 600 planes, is being built at Nanchang; 952 cooperatives with 300,000 members have been organized;—and five million men and boys between 18 and 40 are being given military training.

THE RENAISSANCE IS HERE.

It has begun and it is a wonderful thing. It means sanity, joy, power and soul refreshment for multitudes. It is God's own way, for it is the renewing of the mind. It is religious education for adults that grips the life of the church today. Something we thought stopped when we left the Sunday school we now see can be fresher, more vitalizing and life saving than ever.

It does not mean resurrecting old ideas and restoring old prejudices. It really means going in quest of the modern, the fresh and up to date.

We now know that minds can go on learning till the body wears out and the time for departure is at hand. This covers all fields of learning, so why not apply it to the areas of religious education for adults?

Religion offers thoughts which we can digest and keep, allowing them to become strength to the soul and inspiration to the spirit.

This year, more than ever, churches have called men and women together, offered them courses in the study of the Bible, the meaning and use of prayer, the history of the church, the modern conceptions of Christianity and their application to present-day problems.

Prepared teachers can be found when colleges and universities are near, and educated men and women everywhere will take pains to prepare themselves to teach such classes if the churches and communities are remote from schools of learning and do not have such teachers and professors in their midst.

Open minds can receive new truth and active personalities can discuss the worth and work of such truth in modern life. The dullest drabness of the church is dumbness, and from this we can be saved by the spread of religious education for adults.

Mere money-making is satiety; continual entertainment is boredom; mass thinking is the opportunity of the dictator; shallow drafts keep us always in the roll of surface waves.

We need to think. We need to have something worth while about which to think.

Great numbers of adults in our churches everywhere listening to fresh presentations of vital truth, reacting in the self-respect of individual thinking, creating religious fellowships of inspired souls and renewed minds, is the surest method for lasting recovery and creative living.

Every midweek service in the land can change from droning humdrums of reiterated routines to classes of active interest upon as many and varied subjects as the people choose and there can be found teachers to teach. All can gather at a dinner if that is most convenient, a brief devotional and song service can unify and uplift the souls, then the gathering can break up into classes of study and discussion with the general feeling that the minds of Christians and church members are alert and the souls of all are keeping strong, by continual taking of food for body, mind and soul.—Allan A. Stockdale in Exchange.

CHURCH MEMBERSHIP.

Church membership is often treated lightly and yet it involves a sacred obligation. When we identify ourselves with the church we offer a testimony, we assume a responsibility and we achieve a distinction. We declare our allegiance to Jesus Christ and express our purpose to follow Him. We acknowledge our willingness to work for His kingdom and for the advancement of the common life of humanity. We join a glorious company of men and women who stand for the best in human life and we become a part of the noblest institution that civilization has ever known.

Church membership does not place an inhibition on wholesome and positive living, nor does it demand slavish allegiance to prescribed theological formulations. It calls for loyalty to our deepest insights, a fidelity to the best that we know.

No one should join the church for personal advantage, for social distinction or through a desire to conform to conventional standards of respectability. Rather we should take this step because we wish to witness for Christ and share in the coming of His kingdom.

Do not think primarily of what the church will do for you—although it will bring you only blessing—but consider what service you may render in its behalf. Bring the church the best your life contains. Give your time, your energy and your means to its support. Let your prayers rise continually in its behalf. Show a wholesome liberality of spirit, a respect for the church's traditions and a purpose to bring honor to its name.

Let your church membership be a forthright expression of faith, a real adventure, a true achievement of the soul!—Alfred G. Walton in Advance.

AS WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE SEES THE LIQUOR SITUATION.

"It is officially announced by the United States government that the consumption of regular legalized liquor is far below the expectations of the government and the legalized booze makers.

"One of two things is true: Either the bootleggers are getting the business, or prohibition has broken America of the liquor habit.

"If you take the first alternative, why not go back to prohibition and outlaw the whole business, if it cannot be legally controlled? We have the same number of racketeers; same amount of disrespect for the law that prohibition revealed. We are a lawless people, anyway.

"Take the second alternative. If outlawing liquor for a dozen years or so broke the American booze habit—even though it had all the evils the enemies of prohibition assigned to prohibition—it was doing some good. Why not go back to it?

"Write your own ticket. The destination is the same."

Undoubtedly much more liquor is being consumed by the American people and the bootleggers are profiting accordingly.—Advance.

OUR WET FRIENDS.

If it did not border on the tragic, the position taken by our wet friends and neighbors, since their defeat at the polls on May 15th, would be laughable.

The wets controlled the lower house of the recent legislature. Their leaders in that august body of statesmen drew the bill governing the election. They fixed the date of the election. They jockied the bill through the upper house. This date fell on a day when our Baptist pastors and lay leaders were due in Memphis, Tenn., to take part in the annual meeting of the Southern Baptist Convention. They put at the head of their organization two of their most astute and popular leaders. They had a strong war-chest; money was plentiful. They controlled the great dailies of the state and a large section of the ruralist press. The outlook was most auspicious.

For years they had done their best to nullify the prohibition law. They had looked forward to an appeal to the "dear people." They had done their utmost to destroy the influence of the preachers. They had sought to drive the church out of the political arena. A popular federal administration, pledged to repeal, had given them renewed hope and courage. They believed the economic conditions of the state challenged action and assured success. But they were defeated.

Naturally they are sore. In the terminology of the street, "they cannot take it." The wets boast of being good sports. They boast, too, of being good politicians. How the mighty have fallen! May we not say to them: Take your defeat with a smile. Get under the burden of lawlessness, ignorance, poverty and prejudice in this state and lift, like Ajax, until every fetter that binds a great people is broken. Drive out the bootlegger, the racketeer and the gambler. Make it difficult for these evils to exist. Take your defeat like men and help the prohibitionists crush the evils in the state against which you have vociferously inveighed.—Christian Index (Baptist) Atlanta.

YOU AND I.

By Carl M. Kilmer.

If you and I but knew the power
That underlies each fragrant flower;
Or sensed the working of the will
That bids the winds be wild or still;
Could we but know the infinite mind
That lies the universe behind—
'Twould not be hard for you and I
To know that God is in the sky.

If you and I could scale the crest
Where safely lies the eagle's nest,
Or unknown depths of ocean plumb,
And view its wonders one by one;
Could we but solve the mystery
Of sprouting seed and waving tree,
And hidden life in bud unfurled—
We'd know that God is in the world.

If you and I but knew the need
Of joy that springs from kindly deed:
If you and I would understand
The need of willing, helping hands;
Would we but ease another's grief,
To aching hearts bring sweet relief,
We'd clasp the joy that love imparts,
And know that God is in our hearts.

Though you and I may never find
The secret of the power or mind,
Or solve the age-old mystery
Of swelling bud and restless sea—
Yet faith can answer all we ask,
And hope can lighten every task,
And love can joy and sorrow share,
To tell us God is everywhere.

Disciples of Jesus are ready to follow their Master anywhere, but they often hesitate to believe that this way will lead them into adversity. They strive to emulate His love for mankind and to live a life of self-denial and sacrifice, but when troubles come their way then they consider that something has gone wrong with the divine control of the world. We know, however, that Jesus during His days on earth suffered more acutely than others, and even in this way we must follow Jesus and we must suffer more adversity than those who are not His followers. Jesus warned His disciples of this when He foretold them that the world would hate them as it hated Him. Such troubles are not a cause for depression but rather for joy in that we are counted worthy to suffer for the Lamb, and St. Paul tells us that if we suffer for Jesus' sake we shall also reign with Him.—Canadian Churchman.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

Rev. F. C. Lester, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

TOURING SUMMER CONFERENCES.

It has been (and still is) the pleasure and profit of the writer to tour the Summer Conferences and Training Schools under our denominational leadership in the Southeast. This modern development of our Christian Youth Movement is one of the most significant and valuable phases of church life and promises well for the future of our churches. In these Summer Conferences the young people not only enjoy the pleasures of a summer outing, and the fellowship with others in their states or groups of states, but also to study to prepare for better service in their churches and to face the problems involved in making this a more Christ-like world. We were impressed with the fine groups of young people, their high-mindedness, their zest, and their earnestness.

Of the nine such conferences held in the Southeast this season, four have been held and have been visited by the writer, and as this is written the Elon Leadership Training School is about to begin and the delegates are being registered. It will be too early to report Elon, but we can say that all things are in readiness and Dean Lester is to be congratulated upon the fine program and the strong body of leaders and teachers. It looks as though there would be a registration of about 150. This conference will include not only delegates from the Christian Churches of the Southern Convention, for whom the Elon Conference has been a regular event for some years, but will also include delegates from the Congregational group of churches in the Carolinas, Georgia and Florida. In the past these churches have sent delegates to Blue Ridge. All are looking forward to a happy united fellowship on the beautiful campus of Elon College. Now for more detailed report of the conferences so far visited.

DeLeon Springs, Florida.

The tenth Florida Young People's Conference was held at DeLeon Springs, a beautiful resort near Deland. The tenth birthday was celebrated with a party, a cake with ten candles and a presentation to Mr. C. A. Hoyt, who originated the conferences and has devoutly each year served as general manager, being chairman of the State Conference Committee on Young People's Work. In this he has had the fine help of Miss Pattie Lee Coghill.

This year 83 young people registered and there were 15 faculty and staff members—98 in all. The program and personnel of this conference has been previously given and will not be repeated. The courses of study offered were similar to other conferences. Some new features were introduced such as the Interest Groups which were held in the afternoons. Each one was given a badge in the form of a "hobby horse" with the hobby he chose lettered on it. The groups were: Nature Appreciation, Music, Photography, Good Manners, and Dramatics. Each of these made some contribution to the interest of the conference. For instance, the Nature Appreciation group brought in some non-venomous snakes and were taught how to handle them. The Dramatic Group gave a beautiful and original pageant written by Miss Martha Race, the leader of the group. This was part of the beautiful services and events on the closing evening, which also included an outdoor Communion Service.

The "trails" were also a new feature. There was a "Book Trail" and a "Peace Trail." There was also a "peace plebescite" which showed the group decidedly on the side of world peace and strongly against war. We haven't the figures on the vote.

This Conference specialized in student participation, beside the usual student council. The students conducted the program for the chapel services, offered the blessings at the tables, and assisted at the communion and other services. Miss Coghill declares this to be the best of the ten Florida Conferences. She reports that one of the most vital events was the talk by Mrs. Mary Bethune, head of the Bethune-Cookman Institute in Daytona Beach and receiver of the medal given by the Society for the Advancement of the Colored People, the second woman to receive the award for service to her race.

St. Simon's Island.

This conference is held for the young people of the four churches in the rural parishes in Southeastern Georgia of which Rev. Alan Jones is pastor. Mr. and Mrs. Jones are responsible for this fine conference which is held at Camp Marion. This year it was held in two sections of a week each and a total of about 80 were in attendance. Mr. and Mrs. Jones were assisted by Rev. Milo J. Sweet, and Dr. M. J. W. White and by four of the Students' Summer Service workers: Jennie Belle Abernathy, Sarah Virginia Hook, Joy Grigsby, all of Elon College and by Eben Chapman of Union Seminary. The young people bring their own provisions and cook them and do all the camp work. Joy Grigsby as dietitian and head cook does a good piece of work. Most of the young people arrive and depart in turpentine trucks. They have a fine time and the work in the classes is of value. Dr. White's lectures on the Philippines was of special interest.

Grand View, Tenn.

This conference takes the place of Blue Ridge for the young people of Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama and West Florida. It is held in the old building of the former Grand View Institute. Here also the young people bring provisions and do all their own work. This conference is under the direction of Dr. F. P. Ensminger and Miss Marguerite Davidson, and Rev. Alfred W. Hurst was dean. There were 115 enrolled and it was interesting to discern that these traveled a total of 26,385 miles to get there, an average of 240 miles apiece one way. This conference had a fine faculty, strong courses of study, a fine group of young people and the meeting was in a beautiful place though the old buildings are in bad condition, having been unused for so long. The young people visited the interesting government "Homesteads" at Crossville.

King's Mountain.

At Lincoln Academy the colored churches of the Southeast have held a conference for several days. It was an interesting experience to make a short visit to this conference. It is not only a young people's conference but there are also pastors from all over the area. There were about 150 in attendance, among them a large delegation from Texas. The quality of the membership of the conference, the ability of the leaders and the fine spirit of the whole group impressed this writer .

This was the last of the conferences visited until the one at Elon which will be reported next week. Later on will tell the story of other conferences which will be held. The writer hopes to visit the one at Piedmont College. Others will be held at Wadley, Ala., and in Southeast Ala., known as the Sealacon Conference.

Florida Youth Fellowship.

The Florida Youth Fellowship was organized at the DeLeon Springs Conference and the following officers were elected and installed in a beautiful service on the closing night of the conference: President, Earles Ward of Winter Park; Vice Presidents, Jean Cross of St. Petersburg, Dick Forester of North Miami, and Harold Herbst of Sanford; Secretary, Emily Carleton of Winter Park and Treasurer, Elizabeth Newton of Jupiter.

WHY IS PROFANITY HARMFUL?

Christian Endeavor Topic for July 7, 1935.

(Consecration Meeting.)

Bible Readings:

July 1.—Denotes lack of control. Prov. 16:32.
July 2.—Violates God's Word. Lev. 19:12.
July 3.—Cursing father or mother. Lev. 20:9.
July 4.—Effect on the user. I Tim. 6:20, 21.
July 5.—Accompanies anger. Mark 14:71.
July 6.—A prayer for deliverance. Ps. 19:14.

Scripture: Ex. 20:7; Matt. 5:34-37; Matt. 26:69-75.

Some young people have said that profanity harms the soul, that it is not ladylike. Does the use of profanity show the lack of respect for language, for one's self, for others, and for God?

Hearing a man use God's name irreverently, a lady asked if he knew God well. She said that God was a very good friend of hers and whenever his name was mentioned she became interested. He didn't seem to understand about what she was talking, but after an explanation about the matter, he stopped using God's name, and the conversation continued intelligently. Often people use God's name without realizing it.

Where do we find profanity used? In the newspapers? in what kind of books? in our places of business? Where do we find it used?

Have your people investigate and make short reports.

HAND AND VOICE.

A hand is reaching out across the world;
It is the hand of Christ, outstretched to men
Of every race and tribe and clan. He pleads
For brotherhood, for justice and for love. "When
Will you heed my words? My heart still bleeds;
Not from the spear-thrust in my side,
It bleeds for all the world of those for whom I died."

A voice is ringing out across the world;
It is the voice of Christ, clear-ringing still
To all the nations and to every land. His word
Entreats all men to brothers be; his will Obey. "Oh, have you never heard
Of me and of the Father's will?
Have you forgotten what took place on Calvary's Hill?"

Thus may his praying friends who circle
All the earth today clasp firm this hand
Of Christ and hear his calling voice, until a band
Of brothers knit in ties of love shall know
That Jesus shows us still the pathway we should go.

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

LIBERTY UNDER LAW.

(Temperance Lesson.)

Lesson XIII—June 30, 1935.

Golden Text: "It is good not to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor to do anything whereby thy brother stumbleth."—Romans 14:21.

Lesson Text: Romans 14:13-21; I Cor. 8:9-13.

It cannot be too often repeated that liberty does not mean the right to do as one pleases, but the power to do as one ought. No man is free who does as he pleases unless he pleases to do right. And a man never finds true liberty in defiance of law but in obedience to law. Liberty is not license. Many a man boasts of his freedom when as a matter of fact he is an abject slave. On the other hand many who seem to be in bondage, or at least whose lives seem to be restricted, are enjoying true liberty. If Christ sets a man free, as Paul says, "then is he free indeed." But freedom in Christ is to be had only by obedience to Christ.

Judge Not.

How easy it is to sit in judgment upon others. And how commonly it is done. And how dangerous, as well as how unfair it is. Jesus said that we were not to judge others, lest in the very act of judging others we might condemn ourselves. The writer in remembering what he might have been and might have done but for the grace of God, finds it increasingly difficult to judge, in the sense of condemning others. This does not mean that he condones everything that everybody does. It means that there are so many forces that enter into a man's life, and there are so many factors that enter into his deeds, forces and factors that are so often unknown to others, that he does not feel competent to pass final judgment on others. Much of our judgment of others is like unto an immature judge on a bench, passing a verdict on the basis of incomplete and insufficient evidence.

Stumbling Blocks.

"But judge this, rather, that no man put a stumbling block in his brother's way or an occasion of falling." The phrase is suggestive. What would you think of a man who placed an obstacle in the way of a blind man, or tripped up an unsuspecting person, perhaps a child, or a sick man? Well, there are people who do just that thing. One of the worst features of sin is the fact that it has power to make us tempt our fellowman. Alas for all of us who cause others to stumble. One of the most damning charges against the liquor traffic is that fact that it puts a stumbling block in the paths of multitudes of men and women, young men and maidens. So far as the writer is personally concerned he will give no sanction to the liquor traffic, if only on those grounds. Those who favored repeal, and those who are using every opportunity to fasten the legalized liquor traffic on our nation, are guilty of a great sin.

Him for Whom Christ Died.

The awfulness of sin is to be seen in what it does to human personality. "For whom Christ died"—that is a tremendously significant and sobering phrase. Jesus put the supreme emphasis and the supreme value on personality. Let every man see to it that his actions and his influence are such that they will not degrade the personality of others, those for whom Christ died. And that means all, for Christ died for all. There are those who would be most careful in applying the doctrine of the sacredness of personality to a white man who would laugh at the idea that the personality of a negro—niggers as they say—was sacred. "For whom Christ died"—let man beware.

The Kingdom of God.

How often that phrase, or its equivalent was on the lips of Jesus! He did not refer, of course, to what we so often call heaven. He was referring about that social order in which the will of God was done on earth, even as it is done in Heaven. The kingdom was both present, and future.

But it is not a material kingdom. It is not based on force. It is not concerned primarily with things, although material things do have a place in the coming of the kingdom. The kingdom of God is righteousness—it is the holy and just reign of God in the hearts of men and in the life of the world, it is the expression of right attitudes and right actions of men toward each other; and peace—the kingdom is not to come by large armies and by huge navies, it is not to come by war, it is characterized by peace, by peace between God and man, and between men and men; and joy in the Holy Spirit—the kingdom has a note of joy running through it, it does not take true happiness from life, it makes happiness a permanent quality of life. But it is spiritual happiness, not sensual pleasure. Joy in the Holy Spirit, the joy which Jesus said the world could not give and could not take away.

The Things Which Make for Peace.

"Let us follow after the things that make for peace," said Paul. How many of the things we say and the things we do, and the attitudes we hold, tend to create friction, to cause misunderstanding, to stimulate fighting. And this is true of nations as well as of individuals. Blessed are the peacemakers, said Jesus, for they shall be called the children of God. What a difference it would make in our homes and in our communities, and in the world, if we followed after, if we sought eagerly, the things that make for peace, that create good will, that develop the spirit of brotherhood.

Our Brother's Brother.

We may not be our brother's keeper, but we are our brother's brother. The law of love demands that we do all we can to help our brother to walk in the way of righteousness.

Liberty A Curse.

"Lest this liberty of yours become a stumbling block." It is one thing to have liberty. It is quite another thing to know how to use one's liberty. One wonders for instance, if many modern women who have been freed from so many household burdens know how to use their freedom. And what about the larger liberties of young people today? And what about leisure time which is liberty from work? In many cases liberty which ought to be a blessing, has become a curse, not only to the possessor of liberty, but to others. Let every man take heed how he use such liberty as he has.

MT. CARMEL HOME COMING.

Home Coming Day will be held at Mt. Carmel Church, Walters, Va., on June 30th, the services beginning at 11:00 A. M.

Following a special musical selection by Rev. and Mrs. C. E. Gerringer, the morning sermon will be delivered by Dr. W. M. Jay. The welcome address will be given by Miss Myrtle Johnson.

The afternoon service will begin at 3:00 P. M., with greetings by Rev. J. Sidney Cobb. The history of the church will be discussed by Dr. I. W. Johnson. Special music for this service will be furnished by the Quartette from Franklin Christian Church.

"THE SHADOW."

"If a man keep my saying, he shall never see death."—John 8:51.

"Shapeless and grim
A shadow dim
O'erhung the ways
And darkened all my days.
And all who saw
With bated breath,
Said 'It is Death.'
And I, in weakness,
Slipping toward the night,
In sore afright
Looked up. And lo—
No spectre grim,
But just a dim,
Sweet face,
A sweet, high mother-face,
Alight with tenderness and grace,
'Thou art no Death,' I cried—
For life's supremest fantasy
Had never thus envisaged Death to me—
'Thou art not Death, the End.'

"In accents winning,
Came the answer back—'Friend,
There is no death!
I am the beginning,
Not the End.' "

TUESDAY.

"THE GREAT SOLUTION."

"I am the Almighty God; walk before me and be thou perfect."—Gen. 17:1.

Bishop Burns has said recently that the present depression is one of the best periods, for we know what to do with the times. The building of the kingdom of God and the periods of greatest growth of the church have not been during periods of prosperity or extreme poverty, but periods of bewilderment of confusion such as at the present. In our present times, many have asked whether civilization and Christianity will survive. We have been engaged with things fundamentally material—social, economic, and industrial, he says, and the result has been a spiritual desert. All the social panaceas have failed to bring an answer. The world will never be saved en masse. Prosperity and peace are not by the multitude.

We can't change the world till we change folks. It is not good times nor bad times, he says but folks. The value of the church is not creed, nor doctrine. The development must be by personal belief in God and obedience to Him, and then the social and the spiritual results will come. He says that the church must become aware of the surcease religious movement that is going on outside of the church. This movement is observed in the movements within the Chambers of Commerce, colleges and industry. The thing that is happening is that the people on the streets are undergoing a spiritual renaissance. They are hungering for something which they cannot grasp, and among them are folks who would give their future if they could be sure that they could know God.

The reason for all this, he says, is that we have been studying childhood instead of John and Mary and as a result we are suffering from increased juvenile delinquency and juvenile courts; we have been regimenting religious, educational and social theories in mass movements and reaping abstractions and confusions. Humanity is longing for the bread of life for their own souls and for surety and confidence is spiritual values.

The call of today is the same as it was in Jeremiah's time: "Stand ye in the way and ask for the old path," and that path is to recognize God as the Almighty and walk before Him in obedience to Him."

Prayer—Dear Lord Almighty, we who are now before Thee pray for the power to be thy obedient children. In His name we ask it.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"WITH ALL YOUR HEART."

"Ye shall seek me and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart."—Jer. 29:13.

Do you know what that means? Dr. Trumbull tells us a story of a soldier who had been long in the southern prisons, calling at his home after the war. He says he met him first while in prison at the Charleston jail, and again they were together in jail in Columbia. Three years had passed and here he was, and he says, "I asked him of his later prison experiences." "I don't remember much about it, chaplain," said he, "only that I wanted bread. How hungry I was! I used to think of home, but then I grew so hungry I couldn't think of home any more. For a long time I wanted to escape, but I grew so hungry I didn't care for that even; I only wanted bread, bread, bread."

Dr. Trumbull says that that is longing for bread "with all the heart"—with one supreme overmastering desire. Home, friends, liberty and life, lost sight of, unthought of, in the ceaseless craving for food! Can we hunger for God that way? "Blessed are they who (thus) hunger and thirst after righteousness (after the bread of life) for they shall be filled."

Prayer—Our dear Heavenly Father: Help us to put our hands on our hearts and get after our sins, those things that keep us from God, and say to Thee, "There Lord Jesus, there it is. I will die before I will commit again. I turn from it and to Thee now and forever. Come Lord Jesus and so bless us.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

"SPIRITUAL QUICKENING."

"Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life."—John 6:54.

This scripture is a warning against the belief that truth,—what we have heard and learned,—will satisfy the soul. There was a time in primitive conception of tribal worship when the worshippers were supposed to feed upon their God, as we are told, or some animal representing him. The ancient custom of the living sacrifice of animals was a part of the idea. In partaking of this God they would become like him.

Our Lord abolishes that custom. His flesh with grace is to be sufficient for all mankind. He identifies His body with bread and his blood with wine, and forever afterwards these emblems are to be the token of partaking of His flesh and becoming like Him.

Spiritually speaking, every follower must realize the meaning of the life of service and the death of sacrifice with all its atoning values, and it is service and sacrifice that are the notes of His own life, and the taking of the bread and wine symbolize the conveying of Divine life to our own.

Prayer—O Lord, our Father and our God, make Thyself present on our thoughts and in our living. As food quickens and makes strong the functions of the body, give us Thy quickening spirit and make eternal heaven in our hearts. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

"INDEPENDENCE."

"In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread till thou return to the ground."—Gen. 3:19.

God gave man an abode and an occupation, and that occupation was to keep and dress the world and make it a paradise. In this paradise he was to find occupation for his mind, body and spirit and in these realms take life seriously enough to have a destiny and work for it. This destiny must be worked out by each soul by his own earning power, and leaches must be failures. Only to him who thus works out his own salvation is God exhibited as Creator, Sustainer and Supreme Governor of the world.

Man is shut up to a life of toil and his future happiness depends upon his earning it, and the promise is that he shall not be disappointed. How many of humanity's troubles are due to trying to get life without earning it, to our thoughtlessness, to our recklessness and to indifference to God's way!

Prayer—Dear Heavenly Father: O Almighty, clothe us with Thy goodness, that we may be among those who eat of the tree of life because we have been obedient to Thy word and Thy universe. This we ask for Jesus' sake.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

"ACCEPTING GOD."

"Bless Jehovah, His substance, and accept the work of His hands."—Deut. 33:7-11.

This sentence, from Moses' blessing of the Levites, seems indeed strange at first; for who are we that we should not accept Jehovah? Must we not accept Him, anyway? To whom else can we turn but to our Creator?

But there are a vast company that do not accept Him. Either through indifference, or ignorance, or selfishness, or worldliness, they are without God. They live in a dead universe. Nothing is behind them and nothing before them. Their God is their poor, empty selves.

How happy are those that accept Jehovah, His substantial Being! To them the universe has taken on a blessed Personality. Wisdom is behind them and Hope before them, and Love is all about them.

Prayer—We rejoice, O God, that Thou hast given us the power of rejecting Thee or accepting Thee; for now we can be Thine forever.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

"THE PERIL OF PRAISE."

"And immediately an angel of the Lord smote him, because he gave not God the glory."—Acts 12:17-24.

It is a dangerous day when people say of our speech, as they said of Herod's, "The voice of a god, and not of a man." Flattery is easily swallowed, and it is poison.

Our God is a jealous God, and it is for our good that He is. It is well that He holds us to a just opinion of ourselves, for pride has a terrible fall. Humility is the basal virtue. All progress rests upon teachableness.

Prayer—Send Thy angel, O God, to smite our vain-glory, before it smites us to the dust. And as there are so many ways to be proud, may we walk humbly in all our ways.—Amen.

GIVING JOY TO CHILDREN.

By John G. Truitt, D. D.

"Whosoever shall receive one of such children receiveth me; and whosoever shall receive me, receiveth not me, but him that sent me."—Mark 10:37.

Giving joy to children is one of the things that makes Christmas such a time of universal happiness. Giving joy is joy-giving, and should be an all year round business. Giving joy to children is a very happy business, indeed. If one wishes to be remembered throughout the months, and years of a long lifetime let him give joy to little folks along the way. He will store up treasures in the heaven of their hearts which neither time nor tears can erase. I see them still standing out in my memory. Those adults who gave the little boy that I used to be happiness. And if I may speak a word today to carry you in pleasant memory in scores of little folks hearts until the years grow old I shall be happy.

Jesus received the children. And He taught us to receive them. And He tells us an advantage that comes from receiving the children that we may often overlook. He says that they who receive children receive Him. And He then tells us that they who receive Him, receive God who sent Him. He is saying that through the heart of a little child we may walk into the throne-room of God! One of life's greatest questions is: How may I receive God? How may I have Him? How may I know, fellowship, and commune with God? You will find an answer in the text of the morning: "Whosoever shall receive one of such children, receiveth me; and whosoever receiveth me, receiveth not me, but him that sent me."

That day when Jesus entered the house in Capernaum He had a very important matter to discuss with the men who were to carry forward that which He began to do and teach. It was a very important matter. He had heard them disputing along the way about who should be greatest among them. There was no more perilous proposition than that. That dispute has wrecked many a man and measure since that day. Jesus must set that right with His followers at once. So the conference which he would have now that He was "in the house" and ready would be a most important one. "Go away, children, the Master is busy" is not what he said to the little folks in that house.

And by which I do not mean that there are not times when children themselves may be much happier and the business at hand the better attained to if they ran along. But I am calling your attention to a consideration of the Children by Jesus which is unusually beautiful.

What did Jesus do? "He sat down, and called the twelve." Was there ever a much more important meeting in the light of history, and all that followed, than that? What did He say? "If any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all and servant of all." One man takes up his time with leading great armies of great men; Jesus takes up part of His time loving the little children of Palestine. Was there ever such heroism and growth of the church shown as that which followed about the time the little folk of Jesus' day marched forward with the picture of the Master in their minds?

The disciples would never forget that hour. They perhaps sat about that circle afraid of what the Master might say to them. Even when Jesus asked them what they had been disputing about they held their peace, for they were quite conscious of their error. But instead of upbraiding them for their selfishness, "he took a child, and set him in the midst of them; and when he had taken him in his arms he said unto them: Whosoever shall receive one of such children receiveth me; and whosoever receiveth me, receiveth not me, but him that sent me."

So at the council table of Jesus sat the children. They were never overlooked. Their innocence. Their need. Their future. Their teachableness all attracted the attention of the Great Teacher. He blessed them, and loved them. He was one man who loved little children, who also loved great sinners. Today we hear the expression, "Oh! I am so fond of little children, but I simply have no patience with that impetuous father of theirs." Not Jesus that! Jesus had in that house in Capernaum one of the world's most impetuous men,—of him he made the first apostle of all time! He had plenty of patience with Peter! Thank God for that. He had patience with the children, and with the childish, so there is room in his heart for all.

And there will be room in the heart of his saints for the little ones. They will not forget the lesson in Capernaum taught. They will still place the child in the midst of their hearts, of their homes, and of their hopes.

"They are idols of hearts and of households;
They are angels of God in disguise;
His sunlight still sleeps in their tresses,
His glory still gleams in their eyes;
Those truants from home and from heaven
They have made me more manly and mild;
And I know now how Jesus could have likened
The Kingdom of Heaven to a child."

Two of the greatest departments of this church's school are the Cradle Roll, and the Beginners' departments. And the hope of a home is not the guest room, as beautiful and necessary as that is, but the hope of the home is the nursery. The hope of the church is its children. And by the children I mean here all those this side of adulthood. A few years ago it was a favorite pastime of many reformers to tell how the church had neglected the children. Well, I am thankful to say that I have never known personally any such church. Forty years ago I was a little child in a little one-room country church. But notice, I say I was in the church. And so were there dozens of others. And there was no place in all that countryside that the children loved more than that church. That church had a heart and mind for the children, and so have the churches I have known personally ever since that day.

This church seeks to give joy to its children. It spares nothing to make them happy. It seeks to teach them the true secret of happiness. All of us are not teachers in the Children's Division of our Sunday School, but we all have a part in providing for their churchly needs. And there is even a larger place we may fill than that, namely, our attitude toward the children in our homes, in our schools, on our streets, everywhere. We can love the children. Not a thoughtless sentimentality that ruins the child for lack of direction, faith, encouragement, understanding, and discipline; but a love which seeks to give children immediate joy, and at the same time everlasting happiness.

And there are returns. God has seen to that. For whosoever receives the children receives God. Many a young man has been rather too free and thoughtless until he has felt his own child in his arms, and then life has taken on a fuller meaning, and a greater joy. And yet we do not have to be a parent to love and serve little children. Jesus was not a parent, and yet all that

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

It always brings a lot of joy to us to receive letters from the boys and girls who have gone out of this institution; but we received one last week that brought unusual joy and delight.

Nineteen years ago two little twin boys came to make their home with the Christian orphanage family (fine little fellows). When they grew to young manhood, Lawrence accepted work in the city of Durham and Clarence joined the Navy. Of course, being in the Navy for several years has given him an opportunity to see quite a lot of the world. Clarence, not having an opportunity to visit us, has been faithful to write from time time and keep us informed as to his health, etc. We had missed his letters for several months and had wondered why such a prolonged silence. Last week we received a letter stating he had a very serious major operation in April and was still in the Navy Hospital in the Philippine Islands..

I could not help but shed a tear to think he had been so ill and so far from home in a strange land far away from his home folks and those who loved him most.

No familiar face from home to cheer him with a friendly smile and a happy greeting that generally makes one feel better whether one's condition is improved or not. I know I have had that experience.

The orphanage has never had a child go out that ever loved it more or was more interested in it than Clarence is. In closing his splendid letter he said: "I am enclosing my check for $25.00 for the orphanage and wish I could make it more but hope this will help you some." If Clarence Fields ever accumulates a fortune, the orphanage will share in it. He loves his old home and is always happy to come back. He is the boy that took twenty pigs and produced the orphanage 10,500 pounds of meat one year and won a watch for a prize. He always makes inquiries about the hogs, farm, and dairy in his letters, showing that his interest still abides, though far away.

is best in loving little folks is epitomized in Him. I am reminded of Helen Welshimer's poem:

"I'll not send little girls to school,
Blue ribbons on their hair;
I'll not warn little boys to watch
For fear their pants will tear.

"I'll never fill a cookie jar
With spicy, fragrant things
And know a whispered secret,
Or a round, red mouth that clings.

"Or hum a snatch of lullabies
When heads begin to nod,
And figure how to buy new shoes,—
I wanted to though, God!"

Do flowers sweeten your day, and music sway your spirit? In a far larger and more lasting way let the children sweeten your soul. Many a hard heart has been made soft, and a cold heart warm by the friendship of a little child.

"Perhaps there are tenderer, sweeter things
Somewhere in the sun-bright land;
But I thank the Lord for His blessings,
And the clasp of a little hand."

MARRIAGES

LISKEY—HERRING.

Mr. Freeman H. Liskey and Miss Ida B. Herring came to my home on April 27, 1935, and, in the presence of a few friends, were quietly united in marriage. Both are from Harrisonburg, though the groom originally came from the neighborhood of our New Hope Church.

A. W. ANDES.

SPITLER—KENNEY.

On May 12, 1935, I stopped, by invitatiou, at the home of Scott Kenney, near Mt. Jackson, Va., and united in marriage his daughter, Easter V. Kenney and Russell S. Spitler. They will reside at the bride's home where the bride keeps house for her father since the death of Mrs. Kenney.

A. W. ANDES.

WARREN—MONTGOMERY.

On Saturday, June 1, 1935, Mr. Paul Warren of the Salem Chapel Community and Miss Alma Isabel Montgomery of near Winston-Salem were quietly united in marriage by the writer, in the presence of a few friends. They have the good wishes of their friends as they launch out upon a united life.

D. M. SPENCE.

WALKER—STRADER.

The wedding of Mr. William Alvin Walker and Miss Thyra Strader was solemnized Saturday, June 15th, at 11 o'clock at the home of the bride's grandmother, Mrs. T. J. Preston, at Walkertown, with the writer officiating.

The bride was attired in a white ensemble and wore a shoulder corsage of gardenias and sweet peas.

The bride is employed in the office of P. H. Hanes Knitting Company in Winston-Salem. The groom is connected with the post-office in Walkertown.

Immediately after the ceremony, the couple left for a motor trip through the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia. After their return they will make their home in Walkertown.

Their many friends wish for them success and happiness.

VOLUME LXXXVII. RICHMOND. VA.. THURSDAY, JULY 4, 1935. NUMBER 27.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

The "Security" Act's Cost.—

It is estimated that in 1937 the Federal Social Security Act will cost Virginia employers and tax payers not less than $6,000,000. By 1939, it will have mounted to $9,000,000. We do not have statistics for the entire country, but if Virginia is an average State then the total tax to the nation will be around $500,000,000 and will, in the last analysis come out of the pockets of the thrifty employee to be applied for the benefit of those less thrifty. When they have had time to consider such legislation, will the employees and small business men of the country submit to it without protest?

House Refuses Utility Death Sentence.—

The House of Representatives, on Monday of this week, refused to concur by a vote of 216 to 146 with the Senate Bill providing the elimination of utility holding companies. On Tuesday, by a still larger majority, the House passed its own bill which is much more favorable toward holding companies. This does not mean future security for all such companies, but the House provision, if it prevails in the conference between the two legislative bodies, will prohibit anihilation of these companies regardless of the service they are performing. President Roosevelt has thus lost the first round in his elimination fight.

The Champion Amender.—

Senator Norris, of Nebraska, who is just about a champion as an amender of Constitutions, is now out with a proposal to prohibit the Supreme Court from holding an act of Congress unconstitutional except by a two-thirds vote, and then only when the test has been made within six months after the act takes effect. Perhaps only Senator Norris knows why the Supreme Court, composed of distinguished lawyers, should be banned from acting by majority rule, when a President of the United States can be elected by one electoral vote, or the Senate can pass or kill the most vital piece of legislation with the Vice President casting the deciding vote.—Exchange.

Virginia's Oyster Industry.—

Pollution of tidal waters has become a menace to Virginia's oyster industry. Continuation of such pollution will mean its anihilation, according to statements recently made by J. J. Baecher, president of the Izaak Walton League of America. Says Mr. Baecher: "The abundant life of Virginia's tidal waters constitutes the second industry of the Old Dominion." But he adds that the "pollution of the waters which flow into Hampton Roads . . . menaces the entire shellfish industry of the Chesapeake area." Figures given show that the production of oysters in the waters of the Commonwealth amounted to as much as 47,861,000 pounds in 1880, and by 1904 had increased to 53,286,000 pounds, but in 1933 the poundage dropped to 13,468,000, or just twenty-five per cent of the 1904 figure. Even at this reduced figure, the shellfish industry represents a capitalization of approximately $22,500,000, and immediate action is necessary to save this.

America's New Frontiers.—

Half a century ago, Carroll D. Wright, Federal Commissioner of Labor, thought he saw what many people would have us believe today—the end of expansion. He said, in 1886, during the depression of that time: "It is true that new processes of manufacture will undoubtedly continue, and this will act as an ameliorating influence, but it will not leave room for a marked extension, such as has been witnessed during the last 50 years or afford a remunerative employment of the vast amount of capital which has been created. . . there may be room for further intensive, but not extensive, development of industry in the present era of civilization." At that time Mr. Wright thought he was certain that America's frontiers were closed, but think of the expansions of the last 50 years. Will those who talk today of the end of progress seem as comical twenty-five or fifty years from now? It is foolish to talk of the end of America's expansion when even at this time we are only in the experimental stage of air conditioning, flying, steel housing and a thousand other developments upon which industry is eternally working.—Exchange.

Ex-Senator Reed Lashes Proposed Wealth Tax.—

"It is inconceivable," declared the fiery Missouri Democrat, "that any honest man, in his right mind, would propose by force, to despoil a citizen of the property he has honestly acquired." In Russia, such an idea might be entertained, thinks he, but not elsewhere, and the 73-year-old veteran politician believes "that there is enough common honesty and common sense among the American people to repudiate the doctrine and repudiate its authors." He argues that aside from the moral issue, the economic effects are bound to be disastrous and will in the end bring suffering upon the small investor and the laboring classes. The ex-Senator calls attention to the fact that many of the larger corporations which the proposed taxes would hit hardest have their bonds and stocks distributed among innumerable stockholders and bondholders. Although such "share-the-wealth" schemes attracted numerous followers when presented by others, they assume serious proportions when proposed by the head of the National Government. Regardless of whether they are just so much ballyhoo for future vote-getting or whether they are seriously presented, they are illogical and ill-advised.

Tax Exempt Bonds and Prosperity.—

No one will deny that staggering debts are a major factor in the causing of periods of depression. The individual who becomes hopelessly indebted to other individuals ceases being an asset and becomes a liability to the community in which he lives. Ultimately he becomes a bankrupt. What is true of individuals is true of nations. Certainly one of the causes of the depression through which we are now passing is the debt of our country. Yet there is little attempt to reduce our indebtedness, but rather the present Administration seems willing to go to any lengths in its spending orgy. Borrowing by the government, will itself retard recovery, as the amounts borrowed are just so much taken from the capital that should be used in private enterprises, to say nothing of the ultimate increase in taxes that it must bring. Harry Flood Byrd, Junior Senator from Virginia, in a recent release to the press tells of the staggering borrowings, by Federal, State and local governments, and shows how this borrowing is made easy by the tax-exemption clauses which such bonds contain. We quote: "The amount of tax exempt bonds has now reached the great total of $90,000,000,000. This provides a refuge for those who invest in such bonds and thus escape the payment of taxes which must be paid by those engaged in productive business enterprises. This total is being constantly increased by new issues of federal, state, county and municipal bonds. The Federal Government alone is now spending $13,000 every minute of the twenty-four hours of each day including Sundays. $7,000 each minute is being added to the Federal public debt by the issuance of Federal tax exempt bonds. I have always believed in an equilization of the tax burden by taxing all classes of property on a fair basis. I have introduced legislation to make possible the taxation of all future issues of federal, state, county and municipal bonds, and providing also that the state can tax federal bonds. Any reform of our taxation systems on a basis of ability to pay must provide for the taxation of the bonds which are now exempt." Mr. Byrd has shown himself to be progressive, but has never advocated spending more than could be raised by just and equitable taxes, nor did he, while Governor of Virginia, lend his sanction to bond issues that might place burdens on future generations. He concludes his statement: "Very frankly, one of my objectives in this legislation is to discourage the future issuance of federal, state and local bonds. I still believe in the pay-as-you-go plan. I do not favor giving a refuge to the rich to avoid taxation by the issuance of tax exempt securities. Issuance of such securities imposes a great burden on the people."

NOTES-PERSONALS

News from the Churches.

Today is our nation's birthday. Long may it be a land lighted with freedom's holy light. May the God of love and might guide her in the year that is to come.

Rev. A. L. Granger is assisting Dr. C. H. Rowland, pastor, First Church, Greensboro, Dr. Rowland preaching at the 11:00 o'clock service, and Brother Granger at the 8:00 P. M. services each Sunday. Mr. Granger preached for the Asheboro Street Friends at 11:00 o'clock, Sunday morning, June 30th.

A good friend, writing for her church, says: "Our cent-a-meal box was such a joy to each one who had them and we are refilling ours." That is fine. The boxes are of polished pine and substantial and can be used over a long period of time and refilled, as there is a covered spring to the box which enables them to be emptied without disfiguration.

Our Orphanage Superintendent, Bro. C. D. Johnston, tells in his column in The Sun this week about the loss the Orphanage sustained by fire on the morning of June 27th. Bro. Johnston has our sympathy, as we are sure he will have that of the entire church. No man labors with a deeper sense of responsibility and greater zeal for the cause to which he is giving his life than does Supt. Johnston.

Dr. H. Shelton Smith, Duke University, Durham, N. C., was the preacher at Elon College, closing the School of Leadership Training, Sunday, June 30th, 11:00 A. M. Dr. Smith very appropriately chose for his able discourse an exhortation to his audience to say "O" Father. It was a very appropriate service, culminating as it did with the observance of the Holy Communion under the direction of President L. E. Smith.

The Sun's editor was glad to meet Rev. Ivan Smith, pastor of our Winchester and Timber Ridge churches last week. Brother Smith was a member of the faculty in the Leadership Trainin-School at Elon, and it was his first visit to our College. We trust it will not be his last, as he made many new friends who will be delighted to have him come this way again. Brother Smith is deeply interested in his present pastorate and is of opinion that no pastor has better people with whom to work than those of Winchester and Timber Ridge.

"Oldham's Grove, Moore County, North Carolina, Thursday, September 29th, 1870. According to appointment, the Deep River Christian Conference met at this place today in its sixth annual session. The President of last session, Elder A. S. Nelson, took the chair and called the Conference to order." So read the Minutes opening the sixth annual session of the former Deep River, now the Western North Carolina, Conference, according to the annual of the year 1870. One wonders what has become of Oldham's Grove Christian Church? Did it disappear altogether? Has it a successor? If so, what is the present name of the church? Among other churches listed in the Conference at this session, we note "Acorn Ridge, A. S. Nelson and M. L. Hurley, pastors; Cool Spring, J. S. Lawrence and S. L. Craven, pastors; Salem, W. M. Craven and J. A. Scott, pastors." One wonders if these churches passed out of existence or have been succeeded by churches of a different name?

Dr. E. C. Gillette, president, and Rev. F. C. Lester, dean, with their assistants and corps of teachers, have our heartiest congratulations. Their and our School of Leadership Training held at Elon College, June 24th-30th, inclusive, was even a far greater success in attendance, enthusiasm and results than the most sanguine had anticipated. It was certainly good to see nearly two hundred of our fine, young people, and some of our good pastors and interested laymen, going to class or lecture rooms, to vesper services and the worship periods, as they enjoyed fine fellowship together and class-room work work for the days they were here. There were many interesting features, and all who had to do with the institute feel highly gratified at the attendance and the real constructive work done. Dean Lester tells in detail, as others will in later issues of The Sun, of the good work done. It was most gratifying that several of our leading pastors came with groups of young people from their churches and remained through the week. It was an event such as to give faith to believe that a school of even larger scope and more far-reaching plans and consequences can he held next year.

What can increasing years, even up to seventy-five or more, do with a man like our ever youthful and venerable friend, Dr. A. D. Woodworth, who, after serving as a most faithful missionary in Japan for a period of forty years, is now living on the retired list at his home in Merom, Ind. Brother Woodworth in a personal gleam wishes us to remember the doctor of old who prescribed a maul for the sick king, saying: "The virtue of the maul lies in the handle and does not come out until your majesty pounds with it until he sweats." And then, after telling how he can now handle the maul, adds this delight: "Recently, when the Wabash (The Big Muddy) was in flood about five feet deep over some bottom land, I saw two old hens marooned on a fence two hundred yards from shore. No one else was near to help, so I waded out and brought them in on a log. It was great sport. The birds belonged to two widows, a mother and daughter. I am passing delightful days at Merom, but I think I should like it better if I were on the go most of the time. Churches of different denominations in the vicinity occasionally give me calls for service." Many of our church could hear Brother Woodworth from rich experience in Japan for nearly half a century and hear him with profit.

Visitors at the North Carolina and Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention at Bethel were much impressed with the reports from a number of Sunday schools that had been compelled recently to enlarge their quarters or erect new buildings. Danville, Va., Rev. M. T. Sorrell, pastor, reported that although it had added a number of rooms only a few months ago, the present plant was already proving inadequate and it seemed as if other rooms would have to be added at an early date or present rooms enlarged. Then Reidsville, N. C., Rev. J. L. Neese, pastor, reported that its present quarters were over-run and considerable additions had to be made to supply the increase in Sunday school attendance and enrollment. Ingram, Va., Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, pastor, reported very extensive and modern equipment and additions to accommodate the increased enrollment and attendance. Happy Home, Rev. W. M. Stevens, pastor, finds its building wholly inadequate to meet the increasing enrollment and contemplates an entirely new plant with five or more Sunday school rooms added. While no newly organized schools reported to the Convention, it was quite noticeable and very gratifying that so many churches in the Convention were having to add to their present equipment, a sign of healthful growth.

OAK LEVEL CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The Memorial-Home Coming and Community Day of this good old church was held the first Sunday in June. The community was hungry for a day of fellowship, hence they decided for an all-day meeting. Sunday school at ten o'clock, preaching at eleven, dinner and varied program at two, consisting of splendid hymns, short talks by local members and visitors.

There were many out of community visitors, and relatives and friends had come in to comingle in faith, friendship and the hospitality of the community. It was a day of real fellowship. Many expressions of love for and loyalty to the Church were heard. There were many expressions of love and sympathy exchanged by relatives and friends who had not seen each other for a long while. Such occasions soften our lives and deepen human ties and touch our souls with the Divine.

A happy day was spent in community fellowship. All graves had flowers placed upon them. Serious thoughts and honest examinations filled many minds and hearts during these services. That is not in vain which sweetens human life. I believe there are many of strong faith and loyal hearts in this good old country church. The service was by the writer and pastor.

Jas. L. Foster.

THE BETTER WAY.

Two men once walked side by side, behind the Christ who trod
A hillside path to Calvary, to suffering, and to God.
One man walked but with the crowd, followed where it led;
The other saw an humble cross far ahead,
With the crowd one soon returned, weary from the day,
But in the darkness one remained to watch and pray.

We also walk a hillside path, a path that Christ has trod,
A path of life that leads us up to suffering and to God.
Do we but follow like that crowd, follow where it led;
Or do we glimpse an humble cross far ahead?
And when the darkness in our lives covers up the day,
Will we go downward with the crowd, or seek the better way?

Dora Byrons.

The church of Christ is unique.

No baby can be born into it.

No proclamation of king, dictator, or president can command admission.

No act of Congress or executive order secures recognition.

The wealth of a Ford, a Mellon or a Rockefeller cannot purchase membership in it.

Its doors swing open only to the one, be he rich or poor, learned or ignorant, black or white, who has faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God, who is willing to confess that faith in Christ before men, who sincerely repents of his sins and is buried with his Lord in baptism.—Chaplain C. S. Vail.

THE PRIVILIGES OF A MINISTER.

By Clarence A. Vincent, D. D.

Article IV.

Requirements.

One of the most widely known American novelists was invited to address a Sunday school class of men. He began his talk with the statement that no person before the age of eighteen or twenty should read the Bible or study it. He emphasized this at some length and that, not until a person is old enough to judge for himself, should he be instructed in the Scriptures.

He answered his own statement in telling that his mother required him to memorize passages from Shakespeare before he could understand them, but, when he was old enough to read and to understand the writings of the great bard, he began to appreciate the value of what his mother had required him to store up in memory.

When he had finished, the vice-president of one of the great auto manufacturies thanked him for his time given to the group of men, and added that he knew just how the speaker felt about the value of the Shakespearian passages he had been compelled to learn. He, himself, had been required by his dear mother in Scotland to learn many passages from the Scriptures and also several poems from the writings of "Bobby" Burns. He did not enjoy the task but that increasingly since then he appreciated what he had learned and that the Biblical passages were among the richest assets in his life.

The pastor of the church was asked to say something. He, too, thanked the novelist for coming and said, "I am sure that Mr. ——— will be glad to know that for the last twenty years the greatest group of pedagogical and ethical experts have been preparing the Sunday school lessons to meet the needs and understanding of all ages of youth and maturity." The novelist expressed his surprise and confessed that he had never heard of this fact.

My object in this illustration is to emphasize the fact that if a minister did not know more about novel writing, medicine, law, business and many other occupations in which his parishoners are engaged than the novelist did about the methods of the Sunday schools of our country, he could not hold his position as pastor and teacher longer than a year or two.

A minister does not have to be an expert in many lines but he must know enough in many fields to keep him from making mistakes in his statements and illustrations. The writer, when he left Yale Divinity School, had an appreciated friendship with Professor George P. Fisher, and he determined to know enough about the period of Reformation so that he could speak in the presence of authorities of that period with exactness, so that a man like Professor Fisher would say, "His statements are true." He spent several months on that period and this led him to the work of the Wesleys and Whitfield, William Carey and the Pilgrim Fathers, and the Booklet, "Acts of Modern Apostles" was published. Then for a year or more, he studied the history of the United States and the book "Providence in America" resulted. During the years following he studied several fields such as Economics, Music and Musicians, Painters, Astronomy, Geology, Biology and other topics. He would secure the latest text-book in these different fields and thus in a comparatively brief period, he could keep abreast of the latest information. He has always felt his limitations in these fields but he has been able to hold the respect of those in his congregation who are specialists. Dr. Richard S. Stores pursued this same method and with his capacious talents made him a noted leader for many years in Brooklyn. A minister's field is the Scriptures and their application to the needs of individuals and society. Here he must be an expert and can be with continued study and observation.

THE PARABLE OF THE VINE.

Of all the beautiful and expressive parables of Jesus, the last one is most precious. Let us give it a close examination.

Jesus says that He is represented by the vine, His Father by the husbandmen and we are the branches. These branches are supposed to produce fruit of the same nature as the vine. Where do we find the place of the Holy Spirit?

The vine is alive by reason of its sap, which is food and life. By capillary attraction this food is drawn from its source, through the roots and vine to every branch. Every human being hungers and thirsts for that which will satisfy his life. Our lives can be satisfied only as we produce fruit after the nature of Jesus Christ.

The life of the vine, or sap, represents the Holy Spirit which must flew through us if we are to bear fruit.

Jesus frequently refers to the Holy Spirit as the Water of Life or the Bread of Life. In Jesus' talk with the woman of Samaria, He assures her that He would give her the water that would be satisfying and would become a well of water springing up unto eternal life. Jesus in His evening talk with Nicodemus said he must be born from above, born of the Spirit as well as born of the flesh. That Spirit is the Holy Spirit. In that birth one becomes a child of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ. Not an adopted child but a child by birth, as Peter tells us, "made partaker of the divine nature."

In John's vision he saw a river of water of life flowing out of the throne of God and the Lamb, in the midst of it and on either side of the river was the tree of Life. Thus the river of life, the Holy Spirit, flows from God through Jesus Christ into every man born of the spirit, to make him fruitful.

Paul tells us in Galatians what the fruits are: love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. Again we are told, "By their fruits shall ye know them."

Is it strange that in our day the all-wise Father has found it necessary to severely prune the branches of His vine? Myron Tyler.

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

NAOMI.

What a pity, not to say tragedy, it will be if any of our Sunday school teachers shall on Sunday, July 14th, see and teach only a lovely romance or a delightful friendship in the lesson for that day. The Book of Ruth is, as so many writers have said, one of the most beautiful stories ever written. Even Voltaire, an infidel, said, "there is nothing in Homer or any other classic writer equal to the story of Ruth." And Prof. Moulton, who calls the book "a fascinating idyl," says that "the friendship of Ruth and Naomi is the classic instance of a friendship between two women," etc., but if this is all that one sees in the Book of Ruth, then the book was written and is read to poor purpose, indeed. In very truth the book is a missionary story or it is nothing. It reveals the startling fact, even to the Jews themselves, that there were those outside the church of that day who were worth saving and could be brought to a knowledge of the true God and owned and blessed by Him. In order that the writer might make this clear and emphatic, he chooses as the people to whom his missionary (Naomi) goes, the land of Moab, a people and land for whom the Jews as such had possibly more contempt, disdain and disrespect than any land and people on earth. If the reader or Sunday school teacher will go back and see whence came these Moabites, he will readily understand why the Jews held them in more Prejudice and disdain than we of the present hold any race or creed other than our own anywhere on the earth; and yet the writer carries a fascinating and winsome woman, a real, genuine missionary out into the land of this hated people and wins from that people a convert to her God, which convert becomes the ancestress of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Bear in mind, reader and Sunday school teacher, that Ruth, whom Naomi won by devotion to the true God, came out of a heathen country, from a people despised of the Jews, and yet by being won to the God of Israel, to the God whom we worship and serve, became the grandmother of King David, Israel's greatest king, and thus the ancestress of our Lord.

If a romance or a friendship epic, even if it is as the poet Goethe declares it to be "the loveliest little epic which has come down to us"; I say even if it is this, its more appropriate name would be, "Naomi," one of the first and foremost foreign missionaries, a woman of adventure and romance who won a convert from heathenism and thus honored and glorified her Lord as few women of antiquity did. I say again if the Sunday school teacher cannot see in Naomi a genuine missionary and the Book of Ruth a missionary book, then such a teacher must be blind, indeed, and has not given much to the study of the Word of God in its truer and deeper aspects. Some one has said that it could be truthfully written, "The Book of Ruth; The Proceedings of an Ancient and Immortal Woman's Missionary Society." The Book of Ruth is a classic showing in beautiful form the spirit of missions and the very work that hundreds and thousands of our Women's Missionary Societies are doing today.

If the Book of Ruth is not a truly genuine missionary book, then will some writer tell us why twice over again in the closing verses of the book it is related that this Ruth, whom Naomi won from heathenism, came to be the ancestress of our Lord? The writer of this brief story did not want any reader to overlook that fact. And just as Ruth stands out as one of the world's greatest characters, so today some of the greatest and most pronounced Christians on earth in the living present are those who like Kagawa of Japan have been won from paganism by missionaries who like Naomi went into their land and lived such a life of devotion to God that those who witnessed that life became converts to the God who made it the more abundant life.

MORE PRISONS IN PROSPECT.

Hon. Homer S. Cummings, United States Attorney-General, issues a statement that "if liquor law violations, prosecutions and convictions keep increasing at the present rate, the United States is going to need more prisons." We should say so from the facts which the Attorney-General himself cites. He says:

"In the last twelve months under repeal, Federal prison commitments for liquor law violations exceeded those for the last full year of prohibition by twenty-two percent and are increasing." For the fiscal year ending with June, the Attorney-General estimates that liquor law violation commitments to Federal prisons will total 4,314 as against 2,208 in the preceding twelve months, an increase of ninety-five percent.

These facts must be very difficult of digestion by those who advocated repeal and declared that prohibition was ruining the country and increasing drunkenness. A statement recently issued giving the figures shows that under "State Liquor Control" in our neighboring State of Virginia, the increase in arrests for drunkenness in some of the cities has increased the first year some eighty, some ninety percent, the average increase in the eight leading cities named being some over twenty percent, and that the bootlegger instead of being put out of business thrives as of old and is doing quite a thrifty business. This writer's earliest recollections, even as a boy before prohibition was once named among us, of the dangerous things that roamed the woods and the forests, to be feared by day or night, were bears and bootleggers. We are not hearing about many bears now, but the bootleggers seem to be still on the rampage, or seem to thrive on being talked about and sometimes killed.

HER THEOLOGY WENT WRONG.

Mrs. Pearl Buck, herself a daughter, and also the wife, of a missionary to China, came back to America sometime ago, recently went to Reno, got a divorce from her husband and in a few minutes married "a rich publisher" from whom one of her friends had a few minutes previously gotten a divorce. The case of Mrs. Pearl Buck, now Mrs. Pearl Some-Body, is worth considering a moment. She is the lady who wrote the novel, "This Good Earth," the scenes and characters of which are all Chinese, and which book had such a run at the time and brought its author fame and fortune, and also brought her to the United States. But the trouble began previously. The Presbyterian Mission Board, which had sent Mr. and Mrs. Buck to China, was amazed to find this lady missionary with her theology all gone awry. Her magazine articles and many of her utterances show that she had really gone back on the plain teachings of Scripture as well as the teachings of the Christ whose Gospel she had been sent to China to preach. She became modernized too rapidly and went back on the good old faith of the fathers and those principles of faith, hope and love which perisheth not. First of all, Pearl Buck's theology went wrong. Her conception of God went wrong. Her preaching of the faith went wrong. Her Mission Board discovered the same and repudiated her teachings. Thus it occurred in this case, as in thousands of others, that Reno and the divorce were not just a happening, but came as a logical outcome of a faith she no longer held and the fundamental principles of righteousness which she had, with her theology, repudiated.

ROBBER BECOMES EVANGELIST.

When Dr. Sherwood Eddy visited Amoy sixteen years ago, there was a man there with a price on his head; he had been leader of a robber band for ten years. During the first meeting he cut a hole in the mat shed roof, and through it watched and heard Dr. Eddy attack officials and others who were robbing the people. This man said to himself, "I am a robber. I am robbing China. I must stop!" He could not sign his name on the card as a convert, but secured a worker to sign for him. After Dr. Eddy left he joined the church and served as a volunteer preacher. Among other things, he resolved to win as many into the Christian life as he had killed, and began work for robbers and pirates right in the home district. More than 100 joined the church as a result. There were two villages whose residents had for generations followed robbery as a profession; he reached thirty of their leaders and the villagers have given up robbery for farming. This Christian worker cannot write yet, but he keeps a record by getting someone to write down their names. He then draws a rough picture of a tree with branches, on which he indicates the fruit he finds developing in their lives.

Traveling to Amoy to hear Dr. Eddy at his recent meetings he met two strangers on the launch and induced them both to become Christians.

SCREAM, EAGLE, SCREAM.

If we could suggest a form of Fourth of July celebration for this year it would be in due and ancient form. We would have the Declaration of Independence read and secure the loudest and most extravagant orator obtainable to melt his collar in proclaiming the virtues and wealth of the United States of America in a grand and glorious way. We would risk pink lemonade and fireworks for an old-fashioned Fourth of July. We would like to hear the eagle scream.

We believe that there has been too much depressing talk during the depression. It has been the opportunity of "odd fish" who have profited from proclaiming "dangerous thoughts, feelings and fears" to the great mass who are facing economic difficulties. Many of the radical ranters have expressed truth that needs exposition and uncovered facts which needed revelation and the Nation has received benefit from the strictures. The apostle of despair may be a helpful man when the world is speeding in the primrose path or sleeping in a fool's paradise, but it is our conviction that we need a change of economic diet. We need a realism that will see the good as well as the evil. We need a statesmanship that would construct by emphasizing the helpful. The Nation needs a patriotism of appreciation. We hope that in the celebration of the coming Independence Day the croaking of the raven will be silenced by the eagle's scream.

If we were asked to make a Fourth of July speech, or to preach a sermon on the day nearest the anniversary of the signing of that great document in which the principles of our national life are expressed, we think we would again go to our geography and boast of the area of our land, the variety of its products, the beauty of its amber waves of grain and purple mountain majesties, of its populous cities and of its vast industries. We would speak of its free churches, its public schools with the opportunity of education for all, its libraries, galleries and parks which open the treasures of art and nature to the poorest citizen seeking culture and recreation, the long roads filled with automobiles and lined with homes and farms where the millions are living in comfort and security. For one day we would speak of the glory of our land, its peace and its prosperity, its freedom and its joy. No man can say everything on all sides of a question in one speech and surely if we had a chance we would fasten our attention on the high spots in our national scenes on the coming Fourth of July. This editor once had indigestion for a week and after trying reduced diet, hot water, assorted pills and bubbling antiacids, he became hungry and desperate and ate a dinner of ham and cabbage that would have been sufficient for a ditch-digger. The big meal did his indigestion good. It is our opinion that after all the tonics and bitters our physicians of the State have been prescribing that the Nation can stand a good heavy feed of optimism. We believe that a boast will be a boost in this day.

There is enough in the good old U. S. A. to exhaust our powers of boasting. We are not ashamed of our country, its history, its ideals, its achievements and the opportunities it offers men. We had rather live here than anywhere in the world. We would rather have our children live here than anywhere on earth. We love the land of our fathers and we want others to love it. We may criticize a lot of things in it but on its birthday, we want to speak well of it. Great and broad, hospitable and seeking happiness, with principles of government embodied in a constitution, the wisdom of which is manifested in every decision of the Supreme Court, and sufficiently progressive to take care of the well being of its citizens. It is a nation greater than any man or group and beyond the full comprehension of any critic and yet exists not for national grandeur but for the good of humanity. Let us learn the patriotism of appreciation and for once let the eagle scream. We address our beloved land in the faith of a poem, clipped from the scrapbook from whence cometh the best of our ideas:

Thou hast a spacious continent,
Dear homeland of the free
Great lakes and rivers, mountains, plains
Within thy borders be;
Vast oceans lie along thy coast,
Thou hast both land and sea—
The God of Nations through the years
Hath wrought great things for thee.

Brave pioneers from older lands
Have come across the sea
And helped thee found a nation here
Sacred to liberty.
The wisdom of the ages past
Hath guided thee aright
Pillar of cloud by day for thee
And pillar of fire by night.

America, America,
Torchbearer of the free,
Upon thine ample shield I read
Law, Order, Liberty.
All races here in friendship meet
And here united plan
On justice and good-will to build
The Commonwealth of Man.

FATHER'S DAY.

The following prayers were read at Merom at the close of the Sunday school in celebration of Father's Day. The first prayer came over the radio from Cincinnati. Having ideal wishes from a father, it seemed like there ought to be a prayer from a boy, and Dr. Woodworth wrote the second being according to his ideal what a right-minded boy should pray for.

The father—Oh, God, make me a better parent. Teach me to understand my children, and to listen patiently to what they have to say, and to answer all their questions kindly. Keep me from interrupting them and talking back to them and contradicting them. Make me as courteous to them as I would have them be to me. Give me the courage to confess my sins against my children and to ask their forgiveness when I know I have done wrong.

May I not vainly hurt the feelings of my children. Forbid that I should laugh at their mistakes, or resort to shame and ridicule as punishment. Let me not tempt my children to lie and steal. So guide me hour by hour that I may demonstrate by all I say and do that honesty produces happiness. Reduce, I pray, the meanness in me. May I cease to nag; and when I am out of sorts help me to hold my tongue. Blind me to the little errors of my children and help me to see the good things they do. Give me a ready word of honest praise when they do right. Help me to grow up with my children, to treat them as those of their own age; but let me not exact of them the judgments and convictions of adults. Allow me not to rob them of the opportunities to wait on themselves, to think, to choose and make decisions. Forbid that I should ever punish them for my selfish satisfaction. May I grant them all their wishes that are reasonable and have the courage always to withhold a privilege which I know will do them harm. Make me so fair and just, so considerate and companionable that my children will have a genuine esteem for me. Fit me to be loved and imitated by my children.

With all thy gifts, great God, give me calm, self-control, and an understanding heart.—Amen.

* * *

The son—Lord show me how I may give to my parents the honor and reverence which are due to them. Help me to remember the self-sacrifice for me and the care which they bestowed on me when I was entirely helpless, how they fed me, clothed me and provided a home for me. Show me how to appreciate their love and how I may act in obedience to their wishes so as to cultivate in myself a love for what is good and beautiful and true. Help me to be clean in the habits of my body, clean in my speech and always considerate of those around me, and may I do nothing which will bring discredit or shame to my parents or to Thee.

Help me to remember that thou art my Heavenly Father, the Giver of all joy and blessings and that when I practice the teachings of thy Word, I shall give highest honor to Thee and to my earthly parents. So in honor to my earthly parents, help me to be the kind of boy Jesus was when He was a boy like me.

All things I ask for His sake.—Amen.

JOHN WANAMAKER'S MOTHER.

"A woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised. (Golden Text.)

When he was advancing in years, and when he had time from the cares of the great store that he had built, and from his many public duties, John Wanamaker wrote of his mother: "My first love was my mother, and my first home was on her breast. My first bed was upon her bosom. Leaning little arms upon her knees, I learned my first prayers. A bright lamp she lit in my soul, that never dies down nor goes out, though the winds and waves of fourscore years have swept over me. Sitting in my mother's old armchair which she loved because her first-born son gave it to her forty years ago, I am writing this in the evening twilight. With the darkness falling I seem to lose myself in a flood of memories, and to feel that the arms of the chair have loosed themselves to become my very own mother's arms around me again, drawing me to her bosom, the happiest place on earth, just as she used to do in the days and nights long gone by. I feel the touch of her little hand on my brow, and I hear her voice as she smooths my hair and calls me her boy, her very own boy."—From The Presbyterian.

THE WAY OF PEACE.

There is a room where I must go
And close the door and humbly pray,
Where only God shall know
And where I find the highest way.

It is a tiny room—a small room
With conscience dwelling there.
A low way, slinks in dreary gloom
And conscience says, Beware!

It is a tiny room—a gracious place,
With gladness on its walls —
With a highway of peace and grace,
And its many calls.

If cobwebs of cynicism and despair
Fill this tiny room, I hope in vain
To find the highway of heaven's air,
And vainly flounder with my pain.

If that strange Man upon a cross
May guide me to the doing of a selfless deed.
That tiny room will take life's loss
And make heaven's highest creed.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Church membership is a link between earth and heaven. God loved the lost world and sent His Son to make redemption possible. The Son of God came in the likeness of man, suffered and died upon the cross, in His plan to establish a church. "I will build my church," He said, "and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." The church is, therefore, an institution of Divine origin. Because of this unique characteristic, the portals of the church should be open to all who exercise saving faith in Jesus Christ.

Membership in the church should be regarded as a very sacred relation. It should not be entered into lightly or indiscreetly, but reverently, and in the fear of God. For the church on this earth is the human family of our heavenly Father. Many people unite with the church without a real religious experience or a high motive to become servants of the living God. They are the tares among the wheat. Earnest church leaders often advocate expulsion of all such members from the church membership. But who knows the tares from the wheat? The harvest will be the test of sincere church membership and saving faith.

The history of the church, both Protestant and Catholic, has many pages filled with the story of expelling members from its fellowship. It would be presumptuous to question the sincerity of those who have had a part in this method of church discipline. The Roman Catholic Church has impressed its members with the horror of excommunication. The pope or the priest is the personal representative of Jesus Christ. If the Church on earth excludes a person from its membership, heaven approves this act, in the opinion of the Roman Catholic head of the church. For this reason alone, if a church member is convinced on this point, it becomes an eternal tragedy to be expelled from the church. A good Catholic would hesitate to change or sever his relation with the church. And a good Protestant should have the same loyalty and determination to be true to the church of his choice.

Whenever the church considers the matter of expelling a member, it should carefully and prayerfully weigh all the possible results of such action. Does the offense justify expulsion? Is this the best and the only discipline to be administered? Are those who vote for expelling another without sin? Is a church member who daily commits sin, eligible to vote to expel another who has sinned? In the old days of the saloon a church passed a rule forbidding its members to engage in the sale of alcoholic liquors. A member of this church secured a license to operate a saloon. Two of the deacons went to visit him at his place of business to counsel about the matter. After the deacons bought drinks and braced themselves with a good stimulant, one said to the saloon keeper: "Well, brother, you know our church has a rule against the sale of liquor. You are a member and we have come to see you about your church membership and the saloon." What right did those deacons have to drink liquor in that bar and then suggest expelling this member if he remained in the business?

The church should have discipline. There are cases which demand expulsion. But such cases are rare if the leadership of the church is sincere and consistent in holding up a high standard of personal life and spiritual fellowship. A church is not a police court to "try" cases of spiritual delinquency; it is a school of fellowship, to teach and lead weak and brokenhearted people to a throne of grace and a saving Lord. The church is to blame in many cases when members backslide and become inactive. A church is a family, yes, and it should be a loving sympathetic family. All the members of a loving family will love the family circle and fellowship. The right kind of a home attracts members of the family. And the church can be attractive, it is attractive, when it has the spirit of the Master. Church membership, therefore, should be regarded by the individual and the church as a life membership in the family of God.

SUMMER MONTHS AT ELON.

As a rule the summer months are rather lifeless and uninteresting at Elon College. However, things are moving rapidly thus far this summer. A few weeks after commencement the North Carolina Christian Endeavor Association was in session here. There were from 150 to 200 in attendance. A very live group it was. They had a splendid program and the group seemed to enjoy their stay here.

A few days after they left, the Leadership Training School of the Southern Convention of the Congregational and Christian Churches under the auspices of the Board of Christian Education of the convention convened here. This is an annual school conducted by the board. Rev. F. C. Lester of Norfolk, Virginia, is the chairman. Much interest was added to the school this year owing to the fact that part of the Blue Ridge conference was transferred to Elon. This increased interest and attendance greatly.

The school is in session now. The enrollment has reached 188. They come from the states of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama and Florida. They have had a very strong faculty and a most successful school. The college is always glad to welcome these groups, particularly so since they are part of the church. They always bring a good program and a wholesome influence. Elon belongs to the church and is happy to render any service that she possibly can.

The entire college community was greatly shocked Thursday morning to learn that the orphanage barn was burned about five o'clock. This was a great tragedy. The entire building and contents were completely destroyed. Fortunately the dairy herd was not housed in the barn this particular night. Unfortunately the mules were. Four mules and one calf were burned. The fire had gained such headway when it was discovered that it was an impossibility either to check the fire or to save but very little of the contents of the barn.

Fortunately the milk house was preserved. The year's hay crop, which had just been harvested and housed, was destroyed.

Mr. Johnston and the Board of Trustees will have the sympathy and help of the entire church in rebuilding. The barn and contents were partially covered by insurance, but not enough to cover the loss. Any word of sympathy, contribution and help, I am sure will be appreciated.

ELON AND FRANKLINTON.

Franklinton Christian College has been closed for some time. It is not dead, but the stones of neglect will soon crush it if we stand by consenting, and the negroes of our Congregational-Christian fellowship of North Carolina and Virginia will be deprived of one of the institutions which has been in the vanguard of their program.

Franklinton College has a long and worthy history. "The spirit of Franklinton" still burns in the hearts of the colored people. The college is not handicapped and embarrassed by debt. It is centrally located and easilly accessible. The buildings, though not complete, are attractive and are a credit to our church. The property is adequate to provide for future expansion.

Now if those of other years had the courage to start the college from the bottom, with nothing to build on, where is our faith today? In spite of all difficulty we believe there is still good prospect for Elon. Why is there no prospect for Franklinton? All the foundations of a college are still there: the property, buildings, constituency, need and spirit.

Do we feel that Elon is indispensable? Franklinton is equally so. Would it be like losing our right arm for Elon to close? The loss of Franklinton is just as keen. Have we made sacrifices for Elon? So have the colored people for Franklinton!

Some may say that we have no responsibility for Franklinton. Livingstone felt responsible for Africa. Christ became responsible for the world. Now I believe in being missionary in North Carolina and Virginia as well as in the foreign fields. God forbid that while Franklinton lies stripped and half dead, we should play the part of the priest and pass by on the other side. Franklinton is our college, it is a part of our united work. Their loss is our loss.

Can we not do something for Franklinton? Can we not play the role of the Good Samaritan? The candles of hope burn low. Let us do something to redeem Franklinton College.

Perhaps there could be held a Franklinton Summer School of Leadership Training; a Pastors' Conference would be a great blessing to the negro ministers who have limited opportunities for training. These might pave the way to the re-opening of Franklinton. Is it not a good investment? The Congregational Church has been most unselfish in establishing and maintaining schools where they had no hope of developing a constituency. Now here is a constituency already developed; a college already founded. It this not an asset? Is this Cause not worth reconsidering? I love Elon. I also love Franklinton. And I hereby enter my protest against its continued neglect and register the hope that the sacrifices for Franklinton may not have been in vain.

Let your will be one with His will, and be glad to be disposed of by Him. He will order all things for you. What can cross your will, when it is one with His will, on which all creation hangs, round which all things revolve? Keep your hearts clear of evil thoughts; for as evil choices estrange the will from His will, so evil thoughts cloud the soul, and Him from us. Whatever sets us in opposition to Him makes our will on intolerable torment. So long as we will one thing and He another, we go on piercing ourselves through and through with a perpetual wound; and His will advances moving on in sanctity and majesty, crushing ours into the dust.

A Story for the Children

PORK CHOPS.

KATE MATSON POST.

Scrap loved pork chops. Why his family so seldom ate them was a mystery to him, and the amount of chicken and fish they did eat was appalling; for neither of these was he ever allowed to touch lest a bone become lodged in his throat.

Ridiculous, he thought. But nobody paid any attention to his ideas, or even appeared to understand them, though he barked them out lustily.

Of course, he was a member of the family, and as such should have been listened to.

For years he had performed his duties in the household as any self-respecting member should. He drove the cows to pasture and sent the pigs back into their yard when they sometimes managed to escape and get into the potato patch, he carried sticks of wood and acted as general protector to everybody on the farm.

He had been such a tiny ball of brown fur when he had first been given to the boys, that Scrap had seemed the only appropriate name to call him, and Scrap he had been ever since, though as time went on the name was not so descriptive as it had been at first.

He loved the boys dearly and was their constant companion, and they taught him tricks enough to have fitted him for any circus. All together, he led a very happy life, and if the rest of the family did not always understand him, he felt that it was not his fault. He understood them well enough. He knew that, when the boys started off right after breakfast with books under their arms, he was never expected to go further than the gate with them, and that, when they went off up the road with an ax, or perhaps a box of lunch, it was time for a grand frolic, and that by no chance whatever would he be left at home.

Oh, the delight of those tramps! The boys usually walked miles on those occasions, but Scrap easily ran three or four times as far, making little excursions around trees and bushes, chasing dozens of delightful odors, scratching up the soft wood mold in search of no one knew exactly what, and again flying (so lightly did his paws touch the ground) in pursuit of some incautious rabbit that had strayed from its burrow.

When these tramps were over and two very tired, hungry boys came back, an even more tired brindle dog followed them and could hardly wait to get to his comfortable napping-place behind the kitchen stove.

It was when they were coming back from one of these long tramps one brisk fall afternoon, that Mother opening the door spied the boys up the road. Scrap proudly trotted beside them with a long stick in his mouth.

"Take it to Mother," said Jay, as Scrap looked up for instructions.

Away he bounded, laying the stick at her feet.

Mother patted him and told him he was a good dog to bring her kindling wood for her grate fire, and then as the boys came nearer she called to them to hurry, since dinner was ready; for, you see, Scrap's family had lived in the city until the last few years and had clung to the city custom of having dinner in the late afternoon.

"We have some nice pork chops and baked potatoes, and sister has made us some soup, too," Mother added.

"That sounds pretty good to me," said Jay. "I am hungry enough to eat the barn door."

"So am I." echoed Will.

No one noticed that Scrap's ears went up and his tail gave an extra joyful wag at the mention of pork chops.

It took but a few minutes for the boys to wash their hands and make themselves sufficiently presentable to sit down at the table, and it was not long before six hungry people were doing full justice to Sister's good soup.

Father looked up suddenly and asked where Scrap was.

"Behind the kitchen stove," answered Sister.

"What did you do with the chops?" Father asked.

They're on the hearth," she answered.

"Aren't you afraid Scrap will get them? He is as hungry as the boys, and you know how he loves pork chops."

Right here I must explain that the stove in that kitchen was an old-fashioned, rather large affair, with no warming oven, but with a wide low hearth in front, where the food next to be served was often set to keep hot. The hearth was so low indeed, that is was only just about the level of Scrap's nose.

"No," said Sister, "he won't take them. You know, Daddy, you have yourself often boasted about Scrap's honesty. You know he has never stolen a thing since he was a little bit of a puppy. I am sure there is no virtue in being honest if things are put so far out of the way that one can't reach them."

"Very well," said her father, "but I'm not looking out for Scrap's virtues just now so much as I am for dinner."

By this time the most of the family had finished eating their soup, and Sister rose to take the dishes from the table, walking very softly toward the door. Once there, she beckoned to her father, who followed quickly and peeped in the kitchen door.

Scrap was no longer snoozing behind the kitchen stove as Sister had left him, but had gone to the other end of the long room, and was lying with his nose in the corner farthest away.

Triumphantly Sister returned to the dining room with the platter in her hands, and Mother carefully counted the chops and said, "Yes, that is exactly the number I cooked." It was perfectly certain that they had not been touched.

"Now, Daddy, what do you say to that?" asked Sister.

"Well," said Father, "I'll tell you just what I think. Scrap is a great deal wiser and better than some people. He not only did not yield to temptation, but he got as far out of the way of it as he could."

"Come here, Scrap. You certainly deserve a reward. Sit up like a gentleman," and Scrap straightened himself up at once on his hind legs, joyfully took the nicely browned chop Father gave him and carried it out to the old back porch, which was his usual dining room.—Zion's Herald.

BEAUTY.

Beauty is a hidden thing,
Not the morning chimes that ring,
Nor whispering rain against the wall,
And plaintive whippoor-wills that call;
Nor is it in the sunset glow,
Or poplar shadows on the snow.
It is not what I hear or see,
For beauty's hiding deep in me;
I only find it when I roll
The stone of self from off my soul,
And let the light of love make real,
That beauty I may hope to feel.

THE MISSIONARY MESSAGE OF THE CROSS.

The word "cross" in the Scriptures never occurs in the plural. To Christ the cross meant one thing, and nothing less: His sacrifice of Himself to save others. That is what it must mean to every disciple—self-abnegation. To take up the cross and bear it after Christ is to undertake, like the Master, a life of self-crucifixion for the saving of others. It is to lose the self-life for His sake. It is to be willing to die, if need be, that others may live. When our Lord hung upon the cross His enemies tauntingly said: "He saved others: Himself He cannot save." No sneer ever hid a truth so sublime. In the Christian life, saving self and saving others are utterly incompatible; and the one great difficulty with the whole body of professed disciples is that most of them are trying to save themselves, and yet be saved. And so it comes to pass that thousands go to church, come to the Lord's Table, utter prayers and bear the name of Christ, yet live a life essentially worldly, and are engaged in no truly soul-saving work. They spend many times as much on self-indulgence as they give to feed the hungry, clothe the naked, or give the Living Bread to dying souls.

Consider what would be the result if every professed child of God could burn with Paul's passion for souls, could know the continual heart burden for the unsaved, that made it possible for him even to wish himself accursed that they might be saved.

That was cross-bearing. The Apostle Paul died daily; he was "crucified with Christ," he bore branded in his body the marks of the Lord Jesus. Could ten thousand of the millions of professed believers burn with such a Christ-like passion for souls, for one year, the Gospel would be carried round the globe within that year. Arguments and appeals are vain while you argue and appeal to the spiritually dead. Before the church can "convert the world," the members of the Church must be converted. The real difficulty is not in unsanctified purses, or unsanctified cradles, but in sanctified hearts.

A light that does not shine, a spring that does not flow, a germ that does not grow, is not more a contradiction than a life in Christ which does not bear witness to Christ. If there be a spring within, there will flow a stream without. If there is no witness, is there any experience? "He that believeth on me," as the Scripture hath said, "out of his innermost being shall flow rivers of living water." He who has no passion to convert, needs conversion. The saved man is not content to have unsaved men go unwarned, or the saving power of God to go unwitnessed.

It may well be doubted whether one who bears no part in testimony to Christ has any part in His salvation. Would that every one might feel the full force of this paradox of missions:

"Christ alone can save this world,
But Christ cannot save this world alone."

MISSIONARY IDEALISM.

Virginia Churchmanship, then, has been evangelical at heart; a tone of moral earnestness has characterized its purpose; it has stood for reverence with simplicity in the ceremonial of worship, and has recognized the manifestation of the same spirit of God in diversities of administration and orders of ministry. The crowning note in Virginia Churchmanship, however, has been its devotion to, and its enthusiasm for the mission of Christ to all the world. From the Virginia Seminary have gone forth the pioneers and the founders of nearly every foreign missionary undertaking of this church of ours. The idealism of missions, whether it be the ministry to the scattered rural parishes of Virginia or to the neglected folk of the Blue Ridge Mountains, or to the non-Christian civilization of the Far East, has been the inspiration and the driving force of the Virginia parishes whenever they have been keenly alive to the call of Christ.

If, in the future, we are to lay hold on that for which we have been laid hold on by Christ Jesus, then never was there greater need for the Church in Virginia to think of the world as its parish than there is today. It is true that missionary methods demand re-thinking and re-shaping in the light of changed conditions, and of increased knowledge, but the world's need of the Gospel of Christ in the solution of its problems was never more urgent. There is no permanent cure for international discord and distrust, save the love of God made manifest in the spirit of brotherhood and the law of service, which Christ has brought to light for the redemption of mankind. We talk of the honor of our country, but what greater honor can our country achieve than to be the servant of humanity in laboring for peace on earth among men of good will.

During the recent years of the depression we Virginia churchmen, with the rest of our countrymen, have yielded to pessimism, have furled our banners and been slowly beating a retreat. We cannot, therefore, better celebrate the Sesquicentennial of the founding of this Diocese than by once again consecrating ourselves to be adventurers for Christ—

"Flying out the banner! let it float
Skyward and seaward, high and wide."

May I not, then, sum up the challenge of the future to the Church in Virginia in the words with which the great Apostle greeted the unseen days that were ahead, "Not that I have already obtained, or am already made perfect, but I press on, if so be that I may lay hold on that for which also I was laid hold on by Christ Jesus."

—Southern Churchman (Episcopal.).

IN THE SECOND YEAR OF REPEAL.

By Dr. John Haynes Holmes.

Clarence Darrow, ablest, sincerest, and most effective of the "wets" in the long campaign against prohibition, is unhappy over repeal. He feels that the "wets are going to as absurd extremes," as he phrases it, in releasing liquor, as the "drys" went in trying to confine it. "In all too many states the bars are almost completely down not only in the sale of beer and wine, but even of the stronger spirits. In many cities whiskey and other strong drink may be freely purchased by any adult, not only in recognized liquor stores, but also in drug stores, cigar stores, and other emporia." If these conditions continue, opines Mr Darrow, prohibition will come back almost as fast as it went away.

This observation does equal credit to Mr. Darrow's honesty and clear vision. After one year of repeal, the situation is appalling to anyone not primarily interested in the "booze" trade as a producer, vendor, or consumer. None of the promises of the "wets" and all the prophecies of the "drys" have been fulfilled. In a little over a twelvemonth we have returned, straight and sure to the scandalous conditions which originally produced prohibition and will in due course produce it again.

It may be well to remind ourselves of what the "wets," in their long campaign for the repeal of prohibition, really guaranteed to the people of this nation. In 1932, for example, a political candidate for a high office delivered a speech which contained the following passage: "Pass this bill [repeal], and within a year all those who are now idle will be employed at high wages; farmers will again be prosperous through heavy demand for their products; railroads will be running extra trains from coast to coast; taxes will be lowered, crime will disappear, and happiness will be restored to the people."

It is not fair to quote these inanities, since serious and sincere men deliberately used "bunk" of this description, as they might have used "booze," to intoxicate men into inebriate fantasies of a land delivered of prohibition and all its ills. The nation was actually persuaded to believe this stuff and thus to destroy the Eighteenth Amendment. But it would be as shameful now to use these wild words against repeal as it was always shameful to use them in favor of repeal. The sober promises of the "wets" were mad enough, as witness these assurances: (1) That the saloon would not come back; (2) that bootlegging would disappear; (3) that crime would diminish; (4) that business recovery would be accelerated and the tax burden indefinitely relieved.

Honest students of the liquor question knew that no one of these pledges could be made good. The conditions promised never had existed while the drink traffic was let loose upon the land. What guarantee was there now that a miracle was suddenly to be achieved through the mere enactment of a new law? The "drys" had been ridiculed unmercifully for trying to bring in an ideal state of affairs by merely passing a law; and here were the "wets" undertaking to do the same identical thing by merely expurging a law. Their failure, of course, is as tragic as it was inevitable.

The saloon has come back in numbers unparalleled in American history. Open bars are multiplying like the swarming devils of Holy Scripture. Added to the old types of saloons, which now flourish without any of the controls built up through decades of struggle and sacrifice, are the innumerable candy stores, drug stores, cigar stores, tea shops, news stands, filling stations, restaurants, night clubs, railroad stations, even theatres, department stores, and clothiers, where liquor can be had as freely as in the wettest days gone by. The one great achievement of prohibition, the banishment of the saloon, hailed by "wets" and "drys" alike, has been undone at a single stroke.

Bootlegging continues as bad as ever. So outrageous was the rum-running on land and sea in 1934 that the Federal Government started a drive in April, 1934, with which Secretary Morgenthau would "hit, and hit hard, this illicit industry." Just eleven months later, in March, 1935, as nothing had been accomplished, another drive was launched, with expectations as innocently sanguine as ever. Meanwhile State Beverage Commissioner Burnett of New Jersey, ridiculed President Roosevelt's characteristically complacent remark that "We have the bootleggers on the run." "You and I wish," he said, "we had them on the run." Then he went on to state the estimate that 50 per cent of the liquor consumed today is illicit was incorrect, and "that the amount was nearly 56 per cent." On February 9th, in Elizabeth, N. J., an illicit distillery, capable of flooding all New York and New Jersey, was uncovered.

Has crime diminished? It hadn't last year. On the contrary, said Col. Calvin Goddard, Director of Research of Northwestern University's Crime Detection Bureau, on September 30th, "Statistics show that certain types of crime are on the increase." This year is the same or rather worse. That's the reason why in February, last, Washington launched a drive against crime of unprecedented intensity and vigor. The bootleggers, gangsters, racketeers were getting wholly out of hand. The official report from New York, dated February 9th, tells the story: One year after repeal criminal offenses reported to the police registered an increase of 2 per cent, and "property lost or stolen during the year, an increase of 37.5 per cent."

As for recovery, perhaps it is just as well not to refer to a sensitive subject. Certainly there has been no very impressive improvement in business, none such as might have been achieved if the millions put into the liquor traffic had gone into other and more wholesome types of industry. As for taxes, this is the disappointment of the age. Pennsylvania has reported monthly receipts on the beer tax at the rate of $4,000,000, as contrasted with an expectation of $20,000,000—a miscalculation of just 75 per cent. Such figures are typical of the entire country.

Repeal is a complete "flop." Nay, worse than a "flop"; it is a tragic betrayal of the public interest and welfare. Yet we might have known all this after generations of experience with the liquor trade—would have known it had we remembered pre-prohibition days instead of allowing ourselves to be obsessed with the indubitable but comparatively trivial evils incident to prohibition. Conditions today are what they have always been when liquor has been loosed upon the land. The consumption of liquor has been enormously increased; intoxication and all its attendant abominations are multiplying beyond endurance; the whole situation is passing out of control. Look at a few fearful facts and figures:

Arrests for drunkenness in 226 cities of the United States in 1934 showed an increase of 26.17 per cent over the last year of prohibition (1933), and an increase of 244.3 per cent over the first year of prohibition (1920).

Arrests of women on charge of drunkenness in 130 cities in 1934 showed an increase of 39.87 per cent over 1933.

Motor-car accidents as reported by the police in 144 cities, revealed an increase in 1934 over 1933 of 5.12 per cent. The National Safety Council, in its 1935 edition of Accident Facts, reported an increase of 13.19 per cent in motor-car accidents. Fatalities in these accidents increased 9.76 per cent. The extent to which drunken driving was a factor in this increase of disaster is indicated by returns from 192 cities, which showed an increase in arrests for drunken driving of 27.12 per cent in 1934 over 1933.

The amount of liquor now being consumed is appalling. Joseph H. Choate, Jr., Director of the Federal Alcohol Control Administration, has estimated that the "entire sales of legal liquor goods [under repeal] have not run far below pre-prohibition figures." In addition to this enormous total, he says, "is the quantity of bootleg spirits which cannot be much less, and may be more, than we drank before prohibition." Obviously we are out to smash all records.

What all this means is plain. State Beverage Commissioner Burnett, of New Jersey, sees the handwriting on the wall and reads it to mean "prohibition back in ten years" unless conditions are changed. And they will not be changed so long as government prefers not to fight but to foster the traffic in "booze."—Nashville Christian Advocate.

CAPITALIZING BIRTHDAYS.

For more than 30 years birthday offerings have been a regular feature in the Sunday school of the Congregational Church of New Hampton, Iowa. The plan was adopted in response to an appeal for funds to help in building a mission school in Africa, sent by a missionary belonging to the church. Her friends cast about for some way of complying with the request. After discussing various ways and means, the birthday plan was adopted. This plan was explained to the children—just where the money was to go and what was to be done with it—and they soon became very enthusiastic. They not only brought their own pennies but they got their fathers and mothers, sisters and brothers and insisted that they all celebrate their birthdays by making a contribution proportional to their years, to the Sunday school.

These birthday funds were augmented by offerings on special days, such as Christmas, Easter, Lincoln's birthday and Children's day. At the end of the year it was discovered that the church was able to send $100 to Africa.

The plan worked so well that it has been continued. Each year $100 are sent to missions by the Sunday school alone, so that in the last 30 years our little school—never over 100 pupils—has given some $3,000 to missions.

Many became so interested that they continue to send their offerings after they move away. Contributions are being received each year from friends in many states, even as far west as California. The first of each month the names of all whose natal day occurs in that month are placed on a blackboard; and when the contribution is made, the amount is recorded opposite the appropriate names. Many of the older pupils and adults do not limit their contributions to the number of their years, so the offerings run from 25 cents to $1.00.

The plan has not only enabled the Sunday school to make its annual contribution to missions but it has been a joy and a delight to all who participate in it.—Missionary Review of the World.

Jesus is pre-eminent among men because he alone has discovered something that is completely satisfying. The immensities of eternity are contained in the conception that ruled the mind of Jesus.—John Short.

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

Rev. F. C. Lester, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

THE ELON SUMMER SCHOOL FOR 1935.

Facts and figures written on paper can never tell the complete story of the Elon Summer School of Leadership Training for 1935. Things happened to the hearts of the 186 who registered and shared in the school that will make them different people throughout the years that lie ahead. The 121 Standard Credit Cards issued may mean much or little to them, but if those who received them strive to pass on the things they learned in the class rooms, then it will mean much. Those who were under sixteen years of age received A Level Credit Cards, and there were several of them. These younger people have made a start in the right direction, and here's hoping that they continue to improve themselves and prepare for Christian living and leadership.

Attendance and credits this year were about double that of last year. The united Elon and Blue Ridge groups worked together to the mutual advantage of both. Congregationalists and Christians couldn't tell each other apart, for they were striving for the very same things and worked together beautifully. From Virginia to Florida they came to study how they can help to build a more Christian world in which to live. They were eager and earnest.

The Youth Fellowship was well represented. Discussions daily centered around the history and program of the young people's movement in our own Church. Most of the officers of the Southeast Fellowship were present. Several state officers were present. It was a great privilege for this writer to lead these young people in their discussions, and it takes no prophet to say that there surely must be a better day ahead for our Church because of the interest of the young people of today. The class was enthusiastic about accepting an invitation from the Florida group for a Christmas Conference in Florida. The president and secretary of the newly formed Pilgrim Fellowship of Florida were in attendance, and invited the group to come to Winter Park next Christmas to make definite plans for future cooperative work. The matter will be referred to the Executive Committee of the Southeast Youth Fellowship for final decision, but there is fine promise for the success of the idea.

Dr. Malcolm Dana and Dr. J. H. Lightbourne made good leaders for the ministers present. Many more of our ministers could have spent the week at Elon with but litle cost and great profit. Several were there and found much of help. One often wonders why all our ministers aren't eager to get into such groups to learn more of the work and to enjoy the Christian fellowship of their brethren and the young people of the Church. If it is not wicked to think so, I hope those who did not go will feel very badly about staying away—so badly in fact that they will be present next year.

One thing that pleased me greatly was that there were some older people present. There were some superintendents, deacons, and other leaders, both men and women. They had a real place and part in the school. They probably feel much younger now and more eager to work in their churches.

The entire group was of high caliber. The teachers did their work well. The officers and leaders never stopped to think of themselves when there were those whom they could serve. The pupils were willing to cooperate in every possible way. Classes, vespers, chapel, play-time, and the Sunday services were all delightful and uplifting. There were real difficulties, but there was plenty of grace and courage to meet the difficulties and turn them into victories. It was a great school—one never to be forgotten by all who were there.

WE WOULD BUILD.

The spirit of modern Christian youth, as I understand it, is expressed in the poem below which was sung to part of the air of "Finlandia," and was used as the conference hymn by the Philadelphia Regional Youth Conference this spring. Christian youth wants to build; to build things that endure and attract. The best they can build is character. See how their poet, Purd E. Deitz, has expressed it:

We would be building; temples still undone,
O'er crumbling walls their crosses scarcely lift
Waiting till love can raise the broken stone,
And hearts creative bridge the human rift;
We would be building, Master, let Thy plan
Reveal the life that God would give to man.

Teach us to build; upon the solid rock
We set the dream that hardens into deed,
Ribbed with steel that time and change doth not mock
The unfailing purpose of our noblest creed;
Teach us to build; O Master, lend us sight
To see the towers gleaming in the light.

O keep us building, Master, may our hands
Ne'er falter when the dream is in our hearts,
When to our ears there come divine commands
And all the pride of sinful will departs;
We build with Thee, O grant enduring worth
Until the Heavenly Kingdom comes on earth.

THE ORPHANAGE DISASTER.

Mr. Johnston, the superintendent, will probably tell in his columns of the fire that destroyed the Orphanage barn one morning last week. The hay was all in, and is gone. Four mules and a calf could not be saved. The Orphanage needed the barn, the hay, and the animals. But the fire took them away. I saw the boys putting hay into the barn, and I saw them cleaning up the debris after the fire. The first scene was fascinating and the last was pathetic. The boys did their job well in either case. They quit themselves like men, and did their duty.

Now they need our help. They are young fellows with hearts just like yours and mine. They have no home of their own, but rejoice in living in the home of the Church. They labored faithfully to feed the cattle so there can be milk and butter for the ninety babies and young people at our Church Home. But the results of their labors has gone up in smoke and lies buried in ashes. How would you feel if you were they?

Here is our chance to help. I think it is conservative to say that the young people of our churches in the Southeast will spend in the next two month uselessly enough money to restore the barn and its contents. Wouldn't it be a bit more Christian to send the cash to the boys at the Orphanage than to spend it for drinks, smokes, auto rides, and other things that do one no real good? I am suggesting that the young people of the churches take this matter to heart, and see what can be done. Get your church to take a real offering and send it to Mr. Johnston right away. It will bring new courage to him, and it will let the young people of the Orphanage know that the young people of the churches are really interested and sympathetic. It will do much to minister to the needy and build a bridge of friendship between the churches and the institution known to us as the Orphanage.

You may be interested to know that the young people in attendance at the Elon Summer School of Leadership Training gave their Sunday offering to the Orphanage to show their appreciation and sympathy. Surely there are thousands of others who will join them in making such an expression. If each of you will do your best the Orphanage can build bigger and better barns. Why not do your best? And do it right away!

Poem:

"Christ, as a light,
Illumine and guide me!
Christ, as a shield, o'ershadow and cover me!
Christ be under me! Christ be over me!
Christ be beside me
On left hand and right!
Christ be before me, behind me, about me!
Christ be this day within and without me!

"Christ, the lowly and meek,
Christ, the All Powerful, be
In the heart of each to whom I speak,
In the mouth of each who speaks to me!
In all who draw near me,
Or see me, or hear me."

Helps for the Speaker—

"Christian Youth in Action" by Frank W. Herriott gives examples of action—projects which have been carried out by American church groups.

"Jes' Like a Natchel Man," the story of the late Richard B. Harrison who played "God" in "Green Pastures," found in March, 1935 issue of "Christian Herald." See how the idea of God has appealed to the colored man. Or to trace the hand of God in a big city read, in that same issue, "Cable Address, Bible, Chicago."

The influence of Jesus is felt as we take up our cross and follow Him. One man says that we are following Jesus only when we apply His teachings in practical ways. What are the evidences about you that prove the widening influence of Jesus? Are young people interested in the move to "Build a New World?" What type of young people are attending summer conferences now? Why do they spend their vacations studying and working when they are greatly in need of rest and quiet?

When asked what they most wanted out of life, what do you suppose one group of young people answered—money, position? No. They answered, "A chance to live honestly; to tell the truth in business as well as on Sunday."

You might make a part or all of this service a candle-light service. I shall long remember the Commission Service for Student Summer Service workers at Elon last Saturday evening. Something which sent us home more eager than ever to serve was stirred within us as we marched out of the chapel, each with a lighted candle, across the campus singing "Follow the Gleam" and then heard the benediction.

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

MOSES (Leader and Lawgiver).

Golden Text: "Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord."—Ps. 33:12a.

Lesson: Exodus, Chapter 24.

The lessons for the Third Quarter present some representative men and women of the Bible. They are brief biographical sketches of great men and women, and as such they have value for us, for there is nothing more inspiring, and more edifying than the stories of real men and women. Ideals become vital when they are clothed in flesh and blood. "Lives of great men (and women also) all remind us, we can make our lives sublime, and departing, leave behind us, footprints on the sands of time." Biography has a double value too. The lives of those who have succeeded show us how and what to do; the lives of those who have failed show us how not to do, and what not to do.

It is impossible, of course, to give a biographical sketch of Moses in one lesson. As liberator, leader and lawgiver, he was too big to be confined to one Sunday school lesson. What the committee has done, therefore, is to take only one incident from his long career, and through it to present one angle of his character.

The Secret of the Lord.

"And Moses alone shall come near the Lord" —it was not because the Lord played favorites: it was because Moses had that spiritual sensitiveness and that responsiveness which made it possible for the Lord to make known to him His will and His word. Aaron and the elders were good men, but they did not have the spiritual gifts that Moses had. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him.

The Words of the Lord.

"And Moses came and told the people all the words of Jehovah, and all the ordinances." God spoke through Moses. The divine message found a medium through this man. Happy is that minister or that Sunday school teacher who knows that God has spoken to and through him.

The Book of the Lord.

"And Moses wrote all the words of Jehovah." It was not a book such as we have but the principle was the same. There is a place in religion for the written word. The Bible does have a legitimate place in religion and in life. In it there is preserved the record of God in human experience. It is a lamp unto our feet and a light unto our pathway.

The Altar of the Lord.

"And Moses rose up early in the morning and builded an altar under the mount." God is spirit, but material things may be symbols of him. An altar signifies the presence of God. An altar is a reminder of God. The individual and the family need that for which the altar stands. So much of our modern life has become meaningless and fruitless because the altars have been broken down.

The Covenant of the Lord.

"And Moses took the blood, and sprinkled it on the people, and said, 'Behold the blood of the covenant, which Jehovah hath made with you concerning these words.'" A covenant is a solemn and binding agreement made between two parties. It is usually sealed as an evidence of good faith. In this case it was sealed with blood —a symbol of life and of sacrifice. That made it a solemn covenant. It was a dim foreshadowing of that "new covenant" which the Son of Man made and sealed with His Own blood. Israel broke her covenant with Jehovah, but Jehovah did not break His covenant with them.

The Law of the Lord.

"I will give thee the tables of stone, the law and the commandment, which I have written, that thou mayest teach them." Moses was the greatest law-giver the world has ever known. With prophetic insight and spiritual genius he interpreted the eternal principles of righteousness. Many of his laws were embodied in temporal figures of speech, but the principles he announced were eternal. It was he who laid the foundation of the Jewish nation, and to this day we are indebted to him for his contribution to civilization.

The Glory of the Lord.

"And the glory of Jehovah abode upon Mount Sinai." The mountain towered above the plain in a majestic way. Silhouetted against the azure blue of the oriental sky it was suggestive of the ineffable glory of the God of Israel. For us however, the glory of God has been revealed in the face of Jesus Christ.

The Voice of the Lord.

"And the Lord called unto Moses out of the mists of the cloud." There is an element of mystery about it. Literally and figuratively there is a cloud about it. But in all the mystery there is enough of certainty. God does not explain everything but He gives us enough light by which to walk. If any will to do, he shall know. If any man wants to hear earnestly enough, he shall understand enough for his needs.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE.

In the early morning of June 27th, the distressing cry, "Fire" was heard! The devouring noise of fire could be heard at our home about one-quarter of a mile away as it consumed timbers and bales of feed and quickly forced death upon four large mules. Machinery, also was destroyed. The large modern barn and milk shed with splendid equipment was a total loss. Virtually everything burnable was burnt. Just a few days before a large crop of hay had been put in, two days before all the wheat and oat straw baled had been stored there. All gone in smoke! I do not know the plans of Superintendent Johnston, nor what action the Board of Trustees will take when they meet.

This note is written asking you to pray for Brother Johnston at this hour when his life is so full of responsibility and this heavy loss comes so unexpectedly. Can you in any way help to lighten his burden and carry part of this loss? Think on these things. Plan a community, or a church cooperative, and in this way raise a liberal offering to help rebuild for this worthy institution of our church.

I know the immediate needs! Will you act now?

With prayer and sympathy,
Jas. L. Foster.

Over the door of a cabinet-maker's shop in London there hangs this sign, "Living Above." It is a notification to customers that he can be found above his shop if the door is locked.

It is a great thing for a worker to be able to say he is "living above" his work; that his dreams and hopes and real life are above the level of his day's toil. He may have to work amid the clods and clutter, but at least he can "live above." No matter how lowly a man's work, his life can be above if his life is hid with Christ in God.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY H. E. ROUNTREE
One of our Chaplains in the U. S. Navy

MONDAY.

"THE GLORIOUS OUTLOOK."

"I have fought a good fight. I have finished my course, I have kept the faith:

"Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them that love His appearing." —II Tim. 4:7, 8.

Speaking appropriately to this text, Henry Van Dyke once said: "And is not the best of all our hopes—the hope of immortality—always before us? How can we be dull and heavy while we have that new experience to look forward to? It will be the most joyful of all our travels and adventures. It will bring us to our best acquaintances and friendships. But there is only one way to get ready for immortality, and that is to love this life and live it as bravely and cheerfully and faithfully as we can."

Prayer—Dear Heavenly Father, one day at the time we come to Thee with the hope and expectancy of the glorious things to come. Be Thou our God this day and make us conscious of Thyself in everything. In Christ's name we ask it. —Amen.

TUESDAY.

"WORSHIP."

"Wherefore receiving a kingdom that cannot be shaken, let us have grace, whereby we may offer service well pleasing to God with reverence and awe."—Heb. 12:28.

Do you really worship when you turn your thoughts to God? Worship was to Jesus a supreme act of identification, where the highest calls to meet the highest. Says Serman, worship is the final witness of the perfected relationship in which men stand to God. It is a consciousness of a mutual spiritual experience between self and God. In Jesus, this consciousness, this oneness with the Father, was so complete in His every moment and His every thought that there was no barrier of discord for Him to overcome. His whole life was an act of worship, Serman reminds us and this oneness was the eternal spirit of His prayers.

This same feeling we all must achieve before we can hope to worship in sincerity and truth.

Prayer—O Lord, this day we seek that consciousness of a personal relationship with Thee that makes us know that we are joint heirs with Jesus Christ Thy Son and our Saviour and elder brother; and then fill our lives with that altruism, friendship, service, and sacrifice that carries Thy Spirit to others and lead them to be also Sons of God. In His name we ask it.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"DELIGHT IN THE LAW."

"Blessed is the man . . . . whose delight is in the law of the Lord; and in His law doth he meditate day and night."—Ps. 1:1, 2.

Jesus demonstrated in His life how it might very well happen that a man should always feel the right impulse with the law. Goodness is not in obedience to the law, neither does law furnish a complete ground for being good. The enlightened mind and conscience understands that there are silent places in the heart to which the law cannot dictate. Out of these silent places comes the springs of life, good or bad. Out of these silent places spring man's delights, and it is a matter of common sense to make these silent places approvable by God. All the law can do is to indicate how this may most readily be done. In other words, a pure man consents to the law, "Thou shalt not commit adultery," and a truthful man to the law, "Thou shalt not bear false witness." Therefore, a righteous man can say, "I delight in the law," and a devout and pious man can say, "I delight in the Law of the Lord."

If this be true, just as soon as a man's heart,—the inner silent place back in the life—questions the law, the complete authority of that law is invalidated. On the other hand, there are good things to be done to which the law has no reference, or when man may even transcend the law. For instance, Jesus healed the sick man on the Sabbath day. This was against the law, but He invoked the law of love and consideration which law transcends the authority of legalism. The song says, "Is thy heart right with God?" and the transcending laws of God is, "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life."

Prayer—Our dear Father, we pray for the power of Jesus to abide within our hearts, and thus make Thou all the issues of our lives the best,—that good that our deeds shall rise to the heavens and to Thee forever. In Christ's name we ask it.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

"SUCCESS OR FAILURE."

"This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith."—I Jno. 5:4.

God will never accept our prayers until we let Him actuate our services. There is no success without God. Success without God crashes somewhere. Success without God does not bring happiness—failure with God brings happiness and that is success.

Rules for success: take God with you. Make the most of your job. Make the most of your mind, and be loyal to your family, your community and the Church.

Prayer—Dear Lord, our God, we look to Thee daily for Thy companionship, Thy fellowship, and Thy guidance, and all of life we leave to Thee.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

"AN EXALTED VIEW OF GOD."

"We . . . have seen the end of the Lord, that the Lord is very pitiful and of tender mercy."—James 5:11.

Nothing is more important than a correct view of God. Error in this is fatal. It is the primal fount of goodness, and the central truth of Christianity. He is "the Father of lights," "the Giver of every good gift," He can do no evil, and He is changeless; and we are the first fruit of His creatures. But more than all this He is pitiful toward the afflictions of man. "He knows our frame that we are but dust."

Reading from the seventh to the eleventh verse, the virtue called for here is not gentle patience, but for brave endurance, and it is the correct view of Him that will give this. The writer is talking about those who are being oppressed. They are to know what He will do for them and know His pity, and to endure because of the deliverance of the Lord from all their oppressions. There was one single truth that Christ kept before His disciples, which was, "Looking unto Him the author and Finisher of faith," and this look would be to them a practical inspiration of endurance, constancy in faith, belief in the vindication of righteousness, and certainty in immortality. And this certainty is represented in the comparison of the stout heart of a farmer, who plants his seeds, tends his crops, waits for the rains and expects the harvest. Such a view of the Lord is a cure to our grumblings.

Prayer—O Lord save us from the resentment against undeserved sufferings, and help us to endure as seeing Thy will fulfilled and the vindication which we shall receive at last from Thee. —Amen.

SATURDAY.

"PATTERN OR POWER."

"That the power of Christ may rest upon me." —II Cor. 12:9.

Power to the inner man is one of the chief functions of Christ in the life,—power "against unclean spirits," "power to become the sons of God, and power to rise to an "endless life." It is true that He said, "I have given you an example," and it is also true that the apostles occasionally referred to the example of Jesus Christ in morals and conduct. And yet how powerless is mere example! Jesus undertook to make men perceive that righteousness is a matter of attitude, motives and principles issuing from the heart, and, as Dr. Serman says, "it is believed that He would have been aghast at the thought of men, in their dealings with one another if they should use Him as a pattern and not as a power."

It is Christ within that is our hope of doing right, and that is given as the reason for His never giving advice for the making of decisions in many of the pressing problems of the day and in many of the moral issues that confront us. He has left it with us to settle our problems by the power of the spirit within, which spirit has never failed one who embraced it and followed its guidance. How beautifully said, "No man need ever be in doubt as to what constitutes right and wrong, provided he keeps in touch with the spirit of the will of God as revealed in the thought and practices of Jesus."

Prayer—Dear Lord, help us in this hour to lay ourselves wholly in Thy hands. Take us and mold us according to Thy will and fill us with Thy eternal truth forever.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

"THE THING THAT COUNTS."

"But who say ye that I am?"—Luke 9:18-27.

The thing that counted in the lives of Peter, John, James, and the rest was not what the general crowd thought of Christ—whether they regarded Him as an incarnation of Isaiah or Jeremiah or John the Baptist—but what Peter and the rest of the disciples individually and in their hearts thought of Christ.

And that is what counts with us. Is He to us an Eastern sage? a worker of wonders? a maker of parables? Is He to us the Supreme Guide, the Protector, the Consoler, the Friend, the Saviour from sin, the eternal Judge, the Son of God, the all-loving, all-wise, all-powerful Ruler of the universe? Is He all this to us?

If He is, then life is transformed to peace and joy, to strength and love.

Prayer—Lord Jesus, Thou are to us everything that is good, and beautiful and helpful. Thou art our friend, to the end of days.—Amen

I HAVE OVERCOME.

By Joseph B. Hunter.

"These things have I spoken unto you, that in me ye may have peace. In the world ye have tribulation; but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world.—John 16:33.

He was a marvelous man. His enemies had him trapped. There was no escape. In fact, he had no idea of trying to get away. They were set on taking his life, and he knew that they would succeed. But the amazing thing is the spirit which he maintained. The enemy could not shatter his morale. He had gathered his men together for a farewell dinner. They did not know what tragedy was just ahead. He knew. He could see it all. They would arrest him, go through a mock trial, trump up charges, have Pilate approve them, and then have him put to death. He knew that the shock would be more than the disciples could stand, that they would leave him and flee. With that picture in mind, he called them together for a farewell meal. He was to be toastmaster and make his last speech. How did he begin? "Let not your heart be troubled." And how did he close? "Be of good cheer." Can you beat that? No, not in all of the records of human history.

"I have overcome." No statement more adequately expresses the nature of Jesus' life. Life is a series of problems. We can either avoid them or accept their challenge. The great majority see those obstacles and shun them. Some go part way and quit. A few overcome.

So many names come to mind, names of people who have overcome. Our President was laid low with infantile paralysis at an age when very few recover from that dread disease, but through discipline and courage and patience and sheer will power he overcame. I like to recall that knotty little Japanese lad who was feeble among his husky brothers. His wise mother would take him on sunny afternoons to the low hills near their home and encourage him to climb one mound and then another. Presently he was a strong boy. His mother had overcome. But the story goes one, for this youth developed a love for climbing mountains. He ascended the different peaks in America and Asia, and one day the news flashed around the world that a man at last had reached the top of Mount Eiger in Switzerland from that approach which had been considered impossible. It was this same Japanese lad. He had overcome.

Jesus could say, "I have overcome my family." They did not want him to be a preacher. They seemed to have had little part in his service when he returned to preach in Nazareth, and when his fame had spread until his name was on every tongue, his mother and his brothers went to his preaching place to take him home. He had to treat them somewhat gruffly. He turned to the people and said that those who do the will of God were his mother and brethren. But that break was not final. Time passed and we find Mary at the cross, and her speedy exaltation by the church must mean that she came to believe in him as the Lord of Life. And when the church in Jerusalem was established, it was James, Jesus' brother, who was the elder, and it is he who wrote that beautiful description of religion: "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and the widows in their affliction, and keep himself unspotted from the world."

I wonder if his experience is not our own. It is frequently the members of one's own family who keep him from giving full expression to his religious yearnings. Many a man sits at home and reads the paper and smokes while his wife takes the children to Bible school and church when he, too, should be exposing his soul to the wooing power of religion.

He overcame his friends. Friends were his support as well as ours. When we are in sorrow or difficulty, it is a friend who stands by our side and buoys us up for the struggle. But we are also hindered by our friends. In our country it is so common for a good man's political career to be wrecked by his friends that it could be called the "American system." Jesus had that kind of trouble. When he had resolved to go to Jerusalem and die for his convictions, it was Peter, the leader of the twelve, who opposed him. But Jesus said to him, "'Get thee behind me, Satan." Would that we could treat our misinformed friends with that same courage.

When Jesus was ready to give the world a new and adequate interpretation of God and life, the thought drove him into the wilderness to meditate. One by one temptations challenged him. Should he resort to the spectacular and sensational method of securing a following? That sort of temptation has caused the fall of many a capable fellower who did not have the courage to say "Get behind me, Satan." He turned away from this and other temptations in the wilderness and made himself of no reputation and took the form of a servant.

As Jesus said, "I have overcome the world," his movement seemed on the verge of collapse. His foes were bartering with Judas for his betrayal. They were gloating over his downfall. But he knew that he was the champion of the moral law of this world. They could win temporarily, but he knew that his spirit would spread across the world and march down through the centuries to battle in every conflict between right and wrong, and keep on battling until right is enthroned. He identified himself with right and he will plague every wilful disregard of his way. Jesus is overcoming. Nations cannot kill now without trying to prove that it is in self-defense or for other's good. Men cannot graft without incurring the moral indignation of the people.

Count Luckner thrills me with this story: Some years ago the German Emperor entertained the King of Italy. A grand banquet was given on the deck of the dreadnaught "Kaiser." The entire fleet was gathered around and 70,000 voices sang German folk songs, Italian operas, and the national anthems of the two nations, while through some ingenious device a search light, like some magic baton in the heavens, beat time across the sky. And presently the search lights from seventy battle ships spelled across the sky "Italy" in letters a mile wide. But that is nothing compared to what some day shall be. With the achievements of radio rapidly advancing, some day millions of people in America will sing "All Praise to Him Who Reigns Above in Majesty Supreme," and all the world shall hear. And then from all England and Scotland shall come the chorus "Blessed Be the Name of the Lord." And perhaps 500,000,000 people in India and China shall sing the "Amen." And in the sky shall appear the name of Jesus. But more glorious still is the confident fact that his name and his spirit shall possess every heart. With every advance which marks progress toward that glorious day he can say, "I have overcome."

Christian Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

Last Thursday morning, June 27th, a little after four o'clock, the writer was called out of a sound and peaceful sleep to be informed that the Orphanage barn was on fire. Our heart sank within us. It was one of the prettiest and most modern barns in this section, and we were very proud of it. The entire Orphanage family prized it very highly. This barn was built six years ago to replace one that was destroyed at that time. The writer was in the hospital at that time, very ill, and my good friend, Mr. J. M. Darden, President, called the Board together and laid plans to raise money to build another, and he took the lead in building the splendid modern barn that went up in smoke on the above mentioned date.

We have no idea as to the origin of the fire as it was too early for the boys to go to work, and none had gotten up, and no one was in the barn. We had just filled the hay loft to its capacity with the finest hay we have ever produced, and just the day before we had threshed wheat and oats and filled the lower floor with baled straw. It is all gone now, and we have forty head of cattle to feed. Four fine mules and one young cow were caught in the blaze, but all the milk cows were in the lot and were saved.

Friends, it made us heart-sick and blue—a large crop on our hands and not a mule to plow a row of corn, and nothing to feed one on. We went home that night heart-broken, down-cast and blue with eyes filled with tears. My little baby boy eleven years old came and put his arms around me and said, "Daddy, don't worry about the barn, it will come out all right"—a child's simple faith. I was reminded of the Scripture, "A little child shall lead them." He, a child, had faith to believe that the church would not let me bear this cross alone, but would come to my rescue in this hour of calamity and distress. The Christian Church has always responded to the call of the Christian Orphanage and as this is the greatest loss we have ever sustained by fire, I have faith to believe they will get much joy out of helping us to rebuild another barn to house our cattle that furnish wholesome milk for these little children.

One man said he would be one of one hundred men to give fifty dollars to cover the loss. How many will accept his challenge? How many will send us a check of any amount to help us in this hour of distress? The barn must be rebuilt. How many churches and Sunday schools will make a special effort to help us?

DEPENDABLE ONES.

Some weeks ago a certain layman whom we have not had the privilege of meeting wrote to the Herald saying that the charge to which his local church belongs would send two lists to the Annual Conference this year, one the dependable ones and the other the non-dependable ones. And he said that the charge would ask that its assessments be based upon the number on the dependable list. Without entering into the merits or demerits of this particular case, let us say that every charge has some of the dependable class and some of the non-dependable ones also. The tragic thing about it is that on every charge we have, there are a lot of church members who do nothing for the church. They may be good Christian people according to their standard, but judged by the standards of the discipline they are not rated very highly. There are some people who go to church fairly well but they do not give much for the support of the church. Some do not have much to give, and others do not give because they do not want to give. There are some few who do not go to church much but who still give something toward the support of the church. There are still others who can be depended on both to attend and to pay. They are the dependable ones. Now let us think for a moment how much these people are worth, both to the church and to the community. Their religious life is like the river that is fed by the melting snows of yonder mountainside. They are perennial Christians. When the Sabbath day dawns they are found making preparations to go to the church services. Company does not often keep them away, for people know they are church-goers and that if company goes to that home the company will have to go to church. When the time for the service to start arrives they are already in the pew. They have a hymn book in hand so that they can enter immediately into the worship. When the worship is over and the minister is ready to take his text they are still there, both in mind and in body. Their minds are on the service and they are there to get as much as possible out of the service. While the minister preaches they listen with both ears open. It is a pleasure to preach to them. They have made their contribution to the church, both with their presence and their offering, and now they are ready to hear all that God has to say to them through the minister. When the minister makes a good point they are quick to catch it, for they are looking for it. When the service is over they are still dependable, for they feel some responsibility to the strangers and the visitors, and so they offer the glad hand of fellowship to those within the church building. Then they pass peacefully out at the door, go to their homes, and they are still dependable. They can be trusted during the week to carry on the work of the church in the community. The Sunday services are important, but the things that are done by the church during the week are also important. They are on the lookout during the week for new people for the church. They go into the homes of the people and while they are not ordained preachers yet they are messengers of Christ. They are a blessing to the homes they visit. They are not gossipers with the latest things that are going the rounds, but they are God's messengers, carrying the gospel of good cheer to people everywhere. They are interested in the good name of the church and they want the church to succeed. They are interested in the indifferent ones and want them aroused, and they do all they can do to bring the indifferent ones back to the church. They are interested in poor lost sinners and want to see them saved. They do all they can to influence people for Christ. They go the even tenor of their way, the preacher knows they can be depended on and so he does not have to worry about them. When the minister sits down to meditate they come into his mind and he thanks God for them and says to the other members of his family, "What a pleasure it would be to serve a whole church like these." The church is made better because they are a part of it, the community is richer because they live, people are saved to a better life because they came in contact with them. Finally, when faith is made perfect and God has been sufficiently glorified by their lives, He reaches down, and lifts them up to His paradise, and they are with Him forevermore, all because they were dependable. God give us dependable church members—Methodist Protestant Herald.

Herbert Hoover, in broadcasting a message in support of the small colleges that are now having such a difficult time in meeting their budgets, made the following statement: "Whatever be the magnificent services of the larger and highly specialized universities, the liberal arts colleges place such an emphasis upon personal contacts of teacher and student which renders them a vital part of our educational system. A primary purpose of education is a product of high character and noble ideas, which regard moral and spiritual qualities superior to mere material things, without which any purely economic system would collapse. Throughout our history these colleges have been and are now the seedbeds of leadership. They have contributed a large part of the presence in our land of nearly 3,000,000 college trained men and women. . . . The finest traditions in our country are rooted in their associations and their inspiration."—Watchman-Examiner.

OBITUARIES

ISLEY.

Whereas it was the will of our Heavenly Father to call our friend and brother, W. F. Isley, we again affirm our faith in the precious promises of Christ concerning the provision made for those who love and serve Him. Be it therefore resolved by the Loyal Meu's Bible Class of First Christian Church:

1. That we reverenty bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father who doeth all things well.

2. That we express to his bereft one our sincerest sympathies. And we commend them to Him who has promised never to leave nor forsake us.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be entered upon the minutes of our class, a copy to the family, and a copy to The Christian Sun for publication.

CARR.

Whereas our Heavenly Father in His infinite love and wisdom saw fit on March the 9th, 1935, to call from our midst, Brother Jessie Carr, one of the faithful members of the First Christian Church of Portsmouth, and also of the Men's Bible Class, from the cares and anxieties of this earthly life to his eternal reward beyond, Therefore be it resolved:

1st. That we are grateful for what his life has meant to us, for the peaceful, kiud and happy life that seemed to be his.

2nd. We feel that we have been blessed by having him with us, and we will cherish the memory of his quiet and peaceful personality.

3rd. That we will strive to remember, emulate and profit by all that was good and true and worthy in his life.

4th. That we extend to his wife and the children our deepest sympathy, realizing that they have lost a good, kind and loving husband and father.

5th. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the members of the family, spread upon our class records, a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

American Bible Society Moves.—

The American Bible Society, which since 1852 has been located in a building bounded by Fourth and Third Avenues, between 8th and 9th Streets in New York City, has purchased a modern fireproof building at the southwest corner of Park Avenue and 57th Street, and will move its offices into its new building as soon as extensive alterations are made.

No Redress for Drunken Motorists.—

A legal ruling which has been upheld by the highest court in Canada, is that no redress may be secured from insurance companies by motorists for accidents if it is found that such persons were driving cars while intoxicated. A similar ruling the United States would do much to reduce the accident insurance rates of motorists who abstain from the use of intoxicating liquor while operating automobiles.

China's "Dragon River" Again on Rampage.—

The mighty Yangtse River, which has in time past spread disaster and destruction in its wake, was again, this week, reported as having overflowed its banks carrying ruin in its wake. Already property loss has reached enormous figures, and several large cities of central China and hundreds of villages are menaced. If the river continues to rise for another few feet, it is estimated that not less than 25,000 square miles of the nation's richest farm lands will be inundated, making more than 25,000,000 people homeless.

Wine Unnecessary in Communion.—

The question has been raised as to why the Roman Catholic Church does not serve wine to its communicants when administering the Communion. A Catholic priest gives the following answer: "The Catholic Church believes that the communicant receives the living Body of Christ which, therefore, contains also His Blood as well as His Soul and Divinity. Hence the Church considers communion for the laity under the form of wine unnecessary." The priest did not explain why the priesthood did partake of the wine.

Gandhi Would Not Kill the Rats.—

Mahatma Gandhi has appeared in a new role if the London Times is correct in its report. He is opposed to rat-killing even to prevent the plague. It is said that fleas carry the plague from rats to human beings, and one of the first steps in the elimination of this dread disease is the destruction of the rats. Gandhi, in a recent address, is reported to have said: "An advocate of non-violence like myself would die before killing rats. We should by strict observance, no less than by sanitation, prevent rats from breeding."

North Carolina Leads in Tax Payments.—

North Carolina and Virginia made the best showing in the South in tax payments to the National Government for the past fiscal year. North Carolina led with the following: Corporations, $8,822,195; individual incomes, $5,825,541; internal revenue, $235,233,795; and AAA taxes, $33,796,013. Virginia came next with corporation income taxes of $7,335,412; individual income taxes of $3,450,249; internal revenue taxes of $119,263,341, and AAA taxes amounting to $11,210,648. Mississippi stood lowest among the Southern States as a Federal tax-paying state.

Jewish Rabbis Would Conscript Wealth.—

The Central Conference of American Rabbis, which is composed of reformed rabbis, were urged at their recent meeting in Chicago to advocate a tax program which would redistribute the nation's wealth. Dr. S. E. Goldstein, chairman of the Commission of Social Justice, declared: "The government must exercise its power to conscript the income accumulated in order to save the mass of people of America from misery and despair." He claimed that reactionary groups were, in the name of patriotism, engaged in unpatriotic efforts to limit American liberties, but at the same time cautioned that the dangers from communism and fascism were growing greater. The report also favored the socialization of the basic enterprises in the United States.

Baptists Protest Acts of Nazis.—

During the recent sessions of the Northern Baptist Convention, resolutions were passed by that body protesting the interference by the present German government with matters pertaining solely to religion, and denying the right of any church to enter into relations with a state which might compromise its witness or limit its freedom. The resolution claimed for all religious bodies full liberty in matters of faith and worship and the unrestricted right to preach and teach the truth as it was revealed to them. It was asserted that state patronage or control of religion tended to secularize the Church rather than to spiritualize the state. Sympathy was expressed for German ministers and laity "who in facing dangers and deprivations."

Going a Little Too Far.—

Deets Pickett, who is Research Secretary of the Methodist Board of Temperance and Moral Reforms, thinks that it is going just a little bit too far when a "self-respecting Representative (Kenney) is willing to introduce proposed legislation to legalize a national lottery." He declares: "With drinking and drunkenness increasing on every hand, with the underworld riding the neck of legitimate business, and with the general breakdown of those moral convictions without which prosperity and home stability are impossible, it does seem that no one would propose such an utterly reprehensible institution as a national lottery. Prohibition repeal seems actually to have increased the illegal sale of liquor; the legalization of gambling will certainly increase interest in gambling, and consequently the activities and exactions of criminals who exploit the greed and credulity of the people."

Are Taxes Paid Differently Now?—

President Roosevelt, in his famous Pittsburgh speech on October 19, 1932, as he was nearing the end of the campaign which carried him into the White House, said: "Taxes are paid in the sweat of every man who labors, because they are a burden on production and can be paid only by production. If excessive, they are reflected in idle factories, tax-sold farms, and hence, in hordes of the hungry tramping the streets and seeking jobs in vain. Our workers may never see a tax bill, but they pay in deductions from wages, in increased cost of what they buy, or in broad cessation of employment." No more accurate and concise description of how taxes are paid has ever been given. It was sound statement when spoken, and it is quite as true now. Yet our burden of debt has been increased by approximately $13,000,000,000 since that statement was made, and the government is demanding new sources of revenue—higher taxes, that the laboring man must eventually pay.

Will "Il Duce" Have His Way?—

What is to be the outcome of the disagreement that has arisen between the Italian Government and that of Ethiopia? Ethiopia is the only really independent nation of black men, and Italy's greed has been looking for a chance to snatch sovereignty from these people. And now the path from Rome to Addis Ababa seems clear. Official circles in Rome say that, regardless of England's protest, there seems little possibility of English interference. France is friendly neutral, and Russia will follow the lead of France. Germany, too, is now friendly to the schemes of Mussolini, and the United States has declared a policy of hands off. Nowhere else can this little African nation turn, unless it is to Japan, for protection; and Japan, though friendly and with ever increasing commercial interests in Ethiopia, has her hands full in the East. There is no doubt that Italy intends to take the offensive. Does this mean that regardless of what is right, Ethiopia will be reduced to an Italian dependency? Ethiopia will not surrender without a struggle, but the outcome is already decided unless moral suasion be brought to bear by the great nations of the earth upon the dictator of Italy.

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

The typist in last week's SUN made us say that Dr. H. Shelton Smith's topic of his Sunday sermon at Elon College, June 30th, was "'O' Father"; whereas, the copy was "Our Father." Apologies of the proof-reader and compositor to Dr. Smith and to SUN readers.

THE SUN'S editor has the following from Dr. Fred Field Goodsell, Mission Secretary of the American Board, who is now on a visit to our mission fields in the Orient: "March 18, 1935, Nova Lisboa-Angola, Portuguese West Africa. Dear Dr. Atkinson: Greetings and best wishes. Our missions here command my highest respect and loyalty."

A very pleasant visitor to THE SUN'S editor July 5th was Rev. Wm. T. Scott, pastor, United Church, Winston-Salem, N. C. Brother Scott is doing a constructive work in Winston, and one whose steady growth and influence will be realized more and more as the years come and go. His present great need is for a parsonage, which is essential to every church and pastorate. Here is wishing him success in this worthy aspiration.

Rev. and Mrs. R. T. Grissom from Fancy Gap, Va., say: "We are happy to report a well attended Bible School. There were fifty-one enrolled and almost perfect attendance. We think the entire time spent was profitable. We are happy to report that the people of our two churches here are willing to do what they can in helping to finance the work. Our revival begins Sunday, July 7th. We are hoping and trusting that our meetings this year may be far-reaching in spiritual things. Pray for us."

Rev. G. D. Hunt, Lanett, Ala., is making a supreme effort to clear the Lanett Church of all indebtedness during this month. He has labored faithfully to this end, and now that the total of the indebtedness is not so great, he hopes, with united effort of his people, to wipe out the last dime of it. There is no pastor more faithful and zealous than is Brother Hunt, and the efforts he puts forth in the ministry deserve the heartiest cooperation and support.

Readers of THE SUN will read with much regret the following note from the pen of Mrs. Herbert Harrell, Secretary of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Board: "Mrs. J. E. Cartwright, President of the Woman's Mission Board of the Eastern Virginia Conference, fell and broke her hip, while attending Mission Conference at Eagles Mere, Pa. She is in the Muncy Valley Hospital, Muncy, Pa., and will be there from six to ten weeks. Mrs. Cartwright has done excellent work for the Conference, and although she is down is not out of the work of Missions. Her message is vital, and may every woman of every society rally to her support and meet the challenge that she has given them, with their prayers and their efforts."

It will learned with genuine regret by SUN readers, who have come to know him and esteem him so highly, that, under the rule of the Boards, under whose auspices he serves, Rev. Milo J. Sweet, pastor-at-large for the Carolinas and Georgia, will automatically retire from this service on April first, 1936. A person serving in the capacity of superintendent or pastor-at-large automatically retires at a certain fixed age from this service. Brother Sweet is certainly a power for good and a tireless worker in the field he has served so well, and desires that he may be used by his constituency to the greatest advantage possible during the remaining months of his tenure. "I am enjoying with genuine satisfaction the cordial fellowship accorded me so generously by all during my years among the churches of my territory." Brother Sweet has proven himself a wise master builder and a good executive, and has won the admiration and esteem of the brotherhood of his entire constituency. Here is devoutly hoping that a work to his liking and experience will claim his time and devoted energy as soon as his present duties are ended next April.

THE PRIVILIGES OF A MINISTER.

By CLARENCE A. VINCENT, D. D.

ARTICLE V.

AN INTERPRETER.

To interpret the Scriptures, their bearings on individual life and duties and social needs and ideals, to men and women is a most delicate task. To conserve the permanent facts and truths that the past has discovered, to catch the light that the Scriptures and Science can give upon the new problems of life and to reflect it into others to awaken and enrich them, and to hold up personal and social ideals and enrich men and women and youth to possess them and live for them, is a sacred responsibility and privilege.

To do this in the regular daily ministries of a pulpit and pastorate requires an active mind, a spiritual insight, a deep and controlled sympathy and a consummate tact. To make the sermon, not a thing in itself, however artistically perfect, a message to the people that will summon, encourage, quicken and comfort them, to delicately contact people in their varied needs in the calls of the pastorate, is a ministry that angels might covet. One of the joys of later years is the expression of those who were helped in the earlier days by one's sermons or pastoral contacts, of which the minister knew nothing at the time.

To be an interpreter in a critical and fault-finding time like today requires a wise spirit and a keen mind. When the writer was a lad, the theories about the Scriptures and the interpretation of its passages were rather mechanical. In most pulpits Creation took place in six days of twenty-four hours each, but the newer interpretations of the Higher Criticism were just coming and were considered by the masses as dangerous. The minister who saw the new and truer interpretations and would give them to his people often had a stormy reception. To hold up the reliability of the truths and facts of the Scriptures and to show the human elements in it and the mistakes in the interpretations of it, was a task that required wisdom. Some ministers fought the newer interpretations and others became destructive and it is difficult to decide which caused the widest injury to the life of the church. But many ministers were careful in their approach but none the less honest, and led their people into the larger and truer interpretations.

Then came evolution. To some it was a red rag; to others, the solution of all difficulties. To the wise ones, it was God's way of creating the world and man, and made the creation a far-reaching, never-ending process of the Creator. The first two classes split their churches, the last class strengthened and broadened the spirit and work of the churches.

Today, most ministers are deeply concerned about the social conditions of the world. Shall men live together in mutual helpfulness or will they tear one another in pieces? Will the stronger races bear the burdens of the weaker races and help them to strength and character, or will they be overbearing and oppressive? Will the Nations live the gospel in peace and justice or will they destroy one another and civilization in greed and war? Will the Brotherhood of Jesus permeate the spirit of the world, or not?

The Minister must combine frankness in his statements of the spirit and teachings of brotherhood, but must not in his fearlessness be overbearing. He must urge that justice must come now into life's relationship, but must have patience as the coming of the kingdom of God drags. Conditions require immediate solution, but the minister who gets abusive and peevish delays rather than aids the cause.

Dr. Gladden, Josiah Strong and Professor Ely spoke fearlessly but constructively. After all, the coming of the kingdoms of this world into the Kingdom of God is a slow process. We humans are so slow to learn, still we do learn and finally the "kingdoms of this world are become kingdoms of our God and of his Christ."

BEREA AND BETHLEHEM.

With the coming of June, came many things of deep interest to our folk around here in Alamance County and especially to the folk of Berea and Bethlehem Christian Churches. The first Sunday in June was our memorial service at Berea, the which was, as usual, largely attended, also it marked the beginning of the revival meeting. Brothers Aubrey Todd and Billy Andes came to our rescue and did some exceedingly fine work among our young people. Each week-day morning they put on a Bible school which had an average attendance of thirty-seven members per day for the two weeks. The results of this school were gratifying. Then at night they held special services for the two weeks, and as a result of this special meeting, we have received twelve new members, with four more to unite later.

Much interest was manifested among the young folk, in fact the larger part of our additions were among the youth, with ages ranging in the late teens and early twenties. There is a very fine group of young folk in Berea and more than that, they are doing some fine work, few churches if any can boast of a finer group, or better work being done among the young people than can Berea. The church, as it has never failed to do as yet, remembered us with a splendid pounding at the close of the meeting, for which we are deeply grateful.

The week following the third Sunday in June, Aubrey Todd and Billy Andes came over to Bethlehem and started with a Bible school, it being our first attempt here. The membership being largely comprised of country folk, we wondered just how the response would be, but to our surprise, they stormed in on us and our daily average in attendance was forty, with such pleasing results that another was spoken for next year. The larger girls came to the rescue and helped in the teaching. Then the last three nights of the week, we had a young people's round-up for this church and many were present. This meeting resulted in a deeper consecration and a burning desire to walk a bit closer to Him Who is the young person's best friend.

We could not begin to sum up all the value these two young men were to the community and especially to these two churches. They present a very pleasing and acceptable program; one that will live. I should heartily commend them to any church. G. C. CRUTCHFIELD.

A DIVIDED CHURCH IN A DIVIDED WORLD.

By Dr. H. Shelton Smith.

Current society is the child of an order that was conceived in dissent and born in division. Political dissent led to the break-up of empire and the rise of nationalist states. Economic dissent destroyed feudalism in favor of capitalism. Religious dissent, in response to totalitarian resistance, created a multitude of denominations.

Throughout modern times we have sought to achieve our social and spiritual destiny by setting the interests of one group or class over against those of another. As Nationalist Americans, we have shown wherein our nation was better than other nations; as politicians, we have stressed the superior virtues of our political party; as business men, we have demonstrated wherein the wares of our group were better than those of another; as churchmen, we have gloried in those things which divided us. The net result is an atomistic society shot through and through with conflict. In none of its aspects is present-day society an organism; it is a bedlam of suicidal competitions.

Conceivably many of the revolts of history were humanity's only way out of situations adamant against change. Growth through change is an inherent principle of life, and when old patterns of human society resist reconstruction from within, then perhaps there is no way out except to form new groups; for worse even than division is arrested growth. But whatever may be history's justification for the social and spiritual schisms of yesterday, tomorrow's destiny is tragically clear if we continue to move along the path of unlimited division and conflict.

Nowhere is this more true than in the field of religion. In theory, Christianity is a religion of a common Father, under whom men are one in Christ, irrespective of race, class or creed. Nevertheless, the church as a human society is tragically riven by all the forces that operate to divide men in their secular relations.

I. Racialism.

Is the secular world divided by racialism? So is organized religion.

Rooted as Christianity is in Judaism, one might suppose that Christians and Jews would have found much common ground for fellowship and service. But alas, the record is one long story of mutual hate and suspicion, with frequent outbursts of violence. In Germany, a terrific struggle is in process over the question of whether or not members of the Jewish race may enjoy fellowship in a Christian church. Extreme Nazis reject much of the Old Testament. The thought that Jesus was a Jew is intolerable to them.

But we Americans should beware how we toss Semitic stones at Germans. Only in rarest instances have we practiced religious fellowship across Jewish-Gentile lines. Our anti-Semitic restrictions in clubs, hotels, and apartment houses bear witness to the fact that racial alienation rather than brotherhood marks our most fundamental attitudes. As yet, the church has found no assured way to transcend such racial prejudices. Moreover, if we find it hard to scale the wall which separates us from our Semitic friends, how much more difficult is it for us to rise above the barriers which separate us from our brothers in black. We send missionaries to practice brotherly fellowship across color bars in Africa, but we all too frequently draw back from practicing the gospel at the home base. Jim Crowism separates us not alone in our secular pursuits, but also in our religious worship. If public schools run lines of racial division through our secular communities, so do our church schools and colleges.

II. Class Conflict.

Does the economic order suffer from class conflict? So does organized religion!

In a certain industrial town a few years ago a textile strike took place. Capital and labor split into warring groups. The ministerial association also split. Pastors of the workers sympathized with the laborers; pastors of the managers, with the owning class. Two ministerial bodies were organized on class lines, and yet each continued to pray the Lord's Prayer fervently.

Not long ago a well-known downtown wealthy church became concerned to help a group of underprivileged folk in the slum section of the city. A mission was founded; a Sunday school was organized; the experiment succeeded in establishing some wholesale contacts between two classes of the community. In course of time, however, some of the more active youth of the mission became interested in the fathering church, and applied for membership in it. Here these youngsters got a moral shock, for they were told that there was no room for them in the church of their choice. This church was interested in sending the gospel to the disinherited, but it did not wish to worship with them at a common altar. Thus do our missions, whether at home or abroad, so often get reduced to religious paternalism.

If one seeks the cause of the rise of religious denominations in the United States, he will soon realize that one of the most prolific sources of new sects, also a fundamental cause of perpetuating sectarian differences, is social-economic status. Immigrants came to our shores only to find cool reception from the established churches, partly because of belonging to the class of the disinherited.

It is a matter of concern that so many workers are abandoning the established churches. Rightly or wrongly, they feel that the churches are mainly on the side of the privileged. If this secession of the lower class goes on unchecked, it will become increasingly difficult for the church to wield spiritual influence among them. As a result, the more radical nostrums will be espoused by the workers, and used not only to further their interests, but also to undermine organized Christianity itself.

III. Rugged Individualism.

Does the secular world suffer from rugged individualism? So does organized Christianity!

In this United States there are 212 different denominations with an aggregate of 232,000 local churches. For their support in 1926, the people gave $817,000,000. This powerful system of churches, like great chain stores, reaches down to every hamlet. For most of our history, these groups, like business, have acted under the principle of laissez faire; they have planted churches freely wherever they could muster a handful of folks. They have also moved into the urban centers in equally free-lance fashion. Whether, therefore, we look at the big city or the neighborhood village we witness a sad situation.

The little community is so over-churched as a rule that no one church can provide an adequate ministry. Most small town and village ministers are virtually Sunday visitors to their little parishes. They confine their activity all too largely to a verbalization of the gospel. A through-the-week program adapted to young and old and related organically to the life of the community is an impossibility. But even if every minister could be on hand daily, these villages would still be the victims of a religious system which will never allow the churches to see the community as a whole.

In the larger urban centers, organized religion is fighting for its very life. Through these mammoth congeries of human kind the secular tide flows swift and cold. The forces of moral corruption create cross-currents of prodigious power. To watch a multitude of isolated and individualistic denominational ships rocking to and fro on this ocean of titanic evil is tragic!

IV. The Practice of Violence.

Does the secular world break into violence and murder? So does Christianity!

The World War is so vividly in the background of our minds that this point need not be labored. We remember how peace societies collapsed, or went into winter quarters; how pacifists were ridiculed; how non-conformists were denied freedom of speech, of assembly, of press. Christianity bowed in obesiance to the secular State, while the latter served as the voice of God. "The State must be obeyed," said a churchman, "under pain of incurring the guilt of mutiny against God." Another solemnly reminded us that "It is neither a travesty nor exaggeration to call this war, on the part of America, a truly Holy war."

In this mood, we searched the Old Testament for a God of wrath; we created a theology of blood and thunder; we put a bayonet in the hand of Christ. A university friend of mine wrote a book for raw recruits, in which he said to them, "I would not enter this work till I could see Jesus himself sighting down a gun barrel and running a bayonet through an enemy's body." Thus the churches experienced a revival of religion, but it was a religion born of hate and bathed in blood.

SUBSCRIPTION RECEIPTS.

The following subscriptions have been received since our last report which was made in May. For this period there should have been not less than 250 renewals turned in. This list shows only thirty-two. We appreciate the thoughtfulness of those who have remitted, but cannot but wonder what has become of the over two hundred that should have renewed their subscriptions during this time. If you are one of those who has neglected to send in your renewal, will you not do so at once? Look on your label, see if you are in arrears, and if you are, help us by sending in your remittance.

Sincerely yours,

THE PRINCIPLES OF OUR CHURCH:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, as associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here, denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THERE WAS A FAMINE IN THE LAND.

(The Book of Ruth.)

The Book of Ruth, the gem of the Old Testament and the joy of all readers, will come under purview of teachers and pupils, Sunday, July 14th. The beauty of the book, as well as the benefit of it for us, is its application to our day and generation. Its opening sentence is startling and significant: "In the days when the judges ruled, there was a famine in the land." The day of judgment always brings famine. We are in such a day now. The judges have judged. They have weighed us in the balance and found us wanting. They have declared we are unconstitutional, and we are. In fact figures and conclusions, which none can escape, had spoken before the judges rendered their verdict. The famine in the land had driven us into strange company. We found ourselves in the company of exploiters, racketeers and all kinds of evil doers. Church treasuries were empty because righteousness wanted. We were calling home missionaries by the hundreds, church pews were empty and the souls of men and women were crying for the Bread of Life.

From of old God has brought about famine to drive men and women to do the best even against their will. Naomi and her husband, and their two sons, had no longing to go into the heathen land of Moab. They had to be driven into that land of pagans and hated illegitimates. But being driven there, they found a jewel. Ruth was not a Jewess, but she was more than a Jewess. She was capable of becoming one of the fair daughters of God and immortality. No, the way of man has never been the way that leads to helping the most helpless and reaching and redeeming the most needy. Men and women have had to be driven to that task by their Creator in order that their own souls may be refreshed and saved. Naomi not only found Ruth, who was to be famous and noted for all time, but she found her own soul and a real friend and thus made herself noted for all time to come. Naomi was a foreign missionary in the truest sense of the word, driven as men and women have to be driven to do their noblest tasks, that of world redemption and salvation, even against their will. Naomi went out to escape a famine and, through her suffering and sorrow, found a friend and fame. It really seems that God has to bring famine to His church and make His church face that famine to realize that it is the duty and privilege of that church to go to fields afar there to find its truest friends and noblest devotees. So it comes to pass that a church engages in Missions not merely to save the souls of heathens, but to save its own souls from famine and death.

Jonah, the most noted missionary of the Old Testament, had to be driven to Ninevah under the lash of God, there to find his own soul as well as to redeem a pagan people. Jonah had to go by way of a stormy sea and the belly of a great fish before he could discover and acknowledge his own need and pray for his own deliverance. Thus Jonah not only found Nineveh and preached the gospel of salvation, but he found his own soul, and made himself useful and famous to all generations to come.

It was so in the early church. These early churchmen clung to the home base until there was famine in the land. That famine was one of threatened destruction and death. And now read the first verse of the 8th chapter of Acts: "There was a great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem; and they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judaea and Samaria, except the apostles." There you are. The apostles would not go from Jerusalem. They must hug the home base and let their own souls hunger and famish. Then history begins to crowd about others. Saul, who was called Paul, emerges, and driven by persecution, beatings and shipwrecks, foes within and without, Paul bore the message of the Cross to aliens and, in doing so, found his own soul, fought a good fight and won a great race. The Book of Ruth is a typically modern, up-to-date missionary document. It tells of how God had to drive through famine in order to reach fairest friends and highest and holiest aims. Ruth is herself a heroine, whose soul was reached by one who loved God so well and served Him so diligently that she made her own God Jehovah live, rule and reign in the heart of her daughter-in-law, who came to be her dearest friend, the solace and comfort, the joy and gladness of her declining years. It is very easy for us to be kind to those around about us, to be benevolent and ready to help those in need, physically, at every call, but it is another and quite a different thing to submit to the will of God and to be willing to go out and reach the remotest and the most needy and, in the name and for the sake of our God, reach the unreached and save the unsaved. Next to the Book of Jonah, the Book of Ruth stands out as the most striking, sublime and true missionary book of the Old Testament, and of all time.

CONCERNING THE ELON SUMMER SCHOOL.

Back in the office after nearly three weeks touring of Summer Conferences, it is a pleasure to think back over the experiences with these fine groups of young people and I have just been reading with interest the reports and appreciations in The Sun. I would like to express my appreciation and estimate along with the others.

Those of us who have been going to Blue Ridge contemplated giving it up with some degree of reluctance, regret and perhaps question. However, I think all are thoroughly satisfied that this summer program was the best. Between the Grandview Conference, which took the place of Blue Ridge for the western states of this region, and the Elon Summer School of Leadership Training, there were about two hundred more than would have been at Blue Ridge. We were all pleased with Elon as a meeting place and feel that the College campus is a fine environment for such a school. The group of young people, and older ones also, that gathered were an unusually fine lot, with high purpose, determination, and serious interest, combined with happy disposition. The high proportion receiving credits is noted and we knew that these were gained under teachers who did not take the work lightly. In fact, we had a splendid group of teachers at Elon.

The credit for the courses of study, the selection of the faculty and the general direction of all that was most important in the school belongs to the Dean, Rev. F. C. Lester. It was a pleasure to work with him and share with him in the responsibilities of the Conference. If taking some of the details of administration was any help to him, the writer was glad thus to serve. It would be a temptation to list each one of those who labored for the success of the school and to give them credit and recognition for their fine service. Having the business affairs of the school more directly under my care I wish to speak particularly of the very fine work (and hard work too) of Miss Irene Cotten as Registrar and Treasurer, and general bookkeeper, and Mrs. W. B. Williams as hostess. Such devotion and such thoroughness deserve special recognition, though one is aware that all in the other departments deserve mention also.

As for the future, one feels that the Elon Summer School has become a permanent feature of our United Fellowship program, as serving the states in the Southern Convention and also Georgia and Florida. I would hope that we could increase the attendance another year among the older church workers and the pastors without lessening the number of young people. It would be a fine think to develop Elon Summer School not only as a school for members of the Youth Fellowship but also have it serve in a way as a postgraduate school for those who have attended young people's conferences in previous years. There is also a fine place for the development of the pastoral fellowship through this Elon Summer School, and we hope that this can be developed in the future.

It was a pleasure to see Dr. Atkinson and Dr. Rowland occasionally among us, also Dr. Lankford. We shall all look forward with pleasure to next year's school, and look back with gratitude for the fine experiences of the Summer School for 1935.

BY THE TRAINLOAD.

Repealists and the wet press join in the repeated acclaim that trucks and automobiles were smuggling rum across the Canadian line into the United States. Therefore, repeal the 18th Amendment and stop flooding our land with Canadian whiskey. We wonder how our repealist friends and the wet press viewed this report among many others of its kind:

"Only recently is was reported that 100,000 cases of bonded whiskey had been purchased by a certain liquor firm of New York, and that the first four trainloads would arrive within a week. The purchase was valued at $6,300,000, on which the duties and taxes would be $210,000."

The company of distillers that makes this purchase announced that it will spend $250,000 in advertising its liquor, and these advertisements will appear in 175 American newspapers.

Of course, the readers of the wet press, whose editorials and other propaganda "educated" (?) the people against prohibition, will understand why these papers acted as they did. They were hungry for this advertisement, and not a few individual papers, still circulating in the homes of our country, are said to be reaping from $100,000 to $500,000 a year from their whiskey advertisements. Several North Carolina counties are now opening stores for the sale of liquor. This, in spite of the fact that stores that sell liquor legally in the neighboring state of Virginia have succeeded in increasing public drunkenness in that state 22 per cent within a year over that of the previous year. In spite also of the fact that South Dakota, that opened liquor stores last March, has discovered and now declares that the new law of control is beneficial only to the bootleggers and that a widespread demand for a referendum is being made. Iowa, after trying control for three months, has become disillusioned and discovers that "for every dollar the state receives in taxes, the people have to spend $21.41 for beer." But the worst phase of the present propaganda is that of the liquor dealers to induce the women of America. The New York Herald-Tribune recently carried in its advertising columns an open letter to the women of America on whiskey. It advertises that the women can get intense satisfaction and joy out of a certain brand of whiskey since "it possesses that softness and satin-smoothness that a discriminating woman naturally seeks. We hope, therefore, that on your next occasion for hospitality, you will serve ———— (here the particular brand is named). We are confident that you will then appreciate why—in this new era of temperate drinking which you have done so much to create—this mellow whiskey is selected by so many American women." Thus the distillers would, with their wares, induce the women of our homes and hearts to engage in that which has done more than all war and pestilence to kill and to destroy all that is noblest and best. Mr. Joseph H. Choates, Jr., director of the Federal Alcohol Control Administration, has written the firm of distillers who published this advertisement and protested that with such efforts they must expect nothing better than the return of prohibition. Mr. Choate claims that one-half the liquor consumed in the United States now is bootleg liquor, despite the fact that the Government and the States are legalizing it. And thus the row and pow-wow over liquor goes on, and will go on till some better way has been found than that of the past to handle this dangerous and deadly monster.

THE TIDE IS SURE TO WIN.

Rev. Milo J. Sweet, pastor-at-large for the Carolinas and Georgia, was the preacher at the 11:00 o'clock hour, Elon College Church, Sunday, July 7th. His sermon was real food for the soul and greatly edified and spiritually strengthened his audience. The subject of his sermon was "The Way Home." It was the way to the eternal home that the preacher was telling us about. We get attached to our earthly homes, and this attachment is sweet, but there is a home that abides through the eternities, and through our varied experiences, trials, disappointments and activities we may, through hope and faith and love, become attached to that permanent home and be assured of finding the way. Brother Sweet contended that the breakers beat about us and the waves of fortune and misfortune may sweep over us, but the tide is sure to win. And so hope planted in our hearts, when anchored to an undying faith, a conquering faith, is sure to win. He repeated to good effect the following verses that his friend, Dr. F. F. Goodsell, penned while he was a missionary in the foreign field:

"On the far reef the breakers
Recoil in clashing foam,
But still the sea behind them
Urges its forces home.
Its chant of triumph surges
Through all its thunderous din.
The wave may break in failure,
But the tide is sure to win.

"The reef is strong and cruel
Upon its jagged wall,
One wave, a score, a hundred,
Broken and beaten fall.
Yet in defeat they conquer!
The tide comes surging in
Wave upon wave is routed,
But the tide is sure to win.

"O, mighty sea! Thy message
In clanging spray is cast.
Within God's plan of progress
It matters not at last
How wide the shores of evil,
How strong the reefs of sin
The waves may be defeated,
But the tide is sure to win."

AMERICA'S RELATION TO CHINESE HIGHER EDUCATION.

By CHIN-JUN LIN, Litt. D.
President of Fukien Christian University.

[Concerning Dr. Lin, Dr. R. E. Diffendorfer tells us: "One of the leading educators in China is nearing the end of a year's visit to North America. Already noted in his own land for his educational and administrative abilities, he has made thousands of friends in America since he returned to this country in August, 1934. It was not a new land to Dr. Lin, for after graduating from Fukien University, he studied at Harvard University, Columbia University, and Oberlin College. Returning to represent his university and the total cause of Christian Chinese higher education, Dr. Lin spoke with effectiveness and in most interesting and informing terms to nearly three hundred audiences. He spoke ten times on radio programs. Dr. Lin gave a course of lectures at Hartford Foundation, Hartford, Connecticut, and led a series of California conferences sponsored by the Methodist Episcopal Church. To meet these appointments he and Mrs. Lin, who is a graduate of Johns Hopkins Medical School, have traveled more than twenty thousand miles in what was presumed to be a year of furlough!

We wish that his presence and influence might continue much longer. But Chinece tasks are calling for these devoted young leaders, and we bid them Godspeed as they return to the homeland where world history is being made by the month.]

The friendly interest of the American people toward China and the Chinese has been growing with the years. Besides the ever-increasing trade and business interests, there are strong cultural ties, especially of religious and educational character, between the two great countries bordering on the Pacific Ocean. The organization and hence the service of the Associated Boards for Christian Colleges in China, in North America, is a most recent manifestation of the spirit of international good will and Christian fellowship.

Eleven of the American boards of trustees of the Chinese Christian colleges, representing twenty-one missionary societies, have come together to form a common corporation for the promotion and advancement of Christian higher education in China. In the winter of 1934-1935, the Associated Boards introduced a series of educational conferences in nearly a score of cities in the northern parts of the United States. The responses to this initial effort in large-scale promotion have been encouraging. With the loyal support of the members and friends of the Associated Boards and the devotion and ability of their secretaries, it has become one of the most significant factors in modern Christian movements.

Americans have had an active part in the establishment of every one of the thirteen Christian colleges now at work in China.

In the early days, each Christian denomination carrying on missionary work in China started some form of higher educational institution, to meet the urgent need of leadership. As the task grew bigger, it was soon realized that no single group of people had adequate personnel and finance to meet the growing needs in expanding service and in advancing educational standards.

About 1910 cooperative effort took place in a definite way. Various missionary groups working in the same locality pooled their resources to form union institutions. At present practically all of the eleven colleges and universities represented in the Associated Boards are results of such joint efforts. Their work is held in high respect by the Chinese public. All of them are officially recognized by the Chinese Government. Their graduates have equal standing with the graduates of government universities.

The opportunities of and challenges to Christian higher education in China at her present critical stage of national transformation call for not only rethinking but also replanning and rededication of these Christian colleges. A correlated program for their colleges has been worked out by a group of representative Chinese Christian educators, during the period from 1928 through 1933. Eleven colleges have adopted this as the common educational policy. The plan not only tries to eliminate duplication of work and waste effort, by an agreement in a general division of labor and co-ordination of service, but it also aims at the raising of educational standards and the meeting of some of the most urgent needs of the Chinese people, in a comprehensive and systematic way. There is a clear emphasis on scientific, vocational and technical training a serious restudy of China's culture, an earnest attempt in rural reconstruction service, and a new zeal and approach in character education.

In the China Christian Educational Association there is a Council of Higher Education which serves as the general advisory and co-ordinating body for all the Christian colleges in China. A new day is surely dawning in the Christian educational movement for this nation.

The hopeful movement is being greatly aided by the work of the Associated Boards for Christian Colleges in China, in North America. Thru this organization the general program of Christian higher education is being presented to our American friends in an intelligent and a comprehensive way. Duplication in promotional activities by and in the interest of unrelated individual institutions is being eliminated. The interest of all true and sincere friends of China is being rallied for a progressive Christian enterprise, thus offering a great opportunity for effective and fruitful expression of one's international good will and friendly helpfulness to the Chinese people.

Assured of such sympathetic and loyal cooperation and sincere efforts of the American people, as represented in and through the Associated Boards, the Chinese Christian educators go forward with increasing confidence and courage, to meet the unprecedented opportunities of Christian higher education in China, for the upbuilding of a new nation.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

"Home Coming Day" was observed at Mt. Carmel Christian Church, Isle of Wight County, Virginia, Sunday, June 30th, 1935. Dr. W. M. Jay delivered a very appropriate sermon at the 11:00 o'clock service. A bountiful lunch was served to about 400 people at the noon hour. In the afternoon at 2:30 the service was given to a review of the history of the church. Rev. and Mrs. C. E. Gerringer rendered a vocal duet. A quartette from the Franklin Christian Church rendered two selections. The following ministers were present: Rev. Elisha Bradshaw, pastor of the church, Rev. J. M. Roberts, Dr. E. W. Jones of Franklin, Dr. W. M. Jay of Holland, Rev. J. Sidney Cobb, Baptist pastor of Windsor, and the writer.

A historical sketch was presented by the writer. From this sketch the following facts are gleaned:

Mt. Carmel Christian Church is a child of Antioch Church. About 1868 or 1869 a mission Sunday School was organized at "Paradise," near the Joseph G. Johnson farm, about three miles from Antioch. After one year it was decided to move the school to "Duck's Store." During the following year Thomas J. Clements, Thomas Spivey and J. G. Johnson were appointed a Committee to select a permanent location. After careful consideration the present site of Mt. Carmel church was unanimously selected. Major I. W. Duck operated a saw mill by water power at a grist mill near the location. He was the leader in this work and was financially able to give assurance of progress and success as Chairman of the Building Committee. He cut the lumber and superintended the erection of the building. After the building was ready on August 26, 1871, a meeting was called to consider the organization of a church. It will be observed that the building was erected before the church was organized. Dr. William B. Wellons presided and the church was formerly organized with the following charter members: I. W. Duck, Thomas H. Murray, Matthew Carr, Benjamin T. Carr, James M. Pierce, George M. D. Watkins, Harrison H. Butler, John Thomas Cox, Robert J. Cox, Sylvie W. Johnson, Quincy a Watkins, Mills Britt, Joseph E. McLane, Amanda Duck, Bettie Murray, Christian Carr, Emma Carr, Sallie Pierce, Mary J. Beale, Louisa Ballard, Mattie J. Cox, Julia Duck, Louisa Johnson, Vamdelia Watkins, Indiana V. Howell, Missouri A. Stephenson, Martha S. Stephenson, and Lucy Bowden. Jesse T. Whitley acted as Secretary.

The building was dedicated in September, by Dr. W. B. Wellons. A great revival was conducted the week following and fifty-four additional members were received during the months of September and October, bringing the total membership to 82 when the church was admitted into the Eastern Virginia Conference in November. I. W. Duck and T. M. Murray were elected delegates to the Annual Conference. Rev. Mills B. Barrett was elected first pastor on October 14, 1871, and served until his death, April 14, 1891, a period of 19 years and 6 months.

On September 20, 1882, a Building Committee was appointed to consider plans for an addition to the building to be 12 feet long with a recess for the pulpit. The following served on this Committee and the building was enlarged the following year: I. W. Duck, B. T. Carr, J. E. T. Joyner, J. M. Pierce, and Mills Britt.

On October 1, 1904, the Building Committee, composed of J. C. Johnson, Chairman, J. E. T. Joyner, J. H. Beaton and John M. Ballard, submitted a report recommending the erection of a new building. This report was adopted. The old building which faced the Blackwater Road was torn down. Work was begun on the new building, which faced the Franklin-Windsor Road and this building was completed in 1908. It was dedicated the Fifth Sunday in June, 1908. Dr. W. W. Staley preached the dedicatory sermon, and was assisted by Revs. N. G. Newman, R. H. Peel and I. W. Johnson.

On December 6, 1919, under the pastoral care of Rev. E. T. Cotten, a Committee was appointed to consider plans for Sunday school rooms. A called Conference was held January 31, 1920, deacon J. C. Johnson presiding, at which time the following Building Committee was appointed: Otis V. Joyner, Chairman, S. Leon Lewis, S. A. Barrett, E. W. Ballard and Frank H. Johnson. This Committee was authorized to borrow money and proceed with the work of adding eight rooms. The present building cost about $8,000 furnished.

The following have served as pastors: Revs. M. B. Barrett, John T. Kitchen, H. H. Butler (19 years), Stanley C. Harrell, E. T. Cotten, W. D. Harward, T. E. White, Elisha Bradshaw (present pastor); supply pastors: C. H. Rowland, J. H. Lightbourne, W. M. Jay and E. W. Jones.

The following have served as Superintendents of the Sunday school: Thomas M. Murray (killed by lightning in 1876), I. W. Duck, J. H. English, J. C. Johnson, J. Sherman Johnson, J. E. T. Joyner, Mills Britt, O. W. Johnson, Otis V. Joyner.

Deacons have been elected and ordained as follows: I. W. Duck, George M. D. Watkins, James M. Pierce, B. T. Carr, J. H. English, J. C. Johnson, J. E. T. Joyner, S. A. Barrett, J. G. Johnson, E. W. Ballard, J. B. Bland, R. T. Bowden, J. C. Bradshaw, Otis V. Joyner and Frank Johnson.

Ministers reared in this church: H. H. Butler, I. W. Johnson, Floyd D. Ballard (Presbyterian) and Hugh H. Johnson (M. E. Church South).

The present membership is 267.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE CONGREGATIONAL AND CHRISTIAN CHURCHES.

We are members of a great church; a church with a vision and a program. Our leaders are acquainted with present day trends in society, business and religion. They know something of the task of the church in the light of such happenings. Under the guidance of the Spirit we are striving to formulate a program that will point out the line of march, indicating the way for the greatest contribution on the part of the church to the day in which we live.

The church is a divine organization. Her mission and task are spiritual. It is humanly impossible to say where the spiritual begins and where it ends. There is no difficulty in saying that this is Sunday and this is Monday; that on Sunday we are expected to take our minds off of things commercial and political and put them on things spiritual and religious, and that Monday is the day for labor, trading, buying and selling. That is to say that the task of the Sabbath differs from the task of the week day. But you cannot confine the Spirit to any particular day. The Spirit possesses the individual, and becomes not only his inspiration and guide, but his Lord and Master, so that whether he be at worship or at work the Spirit is ever present with him and in him.

"If a man hath not the spirit of Christ he is none of His." No man can be a Christian without possessing the Spirit of Christ. However, the Spirit may use one man for greater achievements than another. A man's ability or lack of ability may help or hinder the Spirit in His activities. Individuals differ in talents and possibilities. Talents can never be used to the fullest extend unless they are adequately trained and completely developed. The genius of the church long since discovered the necessity of training the individual Christian that he might make his maximum contribution to his day.

Our church, the Christian Church, provided for such training in the founding and building of Elon College. In providing facilities for higher education the church in nowise minimizes the place of religicus education in the home and the Sunday school. Nor did it minimize the necessity of training in grade and public schools. Giving the above types of training their proper places in the church's program of preparation, our forefathers sought to add to the program of the church's preparation by providing for our young people opportunities for higher education under the authority and direction of the church itself. And herein lies the hope of the church for an efficient and progressive program in the days that are ahead.

Elon College was built by the Christian Church, has been supported through the years by the Christian Church. Today the Congregational church joins hands and hearts with the Christian church in recognizing the position of Elon College in cur united church program, and the necessity for the type of training that Elon affords. Elon College is greatly concerned that young men and young women of Congregational and Christian church homes in her natural territory come to Elon for their college work. Not merely for the sake of enrolling them, but with the hope that coming to Elon they may have an enlarged appreciation of their own church and increased loyalty to her programs.

The prospects are now that we will have a considerably increased enrollment another year without respect to denominations, but whenever a member of the church fails to come to Elon College for training the church as such is the loser. The individual may not lose, but the church will. We invite the members of our church to patronize Elon College, not solely on the grounds of loyalty, but positively on the grcunds of advantage to the individual who ccmes. Elon College is adequately prepared in every particular to give to her students the best pcssible advantage in all fields of activity where literary and scientifically trained minds are required.

Whenever a student at Elon College reaches a point where his time spent at another institution would be more profitable to him, if he prefers, the college will never fail to advise in such a particular. Elon College exists first, for the church; second for the individual; and all the time for the development of personality and the construction of Christian character.

Our fall term opens September 3, 1935. Anyone wishing additional information will please write the undersigned.

L. E. SMITH, President.

A Story for the Children

THE GOOD SHEPHERD.

I was in an art store a few days ago and saw two oil paintings, each on a rather large canvas, which impressed me so much that I think I must tell the boys and girls about them. They were both sheep pictures. The first one was a summer scene. It was a beautiful landscape that stretched away before the eye, a quiet restful valley, with a lazy stream wending its peaceful way through the meadows into the hazy distance, while immediately in the foreground on the hillside near a group of splendid trees a flock of sheep, some grazing, and some resting, feasted the eye. It was high noon, and the old shepherd lounged in the shade, and by him, sitting on his haunches, was his dog, a little more alert than his master, but in all the picture there was not one element of discord to break the peace and harmony of the scene. Without intending to do so, I found myself murmuring the sweet opening words of the Shepherd Psalm: "The Lord is my Shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: he leadeth me beside the still waters."

Just across the store there was another picture that might have been painted by the same man as a companion piece for the one at which I had been looking, yet such was not the case. It, too, was a sheep picture, but how different was the scene! It portrayed a flock of sheep that had been caught out on the plain in a snowstorm. Not one of those gentle snows which come down softly on the air like feathers, but such a storm as one may see sometimes up in Montana or north-Idaho on the high plateau—a storm where the wind rages and howls and blows so fiercely that it will tear up as much sand and gravel and dirt from the earth as it brings down snow from the angry clouds; a storm where sand and snow and ice seem hurled from the clenched fist of the wind, tossed and torn here and there by whirling winds, now sweeping the earth bare, and again piling the soiled snow in great drifts. It was in a dense, cold storm like this that this flock of sheep had been caught, and the poor beasts are crowded together trying to find some help from each other, with a look of terror in their great sad eyes. The shepherd was nowhere to be seen; perhaps he had already perished in the cold. But near them were two shepherd dogs. One of them was a little fellow, and he was standing in front of the other with his head between the large dog's forelegs, trying thus to escape the force of the storm. But the big dog, how I did admire him! He stood there strong and faithful. And the look on his intelligent face seemed to say to the poor sheep: "I can't do much for you; no dog could get you home through this awful storm; but I won't desert you; I'll stay by and keep you company, and if need be I will die with you."

Far off through the storm the artist revealed the deeper meaning of this picture in a huge wooden cross, with a pile of rocks about its base. But as I looked at it, I said to myself: Thank God, the cross of the Lord Jesus Christ can do more than that for us! It would have been a great thing if, when we were poor lost sinners, and had all gone astray like these poor sheep lost in the storm, someone up in heaven who was honored and loved there, and had all the beauty and glory of the heavenly world to make joyous and happy, had come down to earth to live with us, and had said to us: "I can't do much for you; I don't know how to get you out of the storm, how to get you clean of your sins, and bring you back again to your home in heaven; but I am sorry for you, and I will stay here with you, and if I can not do anything else I will die with you.

Yes, that would have been a glorious thing. It would have been a heroic and splendid act. But Jesus did a much better thing than that for us. He was rich, and yet for our sakes He became poor, and gave His life not that He might die with us only, but that He might die for us, and bear our sins in His own body on the cross. He is the Good Shepherd who "giveth His life for the sheep." He is "a hiding-place from the wind and a covert from the tempest."—Banks in the Free Will Baptist.

BOTH—AND!

"Oh, yes, I'll support the church," remarked a layman as he signed his pledge. He paid the money and was given credit for payment of that pledge. So he should be, although he may attend church or join in the worship service only twice a year.

But his neighbor pledges and also attends every Sunday. Without this neighbor's fidelity, the doors of the church would permanently be closed. His life blood surges through the church and makes of it a living organism. Is it not high time that the neighbor be given credit for Church Attendance? It is, therefore,, as important to report on Church Attendance as on Money Collections. Certainly God's work rates Church Attendance as essential and worthy of even greater consideration than merely payment of money.

Regular attendance may sometimes necessitate self-denial. On the other hand. it has many directly compensating benefits. "Christ loved the church and gave himself for it." In the end, attendance will determine whether the Church survives or perishes.—Advance.

Meditate, O my soul, for the deepening and the elevating of thy worship on that wondrous cross, the great center of God's moral universe! To this center God ever pointed and the eye of faith ever looked forward until the Saviour came. And now we must ever turn to that cross as the center of all our blessing and the basis of all our worship, both on earth and in heaven, in time and throughout all eternity.

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Secretary.

SAVING THE SOUL OF AMERICA.

Every land has its special resources and culture—its heritage and history. The United States of America has been greatly blessed in its location, in the wealth of its natural resources, in the character of its early settlers, and in its naturel history. In spite of many dangers and difficulties —or because of the battle against them—the country's development has been steady and remarkable, at least for the first century and a half of its history. Wealth, education, culture, industry, influence, power have increased as long as national ideals and Christian teachings have united to keep standards high and to develop strength.

But in recent years the body and mind of America have been developed at the expense of its soul. For America has a soul—a spiritual quality of life that must be nurtured if the body is to be kept healthy and is to function properly for the benefit of mankind. The characteristics and vital realities of the soul of America include:

I. Liberty. When the Western Hemisphere was discovered, Europe was passing through the Dark Ages—politically, intellectually and religiously. North America was settled by men and women who sought freedom to live and to work and to worship God in harmony with high intelligence, great industry and noble ideals. The liberty sought was in harmony with law—particularly the laws of God for the well-being of man.

When license and lawlessness take the place of law and order—license in dress, in behaviour, in amusements, in sex relations; lawlessness and laxity in regard to property rights and traffic-laws, in marriage and the sacredness of human life—then a land and its people lose the privileges of true liberty. Is it not time for America to return to the high ideals and the practice of liberty in harmony with the laws which God has established for the physical, moral and spiritual good of all mankind?

II. Progress. No land has offered greater opportunities for progress than has North America. Territorially the United States has expanded from ocean to ocean. No old ironbound customs and traditions have prevented development; new ideas and plans have been tested by laboratory methods —in government, in education, in industry, in social customs and even in religion.

But today the ambition for material progress threatens to cripple and destroy the nation. When wealth becomes a great end in itself; when education leads to the deification of the intellect; when industry develops into selfish warfare between capital and labor; when statesmanship degenerates into petty party politics; and when social life takes on the characteristics and customs of the jungle—then the soul of the nation is lost.

III. Service. Almost every nation seems to have been completely absorbed with its own national problems and with the struggle for existence. From its early years of independence, America has offered a haven for oppressed and underprivileged peoples. Not only the development of her own vast territory but international travel and commerce and the sending abroad of money and missionaries, have enabled Americans to share their material and spiritual blessings with others.

Today many of these streams seem to be drying up. The desire to protect national industries and to avoid entangling alliances is keeping America from adopting unselfish policies and from full cooperation in international courts. Our doors are now almost closed to immigrants and our missionary activities are being curtailed.

IV. Spiritual. America was discovered about the time of the Protestant Reformation. The United States was settled from northern Europe by sturdy pioneers who brought with them their open Bibles and who sought to pattern their lives after the revealed will of God rather than on the lines of humanistic or materialistic philosophies. Pure, monoganous family life in America has been held sacred; character-making education has been offered to prepare all for unselfish service; Sunday, as the Lord's Day, has been respected as a day of rest and worship; Church and State have been kept separate, not to exclude God and His laws from the State but to prevent the State from interfering with religion.

When lawmakers lose their spiritual ideals and their sense of obligation to God; when the Lord's Day is commercialized and secularized; when moral standards in education are lowered, and when a materialistic social order becomes men's ideal, it means that the supremacy of God is overlooked or ignored. Government, education, industry and society, as well as religion, are then on the toboggan.

But America still has a soul—a spiritual life and character—as well as a body—to be saved. Home Missions represent the effort of Christians to extend and express that spiritual life and character in service, according to the will of God as revealed in Jesus Christ. Until this soul of America finds expression in every nook and corner of the country, in every phase of American life, in all our laws and institutions and activities—until then the Home Mission task of the Church of Christ will not be completed. Nationalism may be only a heathen ideal; patriotism may be ignorant and selfish; Christianity means not only loyalty to Christ and His program, but unselfish devotion to one's country and to the welfare of humanity in every part of God's world. The home missionary ideal is to bring one's country wholly under the control of God. But that ideal can only be realized by the surrender of every individual and every institution and activity to Christ.—Missionary Review of the World.

THE YOUTH BUDGET PLAN.

The Presbyterian tells of a way in which youth may become interested in the Church and share in its activities. It says:

> The Church becomes meaningful to young people as they enjoy its privileges and help to meet its problems. Under the Youth Budget Plan those from eight to twenty-three years of age take a definite share in supporting church expenses and benevolences thru a pledge of systematic giving and the use of weekly envelopes. In other words, youth "stakes a claim" and takes a share in the church life through service and giving.

SHADOWS FROM AFRICA.

"God has forsaken us!" cried the people of Gogoi, East Africa, when the Station was closed to meet the reductions in income of the American Board. A boarding school of over one hundred, the only Protestant school from the highlands of Rhodesia to the sea—closed. The dispensary—closed! The nurse—gone! The pastor—gone! The church—closed! "Oh, Lord, what can we do when our children cry for food," prayed a distracted young mother in the locust ridden area. At Chikore the school is crowded with runaway girls from 8 to 12 years of age whose fathers had sold them into marriage for food.

WHAT ARE MISSIONARIES?

We missionaries are sent to preach:
Not experience, but redemption;
Not economics, but Gospel;
Not culture, but conversion;
Not reforms, but liberation;
Not progress, but forgiveness;
Not social reform, but awakening;
Not a new organization, but a new creation;
Not civilization, but Christianity.
We are ambassadors, not diplomats.

—By Erich Schick in Neuruppiner Missionbote.

SHE PRAYED FOR THEM.

No difference—no difference—between people and monkeys, so thought the little Christian Indian nurse from Madura, who, dressed as a high caste Brahmin, climbed the 723 stairs to the top of the famous temple of Palanie and found her way obstructed continually by beggars and thousands of sacred monkeys. At the top she prayed —prayed for them that they might some day know the "real God as portrayed in the life of Christ."

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

An address by W. W. Staley, D. D.

[The Sun's Editor finds among the manuscripts of the late, lamented Dr. W. W. Staley, the following address delivered on May 4, 1894, in Memorial Temple, Norfolk, Va., at the opening of the biennial session of the Southern Christian Convention, of which Convention Dr. Staley was president. The address is full of sound wisdom and prophecy, for which Dr. Staley was noted.—J. O. A.]

We are within three months of the centennial and within seventy miles of the place where Rev. Rice Haggard first proposed the adoption of the name "Christian" to the exclusion of all sectarian names. It was at Lebanon Church in Surry Co., Virginia, on August 4th, 1794, that a small body of believers, before known as "Republican Methodists" solemnly and unanimously declared to be known thereafter only as "Christians." Three simultaneous movements without concert of purpose or action, and representing three great sections of this country, seem to have been inspired by one sentiment which culminated in "The Christian Church." Abner Jones and Elias Smith in the east, Barton W. Stone and William Kinkade in the west, and James O'Kelly in the south were the leaders of these sections so remote then as to be ignorant of what was being done. They had no thought of forming a new organization, but were contending for what they regarded as a return to the teachings and practices of the early church.

In November, 1792, James O'Kelly,in the Methodist Conference in Baltimore, said: "Brethren, hearken unto me. Put away all other books and forms, and let this [Bible] be the criterion and that will satisfy me." He plead for a "General Conference," and for a "lay representation," opposed "Councils," and introduced a resolution modifying the Bishop's power of appointment to the extent of the preacher's right to appeal to the Conference, if dissatisfied, upon the rejection of this proposition he resigned his position in the Conference and several others followed him. They formed a "Republican Methodist Church" which as already said, was changed to the "Christian Church" August 4, 1794.

The history of this movement has passed the many stages of criticism. Ignored as heretics, ridiculed as Christ-yans; alternately belittled and feared, secretly imitated and loved, the Christians seemed to resemble that "sect, that everywhere is spoken against," and yet they live and are beginning to flourish." James O'Kelly, the leader of the southern wing of this movement, was a minister of high rank in the Methodist Church; was a contemporary of Bishop Asbury, a friend of Jefferson and Henry, and he thirsted for religious liberty corresponding to the civil rights for which the pen of Jefferson wrote and the eloquent tongue of Henry spoke. He was opposed to slavery, and believed in the liberty of religious thought.

The five principles for which this Church contends are: 1. Christ, the Head of the Church. 2. The name "Christian." 3. The Bible as our only creed. 4. Christian character the only test of fellowship. 5. Right of private interpretation the privilege of all.

They plead for union among all the people of God and cooperate heartily with all believers in every good work. They expectantly wait for a larger fraternity and a wider cooperation among the various denominations, and trust to the Holy Spirit to lead us up to this higher plain. The tendency of this age is toward cooperation, combination, union. All the great railway systems have adopted the standard guage. It was not always so. Common interest demanded agreement on some great fact, some basic line. Each system may carry out its own ideas in many details, but on this one idea of standard guage they must agree. This has revolutionized transportation. It has added millions of wealth to this country. It has increased the comfort of travelers in untold measure. The Bible as the only standard of faith should be the great basis of agreement in the Church. The American Bible Society rests upon this one fact of printing and distributing the world without note or comment. Here is where we rest our plea. Human interpretations formulated into creeds, higher criticism testing the word by scientific methods, standards other than the Bible itself are rejected by the Christian Church. "Heaven and earth, "creeds and science" shall pass away, but the "word of the Lord endureth forever. The word in hands of the Holy Ghost may be safely trusted to do its work.

I. Education. "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge" was the alarming utterance of the Holy Ghost by Hosea. It is true that ignorance is the bane of the human race. Does it cut men off from the stations they might fill, the fields they might occupy, and the heaven they might enjoy? Does it retard the progress of the race and obstruct the growth of the Church? Does it shut us out from the blessings we might receive, and the good we might do? God declares that it is so. Education in a very large sense is the learning of right relations. It is so in chemistry. To know the relations of substances, the proportions in which elements enter into combinations, to dissolve and combine into new forms, is the work of the laboratory. Here is the field for research, for skill, for utility, turning nature's wealth into wealth for man. It is so in Geology. Unless the Silurian and Devonian ages are known in their relations, they tell us nothing in the great progress of world-building. In Music the artist studies relations chiefly, and all the great orators are only masterful harmonies as the result of tone relations. Painting fulfils the same requirements of light and shade in their relations with all the forms of beauty that grow out of artistic color relations. This idea projects itself into society balancing the relations of capital and labor, of the governing and the governed, the civilized and the barbarious. Political economy considering the interests of the individual is meaningless; but when it studies the relations between men and nations it opens into realms of vast importance. This idea rises into supreme value when applied to our knowledge of God. The paramount question concerns our relation to Him and what that relation embraces. What obligations are disclosed! What it reveals! What hopes it inspires in our bosoms! What sins it uncovers in our hearts! What attitudes of the Divine heart for our rescue! What vast realms it opens for our exaltation! How wonderful the Mediator between God and man! What gleams of light, what streams of power, what empires of love! Through Christ we have access to God. The best education is that which teaches the best relations to God and man. As an expression of our best purpose in this field of activity, we have founded:

II. Elon College. It is nearing the close of its fourth scholastic year. It has already attracted the attention of other denominations, and of several states. Its interests express our own, and our relation to it will determine its destiny. If we stand by it faithfully, it will respond to our constituency in their aspirations to learn the noblest lessons of life. Selfishness must be obscured by the impulses of liberality toward the Institution, for the Church is the soil in which it must take root and grow. Denominational institutions are superior to state institutions in the elementary purposes upon which they rest. They deal with the nobler relations of men more directly, because they stand for the best thought and aspiration of the Church instead of the best thought and aspiration of the State. The State institution stands for science, morality, law; the Church College stands for all these plus spiritual character in Christ. The two commandments, "thou shalt love God with all thy heart," and "thy neighbor as thyself" express the purposes of the Church school and embrace the knowledge which alone can save society from decay and death. The plea for patronage and donations is not, therefore, the plea of pride, but of the highest reason. It may educate us who are past the years of matriculation by developing in us systematic liberality and proper relations to others. We need some center around which our efforts may turn, and our relations to the College may harmonize the tones and colors and forces and aspirations of our beings. Our relations to this Institution is not yet half known. To learn that is education of lasting good. Keep the air full of the sound of its name and its needs. Let the horizon widen until every Church shall see it rising toward the zenith of prosperity as a glittering star. It is not only the partial culmination of a long-cherished desire of the Church, but it will be the exponent of our Culture for years to come. Here let ministers be inspired for study and work by the fires that flame from its altars in future years. Here let the young learn the relations they should sustain to the church and to the world.

III. Publications. Foremost among the potent agencies of this century is the printing press. It not only reduces thought to permanent form, but multiplies it for distribution on a universal scale. It copies and places within the reach of the average home the masterpieces of all fine art; catches the thought of nations in their daily life, feels and records the pulse of humanity, and prints in music the present purposes and hopes of the human heart. It tells the secrets of Courts and private life, whispers its message in the corners of the earth, and proclaims the doings of men in the marts of trade. It shades and colors the sentiment of society and greets the world with morning gladness or tales of woe. It puts the word of God in every human tongue, recites the story of the Cross in politic numbers, and translates the experiences of faith into the form of books. No communion can flourish that does not employ this modern genius in the domain of aggressive work. I cannot specify the books and papers useful to us except to name The Christian Sun. It is now in its fiftieth year, and is just half the age of the Church itself. The committee in charge of this department will report upon practical lines, while I speak only in general terms of our relation to this giant agency of power and good. Papers, books and pictures are indexes to thought, character, and faith. The Church organ should be raised to the highest plane of thought, of purpose, and of form. It should be sustained by liberal patronage, and ministers should contribute to its columns out of their richest observations and experiences in life. The Bible and Church paper are essentials in a Christian home.

I cannot pass without entering protest against all pernicious literature. Vile papers and books lead to vile courses of life and deserve to be excluded from every home. If the base books and pictures that set on fire the passions of men could be suppressed, it would prevent much of the corruption in our society, and leave a clean sheet on which truth could write its lessons of purity and love. It behooves all good people to stand on guard against this insidious curse.

IV. Missions. "Go ye and make disciples of all nations" was the Master's solemn charge. No church has ever expanded into power for saving

ADVENTURES IN YOUTH FELLOWSHIP

"Youth at Work in the Church."

Rev. F. C. Lester, Editor, 505 S. Main St., Norfolk, Va.

WHERE THEY CAME FROM.

Somebody wanted to know where the people who attended the Elon Summer School came from. A check on the records indicates that seventy-three went from Virginia, seventy-eight from North Carolina, twelve from Georgia, eleven from Florida and the the remainder came from Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New Jersey, South Carolina and Tennessee.

This indicates that the Elon fellowship is growing in extent as well as in numbers. It shows also that the school is not merely a local group, but is composed of leaders from various sections of our church.

One conference in North Carolina had only one representative present. It is to be hoped that next year more churches from this nearby conference will be represented. The leaders were delighted that several of the orphanage young people took the courses for credit.

WHEN YOU ARE TIRED.

What do you do when you are tired? Some people get "fussy" and make everybody else unhappy who come roundabout. Others rush off in search of pleasure and expend much more energy. Still others rest.

The feeling we call "tired" is nature's way of saying we should relax and give the physical machine a rest. It is God's call to be quiet. Those who fail to heed the call burn life out knowingly.

Jesus once said that the people of his day were childish, non-cooperative, unresponsive to teaching, that they paid no heed to important things. Then He saw how weary they were and said: "Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden and I will give you rest . . . and ye shall find rest unto your souls."

It is soul rest that most of us need. Very few people die from over work, but worry gets most of us. A tired body with a contented spirit can rest and find renewal, but a restless spirit can wreck anybody. Most Americans seem to have no idea of how to find rest. Even children are taught to be too tired to sit still in church for the length of a short service. We must be moving even if we are going nowhere.

Mine and factory workers, home makers, big business men, church leaders, all types of those who make an honest living by daily toil find themselves in need of rest. I like to think that by the entrance to every mine and factory, by the door to every office, at the fireside of every home, still stands the eager Master saying: "Come unto me and I will give you rest . . . rest for the soul."

When summer comes many church people say it is too hot for church, that they need to lie in bed late, or that they must get out for the day—perhaps to the beach or ball ground. After such a day with extra amounts of food, the system is filled with poison and they return to work for a Blue Monday. If they had accepted the invitation of the Master, if they had worshipped in His house, if they had sought rest in Him, then Monday would dawn bright and beautiful and life would be cheery because the soul had found rest. We cannot expect the blessings of the Christ unless we heed His calls. And one of His calls is to find rest for the soul while we live in a turbulent world.

I know a person who has lived long and useful years. Now the body is tired and rest is needed; yes, much rest. As the evening shadows lengthen more and more rest is required. Then some lovely day when the body can serve no more it will lie down for the long, long rest—lie down like one who "wraps the drapery of his couch about him and lies down to pleasant dreams." Kipling said that when earth's last picture is painted, we shall rest, and faith, we shall need it, lie down for an æon or two. I do not know all about that, but I am sure that the Master who invited the weary to come to Him will stand waiting to welcome those whose tired bodies become too tired to move further across earth's surface in service for their fellow-man, to rest those who have sought rest in Him. That is the Christian message for a restless world.

EASTERN VIRGINIA YOUTH FELLOWSHIP TO MEET.

The Eastern Virginia Youth Fellowship will hold its annual meeting at Bethlehem Christian Church, near Suffolk, Virginia, on Tuesday, July 16, 1935. For eight years the young people of this section have met in large numbers to discuss the needs of modern youth and to make plans for cooperative work. It is expected that a goodly group will be present this year to share in a full day of work, worship, and fellowship.

Dr. M. J. W. White, our returned missionary to the Philippines, will be present to tell of the work being done in those far-away islands and to show interesting costumes, etc., used by the people. He and his good wife are young people who have shared with the people on the other side of the earth something of the joys of the Christian religion. Young people from our churches have a real opportunity to know real missionaries.

Part of the day's program will be given to the consideration of what young people can do about war, and Mrs. Henry S. Eley of Suffolk, Virginia, will be the main speaker on this theme. Mrs. Eley is a nationally known speaker. She is vice-president of the International Order of the King's Daughters and Sons, president of the Virginia branch of the King's Daughters, past president of the Virginia Federation of Woman's Clubs, teacher in Sunday school, member of several hospital boards, and a good many other things, but says that the one thing she is proud of being is the mother of Dr. R. Cannon Eley who is on the Harvard Staff. It will be a real treat to hear Mrs. Eley speak. She will bring information direct from a recent conference in Washington concerning what can be done about war.

It is expected that all pastors, leading young people and their leaders, and all who are interested, will be present at Bethlehem for this meeting.

Program.

Morning Session.

9:30—Recreation and Fellowship led by Rev. H. S. Hardcastle

KEEPING ONE'S WORD.

Christian Endeavor Topic for July 21, 1935.
Matt. 5:33-37; Prov. 19:5.

Hymns: "Loyalty to Christ";"I Would be True"; "Only Trust Him"; "O Jesus, I Have Promised."

Bible Readings:

July 15.—God keeps His promises. I King 8:56.
July 16.—Lying is an abomination. Prov. 12:22.
July 17.—Warning against dishonesty. Ex. 23:1.
July 18.—False versus true. Prov. 14:5-25.
July 19.—The source of lying. John 8:44.
July 20.—Speaking with grace. Col. 4:6.

Why do young people promise to do something and then fail to do it? Why do the members of some of our Christian Endeavor committees fail to show up when there is a meeting and they are badly needed? When they made the promise to be present, they sincerely intended to keep their word, but when the time came they had to study, a date about which they had forgotten had to be filled, or something else prevented them from doing the thing they had promised to do. Maybe we sometimes accept things too quickly without thinking seriously about them, or maybe after we have promised to share in something, we let less significant things interfere.

Do we always keep in mind our C. E. Pledge? When temptations come, would they more easily be overcome if we repeated our pledge which we so sincerely make to God? "Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for Strength. . . "

A mother anxiously waits for her daughter who returns home an hour later than she expected to. She stammers and finally says that she couldn't help it. Another girl calls her mother and explains why she will be late getting home that evening. Were both girls playing fair? Would you depend on both of them for a good Christian Endeavor program?

Sometimes we find it very inconvenient to keep our promises. We have to do many things which we dislike, but what happens to our ideals, our morale, our character if we fail to keep our word?

"I would be true, for there are those who trust me." Another message which we might interpret for our meeting is one by Charles Wesley, entitled

A CHARGE TO KEEP.

A charge to keep, I have, a God to glorify;
A never dying soul to save, and fit it for the sky.

To serve the present age, my calling to fulfill;
O may it all my powers engage, to do my Master's will!

Arm me with jealous care, as in Thy sight to live,
And, O, Thy servant, Lord, prepare, a strict account to give!

Help me to watch and pray, and on Thyself rely,
Assured if I my trust betray, I shall forever die.

E. L. F.

There is always a penalty for breaking a covenant or contract. If we fail to keep our pledge, the loss is ours—loss of self-respect, of spiritual power, of character, even of heaven at last.

Sunday School Lesson

By Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

NAOMI (A Woman of Faith and Courage).

Lesson II—July 14, 1935.

Golden Text: "A woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised."—Prov. 31:30.

Lesson: The Book of Ruth.

We have heard much about Ruth. She is one of the world's immortals. And rightly so. For she was the embodiment of a high type of young womanhood, simple, unspoiled, courageous, loyal, pious (in the good sense of the word), and lovely. She is all the more remarkable in view of the times in which she lived, and the land in which she grew up. She lived in the time of the "Judges", when every man did that which was right in his own eyes, and she lived among the Moabites, a cruel, lustful, war-like, and heathenish people. It was from these times and from among these people, that this fair and lovely young woman came. And as Dean Brown says in his recent book, "Have We Outgrown Religion?", "We have come a long ways from the days of Ruth, and we have made tremendous progress in ways not only of reaping and threshing, but of many other things. But we have not improved on the quality of young womanhood which Ruth herself embodied." Our modern world has not even caught up with her, to say nothing of outgrowing her.

But the point of all this is the fact that there would never have been any Ruth if there had not been a Naomi. It was because this simple Moabitish maiden came into contact with this remarkable, God-fearing woman, because she responded to the influence of Naomi that she came into a place of larger opportunity and of enduring fame. The dominating influence in the life of Ruth was the character and the life of Naomi.

The background of the story is, of course, familiar to folks who know anything about the Bible. Driven by famine from the land of their native home, Naomi and her husband had gone over into the land of Moab. They took with them their two sons, who married Moabitish girls. Then tragedy overtook the family circle. First the father was taken, and then the two sons were taken, leaving the three women widows. Broken-hearted over her loss, Naomi resolved to go back to Bethlehem in Judea—she had heard that conditions were better there. With an inspiring magnanimity, and with high courage, she suggests that her daughters-in-law remain in their native land. It must have torn her heart even to think of such a thing. Orpah decides to remain with her people, but Ruth casts her lot with Naomi, and leaving her native land and her kindred, she goes with her mother-in-law. The rest of the story—how she met Boaz, won his favor, and became his bride—are incidental. It is significant however that the writer of this story twice emphasizes the fact that this Moabitish maiden became the grandmother of David, and hence an ancestress of Jesus Himself. (If the Jews had had anything like unto a D. A. R., this must have been a hard pill to swallow.)

The main character for our purpose today is not Ruth but Naomi. And the story of Naomi is simply the story of the wholesome and unconscious influence of a godly older woman on the life of a high-minded, responsive young woman. Naomi was a follower of the God of Israel. When she went into the land of Moab, she remained loyal to her God, although she dwelt among a people that worshipped false gods, and although her daughters-in-law were followers of these false gods. Furthermore, there was that kindliness about her nature, that winsomeness about her spirit, that genuineness about her religion, that she won the young women to her faith. She had something which they did not have and which they wanted. Religion in her had been made alive and real. It was clothed in flesh and blood, and it was so warm and winsome and winning that they made it their own. The record does not state how this was done, but we can read between the lines. Naomi did not talk a great deal about her religion; she simply lived it. Those young women saw in her their ideals made alive. And in turn they made their religion attractive to others.

How many young women there are in the world today who rise up and call some older woman blessed! It may be a mother, it may be an older sister, it may be a Sunday school teacher, it may be a friendly Y. W. C. A. Secretary, it may be a friendly neighbor, indeed it may be someone who is altogether unconscious of having done anything about it—but some Naomi has made religion so attractive, and has done it in such a simple and quiet way, that these young women have said either publicly or privately, "Thy God shall be my God."

In the book referred to above, Dean Brown tells the story of a woman who once came to an American prison to serve a life sentence for a murder, committed under conditions peculiarly revolting. When she was admitted, the prison officials, accustomed as they were to the seamy side of life, stood aghast at the language she used. And when the matron of the prison came forward to befriend the wretched woman, she was drenched with a torrent of profanity, and with a stream of spit in her face. But the matron was a strong, serene, high-minded Christian woman. She merely wiped her face and said, "I am sorry." Day after day for weeks together, she manifested the spirit of indiscoureageable friendliness. One night, six months later, when the turnkey passed by the cell, he saw the woman kneel down to kiss the floor of the cell where the shadow of the matron had fallen a moment before as she passed by on some errand of mercy. That matron's constant Christian spirit had melted the hard heart of that woman into a tender responsiveness.

Of course the book of Ruth has its distinctive missionary message. Here is written so all that run may read, the inclusiveness of God's purposes, the unsuspected capacities of the so-called heathen peoples, the urgency for sharing the true religion with others, the universality of the gospel, the far-reaching effects of the impact of true religion, not only on individuals but on the history of civilization. Naomi was one of the greatest woman foreign missionaries that the world has ever known.

The ultimate goal of religion is not the saving of one's self "on some plank of prayer and self-denial out of the surges of a devouring sea." It it not big enough to command our allegiance unless it can save a world. And is it not high time for us who believe in its transforming power to give it the chance to do its work and to work with it, every one of us, until the whole world becomes in very truth the Kingdom of God?—President Parsons of Marietta College.

O Lord, how happy should we be
If we could cast our care on Thee,
If we from self could rest;
And feel at heart that One above,
In perfect wisdom, perfect love,
Is working for the best.

"A PRAYER."

"I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from the Lord which made heaven and earth."—Ps. 121:1, 2.

"The bord let loose in eastern skies
When hastening fondly home,
Ne'er stoops to earth, nor wing, nor flies
Where idle warblers roam.
But high she shoots through air and light,
Above all low delay,
Where nothing earthly bounds her flight
Nor shadows dim her way.

"So, grant me, God from every care
And strain of passion free,
Aloft through Virtue's purer air,
To hold my course to Thee!
No sin, no cloud, no lure to stay
My soul as home she springs,
Thy sunshine on her joyful way,
Thy freedom in her wings!"

TUESDAY.

"HOW WE MAY KNOW."

"If we confess our sins, he is faithful and righteous to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."—I John 1:9.

It is through the medium of confession that we can know that we are saved. Confession means to own up everything before God with a view of standing with God thereafter and letting Him direct our lives. It means to say that however dark and difficult the way, and however stiff the fight we may have to make, in the inner secrets of our being we will know that our sins would have never darkened the face of God, had we not chosen to commit them. We alone are responsible for our sins and none other. That is confession.

It is like keeping sick and going to the physician and telling him about all our ills with a view of doing what he says, that we may get well. Can we do less in going to the great physician of souls? With Him, the more outspoken we are in our confessions, the better the health of the soul.

Prayer—Dear Father, as we come to Thee in this prayer, make us conscious of our sins, fill us with the assurance of Thy forgiveness, and lead us into Thy fellowship forever.—Amen.

WEDNESDAY.

"A FAITH AGAINST WHICH THERE IS NO ARGUMENT."

"Jesus said, go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole."—Mark 10:52.

A story among thousands comes to us out of the skies of Bob Ingersoll's life, illustrative of our text. It is said that there was a lawyer in Pittsburg who had been a schoolmate and friend of Bob Ingersoll. This lawyer had fallen into temptations and become a drunken sot. He had lost everything he had, separated from his family and finally landed in the gutter. A slum worker had found him. Christ saved his soul and he had regained his family, his position of influence, was succeeding and happy.

"One day he saw from the papers that Ingersoll was coming to his town to lecture against Jesus. He sad down and addressed him as follows:

Dear Old Friend: I see you are going to lecture here against Christianity and the Bible. You know my history, how I disgraced my family, lost everything I had, my character and all that I held dear in this world, until I became an outcast and a stench to humanity. There came one one day and told me of the power of Jesus to help, and out of that sympathy I turned to Him. By His grace I have regained all, we are happy and I am doing what I can.

And now, my old friend, when you stand before the people tonight to tell them what you have to say against the religion that saves a wretch like me from the depths of hell and lifts me up and makes me and my wife happy, clothes my children, and gives me back my business, my home and my friends—will you tell them what you have to say against a religion like that?"

We are told that when Ingersoll appeared on the stage he read this letter to the audience, and said, "Ladies and gentlemen, I have nothing to say against a religion that will do this for a man. I am here to talk about religion which is preached by the preachers."

Prayer—Dear Heavenly Father, increase our faith more and more and forbid that anything shall disturb that faith until it shall be perfected in Thee.—Amen.

THURSDAY.

"THE SECRET OF TRUE HAPPINESS."

"He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none."—Luke 3:11.

We have seen miserable rich men, and miserable poor ones. The misery of the one was not because of his riches, nor the other because of his poverty. Both were so bound up in selfishness and greed that no happiness could reach them.

The writer has preserved a story from Chauncey Depew as it appeared in Leslie's Weekly a long time ago. Depew says that he knew a man whose income was a million dollars a year and he spent one hundred and fifty dollars a month. He asked him one day, "What is your happiness?" The answer was, "Seeing the snowball grow."

Depew cites another instance in which a very wealthy man on taking a vacation could not be happy because of thinking of how much he was losing in Director's fees while he was away from home.

He then adds: "The happiest man I ever knew was a peddler and a Methodist exhorter. He cheered the sorrowful, uplifted the sick, carried joy into the houses of mourning." This reminds us of that poem which says:

"Let me live by the side of the road
And be a friend to man."

Prayer—Our dear Father, Thy word, through Jesus Christ, to sell what we have and give to the poor and we shall have treasures in heaven, never was plainer to us. Have mercy upon our souls.—Amen.

FRIDAY.

"DO SOMETHING FOR SOMEBODY."

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."—Matthew 25:40.

We read an account once of a certain Dr. Blair who was called upon to attend a middle aged rich lady who had many imaginary ills. He wrote out a plain prescription and left it. It ran thus: "Do something for somebody." He heard nothing from her for a time. One day he was called to the cottage of this lady's washerwoman. She explained to him, "It is not me meself, Doctor, it's me wrist that's ailing." She said further that she had found a basket of soft flannels and other necessities at her door one morning, a gift from this lady. Later this lady had told her how the medicine of this doctor had cured her of her ills, and advised her that if she ever needed a doctor, to call on him, and "so if you'll plaze put a little of that medicine on my wrist, maybe it will cure it too." "It is a powerful remedy," said the doctor gravely. He gave it to her and all along through this doctor's years he wrote this prescription: "Do something for somebody."

Prayer—O Lord, our Father, Thou art a friend that sticketh closer than a brother; and when all other friends are gone, Thou art with us still. We would be like Jesus, Thy Son, as near as we can. Make us so Lord, now and forever.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

"THE SECOND ROLL."

"Then took Jeremiah another roll."—Jeremiah 36:27-32.

Jeremiah had spent enormous pains upon his prophecies. They were the condensation of many years of heroic and God-fearing life. He had acted out his warnings, by long journeys, by many hardships, by the endurance of much ignominy and opposition. And now to see his precious roll of divine messages contemptuously slit into fragments by the king's knife and fed to the annihilating flames!

But the prophet knew well that no fire could annihilate God's wrath and that his warnings from God were indestructible. So when the first roll was gone, he calmly said to Baruch, "Write another roll," and in that second volume he put all that was in the first, and more, far more.

Be the second roll the rule of our lives. Thwarted? Yes, many times. But the truth of God cannot be thwarted. It can only be repeated, again and again.

Prayer—So may we join ourselves to Thy truth, O Ever-living One. Then no fire can destroy our work; and whatever may happen to it, we shall calmly and confidently begin again. In Thy strength.—Amen.

SUNDAY.

"DOOMED TYRE."

"But thou art man, and not God."—Ezekiel 28:1-10.

Because the heart of the prince of Tyre was lifted up, and he said, "I am a God, I sit in the seat of God," Ezekiel was bidden to tell him that he was no god but a man, and that for his pride destruction should come upon him and his great city.

The beginnings of pride have no end but the Satanic conclusion. Like the arch-fiend, they would exalt themselves into the place of God. The only safety in the matter of pride is to condemn it altogether, to drive it wholly from our lives, and to seek relief from it in the depths of humility.

So it behooves us ever to bear in mind our mortal frame. We are not of the sky, but of the ground. We are not of the eternities, but of time. As we seek for ourselves the prerogatives of God, and judge that we are the wise and holy and mighty ones, we fall even below the level of man.

Prayer—Forbid, our Father, that the doom of Tyre should fall upon us, as it falls upon all who are wise in their own conceit. In ourselves we are nothing. Oh, be Thou our All in all!—Amen.

THE CURSE OF STUPIDITY.

By Dwight E. Stevenson.

"Now, everyone who listens to these words of mine and acts upon them will be like a sensible man who built his house on rock. The rain came down, the flood rose, the winds blew and beat upon that house, but it did not fall, for it was founded on rock. And everyone who listens to these words of mine and does not act upon them will be like a stupid man who built his house on sand. The rain came down, the floods rose, the winds blew and beat upon that house, and down it fell—with a mighty crash."—Mat. 7:24-27. (Moffatt.)

The most tragic of human qualities is not intentioned viciousness or deliberate wickedness. It is stupidity. Men of good intention can be stupid, and by that stupidity cause much human misery.

The man who says there is no God is not wicked, said the Hebrew poet, he is merely stupid: "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God."

Stupidity is so tragic because it is blind to the harm it does. It blunders through life fumbling opportunities and mangling good causes through the lack of common sense.

In the parable of Jesus which is printed above, he is dealing with a contrast between a sensible man and a stupid man. The sensible man, when he built his house, saw that it had a solid foundation. The stupid man forgot all about the foundation and concentrated all his energy on the house itself. Now, Jesus said, the first man is the person who hears my teaching and puts it into actual effect in everyday living. The second man is the one who hears my teaching and gives inner assent to it—and then goes and does something else.

I. The first thing that is apparent in this parable is the tremendous claim that Jesus makes. The implication is that he has so searched life to its core that his teachings embody the deepest law of life. For men to fail to live up to them means self-destruction.

What a tremendous claim it is—the one who hears my teaching and fails to do it is inviting certain disaster. He is stupid. That claim is made all the more amazing when we realize the radical character of Jesus' teaching. He had turned his back on many of the old beliefs and systems which his hearers supported, and was advocating a new standard of values and a new mode of living. Again and again we hear the phrase repeated in the Sermon on the Mount, "Ye have heard that it was said . . . But I say." This is a signpost marking a fork in the road, and pointing a direction not traveled before. He set a new standard of character. He singled out the meek, the merciful, the morally pure, and the peacemakers as the real nobility among men; whereas history has exalted the proud, the aggressive, the crafty, and the war-makers—and does to this day. Someone has said that the Englishman (and why not the American, too?) may possess the earth, but he would be insulted if anyone accused him of being meek! Jesus set a new standard of morality. A man is henceforth to be concerned not merely with his overt actions, but sin or virtue begins in his thoughts. The desire to do evil is the twin of the act itself. And Jesus set up a new standard of social relationships. "Ye have heard that it was said, An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, but I say unto you, Resist not him that is evil." For the old law of retaliation Jesus substituted the law of non-resistance, of returning good for evil. We are to love our enemies as well as our friends, and to seek their welfare. Jesus turned the judgments of his day—and, yes, of our own day—upside down. And not only did he do that, but he said that the man who hears these teachings and does not act upon them is stupid.

As we have read this parable the most of us have indulged in a condescending pity for the poor fellow who didn't have sense enough to build his house on the rock, for we have not questioned that we all belonged to the class of those who seek firm foundations when they build. But in reality the majority of us belong in the category of stupid men. We have heard the teachings of non-resistance these many years, but we have not dared to trust them, so we have upheld a system of retaliation and revenge. We have heard the teaching of the inner sanction of morality, but we go on judging men by their overt acts. We have heard the teaching exalting the meek and the merciful, but our great men are too often the aggressive, the strong, and the proud who browbeat the world into slavery. We have heard the teaching blessing the peacemakers, but in time of conflict we have even upheld the hands of the war-makers and called God's benediction down upon them from Christian pulpits! We have heard the teachings of love as the Christian strategy, but we have trusted rather a system of private privilege and selfish interest.

II. One thing noticeable about the foolish builder is that he built for external show instead of durability. He was an externalist. Certainly we can't charge him with laziness, for he shows us not a lot grown up with weeds, but a lot with a well-built house upon it. In fact this parable is so characteristic of our activist civilization that it may almost be styled the American parable.

While his neighbor was using up long hours digging deep to find the solid rock, the second builder was building the house, and probably had the roof on before the first one was completely finished with his excavation. And it is quite possible that his house was more elaborate and luxurious than his neighbor's. At any rate all of his effort was out where it showed—half of it wasn't wastefully buried below the ground where no one would notice it.

III. Another thing noticeable in this parable is that the stupid builder, though he spurned the rock foundation, unwittingly had a foundation just the same. It was a foundation of sand. Every house, as well as every life, rests on some kind of a foundation, either strong or weak. Of course he was stupid in that he knew about the rock but could not bother with it, so built his house on the sand.

There is a whole class of people who have given inward assent to the soundness of Jesus' teaching all their lives; who nevertheless lack the daring or the real conviction to live it out. And since every life is built consciously or unconsciously on some philosophy, they have harbored the philosophy of Jesus and worked out another. Such a life is stupid because it is at war within. By failing to bring the acts of his life up to the affirmation of his soul such a man creates within himself an unfoundedness of soul which will not stand the testing in times of disaster.

What are some of the actual foundations on which we have been building, though professing to hold to the teachings of Jesus? In industry

Christian Orphanage

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

Dear Friends:

The gentle showers which we have been having are making corn and beans grow. The month of June was one of the dryest we have had for quite a number of years.

The Orphanage farm crop has greatly suffered for work on account of having no mules to plow. To look at your fields of corn and other crops going to the bad for the lack of work and no mules to be had in the community to plow it with, makes us feel about as helpless as can be. Six years ago when our old barn was destroyed in November the weather was cold and the cows had to stand out in the weather covered part of the time with ice. I thought then it could not have come at a worse time. This time the calamity came and destroyed our mules in the midst of the working season and no mules to work and now we think that it came at a worse time. And so it goes. It is never a good time to be sick. Some other time it seems would be better.

The writer had a boil on his arm some years ago and went on a long trip and while going through the crowds it seemed that a thousand folks hit that boil. It seemed to be at the most convenient place for everybody to touch.

Troubles come to all of us and they don't seem to come single-handed. We have to meet them as they come in the best way we can. All we can do is to help one another bear the burden that comes to each other.

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

souls that did not keep glowing upon its altars the missionary fire. Foreign Missions is only the outworking of the Home idea, for they are one. The work we are doing in Japan is the outgrowth of what we were doing in the Home field. It is not twenty-five years since the Home effort practically began. Many churches have been created. Many souls have been converted and our investments have made good returns. We have not yet brought into the treasury of the Lord more than a tithe of our obligations to the Cause of Missions. In fact a tithe of our gross earnings paid into the treasury would so swell our funds as to greatly expand our service in all departments. And a tithe is the least that any Christian can be safe in giving. Until we pass that point we are living under law and not under grace. Beyond the tithe system is the field for the exercise of liberality "as the Lord has prospered us." Life gains strength by the exercise of its powers. "The liberal soul shall be made fat." "Give and it shall be given unto you again." We can not live separate from others. We are "branches" of a vine, "members" one of another, "stones" of a temple. The universe is balanced in space by the law of relations, and the Church may bring mankind into harmony with God and one another by the exercise of this law in love. "He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully." The Missionary Association will supplement the contributions for Home needs, but the gifts should increase for the Foreign field. The work in Japan under the management of the Missionary Board of the American Christian Convention has produced good results; and what we have done has been by cooperation with that Board. Our committee will present details of the work. I will say that our contributions to this cause ought to have large increase.

V. Orphanage. The sphere of the Church is all the time enlarging. This modern demand upon the Church makes its own appeal. "God is a Father of the fatherless," but He operates through the Church. Sooner or later we must have an orphanage under our care. "The poor ye have always with you." The subject should be studied, agitated, and it will finally take shape for doing good. The Master fed the five thousand not so much perhaps to prove His divinity by a miracle as to show the practical side of Christianity. Jesus Christ was not so far removed from men as to inspire awe only, but He kept in touch with poverty and want. The orphaned ones shared in His love and aid. Christianity is the only institution initiating the idea of orphanages, and we cannot afford to pass by this method of doing.

VI. Conference questions relating to division and union, the nomination of five trustees for Elon College, the enlargement of our financial operations, the prosecution of work on a broader scale, the cultivation of the field we occupy for richer results, the extension of our Cause, all these lay claim to our wisest plans and best efforts and promise rich returns.

VII. The Memorial Church. I cannot close without pointing to this Church as the visible expression of the reunion between the Church North and South. All good is the offspring of legitimate unions, and it is gloriously true of the body of Christ. Glorious things are spoken of Him. The kingdoms of this world shall one day become the Kingdoms of Christ, but it will never be achieved by a divided church. The little tabernacle in which narrow hearts attempt to worship God must expand, until their cords reach the farthest horizon of the world before such a thing can be. The theology and love of the Church must be as wide as the needs of man and the purpose of God. Charity in the heart and service in the life must be the sign of the Holy Spirit's work. This Church is the first real memorial of reunion between God's people in this country since the Civil war. It must stand as the best expression of the union of our hearts. "All the building fully framed together has grown into a temple unto the Lord." It is a spiritual idea worked out into material form. We enter its portals with grateful thanks. We uncover our heads and veil our emotions as we meet for the first time in this holy place. And here within this temple which northern and southern hearts and hands have reared, I extend, in behalf of this Convention, to the friends who have come from the north a cordial and hearty welcome to our hospitality and good will. We would make our welcome as warm as the clime in which we live, and as generous as we have received on other occasions from you. We gave our hearts at Marion in 1890, and we greet you as brothers now. The freedom of the City and of our homes is yours while you stay and our welcome extends till you come again.

THE SUN'S PULPIT.

we all know we have built on the assumption that self-interest in the individual would multiply into welfare for the social whole. We have trusted to the profit motive to bring general benefit. That foundation has been revealed for what it is—a structure of sand. Jesus' teaching of mutual responsibility and social concern—of love in action—is infinitely more sound than that. In international circles we have trusted to force and retaliation, when the foundation of returning good for evil is far more sensible. The world never has started a cycle of righteousness through an unending cycle of wrong. In morals, our foundation has been libertinism and self-expression. Jesus' teaching of purity of heart is infinitely more sound as a basis of living.

Every life is built on some kind of foundation, as is every social organization. We may not have examined ourselves enough to discover what that foundation is, but we need to. Sound thinking will reveal the teachings of Jesus a solid rock on which to build—both for individuals and for social groups. The first builder was not only a good man, he was a sensible man. What is your foundation?—Christian-Evangelist.

THE VILLAGE MINISTER.

By Bertha Gerneaux Woods.

Counselling the sad and weak;
Hast'ning words of cheer to speak
To the lowly and the least;
Smiling at a wedding feast;
Helping blind, rebellious youth
Into patience, vision, truth.
Teaching downcast hearts to hope;
Clasping feeble hands that grope
When the earth scenes fade, and dim
Eyes look anxiously to him.
Kind, familiarized with death—
As wert Thou of Nazareth.

Now a little child to christen,
Now a patient hour to listen
To a burdened father's woes,
Up and down the street he goes,
Sharing every smile and tear,
Counting not his own life very dear.
Walk beside him all his days
In our small town's devious ways;
Rest him, Lord, with birds and bees,
And the whispering of trees.
He whose days are one long giving—
Keep in him the joy of living.

OBITUARIES

AYSCUE.

Elizabeth T. Ayscue was born in Franklin County, N. C., August 2, 1844 and died at her home near Epsom, N. C., June 23, 1935. Her age was ninety years, ten months and twenty days. On November 4, 1868, she married B. F. Ayscue who died June, 1923. Their home was blest with two sons and two daughters, Ollie Wellons, Tallie Franklin, Margelia and Mrs. L. L. Stainback.

In 1854 Rev. J. W. Wellons organized Liberty Christian Church in a schoolhouse about one mile from the present site and Sister Ayscue, then a girl of ten years, joined as a charter member. At her death she had been a member for eighty-one years. The funeral and burial were at Liberty Church on the afternoon of June 24th conducted by Rev. S. E. Madren, the present pastor, assisted by the writer and Rev. H. E. Crutchfield, former pastor. Sister Ayscue's home was happy and congenial. The devotion between husband and wife, pareuts and children was beautiful. For sixty-seven years preachers found a welcome and the most hospitable entertainment in their Christian home. Not only was she devoted to her home and loved ones, but was a real neighbor to those about her and was loved by her host of friends. She and her husband were among the most loyal and consecrated members of their church. They were regular in attending worship and the financial support of the church was a sacred thing to them. Their children were brought up in the Sunday School and church and are having a part in carrying on the Master's work as their parents did for a long number of years.

Her life of service as given to her home, community and church was a beautiful one. She lived trusting in her Saviour whi fulfilled His promise to supply all her needs. Her end was glorious and trinmphant. Her reward is the happiness of heaven.

Seldom is so large a crowd in attendeue's. The flowers with which her grave eues. The flowers with which her grave was banked were a beautiful tribute to the memory of her life of devotion to service.

IN ESSENTIALS, UNITY. IN NON-ESSENTIALS, LIBERTY. IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY.

VOLUME LXXXVII. RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, JULY 18, 1935. NUMBER 29.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Contributions of Church Members.—

Figures recently released by Dr. Charles Stelzle show that Congregationalists and Christians stand eighth among a list of twenty leading Protestant denominations, in contributions per capita. Our average amount for all purposes per annum, for the ten-year period from 1925 to 1934, was $23.-96. The United Presbyterians stood at the head of the list with $32.91 per member, of which $10.-40 was for denominational purposes—this being far above the amount raised by any other denomination. Our own per capita giving for benevolences was $3.13.

"Deadliest Air Weapon."—

This week there was delivered to the Army testing staff what purports to be the "deadliest air weapon" yet devised. This new mystery bomber was recently finished for the Army Air Corps by the Boeing Airplane Company. It is said to be capable of carrying six tons of bombs, a record load, for the record distance of 6,000 miles without refueling. Its four engines, known as the twin wasp type, can drive the ship at speeds exceeding 200 miles per hour, and are said to be able to carry it upward to an altitude of 30,000 feet.

Figures that Speak.—

According to statistcs of the Religion and Welfare Recovery Committee, during the depression contributions to the Church have decreased by nearly $300,000,000, while expenditures for armaments during that same period have increased $100,000,000. For the hundred years preceding the World War contributions to the Church were almost equal to expenditures for war, and equaled about one half of federal government expenses. Federal emergency expenses are now 12 times greater than our decreasing gifts to church and religious character-building agencies.—Advance.

Demands Revival of Abstinence Societies.—

The Pittsburg Catholic, in a recent issue stated that there was a growing demand throughout the country for the revival of total abstinence societies among Catholics. But "without waiting for the formal organization of such groups," it said, "more and more Catholics are coming to see it as their duty in the face of prevailing conditions and trends, to set an example of self-control in order to steady the younger generation" which is continually having placed before it "the pagan philosophy of pleasure as the chief end of existence." Condemning the Pennsylvania legislature for relaxing the restrictions on the sale of intoxicating liquor, it adds: "The liquor interests . . . forget that there are higher laws that will be invoked and higher motives that will be called into action to save a generation from being debauched."

Geologist Warns of Needed Conservation.—

Dr. Chas. K. Leith, geologist of the University of Wisconsin issues warning of the need of conserving our natural resources. He says that ere long America will be scraping the bottom of her barrel of indispensable mineral wealth. The peak of gold production has been reached and is declining. At the present rate of use or waste, our reserves of oil, zinc and lead will be exhausted within fifteen years. Our copper reserves will probably be sufficient for forty years, as will the reserves of really good iron ore, though there is enough inferior iron ore to last for centuries. There is enough coal to keep anyone now living from worrying—all grades included, it will last for forty centuries—but the best coal will last not more than two hundred years. Natural gas also should be conserved as there is enough wasted at the present time to supply every city in the United States of over 100,000 population. If Dr. Leith knows what he is talking about, and presumably he does, then we should stop long enough in this age of speed to find out where we are going.

Cocoa Beats Records.—

A record high consumption of cocoa in this country was established the first half of 1935, when more than two million bags of cocoa disappeared from port and warehous stocks. Compared with the corresponding period of 1934, the consumption total represents a gain of 30 per cent, or about half a million bags. Recently cocoa prices have been improving moderately under the persistent stimulus of trade and manufacturing demand, although the commodity is still one of the very low-priced ones compared with levels of mid-1932, when all commodities were in the depths of the depression. The high consumption of cocoa is a lesson in price influence. When cocoa prices failed to advance proportionately with other commodities after the depression lows, its use was noticeable affected. Makers of confectionery, principally chocolate bars, which take 70 per cent of all the cocoa used domestically, reduced the quantity of sugar in their mixtures, substituting a larger amount of cocoa. The use of milk was also reduced in favor of a greater cocoa content, while the size of candy bars has been greatly enlarged.—Exchange.

Another Stratosphere Ascent Thwarted.—

In the Black Hills of North Dakota, Explorer II lay in wait to attempt that flight which ended so disastrously for Explorer I last year. Captains Albert W. Stevens, scientific observer, and Orvil A. Anderson of the United States Air Corps, pilot, were impatient to be off as soon as weather conditions were announced as favorable. The latest issue of Literary Digest told this story: "While the baloon soars and drifts in uncrowded space, the two airmen will take measurements of temperature and barometric pressure-changes, collect samples of stratospheric air, study the cosmic ray, collect spores, take motion-pictures of the earth as it recedes below them, and study such other phenomena as comes within their experience betwixt earth and sky. Everything has been done to insure their safety. Both are equipped with parachutes, and a gigantic parachute is attached to the gondola to slow its fall in case of accident. Underneath are shock-absorbers should the gondola strike the ground too heavily. The balloon will be filled with helium, which will not burn. Such is the size of the bag that if it were made into a tent it would cover about two and two-thirds acres of ground and give shelter to 20,-000 men, with room to spare." It was filled with helium, and all was made ready to go—when the big bag collopsed. Details of the failure were not made public, but if failure had to come then lucky were these two adventurers that this giant gas-bag failed before and not after the flight had started.

Is Russia Rediscovering Family Value?—

Signs are multiplying, we are told, that Russia is looking with more favor upon the safeties and sanities of family life. They are rediscovering that family life is the corner-stone of civilized society. Says the New York Times, "Family life in Soviet Russian is becoming daring respectable, "as the Communist paper, Pravda, declares that "love is the whole foundation of the Socialist family. Without it, the family cannot exist." Divorce, too, is to be less easy than in the days when three wives in a week were allowable if not the prevailing custom. Then there is religion. The Soviet's traditional antipathy toward religion is lessening. Such churches as are left are being filled, and though anti-religious pamphlets are still distributed, they are less virulent than formerly. Commenting upon the situation the Boston Transcript says: "True love, religious faith, the feminine yearning for good clothes—all were bourgeois. Life was a serious business. It must be carried on in grim earnest. But people won't play at being robots forever. They've got to have music and novels and plays and fairy-tales and religion. The rulers of the Soviets are, little by little . . . beginning to recognize that man cannot live by bread alone." To this the Detroit News adds: "Sentiment and knightliness and religion and marriage all are very old, and there appear to be certain relationships connecting them that cannot be tampered with without serious consequences." And the Philadelphia Inquirer questions whether it is "too much to expect that Russia eventually will get around to the Golden Rule and the Ten Commandments."

NOTES-PERSONALS

NEWS FROM THE CHURCHES.

"There are those who would not think of not paying the baker for the bread they had bought—not even if they stopped buying from that baker; and yet there are some of those same people—church people, too— who will write to the editor of their church paper, saying, 'Stop your paper,' and think that they have paid their debt!"

Dr. and Mrs. Edwin C. Gillette will spend their vacation for the month of August in Asheville, but Dr. Gillette will continue to carry on such work as is necessary. He will visit the Piedmont Conference in Georgia and will visit some of the churches in the Asheville region. He can be reached through the Jacksonville office, 117 West Forsyth Street.

A Young People's Summer Conference of Congregational and Christian Churches is being held at Sutherland, Pocono Pines, Penna., July 22nd to 28th. Rev. Roy C. Helfenstein, D. D., the pastor of People's Church, Dover, Del., is a member of the faculty, and he will deliver a series of six addresses on "The Geography of the Holy Land and Modern Life in Ancient Palestine."
